It will be recalled that at that time the minister spoke with much firmness about the great qualities of the plan and what she envisaged. She, of course, envisaged an increase in old age security benefits effective this coming January 1. It was only on the insistence of the opposition and others that this particular approach was finally changed by the minister, or by the government, and on September 30 last when we reconvened after the recess we were consequently presented with a new bill to increase old age security by $10 a month effective October 1. I see no reason why this increase of $10 to the old age assistance recipients, the blind and the disabled, should not have been made available at that time.

In response to a question by the hon. member for Ontario on Monday last, reported on page 5321 of Hansard, the Prime Minister indicated that the question of the effective date was under consideration. As the federal-provincial conference had then concluded I felt we might have had an indication that this legislation would be made retroactive, if necessary, and that it would come into force on October 1 so these people would share on an equal basis. The Prime Minister also made this statement about the effective date, that——the provinces differed with regard to that matter. That must be ironed out before a statement can be made.

From what the minister said I took her to mean that the exact starting date was decided at the conference, whereas apparently the government has since made up its mind.

I feel that following the increase in old age security, legislation which was optional to the provinces should have been introduced immediately so that the provinces would have had the option as at that time to enter into an agreement to participate in these measures to the benefit of the various recipients in each province. I notice there is no new tax here as in the case of the old age security increase. Despite the fact that I may be considered somewhat out of order I should like to reiterate that the original election promise of this government was to the effect that these increases would be put through without any increase in taxes. However, this did not prevent the minister from presenting a bill adding 1 per cent to personal income taxes.

I should like to put on record, Mr. Speaker, one or two of our own accomplishments in regard to steps we took when we were in office. Effective November 1, 1957 we not only increased old age security payments by $9 a month but also amended the three acts in question, the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act. It will also be remembered that a very advantageous step to many residents of Canada was taken at that time in reducing the residence requirement from 20 to 10 years. This was a real achievement. At that time, of course, the allowable earnings were also increased proportionately. The blind received the same treatment; their benefits were increased from $46 to $55 per month and the allowable earnings increased by $120 for a single person and $240 for a married person. In 1957 the Disabled Persons Act was amended to increase the benefits from $46 to $55 per month and also coverage broadened to include certain persons in institutions.

I remember at that time a great deal of discussion among various members on both sides of the house to the effect that this particular act should have its requirements broadened so that more people suffering from various forms of disability could benefit under its terms. I expect we will hear more of that today; I hope we do because some further consideration should be given to the interpretation of what "totally and permanently disabled" means, and whether those words should or should not be altered. At that time about 90,000 people benefited from the increase in the old age assistance allowance. Today the minister mentioned 103,000. At that time about 8,300 persons were in receipt of pensions with respect to blindness. The minister mentioned that there were some 8,000 in receipt of blindness allowances today. In the disabled category there were between 36,000 and 43,000 in receipt of allowances, the variation being caused by the increased earnings which were allowable when making the calculation as to whether the recipients were entitled to the allowances.

In February, 1962 I had the pleasure and privilege of piloting through the house, effective as of February 1, 1962, a further increase in old age security benefits from $55 to $65 a month and, in addition, an equal increase in the old age assistance allowances and payments to the blind and the disabled. Here again I should like to emphasize that we made all this legislation effective at the same date.

I said at the beginning of my remarks that I thought it was a crying shame that these three categories of recipients of assistance should not all have these increases available to them on the same date, that is the date when an increase was provided for in old age security benefits. Now they have missed two months. Maybe this does not mean very much to some of us, but I know the minister is able to appreciate, having been in office now for some time, just what it means to the individuals concerned. Both in 1957 and in 1962 the government of that day did increase these three categories of benefits at the same time as old age security payments were increased.

Again, permissible earnings were increased by $180 a month in February, 1962 in respect of a single person, and $360 a month in respect to a married person.

Miss LaMarsh: Per year.

Mr. Monteith: I beg your pardon; the minister is correct. I am wondering just how the calculation is made. I am not doing this through ill intent, but I am interested; because back in 1957, when the old age security allowance was increased by $9, the allowable earnings were increased by $120 and $240 per year. Then in 1962, when the allowance was increased by $10, the allowable earnings were increased by $180 for a single person and $360 per year for married persons. Now, still with a $10 increase per month, we are back to $120 and $240. I am assuming the increase in February, 1962 was probably to round the figure out to an even figure. Perhaps the minister will correct me if I am wrong in this assumption.

I could not agree more with the minister's statement that these increases will contribute to a greater degree of stability and comfort; I believe that was the phrase she used. I heartily agree with this approach to the measures before us. However, as I say, the amendment should have been presented earlier. It should have been presented so as to take effect as of October 1 instead of December 1.

I notice that the minister recently made a speech in Saskatoon. According to the Star-Phoenix she wishes to broaden the scope of the Canada pension plan considerably beyond what was apparently her intention as indicated in the resolution which appeared on the order paper earlier this session. I am wondering whether she discussed any of these changes with the representatives of the provinces at the recent conference or, if not, whether she proposes to do so. I should be interested to know when it is expected that this wider plan will be proposed to the house.

Naturally we in this party intend to vote for the measure which is before us now. We pleaded for it earlier in this session, and I can only regret that its provisions are not made retroactive to October 1. I regret most strongly the lack of any retroactive feature, and I cannot help but condemn the government for the omission.

I have nothing further to say at this time. I do feel that these three measures will be of the utmost benefit to all those concerned, and that they should have been brought into being as of October 1.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the house is aware the bill before us raises to a possible $75 a month the pension or allowance available under the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act. We in this party have asked for these increases to be made. We now welcome the legislation. We shall support it. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, it is our hope and our desire, despite the wide interest there is in this subject in the House of Commons, that because of the unanimity of support for this measure it will not take very long to get through, so we can be certain that those affected by these various pieces of legislation will get these increases promptly. We hope, therefore, that any time which is taken up in speaking briefly on this subject will not be interpreted as anything other than support for this measure even though there are two or three things which need to be said at this time.

First I wish to echo the remarks made by the hon. member for Perth with reference to the effective date of the proposed increases in these three shared programs. The Minister of National Health and Welfare relied on the fact that no province had asked for an earlier date at the recent federal-provincial conference. She also told us some of the provinces wanted an even later effective date to be set. But she must know that prior to the calling of that conference some of the provinces were already asking for these increases to be made possible at an earlier date, and I suggest a responsibility lay upon her and upon the federal government months ago to discuss with the provinces the possibility of these increases so that the earliest possible effective date might have been arranged.

I know the minister will tell us that she and the government had a different perspective, a somewhat different scheme affecting these matters in relation to the Canada pension plan. I remember what she said in her speech on July 18 about these various plans. But I suggest that she and the government should have realized, shortly after they took office, that the question of raising the basic old age security pension to $75 a month was a pressing one, that it was a commitment that would have to be kept, and once that was done these other increases would have to be made.

The government, in our view, should have consulted the provinces at an earlier date, so we would not be in this position now of having had the old age security at $75 per month effective in October, whereas the $75 under these three programs is effective only in December. We deplore this delay just as much as the previous speaker did. We feel that the government cannot excuse itself for its delay in this matter by the kind of statement the minister made with regard to what was said at the recent federal-provincial conference.

We have no quarrel with the fact that these three measures are presented to us in one package. As a matter of fact, although in the past each time any one of these programs has been improved it has been done by a separate bill amending the original act, there is something to be said for looking at these programs at one and the same time. I hope that the day will soon come when we will look at our social security needs, our social security programs in this country on an over-all basis. This is something I want to elaborate upon for just a moment or two at this point.

I think one of the misfortunes that arises from the way in which these increases have been dealt with in this latter part of 1963 is the fact that we have come at these things on a piecemeal basis, and therefore have denied to the provinces, denied to the country as a whole, a chance to consider all of our social security and social welfare needs. We increased the old age security pension, as we simply had to do. Having done that, we now have to increase these related pensions and allowances. Our action in increasing the permissible rates at the federal level makes it necessary for the provinces to contribute their shares. This affects the provinces in terms of their approach to other social and welfare measures.

The minister, in her speech on July 18 when she introduced the Canada pension plan, referred to some of these problems. She referred to the problem of widows with dependant children, the problem of disabled persons who are not now covered, and so on. There is also the question of survivor benefits. There is the whole question of sickness benefits and whether they should be attached to unemployment insurance or to health insurance. There are all these other needs to meet which will be delayed just a bit longer because we have come at this present problem on a piecemeal basis.

In the view of this party, the day cannot come too soon for a federal-provincial conference, such as is necessary, and for bringing in the social workers and those who are experts in this field, to try to devise an over-all program that meets all of our needs. We support wholeheartedly—indeed we have been asking for it—this increase to $75 a month in these three programs, along with old age security. But we think it is a sad state of affairs that there are still no survivor benefits in this country; that there are no provisions for pensions for orphans or for widows with dependant children, and the various other categories to which the minister has referred, and to which I have referred in my remarks today.

There are many people who are facing up to these problems. Experts in the various departments of health and welfare at the federal and provincial level, as we all know, have done a great deal of work and a great deal of study on this matter. Our schools of social work in various universities are working on this matter. The Canadian welfare council and other Canadian social and welfare agencies are all aware of the growing-like-Topsy nature of our social security system. I do not want to suggest by the use of that phrase that it has not some elements in it that are very sound. I think we have made pretty good progress in some parts of the field. I think the establishment of the principle of universality for old age security and at the family allowance level is something good, something of which Canada can be proud. Then, the fact that we have developed these other shared programs is to the credit of this country.

I think, perhaps, that it is good we have not yet laid down lines that are hard and fast. We have not adopted any rigid position which would make it impossible for us to move into new ways of dealing with these things.

What I think has been sad this year is that we have had to hammer away at the government, first to introduce the $10 increase for old age security and now to get these three $10 increases in these shared programs. We have had to hammer at the government to carry out its own commitment for the Canada pension plan, and the best we can get from the government is that it will be delayed and brought in next year rather than this. This government is the one which said, at election time, it was ready to move, it had its plan and was ready to give the people a new look in the social security field.

I do not blame the minister for saying today that this legislation would bring added security and comfort to those who will receive the increases being provided. However, it really is not very much. It really is not anything for us to boast about in the affluence of our society today that people who have played their part in the economic and social life of our country at age 65 can now get $75 a month if they are single and $150 a month for a married couple, with the right to have other income of $30 a month if they are single and $35 per month for married couples. Well, it is $10 better than it was before this legislation was introduced but it is hardly security and comfort in the accepted meaning of those words.

But, Mr. Speaker, we can move a long way in this field. We have the economic capacity to do it in a country such as Canada. I believe we have the intellectual capacity. I think we have the knowledge in the field of social welfare measures to sort these things out and to get an over-all plan to deal with all the needs of our people. I know the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) has had some tough battles. She has had to fight the insurance companies.

Miss LaMarsh: Who, me?

Mr. Knowles: I missed that.

Miss LaMarsh: Who, me?

Mr. Knowles: Apparently the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has now said the same thing about the insurance companies as the Minister of National Health and Welfare said. I am surprised that so many people have risen in this house, as if the insurance companies need to be defended. I think they manage to look after themselves very well.

As I started to say, I know the minister has had a fight with the insurance companies. I gather from reading a magazine such as Maclean's, which knows what goes on within the Liberal party, that she has had a fight with some of her own cabinet colleagues in this field. I know there is a job of education to do in this country. I submit she not only has a tremendous job but she has a tremendous opportunity. If, with the help of the expert people she has in her department, and with the support of a parliament that now believes in social security, she will give a lead in the effort to achieve, not just piecemeal amending of these bits of legislation when pressure comes from the opposition, but to achieve an over-all Canada pension plan, plus a social security plan to meet all the needs of our people, including old age assistance, income in time of illness, provision for widows and survivors, orphans and the disabled, she will do well for the people of Canada. Such an effort could be made with the financial capacity and intellectual capacity that we have in this field.

One of the things that has grown concurrently with our branching out in social security legislation, such as has taken place in the last couple of generations, has been the growth of organizations like the Canada welfare council and the increase in the number of people who are studying social work in our various universities. There is now quite a band of such people. I will not name any of them because it would be unfair to name only some and not others, but there is quite a band of experts in this field.

I am sure the minister has made many more contacts with these people than she ever did previously. I am also sure that if these experts were drawn in and put to work, then before we reach the point when there is another round of increases for items a, b, c and d, we could have an over-all approach to the problem of social security.

I would like to repeat what I said earlier. This is legislation we heartily welcome. We hope, despite the interest hon. members will want to show in it, the house will pass it quickly and the benefit will get through to the people it is intended to cover.

One of the things which disturbed us quite a bit after the $10 increase was given in old age security was to learn that in certain provinces some people got the $10 in one hand and had it taken away, either in whole or in part, from the other hand. We hope that will not happen with this legislation. We asked for this legislation; we welcome it; we support it. But we hope that before the ink can dry on the bill when it is printed as finally passed, the minister will enter upon the hard work of drafting an over-all social security program, jointly between the federal government and the provinces, so that we can meet in an honest, intelligent way the social needs of our people.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): I only wish to say a few words in support of the bill introduced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh).

Of course, we are all in favour of these increases, but nevertheless I would like to make a few brief comments on the present situation in that regard.

The bill provides for a $10 increase per month. As we said so many times, under this administration as well as under the previous one which had not considered advisable to give retroactivity to the measure, this increase of $10 has been set by rule of thumb because it certainly is not based on any special study of the cost of living at this time. This increase is a good thing, but, once again, we would like that all those increases pertaining to social security, provided at any time and by whatever government, be based on the cost of living.

If we look at the increases which are being granted at this time, particularly in connection with the maximum income permitted the recipients of those social security allowances, we see that a disabled person cannot earn more than $360 a year under the terms of subparagraph (i), subsection 2 of section 1, while a married person living with his spouse cannot earn more than $1,320, for if we add the $900, it amounts to the total of $2,220.

Under subparagraph (iii), subsection 2 of section 2, the permissible income is $2,580. That means that a couple cannot earn more than $1,680. If we consider the cost of living today, we realize that such amounts are clearly inadequate. However, we are pleased that the pensions have at least reached the level provided for in this legislation.

In the case of the Blind Persons Act, the situation is the same except that the amounts are higher.

I should like to bring up here the fact that the Canadian National Institute for the Blind has requested that there be no restriction set concerning the blind's income because their incapacity has physical, psychological and mental effects. The institute rightly feels that there should be no maximum limit on the income of those who are entitled to benefits under the Blind Persons Act.

Referring once again to the subparagraphs, it will be noted that the permissible incomes are $600, $1,080, $1,680 and $1,800 in the case of the blind. I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that those increases are very little and that they will not do much for the recipients but, in spite of the restrictions contained in the bill, we are glad that the government has decided to boost those pensions.

It is better than nothing. And I would suggest that the hon. lady might consider, perhaps at the very next session, a substantial increase in those pensions, based on the actual cost of living and not on political expediency as it has been done in the past by most political parties.

When we consider the Disabled Persons Act, I am always reminded of the time when I used to examine people who applied for such benefits. I was made aware then that the act is indeed restrictive and many people cannot take advantage of it. I am thinking of epileptics, for instance. Those people, afflicted with a recurring disease, might go through long periods of regression, but they can also have attacks at very short intervals. In spite of this, those persons are not yet covered by the act.

I submit that they should be, along with some people who were unfortunate enough to lose both hands in an accident. They are not eligible under the pretext that with the limbs they have left or with the help of artificial limbs, they can still earn a decent living.

I suggest that this is impossible when such a person is a skilled worker. I feel that those people should be eligible under the present act.

I should like to make a few brief remarks about increased family allowances.

As you know, when family allowances were established, the basic rate was $5 per child and the number of children entitled to those allowances was limited to seven. Now, several years after the establishment of these allowances, the basic rate is $6 instead of $5 and the maximum amount is $8 instead of $7, that is only a one dollar increase in both cases. However, there is no limit as to the number of children entitled to these allowances.

Once again, I ask the minister to consider the possibility of increasing family allowances and of extending them to children over 16 years of age, especially to students.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to delay the passage of this legislation and once again, I am pleased to say that our group is in favour of the proposed increase. We are glad about it, especially for those who will benefit from it. But we submit that this increase is not at all in keeping with the increase of expenses for the recipients. Therefore, I hope that in the very near future, the minister will see fit to work out those increases more in terms of the cost of living.

As far as retroactivity is concerned, I do not think political capital should be made out of it. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) indicated that he had been advocating that for a long time. We have also discussed that matter for a long time, but I think it is much more difficult to carry out such projects than to discuss them. We also would like to have a retroactive legislation, but we are not going to delay the passing of the bill because there is no such indication.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on Bill C-125, the purpose of which is to increase the benefits now being paid under the Old Age Assistance Act, the Disabled Persons Act and the Blind Persons Act.

Like those who spoke before me, I support with more or less limited enthusiasm this increase of $10 for the persons aged 65 to 70, for the disabled and the blind. But it is to be noted that this increase is far below the increase in the cost of living.

Last summer, sometime before the recess, nearly all hon. members were in favour of increasing their own indemnity. Everyone was saying that the cost of living had gone up, and that therefore, expenses had increased that much.

Well, I think that if our expenses and our cost of living have increased, they have also gone up for the old people, the disabled and the blind who have no other source of income nor any other means than the benefits paid to them under our present laws.

If you draw a parallel between the increase in our indemnity and the increase in old age assistance, and disabled and blind allowances, those benefits should have been raised to about $120 a month, but they are now increased to $75 only.

No one is disputing the fact that the cost of living has gone up, that the cost of everything is going up. The needs of our old, disabled and needy people are the same as ours, that is to say their cost of living is the same as ours. But when it comes to suggesting an increase based on the cost of living, it seems that often we think more about ourselves than about other people.

A single person in receipt of old age assistance or blind persons allowances will be able as from now to have a $1,260 yearly income, while the recipient of an allowance for the blind will be entitled to an annual income of $1,500.

For the person who is married and living with his spouse, the permissible income will be $2,220 in the case of old age assistance and disability allowances, and $2,580 in the case of allowances for the blind.

Considering the number of civil servants necessary to interview the disabled, the blind and the old age assistance recipients, I feel it would cost no more to grant $75 a month, without assessing the income earned by the spouse.

I am thinking of several cases I know, where the wife has to work in order to support herself. Because her salary is a few dollars above the permissible amount under the act, her government pension has been cut down. As a matter of fact, I was able to establish that, in the province of Quebec, the additional amount provided by the federal government, that is $10, has been deducted from the pension of the recipients of social assistance benefits.

I wish to point out to the minister that today, in order to derive any benefits from the Disabled Persons Act, one has to be a bed-ridden invalid as several members have already stated.

I am thinking more particularly of people who have a heart condition. When we request pensions on behalf of those people, the commissioners tell us that the persons are not completely or permanently disabled, despite the fact that their illness often puts them in what I would call a state of helplessness.

The administration of the Old Age Assistance Act, the Disabled Persons Act and the Blind Persons Act is so restrictive that several inquiries are often needed before justice is obtained from the commission, and in a few cases only at that.

That is why I feel it would be easier to pay $75 a month without a means test as far as the spouse is concerned. The number of employees needed for the administration of the act must be taken into account; it requires bureaucracy and a number of bureaucrats. And even if it makes it possible for the provincial or the federal government to save a few dollars, it prevents some recipients from really trying to earn more money.

In that respect, I am reminded of a woman who, at some time tells herself: What I earn in such and such a month is taken from me by the federal or the provincial government because of the maximum set on permissible income.

Mr. Speaker, we welcome this measure to increase by $10 a month the pensioners' permissible income but, on the other hand, I must say that this increase is not in line with the cost of living at this time or the numerous needs of the disabled, the blind and the old.

If you consider the cost of living today and the way old people must live, you will find that they do not live in the same conditions that prevailed 25 or 30 years ago when children looked after old people. Times have changed and today, because of the housing shortage, old people must live alone and look after themselves.

That is why I feel that the increases as mentioned in the bill are not large enough, for one must remember that we have increased our sessional allowance by some 80 per cent, whereas the blind, the disabled and the older people benefits are increased by $10 a month only.

If the increase in the cost of living or in these people's requirements had been taken into account, I think that the measure now before us, that is Bill No. C-125, would provide for an increase to at least $120 a month in the allowances paid under the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act.

[Text]

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity of saying a few words on the amendment now before the house to increase by $10 per month the payments made under the Old Age Assistance Act, the Disabled Persons Act and the Blind Persons Act. I would say this is one of the most confused and poorly handled pieces of legislation that has ever come before this house. Our senior citizens were given a $10 increase as of October 1 last, and only then after considerable pressure was brought to bear by the opposition. The other three classes of people receiving assistance were left wondering why they did not receive this increase, as they had on other occasions when similar legislation was put through. I had 'phone call after 'phone call; I had letters from people in these three categories. They were asking me, "How come I am not getting the $10 a month increase, the same as the senior citizens" What could we tell them? What did we tell them? All we could tell them was that this government failed to consult the provinces and the matter had to be postponed until after the dominion-provincial conference meeting, that at that time it would be discussed and possibly the increase would be put into effect.

The people in these categories have been discriminated against. Why should they be discriminated against? They are just as entitled to this $10 increase as are our senior citizens. They are people who may need this additional money even more than those in the senior citizens group, but for at least two months they have been denied this increase. This means they have been denied $20, which is a large sum of money to them. Speaking for myself, I certainly would have preferred to see the senior citizens, old age assistance recipients and the blind and disabled get their increase in their pensions before there was any increase in the indemnity of members of parliament.

An hon. Member: Did you vote against it?

Mr. Hales: In addition, our increase was made retroactive while the increase for our senior citizens was not made retroactive.

Mr. Moreau: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Hales: Yes.

Mr. Moreau: Would the hon. member inform the house how he voted when the members' pay increase was before us?

Mr. Hales: I voted for it just as the hon. member did, but I still say I would have preferred to see the senior citizens receive their increase before we were given ours.

The increase for these three groups is going to cost $4.2 million for four months or approximately $12.6 million a year. The hon. lady has not seen fit to tell us from where the money is going to come from or how it is going to be raised. I presume it will come from the consolidated revenue fund. However, she did make a point of telling us in the case of the old age security increase that the money was going to be raised by increasing the income tax by 1 per cent. So there is confusion in the method of payment between these two categories. The matter has been poorly handled all along. It has been done in a confused and piecemeal way. We are now asked to pass this amendment today and I may say we are going to support it.

Before I sit down I should like to say a word or two in respect of blind assistance. I think these people deserve special recognition. In my opinion a blind person has a much higher cost of living and finds it more difficult to exist than other people. This observation can be substantiated on three or four grounds. Many times blind people have to hire help to take care of them in their homes. They cannot see to get around and they need guidance. Quite often they have to live in a different type of home than other people. They cannot live in homes with three or four floors but must live in single ground floor homes so that they can get around. There are special circumstances in the case of blind people and as a result it costs them more to live. In some cases it is a necessity for them to have a car. If they have one they need someone at all times to drive them to their place of work and pick them up. This too is an additional expense. When blind people go shopping they are handicapped. They cannot see the product they are buying or the specials that are on sale, so they are not always able to take advantage of these savings. For these reasons and others I think they should be given special consideration and I hope the day will come when this will be a reality. There are only about 8,000 blind pensioners in Canada, as I believe the minister indicated, and an additional $10 a month for them would not amount to a very large sum.

Finally, I say that this government stands condemned because of its failure to legislate in a clear and fair way for the less fortunate people of our country. They have acted in a discriminatory manner. One group received an increase, and the other groups did not get their increase at the same time. This is the way the matter has been handled. We support these amendments and hope that when anything is done with regard to welfare payments in the future the increases will be given to all at the same time. I hope this will be the attitude that will be taken by this or any other government that may be dealing with welfare problems.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) on having an eleventh hour conversion. Some say that deathbed repentances are all right. I congratulate her for bringing in the increase, but how in the name of goodness could she justify leaving these people to the last? Here is a group of people who really need the increase. Their entitlement to it depends upon a means test, and I just cannot see the reasoning behind leaving such people to the last.

I should have liked to see the minister not only make the increase two months retroactive, but go back to April 8 last when the raises for members of the House of Commons came into effect. I think that could only be fair, because surely these people have a proven need. There is not a large amount of money involved in the increase. The matter would seem to be primarily a question of right and wrong, and it does not take a lot of money to make it right because we are told that there are only 103,000 people in Canada who will qualify under the Old Age Assistance Act. This is only one out of every 184 people. In the case of the blind there is only one out of every 2,375 people involved. Therefore I want to ask the minister to reconsider her position and make the increase retroactive at least two months, to the time when the old age security payments were increased. If in the goodness of her heart she could make the increase retroactive to the 8th of April that would be a lot better, because there are only a few people involved and they are people who have a proven need.

So far as the disabled are concerned, here is another group of people who are badly in need. There are only 51,000 of them throughout Canada, or one of every 350 people. We are giving these people $75 a month. At the same time we allow a single person to earn an extra $10 a month.

I know that the minister probably cannot do anything at the moment concerning the point I am about to raise but as I look across the way and see the parliamentary secretary to the minister, who lives in Toronto, I say to the minister: How in the world does she expect a person to rent a room and live in Toronto on the amount of money that is provided only under a means test? I am well aware of course that hospitalization and medical care are provided to these people but I am wondering about the cost of drugs so far as they are concerned. Again I remind the minister that these are people whose need is proven. In the case of the disabled we are going to allow a permissible income of $2,220 a year for a married couple, but in my view this is a mere pittance. A great many of these people, as my doctor friend from Toronto will know, need special care. They need help in their homes. They need someone to go and get things for them. I am sure he will also agree with me that it is an utter impossibility for a married couple to live on that sum of money in the city of Toronto, or other large centres in Ontario.

Let me again draw attention to the discrimination which we practise in this country. It is all very well to speak of universal pensions and national pensions schemes, but surely there is a great difference across Canada in the cost of living in one area compared with another. In my own province of Ontario there is a great difference between a person who has to live in the city of Toronto—I use Toronto because it is a big city, but my observations could easily apply to Ottawa or other cities and towns—and the fortunate person who has to live in some small village, or even on a farm in his own little house. I should like to point out to the minister that over the years we have gone on practising discrimination between the people needing old age assistance or benefits under the Disabled Persons Act or Blind Persons Act who live in the big cities and big towns and those who live in rural areas.

I should like to see some concessions given to disabled persons who suffer additional hardship. I am thinking, for example, of a family I know where the mother finds it necessary to go out to work in order to add to the income. There are a couple of small children in the family and the father has disseminated sclerosis. This lady has to hire a taxi or keep a car to enable her to go to work. Actually in this particular case she hires a taxi. Surely the quality of mercy is not strained by giving these people their just dues, instead of discriminating against them. I should also like to say a few words about disabled persons who need special equipment, such as wheel chairs or special beds. I am thinking of those with disseminated sclerosis, and crippling diseases for example. I hope that some day we will be able to bring in legislation which will take into account the special needs of some people over others.

Mr. Speaker, I know there are other hon. members who want to speak on this bill, but I would just ask that we keep in our minds the problems of the blind person. The hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) brought this out very pointedly. These people need others to assist them to shop. They cannot read the bargains. There are one hundred and one ways in which they are handicapped that those who are not handicapped fail to realize. In conclusion may I say we support this measure, with the added rider that we hope the minister will see fit to go back in date at least to the time when the other old age security pension was increased.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I shall be brief, Mr. Speaker. Like hon. members who spoke before me, I should like to express our group's approval of this legislation which has been made necessary by the increase in old age security pensions and by the increasingly urgent needs of the recipients.

As the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) and others have stated, it would have been better if the increase had been made retroactive to the date on which old age security payments were boosted.

But, unfortunately, the government did not resort to the necessary consultations with the provinces so as to achieve consistency between the two pension plans.

Mr. Speaker, speaking on this measure, I should like to point out that there is room for improvement with regard to the administration side of it.

I know that the administration of these pensions comes strictly under the provinces which, as a rule, establish a special commission to investigate before making the payments.

However, the federal government determines itself the conditions under which these pensions must be paid.

In many instances, in refusing a pension, the social allowances commission in the province of Quebec, for instance, will inform the person who did not succeed in obtaining a pension, that his or her application is rejected on account of the federal legislation and its requirements.

I submit that this gives rise to many cases of injustice.

In other cases, pensioners had been receiving in good faith for one, or even several years, old age assistance benefits when, as a result of an investigation, it was found out that the recipient's income was over the permissible maximum. Then the needy person to whom a pension was being paid was compelled to make a refund. In such a case, there is a real injustice, because those persons were receiving that pension in good faith; and it is obvious that they do not have the necessary means to make the refund.

I suggest that when a person has received a pension in good faith, after his good faith has been established through an investigation, he should not be required later on to make a refund.

To judge of the interpretation of the law in cases of this nature, and in order to avoid this rigidity pertaining to all statutes, I suggest that it would be advisable to consider the setting up of a kind of administrative court, which would review the decisions of the commission and before which a claimant might be heard. Thus it would be possible to eliminate, at a moderate cost for the treasury, absolutely pitiful cases of persons who, in our twentieth century and in our society with its population continually increasing, live in almost undescribable poverty.

Mr. Speaker, care should be taken that this increase, which is not very substantial after all, is not followed by a new rise in the cost of living. It is the special duty of the federal government to see to it that rents in housing projects subsidized by it or by some of its agencies are not increased as soon as the increased pensions are received. There are already indications that this might be the case.

I have no doubt that the minister will make sure that this situation does not occur; she might also warn her colleagues, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Garland) for instance, of the danger of such an occurrence.

In short, Mr. Speaker, when considering this legislation, it is appropriate that we wonder if the time is not ripe to undertake a review of our social security system.

Our system, as it is now, already drains an important part of our national budget, and yet it remains inadequate and cannot meet the requirements of those who try to become eligible to these benefits. Furthermore, it is obviously inadequate in comparison with the comprehensive systems which exist in most European countries.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that we need to take a second look at the philosophy underlying our social security system. It is not as much a matter of distributing a minimum to all as it is rather one of bringing supplementary assistance to those who need it. I am not against the universality of the portable pension plan, but instead of paying a small amount to everybody, most of whom are not in need, it should be attempted, through other legislation, to give to those who are really in need a sufficient amount so as to enable them to meet their actual requirements, in order to remove within our society those distressing cases of hopeless destitution which are so numerous in Canada.

By amending this legislation, we could provide for their needs without burdening our budget with excessive expenditures, because assistance would be given where it is needed, and thus we could release our resources for productive purposes and give those responsible for that production adequate remuneration and compensation for their services.

I unreservedly support the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who is not only asking for a review of pension rates, but of the entire system, in order to make the necessary amendments.

[Text]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): When my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) spoke earlier in this debate he outlined the attitude of this party in general terms with respect to the subject matter before us. I think that over the years we have, unfortunately, put the entire question of providing assistance and help to the needy out of the public treasury on the basis of either a handout or some reason of expediency. It is unfortunate, and it is one of the reasons why we have a disgraceful situation in Canada today with respect to the whole field of social security, of which old age assistance, disabled persons pensions and blind persons pensions are a part.

It is almost a year ago, now—I believe it was on December 20, 1962—that the national council of welfare came into being, pursuant to an act of this parliament passed while the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) held the office now held by the hon. lady. One of the ideas we had about this council was that it would be dealing with, and studying items such as we have before us for consideration, now. I should like, in this regard—that is, with regard to the question of planning some program of concerted effort in this field of social security assistance—to make reference to the annual report of the Department of National Health and Welfare for the year ended March 31, 1962. While I am at it, perhaps I may point out that this report, the one which was tabled by the hon. lady on the opening day of this session, is the last one available. At least, I sent a note to the library and this is the last report they have. It is more than a year and a half old. Nevertheless, it does contain some pertinent information about the general subject matter before us and I should like to make a few references to it and make one or two short quotations from it. The following appears at page 150 under the heading "Income Security". As I say, this report is already a year and a half old and, undoubtedly, the study which went into this took place some while before the date of publication. It reads as follows:

> The program of old age, survivors and disability benefits announced in the speech from the throne, January 1962, required the active participation of staff members for a number of months beforehand in discussions to plan the new program.

It is true this relates to the previous government and to a previous speech from the throne. But it does say that the staff of the department actively participated in studying this whole field for a number of months in order to plan a new program. Then it goes on to indicate that the income security section supervisor spent two weeks in Great Britain, that the director spent several days in Baltimore and Washington reviewing the old age survivors and disability insurance program in the United States, that studies were made on the situation in Australia, New Zealand, and so on. We are told that the work of the Ontario committee on portable pensions was examined and that the staff produced a number of bulletins and made an exhaustive study and survey of the particular question which is now before us.

It seems regrettable that at this late stage in the session, with all this active work behind her, the minister has not yet assessed it and is still unable to transform it into some kind of co-ordinated plan and program which the house and the country could consider.

I wonder if I may call it five o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. member is the last speaker, I wonder if he could be allowed to finish in a few minutes and we could then get the bill through.

An hon. Member: Take the whole hour.

Mr. Howard: I did not know the prescience of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) extended to knowing how long I might take. But I am one of those who have been most vociferous against intruding on the private members' hour and, inasmuch as I have the floor at five o'clock, I do not think it is I who should be asked if I want to go on. I believe the others should be asked.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether Your Honour would ask the house if there is unanimous agreement to continuing after five o'clock in the hope of making progress.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: I must thank my parliamentary secretary, the Secretary of State, for helping me out in this particular instance.

To proceed, let me express appreciation to the house for this courtesy shown, not only to me but, what is more important, to the recipients of allowances and pensions, because they are the people we are concerned with when considering this particular item.

When the minister spoke, her introductory remarks contained a reference to the dominion-provincial conference, and to the effect that not one province was in favour of extending these particular payments retroactively beyond December 1. This, in my opinion, is a shame and a disgrace to the various provinces if they, in fact, took that adamant attitude. The minister has said that some provinces indicated they were desirous of having this measure made effective at an even later date. This, in my opinion, is even more disgraceful. If and when the minister closes the debate, or at some other stage in the proceedings, I believe she should relate to the house and to the general public just which provinces wanted this measure to become effective at an even later time than is proposed. This would enable the people to know which provinces took this attitude.

The minister said, too, that this was the reason the date of December 1, 1963 was picked as the retroactive date for this bill to come into effect. It seems to me that if the various provinces were so mean and niggardly in their attitude toward this measure that they adamantly refused at the dominion-provincial conference to have it come into effect at any date prior to December 1, then the minister should have taken up the challenge, as she is wont to do, and made the measure effective on the same date as the old age security pension. This would have put the provinces on the spot. She could have said to them, "We are being magnanimous and we are going to pay these people what they should have. Will you not go along with us?"

What I expect happened is that this is the attitude of this government, that this government does not want the measure to come into effect before December 1. It wants to save a few pennies for the months of October and November, instead of being reasonable, just and fair to the recipients of these particular payments. I believe the minister said that the cost involved would be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $1 million a month for the three types of pension that are before us at the moment. I do not know if she actually used the phrase "a million dollars", but this is what I have computed it would cost. The October and November payments would, therefore, only involve an additional $2 million and would be payments to those people who really need them more than anybody else. I know the Liberal party is embarrassed because of the attitude taken by the late C. D. Howe, but do they have to be that embarrassed by the statement, "What's a million?" Why do they not say, "What's a million or two million? Let us pay these people for the months they justly deserve and not take a penny-pinching attitude towards people who are really in need".

If the government wants a couple of million dollars, I would remind them that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) was tossing millions around the other day. Apparently he was able to save $75 million in a few minutes of slashing of his estimates. A little more time spent in slashing the estimates of the useless Department of National Defence would give us another $75 million for the people who really need it. After all, we paid millions and millions of dollars for these useless, senseless Bomarcs which we are going to return to somebody in a month or two. Why can we not take the money from this project and use it for people who really need it, the elderly, the blind and the disabled. This, in essence, is what I wanted to say in respect of the general principle, Mr. Speaker; but I should like, if I may, to make a reference or two to some correspondence which I have concerning particular cases. I raised this matter in the house at one stage by way of a question to the minister, but I did not get an answer, so perhaps I should make a reference to it now.

I refer to one instance only, but there are many, in which the provincial department of social welfare of the province of British Columbia curtailed the amount of old age assistance payable to an individual because, and I quote the reason from the form sent to the individual, "old age security to spouse increased from $65 to $75 per month." In effect, what happened—and this happened to many recipients of old age assistance—is that this parliament increased old age pension payments by $10 a month, but the department of social welfare in British Columbia eliminated the increase by reducing the old age assistance payments. We raised this question with the minister. I sent her copies of the particular form, and I sent a letter and also copies of the form to Mr. Wesley Black, minister of social welfare in British Columbia. I asked them to do something about this particular item. I should like to quote the replies which I received, each one of them dated the same day, November 19. The reply I received from Mr. Black in Victoria regarding this matter was as follows, and it refers to an individual case:

As Mrs. Parnell has been granted an increase of $10 per month in old age security pension, it has been necessary to reduce Mr. Parnell's old age assistance allowance by $10 per month in order to keep within the income limits of $1,980 per annum which is the total amount of allowable income set by federal government legislation. To date the federal government has not announced an increase in old age assistance allowances.

On the surface, I considered this to be a factual statement, except that it is passing the buck. The answer I received from the hon. lady is as follows. It bears the same date and it is addressed to me, dear—it reads—

An hon. Member: Dear what?

Mr. Howard: I do not want to mislead either the members of the house or the public, but when the hon. lady and I both sat on this side of the house in opposition, we got to know each other on more than a formal Mr. and Miss basis. Since hon. members are interested in this matter, may I say the letter is addressed in typewriting, "Dear Mr. Howard", and written over the top of that is "Frank". You can see for yourself, therefore, it is almost addressed, "To whom it may concern". The letter reads in part as follows:

Thank you for your letter of November 15, which was similar to a number we have been receiving regarding reductions on certain forms of provincial assistance to senior citizens consequent upon the recent $10 increase in the old age security payments.

You note that the minister says she has received a number of similar complaints. This is not an isolated case.

As you probably gathered from recent statements I have made in the house on this subject, the government is deeply concerned. At the same time, there are limits as to how far we can go in attempting to persuade the provinces—

Note that, Mr. Speaker.

—in attempting to persuade the provinces to let the pensioners themselves have the extra $10 they have been voted. It is a provincial matter and there is little we can do beyond expressing our concern and disappointment.

I, too, express my concern and disappointment, not only at the circumstances in which these people find themselves but at the answer I got from the minister. The minister's letter continues in a friendly tone and one which leads a person to believe that all is not dark and there are some bright spots on the horizon. I quote:

Please be assured, however, that I will personally continue to do everything I can to see that our older people are treated both generously and fairly by all,

Yours sincerely,

I am sure you do not want me to read the name underneath that.

An hon. Member: Read it.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Howard: I have been asked, so I will say it is signed in typewritten form "Judy LaMarsh" and penned over that just plain "Judy".

An hon. Member: Just very attractive Judy.

Mr. Howard: I did not mean that; I meant just ordinary Judy. Notwithstanding this light hearted banter, the fact is that the minister saw fit to pass the buck to the province and say, "I am sorry, I cannot do anything about it." Then the province passed the buck back to the federal government and said, "It is too bad the federal government does not do something about it," and all these people who are recipients of the old age security program, at least in the province of British Columbia, if not in all the provinces, find they have $10 less a month.

These people do not particularly care whose responsibility it is, and do not particularly care which minister thinks it is the responsibility of some other minister. What they are concerned about is that one government has decided to pinch $10 out of their pockets, all because this government did not have the foresight and real concern for these people, to come a long time ago and ask parliament to endorse legislation such as that we have now before us.

While the minister may address her letters "Frank" and sign them "Judy" this does not help Mr. Parnell and Mrs. Parnell. The end result is that in effect they have had $10 a month stolen from them in October and November.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Mr. Howard: I thought the house had been agreeable to proceed and finish the bill.

Mr. Monteith: It is agreed to by this party, at any rate.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 1—Agreements with provinces.

Mr. Howard: I thought the minister was on the point of rising to close the debate on second reading. Perhaps she would relate to the committee the names of the provinces who wanted these increases to come into effect later than December 1.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for trying to spare our correspondence, and I would like to inform him that hereafter I will be careful, in order that he is not further embarrassed, to address him as "Dear Sir."

Mr. Howard: She has broken my heart.

Miss LaMarsh: The information he asked for is something which I think I cannot give. For one thing, I do not remember it offhand, and I do not have it with me. Second, I do not see that it would assist members of the committee in any way to know which provinces did this.

It may be recalled that in answer to a number of questions I stated that this matter would be placed before the provinces. That preliminary discussion was held in September last, and then deferred for a full scale discussion when the premiers of the provinces might be present, and this took place a couple of weeks ago. At that time the subject of discussion was the type of over-all program which looks at need, the type of program which says, "Does this man or woman need public assistance;" and this kind of test is a more modern one, and one which does fill in the gaps which presently exist with regard to categorical programs.

The provinces expressed an interest in exploring future legislation of this kind, and as a result each premier, speaking on behalf of his province, indicated that he was prepared to enter into a series of consultative talks at the civil service level, so that it may take some considerable time to work out a program and recommend it to the federal and provincial governments.

These programs, being shared programs in which the federal government in two cases pays 50 per cent of the cost, and in one case 75 per cent of the cost, can be, and have been in the past on more than one occasion, imposed by the federal government on the provinces as a serious burden, particularly when they come at a point late in the fiscal year of the federal government and the provincial governments, when money has not been allocated in either the federal or provincial treasuries for them.

In the past there has not always been consultation between the provinces and the federal government, and accordingly what has happened is that federal members, in enacting federal legislation, impose an insuperable burden on the provincial governments, because they are then placed in a position that if they do not enact their own legislative changes, in order to keep up with the standard to which the federal government has led the way, they are put in very serious political disability with their own people.

Accordingly we would want to discuss this. We are moving ahead with what we hope will be a better type of program in the future, but admittedly it will take some period of time to bring about agreement on all sides. At all times it has been indicated it was the intention of the federal government, once the future of these programs was ascertained, to move to bring them up to the same level as the old age security payments.

This is the approach which I am sorry my hon. friend from Perth appears to have forgotten was mentioned in the white paper on the Canada pension plan in July, and which was mentioned by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. In the interim, and after consultation with the provinces two weeks ago, the same amount of money, $10 per month, was agreed to by the government and that proposal is now before the committee.

One hon. member inquired why the figure of $120 a month earned income was decided upon. There have been various sums in the past, but it was decided that this amount is sufficient to permit everyone to get the benefit of this $10, and not to suffer by having it cut down, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Skeena. All the provinces asked for a greater exemption of the income ceiling, but I can tell the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency that neither his province nor any other suggested that the income ceiling exemption should be greater than it now is in this bill.

The hon. member for Perth said that this legislation should have been presented earlier. I am at a loss to understand a speech such as that, because he and his colleagues are constantly making speeches about the need for consultation with the provinces in advance of action. We do this, and then my hon. friend complains that we have not gone charging in on our own. He cannot have it both ways. We believe that advance consultation with the provinces on matters that will impose a financial burden upon them is the right way to do it, and this is the reason we approached it in this way.

Of course, it might be possible to back date this program to October 1. It provides some administrative problems, I was informed by some provinces, and some were negative in their approach; but their main consideration was the fiscal one. We asked each province in turn to say at what month they thought we should begin payment, and almost half of them placed it as far ahead as April 1 next. As a result of this legislation when it passes—as I assume it will, since from all sides of the house agreement has been indicated—it will be necessary to amend 36 agreements, as I pointed out, which we have with the provinces. This is only enabling legislation and I cannot guarantee to the members of this committee or to the interested individuals in this country that payment will commence on December 1. This only indicates that the federal government is prepared to start making its share of the contribution as of that date. I assume that any province which finds itself financially incapable of doing so will not be paying this to their blind, disabled or aged persons who are in need of assistance. But we are prepared to meet the cost as of that date.

While I am mentioning the cost, Mr. Chairman, I would point out that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam dealt with this question and was able to figure out, as all of us are, that $4.2 million in a quarter amounts to about $13 million a year. It actually comes to $7.9 million for old age assistance, $3.9 million for disabled persons allowances and $.8 million for blind persons allowances, for a total of $12.6 million in a full year. The cost is admittedly not terrifically burdensome when one looks at the over-all cost of welfare. The benefits to the individual are very great. In the past many applications were turned down, mainly within the disabled persons category, and on this and some other occasions hon. members have mentioned the restrictions under the definition of "disabled". To the department and to each minister in succession this has quickly become a familiar problem, as have the representations on behalf of the blind, or by blind individuals and those who care for their welfare. These representations have pointed out the cost of blindness, which these people feel should merit a special allowance. But surely the members of the committee will see that to avoid discrimination, to avoid pigeon-holing people, the kind of program which I as minister mentioned as far back as July, and which has been mentioned by one or two hon. members today, notably the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that is moving away from sort of making second class citizens of people because they have a specific disability, is a better type of program. It commends itself to me; it commends itself to those provinces which committed themselves, at least as far as the conference was concerned, and it may well be this will be the last time this house is called upon to make amendments to these three specific pieces of legislation.

I should like to make another observation here, Mr. Chairman. As I think all members know, the administration is handled by the provincial governments and not by the federal government. I receive a number of applications from individuals, particularly for disabled pensions, who do not seem to understand that this is not handled from a central office in Ottawa. Perhaps one of the better features of its being handled by the provincial governments is that they are closer to the people and are able to keep a better check on the program. Unfortunately these tests are means tests, a test which has come to be held with certain disapproval by most people in the welfare field in this country; but the movement is from the means test to a more liberal test, and that is a needs test—not of what someone already has, but what it costs them to live in an individual area. My hon. friend from Simcoe made this point, that there are differing costs in differing parts of our country.

It is hoped, Mr. Chairman, that this is perhaps the last step with respect to these three programs, and perhaps in taking this last step it is the first step toward something which may fill a greater need, will make sure that the people of Canada receive better value for their welfare dollar, and will move away from categorizing individuals by virtue of a particular disability.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I will be very, very brief. I would simply like to say that it seems to me the hon. lady was overly sensitive in this respect, because the provinces already have these acts in force; they have legislation in force, they have agreements with the federal government and this is only a matter of increasing the amount. I still claim this should have been done at the same time as the old age security payment was increased. It would then have been optional for the provinces to decide whether they would take action, as it is now. The hon. lady indicated that apparently some provinces do not contemplate bringing this program in for some months. The same situation would have prevailed with regard to October 1, and those who wished to do so would have been in a position to do so.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, there are a great many things one would like to say in this field of social welfare, because it is an extremely important topic and a question with regard to which we in Canada still have a long way to go if we are to keep pace with many of the other nations of the world which have far outstripped us in establishing adequate social security programs. However, I do not propose to go into the matter in detail at this time because, like all other members of the committee, I am extremely anxious that this legislation be passed quickly so that those in receipt of old age assistance, blind persons and disabled persons allowances will receive the $10 increase to which they are entitled and will receive it at the end of this month.

Therefore what I wish to say I shall capsule very quickly into four brief points. First I would like to support wholeheartedly the suggestion of my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the government and we in this house must start thinking in terms of a comprehensive social security program for Canada. The patchwork system we have now leaves a great many gaps in the social security program. Anyone who has taken even a cursory glance at the social security systems in the Scandinavian countries, western Europe and Great Britain will know that only with a comprehensive program can you be sure there is not a great deal of suffering and a great deal of privation. We have a social security program that goes forward in fits and starts, depending on public pressure and the ability of certain groups to organize and express their disapproval. But the smaller groups which suffer from the lack of an adequate social security program are hardly ever heard, and the result is that they are often neglected and forgotten.

So I do wish to press for the early consideration of an adequate social security program that will be comprehensive in scope and will really make Canada a humanitarian, welfare society.

Second, I was pleased to hear the minister say that her department is giving thought to a new approach to these shared programs; that instead of a means test we are going to begin thinking in terms of a needs test. It is possible to measure income, but this does not measure need.

The hon. member for Simcoe East talked about the cost of living in different parts of the country, but in addition to that problem one also has to keep in mind that there is a difference in the cost of living for two people living in the same community. One person may require expensive drugs such as insulin or aureomycin or may need a special diet. One person may live under certain conditions as a result of which he requires more assistance than another person who is enjoying comparatively good health. Therefore, if we are going to keep up to date in the kind of welfare program which has become commonplace in the western world, we have to reorganize these shared programs so as to provide for a needs test basis rather than a means test basis.

This is particularly true in the case of disabled persons. I am not going to take the time of the committee to remind hon. members of what everyone knows, that the present Disabled Persons Act is so rigid in its regulations that it really applies only to persons who are almost totally helpless and completely incapacitated. Yet there are thousands of people in Canada who are unemployable to all intents and purposes. They are not completely incapacitated but they are incapacitated in so far as it is possible for them to earn a living. A needs test could be applied to people of this kind. Probably they do not need as much as a person who is bedridden, but they do need sufficient to enable them to live in decency and comfort without having to be treated as relief recipients.

The third point I wish to make is to suggest to the minister that consideration be given to doing what the Scandinavian countries have done for a number of years, namely tie pensions to the cost of living index. We tend to sit back, let the cost of living go up, and when it has risen so far that it has eaten up all of the increase we gave these recipients we then boost the pension. A d.b.s. daily bulletin which I received a short time ago shows that the cost of living in the last two months has risen to 134, an increase of six tenths of 1 percentage point, making it the highest cost of living in our history. It has gone up 2.1 percentage points in the past 12 months. This means that as the cost of living goes up the buying capacity of these pensions declines. I think there is a good deal to be said for tying these pensions to the cost of living so that without legislation the department would be able to adjust pensions automatically every quarter or biannually in conformity with the rising cost of living.

The last point I want to make is to join my voice with those of almost every other member who has spoken in urging the minister to give further consideration to the effective date of this legislation. As has been pointed out, these shared programs are on a means test basis which means that those who are recipients have virtually no other income. They are almost completely dependant on the payments made under this legislation. If there are any groups that need the $10 a month increase certainly they are the old age assistance pensioners, the blind pensioners and the recipients of disabled persons allowances. It seems, therefore, most ironic that they should be deprived of the increase for two months when it has been given to old age security pensioners, all of whom are not in the same necessitous circumstances as are those in these groups.

The minister takes refuge in the fact that she had to consult with the provinces and that the provinces indicated that December 1 was about as far back as they were prepared to go. I am not quarrelling about consulting with the provinces. I am suggesting, however, that the government has known for some months that it was going to raise the old age security pension by $10 per month and that before the legislation was brought into the house there was no reason why the provinces could not have been approached by letter asking them if they were prepared to agree to a $10 a month increase in the shared programs, so that all persons coming under these programs could enjoy the $10 a month increase at the same time. The minister would then have been able to bring down all the legislation at the same time and treat all these recipients alike.

I object very strongly to the fact that again and again these most needy groups are cheated out of two months increase simply because they have to wait while the federal and provincial governments make up their minds.

Mr. Monteith: Could I ask the hon. member a question? When did this happen before? He has said this has happened again and again. When did it happen before?

Mr. Douglas: I would not want to say without checking the record but my recollection is that in 1951 there was a gap.

Mr. Monteith: I just want to make it clear that there was not in 1957 or 1962.

Mr. Douglas: The hon. member for Perth is quite right. There was not in 1957 or 1962. My recollection is that there was in 1951, but I would want to check the record before being categorical. At that time I had some responsibility in the matter and I remember the battle we waged. To the best of my recollection there was a gap then between the time when the old age security increase became effective, and the increase in the categorical shared program pensions became effective.

I am simply saying it is not good enough to have this gap between these two programs. If there is to be any gap at all it could more easily be justified the other way, but certainly these groups for whom we are legislating now should not be cheated out of two months pension increase just because the federal and provincial governments did not get together early enough to act promptly and to treat all pension groups alike.

I feel perfectly certain that if the provinces had been told at the federal-provincial conference that the government of Canada was going to introduce legislation making the increase in old age assistance pensions, blind pensions and disabled persons allowances effective as of October 1, and it would leave it to the provinces to come in when they chose to do so, most of the provinces would have elected to come in as of October 1. I do not think there is any doubt about it. I wish that the government had taken its courage in its hands and simply made that perfectly clear to the provincial governments.

If the minister and the government are adamant and are not prepared to make October 1 the effective date, the very least they can do is to make the increase in allowable income retroactive to October 1 in order to deal with the kind of case referred to by the hon. member for Skeena where an individual has had her old age assistance pension reduced because her spouse has had an increase in the old age security pension. This would at least remove that kind of disparity. I offer that as a very mild concession but I hope the minister will go much further. Before the legislation passes through the committee I hope the minister will agree to change the effective date to October 1, and then use her very considerable influence with the provincial governments to make their payments retroactive to October 1. Some of the provinces may not be prepared to do so, but I hazard the guess that the great majority of them will welcome this move and will be prepared to pay their share of the pension back to October 1. I hope the minister will give this very careful consideration.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Coming into force.

Mr. Knowles: Is the minister going to respond, as I am sure in her heart she would like to, to the appeals which have been made to change the effective date to October instead of December? If it were in order for us on this side of the house to move an amendment to that effect we would do so, but as it involves the expenditure of public money we could hardly move such an amendment. But the minister could. Will she?

Mr. Barnett: I am sure many hon. members would be quite prepared to give the minister their solemn assurance at this time that, if she does accede to this request, when we return to our home provinces we will be quite prepared to deal with any objections which might be raised in our own areas to this particular move.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I must say I have a great deal of sympathy with the request made by the last three hon. members who have spoken. But it must be appreciated that after the discussions in September, the week-long federal-provincial conference, and the consideration given to it by the Queen's ministers, this decision was taken in light of all the information available. It is not within my province now, despite the matters brought forward by my hon. friends, to alter that decision. Therefore, most regretfully, I must say I am not prepared to sponsor such an amendment.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, could I just answer a question put to me by the hon. member for Perth a few moments ago. I have just checked the facts. In 1952 all the pensions came in at the same time, effective on January 1, 1952. I was in error when I suggested that at that time there was a difference in dates.

Mr. Monteith: Then I do not suppose there has been any time when they actually lagged, up until this present period.

Mr. Douglas: I believe that is correct.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could point out that under the auspices of the Department of National Health and Welfare a publication was presented which states year by year and date by date precisely what the hon. member for Perth has just contended, that up until this present time there has never been a lag. Whenever old age security has been increased and has come into effect, at the same time old age assistance, blind persons allowances and disabled persons allowances have been increased accordingly. This is a new venture, and it is unfortunate that it has to take place under the jurisdiction of the hon. lady because she is such a kind, gentle and humane soul, and I hope this is not her parting act as minister.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Knowles: Now, by leave.

Mr. Monteith: Next sitting of the house. I should like to point out that in 1962 when the same bills were put through, third reading was given on the twelfth of the month and the increases were made payable as of the first of the month. Therefore, tomorrow being the eleventh, I should like to suggest it receive third reading then.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Next sitting of the house? Agreed. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, does the house really want to proceed with private members' business at this late hour?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Aiken: There are a number of very important private bills on the paper and we are hopeful that they can be put through by six o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then the house will now proceed to private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. S-45, respecting the Executive Board of The Canada Conference of the Evangelical Lutheran Augustana Synod of North America.—Mr. Ormiston.

Bill No. S-47, to incorporate Royal General Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace).

Bill No. S-48, respecting The Northern Life Assurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Morison.

THE CANADA NORTH-WEST LAND COMPANY (LIMITED)

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-49, respecting the Canada North-west Land Company (Limited).

Mr. Howard: I would appreciate it very much if the sponsor would give some outline of the purposes of the bill.

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Speaker, this company is an old company. Originally a land company, it has now sold practically all its land holdings. I believe it now holds only a quarter section of land and a number of mineral leases. Over the years its operations have gradually changed, till at the present time its operations are more those of an investment company rather than those of a land company. The amendments now proposed are for the purpose of making its charter consistent with the business it is now carrying on. Its objects are being changed and its capital structure is being changed to conform with its present operations. All the directors and officials are residents of Canada and this is a Canadian owned company.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

MORTGAGE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-50, to incorporate the Mortgage Insurance Company of Canada.

Private Bills

Mr. Fisher: I wonder if the sponsor of the bill would tell us something about the company which is to be incorporated.

Mr. Cameron (High Park): This is quite a long statement but I shall try to condense it. This is to provide for the incorporation of a company to transact the business of mortgage insurance. The company is intended to operate entirely outside the field of the National Housing Act, that is to say, in the conventional mortgage field.

The National Housing Act permits approved lenders to lend up to 95 per cent of approved lending value of new construction. Existing legislation permits institutional lenders in the conventional field to lend up to only 66⅔ per cent of approved lending value of existing and new houses. There is at present an acute need for high ratio mortgage loans in the existing housing market.

The relative unavailability of high ratio loans for existing houses has resulted in a profusion of second mortgages with high interest rates, vicious practices, and extortion as revealed in recent public inquiries. This situation has resulted in certain pressures to make public funds available in this field, for example from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

The present bill is the answer of private enterprise. It represents the response of private enterprise to the need for remedial action in this field.

The plan, which is the product of long study, contemplates a joint approach by institutional lenders such as life insurance companies, mortgage companies and trust companies, on the one hand, and mortgage investment companies on the other. The institutional lender will continue to lend up to 66⅔ per cent of the approved lending value, and a mortgage investment company will lend up to an additional 16⅔ per cent of the approved lending value. The two together will make available up to 83⅓ per cent of approved lending value, for example, five sixths thereof, and will do so at reasonable interest rates. I may say the loans will be insured; it is mortgage insurance.

I think that with this short explanation the hon. member will understand the purpose of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

GOOD NEWS BROADCASTING ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

On the order:

House in committee of the whole on Bill S-15, an act to incorporate the Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada (as amended).—Mr. Enns.

[Mr. Cameron (High Park).]

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to the sponsor of this bill and he has kindly agreed to let it stand on the understanding that it retains its position on the order paper. I have already spoken to the acting house leader and I believe this is agreeable to the government.

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, I agree to giving precedence to items three to seven, but I request, by unanimous consent, that item No. 2 follows item No. 7 on the order paper.

Order stands.

[Later:]

On the order:

House in committee of the whole on Bill S-15, an act to incorporate the Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada (as amended).—Mr. Enns.

Mr. MacNaught: I wonder if the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa (Mr. Enns) would consent to allowing item No. 156 to be called? It is a similar bill to the last, it will only take a moment, and I think it is desirable that it be passed so that it may be disposed of this session.

Mr. Enns: I am quite agreeable to following the conciliatory mood of the house this afternoon and agreeing to the request of the hon. gentleman.

Order stands.

[Later:]

House in committee on Bill No. S-15 to incorporate the Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada—Mr. Enns—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Deachman: When this bill came before the committee in the first instance there were a number of considerations which arose in consequence of which it was sent back to the committee for further examination. When the bill was again before the committee for further study, additional witnesses were called and additional information was obtained. Following this further scrutiny, certain amendments were made. These appear, I believe in Votes and Proceedings of December 9.

However, despite these amendments and despite the testimony given by those who were called to give evidence before the committee in respect to this bill, a number of features remain which, in my view, warrant the careful scrutiny of this house, and it is for that reason I rise at the present time.

First of all, what is the Good News Broadcasting Association? I am not yet satisfied, though I listened carefully to the witness from the United States who appeared before us on behalf of the Good News Broadcasting Corporation of the United States, the parent company, one might say, which is associated with Good News Broadcasting in Canada—I am not convinced that we are actually dealing here with an association. Rather, I believe we are dealing with a proprietorship of one or several individuals; that the so-called Canadian association is not truly an association but, in fact, an extension of a United States franchise.

I might point out that no evidence was brought before the committee to show, for example, that those associated with Good News Broadcasting in Canada are in any way an association with an elected body—elected members with a congregation, for instance, as a church might have a congregation.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Aiken: In view of the fact that some 45 minutes of the private members' hour were spent discussing other matters I wonder whether the Chair would permit the hon. member to complete his remarks, in which case we might get this bill through.

Mr. Deachman: I think it was understood on both sides of the house that time usually taken up by private members' business would be shortened for the purpose of dealing with the legislation which preceded these items. I see it is six o'clock.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

CANADIAN WORLD EXHIBITION CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SITE, NUMBER OF DIRECTORS, ETC.

The house resumed from Monday, December 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Deschatelets (for the Prime Minister) for the second reading of Bill No. C-120, to amend the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Last evening when the motion for second reading of this bill was proposed, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) raised a point of order to the effect that since this bill contained money provisions it should have been initiated by means of a resolution based upon the recommendation of the Governor General. During the course of the discussion reference was made to a number of citations in Beauchesne's fourth edition and also to section 54 of the British North America Act.

I do not intend to discuss the merits of these citations except to say that, meanwhile, I have had an opportunity not only of reviewing these citations but also examining the provisions of the bill. It seems to me that there is at least one money provision in this bill. Section 3 of the bill seeks to increase the number of directors from 12 to 14. Section 5, subsection 2 of the original statute, provides for payment by the corporation to the directors of reasonable travel and living expenses. The financial provisions of the original bill were as follows:

> The Minister of Finance, at the request of the corporation, may, out of the consolidated revenue fund, pay to the corporation by way of grant such amounts as are required for the conduct of the business of the corporation but the aggregate of all amounts paid to the corporation under this section shall not exceed $20 million.

It is obvious that the increase in the number of directors, requiring additional expenditures out of public funds for the payment of the additional directors' travelling and living expenses will not affect the total sum of $20 million authorized by existing legislation. However, the new act will change the conditions attached to the spending of these moneys by the original act, and to this extent the bill now before the house would appear to be a money bill.

I have, of course, given serious thought to the arguments advanced briefly by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) to the effect that the proposed legislation does not require to be preceded by a resolution because there is existing legislation authorizing the total capital fund out of which will be paid the additional expenditures contemplated by the amending bill. May's sixteenth edition, at page 754, has the following comments which would perhaps fortify the minister in his views:

> The question often arises whether a proposal for expenditure or for increased expenditure is not already covered by some general authorization. The test for determining this question in the case of a substantive proposal, that is, a provision in a bill, as introduced, is a comparison with existing law. The comparison of provisions in a bill with the law on the subject, as it exists, may show that, while such provisions undoubtedly involve expenditure, the power to incur such expenditure is covered by general powers conferred by statute.

Many examples of expenditure which, as being covered by pre-existing legal powers, is not treated as a charge are given on page 761. This standard of reference is readily applicable in the case of the large and increasing number of bills which are, in terms, amendments of previous statutes on the same subject. But in other cases considerable research is necessary to determine whether a provision which obviously involves expenditure is a "new and distinct" charge. The application of this test has given a somewhat uncertain answer to one difficult question—whether a provision for expenditure which proposes to finance that expenditure out of funds provided by statute for another purpose is or is not a "new and distinct" charge.

Undoubtedly, there are a number of precedents cited in May's which might be considered to support the view that the proposed increased expenditure in the bill before us is covered by the general authorization in the existing law to the extent that a resolution is not required at this stage.

However, these precedents which come from the House of Commons of the United Kingdom are at variance with our own parliamentary practice. This may stem from the fact that the British usage in this regard is based on precedent, while we are bound in Canada by the constitutional provision of section 54 of the British North America Act, which is restated in standing order 61 of the standing orders of the House of Commons.

It must also be pointed out that the precedents referred to in May's are not recent decisions and at page 763 of the same edition it is stated in part as follows:

> Recent practice makes it doubtful whether certain older decisions, exempting on technical grounds charges from the requirements of financial procedure, would now be upheld.

Later on pages 763-764, it is stated, in part, as follows:

> The examples given below are precedents which require due consideration. It is doubtful if they would be now followed. Indeed in 1928 a bill which proposed to substitute a new purpose for an existing statutory grant was ruled out of order because it had not been introduced on a resolution recommended by the crown.
> The exemption of these cases from the provisions of the standing order was made on technical grounds and seems hardly within the spirit of the rules. It is true that in the cases given below the proposals emanated from ministers of the crown, and consequently the principle of the financial initiative of the government was not in substance abrogated. But from the abandonment of the machinery for enforcing the principle it would follow that the proposal of such methods of financing expenditure would be equally open to private members, and even in the cases referred to there would have been no ground for refusing amendments offered by private members for increasing the proposed expenditure.

May I now refer to section (1) of citation 260, Beauchesne's fourth edition, which is as follows:

> The tendency has been in the Canadian House of Commons, for the past 25 years, to rule out all motions purporting to give the government a direct order to do a thing which cannot be done without the expenditure of money. Our Journals are full of precedents to this effect.

The principle enunciated in section 54 of the British North America Act and in standing order 61 is expressed in Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 355, in the following terms:

> Bills involving expenditure of public money or taxation, and all measures involving a charge upon the people must be preceded by a resolution.

It should be noted however that a resolution is required not only when an amendment seeks to increase the amount previously approved by parliament, but also if it changes the modality and conditions of the grant authorized by the original legislation.

Citation 246 (3) of Beauchesne's fourth edition reads as follows:

> The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications.

In my opinion, the bill before the house seeks to alter the conditions relating to the expenditure of the funds previously authorized by parliament, and should thus be considered as a money bill, which can only be introduced by a minister of the crown after a proper resolution.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, my face is not as red as it would have been if you had made your ruling last night because, after a certain amount of reflection, I came to the conclusion that the rather tentative views I expressed last night might be found by Your Honour not to warrant justification. The fact that you have upheld the initiative of the crown cannot be altogether displeasing to those who sit on the treasury benches. I think the best thing I can do in the circumstances—and in anticipation I have spoken to my right hon. friend who is the sponsor of the bill—is to put a motion on the order paper in the normal way, and when it is proceeded with in the normal way we will take on the bill. Meanwhile I would appreciate it if you would call the next item of business.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall this bill be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does this bill now on the order paper stand, or does it get reintroduced after the house has passed the resolution which is now to be placed on the order paper?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am quite willing to let the Chair decide that without argument.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am informed that there is a precedent, dating back to 1912 or 1913, where the procedure which is now proposed by the Secretary of State was followed.

Mr. Nowlan: It was a good government then.

Mr. Knowles: The Secretary of State was not here then.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the bill stand as agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPOINTMENT OF AUDITORS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-121, respecting the appointment of auditors for national railways.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Auditors.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, with regard to section 1, I would have a few questions to direct to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith). Since he is not here and since the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) is indicating that he is replacing him, I will put my questions to him.

First, who were the C.N.R. auditors before those we are appointing now and second, until what time did the previous auditors assume those functions?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance is better informed than I.

Mr. Benson: I could perhaps explain this briefly. As I understand the situation, from the inception of independent auditors for the C.N.R.—I believe it was about 1923—to the early 'thirties, George A. Touche and Company were auditors of this firm. Then in the early 'thirties, at the time when the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett was elected prime minister, Clarkson, Gordon and Company were nominated as auditors of the Canadian National.

When a Liberal government was re-elected a few years later the audit was then reverted to George A. Touche and Company and they carried on until, I believe, 1958 at which time a Mr. J. A. de Lalanne was appointed as auditor to Canadian National Railways. This continued until last year. Now, Mr. de Lalanne was a partner in the firm of McDonald, Currie and Company, and last year the audit was put in the name it is now in, in the C.N.R. finance bill which is to come before the house, appointing the auditors for last year when the audit was transferred to McDonald, Currie and Company.

This bill is simply to revert the audit to the auditors who have been auditors of the C.N.R. for the entire period it has had public accountants as auditors, except for two brief periods.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance if the former accountants and auditors are being replaced because their services were not satisfactory.

[Text]

Mr. Benson: I think that the government has decided that the firm which has done the audit of the C.N.R. during most of the period it has had independent auditors is quite well qualified to carry on with the job. I would not like to imply political patronage at any time in this entire operation of the C.N.R. Nevertheless, the firm of George A. Touche and Company have always been the auditors of the C.N.R., except for the two brief periods I mentioned, and it is the belief of the government that the audit should revert to the firm that has traditionally done the auditing.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask—

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I would have another question to direct to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance—

The Chairman: Order. I recognized the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather). I shall recognize the hon. member for Lapointe next.

[Text]

Mr. Fairweather: I want to ask the parliamentary secretary whether he would not agree that this is the Enterprise post office formula on a larger scale?

Mr. Benson: I think it is not nearly as near the Enterprise post office formula as was the appointment made in 1958.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, auditors are appointed here to the C.N.R. This is therefore, among others, quite an important function concerning the control of the C.N.R.

Now, when looking over the list of the C.N.R. board of directors, one finds that among the president and 17 vice presidents, there is only one French Canadian. On this very matter, I was asking the Minister of Transport a question the other day concerning—

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps the hon. member for Lapointe could indicate to the Chair how his comments tie in with the bill now before the committee, which concerns exclusively the appointment of auditors for the C.N.R.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, you know very well what may involve—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Gregoire: —the appointment of auditors for the C.N.R. It is not because some individual on the other side of the house shouts "order" that one is out of order.

You know very well that we are discussing the appointment of a person who will act as an auditor—

The Chairman: Order. I should like to ask the hon. member for Lapointe not to go beyond the bill now before the committee.

Mr. Gregoire: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am speaking to the bill now before us. As I said, parliament is being asked to appoint an auditor for the C.N.R. This is just one of the functions in the Canadian National.

Each time somebody is appointed to the Canadian National, such an appointment is within the general frame of the present debate. I submit that my remarks are completely within the limits of the debate on the bill.

When, as I said a moment ago, I note that out of the 18 directors of the Canadian National, there is only one French Canadian, and that when there is a new appointment to the Canadian National, it is not a French Canadian who is appointed, are we not entitled to protest? Every new opportunity which arises to appoint a French Canadian is disregarded.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say this. The appointments are made without parliament knowing about it, without the hon. members knowing about it. On the other hand, when this bill, or any other bill, is submitted to the house, when our approval is sought we have the right to stand up and say: when the government appoints people, it does not take into consideration—and it did not in the past—the fact that we are living in a bilingual country, that both races, both cultures, English and French, have the right to be recognized, and consequently that French Canadians should be appointed to high positions within the crown companies, and not exclusively our fellow citizens, heirs to the other great cultural heritage of this country.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

Mr. Chairman, I submit that my remarks are in order. I request that they be taken into consideration in the appointment provided for in this bill.

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Scott: Surely, Mr. Chairman, you will protect us from these wild, irresponsible, demogogic statements that are being made by the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on the point of order.

I know we often deal with the French fact. That may not agree with certain members. But I would remind these members, who are perhaps the ones who speak from morning till night when agriculture or western wheat is discussed, that we do not complain. On the contrary, we encourage them to speak about their problems in the House of Commons. Should there be in the house western members who wish to speak about wheat, we shall approve them.

Each member speaks about the problems in which he is interested. As far as we are concerned, we speak about those in which we are interested. I think the hon. member is ill-advised to interrupt as he did a moment ago.

The Chairman: Order, please—

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Lapointe cannot make remarks in that respect, since they refer to the appointment of members of the board of directors of the C.N.R. However, I believe that when he complains, for instance, to follow his line of thought, that generally the government does not name French Canadians to certain positions, he comes closer, to a certain extent, to the bill under study.

On the other hand, I would ask him to link his remarks more specifically to the particular appointments we are considering at the present time.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, my remarks are connected, by way of consequence, to the appointment of the auditors for the C.N.R. since that appointment forms part of the general picture. It is through that deduction that it relates to the bill under consideration.

In my opinion, it is not demagogic for a member to rise in this house and claim part of what belongs to his own people in a country where one would like understanding to prevail. That is how I connect my remarks, because understanding will exist only when appointments are made to ensure that the two great nations that make up our country will co-operate in the administration of public business, the various departments and crown corporations.

That is why I protest, not against any specific appointment, because I trust the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, I recognize the competence of those accountants and their honesty when auditing the books of the C.N.R.

The only thing I deplore is precisely—

[Text]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, will the hon. member permit a question? I was wondering whether the hon. member is aware that there are a number of French Canadians in the firm of auditors that is being appointed for the C.N.R. audit. In fact, I would think there are as many French Canadians in this firm as there are in any major accounting firm in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, may I make a comment?

I should not like to leave unchallenged—

The Chairman: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order? The hon. member for Lapointe still has the floor.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, there may be several French Canadian accountants in that firm. I was asking for information about that a while ago and I am only too happy to get some. Besides, I pointed out that those appointed as public accountants are qualified, and the protest I raise tonight is not against that firm of accountants. I do want to say that, but it is rather against the fact that we do not appoint a reasonable proportion of French Canadian people within the federal civil service and the crown corporations.

It is on that point that I raise my objection.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I should like to repeat a suggestion that I think I first made 15 or 20 years ago. It was rejected then and was rejected several times after I first made it. It seems to me that tonight it is more appropriate than ever. My suggestion can be put in the form of a question. Why not have the Auditor General of Canada do the work of auditing the accounts of Canadian National Railways?

Mr. Teillet: Is this still the point of order?

Mr. Knowles: No. Is there a point of order? I was making a speech. Just because I am on my feet does not mean there is a point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a reasonable assumption.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I thought the Chair a moment ago pointed out to me that we were discussing a point of order and asked whether my remarks were on it, and they were not. I thought I had the floor then.

The Chairman: No, I am afraid not. I recognized the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I do not blame my hon. friend and neighbour from St. Boniface for being confused. When I made the suggestion some years ago that the Auditor General might do this job, there was never at that time any comment such as we have heard this evening, involving the use of the word "patronage". We proposed that the job should be done by him because we thought the Auditor General of Canada could do the job for us. After all, he is responsible to this parliament. But because the banter back and forth this evening over the changing of the firm of auditors has raised questions about patronage, it seems to me a good way to remove any such allegation would be by having this job done, not by a firm that might be friendly to this party or the other, but by the Auditor General appointed by the parliament of Canada. It seems to me also it would meet the point raised by the hon. member for Lapointe, because I understand that in the office of the Auditor General there are about 180 employees and I am sure a reasonable proportion of them are English speaking and a reasonable proportion are French speaking. I believe that not only does this suggestion made good sense and good economics, but it would do away with this query about patronage. It would also meet the contention of the hon. member for Lapointe, if the government would consider having this audit carried out by the Auditor General of Canada.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may make some brief remarks in this connection. I have some sympathy with the hon. member's suggestion with regard to having the Auditor General audit the accounts of the C.N.R. However, there are several corporations—and I think the minutes of the proceedings of the public account's committee of last week would indicate the number of audits—which are carried out by other than the Auditor General. I think there is a reasonably good reason for this, in that the Auditor General has consistently had a tremendous problem in maintaining enough staff to carry out the work he has to undertake. I believe that in the public accounts committee over the past several years we have been trying to find ways in which the Auditor General can more easily obtain staff. This has now been solved to some degree, I believe. Nevertheless I think it would be utterly out of the question for the Auditor General to attempt to undertake an audit of the magnitude of that of the C.N.R. in the forthcoming year, in any circumstances. I will bring the suggestion of the hon. member to the attention of the government.

[Translation]

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words in order to take up the remarks of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) concerning western Canada.

I merely want to remind him that in the west, besides wheat, there are French Canadian groups that have many problems and often suffer because of the irresponsible words of the hon. member for Lapointe and other members of his group.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Gregoire: I rise on a point of order. After what the minister has just said—

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, there is no point of order.

Mr. Gregoire: I rise on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member for Lapointe rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Gregoire: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lambert: The hon. member had better make sure there actually is a question of privilege.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) has described our remarks as irresponsible. I wonder whether his French Canadian colleagues do not really find his own remarks of tonight irresponsible, because the demands we make are as much for his fellow citizens as for our own—

The Chairman: Order. The question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Lapointe is not justified.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with your ruling. There was no question of privilege and I am surprised that attempts are being made to keep us from speaking by raising so-called questions of privilege.

On another point I would ask the parliamentary secretary if it is not a case of there being more friends in one firm than in the other, because both of them are national firms and have representatives in the major cities where the Canadian National operates. Since he cannot show that there is a greater degree of competence in the one firm than in the other, why does he not face up to the situation and say that the government prefers the one firm to the other?

Mr. Benson: I think it is fairly obvious, and I made the point in my earlier statement that the C.N.R. audit is reverting to the status it had originally in that it is being given to the firm that has carried it on almost continuously since the C.N.R. has had independent auditors, except for the period when Mr. de Lalanne was appointed. I did not mention it earlier and I will try not to mention Mr. de Lalanne's position when he was appointed auditor in 1958. The audit is now simply reverting to the firm that has carried out the C.N.R. audit continuously except for a period when Clarkson, Gordon and Company did it in the 'thirties. Would one say that that firm was friendly to the party that is now in opposition? I really do not know, but the Clarkson firm was appointed by the Bennett government in the 'thirties. Mr. de Lalanne was appointed in 1957 or 1958 and it was then turned over to his firm of McDonald, Currie and Company. It is now simply going back now to the firm that has done the C.N.R. audit almost continuously.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, I just want to ask the parliamentary secretary what amount of fees is involved in an appointment of this kind. How much would this firm of accountants receive in fees?

Mr. Benson: It is $100,000 or $125,000 for the total audit. I believe it is $100,000, but I am subject to correction.

Mr. Knowles: Could the Auditor General not engage a few people for that amount of money?

Mr. Benson: About 15 chartered accountants.

Mr. Scott: I have been listening to the parliamentary secretary closely and I did not hear the reasons he gave for dissatisfaction with the present firm.

Mr. Benson: There is no dissatisfaction with the present firm. I would say that the firms are equally good. I do not want to dwell upon the appointment of Mr. de Lalanne in 1958. I did not want to point out that he was a candidate for a particular political party prior to his appointment. The audit is simply reverting to the firm that has traditionally done it.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, following several remarks on the part of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), concerning the appointment of new auditors for the C.N.R., to my mind he has not been very clear yet. I should like to get more particulars, if possible, as to the actual reasons for such a change every time a new government is elected.

In the case of a company, there is no question of having a new auditor every year or every four years. The president may change, but the auditor does not, except for special reasons.

Just because the government changes, it does not follow that the auditor should. Presidents as well as directors of companies are replaced, but auditors are not unless there are very serious reasons.

That is the reason of my request to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance.

[Text]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member I would say that the auditors of the C.N.R. are appointed annually as is the case in most commercial firms. The appointment comes up annually and in the case of the C.N.R. the parliament of Canada has the right of appointment and may choose the auditors to be appointed.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance if it is not correct that the auditors were changed during the last five years? One firm was changed to another. Is this not in keeping with the practice which has been followed during the years that the C.N.R. has been coming before parliament?

Mr. Benson: In answer I would say that the auditing of the C.N.R. has changed, as I indicated earlier, and this is simply a change that has taken place.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. de Lalanne is being changed for another firm.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, can the parliamentary secretary state whether the minister or the government received representations by members of the firm or other persons in favour of the appointment of this firm as auditors of the C.N.R.?

Mr. Benson: Not to my knowledge, and I think I can assure the house that there was no approach by the particular firm.

Mr. Martineau: I said by the particular firm or other persons.

Mr. Nowlan: There was none.

Mr. Benson: I really do not know about other persons but I would say this particular firm did not approach the government.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the reticence on the part of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. I think most of us know what the problem was with Mr. de Lalanne. Obviously he was a percentage man. He was not carrying out the audit. He was hardly in a position even to supervise it. He was contracting it out and it was an unsatisfactory arrangement. It was quite obvious it was unsatisfactory to anybody who saw Mr. de Lalanne's performance before the sessional committee that deals with this matter, and I think that the government should be congratulated on changing the auditor.

The only question in my mind is why the government did not give McDonald, Currie and Company, who have developed experience, the opportunity to discuss whether they would be willing to take on the job. It seems to me they are a firm of such size and scope that if they were given the contract there would be no question of this business of diddling back and forth on the basis of whether the Grits were in the swing or the Conservatives were in the swing. If the hon. gentleman really wants to know the main reason, that is it. If he thinks I am wrong I would ask him to go back and look at the evidence before the sessional committee, not so much last year but the year before and the year before that. If he does he will see how unsatisfactory it is to have someone as auditor appear before a parliamentary committee who has really not been intimately in touch with the audit which has been carried out by another organization entirely. I think the parliamentary secretary will have to agree with my analysis and I cannot see why he has to be so circumspect.

Mr. Monteith: Just before the parliamentary secretary replies, may I say that the remark of the hon. member for Port Arthur that the previous auditor was a percentage man is completely unwarranted. True, he may have had other assistance in respect of completing the audit of the C.N.R., but I certainly believe that remark is completely unwarranted.

Mr. Benson: I also rise simply to say that I have no reason to agree with the statement of the hon. member for Port Arthur. In my statement to the house there was no question of the professional competence of the present auditors of the C.N.R., McDonald, Currie and Company. They are auditors of the C.N.R. subject to approval in the railway financing bill which is coming before the house. There is no question of the professional competence of Mr. de Lalanne, who is a chartered accountant, or of McDonald, Currie and Company or of Ross, Touche and Company. The reason the change is being made is that Touche and Company are the traditional auditors of the C.N.R.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, is that sufficient reason for changing the auditors, because the other one has been there and it is more or less a tradition? I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance to explain the statement that it is something of a tradition in the auditing of the C.N.R. books that there should be a change. If one is doing the job properly, why not keep him?

Mr. Benson: There has been no long experience with the present firm, who are auditors of the C.N.R. for the year 1963. This is the first year of this firm's appointment as auditors. We are not questioning the professional integrity or competence of either of the firms, but the firm presently doing the C.N.R. audit has had the appointment for only one year. The technique of auditing the C.N.R. books has been built up by the firm of George A. Touche and Company, which is now Touche, Ross and Company, over a great many years, and we believe they are perfectly competent. Without in any way questioning the competence of the other auditors, perhaps this firm, under these circumstances, is the best firm to perform the audit.

Mr. Langlois: A supplementary question. Was the auditing of the C.N.R. done well last year?

Mr. Benson: It is not finished yet.

Mr. Langlois: How can you change them if it is not finished?

Mr. Benson: The audit for 1963 is not finished. McDonald, Currie and Company were the auditors for 1963 and the audit is not finished. It will be coming forward to the house in due course. We are appointing auditors for 1964, if the hon. member looks at the bill.

Mr. Langlois: I agree you are naming them for 1964, but you said a minute ago the others had done a good job. Would it not be better to wait for the report, and if the auditor has done a good job to keep him?

Mr. Benson: The auditors have to be appointed in advance. It is a continuing audit which starts on January 1. The auditors should be appointed before the beginning of the year. The audit of the C.N.R. is a tremendously large task.

[Translation]

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance whether he expects the deficit of the C.N.R. to be smaller following the change of auditors.

[Text]

I should like to ask whether the deficit of the C.N.R. will be reduced because they are auditors?

Mr. Benson: Being a professional auditor prior to my coming to parliament, I wish I could say that auditors did decrease a deficit merely by being auditors.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): I should like to put a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. Could he inform the house whether this new attitude of the government means that the auditors will be changed every year so that every reputable accounting firm may have its turn? That seems to be the government's new policy.

[Text]

Mr. Benson: The auditing of the C.N.R. is an annual appointment.

Mr. Caouette: I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary this question. According to what he has just said, this firm has been hired, or their services have been retained, by the government of Canada for many years prior to 1957. They were changed in 1957 and the de Lalanne firm was appointed when the Conservative government took over. Now the Liberals are back in power and they are returning to the same company. Do you not think, Mr. Chairman, that this is purely and simply political patronage on the part of the government?

Mr. Benson: I would say not. There are really very few firms in Canada of a size which would enable them to carry out the audit of the C.N.R. Speaking offhand I would say there are about four firms. Clarkson, Gordon and Company is one of these firms. They were the auditors of the C.N.R. in the thirties. Touche, Ross and Company are another firm capable of carrying out an audit which is on a nation-wide basis. McDonald Currie and Company are carrying out the audit at the present time for 1963. They are a large firm. There are really very few other firms which could handle an audit of this size.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I see that the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Guay) would like to have the floor. Since he has not had a single opportunity to speak since the beginning of the session, I should like you to recognize him.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary has given us the history of the appointment of these various firms of auditors across the years. There is one stage in that history which seems to have escaped me. I understand how Clarkson, Gordon were appointed. I understand how George A. Touche were appointed. I understand how Mr. de Lalanne was appointed. But how did McDonald, Currie get appointed for 1963?

Mr. Benson: Mr. de Lalanne, as I understand the situation, was a partner in the firm of McDonald, Currie and Company; I assume I am correct in this. As I understand the situation, Mr. de Lalanne in 1963, at a time when this government was not in power, felt that the job was too onerous for him to carry on under his person and it was turned over to the firm of McDonald, Currie and Company.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps I will satisfy my hon. friend for St. Boniface with a point of order yet. I understand the auditors of the Canadian National Railways have to be appointed annually by parliament. Since when did Mr. de Lalanne take the place of parliament and appoint McDonald, Currie and Company?

Mr. Benson: He did not take the place of parliament. As I explained earlier, legally perhaps the auditors for 1963 for the C.N.R. are not yet appointed because they are included in the C.N.R. financing bill which has not got through the House of Commons.

Mr. Pickersgill: It has been given first reading.

Mr. Benson: This will officially sanction the position taken at the beginning of the year, when McDonald, Currie and Company took on the audit for 1963.

Mr. Knowles: McDonald, Currie and Company have been doing the audit for the months thus far of 1963 without authorization. Is that correct? If parliament did not pass the bill or if it amended it to cut that firm out, we would then have a nullity as far as the audit for 1963 is concerned. Is that the situation? Then someone did exercise the prerogative of parliament at the beginning of 1963.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Clause agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Mr. Leboe: I just want to ask a question. Is it not possible to have these auditors submit bids? The parliamentary secretary says that there are four capable auditors in Canada. Is it not possible to submit a bid on this matter? In this way we could get away from this type of thing.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I would hate to see us come to the position in Canada where we employed professional people such as lawyers or accountants on a bid basis.

Mr. Fisher: Is the hon. member making some kind of distinction between a professional person such as an accountant or a lawyer and, say, a contracting firm or group of businessmen?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Fisher: I would like an answer. Is that what he is suggesting?

Mr. Benson: I can answer this very quickly. The rules of etiquette of professional associations do not permit them to tender on audits. This is quite proper and is in the code of ethics of this particular profession.

Mr. Leboe: I am sure the large private companies do.

Mr. Benson: I can assure the hon. member, having been a chartered accountant and a member of the profession, that in the profession it is forbidden to tender on audits of firms.

Mr. Nowlan: And you would be disqualified if you did.

Mr. Benson: Certainly you would be disqualified if knowledge of such action came into the possession of the professional institute of which you were a member.

An hon. Member: How does this relate to civil rights?

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Mr. Knowles: Next sitting of the house.

CURRENCY, MINT AND EXCHANGE FUND ACT

AUTHORIZATION TO PURCHASE SECURITIES OF INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-106, an act to amend the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act.

Mr. E. J. Benson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): When the resolution relating to this amendment was considered by the house last Friday, November 15, I made an explanatory statement of some length. The house will not wish me, at this stage, to repeat all the explanations I gave. Suffice it to say, today, that this amendment is being introduced in order to empower the government to implement a commitment made neary two years ago. In brief, this commitment was to join with nine other leading countries in an undertaking to make advances under specified conditions to the international monetary fund, in time of need, to supplement the existing resources of the fund.

All the relevant details of this arrangement, which is known as the general arrangement to borrow of the international monetary fund, were explained at the resolution stage.

It seemed to me, however, from the discussion that took place last Friday, that I could usefully add some broad observations. Indeed, before the debate concluded, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) undertook that this would be done. At that time, several hon. members showed considerable interest in some studies which are now being carried forward under the auspices of the same ten countries as are making financial commitments under the general arrangements to borrow. I think it would help to clarify matters if I began by saying a few words about these studies.

These new studies were launched by a meeting of the finance ministers of the ten countries early in October at the time of the annual meeting of the international monetary fund in Washington. They had in mind the fact that the agreement under which the international monetary fund was established is now very nearly 20 years old. Hon. members will recall that the Bretton Woods conference was held in 1944. It seemed to them that the time had come for a new, extensive and forward-looking review of the functioning of the international monetary system. In the communique which was issued on October 2, they said:

> This examination should be made with particular emphasis on the possible nature of the future needs for reserves and for supplementary credit facilities which may arise. ...The studies should also appraise and evaluate various possibilities for covering such needs. ...The ministers...have now instructed their deputies to examine these questions, and to report...over the course of the coming year.

In recent years, as hon. members are aware, there have been many proposals for improvement in the international monetary system. These have been put forward by governments, by bankers, by economists, and by others. It will be the task of our representatives who are carrying forward these studies to appraise, evaluate, and report on them. It is my hope that the ministers may receive a report by next summer so that whatever action might seem appropriate could be taken at the next annual meeting of the international monetary fund. This meeting is fixed for next September.

In reply to a question raised last Friday by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) as reported in Hansard at page 4791, I am happy to give assurance that the Canadian representatives who are participating in these international studies will not be open to any charge that they are dragging their feet. The Canadian government is most anxious that these studies should be pursued vigorously, and that they should lead to constructive results.

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) wondered why Switzerland was not in the group of ten. The answer is that Switzerland is not, as all the other ten are, a member of the international monetary fund. Special legal complications are involved in Swiss association with the fund's general arrangement to borrow. However, legislation is now before the Swiss parliament which, if passed, would permit Swiss association with this operation.

No less than three members referred in their remarks last Friday to an article that had appeared in various newspapers during the previous 24 hours. This article stated that the representatives of the ten countries participating in studies of the international monetary system are—and I quote—"actively considering a plan for creation of some form of international currency unit". The article went on to describe a particular plan which is usually associated with the name of a Washington economist, Edward Bernstein. In doing so, the writer seemed to imply that this plan had some pride of place in the consideration of the group of ten. I am informed that, as one would expect, the work of the study group is still at a preliminary stage. All the main proposals for improving the international monetary system will no doubt come under review, including that of Mr. Bernstein. But, at this early stage, no special attention has been given to any particular proposal.

I am, therefore, in a position to reassure the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) that he is, to say the least, premature in jumping to the conclusion that the next step will be the establishment of an international currency, to use the words attributed to him in Hansard at page 4792, along the lines proposed by Mr. Bernstein.

At this point, and at other points in his remarks that day, he did not distinguish between, on the one hand, the current studies I have been describing, which look towards various possibilities in the future of international monetary arrangements and, on the other hand, the action which the house is now being invited to take in order to implement a two-year-old commitment.

The hon. member for Lapointe made some other statements which I should not allow to pass without comment. I am sure the house would not wish me to take up its time in examining the preposterous, indeed ludicrous, suggestion that the ten major countries of the free world, including Canada, are controlled by the four international banking houses which the hon. member mentions. I would, however, like to assure him, and other hon. members, that the suggestion that two large Canadian banks which recently merged were or are controlled by one of the London clearing banks is not in accord with the facts.

In speaking on the resolution to amend this act, the hon. member for Lapointe is reported in Hansard at page 4792 to have said that at the time of the amalgamation of the Imperial Bank of Canada and the Canadian Bank of Commerce, which took place in 1961, the Canada Gazette showed that the two amalgamating banks were controlled by Barclay's bank of London. This, of course, is far from the fact. I could find no reference in the Canada Gazette to the ownership of shares by Barclay's bank, London. The first annual report of shares and shareholders of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, after the amalgamation made on October 31, 1961, tabled in parliament, reported the total number of shares held by the Barclay's group of banks and companies, including those held as nominees for others, to be less than 4½ per cent of the total outstanding shares of the bank at that time.

It might be of interest to add that the Barclay's group at no time held controlling share interest in either of the amalgamating banks. As a matter of interest, I have obtained figures showing foreign ownership in all Canadian banks. I should like to point out to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) that in only one case, the case of the Mercantile bank, are there more shares held outside of Canada than within Canada. Ninety-nine per cent of the shares of that particular bank are owned by foreigners, I could quote briefly the figures for the other banks: Bank of Montreal, 23 per cent foreign owned, Toronto-Dominion bank, 13 per cent; Provincial bank, 1 per cent; Commerce Imperial, 27 per cent; Royal, 27 per cent and Banque Nationale, 3 per cent.

On the basis of the totals less than 15 per cent in number of the shareholders of Canadian banks were non-residents, and on average less than 23 per cent of the shares of Canadian banks are owned outside of Canada. However, I do not want to lead the house further down these bypaths. Suffice it to say that they have no relationship to the legislation before us, as I attempted to explain adequately and fully on November 15 last.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house appreciates the statement, in part repetition although very valuable, by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) giving the background of this matter which we now have before us. As he has said, this matter emanated over two years ago and was the subject of negotiation between my predecessor as minister of finance, then the hon. member for Eglinton, the Hon. Donald Fleming. This measure finally brings to fruition an agreement which was entered into between the government of Canada and the various other governments in the international monetary fund.

I did not follow the parliamentary secretary in all the arguments which he used a moment ago, but I think that in general I would agree with what he said in respect of the control of banking and the banking institutions of this country. I do not believe the forebodings of some hon. members in this house are justified by the facts, which are a matter of record and which the parliamentary secretary has just brought forward.

It is, of course, a matter of common knowledge that this world is getting smaller and smaller financially and economically. A few years ago the international monetary fund was something which seemed to be a long way from us, but is now very close to each and every country in the world. We, as one of the western nations, are duty-bound to assist the international monetary fund in carrying out its obligations and its duties. We have, in turn, as all hon. members know, benefited from the co-operation of the international monetary fund within the last two years. It may be, although I hope the necessity will not arise, that we may again benefit from it.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, this is a measure which warrants the support of all parties in the house. I shall not take the time to go into the matter further, as one could at great length if he wanted to make a political or economic speech. I simply say that, so far as we in the opposition are concerned, we give this measure full support because it is one which we originated. As I said last night, all of these matters which are coming before parliament now are ones which we originated when we were sitting to the right of Mr. Speaker. Without these measures, the country would not be enjoying the economic prosperity it is enjoying today and, as I have said, the government has been subscribing to the policies which we inaugurated. If they follow those policies in the next few months which they will be sitting on the right-hand side of the Speaker, they will ensure this basic prosperity which the country has today.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is relieved to be able to float into the more rarified atmosphere of the international monetary fund where no doubt auditors are appointed by a celestial agency, free of the taint of the ambiguities of party politics. I suppose one might say that the parliamentary secretary is technically correct when he states that this bill which is now before us has nothing to do with the international fund and some of the discussions which took place with regard to the question of international liquidity earlier this session.

However, I believe he will agree with me it is within that area of our international operations that this bill falls. For some time the international monetary fund had required a very conservative reputation, but fortunately that reputation seems to be ameliorating a little now. Shortly before his retirement, the late director general, Mr. Jacobsson, had some very interesting things to say. In his annual report before the last annual meeting there can be found Mr. Jacobsson's statement, or some of it, which reads:

> International liquidity should be sufficient to allow these countries, the industrialized ones, to take the expansionary step needed for the benefit of their own economies, as well as to assure continued expansion of the world economy. World reserves rose by only 9 per cent in four years ending 1962, while world trade rose by 31 per cent in the same period—obviously too heavy a load for even that increase in world reserves to carry.

Undoubtedly, it is the hope of the Paris club countries, who are now taking the action we are taking here today, that this expansion of the international monetary fund will act as a stop-gap until later permanent steps may be taken.

I had occasion earlier this year at an international conference to deal with this matter of the necessity of research being undertaken into this problem of international liquidity. I pointed out at that time that while we have learned how to free ourselves from the chain of gold that strangled national economy and enabled us to emerge into an era of managed currencies, we have not been able to do that on the international scene. As a consequence, we have been placing an intolerable burden on the shoulders of our neighbour to the south, the United States of America, who gave us warning earlier this year that this burden was now becoming too heavy for them to carry. Consequently, they introduced into the United States Congress the interest equalization measure which I believe is now about to be passed by that body.

Obviously, the United States must have some relief from the situation in which it finds itself today, otherwise the pressures to which it is now being subjected to increase the price of gold may become too heavy to be resisted. I think most people today would agree that any step towards increasing the price of gold would have a most dislocating effect throughout the world.

I was very pleased to hear the parliamentary secretary say that the Canadian government's representatives at the present meetings will certainly not be dragging their feet but, if anything, will be urging our partners in the international monetary fund to go forward with the task of developing and evolving some modern method of international exchange that will be able to carry the ever increasing load created by the vast expansion of production throughout the world today, and this is equally important, enabling the industrialized countries of the world to take really effective steps in the direction of development of underdeveloped areas, and to reduce the gap which is growing wider and wider between the have and have-not nations.

I note that when this matter came up previously on November 7 some fears were expressed that this was a dark, deeply laid plot which was going to deliver us into the hands of the international money lenders and money changers. I suppose perhaps these fears arise from the feeling that the developments, which may take place after the meetings of the Paris club and the international monetary fund committee, may contain the seed from which may grow the plan of future world administration. For my part I would welcome that hope in the world today. I recollect that over 20 years ago John Maynard Keynes possibly wrecked the scheme he put forward at the time by an obiter dictum viewing it as a possible first step to world administration. Perhaps, in the light of the tremendous developments that have taken place in the last quarter century, we are today sophisticated enough to accept that prospect, not with dismay but with hope for the future.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, our criticism of the bill relates only to subclause (1) of clause 1, which permits Canada to make purchases of securities of the international monetary fund. The second part of clause 1, in our estimation, deals simply with a technical matter and no question is involved with it.

The parliamentary secretary has just stated that Switzerland it not one of these ten nations, simply because she is not a member of the international monetary fund. That is a clear enough answer to the question I raised, but the question remains in my mind, why is she not?

Mr. Benson: The reason she is not a member of the international monetary fund and was not able to take part in this particular arrangement, which is really an extension exchange stabilization fund on an international basis, is because of particular legislative difficulties within Switzerland, which are being corrected so that she may take part.

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate that further explanation because I did not quite understand his first statement.

I was struck by the further statement made by the parliamentary secretary that there is no intention here of attempting to set up an international currency. I agree there is no indication of that in the bill, because it states quite clearly that it is introduced—> —in order that Canada may participate in arrangements agreed upon by members of the international monetary fund to enable the fund in certain circumstances to supplement its resources by borrowings from member countries.

It is significant to me that just a couple of days before the announcement was made in the house regarding this legislation, a very detailed news report appeared in the Ottawa Journal of November 14, actually an article originating with the New York Times news service, saying the same ten countries are making plans to set up a global currency system. To quote part of the article:

> The United States and nine other leading industrial nations are actively considering a plan for creation of some form of international currency unit that would gradually lessen the burden on the dollar as the keystone of the international monetary system.

These countries are then listed, and they are the same countries involved in this particular agreement, which we are facilitating Canada to take part in, through the provisions of Bill No. C-106. The article goes on to say:

> The plan is one of several related ideas now under close study, all of which have the same basic objective: to maintain world prosperity by allowing the currencies of the well-off nations of western Europe to play a greater role in the international monetary system.

There may be no direct relationship between this legislation and the article I have quoted, but it is rather significant that the same 10 countries are planning something which the parliamentary secretary has been careful to state is not intended in this bill. I think we should make very careful note of that.

Returning to the background of the whole question involved in this legislation. I would like to make a few remarks which I think are of basic importance to us as we view the international field relating to exchange and problems of international settlement.

Eighteen years ago the matter of setting up the international monetary fund under the Bretton Woods Agreement Act was introduced in this house. It was vigorously opposed, not only by Social Credit members but by others as well, who realized the full implications of the new international gold standard then being set up. Many at that time rightly felt this was an attempt by the victorious United States to impose terms of unconditional economic surrender, not on the defeated enemies, Germany, Italy and Japan, but on her fellow allies in world war II, particularly Great Britain and the commonwealth.

Certainly the announcement in this house when that debate was in progress, that Great Britain had agreed to the Bretton Woods treaty upon being given a substantial gold loan by the United States, made passage of the Bretton Woods legislation a great deal easier in this house, even though the leading British negotiator, Lord Keynes, saw clearly the faults of the new arrangement and, until his death, preferred a much more realistic British scheme tied less closely to gold.

Events have, I believe, proved both the Social Crediters and Lord Keynes to be right. The international monetary fund system has not kept the world free of foreign exchange crises during the last 18 years. Britain has had them. Europe has had them. Canada has had them. Right now the United States faces a very serious exchange crisis. In fact, the threatening United States crisis is the most serious of them all because, if the United States cannot maintain the convertibility of its dollar into gold—and there is every reason to suppose the United States is not going to be able to do this in the long run, at least at present gold prices—the whole world of international commerce is threatened. At a single stroke of the pen the world's leading reserve currency, the currency in which the major part of Canada's foreign exchange reserves are also held, will no longer be suitable for that purpose, and it is this problem which caused the late President Kennedy to state only a few months before his death that one of the basic needs of the world today was a monetary reform program as it related to the mechanics of international trade and settlements.

The legislation we are now considering may appear innocent enough on the surface, but I am questioning it because I believe it reflects a major policy decision, and it is not just as simple a thing as it appears in this brief form. Are we going to continue to support the international monetary fund system of international exchange, accompanied as it has been in the past with crisis after crisis; faced with crisis at the present time, and only to be saved—as systems based on the gold standard have always had to be saved—by supplementary schemes of aid to keep it in being?

When the gold standard was first adopted in Great Britain in 1844 only two years elapsed before a domestic crisis forced it to be suspended. Similarly, when this international monetary fund, gold based, international exchange machinery was set up in 1945, only the concurrent loan and Marshall aid arrangements on the part of the United States, and new arrangements of currency accounting in Europe that have now developed into the common market, made this system workable at all. Unless we have some more patching up on the same basis, it will not long continue, and in my estimation this is not good enough. Is it going to be Canada's policy in the future to continue to provide crutches on which this obsolete exchange system can continue to hobble along, rather than devise something better?

I say this, Mr. Speaker, because it is perfectly clear that a better international exchange system that does not depend upon gold can and should be devised in this modern world. That is why the gold standard today internationally, in 1963, and as we approach 1964 is in exactly the same difficulties that the gold standard was internally in 1935. It is perfectly plain also that our present system of the international monetary fund is a positive barrier to Canada's trade with nations which are her best potential markets. This is because the exchange rates set by the international monetary fund are based, not on the real worth of human labour or comparative living and production costs in different countries, but on the ability to buy and sell a single inert and commercially valueless substance which we call gold; or, even worse, credit based on gold which is no more than a confidence trick that can collapse—that is collapsing—any time its bluff is called.

May I take one simple example, Mr. Speaker. The present exchange rate between Canada and Japan makes Japan's labour costs, in terms of Canadian currency, far below comparable Canadian wage levels. What is the result? Japan urgently needs raw materials that Canada wants to sell her, but because of the difference in price levels caused by this exchange rate, if we want to export coal to Japan we have to pay a subvention to bring the price down on Crowsnest pass coal within reach of Japanese ability to pay. Similarly, Canada urgently needs to import more from Japan to replace her present excessive importation of manufactured goods from the United States. Yet we keep these goods out by tariffs and quotas. Why? Because, once again, the exchange rate so undervalues Japanese labour in terms of Canadian dollars that the prices of these imports are unrealistically low by Canadian standards and constitute unfair competition. This is where the international monetary fund has brought us, and if this is the case with Japan, how much more so is it in countries with an even smaller degree of technical advance which urgently wish to trade with us in Canada and should be trading with us strategically and for other reasons as well.

I think we have the right to ask ourselves: What does the international monetary fund have for us? Let us not forget that it is hindering, as well as helping, international trade and aid to underdeveloped countries. Let us not forget the circumstances under which it was set up, that two of the most senior United States officials employed in the setting up of this fund, Dexter White and Frank Coe, were later found to have very definite communist connections. Let us remember that the U.S.S.R., instrumental in the negotiations for the fund, ultimately refused to join it. Let us take a look around the world at the Soviet trade offensive at the present time; our own tungsten mine at Flat River, for instance, put out of business through cheap communist competition, and similar unemployment caused in Turkey as the Soviets press for world monopoly in the production of chrome. And let us reflect a little on how far this Soviet trade success has been caused by the foreign exchange difficulties of western countries, difficulties that the Soviet union deliberately does not share. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) apparently thinks he has struck a gold mine in increased trade with the communist nations. I only say to him: Be cautious. All that glitters, even if it is gold, is not necessarily the wisest and best trading policy for this country.

My personal view is that the best policy for Canada is a gradual disengagement from our connection with the international monetary fund. This will not be achieved by paying good Canadian money for the paper the I.M.F. chooses to print in return. I believe that one way of doing this is the policy presently being advocated by Belgium in the councils of the common market countries of Europe, as reported in the New York Herald-Tribune of September 29, 1963. This is, simply, that the developed nations should charge tariffs on imports from low wage countries and use the proceeds to lower the cost of their exports to these same countries.

The effect of such a policy is to bring exchange rates in line with labour costs between ourselves and the underdeveloped countries in the world, and so open vast trading areas in markets which present exchange policies keep closed.

Such a policy could be the beginning of a world wide revaluation of exchange rates to give a better deal to underdeveloped nations and so make them markets for our exports. This is where the tremendous trade potential of world export markets lies. We would be able to scrap the gold standard in international trade, to our great benefit, just as for 30 years now we have done very well without it in our local economy within this country. Foreign exchange policy in the present world has been made a matter of great mystery. This need not be so. Essentially it is no more than a proper accounting of the international exchange of goods, and the only basis for any solid trade pattern is the exchange of goods for goods. The greatest trading nation of the world of its day was the republic of Venice. It operated a bank for more than six centuries. That bank had no gold reserves, no exchange crises; nothing, in fact, except figures in a book which represented credits which could be transferred between depositors. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I believe we have devised nothing more practical, simple or intelligent than this system first introduced in the thirteenth century. If this nation will give the world a lead in getting back to first principles—I am speaking now of Canada—in the matter of foreign exchange, we could make Montreal the financial capital of world trade, and Canada the Venice of the twentieth century.

In summation, if we are to continue to operate under a basis as established through the Bretton Woods agreement and the international monetary fund, then some changes such as this legislation proposes are obviously necessary. This measure at this time is therefore obviously necessary. However, let me emphasize again that it is only a patch to a crutch that is already weak and rapidly deteriorating to an even greater crisis which faces us in this economic world which is narrowing down so closely to our own doorstep. On this basis, Mr. Speaker, we are not opposing this piece of legislation, because obviously we cannot continue without something being done.

Again I say I should like to see Canada not just follow along with others but take the lead in working out a basis of international exchange and settlements that will get at the very root of this problem, and deal with it in such a way as to assist the trade and development that this country needs so desperately and which the world needs as well, because today we face the paradox of plenty on the one hand and privation and poverty on the other while at the same time we are not able to solve the basic problem of how to distribute surpluses where the needs are the greatest. That is why I could not help taking this opportunity to outline a few of these points, because we should be thinking from a positive standpoint rather than the tagalong approach which in my opinion this legislation represents as we try to patch up something that has already proved itself basically unworkable in the long run.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on November 15 last, when this resolution was introduced in the house, I stated my views on this matter. Since that time, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) saw fit to give us certain figures concerning foreign control over our banks. Actually, on November 15, I spoke about foreign control over our banks and tonight, the parliamentary secretary considered it was advisable to raise the question and, if I understood correctly, mentioned the three larger banks and quoted certain figures—if I am wrong, the parliamentary secretary might set me right—that is the following percentages: Bank of Montreal, 33 per cent of foreign control, Royal bank, 27 per cent and Imperial Bank of Commerce, 25 per cent.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance who admitted a while ago he was an accountant, must know that a corporation or financial interests controlling more than 20 per cent of the shares of a company can just take over and control the operations of that company because among the other shareholders, there are those who are not too concerned about making their views known, do not go to the meetings or do not even send their proxy to other shareholders. Within a company like that, the majority group is the one which is best organized. In fact, the group which owns 20 per cent or more of the shares is usually the best organized and controls the whole operation.

That is why I say that, as far as the percentage of shares is concerned, foreign interests can easily control the business and change its policy.

All that to say, as the parliamentary secretary said a while ago, that on November 15 last we expressed our fear that we would be faced with another problem after going through the first stage of this plan which, I feel, is well thought out and which, as it is stated in the bill, provides for the recognition of a fund which has already been established and which would enable member countries to supplement their resources when they have exchange difficulties.

The difficulty, as we see it, is that after having taken the first step a second one must be taken.

I agree with the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance who told us a moment ago that it was premature to speak already of a fait accompli. I will not go as far as to suggest that the second step is a fait accompli. These ten countries have not yet adopted a common international monetary unit. However, if it is premature and if it is not a fait accompli, we should not forget that before being ripe, a fruit is premature. There cannot be any maturity without prematurity. There is an antecedent to everything. Besides, that is the term used by the parliamentary secretary. We express our fear by the word "premature", meaning not only that the fruit is not ripe yet, but that the matter is not completely settled yet and is still under consideration.

I am convinced that the ministers of finance of those ten countries mentioned as being the ten countries most interested in the bill now before us, would not be meeting in Europe or elsewhere in order to consider the advisability of establishing an international currency if they did not already intend to apply such a system sooner or later, and it might be sooner than we think.

We are not opposed to the idea of having an international currency, especially in view of the fact that nowadays there is not one of the member countries of that club that can control its monetary credit any better than the others. But when those countries come to have faith in an international currency, that will enable a group of international financiers to control jointly and severally the monetary credits of each of those countries that they are controlling today individually.

In my opinion, it will be most difficult then, for each of the ten countries concerned, to escape from the control of that group of financiers, because each would have to separate itself from the remaining nine countries, which could take retaliatory measures and even prevent Canada from withdrawing from this international credit cartel.

That is where we protest. We are not so much against the first step, for setting up a fund that could be made available to the countries which are facing monetary difficulties on account of the exchange value of their currency not being high enough, that is commendable. On the other hand, we fear that this first step will be followed by others which we would deeply regret.

We fear also that in the case of the second step the government would proceed exactly as it is doing now. The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance tells us that the measure now under consideration was passed two years ago, not "will be passed" but "was passed" two years ago by the ministers of finance of those ten countries. The nine other countries have already ratified that agreement a long time ago and have committed themselves through their finance ministers. As far as we are concerned, in Canada, that step was taken two years after the commitment made by our finance minister; and everything goes on as if it were an accomplished fact.

Now, at that time, they come and request parliament's approval. Why request that approval when everything is already in operation?

That is the way they proceed, Mr. Speaker, and that is the thing to which we object.

If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) wants to make some undertakings and have them approved by parliament, let him do it before signing those undertakings and before giving a guarantee to other countries. Otherwise, we have no voice in the matter and can only take note of the facts.

Mr. Speaker, if they proceed for the other stages contemplated by Paris club, as was done for this one, I suggest this will happen: the Canadian people will one day wake up under the yoke of an international finance trust which it will never be able to shake off and which will keep it in subservience as long as it does not get out of it through violent means, as happened in other countries.

Mr. Speaker, we condemn the method used in order to put this concept into practice, not the fact that ten countries help each other in the field of international monetary exchange; we denounce the way it was imposed upon the Canadian people.

We want the official report of the House of Commons debates to indicate that we object in advance to the establishment of an international monetary unit such as that contemplated by the ten countries which make the same undertaking we are taking today. We wish the Minister of Finance, who is supposed to discuss with the finance ministers of the other countries the creation of that international monetary unit, to know in advance he will find in this house strong opposition to that international monetary fund.

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration seems to aim at setting up a monetary confederation whereas, to set up such a system between various currencies, these must be treated on the same basis.

In fact, are the currencies of those ten countries treated on the same basis?

The international bodies set up at the Bretton Woods conference in July 1944, the international monetary fund, as well as the reconstruction and development bank, put the American dollar in a privileged position. They even established the superiority of the American dollar.

Lately, one of the most famous economists of our times, Mr. François Perroux, came to Montreal where he stated that there was no intrinsical reason for granting superiority or priority to the American dollar.

Now, it is asked: what are, for example, those securities of the international monetary fund that Canada wants to purchase; what are the backing and the nature of those securities?

On the other hand, we should keep in mind that it is always the Canadian dollar which must be used to buy Canadian services and products. It is not an international currency which will enable us to buy services and products made by Canadians.

At the present time, gold is still used as a standard for the international currency, but we can read in the Canada Year Book for 1962, on page 1027:

> —Gold may be bought or sold internationally without any physical movements of the metal, such transactions being recognized by simply putting aside or "ear-making" the metal in the vaults of some central bank.

If really there is no physical movement of gold from one country to the other, what is the good of having a gold standard to regulate these international currencies?

The last thing I wish to point out is that the international monetary unit would give to foreigners a control power over the life of Canadians, and this constitutes a very serious danger at the present time.

Those are, Mr. Speaker, the few remarks I wanted to make so that our country does not embark wholeheartedly in that project which, in my opinion, constitutes a real danger for our monetary system.

[Text]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to go very deeply into this field but I think Canada at least has an obligation to establish some independence from the United States in the manner in which we make our contributions throughout the world. It is quite true, as the parliamentary secretary said, that the international monetary fund set up after the signing of the Bretton Woods agreement indicated that a currency handled by the international monetary fund would be in terms of U.S. dollars, or gold. This raises the problem as far as Canada is concerned of the relationship between our monetized metals and those of the United States. I think this matter has not been given any consideration by this government or by the previous one, or by any Canadian government, for a long time.

It has been said in this debate that the countries supporting the international monetary fund, which have grown from the original 44 to well over 70 at the present time, have become more and more dependant in their international trade relationships on gold and the U.S. dollar. I think this is not always necessarily a good thing. We in Canada have backing for the currency of the United States both in gold to back our dollar in a treasury sense and also for silver bullion which would establish Canada in relation to the United States silver certificates. I think it is unfortunate that Canada has not gone to the international monetary fund meeting echoing, not the fears of some other countries in their relationship to the United States currency, but trying to strengthen not only our own position but also that of the United States at the present time.

We are all aware of the fact that the world is terrified of the large production of gold by countries in the communist bloc. I remember an article in Reader's Digest to the effect that it would be a catastrophe to world trade if Russia suddenly failed to put her money into the currency field through international trade under terms similar to those engaged in by countries like the United States and other members of the international fund, but instead gave away to satellite countries, and any other countries who wished it, the vast quantities of gold they have. Overnight there would be a collapse of the market.

I think something is to be said for those who recommend that Canada looks at this matter from her own position; not from the position of the United States or individual countries, some of which are in the sterling area, some on the gold standard, and some operating entirely on a trade-barter system, but from the point of view from which Canadians and Canada in general can gain the most. I suggest we should be opposed to the establishment by the international monetary fund of an international currency. I believe this is a necessity. I think history will bear out that two of the factors which will form a base for an international monetary system, and the currency which may be contemplated by the international monetary fund, will be gold and silver monetized reserves.

We are aware of the fact that Canada has not been on the gold standard for some time. I do not think anyone in this country will be able to tell us what kind of standard we are on. I am sure no one in banking circles would be able to tell you, and I do not think they could even point to how closely we were tied to the United States system or to any other system, or to what the relationship of these systems is from day to day. Social Credit have had a field day because of the fact that no one in the country seems to know what is going on. The situation is completely confused.

An hon. Member: You don't know either.

Mr. Peters: I make no apologies; I am in exactly the same category. I do not know anything about it either, and do not profess to. But there is a relationship between the two monetized metals, gold and silver; and because of the Bretton Woods agreement both gold and the U.S. dollar are the backing of the currency of the international monetary fund. Silver used to be, as well, because the U.S. currency reintroduced in 1933 silver certificates backed by silver stocks.

I make no apology for my interest in this matter because I represent a major portion of the silver producing industry in Canada, and the producers of some of the other base metals. The people in these operations are interested in this question. If you look, Mr. Speaker, at the Baxter international research bureau report for September 27 of this year you will note that it refers to the fact that the U.S. government has increased the price of silver against their reserves from 91 cents to $1.29. They pointed out that since the beginning of May there has been an outflow of 69 million ounces of silver. Of this amount, 24 million ounces came from the cartwheels—I presume that is silver dollars—and 45 million ounces came from the monetized silver bullion account. Another report, made in October, points out that silver output falls far short of use but that treasury sales should fill the gap. Global use of silver this year is estimated at 380 million ounces, which is about 170 million ounces more than new production. Our government will draw on its own stocks for about 95 million ounces needed for coinage and defence work. Most of the remaining deficit, the report goes on, will be made up by sales of speculative holdings, a reduction of consumer inventories and demonetization of coins abroad.

This is an indication of what is happening, though many people in Canada and, even, a number of those in government, have failed to establish any relationship in this field. If this government wishes to make a contribution to the international monetary fund I believe it is time we should add the word "silver" wherever the word "gold" appears in the bill. It should be remembered that we produce this metal, and its production should not be related to requirements of another currency but rather to the productivity of our own nation and the value of the metal in establishing our Canadian dollar. There is a relationship between these things, and it is one which could be established more closely if we had a government which was prepared to make full use of our own natural resources. I strongly urge that Canada, along with many of the other nations of the world, should establish its own relationship with the currencies of the world and take steps to do this in the manner which would be most advantageous to Canada.

For a government which has said on a number of occasions that it wishes to cut loose some of the strings which binds us in an economic way with the United States, there would be no better way of achieving this end than by cutting some of these monetary strings in relation to our currency. We have been buying some of our currency from our neighbour to the south at a price which they themselves determine—a price which has no relation to the forces of supply and demand in this nation. I suggest that the parliamentary secretary should give some consideration to establishing Canadian independence in this field. The Minister of Finance has himself declared that this is his intention. He wrote a book called "The Economic Future of Canada" telling us that this is what we needed to do. We in the mining industry can certainly find no better place to start than with the monetized metals which we use as the basis of our internal economy.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Sale of gold, currency, etc.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say only a few words on section 1 of the bill which is before us. I wish to point out that Bill No. C-106 is a direct outcome of the agreements which were signed in 1947-1948 at Bretton Woods, while in this house we were warning the government against this attempt on the part of high finance to get hold of an international money control of some sort.

Now we are asked, under the provisions of this bill, to endorse the setting-up of a $200,000,000 fund, together with other countries on the pretence that we will assist countries which could need it.

We must remember that, last year, the government had to resort to the international monetary fund to secure an amount of over a billion dollars in order to discharge their obligations and their dues to the United States.

Mr. Chairman, on behalf of Social Credit and all the members of our group, I say that, in such circumstances, the government should not rely upon the international monetary fund but on a national monetary fund which should be set up by the Bank of Canada since our country has the required materials, products and services to back its currency.

Now, if we produce things which have a certain value, why should we not issue tokens which would be backed by those products? That would enable us to keep control of our money and credit.

If we can afford to assist foreign countries by giving them $200 million, half a billion or a billion dollars, let us go ahead and do it but let us use our own money and not capital which has been borrowed on foreign markets.

When we borrowed something like $1,500 million from the international monetary fund, we had to pay interest at a rate two and a half times higher than what we get when we lend Canadian funds or give a line of credit to the fund.

Consequently, we, in this corner of the house, cannot on behalf of Social Credit accept such an international control of our monetary system and I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to record our opposition to all the sections of the bill since we have the right to express our disapproval.

[Text]

Mr. Marcoux: I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary a question. The hon. member for Villeneuve has just said he was sitting in this house in 1947-48 when the Bretton Woods agreement was approved by the Canadian parliament. I thought that this agreement was signed in July 1944. Would the secretary tell me if it was 1944 or 1947?

Mr. Benson: If I recall it, and I stand to be corrected, the Bretton Woods conference was in 1947. I will check and ascertain the correct information for the hon. member.

I am informed it was 1944.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): According to the great economist Albert Despaux, the Bretton Woods agreement was signed in July 1944.

An hon. Member: There were two conferences.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, two meetings were held in Bretton Woods, I clearly remember that. If my hon. friend for Chicoutimi refers to Hansard for 1946-47, he will find that the Bretton Woods agreement was introduced in the House of Commons at that time, and that the staunchest opponent of this agreement was the then hon. member for Lethbridge, Mr. John Blackmore, who firmly disagreed with it in 1947-48.

[Text]

Mr. Benson: I would be pleased to act as arbitrator here and ascertain the facts as to exactly when the meetings were held, and when the information was presented to parliament. Then, I shall supply it to the hon. members.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Peters: I should like to move an amendment to subsection 3 of clause 1, to add, after the word "gold", the word "silver" in line 15 and also in line 20 to add the word "silver" after the word "gold".

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not believe the amendment is acceptable. I should like Your Honour to put the question.

Mr. Gregoire: Perhaps I should present a subamendment. Since gold is very rare in all countries, as is silver, I should like to suggest that iron ore be substituted therefor. We would have plenty of it for our external trade, or perhaps we could suggest the use of wheat.

Amendment (Mr. Peters) negatived: Yeas, 1; nays, 71.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Caouette: On division.

Clause agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time, now?

Some hon. Members: By leave.

Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Gordon) moved third reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the motion carry?

Mr. Caouette: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: The house seems to be in such a co-operative mood I was wondering if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre would like to complete his speech on the centennial bill.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Knowles: Should the Secretary of State not ask whether anyone else wants to hear it?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I do.

Mr. Knowles: I think he should make it at a more opportune time.

Mr. Churchill: I think so, too, because the subject is one of considerable importance and the hour is rather late.

May I ask the house leader what estimates we will be taking tomorrow and Thursday, and if there is any proposed change in the hours for tomorrow?

Mr. Pickersgill: I did suggest last evening, sir, taking the last question first, that tomorrow we might agree to sit until 7 p.m. I had hoped there might be some disposition to sit in the evening but there are very good reasons why many hon. members would prefer not to do that. It would be a great convenience to the government if we could sit until 7 p.m.

The estimates we would take tomorrow would be privy council, followed by post office. On Thursday, we would take the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, followed again by post office if there are any items of that department not disposed of tomorrow. I believe I would prefer to make my forecast for the rest of the week after I see what progress we make tomorrow and in the early part of Thursday. I should like to have some consultations with hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Churchill: We are prepared to sit until 7 p.m. tomorrow night, or later. May I ask the house leader if on Thursday the Department of Agriculture estimates will be taken with or without the minister?

Mr. Pickersgill: I believe the minister will be here and I am quite sure that if the minister is here, he will have something to say.

Mr. Patterson: So far as this group is concerned, we would be prepared to sit until seven or later. We would sit until ten o'clock if it would be of any help.

Mr. Knowles: I think progress towards this goal might be achieved if we had a discussion about it in the morning. The Secretary of State indicated there were reasons hon. members would not sit until ten o'clock, and perhaps we could discuss whether to sit until then, or beyond six.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, we are agreeable to sit till seven o'clock tomorrow night, in compliance with the suggestion made.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the house will sit until ten o'clock tomorrow evening?

Mr. Peters: No, Mr. Speaker. I have no objection to its being discussed further, but on that basis I would say no.

Mr. Pickersgill: We will accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and see if we can reach some understanding that could be agreed to at the opening tomorrow.

It being twelve minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, December 11, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EXTENSION OF SITTING HOURS THIS DAY

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might just say a word about the business of the house for today. I believe, from what I have learned through the usual channels, that it would be agreeable to the house to continue the sitting today until seven o'clock, on the strict understanding that we would adjourn at seven o'clock and would not go beyond that time. If that is the understanding, I hope it can be so ordered.

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the suggestion of the Secretary of State. Is it so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MINES, FORESTS AND WATERS

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt) moved that the second report of the standing committee on mines, forests and waters presented to the house on Monday, December 9, be concurred in.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, on Monday when the report was presented the Clerk did not read the report aloud. I do not believe any objection was raised at that time, but before the house votes on the matter I think we should know what we are voting on.

Mr. Speaker: I am advised that notice has already been given, and certainly the report will be found in Votes and Proceedings of Monday, December 9, which I have before me. If any hon. member wishes details I can give them very quickly. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

POSITIONS REQUIRING SECURITY SCREENING

Question No. 1,161—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many positions covered by the civil service, government commissions and boards, such as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the national film board, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, national research council, Atomic Energy of Canada, etc., require security screening?
2. What are these positions, and in what departments?
3. What are the criteria used to decide whether any position in a given department or commission will require security screening?
4. What department or interdepartmental committee makes these decisions, and who are the members of such committee?

Mr. Pearson: 1 and 3. No total has been made of the number of positions in the public service in relation to which security screening is required. The determination as to whether the incumbent of a position requires to be screened for security is based quite simply on whether or not the duties of the position require him to have access to classified information. In certain departments and agencies, all or almost all positions require such access; in other departments or agencies, relatively few. The number of such positions may vary considerably from time to time.

2. It would be contrary to the public interest to identify specific positions within any department in relation to which security screening is required.

4. A decision as to whether or not the incumbent of a position requires to be screened for security is dictated by the nature of the work, and is the responsibility of each department or agency rather than that of any departmental or interdepartmental committee.

DEPARTMENTAL SECURITY OFFICERS

Question No. 1,162—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Who are the security officers in each department of the government?
2. How long has each been on this job?
3. What are the qualifications of each of the security officers?
4. What training does each departmental security officer get for this particular job, and by whom are they trained?
5. What are the instructions given to each departmental security officer for carrying out his work?
6. From whom do they get these regulations?
7. Who is responsible for drafting these regulations?
8. How many persons applying for jobs or promotions in each department have been refused such jobs or promotions because they failed to get a security clearance, and of what total number of cases?
9. What is the relationship between the departmental security officer and the civil service commission?
10. What is the relationship between the departmental security officer and the R.C.M.P.?
11. To whom do the departmental security officers report in each department?

Questions

12. Do the departmental security officers make final decisions on cases or do they only make recommendations and, if the latter, who makes the final decisions?

13. When they make adverse decisions, do the departmental security officers advise the civil service commission of the decision and the reasons for the decision?

Mr. Pearson: 1 and 2. It would be contrary to the public interest to identify the security officers in each department or agency of the government.

3. The qualifications of departmental or agency security officers vary with the security requirements of each department or agency. Security officers are required to be middle to senior rank officers of integrity and good judgment, with considerable experience in the field of personnel administration.

4. The nature and degree of training which a security officer receives varies in accordance with the nature and extent of the security problems with which his department or agency is faced. In departments with the greatest security responsibilities, training is achieved through lectures, seminars, demonstrations, films, and the study of extensive background material. In addition, conferences of all departmental and agency security officers are held from time to time to instruct these officers in matters relating to personnel and physical security, and to give them an opportunity to discuss mutual problems in this field.

5, 6 and 7. Basic policy and instructions relating to security are given to departments and agencies by the government in order to ensure that minimum standards are maintained. On the basis of these instructions each department and agency is responsible for preparing detailed security regulations intended to meet its own particular security requirements. In addition to these instructions, departments and agencies are provided from time to time with a number of memoranda of guidance and advice prepared by the security panel resulting from its studies of specific matters relating to security.

8. It has been the policy of successive governments of Canada, and it is the policy of the present government not to reveal statistics concerning the numbers of persons in whose cases departmental action has been taken on security grounds.

9 and 10. Departmental and agency security officers consult regularly with appropriate officers of the civil service commission and of the security and intelligence directorate of the R.C.M. Police on matters relating to security in which they have mutual interests and responsibilities.

11. In the majority of departments and agencies, the security officer reports directly to the deputy minister or head of agency. In all departments and agencies, however, the security officer is finally responsible to the deputy minister or head of agency.

12 and 13. In the straightforward granting of a security clearance, a final decision can be made by the security officer in accordance with security regulations. In cases in which there is some element of doubt the security officer would make appropriate recommendations to the deputy minister or head of agency. Should his recommendation result in a decision to dismiss, that decision would be taken by the minister responsible, or by such other person or body so authorized by statute. When such adverse recommendations or decisions are made, and they are relevant to the statutory functions of the civil service commission, the commission is, of course, advised.

NUCLEAR WEAPON STORAGE, VAL D'OR, QUE.

Question No. 1,390—Mr. Caouette:

1. What preparations are being made at Val d'Or, in the county of Villeneuve, for storage of nuclear weapons?

2. Did the government consult the local authorities at Val d'Or before undertaking these preparations?

3. How many additional workers will be employed as a result of these preparations?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. It is intended to build storage facilities for special weapons and to add to the air warning installations and to the sheds.

2. No. However, the mayor of Val d'Or has ensured the government of his city's full co-operation.

3. Since it is the contractor who will decide how many men will be employed, it is not yet known how many people will be employed.

WAR MEMORIAL, NEPEAN POINT, OTTAWA

Question No. 1,635—Mr. Matheson:

1. What was envisaged in the Nepean point project, with whom did the plan originate, and what preparatory work thereon has been done to date?

2. Who presently opposes this project and for what reason?

Answer: 1. The primary purpose of the Nepean point project was the provision of a suitable repository for the books of remembrance commemorating those Canadians who gave their lives in the Nile expedition and the South African war, world war II and the Korean campaign. The need for such a repository became apparent in 1954, as the world war II book was nearing completion, and cabinet authorized the then minister of veterans affairs, Hon. Hugues Lapointe, to appoint an advisory committee to study this matter and make recommendations.

The committee worked on the premise that the world war II book should have a permanent resting place comparable in artistic development, dignity and general atmosphere to the memorial chamber in the peace tower, which is the permanent repository of the world war I book of remembrance.

After studying existing and proposed government buildings, the committee concluded that a suitable chamber could not be constructed in any of them and it recommended the erection of a shrine of remembrance for this purpose on Nepean point.

In 1956 the minister announced in the house that the recommendation of the committee had been accepted by the government, and that the minister of public works had been instructed to proceed with the design of an appropriate building. Consultants were appointed and produced a number of preliminary designs. The selected design, along with a model, was submitted to the advisory committee on design of the national capital commission who requested a revision to reduce the size of the building and the government directed that the total cost must be lower. The consultants later produced such a revision. Preliminary drawings and elevations and a revised model of the project have been prepared but have not been submitted to the national capital commission.

Subsequent governments confirmed the original decision to construct a shrine and in February, 1963 it was announced that a design had been approved in principle. In September the Prime Minister confirmed that this government had decided to proceed with the project. Some controversy, however, had been developing on the need or the desirability of proceeding with the planning and in October the Minister of Veterans Affairs announced that action would be deferred until a careful review and further study of the project had been completed. No working drawings or specifications of the shrine have been prepared and no work is proceeding at the present time.

In 1955 the Royal Canadian Legion recommended the construction of a cenotaph, not identified with any war, which would become the focal point for future national remembrance and similar services. This recommendation was also referred to the advisory committee which recommended, in due course, that such a cenotaph be erected on Nepean point also, after the razing of the old printing bureau building.

This recommendation, also, was accepted by the government but no design for such a cenotaph has been prepared to date.

2. In the main, a few newspapers.

The major criticisms of the project appear to be that there is no need for a memorial other than that now standing on confederation square, that should any new memorial be constructed it should be a living memorial such as a concert hall, auditorium, library or hospital, and that the design of the proposed memorial shrine was not suitable.

R.C.M.P. OFFICE, COMPTON-FRONTENAC CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,682—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Has the R.C.M.P. a permanent office in the constituency of Compton-Frontenac and, if so (a) where (b) who are the personnel, and (c) what are the main duties of that detachment?
2. If there is no permanent office, what R.C.M.P. detachment covers this constituency?

Mr. Chevrier: 1. Yes; (a) Megantic, P.Q.; (b) Cpl. Roy, G.M., Cst. Gauthier, J.C.A.R.; (c) the enforcement of certain federal statutes.

2. Answered by No. 1.

TOBACCO—FEDERAL REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE

Question No. 1,717—Mr. Mather:

1. What is the amount in dollars which the federal government derived in 1962 as a result of the sale of tobacco products?
2. What is the amount in dollars which the federal government spent in 1962 on public education respecting the link between excessive smoking and ill health?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. The following amount represents customs and excise revenue derived from tobacco products during the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1963, except as noted below; $387,574,859.

Separate statistics identifying sales tax with tobacco products are not available and therefore the above figure does not include federal sales tax which applies on the basis of 11 per cent of the manufacturer's selling price with respect to domestic tobacco products sold for consumption in Canada, and on the duty paid value of such products when imported for consumption in Canada.

2. None in 1962. For the express purpose of reviewing the evidence linking cigarette smoking with lung cancer and certain other diseases and to consider action which might be taken to ensure a co-operative and effective program, the Minister of National Health and Welfare held a conference on smoking and health in Ottawa on November 25 and 26. As a result a technical committee on health education is being set up to assist in bringing the facts before the public and to dissuade young people in particular from acquiring the habit of cigarette smoking. The federal government is prepared to make $400,000 available to assist in the development of a health education program in this field.

*NATIONAL ANTHEM

Question No. 1,745—Mr. Boutin:

Does the Prime Minister intend to include the adoption of "O Canada" as the national anthem of Canada when a bill is presented for the adoption of a distinctive flag for Canada?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this question asks if the Prime Minister intends to include the adoption of "O Canada" as the national anthem of Canada when a bill is presented for the adoption of a distinctive flag for Canada. This government is committed, within two years of taking office, to take steps through parliament to make "O Canada" our official national anthem. It would be natural to expect, Mr. Speaker, that parliament should deal with this matter at the same time that it will be asked to deal with the question of a distinctive national flag, to which the government is also committed.

NEWS COVERAGE FOR ARMED FORCES ABROAD

Question No. 1,755—Mr. Scott:

Has the government received any representations to the effect that members of the various branches of the armed forces in Europe receive almost no Canadian news coverage of events taking place in Canada and, if so, does the government have any plans to remedy this situation and what is the nature of such plans?

Answer: No such representations have been received, in so far as national defence is concerned. At the present time, Canadian news is broadcast over Radio Canadian Army Europe five times daily, Monday through Friday, with additional broadcasts on Saturday and Sunday. The R.C.A.F. No. 1 air division operates radio stations at each of its five bases. News is broadcast four to five times daily with additional coverage on Sundays. In addition, the Canadian press provides a daily newscript, Monday through Saturday, which is transmitted over the armed forces telecommunication system each night and rebroadcast over local stations. Canadian newspapers are provided through non-public funds.

News transmissions from Canada by short wave are affected by electronic and atmospheric conditions and are limited by the capability of the transmitter and receiver system on both sides of the Atlantic. As a result, the transmission reception and rebroadcast of Canadian news has never been entirely satisfactory. This has been a matter of discussion between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the Department of External Affairs and the Department of National Defence.

FRINGE BENEFITS TO EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,771—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Has the federal government figures to indicate the cost of fringe benefits to employers, in cents per hour from 1947 to 1963 (a) in Canada (b) in each province?

2. What was the average net income of a Canadian worker during the years 1947 to 1963?

3. What taxes are levied on such income?

4. What was the revenue of the government in the last ten years from such taxes?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. This information is not available.

2. So far as the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue is concerned, we do not have the necessary information to answer this question.

3 and 4. These questions could not be answered without knowing more about the average Canadian worker referred to, such as his marital status, number of dependents, amount of donations, etc.

2. Of the additional 212 nursing orderlies in D.V.A. hospitals whose salary, and/or reclassification status is pending, when will the department be ready to report as to the disposition of these cases?

2. Of the 212 reclassifications still pending, the department has submitted 44 recommendations to the civil service commission; in approximately 113 additional cases, recommendations will be submitted to the commission within the next three or four weeks; but in approximately 55 cases, it may be some months before employees are assigned to duties which warrant higher classification since some re-organization within nursing services is involved.

R.C.M.P. DETACHMENT, MCCREARY, MAN.

Question No. 1,783—Mr. Enns:

1. How large is the R.C.M.P. detachment at McCreary, Manitoba?

2. What are the police facilities at McCreary, and are they sufficient for efficient and effective police operations for the area?

3. Are there any plans to replace the present building with a more complete and modern police headquarters?

Mr. Chevrier: 1. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police detachment at McCreary, Manitoba, consists of two members of the force.

2. There is a police owned detachment building providing accommodation for a married man and office space for two members. In addition, there is a separate one car garage. This accommodation is considered sufficient for efficient and effective police operations for the area.

3. No, not at present.

*INTERPRETERS AND SOUND TECHNICIANS IN PARLIAMENTARY SERVICE

Question No. 1,784—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

1. How many interpreters are assigned to the service of parliament?

2. Are they requested to perform certain duties outside of parliament and, if so, do these duties interfere with their official duties?

3. How many sound technicians are assigned to the service of parliament and has a survey been made in order to ascertain whether that number is sufficient?

[Translation]

Mr. Dupuis: 1. The 11 interpreters-translators are grouped under a central office which ensures the services of interpretation in the House of Commons, the Senate and committees of both houses.

2. These interpreters are sometimes called for duty at conferences organized by various federal departments. Their services are made available to the departments only when such outside work cannot in any way affect the interpretation service in both houses of parliament and in parliamentary committees.

3. Three sound technicians are presently assigned to the House of Commons (that is to the House of Commons itself and to committee rooms 308 and 311 in the west block). The contract provides, we understand, that those technicians are to look after the operation of the facilities in the house; however, they only have to repair the committee room equipment when there is a break. The authorities are presently considering the needs as far as those two committee rooms are concerned and the three others which will be radio-equipped at the beginning of next year.

REVENUE OF TELEVISION NETWORKS

Question No. 1,786—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What revenue was earned by Canadian television networks during the last five years?

2. Is there a special tax levied on the advertising of American products in Canada over these networks?

Mr. Pickersgill: There are only two television networks in Canada. Therefore information requested is not available in compliance with the secrecy clause of the Statistics Act which forbids divulging information which would reveal particulars relating to any individual or business.

2. No.

He also has participated in national and federal-provincial water studies of a similar nature.

HISTORIC SITE, BOULARDERIE ISLAND, N.S.

Question No. 1,814—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. What consideration has been given by the historic sites and monuments board in regard to the historical importance of the Count de la Boularderie settlement on Boularderie island?

2. Have any recommendations been made by the board on this matter and, if so, what consideration will be given them?

Mr. Laing: The board has not yet fully considered this question, which will appear on the agenda for the next meeting. (spring, 1964).

2. N/A.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Before we move from questions, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may have the permission of the house to change the wording of question No. 1,730 so I could get some information. The wording now used calls for the tabling of names of certain sheep producers who have been paid. I realize that there is some difficulty and that it would possibly discredit some of these flocks of sheep if the recipients of awards for scrapie were made known.

I should like to change the wording and ask, what was the total amount of money paid out; in how many provinces has it been paid—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Olson: —how many recipients there were. I should like also, Mr. Speaker, to ask how many recipients—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest to the hon. member that the better way is to withdraw his question and put a new question on the order paper.

Mr. Olson: I should like to ask for that permission.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

BATTELLE INSTITUTE REPORT TO ALASKA COMMISSION

Motion No. 160—Mr. Nielsen:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of a general assessment of the Battelle institute report to the Alaska international rail and highway commission, and of the latter's recommendations to the United States congress, prepared by the economic division of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, May 26, 1961.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I was speaking to the minister's deputy this morning and he probably did not get an opportunity to call me back; no doubt he has been speaking with the minister. If the minister can assure me that there is material in these documents which would be prejudicial to any negotiations which may now or in the future be conducted with the United States concerning the joint paving of the Alaska highway, then I withdraw my motion.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for again making the same commitment that he made last Wednesday in respect of this motion. I can assure him that if the report which he asked for, dated 1961, were made public it would be accompanied by a series of calculations and recommendations to the government which would demarcate the government's bargaining position in any conclusions or agreements made with the United States government if we arrive at the position where such a mutual undertaking was in prospect.

Mr. Nielsen: Then I withdraw my motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

ECONOMIC REPORT ON HAINES ROAD

Motion No. 161—Mr. Nielsen:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of an economic report on the road from Haines, Alaska, to Haines Junction, Yukon Territory, prepared by the economic division in 1961.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask that this motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 47 this motion is transferred to notices of motions (papers).

CORRESPONDENCE WITH WORLD FAIR CORPORATION

Motion No. 162—Mr. Valade:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the government, any parliamentary secretary or executive assistant to any minister of the crown, including the Prime Minister's office, and any member, full time employee or subcontractor of the world fair corporation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could say a word about this motion. I spoke to the hon. gentleman and he said he would consider the matter. I have spoken to the Minister of Public Works, who would be very glad to talk over with the hon. gentleman the possibility of making public anything that can properly be made public. I wonder whether in the circumstances, in view of the fact that this is correspondence with a public corporation set up by parliament, the hon. gentleman would agree to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the house to transfer this motion for debate because of the amendment the Prime Minister has proposed respecting the world fair corporation and also because of the technical difficulties which have occurred in setting up this land for the corporation. I would therefore like the house to transfer this matter for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 47 this motion is transferred to notices of motions (papers).

DELAY IN EXECUTION OF WARRANT AGAINST HAL BANKS

Motion No. 167—Mr. Diefenbaker:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters or other communications, or memos or records of telephone conversations since October

1, 1963, between the Minister of Justice or anyone acting on his behalf, and the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. or other officer, having to do with a direction given by the Minister of Justice, that the carrying out and execution of the explicit terms of the said warrant that the peace officers should forthwith arrest Hal Banks of Montreal on the charge of conspiracy to commit an assault should be delayed, together with any further letters or communications which altered or varied said direction.

Mr. Chevrier: It is a well established rule that letters and other communications between ministers and officials, or between officials, and memoranda and records relating to conversations between ministers and officials, or between officials, are privileged and cannot be produced. I therefore cannot agree to produce any such material which might exist.

I have in mind a number of motions which I made when I was on the other side of the house, one in particular which was refused and which I have no right to go into at this time, and another which was made by my colleague the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asking for production of the "Canadian Economic Outlook" for 1958, to which the former prime minister replied by stating the information was confidential and could not be produced. If the Leader of the Opposition is not willing to accept this, or is not willing to withdraw his motion, my suggestion is that the motion be transferred for debate at a later date.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not accept the suggestion of the minister that this is privileged. The words of the warrant are mandatory and do not permit of interference by the Minister of Justice. In ordinary circumstances I would agree that letters, memoranda or verbal instructions of the kind to which the hon. gentleman has referred would not be producible when the minister acts according to law; but in the wording of the warrant, form 7, the following appears: "This is, therefore, to command you—" that is, the peace officer— "in Her Majesty's name forthwith to arrest the accused".

This being so, the action admittedly taken by the Minister of Justice cannot be justified, and when he acts above the law what he does must be producible; otherwise lawlessness would be condoned and encouraged.

Mr. Chevrier: As Your Honour knows, this question is not debatable, and I made no attempt to debate it at the time. I would simply say to the right hon. gentleman that if he wants this matter placed on the order paper for debate I am quite satisfied, and I hope to be able to bring forward instances, when he was in office, of a position being taken identical with that taken by the Minister of Justice on this occasion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: At no time was there any act of lawlessness.

Mr. Speaker: Is there a request that this motion be transferred for debate?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

SELLING AND PRICING OF NEW DRUGS

Motion No. 170—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of telegrams, correspondence, and other documents exchanged between the government, the restrictive trade practices commission, or the combines investigation branch, and any person, organization, or company since January 1, 1961, regarding the question of hearings by the restrictive trade practices commission concerning the selling and pricing policies of certain pharmaceutical houses in respect of new types of drugs.

Mr. Chevrier: I am prepared to accept the motion subject to the reservation that memoranda prepared within the department or documents of a similar nature ordinarily considered as privileged, and correspondence and material of a private and confidential nature obtained or received in the course of the inquiry and not included in the report of the commission and in other material made public under the act should not be produced. In these circumstances I trust the hon. member will accept these reservations, and I hope he will be prepared to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Howard: There was no such reservation expressed by the hon. gentleman when he sat in opposition and voted for such a motion, but in view of the changed attitude he has now, I will withdraw the motion. It means nothing now.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH MISS KAHN-TINETA HORN

Motion No. 172—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between Dr. P. E. Moore of the Department of National Health and Welfare or any other person in the government and a Miss Kahn-Tineta Horn or any other person or organization since January 1, 1963 dealing with the subject matter identified by file No. 800-1-9(M12) or file No. 100-1-9(M12).

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Haidasz: Return tabled.

DISMISSAL FROM R.C.A.F. OF PETER CRANSTON

Motion No. 174—Mr. Orlikow:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence between Mr. Peter Cranston, formerly a squadron leader in the R.C.A.F. and the Prime Minister, Minister of Justice, and Minister of National Defence, dealing with the dismissal of Mr. Cranston from the R.C.A.F.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions with the minister, and I am prepared to withdraw this motion.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CONSTRUCTION OF ATOM SMASHERS

Motion No. 178—Mr. Orlikow:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the Canadian association of physicists and the government of Canada, its departments and commissions regarding the building of equipment usually referred to as particle accelerators or atom smashers.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to ascertain from the mover of the motion exactly what he has in mind in using the word "commissions". There is no question about the government of Canada and its departments, but I am not sure what he has in mind in relation to "commissions". Subject to clarification of this point we have no objection to the motion.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is accepted subject to the reservations as stated by the minister.

Motion agreed to.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS CONTRACT FOR RADIO STATIONS

Motion No. 179—Mr. Cowan:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence dated August 15, 1962 to December 1, 1962 between the government of Canada or any minister, department or agency thereof and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Pacific Railways and the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, respecting the contract for telecommunications for the approximately 195 radio stations, the previous ten-year contract having been replaced by a new contract effective October 1, 1962.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I have not had a chance to talk to the Minister of Transport about this motion, as I had hoped and intended to do, and I wonder whether the hon. member would mind allowing it to stand until next week.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Speaker, it has taken a year to get this far, so I presume another week will not hurt.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motion stands.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

RECOMMENDATIONS RESPECTING HEAVY WATER PLANT

Motion No. 180—Mr. Thompson:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of any recommendations made by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to the Department of Industry, trade and commerce and/or finance subsequent to May 31, 1963, and relating to proposals which has been received on that date by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited for the construction of a processing plant to produce heavy water together with copies of (a) any further recommendations or correspondence made by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to the government in regard to the Cape Breton site (b) the proposal of Deuterium of Canada Limited to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited for the construction of a processing plant for heavy water in the form originally received (c) the final proposal submitted by Deuterium of Canada Limited as accepted by the government and as announced by the Minister of Industry on December 2, 1963.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity of discussing this matter with the mover of the motion and have pointed out to him that as the recommendations and correspondence under (a) are internal, they are privileged. In respect of (b), the proposal of Deuterium of Canada Limited, I have undertaken to provide the hon. member with the information he seeks. In respect of (c), the final proposal has not yet been negotiated and therefore does not exist. In the light of this I think the hon. member is agreeable to withdrawing his motion.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the first and third parts are not available and that I have been able to obtain the necessary information with regard to part (b), which is not classified, I agree to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CONSTRUCTION IN CANADA OF BAC-111 PLANES

Motion No. 181—Mr. Gregoire:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and documents exchanged between the Minister of Industry or any of the officers of his department and the president or any of the officers or employees of the British Aircraft Corporation concerning the total or partial construction of BAC-111's in Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could say a word about all the motions standing in the name of the hon. member for Lapointe. Some of them concern the Minister of Industry and some of them concern the Minister of Transport, for whom I am acting in his absence from the house. I would hope that the hon. gentleman would be willing to allow these motions to stand until next week so that conversations could take place between the two ministers directly concerned, which has not been possible since the motions appeared on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, since next week will be the last of the session, I suggest that this would amount to killing those notices of motion. Since their subject matter is very important, I would like the parliamentary secretary to agree to the tabling of those documents today, on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith).

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the desire of the hon. member that I put the motion or that I allow the motion to stand?

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to put the question, especially as far as motion No. 183 is concerned.

[Text]

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, if you are calling No. 181 in the name of the hon. member for Lapointe, in the circumstances I would ask that this be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is transferred for debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I have just heard the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) recommend to the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) that all notices of motion be transferred for debate. Since we are getting near the end of the session, I feel that the government is using this procedure to prevent us from having the documents in question.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The motion is transferred for debate.

CONSTRUCTION IN CANADA OF CARAVELLE PLANES

Motion No. 182—Mr. Gregoire:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or documents exchanged between the Minister of Transport or any of the officers of his department and the president or any of the officers or employees of the Compagnie Sud-Aviation of France concerning the total or partial construction of Caravelles in Canada.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that this be transferred for debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to the Secretary of State that it is certainly not because of the absence of the Minister of Transport that the Minister of Industry has asked that a question concerning his department be transferred for debate.

However, in view of the absence of the Minister of Transport and the suggestion made by the Secretary of State, if we could have the assurance that the motion will be debated and carried when the Minister of Transport comes back to the house, I would accept to have the motion stand for the time being.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, if I might rise on a question of privilege, the hon. gentleman has suggested something is being done that is contrary to the rules. I made the suggestion to the hon. gentleman that he allow his motions to stand so there could be a conference. They would then have to come up next week and be dealt with, but the hon. gentleman refused what is a reasonable request, and one which I have never before known to be refused in the house when a minister was absent.

Therefore he left the government with no choice but to transfer these motions for debate. But if the hon. gentleman would accede to the original request and allow them to stand until next week so this conference can take place, an endeavour will be made by the government to make available all the information that can properly be made available.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the position I take, and the position I stand on, is that there must be a conference between the two ministers, and an endeavour will be made by the government to give all the information that is properly produceable under the rules. If that is acceptable to the hon. gentleman we will not transfer these for debate, but if it is not acceptable we will just act according to the rules of the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I accept. In view of the fact that the Secretary of State, knowing his procedure as well as he does, can catch us off guard, I accept his suggestion.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Motion 181 will stand; motion 182 will stand; motion 183 will stand—

Mr. Pickersgill: All the rest.

Mr. Speaker: Motion 184—

Mr. Pickersgill: Could we not stand them all at once, sir?

Mr. Speaker: Motions 181 to 193 inclusive will stand.

Motions stand.

INDUSTRY

HEAVY WATER PLANT—CONSIDERATION OF REPORTED NEW METHOD OF PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the reports which appeared in this morning's press to the effect that he has a group of experts in Toronto considering the proposal which has been made by British American Oil with respect to the development of heavy water, I would like to ask him when he expects to have a report from this group of experts, and will it be in time to permit a discussion of this matter if the minister's estimates are called on Friday, which should be the case if the report is available? If the report is not available, then possibly the estimates would be deferred. I would like to have the minister comment on that.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited that they would hope to have this report for me by late Monday night, but not before then. In these circumstances I do not think the hon. member would want to push scientific personnel to try to rush their assessment.

Mr. Nowlan: I am sure the minister will advise the house as soon as a report is available, in any event.

Mr. Drury: I will be glad to do that.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): As a supplementary question I would just like to ask the minister if at that time—the time he has suggested—when his estimates are before the house, he will be in a position to provide the house and the country with a complete, comprehensive and factual report on this very important question.

Mr. Drury: The answer to that is no, because I will not know by that time what will be the scientific assessment of this new process claimed by British American Oil.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): As a supplementary question, would the minister give an assurance that he will provide the house and the country with all the information that is available at that time?

Mr. Drury: I am not sure what the hon. member means by "at that time." Is that following Monday?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): When your estimates are on.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): The point we would like to know from the minister is, will he defer the discussion of his estimates until he has received this report from atomic energy and is able to tell the house what decision the government has made with respect to the heavy water plant?

Mr. Drury: If the house so wishes, I think it might be a useful thing to defer consideration of the estimates until this situation has been clarified.

CONSIDERATION OF FRENCH CANADIANS IN MAKING SENIOR APPOINTMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry?

Could the hon. gentleman tell us whether it is true, as reported in La Presse yesterday, that some Quebec Liberal members are bringing pressure to bear on him to have French Canadians appointed as high officials in his department so that the French Canadian element be adequately represented in the Department of Industry?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of such pressure.

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Could the minister inform the house whether he would let me exert such pressure?

[Text]

FINANCE

REPORTED ASSURANCE THAT EXCHANGE RATE WILL BE MAINTAINED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will the minister advise the house as to the nature of the "limited assurances from Ottawa that the Canadian exchange rate will be preserved at its present level," which Gordon E. Grundy, president of the automotive division of Studebaker was reported in yesterday's Ottawa Citizen as having said was a factor in the decision to move auto production to Canada?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to add to what I said on June 13 last in this house.

Mr. Fairweather: As a supplementary question, were these limited assurances given to Studebaker by the minister himself or by one of his officials?

Mr. Gordon: The limited assurances were not given by me, and whether they were given by anybody in Ottawa I do not know.

FEDERAL DISTRICT

STUDY OF POSSIBILITY OF INCLUDING OTTAWA, HULL AND EASTVIEW

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the attitude reminiscent of the middle ages the mayor of Ottawa has taken toward bilingualism, does he not feel the government should take this opportunity to consider the possibility of establishing a federal district which would include Ottawa, Hull and the surrounding area?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would hesitate to characterize any attitude of the mayor of Ottawa as medieval. In medieval times most educated people spoke Latin as well as their own language. On the particular matter of the federal district, this is a question that has aroused interest from time to time and has been under consideration by governments. No doubt it will receive consideration again in the future.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the minister consider the circumstances warrant his giving the house some definitive information as to the crucial negotiations on the Columbia river treaty, or is he precluded from doing so by a continuing contrariety?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Would my hon. friend repeat the last part of his observation?

Mr. Herridge: Does the minister consider the circumstances warrant his giving the house some definitive information as to the crucial negotiations on the Columbia river treaty, or is he precluded from doing so by a continuing contrariety?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, this is the Christmas season—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Crouse: Tell us about Santa Claus.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and I am disposed to give my hon. friend the complete information for which he asks. With that in mind, I can only refer him to the informative reply that I gave yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, directed to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Did any of the officials of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources give Mr. Paddy Sherman the figures he used in a broadcast this morning related to the price for downstream benefits in the negotiations, figures which are denied at the present time to members of this house.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am conscious of the Christmas season too. As far as I know, no figures were sought by Mr. Sherman or given to him by any member of my department.

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the Canadian government negotiating position, which apparently takes into account the position of the government of British Columbia, has been revealed to officials of the United States government, is there any reason now why this house may not share in those details?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, there is an excellent reason why, when negotiations are under way, they should be kept within the negotiating groups.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that both sides now know their definite positions in this matter, could the house not have some idea of what are the intentions of the government, even if not in detail?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, those intentions will be revealed at the appropriate time.

UNITED NATIONS

RUSSIAN OBJECTION TO EXPANSION OF SECURITY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Inquiries of the Ministry

According to today's Globe and Mail the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics has now served notice at the United Nations that it will not permit the expansion of the security council at the present time. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the house what informal arrangements have now been made to rearrange the traditional seating arrangements for non-permanent members of that body so as to provide for appropriate Asian and African representation thereon; and what scheme, if any, has now been agreed upon so that in future Canada will have an opportunity to be represented on the security council?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend will agree that he answered his own question when he told us that the Soviet union has made a declaration of its intention not to agree, as a member of the security council, to the expansion of that and other bodies until such time as the Chinese people's republic has been admitted to the United Nations.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not quite understand my question. I asked him what scheme had been arranged, if any—and I take it perhaps this has not been done—so that Canada will be assured of representation on that body in the future; because as the Secretary of State for External Affairs well knows, since Russia will not permit the expansion of the council the informal arrangements for seating members which have existed until recently will have to be rearranged.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The commonwealth seat continues until such time as the big five and the assembly have agreed, pursuant to United Nations procedure, to another arrangement for representation on the council. Until that decision is taken, the status quo continues.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is telling this house that the commonwealth seat, under an informal arrangement which has existed until recently, is still in existence?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend will see from the answer I have given to his question that there is nothing further I can add. The situation will not change until such time as the assembly agrees to another arrangement.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council. Does the minister intend to appoint Miss Charlotte Whitton to the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, in view of certain statements published in the newspapers?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. There will be no applause from the gallery, please.

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the government will examine that request together with the qualifications of the mayor of Ottawa.

An hon. Member: She is a Conservative.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Is it the intention of the President of the Privy Council to recommend as well that Mr. Gordon McGregor, president of Trans-Canada Air Lines be appointed to that same commission?

[Later:]

[Text]

Mr. Pigeon: I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the Prime Minister to be accompanied by Mr. McGregor, president of T.C.A., on his next trip to France?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

OBJECTION TO "HANSARD" PRACTICE RESPECTING CAPITALIZATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of privilege that I wish to raise. We hear a great deal these days of linguistic rights, and my point of privilege has to do with the breaches of accepted English usage to which hon. members of this house are subjected when their speeches are reported in Hansard. I have reference to the odd and peculiar formula for capitalization that is insisted upon by the Hansard authorities. Yesterday I made a short speech in the house in which I made one or two references to an international body, the international monetary fund. In spite of my request to Hansard that these three words should be capitalized—as they should be according to literate and accepted English usage—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —I find them again in lower case. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is intolerable that members of this house should be subjected to this illiterate misusage of English and some steps should be taken to correct the situation. I propose to raise it on every occasion upon which I am subjected to this sort of nonsense again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I discussed this problem with the Secretary of State and I have the same question of privilege to raise. I give three examples of this in a speech I made on December 3. The first is the University of New Brunswick, which obviously should be capitalized; the Canadian universities foundation should be capitalized, and finally the Canadian universities service overseas. In all these cases correct English would dictate a capital being used.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, perhaps since there is no English academy this question might be referred to the Academie Francaise.

RETENTION OF SESSIONAL STAFF DURING RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State supplementary to the question asked him yesterday by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency. Does the decision to retain members' secretaries on staff during the period between this session and the next apply also to messengers and other members of the sessional staff of the House of Commons?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I will have to make inquiries about that.

RAILWAYS, AIR LINES AND SHIPPING

REQUEST OF FRENCH GOVERNMENT FOR STATEMENT BY T.C.A. PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the French government or the French embassy requested a copy of the evidence given by Mr. Gordon McGregor before the sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have received no such request.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SUGAR

INQUIRY AS TO CONTRACT WITH RHODESIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce which I shall direct to his parliamentary secretary in the absence of the minister. Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce inform the house when a long term sugar contract with Rhodesia might be concluded, in view of the continuing exorbitant prices being charged for this commodity and in view of the fact that it continues to be available in the United States at a lower price than is the case in Canada?

Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED IMPROVEMENT OF GRAIN SHIPPING FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question originally was to be addressed to the Minister of Transport, but in his absence I address it to the Minister of Agriculture. Are the minister or his departmental officials considering approaching or making plans to approach farm cooperative organizations, wheat pools and line elevator company officials to improve elevator and other facilities so that Canada, with a surplus of grain, could meet the demand for western wheat?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): I will take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

KETTLE VALLEY RAILWAY—APPEAL AGAINST DISCONTINUANCE OF SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): In the absence of the Minister of Transport I wish to direct a question of imminent significance to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the right of any interested party, person or company to appeal to the governor in council by way of a petition against any decision of the board of transport commissioners, is the Prime Minister prepared to accept such a petition from the member for Kootenay West on behalf of the Rossland chamber of commerce appealing against the decision of the board of transport commissioners authorizing the discontinuance of passenger service on the Kettle valley railway?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall have to take this question as notice and discuss it with my colleague the Minister of Transport.

HUMAN RIGHTS

REPORTED DISMISSAL OF INSURANCE OFFICIAL THROUGH POLITICAL DISCRIMINATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In the British House of Commons Mr. Peter Thomas, joint minister of state for foreign affairs, referring to the forced resignation of Lord Mancroft from the board of the Norwich Union Insurance Societies, said that the government "strongly disapproves of pressure from any source on British firms to discriminate between British subjects on any grounds". I would like to ask, in view of this statement, whether the Prime Minister is prepared to make a statement on behalf of the Canadian government registering the government's disapproval of the political discrimination practised by the same company against Mr. James Renwick of Toronto.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that the government disapproves of discrimination in any form.

LABOUR RELATIONS

B.C. FISHERMEN'S STRIKE—RESIGNATION OF ARBITRATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries if Mr. Justice Dryer, who was appointed as arbitrator of the dispute in the B.C. fishing industry earlier this summer, has tendered his resignation from that position. If so, when did the minister hear of this?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the hon. member that I received a letter last week from Mr. Justice Dryer advising that in view of his heavy responsibilities, there would be undue delay in proceeding with the arbitration which he accepted early last summer. In view of this we are prepared to accept his resignation, and I am attempting to communicate with the minister of labour for British Columbia, Hon. L. R. Peterson, in order to appoint a new arbitrator.

Mr. Howard: May I ask a supplementary question. Does the minister not feel, in view of the speed with which the government acted last summer when this dispute was in progress, that he should speed things up now? The whole process is being delayed, for which the minister is primarily responsible, and this is inimical to the interests of the people concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order; there is no question—

Mr. Robichaud: Within a few hours after receiving the letter from the chief justice I tried to communicate by telephone with the minister of labour for British Columbia. I was told he was unavoidably absent for a period of ten days. In the meantime my office is communicating with the office of the minister in order to locate him, and this is being done today.

Mr. Howard: May I ask a supplementary question. When the minister was in Vancouver to attend a meeting of the north Pacific fisheries commission, did he then not try to get in touch with Mr. Peterson?

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, I did try to get in touch with Mr. Peterson and I did get in touch with him, notwithstanding the statement to the contrary that was made by the secretary of the united fishermen and allied workers. At that time Mr. Justice Dryer had not tendered his resignation. I contacted him the next day in Montreal where I was attending the resource ministers' meeting. At that time Mr. Justice Dryer informed me he thought he would be able to carry on with the arbitration. However, only a week later, he reconsidered his position and advised me he was not able to do so without unduly delaying proceedings.

MARITIME UNIONS—REQUEST FOR TRANSCRIPT OF PRESS CONFERENCE OF TRUSTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Labour a question. In view of the fact that the maritime unions trustees today held a press conference in Montreal to bring the press up to date on their activities at the present time, and in view of the fact that during the conference they outlined certain deficiencies in the federal legislation which led to difficulties on the great lakes, I wonder whether the minister could get a transcript of the press conference so that members of parliament could be aware of the information that has now been placed in the public domain.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I will make inquiries, Mr. Speaker, to meet that request.

MARITIME UNIONS—REQUEST FOR REPORT BY TRUSTEES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he has made any inquiries regarding the questionnaire to which I alluded yesterday; and second, whether the interim report by the trustees appointed in connection with great lakes shipping is now in his possession.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, I have received no report. As I indicated to the house yesterday I expect to be seeing Mr. Justice Dryer very soon, and I hope to have a discussion about this matter and about the possibility of a report to parliament at the earliest possible date. At that time I intend also to raise the question of the questionnaire; and in light of the further question of the Leader of the Opposition I may wish to be in touch with Mr. Justice Dryer very soon.

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF CHAMBER OF COMMERCE BRIEF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of press reports to the effect that the Canadian Chamber of Commerce has submitted to the Prime Minister and the government a brief urging the government to scrap the Canada pension plan, I wonder whether a copy of this brief and of the Prime Minister's reply, which I hope was an appropriate one, could be added to the return the house ordered under motion for production of papers No. 105 which was passed on October 23 but which has not yet been brought down?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no reason why the brief should not be added to the return in question. My comment on that part of the brief, while appropriate, was purely oral and there would be no record of that. However, I assure my hon. friend that what I told them was in line with the assurance I have already given to the house on this matter.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask a question of the house leader. Will he report to the house with regard to the questions passed as orders for returns?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): By an extraordinary coincidence I anticipated this question today.

Mr. Nowlan: A guilty conscience.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was just anticipation. I have in my hands a list of the returns which are still outstanding, and I shall be glad to lay that on the table. I should like to report that out of 96 questions which have been made orders for returns since the beginning of the session, there are only four outstanding; out of 107 motions for the production of papers which have been accepted and passed, only 37 are still outstanding. I believe this is some kind of record.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a question for the Postmaster General arising out of his acceptance on December 4 of my motion for the production of papers No. 152. I wonder whether the minister could say if he could table that correspondence in time for the consideration of his estimates, which will be under discussion today or tomorrow?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): I do not know if the documents are going to be ready by this afternoon or tomorrow. The motion was accepted only last week, but we are doing our utmost to be able to produce these documents. If we cannot, then I will try to answer all the questions the hon. member may ask during the discussion of the estimates.

AGRICULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but in his absence I shall direct it to the Minister of Agriculture. Since consideration is being given to the formation of an eastern feed grain board, can the minister say if this board can obtain feed grains directly from the Canadian wheat board?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): As I suggested in the house the other day, we are having a meeting of eastern ministers on the 16th, 17th and 18th, when these matters will be discussed. Until that time I do not have any announcements to make.

Mr. Langlois: May I ask a supplementary question and raise a point of order on the answer the minister has given. This subject is of concern to the federal government, not to the provincial ministers. Has the minister or the government any intention of purchasing such grain, or is there any possibility of purchasing such grain for the eastern feed grain board?

Mr. Hays: I have nothing to add. The wheat board is under the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and probably the hon. member should address his question to him.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

PRODUCTION OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH CONSULTANTS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General?

Can the minister assure us that he sent us all the correspondence he exchanged with all his consultants since last April 8?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes, as far as official correspondence is concerned.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Why did not the minister send us that correspondence in our respective ridings as it was exchanged with his consultants?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, you will note that the questions asked by hon. members opposite, especially those of the new Social Credit party, have been numerous and required inquiries in the various ridings of the province to gather as much of the correspondence as possible.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF STAFF HOLIDAY ON BOXING DAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, I am pleased to inform him that December 26 has been declared a holiday with pay for all civil servants, which includes postal employees. Where the 26th is observed as a holiday there would normally be no letter carrier delivery. Employees required to work on December 26 would be compensated in accordance with the civil service regulations.

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): May I ask a question on that, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Postmaster General for this announcement, but will he make this decision public immediately and continue to urge the public to mail early, so there will not be too great a mail delivery load after the Boxing day holiday?

Mr. Denis: I will do my best, Mr. Speaker.

PENITENTIARIES

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL—STATEMENT ON RIOTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): On Monday the hon. member for Vancouver East asked me whether the commissioner of penitentiaries had completed his investigation into the riots at St. Vincent de Paul and the alleged attacks by guards on the alleged leaders of the riots. A summary of the findings and recommendations of the commission of inquiry convened by the commissioner of penitentiaries under the Penitentiary Act in respect of the riots was tabled in the house in June last.

With respect to the question of alleged attacks by guards on the alleged leaders of the riots, I presume that the hon. member is referring to the case of Alvin Gunn. On October 29 last I tabled a statement with respect to this case, and it was printed in Hansard at page 4134. This investigation, which was limited in scope, was conducted by the regional director of penitentiaries over a two day period, and evidence was not taken under oath.

In the light of the findings of that inquiry the commissioner of penitentiaries, acting pursuant to the powers that he has under the Penitentiary Act, appointed a legal officer of the Department of Justice, Mr. Louis Philippe Landry, as a commissioner to inquire into and report upon the alleged physical abuse used against Gunn. Mr. Landry, acting under his powers to subpoena witnesses and take evidence under oath, conducted an inquiry accordingly and reported his findings to the commissioner. The finding was that Alvin Gunn had been severely beaten by eight penitentiary officers and that the beating was not necessary under the circumstances.

At the time of Mr. Landry's inquiry five of the officers had already resigned or were under suspension for other reasons. The remaining three officers were charged before a disciplinary board under the penitentiary regulations with the offence of having used excessive force against Gunn. The board found one of them guilty and recommended a severe reprimand. The board concluded that there was not sufficient evidence to justify conviction of the remaining two officers.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question. May I ask the minister what is involved in a "severe reprimand" for a guard beating a prisoner?

Mr. Chevrier: Having regard to the fact that there were a number of others and that five of them have resigned or been suspended, I presume that in the case of the guard in question the part he took in the incident was less grievous than the part played by the others and warranted, in the eyes of the disciplinary board, a reprimand rather than a dismissal.

NEW WESTMINSTER—RECOMMENDATION THAT CONDITIONS BE INVESTIGATED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A further supplementary: I asked the minister some two weeks ago about the recommendation of a jury that there be an investigation into conditions in the New Westminster penitentiary. He said at that time that the superintendent of penitentiaries was in the west and that he might be able to reply when the minister had his report on his return. I wonder whether the minister has had any report from the superintendent or the commissioner and what action the government intends to take.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that that matter was closed. I had the report from the judge and I gave the house the recommendation made by the judge. Those recommendations have been discussed with the commissioner, and the commissioner has not made any statement other than that which I put on Hansard.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. Do I understand from the Minister of Justice that he is refusing to conduct an inquiry into conditions at the New Westminster penitentiary, as recommended by the jury, merely because of the views expressed by the judge and the commissioner of penitentiaries?

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think I said that, and I hope I did not leave that impression. I reported, as I indicated earlier, that I had discussed the question with the commissioner. I have received no report from the commissioner, and since I hope my estimates will come up this week, or certainly early next week, there will be an opportunity to discuss it then, when I shall be glad to give further information to the hon. member.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—STATEMENT ON ABSENCE FROM COUNTRY WHILE ON BAIL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, while I am discussing this matter perhaps I can reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Bow River concerning the warrant issued against Banks. The answer to the question asked by him, with reference particularly to Banks' absence from the country, is as follows. I am informed by Mr. Jean Martineau, Q.C., special counsel, that there are no court rules in Quebec which prohibit an accused who has been charged with an offence and granted bail from leaving Canada during the time he is out on bail. The amount of the bail and the conditions to be imposed are matters for the court, and it is significant in this case that the court actually fixed bail in a lower sum than the crown suggested, thus confirming that the court brought its own judgment to bear upon this matter.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question with reference to the answer of the Minister of Justice. Do I take his answer to mean that there are special rules governing bail in the province of Quebec which are not covered by the Criminal Code of Canada?

Mr. Chevrier: All I can say in that respect is that the moment the matter is in the hands of the courts, then it is no longer the responsibility, I take it, of those who have laid the charge or are responsible for the laying of the charge. That, I think, applies not only in the province of Quebec but in all other provinces as well. The accused is then in the hands of the court. If the court decides to place conditions upon bail, over which certainly neither the Minister of Justice nor any officer in the department would have any control, I do not think one should direct any criticism at that court.

CANADIAN FLAG

SUGGESTED ANNOUNCEMENT BY GOVERNMENT BEFORE CHRISTMAS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. As the present session is coming to an end and as we will soon be celebrating Christmas, at which time it is customary to exchange presents with one another, would the Prime Minister be willing to give a Christmas present to the Canadian people by granting our country a distinctive national flag?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it will be impossible to have this gift ready and wrapped before Christmas.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ECONOMIC COUNCIL

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the President of the Privy Council when he intends to announce the personnel of the economic council of Canada? I know the chairman and directors have been appointed, as well as some staff. It is now over four months since the legislation was passed, and this matter was supposed to be of very important urgency. So far as I know the government has not yet announced the personnel.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be in a position to make an announcement about this next week.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—CONSIDERATION BY DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is it his intention to hold soon a special meeting between the federal and the provincial governments in order to discuss exclusively the unemployment problem which is alarming Canada at the present time?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The question of unemployment was discussed recently at the federal-provincial conference, at which time there was noted by those present an encouraging rise in total employment in Canada and an encouraging decline in unemployment. As the hon. member will realize from the figures released today, the unemployment rate, seasonally adjusted, is lower at the present time than it has been since the summer of 1957.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pigeon: That noise is a form of closure, Mr. Speaker. I wish to ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that this winter half a million Canadians will be unemployed, is it the intention of the minister to recommend the holding of a special meeting between the federal government and the provincial governments to consider this important matter?

Mr. MacEachen: As I have indicated, the premiers were given an opportunity, pursuant to a meeting in Halifax this summer, to have a special conference with the federal government on unemployment. Most of them preferred to have the item listed on the agenda of the recent federal-provincial conference. This was done, and an additional discussion was held at that time with respect to unemployment.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I was interested in the cavalier way in which the minister disposed of the matter of unemployment. Does he regard the situation today, when there are 300,000 unemployed, as being the full employment which the Liberal party promised?

Mr. MacEachen: The situation of any person who is unemployed and who is willing and able to work is a matter of serious concern to the government, and to all Canadians. I wish to assure the right hon. gentleman that this is the attitude taken on the part of the government. I wish to assure him also that there has been a definite increase in employment during the past year and a definite decrease in unemployment, and that the unemployment rate, seasonally adjusted, is the lowest since the summer of 1957.

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour what projects he has in mind to provide jobs for these 303,000 Canadians who are unemployed. What are his proposals for providing immediate work for these people? I ask this because when the hon. gentleman was on this side of the house he certainly made a big story out of it.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he does not agree that the decline in unemployment is the result of the legislation enacted over the last few years.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): A supplementary question to the Minister of Labour with reference to the answer he gave to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. Is the minister aware that the residents in the area of Thetford Mines would pay his fare there if he would go there and explain to them what he has just said in this house, in the way he said it?

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Could I ask the minister what plans he has for those who will be displaced by the closing of the Point Edward naval base? If he is not able to reply now, then how soon will these plans be announced?

Mr. MacEachen: I would refer the hon. member to the statement made by my colleague the Minister of National Defence with respect to this matter—a statement which I hope he drew to the attention of the people of Cape Breton on his visit there last week end—to the effect that no reduction in the work force at that base would be undertaken until after April 1, that the reduction would be undertaken over a considerable period of time, and that appropriate measures would be taken to assist in the adjustment of those affected.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): In other words, what the minister is saying—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is becoming a debate.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Am I to understand from the minister's last statement that no one will be laid off at the Point Edward naval base until his department finds alternative work for them?

Mr. MacEachen: The statements which the Minister of National Defence and I have made on this point are perfectly clear.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I do not think they are clear to those who will be laid off.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO PREPARATIONS TO AMEND LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): May I direct a question to the Minister of Labour? Will the minister inform the house what progress has been made in preparing legislation to overhaul the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is certainly a question for the order paper at this time of the day.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPOINTMENT OF AUDITORS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Transport) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-121, respecting the appointment of auditors for national railways.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt this motion?

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

PRIVY COUNCIL

1. Payment, notwithstanding anything in the Financial Administration Act or the Senate and House of Commons Act respecting the independence of parliament, to each member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada who is a minister for whom no salary or allowance in addition to the allowances under section 33 and section 44 of the Senate and House of Commons Act is provided (the acceptance of which shall not render such member ineligible or disqualify him as a member of the House of Commons) of a salary of $7,500 per annum and pro rata for any period less than a year, $7,500.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): There are a number of different subjects which might properly be discussed as we consider the estimates of the privy council. So as to have a more orderly discussion, I propose to hon. members that we defer consideration of the estimates of the emergency measures organization until the very end of our deliberations. At that time, the Minister of Industry, who is now responsible for this organization, will take over. I would also suggest that the general discussion on centennial projects and programs be postponed until we reach the vote concerning the centennial administration. If this procedure is acceptable—and I hope it will be, for it will make for a much more orderly discussion, as I have suggested—it would perhaps be convenient for me to say a few words at this point, about the bureau of government organization which forms part of the privy council office and about the progress that has been achieved in implementing the recommendations of the royal commission on government organization, generally referred to as the Glassco commission.

The first volume of the reports of the commission appeared in September, 1962. Since then four additional volumes have been published. Volume 5 appeared in May of this year. The commission has now discharged its mandate. Its staff of experts and consultants, combined with officers seconded to it from within the public service, has now been disbanded.

I should like to take advantage of the opportunity presented by this discussion of the estimates to express the thanks of the government and of the people of Canada to the commissioners and to all those who were associated with them in their monumental study of the structure and organization of the government of Canada in all its many forms. The present government holds the view that the findings and the recommendations of the commissioners deserve the most serious and careful study.

There is, in the view of the government, much in the report of the commissioners that will, if carried into effect, achieve one of the commission's prime objectives as stated in its terms of reference, namely "to provide efficiency, economy and improved service in the dispatch of public business". At the same time, it must be added that there will inevitably be some recommendations which can only be accepted and implemented with suitable modifications, and others which may not be acceptable at all.

It was for the purpose of facilitating the detailed study and appraisal of the commission's numerous recommendations, about 300 in all, that the bureau of government organization was established by the preceding administration in the privy council office. The bureau was established in January of this year just prior to the publication of volume 3 of the commission's reports. It has continued to function actively throughout the year and the first major results of its work were seen in the list of 68 approved recommendations which I tabled in the house on November 5 last. If we add to this list the half dozen or more recommendations formally accepted and approved by the previous administration we can say that something like 25 per cent of the formal recommendations made by the Glassco commission in its five volumes, containing 24 reports, have now been formally approved by the government.

I should add immediately with reference to the statement I have just made that I recognize the impossibility of judging the progress made in implementing the commission's findings simply by reference to the percentage of recommendations that have been approved. The 75 or more formal recommendations which have been accepted to date are not in all cases to be considered among the most important of the commission's recommendations. Many of the more fundamental and far reaching proposals still remain to be assessed and decided. Indeed, many of the most important proposals of the commission are not set out as formal recommendations at all. Instead they are embodied in the text of the reports themselves, not as formal recommendations but explicitly or implicitly as part of the argument of the commissioners. I cite as instances of my point report No. 1 entitled, "A Plan For Management", the separate report of commissioner Therrien on bilingualism in the public service, and report No. 19 on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Not one of these three reports contains a single formal recommendation. One has to look to the text of the reports themselves and to the argument advanced in the text to determine what criticisms are offered concerning the present arrangements and what changes, by inference if not directly, are advocated.

This is why I say that the findings of the commissioners, both their formal recommendations and the implications of their criticisms and their observations on a wide variety of governmental activities, must be studied actively and with the greatest care in order to determine the full implications of the changes which are proposed in the interests of improved and more effective service to the taxpaying public.

I should like now to direct the committee's attention to a number of major questions of principle to which the Glassco commission addressed itself, since it is only by so doing that we will be able to place in proper perspective the recommendations which the commissioners made and which the government has been considering. Perhaps the most important of these general questions has to do with the degree of concentration or delegation of authority that is to be sought in a service as large, as varied and as far-flung as is the federal public service. By its very nature the federal administration must be widely dispersed and highly decentralized in physical and geographical terms. That is not only highly desirable but entirely unavoidable in a country as vast as Canada.

We have also accepted in our governmental structure over the years a high degree of decentralization by departments and agencies. The proof of this is seen in the number of departments which have been created over the years and in the even larger number of independent and quasi-independent agencies, including crown corporations, which have been established by parliamentary action both in the pre-war and especially in the post-war years.

In another sense, however, with respect to authority for decision making there has been a lesser degree of decentralization than one might imagine if one were to judge solely by the appearances of geographical and departmental decentralization as applied to operations. So far as the basic authority and responsibility with respect to financial and personnel management are concerned, these have not been decentralized with respect to departments to anything like the same extent that they have been in the case of crown corporations or other agencies. For a good many years now, since 1918 or earlier in respect of personnel matters and since 1932 in respect of financial agencies, the civil service commission, the treasury board and the comptroller of the treasury have exercised detailed control over the personnel and financial activities of individual departments to an extent far beyond that which the Glassco commission considers necessary for the effective operations of the departments or for the proper safeguarding of the public interest.

The commissioners point out, for example, that under the provisions of the Civil Service Act it is the civil service commission which recruits, selects, promotes, transfers and carries out most of the other important elements of the personnel function affecting the careers of the classified civil servant in a government department. It is the civil service commission, together with the treasury board, which deals with matters affecting establishments, classifications and reclassifications. It is the treasury board which in the final analysis deals with pay determination. In fact, very few of the decisions in the personnel field affecting the work performance, the careers and the effective deployment of the members of the civil service can legally be taken by the departments which, nominally at least, employ, direct and supervise the civil servants whose services they use to discharge the department's responsibilities.

The reasons which have led to the concentration of authority and responsibility in respect of personnel matters in the hands of the civil service commission and in the treasury board are of course well known, and have their roots in the early history of government in this country. While recognizing these historical factors, the Glassco commission concludes none the less that the removal of authority, responsibility and accountability from departments for personnel management has gone too far; that the departments have become weakened thereby; and that this has led to a degree of dependence by departments on the central control agencies, which is not healthy or conducive to sound concepts of organization or management. Where responsibility is too widely dispersed—where it is scattered, fragmented and shared by too many units of administration—it becomes almost impossible to fix or to pinpoint responsibility. By the same token it becomes more difficult to hold any one unit or authority accountable for the consequences of decisions which are taken.

The Glassco commission compares the position of the government departments and of the civil service in this respect, with the much greater concentration of authority, responsibility and accountability on line management that is found in private industry, and equally in the crown corporations and independent agencies. The commissioners ask, in this connection, what is so different about the position of 133,000 classified civil servants —and about the calibre and quality of departmental management—that they have to be treated so differently from employees in private industry, and so differently also from the much larger numbers of crown employees employed outside the confines of the Civil Service Act?

The conclusion of the commissioners is that the high degree of detailed and centralized control over individual personnel management decisions presently exercised by the civil service commission and by the treasury board is both unnecessary, and in fact detrimental to efficient administration. It recommends that central control continue to be exercised through the laying down of broad policies, directives, principles and guide lines through the treasury board; that the role of the civil service commission be substantially altered with the removal of many aspects of personnel administration from its jurisdiction and a strengthening of its role as an independent agency for the safeguarding of the merit system; and that departments be given greater responsibility for making the detailed individual personnel decisions affecting the employees of their respective departments, but always within the policy guide lines established by the central management authority, that is, the treasury board.

When we turn to the area of financial management, and to the relationship between the comptroller of the treasury and the treasury board with departmental managements, the commissioners present to us a similar picture. Under the Financial Administration Act the comptroller of the treasury must pre-audit every proposed payment of every department of government. Should the comptroller's view of the legality of the proposed payment, or of the eligibility of the proposed payee to receive the payment conflict with the view of the administering department, such disagreement can only be resolved by the decision of the treasury board. Such a system involves, in the view of the commissioners, an undesirable degree of protection, leading to dependence on the comptroller, for departments; inevitable duplication between the work of departments which must make the initial decision, and the comptroller, who must confirm or reject it; and excessive involvement of the treasury board in a large number of individual decisions when its primary concern and preoccupation should be with broad policy matters.

The full measure of the extent to which the responsibility for decision making has been shifted from departmental management to the central management authority of the treasury board can be seen from the table shown on page 131 of volume 1 of the Glassco report, which shows that in 1960 almost 16,000 submissions were made by departments and agencies to the treasury board seeking authority to make decisions. The number of management decisions, initiated by departments in the personnel field, or in the proposed authorization of money payments which require the sanction of the civil service commission or the comptroller of the treasury, is vastly in excess of the questions submitted for decision to the treasury board itself. In all three areas, the view of the Glassco commission is that the vast majority of these individual decisions on detailed points can and should be taken by departmental management within the framework of broad policy guide lines established by the treasury board or other central control agencies. In other words, the central control agencies should exercise control through policy formulation, and through a method of supervision which endeavours to assess the over-all effectiveness with which policies are carried out. If this viewpoint is accepted, it means in the view of the commissioners that the central control agencies concentrate on policy formulation, and disengage from detailed decision making with which they are so greatly overburdened at the present time. Departments, on the other hand, within the framework of the policies laid down for them to follow, would have the responsibility for making their own decisions, would not be excessively protected from the consequences of their own carelessness and mistakes as they are at present, and would be held accountable for the results, whether good or bad, which flow from their decisions.

At this point, the question can quite properly be asked: what is the government's attitude to the commission's point of view on this important question of financial management and control? Does the government subscribe to the philosophy of personnel and financial management outlined in the Glassco report?

The answer to this perfectly proper question must, of course, be a qualified one. By and large, however, the government's view on the score of financial management is indicated by the fact that it has accepted, in the list which I tabled on November 5 last, the recommendation set out at page 105 in volume 1, of the report that "departments and agencies be given a greater measure of financial authority and be held correspondingly accountable for the effective management of the financial resources placed at their disposal."

I should perhaps draw attention to an important difference between the recommendation as it appears in the commission's report and the form in which I have indicated the government's acceptance.

The report refers to departments being given "the necessary financial authority"; the recommendation as accepted by the government calls for departments to be given a greater measure of financial authority. This distinction is an important one. The government, in other words, is accepting and moving in the direction which the commission has recommended, that is to say, the direction of greater departmental management control, responsibility and accountability for its own administration.

The government has not yet, however, made a final determination as to how far it is prepared to go along the lines recommended by Glassco, nor is it prepared as yet to say that it will go the entire distance advocated by the commission. That is why it has to date indicated its acceptance of only 16 of the 27 recommendations contained in the financial management report. The remaining 11 have not been rejected; they have merely been reserved for more detailed study.

I should perhaps at this point refer to another step which we have decided to take in the process of testing the validity of the Glassco commission's recommendations on financial management in advance of their actual implementation. Members of the public accounts committee have already been advised of a number of feasibility studies which have been arranged to test the applicability of the commission's recommendations on financial management in the day to day administration of four separate departments. The departments engaged in these feasibility studies are the departments of agriculture, northern affairs and national resources, transport, and veterans affairs. In the case of northern affairs the study extends beyond questions of financial management to include the Glassco recommendations on personnel management and paperwork and systems management as well. Each of these four departments has retained the services of a management consultant to assist in working out the changes in departmental organization structure and procedures which would be required to implement fully all the Glassco recommendations in the fields mentioned.

These studies, which will take six months to complete, will cover not only the recommendations in the fields of financial management which the government has already accepted, but also those which have not as yet been decided. We hope and expect that out of the experience of these four departments we will be able to determine the extent to which it is sound and practicable to apply the commission's recommendations on financial and personnel management, etc., to the service as a whole.

My remarks to this point, Mr. Chairman, have related principally to the recommendations contained in the first volume of the Glassco commission's reports. Here the principal issue has been the division of responsibility between the central control agencies, treasury board, the civil service commission and the comptroller of the treasury on the one hand, and the departments on the other.

The commission comes down in favour of a substantial shift of management responsibilities on matters of detail to the departments.

There is one other issue of major importance raised by the commissioners in their very first report entitled "A Plan for Management". That has to do with the proposed relocation and reconstitution of treasury board, and the designation of a minister as the full-time president of treasury board. The principal reason advanced for this proposal by the commission is that the Minister of Finance, because of his other preoccupations and responsibilities has, in fact been unable for a number of years now to devote an adequate amount of time and attention to his duties as the chairman of treasury board. The commission expresses the view that if the trends of recent years continue there will be an increasing danger that the really effective control of treasury board decisions will come to rest increasingly with the staff of treasury board rather than with the ministers who make up treasury board itself. The commission therefore recommends that a full-time minister be named to preside over the work of the board, that the board itself be recognized effectively in its constitutional role as a committee of the privy council, and that in conformity with this concept of its role the staff of the board be reconstituted as an integral part of the privy council office, instead of the Department of Finance to which it presently belongs.

It is clear that this recommendation of the commission is one of fundamental importance to the future role and function of treasury board, and to the discharge of its responsibilities as the central management authority of the government itself. The existing arrangement whereby the Minister of Finance serves also as chairman of treasury board goes back to early days of confederation. The committee can be assured that the government is giving the most careful consideration to these important recommendations of the commission, but it may be some weeks yet before it is in a position to announce a definite decision one way or the other.

I have concentrated my remarks in large part, Mr. Chairman, on the reports contained in volume 1 of the commission's work, partly because we have had a longer period of time in which to study these reports, but more importantly because they deal with principles and problems which affect the functioning of the public service as a whole. I expect that within the next few months we will complete very largely our consideration of the important issues raised by the reports contained in volume 1, and that by the time this committee is called upon to consider the 1964-65 estimates of the bureau of government organization I will be in a position to present to the committee a report on the government's decisions with respect to the questions still outstanding. As the work on volume 1 approaches completion, we are turning our attention increasingly to the reports contained in the later volumes. The list of approved recommendations which I tabled on November 5 covers, in fact, a variety of matters contained in volumes 2 and 3, but does not touch volumes 4 and 5. These later reports are now receiving our detailed attention.

I should like to mention a particular group of recommendations, relating to report No. 6 on purchasing and supply, which the government has already announced its intention to implement. These recommendations call for the conversion of the Department of Defence Production into a department of supply, which will serve as the central procurement agency for most, if not all, departments and agencies of the federal government. As the committee knows, the Department of Defence Production already acts as the procurement agency for the defence department and the armed forces, whose combined requirements exceed by two or three times, in dollar value, all the procurement requirements of all the civilian departments and agencies of the government. The logic of the recommendation to establish a common procurement agency is therefore difficult to argue against. The Department of Defence Production has therefore been authorized to proceed by orderly stages, to the establishment of a central procurement agency to serve the common needs of all departments and functions of the federal government.

The first stage of this will consist of—

The Chairman: I am sorry, but I must interrupt the minister since his time has expired.

[Text]

Unless he has the unanimous consent of the committee—

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lamontagne: The first stage of this will consist of taking over certain common procurement functions previously assigned to the Queen's printer, office equipment and supplies; the Department of Public Works, office furniture; and the Canadian Commercial Corporation, procurement for other governments. When this stage has been satisfactorily completed, the transfer of common procurement from the various departments and agencies, which now carry out their own purchasing and supply activities, will then be undertaken.

Some commentators on the work of the Glassco commission have contended that the purchasing and supply recommendations, and others, contained in other reports throughout the second and subsequent volume, run directly counter to the principal recommendations contained in volume 1. Volume 1 would decentralize authority and control for detailed decision-making to departments. Volume 2 in the report on purchasing and supply would take the procurement function from the departments and centralize it in a common procurement agency. Is there a contradiction here? In the view of the government there is no contradiction. Under the arrangements proposed, the procurement authority and control will continue to rest with the individual departments and agencies. The departments will continue to decide what they need, what specifications should be laid down, what quantity and quality should be stipulated, what requisitions should issue, and so on. The departments, after all, are the ones which will be accountable for the expenditures of the funds voted by parliament. The new department of supply, on the other hand, will act solely as the agent of the requisitioning department, in a service not in a control capacity. It will be the task of the treasury board, as the central management agency of the government and the over-all policy making authority in this field, to ensure that the individual departments and agencies conform to the government's broad policy directives in the requisitions which they issue for the central procurement agency to fill. The control or supervision of departmental action will in no way be a function of the central procurement agency. If this principle is maintained, there will clearly be no conflict between the principles advocated by the commission and adopted by the government with respect to central procurement and those which favour a larger measure of departmental responsibility as set out in volume 1.

Mr. Chairman, my last remarks on the recommendations of the Glassco commission, are related to the problem of bilingualism in the civil service. The commission submitted, in that field, five recommendations which have already been approved by the government and which we are now implementing.

Here are these recommendations:

1. That the federal government adopt active measures to develop bilingual capacities among its employees on a selective basis.

2. That the government intensify its efforts to attract and retain more of the highly-qualified young people of French Canada capable of advancement to senior ranks.

3. That consideration be given to a review of the classification, remuneration, and career opportunities for translators throughout the public service.

4. That steps be taken to attract more bilingual information officers to the public service.

5. That, in every department and agency, full bilingualism be made a mandatory qualification for at least one of the top positions in the information service unit.

I must stress the fact that these recommendations are formal proposals, emanating from the commission as a body. They are not part of the minority report of Mr. Therrien, that I have already mentioned. Although Mr. Therrien in his report does not make any formal recommendations, he makes some very important and useful remarks on the subject of bilingualism in the federal administration. Mr. Therrien has explained most clearly the various aspects of a situation which has always existed but with which we cannot put up. We all know that it has to be corrected, improved.

It is partly for that reason that the government decided to set up a royal commission of inquiry on bilingualism and biculturalism.

However, the federal government felt that it should not wait for the commission's report to act. As early as last May, a special cabinet committee was established to look after administrative reform and bilingualism. I have the honour of being its chairman. As its first task, the committee has decided to define more clearly the objectives of the government regarding federal administration.

We have set ourselves the three following aims:

1. To put in theory and practice, French and English on an equal footing for all public relations of the federal authorities. In practice, for external written or oral communications, the preference of the citizen would determine the language to be used.

2. To establish a similar policy concerning internal communications within the civil service. Thus, correspondence and other written communications could be in English or in French, according to the writer's choice. A similar system should finally be set up for oral communications. Handbooks, general instructions and circulars would be published in both languages.

3. To intensify the efforts being made to recruit a greater number of civil servants from French Canada and, to this end, to revise if need be, the competition system and recruiting methods.

In order to assist the government in reaching those objectives, an interdepartmental committee made up of officials representing the main departments and the crown corporations has also been established. This committee has been given the task of submitting as soon as possible concrete recommendations on the following aspects of a general program.

1. The nature and organization of French and English classes within the public service, for government officials as well as for other employees. The committee has already submitted a report on the matter and the government has approved a plan which is to be carried out, on an experimental basis, by the civil service commission and which will be used to determine the contents of a comprehensive program we expect to launch in 1964.

2. The suitable measures to adopt to recruiting, training, promotion and assignment of employees, so as to better meet the requirements of bilingualism within the public service.

3. The payment of an additional salary as a reward for the additional competence required from the civil servants who have to do business in both languages.

4. The setting up, in each department, of a section concerned with the progress and coordination of the measures intended to ensure bilingualism.

5. The setting up, location and structure of a federal institute where civil servants would study especially the problems relating to bilingualism and biculturalism.

6. The use of bilingual forms, manuals and circulars in all departments and crown corporations.

7. Bilingualism within our armed forces.

Of course the government reserves the right to accept, amend or reject the recommendations made by the interdepartmental committee.

Moreover, we do not intend to impose that over-all program by force. We believe, on the contrary, that it would fail without full and wholehearted support from civil servants and their associations.

That is why the government intends to consult with these associations before taking each important step in that program. We want above all to avoid affecting acquired rights and creating new discriminatory conditions while trying to rectify the injustices that exist at the present time.

It must be added that many civil servants have already understood the new tasks which force themselves upon them and, in many cases, they have themselves taken the initiative by attending special classes, devoting part of their leisure time and their own money to that purpose. We are then convinced that civil servants will accept the government program concerning bilingualism, not reluctantly and as a concession but as an opportunity to improve their own culture and thence be able to serve all Canadians more effectively.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the committee appreciates the statement which the minister has just given to us. It was one of some length, and I do not say that critically at all. The subject matter deserves to be treated at some length. This is the first really definite statement on the administration of his department, with particular reference to the report of the Glassco commission. I appreciate the fact that the minister has dealt at some considerable length with the report of the Glassco commission. He dealt also with the matters of bilingualism and biculturalism, which is a very important matter. I am sure the minister and the committee will appreciate the fact I do not dwell on that at any length at all because I think we agree, in general, with what he has said. However, for a few brief moments I want to deal with his references to the Glassco commission.

I can appreciate the problems which are confronting the government, and particularly confronting the minister, because, as I understand it, the minister is charged primarily with the responsibility of developing this situation. I appreciate what he says about the chairman of the treasury board. It is true that constitutionally the Minister of Finance is the chairman of treasury board, or at least is responsible for its administration. I doubt whether that practice has been carried out to the letter for some years. I do not think I am betraying any state secrets when I say that during the time when I was minister of national revenue, in fact before the government changed in 1957, I was informed, when Mr. Abbott was minister of finance, that the minister of national revenue acted as chairman of treasury board, or was acting chairman of treasury board. During the time when my colleague Mr. Fleming was minister of finance, I very often, in fact usually, acted as chairman of treasury board; and when I became minister of finance I had another colleague take over the same responsibilities. Because it is absolutely impossible, of course, for a minister of finance to look after the details of matters which come before treasury board.

I think we are very fortunate in having had this report of the Glassco commission which points out the detailed administration which vests in treasury board today. With all respect to a most distinguished and able group of civil servants—no government could be better served—it is very difficult indeed for treasury board to deal adequately with these problems which confront them. I have been sitting in the public accounts committee during the last few days listening to discussion by hon. members about investigating tenders and other matters which come before treasury board. I have felt from listening to these hon. members that they did not realize that every week hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of these matters come before treasury board and have to be dealt with on the recommendations of the officials. It is impossible for the Minister of Finance or the Minister of National Revenue or for anyone—I understand that under the present government a colleague of the Minister of Finance acts as chairman most of the time—to deal with these problems. Therefore I appreciate the fact that the minister has dealt at some length today with his thinking with respect to the report of the Glassco commission.

I know very well that in the relatively short time which he has had at his disposal it is impossible for him to make definitive recommendations to the committee. I quite appreciate the fact that he will need some weeks, perhaps some months, longer to deal with the question. Perhaps I am pessimistic enough to think that he will have another three or four months in which to deal with these matters, and that when he brings his estimates before the committee of supply, which will have to be fairly early if he is going to deal with them, say in the early spring of next year, we will expect the minister to bring forward, as I am sure he is planning to do, positive recommendations or statements of policy as to how far he or the government proposes to go in implementing the Glassco commission report.

I know that the government of which I was a member was impressed with many of the recommendations in the report. We did not endorse them all, but I think there are matters there which are worthy of debate and should be considered very carefully before they are adopted. We did second to the privy council several civil servants, two of whom were particularly able; the deputy minister of a department who had had wide administrative experience and in whom I am sure every member of the House of Commons and member of this committee has complete confidence, and a Mr. McDonald, who had been a member of the treasury board, who co-operated with him. I am sure the minister is having the assistance of these senior civil servants, as well as undoubtedly many others in formulating his plans.

Without taking up too much time just now, because frankly one could talk about this matter for two hours and end up with the same situation—that there has not been time for the minister or the government to arrive at definite conclusions as to what they propose to do in this matter—may I just say that I think it is highly important that something should be done. I think the report is very valuable. I hope and believe that the minister also feels there are many recommendations deserving of support which will result in economies in an area in which economies are very difficult to achieve; hence any avenue which leads to economies should be explored in every way.

I do not think I can usefully add anything more at this moment to what I have already said on the other question of bilingualism and biculturalism. This is a problem which has been with us for many years. I know the government is dealing or is intending to deal with it, and I am sure the committee and the House of Commons will support the government in every reasonable step they think necessary to develop the matter. So far as the Glassco commission is concerned I leave the report on the desk of the minister who is responsible for it, and look forward, as I said not later than the last of February or very early in March, to the recommendations which the minister will bring forward; otherwise it might be left on my desk, and I would rather have his recommendations to deal with at the moment than my own.

Mr. Webster: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak briefly at this time on the relation between this parliament and higher education. Although education is a provincial responsibility, through necessity and through the pressures of public opinion the federal government has become involved in the matter by virtue of its many agencies. The Glassco commission refers to 20 different federal departments which provide some educational service. In spite of this activity there is greater need than ever before for increased federal participation, according to recent representations by responsible and informed professional bodies which have been made both to the Prime Minister and to the cabinet. First, the Canadian teachers' federation, representing all the teachers of Canada, have urged the federal government to act to alleviate educational inequalities across the country. Their brief emphasized the wide disparity between the amounts available for education in one province and those of another. In 1961 in Newfoundland the cost for each pupil was $141, in Prince Edward Island $162, but in Alberta it was $378 and in British Columbia $373, almost three times as much. Teachers claim that it is unjust that the standard of education should depend on the place of birth of a Canadian child.

Second, the Canadian universities foundation, supported by all our institutions of higher learning, have appealed to the Prime Minister and the cabinet to consider sympathetically an appeal to assist the universities across this country in their building programs. They estimate that costs of the 16 new universities at present under construction will amount to $800 million in the next three years. They have asked the federal government to provide $300 million in the form of matching grants to the provinces. They urge also that the grant to the Canada Council be increased by $2 million a year for scholarships in the social sciences.

Third, student organizations from coast to coast have been urging the federal government to keep its commitment to provide 10,000 university student scholarships as promised in the last election campaign by many speakers for the Liberal party: So much talk during the campaign, but not a word since parliament convened last May. University enrolment has doubled in the last 10 years and it is expected to double again in the next seven years. Why this crisis in university education? One answer is immigration and the trend to larger families. More important, however, is the recognition of education for all as a basic human right, and I mean not just elementary but secondary and higher education as well. Today the masses are crowding at the university gates as never before. This is true throughout the world, in communist countries as well as in the western democracies. In the United States, at least 30 per cent of the American youth enter an institution of higher learning. In Canada the figure is nearer 12 per cent. The most significant reason for this tremendous interest in the training of our citizens is the growing conviction that education is a basic tool in economic and social development. We need educated personnel for industry, for business and for the public service.

I wish to quote from the report of the committee on higher education appointed by the Prime Minister of Great Britain under the chairmanship of Lord Robbins, presented to the United Kingdom parliament in October, 1963:

> We do not believe that modern societies can achieve their aims of economic growth and higher cultural standards without making the most of the talents of their citizens. This is obviously necessary if we are to compete with other highly developed countries in an era of rapid technological and social advance. But, even if there were not the spur of international standards, it would still be true that to realize the aspirations of a modern community as regards both wealth and culture, a fully educated population is necessary.

The report recommended that Britain increase its expenditure on higher education from £206 million sterling in 1963 to £742 million sterling by 1980.

In conclusion, may I say this: If Canada is to expand its economy and maintain its position as a strong middle power among the nations of the world, we must give greater attention to the present crisis in higher education. This will require federal action on an unprecedented scale. I hope we shall be wise enough to make that decision.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, a short while ago I met the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) and I told him that as far as I am concerned I would not delay the adoption of his estimates, because I was not supposed to speak. However, since the spokesman of our party is not in the house at this moment, I will therefore say a few words in his place.

I believe that we should congratulate the government for its goodwill shown in the two fields mentioned by the President of the Privy Council. He referred to the report, or reports of the Glassco commission. Although with some reservations, he has nevertheless proved that the government favours the implementation of certain parts of the report and a more detailed consideration of some others. It seems to be sincerely interested in the Glassco report.

The government ought to be commended in that connection. I believe our group would agree with me when I say that it is a step in the right direction, that of justice and equity.

The minister also referred to the Therrien minority report. There again, I feel that Mr. Therrien did well in submitting such a report even though he did not suggest any corrective measure. I have the impression that the government and the President of the Privy Council will do their utmost to find a solution to the problems set out by Mr. Therrien.

It is a well-known fact that the government intends to favour bilingualism, and I say that it deserves to be congratulated for the projects which the minister has announced in that respect.

It should be kept in mind that, according to the proverb or saying, the road to hell is paved with good intentions. Further steps are required and a definite stand should certainly be taken to cope with those problems.

I must admit that this problem is extremely complicated and that the Laurendeau-Dunton royal commission will not succeed in solving it. An answer will only be found with the good will of every individual, of parliament and, on a larger scale, of the Canadian people. It is only through understanding that we shall finally find a proper solution.

As for me, I am not interested in knowing the whys and wherefores of such situations within some department or agency in which we have only one representative out of a hundred. That is a thing of the past; what we are interested in now, is proportionate representation within each and every department.

I am not one of those either who insist on French Canadian representation on the basis of language regardless of competence. Indeed, I hold the same opinion about patronage. In my opinion, it is not because a person belongs to one party rather than another that he has the necessary qualifications. He must have specific qualifications and be competent.

In that connection, I feel that bilingual French Canadian candidates must be just as competent as the others, but they must also have an equal chance. It still happens that some people are not given an equal chance, and that is why I say that the question is difficult and delicate.

I shall stop here because I should not want to delay the adoption of these estimates.

There is a great deal of talk about national unity, the union of our two nations. Indeed, several expressions are used in that respect. To prevent any ambiguity, we should speak of the good will which should exist between the various groups which form our country. However, we should recognize the fact that the two groups which founded Canada have certain rights and responsibilities of which immigrants should be aware before they come over here.

As far as culture is concerned, I do not admit that it must divide us; on the contrary, it must unite us and give us a better understanding of each other. Thus, through our various cultures rather than our languages, I am of the opinion that we should look for things we have in common, which would help us to agree instead of disagree.

I express the wish, since there is often talk of bilingualism, that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) will see to it that this commission will really give us an idea of the reasons why we find ourselves in such a situation today and let us know if there is a way out.

Before closing, I would like to add that my fellow citizens in Quebec with whom I am often in contact and to whom I offer applications to join the civil service, tell me: We do not want to go to Ottawa, we do not want to work for a federal department, we do not want to take a cut in salary in Ottawa when we can do better elsewhere.

Those are important problems and if we are aware of them, it will help us change an established situation of which we are conscious and about which even the royal commission will not give us much information.

Before closing, I would like to mention in connection with estimates Nos. 45, 50, 55 and 60 that the minister will have to change, I presume, the titles of those items which now read as follows: "National centennial" and "National conference on Canada's centennial", which will later be amended to read as follows: "Centennial of Canadian confederation" and "National conference on the centennial of confederation", under the terms of Bill No. C-107.

[Mr. Marcoux.]

Mr. Valade: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

In the very beginning of his remarks, he congratulated the government for having implemented the representations of the Glassco report. Should he not congratulate the former government for having established that commission?

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned a moment ago, the intentions were good, and they should be congratulated. The Conservative government has established a number of commissions, but they did not always implement the recommendations which they made. It is one thing to establish commissions, but we must congratulate as well those who implement their suggestions.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say only a few words on the estimates of the President of the Privy Council which will amount this year to $16,239,800, that is an increase of $9,096,990 compared to last year. This increase is mainly due to the fact that this year the government has approved payments to the fund of the centennial of confederation which will be celebrated in 1967, as well as to some government or semi-government commissions making investigations here and there in Canada.

Mention has been made awhile ago of the role of the Glassco report and other commission reports. Liberals and Conservatives congratulated one another, the latter for having created these commissions and the former for having proceeded with them.

In my opinion, it is the first year that the Department of National Defence, which still has supplies accumulated in wartime, takes into consideration parts of the Glassco report, because there were extravagances and unreasonable expenses, which could have been eliminated. That is why I said the other day, during the study of the estimates of other departments, namely industry and trade and commerce, which want to promote industrialization all over Canada, that the reports of the Glassco commission, as well as all commissions, are terribly costly and did not produce much up to the present. The facts have been placed before us, but it seems somewhat difficult for the government to take action now. We approve the estimates, for instance those under vote 50 entitled:

Programs and projects of national significance including grants towards such programs and projects.

As well as vote 55:

Payment to the national centennial fund—

—or the confederation centennial fund—

—to enable grants to be made to the provinces for local projects of a lasting nature (the total of such grants not to exceed $1 per capita of population per province).

This means that Ontario will receive a total of $6 million, Quebec, $5 million, Alberta, $1.5 million, British Columbia, $2 million, etc.

The President of the Privy Council is surely within his rights and, in my opinion, nobody in the house will object to the approval of his estimates which will enable us to celebrate properly the centennial of confederation.

We do not object to his estimates but we want to draw the minister's attention to the amounts allocated to various commissions. There have been many such commissions in the past under the Mackenzie King administration; there were some also under the Tory administration after 1957 and similar commissions will again be created to investigate the expenditures of various departments in the future.

Our commissions spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to provide a report and then they are not carried out, steps are not taken to correct situations which need to be corrected. I hope the government will seek a remedy for those situations which need it and will not hesitate in assuming the necessary responsibilities.

We, on this side of the house, will certainly co-operate with the President of the Privy Council to help him, as far as possible, to carry out the work that every representative of the people should have his heart set on, because the President of the Privy Council will certainly agree that government moneys must be spent in the best interests of the Canadian nation.

[Text]

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I always try to speak briefly and I am already so overwhelmed with the yuletide spirit that this will guarantee ever greater brevity. In addition, I was back to my constituency yesterday and I was accorded such a good reception there that I am more anxious than ever to return so I would not want to carry on at any great length on these estimates.

I should like to say that I too appreciate the statement of the minister in respect of the possible implementation of the Glassco royal commission recommendations. We on this side of the house are very proud of the initiative taken in this regard. We are happy about the prospect that those now in power —I was going to say "temporarily in power" —will look kindly upon the very practical suggestions put forward after this careful and exhaustive study.

I think it is tremendously important that we take some steps to bring about greater efficiency in the governmental service and, indeed, in the whole parliamentary process. Down through the ages it has been easy, of course, for those who set efficiency as their god to describe the parliamentary process as slow, ineffective and ineffectual. When Robert Borden came to the parliament of Canada many years ago he thought that the waste of time was enormous and that the methods were most unbusinesslike; but when he left he had a greater regard for the parliamentarian than for the businessman type who, he said, very rarely made a good parliamentarian. He did, however, make one or two exceptions. At a time when there are so many who, quickly and casually and I am not looking in any particular direction for the moment, would denigrate our parliamentary institution, it is of the essence that we take such steps as will bring about greater efficiency without at any time losing the essential ingredient, which is the democratic, representative and responsible element that makes our parliamentary institution something far more important and far greater than any economic aggregation.

I was most impressed with the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, not only because many years ago I was a member of the Canadian teachers' federation and, after that, a faculty member of various Canadian universities, but because of the tremendous importance of the subject which he so well emphasized. I have recently come back from a visit to various universities in Canada and one cannot visit a Canadian university without being impressed with the tremendous needs, financial and otherwise, that face administrators, the tremendous problems that face those concerned about the education of our youth.

The representations of the Canadian teachers' federation and the Canadian university foundation must be met. I would call upon the government to find means to give more than an agreeable verbal response to these people—I am sure the government will find support in all parts of the house—in order to try to assist our educators in facing up to a problem which is as acute indeed as our need for national survival, and as important as our hopes for national greatness and advancement. I believe the minister has not always been overly kind toward the concept of shared programs. I come from one of those provinces which are never terribly concerned about joint ventures in which the dominion government participates. We have no worries about our provincial purity as long as we can find some means—

Mr. Lamontagne: As long as you get the money.

Mr. Macquarrie: —to assist in meeting the needs of our people. Therefore we welcome assistance. Indeed, we welcome it from this government just as heartily as we did from its predecessor, and in the field of education it is obvious this would have to be a shared program of some kind, recognizing the fundamental and prime role of the provinces in this field.

I am not going to speak at length, and certainly I am not going to bring in any partisan asperities, but I would say that I very much hope the Prime Minister will move quickly on his pledges to the young people of Canada, the students, to bring into being a system of scholarships. I believe the promise was made a few months ago of 10,000 scholarships of $1,000 each, and of various plans for bursaries and other assistance in the form of loans. The need is great; the promise was made, and I think the government will find no opposition, no harassment, in its efforts to honour that promise and to assist the young people of Canada in attaining their educational goals.

I would like to say, too, I was most impressed with the remarks of the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency when he spoke about bilingualism. Naturally we have a bilingual parliament by law, and of course we must take note of the importance of regarding bilingualism as essential in that apparatus of parliament, and in the administration of government; but I would hope that in our efforts along those lines we would not move to a situation where the linguistic abilities of the citizen would transcend any other of his abilities or capacities. Therefore the remarks of the hon. member commend themselves to me very much for their soundness and, I think, for their validity.

I will not discuss the question of biculturalism and the royal commission, only to say I wish it well. I cannot anticipate too much in its accomplishments. It may help us outline and define the problem but it cannot come close to a solution, because problems so grave and so significant are not handed over to a royal commission to be resolved in the report thereof.

It seems to me that the people of Canada are most anxious in these very trying times that moderation and reason will prevail. We have the national centennial commission under the minister's department, and we hope the same spirit of common sense and reasonable accommodation will prevail today as it did nearly 100 years ago.

I was very proud that a colleague of mine, the hon. member for Three Rivers, in my view was the first man to utter in accents of 1963 the principles of Cartierism in that approach. I might tell the parliamentary secretary it is of another Cartier I speak. Jacques Cartier was a great man, but perhaps the latter one was an even greater man, Sir George Etienne Cartier, and his were the views so recently enunciated by the hon. member for Three Rivers. He is not the only one by any means, because this is the kind of rationale upon which we must base our consideration of bilingualism and biculturalism, although the purists may say the word biculture is not properly used.

Finally, before I sit down, I would like to commend the minister's attention to the activities soon to commence in the province of Prince Edward Island where we are putting on a real celebration, extending over 12 months, celebrating 100 years commemoration of the Charlottetown conference, where the whole confederation project began. I would not presume for a moment to say that we in Prince Edward Island can teach all of Canada how to conduct celebrations, but I would suggest that any Canadian who comes to these would learn a great deal. Therefore I would invite the minister and all others to become a part of the celebrations we will launch in a very few days to honour that historic event. I am quite sure the minister will still be the minister for a good portion of the celebrations, and who knows how much longer. I wish him well in his department.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): I would like to speak about education, but in a much more limited way with regard to the rather serious problem that exists so far as the future of physicians in Canada is concerned. The education of physicians has become a very serious matter, much more serious than we realize, and in order to go into this subject I would like to preface it with three questions: (1) Are we producing enough physicians in Canada? (2) How does the quality of the physicians we produce compare with those produced in other countries? (3) What does the future hold.

The answer to the first question must be a categorical no. In the year 1901 Canada had one physician for every 972 persons. In the year 1951 there was one physician for 976 persons. Although our production of physicians from our own medical schools had increased during these years, it had not increased as rapidly as had the population of our country. Fortunately for us we were saved from a disastrous shortage of physicians during the past 10 years of rapid population growth by the large number of immigrant physicians who came to our country. The average output of our own 12 medical schools in Canada at the present time is about 850 new physicians a year. During some of the years since 1955 the immigrant physicians coming to our country have annually numbered over 600, thus increasing by approximately 75 per cent the number of physicians entering practice in Canada each year over what we produce ourselves. As a result of this, our physician population ratio has improved and in 1960 it was one to 879 population. It still is below that of 20 other countries in the world today, and far below the United States, which has one physician to 711 population.

Even if it were advantageous for Canadians to be looked after in significant part by physicians educated elsewhere, we cannot count on this source of supply to continue. Many of these immigrant physicians were the ones who were unhappy under some form of prepaid health insurance that existed in their own countries. As the years go by the number of malcontents becomes less, in part because physicians have been more inured to the new system, and in part because forms of prepaid health insurance in other countries have been improving as the difficulties in their early years of use have been smoothed out. Further, when Canada develops a form of government supported prepaid medical care itself, which most assuredly will happen, it will cease to be one of the few remaining centres of individual enterprise in the field of health.

Another factor which will make our supply of physicians still less adequate is the fact that when Canada does develop a form of government supported prepaid health insurance, there will be a significant increase in the demand for health services. In some other countries where this has been studied, the demand has increased by as much as 30 per cent. It is doubtful that the increase will be so great in Canada, because it seems likely that a larger proportion of our population is now receiving adequate medical care than in many other countries. However, there can be no doubt that there will be increased demand for physicians under any form of government supported health plan which is likely to come into effect in this country. Thus, at the moment when our demand for physician services will increase, we are likely to be thrown back on our own inadequate resources for the education of this group.

Still another factor enters the situation. I shall not go into detail on this at the moment but will touch on it a little later. Medical education has been founded upon the fact that there are charity patients, and on these patients Canadian doctors have learned how to practise medicine. When health insurance is universal in Canada, charity patients will cease to exist. This will present a problem of the first magnitude in the training of physicians in this country. Under the circumstances, I hope you will agree with me that we are not educating a sufficient number of physicians.

The second question is: How does the quality of physicians produced in Canada compare with those produced in other countries? Teaching hospitals have been tremendously important in Canada's history. Apart from providing the medical student, the interne and the resident with patients over whom they could have certain responsibilities under supervision, they have been the locations in which clinical investigation has been centered. They have provided areas in which treatment methods could be evaluated under controlled circumstances. Their carefully selected physicians have been responsible for almost all the progress which has been made in medical care in this country. The physicians selected to serve on their staffs considered it to be an honour and the faculties of medicine had access to the services of these outstanding physicians for a part of each day for a tiny honorarium each year. Most of the patients in these units were charity patients from the community, referred in by the practising physician because such referral did not mean a loss of income. However, many others were the serious problem cases of the region requiring the excellent facilities and staffs provided. Truly the nerve centre of Canadian medicine has been the closed teaching units developed in our centres of medical education.

So medical education has progressed rapidly. That provided in Canada could compare favourably with that in any part of the world and as short a time as eight years ago Canadians had every reason to be proud of the physicians that were being produced in this country. However, since that time a whole series of events have entered the scene to make it difficult or impossible to maintain the standard which had been set previously. These I would like to enumerate.

First, forces have come into play which have tended to break down the strong union between the medical school and the teaching hospital. One of these forces has been a diminution in the number of charity patients and therefore a diminution in the interdependence of the two. As a result of the growth of voluntary prepaid medical plans large numbers of people are already covered for medical care. This is particularly true in the large centres of population wherein universities and medical schools are likely to be situated. Thus the number of charity patients to be referred to the teaching unit has diminished and in many schools in Canada a very real shortage of teaching patients is developing.

A second and more sudden influence has been the introduction of government supported hospitalization. In the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act made law on April 1, 1959, no mention was made of medical education. As a result, provincial hospital commissions have mostly taken the attitude that the additional costs of the teaching hospital, which previously had been supported by voluntary funds, were not a responsibility under the national hospital insurance agreement. Therefore, although every dollar required for the provision of routine care to the patient is provided in the main, no single penny is available for the added costs associated with medical education and with medical research. Further, the hospitals now being government supported are unable to continue their fund raising activities successfully. As a result, hospitals have not been able to continue to support medical education and medical research. The costs have been thrown back directly on the small and already strained budgets of the universities, and it is a fact that the universities have been subsidizing the national hospital insurance plan. As a result of these two influences the strong union between the teaching hospital and the medical school is rapidly breaking down in our country and producing a serious problem in medical education.

This has not been true in other countries which have embraced government support of health care. In the United Kingdom the teaching hospital is the recognized centre of the hospital region. It is accepted that its costs will be from 25 per cent to 30 per cent higher per patient-day than those of any other hospital in the region. Its facilities are greater, its staff is larger and its patient clientele is assured because it is the only hospital in the district that can look after problem cases. In Sweden, despite a prepaid system outside the hospital, the same arrangements prevail inside the hospital as occur in the United Kingdom and thus the patients and the facilities to ensure the training of physicians are assured. A second influence which increasingly enters the scene is represented by the rapidly spiralling costs of medical education. Standards are being set in other countries which our universities are desperately trying to meet without adequate sources of funds.

I have explained how in the United Kingdom the additional costs of clinical teaching are considered part and parcel of the health care plan. In the United States the solution was found in quite a different way. It was painfully obvious that medical education needed more financial support than it was receiving from the education budget. There were problems associated with federal sources of funds being granted to state supported medical schools for educational purposes. Accordingly the federal government of the United States has undertaken to support medical schools indirectly by huge increases in the grants available for medical research, virtually all of which is done in medical schools. The speed and extent of the explosion of these funds can best be illustrated by outlining the budgets for government support of medical research in the U.S.A. in the past few years. For several years, up to and including 1959, there was approximately $250 million available for support of medical research in the United States. Most of this was going to the 87 medical schools in that country. In the year 1960 this was increased from $250 million to $425 million; in 1961 it was increased to $650 million; in 1962 it was increased to $890 million, and in 1963 it is no less than $1,100 million.

After removing a significant amount of these funds to pay for the federally operated medical research laboratories in Bethesda, Maryland, and other centres, there still remains an enormous amount of money to be divided among the 87 medical schools in that country. During this year, if the money were averaged it would amount to approximately $10 million per medical school. In Canada the total sum of money from government sources available for the support of medical research is about $12 million and would provide each of our 12 medical schools, if it were evenly divided among them, with something less than $1 million per year. Thus the 12 universities in Canada which have undertaken the responsibility or the education of physicians have been desperately trying to find the funds to put their medical schools in a position in which they can compete with other medical schools on this continent. The medical schools are taking an embarrassingly large percentage of the total university budget for a very small percentage of the total students. In the University of British Columbia 9.5 per cent of the budget goes to the support of 1.5 per cent of the students who are in the medical school. Despite the heroic efforts that have been made by universities to keep pace with what is going on in medical education in other countries, they are fighting a losing battle.

Over this long open border between the United States and Canada there is great freedom of interchange of medical scientists. Over 5,000 Canadian educated physicians are now living within that country. Most of these physicians have gone there to practise, but in recent years a much more serious trend has developed. Partly because we cannot compete either in salary scales or in working conditions, we are tending to lose more of our most able medical educators to that country. More important perhaps is the fact that with the facilities and staff that can be obtained under these very generous research grants, there are research potentials in the United States which are not available in our country. Thus the very core of our system of medical education and medical research is in danger of being lost to another country.

In recent months a new factor has entered the situation. Legislation has been enacted in the United States which provides federal sources of funds for the building of teaching facilities for medical schools in that country. Thus teaching hospitals and buildings in which the basic medical sciences can be taught will now be very largely supported from the federal government in addition to the support for the operation of these schools.

There is one other point concerning unfortunate factors which have come into being in recent years which must be mentioned. The number of individuals applying to medical school in this country fell steadily from the post-war peak to the year 1958. During the years 1955 to 1958, in particular, we were terribly concerned about our ability to fill even our inadequate number of places with reasonable students. Since 1958 there has been an increase in the number applying for medicine. However, we do not believe that this increase is the result of any change in forces that are being brought to bear on the situation. Rather it is because the post-war baby boom has reached the stage of entry to medical school, and we are simply deriving our applicants to medical school from a temporarily larger group of people who are attending university.

There is obviously more than one reason for this diminution of people attending medical schools. Fifty years ago a very high percentage of all the young people who entered university found their way into medical schools. Apart from law and the church, there were few other attractive careers available to them. Now a very small percentage of the total number of students who enter universities come to medical school. So many new attractive careers have come into being in the past half century that medicine must now make very active efforts to recruit its share of intelligent young people.

This factor has been in operation in every country in the past half century, but in our country still another factor has come into operation in recent years. Some years ago in an attempt to increase the number of individuals attracted into the physical sciences, such as chemistry and physics, the government, through the national research council, created a subsidization program. This program provides that once a good student has obtained his bachelor's degree in the physical sciences, he is supported in the amount of approximately $2,200 for whatever number of years is required to obtain his Ph.D. degree.

The future members of the health sciences of this country, the physicians and the dentists must be selected from capable young students who have shown an interest in the general field of science. However, let us compare the financial problems facing the student who wishes to enter the field of medicine with the student who wishes to enter the field of science. In most schools in Canada it is at the end of the third year of university that he must make this decision. If the student decides in favour of physics or chemistry, he has one more year in which to pay his fees at the university until he receives his baccalaureate degree. Thereafter, if he is a good student, he will receive the government subsidization program for the three or four years necessary to obtain his Ph.D. and will then be able to step into a well paid position. In contrast, the student wishing to enter medicine must pay four years of the highest fees which the university charges for the remainder of his undergraduate medical education, with no subsidization program available to help him. He must then take a minimum of one year's interneship, which would barely provide him with enough remuneration on which to subsist. If he wishes to proceed to specialty training, he will require four more years of a bare subsistence income before he can begin to go further into debt by setting up his office and awaiting the arrival of his first paying patient.

Is there any wonder that the number of individuals applying to enter medicine in Canada has diminished in recent years, and is there any wonder that this diminution in numbers is particularly notable among the brighter students who are assured of the subsidization program if they go into other areas? I think it must be made very clear that, if a subsidization program is instituted for one part of the field of science to the exclusion of the remainder of that field, it will cause an entirely artificial emphasis on those areas which are being subsidized. I fear that, unless we do something to more nearly equalize the financial problems of higher education in these various groups, we may, 25 years from now, pay very heavily in a reduced level of medical care in our country.

To summarize our second question, after achieving an extremely high level of medical education in our country, three apparently unrelated forces have come into being in recent years which have reduced that level. These are:

1. Lack of recognition that teaching hospitals must receive a greater degree of support than usual general hospitals.

2. Rapid increase in support of medical education in other countries.

3. Subsidization of other science students in Canada.

The acuteness of the present situation can perhaps be best illustrated by events which have taken place within the past year. In the United States and Canada there is an accreditation panel for medical schools. Approximately every eight years every medical school on this continent is visited by a team of medical educators. The school is studied intensely over a period of several days. Thereafter a report is written describing the school and a recommendation goes to the association of American medical colleges as to whether this school should or should not continue to be accredited. Failure to obtain accreditation means a school really must close its doors. Because of the difference in the degree of financial support of medical schools in the United States and Canada a difficult task faces the evaluators. It is just not possible to apply to Canadian schools the same high standards as are being applied to American schools. Perhaps this is best summarized in the words of Dean Chester Stewart of Dalhousie University, in his report to the Canadian universities foundation earlier this year at the end of his term of office as president of the association of Canadian medical colleges. Dr. Stewart stated:

> It is probably well known to most university teachers that medical education in Canada has made immense forward strides. Our medical schools have become the equal of any in the world and have made outstanding contributions to the development of medical education and research. Perhaps few are aware, however, of the rapidly widening gap between progress in medical education in the United States and Canada. We would ask the Canadian universities foundation to consider the implications of what has been frankly called "the double standard of medical education on this continent", a comment by a senior member of the accrediting bodies. It would be little short of tragic if some of our Canadian medical schools were to lose their status as fully accredited institutions just at a time when there is a growing pressure for the expansion of medical school facilities in order to meet the physician requirements of this country.

I am not by nature a pessimist and I do not enjoy the role of being a prophet of doom and gloom. However, I feel strongly that if we, in our country, fail to keep pace with other countries in the support of educational opportunities in the field of medicine, we will pay a heavy price in the years ahead in the quality of medical care available to us. Immediately we will pay the price of losing our most able teachers and investigators to those parts of the world where the necessary support is available to them.

Now the final question is: What does the future hold? I think this can be answered briefly. If Canadians are to receive adequate health care in future the 12 universities that have taken on the responsibility for the education of physicians must have more assistance. I think it is appropriate that this assistance come from federal sources of funds. A medical school is much more than a local asset. Physicians travel widely both in their post-graduate training and in their subsequent locations of practice. The increased sources of funds provided to medical schools must be for three purposes:

1. There must be a very significant increase in the support of the day to day cost of medical schools. A very significant proportion of this could be taken care of by including the cost of clinical medical education in the Diagnostic Services and Hospital Insurance Act. Without increasing significantly the tremendous sums of money which are now going to the support of hospitalization, the problems of the medical schools in Canada could be sharply reduced.

2. Assistance must be provided for the development of buildings both for teaching and for research. Such assistance was recommended by Dr. Ray Farquharson's special committee two years ago. Although accepted in principle, no action has been taken by government. We do not have a single university owned and operated hospital in the twelve medical schools of our country. We are dependant upon the use of general hospitals in the communities in which the medical school is located. While this has worked well in the past, the interest of these general hospitals is increasingly in conflict with the interests of medical education, as I have tried to point out.

3. We need support and subsidization for students entering into the health science field. At the present time 84 per cent of all medical students depend largely on their parents' funds to put them through school. Approximately 20 per cent of graduate students in the fields of science depend to any degree on parental assistance. As long as this situation exists, a proper share of the bright young minds of Canada will not be directed towards a medical career and in future the health of our country will suffer.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I listened with attention to the remarks made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) who spoke, among other things, about setting up of a cabinet committee and an interdepartmental committee made up of high officials to put into force some recommendations made by the Glassco commission, even some from the Therrien minority report.

I would advise the minister not to appoint the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) to that special cabinet committee because recently he appointed three deputy ministers, none of whom were French speaking.

I feel, Mr. Chairman, that the civil service must give a true picture of our country, that is of its two basic groups.

Some departments require a very special attention, such as the Department of External Affairs. This department must be, at the international level, a true image of our country.

In my opinion, the greatest deficiency within the federal civil service is the lack of French speaking officials in the crown agencies. Recently, all members of the house were made aware of the situation, since it was raised during a sitting of a committee of the house. Indeed, it was noted that, among the nine directors of T.C.A., not a single one was French speaking.

As has been said, the previous government created the Glassco commission with a view to improving the public service.

I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that when I was parliamentary secretary to the minister of agriculture, under the Tory administration, we had started jointly to apply within that department the recommendations of the minority Therrien report. For instance, the government appointed a French speaking associate deputy minister who had started taking steps to engage French speaking high officials and agricultural technicians.

I am also aware of the fact that a start was made on this in some departments, for instance, in the secretary of state department.

As Mr. Therrien said in his report, and I quote:

> French Canadian public servants cannot freely use the French language as a means of communication within the federal administration.

He also said:

> —a working and communication language which would be equal with the English language within the civil service.

I shall also quote another essential point from the Therrien report:

> Entrance examinations for candidates to positions in the public service do not conform to the French Canadian educational system, nor are they set in French by qualified French Canadians. Imperfect mastery of the English language is considered to be a shortcoming which prejudices the French Canadian candidate or civil servant.

Mr. Chairman, I think that if the Civil Service Act is amended, that is if some amendments are made, for instance, to the civil service commission examinations, in order to adjust them, not only to the English provinces educational system, but also to the French provinces system, that would give a much better chance to French speaking candidates to come and take their place in Ottawa.

I refer here to a question which was asked in the House of Commons in 1961 and which had to do with a civil service competition among students of Montreal, Sherbrooke and Laval universities. Out of 143 French speaking candidates, 18 were successful and were offered positions, but only six accepted. So, out of 143 candidates, 18 were successful and only 6 became civil servants. This is a significant spread indeed.

I have here an article from Le Devoir where this situation is exposed. Questions were asked to know the reasons of this massive failure.

Precisely, Mr. Chairman, it is said in this article that out of 143 candidates, 87½ per cent failed. So, one can pass a severe judgment.

Would this be due to the personal qualifications of the graduates or to the education they have been given in the departments of our Quebec universities, or would it not be that the competition is not adapted to the education system of the province of Quebec?

My opinion is, Mr. Chairman, that if we really want to attract French speaking Canadians into the federal civil service, the civil service commission's competitions must be adapted to our education system.

I believe that this is to a certain extent the stumbling block, the reason why there are so many failures among the applicants from the graduates of Quebec universities.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, French speaking Canadians must at any rate be interested in the federal civil service. They must not be afraid to come to Ottawa to take their place. I urge the officials of the civil service commission to establish a special committee, the members of which would visit all our Canadian universities, not only those of the province of Quebec, but of the whole country, in order to explain to those who attend universities, high schools and colleges, particularly in the province of Quebec, the importance for them to take their place in Ottawa. Such a scheme should be carried out especially in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, it is all well and good to complain and to suggest, as is done in certain quarters, that we are unfairly treated in Ottawa, but if French speaking Canadians are unwilling to make the required effort to take their place within the federal civil service, I feel we are in no way justified in casting the blame on somebody else. But, as I said earlier, a more favourable climate should be created here in Ottawa, more especially with regard to competitions.

Mr. Chairman, according to the findings of the Glassco report or of the minority Therrien report, there is a complete lack of the French element in crown corporations.

I do not ask the government to impose its will over the crown corporations, since they are independent governmental agencies which have nothing to do with politics, but I would like the minister, if possible, with all the influence I know he has, to make some suggestions to the presidents of these crown corporations in order to encourage them to make the necessary efforts, for instance, in visiting the Quebec universities, to state before the students the interest and the urgency there is for them to take their place amid the crown corporations.

Mr. Chairman, the minister, who, I believe, is well intentioned, spoke about an administration training school for federal civil servants. I would suggest he be a little more careful in that respect, since education comes under provincial jurisdiction. I wonder if he could not, using his influence, convince the premiers of the provinces, including that of Quebec, to establish a department where students would be prepared for public service, in order that they may be more anxious to come to Ottawa.

Now, I would suggest to the premier of Quebec, who sat for a long time in this house, who occupied a ministerial position, and who certainly knows the weaknesses of the federal civil service, in so far as French speaking Canadians are concerned, that he would certainly be in a position to have a special budget voted in order to create a university department to prepare French Canadian civil servants to come to Ottawa to occupy the place that belongs to them.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to resort to an article which was published in Le Devoir on August 19 last, to make the next few remarks. The writer of the article was Mr. Jean-Pierre Fournier. Here is what he had to say:

> Even though the administration school which the federal government intends to establish is not useless, it could not be the key to bilingualism in the public service.
> (1) On the one hand, the essential point is not to enable classified civil servants to acquire a fluent knowledge of both languages, but to ensure to French Canada its just representation at all levels of the civil service, based on the proportion of the French Canadian population.

Mr. Chairman, the fact of the matter is that in Ottawa, we have a problem with translators and interpreters; I take this opportunity to point out to the minister that the only way to find a sufficient number of them is to increase their salary. I suggest they be offered a more attractive remuneration, as they are hard to find. I am told they are few and far between in Canada, and that the best means to attract them to Ottawa is to offer them a higher salary.

I also suggest to the minister that civil servants in categories 1 and 2, be also granted an increase. I believe those are the only categories which have been overlooked, when the salaries of the federal civil servants were revised.

Mr. Chairman, quite recently, on October 18 last, Le Devoir published an article with the following title.

> Ottawa—eight civil servants denounce the fate of Quebec university graduates.

The article quoted a letter signed by eight federal civil servants. I would like the minister to check the facts pointed out by the newspaper. Could the minister tell us whether he has personally looked into the matter?

Mr. Chairman, the minister told us about forthcoming reforms. I put on the order paper a question asking how many bilingual employees worked in the Prime Minister's office. I must tell you frankly that I was disappointed when I read the answer given me. In fact, I noticed that there is great difference in the number of French speaking, and English speaking employees in the Prime Minister's office. And I ask the minister to remedy that situation so that the government itself and, therefore, the Prime Minister, will set an example to create a favourable climate and, indirectly, attract more French speaking Canadians to take their place in Ottawa.

Mr. Chairman, before closing, I ask the minister if it might not be time to study the possibility of setting up a research office for all the members of the house so that they may have all the information they need to prepare their speeches and the questions they put on the order paper or ask in the house. I know that such a body exists in other countries and I see no reason why experts should not be available to inform the members, thus helping them to make a better contribution to the debates of the house, and at the same time being of service to their country.

Mr. Chairman, I wish the minister well. The work had already been started; he showed his good faith by telling us that he wants to follow it up by carrying out the recommendations contained in the Glassco report and those in the Therrien minority report. Therefore, I wish him well, and next year, when his estimates are introduced, we shall ask him to report the progress made.

[Text]

Mr. Cantelon: I should like to take up a few minutes of the time of this committee, while we are discussing the estimates of the privy council, to make a proposal. First, I should like to say I am very much in accord with the suggestions made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and by the hon. member for Queens with regard to education. On previous occasions I have made contributions to debate in which the same ideas were promulgated.

In making the proposal I have in mind, let me say at the outset that it is not put forward by my party; it is being made by myself, though I would hope my party would not oppose it. I trust, also, that this proposal would not have any tinge of partisanship attached to it. In fact, I am sure it could not succeed if it carried any such stigma. Certainly, none is intended on my part and I would hope, if the proposal were accepted, that none would be allowed to creep in. Further, may I say that the proposal is not mine. It is the brainchild of a young Saskatchewan man who believes it would be a popular and attractive way of celebrating our centenary year in 1967.

I am sure we all feel too much could not be done to emphasize the importance of our 100th birthday. But nothing seems to have been planned for one most important group—a group which is just ready to step on to the stage of life and a group which is sometimes unjustly maligned—the teenagers. It is to this group that my suggestion is directed. Baldly stated, it is that a youth parliament be held in Ottawa in the summer of 1967. Many details would have to be worked out before such a parliament could be held. We would have to decide how many delegates there should be, how they should be selected, just when and where the parliament would be held, and a great many other similar questions. Assistance could, perhaps, be given by some of our national service groups. If these groups could be persuaded to give their support it would, no doubt, mean a great deal to any such scheme.

I have here an article from the Daily Gleaner of Fredericton which sets down in some detail the various things which could be done in connection with this proposal, and some of the difficulties which might arise. If I might have the approval of the house I would like to have this article incorporated in the report of my remarks as they will appear in Hansard. I do not think I will read it, because I do not wish to take up the time of the committee by elaborating this proposal in detail.

This scheme is, perhaps, most worth while because it might show us and the people of this country the characteristic which is so strong in this group—the forward-looking idealism which in the past has so often given us an impetus for making reforms. There is already a basis for a scheme such as I have suggested, since youth parliaments are in operation now in some areas, notably in my own province of Saskatchewan. I sincerely believe that this plan is worthy of serious consideration and I therefore respectfully suggest to the Prime Minister that an appointed committee consisting of two government supporters, two from the official opposition, two from the New Democratic party, one from Ralliement Creditistes and one from the Social Credit party be convened to consider it further, and to bring in recommendations to this parliament relative to it.

Mr. Herridge: I rise briefly to support the pleas made by previous members who have spoken urging the government to give immediate and serious consideration to the needs of universities which require plant and equipment, and to the question of scholarships and loans for students.

I have been asked by graduates and students of the universities of British Columbia, Victoria and Notre Dame who are resident in my constituency to remind the government of the election pledge to provide 10,000 scholarships valued at $1,000 each. This is a pledge which was taken seriously by young people throughout the country, and by many other Canadians who are expecting the government to keep that promise. In fact, some of these young students planned their future activities in the hope of winning one of these scholarships, but I must say that what has happened so far has not justified their confidence in the promises made by government spokesmen during the election campaign.

However, in my opinion even these scholarships will not by any means meet the rapidly growing need for assistance to universities and to students. I presume that assistance to students will be of two types. First, there will be scholarships for those who are able to win scholarships and demonstrate their particular skill and ability to do so. Then I believe there should be a system of loans. I am not one who believes that you should hand out something for nothing to young people. I believe that you value what you earn. In my view we should establish a sound system of loans available to students who have the ability to go through university and to apply that ability to university studies, advanced studies and so on.

I might say that I discussed this problem recently with a person who is very interested in education. We were considering the problem in relation to the circumstances of the country, the financial ability of the federal and provincial governments to meet these needs and the fact that this should be done on some sound basis, not just on the basis of handing out money wholesale to anybody who says he wants to attend university. This gentleman asked me to bring this point to the attention of the minister. I thought it was a rather novel suggestion. He suggested that consideration should be given to loans to students who could take advantage of such loans—there would have to be some winnowing out—and who would graduate, and as a result greatly improve their earning ability. He went on to suggest that these loans could be repaid on the basis of the government establishing an education tax of 1, 2 or 3 per cent of their income, whatever might be necessary, over a period of years in their earning life so that repayment would not be a heavy burden on them in their first earning years, but would be on a sound basis. I do not know whether consideration has been given to that sort of scheme but I suggest that it merits consideration, as well as other schemes that will make it possible for young, capable persons to obtain loans from the federal or provincial governments as the result of federal-provincial co-operation. These could be repaid in such a way that they would not constitute a great strain on them in their early earning years. With these few remarks I resume my seat.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks to make about the estimates of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne).

In fact, I must tell you that before knowing him as the President of the Privy Council, I knew him most of all as an orthodox economist. It is only since becoming a member of this house and President of the Privy Council that he has directed his activity to other fields, for instance to the reports submitted by the various commissions or federal-provincial relations which, I think, come first among his functions.

I feel, however, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) was well advised to change his field of activity because in this one he can show greater efficiency than in the other.

I see that the President of the Privy Council does not seem to appreciate my qualifying his talent in economics as conventional, but it seems to me that he follows mainly the antiquated methods and doctrines of the 19th century, if not of the 18th, as far as political economy is concerned.

I have some remarks to make and I think that the President of the Privy Council is well disposed to receive fruitfully these remarks and try to find solutions to the few problems I would like to point out today.

First of all, I would like to raise a problem which I consider important. I listened last Sunday to the press conference given by the Quebec premier, Mr. Jean Lesage, during the television program on public affairs or political events of the day. I do not know whether the President of the Privy Council had the opportunity to listen to that program. He nods; he will then understand my remarks all the better. I found during the program that the premier of Quebec showed a really pitiful attitude and talked in a soppy tone. In short, he looked depressed and in low spirits after returning almost empty-handed from the federal-provincial conference.

Being aware of the legendary courage of the premier of Quebec, I thought he would soon abandon that pitiful and soppy attitude, that the reaction would set in before long and that he would deliver new ultimatums, taking a really resolute stand, in order to get what the province of Quebec claims, faced with its priority needs.

I suggest that the President of the Privy Council should not wait for that reaction to set in but that he should undertake an open-minded examination of Quebec's requests and problems and, as the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) would say, to consider in a more broadminded spirit the problems which interest both the provincial and federal governments and to accede to Quebec's legitimate requests.

If the President of the Privy Council looked at that program he must have noticed that the Quebec premier looked depressed and beaten. I hope he will react and show more firmness than he did in the past because when he starts changing the word "demand" for "request" or "require" his most simple requests remain unsatisfied. It is inferred that in order to obtain something from the federal government, a firmer stand must still be taken.

I ask the President of the Privy Council who is, I believe, a friend of the Quebec premier and who understands, not only the requests of that premier, but also those of all the people in Quebec, to help find a solution to those problems by meeting the priority requirements of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the province of Quebec, especially after the reaction felt among the public following Ottawa's refusal to comply with its requests, will tolerate much longer to be treated as it was at the last federal-provincial conference. The general disappointment which was noted among the people is an indication that the province of Quebec will no longer tolerate its requests being turned down.

Another point which, in my opinion, comes under the President of the Privy Council, and for which he should make claims and use pressure, is the statement made yesterday or the day before by the mayor of Ottawa to the effect that Ottawa is and will remain an unilingual city.

As we are in the city of Ottawa, I feel we have the right to speak French in this city. People are talking of bilingualism, but this should not stop there, it must become a reality, without it being necessary to ask permission from the Ontario government. Considering the importance of the city of Ottawa in the country, since it is the capital and the seat of central government, where French speaking as well as English speaking members of parliament sit, we must see to it that everyone feels at home here and is welcomed by persons having a sense of hospitality.

When we talk about bilingualism, we do not seek to take away anything from other people; we merely want for everybody the right to speak his own language. Now, in the federal capital, we would not like to be deprived of this right.

I would describe the mayor of Ottawa as a female tyrant.

An hon. Member: It is true.

Mr. Gregoire: I may say that I was very happy to see that the English speaking newspapers condemned her backward attitude. It obviously indicates that the English speaking press understands the situation and, more rightly so, the nation's capital ought to proclaim itself a completely bilingual city, since citizens representing ridings all over the country live there. I shall add that when the mayor of Ottawa comes in the province of Quebec, she is welcome, she may speak her own language, she is understood in her own language, because, in the province of Quebec, we are happy to receive her in a bilingual fashion. Let her do the same thing in the country's capital.

I recognize she may have some inhibitions which lead her to vent her spleen occasionally. In my opinion, she could have vented her ill-humour on another matter. There is precisely an opera aria which is entitled "La donna e mobile" or "Like a Feather in the Air". I believe that on the subject of bilingualism, the mayor of Ottawa could be more serious and stop going around "like a feather in the air", as is said in that famous opera by Verdi.

Mr. Chairman, I would now like to touch on a point which gave rise to several remarks in the Canadian press recently, that is, the presence of the president of Trans-Canada Air Lines at the meeting of the parliamentary committee on railways, air lines and shipping. In my opinion, this is in order, since the subject concerns the question of relations between the two great nations which form this country. In that respect, I would like to make a correction. There is no question of blaming the president of Trans-Canada Air Lines for his attitude towards bilingualism in the country. On the contrary, I believe it is in Trans-Canada Air Lines, among all the crown corporations, that bilingualism is the most respected.

The ratio maintained at T.C.A., that is 28 per cent of the employees being French Canadian or bilingual, would seem acceptable to me. Mr. McGregor stated the other day a commendable fact when he said that for the last year, no employee who has to come in contact with the public has been hired unless he was bilingual, that is able to be understood by the two great nations living in this country. I have no fear in saying that we must encourage Mr. McGregor and admit that he possesses a real sense of bilingualism. Indeed, within his corporation, nothing suits him better than to meet his obligation in that field.

But he is blameworthy on another point, that is for his adamant attitude in hiding from Canadians facts which they have the right to know. In view of the unkind remarks by the president of T.C.A. for the Sud-Aviation Corporation and the Caravelle aircraft, people are justified to ask why they refuse to build that aircraft in Montreal, thus enabling Montreal workers to earn a livelihood when there is unemployment.

In fact, the experts' report seemed to have been brushed aside. We do not object if workers are employed at the general maintenance base in Winnipeg, if Winnipeg workers earn a livelihood, but we wonder why a report by experts is brushed aside when a French aircraft is involved, when Montreal is concerned. We are given no reason, no argument. They refuse to produce the report and they are unkind and even unscrupulous towards the Sud-Aviation Corporation.

Montreal workers are not given satisfaction and that is what the people of the province of Quebec cannot tolerate. How come the public is not allowed to examine the report? Security is given as a pretext while nowadays, all over the world, in South America as well as in Europe, people never cease praising the qualities of that aircraft in terms of security and they even go as far as saying it is the safest aircraft in the world at the present time. We are given no reason and we wonder whether it is not a matter of favouring the United States.

That is the opinion among the people of Quebec and it is derived from the evidence given by Mr. McGregor concerning the purchase of new airplanes.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I am rising on a point of order. It is impossible for me to relate these remarks to the estimates now under consideration. I wonder if the Chair would rule on this point?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I have been listening to the hon. member for Lapointe and I do feel he is not remaining very closely with the estimates now under consideration. I would hope, if he is going to continue his remarks, that he would try as far as possible to stay within the limits of this department.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for that information. I shall come back now to the estimates of the President of the Privy Council, because federal-provincial relations fall within his jurisdiction, as is also the case for the inquiry on biculturalism.

I feel it is my duty to point out to the President of the Privy Council, that federal-provincial relations will be friendly and that our culture will blossom freely only if there is harmony between all the regions of this country.

While I am on that point, Mr. Chairman, may I state that, in the face of interference tending to favour a given province, to the prejudice of another, where unemployment is worse—and I am thinking of the case of Trans-Canada Air Lines—we must expect people to wonder what are the reasons for such happenings.

Mr. Chairman, this brings my remarks to a close. I am sure that the President of the Privy Council knows all about the present problem. I think he will find the necessary solutions in the field of federal-provincial relations, and, more particularly, as far as the "bonne entente" between our two ethnic groups is concerned. We must see to it that each of these groups develops, blossoms out and improves by means of its own, while retaining harmonious relations with the other group.

Mr. Chretien: Would the hon. member for Lapointe allow me a question?

Mr. Gregoire: Certainly.

Mr. Chretien: In the first part of his speech, the hon. member dealt with provincial politics and the nature of the meeting which he held in Donnacona over the week end. Could the hon. member for Lapointe tell us whether he suggested to Mr. Gerald Martineau in which constituency he should run at the next provincial election?

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I have never met the person mentioned nor talked to him. However, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche has to take his orders from those who contribute to the election fund; as for myself, I do not even have to bother about that, but he is on his hands and knees before the treasurer of his party.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Will the hon. gentleman resume his seat, please.

When the hon. member for Kindersley was making his remarks a few moments ago he requested that there be included in Hansard a short article from a newspaper. His request was not heard by me, but I understand the transcript of his speech shows that he did ask for permission to do this. Would the committee now grant permission to the hon. member to have included in his remarks this very short article?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Churchill: No, Mr. Chairman. I would like to agree to the request of the hon. member for Kindersley, and I heard it when he was making his speech; but I think the precedent that would be set by this would not be tenable in the future. Newspaper comment can be summarized or read into the record, but simply to hand to the Hansard reporter material of that nature is, I think, not at all customary in the house and is something we would have to guard against very carefully.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps I could explain to the hon. member that the short article was an explanation of the plan which the hon. member was presenting, and I presume that if permission had not been granted by the committee, he would have read or summarized the article.

Mr. Churchill: I regret, Mr. Chairman, that we did not deal with this request at the time. I was not aware that the chairman had not heard the request of the hon. member. But if we grant this request, how then can we refuse others who may make similar requests in the future? Perhaps if the hon. member speaks again, as he would have an opportunity to do, he might summarize this article and make sure that his statement is in Hansard.

Item agreed to.

40a. Expenses of the royal commission on taxation, $250,000.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I may appear at this stage to filibuster my own estimates, but I promised some weeks ago to make a statement on centennial agencies and centennial projects and programs. I believe this kind of statement will be useful at this stage, not only to members of the house and members of this committee but also to the population in general. I want first to deal with the centennial agencies. It may appear to the casual observer from this point of view that there is a surfeit of organizations, agencies and structures throughout Canada for planning the centennial. This may be a legitimate complaint at the moment, but I believe that once programs begin to emerge involving the three levels of government and private organizations in every part of the country, these agencies will each find their role and serve their purpose as they are meant to.

In the private sector, the Canadian centenary council has been established "to stimulate interest and to educate the Canadian public for appropriate observances of the anniversary of confederation in 1967 by encouraging, undertaking and assisting centenary projects of a lasting and beneficial nature to the community". I have quoted from their constitution. This Canadian centenary council is a purely private and voluntary body which is designed to work in close co-operation with private organizations while maintaining close liaison with government agencies. I am convinced that the council will play a most useful role in the preparation of the centennial celebrations, as I said in a recent letter to its president, Dr. Norman MacKenzie. I would like to quote briefly from that letter:

—the Prime Minister and all members of the government are in full agreement about the importance of thought and action directed toward the centenary by individual citizens and by their many private organizations...

For maximum effect these efforts of Canadian citizens and Canadian organizations must have a focal point, a centre for clearance, for planning and for the exchange of views and experience. Outside the national centennial administration, which is the federal agency established by law for the purpose of planning the centennial with a national approach, the Canadian centenary council represents the only national voluntary organization whose sole purpose and object is to further centennial planning...

We have been pleased to note not only the existence of the Canadian centenary council, and its accomplishments during the past few years, but also its record of working effectively and harmoniously with the organizations established for the centenary by the government. The federal government invites the Canadian centenary council—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I wonder if the minister is speaking on vote 40a, or is he on vote 45?

Mr. Lamontagne: I thought it was 45a, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: No, we have not yet reached vote 45a.

Item agreed to.

National centennial administration—

45. General administration, $250,000.

Mr. Lamontagne: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to finish quoting from the letter to the president of the Canadian centenary council:

The federal government invites the Canadian centenary council to continue to work closely with the national centennial administration.

In the private sector all across the country voluntary associations, agencies and corporations are developing centennial programs. It is not the size of the project that counts. Some of them will be small by force of circumstances, but it is the total and the quality that count. I am informed that many of these voluntary programs, large and small, are already in operation.

In the public sector, a great number of municipalities have already set up local centennial committees and we hope that every municipality in Canada will have its own local committee in the near future. All provinces have designated a minister to be responsible for the centennial celebrations and most of them have set up their own provincial agencies. At the federal level, the government has constituted a cabinet committee on the 1967 program and an interdepartmental committee of officials which will coordinate all the activities of the different federal departments and agencies directly or indirectly related to the centennial celebrations.

The national centennial administration is the central federal agency charged with originating, developing and implementing projects and programs as approved by the governor in council. It has a specific responsibility for centennial projects which it will undertake itself within its own terms of reference, but it is also the agency of the federal government charged with the responsibility of implementing the federal program of grants for local centennial projects in collaboration with the provinces. Finally, it will play an important part in advising other federal departments and agencies on centennial projects conceived and developed directly by these departments. The national centennial administration is a crown corporation with a commissioner, a deputy commissioner and eight directors who were appointed in January, 1963. Since May of this year, the administration has been busy recruiting government personnel for the tremendous task ahead and developing these projects and programs.

Finally, there are two liaison agencies. The national committee on the centennial is responsible for liaison at government level. It is composed of two federal ministers and ten provincial ministers responsible for the centennial celebrations and their advisers. In other words, this national committee is a federal-provincial conference on the centennial. The national committee met in October of this year for the first time since 1961 and will meet again in the middle of December.

The national conference on the centennial is an over-all advisory and liaison agency which consists of 20 representatives, whose nominations were proposed by the provincial governments themselves, and of 40 members at large representing the different segments of the Canadian population. In addition, representatives from the Canadian centenary council and from youth movements are invited as observers. The national centennial administration provides its secretariat and its staff.

The national conference met for the first time in the middle of October this year in Ottawa. This meeting was, of course, of a preliminary nature. The general aspects of federal-provincial programs were reviewed and other centennial projects were also discussed. A steering committee was set up to act in an executive capacity. This committee met in November to prepare the next meeting of the conference which will be held in Ottawa next week.

This administrative set-up, with its various agencies, may seem to be unduly complicated and cumbersome. I believe, however, it reflects the character of our country with its federal structure and its sparse population distributed over a wide territory. I can assure hon. members also that everything will be done to avoid duplication and overlapping between these various agencies.

I should like now to report briefly on the centennial projects and programs which are under consideration at the present time. This report will be limited to those projects and programs which are directly connected with the federal government. They can be divided into two categories, capital works programs and other projects. The federal government will participate in financing or initiate three different capital works programs.

First, the federal government is offering assistance to local or regional capital works projects. Federal grants are distributed through the national centennial administration and paid out of the national centennial fund. They are subject to varying conditions. First, an application for a federal grant, if it is for a local centennial project, must be made to the province. Second, the province must approve of the project and must assure the national centennial administration that two thirds of the cost will be met jointly by the province and the initiating agency. Third, the national centennial administration will pay up to one third of the estimated cost of approved projects, the grant being made to the province. Fourth, a project which is eligible for other forms of federal aid will also be eligible for a centennial grant, provided that the aggregate federal contribution does not exceed 50 per cent of the cost. Fifth, the total amount available under this program will be one dollar per capita of the province based on the population on June 1, 1963. Sixth, the projects must have a reasonable prospect of being completed by the time of the centennial observance. Seventh, anticipated revenue from the project will be taken into consideration in determining the amount of federal contribution.

A project must be of a lasting nature and might include, for example, acquisition and construction of buildings, parks and other capital works; the acquisition of buildings of historic or architectural merit; the restoration of buildings of historic or architectural merit; the writing and publishing of books; the composition of musical works, and the creation and completion of painting, sculpture and other works of art. However, it does not include any part of pageants or celebrations or administrative expenses of local committees.

This program will be implemented within the framework of specific federal-provincial agreements. The terms and conditions of these agreements have already been discussed in detail with all the provinces. Copies of the proposed agreements have been sent to the provincial governments several weeks ago. Four provinces have signed this agreement and others are expected to do so before the end of this year.

Thus, there will be no direct federal assistance to local or regional centennial projects of the capital works type. All requests for aid concerning such projects must be sent to provincial governments or to their centennial agencies rather than to the federal government or the national centennial administration.

The second program involving federal participation concerns provincial capital works projects. The federal government has agreed to pay 50 per cent of the cost of two buildings which will commemorate the two conferences held in Charlottetown and Quebec city in 1864. It is anticipated that early in May 1964, the Fathers of Confederation Memorial Building, Charlottetown, which is jointly financed by the federal government and by the ten provincial governments, will be completed and ready for use. This building will play a very important part next year in the special observances of the centennial of the 1864 confederation conference.

Another building for the performing arts will be erected in Quebec city to commemorate the Quebec conference. Construction work will begin next year. A special program of celebrations to commemorate those two historic conferences will be announced shortly.

Finally, the federal government will undertake a special building program in the capital district which will help to improve the cultural life and institutions, not only in the area but in the whole country. This program will include the national library and archives building, the national museum building, the redevelopment of confederation square, including possibly a convention centre and auditorium, and the restoration of the Thompson mill at Victoria island. Finally, the establishment of a national centre for the performing arts is under active consideration by the government.

The federal government is also developing another kind of program designed to prepare for, to celebrate or to commemorate the centennial. The acquisition and construction of buildings, parks and other permanent capital works will be excluded from this program. Eligible projects will be partly or wholly financed by the federal government and will have to be of a national or interprovincial character.

In order to celebrate the centennial, we must prepare for it. This means that Canadians, especially young people, must improve their knowledge of Canada and her history. We hope that Canadian teachers, especially in the field of history, will intensify their efforts in this respect. Beginning early next year, we intend to work in close co-operation with Canadian newspapers and magazines, as well as with our broadcasting networks and film producers to initiate special projects with these organizations if necessary in order to create greater interest in the centennial and its celebrations. We will also begin in 1964 to participate financially in an expanded youth travel and exchange program in collaboration with existing private organizations. We hope also Canadians, instead of criticizing what is done or not done in preparation for the centennial, will continue to send suggestions and proposals to the national centennial administration in Ottawa or to the Canadian centenary council or to the appropriate provincial authorities.

The preparation for the ceremonial program or the so-called birthday party has begun. Such projects as the confederation caravans, floating exhibits and a military searchlight tattoo are under consideration. Other projects for the centennial celebration are also being considered, such as a special travel program with particular emphasis on young Canadians, a series of international events to take place in Canada in 1967, an international and a national festival for the performing arts which would tour the main cities of our country.

In addition, other projects which would not only contribute to the celebration of the centennial but would also have a lasting value in commemorating the Canadian confederation are under study. They include such projects as a series of films on Canadian history, including a colour film on ethnic groups, the collection of basic documents on Indian history and culture to serve as source material, a centennial volume covering the Canadian centenary to be used by the dominion bureau of statistics, special editions of the Canada Year Book and the Canada Handbook, a definitive edition of the debates of the House of Commons from 1867 to 1874, a new edition of Canadian ministries since confederation, a biographical dictionary of all members and Senators since 1867, the papers of Canadian prime ministers commencing with Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, a bibliography of Canadiana between 1867 and 1900, a series of lectures by distinguished personalities from abroad under the auspices of the national gallery, a possible new general issue of stamps for 1967 incorporating a centennial symbol, the establishment of a national symphony orchestra and of two national theatre groups, the sponsorship of national amateur festivals. Other suggestions are under review; a special coinage issue and medallions for school children, the commissioning of works of art, a Canadian anthology recommended by the Canadian authors association, a proposed youth parliament, as mentioned this afternoon, representative of all the constituencies of Canada to meet in the House of Commons. Finally, the Department of External Affairs is also considering special programs which would come under its direct responsibility.

We must try to make the centennial available to the maximum number of Canadians throughout the whole of Canada. This is why we are featuring exchanges and portable exhibits and encouraging Canadians to travel at home. We propose to do our best within the bounds of the sensible and practical to bring the centennial to the people of Canada.

Those are some of the projects which have been decided upon or are presently under active consideration. Some of these projects will be changed and reshaped or even replaced by others as the order of priorities is reassessed. Undoubtedly, other worth-while projects will be added to this list as our discussions and our work progress. I will be pleased to report to the house on projects and programs related to the centennial from time to time as decisions are reached.

This short report clearly indicates how the government intends to prepare and to celebrate the Canadian confederation centennial. We wish this great historical event to serve the purpose of proving as well as enhancing the Canadian people's cultural life.

Canada has made remarkable progress during the last century from the economic and even from the social standpoint. Previously to 1867, our country was made up of economically stagnating regions. Today, we are one of the wealthiest nations in the world. However, progress in our cultural life has not matched our economic and social progress.

Such a lack of balance brings to our mind the thought expressed by the French philosopher, Henri Bergson, as regards the whole modern world. Here is what he said:

> Nature, in giving us an essentially active mind, had thus intended for us a certain development. But machines running on fuel, coal and white coal, and converting into motion potential energies accumulated for millions of years, have finally given to our system such tremendous expansion and power, which is so disproportionate to its size and strength, that surely nothing of the sort had been anticipated in the planned structure of our species...Now, in this inordinately expanded body, the soul remains what it was, too small now to fill it, too weak to direct it. Hence, the vacuum between body and soul. Hence, the formidable social, political and international problems which are so many indications of that vacuum and give rise, in order to fill it, to so many disorderly and inefficient efforts...The enlarged body calls for a greater soul.

Since 1867, our country has expanded physically and materially at an increasing rate. It now seems to be calling for a greater soul. It will achieve this only if it intensifies its cultural life, feeding its two main cultural streams and getting them to meet more often.

That is the major purpose the government of Canada would like to achieve for the centennial celebrations in close co-operation with the provincial governments, the municipalities, the leaders in the private sector and the greatest possible number of citizens.

If we succeed in giving to several of our cities suitable art centres, if we succeed in making of the Ottawa-Hull area a national centre where our two main cultures will be able to express themselves and to meet with the best they have to offer, if we succeed in creating at least two national theatre groups, an orchestra, a ballet company, encouraging our artists to a greater extent, giving our young people the opportunity to meet and know their country better, if we succeed in knowing our history and background better thanks to the work of our researchers, we will be able to celebrate the centennial with a light heart, because we will have taken advantage together of this unique opportunity to give a new impulsion, a new start to our cultural life, to give a greater soul to our country.

There is little time left to prepare the celebration of the centennial of confederation but it is not too late, fortunately, if all men of good will agree to co-operate and work hard. The present government itself has not lost time and is now ready to carry out the various projects.

The national centennial administration is well established and will soon be able to operate fully. The national ministers' committee has been revived recently; the national conference has been established and will soon be divided into special committees. Those two agencies will meet again next week in Ottawa.

It remains, however, that the federal government cannot do everything by itself. The provinces, the municipalities and the leaders in the private sector will also have an important role to play.

In the last analysis, the success of the centennial celebrations will depend on the Canadians in general, on the interest they will take in them and on their active participation. We must therefore all work together so that 1967 will become a new start towards our destiny.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Kindersley.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cantelon: I appreciate that applause, especially since I rise to correct a mistake made in the course of my address earlier this afternoon. It had been my intention, when I spoke then, to ask for the inclusion in the report of my remarks of an article which appeared in the Daily Gleaner of Fredericton, but I am afraid I did not go about it in the right way. So, with the indulgence of the committee, I would like to read that article now because I think its terms will be helpful to the committee in considering the proposal I made.

> William S. Fair, 23, came to Ottawa this week to see political leaders and government officials about his proposal that senior teen-agers be selected from each federal constituency to come to Ottawa and hold a mock parliamentary session.

The politicians and centennial planners see some merit in the idea from several angles—promoting good citizenship, giving young people a special role of their own in the centennial and marking the 100th birthday of confederation.

However, the politicians and some of the centennial planners also see in Mr. Fair's plan some political pitfalls.

For one thing they wouldn't be entirely happy about having the members of the youth parliament chosen in election contests with parties run under the labels of national political bodies. The planners would be fearful of having such organizations as the youth branches of the Liberal, Conservative, New Democratic and Social Credit parties take over.

I should like to say, as an aside at this point, that I would quite agree with them.

One suggestion is that elections might be held on the basis of new, fictitious parties, or parties not now active in national political affairs.

Another point of concern is: What would the youth parliament debate? What bills might it pass? What stands might it take which might prove to be distinctly embarrassing to the government of the day in 1967?

The politicians expect another general election to be held between now and the centennial year—or, if not, in 1967 itself.

Ottawa feels the project will need the sponsorship of some national body, such as a service club with branches in all federal ridings, to handle financing and organization.

It will also need endorsation by the government and the national centennial planners. Mr. Fair has suggested that Prince Charles might open the youth parliament session in the Senate chamber—as his mother did with the Canadian parliament in 1957—and that the sessions be held in the Commons chamber.

Though it is obvious that the suggestions made in this newspaper article are merely flying kites, I think they are worth quoting in connection with what I said earlier, because the article does give some idea of the objections which might be raised as well as some indication of what might be done in order to make the plan efficient and successful.

I appreciate the observation by the President of the Privy Council that it is intended to make the centenary celebration as widespread as possible. In this connection, a youth parliament, with its membership drawn from all parts of Canada, would seem eminently to fulfil that objective.

Mr. Olson: I listened very carefully to what was said by the President of the Privy Council as he outlined various projects planned to celebrate Canada's centennial which are now being considered, or which are under way. I should like the hon. gentleman to know that I, along with I believe most members of this group, would support many of the general proposals he has mentioned, and even a number of the specific undertakings to which he referred, including the restoration of the confederation buildings in Charlottetown, the building of some type of centre in Quebec city to commemorate the conference which was held there, and so on.

However, I am a little concerned about the omission of any special project to commemorate the date when two of the most important provinces in Canada actually entered confederation. I refer to 1905 when Alberta and Saskatchewan came in. There are other dates, of course—the dates when British Columbia and Manitoba joined confederation. I would think that on Canada's 100th birthday some consideration might be given to special projects commemorating these dates. I did not come prepared with any suggestions, but these came to mind while I was listening to the minister's remarks. Perhaps the federal government could undertake to build a second trans-Canada highway through these provinces and call it confederation highway. Or the federal government could undertake to build a large storage dam in the upper reaches of the South Saskatchewan river, a dam which would be a benefit to all the provinces of western Canada. I bring this up because there seems to be a lack of any provision to commemorate the dates when these other provinces came into confederation.

Mr. Churchill: I just want to say these words. We are abstaining from extensive comment on the progress report given by the President of the Privy Council, because there will be plenty of opportunity next session to deal with this particular subject at some length.

We welcome this progress report. It indicates that the centenary committee is very busy. We are glad it is so active. As the minister has said, all manner of suggestions may be made to that committee, and all will receive thorough consideration.

Item agreed to.

Emergency measures organization—

15. Administration and operation, $1,463,000.

Mr. Lamontagne: I imagine the leader of the house may have a word or two to say at this point. But if it is acceptable to members of the committee, this special vote could be taken up when the estimates of the Department of Industry are before us.

Mr. Pickersgill: There are only a few minutes remaining to us now and it seems hardly worth while starting the estimates of another department. If there is any member who would like to say something about this subject between now and the time we adjourn the committee would, no doubt, be glad to hear his comments. I asked my colleague the Minister of Industry to come down but I am not sure if he is available.

Mr. Lamontagne: He is.

Mr. Churchill: I hope the Minister of Industry does appear, to give us a report on this particular field of activity, because it is one which is of great interest to the people of Canada. I express regret that the Prime Minister has not continued to accept responsibility for this organization, as was done formerly, because these arrangements do affect the security of Canada and of the people who live within our boundaries. This is a matter of major importance.

The minister has now appeared and, having saved him by making those brief remarks, I will give him an opportunity to make a report.

Mr. Drury: The report will be, by reason of the hour, relatively brief. These estimates, as members of the committee know, were prepared a year ago. They appear as a section of the privy council office estimates contained in three votes, numbers 15, 20 and 25. In the meantime, the present government arranged for the emergency measures organization to become a separate agency responsible through its own deputy head to me as minister. At the same time, the administration of the civil defence college at Arnprior was transferred to the emergency measures organization. Since estimates for the college had been prepared by the Department of National Health and Welfare, it was deemed appropriate for the minister of that department to deal with those estimates for this year.

The objectives of civil emergency planning may be put as follows:

1. To aid our people directly and through measures taken by government at all levels better to endure the effects of nuclear war, if it should occur, so that greater numbers would survive and more of the necessary items of supply remain to meet their needs.

2. To add to the capability of Canada to meet the requirements of a modern conventional war, remembering that such a war may well place extremely severe and unique demands upon all of us and that, among other unusual conditions, there would always be the possibility of rapid escalation into nuclear war.

3. To reduce as far as possible the losses in life and property occurring because of natural disasters affecting Canada.

In the period since I have been responsible for this work I have had some opportunity to review it. One is impressed with the marked advance in civil emergency planning in the last few years made by the provinces of Canada. Several of them have given it attention to a degree quite unknown before. They tend to stress the need to prepare for natural disasters as well as for the major hazards of a possible war. They agree that these are all risks that we must recognize and that this sort of insurance is but prudent.

Vote 15 covers administrative costs of the emergency measures organization. The total staff is modest in size, numbering at present less than 100 persons, including the staff of the ten regional offices. Vote 20 includes the program for the provision of radiac instruments to measure wartime fallout and to enable forecasts to be made of impending danger to the people from this hazard. This is a program of shared costs with the provinces. Vote 25 reflects the importance of provincial and local government programs in civil emergency planning. It provides for federal financial assistance to provinces and municipalities up to 75 per cent of their costs.

Civil emergency planning, at least at the modest degree and at the level of costs we have provided in Canada, appears to be sensible. The Cuban crisis last year emphasized fully the need for instantly available emergency measures at such a time. Continued attention is required as part of our national and international effort. Civil emergency planning is part of our total defence. It merits a suitable portion of our attention, effort and money.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, this is indeed a brief report on a very important field of activity, but I think the house is glad to have had a report. Emergency measures work in Canada has now been going on for about 13 years and, as the minister pointed out, with increased emphasis during the last several years. The response by the provinces is very gratifying indeed. According to the latest issue of the emergency measures digest, as it is called, quite a substantial number of people have received training in various aspects of survival operations, which is very much to the good. The more widely knowledge is spread with regard to survival operations the better because, as the minister pointed out in a speech he made in October, some sentences of which he could have repeated here, we have to be on our guard. I am going to repeat two or three of those sentences which are taken from an address by the minister in October, 1963. He said:

> There is no guarantee, whatever we may hope, that the present mild international climate will not degenerate again into freezing weather, with or without warning. Nuclear war remains a possibility, a remote one perhaps but nevertheless a worrisome one; and as long as this condition persists, we must continue the effort to improve our chances of surviving. In short, the civil emergency preparedness program is an insurance policy. As with other forms of insurance, there will be no regrets if we never collect on the policy...

That is a quotation with which I am thoroughly in accord. This is a form of national insurance. It is a field of activity in which every Canadian should be interested. I do not think we should take the point of view that nothing can be done in the event of nuclear war. I think that is wrong. I do not think we should take the point of view that civil defence measures are an indication that a nation can endure a nuclear war. I heard that doctrine advanced just the other day. I think that is wrong. I think it is just sound common sense to be prepared for emergencies. We do so through our defence operations in order that if conventional or nuclear war breaks out we will have forces ready to take action; but under modern conditions the civil population must be prepared for survival operations, even if it is a war after the fashion of the second world war, with the awful destruction that was caused just by the conventional weapons of that period.

So it is sound common sense to have an emergency measures program, and even if it has not gone too well in some areas this is no excuse for not continuing the program on a national scale and with the co-operation of the provinces. A debt of gratitude is due to those people, the director and his staff, who have carried on during the past several years without any particular public recognition or any particular blare of trumpets, because this is a field of activity in which some people are interested and some are not. Nevertheless it is vital to Canada's welfare and I hope that it will continue without abatement so that we are ready for any emergency whatsoever.

I have one note that is not quite in keeping with all that has gone before. I had an argument with the Minister of National Defence as to the role of the militia with regard to this particular problem, and I presume I will have to wait until he reappears with his estimates to conclude that debate. I think he suggested that the minister reporting for emergency measures might have something to say about the role of the militia, but I would prefer to have it right from the mouth of the Minister of National Defence himself; so I will not press the minister, who perhaps has too many other things to do than to carry part of the burden for the Minister of National Defence.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This completes the estimates of the privy council.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I would like to ask the house leader to outline the business in front of us as far as he can go, with the hope that we will be able to complete this session and prorogue not later than the twentieth of this month. So far as we are concerned, the eighteenth would be even more satisfactory. We have now had two or three quiet days, so will the house leader produce some victims for slaughter?

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, sir, I do not like the idea of the last observation of the hon. gentleman in the context of what I am about to announce, but it was understood that we would take the estimates of the Department of Agriculture tomorrow. When they have been concluded and the carnage is over, the Postmaster General is only too ready to enter the slaughterhouse.

To take a more serious note, before we do either of these things I think my hon. friend, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, would like to move third reading of her bill tomorrow, which I hope will take a very brief time indeed because, as the hon. member for Perth pointed out, it is very important it should pass and get to the other place.

On Friday we would like to begin the day with the estimates of the Department of Justice, which have already had quite a thorough going over, and therefore should take a brief time. Then there will be the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and after that various other departments which I will discuss with hon. members opposite; but we would not take any other new departments.

I believe, sir, and I come now to the really important point, that there would be agreement, and that an order to that effect might be made now—and I believe this from the consultations I have had—for the house to sit on Saturday from eleven o'clock in the morning to 1 p. m., and from 2.30 in the afternoon until six o'clock, and it should be understood that the rules that apply to Friday would apply to that Saturday, except of course that we would not have a private members' hour from five to six.

If this is agreeable to the house, then on Saturday we would begin with the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, which would be the only new department available. I hope the house would be agreeable to my arranging what other departments could be brought on after that. Perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare might be available. In any event, I think we could find plenty to do.

Supply—Items Passed

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it agreed that the house will sit on Saturday from the hour of eleven o'clock in the morning to 1 in the afternoon and from 2.30 to six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: This is in accordance with the understanding we have had. We were anxious that if we sat on Saturday we would deal with a new department. The department that has been suggested suits our purposes, and on this basis we are prepared to agree and let it become an order of the house.

Mr. Olson: We in this party also agree.

Mr. Churchill: For the record, we have been in agreement for a long time to extend the hours and get on with the business.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre becomes more and more agreeable as Christmas approaches.

It being eight minutes after seven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

Third and final report of standing committee on veterans affairs—Mr. Forgie.

CONSUMER CREDIT—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Brant-Haldimand) presented the first report of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the consumer credit, and moved that the report be concurred in.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PETITION OF PEGUIS INDIANS CLAIMING ABROGATION OF RIGHTS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to present a petition under standing order 70. It is a petition by Chief Albert E. Thompson, Councillor Allan McPherson, Councillor Robert Kipling and Councillor Arnold Favel, all of the Peguis Indian reserve at Dallas, Manitoba. I have read the petition and according to the rules have inscribed my name thereon. I am satisfied that the petition meets the rules of the house and the form of petitions in every respect. It refers to, and asks a solution for, what the petitioners claim is an abrogation of their rights under a treaty between the crown and the members of that particular nation of people.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REPORTED STATEMENT BY QUEBEC PREMIER RESPECTING PROVINCIAL REQUESTS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister.

Does the hon. gentleman consider as an example of the new co-operative federalism the statement made by Mr. Lesage, yesterday evening, to the effect that it is the people of Quebec who will suffer from the central government's refusal to meet his requests?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the statement referred to by my hon. friend. At any rate, I do not intend to comment on a statement I have not seen.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? The Acting Prime Minister will find, when he sees the statement, that this is really an ultimatum on the part of the premier of the province of Quebec.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Acting Prime Minister tell us if Mr. Lesage is right in saying that the responsibility for the double taxation will have to be borne by the federal ministers?

Mr. Chevrier: I doubt very much that the premier of Quebec said such a thing, in the terms used by my hon. friend. In any case, as I said, I shall have to see the text before making any comments about it.

However, as my hon. friend from Three Rivers knows, there is going to be a conference on taxation and federal-provincial relations next spring, and those questions will be discussed.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): As happened last time?

Mr. Chevrier: They were very well disposed, last time.

Mr. Martineau: In view of the remarks made by Mr. Lesage, not on television or to the press but in the Club de Reforme in Quebec, can the minister tell the house if he or the government have received a new request from Mr. Lesage since the federal-provincial conference took place?

Mr. Chevrier: The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR WINTER WORK BONUS ON RENOVATION WORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour. I should like to ask the minister if he has received from some chambers of commerce and businessmens' organizations representations to the effect that in addition to the $500 bonus in respect of homes built during the winter there should be a bonus of $50 per $1,000 spent on the renovation of homes, apartment blocks and commercial premises? Is the minister giving consideration to these representations, and is he likely to adopt them as a means of reducing unemployment this winter?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I should like to take this question as notice and reply to the hon. member tomorrow.

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO IMPROVE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has he informed his colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. McEachen), of the projects he had in mind, some years ago, to check unemployment and provide work for the 300,000 unemployed people there are now throughout Canada?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the matter is obvious, for we have a labour minister who accomplishes much for the unemployed.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he simply answer the question I put to him?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I gave the hon. member a very good answer.

[Text]

WINTER WORKS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can he tell the house whether, following the great number of protests made by the municipalities, he intends to revise the deadline set for winter works, that is April 30, and extend it to May 31, as was done last year?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, aside from the preliminary remarks of the hon. member, which are not entirely accurate, there is no intention at the present time to change the dates specified; because the expectations are that this winter the winter works program will be more extensive in man hours, labour content and dollar volume.

FINANCE

REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER RESPECTING BUDGETARY DEFICITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. According to newspaper, radio and television news reports the Prime Minister assured the Canadian Labour Congress yesterday that he saw eye to eye with them on the use of budgetary deficits to assist in the solution of the unemployment problem. Does this announcement indicate a new policy on the part of the government, or does the Minister of Finance have an explanation to make of this apparent conflict with his previous policy.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member will allow me to reply. I should like to say on the Prime Minister's behalf what he has told me he would have said in answer to this question if he had been in the house. Some press reports have interpreted remarks of the Prime Minister to the Canadian Labour Congress delegation yesterday as if he were taking a view of budgetary deficits different from the view of the Minister of Finance. This is completely without foundation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: The substance of what the Prime Minister said yesterday is what he has said many times before. It is what the Minister of Finance has said many times and what has been said by many others on behalf of the government and the Liberal party.

We accept the necessity, indeed the desirability, of deficit financing when it is the effective way to stimulate the sound and steady expansion of the economy needed to increase employment. The Prime Minister also believes, as the Minister of Finance believes and the government believes—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: —that it is important not to permit an indefinite continuation of the chronic, very large deficits we have been experiencing. Deficits should be incurred only by deliberate decisions of economic policy; to allow them to continue or to expand indefinitely for other reasons would undermine confidence in the currency and impede steady economic expansion. Therefore one of the objectives of the government should be, and is, to move toward a more balanced budget as the economy gains strength; to see that deficits are reduced with improving economic conditions. That is the government's policy; it is the minister's policy and it is equally the Prime Minister's policy.

The Minister of Finance is making every possible effort to reduce budgetary deficits, among other things by reducing unnecessary expenditures. But he has not hesitated to support expenditures for necessary social and economic purposes, in particular for the reduction of unemployment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: In following these policies the Minister of Finance has, and will continue to have, the full support of the Prime Minister. I thank the house for the very courteous manner in which members have received this statement.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of this secondary revelation of second thoughts by the Prime Minister, may I ask the Minister of Justice why it was, if this represented the consensus, that the Prime Minister turned to the Minister of Finance as he made that statement yesterday and said "I have not consulted with him and I do not know whether he agrees"?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I was present at the meeting which took place yesterday. It was an excellent meeting, as my right hon. friend knows. It was one of the finest meetings I have experienced.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: But if I may answer my right hon. friend's question I would say he should not be disturbed too much about budgetary deficits in view of the $3 billion budgetary deficit which took place while he was in office, and he should not be worried too much about what this government is likely to do.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there does not seem to be the clarity in that answer that there was in the prepared answer. I now ask the minister, did he hear the statement made yesterday by the Prime Minister to the Minister of Finance, which in effect was "I have not consulted with him and I do not know whether he agrees"? Does this agreement represent an agreement overnight?

Mr. Chevrier: I am not sure that I heard the words to which my hon. friend refers, but I have one recollection and it is this. As I tried to say a while ago when I was interrupted, I have attended no finer meeting between labour and government than the one which took place yesterday.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister would agree with the story my mother used to tell me when I was a boy—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Thompson: —about—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the Acting Prime Minister has given the views of the Prime Minister and the Prime Minister, in absentia, has given us the views of the Minister of Finance, could we hear from the Minister of Finance himself?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to the very clear statement which the Acting Prime Minister has just made. I agree with every word of it.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement the Acting Prime Minister has just made, could he tell the house if he foresees an unprecedented peacetime deficit for the current fiscal year?

Mr. Gordon: I am looking forward, and I think we are all looking forward, to a good year in 1964. We will be making more detailed statements about this at the proper time and in due course. At the moment I think it is fair to say that conditions look good.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): May I ask a supplementary question of the Acting Prime Minister. In view of what he has just said, how is it that under a Conservative government all these deficits were a disgrace and a national shame, but apparently they have become a national grace under this government?

[Translation]

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, as far as the first part of the question goes, I suggest that my hon. friend direct it to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). As for the second part, it will be necessary to wait for developments before a statement can be made.

[Text]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the Acting Prime Minister, and it is a serious one. In view of the almost complete agreement the Prime Minister expressed yesterday with the proposals contained in the brief of the Canadian Labour Congress, can we assume that those proposals will be in the speech from the throne at the start of the next session?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I take it the hon. gentleman was present, together with his colleagues, at the meeting, because I saw them there. I thought I saw them agreeing with most of the things the Prime Minister said. I cannot add anything more to what was said on that occasion.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Are we not going to hear what the mother of the hon. member for Red Deer had to say?

[Later:]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. Would the Acting Prime Minister maintain that the current expected deficit was deliberately planned by the government and the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Speaker, if one has regard to a comparison between what is taking place now and what has taken place before, the comparison is as between day and night, and I would not want to go into the matter any further.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Longueuil.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Longueuil.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: What is your point of order?

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is related to the standing order which provides that a minister must reply to the question directed to him. He is not obliged, of course, to reply if he does not want to. However, I submit that, as far as the last question put to him is concerned, the Minister of Justice, as has been the case in many occasions lately, answers anything but does not answer the question directed to him. I think it is time to put a stop to that way of answering questions. Proper replies should be given to the questions put.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will kindly resume his seat when I get on my feet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows the standing orders as well as I do, and when I am on my feet the hon. member should be seated.

The hon. member for Longueuil.

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): I shall put my question later, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister a question?

In view of the statement he made in this house this afternoon to the effect that he was in favour of a budgetary deficits policy and in view of the statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) some days ago in Edmonton that she was in favour of a pay as you go financial policy, could he tell us which one of those two statements is official?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I would ask my hon. friend to be at least kind enough to read tomorrow the statement I made in the house this afternoon and which will appear in Hansard, because the preamble to his question does not tally with the statement I made.

FEDERAL INSURANCE CARRIED WITH NORWICH UNION COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. L. Klein (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the Arab boycott now being conducted against the state of Israel, resulting in the resignation of Lord Mancroft from the London advisory board of the Norwich Union insurance societies, will the minister ascertain whether the government of Canada or any of its crown corporations are presently carrying any insurance contracts with the Norwich Union insurance societies?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend will realize, this question involves a lot of research. We are going to do it with the greatest pleasure, but in the meantime I wonder if it would be acceptable to the hon. member to put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Klein: If the minister so wishes.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT ON PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs which arises out of the reported agreement on the Columbia river treaty amongst the negotiators representing the three governments concerned. Does this mean there is now complete agreement among the negotiators as to the price that should be paid for downstream benefits, or is there still some latitude being left in this respect?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to send over to my hon. friend a copy of the communique that was issued at the end of the meeting last night. That release said in part that after three days of discussions, during which substantial progress was made, the negotiators were in general agreement on a report that would now be submitted to the governments concerned. This represents a very considerable advance in the matter—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and I am sure that no one will be happier at this news than my hon. friend.

TRANSPORT

FERRY SERVICE, FATHER POINT-BAIE COMEAU—NOTICE OF DISCONTINUANCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gustave Blouin (Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport. Is he aware of a public notice given on December 9 by the shipping company Nord-Sud Limitee to the effect that the daily service provided by the ferry-ice-breaker Pere-Nouvelle between Father Point and Baie Comeau in my riding, will be discontinued on January 4, 1964?

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Order paper.

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have received notice of that action being taken by the ferry company.

[Translation]

Mr. Blouin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Does the present government intend to give effect to the commitments made by the previous government to maintain this public service between both shores?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the present government is not responsible for the breaches, if any, of commitments made by the former government; but the question—

Mr. Mandziuk: How about the nuclear arms?

Mr. McIlraith: —of subsidy to the ferry is being examined at the moment.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. We are entitled to know what breach of commitment was there by the previous government. As far as the Pere-Nouvelle ferry is concerned, we worked very hard to establish that ferry and it should be given sufficient subsidy to carry on.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the point I made was in answer to the question of the hon. member, and I repeat "the breaches, if any". However, since the hon. member for Three Rivers has asked the question, the breach they complain of is contained in a letter written by the hon. member in which he indicated that his government would admit the ferry duty free.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

BRIDGES

THREE RIVERS—SUGGESTED CONSTRUCTION AT CAP DE LA MADELEINE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Paul Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the technical and other difficulties that seem to be involved in the building of the Three Rivers bridge, which is greatly needed, has your department considered suggesting to the corporation to build that bridge in Cap de la Madeleine instead of Three Rivers, so that some of the difficulties might be removed?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This really is a question for the order paper.

NATIONAL MUSEUM

DR. RUSSELL—REPORTED STATEMENT AS TO RESIGNATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a question arising out of the report carried in the press yesterday with regard to Dr. Loris Russell, explaining why he felt he had to get out of the national museum. I wonder whether the minister has any comment to make on this report or any indications as to how he plans to meet the criticisms contained in Dr. Russell's statements, for example by putting them before the house or one of its committees.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I read with considerable interest and some dismay the statement attributed to Dr. Loris Russell yesterday. This would seem to culminate a great many years of disturbance within the management of the affairs of the museum. I regret it very much, because Dr. Russell is a distinguished Canadian scientist who indeed in the last several years during which tumult has existed there had contributed enormously to bringing peace and some measure of tranquility to the museum.

I can assure my hon. friend that my one purpose now with regard to the museum is to re-establish over a period of years a degree of tranquility. I am only sorry that Dr. Russell will not be part of it. We have lost not only Dr. Russell but I think six or eight scientists in all, including several holding doctorates. This is an unfortunate state of affairs. I hope it is not a tendency that applies to that particular degree of study. But we are not going to establish a sound museum until internal peace is restored. We propose to make appointments to the museum, the staff of which will be headed by Dr. Glover from the University of Manitoba, and we hope to establish a degree of extended growth and peace in the museum as rapidly as we can.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which may seem narrow. Dr. Russell in his statement refers to representations that were received which were critical of the course of the museum, particularly from members of the Canadian historical association. I put a request on the order paper in the form of a notice of motion for the production of papers in relation to these communications. The reply was that there were no communications of this character.

I wonder whether the minister has any explanation for this, because here is a civil servant who knows the correspondence exists, yet the minister has given a reply that there is none available.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member made such a request—I cannot recall it fully now—and we told him there were no such communications, I would say that we told him the truth. However, I noticed the statement of Dr. Russell that pressures had been put upon him to give up his post. I want to say to the hon. member that neither I nor any member of my staff at any time endeavoured to persuade Dr. Russell to leave his post. We were aware that he was dissatisfied in the current post and indeed was hoping, I think, to be made chief of the museum. I think delay in such a decision contributed in part to his discomfiture. However, with regard to the statement that pressures were put upon him to resign, I want to assure my hon. friend that this was not my policy, the policy of the deputy minister or of anyone on the staff.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, having attended university with Dr. Russell and watched the development of his work in the national museum of Canada over the years, I want to say that in Dr. Russell the Canadian government had one of the finest geologists who ever graduated from a university in Canada.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MEMBERS OF ANTIGUA GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wonder whether he is aware that in our diplomatic gallery today we have two very distinguished gentlemen from the West Indies area, Mr. Bird the chief minister of the territory of Antigua, who does not have to delegate the responsibilities of minister of finance as we do because he is the minister of finance as well, and his public works minister, Mr. Williams.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the presence of the chief minister of Antigua and the minister of public works of that territory, but I am looking forward to seeing both of these gentlemen in my office later this afternoon.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ANTICIPATED REDUCTION IN ARMED FORCES AND CIVILIAN PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence in the absence of the Minister of National Defence. Two days ago I asked what was the estimated number of personnel involved in the reduction in the armed forces, and also in the civilian workers. Is the minister now in a position to give an answer?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am in a position to inform the right hon. gentleman that a total of 2,293 service and 2,751 civilian personnel will be affected by these reductions. I should point out, however, that in so far as the servicemen are concerned, for the most part they will be transferred to other units to fill vacancies or take the place of others who retire.

As for civilians, approximately 800 are employed on the northwest highway system and at Fort Churchill, and it is expected that there will be little change after the transfer of administrative responsibilities from the Department of National Defence. Of the remainder, positions will be found for some in other government departments in lieu of personnel who would normally be recruited from outside the public service. A few will be retained in the Department of National Defence, where their experience and skills can be used to good advantage.

Every effort will be made to ensure that as many as possible of the employees affected will be taken care of in one way or another, and it is expected that a number will obtain employment in private industry through the agency of the national employment service. I might add that, as my colleague pointed out last week, the discontinuance of or reduction in certain defence establishments will be done on a gradual basis, and every endeavour will be made to minimize any possible hardship or inconvenience for those personnel involved.

[Later:]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): I wish to ask a supplementary question on this point, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Associate Minister of National Defence tell us whether he has given consideration to the pension fund which was accumulated by the employees who are being displaced and could he tell us what the government intends to do in that respect, in order to protect the employees concerned?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, all those things are being considered.

[Text]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question for the associate minister. He mentioned that approximately 800 personnel were employed on the northwest highway system. My understanding of the most recent figures was that 1,200 personnel were employed on the highway. Does the minister's mention of 800 mean that there is to be a reduction of approximately 400 personnel when the Department of Public Works takes over the operation?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I am relying on the figures of the department, and I understand the number of civilian personnel on the northwest highway system and at Fort Churchill is 800, not 1,200.

[Later:]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have been trying for 35 minutes to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Public Works. It arises out of the discrepancy in the figures that the Associate Minister of National Defence appears to have given the house with respect to personnel on the northwest highway system. Can the minister assure the house that, regardless of whether the figure is 800 or 1,200, there will be no reductions in the civilian personnel on the highway as a result of the take-over of the maintenance operation by his department?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will not expect me at this time and on the spur of the moment to give any assurances of any kind. However, I am going to look into the matter, and within the next few days I will probably be able to give the hon. member an answer.

LABOUR RELATIONS

B.C. FISHERMEN'S STRIKE—RESIGNATION OF ARBITRATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and ask him whether he has yet been able to get in touch with the British Columbia minister of labour, Hon. Leslie Peterson, in Victoria, with respect to finding a replacement for Mr. Justice Dryer in the arbitration in the fishing industry dispute.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday in reply to a question from the hon. member, Hon. Mr. Peterson is away but he will be back in his office on Monday morning. I have left word for him to call me on Monday morning, when this matter will be discussed with him.

Mr. Howard: As a supplementary question, is the minister aware that as long ago as October 25 Mr. Justice Dryer expressed the thought that because of his duties as a member of the maritime union trustees he would be unable to perform his duties as an arbitrator in the fishing industry dispute, and suggested that the parties get in touch with the minister? Further, is the minister aware that as long ago as November 14 at least one of the parties got in touch with the minister and expressed that point of view?

Mr. Robichaud: In reply to the hon. member I wish to state that on November 18 I contacted Hon. Mr. Peterson, and he advised me he had no notification from Mr. Justice Dryer to the effect that he would not be able to carry on as arbitrator. The next day, November 19, as I said yesterday, I contacted Mr. Justice Dryer again and he advised me he thought he was in a position to carry on with the arbitration. I also said yesterday that on December 4 he wrote me and mentioned in his letter that if we felt he could not carry on as arbitrator to the satisfaction of the two parties concerned and that an unexpected delay would occur, we were free to replace him, and this is the action I have taken since.

Mr. Howard: As a supplementary question, can I take it from this that we should place less trust than normal in the government of British Columbia?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING WITH ONTARIO MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry. Would the minister report to the house following his conference with the Ontario minister of trade and industry?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think it would probably be more convenient if I made a report when the estimates for which I am responsible come up for consideration next week, rather than on orders of the day.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Hales: Could I ask the minister at this moment whether the Ontario minister of trade and industry requested that the Brantford area be withdrawn from the list of designated areas?

Mr. Drury: He did not.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR AGENDA FOR DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Would the minister be kind enough to give the house a general outline of the federal-provincial conference on agriculture which will take place here on December 16, 17 and 18?

[Text]

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Well, Mr. Speaker, there are many, many subjects that are coming up, and I would be very glad to give the hon. member a copy of the agenda on Monday morning. Further, my estimates will be up for discussion in a short while.

[Translation]

Mr. Boutin: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

Could the minister tell us whether the question of a wheat board for eastern Canada will be considered at the next conference?

[Text]

REPORTED SPEECH BY MINISTER IN CHICAGO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a brief but important question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that when speaking to the Chicago farmers club on December 2 the minister is reported to have informed his audience that the government of Alberta was a Conservative and republican type of government, is he supporting the campaign of the hon. member for Lotbiniere against Her Majesty.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): I have not seen this speech.

Mr. Douglas: Did the hon. gentleman see the speech before he delivered it?

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture will explain how he can read his speech without seeing it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Wait and see.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister?

Can the minister tell us whether he deliberately replied in French to the question put to him in English by the hon. member for Villeneuve?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gregoire: This proves that they are both bilingual.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

KENYA—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT INDEPENDENCE DAY CELEBRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs who represented Canada at the independence day celebrations in Kenya earlier this day? I am certain all hon. members want to welcome this new member nation of the commonwealth, but I would like to know who performed this pleasant duty for Canada?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house joins in the observation made by the hon. gentleman in expressing a warm welcome to Kenya on the occasion of its independence. Canada is represented on this occasion by the head of our mission in an associated country.

BOLIVIA—PROTECTION FOR CANADIAN MISSIONARIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could the minister indicate whether security measures have been taken to protect the many Canadian missionaries who are in Bolivia, in the Oruro, Catavi and Siglo XX areas, in view of the uneasiness which prevails in those regions at this moment?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will try to answer the question of the hon. member for Villeneuve next week—I will not be here Monday—since I am not in a position to answer it right now.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

USE OF CHILDREN'S TEETH AS RADIOACTIVE FALL-OUT CHECK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether she has had time to prepare an answer to the question I asked last Thursday. While I am on my feet I should also like to ask her whether she is now prepared to give us the names of the members of the advisory committee that she promised or stated on November 7 would be chosen from recognized university authorities and other sources?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have been carrying the answer to this question around hoping that the hon. member would be in the house some day and would ask it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

An hon. Member: Privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Simcoe East on a point of order.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I have been in this house—

Miss LaMarsh: I did not mean any offence to my hon. friend; I meant since my return to the house. I know he has been here when we have been dealing with other legislation, but he has not been in the house during recent question periods. The question asked in my absence while I was at the dominion-provincial conference was taken as notice by my parliamentary secretary, and it is one which requires a fairly elaborate answer.

The information now available to us concerning the University of Toronto project on the measurement of strontium 90 in the primary teeth of Canadian children suggests that a widespread misunderstanding may exist with regard to the purpose of this project. It appears that the study is designed to serve two purposes; (1) to obtain an accurate estimate of the discrimination against strontium 90 as it passes from cows to milk to humans; and (2) to study the uptake of strontium 90 by calcified tissues which have different metabolic properties than bone. From the information available to us there is no reason why these objectives cannot be met by the University of Toronto program. Such studies are of course research studies, and should not be confused with public health monitoring programs.

In my department we are concerned with the public health aspects of nuclear fall-out. The objective in this case is to determine the radiation dose to sensitive tissue such as the bone marrow. The most direct method of assessing the current public health significance of the cumulative effect of fall-out in the past is through a program of measurement of strontium 90 in human bones. My department is engaged in such a study. At the same time we are concerned also with the future significance of fall-out, and for this purpose we have developed a comprehensive nation-wide system of fall-out studies in air, precipitation, soil and food products.

Analyses for strontium 90 in teeth do not provide data which can be used directly for estimating the present or future radiation dose to bone marrow. This is because primary teeth, unlike other parts of the skeleton, are fully formed by the end of the first year of life and there is subsequently little exchange with minerals in the diet. Indirectly, teeth analyses may be used to reflect the levels of strontium 90 in the diet during the period the teeth were formed, that is to say, four to six or more years earlier. If such data are required for public health purposes, a program such as my department's milk monitoring program provides data right up to the present time.

Mr. Rynard: A supplementary question. I do not think the minister has answered the second part of my question as to the committee which she was to appoint to study radiation. She was going to name the committee which she said on November 7 would be appointed.

Miss LaMarsh: My hon. friend asks me whether I am prepared to name them?

Mr. Rynard: Yes, that is what I asked.

Miss LaMarsh: I asked the department this week for the names, and the senior official with respect to radiation measures is out of the city for the week, so I have been unable as yet to get this information.

AIR TRANSPORT

APPLICATION TO DISCONTINUE PART OF PRAIRIE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It is reported that the air transport board yesterday authorized Transair of Winnipeg to suspend or abandon its run which serves Swift Current-Medicine Hat-Calgary-Regina effective January 11. Does the government concur in this suspension and, if it does, what arrangements are being made to service this run?

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): My understanding is that the order granting the right to suspend part of the service referred to by the hon. member was subject to the decision to hold a public hearing to deal with the question of whether or not the service should be cancelled. It is merely a suspension order which has been granted; the question of whether the service should be cancelled will be dealt with subsequently at a public hearing. Also at that hearing any other applications for a different or a substitute service to cover these points will be heard.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I will direct to the Acting Prime Minister. Is the suspension of the prairie run referred to by the hon. member for Regina City an indication that the Liberal government is again forsaking western Canada?

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): A supplementary question. The reply of the Minister of Transport did not indicate when this public meeting would be called. I should like to ask him now whether that meeting will be called prior to the suggested suspension date of January 11, and whether the government is prepared to maintain the service until the hearings are held and a decision respecting an alternative service is forthcoming.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is a matter for the government to provide the service; and it is not the prairie run which is involved, it is part of the prairie run. I have not had the opportunity, not having had notice of the question in advance of the sitting of the house, to get full information. I think perhaps the interest of all concerned would be best served if I were to get accurate information and answer the question more fully tomorrow.

QUEBEC—ALLEGED MISCARRIAGE IN COFFIN CASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice arising out of the sensational disclosures that are again taking place in regard to the Coffin murder trial, namely that the prosecutor has now asked the Quebec bar to investigate his conduct of the prosecution, and a Toronto newspaperman has been implicated in the disappearance of a key piece of defence evidence. Would the minister now give consideration to appointing a royal commission to investigate and clear away all the rumours and clouds which are surrounding the most mysterious murder trial in Canadian history?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, if there is to be a royal commission I am sure the proper place for it is in the province where the trial has taken place, notwithstanding the statements which my hon. friend has made. However, as I said yesterday, my officers are reading the book which has been published by Mr. Hebert to ascertain whether there is any federal aspect to it. I am also reading it myself, and when this reading has been completed if there is any reason to do so, I will make a statement.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I can understand the answer of the Minister of Justice, but I wonder whether an examination has been made with regard to representations which were made following the sentence of death so as to determine whether, during those representations, any of these matters were raised at all.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the right hon. gentleman for that question. I think it is going to be very helpful. But what I had in mind to say—and I am sure the right hon. gentleman remembers this—was that this case was appealed on one, if not two, occasions and judgment was rendered by the Supreme Court of Canada. But I will give consideration to the implication contained in the question.

Mr. Scott: I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that it was the federal cabinet which refused to commute the sentence to one of life imprisonment, does the federal government not feel it has some responsibility in this matter? If the cabinet had acted differently, Mr. Coffin would still be alive.

Mr. Chevrier: Certainly the federal government has no responsibility for what antedated that decision; but from there on, as I have stated, I am having the book studied. I cannot make any comment in that respect at the present time.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Surely the minister will admit that as Minister of Justice it is his responsibility to investigate—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is an argumentative question, as is apparent from the way in which it is being put. Perhaps the hon. member would care to rephrase it.

Mr. Douglas: Then I ask the minister if he would not agree that if evidence is turning up to show that an innocent man has been executed, he and the government have some responsibility to look into the matter.

Mr. Chevrier: If the hon. gentleman had listened carefully to what I said, I think he would have understood the statement I made. I said that those things which antedated the action taken by the governor in council were it seemed to me, matters to be adjudicated upon under provincial jurisdiction. So far as the rest of the question is concerned, I will say this. It may be there are other matters which will arise out of the study which is being made of the book at the present time. If, following that study, there are matters which are of interest to the Department of Justice, then the minister should, and will, take the steps which are necessary.

Mr. Douglas: Did I not hear the minister say that if there was to be a royal commission to look into this matter it would be set up in the province and by the provincial government?

Mr. Chevrier: I did say that. In so far as the case is concerned, the allegations concerning the case and the statements which have come out in the press from time to time, it would seem to me that if a royal commission were to be set up, such a commission should be a provincial one.

SHIPPING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport, but first may I express the hope that he enjoyed his trip to the maritimes. I should like to ask him a question regarding a statement he made while in that area. When does he expect to reach a decision concerning repairs to the coastguard ship Nanook for which tenders have been called? Work on these repairs would provide a considerable amount of winter employment in this area.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is a question for the order paper.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—CLEARANCE BY ALL OCEAN GOING VESSELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister advise the house if all ocean going vessels have now cleared the St. Lawrence seaway?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the last one cleared the seaway the day before yesterday at 10.40 in the morning.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

WHEAT—LOSS RESULTING FROM CONTAMINATED SHIPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. It is the same question I addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce last Monday and it has to do with the contamination of several cargoes of Canadian wheat by glass. Has the minister ascertained whether these cargoes can be cleaned and, if not, who will have to sustain the loss?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No claims have been made. That is the simple answer to the hon. member's question. So his question as to who will sustain the loss does not apply at this time.

FOREST PRODUCTS—CANADIAN PREPARATIONS TO MEET WORLD DEMAND

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry. Following the statements he made in San Francisco recently to the effect that the world demand for forest products will double in the next twenty years and that Canadian industries must get a large share of that market, can the minister inform the house how the federal government intends to do its share to help those industries?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Forestry is absent, I will take this question as notice.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

REQUEST FOR RETRACTION OF STATEMENTS BY PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could he inform the house whether the government will force Mr. McGregor, chairman of T.C.A., to withdraw some inaccurate statements he made concerning the French aircraft Caravelle which is used by 22 air transportation companies and which has carried more than seven million passengers since it was put into service in May 1959?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): The government has no intention of forcing Mr. McGregor to retract any statement he made. As far as I know, he made no inaccurate statement.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister a supplementary question. Does the government intend to suggest to the members of the sessional committee on railways that they invite a representative from the Sud-Aviation Company to reply to the charges made by Mr. McGregor?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, or should know, the standing orders of the house are quite specific on that matter. The members of a committee manage their own discussions and they are the ones who decide whether or not they will ask a witness to come before a committee.

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Did the minister in fact say that the statements as made by Mr. McGregor were accurate and that he has examined them accordingly?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order. The hon. gentleman appears to be referring to the proceedings of a committee which, of course, is against the rules of the house. For that reason it seems to me the question should be ruled out of order.

Mr. Martineau: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member was referring to the reply given by the Minister of Transport and not to something that occurred in the committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then I apologize.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport gave an answer a few moments ago regarding a statement made by the president of T.C.A. with respect to this French plane. He said "I know of no statement made by him that was inaccurate". I submit that the question asked by the hon. member is quite proper, because it certainly should be cleared up as to what the minister means by saying the statements have not been inaccurate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I want to apologize for my intervention.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the first question probably should not have been answered at all, because it contained a great number of statements and was quite different from what the Leader of the Opposition has now indicated. Perhaps I should look at the answer and the question and see if my answer was sufficiently complete, but if I understood the question correctly my answer was quite accurate. I was troubled by the question. Quite frankly, it had so many allegations in it that I was not sure what construction should be put on it. There were so many of them wrapped together.

EDUCATION

QUEBEC—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TOWARD NEW TECHNICAL INSTITUTE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. We have learned from Quebec that an aerotechnical institute is going to open in Montreal, in 1964. Has the minister received any request for assistance or co-operation from the government of Quebec?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is obviously a question for the order paper.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

SUGGESTED STAMP IN HONOUR OF LATE PRESIDENT KENNEDY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Can he tell us if the federal government has the intention to issue a stamp bearing the effigy of the late President John F. Kennedy?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, no decision has been taken on that matter.

Mr. Langlois: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering the nature of the question and of the answer, are we to understand that the matter is under consideration?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, all suggestions are taken into consideration, and then a final decision is arrived at.

SUGAR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday the hon. member for Cumberland asked me about negotiations for a long term sugar contract with Rhodesia and when they might be concluded. I informed the house on November 12 that we have been approached by a number of sugar exporting groups with respect to the negotiating of long term contracts. These discussions are still going on, and there is nothing I can say at the present time that would be appropriate.

AIRPORTS

WINNIPEG—FACILITIES FOR IN TRANSIT PASSENGERS ON INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has he yet been able to make his inquiries into the arrangements at the Winnipeg international airport for international air line passengers who have to stop over there between flights?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I regret not giving the hon. member before now the answer to the question he asked some days ago. I hope he will be tolerant of my absence the last few days. The matter raised by him has to do with the provision made for in transit passengers from a foreign aircraft flying over Canada and landing at Winnipeg for a short time.

This is a matter for decision by the air line concerned, since it is the air line that makes the arrangements for the handling of these passengers on in transit flights. It must determine if it wishes to hold its passengers on the aircraft, have them get off but remain as in transit passengers, that is not cleared by customs and immigration, in which case they may not move around the building, or be cleared by the inspection services so they can circulate freely within the terminal building.

On the flight referred to in the press I gather that the stop was made for 40 minutes only, and that the period of two hours reported in some press stories was not accurate. Accordingly the air line determined that the passengers should be held in transit and not cleared in a way that would permit them to move around the building freely.

Transit facilities at airports normally have limited use. Those in the Winnipeg terminal are comfortable and well furnished. Arrangements have in fact been made to offer additional rooms to the air lines for this purpose when required. If user air lines wish special services provided in these rooms or other adjustments, this is a matter for them to take up with the inspection services or the Department of Transport, according to what their requirements may be. Basically the responsibility rests with the air line concerned for the arrangements it wishes to make for its passengers, and suitable facilities should and can be made available for this purpose.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Longueuil.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

GILL REPORT—OBJECTIONS BY QUEBEC LABOUR FEDERATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, if other members had not asked so many questions, I would have also waited until tomorrow. But, as I wanted to put my question yesterday, I shall do so this afternoon.

My question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Is he aware of the statement made by the Quebec workers federation rejecting the findings of the Gill commission report? If so, what consideration does he intend to give that statement?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it will be the desire of the government to consider carefully all views expressed with respect to the recommendations of the Gill committee. I may tell my hon. friend that the Gill committee recommendations are now under study and will be considered by the government.

PENSIONS

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING OLD AGE ASSISTANCE, BLIND AND DISABLED PAYMENTS, ETC.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-125, to amend the Old Age Assistance Act, the Disabled Persons Act and the Blind Persons Act.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, as the house is well aware we in the official opposition, particularly during the debate on second reading, indicated our displeasure with the effective date of the legislation. We feel that the effective date of these increases should be the same as the starting date for the old age security increases.

I do not wish to repeat the many arguments that were presented on second reading, but we do feel that the inequities created by the effective date in the present measure should be rectified. We feel that possibly at this stage the government may have reconsidered its position and may wish to do something about this.

In consequence, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill):

That Bill C-125 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole house for the purpose of reconsidering the effective date set out in clause 4 thereof.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before putting the motion, Mr. Speaker, I suppose Your Honour will give the usual consideration to the question of whether it is in order.

Mr. Knowles: If Your Honour has any intention of commenting upon the point of order which has been raised by the Secretary of State, I trust you will hear argument first.

Mr. Speaker: I have already given a very quick consideration to this matter. The motion is in general terms and I see nothing in it which would make it out of order. Therefore under the rules of the house it is my duty to ask if the motion meets with the pleasure of the house.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The way you have put it, Mr. Speaker, is of course the easiest way to get the determination as to the wish of the house. We can do that by a vote, but perhaps it might be said for the record that we in this party also feel very strongly that the effective date of this bill should be reconsidered. We are delighted that the hon. member for Perth has moved an amendment in general terms so that it is in order. The import of the amendment is quite clear, namely that reconsideration of the effective date should result in that date being changed so that these increases in old age assistance, blind allowances and disability allowances will be effective on the same date as was the increase in old age security. The date of that increase was October 1.

We think it is unfortunate that thus far that is not the effective date of these three pieces of legislation. As was pointed out the other day, every time there has been an increase in old age security and in the other related programs the effective date has been the same. It is a shame to spoil the record this time. These three increases should also be retroactive to October 1. We support this amendment very strongly, and we are prepared to show our support by our vote.

Miss LaMarsh: When this matter was raised the other day I pointed out—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I am not quite sure at what stage we are with this amendment, whether Your Honour has put the motion or whether we are speaking to a point of order. However, I should like to say that this party is in favour of making the retroactive date October 1. In fact we, like so many other members, are in favour of increasing old age pensions, assistance to the blind, the disabled and so on.

However, I believe we have to be realistic and practical. We have to realize that the federal government is only paying 50 per cent of the increases that are under consideration in these three fields. If this matter were to be referred back to the committee for reconsideration I suggest to you we would also have to refer the matter to another federal-provincial conference so agreement could be reached for the provinces to pay the other 50 per cent. If I understood correctly, some statements were made in this house earlier that the effective date of December 1 was in some respects a compromise. There were provinces which expressed the desire to make the effective date of this increase April 1 or some time later. I think the interests of the people who are actually going to receive these increases would best be served by passing this measure now when we have agreement from the provinces on the effective date of December 1.

If we referred this matter back to a committee and then parliament did set the effective date as October 1, I submit that the actual increases would be held up for a considerable length of time while another federal-provincial conference was called to ascertain whether the provinces were willing to participate to the extent we all know they do. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, while a lot of high sounding platitudes can be used in referring to these measures, we want to be realistic and practical, and when we have this agreement between the ten provinces and the federal government on this date we would do these people a favour by making the measure law as quickly as possible.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I rise merely for the purpose of pointing out that a change in the effective date of this legislation will not hold up in any way the payment of the increased pensions. This is enabling legislation. Its passage will simply indicate that the federal government is prepared to pay its share of these pension increases as of October 1. Any province which does not want to pay these increases will pay on the old basis and the federal government will pay its share on that basis. There are provinces which will want, as I suggest most of them will, to pay the increases and make them retroactive as of October 1.

I certainly oppose very strongly this suggestion that the passage of this amendment and the proposed change in the effective date will hold up payment of the increases. There would be no need to call a federal-provincial conference. This is purely enabling legislation. It would merely allow the provinces to make the increases retroactive to October 1 if they so chose. It would leave them the alternative of paying the increases when they are prepared to do so.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the remarks of the hon. member who has just resumed his seat.

First, when we passed the legislation concerning old age pensions, all of us received representations from disabled persons, blind persons and crippled people who also asked for an increase in their pensions.

I am of the opinion that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) is absolutely right when he states that if the federal government passes this legislation and makes it retroactive to October 1, it says that it is ready to supply the necessary 50 per cent as suggested to the provinces, the provinces being free afterwards to accept or refuse the offer of the federal government.

Then the Canadian people will not blame the federal government if the pensions are not paid. I do not think that the passage of the amendment will delay in any way the passing of the legislation concerning pensions for the disabled or the blind, as of December 1, as was agreed with the provinces. As far as retroactivity is concerned, it would be accepted by provinces that would so desire as of October 1, exactly at the same time when our older citizens received a $10 increase.

We on this side of the house do not see how a member can be against the amendment of the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith). So we agree entirely to the amendment and ask the federal government to offer to the provinces 50 per cent of the increase in the pensions for the disabled and the blind, at the same time as the pensions granted to our older citizens.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has suggested that passing such an amendment would not have the effect of causing a delay with respect to these payments. Hon. members would have no reason, I suppose, to understand that these payments are made on the basis of individual agreements signed with each province. Thirty six agreements in all will have to be negotiated and signed in order to make these payments. I asked my department a couple of days ago what would be the latest date by which this legislation could be passed so that we would be sure that the recipients of these assistance payments could receive them before the end of this year. This, unlike old age security, is not a matter where we can mail out cheques in time if we pass a certain date. Agreements cannot be negotiated and signed until we have royal assent. All hon. members of the house know there is about a week to go in which this legislation might be passed in the other place and receive royal assent. After that time the agreements would have to be negotiated. It seems hardly likely it would be possible to have the agreements executed in time for December payments to be made.

There is, however, another point, and it is one which I ask all hon. members to consider. It is this. In this parliament there has been a great deal of talk from all sides of the house about the necessity for agreement, discussion and understanding between the federal government and the provincial governments. This matter was, as the house was frequently advised, on the agenda of the last dominion-provincial conference and was discussed during the whole of the day given over to pension matters. While a number of provincial premiers indicated that their own governments were prepared to match the federal government's share should there be increases under these assistance programs, at the conference, attended as it was by the ministers of health and of welfare of the various provinces, not one premier suggested that there was any merit in a retroactive payment.

The administration of this plan lies not with the federal government but with each of the provincial governments. The hon. member for Perth must know, since he had the responsibility for this department, that there are a number of differences in the way the administration is handled by the various provinces. Their advice to us was that the administrative difficulties were very great in making such payments retroactive. These are assistance programs; most of them are based on satisfying means tests. It is not as simple a matter to administer such programs as it is to date back legislation to make flat rate payments retroactive.

All hon. members have agreed that it is a good thing to consult the provinces in advance. Some hon. members in the house and outside the house have directed certain critical remarks to me, suggesting that I have not consulted others in advance in certain instances. But the course of advance consultation was taken here, because it is not only federal money that is committed, and it is late in the fiscal year. We would be imposing a burden on the provinces, and let us not have any sophistry about this. While it is true that provincial governments may decide whether or not to pay their share, let us have reference, as a matter of practical politics, to the fact that no provincial government could resist the pressure to make the increase available if we had in fact enacted this legislation. Each one of the provinces thus would have to assume a burden for which they did not budget in the spring of this year.

No hon. member in the house can have failed to observe what every provincial representative said in this capital only a few weeks ago; that they were all short of money for the programs which they themselves had already brought in. They were here seeking additional revenue for this purpose. What is involved in this amendment is, I suggest, an invitation to the federal government now, after full consultation, after hearing the opinions of the provincial governments, to act in breach of its word; to deliberately put a gun to the head of each provincial government and say to it "You try and resist the pressure from your own people now. We have really forced you into a deficit position because we have decided upon this. Notwithstanding what you said, we know better".

Well, Mr. Speaker, it is sometimes suggested from the opposite side of the house that we on this side have taken the position that we know better. We have tried to show in our actions with respect to these shared-cost programs our desire to consult with the provinces, who are closer to the people in this respect; and we have, in consultation—as I explained to the house earlier—and after considerable discussion as to how difficult it is to make a retroactive payment of this kind, decided to make it payable at the earliest possible time, which is December 1.

If this legislation is not proceeded with now even that may not be possible, and it may very well be that in at least some provinces the passage of this amendment would result in needy individuals being deprived of this $10 increase. It would depend, of course, upon the final decision of the provincial government concerned. Those who would pass such an amendment must bear the responsibility for that. I ask my hon.

friend, who was minister of this department and I am sure has at heart the best interests of these recipients of such allowances, to consider for himself and his colleagues the position which could result. I ask the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and his colleagues to consider what might happen; and I ask, sir, bearing everything in mind, that the vote be against the amendment and we be allowed to make these payments effective December 1, to keep faith with the provinces and to be sure that we get the money out to these people as quickly as possible.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I rise very, very briefly simply to say that the specific references made by the minister are somewhat irrelevant in considering the general terms of the resolution, and we suggest that the question be now put.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, may I ask Your Honour for clarification with respect to the point raised by the last speaker. It has always been my understanding that a motion is not in order if it seeks to do something indirectly which cannot be achieved directly. This motion is couched in general terms. I assume that if the date of October 1 had been written in, it would have been out of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am very sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but at this point the Chair does not know exactly what means the opposition are going to use under the terms of the proposed amendment. The motion is in general form, and to my way of thinking is in order. I have already given a decision on the point, and I do not think the hon. member can contribute much by continuing his line of argument.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, just before you put the question I would like to say a few words on this amendment. I think this is just another example of the Minister of National Health and Welfare trying to put across a piece of legislation as terrifically messed up and jumbled as anything that has ever been before this house. If the whole matter had been conducted in the proper way and the old age security assistance and blind persons and disabled persons allowances had been discussed and studied with the provinces, we would have had this program decided upon all at once and there would have been no discrimination.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Monteith) which was negatived on the following division:

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

1. Departmental administration including the national co-ordinating committee on agricultural services, $1,057,600.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned a week or so ago, I thought that probably many members on the other side of the house were missing me. I realized this when they complained so much that I was away. I am pleased to be here today. I am pleased to present the estimates. I might also suggest that this is a happy time for agriculture.

The main estimates of the Department of Agriculture for the 1963-64 fiscal year total $171,848,900. Of this amount $129,365,900 is to be voted and $42,483,000 is statutory. The statutory items include provision for the payment of carrying costs of temporary wheat reserves and payments in connection with the Prairie Grain Advance Payment Act. I should explain to the committee that the present main estimates were drawn up under the previous government and before responsibility for the Canadian wheat board was placed with the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It is for this reason that funds required under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and the Prairie Grain Advance Payment Act appear in the main estimates of the Department of Agriculture this year.

In addition to the main estimates, two supplementaries have been tabled containing votes for the Department of Agriculture. Supplementary estimates A provide for a total of $372,250, covering various items for which additional funds are required. Supplementary estimates D contain an item for $1 million to provide for the payment of winter storage on western feed grains in eastern position, which I shall refer to later.

In my brief period of office as Minister of Agriculture I have been impressed with the services and the leadership provided by the department to the farming community. It is obvious, of course, that these functions cannot remain static. They must be arranged to meet the changing needs and circumstances of Canadian agriculture, as indeed they have been periodically over the long history of the department.

In the beginning, before the turn of the century, when science was making its first impact on farming, the major preoccupation of the department was in assisting farmers to introduce new cultural and husbandry techniques. This was the period of the inauguration of the experimental farms system and also of the department's veterinary work.

In the earlier part of this century the department's interests expanded gradually into the marketing field, notably in the standardization and grading of a wide range of farm products. The Hon. W. R. Motherwell was particularly responsible for these developments during his period as minister.

The department's entry into the field of rehabilitation and water conservation started in the 1930's under the leadership of the Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner. This was the era which saw the beginning of the prairie farm rehabilitation and maritime marshland rehabilitation administrations. In the 1940's, price supports for farm products became a part of agricultural policy. In the late 1950's, under the then minister, the hon. member for Calgary North, crop insurance was introduced, the Farm Credit Corporation was established to take over and enlarge the previous functions of the farm loan board, and a start was made on a wider rehabilitation program which was subsequently introduced as the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act. Thus step by step over many years the activities of the department and its associated interests have been adjusted to meet and serve the needs of Canadian farmers.

In the present circumstances of Canadian agriculture it is becoming clear we are concerned with two broad groupings. On the one hand we have a viable, progressive farming industry made up basically of efficient farms operating on good agricultural lands. Increasingly this is becoming an industry of strong family farm business enterprises. While this side of farming does have occasional difficulties in its various segments, it is essentially in a sound position and is able to benefit from the wide range of government activities in such fields as research, production and marketing policies and credit arrangements.

On the other hand we must recognize that we do have a segment of our agriculture where underemployment is serious, the standard of living low and the size of the operations marginal. This segment, unfortunately, does not benefit greatly from the type of policies which are helpful to the more fortunate section of the farming community. In the main, the less productive segment of our agriculture is located in our poorer land areas, individual operations are small by present standards, and the people concerned endeavour to augment their farm income by other employment. This circumstance is not peculiar to Canada. It is being experienced in many countries and farm policy generally is being shaped to include measures to alleviate the circumstances of people in this lower income segment of agriculture.

The objective of rehabilitation and development programs must be to enable people to stand on their own feet and become a viable part of the economy. The necessity of policies for this purpose is recognized and strongly supported by the government. As an indication of this I might point out that since May 1, 1963, 112 ARDA projects have been approved involving expenditure commitments of $4,610,000. This compares with a total of 136 projects approved prior to May 1 with expenditure commitments of $2,119,000, or since May 1 we have almost doubled the dollar expenditure in this area. In addition, in six provinces the government of Canada is financing research projects to secure information on which sound programs of rural development can be initiated in problem areas.

Rural development is a particularly challenging aspect of rehabilitation and the one under which, in co-operation with local interests, the circumstances in less productive farming areas are examined and means sought to improve the employment and income opportunities of the local people. This a complex problem and there is no simple or single approach to it. My department will continue to work closely with other departments of government, with the federal-provincial technical and vocational training programs, with the Department of Industry and particularly the area development agency, and with the Atlantic development board and, of course, the provinces to help assure the kind of co-ordinated approach that is surely required.

It is basic to the rehabilitation program, both P.F.R.A. and ARDA, that we develop as quickly as possible a complete inventory of all our lands now devoted to farming to determine the most appropriate use which can be made of them. We refer to this as the Canadian land inventory. Under this the classification of lands according to their suitability for agriculture is now well under way in co-operation with the provinces. Since I assumed office I have signed agreements with eight provinces to carry on this work at a total cost of $126,000. This is in addition to the resources of my department which are being devoted to it.

The Canadian council of resource ministers has agreed, at our suggestion and with federal financing, to sponsor the extension of this inventory to assess the extent to which present farm lands may be more suitable for forestry, recreation and wildlife. In short, we need this particular inventory as a basis on which to build joint federal-provincial policies and programs.

Soil and water conservation is also extremely important. In addition to substantial action programs under P.F.R.A., M.M.R.A. and ARDA we are working with the provinces on research into longer term water conservation problems. These include irrigation areas in Alberta, ground water supplies in Saskatchewan and water sheds in Ontario.

The present master ARDA agreement with the provinces is in effect until 1965. The agreement was deliberately limited to a three year period to enable both levels of government to gain experience on which to develop a sound basis of operations in the years ahead. There will, therefore, have to be extensive consultations over the next year to decide on long term rehabilitation programs. While rehabilitation matters must command our attention, we must be concerned also with strengthening the ability of our farmers to compete with the produce of other countries on export markets and in their home market. This requires continuing attention to efficiency in both production and marketing.

This, if course, is the purpose of research. I am sure that any minister coming to the department would be impressed with the ability and dedication of the scientists who serve agriculture in the department's research activities. We spend considerable money on research. Over 20 per cent of departmental funds are devoted to it. However, the benefits which have flowed to Canadian agriculture have justified those expenditures many times over. In fact, the difficulty is to apportion the available funds to meet the demands for research from different parts of the country and from various segments of the industry.

Since I assumed office, I have visited several of the department's research establishments and have appraised service which they are rendering. I intend to continue this practice as opportunity affords. Some are outstanding. Most are of high calibre. A few need strengthening, both in relation to their programs and in respect of their relations with the farming communities in the areas they serve. The responsible officials are appraising this. I support the requirements for research, believing as I do that research directed to the needs of agriculture is fundamental to our farming industry.

One area where the department's research programs needs to be strengthened is in the province of Quebec. We have decided to establish a research laboratory in association with the faculty of agriculture at Laval University and to develop an enlarged horticultural research station at St. Jean.

I am convinced, too, of the need to strengthen livestock testing programs to ensure that our livestock operations remain fully competitive with those of other countries. This is necessary with beef cattle. It is necessary with hogs. On the matter of livestock, while the department has been able to improve its veterinary staff position to some extent, there is still a basic shortage of veterinarians in Canada, as indeed there is throughout the world. The department employs about 25 per cent of all Canada's veterinarians. To help improve the situation, the government offered to assist to establish a veterinary college in western Canada by contributing 25 per cent of the capital cost to a maximum of $625,000. The western provinces accepted this offer and they have decided the college will be established at the University of Saskatchewan in Saskatoon. In fact, it is well on its way.

As I said previously, this is necessary with beef cattle. It is necessary with hogs, where we are gradually losing the quality advantage we have enjoyed for our pork in the United States market, as that country improves its hog quality. On my visit overseas this summer, I was impressed with the hog programs in some European countries. I had sent a mission of our technical people to Europe to look into these in depth. As a further step to strengthen livestock testing, we have removed the earlier restrictions on r.o.p. testing for dairy cattle.

On the international trade front, exports of Canadian agricultural products for the first nine months of this year amounted to $861 million, compared to $803 million for the same period last year. All but a small part of the increase is due to expanded wheat sales. For this crop year, exports of Canadian wheat and flour are expected to be in excess of 550 million bushels. The largest quantity exported in any past year was about 400 million bushels. This year we will export 150 million bushels more than in any previous year.

A number of events which could prove significant for the future of agricultural trade have been taking place. As my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, reported earlier this year, a meeting of ministers was held under the general agreement on tariffs and trade in Geneva last May. The ministers then decided that a new round of comprehensive trade negotiations would begin in May 1964, that these negotiations should cover all products, and that they would deal with both tariffs and non-tariff barriers to trade. The non-tariff barriers have assumed particular importance in agricultural trade in recent years.

A trade negotiations committee was established to prepare for the negotiations, and during the past summer they set up a committee on agriculture to consider and submit to the trade negotiations committee recommendations in regard to the rules to govern and the method to be employed in the creation of acceptable conditions of access to world markets for agricultural products in furtherance of a significant development and expansion of world trade in such products. This agriculture committee met recently and made an initial study of the many problems that will be involved in the agricultural negotiations.

For particular products for which special trade arrangements might be more appropriate, such as wheat and coarse grains, meats and possibly dairy products, the GATT ministers decided that special groups should be established as negotiating bodies. The cereals and meat groups have begun their work and a pilot group has been established for dairy products to review the trade problems in dairy products and determine whether a special group would be the most effective way of dealing with these products. The cereals group has agreed to move into actual negotiations early in the new year. These negotiations would be expected to take several months and would aim for a new world grains agreement to cover wheat, flour and the principal coarse grains. These could prove to be important and far reaching negotiations and it is likely that access to important markets as well as production and price policies of both importers and exporters would be brought into the framework of the negotiations.

What progress will, in fact, be made in the over-all agricultural negotiations is not yet quite clear. The members of the European economic community have still not reached agreement among themselves on a number of basic policy decisions about their own agricultural arrangements. The United States has stated on a number of occasions that if progress is not made in the negotiations on agriculture, it will be unable to reduce its industrial tariff. Much will depend on the extent of the participation of these two major trading partners. Canada, of course, will be playing her full part, with the interest of our own relatively efficient agriculture industries very much in our minds.

Reverting now to domestic matters, I might say a word about crop insurance.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might interrupt the minister, since he is starting now on a new item? I have an indication that there might be agreement to go on until just a minute or two before six, since there is one private bill, I think the first one, that there would be some disposition to consider briefly. If that were the unanimous wish of the committee, it would give the minister a chance to complete his remarks without interruption.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hays: Reverting now to domestic matters I might say a word about crop insurance. The crop insurance schemes are operated by the provinces. Under the Crop Insurance Act, the federal government supports approved provincial schemes by paying 20 per cent of the premiums and reimbursing the provinces for 50 per cent of their administrative expenses. If the claims in any one year exceed reserves plus $200,000, the federal government will lend a province 75 per cent of that.

I am sure we are all hopeful that crop insurance will expand so that farmers may protect themselves against serious crop failures due to circumstances beyond their control. However, an impediment to its expansion, particularly in some of the western provinces, is the concern of the provinces that a serious, widespread crop failure before adequate reserves had been built up may put a severe strain on their financial resources. I can inform the committee that the government is entering into discussions with the provinces with a view to working out an arrangement under which the federal government would be prepared to reinsure a part of the residual risk which now falls completely on the province.

We are also examining whether the present provisions with respect to farm credit are adequate for the present needs of Canadian agriculture. This is a matter of considerable interest to farm organizations and a brief with respect to it has been submitted to me by the federation of agriculture.

The farm credit corporation, at my request, has been studying the matter and examining programs in existence in other countries. I have asked the corporation to undertake a survey of a cross-section of Canadian farmers to determine their views and requirements.

There is a matter which has some association with farm credit which I would like to mention briefly. It is associated also with the net income position of farmers, which is dependant on two considerations. One is the revenue from the sale of produce; the other is farm operating expenses.

Many measures have been taken by governments, at both the federal and provincial level, to help stabilize and improve farm income. Farm operating costs, however, continue to rise and it is becoming increasingly important that farmers, with government guidance and leadership, look for ways to economize in their operating costs. One field which we are exploring is that of farm machinery. In 1961, depreciation on machinery, interest on investment and repairs represented 20 per cent of total farm expenses. A survey of a sample of grain farms in the prairies in 1962 showed that these items contributed about 50 per cent of the expenses there. An additional consideration is the heavy capital cost of farm machinery and equipment, which often is financed at a high interest rate. This capital cost of machinery is, indeed, one of the most serious stumbling blocks to young men wishing to enter into farming. I doubt if many industries could bear the capital cost for equipment which is used for such a short period each year, as is the case with many items of farm machinery.

Can some means be found to permit farmers to make increasing use of farm machinery on a rental or pooling basis and, to the extent that this is feasible, avoid some of the heavy capitalization and carrying costs which they now incur? This is a matter in which I have had some personal experience. On my farm this year I had my 750 acres of grain combined on a custom basis at a cost of slightly under $4 per acre, or a total of $2,800. I calculate this is about what the interest, depreciation, repairs and operating costs would have cost me in a year on a $9,000 combine. We are exploring this whole matter and looking into operations in other countries. I intend, also, to discuss it with provincial ministers of agriculture at our conference here starting on Monday of next week.

Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of my remarks I referred to a supplementary vote of $1 million to provide for winter storage charges of western feed grains in eastern position. This policy was announced by the government in August of this year and I would like to familiarize the committee briefly with its background and results. The feed grains which livestock and poultry producers need from western Canada during the winter months to supplement local supplies must be brought east before the close of navigation or else bear the much higher cost of rail movement. It is important, therefore, that adequate stocks for the winter be brought in before the close of navigation. There have in the past been two circumstances which have been an impediment to this. Since the buyer assumes the carrying costs when he purchases grain at the lakehead, there has been a tendency to delay winter purchases until near the close of navigation. This has put pressure on both supplies and prices at that time.

This pressure on prices has often resulted in cash prices of coarse grains at time of shipment being above the May option, so that the cost of any carry-over stocks after the opening of navigation in the spring, with accumulated carrying charges, is higher than the current replacement cost. This in turn has tended to restrict the total movement for winter use. To remove these impediments the government introduced on August 22, as part of its feed grain policy, the payment of accumulated storage charges on western feed grains in licensed eastern elevators from October 15 to April 15. It is now apparent that this has resulted in an earlier and larger movement. At November 27 the stocks of western feed grains in eastern position were 62 per cent above last year at the same time.

The government recognizes the importance of feed grains to the livestock industry of eastern Canada and British Columbia. There will probably be a gradual expansion of feed production in the east, which would appear to be in keeping with sound farming practice, but certainly for the foreseeable future the east and British Columbia will require considerable and increasing quantities of western feed grains. There have been proposals from farm organizations that a body be established to administer the feed grain policy and to act in a general liaison capacity between feed grain buyers and the various agencies and interests involved in the supply and movement of feed grains. Those making the proposal do not envisage that the body would act as a buying agency, and it is clear that it could not control prices or dictate priorities for shipping and storage. The government sees merit in having an administrative arm responsible for the feed grain policy and to act in a liaison capacity in feed grain matters, and intends to move in this direction.

The measures introduced by the government this year to place more incentive on the production of cheese and to remove some of the incentive on butter production in the non-manufacturing milk side of the industry appear to be having favourable results. The production of butter in the present dairy year, extending from May 1, 1963, to April 30, 1964, will certainly be no more than consumption, and indeed it now looks quite probable that it will be necessary this winter to draw on some of the reserves which have been accumulating in previous years.

After consulting with friendly countries which are traditionally dependant upon butter exports, the government has decided to take steps to dispose of some of the butterfat surplus which has accumulated over past years. In the course of doing this we shall be careful to avoid disruption of international markets. We are able to move about 5½ million pounds of butter under a special quota established by the United Kingdom, and we are now engaged in selling stocks of butter oil which amount in total to some 80 million pounds. We have firm commitments to date for export sales of over 15 million pounds of butter oil. I think it will be accepted by all Canadians that the disposal of this surplus on export markets, even at a substantial loss, is preferable to sitting on stocks indefinitely and paying annual storage charges of some $4 million to $5 million, particularly since there will be no further accumulations of butter in this dairy year.

The emphasis given to cheese under the dairy support program for the present year has been successful in achieving an increase of about 20 per cent in our cheese production. All present indications are that this increased volume will be handled without serious difficulty. Indeed, I am impressed by the fact that the demand in export markets for top quality mature Canadian cheese exceeds the available supply, and my department is exploring means to direct our dairy assistance program to encourage an increase in the production of this type of cheese.

Mr. Chairman, in all these matters involving agricultural policy it is important that there be close discussion and co-ordination between federal and provincial interests. I met with the provincial ministers of agriculture at their summer conference in Edmonton and we will be meeting again at the federal-provincial agricultural conference here on December 16, 17 and 18. The provincial and federal governments have important roles in the development of policy in the interests of Canadian agriculture. I regard it as important, and I know the view is shared by my provincial colleagues, that there be close liaison between us in the common interest of agriculture.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, do I understand that we are to revert to private members' hour at a few minutes to six o'clock?

The Chairman: Yes; the understanding of the Chair is that we are to go on until a few minutes before six.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I think it would be an understatement if I said that the house was awaiting the minister's statement with some interest. I think you can readily understand that in view of some remarks which the minister made over the last six or seven months, we were awaiting his statement on these estimates with considerable interest. But now that we have had this statement some of us are wondering what kept it so long, because quite frankly I believe as a Canadian there is a future in farming. However, in view of the minister's statement, I sometimes wonder how that is going to come about, unless there is a very serious realization on the part of the government that fundamental problems now before us need fundamental solutions.

First, I am going to mention a few of the things mentioned by the minister, and then suggest where I think the emphasis should go; because in talking about agriculture we should never lose sight of the fact that a big problem existed, that it was tackled a few years ago, and that we want nothing to interfere with the solution to the problem.

The minister mentioned that there are two broad groups in Canada, the farmer who has adjusted to the conditions of agriculture today and who can be labelled as efficient, and then the marginal farmer. I listened intently as the minister spoke to see if there was any sign that he understood not only the depth of this problem but the fundamental nature of the solutions that must be undertaken.

Not so long ago, on October 14, it was my privilege to move a motion of no confidence in the government on the basis that no action was being taken on a short term solution to meet the problems of eastern farmers. In the over-all picture today we have one basic fact to consider, that with the tremendous and rapid growth of technology in agriculture in the western countries, the industrialized countries where agriculture has almost led the way in technological changes, these countries have a capacity to produce far greater than the ability of their domestic populations to consume.

That fact can be looked upon as a threat to the well being of our farmers, or it can be looked upon as a great asset to be used in the over-all process of developing the income of our country and serving the people of the world in general. When I heard this mention of the two groups I thought we would also hear some indication that there was complete understanding of the necessity of what could be done to take this great ability to produce and harness it for the good of the world, and at the same time have policies in effect that could do something to lift up these farmers in the marginal group.

It was a buckshot treatment of the subject. Some of the matters that I think come close to meeting these two problems were mentioned, but there was no evidence I could find that there was a deep understanding of what the main problem is.

On October 14, when I outlined the extent of this problem, I indicated from the statistics provided by the 1961 census that 43 per cent of the farmers in Canada had a gross income, before deduction of expenses, which could only be considered as verging on slum conditions. The minister spoke after me on that occasion and said that these figures were for losers, and this was all a bunch of junk. I do not know how the people on these marginal farms in Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes feel about his saying their problem is just a bunch of junk, but I did think that after the couple of months elapsed since that speech was made, there would be an indication of some action, and less talk. I say this because away back on October 14 we heard all about what had to be done with respect to machinery costs. The minister said this was going to be studied, but today we are going to study it once again.

For the minister's information I can tell him we have been studying this problem of machinery since the 'thirties, and there have been innumerable committees set up and innumerable proposals made, but still we wait for the action. A committee was set up during the administration of the previous government, which was trying to get at the basic troubles and was making good progress. However it was cut off with the change of government, and this matter has not come again before the committee on agriculture and colonization.

Therefore I would like to suggest here, with regard to the action that has to be taken, both on behalf of making use of the tremendous capacity to produce of the efficient farmer and finding him markets at remunerative prices and, second, with regard to getting at these marginal farmers' problems, that I listened in vain for some indication of a deep understanding of what these problems implied and the actions that must be taken. Instead, we had this rambling account, covering the whole broad field, without the evidence that there is something deep behind these various suggestions.

Mr. Chairman, I will give you an example of what I mean. The minister said that up until May 1, there had been 122 projects signed under ARDA. Then he said that since May 1, there had been 136 projects signed and, ipso facto, he was doing a better job than the previous government. Well now, I wanted to hear something of his philosophy of ARDA. Is he going to make ARDA purely a question of signing contracts with provincial governments to do certain things, or does he intend to insist in his department that the philosophy of ARDA, agreed on by the provinces and the federal government, shall be maintained?

This philosophy I am talking about is that ARDA will not degenerate into simply doing things like draining a marsh or building a dam, but will go to the guts of the question, which is to raise the farm income in these marginal areas by looking for income opportunities; and if those income opportunities come in any line whatsoever, then they should be made available to the people on that land.

If studies indicate there is over population in some areas, then what is going to be done with that over population? Here is one of the biggest tasks that can be placed before governments all over the world. It applies to many other countries besides our own; but after 50 or 60 years of this problem's developing, finally, in the year 1961, a government took hold of it. There was no intent or intention of trying to solve the problem in one year, two years, five years or 20 years, but to start the ARDA operation accurately and make it work.

I will give you another example, Mr. Chairman, the philosophy of ARDA is to make every possible use of the land, and if ARDA is narrowed down into just a concept of agreeing with the provinces to build, as I have said, a drainage ditch or a dam, that is not the answer. The answer is to make the best use of that land.

When the minister mentioned the question of the land inventory I hoped he would then mention that this was tied in with the philosophy of ARDA, because this question of land inventory is not new. However he did mention, when he talked about the inventory, that he would look to see if this land could be better used for forestry, recreation or wildlife. This is what I mean by extra opportunities. We must not consider ARDA purely in the traditional sense of agriculture, but rather as a device, as administrative and legislative machinery to make the best use of our land and to increase the income of the people on it.

These various agreements under ARDA will be watched very keenly by those of us in opposition. This is legislation which I think pioneered a concept that was at least equal, if not superior, to legislation in any other country of the world. The provinces support it wholeheartedly. The farm organizations support it wholeheartedly. Where it has been explained to the farmers, in many cases they know it is their only hope. Not only do I plead with the minister to dig into ARDA to try to understand its philosophy and its principles, but I ask that he become the living exponent of it and make sure that it is never narrowed down just to the traditional agriculture, but also exploring of all possible uses to which land can be put.

Still speaking of ARDA, Mr. Chairman, the organization of ARDA is not complete. If we are to carry through to the end the philosophy and principles of ARDA we are going to have to recognize that it must be a completely co-operative venture with the provinces. There can be no more of this business of the federal government deciding every little detail of what the provinces do. This problem is so immense and so close to the people who live in the country that the government closest to the people has the best knowledge of what to do; and when recommendations come up through the ARDA chain—through the group of ministers at the provincial level to the group of ministers at the federal level—the project in question should be looked at to see if it is in conformity with the general understanding of the general ARDA agreement, and there should be no quibbling over dotting the i's and crossing the t's. It is the provinces' responsibility, and if in the opinion of the federal government these things do not fit into the over-all agreement and are at variance with the principles of ARDA, the provinces have to be told very plainly that the federal government will not support that program any longer. But ARDA will die if you try to control every dollar and cent which is spent. Surely if you make an agreement under the master agreement to cover the principle of a project, the provinces are in the best position to decide whether control should be confined in the first place to the local level. All that we should be concerned with is whether it follows the principles of ARDA, and we should make sure that the provinces do not abuse it in any way, go beyond the principles of ARDA or narrow down its concepts. So I say that there is need for a comprehensive look at the requirements of the country, and that is the job of ARDA at the federal level. Let the details of the administration and supervision of these projects rest largely with the provinces. Certainly we can maintain control of our dollars invested in them by a general perusal of those programs; but if we kill off each program by watching every nickel spent and by taking a year to decide whether or not a project should be approved, it is the quickest way to stop any progress under ARDA.

Still following along the line of the concept of redevelopment, the minister mentioned water conservation. He also mentioned irrigation in Alberta and groundwater table surveys in Saskatchewan; and I think he mentioned one more. These are good in themselves, and I have worked hard and long to get that groundwater survey started. But I waited today for one of the most important statements that the minister could have made. Speaking now of western Canada, surely he must be aware that for many years the great need of western Canada has been for a physical and economic survey of the Saskatchewan-Nelson river system. Surely he must be aware that the western Canada reclamation association and the South Saskatchewan river development association have both pleaded with governments to bring forward some form of joint study. Surely he must be aware that the federal government proposed to the three provincial governments concerned that we be all prepared to share the financing.

I know that this matter is one of constant interest, but I want the minister to know what is our feeling on this side of the house about this study. This is not just a study of the amount of water that flows down the river. We can ascertain that just by looking at the records of the northern affairs water resources branch. What we want to know is what are all the forms of water which we can get the use of over the next 30 to 40 years in the west. This has to be a co-operative study because the economic study of the area will lead to solutions which must be reached co-operatively. What I am frightened of is that some single department—I am referring to northern affairs and national resources—will say: "We want to do this study because we have a water resources branch".

If that happens, Mr. Chairman, the first thing the government will run into is the opposition of one or two of the provinces. The machinery for this study is ready now. We have the prairie provinces water board with three members from the provinces on it and two members from the federal government. This board should be authorized to carry out the study. The study should be speeded up, because we have wasted the last two or three years trying to get agreement with one of the provinces, and now that province shows signs of giving its agreement. This study should be both physical and economic. I am looking at all the possibilities of that river basin. I suggest that this prairie provinces water board realize that the P.F.R.A. organization has certain opinions; they realize that the P.F.R.A. has certain machinery to carry out the big aspects of the study. They know what the Saskatchewan research council is doing in this matter. With all this information available I ask them not to duplicate what is being done but to correlate it and fill in the gaps. I suggest strongly that this is something which would indicate that there is a comprehensive approach to redeveloping many of these areas of Canada; and on this particular aspect I am speaking about the prairies.

I am going to skip some of the subjects, Mr. Chairman, because I realize that I have not time to cover them all, and I am turning now to the question of the eastern farmer. Generally speaking, if one measures the health of agriculture by looking at the realized net income per farm over the past 10 or 12 years, this is the best knowledge that we have of finding out where the trouble lies. It is obviously not the final way but it is the best way that we know. I put on the record of the house two months ago some of the income statistics per farm by province and regions so as to indicate in a general sort of way how the income in the prairie provinces in the last five years has risen and is beginning to look fairly good. It is coming up. In Ontario it is just fair because the income of the good farms is balanced off by the low level of income from the marginal farms. In Quebec it can only be described as poor. There is an increase but it is a poor level of increase. In the maritimes it can only be described in one short word, "bad". If we are going to look at the health of agriculture—and the income figure tells us where its health is bad—surely there should be a concentration of interest on the problem of the marginal farmer who has not been able to adjust, at the same time not letting down on our program to help the efficient farmer.

What evidence did we have in the minister's statement that there was a real and serious effort to get at this program? Almost none. What the minister said was that we are voting $1 million in these estimates and the supplementary estimates to pay for storage for grain stored in eastern positions for domestic use. He thought that this would answer all the eastern farm problems; that this would bring down, and has brought down, a sufficient supply to meet the needs. I am not going to repeat what has been happening in the standing committee, Mr. Chairman. I am going to put it in this way. There is a long range problem here. We have set up the machinery, both legislative and administrative, under ARDA to look after the long range program of adjustment. But we have to remember that there are short-range measures we can take, I should like to suggest five or six in number.

One of these is to get at the biggest single cost of the eastern farmer, the cost of feed grain. The minister suggests that by spending $1 million for storage in terminal elevators in Montreal, Quebec, Three Rivers, Halifax and other places this whole problem will be solved. I simply say, as I said on October 14, that this will not solve the problem. A farmer who is feeding stock wants to know what the price will be for the six months he is feeding. He wants to have stability of price. I do not know why the government shies away from this. This whole matter has been discussed in the committee, and we are working there. As you may know, Mr. Chairman, between 15 and 18 Progressive Conservative members, not only from the east but from the west, are there attending the committee every day, attempting to find some solution to this problem. Drawing evidence from witnesses is, sometimes, like pulling deeply rooted teeth, but slowly and inexorably we are reaching the point where we can make suggestions. Even if this government has no suggestions to make, the rank and file of that committee do have suggestions which will meet the needs of eastern agriculture.

There is no secrecy about it. We had a bill ready a year ago. The whole of this year has been wasted. Nothing has been done about the long range task of stabilizing the price of feed to eastern producers, who need to know what the price will be over the whole of the six months period. The eastern farmer is not complaining about the price the western farmer is getting. He is complaining because when he starts to feed he cannot be sure the price will remain stable. In the past the price has gone up during the feeding operation, and as a result eastern farmers have lost their investment. We have been waiting to see whether an announcement would be made on the occasion of these estimates to show that the government had produced a policy to meet the situation. But we are disappointed.

The minister went further and told us there should be some body set up to provide liaison between all the agencies of government and private business concerned with the supply of feed grain. I do not wish to go into detail about the work of the committee but I think the questions which were put to the witnesses and the answers which members of the committee received indicated that this suggestion cannot possibly meet the needs of the eastern feeders. I know this proposal was put forward by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, but the representatives of that body did not look like very happy witnesses after they had been questioned by the members of the committee. Once again, the government is shying away from the main problem.

A government which is not prepared to move to help eastern agriculture in the face of the figures on record should not be sitting on the government side of this house. I speak harshly on this question because I feel deeply about it. The minister must be aware that a study was made last January of conditions in the five eastern provinces. I asked the provincial governments to pick areas in Ontario, Quebec and the three maritime provinces where income was below the average level. We sent in competent people to interview the farmers in these areas in depth. This study is now available to the hon. gentleman. I do not intend to ask for its reproduction, though I sometimes wish that a summary of it might be published. I honestly believe that if the people of Canada were made aware of the situation in 22 areas of eastern Canada, as disclosed in that study, the shame of it would force any government into taking action.

There are many things to be done. I suggested that we have five or six in mind. The first is to stabilize the price of feed grain, and this is going to be done, if the opposition has any say.

To return briefly to the situation of the efficient farmer. The efficient farmer has a tremendous capacity to produce. We have demonstrated that if we go out and search for markets, as we have done in the case of markets for grain, these markets can be found. Today we face a prospect that by the end of 1965 the western farmer producing bread grain can increase his production by 15 or 20 per cent, using all the techniques available to him. I am not the least pessimistic about that. What a contrast with what was said in the Gordon commission report, in 1956, to the effect that we could look forward only to exporting 250 million bushels of wheat a year until 1980. Today, in 1963-64, not only are we going to hit an export figure of 550 million bushels, as has been suggested by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but our exports are likely to exceed 600 million bushels and be closer to 625 million bushels. Russia has now come into the market as a regular buyer requiring definite quantities of wheat. The countries behind the iron curtain are saying they want to trade with us on a permanent basis. China wants to trade with us on a permanent basis. In these circumstances we must look forward to providing for export at least 400 million bushels a year. All this shows what can be done. I wish to turn, now, to eastern agriculture.

Who is carrying the mail for the dairy industry today? All we have heard today is that 15 million pounds of surplus butter have been got rid of. Is this the answer? The minister said the cheese market has been expanded. That is good, but I am thinking about a world which needs proteins and which is willing to pay for them if the stuff is available for sale. I know there are limitations. We have allies in New Zealand and Denmark, friendly democratic countries, and we would not think of putting our products on the world market at a dump figure. If the world price for butter is 32 cents. I am sure no Canadian government would sell it for less. If they did, and if, as a consequence, the world price fell to 27 cents or 28 cents, a serious charge could be laid against the minister that in exporting our surplus he had lowered the world price to the great detriment of our friends in Denmark and New Zealand.

I listened carefully to what the minister said about the desirability of an international agreement covering flour and coarse grains. Discussions in this direction should include dairy products, because this is the field in which agreement is most needed. We are, fortunately, in a sellers' market for grain and we can talk good terms. Today, the need is in the dairy industry. The answer to the difficulties of that industry will not be found in making a modest change in the price of cheese or in the price of skimmed milk powder, though all this helps. I have before me a speech made by Mr. Hannam—the last speech of a man who had given over 20 years of service to the farmers of this country. He says that short term solutions are not enough; there must be long term solutions. This particular speech was delivered in January, 1963. Then he went on to deal with the dairy industry. He said the government was working with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to reach a national dairy policy. Well, I have not heard anything about this idea in the last eight months, although it was conceived more than a year ago. I have not heard of the birth of any policy. Has there been an accident in the meantime? Has there been a stillbirth? I do not know. But I do know this: The dairy farmers of Canada, particularly of Ontario and Quebec, expect some action to be taken by this government, not just a few words about what is happening to the price of butter, and so on. There is to be discussion with the provinces, not only next summer, at the summer conference, but in the conference to be held next week.

I would hope that the minister would concentrate on the problem of a national dairy policy. We had a conference on February 22 last. There was an election on April 8 and the government changed on April 22. I have waited all this time for some sign that the little idea we started with over a year ago resulting in the conference on February 22 last is going to flower into something tangible, because in addition to looking at the short term situation you have to look at the long term.

My time is nearly up. I could discuss crop insurance, net income and a few other things, but I think I have made my point clear.

The Chairman: Order. Has the hon. member the unanimous consent of the committee to proceed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hamilton: I will still shorten my remarks because I do not want to trespass on the committee. The minister likes to say that he is a pretty knowledgeable person with regard to agriculture. When any person points out the terrible conditions that exist in some segments of agriculture, he likes to say that this is junk. But he has come out today with this bits and pieces type of announcement that indicates to me he has no concept whatsoever of a broad, comprehensive policy to get at the fundamental needs of agriculture. Fortunately, even though he does not recognize it, he is operating today on the momentum of the seven point program announced in the house on August 20, 1958, and put into legislative form and administrative practice in the years that followed, which today is moving agriculture to higher and higher plateaus. As long as he does not understand it, fine; but I hope that with all the juggling he is doing he will not rock the boat.

In any farm policy the first concentration must always be on markets, not only for wheat and grain of all types but for dairy products and all products which we can produce in surplus. Second, there must be a constant effort to keep the agricultural stabilization board abreast of changing conditions. We introduced this act. It pioneered many new techniques and did a wonderful job, but I was never satisfied that we could not go further. I think of the potato producers who are without any protection under the act. I think of adjustments that can be made with regard to various products now coming under the board. I often think that the board would be more efficient and could go ahead and pioneer new techniques if it were more independent of the Department of Agriculture. An independent board outside the department could use the facilities of the department to get information, but could try to arrive at policies on the basis of what the members of the board thought were the principles of the act and without worrying too much about individual problems within the department.

Crop insurance is good legislation. We will support the government if they can come to some agreement with the provinces on the question of residual coverage. With regard to farm credit, after the October 14 speech I had expected a big announcement that we were going to get rid of a lot of the small farmers and go all out to help the big farmers, but that has not happened.

I have already discussed ARDA whose basic aim is to get at the problem of the marginal farmer, and I did say by inference that there should be regional policies to help such areas.

I was going to ask a lot of questions about the Liberal program announced in the last election but I do not think it would add anything to the level of the discussion we have had so far. I will end my remarks by simply saying that generally speaking the farmer is very satisfied with the fact that things are moving forward and that the government has not interfered so far with any of the policies we instituted in our years in office. The farmer is somewhat amused by the fact that certain things were promised before the last election and have not come to pass. He has waited to see if some action would be taken with regard to a second minister of agriculture to deal with eastern Canada. The Liberals did not have any policies for the east but they were going to have a second minister. But I think discussion of these things can be left to other occasions. We want to help the minister get his estimates through. We want to give him a chance to put his own estimates together for next year, and we will then examine those estimates most carefully.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

I welcome the minister to the committee on the occasion of his first presentation of the estimates of the department. I am sorry I have had to be very outspoken in my opinions but I feel very keenly about some of these matters and I would not have been doing justice to my thoughts if I had not spoken as I have.

The Chairman: Order. Would the committee consider this an opportune time to proceed to the consideration of private members' business?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: Before you leave the chair, Mr. Chairman, may I draw your attention to the fact that I think this was to hinge upon the return of the sponsor of the bill standing first under private bills. He is not here yet. It also hinges to some extent upon the return of the hon. member for Danforth who is also interested in this bill. I understood the bill was to await their return, and the indication of agreement or otherwise.

Mr. MacNaught: That is substantially correct, and I suggest we carry on.

Mr. Enns: Mr. Chairman, since we are considering a change in the business I am wondering whether we could not go on with consideration of item No. 150 under private bills.

The Chairman: We can consider that when the Speaker is in the chair. At the moment we are still in supply. The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, we have waited for some time, as I am sure agriculture has waited, for a statement from the minister which I presumed would follow along the lines of the speech he made, indicating that there were at least four major problems facing agriculture today. We are surprised and I am sure all those connected with agriculture will be surprised at the statement made by the minister today, a statement prepared by civil servants revealing some of the problems of agriculture. Having read some of the minister's own speeches I am sure the one today is not in the same category.

Some things have been said this afternoon by the former minister of agriculture which I think warrant a reply by the minister, and I will be very interested in that reply because since I have been in the house there has always been a tendency to say to the government of the day: You are just carrying on something we started; you are simply amending it and making it a little better. In this case I would think it would be very difficult to carry that very far because there does not seem to be much change in the situation at all.

In my opinion agriculture is in a very bad condition in much of Canada. It is quite true that the government through various agencies has been very successful in the marketing of one of our major products, wheat. It is quite true that we were very fortunate, and this really has nothing to do with government but is related to climatic conditions and the ability of the farmers to grow wheat, in that we were able to harvest a bumper crop of wheat in western Canada and have been able to sell a large portion of it through various agencies. We have now reached a stage, Mr. Chairman, where we must ask ourselves, if we remain as a prime exporter of wheat, whether or not we are holding sufficient grain in storage to take care of any calamity that may occur, such as has happened to other exporting nations. If such an event occurred, would we be in a position to take care of our needs for a sustained period of several years? I would think with the maintenance of the stock this year, we probably will be in no worse position in this regard than we were in former years.

However, I believe that before long a study has to be initiated of the potential of Canadian agriculture and our role as an exporting nation, in order that we can be sure of maintaining sufficient stock to take care of the fluctuations that are inherent in an agricultural economy. As we all know, the crop depends on the weather and we should maintain good stocks in storage as a protection for the years when crops may not be up to standard. The situation in which Russia finds itself today could easily be repeated in Canada because, to some extent, we are subjected to the same kind of climatic conditions. Over the years, Russia has built up production, and this year they find themselves faced with their terrific shortage because they did not maintain sufficient stock in storage.

The Minister of Agriculture has several thoughts of his own in that October 14 speech. One of these related to the problem of farm machinery. I am not sympathetic to a government—and I am not referring just to this government but to the previous government as well—which has committees available on which there are agricultural people with some knowledge of this subject and who are willing to spend their time discussing these particular subjects, but who are not used by the government. I blame the previous government for not reconstituting the farm machinery committee after it had done so much work in this particular field. In October the Minister of Agriculture said he felt the high cost of farm machinery was one of the major problems and therefore, I expected he would do something about it. I believe the statement he made was considered by other agencies. I refer particularly to the Searle Grain Company which, in one of their publications, mentioned this problem in an article entitled, "Farm Machinery Costs Bearing Upon the Small Farmer." I quote in part from this article:

> It would be interesting to know exactly what the Minister of Agriculture had in mind the other day when, in discussing some of the major problems faced by western farmers, he suggested that "if we are going to have the family farm we must have some sort of rental deal whereby the farmer will be able to rent the machinery he needs when he has good crops."
> We have always been quite interested in this subject. From time to time various Department of Agriculture officials and economists have warned that operational efficiency could be seriously affected through over-capitalization in farm machinery. At the same time they have cautioned against purchasing sizes and types of farm machinery that were uneconomic to the farm operator. Others have gone so far as to say one of the main reasons for the difficulty facing many of the small farm operators in western Canada can be traced to an over-investment in high priced farm machinery—that is the purchase of combines, swathers or other high priced units by operators whose size of farm or scale of operations could not possibly justify such an outlay or provide an opportunity for the full utilization of the equipment purchased.

There is no indication that this matter is going to be discussed in the statement the minister made today. He certainly did not refer to any activity that would indicate the subject was going to be discussed, yet it is one of the major issues faced by the government.

There are other things which the minister mentioned, such as the credit we need to make farm units economical. The Farm Credit Corporation was good, but not good enough, said the minister. Our third big problem is crop disaster—that is, when many farmers had their crops hailed out, dried out, blown out or frozen out. There are farmers who need help, and the sooner we do it the better. The minister asked: "How can we do it when we waste so much time in this house? I have never seen such a waste of time; it is just fantastic." I do not think the minister needs to worry about that. He is the least well known member of this house. He is almost unknown in his own department. I have talked to officials who have never met the minister. He need not worry about the time wasted here. I do not believe this is good enough for agriculture. I think we need to do something about it, and the Canadian public are demanding that we do something about it.

I should like to adjourn this debate and return to this subject at seven o'clock.

Mr. MacNaught: Since there are one or two formalities to be performed before six o'clock, I suggest the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again later this day.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

1. Departmental administration including the national co-ordinating committee on agricultural services, $1,057,600.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, before the recess I was commenting on the fact that the minister in a speech in October had indicated that one of the things needed in this area was assistance to the dairy industry. I think this is a field to which the minister should give his full attention. We thought at one time that the second minister of agriculture would probably work in this field, and we have been surprised that so little has been accomplished in this respect. In the field of eastern agriculture, particularly in the dairy industry, there is room for expansion and government assistance, because the dairy industry has not by any means reached a capacity position and if assistance is given it is quite likely there will be an expansion in almost every part of that industry.

[Mr. Peters.]

Ontario has given consideration to some of the problems. A speech made recently by the minister of agriculture of Ontario indicated their desire to explore the methods of marketing agricultural products, and lamented the fact that some difficulty had been experienced in maintaining the agreements negotiated between producer and distributor in the dairy industry. There has been, and is, government interest in the field of establishing grades in the dairy industry, particularly in the matter of cream, and establishing a price based on quality of the product rather than just on the quantity. We are all aware that some fields, such as the premium export of cheese, the field of unpasteurized cheese for export, can be greatly increased. This is a field for which there is a large market in Europe and it is a market we have not been able to satisfy for some time.

Perhaps some hon. members are not aware of the fact that much of the cheddar cheese produced in Ontario and eastern Canada today is generally of the quick pasteurized type which is difficult to sell in Britain, in particular, because of the difficulty in maintaining a grade. However, cheese that is naturally cured has a ready market and is a field which I think many cheese producers should be encouraged to enter. Additional assistance should be provided which will allow for the storage facilities necessary in competition between the two types of cheese. In producing milk the dairy industry has also run into many problems to which I was very surprised to learn the federal Department of Agriculture had given little consideration.

The problem of surpluses has bugged the dairy industry, particularly the fluid milk industry, over the years; but now the industry has found a new way of making use of milk surpluses, converting them into sterile milk which is manufactured under the trade name of multimilk. This is a development which is quite prevalent in northern Ontario, and I should at once point out that there is nothing wrong with multimilk. Through a process of vacuuming, manufacturers are now able to sterilize products, removing the bacteria from them so that, for example, when meat is packaged it can sit on a store shelf without refrigeration for several weeks without any deterioration in its quality.

Multimilk is a vacuum treated, water removed product which the housewife can leave on a kitchen table or shelf for quite a period of time. She has only to add water to the product, in the ratio of two quarts to one, to turn it into liquid milk. However, the complaint of the dairy industry, particularly the fluid milk industry, is that this milk which is coming on to the market as a fluid milk is not classified by the department as a fluid milk but as a processed product; yet it is in competition with fluid milk.

This is further complicated by the fact that the milk which goes into its manufacture is bought at surplus prices. Normally fluid milk in Ontario is marketed at over $5 a cwt. while surplus milk fetches only $2.85 a cwt. Yet when the surplus milk is processed it has a premium price over fluid milk, but the farmers only get the surplus milk price for it.

There is another side to this problem. One has only to walk into a grocery store and look at the dairy counter to find pounds and pounds of what appears to be butter, but on examination it will be seen to be margarine. This product is now coloured and has the appearance of prints of butter. However the farmer gets very little protection against this unfair type of competition. A government that is interested in helping the farmers will give consideration to these matters.

The minister did bring out some good points, and in this connection I would like to point out that many Liberal candidates in the last election talked about farm credit and the extension of credit to help make good, economic, farm units. There is nothing more important to the farmer than the ability to establish good credit, and to get the money necessary to make his farm an economic unit. However the Liberal candidates failed to point out to the farmers that credit in itself is not necessarily a good thing.

Because I have a job and can go down to a finance company and borrow $2,000 or $3,000 does not necessarily mean it is a good thing for me to borrow it, unless I have some purpose for its use, some project that will bring me a return, that will enable me to pay off the loan and still be able to maintain my family or my operating unit on an economical basis. In fact, the department itself in its publications stresses this fact, and in the Farm Credit Corporation publication, "Credit for Profit" it says:

> "Credit for profit" is a short way of saying that the borrowed dollars should be used to provide an increased income which will pay all operating and maintenance costs, give the farmer and his family a good living, and provide for the orderly repayment of the required credit.

This is often forgotten. In my constituency the Liberal candidate went around telling the farmers, "You have not been able to get credit under the Conservative government. We will give you your loans; just make the application." If this had happened it would have put half the farmers in Timiskaming out of business. A farm credit loan, based on a mortgage on the land, is only an acceptable credit if the farmer can prove to the person making the loan that there is a chance to pay it back, and at the same time maintain his farm as an economic unit.

This matter of credit has been considered by the house several times in recent years, and the results have been fairly satisfactory. There is no question but that when we discuss this there will be complaints and some talk about the fact that all the lawyers handling the mortgages change as soon as the government changes. Patronage applies in the legal section as well as in others, but this is not my point. I believe that agriculture is an industry that is as valuable to Canada today as it has ever been. It is an industry that needs assistance because it is highly automated. The farmer must be given assistance to help him package and deliver his products to the consumer, whether the product be grain, free of glass, or any other commodity.

The farmers of the nation deserve better for their contribution to it. We have heard there is going to be a cabinet shuffle. Certainly we need it in this portfolio, because I do not think the minister is interested in his department. I do not think he is interested in the things that go on in the department. In all honesty he should say whether he is going to be in Ottawa and will do something in the department, or not. There are Liberal members of the agriculture committee who are trying to do something on behalf of farmers, and I am sure the farm organizations will want some change made in the department. I would go further, Mr. Chairman, and say that the assistant minister, who is to be designated as the eastern representative of agriculture, has done even less than the minister. Nobody has been filling this portfolio, and anyone who wanted it could step into it.

For several weeks on the agriculture committee I have sat with many young Liberals who are interested in agriculture. It is not for us to question whether the voters were right in deciding they would only send one Liberal from the prairies to parliament, but there are young progressive farm representatives in the Liberal party who have made a great contribution to the agriculture committee. I see two of them now sitting behind the minister, both the chairman and vice chairman of the agriculture committee, and I think they have an honest desire to see that something is done in agriculture.

I strongly recommend that the Prime Minister give consideration to some of these young people. If they did not want to, they would not have sat on the agriculture committee, and I would point out that that committee had a great time getting the minister to attend it for one afternoon.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest he resign. Agriculture deserves a better deal than it is getting. The minister on numerous occasions has said that this place is a waste of time, that he has never seen such a fantastic waste of time. If he thinks this, then he has an obligation to the Prime Minister and his other colleagues in the cabinet to do something about it.

Yesterday I sat for an hour and a half listening to the Canadian Labour Congress present its brief to the government. It was generally agreed by everybody there that they were quite happy with the reception they received from the government. I kept thinking of the situation that prevailed a year or two ago, when the former prime minister exercised some influence in this field, and that was not the feeling then. I think the situation has changed from the position where labour was not the white-haired boy to the position where it is now that. On the other hand farmers are not any longer sure they are getting a hearing from the government and have lost faith in the Minister of Agriculture's ability to help them. They deserve better than this and I think the minister, who has had some success in other fields, would be fair to his colleagues to take this into consideration.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the members of this group we welcome this occasion, which is the first time the minister has made a major speech to outline a broad, general review of some of the agricultural policies his government has undertaken since it took office. In the few minutes available to me this evening I want to make a general statement of policy on behalf of my party and to indicate to the minister and the government some of the things we support and some of the things to which, at least up to this point, we think they have not paid sufficient attention.

Before I go to that I should like the minister and all hon. members of this committee to know that we in this group consider agriculture still to be the most important industry in Canada. For that matter it is still the most important industry in the world. Whether the meaning can be given to the remark of the minister during some of the debates which have taken place in this house about its being a waste of time, I do not know. If that is what he means, we violently disagree with him. I should like him to know that the success or failure of an organization as large and of such magnitude as that of the European economic community is in jeopardy today because not enough time has been spent over agreement on agricultural policies. I heard on the radio news broadcast yesterday that the French delegate to negotiations now under way in Brussels walked out of the discussions and went back to his government for further instructions. The reason is because President de Gaulle of France is demanding that agricultural policy within this market be determined now; he is not willing to wait any longer. In fact, he has indicated that unless this agricultural policy is determined very soon he may even withdraw France from the whole agreement within the European economic community.

I should like also to point out to the minister and the government that there is an article in the Christian Science Monitor indicating that the whole "Kennedy round" of negotiations respecting GATT and the E.E.C. is going to fail unless a satisfactory solution is found to our agricultural policies. In other words, agriculture to Europe, particularly to France and even to the United States, is so important that all their other agreements respecting trade will break down unless they can come to some mutually satisfactory arrangement over agriculture. I just want to make it abundantly clear that even the most highly industrialized nations of the world, such as the United States, France, and so on, regard agricultural policy as paramount, with the exception perhaps of defence. The previous prime minister had this to say, and I am not sure whether he was in the house at the time because my source does not indicate that. He said:

> Trade has become a major weapon in the communist offensive. They do not care about profits. Their profits will be measured by the numbers of souls who trade their survival as free men for the temporary material advantage of the present.

So I suggest that even the past prime minister has indicated that agriculture and trade policies are of major importance.

On one or two occasions the Minister of Agriculture has referred to our surplus foodstuffs as being something of a problem. I think it would be well for him to take the attitude that a surplus of food is not a curse btu is in fact a blessing. It is far better that we have surpluses than shortages. We need only look to the countries behind the iron curtain, for example, who have been unable to develop production techniques that can fill the food requirements of their own people. I think the minister will agree that their problems are far greater than ours with our surplus food production.

I also suggest to the government that Canada can play an important role internationally as a major food supplier. We have said this on a number of occasions, and I suppose some hon. members are getting a little tired of hearing us say that Canada's ability to produce food could be a major item in our external policy, our foreign aid policy and our peacekeeping policy.

There is one other aspect of trade and agriculture which I think is worthy of mention. I have before me some newspaper articles. I will not read them all, but I have one from Washington which indicates the amount of dollars Canada is spending on agricultural products from the United States. A figure amounting to something like $517 million annually is spent in the United States on agricultural products which are imported into Canada. Yet from time to time we have a serious balance of payments problem with the United States. In fact, the problem is chronic; it occurs each year. We imported $80 million worth of corn from the United States last year. At the same time we produced in Canada, not necessarily at points where it was most needed, grain, feed grains particularly, which could be substituted for a lot of these items we are getting from the United States.

There is one other matter we should take note of during discussion of agricultural estimates—although the Canadian wheat board, which deals with this matter, has been transferred to the department under the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who answers to parliament for their activities—and that is the matter of selling large quantities of grain on the international market, particularly to Russia and China. I think the sales over the last few months have proven for all time that the ex-minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, has not any exclusive claim to being a wheat salesman. When conditions are right and there is the demand, the Canadian wheat board can and does sell large quantities of wheat whether or not the hon. member for Qu'Appelle happens to be occupying the seat of the minister of agriculture. It should be clearly pointed out too that the claim of the Conservative party that they initiated this kind of program falls by the wayside. If hon. members would take a quick glance at history they would see that one of the first deals made on a credit basis was the deal with Poland when wheat was sold under a long term credit agreement. These sales to Russia, and the additional sales to China since that government was turned out of office, simply prove to me—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Olson: No. The hon. member will have ample opportunity to make his own contribution. My time is limited to 30 minutes.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I should like to hear about the position of the hon. member's own party with regard to these sales to communist countries.

Mr. Olson: There is one thing which can be said as far as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and his party are concerned.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Let us hear about your party.

Mr. Olson: It is abundantly clear that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is a champion of publicity and public relations. For taking credit to himself for whatever was done, he is unexcelled. Never before in our history has any minister spent so much out of public funds in order to advertise a political party. I think this is something of which the Canadian people should be aware. For example, we know now, though we did not know it then, that the former minister of agriculture got himself flown over to Hong Kong at public expense to make an announcement that a deal had been made, three days after the contract had been signed. I am sure this was good for the Conservative party, and the very fact that it was to the benefit of that party seems to impose an obligation to pay for that flight. But this trip was paid for out of public funds. Almost every day, for months on end, we could look into our mail boxes and see some press release or pamphlet or other publication from the Department of Agriculture. So I give the hon. member full credit for all this publicity. Whether it was good for Canada or not, is questionable. Certainly, it was good for the Conservative party.

I agree with the remarks the minister made concerning farm credit. I think all parties in this house, possibly all members of this committee who have interested themselves in agriculture, will agree that the supply of credit to maintain the family farm, for which we all have respect, is one of the most vexing problems we face in this country today. I agree, also, that the cost of farm machinery, its maintenance, depreciation and so on, constitutes one of the major difficulties to which we must give attention. I believe the minister said that in 1962 the cost of machinery in Canada generally accounted for about 20 per cent of the total operating costs. I believe he went on to say that in one area of western Canada they amounted to 50 per cent of all operating costs. I know from personal experience that this is so. The price of farm machinery has increased tremendously. I cannot blame the manufacturers for putting up their prices. I know that the farmers—and I am one of them—keep demanding bigger and more spectacular equipment. I happen to know that my father, farming in 1940, was able, for example, to cultivate his land with one tractor of 45/50 horsepower. Now it seems we need three of them to work the same 2,500 acres. Most of the time, these machines are doing nothing. In former days, it seemed we had men to run this one 45 horsepower tractor 24 hours a day.

I think there is a great deal to be said in favour of the establishment of machinery pools, or co-operatives, or similar arrangements so that farm machinery could be used for many more hours than it is being used today. I say this from personal experience, because my brothers and I are able to make use of the same equipment on each of our farms. In other words, we do not each buy the same item. Sometimes this equipment is only in use for three or four weeks of the entire year. Possibly it is in use for only two weeks. This sharing arrangement has certainly reduced our costs substantially, since depreciation takes effect only on one unit instead of on three. There is a great deal which could be done in this direction.

I should like to refer, now, to this report put out by the Searle Grain Company Limited, to which the hon. member for Timiskaming referred. This publication discusses the advisability of forming machinery pools in order to cut down operating costs. I notice the hon. member did not quote from the end of the article where it says:

> Whether or not it might be possible for groups of farmers in western Canada to form a local association in this way we cannot say.

Then, a little further on, the report says:

> We agree that if something were to develop along the lines suggested by the minister, it might be very desirable.

The article goes on to say that some leadership in this field would have to be given either by the federal or the provincial departments of agriculture. I really fail to see what the departments of agriculture, either provincial or federal, can do except to urge farmers to take part in such arrangements. If such a scheme is to be effective, the farmers themselves must initiate it in co-operation with their neighbours. I can visualize serious problems arising if two or three farmers owned one combine capable of harvesting the crops of two or three farms. Weather conditions being as uncertain as they are, there would likely be a dispute as to who was to get it first, and if one farmer got in his crop while another was hailed out, the government would be in a precarious position in deciding what was to be done about the lost harvest supposing it was connected, as a sponsor, for example, with the sharing agreement. For this reason I think any such scheme should be worked out among the farmers themselves.

I was pleased to see that in the last wheat deal with the Soviet union provision was made for a certain portion of that wheat to be supplied in the form of flour. This is the first time in several years that the flour milling industry of this country has had a break. We heard the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who was minister of agriculture at that time, say that provision had been made for at least some portion of the wheat sold to China to be delivered in the form of flour, or the finished product. But to my knowledge there was not one single bushel of those 112 million bushels delivered in the form of flour. I should like to point out that between 1956 and 1962 there has been a steady decline in the production of the flour mills in Canada. In 1956, the amount of flour produced here was 4,071,437 cwt. By 1962 this amount had dropped to 2,202,828 cwt. In fact, it has been cut almost in half despite the fact that in 1962 there was more flour traded on international markets than at any time in history. Canada has not lost only in absolute terms; we have lost even more in terms of our relative share of the world market. The Department of Trade and Commerce, the Canadian wheat board or the Department of Agriculture, whichever was responsible, should be congratulated for making sure, in the course of these negotiations, that the deal with Russia provided for the inclusion of a reasonable amount of flour. As a matter of fact, the total unused capacity of the flour milling industry of Canada will be entirely taken up by the 29.1 million bushels of flour content provided for in the agreement. So we could not have sold them any more flour even if they had wanted more. I want to acknowledge this and to thank whoever is responsible, because this is the first break that the flour milling industry has had and they are now assured of being able to run at full capacity until July 31 of next year. Sometimes there is a tendency toward a chain reaction in regard to these things. I have been in touch with some of the managers of the mills, whom I know since the Russian deal, and I have learned that some of their regular customers have been sending in more orders than they were a year ago. This is all well and good for the next ten months. We acknowledge it is a good thing but we are a little apprehensive about what is going to happen after that.

We think it is the responsibility of the government to give priority to the setting up of deals for flour and so on in the international field, so that we will have regular customers on a continuing basis. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle suggested that the dealings with China and the countries behind the bamboo and iron curtains are probably going to be on a permanent basis. I am really not prepared to accept at the moment that they will be buying flour or wheat from us when their own production meets their demands, as it apparently did prior to 1960.

I want to turn now for a moment to ARDA. The act was brought in several years ago and a lot of publicity was given to it. We were told by the Progressive Conservative members, who were running round the country at that time, that the act was all-embracing, that it was very broad and that it was going to solve all the problems of agriculture. It was broad, all right, but it was so vague in its terms that nobody knew anything about what was intended—that is specifically what projects would be acceptable. As a matter of fact, I do not believe that the provincial and local ARDA committees yet have a clear concept of what specific projects the federal government has in mind.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It is because the provincial government of Alberta will not co-operate.

Mr. Olson: We have all these people, like the former minister of agriculture, pointing out all the problems. He has analysed the problems. But then he winds up by saying the government should do something about them. If there is anything that leaves me cold it is a long discourse about problems, and then no suggestions as to what should or can be done about them. This is exactly what took place before the ARDA bill was introduced. The Conservative members of that day pointed out all the things that were wrong with agriculture and all the problems of the farmers of eastern and western Canada. Then the government of that day introduced a bill that said, in effect: "We are in favour of doing everything that is good for the farmers," —and that is about all.

I do not believe we need any further studies on some of these matters. It has even been suggested that we need to have another study of the South Saskatchewan river basin. I happen to know there is a royal commission report in the hands of the government now and I have a couple of copies in my office. I refer to the Hogg commission which studied this matter.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): In what year?

Mr. Olson: In my view what we need for the farmers of this country is some action and not more studies. As far as specific projects are concerned, one hon. member mumbled something which I understood to be: What is your solution; what is your suggestion? I have many suggestions. There is the matter of community pastures, a project that should get under way right now. There is the matter of upper level storage for the drainage basins. I do not know whether the hon. member for Macleod is here tonight, but he has talked about all these things year in and year out. In 1957 they were going to do them then. In 1962 they were going to do them then. But what they are saying now is that they will do them as soon as they get back into office.

The former minister of agriculture pointed out all the problems. He had the problem of the eastern grain feeders completely analysed but now he criticizes the present government because they have not done anything in the last six or seven months although he had the problem completely analysed, and had the solution available.

Mr. Fane: What about crop insurance in Alberta? What does your Social Credit government think about that?

Mr. Olson: There are a lot of mumblings over here, but these members will have plenty of time to talk and say what they want to say before 10.30 tonight. P.F.A.A. has been in effect in western Canada for the last 20 years, and we want it to be abundantly clear that we believe it has been a truly beneficial program for that area. It has been in effect for more than 20 years and I have heard some rumours that the present Minister of Agriculture is disposed to cut the program down a little. If it is true that he is thinking along these lines I suggest that he take a long, hard look at the large area of western Canada that has received a great deal of benefit, with a resulting stabilization of the agricultural economy in that area. In some areas it has applied in cases of drought, but we have also seen very beneficial results as a result of this program in cases of freezing, hail, flooding, early snow and so on. The farmers of western Canada are paying large premiums toward this program. In fact, I think they pay more than 50 per cent of the cost with the exception of the farmers of Saskatchewan. Therefore I suggest to the minister that if he has any idea of cutting down on the P.F.A.A. program he should reconsider the matter.

So far as crop insurance is concerned, we are pleased to hear that the government is now prepared to move into insuring some of the residual risks. I have a very few minutes left, Mr. Chairman, and I am afraid I would not have much success if I were to ask for additional time, so I had better get on with my remarks.

With regard to the matter of an eastern feed grain purchasing board, as it has been called, we agree partially with what the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has said, and I understood from the minister that the government intends to adopt this program. As I said, we agree partially but we do not believe it goes far enough. The submission of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture requests that such a board be set up only in an advisory capacity. However, because of the problems that have been placed before the committee by members from these areas of Canada, we believe that we should have an eastern feed grain purchasing board with credit available to it so that it can go to western Canada and buy grain from the Canadian wheat board or in Ontario, or in any event in whatever place it can make the best deal at the most seasonable time of the year.

We are pleased that the government has appropriated $1 million to pay for the storage charges for this winter. We realize this has been helpful in moving a far larger volume of grain into position in eastern Canada. However, in order to solve the problem we think it would be well to have a separate entity that would be charged with the responsibility of buying feed grain at the best possible price. We believe it should be given credit for that purpose, so that it could then move large quantities of grain into position when the seaway is opened, and in fact do for the eastern feeders exactly what the Canadian wheat board is doing for the western producers. We do not believe it should be a branch of the Canadian wheat board, because there would be a conflict of interest. Such a board should be set up, provided with credit and given all the necessary powers it needs to do the job effectively. In our view it should deal with the Canadian wheat board as much as possible so that responsibility would fall on both bodies to see that the job was done.

In closing I want to say a few words about the matter of scrapie. There is a bit of apprehension amongst sheep breeders across the country as to this matter. I did revise my question on the order paper and I would urge the minister and his department to give me a complete and comprehensive answer. I revised the wording of question No. 1,730 so that we could look into this matter.

There is one other point I should like to mention, Mr. Chairman. We do not believe the small amount the federal government is contributing to the veterinary college in western Canada is in keeping with the responsibility the federal government has. The minister admitted the federal Department of Agriculture employs about 25 per cent of these veterinarians in Canada. Apparently, on this basis, they are willing to pay 25 per cent of the capital cost of this college. As a matter of fact, the $625,000 does not even meet the 25 per cent share. However, there are also operating costs and they are going to be substantial over a number of years. We think the federal government, through the health of animals branch, has a responsibility to pay some of the operating costs for training these veterinarians.

[Mr. Olson.]

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I just want to say we feel the minister should change his attitude concerning a number of things. These debates in this house are not a waste of time. He should move rapidly to set up an eastern feed grain purchasing board. If he will do a number of these things that we suggest, we wish him well.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, let me first of all congratulate the Minister of Agriculture for his report. I think this report will give us an opportunity to discuss our problems—I was going to say to leave the western provinces for the eastern provinces.

Since this debate started, we have been hearing about the west and its wheat, for which I hasten to say I am very happy for the western farmers. But when you think that Quebec and Ontario are the provinces where agriculture is the major industry in Canada, and that when farming problems are raised in this house, seven eighths of the discussion are concerned with the western provinces, it seems to me that either the western members defend their cause with too much zeal or the eastern members do not show enough concern to safeguard the interests of their provinces in that regard. In fact, when looking over the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, I note that more than 50 per cent of that budget is allocated to western provinces:

Production and marketing branch—

Freight assistance on western feed grains, $18,500,000.

Board of grain commissioners—

Canadian government elevators, $1,529,000;
Salaries of the commissioners, $42,000;
Administration, $173,000;
Inspection and weighing of grain and related services, $4,656,000;

Under the heading "Land rehabilitation, irrigation and water storage projects", the western provinces are much more favoured than the eastern provinces. The province of Quebec particularly does not get a single dollar for its irrigation projects, while western provinces receive over $33 million for drainage.

Under the heading of "Special estimates", there is an amount of $785,000 concerning the Prairie Farm Assistance Act administration and for the payments in respect of projects and programs under the Agriculture Rehabilitation and Development Act, the western provinces receive $7 million. For administration, operation and maintenance, $157,000. For payments in connection with the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, $900,000, etc.

Besides that, we find payment of carrying costs of temporary wheat reserves, $41,524.

That goes to show that the western provinces are well treated in parliament.

When I look at those figures, I am tempted to think of the situation in Canada 50 years ago. At that time, the provinces of Quebec and Ontario were considered as the granary of Canada, while the western provinces were thought of as being poor lands, in need of development. Today, we spend all our savings for these provinces, which by the way, deserve it. We levy taxes on our people so as to develop these marvelous prairies of ours. I invite today our western fellow Canadians to show themselves duly grateful.

Before approving these estimates, our group would like to point out to the government three items which interest us most of all: the Farm Credit Corporation—comprising ARDA—the loans to farmers, the department of agriculture for the east and seed grains.

I suppose we cannot find fault with the amount of money the present government has made available to all Canadian farmers. After increasing the amounts paid during the past years, the present government certainly registered a point in favour of the Canadian farmers, and I avail myself of this opportunity to congratulate the minister for the implementation of ARDA, which has been in existence for several years but which has just started to be used in the province of Quebec.

The aim of ARDA, as the minister indicated, is to help the underdeveloped areas. I feel this act is misunderstood in Quebec. The main problem is draining, and for a year every effort has been made to deal more particularly with tree planting. There is a field in which I was in a position last summer to witness the government activity, and it is the blueberry fields. It is very well to look after the blueberry fields, but I believe draining has priority on tree planting, because draining accounts for 50 per cent in my area. There is only 50 per cent of the land which is properly drained.

A better draining of our lands should be put into effect in order to return those lands to farming. And I believe we shall pursue the aim of ARDA only in approaching with greater zeal that vital point, the draining of our soil.

Here I wish to make my meaning perfectly plain by saying that the prime work should first be done in Quebec, and that is why we are trying, with the provincial government's influence, to get what western people have received and to have our lands drained, so that our farmers can return them to farming. However, the government does not help farmers enough. In fact, when we look at the federal budget, we are inclined to feel sorry for the minister. Yet, when we realize that the most important department is the Department of Agriculture and that only 2.7 per cent of the total estimates is intended for agriculture, we feel that there is some unbalance here which is hard to understand, and I want to remind the minister of that fact, because it is far too little for Quebec.

But there is another point which remains difficult to understand, Mr. Chairman, and that is the way those amounts are distributed among the provinces.

Here, I do not know whether I should address myself to the government or simply to the Department of Agriculture or to the minister himself, who cannot seem to find the time to go and see at least once what is going on in Quebec.

I would advise him at least to read the reports of the Farm Credit Corporation. Then, by merely reading the data contained therein, he might realize that something is not running true in my province.

The other day I heard the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) boast about the fact that, in 1962, the Conservative government had granted 804 loans, as against 109 in 1961.

When I look at the amount of loans granted in the other provinces, compared to the urgent and ever-increasing needs of the province of Quebec, I come to the conclusion that neither of the old line party governments can pride itself in having given the lion's share to Quebec's agriculture.

And to think that the province of Quebec is now in the worst state of stagnation as far as agriculture is concerned and that it is given, with regard to its population, the least assistance.

I can see that in the past, when exclusive legislation had to be enacted for the western provinces, the governments did not hesitate and passed it in order to benefit these provinces. They did right. Now it is the turn of the province of Quebec to need specific legislation in order to revive its agriculture. Is she going to be denied that legislation any longer?

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the minister make a special study about federal loans granted to the province of Quebec.

At first it might be enough for the minister to improve the staff of the Farm Credit Corporation in the province of Quebec, for I am afraid that the problem lies with the staff which is satisfied to administer rigidly the present legislation because it lacks the ability needed to interpret this legislation, which is too broad, and adapt it to each region, each farmer.

As a matter of fact, I have been told many times by loan inspectors from the Farm Credit Corporation that the act was not precise enough, clear enough or not suited to our regions.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that it would be worth it to have an investigation made in the field by the department in order to find out what is wrong with the legislation and the considerable harm all this is doing to our farmers in need.

I ask the minister to carry out a serious investigation to see what is going wrong in the province of Quebec.

I shall give you an example of the situation in my own area. Our farmers have an urgent need of at least 2,000 federal loans and we succeeded in obtaining only about a hundred this year. This means that 1,900 farmers will not get the money they need to resume work on their farms or to put back under cultivation 40 per cent of our farms which have been waiting only for the necessary manpower for the last 10 or 15 years.

Mr. Chairman, our farms cannot wait any longer, our farmers are forced to leave their farms for the cities. Is it because the legislation is not suited to eastern Canada or is it because the people responsible for its implementation are not able to interpret it? I leave it to you to judge.

It may also be that serious research on the part of the minister would help him to realize the need for an eastern department. This famous department has been promised us for a long time. First, in the speech from the throne, then on the order paper, where it stayed for a while third on the list, to drop almost into oblivion these last months since it is now eleventh on the list.

Yet, we had always cherished the hope that we would have it by 1963; but our hopes were dashed a few days ago when the government announced that we would get it in 1964.

We are somewhat puzzled by all that and we wonder whether this government is responsible. If it were, it would indeed have introduced the various pieces of legislation in order of importance; and since in my opinion agriculture is of prime importance all over Canada, all other matters must give precedence to it. However, it is not at all what we have seen.

Under the existing system, I said and I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that only a department of agriculture for eastern Canada will make it possible to have a well balanced and economical agriculture from coast to coast. We know that from experience. When we had the department of agriculture in eastern Canada, the western provinces were on the verge of bankruptcy. But now it is in western Canada, and the eastern provinces have a precarious existence. So the only solution is to set up a department of agriculture for the east. And the sooner the better. Pressure is certainly not lacking. I have here an article which appeared in the December 2 issue of Le Droit under the following title:

Appointment requested of a second minister of agriculture for eastern Canada.

The article reads as follows:

The "Meuniers du Quebec Inc." requested the federal government, Friday evening, to carry out without delay its promise to appoint a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada who would enjoy the same rights and privileges of the present Minister of Agriculture.

And further on:

Ottawa was finally urged not to apply next April a first 4 per cent portion of the Gordon tax on building materials and equipment in order to further the growth of farm production, etc.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that we are now facing facts. Must we wait a long time yet? I think the limit is reached, and if the present Minister of Agriculture does not deal very seriously with this problem and if the government does not organize the business of the house so that this legislation will be presented soon, I am of the opinion that farming, in the province of Quebec, is a long way from reaching new heights.

But outside of the two problems I just mentioned, there is a third one the solution of which can wait no longer, and it is a problem which can be solved by the present Minister of Agriculture.

On October 18, 1963, representatives of the catholic farmers' union and of the federated co-operative of the province of Quebec met our group to set forth their grievances, so as to enable us to relay their representations to this house.

We have already spent many hours listening to the evidence presented by representatives of various organizations concerning feed grains. There is an unaccountable price spread between producers and consumers and it is our duty to find out the truth about the department and so as to bridge the gap between western and eastern farmers.

Several boards have appeared before the committee on agriculture in the past few days. There is no point in enumerating all of them but I think their representatives would like us to find, concerning the problem of feed grains, a solution which would be satisfactory to everyone.

It is urgent for parliament to give serious consideration to that problem which is several years old but is getting worse all the time and gives rise to willful disagreement.

In fact, we can delay no longer the solution of a problem which is threatening the whole agricultural economy.

In the fine brief they submitted, the U.C.C. and the co-operative federee stress the two major problems we must settle to balance the economy of the eastern and western parts of our country.

Right from the start, it strikes you that neither the west nor the east and even less the province of Quebec are to blame for this extraordinary situation which spoils the relations between western Canada and the eastern provinces.

On the contrary, if you examine the situation more closely, you will be pleased to notice that western farmers like their eastern counterparts strive for the same ideal—that of achieving a better standard of living for each group and that they sincerely wish to get along together. However, a wall just like the Berlin wall has gone up, and it prevents the peace-makers from being heard.

If the good will of farmers is not lacking, why can a solution not be found? Where does the situation referred to exist? It is precisely this vital question that I intend to answer.

In this case, Mr. Chairman, I suspect that a dictatorship is being exerted by an organization enjoying special favours from governments, so as to wield its powers without fear of being ousted.

The prairie provinces are recognized as the best grain producers. The climate, the soil and the geographic location are so many factors which have made the prairie provinces the granary of Canada, enabling them to exert their influence even on world markets. On the other hand, eastern provinces are recognized for the variety of their agricultural production which goes from maple syrup to market-gardening crops and cattle.

It would merely be logical that these two regions, the east as well as the west, be given the necessary scope, and I would even say enjoy the necessary assistance, from the governments to launch into their own production.

We all know that to be in a position to produce, the farmer needs a minimum cost price. Consequently, the catholic farmers' union stresses in its brief that the eastern farmer should be in a position to earn his living with his products

We do not wish the same mistakes to be repeated as when western farmers were being paid to refrain from producing wheat or again not long ago, when the Minister of Agriculture abolished the 25 cents premium per hundred pounds of milk and went so far as to ask the Quebec milk producers to reduce their production, at a time when so many Quebec families do not have enough milk, and that is particularly true in our schools.

The purpose of our inquiry today is therefore to find who is responsible for this inconceivable inconsistency shown by a government which dares to claim it is still democratic.

On one side, we have people who want one thing only: to produce wheat, and on the other side, we have people who need wheat and cannot buy it because its price is exorbitant.

Where is the key to this mystery?

Mr. Chairman, we are fighting the very cancer of our farm economy, and it is that same cancer which affects every sector of our national economy. In every field, industrial, monetary and so on, the evil always comes from faulty distribution.

The present formula is all for one and nothing for the others. The great master of our economy is still the trust.

Mr. Chairman, when you think that the western producer gets only 55 cents per bushel of grain, for which the eastern consumer must pay up to $1.50, that is fantastic. So there is not only the case of other financiers even more brazen who, with a $10 deposit, succeed in borrowing $100, just like the chartered banks.

As a matter of fact, if you push your inquiries further, you will find that all the western wheat is delivered to the great lakes by the Canadian wheat board, which sets the price according to the price paid to the western farmers, plus the transportation costs which are borne by those same farmers. I think also that the grants paid by the governments for the transportation and storage of grain help maintain the price of grain at a more reasonable level today.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Roberval, but his time is up.

[Text]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief because none of us on this side wants to hold up the minister's estimates. In fact, we are prepared to co-operate to the extent that I will probably be the last speaker as far as we are concerned, if we get the co-operation we anticipate the minister will give us. As he knows, a matter has arisen under the administration of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act which is to be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. The minister has received a request from the clerk of that committee to appear before it tomorrow morning. If the minister can give us the assurance that he will be with us tomorrow morning, then I will be quite happy and conclude my remarks at this point.

Mr. Hays: I am very sorry but I cannot give that commitment. I have a speaking engagement at the annual meeting of the farm union in Alberta which I am committed to, and have been for some time. But I will be back and am quite prepared to meet the committee on Saturday morning.

Mr. Nielsen: This presents a problem. The committee has not decided to meet on Saturday and it is not usual for committees of the house to sit on a Saturday. Therefore Saturday is not a suitable date. The reason I raise the matter at this time is because when the minister was informed that he was requested to appear before the committee he replied to the clerk that he was unable to do so. Since that time we have heard second hand, through the hon. member for Carleton, the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand and the hon. member for York-Scarborough, of different commitments. Some mentioned Wednesday, some Tuesday and now it is Saturday. The request was sent to the minister to appear on Friday.

We are perfectly agreeable to working out some arrangement in co-operation with the minister. I am not suggesting for a moment that this is what he has in mind, but what we fear is that he might not appear before the committee at all before this session is over unless we get some commitment from him this evening. The committee meets at nine o'clock tomorrow morning. If the minister was there his evidence could be taken within an hour, and then he could get off to Calgary and meet his commitment there.

Mr. Hays: I am quite prepared to meet the committee; as a matter of fact I welcome the opportunity. I have stated my problem, and would be quite prepared to meet the committee at nine o'clock on Friday evening, or Saturday morning, or seven o'clock Monday morning, or Tuesday morning or Wednesday morning—any one of these mornings. Next week the ten ministers of agriculture are to be here and we have a conference starting on Monday, and running Tuesday and Wednesday, so it will be difficult for me to appear any time after nine o'clock. However, as I say, I am quite prepared to meet the committee at seven in the morning.

Mr. Nielsen: That is fine. If the minister is prepared to meet the committee at nine o'clock tomorrow evening and is agreeable to be the first witness to be examined on that committee, then we are quite happy on this side.

Mr. Hays: God willing, I will do that.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak perhaps I could comment on some remarks made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat. I could not help but think that perhaps he was preaching for a call. Whether that call was to be next minister of agriculture in a Liberal government I am not sure, but that thought did run through my mind as he talked on and on, on a Liberal theme, about farm machinery being the main trouble with agriculture generally. I questioned him as to where his party stood on communist countries buying Canadian wheat. Not only did he not have time to deal with the question at that moment, but he failed to deal with it at all. He failed to deal with his party's viewpoint on that crucial issue in the last two elections. Why did he fail to do that? The only thought which came to my mind was that perhaps he was going to cross the floor of the house and no longer remain with his present party.

The hon. member talked about ARDA and how vague it was. He did not say that it has not worked very well in Alberta, because the government of Alberta has not made any real, concentrated effort to make it work or to see that it would work. The reason is that they are afraid to spend some of the money they have in their oil rich treasury and put it back into the basic industry of the country. The basic industry of Alberta is still agriculture, but we are still fighting to see that some share of their provincial money goes back to the land; but it is a hard fight in that province.

The hon. member also talked about the study on the Saskatchewan and Nelson rivers basin, which includes the Red Deer river project, a very vital project to central Alberta reaching down as far as his own constituency. According to him, no more studies were needed in this regard. He said he had a study in his own office, but he did not say what year it was. I have one too. In fact, there have been studies ever since the William Peers project in 1918, as well as 1928 and 1942. I do not know which study he has but we are now in 1963. We now have the Alberta government stingily not wanting to go ahead with any study. They have resisted co-operation with the prairie provinces water board? Why? Because here again they have been reluctant to spend some of their money, received from wealth resources below the surface on the land itself, to replenish and develop the basic industry of agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This wisecracking at the other end of the chamber reminds me of an old saying that wisecrackers rarely gather wisdom. The hon. member talked about community pastures and the greater need for them throughout Canada. What is the attitude of the Alberta government in this regard? There has been no federal participation in community pastures within the provinces; that is what they tell us in Alberta. The province from which the hon. member comes is a Social Credit province, and he has the gall to get up in this house and say that he wants further action on community pastures by the federal government, when the federal government itself is not allowed to enter the province in this respect. There are some 70 new community pastures which have sprung up in the last four or five years in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, but not one in Alberta—except the one brought about by a severe drought. We were also able to secure a large part of the Suffield experimental station as a sort of community pasture, but on a limited basis. But this was done through the Department of National Defence. Though his remarks were interesting, he said very little. He did not take into account, in the course of his observations, the thinking of the federal Social Credit party with regard to sales to Russia, or the thinking of the provincial party, for that matter. The only conclusion I can reach is that he was preaching for a call—that he was expecting to become the next minister of agriculture in the Liberal party. This has been suggested by a learned journalist whom we have among us, namely the hon. member for Port Arthur. Maybe the hon. member for Port Arthur is right in this regard. Who am I to say?

When I rose to speak tonight I did not intend to deal with the speech made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, but I thought it deserved comment, if only on account of what the hon. member did not say. In speaking tonight, I should like to make it clear I have no axe to grind with the present Minister of Agriculture as a person. I know he has a highly successful record in real estate, as a farmer and as an entrepreneur of most descriptions. He has a reputation in this regard and I respect him for it. But he has failed miserably as a leader of agriculture in this country, and it is in this direction that I want to direct my criticism. He has provided no leadership either to the department, or to Canada, or to the farmers across the country. His speech today was nothing more than a factual report, item by item, on the estimates of the department. There was no review of the future outlook for the Department of Agriculture. No real leadership was shown with regard to the general direction in which we are moving. It is obvious that someone inside the department wrote his speech. It certainly differed greatly from the speech which was made in Chicago some time ago when the hon. gentleman said there were only four members in the Liberal party who knew anything about agriculture. I really did not know whether he was including himself among those four or not, and I wondered who the other three might be. That speech must have been a real eye-opener for the people in Illinois, Montana, and the west, generally.

I looked in the hon. gentleman's speech today for some show of leadership. I tried to discover where the Liberals were going to lead western agriculture and agriculture in Canada generally. I thumbed through a copy of the Liberal promises with regard to agriculture. This is what they said:

> A Liberal government will provide continuous, "realistic guidance on the market outlook for different crops and livestock products".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I hear members over there pounding their desks. Well, I have several other clippings here. Here is a beauty: "Hays calls for less wheat". That is from the Farm Union of October 2. Was this an example of realistic guidance on the market outlook for different crops? I should like to say a word or two more about this Liberal program because I saw nothing in the speech from the throne or in the remarks of the minister to indicate there was any consideration being given to continuing the ideas they had at the beginning of 1963. What is being forecast for 1964? What can we expect in the next speech from the throne? Here is what they said:

> Under a Liberal government, a reorganized industrial development bank will be able to provide long term finance for co-operatives. Improved research services will benefit co-operatives.

I looked for that in the speech from the throne this spring but I never saw anything about it and I have not heard anything about it since. Here is another quotation from the program:

> A Liberal government is pledged to increase the return to the farmer from wheat sold in Canada for human consumption.

Well, I see no evidence that this is being done. Then again, there was the $2 a bushel wheat, and there was the two price system. The program is specific about this. The Prime Minister, speaking in Saskatoon on March 6, said:

> This policy (two price system for wheat) will be accompanied by a consumer subsidy so that there will be no rise in the price of bread.

No more has been heard about that. Another change forecast in that program was the introduction of deficiency payments on a quarterly basis for oats and barley and a wide range of agricultural products. I would point out to the committee that only the other day the minister announced a policy with regard to eggs. Did he say payments were to be made on a quarterly basis? No, he did not. This, like the rest of this program, has been completely forgotten. Even the few ideas which the Liberals might have been able to grasp as possible solutions for some of the difficulties in which agriculture now finds itself, have been forgotten, too. I could read on but I see I should lose too much time if I got worked up over these broken promises. No wonder the party opposite includes so few members from the rural areas of Canada. No wonder the Liberal party is represented by only four members who know anything about agriculture. It is because they have advocated this false Liberal program over the years.

Farmers and other Canadians want leadership from a minister of agriculture. They want a future to which they can look forward. The minister talked about ARDA. What has happened to ARDA since the program became the responsibility of the present government? It has become an almost completely ineffective piece of legislation. The sum of $4 million has been made available to it, the minister has told us, though $50 million was made available by the previous government over a three year period. The hon. gentleman talked about farm credit and the leadership which has been provided in this regard. The Liberal program says:

> Farmers who wish to switch from dairying to other enterprises to which their farms are better suited, will be encouraged in the Liberal plan by credit and assistance specifically adapted to this purpose.

Have we heard anything about this promise since? No. The minister mentioned farm credit a while ago, but that is all. The operations of the stabilization board remain unchanged. Perhaps the board needs some modernization. That is why amendments to acts are introduced.

The hon. gentleman spoke of the dairy industry. Well, the butter subsidy is still the same only we are able, now, to balance our production against our consumption as a result of a Conservative program for paying a subsidy to butter consumers which has brought about an increase in consumption. Certainly, there is a problem in connection with eastern feed grain. We have been studying it for three or four days now. Provisional pricing may and I think will provide a benefit. But this was already designed before, under our announced policy for legislation in the house. The storage charges on grain are going to be paid. This is similar to what we had promised we were going to do. The minister said that an agency would be assigned to look after this matter, but the agency would have no teeth in it. It is a rather useless agency if that is all it is going to be.

In an earlier speech he made in the house he talked about farm machinery and said there must be depots and renting and pools. Any western farmer who is depending for his whole livelihood on 7,000 or 8,000 bushels of grain that must be harvested wants his own combine so he can get out and harvest it. Back in the early 'forties a lot of custom combining was done, but the trend is away from that today. It may go back to it but I do not think it will. As for renting and pools, I found renting to be rather expensive. I am in several machinery pools with some of my neighbours. With certain types of inexpensive machines which can be used at any time of the season pools will work all right. But a tractor represents 50 per cent of the farm machinery cost of any given farmer and a tractor and combine are needed if one is to engage in the farming business in a full time way at all. No pool will provide any real solution to that. When the minister talked about this a while ago I wonder whether he had read the report of the committee on agriculture set up to study that question some time ago.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am sorry but I am running out of time.

An hon. Member: I'll say you are.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You can ask me a question at the end of my speech. We have heard a lot of talk about why the wheat board and the board of grain commissioners were switched from the Department of Agriculture back to the Department of Trade and Commerce. The farmers wondered why. The reason is obvious. The Minister of Agriculture had something to say on June 22, 1963, which indicates the reason. He was referring to the China wheat sale and he said:

> That comes under the trade and commerce department now, and I know little about it.

"I know little about it". We never had such a barefaced admission of the facts before. Of course, he was a new minister then. "I know little about it". This was obvious to many western farmers and to many people throughout Canada. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is a former deputy minister of the department. The Minister of Agriculture was appointed by the Prime Minister, and as the Minister of Agriculture knew little about the subject it was natural to switch these boards back, not for the benefit of the producers but for the benefit of the Liberal party. That is why it was done. It is obvious, and most Canadians recognize this fact now.

The Minister of Agriculture made a tour of Russia. What did he say about wheat over there? This was before the gigantic wheat deal with that country. What did he say? He never said anything. He did not come back and say, "I saw a poor crop over there".

Mr. Dupuis: You do not understand Russian anyway.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You can look out the train window and see whether the crop is going to go five bushels to the acre or 40 bushels. The minister came back and said: "We can sell a lot more purebred Canadian beef over there".

An hon. Member: More bull.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Well, perhaps so. We are looking, and I mean the Canadian public, for leadership in the Department of Agriculture. Here is what the Ottawa Journal said yesterday in referring to the whole hoax of the 60 days of decision of the present government. The editorial refers to the promise of two ministers of agriculture and goes on to say:

> It can hardly be said that there is even one minister.

That is a shocking statement to appear in a Canadian paper. That is a shocking statement to make about the primary industry of this country. We can hardly say we even have one. That is in direct contrast to what the situation was back in 1962 and 1961. Everybody in Canada knew then that we had a minister of agriculture, and everybody was proud of that minister of agriculture.

We hear a lot about leadership and the minister's position. At a meeting of the farmers union in Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, the minister said:

> I would be irresponsible if I didn't urge farmers to examine the question of wheat output—

The heading of the article in the October Union Farmer is "Hays Calls for Less Wheat". The article goes on to say that the minister said the government would do all it could to investigate the problem. We wanted leadership. We wanted guidance.

An hon. Member: That is what you need, leadership.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This is what the Minister of Trade and Commerce had to say about the same problem on August 12, 1963 at Edmonton, as found in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix:

> Trade minister Mitchell Sharp stressed the need to reduce wheat acreage and production in favour of more barley and oats production.

We all remember that famous speech. Is this realistic guidance to the farmers of Canada as to what they are to do and what they are to produce? Certainly it is a short-sighted attitude on the part of two ministers of the cabinet, and they took it not because of their knowledge of the subject but because they were jealous of the record established by the former minister and wanted to cut it down to their size, or below their size if at all possible. That is why they took that attitude.

We have heard some talk today about a veterinary college in western Canada and the minister's offer of 25 per cent or $625,000. I read an editorial in the Canadian Cattleman which condemned the minister for being so stingy. It pointed out that the federal government will spend $1 million to build a vocational training school. They have in Drumheller, Stettler and many other places throughout Alberta and Canada generally. But they will only put up $625,000 for a veterinary college when the federal government is importing veterinarians into this country. Is this logical? When we are importing veterinarians from Great Britain, Australia and New Zealand is this logical? The minister wrote a very nice letter to the editor of the Canadian Cattleman and explained that he wanted to suck in the provincial governments, and he felt that if he put up enough bait one of them would grab it because he knew they were all eager to have it. With regard to the Department of Agriculture spending money, I would point out that the minister said, as reported in the Regina Leader-Post of June 28, 1963:

> There would be nothing wrong with spending a lot more on agriculture in this country.

The minister knew he could suck in the province of Saskatchewan on a veterinary college because they wanted to get it before it went to the proper place, Alberta, where most of the cattle are, and the minister was quite successful. Another Social Credit Albertan is pounding his desk, but how he can do that I do not know when the province of Alberta, which is so wealthy from oil and gas, is so stingy with regard to spending money on the basic industry of that province.

I am going to have to slow up a little perhaps, and try to get across the theme of my remarks. If the Prime Minister does not choose somebody more capable of providing leadership for agriculture, and the present minister is allowed to continue to wander and squander throughout the department and throughout Canada, then I want to make a few suggestions in the hope that if he is left in that department he will heed the call of Canadians generally, and of the agriculture industry, for a strong minister of agriculture, a minister with foresight and leadership.

At the beginning of the minister's term of office I was reluctant, as the record will prove, to ask him questions and to press him because I knew he was a new minister. I also know he is a capable businessman in his own personal business. But I want him to take hold, to take an interest and to go to work in this department, if he is capable of providing leadership.

In the early days of the session, there was a bit of comment concerning some of the replies the minister made in the house. If the minister was not in his seat, we pointed this out to hon. members. If he happened to be away selling cattle, we gently nudged him and said, "Now, Harry, you have a new job; you have to drop this cattle selling and assume a more important role in Canadian life." However, the minister continued his efforts on behalf of a few of my learned colleagues, like Dr. Rynard and others who are in the cattle industry and who sell purebred cattle.

If one takes a certain look at what this government has done during 200 days in office, he must conclude it is time the Prime Minister took a look at this department. We have looked at all the departments. We have gone through finance, post office, health and welfare and so on. Now, let us look at the basic industry of this country, agriculture. It is still the backbone of the country. All I am asking is that we take a look at this department. The minister must ask himself, "Do I want to be minister? Do I want to bring in new programs? Do I want to explain those programs in this parliament or do I want to continue travelling across Canada as an auctioneer for cattle breeders?" If he does continue this practice, he is neglecting his official duties.

The Toronto Globe and Mail has commented on this situation more than once. They even suggested that there was talk of having two ministers, but we have not seen the second one. We rarely see the first. Perhaps we need a third. Surely, 200 days is sufficient time for the minister to find himself and take hold of his duties.

The Ottawa Journal had this to say:

> He will say, naturally, that cabinet ministers often appear on ceremonial occasions to give their blessings to buildings, fairs and other worth-while projects. The trouble with Mr. Hays is that he wants to participate rather than visit. If he were invited to lay a cornerstone we fear that he would keep the trowel and put up the whole wall.

This shows the man has energy, and I want him to use it for the benefit of the whole of Canadian agriculture, and not a special group he seems to prefer. I suggest that unless the Minister of Agriculture spends some time in the House of Commons and in his department, gets to know his department, becomes aware of the feeling of the average Canadian farmer, then he should spend all of his time at auctions. At one time, the minister boastfully stated, in speaking about agriculture in Alberta, that he had 5,000 acres of land, so many hired hands, trucks and so on. This does not entitle him to boast about his personal efforts in the field of agriculture. He is now the minister looking after the welfare of a vast number of farmers who do not have that same financial backing, and perhaps are in need of some financial backing.

It may be that some of my friends on the other side of the house will think I am being a little rough on their lovable friend, Harry. I am doing this for the explicit purpose of trying to direct his attention back to the Department of Agriculture, if it ever was on the department, for the benefit of farmers generally throughout Canada. Frankly, the minister must realize that he is no longer in the position of an athlete in the prime of life. He is rather like a hockey or baseball player reaching the end of his career but still trying to continue. The minister has now been called upon to accept a higher role in the affairs of Canada. He must meet that challenge that is presented to him. He must turn his mind away from his chosen line of business and direct his attention to the new aspect that confronts him. He must show a greater amount of leadership, a greater amount of foresight in his efforts to raise the standard of living of farmers throughout Canada.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): May I ask the hon. member a simple question? Why does the hon. member spend so much time complaining, when all the western farmers are so happy after the record wheat sale we had this year?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I could have dealt with wheat sales. I imagine you are going to give me time to deal with this question, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Medicine Hat suggested something along the same line. I may point out that I asked the members of the wheat board about wheat sales in the committee the other day. I asked what government provided the first credit wheat sales, and they frankly admitted that before the first China wheat sale there had never been any other wheat sale like it. No other government had attempted to put up that kind of credit for the sale of wheat. This sale established a pattern. We in the west are proud of it.

I was a member in those days when wheat sales were not being made, and I recall the great difficulties. We urged the cabinet at that time to consider the question of credit sales. For years, the farm unions had been crying for this type of thing. We went ahead and did it. The farmers in western Canada know about wheat sales and they are happy with this program. They wanted it years ago, and now that it has been established it is starting to bear fruit. It bore more fruit last year and is continuing to bear fruit this year. The former minister of agriculture, the Hon. Alvin Hamilton, told them to go out and grow all the wheat they could and he would sell it. He was quite sure of the market outlook at that time. Away back as far as February, 1963, he forecast record wheat sales for this year. This is nothing new to the farmers. They accepted this and they are grateful to the Minister of Trade and Commerce for continuing the pattern we established.

We want further leadership on many of the other agricultural problems, such as credit. I could go into these problems at length, but I realize, Mr. Chairman, you have been patient in allowing me to answer this question.

Mr. Herridge: I feel very humble indeed, after listening to my colleagues talk about the huge tractors required, and the great horsepower required, to operate their farms. I rise to speak, Mr. Chairman, only as a rancher who has a five horsepower lawnmower. I might say also that I would not attempt to compete with the hon. gentleman who has taken his seat, so far as lung power is concerned.

Listening to these debates on agriculture throughout the years makes one realize that there have been a number of interesting personalities who have been ministers of agriculture from western Canada. We all remember the Hon. W. R. Motherwell, who I think was respected by all regardless of party; the late Hon. James Gardiner who, while we differed very sharply, was recognized as a fighter, particularly for prairie agriculture. Then, we had the Hon. Douglas Harkness who, while he was very conscientious and sincere, I always felt was more at home on the parade ground than in the village hall. Then, we had the Hon. Alvin Hamilton, who was an auctioneer of ideas. He was a very conscientious minister and left some worth-while policies behind him which I trust the present government will do something to continue and improve.

Now Mr. Chairman, I come to the present Minister of Agriculture. I cannot help commenting, as I sit in the house on this side and watch his cherubic expression, regardless of statements being made by various members of the opposition, that he is an auctioneer of livestock. We have had two very famous speeches by ministers this session, two that will probably go down in history. The first was made by the Minister without Portfolio, more correctly termed the minister still in waiting. He made a very well organized, fruitful and, I thought, thoughtful speech. I read the text in one of the agricultural magazines. I can well imagine his getting the assistance of the officials and members of the profession that he knows; possibly even his good wife, because it was obvious after you read the speech that he was preaching for a call.

I intended, Mr. Chairman, to deal with another aspect of agricultural policy this evening, but I feel that owing to the development of the debate and these two famous speeches, they should be dealt with. I am going to deal with the speech the Minister of Agriculture made to the farmers club in Chicago on December 2. I might explain that I understand the farmers club in Chicago is like the members of the Rideau club in stetson hats. Anyway, the minister is almost unknown in the interior of British Columbia. I have had many inquiries and letters asking me, "What does he look like? How does he think?"

An hon. Member: Does he?

Mr. Herridge: "How does he talk? What does he say?" Mr. Chairman, I am going to let him speak for himself. This will save me a great deal of correspondence and I think it is worth while letting the people of Canada know how the minister thinks, because if you size up how the minister thinks you get some idea of what Liberal agricultural policy is.

This famous speech in Chicago was given on the same day that the hon. member for Red Currant—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: —Swift Current-Maple Creek rose on a question of privilege. The committee will remember that the minister's absence was noted, as usual, and the Prime Minister rose and explained that he was away on official business. I shall deal with the official business in a few minutes. His speech was taped; parts of it have been given on the radio and it has whetted the appetite of thousands for more. It is unique. It is unusual, and I am sure when the members of this house have heard it they will say it is a fantastic speech. It is a speech that deals with his family tree; that deals with his rise —his Horatio Alger rise from a farm boy to a position of prestige and importance in the federal government; that deals with his philosophy of life and then deals with Liberal agricultural policy. I think we owe it to the members of this house and to the nation to let them know how the minister thinks. I have a text of the speech here taken from the tape recording:

Speech by the Hon. Harry Hays, Minister of Agriculture, to the Chicago farmers club, December 2, 1963.

This is an authorized and authentic copy.

When it was suggested to me that I should come and speak to the Chicago farmers club, I decided that I wanted to do that job. I have the kind of Prime Minister who allows me to come down here—

Wasn't that kind of him?

—and I understand that I am the first of his ministers who has had the privilege of speaking in Chicago. In any case, I am elated to be here. Dr. Wilson, in introducing me, was pretty kind to me because generally I've been in trouble all my life—

That is an understatement, if ever there was one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: His speech continues:

To be the Minister of Agriculture, to be the mayor of a city, to be the auctioneer of a good sale, or of a poor sale, you have to be a bit of an optimist and to show you how optimistic I am about the problems of the farmers and that sort of thing I'd like to tell you a story about an uncle of mine.

This is very closely related to agriculture. You can see the minister was on official business.

I live in Alberta, which is north of the state of Montana. And our country is much the same as some parts of Montana. And we have there a government called a Social Credit government, which has turned into a very conservative republican government.

There is a point I want to raise here, Mr. Chairman. This has caused a great deal of concern. Is the minister now co-operating with the hon. member for Lotbiniere in a campaign against Her Majesty? I hope the minister explains this when he replies later on in the debate, because it is causing concern.

During the depression time, they put a moratorium on interest payments so that the farmer might be able to pay his debts. They wouldn't let anybody foreclose.

It sounds as if the minister was a bit disappointed himself.

But I had an uncle who lived in a small town where I was born, north of Calgary, who had guaranteed a couple of million dollars worth of loans. He had guaranteed the interest, so you can see what happened to him during the depression—the interest he had to pay dissipated his complete fortune.

Well, he had a heart at least:

We had a little hotel about a half mile from the cemetery.

A good place.

And we lived about four miles out of town, but he decided when this took place that he would go down to the hotel every morning to try and drink the beer faster than they could make it. He did this for 20 years. Every morning he was the first fellow there and every night he was the last guy to go home. Of course he didn't have much money left and he was the town gossip. Not only did everybody talk about him, but during the day he talked about everybody else.

I have a great deal of respect for this uncle of mine. He was a real champion of mine because he had been very, very successful in the real estate business.

This indicates that the minister's mind is not directed toward agriculture; it is still directed principally toward business.

I remember we had an old postmaster who used to go over and pick up the mail every day when the train came in at one o'clock. He had a two-wheel cart and he'd take it back to the post office and sort the mail every day. You set your clock by him. When he was a very old man, one day he died. And they came down to the beer parlour and someone said to this group where my uncle was partaking that day, "Say, you know Joe King died" My uncle said, "Well, isn't that something".

He left a will and they wanted him to open up the will right away. So, they opened it up and (now remember I told you the cemetery is about a half a mile away from the beer parlour), he said in his will he wanted to be buried eight feet deep.

My uncle looked at it for a minute, and he finally said, "Well I'll tell you what to do. You let them bury old Joe King eight feet deep and when I die you just bury me two feet deep. And on resurrection day I'll be down to the beer parlour before old Joe King is at the cemetery gate".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: This is the minister who was on federal business.

Mr. Herridge: He continues:

That's the kind of an optimistic family we had.

I can say to the members of the farmers club, "Didn't you have a good idea of agricultural policy?" He continued:

I remember my run for mayor of the city of Calgary. My wife and I were driving down to our ranch about three weeks before the election, and they were trying to get somebody to run against this fellow in office. I said to my wife, "You know, I think I'll run for mayor". "Oh God, Harry", she said, "you couldn't get that job and if you did you couldn't run the city". Now this was kind of a challenge to me. So about a week or ten days after that I decided to run. And I did, and I squeezed in.

It was the first time I had ever been in the city hall. And I'll tell you that was an experience.

That is not the last experience the minister is going to have.

When I had been there for 3½ years running the city, everybody realized how hard it was. And because I was having such a hard time they put me in easy the second time.

Then Mr. Pearson came along and suggested maybe I should run for parliament.

The picked and chosen of the Prime Minister. Then he said:

If I had known what I do now—talk about the job at city hall being a tough one, this one is a lot worse.

I am sure the minister said that with great warmth.

There are only about four agriculturalists in the whole Liberal party but they are all agriculturalists on the opposition side. So I get a good overhaul every day, every day.

Mr. Chairman, I will just try to guess who the other agriculturists are. The first would naturally be the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who many times was the agricultural spokesman for the Liberal party; and have I not heard him plead for the government to do something for the soybean growers in his constituency? I am sure another is the Postmaster General. When I say that, I must explain, Mr. Chairman, I have in mind that he farms out other things.

There are great problems in agriculture in the United States, and we have them, too, in Canada. Mr. President, I think no one knows better than I know, and I would like to express this thought, that you people in the Chicago farmers club, people who have made your living elsewhere, have a great love for the land. You have gone back to farming, raising cattle and raising grain, raising fruit and all the various things that you raise on farms. To me the farmer is possibly the great artist of our time.

He will have to be under this government.

When I think of the great things that you—let me call you sidewalk farmers—

I never heard of that kind before.

—have done for agriculture throughout the world, I don't think that you could buy it. I don't think that all our research centres compete with it or could compare with the things that are done by people who are business people, who love the land, who have the energy and foresight and the get up and go to make money to invest in farms.

Here is the Minister of Agriculture practically disowning the research staff of the Department of Agriculture, and the research staffs of the provincial governments, and placing these other peoples' ideas ahead of all the research on agriculture that has been done up to date.

Most of you, I know many of you, keep these farms—they don't keep you. But the contribution that you make to agriculture cannot be measured in gold. I think of some of the great cows that have come from the Mount Vernon and the Brampton farms, to recall only a few. I could go on and on. Most of these animals were bred and developed by people just like yourselves. You've given this to posterity and I don't know how we can thank people like you.

I remember not so long ago being in Denmark looking at a great array of oil paintings by the great artists of our times. When I stop and think that I was looking at the champion steer last week in Toronto, the week before last (incidentally I believe it was a steer from Ohio) I realize that the people who put this flesh and blood together certainly were artists. Certainly they were dedicated people. And certainly they were people who did a great deal for Canadian, for North American agriculture and, in so far as that is concerned, they did it for the world.

If you want to check all the world records both in championships and in production records in so far as cattle are concerned, and chickens, sheep and what have you, you'll find that the people interested in agriculture such as yourself, have made their contribution. Certainly it has been felt and we are all deeply grateful for it.

I would like to just say a word about Canada's agriculture which is something I think you will be interested in. We have a great deal to thank you for in so far as Canadian agriculture is concerned. But sometimes we become greatly concerned in Canada, sitting beside our very powerful neighbour for we have a great deal of respect for everything that you do.

I hope the minister considers he is only speaking for himself in that respect.

Now that you are leaders of the world we can take a great deal of gratification in the fact that you are our neighbour, our closest neighbour. We are pleased that you are in the position you are, because we know that anything you are doing is in good hands.

We in Canadian agriculture though sometimes become concerned by the off-hand manner in which you treat us, because we are your best customers. We buy more from you than any other country in the world. And you in turn are our best customers—but sometimes we worry a little bit. For instance, at the moment I think you have five or six bills coming up before congress that are possibly going to control your meat products in the United States. Canada is a high-cost country but we do ship you quite a bit of meat and we'd be in an awful predicament if we couldn't ship. So, I gathered some figures for you because you are leaders in your field and because I know they will be received in the manner in which I wish to give them.

Then the minister goes on and—

Mr. Hays: Why don't you give the figures?

Mr. Herridge: I am glad I am getting encouragement from the minister. I was afraid I was boring him.

At the moment we ship to you something like 500,000 head of beef cattle a year. Now this compares, I think, with about half as much as you get from Australia. I don't know what the figures are and the amount that you receive from Mexico and some of these countries, but this is the comparison and these are the things that we worry about when it looks as though you may cut us off.

And I'll give you these round figures which I think will be of interest to you. The total amount of beef that we ship into the United States in a year represents 5.8 per cent, that is five days of your total consumption. That is all the beef we send in. And the meat that we import represents, although it is a smaller amount, seven days consumption for Canada. Now get these figures because they are pretty important. Although the amounts are different, the amount of meat that we ship into the United States represents a five day supply for you, a bit over five days and a half. The amount that we import in beef products, processed beef, stripped beef and that sort of thing, feeds our people for seven days.

But when we take all of the agricultural products that we ship into the United States, and you are our best customers, it will feed your people for one and a half days. The amount of feed, the amount in dollars, the amount that you ship back to us will feed our people for 29 days.

So you can see how concerned we become sometimes when one segment of the industry says, "Well, we don't like these exports (or imports) coming into our country." We would hope that you would take a look at the whole picture. This is a pretty big story to sell, but it's a pretty big thing to us in Canada, when we are in this position. Stop and think about poultry for instance. We import 35 to your one in Canada; our exports are one part and yours are 35. In cheese it is four to one in your favour. In so far as grain is concerned we don't send much grain in here, but last year we imported from you 35 million bushels of corn, which we were pleased to get.

But here's something we would like you to consider in so far as Canada is concerned. Because we have to live together on this North American continent we're one and the same economy. We are a great storehouse of energy and oil and all of the things that you may need in strategic materials waiting to be used by the North American people. There are certain things in the United States that we must always have, things that we can't grow because geography makes it impossible for us to grow. I mentioned a few of these, for instance cotton. We must have your cotton. We will always need it. We can't grow cotton, we'll need your citrus fruits, oranges, grapefruit; we need your vegetables out of season. We need rice, we need soybeans—

I am sure, Mr. Chairman, I remember the hon. member for Essex East pleading with the former government to assist the soybeans producers in Ontario.

—we need peanuts. All of these things are agricultural commodities that you people produce that we cannot or never never will produce.

This all adds up to the fact that our economy is a high-cost one, compared with yours because we're north of the 49th parallel and we have to live with the elements. The United States and Canada will always be great trading nations. I was going to mention wheat. We have in Canada 60 million acres of arable land. We farm 5 per cent of Canada—just the small amount of 5 per cent. This 60 million acres hasn't changed in the last 30 years very much.

It won't change very much in the next few years because they are going to drown a lot of land in the Kootenays.

This year we had a bumper crop of wheat. We grew something like 700 million bushels—720 to be exact—which is a record crop. The highest we've ever grown from 27 million acres. And then a small amount of soft wheat which we grew in Ontario, for which you would have to add a couple of million bushels. This grain for the most part, has been marketed as you know. We grew 27 million acres at the expense of a certain amount of acreage that would ordinarily be sown to oats and barley and coarse grains and that sort of thing. But this grain is an expensive proposition for us. So are our beef cattle an expensive proposition for us. So are our dairy products.

This is a very interesting paragraph.

If we in dairy products are going to live or compete with the rest of the world, for instance Argentina or New Zealand or Australia, we will have to change our whole pattern of dairy farming. But I don't say that we will have to change it so far as the cost of fluid milk is concerned. As long as we are shipping fluid milk we will have to produce it the year round.

But we are giving great consideration to educating our people to live with geography. For instance, you can produce a pound of cheese at almost half the amount of money in the summer as you can in the winter.

I would like the minister to explain this, because it almost indicates that you milk the cows in summer and let them dry up in the winter.

Storage facilities have changed and we are taking a long look at some of these problems.

We are also at the moment taking a long look at the high cost of machinery in Canada. We think that if we are going to be producing for world markets, then we must take a look at some of these great problems. Because it doesn't seem right that you should have $40,000 invested in a section that requires $25,000 or $30,000 worth of machinery to operate it. Particularly when you think about the problems we have in Canada. One year we might have a big crop like we had this year and a farmer has 6,000 bushels of wheat on 300 acres. And he hasn't had it marketed and his neighbour has the same thing so he goes out and buys an $8,000 or $9,000 combine. And then the next year he's sitting there with the combine and he got hailed out and his neighbour got hailed out and everybody else. So he's got no place to put the combine. And the third year he got dried out and about that time the old lady ran away with the hired man and he's in a real mess, this fellow.

I suggest that it is not fair to the farm housewife of the prairie provinces to suggest that they are in the practice of running away with the hired man.

These are some of the problems that confront the Canadian farmer, and I'm sure you have the same problem here. Another thing that we're taking a look at is crop disaster. When a man is hailed out, blown out, frozen out, all of these are a great worry to him and we think that we admire some of your crop insurance and we are going to take a long look at this.

We shall be interested in the minister's intentions in regard to that.

When we were in Holland we saw it was costing $2,000 an acre to reclaim land from the sea. And we were told that they were selling this back to the producer at greatly reduced prices and giving him 60 years to pay for it at 3 per cent interest. This will show you the important place the farmer holds in these older countries. The producer of food is the very backbone of their economy.

I agree with the minister there.

Mr. Chairman, I would think that we have the same problems here. We in Canada would like to work very closely with you in agriculture. I suggested the last time I saw your secretary of agriculture, Mr. Freeman, that we would like to ship a little more cheese into the United States. And because we only send in 500,000 pounds and we import 2 million pounds it looked to me like we had a real good argument. He said "Well, but you have cheddar cheese". I said to him "I think this is a specialty cheese and I'm going to call it Freeman cheese from now on."

I hope that if he is elected again—

Actually, the secretary of agriculture is appointed over there, not elected—

—we will be able to export more cheese into the United States.

Now, I'm being a little facetious about this, but these are some of the problems that confront us in Canada. We have a great deal of admiration for our friends in the United States, the farmer particularly, because you have given us the very foundation of our dairy cattle; most of the best ones come from this country.

I differ with the minister over that. The original stock of the Ayrshire herds and the Holsteins came from Scotland, Great Britain and the European countries, and most of the best ones come from this country.

Much of our cereal seed grain comes from this country.

He means the United States, there.

We would like to work closely with you in research also. Our problems will always be the same because it looks as though for quite some time we are going to be producing all agricultural commodities in surplus and so we will be competing in world markets.

The minister has anticipated that we are going to be producing agricultural commodities in surplus for some time. This represents an almost subconscious thinking and I hope the minister explains that statement when he replies.

Nevertheless, we would like to work very closely with you people in this regard.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity of speaking to you this afternoon. I would be remiss in my duties if I did not invite you back to Canada. I hope that you will see fit to come to Canada. It has been a real pleasure to be here this afternoon. I only wish I could stay this evening. Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman, I have put this somewhat unusual speech on the record because I think it will save a lot of members' time explaining what type of man the minister is, how he thinks, how he talks, and what government agricultural policy is. This will enlighten the people of Canada and I trust that when the minister replies later on he will explain some of his ambiguous statements. We expect ambiguous statements from the Secretary of State for External Affairs but not from the Minister of Agriculture. I have always claimed in talking to other hon. members of my group that there is one thing about farmers—you know where they stand. But I tell you at this stage, Mr. Chairman, we do not know where the Minister of Agriculture stands.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Chairman, the agricultural problems in our area are being seriously considered by a growing number of people in eastern Canada.

It should be said, therefore, that the eastern farmer's lot is receiving the kind attention of many members of this house who have made up their minds to draw plans to improve substantially and without delay the difficult financial situation in which the farmers find themselves.

According to official reports, there would be one area in Canada, the west, where farmers have seen their financial situation gradually improve in recent years, whereas, in the case of eastern farmers, the situation is deteriorating to the point where many are and will be incapable of carrying their burden.

However, thank goodness, solutions are being proposed to prevent the disaster from spreading.

The catholic farmers' union and the federated co-operative of Quebec have always been engaged in promoting and protecting the general interest of agriculture. In the last few months, both associations, which are beneficial and essential to the welfare of farmers, have submitted requests to the proper quarter in order that a sound solution to the problems of their members be found, particularly the problem of the feed grain required by the stock-breeding industry in eastern Canada.

It is easy to see that western farmers, generally speaking, are satisfied at the present time. On the other hand, they do not seem to be too much interested in eastern Canada buyers and to be anxious to inquire about prices paid by customers who are farmers like themselves.

At the present time, we have to pay close to $20 a ton, for instance, for feed grain delivered in Montreal. And it is precisely on that point that we have to co-operate if we want the purposes of the stock-breeders in my region to be achieved. On that matter, the officers of our syndicates and co-operatives have their heart set on attaining our object, which is to participate in the crop abundance in the prairie provinces, in the reasonable and equitable prices obtained by western farmers and finally, allow our stock-breeders in eastern Canada to benefit from a steady and necessary increase.

Thus, since 1941, the federal government grants a freight subsidy for feed grain produced in the prairie provinces and consumed on farms in eastern Canada and in British Columbia.

In Montreal, that subsidy amounts to $5 a ton at the present time. As an average for the whole province, it amounts to some $8 a ton.

That is not a statutory policy. The subsidy is annual and is renewed each year by order in council.

Quebec imports about one million tons of grain and mill feed from western mills, that is 35 or 40 per cent of the requirements. For the fiscal year ended March 1961, Quebec farmers received some $7.7 million under that policy.

On an average, the province of Quebec gets 40 per cent of the total amount paid out by the federal government under that policy.

The province of Quebec is a dairy province directed toward grass farming. Its natural environment is quite suited for such direction.

An excellent method of consolidating the Quebec farms is to direct their activities towards those livestock productions in which we are short. At the present time, the increase of these productions is handicapped by a cost-price squeeze.

Our local production of feed grain covers only 60 to 65 per cent of our local requirements, at the present level of our livestock production. We could, of course, increase our local production of feed grain, but never enough to meet all our needs, especially in barley and wheat.

The subsidy rate did not keep pace with the increase in freight rates. In 1941, the subsidy represented in Montreal $4.50 per ton; today, it is equivalent to $5 per ton. During the same period, the freight rate increased from $5 to $13.20 per ton.

Most farmers and agricultural advisers in our cattle industry are aware of that fact.

When we get a department of agriculture for eastern Canada, it will be the reward for our efforts in Ottawa in order to gain a fair appreciation of our farm requirements.

We all have here a responsibility to change a state of affairs that means frustration for our rural population.

You are aware of the fact that people have been complaining to the government for a long time, and now is the time to act.

Finally, I should like to point out that the ARDA offices at Mont Joli, in the riding of Rimouski, were officially opened last December 8.

Federal and provincial ministers and members of parliament took advantage of the occasion to take a quick look at the projects which are being considered for the Rimouski-lower St. Lawrence pilot district.

ARDA forces neither plans nor projects upon people. It merely strives to help them in the preparation and implementation of plans and projects.

Its usefulness and efficiency in carrying out the various necessary reforms for the redevelopment of the territory covered by the pilot district will depend on the collective and individual co-operation of the parties concerned.

Our farmers truly deserve our solicitude and all men of goodwill are invited to contribute to their welfare and survival.

ARDA offers us a chance of progress and success. Will we take it? I hope so.

Mr. Nesbitt: I just want to take a moment or two of the committee's time to mention one or two matters which occur to me. I listened to some of the minister's remarks this evening and this afternoon. While he touched on several aspects of the dairy industry I feel that the affairs of the industry in general were not given the consideration they deserved.

The dairy industry in Ontario and Quebec at the present time finds itself in a precarious state. There are many problems connected with it. The minister and his department are familiar with these problems, I am sure, and I hope that in the near future, as soon as possible, the hon. gentleman will get in touch with the ministers of agriculture of Ontario and Quebec and with the dairy farmers organizations and try to work out some solution to the dairy problem, because the difficulties of this industry seem to be growing more and more acute.

In conclusion, I should like to ask one question of the minister. It is my understanding that the concentrated milk producers of Ontario have been trying for weeks to obtain an appointment with him without success. This is an important matter. This is an important organization representing a large number of the dairy farmers of Ontario and, indirectly, their compatriots in other parts of the country. I do hope the minister will be able to find time to meet this delegation as soon as possible.

Mr. Hays: I should like to answer that question. I can assure the hon. member my door is always open. There is no delegation that I have not seen as soon as possible. Over my gate back home there is a sign—I think it is a famous sign in Calgary now—saying: "The latch string is always out". That is the way I have tried to operate since I have been in Ottawa.

While I am on my feet, perhaps I might say a word about the discussion so far. I hope everybody has had a great deal of fun here this evening. Certainly, I have. If I have provided some of it, I am thankful for that. All through my life I have had a great admiration for people who do things and I would like hon. members to know that it is a great challenge to me to be Minister of Agriculture. I say this humbly. I do not have as much book learning as a lot of people have, but I have a sense of responsibility and I can contribute to agriculture. There has been a great group of leaders in agriculture before me; one cannot help being aware of this when holding an office such as mine. I am thankful that this year—perhaps we did not have too much to do with it—we are looking back on 1963 as the greatest agricultural year Canada has ever known—$3,200 million, the best ever recorded.

We are trying sincerely to do something about the eastern feed grain situation. We thought that if we were to pay the storage it would make an impact. I think that by the end of the season we shall have all the feed grain in store in eastern Canada for eastern users. It will be $3 a ton cheaper for both oats and barley, half the price for bran, and shorts are almost half the price which farmers had to pay a year ago. Price has been stabilized and we think this has made some contribution to bringing about a wholly better situation.

We think we have done something in connection with the dairy program. We have taken a sincere look at it. In this connection I should like to read to the committee from an article which appeared in the London Free Press and other newspapers. It is a report of something which was said by a very responsible man, Mr. J. M. Hartwick, president of the National Dairy Council of Canada. He said:

> A shift to cheese production from butter has helped provide the dairy industry with the most optimistic situation experienced in many years. It is now almost certain that cheddar cheese sales in Canada this year will record an all-time high of well over 105 million pounds.

Mr. Hartwick commends the federal government for the things it has done. I could also read the favourable comments which have been made by the tobacco growers who were paid a floor price of 47 cents. These people had a difficult problem. Well, they have sold 22 million pounds of their tobacco at higher prices than have ruled for a long time, and it appears it will be possible for them to get rid of all their tobacco this year and clean up a problem which has worried them for a long time.

I could go on in this vein. There have been successes in nearly every field of agriculture although, maybe, we have not been selling this story hard enough. We still have a big job to do. We shall never be through. I have a great team behind me. These people are trying to help me and I need help, and I am getting some help from the other side, too. I think we can do a job for agriculture in Canada and I hope, in some small way, I can make a contribution.

Mr. Nesbitt: I much appreciate the minister's answer. I hope he will indicate that he will see the Ontario concentrated milk producers delegation perhaps before Christmas, and, certainly, before the year is out. I am glad to see the minister is nodding in assent. That is fine. I trust the hon. gentleman was not referring to me when he suggested that some members might have been trying to have some fun at his expense, because that would certainly not be the case; I regard this subject as being a very serious matter indeed.

I am glad the minister has said the things he did this evening indicating that he intends to take a serious look at the milk side of the dairy industry in particular, because that is the part of this industry which is in the most difficult position of all.

Mr. Langlois: I do not intend to speak for very long on the estimates of this department.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Langlois: I wonder if the supporters of the government are fearful I may get back at the Minister of Agriculture on the subject of eastern feed grain and the appointment of a minister of agriculture, east. I do not think they are too far wrong. I probably will not make the kind of speech that was made in Chicago. I have not got that kind of competence. I heard the minister say a few moments ago that he felt a little ill at ease after taking on such a ministry. We know he was a very successful man in his own line of business, but I must say that we cannot permit him to rely on experience of that kind so far as agriculture in Canada is concerned. In that regard I am referring particularly to the situation in the eastern part of Canada.

Eastern agriculture has been neglected and is in a pitiful state economically at the moment. I do not blame the Minister of Agriculture in office now. I blame those that were there before him and the governments that preceded the present government. I blame the Liberal government that was in power prior to the Conservative administration of 1958, and the Conservative administration which took power at that time. That Conversative government had 208 seats in the house and yet could not find any possible way to solve some of the problems of eastern Canadian agriculture.

I heard the minister say today that there are two broad groups of farmers, the qualified and the more or less marginal group. He forgot one group, those who are in such deep financial trouble at the moment, those who are in a hopeless situation at the moment in the eastern provinces, especially in the province of Quebec, who represent by far the majority of the farmers in these provinces.

We have farmers in Quebec who are leaving their farms today, and the same applies to New Brunswick. They are doing so for the simple reason they cannot make both ends meet. They are working in the same way they worked 20 years ago. They are still slaving from sunup to sundown. The only difference is that at the end of the year ends do not meet any more, financially. Even if we take just the two groups, the qualified and the marginal, those farmers have financial troubles. Every single farmer has them. Some of them have more than others.

So far as the western farmers are concerned, the government looked into their troubles in 1935 and helped them to solve their financial troubles to a certain extent by stabilizing the price of their grain. In 1935 the government formed the Canadian wheat board, and I think every western farmer is very proud of the Canadian wheat board.

How proud the eastern farmers would be if they had an eastern feed grain board. They are waiting for the same type of governmental action that was taken in 1935 to solve the problems of the western farmers to be taken now to solve the problems of the eastern farmers. The eastern farmers are in a critical financial state. If we compare western farms and eastern farms we find that western Canada is a better grain producing region and the farms do not need the care and labour that has to be put into eastern farms. Western farmers have a capable organization to sell their wheat. The government has an eye on the matter and sees that it is done. The western farmers have a guaranteed price. They have a floor price on their wheat and they at least have that guarantee.

What has the eastern farmer got as a guarantee? First of all, he does not produce enough for his own needs. This year in the province of Quebec there is 45 per cent underproduction. Where is the organization on the part of the government? The eastern farmer has to go through co-operatives, mills, brokers, distributors right to the lakehead, every kind of organization imaginable, to get the feed grain necessary for the winter. At the moment he has a fairly difficult time obtaining it at a decent price or at a price that will permit him to continue farming. There is no stable price in eastern Canada.

I heard one member say today that a farmer can start to prepare livestock, and before the winter is over the price of feed grain has varied so much that it is utterly hopeless for him to make ends meet. In Geneva in 1959 there was an international conference to stabilize the price of wheat on the world market and to provide floor and ceiling prices. If that was good for the world, why can we not have a stabilized price in the province of Quebec and the eastern provinces generally? If you can stabilize the price of wheat going out of the country, why can you not stabilize the price of grain coming into the eastern provinces so that it will not be too expensive on the one hand, and so that it will not go too low in price on the other hand? At least the farmers would know within what limits the price would range.

How are we going to stabilize the price? How do we solve the problem in eastern Canada at the moment? We have discussed it for the past few weeks in the standing committee on agriculture. I heard one opposition member say that the government had a two price system in its election platform. Why not provide a two price system in eastern Canada and pay a subsidy on western feed grain and seed grain also, so that the farmers of eastern Canada could obtain grain at a reasonable price and could make both ends meet at the end of the year? At the same time this would assure that the western farmer would receive his price also. With a subsidy on grain coming into eastern Canada the eastern farmer could purchase grain at a price which would allow him to make both ends meet at the end of the year. His financial problems would be solved and those of the western farmer would also be solved.

Eastern farmers have nothing against western farmers. They know they are not getting too much for their wheat or feed grains. But eastern farmers also know one other fact. They know they are paying too much for feed grain in the eastern provinces, and I suggest that anybody who thinks this is not so should go and take over a farm in any constituency in eastern Canada. I can take the Minister of Agriculture, or the supposed eastern minister of agriculture, to my constituency and put them on a farm. Up until six or seven years ago there were many farms in the province of Quebec that had been free of debt since our ancestors came to this country. Why is it that the same men who up until that time had been able to operate these farms and to have money in the bank today are in debt to the farm loan board, are in great difficulty and are wondering how to make both ends meet in order to pay their debts? These men are moving off the farms at the age of 40 or 45 and going into the city to try to find work. Yet we wonder why we have unemployment. Do hon. members think those farmers do not want to work their farms? They certainly do. It is no more pleasant to starve in the city than to starve on their own farms, but they are being kicked off their farms because they cannot even pay the taxes.

There is a possible solution, if the government wants to listen to one—and I would ask some of the government members to listen. I hear some talking by Liberal members. They can talk if they like. They did their talking for the 22 years preceding 1958. Now, perhaps the farmer will wonder why he is in such a mess. Instead of telling the farmer to look at his administrative problems, the government might tell him to take a pencil and calculate why he is in this position. If three-quarters of the farmers did this, they would not have lasted until now. They are always living in hope. When you make the calculation on paper, you destroy the castle of hope in which the farmer has lived, and you destroy any hope he has of pulling himself out of the financial situation in which he is today.

We need an eastern feed grain board for eastern Canada. This board should buy its grain direct from the Canadian wheat board, which sells grain for western farmers. If the law does not permit these direct sales, then the law should be amended. If this were done, we might have some control over the movement of wheat. At the moment we cannot follow the movement of wheat from western Canada to Port Arthur or Fort William and then through a zigzag line. We do not know where it goes. All we know is that the farmer is paying for it. We have agencies, and we do not want another agency added to the ones we already have. If you add another agency to the 20 we have, we will merely have 21 agencies. The twenty first agency will take a profit. What we want is one agency to negotiate with the Canadian wheat board so that we can buy wheat at the price at which the wheat board sells it.

Then, this agency should use the shortest and cheapest route to get the grain into the farmer's yard. The cheapest way for the farmer is the shortest way, and not this zigzag line the grain follows at the moment. If the grain is moved through an agency the government will have a certain amount of control and supervision over that agency. The minister wanted to have supervision of the grain by this agency. I can supervise somebody all I want, but if I have no power to stop him from going into a bank or a shop and robbing the place, I might as well not be there at all. We do not want a board to supervise; we want a board to act in distributing the grain and controlling the movement of the grain. Then, the representatives on that board could appear before the agriculture committee and we could question them.

Then, Mr. Chairman, the government could employ the eastern feed grain board to administer the subsidy which it gives to the eastern farmer, the subsidy on transportation. We do not know the amount of this subsidy. The government also gives a subsidy for storage and another subsidy for protecting the grain. If all these subsidies were given to the eastern feed grain board, then the price of grain to the farmer might be reduced. If the price were still too high, then the farmers could make representations to the government to the effect they needed greater subsidies to enable them to operate with a profit. We have farmers now who are willing to work, but you will not keep them on the farms, you will not keep their sons on farms, as long as this situation exists.

The establishment of this eastern feed grain board would eliminate these excess profits taken by the agencies who handle the grain in its movement from the lakehead to the farmer. This board could also have some measure of control over the feed mill. How much do we pay for feed at the moment from the mill, what we call chop? I believe we pay anywhere from $5.90 to $6.50 per hundred pounds. Can the minister tell me he knows what is in that chop? If there is a nickel's worth of some ingredient added, can the minister say at the moment that is sufficient reason for raising the price 75 cents? Does he know the situation? Let him look into it and establish a decent price for feed from western Canada for the eastern farmer.

Let us consider the position of the hog raiser in eastern Canada at the moment. If he raises 100 hogs and calculates the cost of feed and his time, he will find he is going to come out $150 in the hole. This amounts to a loss of $1.50 per hog. At that rate, is the minister or anybody else going to stay on the farm? The farmers are the ones who are classified. They are always the ones on the receiving end. If a farmer sells a hog, it is going to be classified as a class A hog, and he will be paid for it. If it is a class B, he will be paid for that. If he sells a class C hog, he will get the price for class C. When the Minister of Agriculture walks into a butcher shop, he buys a piece of pork. Did he ever buy a piece of class A, class B or class C? He might be buying a class C piece of pork but paying the price for class A. There are no distinguishing marks on that pork. However, everything the farmer sells is classified. The department classifies chickens, eggs and hogs. The farmer is a classified man, even in so far as the income tax department is concerned. He is also a desperate man, and he will be ruined if the minister does not take his responsibility seriously.

The minister can refer all he likes to the minister of agriculture for eastern Canada. If the government gave the eastern minister of agriculture responsibility for this feed grain board, and if it were operated properly, that would suffice for the eastern farmer. This would permit the eastern farmer to make both ends meet. Perhaps it would enable the eastern farmer to get a little more for his produce, and this would give him something above his cost of production. There are only two solutions to this problem, and I think the one I mentioned first would be the logical one. If a government agency for wheat sales was good for western Canada, it should be good for eastern Canada. If a stabilized price for wheat is good for the international wheat market, it should be good for eastern Canada as well. We should do these things at home before we put them on a worldwide basis. I do not blame this government for helping the western farmer; he needed it. Our greatest market for wheat is the export market. I believe, for that reason, we have forgotten about our internal market. It is high time we started thinking about it.

The eastern farmer sees ships containing millions of bushels of wheat going up the St. Lawrence destined for China, Yugoslavia and Russia. It is all very nice that we are selling our wheat, but the eastern farmers are grinding their teeth. Eastern farmers are looking at these ships with anxiety and with sorrowful hearts, knowing that we are selling wheat to Poland cheaper than they can buy their feed wheat. Farmers are wondering why the government is worrying about Russia and Yugoslavia, because they think it is time the government started worrying about the Canadian people on Canadian farms. Then, when Canadian farmers are satisfied, you can start selling wheat outside of Canada. This is the primary problem to be solved at the moment.

I do not understand a situation which prevents the eastern farmer from buying wheat directly from the wheat board. But you can do it with United States corn. In 1962-63, 35 million bushels of United States corn came into eastern Canada. There is one group of persons that can buy from western farmers directly; these are the feed mills and the western flour mills. Nobody else has such a privilege. In fact, when you buy corn from the United States you do not even need a permit; you only need to pay the duty on it. You can take all the corn you want. But you cannot do it with Canadian wheat. Before putting boundaries in your own country you should solve this problem. You are creating problems when you put a boundary between eastern and western Canada with regard to grain.

It is no better to put a boundary between eastern and western Canada with regard to grain than if you put one between the United States and this country and started imposing taxes and duties on every single import or export that went through. We have special exports and imports that are duty free. This is a normal thing and it is a good thing. This system is adopted by both countries. We need grain in both countries. Either take the wall away or set up an organization that can go through the wall. This would be an eastern feed board. Nobody else can go through this wall because of the law. Not only would there be supervision with such a board, but somebody would be responsible for control. In the long run this would bring good results. You will have to perhaps eliminate some things. It will be hard to push aside some of the people who have their hands in this business at the moment. There are some people at the moment who have no conscience in their dealings. You have some racketeers in this business. You have always had some. You had some in 1935 in western Canada. You still have some in eastern Canada. You will have trouble pushing them aside, but as long as you permit some of these rats that are eating at and chewing away the rules that apply to Canadian agriculture you will not solve this problem. Do not try to cover it by a Liberal or Conservative blanket. At the end of three or four years these rats will have eaten the blanket too and we will have to change the government. This government should try to arrive at a solution that on a long term basis would be stable and good for western and eastern farmers. Then you might have a higher prestige as the government of Canada; but at the moment your prestige is very low as far as the farmers in the eastern provinces are concerned.

If the problem is not solved before you next go to the Canadian people, you will have a great deal of explaining to do. And if it is not solved I will also be there to give the people the reason for your not wanting to solve the problem.

Mr. Fane: Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to have the opportunity this evening to speak on the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. I have waited since May 18 for just this opportunity. There have not been too many times when we have been able to speak about agriculture, and when we have said something we have not got very far with it. I am very sorry that the hour is so late. It is ten minutes after ten o'clock and I believe our sitting will finish at 10.30.

An hon. Member: Ten fifteen.

Mr. Fane: Therefore, Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be very brief, much more brief than I intended. Before beginning my remarks I want to say how impressed I am with the address of the hon. member for Megantic who preceded me. I think he has put forward as good a case for the farmers of Quebec as I have ever heard. For the life of me I cannot understand why, in the name of God, something has not been done for the farmers of eastern Canada to help them out over the years. We in the west were in exactly the same position up till 1957. Last year we heard a great deal about the fact that if a farmer in Quebec made $1,200 a year profit he felt almost like a millionaire. That is the way it was in the west with most of us up till 1957. There were many things I wanted to say to the minister, Mr. Chairman, but I will not say them because of the lateness of the hour.

There are, however, a few things I do want to point out. I want the minister to know that I realize how difficult it must be for him to live up to the tenets of a district governor of the Rotary club and be at the same time a minister in a Liberal government. This must be really tough on him. As we know, the first of the tenets of the Rotary club is truth. He cannot always have Judy with him. I wanted to make some remarks about the speech of the hon. member for Medicine Hat, but I think the hon. member for Acadia gave him a pretty good going over. I will come back to that hon. member a little later.

I wish to say one thing about the farmers of eastern Canada who buy feed grain. Perhaps people in the east do not know that the farmers of western Canada pay the freight on the grain, whether it is feed grain or wheat, all the way to the lakehead or Vancouver. It costs every farmer who sells grain 26 cents per 100 pounds to ship the grain down there. We have only that small amount to pay because of the Crowsnest pass freight rate, the agreement which gives us that freight rate to the lakehead. This rate is in effect because of agreements made in the past and because the transcontinental railway companies were well paid when they ran their railways through our country. They obtained one eighteenth of the land of western Canada in payment for continuing these low freight rates in perpetuity.

I should like to make some comments about the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and crop insurance. The government of the province of Alberta has not yet seen fit to do anything about implementing crop insurance in our province. I know they are talking about it this year, and they may do it some time. I think this government should make amendments to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act which will make its benefits available to all farmers. This would be fair to all. At the moment, in order to receive prairie farm assistance you must have a block of 12 sections in a rectangular block which has suffered a crop failure. I think this is too much. Who in the world ever heard of rain, hail, drought, or any other cause of failure, coming in rectangular blocks? I do not know why in all these years since 1939 a farmer is not eligible to receive assistance if he has a block of one section, because I can assure the committee that misfortune does not always hit 12 sections or, as it was before, 18 sections.

In 1962 in my constituency about 30 townships were flooded out. They had as much as 35 inches of rainfall in an area where 12 inches or 15 inches a year is a lot. The farmers lost their whole crop on the lowlands, but they did not get prairie farm assistance because some of them sowed a little on the hilltops and were able to harvest pretty good crops off the 10 or 15 acres that they sowed there. For the purposes of assistance the whole area was assessed on the amount taken off those little patches, and I believe that is a regulation which should be changed.

I would like to see this government honour its commitments to provide stabilized prices for hogs and chickens on a regional basis. I know this will be quite difficult to do, and I would also like to see the government fulfil its promise to provide a two price system for wheat. Most of all, I would like to see the Prairie Farm Assistance Act brought up to date and its provisions made more reasonable, so that all those farmers who have not been able to get assistance over the years will be able to get it in the future.

With regard to machinery prices, I do not know what kind of deal the minister hopes to work out on a rental basis for farm machinery. As a matter of fact, I would like to rent a nice big tractor myself at a reasonable price, as mine are getting a little worn out. It is the price of farm machinery which keeps the farmers in the west almost broke. For example, 20 years ago the biggest combine in the country could be bought for the value of between 2,500 and 3,000 bushels of wheat. It now costs something between the value of 9,000 and 10,000 bushels of wheat. It is a little better machine, a little more streamlined, but it will not stand up a darned bit better. It will do a little more work a little bit faster, but the increase in price is out of all reason because the price of farm produce has not gone up in ratio to the price of machinery.

I was a member of the agriculture committee when it was inquiring into the price of farm machinery. We did not get too far with it, but we did get a lot of information that might be of assistance to the minister who wants to have the government go into the farm machinery business. All I can say is that I wish him luck.

We in the west are very pleased that the government is continuing the practice that was instituted by its immediate predecessor in selling grain to countries who do not have the same political ideology we have. I have always said that if we do not sell grain to those people—despite what our friends to my left say—and that if we do not deal with them, then how in the name of God are we going to get to know each other? How are we going to get people to realize that there are really decent people behind the iron curtain? That is what I believe and that is what I have always preached.

If they need the grain, sell it to them. We sure as heck don't need it piled up on farms, in skating rinks, or anywhere for that matter. The big thing is that we are a producing nation, and in order to survive we have got to sell our products. That is what has to be accomplished, and that is what was instituted by the former government through its minister of agriculture, the Hon. Alvin Hamilton. It was that which put the farmers of western Canada on their feet.

The former Liberal government said "Come and get it. We raise the best wheat in the world, come and get it." We went to these people and we made the deals. We did not wait to deal with them until they came to Ottawa and said they wanted to make a deal. However, we are very pleased that this government is continuing that policy.

We are also pleased to note that a veterinary college is to be established in western Canada. For many years there has been a dearth of veterinarians, and it will be a very good thing to have this college.

I now wish to make some remarks about farm credit. I believe that my constituency, while it is one of the most prosperous and most forward looking constituencies in the west, makes more use of farm credit than any other area of similar size in the country.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder before you leave the chair if there would be a disposition to continue for a little while after the royal assent. I believe this would be a convenience, especially for some of the western members, because there might be some difficulty in bringing these estimates on again until quite late next week.

Mr. Churchill: That is quite agreeable to us.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Mr. Douglas: How long has the minister in mind, because this is a long day, and the banking and commerce committee starts at nine o'clock in the morning.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thought perhaps to about 11.

Mr. Douglas: Then only as long as it is to eleven.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

An hon. Member: No.

The Chairman: I understand there is not unanimous consent.

[Mr. Fane.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, there is.

The Chairman: Is it unanimously agreed?

An hon. Member: No.

Progress reported.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency, the Governor General, that this honourable house attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act.
An act to amend the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act.
An act to amend the Railway Act.
An act to amend the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act.
An act to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.
An act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.
An act respecting the appointment of Auditors for National Railways.
An act to amend the Old Age Assistance Act, the Disabled Persons Act and the Blind Persons Act.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May we have from the leader of the house the business for tomorrow and Saturday?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. I should like to suggest a slight modification in the order of arrangements for tomorrow, but, before I do that, hon. members will have noticed that the somewhat belated resolution respecting the worlds fair bill was advanced one stage today. We would not wish to have any debate on it, but if there were a disposition to dispose of it without debate so that the bill might become available for debate on Monday, it would be a convenience. Perhaps hon. gentlemen opposite could let me know before we sit tomorrow morning whether that would be possible.

As far as the departments are concerned, the Minister of Justice finds he has committed himself to do something in the afternoon, tomorrow, and it would suit the government much better if we could begin with the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. If we could take the Department of Fisheries and any other department whose estimates are already well advanced, up until about four thirty in the afternoon, I believe the Minister of Justice would then be available, and we could then go on with his estimates until they were completed. We would always have some other minister available in the event that anything more could be done that day.

On Saturday, as I announced earlier, we would start with the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. When these are completed, if the estimates of the Department of Justice have not been completed we would like to bring those back in the hope of completing them. After that we would take up the estimates of the Department of Public Works. That, perhaps, would be enough for Saturday. If the estimates of the Department of Public Works were completed on Saturday we would adjourn even if it was not quite six o'clock.

It being twenty two minutes before eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DOUGLAS—ALLEGED EXCESSIVE PROFITS OF SUGAR COMPANIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I will state my question of privilege, I will read a letter to substantiate that statement, and move a motion. For several months we have been told by ministers of the crown that the series of increases in the price of sugar has been due entirely to the rise in world prices and has not been due to any undue profiteering by the sugar companies of Canada. I have in my hand a letter from the British Columbia Sugar Refining Company dated November 29 and signed by the president. It says:

> Due to the higher prices for sugar that prevailed through most of the past financial year, the profits of the over-all company have proven to be greater than normal. Under these circumstances, the directors of the company have decided that a special bonus be paid to all permanent employees.
> The amount of each individual bonus has been determined by a formula which takes into account the length of service of each employee. Your bonus cheque is enclosed with this letter.
> I wish to point out that this payment does not establish a precedent as it is being made as a result of most unusual circumstances that may not again arise in future years. It is hoped that it will be accepted in recognition of your years of service through both poor and good years.
> The company has no wish to receive any publicity from making this payment and I would be obliged if each of you would keep it as confidential as possible.
> Yours very truly,
> Forrest Rogers, president.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Port Arthur:

> That in the opinion of this house the government should investigate the excessive profits made by the sugar companies of Canada due to the price increases imposed in 1963.

Mr. Speaker: Once more I have to decide whether there is or is not a good question of privilege. It seems to me, after due consideration, that the motion I have in my hand is a grievance in the nature of a substantive motion which, of course, requires notice. In view of the fact that the estimates of the Department of Justice should be up for discussion this afternoon I do not believe there is a bona fide question of privilege at this time.

Mr. Douglas: I wonder if the house would give unanimous consent to considering this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Perhaps I might just say a word about that. There is one great difficulty about this matter. This is a subject which could quite properly be discussed today when, as Your Honour has indicated, the estimates are considered, and it does seem to me that to have some other procedure intervening, particularly in view of the ruling of the Chair, would be to follow a particularly unusual course.

Mr. Douglas: On the point of order, I would point out that to discuss this matter on the estimates of the Minister of Justice would not give the house an opportunity to express an opinion. Moreover, this subject covers a wider field than the item in the estimates of the Department of Justice. However, having regard to the objection expressed by the Secretary of State, I will accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES OF CERTAIN PUBLIC OFFICIALS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, before you put this motion I wonder if I could say a word. The motion has to do, of course, with a salaries bill. I think there was agreement through the usual channels that when this particular motion came up we would do what we did with certain other motions about a week ago, namely that we would consider this matter as soon as orders of the day were reached and that by agreement Your Honour would leave the chair and the matter would be disposed of without debate so that the bill would be available for debate on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the procedure suggested by the Secretary of State is acceptable to the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (for the Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee later this day to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

Inquiries of the Ministry

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Canada Grain Act, the Financial Administration Act, the Income Tax Act, the International Boundary Waters Treaty Act, the National Energy Board Act, the Railway Act, the Salaries Act and the Tariff Board Act with respect to the salaries of certain public officials.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Twelfth report of standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace).

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUEBEC—ALLEGED MISCARRIAGE IN COFFIN CASE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house I want to make reference to a statement that has appeared in a newspaper, as a foundation for the question I am about to ask. The statement is to the effect that at the time the Coffin case came before the cabinet the advice of the then prime minister, Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, tendered to the then governor general of Canada, Right Hon. Vincent Massey, was followed by argument but that a constitutional crisis was averted. The report states that Mr. Massey did not want to sign the order to carry out the sentence of the court, and that he was only induced to do so by the eloquence and judicial wisdom of the prime minister of that day. It is stated that the story is based on a reliable source.

I ask the Minister of Justice this question. Is it not correct that under no circumstances does anyone reveal what passes between a prime minister and the governor general of Canada, and that the attitude taken by a governor general is never made public? If that be so, is the minister looking into the question of who this reliable source was or is?

An hon. Member: Peter Newman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was speaking of a reliable source. This is a serious constitutional breach, and it certainly should be looked into.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Well, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition prefaced his question with a fairly long statement, and then asked a question which I think should have been put and should be answered. I need hardly say that when I listened to the news this morning I was very disturbed by the statement. Let me say, incidentally, that I considered the question of the right hon. gentleman very serious, notwithstanding the fact that perhaps it was not so considered by hon. members on the other side of the house.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Lambert: Nonsense.

Mr. Chevrier: I considered it so serious that I decided to call up Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent, the former prime minister, and since the conversation with him was in French I should like to put it on Hansard in that language.

[Translation]

Mr. St. Laurent, to whom I spoke this morning, tells me that this story is ridiculous, that he did not see the governor general about that matter and that he did not intervene in any manner whatsoever.

[Text]

I also took it upon myself to communicate with the former governor general, Mr. Massey, who told me he had received a number of inquiries from the press to all of which he had stated the following, that the principle in these matters is quite clear; the government of the day is responsible for its decisions and the governor general, under our system, acts on their advice.

Since I am on the subject I should like to remind the house that after the Coffin appeal had been dismissed unanimously by the Quebec court of appeal and leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada refused, a reference was made by the governor in council to the Supreme Court of Canada under section 55 of the Supreme Court of Canada Act. The terms of reference were as follows:

If the application made by Wilbert Coffin for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada had been granted on any of the grounds alleged in the said application, what disposition of the appeal would now be made by the court?

The Supreme Court of Canada refused to intervene in the decision.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What was the division of the court?

Mr. Chevrier: The division of the court was five against intervening and two who dissented from that view.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): In view of the statements that are being made day by day regarding this whole incident, may I again ask the minister to reconsider his refusal to appoint a royal commission to look into this incredible series of disclosures?

Mr. Chevrier: With reference to that question, Mr. Speaker, which the hon. member has posed on more than one occasion, I may say I have inquired from the officers of the department on the question whether the sentence should have been commuted or allowed to take its course. I find that it was painstakingly investigated and considered in the Department of Justice and the cabinet in the ordinary way before a recommendation was made to the governor in council. The record does not, of course, disclose the considerations that moved the cabinet to its recommendation. That confirms what the former prime minister, now the Leader of the Opposition, said with reference to the fact that there could be in his mind no question of matters of this nature being divulged in any way whatsoever, and I am convinced they were not.

However, I can say that the file indicates that representations were made to the department prior to consideration of the commutation issue, upon alleged new evidence relating to several of the matters now being raised, including the source of money spent by Coffin after the date of the murder, a rifle allegedly seen in Coffin's truck, other Americans in jeeps alleged to have been in the vicinity, and jeep tracks at the scene of the crime.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, Mr. Speaker, in view of the latter part of the minister's statement, namely that these various matters were considered, does he not feel that in the public interest the suggestion which was made by the hon. member for Danforth should be considered? This kind of thing is very difficult. I am not here trying to do anything to embarrass the minister. This is one of the most difficult problems a government faces; in view of the discussion that has been aroused and the books that have been written, would the minister, even if he did not appoint a royal commission, appoint a group of people to go into this matter? The administration of justice in connection with commutations is a heavy responsibility as it rests on the minister, and everything should be done to reassure the public that no miscarriage of justice took place.

Mr. Chevrier: I agree fully that nothing should be done in any department, more particularly the Department of Justice, which would lead to a miscarriage of justice, but I have to say at once that the moment these questions were raised, officers of the Department of Justice gave and are still giving consideration to them. They are, as I indicated earlier, reading the book. My right hon. friend shakes his head, but all this has arisen because of the book that has been written, and I am sure the book must be read and considered in the light of the information which is in the files of the Department of Justice.

What I want to say in answer to the question of the Leader of the Opposition is that until I have a report from them—and at this moment I must say I am not satisfied that there is cause for further action on the part of the government—none the less I am not closing the door to an investigation, and the director who is in charge of the criminal law section of the Department of Justice, together with several of the officers of the department, are devoting their time to a consideration of this matter.

Mr. Scott: As a supplementary question, in view of the fact that the controversy surrounding this matter is seriously calling into question the faith of a good many people in the whole administration of justice, would the minister urge the officials to hurry up their reading of the book so we could get a statement on Monday?

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this matter is so serious that it should not be considered by way of hurry up proceedings, and I think the time that should be taken to consider this will certainly be time well spent. While I cannot add any more to what I have said, in view of the remarks that were made on the radio I will be prepared, as time goes on, to report to the house on the matter.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Could I ask the minister if he would consider having some independent individual or group of persons make this survey, rather than officials who may feel that the reputation of the department is at stake and may consequently be somewhat prejudiced in their decisions?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I think my answer to that question has been given already, namely that I am awaiting a report, and once I get the report I will be glad to look into the matter.

BRIDGES

THREE RIVERS—POSSIBLE REVOCATION OF ORDER IN COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport a question.

Since the government of the province of Quebec approved yesterday a loan of $1,100,000 to grant a first contract for the construction of the Three Rivers bridge, can the Minister of Transport say today that the government will not cancel the order in council passed by the former government about that matter?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member that information.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I think it is extremely important for the minister to reassure the house and the public in regard to this matter. I would like to ask another question of the minister. Is he aware that the provincial government had a cabinet meeting yesterday on this matter; that the minister of highways said the figure of $62 million quoted by the minister was simply ridiculous, and that the provincial government had given permission to the bridge corporation to go ahead whatever the decision of the federal government? I think it is extremely important that the minister should take his responsibility.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the minister has been trying to take his responsibility in this very important matter. The situation is that the province has jurisdiction over roads and the federal government has the responsibility for the St. Lawrence waterway. The difficulty in this matter is receiving careful attention. I am not aware of all the assertions made in the hon. member's question, but I did see a newspaper item indicating that a contract for some of the preliminary construction was going to be let. I have no more information on that point than is contained in the news item.

It is perfectly obvious to anyone familiar with the situation that a crossing of the river in that general area is very much needed and wholly desirable; but it is also equally important to this country that the government should not stand idly by if in fact the reports are to the effect that the construction and location of the piers in the way proposed will materially affect shipping in the St. Lawrence system, and in addition damage the harbour of Three Rivers, which has a very good record as a harbour and one of which I am sure the hon. member who asked me the question would be very proud.

I therefore feel that the matter has to be treated responsibly and not in the way indicated by the question. At the moment I can tell my hon. friend that my latest information is that the provincial government is having hydraulic engineers study the effects of the piers on navigation on the St. Lawrence, and concurrently there is communication going on between the bridge company and the Department of Transport on the engineering matters involved.

Mr. Balcer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it not a fact that the hydraulic engineers of the provincial government reported to that government, and that it was following this report that the provincial government made its decision yesterday? The minister of highways is the one who said that after consulting those engineers it was decided that the figure of $62 million was ridiculous. What I am afraid of is that the minister will give his permission after the bridge is built.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unless the minister has further information to give, it seems to me we have discussed this matter at considerable length and the minister has given all the information he could reasonably be expected to give at this time.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the last part of the statement made by the minister—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIlraith: —by the hon. member for Three Rivers requires an answer. The difference with this minister is that he does pay attention to competent engineers' reports when he sees them and tries to act responsibly.

Mr. Lambert: Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport a supplementary question?

Did he get recently a written communication from the premier of Quebec in this regard?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, if I understood the hon. member correctly he used the adjective "recent" communication. The answer is no.

[Later:]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that he said to the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) that he had not received any letter from the premier of the province of Quebec, regarding the Three Rivers bridge could he tell the house whether he has received any communication from the premier of the province of Quebec or from another minister of that province on that matter?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I did discuss this matter with the premier of Quebec on a personal visit. I did not say that there had been no written communications; I said there had been no recent written communications.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, you did not.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Can he tell whether that discussion contributed to hasten the hon. member for Three Rivers' project?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker. I hope it will bring about a proper solution of the difficulties in a way which will serve the interests both of the people in the communities adjacent thereto who require the bridge facility and of the people in Canada who require the shipping facility in order to keep the economy of this country operating at a high level.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chretien (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Does he think that a bridge will be built in the area of Three Rivers in the near future?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is the provincial government's responsibility, it is not the responsibility of the federal government; but I hope a bridge or tunnel will be built there in the near future.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE—MEETING WITH MANITOBA DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Minister of Transport which he can answer in his customary short way. Has a meeting been arranged for next week between representatives of Manitoba and the government concerning the T.C.A. overhaul and maintenance base in Winnipeg; and if so, can the minister give me the time, date and place?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the final arrangements were made in my absence and I was not told about it yesterday. I would like to check into the matter further.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was not an arrangement made weeks ago for such a meeting next Tuesday, and is not the Manitoba delegation coming?

Mr. McIlraith: There was a proposal for such a meeting, but I believe it was never made final.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Transport consult the Prime Minister and ascertain whether this matter was discussed at the last federal-provincial conference?

Mr. McIlraith: I am quite aware, Mr. Speaker, of some discussions with regard to this matter, but I was asked whether a meeting had been arranged.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere.

[Translation]

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, my question has already been put.

[Text]

REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT RESPECTING QUEBEC CRIME RATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It arises from a statement by Mr. McGregor, president of Trans-Canada Air Lines-Air Canada, reported in this morning's paper, which quotes him as saying that Quebec is already free and that there are more hold-ups there than anywhere else. Does the minister not think this is an insult to the province of Quebec and, if so, does he not think that it is time Mr. McGregor shut up—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Valade: I have asked the minister a question and would like his opinion in that regard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I did not want to say this at this stage, but I will now. In my opinion that question is completely out of order.

Mr. Valade: Then I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. As a member of parliament coming from the province of Quebec, and also on behalf of members from the province of Quebec in all parties in this house, we should feel insulted by the remarks made yesterday by Mr. McGregor about Quebec having the most hold-ups in this country. I question this statement. As a member of this house coming from the province of Quebec my question of privilege is that the Minister of Transport should ask the president of T.C.A. either to shut up and stop making these foolish statements or get out of his position.

[Later:]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice?

Could the minister tell the house whether it is stipulated in the Criminal Code that a province where there are more armed robberies has more freedom and independence?

[Text]

REQUEST FOR RETRACTION OF STATEMENTS BY PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have a question in French for the Minister of Transport.

[Translation]

Bearing in mind the general consternation brought about by the answer the minister gave in the house yesterday concerning Mr. McGregor's statement about the Caravelle, does the hon. gentleman intend to tell us clearly whether he approves Mr. McGregor's remarks?

[Text]

On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no point of order. I think the minister is quite right in not answering.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): On a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: The Speaker said there was no point of order.

Mr. Martineau: I am raising a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think it is up to all hon. members to use a little discretion with regard to this very touchy racial and linguistic subject. I do think we should have a sense of responsibility.

Mr. Martineau: That is precisely the reason I am raising this point of order. Yesterday the Minister of Transport stated in answer to a question, as found on page 5746 of Hansard:

> The government has no intention of forcing Mr. McGregor to retract any statement he made. As far as I know, he made no inaccurate statement.

A little later in answer to a further question on the same subject he stated:

> Perhaps I should look at the answer and the question and see if my answer was sufficiently complete—

Because of that statement and because of the circumstance to which Your Honour has just referred, I think the minister should give a clear answer to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has done a very good service in reading the answer I gave yesterday. I attended all the meetings of the committee, with one exception. Regrettably I had to miss one session because I was in the House of Commons dealing with legislation. During the time I was present at the committee meetings I heard no statement made with which I could disagree.

When I gave my answer yesterday it was quite apparent that there was a great deal of concern on the part of a segment of the members of the House of Commons. I believe it was the Leader of the Opposition who asked a question later in the proceedings yesterday, and I gave an answer then that was not so categorical.

Now, then, the committee evidence was not printed until late this forenoon. Part of it has been printed but the rest is not yet available. I propose to examine the evidence very carefully, because it is readily apparent to all who read the newspapers in both languages that there have been constructions put upon answers given in the committee which are not warranted. Indeed, this whole matter was raised in the committee, I think by way of a question of privilege, and the committee members took an active part in dissociating themselves from certain stories that appeared in one or two of the newspapers of that day.

Notwithstanding the statements of these hon. members, it seems that these newspaper stories have been printed as a record of what took place in the committee instead of the actual transcript of evidence. I want it to be clear that when I make these remarks about the press, they are not general. I believe the stories were confined to one or two newspapers, but unfortunately these stories seem to have been reprinted in other newspapers since and there is some real concern about the point raised by the hon. member. I propose to examine the evidence very carefully.

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker; may I ask the minister to identify those newspapers?

Mr. Pickersgill: No.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the reason is quite simple. The matter is one of the record of the printed proceedings of the committee, and I do believe that in a matter of this sort the record should be followed. I do not believe a subject like this should be treated lightly in the question period.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question—

[Text]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. According to Beauchesne a question of privilege should be raised as soon as the breach of privilege occurs, and it is for this reason

I am raising the question now. Just before the question was put by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, Your Honour said that the question referred to some racial or linguistic matter. I take exception to those remarks, sir—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member for St. Mary that he wait and read in Hansard what was said. The interpretation he is giving now is not, I suggest, a proper interpretation of the remarks I made.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister.

Can he deny or confirm reports now circulating to the effect that the next ambassador of Canada to France will be no one else than Mr. McGregor?

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to set the record straight on the point made a moment ago by the Minister of Transport.

The minister mentioned that members of the committee had dissociated themselves from an article published in a Montreal paper, La Presse. I must point out that we dissociated ourselves from the article as far as bilingualism is concerned, but that we agree with the remarks in that paper concerning the Caravelle aircraft.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I see no question in those long remarks.

TRADE

LUMBER—CANADIAN PROTESTS RESPECTING U.S. ACTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Could he tell us whether it is true that a confidential note has been given by our ambassador in Washington, Mr. Ritchie, to the assistant under secretary, Mr. Johnston, protesting against the United States legislation for the identification of Canadian timber? Could he state whether representations of the Canadian government have brought some results, up to now?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the matter to which the hon. gentleman refers has been one of very great concern to the government. As hon. members know, a bill passed the United States Senate and I believe is now in conference or perhaps has now been approved by congress which would require the marking of imported goods and particularly the marking of sawn lumber. We have already made strong representations to the United States authorities both on the bill as a whole and on the lumber amendment, pointing out the restrictive effects on trade which would flow from the enactment of this measure. We are continuing to be in close touch. Indeed, I believe our ambassador was in the state department, and I think in the White House, yesterday putting forward these representations.

We believe that the amendment which deals with sawn lumber in particular is contrary to obligations undertaken by the United States under the general agreement on tariffs and trade. We are hopeful, of course, that these representations will have the effect of there being non-approval of the legislation by the President, but it is too early to say whether we have been successful.

Mr. Martineau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say whether the note remitted by the ambassador is in the nature of a note of protest?

Mr. Sharp: Oh yes; the note is also one of protest, and we hope it will have the effect immediately of there being either the veto or non-approval of the legislation by the President.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan-Boundary): Mr. Speaker, has the minister been in touch with his opposite number in the United States?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we thought because of the great importance of this matter that our representations should be made at the highest level, which is higher than my opposite number in the United States.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TORONTO—CONVERSION OF STATION CJBC TO FRENCH LANGUAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State a question which comes from the rising controversy in Toronto. Knowing the minister's powers of anticipation, I would ask him whether he has any kind of a statement or explanation about this move of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in converting station CJBC into a French language station in the Toronto market and audience area.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have received no communication, official or unofficial, from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation about this matter. Therefore I am not in a position to provide any enlightenment to the house that has not already been provided by the press.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister, in view of published stories in this morning's Globe and Mail which indicate the seeming reluctance of the C.B.C. to make this move, whether he can assure the house that there were no representations or pressures exerted by the government to compel the C.B.C. to make this move.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can assure the hon. gentleman that so far as this member of the government is concerned there was no such pressure, and I am sure there was none from any of my colleagues. I say that because I am the official channel of communication between the C.B.C. and the government.

I must say, sir, that it has been the policy, I think with the approval of all sections of the house, to endeavour to see either through public or private efforts that there is broadcasting wherever it is feasible for any significant minority, either English speaking or French speaking, in any part of this country. Just as I would be exceedingly sorry if anything should happen to jeopardize English language broadcasting in the city of Quebec, so I feel as a Canadian that the very considerable French speaking minority in southern Ontario is also deserving of similar consideration.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question. I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council whether he had any discussions with Mr. Ouimet on this decision to convert this radio station CJBC into a French language broadcasting station.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State supplementary to the questions put by the hon. member for Port Arthur. I wonder if he can tell the house whether there is, or will be, any plan to protect the interests and the future of outstanding personages such as Bruce Smith, Walter Bowles, Ed Fitkin, Elwood Glover and others in connection with the planned transfer of CJBC.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will draw the question of the hon. member to the attention of the board of directors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, all but two of whom were appointed by the government of his right hon. leader.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to ask the minister if he knows whether the C.B.C. gave any consideration to whether this minority group could not be served by low power relay transmitters rather than by taking over a major station with an established market and audience.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be glad to put that question to the C.B.C. and when I get an answer I will give it to the house.

Mr. Scott: Would the Secretary of State investigate the rumour that the person appointed to manage the French station cannot speak French?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will not conduct a personal investigation, because apart from not having the constitutional authority I would doubt my competence to do so. But I will draw that question also to the attention of the C.B.C.

NEWS BROADCAST RESPECTING INCREASES IN ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege regarding the reporting of the proceedings of the house. I have here a copy of the transcript of the C.B.C. television news broadcast of last evening at eleven o'clock, which of course was a nation-wide broadcast. It says:

> The Commons has passed legislation increasing the old age assistance, blind and disabled allowances by $10 a month. The increases, passed by the vote of 117 to 100, bring the allowances up to $75 a month, the same as the federal old age pensions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the members on the treasury benches seem to think this is amusing. I hope the C.B.C. does not think it is amusing and I am sure the nation does not think it is amusing, that a crown corporation responsible for communications in this country should make a statement which is completely at variance with the facts.

Mr. Churchill: And false.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: These increases were not passed by a majority of 117 to 100; they were passed unanimously.

Mr. Churchill: That's right.

Mr. Douglas: The vote of 117 to 100 had to do with an amendment moved on third reading to refer the bill back to the committee of the whole to reconsider the matter of effective date.

Some hon. Members: Right.

Mr. Douglas: I think the record ought to be made clear, Mr. Speaker, and I think the minister to whom the C.B.C. is responsible ought to draw to the attention of the news department of the C.B.C. that it would be advisable to be more accurate in reporting the proceedings of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is an experienced member of this house, and I am sure he knows that this is not the first time that even an experienced member, in the guise of a question of privilege, has got his point of view put before the house.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I rise now on a question of privilege—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Douglas: I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Woolliams: Arrogance.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam would allow the hon. minister just to finish his short statement.

Mr. Douglas: No, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a question of privilege. I intend to stop the Secretary of State—

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Douglas: I intend to stop the Secretary of State—

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, sir—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, the hon. gentleman knows—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Douglas: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think in the circumstances the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam—

Mr. Douglas: I am rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order again.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Smith: You can tell the C.B.C. what to do, but you can't tell us what to do.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order.

Mr. Douglas: I am rising on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, and I do not intend to surrender the floor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: —I rise again on a point of order—

Mr. Douglas: I am on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, you have already given me the floor three times.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: I do not intend to allow the Secretary of State to impute motives to me. He is not going to be allowed to do it in this house.

An hon. Member: He didn't.

Some hon. Members: He did.

Mr. Douglas: He made the suggestion that under the guise of a question of privilege I was seeking to do something else. I rose, as is my duty as a member of this house, to draw the attention of the house and the country to the fact that there was an inaccurate reporting of the proceedings of this house.

Mr. Monteith: Exactly.

Mr. Douglas: I did so in all honesty, and I do not intend to have motives imputed to me by the Secretary of State. This has become a common practice with him, and I do not intend to ignore it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the last sentence of the hon. gentleman's remarks is about as clear an imputation of motive as anyone could possibly make—

Mr. Churchill: It is true.

Mr. Pickersgill: —in the suggestion my conduct is generally unbecoming. But I am not going to ask him to withdraw that remark at all—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —if that is his opinion.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not so thin skinned as to be worried—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and I do hope I might be allowed to speak now, after I have been—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Secretary of State should be allowed to finish his statement.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman suggested I had imputed motives to him.

Some hon. Members: You did.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I imputed motives to him, I withdraw the imputation. But I go back to the point that an hon. member familiar with the rules knows that a question of privilege can be raised about the official record of this house, but if the time of the house is to be taken up—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —by objecting, under the guise of questions of privilege, and attempting to correct every news report everywhere in this country, there would be no public business done at all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was astonished that an hon. member belonging to a party which has always advocated the independence of the public broadcasting corporation should suddenly have suggested that the government should discipline that corporation—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and I can tell the hon. gentleman that from this side of the house there is going to be no suggestion of censorship of the news on the C.B.C., to please the N.D.P. or anybody else. If the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation made a mistake, that could be referred to in debate by any hon. member at any time and no doubt they would do their best, as would any other reputable news medium, to correct that mistake. But this is not the first time the C.B.C. news has made reports of things that happened in this house that some of us did not like.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Smith: But this is fact.

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite often there are reports that some of us on this side of the house do not like either. It seems to me, sir, we have had about enough of being thin skinned this morning, and we had better get on with the public business and leave it to the press and the broadcasters to report us, without trying to interfere with the way they do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pickersgill: Again?

Mr. Douglas: —the Secretary of State has just quoted me as saying that I wanted the government to discipline the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not say that.

Some hon. Members: You did.

Mr. Douglas: That statement, as the record will show, is completely untrue. What I said was that I would suggest that the minister to whom the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is responsible should draw this to the attention of the news department of the C.B.C. That is all I asked. The minister could simply have said he was prepared to do that and the matter would have been dropped. I want to say also that this party is in favour of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation being independent, and it is because we want to keep it independent that I have raised this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this in any way, but I think when the hon. gentleman looks at the record he will see that I did not purport to quote him at all.

Mr. Knowles: You made that allusion.

Mr. Pickersgill: I made reference to my own opinion. Surely I am also entitled to give my opinion in this house without being restricted. But I did not attempt to quote the hon. gentleman, and I am not suggesting that I was attempting to quote him. If the record shows that I did, I will withdraw it at once.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would like to make a suggestion to all hon. members in the house, that we now proceed with the orders of the day.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State, in view of what has just taken place here. Does the Secretary of State realize that the last four times he was on his feet, he was on his feet without recognition from the Chair?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: The Secretary of State wasting the time of the house.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—WRECK OF SHIP CARRYING BEER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gustave Blouin (Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware that the Sainte Adresse was shipwrecked during a storm on the night of December 10 on the north shore of the St. Lawrence carrying a cargo of 1,100 tons of beer cases, and what steps does the government intend to take to salvage this important liquid cargo so that my constituents can have a beer for the Christmas holidays?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in view of this particular ship's cargo I suspect that the hon. member will have no difficulty in getting very quick consideration of this problem.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN MERCHANT FLEET

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In the light of the statement made by Mr. Roy Crabtree, president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, that export of Canadian manufactured goods will exceed $1 billion this year, does not the minister feel that the time has come to have a merchant navy more realistic and better adapted to our transportation needs?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I see very little relation between the two statements of the hon. member.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REPORTED STATEMENTS BY PREMIERS OF ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister arising out of the speech made by Premier Robarts of Ontario to the Hamilton Traffic Club yesterday, wherein he stated that the province of Ontario was going to take a harder or tougher line in the future with the federal government. In view of the alleged spirit of warmth and harmony following the last federal-provincial conference, I wonder whether he would inform the members of this house which of the agreements between Ontario and the federal government are particularly vexing or that the premier is unhappy about, so we can be prepared for this battle which is going to take place.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say what is in Premier Robarts' mind, but if he did say what my hon. friend quotes him as saying I could not blame him for wanting to try to drive a harder bargain for his province, in the same way as the premier of the province of Quebec is trying to drive a good bargain for Quebec. They are matters which will be discussed at the next federal-provincial conference on fiscal matters, and I have nothing more to add to the matter.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question. Is the Acting Prime Minister saying that the premier of Ontario has not communicated this information to the federal government before?

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not imagine that there has been any communication since the conference terminated its proceedings some days ago here in Ottawa.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question. Could I ask the minister whether his attention has been drawn to the statement of Hon. Eric Kierans in his speech to the Empire club in Toronto in which he attacked the fiscal policies of the federal government and criticized what he called the "increased economic nationalism in Ottawa"? I would ask the Acting Prime Minister whether these views are shared by government members from Quebec.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, my attention has not been drawn to that statement save and except as it has now. I have not the text of the speech, nor have I seen what Mr. Kierans has said, but I will be glad to look into it.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

Does the minister share the opinion of Mr. Lesage who wants to impose double taxation and put the odium on the ministers of the federal government?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I consider this question out of order for many reasons.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RETURN OF CLERK ASSISTANT AFTER ILLNESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I believe that what I am about to say is not strictly within the rules of order, but in this case I am sure the house will raise no objection. I am sure we are all pleased to see the efficient Clerk Assistant back in his place today after his illness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I wonder if I might thank the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka for drawing our attention to something which gives us an opportunity to recognize the immense debt we owe to the officers of the house and particularly to those who sit patiently and silently at the table throughout our deliberations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

CONSIDERATION OF PAY INCREASE FOR CLEANING STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I hate to intrude in these proceedings, but after all I have only risen 16 times. I wish to address a question to the very kindly Minister of Public Works. My question is based on certain conversations I have had with certain ladies very early in the morning. In view of the fact that the majority of the employees in this house coming under the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works received a recent increase in their emolument, and the cleaning ladies have been overlooked, will the minister look into this matter to see if consideration is being given to the needs of these worthy women?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I am going to look into this matter and some time next week report to the hon. member.

TRANSPORT

VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR FASTER UNLOADING OF GRAIN CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Since there is only a two bushel wheat quota in existence at many points in Alberta, and in the light of the fact that in Vancouver there are many grain cars lined up waiting to be unloaded, would the minister look into this situation and try to speed up the handling of grain at this port in order that these cars might be unloaded and released for further movement of grain from the country elevators in Alberta and western Saskatchewan?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have been in communication with the officials of the wheat board on a number of occasions with regard to expediting shipments, particularly of wheat, and the movement of grain both east and west. The chairman of the wheat board told me today by telephone that now the St. Lawrence seaway has frozen over for the winter it will be the objective of the board to achieve as high a degree of equalization as possible until the opening of the navigation season next spring. This will include points in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Mr. Smallwood: I am afraid that does not answer the question I asked. My question was directed to these cars which are lined up in Vancouver waiting to be unloaded. This has nothing to do with equalization. The point is that these cars are not being moved out for reloading.

Mr. Sharp: I meant to include that in my answer. I have been discussing this with the wheat board. They are conscious of the problem and they are doing everything they can to get a quicker turnaround.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): In view of the fact that a question I asked two days ago is really supplementary to the one just put to the minister by my hon. friend, I wonder if I may address it now to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I addressed it originally on Wednesday to the Minister of Agriculture, who I see has now left the house.

My question was this. Are the minister or his departmental officials considering approaching, or making plans to approach, farm co-operative organizations, wheat pools and line elevator company officials to improve elevator and other facilities so that Canada, with a surplus of grain, could meet the demand for western wheat? That question was in line with what the minister said in reference to not being able to complete the contract with China. We have the wheat, but we do not have the facilities to deliver it.

Mr. Sharp: I have already been in touch with the groups mentioned by the hon. member, and I have consulted the wheat board in an effort to speed up movement out of Vancouver. However, even though we have experienced some of these difficulties—difficulties which have persisted for years and years under the administration of my predecessor and of his predecessor, too, in charge of the wheat board—I can assure the hon. gentleman that we shall achieve our targets, which involve the movement of tremendous quantities. Indeed, the chairman of the wheat board feels we shall exceed even the 550 million bushel figure which was originally cited. So any of these difficulties are relatively minor in comparison with the enormous movement which is going on now, movement which is the result of very close and energetic co-operation among the railways, the elevator companies and all parties concerned.

INDUSTRY

RAYMOND, ALTA.—REPORTED INTENTION TO CLOSE SUGAR REFINERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Did the minister receive a delegation from Raymond, Alberta, concerning a decision of the British Columbia Sugar Refining Company to close its plant in that city, and has his department taken any action in this matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The answer to the first part of that question is yes. It is not a responsibility which rests on the federal government as such but in my capacity as Minister of Trade and Commerce I have been having conversations with some of those concerned with the production and refining of sugar in that area.

Mr. Prittie: Has the restrictive trade practices commission received a submission from the mayor and representatives of Raymond concerning the decision of the company to close its plant in that city?

Mr. Sharp: I am told so, but I would have to inquire and report to the house.

HEAVY WATER PLANT—SUGGESTED LOCATION AT ESTEVAN, SASK.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): I have a question to direct to the Minister of Industry. In view of the fact that his department is now reconsidering the letting of the contract for the production of heavy water and the location of the plant, would the minister once again take into consideration the representations made by the industrial development council of Estevan, Saskatchewan, to have the heavy water plant located there?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I can assure the hon. member that if any review is made, all these considerations will be taken into account.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REPORTED APPROACH TO STUDENT AT UNIVERSITY OF SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Last Friday, in the absence of the Minister of Justice, I directed a question to the Prime Minister with regard to charges that the R.C.M.P. were making security investigations at Regina college. The Prime Minister said he would make inquiries. I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister has any information to give the house.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Yes; the Prime Minister did speak to me about it, and I saw in Hansard the question which was put by the hon. member.

I inquired about the matter, and I find that the commissioner of the R.C.M.P., having made inquiries at my instance, has given me his denial that the R.C.M.P. approached any student as alleged. There was a chance meeting in the coffee shop among a student of the university, an officer of the R.C.M. police and an employee of the Regina Leader-Post, which was not instigated by the R.C.M. police and did not lead to any such proposal by them.

Mr. Orlikow: I wonder if the minister could make inquiries of the principal of Regina college, who made some comments about this matter, to see what information he might have?

Mr. Chevrier: The point which strikes me about this whole affair is that if there were four people present at the so-called interview there would not be much purpose in inquiring of the principal of the university, because this seems to me to confirm what the commissioner has said. In any event, I am sure the principal of the university would have made representations if something untoward had taken place.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MARITIME UNIONS—ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS RESPECTING TRUSTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware of press reports to the effect that the trustees of the maritime transportation unions have made certain suggestions to the shipping companies as to improvements they might make in their procedures for bargaining with the employees? If the trustees need any backing in this matter, is the government considering giving such backing?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the question asked by my hon. friend gives me the opportunity to answer it and several others that have been raised in connection with the trusteeship. I am aware that the trustees have made it known that they intend to undertake consultations with the employers. Beyond that I have no information.

With respect to the desire that has been expressed to have an interim report from the trustees, I find that it is the wish of the trustees to be allowed to carry on for the present without making a report, with the assurance that they will make a report for presentation to parliament early in the new year, or as early in the new year as possible. Their view is that their work can be undertaken more successfully without the necessity of making an interim report at this stage, which I thought I might be able to have for the house last week.

The Leader of the Opposition asked about a questionnaire reported to have been distributed to the seamen. According to my information, no such questionnaire has been prepared or sent to the seamen.

With respect to the question asked by the hon. member for Danforth, no transcript is available of the press conference held recently by the trustees.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED INTENTION TO CLOSE RADAR STATION AT ST. SYLVESTRE, QUE.

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence, I wish to direct a question to the associate minister. Could he tell us whether a final decision has been reached with respect to the elimination of the radar station at St. Sylvestre, in Lotbiniere county? If so, can he inform the house of the steps that the government intends to take in relation with the lay-offs that will result from the elimination of that radar station?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this matter is still under study and no decision has been arrived at yet.

WORLD FAIR

INQUIRY AS TO RECEIPT OF COMPLETE PLAN OF PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works in his capacity as the minister responsible for the world fair. On December 6 the minister informed the house that he expected a report from the corporation about its plans and projects for the fair. Could he tell the house whether he has received that report yet?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker, but the over-all plan will be given to me some time before December 20 and surely before the holidays.

Mr. Howard: Will the report as to plans and projects be made public or tabled in the house?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, a bill is now before the house—

Mr. Knowles: A resolution.

Mr. Deschatelets: A resolution. If my hon. friend would wait until we take up the study of that resolution I will answer all questions pertaining to the world fair.

Mr. Howard: What happens if the minister does not have the report by then?

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENT ON 1962-63 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In his recent conversations with the Canadian wheat board officials did he ascertain whether an interim or final payment would be made soon on last year's wheat pool and, if so, when?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have had some informal discussions with the chairman of the Canadian wheat board about this matter, and I think it will be his recommendation that the accounts should be closed out some time in January or perhaps in the first part of February. As the hon. gentleman knows, sales have been going very well. I might add in relation to the previous answer I have given—I overlooked it—that notwithstanding all the troubles we had on the St. Lawrence seaway arising out of labour disputes and strikes, we have in fact fulfilled every obligation that we undertook.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HAMILTON—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE BY MEMBER FOR MEDICINE HAT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege that affects me as a member and also as a member of the Queen's privy council. On page 5767 of Hansard for yesterday I find this sentence attributed to the hon. member for Medicine Hat:

> Never before in our history has any member spent so much out of public funds in order to advertise a political party.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that this is an imputation against my personal honour and against my activities as minister of agriculture. I have to ask not only for a complete withdrawal but, I would suggest, a very strong apology as well.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, if anything I said yesterday can be construed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle as being offensive to him personally, I withdraw that. However, the statement he has quoted is my opinion, and I have a right to express my opinion in this house.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): A very serious question of privilege has been raised by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. The words spoken by the hon. member for Medicine Hat in this house constitute a reflection on a member of this house. Let us look again at the sentence, sir:

> Never before in our history has any member spent so much out of public funds in order to advertise a political party.

This is a most unusual statement to be made by any hon. member. The only recourse, sir, is a complete withdrawal.

Mr. Olson: It just happens that I believe the remark is true. If it happens to be offensive to a particular member of this house, we could surely change the word "member" to "former minister" or something of that sort. However, I do not feel under any obligation to withdraw something I said which I still believe is true.

Mr. MacEwan: Prove it.

Mr. Hamilton: I suggest that if the hon. member insists that he believes this statement, he has no choice but to move a substantive motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): In so far as the question of privilege is concerned, when the remark was made yesterday by the hon. member for Medicine Hat I was quite astounded, because what he is saying is that the former minister of agriculture has misapplied public funds. In essence he is making a charge of fraud by misuse of public funds. Citation 108, paragraph 3 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, says in effect that libels on members have also been constantly punished and scandalous charges or imputations directed against members are equivalent to libelous charges.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has raised a substantial question of privilege, and not only should there be a complete withdrawal but a very strong apology as suggested. Certainly, in the brief time I have been in this house any honourable member would withdraw such charges without any question at all.

Mr. Olson: Of course the hon. member who has just spoken has made an imputation that I am not honourable, so I could raise another question of privilege right now.

Mr. MacEwan: That is a question.

Mr. Olson: If the hon. member for Qu'Appelle takes definite objection to the word "member", I could withdraw that. The implication I intended, and which I think was clear to all hon. members in the house when the statement was made, was that he, along with his government, had spent a great deal of public funds to advertise the advantages the farmers of Canada would receive from the Conservative party, and I still believe it.

Mr. Speaker: Unless some other hon. member has some really soothing remarks to offer at this time, it happens very often that in the course of debate members get overheated, get carried away with remarks, with the emotion of the situation, and with the argument they are trying to present. This morning the hon. member for Medicine Hat has certainly cut off any individual reference to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: At least that is the import of what I have understood.

Mr. Churchill: He has made it worse.

Mr. Speaker: But on the other hand it seems to me that the question having been raised, having been aired, it would be a very gracious act if the hon. member for Medicine Hat would care to rise and just soften the effect of some of the words he used this morning.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to withdraw anything that the hon. member can construe as having been an allegation directly against him personally.

Mr. Hamilton: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but this goes beyond any allegations against me personally. He has intimated that I have misused public funds.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Greene: That is your conscience talking.

An hon. Member: Withdraw that remark.

Mr. Hamilton: I have no choice, Mr. Speaker, but to ask the hon. member for Medicine Hat not only to withdraw what he said about me in a personal way but to say without any equivocation that he removes from me any imputation about the way I handled public funds in connection with my department.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, if I had made such a statement I would withdraw it, but I did not.

Mr. Speaker: May I point out that Beauchesne, citation 108 (3), says:

> Libels on members have also been constantly punished: but to constitute a breach of privilege they must concern the character or conduct of members in that capacity, and the libel must be based on matters arising in the actual transaction of the business of the house.

I would hope that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle would feel that the matter has been straightened out. If not, now is the time to say so.

Mr. Hamilton: I have no choice but to say I am not satisfied on the second point, namely that I misused public funds of this country for the good of the Conservative party. The hon. member for Medicine Hat repeated that statement again this morning—

Mr. Chevrier: He did not.

Mr. Hamilton: —and I have to ask that it be completely withdrawn, and I would hope he would be gentleman enough to apologize for it.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I think this matter refers to something that happened in the house quite some time ago concerning the ARDA program, and before any decision is taken by Your Honour I think there would have to be some reference to the debates that took place some time ago. I think there was nothing personal in the remark that was made, but Your Honour will remember there were charges some years ago when the ARDA program was put forth, for example, that something was published and circulated in rural communities concerning the ARDA program before it had been passed by parliament. At that time charges were discussed in the house which in my opinion would warrant some of the implications in the remarks of the hon. member for Medicine Hat.

It also seems to me that we become very touchy in relation to party responsibilities in relation to points of privilege, and if the hon. member for Medicine Hat withdraws the personal implication, I think the party implication that was made at that time warranted the statement the hon. member made in the house yesterday.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have just one brief word on citation 108 (3) which Your Honour has read. There obviously is a direct imputation by the hon. member for Medicine Hat as to the misuse of government funds, and what the hon. member for Timiskaming has just said refers to the publication of an ARDA pamphlet. There is no difference between that kind of pamphlet and the pamphlet covering the $500 house bonus issued under the Minister of Labour. The imputation has not been made in that regard, and should not be made in this regard by the hon. member for Medicine Hat; but citation 108 (3) says that a libel on an hon. member to constitute a breach of privilege "must concern the character or conduct of members in that capacity, and the libel must be based on the matters arising in the actual transaction of the business of the house."

The business of the house in this instance concerned the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, on which the hon. member was speaking, and there is no doubt it affects the conduct and personal character of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. I do not know why the hon. member for Medicine Hat cannot be gentleman enough to get up and withdraw the charges he made.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, the last speaker has suggested that the hon. member for Medicine Hat had said that there was a misuse of public funds. I would like him to read that from what was reported in Hansard. I have not read that, and I would like him to read it where it says that. The hon. member is imputing something to the hon. member for Medicine Hat that is not in the record.

Mr. Speaker: I still have the question to decide, and I would like to hear from the hon. member for Qu'Appelle whether he is satisfied with the explanations given and with the statement of the hon. member for Medicine Hat. These things concern the privileges of all hon. members of the house and are indeed very serious in principle. In the present instance they may not be that serious, but generally speaking, in principle libels against members, and purported libels, are serious and must be attended to.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, it is because the subject is so serious that I cannot add anything more to what I have said. I would hope you would take this subject under advisement and come to a conclusion based on what has been said here today. I think the sentence I quoted out of Hansard is my complete case, both on my personal side and on my position as minister. I would ask, in view of the reluctance of the hon. member for Medicine Hat to withdraw the two charges, and in view of the charge made by the hon. member for Timiskaming who spoke in this debate today, that you consider the evidence you have before you and decide your future course at your leisure.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think that is an excellent suggestion, that the matter be taken under advisement and that no more time of the house be taken at present. Because it is a very serious matter, I hope, when Your Honour does so, Your Honour will also examine some speeches made in the house by the senior hon. member for Queens, Prince Edward Island, also imputing motives to another privy councillor.

Mr. Speaker: Acting on very sound advice, I will take the matter under advisement.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, before we proceed with the orders of the day I have a question for the Secretary of State. I want to ask the Secretary of State what imputation he was placing on the hon. member for Queens, in his absence, when he suggested to Your Honour that you examine some statement the hon. member for Queens had made. Let the Secretary of State identify his complaint with regard to the hon. member so that we may have the facts in front of us.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Queens is a very experienced member of the house and I am sure he will be able to protect himself. If he puts that question to me I will be very glad to answer it.

PUBLIC SERVICE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES OF CERTAIN PUBLIC OFFICIALS

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (for the Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Canada Grain Act, the Financial Administration Act, the Income Tax Act, the International Boundary Waters Treaty Act, the National Energy Board Act, the Railway Act, the Salaries Act and the Tariff Board Act with respect to the salaries of certain public officials.

Motion agreed and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in committee of the whole on a certain resolution. Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Chevrier (for Mr. Pearson) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-128, to amend the Canada Grain Act, the Financial Administration Act, the Income Tax Act, the International Boundary Waters Treaty Act, the National Energy Board Act, the Railway Act, the Salaries Act, and the Tariff Board Act with respect to the salaries of certain public officials.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

House in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

40. Grant in aid of the development of the international peace garden in Manitoba, $15,000.

The Chairman: House again in committee of supply, vote No. 40 of the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I want to spend a little time on this question of the national museum and the situation which exists there and has existed for some time. I think it is interesting to note that there has been trouble and dissension in this organization since 1956; at least it began to appear in 1956. I think it is also of interest that there have now been three different administrations involved, the St. Laurent, the Diefenbaker and the Pearson administrations. Therefore I do not think one can say that this is really a one party issue. I tend to feel it is not necessarily a weakness in the ministerial approach, because we have had a succession of ministers of northern affairs and national resources and the situation has kept on developing. In other words I think there is something inherent in the administration of the museum and the personalities within the permanent administration which is the cause of quite a few of the difficulties.

This tale of the national museum is one of the most complicated I know. It is not a very large organization as government organizations go, yet it has been filled with more malice and sensation than any other part of this department.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I would draw his attention to the fact that we are now on vote No. 40, which deals with the national parks branch of the department.

Mr. Fisher: I was aware, Mr. Chairman, that the preliminary votes had passed, but since you did not call them I thought I would take advantage of your omission and go ahead with my remarks. My remarks are entirely in connection with the national museum and I should like to get them over if I can, not so much to get an answer from the minister—because I am sure he will give one—but because I have to be in another place. I wonder whether I could have unanimous consent from the committee to complete my remarks on the national museum at this time.

The Chairman: It that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

National Museum of Canada—

120. Administration, operation and maintenance, $1,229,500.

Mr. Fisher: Thank you very much; I appreciate that.

Mr. Dupuis: Give us the same break sometimes.

Mr. Fisher: I have been asked by the parliamentary secretary whether I would give them the same break some time. I am sure the parliamentary secretary knows what a co-operative group of people we are. We have just had recent evidence of that during the question period.

This museum trouble has broken out into the open again with some opinions expressed by the former director, Dr. Loris Russell. The minister in a sense tried, I will not say to slur over the issues raised by Dr. Russell, but he did not really come to grips with the problem. I have a mass of material I could go into, everything from archaeologists' bibliographies to the whole question of the kind of administrative controls which have existed in the museum, but I should like to try to approach the subject from some distance.

It seems to me—this is an honest opinion which I should like to put before the minister—that in all the information I have been able to gather, the one weak point in the whole business in a personal way relates to the now deputy minister of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, Mr. Côté. In fairness I would like to explain why I think this is so. Ever since Dr. Rousseau was approached to come to the national museum, ever since it was decided that in order to bring Dr. Rousseau in, even though he was a botanist, and put him into the human history branch, thus effectively putting someone who should, from his background at least, have been on the natural history side, we have had two natural history types, Dr. Russell and Dr. Rousseau, heading two departments. Ever since that time the difficulties have developed. Mr. Côté was deeply involved in bringing Dr. Rousseau into the museum, and he was also deeply involved in all the recriminations which followed. As I understand it, I think the minister will acknowledge that although the previous deputy minister, Mr. Robertson, was not exactly at arms length with the museum, the main channel through which the museum was administered by the department was Mr. Côté as acting deputy minister.

I suggest that a great many of the problems we have had with the museum must arise from some kind of inadequacy in the objectives and the kind of approach he has had to the museum. I am not sure that this situation has been cleaned up at all. Dr. Rousseau was, in a sense, given the gate. Dr. Russell has resigned, I take it from his account in the paper, to consider his situation because of the fact that he was not made over-all head. We have had a historian brought in from the University of Manitoba, for what good reason I am unable to fathom. Without being uncomplimentary to this gentleman's academic record, about which I have made some inquiries, there is nothing, it seems to me, in Dr. Glover's documents which would indicate he is the man we should have been looking for to fill this particular post. He has not, within an academic framework, had a career of the kind which would lead him to be the head of a department of even a relatively small university. The field in which he specializes has no more relevance to the museum and its purpose than a host of other studies.

Once again there seems to be a reaching out to get someone to come in without any real explanation of how his training and background would permit him to give the kind of leadership which this part of the museum will need. The move might be interpreted as being in response to the criticisms of the Canadian historical association; at least it is suggested by Dr. Russell that there were such criticisms. Dr. Russell seems to feel that it was criticism by the historians which prevented him from moving up into the top position.

I do not know what views the minister has, or may have, as to the role a museum should play; whether it should have a split capacity and deal with human history on the one hand and natural history on the other. I do not know whether he thinks the emphasis should be on research or on display. But I know there has to be a clear policy in this regard, a policy spelled out over a number of years in terms of dollars and cents in the estimates in order to achieve the desired objective, because there is bound to be competition.

We have the example of a similar situation in the federal civil service where the national library and the public archives are under one director. I have heard criticism of this arrangement because of the fact that the aims of the archives and the aims of the library are not on all fours; there are differences in emphasis. It seems to me that if we cannot create a separate crown agency, a body with a genuine feeling for the subject matter itself, we should consider separating these two branches completely, that is the human history and the natural history branches. We might, on the one hand, have a natural history or a natural science museum, and on the other hand have the kind of museum which emphasizes human history and which is related to anthropology, archaeology, sociology and subjects such as those.

The pettiness involved in the situation we are considering is enormous. It so happens that one of the key figures involved in this museum question is a friendly acquaintance of mine. He has left the museum now. He is an archaeologist. I know from my contacts with him that the world of the archaeologist and the anthropologist is filled with controversy. There are different schools of thought. There are personality clashes entering into the field of scholarship. Their world is not a wide one, and in Canada we do not have a great number of people working in either of these two fields. We tend to bring into this country the controversies which split the academic world in the United States in these two fields of study.

This being the case, it does not seem to me there is any possibility of breaking out of the present rut unless we get an outstanding man, a world figure, to fill this particular post. It is apparent there will always be restiveness in the fields of anthropology and archaeology, particularly if work in the area of research has to be under the direction of a straight historian. I think only the most broadminded historian, someone with the highest of status in terms of international reputation, would be acceptable to the people working in anthropology and archaeology in this field.

I suggest to the minister that Dr. Glover, with all due respect to his accomplishments, hardly fills this role. He does not straddle the field of history in Canada or in North America with any genius. But, I should like to suggest, it is someone with a personality and reputation of this kind who is necessary if we are to bridge these other conflicts and establish a successful human history museum.

Another thing which disturbs me about the national museum is this. Dr. Russell suggests that politicians have been too much involved in this whole matter. I am trying to figure out who he means by "politicians". Is it Mr. Lesage, who in co-operation with Mr. Cote went to such lengths to get Dr. Rousseau into the museum? Is it the former minister of northern affairs, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who played politics with the museum? We do not know. Is it the present minister who is playing politics with the museum? Is there a suggestion that the appointment of Dr. Glover is a political appointment? We do not know. These are questions which the minister does not necessarily have to answer in terms of the past, but I think he should project a future in which no political interference will be brought to bear in connection with the museum's affairs.

There have been a number of appointments to the staff of the museum which intrigue me, particularly in the field of archaeology. I do not intend to discuss them at length because I have put a number of questions on the order paper in connection with them.

The Chairman: May I call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that it is one o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. When the committee rose at one o'clock we were considering vote No. 40. The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I have been checking what I said before the lunch break, and I think it could be construed that I was unfair to Dr. Glover who was appointed to look after the human history aspect of the museum. I wanted to make it quite clear that when I said I had checked into his career I was informed by certain people that in historical circles he has not been one of the giants of the history profession in Canada, but he certainly has done good work and has at least several outstanding publications to his credit.

One other conclusion I came to was that I should have put on the record part of what Dr. Loris Russell said in his interview the other day in Toronto in order to put the thing in focus. I think it would look pretty scrambled on the basis alone of my preceding remarks. I am taking these quotations from the Ottawa Citizen of two days ago, December 11. This is Dr. Russell's story:

> From 1930-37 I was at the national museum and I left to go to Toronto as a University of Toronto professor and a member of the Royal Ontario museum staff. In 1950 I was approached by the then chief curator of the national museum, Dr. F. J. Alcock. He said he was going to retire and wanted me to succeed him.
> I came to Ottawa and while working at the national museum I learned in 1954 that there was a movement under way to make Dr. Jacques Rousseau the director. In fact, Dr. Rousseau had been promised the job by people who forgot it was a civil service position and would be awarded by competition.

I should like to interject here that I understand from information I have received from several sources that the deputy minister, Mr. Côté, was involved in this whole arrangement to bring Dr. Rousseau here. I do not know what were the main reasons for it. I do not know whether it was an attempt to strengthen French Canadian representation at one higher level in the civil service, but he was involved in it. As a matter of fact I understand he even helped Dr. Rousseau prepare his application to the civil service commission.

In 1956 the position came up for competition, and I won it.

I understand from information I have that Dr. Russell won it on the basis of the fact that he had the advantage of overseas service. All other things being equal, this gave him an advantage. Dr. Russell goes on to say:

There was a big hassle and the events that followed were slightly incredible. They were stuck with somebody they didn't want.

To get out of this mess they decided to split the national museum into two separate sections —the Canadian museum of human history with Dr. Rousseau as director and the Canadian museum of natural history with myself as director. They used the Massey commission report—

When he says "they" I presume he is talking about the senior administrators and the politicians of the day, which in this sense would be Jean Lesage who was minister of the department and, I would also assume, the deputy and assistant deputy ministers of the department.

They used the Massey commission report of 1951 to justify this act. The division would never have been made if I hadn't won the competition. It was an excuse to get themselves out of a mess. I found this out years later and I can't be contradicted—I know this to be a fact.

I also know it to be a fact. This is an example of what happens when you try to do something in order to achieve purposes that do not quite fit into the administrative structure. Dr. Russell goes on:

I protested this on grounds that you need a strong museum, not a lot of small uninfluential segments. I said this division was bad in 1956 and in 1957 the government could not get this bill creating two museums through the House of Commons. It was a piece of parliamentary clumsiness. They muffed it.

Again, I understand that by "they muffed it" he really means the minister and the senior officials.

So they created two branches of the national museum with both of them holding equal powers. We got along well for two years with no quarrels, no friction, although some people on the staff were working for us both.

[Mr. Fisher.]

I want to interject here that they created these two branches and put a man in charge of the human history branch who was not really experienced in that field. I think this is important to show how far the government and the administration of that time were prepared to wrench things to achieve, I suppose, although I am not exactly sure, a better French Canadian representation in the senior levels of government.

There is some poetic irony here because the people in most bitter and violent disagreement with Dr. Rousseau were the same people who used their power and influence for him in 1956.

I take it he means Mr. Côté, who helped to push Dr. Rousseau into this position and then was the main instrument in getting him out when things turned a few years later.

Dr. Rousseau was forced out and it was a bitter blow to him. As far as I know we parted friends and I hold no grudge.

The human history branch was in a dreadful state and deputy minister Gordon Robertson asked me to take over as a single director of a single museum. I agreed to act as director of natural history and acting director of human history.

But I was instructed to function as a single director—at no increase in pay—and I said I would not be bound to serve under a dual directorship again.

In the next few years I made it my main business to rebuild the human history branch. I added new staff, leaned over to assure the staff that I was not less interested in their work than the natural history branch. Finally we had a very nice organization flourishing with first class men on the staff.

But in 1960 I began to worry. The centennial year was coming and nothing was being done. There was a lot of talk but no concrete proposals.

I made it my centennial project to collect Canadiana on my own authority. We needed historical exhibits—ours were all anthropological. Everyone told me I was ten years late—now they say there wouldn't be anything if I hadn't started on my own authority.

To add to our problems the present national museum building was condemned in 1961 and public works said it would have to come down. We began to plan for a national museum with a great store of Canadian historical exhibits. The cabinet approved a series of yearly grants of $50,000 for this search for articles.

Now, in Ottawa, we have the greatest collection of Canadiana anywhere. It represents the history of the people—tells how they lived. I wasn't looking for bargains. I wanted to get the material before it had all gone into the United States.

It was all there—almost completely telling the story of Canadian life from the seventeenth to early twentieth century.

It was beginning to create a lot of excitement amongst historians. I had tried to get a historian on the staff—but I wanted one who would appreciate my point of view.

This is where I ran into trouble. The historians began to complain. They weren't interested in museums but they wanted a professional historian to run the historical section of the new museum.

Many of them were critical. I wanted to show people how Canadians lived.

I think it is interesting that Dr. Russell wanted to do this because this was not his field primarily. His training was on the natural history side of things. I continue to quote from the article:

> The historians wanted to show people relics from famous battles—they wanted to tell the military and political history all over again. I say this is best done in books.
> Under their fire I became a little tactless and wrote a critical article saying historians were not interested in the museum. I said a historian must work with a qualified museum expert to create a great historical museum.
> Apparently you do not talk to historians like this. It caused a great ruckus and one member of the Canadian historical association—

I have heard that this was Dr. Hilda Neatby.

> —wrote the Prime Minister saying Russell must go. One letter was so abusive they wouldn't show it to me. I'd like to challenge that person to come out and say to my face what he said behind my back.
> Great pressure was put on to get me out. An advisory committee to the minister was appointed and it appointed a subcommittee to advise it. These committees decided the new museum's historical section would be strictly military and political with only a passing reference to social history. I had lost that one.
> In December of 1962 it was decided to appoint a new director of human history with equal power to mine—back to the old scheme which failed before. I hoped they would eventually appoint a director general and I decided to wait for a year.
> Two qualified museum experts were among those who entered the competition for the job. When the smoke cleared—

I want to emphasize this phrasing.

> When the smoke cleared Professor Richard Glover of the University of Manitoba won the job. He is a qualified historian but he has absolutely no museum experience and this was in the terms of reference for the job.

I should like the minister to explain to us something about that competition. I understand that a gentleman from Nova Scotia and another gentleman who was in the historical names section were also involved in the competition. I think in the light of the charges that have been made it would be a good idea if the minister indicated where these two people fell short and where Dr. Glover came through in this particular competition. I think it is especially fair that this should be done in the light of the things which happened between Dr. Russell and Dr. Rousseau and what that competition led to. I continue to quote:

> This changed the situation. I met the new deputy minister Ernest Côté at the earliest opportunity. He has great enthusiasm and is a capable administrator but he is neither a scientist nor a museum man. His answers to me were frank but they were all wrong as far as I was concerned. I decided to resign.

I want that point to be remembered in connection with my suggestion that the root of much of the difficulty in the museum is the role played by Mr. Côté as administrator. He is a capable administrator and he has great enthusiasm, as Dr. Russell says, but he is neither a scientist nor a museum man. I would judge from some of the things in which he has been involved that he has no clear idea where the museum should be going. I should like to continue reading:

> I resigned because the situation had become impossible. You cannot have a museum of political and military history without arousing controversy. You have to pay homage to French Canada when you mention Canadian history and some segments do not concern French Canada.
> Whether they like it or not they will have to use the material I have collected. And I personally do not think the new building will be ready in 1967.
> The national museum must have unified direction and the director must have the status of the deputy minister and have access to the minister direct.

I should like to ask the minister whether these suggestions by Dr. Russell, which have already been put forward by other people, are not worth considering. If I understand correctly, Dr. Lamb who is head of the public archives and the national library, has the status of a deputy minister. It certainly seems to give him executive power, and this would be a means of having the control that has been missing in most cases. I continue to quote:

> He must be a man with a blending of scholarly status and museum experience and he must have the confidence of the entire staff. The national museum should be a senior museum in Canada and people must be able to look up to it. They cannot look up to it now.
> Political sniping at individual museum staff members must stop. Certain M.P.s have been doing this since the Rousseau incident. The best help the M.P.s can give the museum is to leave it alone. If individuals are not protected from outside political attack it will kill the museum as sure as an axe in the head of an ox.

I quite agree with him in connection with that last point. I probably have been one of those he is thinking about in terms of placing questions in order to find out what has been going on there. This is the reason I should like to close with the emphasis that we should, as much as possible, leave the past history of the museum alone.

However, I consider we cannot do that unless we get some fairly clear indication from the minister as to what he is going to do, for example, about putting the museum under a single head, or else making a completely clearcut situation as between the natural history section and the human history section. I think we need to know what the minister's feelings are, particularly in the field of archaeology and anthropology, about the difference that is envisaged in the research function and development of archaeology; whether there will be a research program right across the country which is led by the national museum's branch, or whether there is going to be a double function. Again, I do not believe he has given us as yet any clear answers.

I would hope that after the minister gives his policy, and the direction the museum is going, the political sniping will stop. We have a wonderful example here, over the years since 1956, of what a mess a place can get into when politicians and senior administrators at the top try to bend an institution in order to achieve objectives that have very little to do with the objectives of the institution itself. That is the way I read the Rousseau case and all the consequences that flowed from it.

I suggest that the minister has not had a great deal of time to determine what should be done with the museum and the kind of direction he is going to give it, but I would also suggest he has not got much time to make the decisions, because this is one of the responsibilities that rest upon him. For that reason I would ask him to be as clear and unequivocal as he can in response to these points and, further, if he cannot be definitive, that he undertake to do so within a certain period of time.

I have one final point. It seems to me Dr. Russell indicates he has no wish to come back but I still say, in view of the commendations I have heard with regard to his administration, that he should be kept in mind as someone who can still make a great contribution, and I would not assume that his role in the Royal Ontario museum is necessarily a die cast forever.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I understand that the hon. member for Port Arthur was discussing this item dealing with the national museum of Canada by permission of the committee. Is it the wish of the committee to continue with item 40, or stay with item 120?

Mr. Herridge: I want to say a few words about the national museum.

Mr. Woolliams: I would go along with that, because my own remarks will be in reference to national parks.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we conclude the debate on vote No. 120, dealing with the national museum of Canada?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I have known something about the museum and its operations for some time, particularly going back to the session of 1956-57, at which time I received information from a newspaperman, now deceased, as to the peculiar manoeuvering and finangling that was going on in so far as the museum was concerned. As a result, when the bill was brought in to split the museum in two I opposed it, and we were able to block the passage of the bill because the election of 1957 was then about to be held. However, in spite of that fact they went ahead and split the museum into two parts without having any legislative authority to do so, and I think the troubles of the museum sprang from that action.

I do not propose to go back over the history of the matter and rake up a lot of old straw. However, I do think there is no question but that the difficulties in the museum, which have continued from that time, sprang from the attempt to divide it into two parts, and all the difficulties and jealousies came into being at that time. I do not think there is any point in attempting to attack officials, either past or present, over what took place.

We would like to see the museum put on a good, sound basis so there will be no continuation of the troubles in future. In order to accomplish that I think it is essential to restore the museum as one united organization with one head, a director general; and we must get the right man for that job, a man who knows museum work and who has the personality and ability to handle the job. We should then give him the authority to go ahead and organize the museum in an effective manner. There will be trouble in the museum until action along that line is taken. I do not want to take up any more time of the committee in discussion, but I hope that course of action will be followed.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to take advantage of this item to say a few words, because I have been interested in this subject and problem for a number of years. Anyone who has any knowledge of the affairs of the museum knows there has been a very unsatisfactory state of affairs in it for a good number of years, under the former Liberal government and under the previous government, and unfortunately this state of affairs continues.

My interest has been prompted as the result of conversations with a good number of people in Ottawa who are interested in the museum, and as a result of conversations with other people interested in it. I discussed this matter with the staffs of other museums in Canada, and have some correspondence on it. It is obvious that the state of affairs that exists in the museum is a subject for discussion in museums across Canada by people who are interested in this question, and it is also a subject for discussion by people in other countries.

In that connection I want to read a letter which I received from the director of the Instituto Interamericano dated November 13, 1963. It reads:

Dear Mr. Herridge:

We have been interested in the affairs of the national museum of Canada for some time since our organization is dedicated to the study of man and his activities, past and present, and the dissemination of knowledge thereof. We have kept in touch with the museum's stormy affairs through the Canadian press. I enclose a copy of our current newsletter that you may see how things look to us at the moment.

He then draws my attention to page 5, which is a critical analysis of the circumstances that exist in the museum.

While our area of interest is world wide, we are perhaps best informed on the U.S. and Latin America. For this reason we are curious about certain points and facts which seen uniquely Canadian.

First of all, why is it that the museum is administered by the northern affairs committee?

That question is asked by people in Canada too.

It would seem more logical for it to be administered by the secretary of public education as in Latin America or by an autonomous board of directors subject directly to the prime minister or the parliament. I admit my unfamiliarity with Canada's internal affairs.

We have received a considerable amount of printed material regarding the location of the site of the battle of the Long Sault where Dollard des Ormeaux gained fame. Our material may have been somewhat biased but it appears to us that the evidence is overwhelmingly on the side of the site excavated by Thomas E. Lee. Yet we understand that officially the site is located elsewhere. Is this a political matter as one of our sources said?

That too has been asked by a number of persons in Canada.

A third point involves the museum staff. It is rather odd that twice within four years there should be wholesale resignations either voluntary or forcibly. Is this due to internal stresses or is it also a matter of politics as also has been suggested by published articles?

I suppose that all of this is really none of our affair but we are intensely interested and greatly involved in anthropology in the Americas and this museum matter affects Canadian anthropology gravely. Moreover, we have always had a very warm feeling for Canada and her people.

Sincerely yours,
Carl B. Compton, director.

There have also been articles in the French Canadian press dealing with certain aspects of the museum's operations and organization, and numerous articles in professional publications that would be read by people interested in museums. There has been a lot of questioning as to the type of organization that exists and as to the most unfortunate circumstances that exist between various members of the staff. I have heard the most amazing stories about people who are well paid by the government of Canada, arriving at the museum at eleven o'clock and doing an hour's work. I do not know whether they are true or not, but I had dozens of letters written to me in Ottawa, and something has been brought to my attention recently that shakes my belief in the validity of information given to this house by the officials.

I have definite proof that one publication filed by Mr. Taylor as a professional publication, a publication to which a man could lay claim because it was part of his professional publications, was nothing more than a commercial pamphlet distributed in this country and in Great Britain for the purpose of selling tents and camping equipment. This well paid official had one paragraph in this commercial pamphlet, which we were informed in this house, in reply to questions asked by the hon. member for Port Arthur was a publication.

This gives rise to lack of confidence, Mr. Chairman. In fairness to those who are doing their duty, those who are unfairly criticized, and so on, I am of the opinion that this situation requires a thorough investigation. It would be too much to expect the minister to rise in his place and give the answers to all these problems immediately. He must have time to thoroughly investigate the situation. I suggest there should be an investigation into the organization of the museum, after the minister has taken the advice of the best persons available, as to the functions of the staff, the duties they perform, their hours of work, publications, and things of that sort; in fact, all things related to the organization and operation of the museum. I think the minister must have time to organize his inquiry, as it were.

I suggest, in conclusion, that it might be a good idea to have the estimates of the museum referred next session—there is not time this session—to the committee on mines, forests and waters, where the officials could be examined and the committee would have the opportunity to call qualified persons from other museums. Then we would be in a position to treat the matter properly, to be fair to the staff concerned and sift out, shall I say, the weaknesses. This committee could then do something as the result of advice from qualified persons. They could make some recommendations to clear up this situation once and for all, so that in the future Canadians can be proud of their national museum, its operations and the way it is carried on.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I have been listening with interest to the discussion on this item, vote No. 120, and it seems to me most of the discussion thus far has been concerned with a period in the museum's development that goes back to the years 1956-57 when, as hon. members have indicated, there was a series of difficulties which finally had to be aired in the House of Commons. Some mention has been made of the fact that there has been continuing interference by the politicians with the activities of the museum. I believe this came from the statement reported in the press the other day which purported to come from the former director, Dr. Loris Russell.

I should like to introduce another note into this discussion. This has nothing to do with interference by politicians as being germane to the difficulties of the museum. That is another difficulty. I refer to the problems of housing the national museum. Over the past few years there has been a chronic shortage of space and at least attempts to formulate plans that would overcome this difficulty. Hon. members will recall that following the evacuation of the old Victoria building by the national gallery and the Canadian geological survey it was felt that at long last the old building would be adequate to meet the reasonable needs of an expanding museum. Unfortunately that decision had no sooner been reached than it was discovered that the Victoria building was unstable and not suitable for the purposes that fall to the development of a national museum.

I happened to be the responsible minister when this further crisis arose. At that time the departmental officials immediately tackled the problem of finding suitable and adequate housing accommodation. At the time of the change of government I think hon. members will recall there was legislation before the house to provide for a completely new plant facility to be built in time to coincide with the observance of Canada's one hundredth birthday in 1967. It seems to me this is one of the essential problems to be overcome in creating in Canada a museum that is worthy of a nation like Canada. Therefore I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the sooner we in this house get on with the legislation that was proposed last year to provide for adequate facilities, the sooner we can come to grips with some of the other problems of the Canadian national museum.

During the three years I was responsible for the national museum I believe I enjoyed reasonably warm and cordial relationships with the dedicated personnel there, particularly the director and assistant director. Once the decision had been reached to establish adequate facilities it seemed that many of the major difficulties had been overcome. It was disturbing to me to find that once again difficulties—and this was information I gleaned from the press—had occurred amongst the very competent personnel engaged in museum work. What is at the basis of those difficulties I cannot say, but I repeat that we must move with all haste toward the passing of legislation that will make it possible for the parliament of Canada to provide adequate facilities to house Canada's national museum.

There have been expansions in recent years on what might be called an ad hoc basis. The national aviation museum was officially opened in 1960. I am sure anyone who has had the opportunity of visiting that museum, which is housed at the present time in the terminal building at Uplands airport, will come to the conclusion that here is a display of Canadian aviation history which is worthy of our nation. I am sure that once we have provided through legislation for the type of accommodation that is necessary, there will be a further unification of the various aspects of museology. The aviation museum, for example, will be brought under the same roof as the museum of natural history and human history. The accommodation that was contemplated at the time of the change in government had this in view. The aviation museum would have become the nucleus for a museum of science, something that is entirely lacking in the present organizational set-up. Under discussion as well was the possibility, or the probability, of bringing the war museum under the one roof that would be provided. This might again be one aspect of the museum of science to which I have already referred.

I do believe it is essential, if the organizational structure of the Canadian national museum is to be rational—if it is to be organized in the best interests of efficiency—to have an over-all director with separate heads of staff for the various branches that would be required to provide leadership in the various areas of Canadian history.

I would be interested in hearing the minister's comments about the present state of the legislation which was contemplated last year, and how soon we might anticipate its being brought before this house so that it might be dealt with by parliament as a whole. As has been pointed out in the letter quoted by the hon. member for Kootenay West, it is not in the best interests of Canada to have these periodic explosions amongst the highly trained scientific personnel which, of necessity, must be the kind of people employed in museums, disturbances which receive considerable airing in the public press and the type of critical comment which has been placed on the record by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Just by way of a further thought on this matter, the hon. member who has just spoken raised a point, which is of some significance, about the department of northern affairs being the most suitable branch of government to have supervisory and administrative responsibility for the museum. We all know that the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources came into being in 1954 and under its wing were included all kinds of interesting activities, which found a home in the department because they were largely orphans in other departments. As an example of this kind I refer to the Canadian government travel bureau, which for a number of years came under the purview of the minister of northern affairs and which a year ago was returned to the Department of Trade and Commerce because it was thought that this was a more suitable department to handle these activities. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that some thought might be given by the government and by the very competent officials who have worked with the government on these matters as to whether northern affairs is the most suitable departmental home for an activity of this kind.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the previous speaker, and I must say it had not occurred to me that there was anything inappropriate in the national museum being within the purview of the department of national resources, which I have always felt was the wing under which such a repository or record of our national resources, human and otherwise, should properly come. I should like to hear the present minister make some comment on this matter of museum accommodation referred to by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. I think this is a very important question in the consideration of some of the matters raised in this discussion.

One point I should like to make is this. I am not at all sure that our national museum, with much interest focused on it, should be accommodated in the city of Ottawa or its environs. Such little real association as I have had with the museum as a member has arisen out of the desire of some of the people on the west coast of Canada to have brought back to the west coast some of the items which years ago were taken to Ottawa. A great many of our Indian peoples would like to have back some of their potlatch regalia which was removed from them; they say it was confiscated, although I have understood from time to time that the authorities in Ottawa tend to claim they were in fact paid for it.

In view of some of the discussion which has taken place regarding some of the unhappy aspects of the affairs of our national museum, I should like to say that in course of dealing with this question I had occasion to discuss it both with Dr. Rousseau and Dr. Russell. If there were any differences of outlook or any disturbances within the inner workings of the museum I should like to mention, so as to introduce a more cheerful note into the discussion, that as far as dealing with me on this particular question was concerned they concealed those things very well, and I found my dealings with them very satisfactory.

I should also like to say that as far as I was able to determine their outlooks on this particular question were similar. I met with a good deal of sympathetic consideration for the idea that there was a place for the functioning of our national museum outside the boundaries of our capital city of Ottawa. I put forward this point of view at this time in the hope that the present minister will deal sympathetically as a matter of policy with the suggestion that provision be made to assist the growth and development in other centres of the country of an interest in museum affairs, and that a national museum, centred in Ottawa and operating under wing of the minister of national resources, should consider as one of its functions the stimulation of the growth and development of interest in museum displays in a smaller way in many centres of the country.

One idea which appeals to me and which I explored in discussions with both the gentlemen to whom I referred a moment ago was the idea of providing small displays for some of the smaller centres, the title to which might well remain with the national museum but which could be placed on loan in such centres for a period of time. I hope, no matter what changes may be made in the organization and structure of the museum, that this idea will be kept in mind and that the policies which are developed, in addition to providing adequate accommodation for central displays here in Ottawa, will be such as to encourage opportunities for Canadians in other parts of the country to have a sense of proprietary interest in some of our national heritage which properly belongs to museums both national and local.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, a few words only concerning vote No. 120 which involves an expenditure of $1,229,500, that is an increase of $7,000 compared to last year.

If we examine the estimates, we notice that this amount is broken down as follows:

Natural history	$309,143
Human history	330,244
Common services	383,499
Canadian War Museum	64,875
National Aviation Museum	141,739

As I said, there is an increase of $7,000 over last year.

This amount is allocated to the administration, operation and maintenance of the national museum of Canada. That is why we are of the opinion that the Canadian people, not only in Ottawa but throughout Canada, should know about the national museum and what it should mean to them. The national museum should be an attraction for visitors from this country and elsewhere.

As for visitors from outside, I am under the impression that, the moment they get to Ottawa, they think the federal parliament is the national museum. That is just because they cannot tell what the national museum is all about. They do not know what is going on there. As a matter of fact, there are many who ask themselves whether the national museum is not to be found in the other place.

Mr. Chairman, it is all very well to speak of the history of the war and of aviation, but I think the history of Canada should also have its exhibits in the museum. There, one should be able to go over all the history of our country, from the beginning of the colony, in 1534, to this day. Something attractive should be set up, considering the amount of money devoted to this item and which the Canadian people is required to pay.

I heard a while ago a member from the official opposition state that politicians must not interfere in any way with the national museum. Mr. Chairman, I have full confidence in the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) because I feel he is not himself a politician and will not interfere with the administration of the national museum.

On the other hand, I repeat my view so that this museum will have great significance for visitors and the Canadian people as a whole.

And if some day the national museum has to be expanded we might then suggest to the minister to find room there for the orthodox economists and sociologists who are still advocating the maintenance of an obsolete system in Canada. When that happens, visitors will be extremely interested to see those people mummified at the national museum.

Mr. Laing: It might be the wish of the hon. members that I endeavour to make some reply on each main item as we go along rather than leave all my observations to the end. I want to say at once that I appreciate very much the interventions which have been made by hon. members, the criticisms which has been expressed and the advice which has been given me for my direction in the future.

I would like to say to the hon. member for Port Arthur that I thought he was more prone to point at the flat tire than to push on the wrench. That, however, is his responsibility and I am quite prepared to take the observations he made. I am going to admit at once that the museum has been the most unhappy part of a department which otherwise, I believe, has been a very happy ship.

This is a situation which has existed over a number of years. Like the hon. member for Calgary North, I do not wish to thrash old straw, although I would have no objection to doing so if there were more grain in it. I think probably his suggestion that we must have some strong central direction of the museum is very sound. I think some of our troubles have arisen from the fact that there was more than one skipper on the ship. I think we shall probably need to make an investigation of whether an exceedingly competent scientist is always an exceedingly competent administrator. I am rather of the opinion that the reverse may be the case, and I think in the arrangements we shall have to make our first responsibility will be to find a competent administrator. I think a competent administrator, one who has a knowledge of human beings, will attract to him people who are extremely well qualified in the work of the various branches which are required within a museum.

With respect to this work, I should like to impress upon members of the committee that these are no longer just dusty studies of bygone days. They have a real application to the times in which we live. These things are not all in the attic. Many of them are in our living rooms and could be the source of worth while developments from a number of viewpoints.

I wonder how many members of the committee have been to our museum recently. I would like to suggest that it be a required visitation on their part; because in these years when we have had all these troubles, the last five or six years, a tremendous amount of magnificent work has been done by the men there. I could mention the displays in the Eskimo hall, the hall of mammals, the marvellous collection of Indian masks and the Lord Bossom collection, all of which are a tremendous asset to our museum.

An hon. Member: And the mineral collection.

Mr. Laing: Yes, and the mineral collection. The suggestion was made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni that we should send parts of our exhibitions around the country. I think that is a splendid idea and one which could be worked out. We did this when part of the Baddeck exhibition was sent to the Vancouver Pacific international exhibition early this year, and it would seem to me that from time to time we should consider taking portions of these splendid exhibits and sending them to various parts of the country.

I do not want to revive the animosities and distress surrounding the severances and departures of recent years, because I do not think it would improve the position of those who have left. But I do accept the situation as being a serious one. Others including Dr. Russell—I think six or seven men with doctorates—have left us in recent years. I return to the belief that we must have a unified central administration in the hands of a competent administrator, and I think we shall start from there. So I can promise those members who have contributed beneficially to this discussion that I intend to pay particular attention myself, as minister, to the affairs of this branch. I have studied book after book on the history of the museum in recent years, and they make a doleful tale.

As I say, I intend to pay particular attention in my capacity as minister to trying to establish some peace there and to provide for some progressive work to be done. I can assure hon. members that the days of surgery are over but the days of medication are about to begin. That is a promise I can make to the committee, and I think it will work. I suggest to hon. members that they can hold me responsible a year from now, by which time I think we shall have made some progress.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I just have one question. Some years ago the museum housed a Kootenay canoe, a type of canoe not found anywhere else in North America. That canoe collapsed. The officials of the day having responsibility ordered another one to be built by one or two of the surviving Indians who could build such a canoe and $400 was paid for it. I have paid several visits to the museum to try to find the canoe but without success to date. Can the minister tell us where it is?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I will find out for the hon. member where his canoe is. I think he has implied that he supports the view of my predecessor in office, that we simply have to get a new building and new accommodation and the sooner we do that the better. I want to remind the committee that from 1916, when the fire took place in the central building here and when some of the functions of parliament were removed to the museum building as it now exists, until the year 1960 we did not have sole occupation of that building for our own purposes. We have a great number of excellent things that should be on display to the Canadian public, items that would attract scholars from other parts of Canada to make studies of them in this atmosphere, but they are hidden away and will remain hidden away until we get a new building. I want to tell my predecessor that the general plans for the building are all drawn. We require only some detailed plans. I am informed by my officers that the building can still be ready to be opened in late 1966 or 1967, and that will be our objective.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now return to the consideration of item 40, national parks branch.

40. Grant in aid of the development of the international peace garden in Manitoba, $15,000.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I realize that everyone is quite anxious to get some of these estimates through but I should like to say a few words particularly about Banff national park, which is situated in my constituency of Bow River. This year more than a million people visited Banff national park, I believe, and one of the problems that no doubt troubles the departmental administrators and will trouble the new minister as it has troubled other ministers arises from the premise spelled out in the National Parks Act in relation to what goes on in the parks.

I do not think I could refer to two better authorities than the Glassco royal commission report, volume 2, page 37, and page 2 of the Oberlander report entitled "Urban Development Plan". I wish to ask the minister some particular questions, but before doing so may I say to him seriously and with the greatest respect that there is some uneasiness among the people in the parks with regard to statements that have been made that they feel are not correct. I have asked the present minister certain questions on the orders of the day. On some occasions he has denied the reports that have appeared in the newspapers as to statements made by himself, and on other occasions he has left the matter up in the air. In view of these facts I say to him seriously that there is some uneasiness among the people who serve the tourist trade, which is probably the second major industry in Canada.

Before dealing with this question I think it is interesting to put on the record the basic problem that frustrates me as a member of parliament representing Bow River, and other members representing constituencies where there are national parks. It is a problem that must frustrate the administrators and the minister as well. I read now from page 37 of volume 2 of the Glassco report:

The National Parks Act declares that these lands are "dedicated to the people of Canada for their benefit, education and enjoyment" and further stipulates that they be maintained "so as to leave them unimpaired for the enjoyment of future generations".

If I may interject there, Banff national park is not a small area of land. It contains more than 87 square miles. I believe I read somewhere some months ago, possibly in the Glassco report, that the park is the size of Prince Edward Island. So it is not a small area of land. The few acres that are taken up by the Banff townsite are so small that they are like a pinprick on mount Rundle. Therefore when we are realing with Banff townsite and Banff national park we must realize they are two distinct things, one being the townsite that serves tourists and the other the park itself.

This is what the Glassco report says, and this is the whole crux of the problem and why there has been friction from time to time between members of parliament and the minister, and between members of parliament and the administrators. I see the officials are in their places this afternoon. Probably the new minister will have a similar experience with regard to members who represent park areas because the problem is difficult. The report goes on to say:

This is somewhat of a contradiction in terms, and the provision of amenities and recreational facilities for the five million people annually visiting the parks has, of necessity, brought about physical changes in the countryside which rob it, in part, of its virgin character.

In other words, if we are going to have the world Olympics at Banff national park we have got to make up our minds what we are going to do. An island is being rebuilt for the world's fair, and some very definite changes are going to have to be made quickly with regard to Banff townsite and also the skiing site.

Are we going to run slam bang into the proposition set forth in the National Parks Act that these lands are dedicated to the people of Canada for their benefit, education and enjoyment? What that means I am not just sure. I know there is no judicial interpretation, and the administrators have interpreted these words as they have seen fit, as their ambitions and visions have dictated from time to time.

Let us take a look at what the Oberlander report has to say on page 2:

Established primarily for the preservation of the natural landscape and for the protection of native wildlife, they are to be "maintained and made use of so as to leave them unimpaired for the enjoyment of future generations".

I do not think that the fact that we allow some development of the townsite in order to serve tourists is going to run afoul of the preamble and intention of the act. In fact, I do not think the act says what some people believe it says. In my opinion it is being interpreted very narrowly, and from reading the Calgary Albertan recently I am inclined to think that the new minister agrees with me in that regard. But there is somewhat of a contradiction, because if you are going to attract tourists you must provide some facilities.

The extreme interpretation of the act is that the park should be fenced off so as to preserve those funny bears with their queer posteriors. Hon. members will recall when that came up in the house. That is the extreme viewpoint. The other viewpoint is that the park should be kept in its natural state as far as possible but that motel, swimming, camping and other facilities should be provided for tourists at certain places.

Even at the time when the minister of the department was a Conservative I said that when the Rogers pass road was opened there would be more people coming to Banff each year. The fact that more people visited Banff national park this year was not because there was a world's fair last year in Seattle. The fact is that people come to the parks of Canada for three reasons. First, they like Canada. Second, they like our parks. Third, they come because the dollar is pegged at 92½ cents and they have more money to spend.

I think the administrators have a big say in the operation of the parks and I do not want to be unkind to them, but if I was critical at all it was because they lacked the vision that all these people were going to come to our parks. I do not want to give my source of information, but I have been told by a person who has lived in the parks for years, a person who is not in the restaurant business, the hotel business, the motel business or any other business whereby money is made out of tourists, but is in a capacity of some authority, that at one time people had to sleep in their cars in the park.

They could not find camp facilities because the camp grounds are crowded. I want to pay the former minister a compliment. There was a large development took place in connection with camp grounds under the previous administration. However, I must go this far and be fair by saying there is still not sufficient space provided to satisfy the number of visitors coming to Banff national park each year. Surely, after people drive 300 miles or 400 miles from the United States, after they have read these attractive ads that are costing the taxpayers of this country money, it is not fair to make them drive another 80 miles to the city of Banff to get accommodation.

This is a problem that was mentioned in the Glassco commission report. There seems to be a conflict as between some people as to what the act means. Once we clear up that conflict, then we are on the road to getting satisfaction in these parts. I think that is the major problem. I will go this far: I know that everyone in the department is doing the things he honestly believes are correct. However, I say with the greatest respect that some individuals seem to have lacked vision in considering this matter.

I should like to take this opportunity to ask a few questions. I said there was some uneasiness in the parks with regard to the statements the minister has been making in the Albertan and the Calgary Herald. These statements have scared the people in the parks, and they have scared people like Mr. Bruce who has several times tried to get the Liberal nomination in that riding. It is not just the Conservatives who are scared, but the Liberals as well. Why are these people scared? Let me tell the minister this: For some time the department used to give 20 or 21 leases. Then, these leases were extended to 40 years or longer. This was the security of tenure on lands of persons who had invested in motels, restaurants and other facilities to look after the tourists. They made their investment in buildings, and they would have the security of tenure provided by these leases.

Now, recently, the minister stated that there was some question of the elimination of these leases. I do not know whether or not the minister made that statement, but it was reported in a Liberal newspaper, and because it was reported in a Liberal newspaper the Liberals believed it and so did the Tories. First of all, I think the minister should clarify that situation. Then, in that same article there was reference to the fact that people might have to pay land taxes. They have never paid land taxes in this area. These statements have unnerved the people. They expect an answer from the minister.

There is one matter that is sub judice, and I do not want to get into a court case. However, I do want to say that there is freehold land in the parks, and a large amount of it is owned by the Canadian Pacific—I do not know how many hundreds or thousands of acres. I want to say now that the Canadian Pacific does an excellent job of serving people from the United States and other parts of Canada who go to the parks. I am not being critical in that regard. However, there are other people who own land in the parks. I do not expect the minister to make a statement on this now because it is a big subject; but at some time I would like to hear from him an explanation of why it is that, over the years, land was expropriated from individuals. They were discriminated against, and yet the land of the Canadian Pacific, that big corporation in this country, was not expropriated. I know it is said these decisions are made at the minister's level. I believe they are made at the administrative level and laid on the minister's desk.

Do you know how you expropriate land? You do not even notify the owner; you merely file an order in council. One group of individuals did not know they had lost their land until they wanted to make a transfer to somebody. They searched the land titles in the office at Calgary and they found a certain order in council. I can go further. When they came to me, I called the Canadian Pacific and they referred me to the head office. They did not know their oil rights were expropriated, and they are now very concerned. The previous government had suggested, and properly so, some changes in the law connected with expropriation. I was looking for such legislation. I would say this situation should be looked into by the new government. I want to say, too, that more and more individuals are being discriminated against but the Canadian Pacific holds its land on a freehold basis. I am not against freehold, and I want to make that point clear. I am against discrimination. I am against the method by which expropriation was accomplished.

I am not saying there were politics involved, but I know a man who was a friend of the late R. B. Bennett. He owned some 60-odd acres of land in the park and it was expropriated by the previous Liberal government. I do not say it was a coincidence, but I do say that if you leave the law of expropriation in this condition, whether it is a Conservative government or a Liberal government, you are going to find politics being played with land transfers in the park. It is time there was a clearcut policy from the minister and the department. This is a serious matter. The minister has not been too long in this portfolio, but this situation has continued for a long time. I might say that, at long last, like the Duke of Windsor, I can say a few words on my own. For five years I have wanted to say what I have said this afternoon. I am laying it right on the table. Here is a terrible situation. I want to say once again that individuals are being discriminated against. Why is it that the Canadian Pacific is allowed to hold land under freehold? If there should be a decision of the government approving the expropriation of freehold land in parks, then let us have it. I am against it because I believe that free enterprise can do a better job in the parks. I am certainly against any discrimination.

Now, that is point No. 1. Point No. 2 concerns a smaller matter, but it is an aggravating matter. For a number of years I have been asking that this be changed. It may be changed now, I am not sure. I wish the minister would assure the people it has been changed. People come into the parks and park their cars. They come to spend money, to see the mountains and live with nature.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, and some of them live with nature. They park their cars. Maybe they park them too long and they get a ticket. Normally, in any city you can go down to the police station and pay $2 or $3, whatever it is and settle the matter. What have you got to do in the parks? You have to stay over. You are charged with an offence, almost as if you committed a murder, and you have to appear before a magistrate. Please get that regulation fixed up. If you do that for me, Mr. Minister, I can assure you that when your estimates come up next year I will be most kind. People have been asking for this change for a number of years.

I just want to say a few more words about the school of fine arts. There is even a recommendation in the Oberlander report in that regard, that the school of fine arts should not be allowed to develop any further because it might spoil the look of the mountains. This is a big area, as big as Prince Edward Island. I think there are bears in the park that have not been seen by a human and vice versa, it is that large. I may say that the hon. Senator Cameron, if I may refer to him in a most courteous way, has done a tremendous job in developing the school of fine arts at Banff national park. Why was it developed there? Well, certainly the senator could give this information far better than I, because I am not a student of the fine arts. The fact is that a school of fine arts should surely be in Banff national park, the most beautiful place in the world, in that mountain atmosphere. Surely buildings which fit into the trees and mountains, in a space covering 8,700 acres, will not ruin the park? They are not going to scare the little animals and they are not going to hurt those great, big mountains. Let us take a broader look at this thing.

I want to be complimentary to the minister in this regard, because I go along with some of the things he has said. He has grasped the situation that there is a definite conflict—

Mr. Laing: But neither of us want to scare Claude Brewster.

Mr. Woolliams: No, we do not; but I am just going to show you how ridiculous this is. When Premier Manning of Alberta decided to build two art centres, one in Edmonton and the other in Calgary, he wanted to use some of the stone that is found on mount Rundle. Now, mount Rundle is a fairly large hill. It is a pretty large place, and I am certain that somewhere on that mountain a little rock could have been taken out to build one building in Canada. But what happened? The premier could not get the rock. It could not be moved from the park, even with a truck, and so they shipped the stuff in from the United States, which doubled or tripled the cost. I may add that these two beautiful buildings in Calgary and Edmonton are a credit to the provincial administration, but surely the example I have given is carrying things too far.

There is a conflict between keeping all this place for nature and making use of it for other purposes. When one talks like this, especially around Calgary, people write editorials, and they are dirty editorials. They say you want dancing girls, pool halls, and everything else; but no one is suggesting that. I hope I make myself clear this afternoon. I am suggesting facilities suitable for the million and more people who visit the parks, and that these facilities should be extended to take care of more and more people who will come to visit the parks, and that this be done with real co-operation between the federal department and the provincial governments.

There is a little spot up in the north where a mine extends only a few feet into the national park, but if anyone were to put his hands across the dividing line he would have his fingers removed. This is carrying things a little too far. Again, the animals are not going to be scared by that little bit of encroachment.

It may be said that this will establish a precedent. In fact a lot of people criticize lawyers because they believe in precedents, but I have never seen a precedent that could not be changed, distinguished, or done away with by a court. Therefore I tell the minister not to be afraid, in dealing with the parks officials, if they tell him he is going to establish a precedent. The average person who thinks about the development of our parks is not concerned about that.

I congratulate the administrators; that is their job, to keep the parks in their natural state. But if we are going to have tourists we must have some development, and let us make it a reasonable development, and not a monopolistic development either. There was some suggestion, and I do not know whether this is correct or not, that the department was going to get into the building of motels. For goodness sake, it does not matter how socialistic a government may think we should become, freedom of enterprise does do a better job when there is competition, and we can make certain that tourists from the United States and all over Canada can be provided with proper facilities without having the government getting into this kind of business.

There are three things I would say. This conflict must be straightened out. Second, for goodness sake take a look at the way expropriation is going on for the parks, and whether there is any discrimination. Under the present act there certainly could be. We should also determine whether it is fair to have certain forms of traffic regulations throughout Alberta, that encourage tourists to come to our parks, and then have other regulations that are medieval.

How many years does it take to make these changes? If the minister does the things I suggest, he will do a good job for the tourists, for the parks and for Canada. One of the most beautiful places anywhere for skiing is at lake Louise and Banff, and when the world Olympics come we will sell our parks as they are and develop good will all over the world. Look at what has been done in that connection in European countries. What has been done in Europe can be done in Canada.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, when I was listening to the hon. member for Bow River I remembered that the first time I came to this house I was seated immediately behind his predecessor, and I have come to the conclusion that, regardless of party affiliation, the hon. members for Bow River seem to show an almost obsessive concentration on the problems of Banff. I used to tell the former member that when one was travelling west, after spending a few weeks or months in eastern Canada, those mountains around Banff did not look too bad; but of course when one was travelling east, after having spent some time in British Columbia, those little pimples were hardly noticeable.

I have one or two suggestions for the minister which may help him solve some of his problems with the hon. member for Bow River, concerning the overcrowding of Banff. I would point out that in my constituency we have some ice fields that would make the Columbia ice fields look pretty small. The hon. member for Bow River also talked about another vast expansion of park, but in the mount Waddington region there is mountain scenery that would make that at Banff rather pale in comparison, and which I hope will be made one of the great wilderness parks of Canada. However, I am not seriously proposing at the moment that this should be done immediately; but while we are discussing this item I would like to know how the minister is getting along in the discussions he has been having with the British Columbia provincial authorities in respect to national park development in the coastal areas of that province.

Earlier this session there were several references to Garibaldi park, and I would like to tell the minister that I have been receiving increasing representation from Vancouver island as to the desirability of Strathcona park and the Forbidden plateau area being developed as a national park. I have replied that the initiative for any such development would have to come from Victoria, because Strathcona park is a provincial park and comes within the jurisdiction of the province. But I have expressed the hope that if such a development would be within the wishes of the provincial authorities, then perhaps the matter would receive a favourable reception here in Ottawa, and I have indicated I would do everything I could to persuade the federal authorities of that desirability.

As I have said before in this house, it is a matter of great regret that while we do have these beautiful national parks in the eastern part of British Columbia, and in the adjacent area of Alberta, we have no federal park development in some of the beautiful park areas on the west coast. I would like the minister to tell us if there is any greater likelihood of his being able to make such proposals than there has been on various other occasions when this matter received discussion and attention here.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I have just a very brief question to ask the minister. He might reply to it when he replies on the item concerning national parks. My question concerns the proposal for the establishment of a national park in the Yukon. As he knows—or may not know—there are two views in the Yukon with respect to the establishment of a national park. All the groundwork has been done, of course, through the efforts of parks branch officials who have very thoroughly investigated areas in the Yukon which might be suitable for the establishment of a park. The matter has come before the legislative council of the Yukon on more than one occasion for discussion, and I believe the minister will find in his departmental files certain submissions made by the Yukon chamber of mines, and other organizations in the Yukon.

One point of view is that we should have a park because tourism is essential to the growth of any economy, and certainly it is an important segment of the economy of the Yukon. In opposition to this view is that of the mining community, which is against the establishment of a national park because of the existing restrictions which would prevent geological exploration and development with any park boundaries which might be established. The Yukon has perhaps the largest area of nature in the raw of any area in Canada, with over 207,000 square miles available for the establishment of a park. One of the objections of the legislative council in the Yukon to the proposed location of the park was that it was to be located in an area of promising potential development adjacent to, for instance, the holdings of Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company, where substantial low grade nickel deposits have been established.

All I would like the minister to do is tell us what the intentions are, in so far as the government is concerned, in connection with the establishment of the park. When he was in Whitehorse he spoke on the subject—it may not have been in Whitehorse, but certainly in one of the locations in the Yukon; perhaps Dawson City—of the establishment of a park. That might be a suitable area; I do not know. Certainly the parks branch officials are much more capable than I to suggest the factors which should be present in the establishment of any park. But my understanding of the minister's remarks there was that such a park would be established, and just as quickly as possible. With those few brief remarks, Mr. Chairman, and the request to the minister to state the intentions of the government, I have nothing further to say on the item.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, the minister did state his intention was to reply to each item as it was raised. If he would follow that procedure, it would be very acceptable to me.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member for Yukon, I would say I assume we would be forced to regard the territorial government in the same light as we would a provincial government. Therefore I would very much hesitate to announce that we were going to place a national park in the Yukon without an agreement with or request from the territorial council of the Yukon. I know, as the hon. member knows, that this matter is under way up there. I think all it requires is a determination and agreement on their part that they are setting aside a piece of property with regard to which they can overlook the expression that "there's gold in them thar hills". I think it is a matter of deciding on a property which the mining interests agree is not worth working. I am quite certain that if an application were made by the territorial council on that basis, the government of Canada is desirous of seeing to it now, particularly in the light of the coming centennial celebrations, that there be set aside such property for preservation in the future. That would be the attitude as far as the Yukon is concerned.

As far as my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni is concerned, we have latterly had indicated to us that there is a minute piece of property in the general region of cape Beale, on the west coast, which is available to us. I do not think this would interest us because of its size and location. I have not given up hope entirely in respect to Garibaldi. I have spoken to some of the ministers of the province of British Columbia and I would hope there is some chance yet of our having the government of British Columbia agree to turning that property over to us. I am quite convinced that as there are four or five national parks on the Atlantic coast, and not one of the Pacific coast, it is in the interests of the provincial administration that we have a national park on the Pacific coast. I am quite certain it would net the province of British Columbia $4 million or $5 million a year in holding back that great number of tourists coming into that province from the south, making a bee line toward Banff, because Banff is a historic name they have in their heads, and then using the ultra modern highways to get out of British Columbia as fast as they can. I am told by men who are familiar with areas which people enjoy in Europe that there is no comparable area anywhere in the European Alps with what can be developed in the Garibaldi area. I want to thank my hon. friend for mentioning Forbidden plateau. It too is a very considerable and renowned area in British Columbia and I think it should be given a great deal of attention as either provincial or federal parks are developed in the future.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the hon. member for Bow River. I enjoyed him very much and I am quite certain he enjoyed himself. I think all the estimates he ought to discuss should be in this department, because he was indeed humorous and at the same time gave us something to think about. I want to assure him that I made the statement that we are searching for a different and more equitable basis than the present one on long term leases in the park.

Mr. Woolliams: What does the minister mean by "more equitable"?

Mr. Laing: Well, a fair basis. I am thinking in terms of what might be called a business tax, rather than the situation that now exists.

My hon. friend dealt with the tremendous increase in the number of people. Historically the western parks attracted some wealthy Canadians and a great number of wealthy Americans, as he knows, who came through in trains in the old days. They set up in C.P.R. or Canadian National hotels, where all facilities were provided, and their holidays were very expensive over several weeks. There is a new torrent of trade now, which is due to the automobile, rubber tires, good highways and a number of other factors, including probably the 92 cents dollar, but also the relatively buoyant conditions of the economy of Canada, and statutory holidays with pay. Therefore Canadians who hitherto did not have the money with which to see Canada now have that money. It is a very fine thing that they do. We have to take care of the accommodation that they require in our parks. I agree in general with my hon. friend from Bow River that our parks are large enough, the topography there is of such a nature that we can put these tenting and camping locations and the requirements for trailers in areas where they will not deface the general landscape. This is what we are going to do.

The hon. member talked about historic leases. I have studied this question and have been astounded and amazed at what I found. There are leases for tiny sums of money that have been built up through the years, partly as a result of the monopolistic situation created by the establishment of the parks by a national government, into tradeable items of many thousands of dollars—and I do not like it. I am referring to leases of $7 or $9 a year, and I hear reliably that those leases are being traded for ten, twelve and fourteen thousand dollars. I suggested that we should arrive, over a period, at a position where we could establish what I call a business tax in place of these long-term leases.

Mr. Woolliams: Does that mean that the leases would remain the same, the tenure and so on? What you say is, tax the enterprises which are getting rich in the tourist trade.

Mr. Laing: I do not want to be unfair or scare anybody, but I am told that one or more provinces in Canada have given notice over a period of years that long-term leases are out. I have not decided that we should do that nationally, but we are making a concerted study to see whether more equity as well as fairness can obtain. Because we have a situation, as my hon. friend knows, where some grandchildren are today in the position where their grandfathers took the original lease of land in a national park and have been living in the park, but now that right is denied other Canadians because we do not lease them any more. In the interests of equity and in the interests of participation on the basis of the accruing value from the monopolistic position of the parks branch here, I would like to see something better than that which we are doing at the present time. I appreciate very much the advice given today by hon. members who have spoken on this item.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister say something about the remarks I made—made not in a political way—about the method of expropriation of land? I say this with great respect to the C.P.R., who have done a tremendous job of building up the tourist trade, not only with their trains but also with their beautiful hotels. I should like to know what the minister's plans are for the future, or whether he has discussed this question with the Department of Fisheries.

Mr. Laing: I do not know, without notice, about expropriations such as the hon. member describes. Any attempts we have made to buy property have been made strictly by negotiation. I think that is the case in every instance since I have been with the department. Some of the attempts we have made along the line of negotiations have frightened me to death, again because of the apparently monopolistic position. We are spending tremendous sums of money, and some of them I have set aside currently for this reason.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to develop this for one minute. A lot of these things have been cleared up, and in this I pay regard to the former minister. When I first became a member of parliament for Bow River in 1957, Mr. Edward McCormick, Q.C., of Calgary, had various cases in his office where all the government does—and I have checked the procedure; I know the procedure and have done research into it—is to pass an order in council, file it in the land titles office, and there is no notice to the landowner at all. He may or may not know about it. The land titles office may inform him, but otherwise there is no notice.

On top of that, five, six or seven years go by. I am now referring to one of the cases which the minister and his officials may have in mind. It has now got to the stage where I do not know whether they will compromise or not. I am talking about ordinary cases in Banff and I could name dozens. I have a file full of cases which were finally settled. We begged the minister and his officials from 1957 on, and finally they settled. I am not saying this was because the Conservatives came into power, but because pressure built up. Although I give the minister credit for cleaning these cases up in his time, I am sure that if he had been the previous minister he would have cleaned them up. The fact is that I hope the minister looks into it, because there is a lot of freehold in our parks land. One lady came to me when I was in Calgary with a letter from the department. She knows what happened to her other relatives. This letter said: "Will you sell your land?" If she does not answer the letter and does not negotiate at a price with a gun at her head, what happens? At some time in the near future there will be an order in council passed and there is only one solution. They say: "You can go to the exchequer court".

Why should a landowner have to go into court? Why does not the department in three or four weeks, if they cannot settle it at a price, after proper valuation take the matter to court and pay the costs? Much of this land in Banff is only worth $100, $200 or $300. If they did go to legal counsel and fight over it, it would not be worth their while. That is how it is done and it is wrong. That is why the Expropriation Act of Canada should be changed. I know the minister cannot do it today, but I ask him to take a hard look at this. I have a case—when it is settled, or tried and passed through the exchequer court—that will be a national scandal. It dragged along for four or five years before they started an action. Why should people have to start an action? Why are they not notified? Why does not the department sit down and negotiate with them? If they cannot agree to a reasonable price let the exchequer court decide. But the fact is that it costs that person money. He has to go and hire a lawyer. He is put in all these difficulties. But it is so easy for the department; they sterilize development. That is what the department does, and it is a national scandal. You can own land and put your life's savings into it. Then the government expropriate it, and if you do not take their price they sterilize development till they get it in their hands, and then develop it. Is that fair to the individual? What about the civil property rights of the people of this country? That is what I am complaining about. It is a national scandal.

Mr. Laing: I do not think any of the conditions portrayed by the hon. member in the bad old days of which he was a part persist at the present time. I do not think we have picked up any person's property at all without attempting to negotiate. If we have been unable to negotiate—and I am talking after eight months' experience—we have not expropriated the property in question.

Mr. Woolliams: Since the minister took over many of these things have been cleared up, and I would say that is correct; but in the past, under former Liberal administrations it has happened. I am not saying it was because a Liberal administration was in power but that is what took place. It is at a halt at the moment, but I can show you letters where freehold landowners have written to me, maybe unknown to the minister, saying: "We do not believe in any freeholds in the parks; we want your land". But the C.P.R. does not get a letter like that. You can deny it, but give me the chance and I will bring in files of evidence.

Mr. Pigeon: Only one question for the minister. Has he received a request from the government of the province of Quebec to create national parks in that province? Because I do not think we have one park.

Mr. Laing: I understand that the government of the province of Quebec is engaged in some studies. We have had no request from them to establish a national park in Quebec. However, I am told some studies in respect of two areas are under way.

Mr. Watson (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Chairman, may I take a few minutes of the committee's time to make a few remarks. I am wondering why there is one very important deficiency in our national parks program, namely a lack of proper and adequate park facilities close to our two major metropolitan centres of Montreal and Toronto. I think there is a growing recognition at all levels of government that as the full force of the technological change which is called automation strikes industry and our working population, a shorter work week will result and it will be necessary to provide recreational facilities to meet the increase of leisure time. The full effects of this automation will first be felt in the metropolitan areas. I suggest that the need for park facilities within a reasonable driving distance of Montreal and Toronto is urgent. I suggest that wherever possible and with full cooperation from the municipal and provincial authorities, a survey be made in the river area along the St. Lawrence, in the Montreal region, and in the lake area around Toronto, with a view to establishing park areas around the many historic sites which mark the route of voyageurs up the St. Lawrence and the paths of the early settlers around the lake in the Toronto area.

I have a specific suggestion to make, and it is that the historic site of the battle of Chateauguay at Allens Corners in the county of Chateauguay should be properly established as a park under the jurisdiction of the department. This site is located only 25 miles from the island of Montreal and it commemorates, as I am sure any historian today would agree, one of the most significant events in Canadian history—the repulse of an invading American army as it approached Montreal in October, 1813. This victory over the Americans on October 26th, 1813, was a French Canadian victory. Had it not been for the unity of all the elements of society in Lower Canada in 1812 and 1813 it is very likely that Montreal would have fallen to the invaders and, with the link with Upper Canada cut, that the whole of Canada would have fallen to the Americans. I suggest that this battle is worthy of proper commemoration.

At the present time there are two stone cairns commemorating the event. These are situated on plots of land, one of which measures about 25 feet square, and the other approximately 40 feet by 150 feet. Since there is a great deal of land available in this area —it is not an urbanized area—I hope the hon. gentleman will give every consideration to further development of the site commemorating the battle of Chateauguay.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I should like to suggest that along the St. Lawrence river a number of historic sites exist which are neither marked nor commemorated, and I hope the appropriate branch of the department will in the near future investigate the possibility of commemorating these important reminders of our history.

In closing, I should like to say that if we are ever to establish any sort of Canadian identity it seems to me it will have to come from our identification, as Canadians, with the vast wilderness heritage which has fallen to us. When we consider the space we have available, I think Canadians should be the greatest outdoor people in the world. Yet they are not. I feel, as I know the minister does, that his department has a most important role to play in instilling an appreciation of this Canadian heritage in our youth.

Mr. Patterson: I was interested in the observations which have been made with respect to the possibility of establishing a national park in the Garibaldi area of British Columbia.

I know that on a number of occasions suggestions have been made in this regard. I do not know if the idea has been regarded too favourably by the province of British Columbia. It may be they are leary of the intentions of the federal government in this field, because on several occasions in the past they have been faced with efforts on the part of the federal government to gain a little more control over British Columbia and its resources. I look back a number of years to a bill called Bill 3 which proposed to take over the Columbia river area and declare it to be in the national interest. Then, more recently, the federal government proposed to lay claim to the offshore mineral rights of British Columbia, and this question has not been settle as yet.

So, with regard to this possibility of acquiring land for a federal park in the Garibaldi area there is a question of just what might be involved in the way of provincial natural resources. I would like to ask the minister if in any consideration he has given to this project he found himself in agreement with the former minister, that there is room for two developments in this section, one, provincial, taking in the Golden Ears area, and the other federal, to include the northern alpine area as a national park. I wonder whether the minister is of the same opinion as his predecessor was in this respect.

Mr. Laing: That might well be so, but I would prefer to have our technical men make an inspection of the area and report upon it before I make any judgment. So far, the premier of British Columbia has not agreed to let our technical men enter the property.

Mr. Nielsen: I have only a word to say at this point and it is with reference to the minister's assurance that no decision will be taken with regard to the establishment of a national park in the Yukon until the Yukon legislative concil has made application. I wish to thank the hon. gentleman for that assurance, since it was on my suggestion that the previous administration established this policy. I am sure the people of the Yukon, through their council, will be happy to hear what the minister has said in this regard.

Item agreed to.

50. Canadian wildlife service—Wildlife resources, conservation and development including administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act, $979,700.

Mr. Pascoe: I have a few comments to make under this heading. The problem I wish to raise concerns the natural migration in the fall of large birds called sandhill cranes which do great damage to the crops of farmers in one area of my constituency. This is the area around Govan, Nokomis and Hatfield at the northern end of Last Long lake—an important lake which enters into the naming of my constituency, Moose Jaw-Lake Centre.

To outline the problem very briefly which I wish to present, I should like to read a few comments from an article which appeared in the Semans Gazette, a newspaper in my constituency. The article reads in part as follows:

—the breeding range—

Of the sandhill crane.

—is in the far unsettled north, from Siberia to Baffin island.

This is the part I am concerned about:

> In August the cranes start funnelling down from the Arctic toward their wintering range around Texas, Louisiana and Mexico. Last Mountain lake...is a sojourning region where the cranes gather in thousands and live well for a few weeks before continuing the journey.

With regard to the damage to crops done by the sandhill cranes the article says:

> It is not the amount of grain the birds eat, although this can be considerable, but the damage they do to the swathed grain with their large feet that brings most complaints from farmers. The birds will literally take a field apart. What grain they do not eat they scratch out of the heads and pound into the ground.

The article also brings out an item which should be of interest to the minister and probably to the house. It refers to the number of sandhill cranes in this particular area and says:

> On August 1 less than 300 of these cranes were in their usual roosting ground on the lake. By August 31 their numbers had increased to 30,000.

The problem I am trying to bring out is put in these words in the article:

> It is one of trying to fit the crane migratory pattern into the local farming industry so both may survive and flourish.

Naturally the farmers who suffer severe crop losses want some way of controlling the birds. The former minister of northern affairs and national resources, whom I am glad to see in his seat, took definite action on the problem in 1961 and 1962. His department planted what were called lure crops to attract the birds from the grain fields. I think this plan was at least partially successful and I believe additional land was seeded to lure crops this year.

I have had considerable correspondence about this problem and I think the minister has too. I should like to refer briefly to some of it. I have here a letter from the secretary of the rural municipality of Wreford, No. 280, in my riding. He says in part in his letter:

> We would recommend...if these cranes must be protected, that a couple of sections of lure crop might keep cranes off the farmers' crops which might be sufficient, under favourable weather conditions in the fall, to allow farmers to harvest their crops and not suffer too much damage, but in addition to this, exploders and shooting to scare practice should be used, outside the lure crop area, in order to herd them onto the lure crops.

I have another letter containing a resolution adopted at a meeting in Govan, Saskatchewan, of the Saskatchewan farmers union. This resolution was passed on March 21, 1963. It suggests that some plan be worked out under which the federal and provincial governments would pay all losses caused by sandhill cranes. I am sure the minister received a copy of that resolution. I think these resolutions demonstrate that the farmers in the district are ready to co-operate in any effective program of crane control. I find the residents around Last Mountain lake just as interested as any other group in preserving the whooping crane. To a great extent the whooping crane resembles the sandhill crane and the odd specimen of the whooping crane is found among the sandhill cranes. That is why the farmers are loath to shoot them. I do not believe they have permits to shoot them anyway.

It might be of interest to the committee to know that a small bird sanctuary, the first one on the North American continent for birds, was established in the area around Last Mountain lake in 1887, and I am pleased that it was established under the Conservative government of Sir John A. Macdonald. I suggest to the minister that this wildfowl sanctuary should be expanded by purchasing additional land, some of which can be seeded to lure crops and the rest left as marshy feeding grounds. I also think that the sight of 30,000 large sandhill cranes, each about three feet tall, feeding in one sanctuary would be a great tourist attraction. There would also be the possibility of tourists seeing one or more of the rare whooping cranes.

I understand that the minister's department has agreed to allow certain farmers in designated areas to shoot cranes threatening their crops. I realize that some of the farmers might be provoked into shooting the birds because of the damage to their crops, but I think it would be a mistake to allow indiscriminate shooting in view of the danger that one of the rare whooping cranes might be killed.

Most people would agree that an adequate bird sanctuary is a better solution. As I said earlier, the first bird sanctuary on the North American continent was established in this area in 1887. The enlargement of this sanctuary by 1967, 80 years later, would be a very fine centennial project. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources might be able to call on his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, to help secure the necessary land under the ARDA program, and I am sure the farmers in the area would co-operate in any project that is planned.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could intervene to see what the sense of the committee might be. It was understood through the usual channels that at 4.30 the Minister of Justice would go on with his estimates, but I think I explained last night that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources would find it a tremendous convenience if there was some possibility of getting his estimates completed within a reasonable time this afternoon. I should like only to find out what should be done, because if there is no hope of getting them through in a reasonable time I think we will go right ahead at this point with the estimates of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Churchill: Is it the intention to carry on with private members' business at five o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am hoping to find out through the usual channels. Perhaps we could reach agreement about that right now. I know that the first bill which stands in the name of the hon. member for Timiskaming is not going to be debated and the government is willing to have it stood, so that it will not lose its precedence. I have not been able to find out whether it is the general view that we should debate a purge for the King's-evil or the whooping crane, but as between the two I would hope, quite frankly, that we would go on with the whooping crane.

Mr. Knowles: You mean the whooping evil.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Port Arthur has expressed the desire to purge the King's-evil rather than debate the whooping crane.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps we could wait until five o'clock and let the hon. member for Port Arthur speak for himself.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure whether we have decided that we are going to continue with northern affairs.

Mr. Pickersgill: I had hoped that we might dispose of the department in the next 20 minutes or so.

Mr. Barnett: I have one question.

Mr. Nielsen: If the hon. member does not mind, I should like to interrupt to say that I will need more than 15 minutes to make my remarks on the first item of northern administration. I was not here when item 1 was called and there are some urgent things I have to say in that regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think, in that case, sir, we should do what we originally intended to do and go right ahead with the Department of Justice.

The Chairman: Shall item No. 50 carry?

Mr. Barnett: No, I have a question I want to raise on that item.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the hon. gentleman raise that question and have the item carry?

Mr. Barnett: I should like the minister, just briefly, to inform the committee what, if any, developments are taking place in the field of federal-provincial co-operation in respect of wildlife services. I have had certain representations made to me by fish and game organizations to the effect that there should be developed a federal-provincial cost-sharing program in this field, one which would probably lead to even greater integration and co-operation in this field.

Now, I should like to know whether or not this has been the subject of discussion at the resources ministers conference, and also whether there was any discussion of this matter during the recent federal-provincial conference.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member I may say that there are a number of fields in which co-operation is being advanced between the federal government and the provincial governments, notably under the resources program in respect of wildlife on the Canadian prairies. We have set up so-called "wet spaces", particularly for the duck population. We are in the process of making arrangements, over an extended period of years, to do considerable of this work which will plan the efficacy or fail to plan the efficacy of doing this on a large scale. We are finding a great deal more information about ducks all the time. We want to put some of this knowledge to use on a fairly extended scale, involving quite a sum of money in the various provinces.

The closest possible relations also are beginning to exist between the provinces and the federal government in the acknowledgement of the fact that here we have a resource of tremendous value, not only for the enjoyment of the people who live in Canada but for tourists as well. I can assure my friend that real progress is being made in that direction.

While I am on my feet I should like to say a word to the hon. gentleman who brought up the problem of the sandhill crane. He dealt with the technical aspects from beginning to end. I may say we have arranged with the United States authorities to, what my scientific people call, harvest a crop. The United States authorities have undertaken, after separation of any whoopers that come up in the crop of sandhill cranes, to bash the cranes down. Whether or not that will work, I do not know.

Mr. Pascoe: Is there any suggestion of increasing the number of sanctuaries?

Mr. Laing: Yes, some work can be done in that regard. Apparently, these birds can be attracted to one place, and they damage the crops on farmlands. I do not believe anyone should snicker at this. I believe these cranes congregate in three places only; and when they do so in such numbers, millions of dollars of crop damage can result. There is a responsibility for us to try to entice them by baiting certain areas where we can feed them. In any event, we are undertaking, in co-operation with the United States authorities to annihilate them when they are down south.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: Is it the desire of the committee to pass also item 50a which also deals with wildlife service?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

1. Departmental administration including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $1,378,100.

Mr. Bell: I will be very brief in my remarks on this item because I do not feel the estimates should be dragged out. However, when the first item was up for discussion a week ago, most of the remarks centred around security changes. Speeches were made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice. I do want to make one or two perfunctory remarks.

It has been customary, when the departments are first called and when the estimates were prepared by a former government, for the minister to say that criticism would be limited. At times former ministers have paid tributes to the different civil servants with whom they have been associated. I cannot do that job adequately, but since I was parliamentary secretary to the former minister of justice, Mr. Fulton, as well as Mr. Fleming, I do want to take a moment to say a few words. I am sure we all recognize the good record Mr. Fulton had when he was minister of justice. His energies and his capacities were known to all of us. He had a good record as a parliamentarian and I am sure he will be remembered as a good cabinet minister. In so far as his work in the Department of Justice is concerned, he will be remembered particularly for his reorganization and modernization of the federal penal system and the change to medium security and minimum security prisons, as well as for instituting a program of staff training and industrial training for inmates.

I should like to pay tribute at this time also to the press who were so co-operative during my time in the department in attempting to explain and sell this new idea of penal reform to the people. Some of the other matters that came under reform in the department during Mr. Fulton's time were the national parole board, narcotics control, capital murder, sexual psychopaths, anti-combines legislation and R.C.M.P. reform. I merely mention these things for the record, Mr. Chairman. I had some extensive notes, but hon. members will be pleased to know I seem to have lost them since the estimates were first presented.

I want to mention two other subjects which were of particular interest to me, namely the R.C.M.P. and juvenile delinquency. I want to pay tribute to the former commissioner, Mr. Harvison and to his successor, Mr. McClelland. I am sure that their records are known to us all. We wish them both success in their new endeavours and their responsibilities, respectively. The R.C.M.P. have suffered a certain loss of prestige in the eyes of some people in the country. We hear of criticism of them in their performance of the many arduous duties assigned to them, such as traffic control, policing yachts, boats and matters of that type. I think we should take a hard look at that because it is we, in society, who assign these very difficult tasks to them. There have also been communist activities which have needed investigation, and we have been perhaps overzealous in our criticism of them there.

I think, Mr. Chairman, a new look is needed at this problem. It may be that social contact between the R.C.M.P. and individuals in our society will help this problem. It could be that a full campaign of national publicity and a youth program would help make this better understood. There were some figures I saw recently which quite surprised me. I noted that out of 1,538,000 investigations within a full year, the R.C.M.P. had only received 103 complaints and of those only six needed disciplinary action. This is one matter we will be watching from the opposition standpoint. The various activities of the R.C.M.P. do seem to be very close to our daily lives in this modern world.

Now, juvenile delinquency is another favourite subject of mine. A short while ago I asked the minister a question about the juvenile delinquency report, and he answered in some detail on November 20. That answer is in Hansard and I do not intend to go through it. It was to the effect that the committee, which was set up by Mr. Fulton, is continuing its work. There were some difficulties due to staff changes and the like, but it is hoped that the complete report will be available in 1964. I hope the work will go forward and that there will not be any delay.

I want to stress the importance of it. I am sure the new minister is interested in this too, and I would hope that in some way part of the report could be made available, after it has been seen by various responsible persons, so that those of us who are interested can go through the statistics and the information, and try to assist in making final recommendations that will result in new legislation.

Some of the figures on juvenile delinquency are very startling. I recall reading a report in the October 21 issue of "U.S. News and World Report" dealing with crime in Washington. I am not suggesting it is the same in Ottawa, but here are two capital cities that have similar conditions. What was amazing was that some 50 per cent of the juveniles who ended up in the hands of the police in Washington had come from broken homes, and in one particular area 90 per cent of the older persons with records had previously been charged as juveniles. I leave those figures with the committee for consideration, and I hope they will interest us to make these very necessary changes in our society.

There is, of course, a great link between the two subjects I have mentioned, the R.C.M.P. and juvenile delinquency. It might be that the responsibilities of the R.C.M.P. could be directed, even more than they are now, to problems of our youth, and in this way a more favourable image of the R.C.M.P. would be created. That force would then be dealing with one of the great challenges of today.

I do not have anything more to say. I wish the new minister well in his endeavours, and I hope he will carry on some of the very important reforms that were made by Mr. Fulton when he was minister of justice.

Mr. Orlikow: It is not my intention today to discuss the question which I, and a number of other members in this group, have discussed on a number of occasions, namely the measures taken by the government in connection with security investigations. It is not that we do not think this is an important question. It is not that we do not think much discussion is required, but we have the statements made recently by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of Justice that a new look is being taken at this important question, and that new policies and new regulations will be worked out. We are prepared to wait a reasonable time, to give the government a chance to work out a policy and report to the house, before we discuss the problem further.

I have just one more thing to say on this subject. So far as I am concerned, and I think I can speak for other members of this group, despite what the last speaker seemed to intimate, our criticisms have never been primarily with the R.C.M.P. I have said it before, and I will say it again, that successive governments have given the R.C.M.P. an impossible job in the field of security. They have not defined clearly enough what they want from the R.C.M.P. so that they could do the job that is required and still protect the rights of the individual citizens concerned. This is something we will be dealing with at the next session of parliament. Meantime I wish to tell the minister we expect to have a pretty clear, detailed explanation rather than the fairly good but rather vague and general statements recently made by the Prime Minister and himself.

This evening I want to discuss what I think is the completely inadequate rate of progress we are making in correctional programs. In 1950 the United Nations made a survey of correctional programs in its member countries, and Canada was listed fiftieth among those countries in the standard of service which was provided to unfortunate people who pass through correctional systems. We have had progress reports since then, but I do not think the improvements we have made will have boosted us very much in the scale, and I would be very surprised if we were in much higher than fiftieth position.

This is not surprising, if we realize that at any one time in Canada, in the prisons, penitentiaries and jails operated by the federal and provincial governments, there are probably over 17,000 people behind bars. Of those in the federal penitentiaries, 75 per cent of the inmates are repeating sentences, and in the provincial institutions somewhere between 60 per cent and 75 per cent are repeating sentences.

Stuart Jaffary, who is a professor of social work at the University of Toronto, in a book published this year gives comparison rates of prison populations in Canada and Great Britain. He uses the year 1955, which apparently was the last year for which he could get figures, and these figures ought to shock and cause a great deal of concern to us.

Great Britain in 1955, which had three times the population of Canada, only had a few thousand more people in prison than we had. We had 13,500 people in prison, the rate being 87 per 100,000 population; while Great Britain had only 18,500 people in prison with the corresponding rate less than half of ours, or 42 per 100,000 population. Of those convicted of indictable offences in Canada, 45 per cent were in prison, while in England and Wales only 17 per cent were in prison. For indictable and non-indictable offences 122,000 people went to jail or prison in Canada in 1955, a rate of 781 per 100,000 population; while the number in England and Wales was only 39,000 people, a rate of just 90 per 100,000 population.

This is not surprising because the British have had a system of probation for a long number of years, while we are really only beginning such a system, and it is not much thanks to the federal government that we have any kind of probation system at all.

The last report, the last of many studies made of our correctional system, the Fauteux report, suggested that in a modern correctional system the first principle is to keep as many offenders out of prison as possible. I suggest that something be done to get this idea across to the public.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I might interrupt, and I apologize to the hon. gentleman, the hon. member for Port Arthur has sent me a message and I believe there would be general agreement to go right on until six o'clock. If that is the case, I am sorry to have interrupted the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Howard: That is agreeable but it is regrettable the hon. member for Port Arthur is not here to speak for himself.

Mr. Pickersgill: I had power of attorney.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I hope the Minister of Justice can do something—

The Chairman: Order. Is it agreed by the committee that the Chair will not see the clock until six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: Provided you see it at six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knowles: What are you going to say at six o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: "It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair".

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I hope the Minister of Justice can do something to convince the judges of this country that they ought to pay some attention to this recommendation in the Fauteux commission report. In this morning's Montreal Gazette there is a story that yesterday a judge hearing a case of a man being tried for robbery, I think, ignored the recommendation of both defence counsel and crown prosecutor—who agreed that the sentence for this man, who was guilty, should be only one year—and imposed a sentence of seven years in the penitentiary. The judge is quoted in the news story as saying, in explanation of having done this, that his first inclination was to impose a sentence of one year for each charge. There were 17 charges, so this man could have been sentenced to 17 years in the penitentiary, but the judge was very generous in sentencing him to only seven years. Obviously that judge has not paid much attention to the Fauteux report.

Last year in the city of Toronto a man came forward and admitted he had been guilty of arson. This man was obviously seriously ill and needed intensive psychiatric treatment. The judge again completely ignored the recommendation of the Fauteux commission report and imposed a sentence—I am speaking from memory—of well over 20 years. There was quite a storm about this and a committee of very prominent lawyers was established to work on the case, but this did not help much with regard to the original sentence. We had a case a few years ago in the city of Winnipeg—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, before the hon. gentleman continues he ought to complete this matter. The matter came before the court, did it not, and was not the sentence reduced? I think that should be clarified. My recollection is that the matter was considered in the nature of an appeal and the sentence was cut in two; is that not right?

Mr. Orlikow: I thank the right hon. gentleman for his addition. I think he is correct. However, speaking from recollection, even after the appeal the sentence was a very substantial number of years. In the city of Winnipeg just a few years ago we had a case involving a married man with a family, a railway worker, who had never previously been in trouble with the law. It was this time of the year, shortly before Christmas. This man was going to work; he was working the evening shift, as I remember. His wife was somewhat critical because they did not have much money for Christmas presents for the children. Unfortunately for him he left his house early and stopped at the local beer parlour, as they call them in Winnipeg. He had a few beers too many. I do not excuse what he did, but he went to the cashier of the largest theatre in Winnipeg and asked for the money. He had no gun, but he told her he had a gun and asked her to give him the money. He did not wait long enough to get the money; he ran away.

When he was apprehended he was charged with armed robbery, because of course he had threatened her and said he had a gun. The police who put him in jail asked if he wanted his wife to be notified. He said this would only frighten her, so she was not notified. He appeared before the magistrate the next morning. Everything that should have been done under the law was done, technically. He was asked whether he wanted to have counsel, but he said he was guilty after all so there was no point in having counsel. He pleaded guilty and the magistrate imposed a sentence of four years. I am speaking from memory, but I do not think I am wrong. The first his wife knew about the case was when she turned on the radio and heard that her husband was on his way to the penitentiary to serve a four-year term of imprisonment.

Again I suggest to the minister it is time the judges of this country got into the twentieth century way of thinking about this problem of correction, instead of being better suited, as I think some of them are, to the days of the inquisition. Even if our judges were using more common sense—and I think some of them are—we would not achieve the results that have been achieved in Great Britain, because in that country they have an active and aggressive program of probation which is designed to keep offenders, and particularly young offenders, out of prison. We have a situation here where police chiefs, and indeed judges sometimes, are quoted as saying things which are not true and certainly do not help this situation. Just a couple of weeks ago the chief of police of Ottawa was quoted in both newspapers of this city as saying that the reason for the crime wave in Ottawa was that we are being too soft; that too many people who are out on parole are committing crimes. Of course, the records are clear; this is not true at all. But this is the kind of impression which people who ought to know better are still conveying. It seems to me that if we are to achieve the kind of results which have been achieved in Great Britain we must actively promote a probation system such as that proposed in the Fauteux report.

We have a large number of shared programs with the provinces. I suggest to the minister it is time we looked at the possibility of sharing with the provinces a program of really successful probation. If we do not do it on the basis of humanitarianism, I suggest we do it on the basis of the cold, hard saving of cash. I think the minister knows it costs somewhere between $1,500 and $2,500 a year to keep a person in one of our jails or penitentiaries, while the cost of probation runs somewhere between $50 and $200 a year. Unfortunately we have been too prone, too ready to pay for another building, another extension to a prison or jail in which to lock up people. We have not been ready to pay for the kind of thing that would really bring results; that is, a probation system. So we have the anomalous, ridiculous situation in which several provinces, such as Ontario and British Columbia, have no effective system of probation, while other provinces—Quebec, for example—have no probation system. To my knowledge the province of Quebec has no such system. Then in other provinces, such as Manitoba, they have what is called a probation system, but they lack the properly trained staff to do the job that I think is required. I would suggest to the minister it is time we got on with this very important task of establishing a proper probation system. Even if we had such a system we could not keep everybody out of our correctional institutions.

The last time these estimates were before the committee the hon. member for Vancouver East spoke about our institutions, about the buildings. We have made some progress, but I would suggest to the minister that if he really means business, if he really wants the support of the members of this house in getting the money required to modernize our correctional institutions, he should arrange for hon. members to spend a day, as some of us have, going through St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. I do not think there is any hon. member of this house who would not be shocked at the conditions in that institution. All hon. members should spend a day there and see how these people live. They may have committed crimes, but they are human beings. I do not think there is a member in the house who, on seeing the conditions in St. Vincent de Paul, would suggest for a moment any reduction in proposed expenditure that the minister would want to make next year.

St. Vincent de Paul is the worst case, but it is not the only one. We have made some beginnings but really the beginnings we have made are infinitesimal. Our institutions are overcrowded. Because they are overcrowded we have no real system of segregation as proposed by every investigating commission which has ever looked into the correctional system in Canada. So you find, Mr. Chairman, in the prisons of Canada drug addicts, embezzlers, forgers, bank robbers, alcoholics, sex deviates, petty thieves and murderers all in the same institution and all sharing the same cell blocks. How can you do anything under those conditions? We cannot blame the staff. We ought to blame ourselves. The staff are doing the best they can in the conditions under which we expect them to work.

The Fauteux report recommended that the federal government take care of all prisoners whose sentence is more than one year, and that the provinces look after prisoners who have sentences of less than six months. But the federal government, although endorsing the report in principle, has so far refused not only to adopt this principle but to set the date when they will adopt it. The result is that provinces which want to do the job say they cannot plan their programs until they know what the federal government intends to do and when it intends to put this kind of provision into action. Some provinces which have not been very enthusiastic about taking on the job, and I include my own province of Manitoba in that category, have found this to be the perfect excuse. The attorney general of Manitoba has said on a number of occasions that we were not going to go into any expensive building program until that province knows when the federal government will take on the job, and when the responsibility for it is clarified. Despite the fact that we are a long way from meeting the present needs, I suggest that the federal government should set a date when it intends to go ahead with this recommendation of the Fauteux report.

No system of correction can really be any better than the staff. You can have the best building in the world, but if the staff is untrained and is thinking in terms of incarceration and punishment instead of rehabilitation and correction we will never turn the corner and begin to solve the problem. We will never reduce the number of inmates in our institutions as they have in Great Britain and other countries. It is an amazing thing to me that this country can find the money to hire trained engineers to build the buildings we need and the roads to our resource developments; we can find experts in agriculture and do research into how to get better hogs, a better grade of wheat and how to get better fruit. I am not being critical of these things because they are required. But when it comes to finding people who are trained in the much more important field of how to rehabilitate people and improve people, we have almost been completely remiss. And of course we have no money for this.

If anyone doubts this, let him look at the answers which the minister has given this session and last session with regard to questions which have been put down regarding staff in our institutions. We have 26 penitentiaries. I put down a question not long ago asking for the names of the wardens. After all, a warden is the key man in any penitentiary. I asked how long they had had their jobs, what were their qualifications. I am not going to read a long list into the record, although I think it would be worth while to do so, but of the 26 wardens in Canada, according to the minister's reply two of them have a B.A. degree, one an M.A. degree, one a teacher's diploma and one a diploma in agriculture. According to my total, 21 have no formal training at all, or no better training than that which I have mentioned. After looking at the qualifications of these 21 wardens, what does the minister say about them? They have had army training or they have had police training. I do not want to be critical of the training that a man gets in the army or in the police. If our correctional institutions are merely institutions of punishment, merely institutions for incarceration, I agree that a person who has had army training and training in police work would probably make a very good warden. I am not criticizing these people individually, I am sure they are doing the best they can. But if we are really thinking in terms of rehabilitation as suggested by the Fauteux report, I suggest that people with this kind of background, education and training who staff our penitentiaries simply cannot do the job.

I asked the minister the question whether all custodial officers in our correctional institutions receive training in the behavioural sciences by qualified professional staff, and the answer was very simple, with no argument about it. It was one word—"No"; that they do not. We have nothing in the estimates concerning training grants or bursaries in the field of correctional training, so even the people now on the staff or doing social work, or work in psychology or sociology, who want to go into the field could only get the training, paid partly by the federal government, on condition that they came to work in our institutions when they finished their training. This is a step which various provincial governments have taken, but we have done nothing in this direction.

Of 19 positions for psychologists in the establishment, only nine are filled according to the answer the minister gave me some time ago. Of those nine, five of them had only a B.A., three an M.A. and one a Ph.D. I want to suggest that the number is much too low and the training they have is completely inadequate to do the kind of job that people much better qualified than anyone in this house have said over and over again is required, if we are to have a modern correctional program. We have only eight psychiatrists on the establishment. I do not know how many they concede there are, but to the best of my knowledge not one of them is full time.

At the present time a murder trial is going on in the city of Quebec. On trial is a man named Dion. I have just been told he was sentenced to death today. I do not want to say anything about his guilt or the crime he committed, but I think it is significant that this was not the first time he had pleaded guilty to that type of offence. It was not the first time he had been in a penitentiary. The reports which our vastly understaffed psychiatric departments had given on previous occasions were that this man was a very severely disturbed and ill person. How much psychiatric treatment did this man have, may I ask, before the parole board recommended his release?

I am not being critical of the parole board. I want to make that clear. I am not being critical of the psychiatrists. I have met the man who is on the staff of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, Dr. Cormier, and he is a really competent psychiatrist. But he works, I believe, only three mornings a week. How much can he do on this basis in an institution of that size? I want to suggest that if anyone is guilty of the murder of these boys it is the governments of Canada, the parliament of Canada and the people of Canada who have refused, in the past, and who have refused until this day to provide the specialist scientific staff which is required in a system such as ours.

The Fauteux report stated that the cornerstone of a modern correctional system is the classification staff. I want to read examples of the kind of classification staff we have recruited to do this work. It is true, we have made a beginning. We have the beginnings of a classification staff, the beginnings of a new system. The minister answered some questions which I put to him some time ago and I want to read some examples of what has been done. I am not being critical of these people. We get the people we ask for. The qualifications are those we set and, what is more important, we are getting the kind of people we are prepared to pay for. Obviously, we are not paying very much. Here they are. At Dorchester, the classification officer spent one year at university plus attendance at classification staff college. At Dorchester farm camp the classification officer is a high school graduate. These are the kind of people we are putting on the job, though the Fauteux report says classification is the cornerstone of the system. At the Blue Mountain institution the classification officer has almost completed his studies for the degree of B.A. At St. Vincent de Paul the classification officer has grade 12 plus university courses in criminology. Another has grade 10 plus some university courses.

At Kingston penitentiary the classification officer has three years attendance at university plus courses under the penitentiary program. A classification assistant has grade 12, plus courses at the penitentiary. Two classification assistants have senior matriculation, plus courses, and another classification assistant has grade 10. At Collins Bay the classification officer has two years attendance at university plus courses; at Landry Crossing correctional camp the classification officer has junior matriculation; at Joyceville institution the classification officer has senior matriculation; at Manitoba penitentiary the classification officer has two years attendance at university, and at the Manitoba farm camp the classification officer has grade 11. At the Saskatchewan penitentiary the classification officer has a grade 10 education, at the William Head institution he has senior matriculation, and at the Agassiz correctional camp the classification officer has a high school education—I assume that phrase means he did not even graduate from high school.

Once again, let me say that I am not being critical of these people. We are responsible for the kind of people we have working for us in these institutions. I suggest that while we have a situation of this kind we have not even begun to nibble at the edge of the problem which faces us.

The Fauteux commission recommended that there be a presentence report.

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Winkler: It is not my intention to delay the committee for any length of time and I have taken this attitude in all cases with regard to the balance of these estimates, but a situation has arisen since last April with regard to my constituency with which I feel obliged to deal, and I am sure the minister will know whereof I speak. In the concluding minutes of my contribution it may seem as if I am being somewhat irrelevant but I trust you will bear with me, Mr. Chairman, because my remarks will have a definite relationship to the balance of my words.

First of all, let me say there is a considerable degree of agreement everywhere in Canada that a greater degree of fundamental progress and reform took place in the general field of justice under the Conservative government than in any period of Canada's history prior to that time. Under the capable and aggressive administration of the former minister of justice, the Hon. Davie Fulton, stimulated by the well-known interest taken in this field by the former prime minister himself, the important and long overdue steps then taken included improvements in the administration of justice in Canada, reorganization and modernization of the federal penitentiary system and the correctional program, a new and effective approach to the problem of narcotic drug addiction and the traffic in barbiturates, a new law on capital murder, and several important amendments in the field of criminal law generally.

I have the details here before me, but I shall desist from taking the time of the committee by referring to them at greater length for the reasons I have previously mentioned. I wish, however, to make a brief reference to the advance which was made under the direction of the former minister in the field of prison work camps. The value of this work has been proven many times since it was undertaken, and it is the result of the policy which was so vigorously followed by the minister of that day. I also have before me a number of well documented articles and editorials by various organizations, and others interested in this work, acknowledging the tremendous steps forward which were taken under the direction of the minister of that day.

I also have a copy of the speech which was delivered by the former minister of justice, Mr. Fulton, on the occasion of the opening of the Joyceville institution. In the course of this speech Mr. Fulton indicated that the work of prison reform involved not only the officials of a penitentiary but the public as a whole. The rehabilitation program which the minister sought to bring about at that time was, in effect, made possible as a result of the change in the thinking brought about by the Fauteux report. I refer particularly to the section in which it is stated that federal and provincial governments should proceed as quickly as possible with the establishment and maintenance of special types of institutions for the treatment of various types of offenders. The minister of that day initiated action in this regard by setting up a committee to study the problem and bring in recommendations. I believe it was determined that the inmates of our institutions would be regarded in a somewhat different light; that there would be a change in the attitude taken toward them. The minister of that day tended to favour a program of lessened security. I believe the program, generally speaking, favoured medium security institutions, or institutions where security was even less, and he proceeded quickly in this regard. I believe he indicated in that speech at Joyceville that this type of reform in the treatment of inmates was long overdue and that it had been proven that these people could be rehabilitated in a much more sensible and satisfactory manner if they were handled in this way.

In order to save the time of the committee I will not refer in too much detail to the remarks of the minister of that day, but I should like to point out that he did state this at Joyceville:

> By far the largest part of our penitentiary population does not require detention in a maximum security institution, yet the vast majority of our prisoners are kept in just such conditions. We do not need that type of accommodation. We do need more medium and minimum security institutions into which we can send carefully selected inmates to undergo carefully planned treatment and training.

Further on he stated:

> It is here that our new parole system has its principal role.

As hon. members know, of course, he moved quickly in that direction. In the course of his tenure of office he made certain announcements that were indicative of the progress he intended to make. His thinking and the thinking of the departmental officials were based on two main premises. The first was to arouse in the people of Canada themselves an interest in this long neglected branch of government and to make Canadians aware of their responsibilities in this respect and of their continuing fight against crime. The second was to implement reforms and provide new facilities and programs which had been worked out during the same period.

Accordingly, Mr. Chairman, about the time of the election campaign of 1962 the minister visited my constituency and announced the construction of a project somewhere in the area of the villages of Markdale, Flesherton and Dundalk. I hold in my hand a copy of the Flesherton paper of Wednesday, May 16, 1962 in which is reported the announcement by the minister of the construction of a $4 million project with a yearly payroll of approximately $1 million. That project was to be built in that particular area.

Because of the necessity of proceeding with this project at that time my Liberal opponent also thought he should endorse it. Accordingly, in an advertisement in the issue of June 13 of the same paper he assured the people of that area that if they were interested in the construction of such an institution their wishes would surely be fulfilled when he was elected. Obviously that was the thinking of the people in the Liberal party at that time.

I come to an area now where my remarks may possibly be slightly irrelevant, but I would ask hon. members to bear with me because what I am about to say has a definite bearing on the program that is being followed. As the minister knows, I have discussed this matter with him personally and I honour the privilege of interviews with him for the purpose of discussing it. You will know, Mr. Chairman, as will other members of the committee, that at that time several medium security institutions of this nature were planned, one for the constituency of the hon.

member for Bow River, one for the constituency of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot and another one which I believe has actually proceeded. It is my understanding that as of the present time the others have been terminated, after some expenditure of money.

The important factor is whether the thinking of the department has now changed. Have they returned to the thinking that such a program is not the type of program to be followed? Are the institutions now in the planning stage to be maximum security prisons and is this the reason for the cancellation of the institution for my constituency? When I think of all the acts of patronage that have taken place, I wonder whether patronage is not creeping into the Department of Justice. I have very good reason for saying this.

As the minister knows, my Liberal opponent in the last campaign was down here pleading for the construction of this institution in my constituency. Therefore he agreed with the thinking of the minister of that day and with my own desires. Not only did he come to Ottawa but he brought the Liberal organization with him. In addition to the plea of the Liberal candidate, I understand that the provincial Liberal member for the constituency north of mine has also been pleading for this institution. I believe that the present leader of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario was also here pleading for this institution.

This is a very peculiar state of affairs. I believe the reason for the withdrawal lies in the fact that the minister has intimated that such an institution must be a maximum security prison, and therefore cannot be constructed in that part of the country because the lines of communication are too far removed, and as these criminals are hardened types they must be kept under tigher security. If this is the case, I suggest that the present minister review some of the thinking advanced by the minister of that day, and he will find that his thoughts on the matter are very basic, directly relevant to the findings of the Fauteux report and should be carried out, I believe. I think it is not too far fetched to say that the fresh air in my riding would do such people a lot of good, rather than keeping them in some area of southern Ontario where the lines of communication may be a little shorter but where traffic is heavy. So far as hardened criminals are concerned, I think my area would be a very good one in which to rehabilitate them, rather than putting them in the large and overcrowded institutions which exist today.

I have mentioned people who have made representations in this regard. It may be a peculiar thing, but I remember the present leader of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario saying how kind and considerate the Conservative government had been to him. I must say he was probably referring to the provincial government, but thank God he has to deal with an organization like the Conservative government in the province of Ontario because he knows, as does everyone else who has beaten a path to the minister's door, that there is no use coming to Ottawa.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I just wish to say a few words about the estimates of the Department of Justice now under consideration.

First, I would like to extend well deserved congratulations to the head of that department, because the minister is a man who fulfils his duties with great dignity and honesty; he is a very distinguished parliamentary figure and it is not too much to say that we are very proud of him.

Mr. Chairman, the matter I want to deal with as briefly as possible is the famous Coffin case, which is creating quite a stir in the province of Quebec. The matter was raised for the first time in the house last week, if I am not mistaken, when I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) if he intended to take special measures following the publication of a very contentious book, not to say slanderous, about some persons of rank. The minister answered me quite properly that this matter came under provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Chairman, this famous case, now known as the Coffin case, causes as much turmoil as the Dreyfus case which happened many years ago but is still referred to. I wonder whether the federal government would not be well advised to institute an inquiry into this matter, even if it comes under provincial jurisdiction, because it would not be infringing in any way the provinces' prerogatives, since the following provision can be found in the Canadian Bill of Rights which is federal legislation:

> It is hereby recognized and declared that in Canada, there has existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely:
> (a) the right of the individual to life, liberty, security of the person—

Mr. Chairman, if there was a miscarriage of justice as stated forcibly and violently by Mr. Jacques Hebert, it means that an attempt was made on the life of a man and that his life was even taken wrongfully which is a violation of section 1 of the bill of rights and consequently, it concerns the central government.

On the other hand, Coffin's conviction was maintained by the Supreme Court of Canada, our court of last instance, which exists by virtue of a federal act, the Supreme Court Act.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the persons involved in that case are treated by the author, not as guilty people, but as murderers: "I accuse the murderers of Wilbert Coffin", he says, and there cannot be any stronger title; among those murderers accused by Jacques Hebert there is a respectable and honest judge of the Quebec court of appeal who was appointed by the federal government.

Mr. Chairman, all those reasons, in my humble opinion, call for action by the federal government.

I think it is most important that the whole population have unswerving confidence in all our institutions, whatever the authority concerned. If the general public has no trust in the value and the efficiency of our judicial institutions, then I say that order, peace and good administration are jeopardized in Canada; and order, peace and good administration in Canada come under the jurisdiction of the federal authorities.

Those are the reasons why I humbly and earnestly submit that the central government should institute an inquiry in the Coffin case.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, as we are discussing the estimates of the Department of Justice, I cannot help thinking about certain problems which have recently beset Canada and greatly affected our fellow Canadians. I am referring to the combine problem, and more particularly to the sugar monopoly.

If I mention that particular commodity, it is because I want the Minister of Justice to know that, while he is hiding behind technicalities, according to which price fixing comes under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces, the fact remains that in this particular case—the rocketing sugar prices we have known since the beginning of the year—the Minister of Justice had a very definite responsibility and that he could, under the Combines Investigation Act, that legislation the purpose of which is to fight monopolies, have ordered an inquiry which would have shown Canadians what intrigues were behind that shameful speculation.

I say "shameful speculation" because figures quoted in this house, show that Canada's supplies of raw sugar were the same as the preceding years, that there was none of that so-called shortage on the international markets, and that the production of this commodity was fairly good in all producing countries.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that as far as sugar is concerned, our population has been left to the mercy of greedy speculators, who took advantage of the fact that Canadians cannot do without sugar. It seems that these speculators had the benediction of the authorities to shamelessly go on taking unfair advantage of the people.

So I call the attention of the Minister of Justice on this matter. I am convinced that he cannot get away with it so elegantly, if we consider that profits in the hundreds of millions of dollars were made by some firms in this speculation which lasted only for a relatively short time.

I also wish to call the attention of the minister on a matter in which I am especially interested. I mean juvenile delinquency. Perhaps the minister will tell me that this is also a responsibility of the provincial courts. I feel, on the contrary, we are responsible also as members of parliament because we cannot divest ourselves of our obligations in that respect. I suggest we are all directly concerned with the problem of juvenile delinquency in Canada.

However, it is appropriate to ask ourselves what our responsibilities are, who is responsible and what are the causes of this increase in juvenile delinquency in our country.

I have come to the conclusion that the present irresponsibility of parents towards their children is a direct cause of juvenile delinquency.

Because of present economic circumstances, fathers and mothers have to work at jobs in which they are under such a nervous strain that they have to take several hours of relaxation during their free time.

It is my feeling that they work only to provide for their children and to increase the family income. That may also be one of the reasons why parents have abandoned part of their responsibilities concerning the bringing up of their children.

But it is probably not the field in which our joint responsibilities are the greatest. I shall therefore proceed by stages in this scale of values. And the next one, in my opinion, is the system of censorship which is definitely inadequate at present. The producers of films shown in movie-houses and on television seem to have only one purpose: to depict as heroes those who succeed in breaking law and order.

Those movies are also shown at certain hours when very young children are listening and can observe the behaviour of those characters. They are very impressed and, as a result, the inbred taste for adventure in all youngsters is increased, which prompts them to imitate and go through the same motions, without realizing, on account of their age, the important implications that those thoughtless actions can have in the future.

I think that the censorship of films shown on television and in our cinemas should be reconsidered and reassessed if we earnestly wish to raise the moral standard of the population.

There is also another dangerous medium for youth. I am thinking about the yellow press or these famous scandal sheets, as they are commonly called. They do not care about the effects which sadistic pictures occasionally published may have on young people.

To refer to a well-known one in Montreal, let me mention Allo Police with its publication of morbid news items. This scandal sheet is immunizing our youth against wholesome reactions they they should experience in such cases.

Here again, we realize that it is enormously difficult to control those newspapers and that it is the duty of the people themselves to discharge this responsibility as individuals by refusing to patronize them.

On the other hand, we know that the mass of the people can unfortunately be very easily influenced by the advertising media, by everything which appeals to the sight or the ear.

I believe that it is the duty of parliament to check the eagerness of those in pursuit of a goal which is far from being commendable, who do us almost incalculable harm and multiply our problems by obliging us to spend public funds to build institutions which they contribute to fill by the way they comment and present the news in general.

Mr. Chairman, I believe an article which was published in a newspaper in my district gives a typical example of the state of mind in which our population lives at the present time. That article was written by Mr. Germain Tremblay, who was making some comments concerning the recent crash of a T.C.A. DC-8 near Montreal. Here is what he wrote:

> At a time when most Quebecers felt a deep and intense sympathy towards the victims of the DC-8, that some other persons happened to indulge into gross vandalism and pure and simple acts of robbery does not fail aggrieving us more and adding to our concern as responsible and answerable members of a humanity, the nervous system of which is incessantly taxed to the maximum by all sorts of unlikely catastrophes and tragedies. We live seemingly at the epidermic level.

And further on:

> To quote just one example, we find that the reading of a newspaper like Allo Police has too many adepts among our people and that it is not such as to soften our manners. Apparently, that sheet and some other weekly sheets of the same nature contribute to the line-production in the "Belle Province" of experts in the sordid and the unusual. There is nothing more disheartening in misfortune than the moment when we have to lose hope in men themselves. Those we should pity are not always the dead. Very often, they are the quick. We can be so stupid when we want to.

Mr. Chairman, I felt I should quote that thought because it shows to what a degree has been impressed upon the minds of our population that sense of the unreal accompanied by a complete lack of the sense of values, since certain individuals, in order to have souvenirs, went so far as to go and rob the victims of that tragedy.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Chairman, could I have the hon. gentleman's consent to interrupt him for a moment? The acting chief government whip has two very important motions to make concerning changes in the personnel of committees which are scheduled to meet tonight. In order to permit him to make those motions I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again this day.

The Chairman: Shall I rise, report certain resolutions, and ask leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

1. Departmental administration including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $1,378,100.

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply on vote No. 1 of the Department of Justice.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, before recess, I was reviewing the main reasons for the increase in juvenile delinquency. I mentioned in particular the social and economic conditions which make families, as well as the press, radio, television and films, refuse to assume their responsibilities.

I leave this subject by underlining a major factor which, in my opinion, is responsible for the situation that exists now: I mean our economic system which does not hold any hope for our young people who see their future darkening because we, who are now entrusted with the nation's business, keep on increasing the public debt which they will have to bear and reimburse later.

I think that this economic situation in which we live is to a great extent—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Lake St. John, but it seems to me that he is straying quite far from the subject matter of the resolution now under consideration by the committee when he talks about the country's economic situation.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): I agree with you, Mr. Chairman, but I think that a certain link can be found between the responsibilities of the Department of Justice with regard to juvenile delinquency and the reasons for it. I feel that the Department of Justice can, in its own field, point out to the economic and administrative sectors, the reasons for the problems it has to deal with at the present time.

In my opinion, the present economy of this country does not offer to our young people the advantages they are entitled to expect; that is the reason for this problem we now experience: juvenile delinquency.

To conclude, I should also like to mention that judges, when they met in Quebec city, admitted the weakness of our system as far as institutions where sentences can be served are concerned. In my opinion, judges have no choice when they have to pass a sentence. As a matter of fact, they must sentence offenders to a term in a penitentiary or in a prison. I suggest that the government should generalize in Canada, as it had been undertaken, the setting up of those institutions that make it possible to rehabilitate the young and not so young people who, in fact, constitute not only a burden for society but also a loss, since we deprive ourselves of the services they might render if they were rehabilitated.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, we begin consideration of the estimates of the Department of Justice. They amount to a total of $30,748,000 for a department with 3,559 employees—I believe that the bench, at all levels, is included.

Although the incumbent of the Department of Justice and myself are politically in complete disagreement, I must admit that he is competent as far as the administration of the Department of Justice in our country is concerned.

[Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John).]

This afternoon we heard several members successively and I would be remiss if I did not mention, for instance, the member who spoke on behalf of the N.D.P. about our penitentiaries, because it is important to reorganize them so that the directors of these institutions be, not professional executioners but educators.

We must by all means see, above all, to the rehabilitation of our young people who, for one reason or another, have to spend some time in those penitentiaries, in whatever province it may be.

We have received, on many occasions complaints concerning the treatment given to some prisoners, chiefly young people, as one must admit that inmates in those penitentiaries are mostly young people from 20 to 30 years old.

Mr. Chairman, I call upon the Minister of Justice to consider this question of prime importance most carefully. The staff of those penitentiaries must include educators, as I said, men and women of great ability who can come to an understanding and communicate with other human beings.

Very often in the past parolees became habitual criminals. Why? Because they had no chance to rehabilitate themselves and because, instead of being taught moral principles during their term in the penitentiary, their morale was undermined by the sombre perspective they were shown of going back to a society where there was no place for them.

I should also like to say a word about a point which the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) raised this afternoon, that is the Wilbert Coffin case which puzzled and still puzzles the average Canadian citizen.

The accusations in Jacques Hebert's book constitute an attack against the judicial organization in our country. The judicial organization of Canada finds itself today, if not undermined, at least badly damaged by violent statements and attacks against the administration of justice in one of this country's regions.

That is why I endorse the request of the hon. member for Lotbiniere when he asks the Minister of Justice to institute a royal commission to inquire into this particular case. I suggest that, in the present circumstances, such an inquiry is in order and is becoming increasingly so. Our whole judicial structure is attacked, dragged through the mire, and there is a point beyond which we should not allow things to go.

If Mr. Hebert is right, let the government find the evidence. If he is not right, then Mr. Hebert becomes himself a sort of moral assassin of our judicial structure in Canada.

I feel that the Canadian Minister of Justice does not have the right to tolerate or put up with a book which directs fantastic accusations againt judges and lawyers.

Therefore, that royal commission should be set up, so that the Canadian public does not lose confidence in our judicial structure and the administration of justice, not only in the province of Quebec but in the country as a whole.

Mr. Chairman, I should now like to deal with the parole of prisoners. It will cost the Department of Justice $701,500 to administer the Parole Act.

On many occasions, complaints have been made about paroles being granted too easily in some cases. As a matter of fact, the Dion case was brought up before supper and I believe this criminal was sentenced today to be hanged. Dion was paroled once or twice, if I am not mistaken. Finally, after being charged with the murder of youngsters of 11, 12 and 13 years—there were four, but we mentioned only a few—Dion is now sentenced to hang after succeeding in evading, so to speak, the law of the province and of the country.

Now, occasionally some young people are condemned to six months, a year or two, young people who were arrested following a burglary, car theft, armed robbery, theft committed wearing a mask. Among them are young repeaters who in several cases were led astray when they were quite young. While habitual criminals sometimes manage to obtain their parole, some of those young people can hardly manage to do so, even when favourable reports are given by the judge who heard their case, by the parish priest, by clergymen of some municipalities or districts, by relatives or employers who are willing to hire them.

It appears to me that we should examine more thoroughly and carefully the requests for parole which are submitted to us or to the Minister of Justice in the case of many of our young people who are now in jail. This does not mean that we should give our blessing to the vandalism of those young convicts. Not at all. But I am of the opinion that after a stay of a few months in prison, many of those young people change their mind and become honourable citizens afterwards, citizens who understand the implications of their actions. I maintain that most of them have committed thoughtless deeds because they had joined a gang or a group of young people of their age, which was often dominated and led by elders—and it is in this manner that those young people have become involved.

Now, the parents must be taken into consideration and also the family circle where those young people evolve. If the possibility of an easy rehabilitation is seen for them, if they seem to show regret as sincere as possible and a desire not to repeat the same actions, it seems to me that they should get better consideration from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Chairman, in the estimates of the Department of Justice, there is also an item concerning the administration of the R.C.M.P. On that score, I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Justice on a fact which happened in Quebec city some ten days ago. A certain Mr. Jos. Gignac had secured a $5,000 loan from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and he was paying it back at the rate of $100 a month. He experienced financial difficulties and undertook to pay back the corporation at the rate of $30 a month, and that, for the last five or six months. However, some ten days ago, while the balance due by Mr. Gignac was $507, an R.C.M.P. officer from the Quebec division, under the direction of a Mr. Poirier, arrested Mr. Gignac and put him in a cell, ordering him to pay the total amount of $507, otherwise he would remain in jail.

Apparently, the individual named Poirier, a very zealous member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, uttered threats against Mr. Gignac, saying that he would serve several months in jail should he not pay the amount of $507. Fortunately, somebody came to Mr. Gignac's rescue and paid the total amount, thus allowing him to recover his freedom.

I wonder under what section of what legislation a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police can arrest and imprison a man simply because he does not discharge the monthly $100 payments he undertook to make to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

I have the greatest respect for the R.C.M.P. I imagine it is the most famous police force in the world since it is given as example in the whole world, but among its members may creep some zealous people of Mr. Poirier's type, who threaten the people they meet or rub shoulders with behind bars.

I point out this case to the attention of the Minister of Justice to let him know that Mr. Gignac was imprisoned because he had not paid the monthly $100 he owed Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. Chairman, it was said a while ago that Canadian penitentiaries should be rehabilitation centres rather than correction centres. I agree with that. It happens that small thieves are condemned to one or two years in jail because they broke down a store door. They are given a good talking to and urged not to commit again the offences for which they were condemned. On the other hand, there are others who should be the subject of a very special attention from the Minister of Justice and be put behind bars too, especially when there is evidence that they did not steal only from stores, taxi drivers or banks but from all the population. I refer to the sugar trust.

It was suggested this afternoon that a fine be imposed on those cartels, those "controllers", those cartel and "trust" owners. A letter received by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) was also read to us which proved beyond any doubt that exorbitant prices were being imposed on sugar, whichever trust was involved. But the trouble is that, should the Minister of Justice decide to prosecute those people, make them pay a fine of $25,000 or $50,000, then they would go back to where they came from as if nothing had happened. A fine of $250,000 or $25,000 means nothing to them because, upon their return, all they would have to do would be to raise the price of sugar by one half cent, one quarter cent or 2 cents per pound.

Because, then, it is $1,000,000 which goes into their bank. Therefore, it is no punishment for them. However, there is a way to prevent trusts and cartels from exploiting the Canadian people. When we are confronted with the man responsible for a trust on sugar or some other commodity—let us amend the legislation so as to put him behind bars for 10 years. I assure you that once behind bars, the "controller" in question will think about it twice before exploiting the people again when he goes back to his usual business, whether selling sugar or engaging in any other sector of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Chairman, we have little thieves, but we also have public thieves. They are the ones who jeopardize the economic security of this country. They are the ones who prevent the poor from shaking off their poverty and impose hardships to human persons who do not deserve them. As it was demonstrated, the price of sugar is twice as much in Canada as in the United States. This situation is certainly not normal. We have been discussing the sugar situation in this house for three months, and the more we discuss it the more the people who control the sugar trust go on raising their prices, in order to take more unfair advantage of the people.

That is the reason why I ask the Minister of Justice to amend the legislation, so that those trust controllers might be sent to jail. Then we would enjoy greater freedom.

I understand that some trusts may help support election coffers. In all likelihood, this support to election coffers prevents the present Minister of Justice, as was also the case for past ministers, to take action, but we, in our group, are not backed by the same coffers. We enjoy a greater freedom and this is why we denounce these swindlers and these trusts throughout Canada.

I appeal then to the Minister of Justice who, I believe, wants greater justice for all Canadians. We have a responsibility to help the oppressed and to safeguard them from the attacks of financiers and of trusts that prevent the human person from knowing self-achievement in a country like ours.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say just a few words, so as not to delay the passing of the minister's estimates.

I may have made somewhat bitter remarks in the past against the minister, but I am pleased to avail myself of this opportunity to congratulate him for his appointment, which is well deserved on account of the services he has given the country for a little more than 25 years.

I wish to tell him that he has chosen a very efficient staff. I had the occasion to seek information from his two executive assistants, Mr. Lord and Mr. Denis, lawyers both, and I have always been answered in a courteous and conscientious way.

I would also like to ask the minister whether he intends to amend the Criminal Code in 1964, so as to allow the provinces to establish lotteries if they wish to. I know that there are provinces which do not agree about such a thing at the present time, but the federal government often assumes positions which do not require the provinces' unanimous consent.

My second question is this. At a recent meeting in Banff, Alberta, the minister announced that the government was considering the convening of a conference, in 1964, to amend the British North America Act. I should appreciate it if the minister would tell the house what he means by the word "amend". Will the objective be the strengthening of national unity? What amendments does he have in mind?

I wonder also whether it would be possible for the Department of Justice to examine a problem which exists throughout Canada concerning the C.B.C. Indeed, certain provinces complain because they have no right of censorship over the films shown on television.

In fact, I remember that on one occasion the C.B.C. presented a film on its network shortly after the authorities of a western province had forbidden its showing in theatres.

I would also like to ask the minister if it would not be possible to amend the legislation soon, in order to stop this great number of n.s.f. cheques the payment of which is refused by the bank owing to insufficient funds. Those cheques are a plague at this time everywhere in the country. I wonder if there would not be some means of passing legislation similar to that now in force in Switzerland. In fact, under the provisions of that legislation, whoever writes a cheque without sufficient funds is immediately placed under arrest and brought to court. I believe that the adoption of such legislation would prove beneficial to society.

Mr. Chairman, as far as Mr. Jacques Hebert's book is concerned, I do not think that we should give it too much attention, because this author specializes mainly in sensationalism. One must not let oneself be carried away by whatever he writes, because this is an existentialist author, and he delights especially in writing sensational material and in trying to revive old stories.

In my opinion, the minister was wise to ask the experts of his department to examine the book instead of setting up immediately a royal commission of inquiry. In fact, if he feels that the question is doubtful, it might be advisable to have competent lawyers study the Coffin case, before an investigation is launched, to prevent boosting the sale of Jacques Hebert's book by excessive publicity. Indeed that is the author's objective. Afterwards, the file could be closed if the experts so recommend. I would like it very much if the minister would answer those few questions.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm allow me a question? Does he not find the question serious enough—

[Text]

The Chairman: Order. I have recognized the hon. member for Skeena and given him the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, when a minister introduces his estimates for the first time, it is customary to congratulate him on his appointment. Right now, I do not quite know whether I should do just that by congratulating the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) or whether I should wish him farewell.

Mr. Chevrier: At any rate, it is well said.

[Text]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that that is the extent of my knowledge of the language in which the minister is so proficient, because I will have to wait until I see the translation to discover what he said in rejoinder.

When the hon. member for Winnipeg North spoke he outlined the views of the members of the New Democratic Party very ably and well, and I simply want to say in passing that I endorse them. He indicated that the emphasis within penitentiaries should be on rehabilitation or reform, rather than on dispensing justice and carrying out sentences merely for the sake of carrying them out. It seems to me still, as it did a few years ago, that the penitentiaries branch is perhaps more interested in the soul of the inmate in prison than in what he will do when he gets back into society again. We spend more money for and employ more clergy than psychologists. I understand there are some nine full time psychologists on the staff of the penitentiaries branch and not a single full time psychiatrist, but there are 22 full time ministers or priests to minister to the needs of inmates. If we would alter that situation a bit and spend more money on psychologists and rehabilitation, those gentlemen and ladies who are now inmates of prisons would have a better chance to get to that place where the members of the clergy want them to go after they leave this earth.

In my view there is not too strong a desire on the part of members of parliament to pay more than passing attention to affairs within the penitentiaries, or to penological matters. In that regard I am reminded of the fact that since our native Indian people have been given the right to vote in federal elections there has been a marked increase in the interest by political parties and candidates and members of parliament in Indian affairs, because the Indians are a group of voters now. This has been beneficial, because it means that parliament and members of parliament are better informed about Indian affairs. It seems to me that we might expand this idea and perhaps give the inmates of prisons the right to vote in federal elections. If such were the case, I am sure the prisons would be filled with members of parliament wanting to find out how these people were going to vote, and in the process members of parliament would discover some of the problems within prisons. The result might be a better attitude toward prison matters than exists at the present time.

I should like to deal with only one aspect of the activities of the Department of Justice, which has to do with two sections of the Criminal Code. There is one section which I think is a most shocking invasion of the rights of the people of this country. I refer to section 660, the so-called habitual criminal section providing for the imposition of a sentence of preventive detention, which is in effect a life sentence.

A person may be charged, if that is the proper expression, under section 660 of the code if he has been convicted on three separate occasions since the age of 18 years of indictable offences for which he has received a sentence of five years or more. If this can be proved to the court he can then be sentenced to life imprisonment, or as a so-called habitual criminal receive a sentence of preventive detention.

Even though this provision has been on the statute books for some 13 or 14 years, I submit this is wrong in principle because in fact it is a process by which an individual may be sentenced twice for the same crime. He may receive a sentence which in fact is the third of a series of sentences he has received since the age of 18 and then find he is subject to being charged as a habitual criminal and may be so charged and found guilty under that section. I am not sure of the legal terminology used with regard to this section. I do not know whether the individual is charged, found guilty and sentenced or whether there is merely an application to the court for the imposition of such a sentence. However, in essence the individual may find himself sentenced to a certain number of years on a specific charge and then find later that an application has been made to the court to sentence him again for exactly the same charge, plus two or more other charges for which he has already been sentenced and with regard to which he has already paid his penalty.

I submit this is sentencing the individual twice for the same offences; and in addition the sentence of preventive detention is based to an extent on future crimes that might be committed, because reference is also made in the statute to the individual habitually associating with other criminals or normally leading that sort of life. This section of the code is not confined to crimes of violence such as sexual offences or crimes of violence such as armed robbery or assault. It covers the whole field of indictable offences, and because it does its impact falls more heavily upon certain sections of our so-called criminal society than it does upon others.

I am thinking primarily about the impact of the status of habitual criminal as described in the code upon those unfortunate people who are narcotic addicts. These people, because they are narcotics addicts and because of the rather stupid policy adopted in the past towards narcotic addiction, are pretty well doomed to a life of narcotic addiction, whether they are in prison or out of it. Under this section a person may well find that he could receive, for one indictable offence, a sentence of five years if the crime with which he is charged carried a sentence of five years. Then, he could discover later that, even though he had been sentenced to the maximum for the particular offence with which he was charged, he was confronted with a life sentence under the habitual criminal section of the code. He might, on the other hand, find himself having been charged with an offence which, for the sake of argument, carried a life sentence, such as trafficking in narcotics, and the presiding judge, in view of the circumstances of the case, may only sentence him to two, three or five years. Then, that individual may find himself faced with an application by the attorney general under the habitual criminal section of the code.

I submit that inherent in this section there is the principle that a person may be sentenced twice for the same crime. He may be sentenced once for the crime itself, and then under the habitual criminal section of the code which carries with it a sentence of life imprisonment if in fact, he has had other convictions which carried with them possible sentences of five years or more.

Normally, I gather there is a period of 30 days during which an individual may appeal his sentence. It can happen, and often has happened, that an individual who has been sentenced does not appeal within the 30 days. Then, he finds, after his last resort has gone, that he may be imprisoned for life if a charge is laid under this section. However, if an indication were given to him before that this charge might be laid, he might have appealed his sentence. There are a variety of reasons why a person might not appeal a sentence, such as a lack of money and so on. He might then, having the knowledge that he might be faced with life imprisonment under the habitual criminal section, take steps to save himself from that fate.

It is submitted that some people plead guilty or, in effect, take steps to prove their guilt under section 660 of the code without actually knowing what they are doing. Perhaps I could best illustrate this point by quoting from a letter sent to me by an inmate in one of the penitentiaries in Canada. I do not believe it would be correct for me to put the name of this individual on the public records. Any hon. member desiring to see the letter to ascertain that an inmate did write to me, may do so. The letter reads in part as follows, in respect of this question of pleading guilty or proving your guilt under the habitual criminal section:

> There's one other thing that bothers me very much and that is the way the officials of the court allow you to plead guilty, without your knowledge, to what amounts to life imprisonment. By that I mean they first, with no warning after they have found you guilty or you may plead guilty, which I did, they then ask you if a document is your criminal record which, in fact it is. When you reply that it is, not knowing you are about to be charged as an habitual criminal 80 or 90 days later, they use this admission in your habitual proceedings, which of course makes it very easy for conviction.

This, coupled with the practice which allows the 30 day period for appeal to lapse before an application is made, is a most unfair way of using what I think is a shocking section of the code in any event. The chairman of the national parole board, Mr. Street, is a person for whom I have great admiration. Incidentally, I think he is doing a remarkable job of administering the act under his jurisdiction and assisting in providing a mechanism whereby people may be rehabilitated. A few years ago Mr. Street made a statement to the effect that the habitual criminal section could be used more often so that individuals would be placed under his jurisdiction for potential parole of life sentences. Then, they would have control of these individuals on parole, with all the administrative facilities available to them, and that individual would be subject to their control for the rest of his natural life.

As a result, there was a marked increase in applications for preventive detention under section 660 of the Criminal Code. This has resulted in what I believe are some anomalous and rather ridiculous situations. If we look, for instance, at the question of the age of people who have been sentenced under this section, we find that in the city of Vancouver a 68 year old man, a narcotics addict, was sentenced to life imprisonment. We all, of course, have a feeling of pity and sorrow for narcotics addicts. I believe everybody in this house regrets the fact that past governments, this government and provincial governments, have not found an effective and sensible way of dealing with narcotics addiction. Here we have a person 68 years of age, a narcotics addict and he is sentenced to life imprisonment as a habitual criminal. This is a rather ridiculous situation. The statistics printed in Hansard for July 17 of this year reveal that of the 68 people who are serving sentences of preventive detention, eight were 58 years of age or over. As I have said, this seems to be a rather ridiculous situation.

In British Columbia, the primary effect of this section of the Criminal Code falls upon people who have a history of narcotic addiction. We all know how the R.C.M.P. hounds people who have a history of narcotics addiction, almost day and night, for the purpose of trapping them and charging them with possession or trafficking in narcotics. Automatically, they are sentenced to the penitentiary. I have a great wealth of correspondence from one individual in the British Columbia penitentiary, and have visited and spoken to others who have found themselves in this position.

The minister, his department and the government should review very carefully and seriously the section of the Criminal Code which sets up the machinery for preventive detention and take steps to eliminate it as it is presently constituted, because I submit it is a violation of the right of an individual, namely the right not to be sentenced more than once for the same crime.

There are other matters in which this party is extremely interested. I shall not go into them at this time, except to say that other members of the party have an interest in these fields also, and will put their points of view to the minister. We will attentively watch and listen to the responses of the minister to the various points we raise, and we hope the words we use will somehow or other have a beneficial effect.

Mr. Prittie: I should first like to congratulate my colleague, the hon. member for Skeena, on his efforts in French tonight. I notice he has been carrying on some correspondence with the minister of natural resources in Quebec, and it seems Mr. Levesque has had some influence upon him.

Other hon. members this evening have spoken about people who are in prison and who may have been dealt with harshly. I am going to speak of some people who perhaps should be in prison and who have not been dealt with at all harshly. I want to say something about the anti-combines act and the activities of the government in the past few years in enforcing it. I have had a feeling for some time that for a great many years really not very much has been done in Canada in this particular field, and my feeling is shared by many people. It is only rarely that we see any successful prosecutions in the field of monopolistic practices, and usually these are followed by what seem to be very small fines.

Many members of the public are skeptical about this whole affair, and the vague feelings they and I have had, have been substantiated in a recent major criticism of Canadian anti-combines legislation and the enforcement of it, in a book published earlier this year entitled "Canadian Anti-Combines Administration, 1952-60." This was written by Gideon Rosenbluth, professor of economics at the University of British Columbia, and Mr. Hugh Thorburn, an assistant professor of political science at Queen's University.

Before dealing with the period under study, 1952-60, the authors give a short history of combines legislation in Canada. They deal with the early days, with the views of Mr. Mackenzie King on this subject, and with the work of Mr. McGregor who was commissioner until his resignation in 1949. They then go into the dispute which arose, I believe around 1948 or 1949, between some members of the cabinet, between Mr. C. D. Howe and Mr. McGregor, a dispute which arose out of an investigation of the flour milling industry.

Following the resignation of Mr. McGregor a royal commission was established to investigate the legislation, and this commission was generally known as the MacQuarrie commission. I note that the President of the Privy Council was a member of that royal commission, and it made some recommendations, some of which were implemented by the government of that day.

It was at that time that the functions were separated, and there was established the restrictive trade practices commission, and the office of investigation and research. Incidentally, I notice that one of the original members of the first restrictive trade practices commission is the present Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, so that within the cabinet there is no lack of experts on this particular subject.

In 1960-61 other changes were made in the legislation. Over the years Mr. Fulton had gained some bouquets for the job he did as minister of justice, particularly in the field of penal reform, but I do not think he has any awards coming to him for what he did in the field of restrictive trade practices, because the changes made at that time seem to me, and to the authors of this book, to have weakened the act. However, it is the enforcement of the act with which we are primarily concerned.

The authors point out that the importance of a government department or agency can be measured by the amount of budget it receives. They point out that the amount of budget available to the combines investigation branch has been rather small throughout the years. In 1960 it had a budget of approximately half a million dollars, and at page 44 of their book they give some comparisons for other government departments. The Canadian government travel bureau in that year had $2.3 million, while the Newfoundland bait service had the same amount of money, half a million dollars. I am not knocking the Newfoundland bait service, but it seems to me the combines investigation service ought to be a more important field of activity.

In that same year the administration of the Immigration Act cost $1.2 million, and defence research and development $39.2 million. In any case, the amount of money allocated to combines investigation has been quite small, and on looking at the estimates for this year I was disappointed to note that there are very minor increases for the office of the director of investigation and research, and the restrictive trade practices commission.

I know the minister may answer that this budget was prepared by the previous administration. Perhaps that can be accepted for the moment, but I would point out that, even though our gross national product has grown year by year, and at present is around $37 billion, the total amount for combines investigation has not grown in any comparable manner.

The authors of this book made quite a thorough search and analysis of the administration of the act between 1952 and 1960. They analysed the fields of business that were investigated. They have made lists where successful investigations have taken place, where prosecutions have followed, and they have also listed those fields of business where the investigations were unsuccessful or were not followed up. The important thing is that the total amount of successful anti-combine work, the successful completion of investigations, followed by prosecutions in some cases and by no prosecutions in others, is a very small part of the total business activity in Canada.

It does not seem to me that there has been very much increased activity in this field since we had a change of administration last spring. My colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North, has at present a series of questions on the order paper concerning recommendations of the restrictive trade practices commission, recommendations which have not yet been acted upon. During the past several months I have, on two or three occasions, asked about a report filed by the commission concerning tied sales, that is, the practice of petroleum companies forcing service stations to buy and handle certain products.

This practice was recommended against by the commission some two years ago, and the minister has replied that the recommendation is under study by an interdepartmental committee. I hope that in the new year we can see some action on this point.

An hon. Member: What year?

Mr. Prittie: 1964. However, Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied from my own observation, and this has been verified by the authors of this book, that there has not been a very vigorous enforcement of the combine laws which we have. A number of years ago one hon. member of this house had this to say, and I am quoting from page 13 of the book:

> A law can be full of teeth, but if the teeth are not used to bite with it becomes a mere sham on the statute books.

That member is now the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. Again, Mr. Chairman, the authors point out the dilemma that faces a Canadian government in this field. They say the government has a choice between alienating important business groups in the country on the one hand, or keeping satisfied certain other groups on the other hand—the small businessmen, the consumers, labour, agriculture, and so on. They say also that in this balancing which is supposed to take place, the other groups—the consumers, the small businessmen—usually lose out. Again, Mr. Chairman, they pose this very important question:

> Does anti-combines activity in Canada represent a serious attempt to influence the structure and functioning of the Canadian economy, or is it essentially a political gesture designed to meet the demands of voters while leaving the structure and practices of business substantially unaffected?

I get the impression that this is what has happened in the past, that it has been left unaffected. It seems that our governments in the past have acted on the assumption that combinations, monopolistic practices, are not the usual thing; this is something out of the ordinary; somebody may commit a crime and should be punished for it. I suggest this is the wrong approach, and that in the type of economy we have the tendency to eliminate competition is there at all times. Indeed, people in business may be forced to do this. Nevertheless the tendency to eliminate competition, to form larger firms, to get the market under the control of fewer and fewer companies, is built into our economy. It is not something unusual that has to be watched at all times.

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that this is much truer in Canada than perhaps in the United States. An earlier study by one of the authors of this book, Professor Rosenbluth, "Concentration in Canadian Manufacturing Industries", points out that we have a relatively greater concentration here than in the United States, so that we should watch this particular field of activity more than they do in the United States. I hope this subject is under study by the government at the present time. I see the parliamentary secretary to the minister has the same book in his hand, so at least he is studying it. I hope someone else is also. When the new estimates are presented for the next fiscal year I hope we will see an increase in the budget for this very important department.

I should like to conclude, Mr. Chairman, by reminding the minister of this. I quote again from the text:

> However, in more than a technical sense, ultimate responsibility for the scope of anti-combines activity rests with the cabinet. It selects the director and the commission, determines heir budgets, and can issue directives that govern their work. It selects prosecuting counsel and is responsible for their instructions. It can initiate changes in the legislation to meet needs revealed by judicial interpretation. If the application of the combines machinery has been very limited, this state of affairs reflects the policy of successive governments, both Liberal and Conservative.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, we will see a change in the future in this particular field.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, it is a privilege to rise in my place and speak on the estimates of the Department of Justice, particularly in view of the fact that this department is responsible for the estimates of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. It is just 90 years ago that Sir John A. Macdonald introduced a bill into the House of Commons to set up this world famous force. We have always had good leadership in the force, which has contributed in a marked degree to their world wide reputation in the maintenance of justice and freedom in our country. It is a painful thing to have to sit here sometimes and hear members of parliament, who should know better, pick on the mounted police and their role in our national life as if they were some kind of hoodlum gang from Chicago, and not the world famous force which it is and which we so rightly admire.

To say that the R.C.M.P. hound people in the matter of narcotics is just sheer nonsense. If you knew, as I know and as the members of the mounted police know, how difficult it is to pin down the traffickers in narcotics in Canada, and how our boys go out and risk life and limb to track these people down, I do not think you would say they are hounding them at all. They are performing a most difficult task. Having found the fellows who peddle it, it is even more difficult to track down the source of these drugs. I would recommend to the minister through you, sir, that the mounted police be taken more into his and the people's confidence. I think those who have to administer the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act know better than anybody else the best long term plan for putting down this trafficking. I personally am convinced that if we gave drugs free to the people who are subject to this dreadful habit and took the profit out of drug trafficking, we would have some chance of putting down this nefarious business. It is the enormous profit which causes drug trafficking, even in Canada where we have the services of the mounted police to try and keep it down.

Some hon. members may not know that in certain countries these dangerous drugs can be bought for $2 or $3 a pound. When they get here and are watered down, thinned out, and sold on the market to the individual, sometimes one packet of dope costs as much as $30 or $40. This means a pound of dope can be worth $55,000 to $75,000. Do not say the mounted police hound people. Let us get behind them, not only outside the house but inside, and appreciate the service they are giving us.

It has also been said that they hound people who are suspected of subversive activities. Hon. members know how difficult it is to track down subversive activities. These activities range from open sabotage to the undermining of the morale and the national spirit of our young people. It is not an easy task to pin it down. The R.C.M.P. are seized with this job. None of us like it; but they are doing the job and yet it is said they are spying on their neighbours. That is a harsh word to apply to the work of security. This is done in the United States by the F.B.I. We are very proud of the work they do down there. Our force, in plain clothes, are seized with this job in Canada. They are not hounding any Canadian, but are looking out for the security of our country. I am tired of hearing this carping criticism which I think is only dreamed up to get notoriety in picking on a famous organization which is doing its best.

I think the role of the R.C.M.P. should be reviewed with regard to their contracts with the provinces. On several occasions within my memory the R.C.M.P. have been in difficulty. Their leadership has been in difficulty because the duties of the force have not been clearly defined, when it comes to maintaining law and order. There are three circumstances in which the force might be called in. In the first place, if there is a man breaking the law, openly stealing or drunk in a public place, their duty is plain, where they are seized with this duty. It is to arrest the man and bring him before the magistrate at the proper time, see that the proper evidence is produced, and so forth. The role of the force is plain. It might be called out in time of open strife, perhaps even to co-operate with our armed forces in an emergency. Naturally if a submarine was seen coasting along the Cape Breton coast a patrolling officer would contact the military authorities, who would alert the army, the navy and the air force. Then they would retire to their proper role of civilian police. I do not think there is any difficulty there; they could be used as a warning device to let the proper authorities know.

Then there is a third situation, in which they are called upon in the role of what civilians perhaps call strikebreakers. Where are they then? I say that their duty in this situation has never been clearly defined. Where and when is it the responsibility of the individual policeman or the mounted police, as led by their officers, to maintain law and order, which in a sense is a kind of political war? I think these roles should be clearly defined and then never again will the commissioner and the mounted police find themselves at loggerheads with the Minister of Justice.

Some years ago the R.C.M.P. were used actively in what we called the youth and police program. There are statistics in the records to show that when this youth and police program was in full operation juvenile delinquency suffered a dramatic decline. We used to call juvenile delinquency "being a bad boy," but, call it what you like, when the mounted police were actively engaged in this great program there was a dramatic drop in juvenile delinquency. I think many of the members felt at the time that this was an imposition. Some of them did it willingly, some under a certain amount of pressure from above; but nevertheless, if the record is looked up it will be found that the mounted policeman was proving himself to be in his finest role when he was interested and active in this preventive police work among our youngsters. I would recommend to the department, through you, sir, that this very important and valuable use of the mounted police be considered for revival.

Another matter to which I wish to bring attention, having been a policeman myself, is the great difficulty in the public mind, and sometimes even in the minds of the police, of the lack of uniformity of provincial laws. We have at least ten traffic acts in Canada, not to mention the bylaws in all the different cities. I know that that is not anything new, but I would again stress that I think it is of prime importance that at the next provincial conference perhaps the heads of the municipal police, the heads of the mounted police, and the heads of the various justice departments, the attorneys general, might well accompany their premiers, straighten out the situation once and for all, and agree upon a sensible traffic law which would be acceptable all across Canada. I do not think we need run into constitutional difficulties here. As long as we have uniformity in our thinking it would not be difficult to get uniformity in our laws. To travel across our great country touring and trying to keep in mind ten, 12 or 14 different traffic laws is certainly difficult for someone who has had personal experience in the matter; for the uninitiated driver of an automobile I am sure it causes many accidents and a great deal of grief and pain.

May I close by saying that during this 90 years we have always had leadership in the mounted police which has been a credit to that force and to our country. I must say that we can look forward to the future with confidence in these fine men who care for our national security, and the Queen's peace.

[Translation]

Mr. Frenette: Mr. Chairman, I shall take just a few minutes of the committee's time since I only wish to outline one point in connection with the estimates of the Department of Justice.

I should like to call the minister's attention to the necessity, indeed, the urgency of amending the Bankruptcy Act so that the rights of Canadian citizens are better protected and more respected.

Mr. Chairman, I am not a jurist and that may be why I do not understand much of that legislation. However, on the basis of what I have been told by members of the legal profession, I do not hesitate to say that the Bankruptcy Act is probably the most complicated and ambiguous piece of legislation in our statutes.

Besides, numerous bankruptcies are merely daring and clever financial operations to succeed in business in defiance of all honesty and fairness.

And yet, those operations are effected under the act and seem to comply, if not with the spirit, at least with the letter of the law.

I have just gone through a rather painful experience during which 30 odd workers of my city have lost almost $20,000 in salaries following a bankruptcy that has been before the court for more than two years.

Yet, those workers acted in good faith and relied on people regarded as competent to help them to recover their salaries.

In this case, of course, I am not accusing anybody of incompetence nor of dishonesty, but I am still convinced that if the Bankruptcy Act had been worded in a clear, accurate and concise way, those workers would have been able to recover what rightly belongs to them.

For several of them, the losses exceeded $1,000, an amount which represents several months' salary. I am not trying to be emotional over this, but try to understand, Mr. Chairman, what such an amount means to families having to manage on an annual budget of $2,000 or $2,500.

It is urgently required that the Bankruptcy Act be thoroughly reviewed so as to protect the public against unscrupulous and ambitious crooks.

I am thinking not only of workers, but also of suppliers and subcontractors who, more than once, have suffered at the hands of those sharks.

If they have not done so already, I hope that the officials of the Department of Justice will start planning a revision of the act, not to cover and shield questionable transactions, but to protect the rights of Canadian citizens who, in their vast majority, are honest and conscientious people.

The present act gives rise to judicial conflicts, which are always very expensive for those who bear the costs.

I quite understand that it is difficult, not to say impossible, to draft legislation which would put an end to lawsuits in cases of bankruptcy; but I am confident that the departmental experts will at least be able to improve matters considerably in that field.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, I only need a few minutes to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to some of the problems with which my constituency is confronted.

However, before doing so, I wish to congratulate on his excellent French, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) who spoke a moment ago. He should indeed be congratulated for this commendable effort, and I suggest that the other members might follow his example.

Mr. Chairman, I am coming now to the substance of my remarks. I wish to point out to the Minister of Justice that, in my constituency, there is no bankruptcy court.

As I pointed out to the Minister of Justice a few days ago, we must go to Sherbrooke, that is some 60 miles from Granby, the centre of the constituency of Shefford, to settle bankruptcy cases.

There is a court at Sweetsburg, in the district of Bedford but at the present time there is no bankruptcy court there. Such a condition is far from being practical for lawyers or interested parties who have bankruptcy cases to settle.

In addition, I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that the city of Granby in my constituency of Shefford has quite a large population now but is still without a court house or a court; we have to go to Sweetsburg to settle our legal problems.

I am therefore wondering whether it would be possible to establish in the main city of my constituency a court where our problems could be settled. It is our most important problem at the present time. As the bar association of Bedford pointed out some three weeks ago in a resolution, it wishes to settle this problem as soon as possible. Consequently, I hope that the Minister of Justice will attend to this matter.

In addition, I wish to point out to the Minister of Justice the problems of the judges, especially in the Quebec, Montreal and St. Hyacinthe districts. Looking over the list of cases, we note that thousands are waiting to come before the court. It is also noted that in some cases, they will have to wait for three and maybe four years before they can be heard.

I think the Minister of Justice is aware of the problem.

At present, in the city of Montreal, there is a backlog of thousands of unheard cases or cases heard several years ago and still awaiting a judgment. Besides, a great many cases have not yet been called before the court.

Mr. Chairman, I should also like to make a few comments concerning the famous Coffin case which everyone has heard of and which has been making the headlines these last few days. It does not seem normal to me at this time to allow someone to write a book—maybe hoping for a large circulation—that can only undermine justice in our country. I am not discussing the merits of the book. But, at this time, the way things have been going, I doubt the wisdom of the questions being asked about prominent people and especially about judicial principles and mechanisms in Canada.

What strikes me most is that for several weeks now they have been reconstituting a case by means of films—and in this I ask the Minister of Justice whether the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is not co-operating with the writer of this book in order to reconstitute the circumstances of the crime in the Coffin case. We have the feeling that the C.B.C. and the writer of the book in question work together, hand in hand, in order to create a scandal around an unproven theory.

In any case, what moves me the most is to see that the C.B.C. is using our money, public funds, to undermine the concept of justice in Canada.

Under the circumstances, I would ask the Minister of Justice, whose longing for justice I would in no way question, to kindly request the minister responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, to have an inquiry made and see to it that openly offered co-operation by socialists in the C.B.C. be stopped. In fact, for several years, everybody has been complaining that the C.B.C. is crawling with socialists; you get the feeling, especially since the alleged Coffin scandal has been stirred, that the intention is to promote certain well known socialists in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, I should like the Minister of Justice to settle that case as soon as possible, because the longer we wait, the more we let those things happen, the greater the harm done to the smooth operation of our judicial system.

Therefore, I suggest that the sale of that book be banned, that a royal commission be set up and that the culprits be convicted, otherwise, the confidence of the Canadian people in the judicial system of this country will be destroyed.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have said enough to draw the minister's attention to the problems raised by the Coffin case, to which newspapers have been devoting full pages in the last few days.

We seem to want to pass the buck but if nothing is done, who will deal with the problem?

Mr. Chairman, I know that the Minister of Justice has answered a few questions on the subject, these last few days saying that he was expecting certain decisions which did not come under his department. But he ought to do everything in his power to set up an inquiry into the facts under his department, through his officials and those of the province of Quebec, so as to put an end to that scandal which, if allowed to continue, will contribute to undermine the trust of Canadian citizens in the judicial system of our country.

Mr. Scott: I want to take a few minutes of the time of the committee to pursue a subject which I have raised on the orders of the day for the last couple of days and which has been the subject of comment by several of those who have spoken in the course of this debate. I refer to the Coffin murder trial. I want, again, to urge the Minister of Justice to give some consideration to a suggestion which has been made both inside and outside this house, namely that a royal commission should be set up to investigate the situation. I understand that some of my hon. friends on this side of the house are not in favour of this suggestion—that they have suggested a committee of lawyers should look into it. This, of course, is something which has already been done. It was done in the United States, and it was done here, when the committee which reviewed the case included some of the defence lawyers as well as newspapermen, all of whom came up with grave doubts as to Coffin's guilt, and the justice of his being put to death.

It may seem strange that we should be concerning ourselves today with what happened ten years ago. In the summer of 1953, three United States hunters came to an area of the Gaspe and were killed there. Their bodies were mangled by bears. A few weeks later they were discovered and Mr. Coffin was subsequently arrested. Then there began what is surely the strangest and most complicated criminal trial in the legal history of this country. No murder case ever went through so many procedures. Perhaps no man was ever reprieved so many times. By the time he was finally executed, Coffin had been drawn back from the brink of death no less than seven times. He started his trial with jet black hair and he went to the gallows with snow white hair. No case within my recollection has provoked so much disturbance in the minds of the legal people who have perused the evidence. From the day Coffin was arrested to the day he died a curtain of mystery descended around this trial and this veil of mystery has persisted until this very day.

Recent disclosures have resurrected the events of the trial and revived doubts as to the validity of the sentence. Let us consider the trial itself. The mangling of the bodies meant there was no real evidence of the way in which they had died. Coffin was convicted on circumstantial evidence, and there is considerable doubt as to the strength of that chain of evidence. It is a well known rule of law that circumstantial evidence must not be just consistent with guilt; it must be inconsistent with any other reasonable conclusion. This is the question which has troubled the lawyers who have been concerned about this case. It has troubled the counsel who acted for him, the people who knew him in the penitentiary and the priest who sat with him and knew him for some five months. This was a case in which there was no murder weapon ever produced, no mark on the body, no killing bullet ever found. Only one charge was laid and that was in the death of the Lindsay boy. The only evidence of a bullet wound was a hole in his jersey. The medico-legal expert at the trial testified that he could not say with certainty that the rifle Coffin was alleged to have used would have caused such a hole.

So much at the trial was not done. One hesitates to criticize counsel. It is always easy to be wise after the event. But an examination of the trial itself makes me wonder. Witnesses were not cross-examined. No defence at all was put in. Not a single witness was called in Mr. Coffin's defence. Mr. Coffin himself was not permitted to take the stand to testify, although throughout the period before he was executed he insisted he had always wanted to. As I said, the only evidence of a bullet hole in the body was a hole in the jersey and the medical evidence was very doubtful in that sphere.

Some of the bodies were found five miles apart in the bush. Maps were presented to the jury, for example, that did not show the multiplicity of roads that permeated the area and the ease with which other individuals could have arrived at the scene of the murder. The goods of the murdered hunters were strewn along the road leading from the scene of the murder and evidence was given this could not have been done by one man but that, for example, it would require two or three men driving a moving vehicle. No investigation was made in this regard.

Coffin had stated, and he maintained until his death, that when he left these men in the bush there were two Americans with them and that the Americans had driven up in a jeep which Coffin described in great detail and with great particularity. We have no evidence that any search was made to find this jeep though after his death, as I will show in a moment, witnesses came forward with affidavit evidence that they had met these men and seen them in the area.

Coffin denied having a rifle and no rifle was ever produced at the trial. Yet it was alleged he had used a rifle. The only evidence against Coffin at the trial as to a rifle was that of a Mr. McGregor, I believe, who said he had seen Mr. Coffin coming out of the bush and in the truck he saw what he thought was a rifle. The man was never cross-examined to ascertain if it could have been anything else. After Coffin's death this man came forward and made an affidavit stating that he wished to change his evidence, that he now wished to say he thought it was an iron bar that had been in the truck. Again, no investigation was made of this statement.

The trial was the longest and most expensive criminal trial in the history of the county. It would have bankrupted the county to pay for it, but the entire expenses were very kindly paid by the province of Quebec which seemed to have a very keen interest in the trial at that time. The defence had stated throughout that they were going to call 100 witnesses, but when the crown rested its case the defence got up and said: "We are not going to put in any evidence at all; Mr. Coffin is not going to take the stand in his own defence".

Coffin until his death, as I say, persisted in his story. He never changed it one iota. He always claimed that he had wanted to get on the stand and tell the one story that could have saved his life, namely that he had been in the bush, that he had seen the truck of the hunters, that he had stolen the goods that were later found in his possession but that he did not murder these hunters. This was the one defence which, if believed, could have saved Coffin's life but he was not given the opportunity to present it.

I am not being critical of the people who conducted the trial, but the trial itself raises very grave doubts in the minds of a lot of people as to the validity or otherwise of his conviction. However, Mr. Coffin was found guilty. Perhaps on the evidence presented this was the only conclusion the jury could reach. Certainly with no defence presented it must have been difficult for the jury.

But the real mystery of the Coffin case starts from the day of his conviction, because after his conviction and before his death a whole series of bits of evidence developed which cumulatively began to increase the doubt which everyone felt. For example, the crown had charged that Coffin had murdered these people for their money and had stolen $650 from them. After his death people came forward with sworn affidavits that they had paid Mr. Coffin $580 to go out and stake mining claims for them. This was never followed up and investigated further.

Coffin always maintained there was a jeep with American hunters at the scene of the murder. Sergeant Doyon, who testified at the trial, said that he had seen marks of a jeep on the scene but had not mentioned it at the trial because nobody had asked him. This was not brought out in cross-examination. Dr. Wilson, a young Toronto physician, swore an affidavit with his wife that in June of 1953 they met two American hunters crossing on a ferryboat going toward the area. They described the coats the men wore and the plywood covering, and so on, on the jeep, which was similar to the jeep that Coffin had described. Maddern River, a Lorne Patterson service station operator, remembered seeing the same jeep and that the occupants had asked for the Lindsays, who were the murdered men. Again this was in the general vicinity.

A Dr. Charles Attendu of Montreal gave evidence that he had seen a jeep in the area near the murder. A Mr. Tapp, who was a police constable, recalled meeting an American at a cocktail party who was going to go to Gaspe to hunt, and in this book by Beliveau he recites how the American was picked up by another man in a jeep and they drove off to go hunting.

The whole mystery of the rifle that committed the murder has never been resolved. I have already placed on the record the statement of Wilson McGregor who was a witness as to the rifle, and who first thought it was a rifle and later wanted to change his evidence, and made an affidavit that he thought it was an iron bar.

Because of these doubts the pressures mounted and the government of the day then referred the case to the Supreme Court of Canada and asked the court to give it guidance as to what it would have done if it had heard the appeal. The case was argued extensively. I believe the present Minister of Citizenship and Immigration represented the government at that hearing and is no doubt familiar with the case. At the conclusion of the case the court ruled five to two that if it had heard the case it would not have quashed the conviction and would not have granted a retrial.

No one is quarrelling with that, because the real significance of the Supreme Court of Canada case is that the court did not have before it all of the new evidence that came to light after Coffin's conviction. The Supreme Court of Canada, and rightly so under our rules, is limited to the court record at the trial and at this hearing it did not have access to all of the new evidence I have alleged tonight. To my knowledge this evidence has never been presented to a court of law considering this matter.

Therefore, while the Supreme Court of Canada did rule five to two, I think the significant point is that there was dissent, that a judge of the eminence of Mr. Justice Cartwright said on the basis of the evidence at the trial that, had he been dealing with the matter "it would have been my opinion the appeal should have been allowed, the conviction quashed and a new trial directed". I would have thought that the fact of a dissenting judgment by two eminent judges would have raised doubts in the hearts of the members of the cabinet. The new evidence I have mentioned tonight was not available to the court, of course, but it was available to the government of the day and representations were made to the government, first for a new trial, which was declined and, second, for commutation of the sentence to life imprisonment.

We do not know what consideration took place. The records indicate that considerable discussion took place in the cabinet and the matter was thoroughly investigated, but the tragedy is that by that time the Coffin case had developed political overtones in the province of Quebec. The then premier of the province, the late Mr. Duplessis, seemed to regard any action by the federal government as an infringement of provincial rights, and he began making very strong statements as to what view he would take should the federal cabinet ever grant a new trial or commute the sentence to life imprisonment. Indeed, Mr. Coffin's tragedy may have been that he was convicted of murder at a time when provincial rights were very dominant in the minds of Quebec politicians. There has never been any overt evidence of this, but it was significant that when the refusal to commute the sentence was announced Mr. Coffin then asked if he could marry his common-law wife and legitimize his little son. Mr. Duplessis, in all charity, refused. Mr. Coffin was hanged, I believe, the day after the cabinet declined to commute his sentence.

These, briefly, are some of the facts that surround this mysterious case. Over the years,

Mr. Chairman, the members of the legal profession, at least the ones I know, have had a secret doubt in their hearts. I do not know whether or not Coffin was guilty. I would have thought, in the face of the new evidence, in the face of the dissent by two eminent justices, there ought to have been enough doubt to have permitted Mr. Coffin to live under a sentence of life imprisonment. The tragedy today is that, even if we got a royal commission, even if we were able to prove Mr. Coffin innocent, he is not alive to be released. If ever there was a case which supported abolition of capital punishment, it is the case of Wilbert Coffin. Here was a case where there was doubt, I think, in the hearts of most honest men, a doubt which should have been resolved in his favour. For reasons good or bad, it was not so resolved.

After his death his counsel were so convinced of his innocence that they did not let the matter rest there. They formed a committee in Toronto, the Canadian Coffin committee, and invited newspapermen to serve on it. These people investigated further, reassessed the evidence and still there was this doubt. The well-known court of last resort in the United States, for the first time in its history, took up a capital case after the accused had been executed. They, too, investigated. As I have said, down through the years there has always been a doubt in the hearts of many people as to Mr. Coffin's guilt. Certainly, there was enough doubt that a new trial should have been granted. Certainly, there was enough doubt that he ought to have lived, so that if his name were ever cleared he would be able to be released. This avenue is no longer open to us and that is why we have raised this matter.

It is true that even if we were to investigate the case now, it would not help Coffin. We have always said that under our jurisdiction it is almost impossible for an innocent man to be convicted. The presumption of innocence is so strong, the necessity to prove his guilt beyond all reasonable doubt is so strong, that it is clearly impossible for an innocent man to be convicted. The question we now ask in our hearts is, is it possible for an innocent man to be executed? Until the mysteries of the Coffin case are resolved, I am not sure that we can ever say that under our jurisdiction it is impossible for an innocent man to be convicted and executed.

I am not too concerned with the recent book that has been written, although I think these charges are unprecedented and disturbing. The writer of the book seems to be alleging what almost amounts to a conspiracy of the parties to convict Coffin and have him executed. He makes what appear on the surface to be rather wild charges. They are sensational, and because they are sensational they are receiving very wide attention. I want to assure the Minister of Justice and his parliamentary secretary, for whom I have a very high regard, that interest in this case is not going to die down. If you think that by postponing or neglecting it you are, in some way, going to ride out the storm, the forces that have again been set in motion by this recent book and by the sensational charges, the resurrection of all the evidence that no court ever heard, I can tell you that most of the interest in this case is going to continue. For my part, I will do what I can to see that this is the case. I think it would be a wise move on the part of the Minister of Justice to appoint this royal commission. Let us go into the facts of the case and if, in fact, an innocent man was convicted and executed, then let that be known. Until you clear away the clouds of mystery that surround this case there will always be a cloud on the integrity of our jurisprudence, and for that reason I urge the minister to give favourable consideration to this request.

Mr. Peters: I had hoped the minister would reply before the item carried. There have been many problems that have been raised, but certainly none of them have been raised as eloquently as the last appeal by the hon. member for Danforth. I think it is a classic. If it does not move the Department of Justice to some consideration of this matter, then of course there is no point in anyone else speaking. I hoped the minister would reply immediately to the hon. member's remarks, because the problem I have is not quite as serious.

The problem I should like to raise, Mr. Chairman, is one in which I have been interested for a long time, but it affects only those who are getting out of prison or about to get out of prison. We have heard today many complaints about the manner in which we treat criminals. Certainly one of the problems that faces every inmate of a prison is the fact that some day he is expected to walk out the gate and live again in society. I think this is one of the most difficult problems that faces a prisoner, especially after many years in jail. In speaking to the officials of the Department of Justice, I have been told that cost is a factor in remedying the treatment of prisoners. They say that they know St. Vincent de Paul is in terrible shape and they would like to get prisons of a new type constructed. They would like a system under which an inmate might be given more freedom, under which he would be allowed to engage in useful activity in a community under supervision. These things would be very good, but we have not got the money for them. Mr. Chairman, should we not have reached the stage where we try to treat our prisoners within our penal institutions in such a way as to indicate that we want to reclaim them in society? If we believe that the only purpose of putting a man in jail is for the protection of society, then I believe we have an obligation to make sure that a prison sentence is not necessarily considered as a punishment.

If this is true, then rehabilitation should be the prime consideration. It is very interesting sometimes to read what the prisoners themselves have to say. I should like to quote from an article written by a man who is certainly highly qualified in this field, the director of remission services, Mr. A. J. MacLeod. The article is entitled, "The Citizen and the Correctional System", and the author refers to a prisoner coming out of prison. He has this to say:

> The prison experience is bound to have left its mark upon him, and this is especially so where the period of confinement has been eight, ten, 12 or 15 years. By this time he has forgotten most of the social graces that he ever knew. To him the simple operation of buying a package of cigarettes or ordering a cup of coffee in a restaurant is fraught with difficulty. He is highly conscious of his table manners—or rather the lack of them. He has forgotten how to go about buying his own clothing. He is nervous about meeting strangers.

I think that this is something most of us cannot understand. Just think, Mr. Chairman, how this must be in other fields, in particular emotional fields, rather than in social fields. The man who has been in jail for a considerable length of time has only met his family through a glass partition. He has not been able to talk with them in privacy, and he must have suffered untold emotional damage which he would have to be very strong to overcome.

I am sure some hon. members have visited prisons. No doubt a few of them have gone on junkets where they were shown around prisons, but I am sure others have gone to prisons to visit a particular inmate at the request of that inmate. He certainly has a problem or he would not invite a member of parliament to visit him; but when a member goes to see him a guard sits behind and the talk is through a partition. There is an emotional restriction that prevents free discussion.

By contrast, I am always very pleased when I visit any of the provincial jails. I do not know whether this is because I have no business being there, but when I go to visit prisoners in my own district the officials give me the doctor's office and we sit in easy chairs, with the guard outside the door, and we can talk about whatever we wish. It is much easier for a prisoner to discuss his problems in that atmosphere rather than in the normal prison visiting atmosphere. I am quite happy to go into a room, have the door locked, and talk with one or two prisoners for a half an hour. They would not ask me to visit them unless they wanted to talk to me, and I am sure they would not cut my throat. Now, members of parliament certainly have more privileges than other prison visitors, but even so in federal prisons the atmosphere could be better.

There are many emotional problems that may develop between a prisoner, his wife and his children when they visit him, and there are many emotional problems for the family at home. We put the offender into prison and we say we do this because he has offended against society; but have we not really convicted his family as well, and is their penalty not even greater than the prisoner's? It has been said that once a door closes on a prisoner he knows he is convicted, what sentence he must serve, and the reason for it. But is this true for the family left at home who may not have been aware of the circumstances surrounding the offence which ended in the imprisonment? They may be completely unaware of it until, as some hon. member said this afternoon, the wife picks up a newspaper or listens to the radio and hears that her husband has been sentenced to four years in prison. What are we really sentencing such a family to, when they do not know what the circumstances were?

It is for this reason we should take advantage of some of the developments in other parts of the world. I know perfectly well that because we have not sufficient room to house all the prisoners in jail, we will have great difficulty in providing space for their wives to visit them in privacy. But I have been surprised to learn that in one of the most backward areas on this continent, the southern states, the state of Mississippi allows the wives and families of prisoners to visit them every Sunday. We should be able to do something like that. I do not know too much about penal institutions down there, but I have heard of the chain gangs. However, the authorities do not make these conjugal visits dependant on the good behaviour of a prisoner. It does not matter whether a prisoner has been on good behaviour or not; he is entitled to these visits. For three Sundays in succession his family can visit him from one o'clock in the afternoon until three, and on the fourth Sunday they can visit him from one o'clock until five o'clock.

In Alaska, which some say should be part of Canada, and which is the youngest of the American states, there is a law allowing families to visit prisoners for 24 hours, every three weeks, provided the prisoners have been well behaved. This is even more far reaching than the system in Mississippi.

There are also cases where houses have been built in which families can visit with the prisoners. A wife can cook for her husband and the children can get to know their father. Such visits last for a week end, and when the prison gates open and the prisoner returns to society he does not find the transition so strange. Many countries have more farsighted laws in this regard than we have. I am not suggesting this will solve all the problems of rehabilitation, but it will solve some of them.

How many times have members of parliament sought parole on behalf of prisoners only to find that once that a parolee has been released he finds himself in trouble with his family? He no longer knows his wife. Maybe he did not know her too well before he went to jail, and the children left behind are now older. During the period he has been in jail the wife has been both mother and father to the children, has been the sole authority in the house, and when she punishes the children an argument develops with her husband. The man then does what he has always done, certainly what he has done when he has been in jail. He dodges responsibility, because he has not had to carry it for a long time. He goes downtown, gets drunk, his parole is rescinded, and he goes back to jail.

We do not want to talk about the homosexual practices engaged in, in all our prisons, but I think the minister will agree they have been the basis for most of the riots we have had in Canadian prisons over the past number of years. I am sure the minister is not going to stand up and go into the details of the homosexual practices that have taken place, and which have been responsible for many of these riots. But we know they exist. We know that if you take normal people out of society and put them under control, they will turn to any alternative which is available to them. With regard to those people who may not have the education, the intelligence and the background that would prohibit them doing this sort of thing, this is the type of practice in which they engage. I think it is safe to say—and I am not making any charge against any particular penitentiary or any particular guard—that many of the guards fit into the category that allows this practice and take advantage of it, and sometimes they become quite wealthy because of it. This is a fact. This has always gone on in prisons; it has always gone on in any kind of institution where men are in close proximity for a long period of time.

There is another side to this question, Mr. Chairman. What happens to the wife? Sex is equally important to both our sexes, and the wife also finds herself in a situation she has not been prepared to face. Her husband has not been sick; he has not died; there has been no preparation for the withdrawal, which preparation is necessary. If the minister wishes to refute my argument he will have to tell us how many prisoners have returned to their homes to find a child or two born during the period of their confinement in prison. We know this is true in many cases. I do not think you can blame the people involved, because they have been accustomed to a normal sexual life and there was no emotional preparation for this withdrawal. If there is a war and people go away, the emotional attitude makes this withdrawal possible. When a person dies there is an emotional attitude that makes it possible. In the case of the confinement that takes place in prison, this is not necessarily true.

What do prisoners themselves say about some of these matters. A year ago T. Cunningham, a prisoner, wrote in "The Telescope", the inmates' magazine of Kingston penitentiary, when speaking of visits:

> Any time they sit across from their wives, a table and a mesh screen separating them, they don't think about words like reformation and rehabilitation.
> They think about how nice it would be if they could just reach through the screen and hold her hand for a moment. In 30 short minutes she is gone and they find it hard to believe she has ever really been there. And some wonder if she will be back.

He points out this is not the case in some prisons, and speaks of the situation in Mississippi in this way:

> "Wives are permitted to visit every Sunday afternoon between one and three, except on the third Sunday, at which time they are permitted to visit between one and five. Unless a prisoner is being punished and is confined in our maximum security unit, he is permitted to see his wife privately on any visiting day—no matter how good or bad a prisoner he is".

He is there setting out what the warden of the Mississippi state penitentiary has written about this subject. Then he says:

> Adjusting to the society that banished him is a difficult task for a man released from prison. The affection and support of a wife and the responsibility he feels to his children can make the task less difficult.
> No woman can be expected to endure a life devoid of physical love for a number of years because her man is in prison. Her needs are as great as his and they cannot be satisfied through a glass and mesh partition.
> The communication must be more than spiritual, as has been borne out by the many broken marriages caused by imprisonment. If judges and magistrates understood that when they sentence a man to prison, they are also sentencing his wife and family, conjugal visits in Canada would be more likely to gain their support.

Mr. MacLeod, who is responsible for this and you might say should be recommending a higher budget for it, does understand the problem and I think is very sympathetic to it. He had this to say in the address he delivered to the John Howard society on February 25, 1963:

> We are concerned about the relationship of the inmate with his family. That relationship will, upon his release, usually have a profound effect on the question of his successful readjustment in society. Accordingly, we encourage visits to the inmate by members of his family and we provide as little restriction and supervision as possible during such visits, having regard to the security considerations involved. We want the inmate and his family to meet each other frequently in surroundings that are free from strain.

This may be true and it may be what we want; but it is not what we are accomplishing in most of our prisons. It may be true that we are a prudish nation and do not want to talk about these things. Very seldom, if ever, will you hear the reasons for the problems in prisons discussed. But there was a story told recently in this connection. The minister can investigate it. It concerns some of the practices that took place in Kingston penitentiary. The minister should look into this case of a young chap for whom the guards and the inmates took up a collection. They bought him a bicycle and turned him loose in the compound to learn to ride the bicycle. He was not an old man, or even a young man; he was a boy 13 years of age. I think the minister should find out for himself what happened in this case. Perhaps he would then be sympathetic to the problem we have in Canada because of our prudishness and our unwillingness to even face this situation.

I do not know whether it is wise to be too strong about these things. I do not think the minister is going to do a damned thing about this. I do not say that because he is the minister, but because this is a problem society has not faced up to, and it is a very serious one. If the minister is even going to talk about this problem, people will say, "Why in heck are you paying $2,500 a year to keep a guy in jail, if you are going to give him all the comforts of home?" Certainly they are going to say this. Many people don't give a damn whether that guy is ever rehabilitated into society. Even here we have the chief of police of Ottawa saying these people should not be out on parole, we should keep them in jail. If many of the people who are really involved with this matter understood these problems and were more sympathetic to them, more willing to bring them out into the open and ask for the help, support and consideration of the nation in general, and told people the facts of the problems, I think this nation would be very sympathetic and would want some solution found to the problems.

We quite often cover these things up. I think we should not do this. If the minister were to get up and say, "We are going to allow conjugal visits for married prisoners who have been married over six weeks, and these visits will be allowed once a month", somebody would immediately get up and say, "What about the single man? How come you are doing this for the married man and you will not do it for the single man?" In other countries they supply prostitutes for the prisoners. I am sure this could not be tolerated in Canada and I am not suggesting it should be tolerated. But just because there are some road blocks, we do not have to go to that extreme or any of the other extremes; we can give consideration to those things which are acceptable to our society and can develop our program to meet the needs of today.

We are a long piece behind. I hear hon. members speak of the Fauteux commission. I decided to read it one time and did not get too far in my study of that document. But I hear people refer to it and I think you can take any part of it out and say, "I would like this to apply", because very little has been applied to our penal system in Canada. In closing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that I think our institutions should be for the re-establishment into society of people confined therein. Even murder is acceptable to society in times of war and other situations; it is even approved, spiritually approved in many cases. It is only when it does not conform to society that it causes difficulty in the society against which the crime is committed. We should try to rehabilitate these men in our society. I will not mention the other systems of treatment which may be provided to prisoners; other hon. members have done this much better than I could. I think one of the things we should be prepared to do is this: When a prisoner goes out of a gate he should be capable of going in a normal fashion into the society from which we took him, so as to live with his family in the proper way; so that he can walk down the street carrying his lunch pail to work, coming back again to his family who understand him and can sympathize with him and give him support at the time he most needs it. If we provide the machinery, they can make it possible. If these steps are taken about one or two years before long term prisoners are released, this will be an advantage and keep many people out of prison the second time, as well as making the job of the parole officer, that of the John Howard society and others interested in rehabilitating prisoners in society very much easier.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I know the house is anxious, and I am sure the minister is, to end this discussion and get the estimates through, but I have a matter of a constitutional nature which I believe of some importance. Even though the matter is important I think I can sum it up very quickly.

A few weeks ago the Supreme Court of Canada upheld the validity of the labour relations amendment act (1961) of British Columbia by a majority decision of four judges to three. This legislation in effect prohibited trade unions from using about 99 per cent of their funds to support any party or candidate for office in the federal field as well as in the provincial. One of the minority judges described this decision as a grave and unwarranted extension of principle. He also described it as a matter of great constitutional and political importance.

The decision, if I may say so with very great respect, justifies an intrusion by the provincial legislature into the field of federal elections, which is surely a matter which should be within the control of parliament, not of provincial legislatures. The decision of the majority indicates—and I say this with a great deal of respect to the court—a lack of understanding of the historic rights of labour. And lastly, this decision implies the right of the provincial legislatures to restrict the political rights of every organized group in Canada, be they a trade union, a corporation, a co-operative or any other association of individuals. It is, I suggest, entirely inconsistent with the bill of rights passed by this parliament, which purports to preserve freedom of association as one of the basic constitutional rights upon which our whole system depends.

In light of these facts, Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister will give careful and indeed favourable consideration to the request which I understand has been made to him to support an application for a rehearing of this matter by the full court of nine judges. The matter is of such grave importance that I respectfully suggest to the minister and his department that by supporting an application for a rehearing they will be assisting in the protection of the rights of this parliament, and the rights of the people of Canada.

The Chairman: Shall item 1 carry?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to prolong this matter but I think everyone is waiting with great anticipation for the minister to make some response to the various proposals which have been made.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that it would be possible for me to do this on the items as we go along after passage of the first item, because all of the matters which have been discussed can be discussed, as I understand it, under the various sections of the estimates. I had thought that if we passed the first item on administration I could then deal with the various matters; but if there is objection to that—

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I am sure there is a general disposition in the house to proceed to pass the estimates of all departments within a reasonable period of time, and I assume preferably before next Saturday comes upon us. Such being the case I think there is also the general understanding that as much debate and reply as possible should proceed on the first item, and then the committee would move with dispatch to pass the other items without difficulty.

Mr. Chevrier: Then, Mr. Chairman, in view of that I think I will accept the suggestion made and proceed at once to deal as generally as I can with the matters which did come up for discussion. In the first place I should like to say how grateful I am for the manner in which these estimates have been discussed, not only this evening but when they were up for discussion on an earlier occasion. Having regard to the number of years I have been in the house and to the fact that I sat on the other side for almost six years, I think I can say that these estimates have been given very careful scrutiny and study by all those hon. members who rose to discuss them both this evening and on a prior occasion. I think that is all to the good. I am grateful too for many of the suggestions which have been made, because several of them, not to say all of them, have been excellent, and I shall certainly be glad to give them my utmost consideration.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North dealt with a number of items, and he will excuse me if I do not go into all of the subjects which he brought up seriatim, and in the manner in which he did. But I should like at once to say to him that I think he has shown a tremendous interest since he has been in this house in the matters which he has discussed and in the questions he has posed from time to time. That has been evident from the trouble it has given me to find answers, with those of my officers who surround me, to the multifarious questions which he has asked. However, I might say without any hesitation that all of them have been pertinent and enlightening.

The hon. member referred to the inadequacy of progress in the field of correctional programs, and at once I must admit, and agree with him, and with those others who have spoken tonight, that there is inadequacy in that field. There are reasons why this exists. I do not make any excuses for it. Unfortunately the progress should perhaps have been greater, but as my hon. friend knows, in a country such as ours there are always priorities. It is unfortunate that matters of this importance should be relegated to, I should not say the bottom rung, but to a secondary level. But none the less, unfortunately that is what happens from time to time. I can assure him that our officers are giving this matter careful consideration indeed. I might add that representations were made to me during the course of the last federal-provincial conference about this very matter and some action will be taken with reference to it.

The hon. member made comparisons between what happens in the United Kingdom and in Canada. Those comparisons were, of course, enlightening, but I should like to say to him that the constitutional position in Canada is entirely different from the position in the United Kingdom. The hon. member referred, for example, to the case of a young boy in Winnipeg whom a magistrate had sentenced to four years and compared it with what happens in the United Kingdom. I am sure the hon. member recognizes that this case, if I understood him aright, is one over which the federal government would have no jurisdiction. Magistrates are appointed by the provinces, except, of course, in the northern territories, and if a magistrate decides to pass a sentence such as that, even though it would appear to be severe in the circumstances, it is not a matter which falls within the jurisdiction of the federal government.

I agree with the hon. member that every member of parliament should visit the penitentiaries of our country, particularly those which are not far from the House of Commons, penitentiaries such as Kingston and St. Vincent de Paul. He knows full well that members of parliament are free to visit these institutions. He and other members have been given the fullest co-operation in visiting them, and this situation will continue.

Reference was made to the Fauteux report and the fact that many parts of it are not being put into effect. As I said earlier, this, also, is a matter which was taken up by representatives of certain of the provinces with me in my capacity as attorney general, and this question is under study.

There was a discussion, too, on the Dion case.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, here I take the liberty to say first a few words in French on this matter which, as the hon. members of the house know, has been discussed many times in the house not exclusively, but mostly by the members of the Social Credit party and also by certain members of the Ralliement Creditistes.

I prepared a statement some time ago concerning the points raised in relation to this unfortunate case, but considering what is going on today and due to the decision of the tribunal, I believe that I should not make that statement to the house under those circumstances. Furthermore, the case is still sub judice. There will probably be an appeal; as everybody knows, it is possible to go to the supreme court in cases as important and serious as this one.

I would then ask hon. members to excuse me from making a statement today; I shall make it at another time.

[Text]

The hon. member for Grey-Bruce brought up a number of matters. He referred to the penitentiary program which was inaugurated by the former government and inquired whether there had been any change with respect to that program. No, as far as I know there has been no change in principle. The program is the same and it is being carried out in accordance with the recommendations which have been made by the commissioner of penitentiaries. There may have been changes as far as the locations of some of these institutions are concerned, but these changes were, I believe, decided upon for obvious reasons.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) dealt with the Coffin case, as did the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott).

[Text]

But since most of the remarks with reference to that case were in English perhaps I should deal with them in that language.

I listened very carefully to what the hon. member for Danforth said with reference to the Coffin case and I do not think there is anything useful I can add to what I said this morning on the orders of the day. I do not think the hon. member would expect me at this time to say anything more. There is a divergence of view with reference to what should be done. The hon. member for Lotbiniere suggested a royal commission should be appointed and the hon. member for Danforth did likewise. One hon. member suggested a committee of officers of the Department of Justice. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm felt the accusations in the book by Mr. Hebert should not be taken too seriously.

I thank the hon. member for Danforth for the time and study he has given to this case. It is easy to see he has spent a lot of time on it. I have no hesitation in saying that he has spent far more time considering the facts, at least, than the Minister of Justice has. But he will not be offended if I say that most of the things he said tonight—not all of them, but most of them—point toward action by the provincial jurisdiction. I would remind him, as I did earlier today, that this matter was referred to the appellate court in the province of Quebec which unanimously dismissed the case. Leave to appeal was asked of the supreme court. It was refused. Thereafter, the governor in council under section 55 of the Supreme Court Act referred the case to the court in order that the convicted person might have the same rights as he would have had if the Supreme Court of Canada had heard the case on appeal. As I indicated earlier, by a decision of five to two the supreme court decided that it would not interfere with the decision of the governor in council. The hon. member is right in saying they did not hear the new evidence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not with the decision of the governor in council; that was not a decision of the governor in council. I think the minister is in error, there. It may only have been a slip in expression. But the Supreme Court of Canada decided that if the case had come before it by way of appeal, it would not have allowed the appeal.

Mr. Chevrier: The Leader of the Opposition is right in correcting me and I am glad he did. I return to the interjection made by the hon. member for Danforth, and I say it is because of this new evidence that I have asked the law officers to ascertain if there is not some aspect of the case which the federal jurisdiction should consider. As I have said, I have not closed the door but I will have to await the report of these officials.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) raised the matter of sugar.

What grieves me a little is that he said that the Minister of Justice was hiding behind technicalities.

I am not in the habit of hiding because I am rather regularly present in the house, and I am sure the hon. member did not mean it that way but rather in the legal way.

It is a very serious matter, but when he deals with the sugar price, there is no need for me to remind him as well as the house that the federal government has no jurisdiction as far as prices are concerned. Let us not forget, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) repeatedly said in the house, that if price control is what is wanted another jurisdiction than this one will have to impose it.

Unfortunately, the restrictive trade practices commission's jurisdiction is rather limited.

I have here a section which I cannot read into Hansard because it is rather long but you will find in sections 32 and 33 the powers attributed to the commission. They deal with the abolition of combines and, most of all, collusion. When there is collusion between two corporations, the government can intervene through that commission.

I appreciate that the question of sugar is of particular interest to the house because it affects every home, but the fact remains that the government is bound by the law and cannot go beyond it.

I would have liked to deal at greater length with these sections. I may have the opportunity to do so another time, because I wonder whether this is the right time.

I certainly do not want to ignore the suggestion made by the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) and the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) who dealt with the organization of our penitentiaries and suggested that we hire competent officials, so as to rehabilitate these people. That is what we are trying to do.

As I tried to say a moment ago, in reply to one of the hon. members who had raised this question, unfortunately there are some priorities to which we must give greater importance—and I regret to have to say that—both in the present circumstances and at the time of the former government, which was faced with the same problems.

The hon. member for Villeneuve mentioned a case in particular, that of Mr. Gignac; I am not acquainted with the details of that case, but I will seek information from the officers in my department.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) asked many questions. He asked me if it was my intention to amend the legislation in 1964 so as to permit the establishment of lotteries. I have already answered that question in the house by saying simply that following the federal-provincial conference I would report to my colleagues and that a decision would be reached at that time—

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before the minister goes on—

Mr. Chevrier: May I finish the sentence?

[Translation]

—with regard to the advisability of amending the legislation.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before the minister goes on, I should like to ask him whether he made the statement yesterday and whether he was speaking for the government when, in reply to a request by the international railway brotherhoods for an amendment to the Criminal Code to permit legal lotteries controlled and operated by the government, he said that he personally favours the establishment of lotteries under provincial jurisdiction? In saying that, was he speaking for the government? If not, how can he, in virtue of his position, separate himself from the government?

Mr. Chevrier: I have no hesitation in answering the question. Yes, I made that statement, and I made that statement at the federal-provincial conference. I made that statement openly. I made it before the attorneys general. I made it in the conference. I said that I personally favoured the operation of lotteries under provincial jurisdiction but that I was expressing a personal opinion and these matters had to be considered in the light of the representations that had been made by the provinces. These representations were made to me first by the attorneys general and some premiers and then later by the members of the dominion-provincial conference assembled together. I repeated again there that I would have to give consideration to the representations of the provinces, because many of the provinces were against the operation of lotteries. Several indicated quite clearly that they did not favour them. I believe that on that occasion I gave, as succinctly as I could, the reasons that certain provinces were against them. That is why I say that the matter will be submitted to—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to clarify this. This is a very important matter.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to continue. Just a moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the minister is turning from that matter to another point then all I can say is that if he does not want cooperation he will not get it. I want to clear up how a minister of the crown can say that this is his personal opinion, and not be representing the view of the government of which he is a part.

Mr. Chevrier: I apologize if I did not allow the Leader of the Opposition to raise the question, but the Leader of the Opposition will remember that I was asked to deal with what had been said. That is what I was trying to do. If questions are forthcoming when we get down to the particular item I will have no objection to dealing with them. Again I say to the Leader of the Opposition that if he thinks I have been brusque—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, but it is a simple question—

Mr. Chevrier: —I am sorry.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —of how the minister can make a statement like that and not bind the government.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may go on with the other question asked by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm having to do with an amendment to the B.N.A. Act; as I indicated, that again is a matter for a conference of the attorneys general which I said at Banff I intended to call during 1964. There is machinery in the Department of Justice to deal with conferences of this nature. There have been a number of them. This matter is under careful consideration now.

The hon. member also asked about an amendment to the Criminal Code with reference to those who issue cheques without funds. I think all I need say here is that there is a committee within the department that deals with amendments to the Criminal Code and I could ask them to give consideration to such an amendment, if it has not already been done.

I commend the hon. member for Skeena upon his excellent French. In fact, I think it is remarkable that he should speak, or at least write three languages, because according to the press there is another language which he at least writes. In any event, I can tell him that his French was quite good. I join with other hon. members in telling him how well he pronounced it. The hon. member dealt particularly with section 660 of the Criminal Code which has to do with habitual criminals. He paid a compliment to one of the officers of the department, and I am delighted that he did. I should add to what has already been said on this matter, that there is a study being made of amendments to the Criminal Code. I can tell him that the officers of the department will carefully review this section relating to preventive detention.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond dealt at some length with the combines act and referred to a book entitled, "Canadian Anti-Combines Administration", which had to do with restrictive trade practices and the like. I am delighted that my parliamentary assistant has given special study to this matter and I think I shall be guided by much of the advice which he will give me.

I commend the hon. member for Athabasca for his support of the activities and actions of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I am delighted that he made the speech which he did. It is not the first time that he has intervened in this house in that respect. I think it is a good thing that members do rise from time to time, as often they do, to support the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Although some hon. members do criticize the mounted police, I believe that those who do so, criticize constructively. I was pleased to listen to the remarks which were made by the hon. member for Athabasca.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Frenette) and the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) talked about amending the Bankruptcy Act. I say without any hesitation that that act should be amended. The Bankruptcy Act is getting more and more obsolete. I wish to change the word "obsolete" and replace it by the expression "ineffective in some cases".

As both hon. members and the whole house know and as I said on several occasions, we are now studying the Bankruptcy Act in all its aspects.

I hope it will be possible at the next session of parliament to submit a bill amending that act.

I take note of the suggestions which were made by the hon. members for Portneuf and Shefford.

[Text]

The hon. member for Timiskaming, along with other members, raised the question of the rehabilitation of prisoners, the aftercare treatment that they should get, and the fact that we should be doing more in order to integrate them into society. I agree with him. I hope it will be possible to increase the estimates for the next fiscal year towards that end. He did refer to one particular incident which took place in Kingston, and I shall ask my officers to look into it.

The hon. member for Greenwood asked me to give consideration to the labour relations practices act, and requested a rehearing of the case. I would ask the hon. gentleman not to press me unduly on the matter because, as he knows, I have received some representations and I am going to receive additional representations on this subject. Until I do, I do not think it would be proper for me to make any statement with reference to his request. I can assure him that I listened carefully to the submissions made by him, and I shall listen carefully to the submissions that will be made.

I think I have covered, as best I can, most of the suggestions that were made in the debate.

Mr. Howard: May I be permitted to put on the record some brief background information about the sugar situation in Canada and to indicate, from my point of view, the smooth, facile and gentle way in which the minister approached this question. His approach left a great deal to be desired, so far as the people of Canada are concerned, and showed that the minister really did not tell all the facts about the sugar situation in this country.

Some years ago the B.C. Sugar Refining Company in Vancouver acquired the assets of the Alberta sugar factories and made them subsidiaries of that company. This acquisition put the company in a monopoly position in British Columbia, Alberta, and perhaps midway into Saskatchewan. A few years later the company took steps to acquire controlling interest of many Manitoba sugar factories, and made them subsidiaries also. This placed the B.C. Sugar Refining Company in a monopoly position in respect of sugar in all of western Canada to about the lakehead, which, I understand, is the break-even point on distribution costs between B.C. sugar refining companies and eastern manufacturers.

It was as a result of this acquisition by B.C. Sugar Refining Company of the Manitoba sugar factories that the combines investigation machinery was put into motion to determine whether or not the proposed acquisition was contrary to the statute. A reading of the report of the restrictive trade practices commission would be most enlightening. If hon. members think that the letter read by my leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam from Mr. Rogers, about keeping things secret concerning the operations of that company was enlightening, they should read the drastic statements he had to make about the steps which should be taken to gain control of the Manitoba sugar factories.

In any event, a charge was laid under the Combines Investigation Act, the merger section of it. This action was lost in the courts. This was the second case which was lost, the first being the one against Canadian breweries. I submit that the case was lost for two reasons. One, the merger provision of the Combines Investigation Act is just about useless, as these two cases proved. Two, the then minister of justice, who has since returned to British Columbia, Mr. Fulton, by the process of prosecuting the case, in fact gave it away.

In 1960 when the minister and the present Secretary of State for External Affairs sat on this side they were most vociferous in their opposition to proposed amendments which were then introduced by Mr. Fulton to the Combines Investigation Act. They raised a fuss day after day in this house and in the committee on banking and commerce, I believe it was, which was studying the bill, in opposition to the amendments which were proposed at that time. Those amendments became law, and out of all this we really see that the Minister of Justice is probably one of those types which the mother of the hon. member for Red Deer referred to as being able to look both fore and aft when driving a car.

Mr. Chevrier: I thought he did not get the story over.

Mr. Howard: Well, I was closer to the hon. member than the minister.

Mr. Macdonald: That is an interesting admission.

Mr. Howard: In this regard the minister reminds me of the Roman god Janus, who had two faces so that he could look both behind and ahead at the same time. This is the type of minister we have, one with two faces, and one face says, "we would like to do something about the sugar situation," while the other says, "We cannot." If he really had a sincere heart in this matter, the government would have long ago introduced amendments to the Combines Investigation Act so that the law enforcement officers could proceed to deal with the gouging that is taking place by B.C. Sugar Refinery.

When the minister, in his very suave and smooth way, tries to get out of all responsibility in this matter, I can only conclude he is speaking out of the other side of his face, and we will look upon it accordingly.

I was reading the Vancouver Sun and I saw where an old acquaintance of mine, one Wilfred Heffernan, a lawyer in Vancouver, is back in business as a prosecutor for the crown in drug cases. When the Conservatives came into office we discovered that they tore up the old patronage list of the Liberals with respect to lawyers to be employed in the prosecution of drug cases, and imposed their own list of Tory legal friends and firms to get the spoils of office by prosecuting in these cases. During the renegade years, as I think they are referred to, Mr. Heffernan and the other Liberal lawyers were out of the picture; but now Mr. Heffernan and other Liberal friends are back in it again, and I wonder whether the minister will tell us that he has put into effect the Liberal legal patronage list that existed prior to 1957.

Mr. Chevrier: In answer to the last part of the question there is no Liberal patronage list so far as I am concerned, and I can tell the hon. member that there are a number of lawyers who were appointed by the former government presently acting in these cases because, as the hon. member knows, some of these cases last over quite a number of years as they go from one court to another.

I would remind the hon. member also that, while he does not seem to approve of what I have said, and thinks I am smug about the manner in which this act is being administered. I am not. I am as concerned about it as he is, and I am as worried as he and some of his people are; but I have to say I am bound by what is contained in this act, and it may well be that in order to put teeth in it, it will have to be amended. I am willing to give consideration to that, because I find that most of the time when investigations are made, or when lawsuits are brought—and I think the house should know this—it is section 32 which is kept in mind, and which says what an offence is. I will not put it all on the record because it is too long, but subsection (2) says:

> Subject to subsection (3), in a prosecution under subsection (1) the court shall not convict the accused if the conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement relates only to one or more of the following:
> (a) the exchange of statistics,
> (b) the defining of product standards,
> (c) the exchange of credit information,
> (d) definition of trade terms,
> (e) co-operation in research and development,
> (f) restriction of advertising, or
> (g) some other matter not enumerated in subsection (3).

Then it goes on in another subsection and gives other reasons why the court shall not convict.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What year was that particular section brought into effect?

Mr. Chevrier: This section was passed in 1960. Now, I am not complaining. What I say is that the courts are bound by the law. The director of investigation and research is the one who has to put this into effect, and these are the difficulties. But I repeat what I said. I feel that we should give consideration to seeing if there is not some way to strengthen this legislation.

I do not think that we can do anything with reference to the control of prices, and I do not think the hon. gentleman, if he is serious, questions that. But I do think that we can perhaps do something to get at those who are guilty of collusion, mergers, monopolies and the like, and I say that I am willing to ask those responsible for the administration of this act if it is not possible to give consideration to amending it.

Mr. Howard: With respect to the employment of lawyers for drug prosecutions, the minister said that there are still under contract, or however it is done, lawyers who were appointed under the previous administration. Then he went on to imply that would not be carried on very long, because he said that many drug cases take a long time to conclude, through appeals and the like. I suppose what he does not want to tell us is that he does not want to change prosecuting horses in midstream, but as soon as those particular cases are finished we will find that these lawyers are out of business or prosecutors in drug cases, and this Liberal patronage list, that he does not know about, will suddenly be discovered—just the same as the Liberal patronage list that the Postmaster General and the Secretary of State did not know about suddenly came to light.

When the minister quoted the section from the Combines Investigation Act, that the courts shall not prosecute if the combine, conspiracy, or whatever it was, related to certain things, I would point out to him that when those amendments were introduced in 1960 by the Hon. E. Davie Fulton, the present minister and his colleagues, led all the way by the person who is now Prime Minister of Canada, said at that time that they would do everything possible they could to defeat them, because they were inimical to the interests of the Canadian people.

That was three years ago. They did not do very much about it then, but I thought that since returning to office the Liberals would remember the then clarion call of their leader, and we would have had amendments introduced to bring the act back to a stable basis, and remove it from the distorted condition in which the Conservatives placed it. I hope that if the minister stays in office, by the time these estimates roll around next year we will have had these amendments before us.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not going to enter into any argument respecting the amendments to the Combines Investigation Act three years ago, except to say that the concept that bigness is an offence is contrary to the experience of all the nations of the world, particularly the western world. The offence must always be that of doing something to the detriment of the public as a whole. Wherever that detriment is caused, it should be an offence. But in so far as combinations are concerned that are designed for the purpose of making it possible to compete for trade in other parts of the world, and are not in any way intended to interfere with the rights of people in Canada, certainly they should not be legislated against. But I did not rise for the purpose of dealing with that matter, Mr. Chairman. I come back to a question that I asked earlier and which the Minister of Justice answered in a rather cavalier way.

Mr. Chevrier: I thought you had forgotten that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The other day he advised the federal-provincial conference that he personally was in favour of lotteries operated under provincial jurisdiction. Furthermore, yesterday he repeated the same proposition to a group that met with him. I ask him this, and I hope to get an answer on this question. When he placed that viewpoint before the federal-provincial conference, was it the viewpoint of the government, or was he merely endeavouring to ride two horses, to be able to say, "I am in favour of this. I want to ingratiate myself with those who are in favour of this; but I do not speak for the government"? I am certain that a person with his lengthy experience would not advocate such a proposition. This is a statement made, according to the newspaper report, with regard to an amendment suggested by one or other of the provinces, which he said was acceptable to him and would be supported by him. In making that statement was he speaking only for himself? I ask the minister this simple question. When he made that statement was he speaking for the Prime Minister and the government, or was he merely flying the kite in order to ingratiate himself and establish further evidence of that smile which wipes aside so many arguments so often?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I hope the smile, if I continue to have it, will wipe aside the question that my right hon. friend has put. I do not want to be offensive, but I am inclined to think he put it with his tongue in his cheek.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; I am asking.

Mr. Chevrier: I will answer it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All right; that is what we want.

Mr. Chevrier: Nevertheless, I think I indicated quite clearly to the right hon. gentleman earlier what I had said on two occasions, and I am not attempting to withdraw from that position. But I am saying this. There was a discussion on the subject. No decision had been taken. I think I as an individual, whether it be as minister or in any other capacity, have the right to express my opinion. That need not be the opinion of others. It need not be the opinion of colleagues. But once the government has taken a decision on it, then my right hon. friend is right—I think there must then be collective responsibility, as he has said. If that had been the case, I think my right hon. friend would be quite right in the position he puts forward. But that was not the case. It was an informal discussion which took place following a subcommittee meeting, and in the course of a very friendly conversation which took place with several of the premiers I made the statement. I can only say that I was expressing my own personal views.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read the press dispatch with regard to this matter, because I asked the minister whether he was speaking for the Prime Minister. In a Canadian Press dispatch dated December 13 it says this:

> Mr. Chevrier made the statement Tuesday in reply to a request by the international railway brotherhood for an amendment to the Criminal Code to permit legal lotteries "controlled and operated by governments".
> He was pinch-hitting for ailing Prime Minister Pearson at the annual meeting between the federal cabinet and the national legislative committee of the international railway unions—

Does the minister say that when he pinch-hit for the Prime Minister he was not exactly sure on what team he or the government was?

Mr. Chevrier: I doubt very much if I used that expression, even though it is in the report. I am not denying the substance of the report; I am denying the words. I doubt very much if I said I was pinch hitting. I probably said that in the absence of the Prime Minister I was acting as chairman of the meeting, and I said about the same as I had said earlier at the federal-provincial conference. This, too, was a very informal meeting with the legislative committee of the railway brotherhoods at which the greatest, I should not say unanimity—

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what appears.

Mr. Chevrier: —but certainly the greatest informality existed. I do not think I need add any more to what I have said. I was not speaking on behalf of the Prime Minister; I was speaking, again, on my own behalf, but I was acting as chairman of the meeting in the absence of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, it was good to hear the minister express such interest in and support for the anti-combines legislation. Coming as I do from Winnipeg, I have had 30 years in which to read editorials in that great Liberal newspaper, the Winnipeg Free Press, about this wonderful legislation, this important legislation passed by that great Liberal Mr. Mackenzie King. The minister has mentioned the difficulties the government has had to face as a result of the amendment passed in 1961 by the former government. I express no opinion about that. But if one looks at the record of governments over the years with respect to the anti-combines legislation, most of them Liberal years, he cannot help being struck by the complete ineffectiveness of the legislation we have had in those years.

Some members of parliament, myself included, asked last year, I think it was, for the tabling of the list of prosecutions which have been conducted over the past 15 or 20 years, I think. The list was a long one. I am speaking from memory, but there had been in the neighbourhood of 50 or 60 prosecutions. What do we find? Even when the courts found the companies guilty, they imposed penalties which were really ludicrous. If one makes a mistake and has the misfortune to commit an offence against property, commits a robbery, for example, the first time you are caught and convicted you are likely to get a relatively minor sentence. But if you are caught a second or a third time, the judge—I am not being critical of judges—makes very sure that he impresses upon you the fact that you should not be doing this again, and you are likely to wind up with a pretty severe sentence. I spoke about this earlier in connection with the kind of sentences imposed by judges. But when it comes to companies we see that in this country we have one law for the poor and one for rich; one law for the individual and another for the company—and it seems that the bigger the corporation, the better it is for them. I took the trouble to list these companies to see how many of them were convicted more than once. Speaking from memory—and if I am wrong I apologize—it seems to me that the Eddy Company were convicted four times, and certainly three times.

What are the courts doing about this? Here is a company doing millions of dollars worth of business and making fantastic profits. I do not question their right to do this if they are an efficient company. But in each case the court has imposed a fine of $25,000. In the course of eight or ten years what is a fine of $75,000 or $100,000 to the Eddy Company? That is not a penalty; it is a licence for doing business. It is a licence for stealing from the public, just as much as a man who holds up a store or a bank is stealing.

Unfortunately, these people do not go to jail. The law passed by the former government permits the court to impose a penalty of either a fine or a jail sentence. I ask the minister whether any officer or director of a company in the history of Canada has ever gone to jail for breaking the anti-combines law? I know that his answer will be no. I think the minister should look very carefully in this regard at the experience of the United States, where the officers of some electrical companies were sent to jail, it is true only for a month, but at least they suffered in the same way as poor people who break the law. Since we have for many years given the courts the option of making the penalty either a fine or a jail sentence, and since the courts have consistently refused to impose the more severe penalty, as they would with an ordinary citizen who breaks the law, I suggest to the minister that he give serious consideration to making the penalty of a jail sentence mandatory at the second or third offence. Because in my opinion the breaking by a corporation of the anti-combines law is just as serious as the breaking of any other law by an ordinary citizen.

Mr. Woolliams: In the United States of America it is optional; it is at the discretion of the court.

Mr. Orlikow: But our courts do not use it.

Mr. Winkler: That is a matter for the courts.

Mr. Orlikow: If the courts do not use it we will have to find another method.

There is another matter which comes to my attention. I took the time to get the reports of investigations made by the anti-combines branch of the department over the last five years and was amazed at the number of investigations which were made. Some involved in the neighbourhood of 15 to 20 reports. Many of them made very specific recommendations. I wonder whether the government is going to give consideration to looking at those reports and taking steps to implement those recommendations. Because if they do not, I suggest that the government is in fact saying that the work of that investigation branch is really useless.

I have put some questions on the order paper, and although I do not want to refer to them in detail I would like to refer to some of these cases concerning drugs. In this regard the commission made a number of recommendations. One important one was that the commission made the charge very clearly that companies who keep the price of prescription drugs in Canada at the highest level anywhere in the western world should have their patent rights taken away. I suggest the government look at that recommendation and introduce legislation to give effect to it pretty quickly.

In the case of the paperboard companies, the commission recommended that the tariffs be reduced. If ever there was a party which prided itself on the establishment of free trade and low tariffs, it is the present Liberal party. Is it not about time that these recommendations, which were made not yesterday or the week before but over the last two or three years, should be put into effect? In the case of Canada Packers the commission recommended steps should be taken in the courts to force that company to divest itself of the control it had purchased in other companies. I ask the government whether they are considering these recommendations, or whether, like so many others, the reports will gather dust on the files of various offices in this and other buildings. I think the sentiments the minster expressed and which we were glad to hear are very fine ones, but the time is long past when pious platitudes suffice. We ought to see some action by the government in this regard.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, I should like to add a few remarks.

I appreciate that the minister had to deal with several subjects in reply to the many speeches made tonight, but I would like to get his or his government's views about the appointment of judges in certain judicial districts of our province in particular, where the rolls are too heavy. I believe that the minister forgot to mention this in his reply.

Does his government intend to make appointments shortly in order to relieve the backlog in several courts in our province?

Mr. Chevrier: Will the hon. member allow me to answer this question when we are dealing with the item in question?

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take too much time; I simply want to say a word to the minister before the general item passes, because I imagine the other items will not take so long. I am sure hon. members of the committee appreciated the courteous replies the minister gave to the various questions put and statements made. But the minister's replies will not do much to stir up any enthusiasm as to what is the future program of this department. When the minister brings down estimates one generally expects him to map out the programs he has in mind and to set forth the plans and objectives of his department. I appreciate the fact that the minister has been in charge of this department for only eight months and that these were estimates prepared by the previous administration; therefore I think there might be some excuse for dealing with the matter in a fairly low key. But I suggest to the minister that when the next session comes along, at which time we hope he will still be Minister of Justice, despite all the rumours to the contrary which are being circulated—

Mr. Knowles: Paris is no place for him.

Mr. Douglas: We would rather have him here than in Paris. But if he is still minister we hope we shall be able to get a clear outline of what his programs are in various fields. There is no need for me to go over them all because my colleagues have dealt with them admirably. There is, for instance, the penal system, which, in this country, is archaic. I have listened to the minister expressing his good wishes and good intentions this evening. But we have been listening to such expressions as these for over a quarter of a century.

I remember the Archambault report about which practically nothing was done. Then there was the Fauteux report about which very little has been done. I think we need from the minister a precise statement at the next session of parliament setting out the government's intentions in the field of penal reform. There is a tremendous need for the establishment of a farsighted policy in Canada in conjunction with the provinces. It is not enough for the minister to say that some of these matters come under provincial jurisdiction, that magistrates are appointed by the provinces and that there is not much we can do. The fact is that the federal government can do a lot by entering upon shared programs with the provinces to provide, for instance, probation and placement services. The provision of these services constitutes a most crying need today. Many of the provinces would respond. In fact, some of them are struggling to provide them on their own. I hope when we come to the estimates next session the minister will put before this house and the country a challenging program to bring Canada up to date in terms of its penal institutions and its penal program.

I think the same comment applies to the whole question of anti-combines legislation. This legislation is in great need of strengthening, as my hon. friend from Winnipeg North said a short time ago. Some time ago I drew the minister's attention to the fact that three of these sugar companies which had been found guilty of making an illegal profit on 80,000 tons of sugar were ordered to pay fines of $25,000 each, which was equivalent to $1 a ton or less than one twentieth of a cent per pound. At that time the minister said there was no maximum limit on the fines which could be imposed. But, equally, there is no minimum, either. This legislation needs to be amended so as to make the punishment fit the crime. To fine three companies $25,000 each after an illegal profit has been made on 80,000 tons of sugar is, as I have said before, simply issuing a licence to commit piracy. Again, we hope that by the time the house meets next session the minister will have legislation ready to introduce.

We hope, too, that he will tell us what is to be done about the various reports of the restrictive trade practices commission—reports which have been brought down and upon which no action has been taken. For the moment I am not laying this at the door of the minister because he has only had a few months in which to deal with these things, but we did expect this session and, certainly, we will expect during the next session, some statement from the minister about what he proposes to do. He has promised to look into the matter of the sugar combines. I had hoped there would be some report from him on this subject tonight. But if he has nothing to report at this time, perhaps he will be able to make a full statement to parliament when it meets again in January or February.

Reference has been made by my hon. friend from Skeena to the B.C. Sugar Refining Company. I drew attention the other day to the fact that this company has in the past year increased its operating profit from $5,670,945 to $10,084,271. Its net profit amounted to $2,780,000, a gain of $591,519 over the profit for the previous year. This is the company which was able to say, in a letter sent out by its president to the employees, that due to the higher price obtained for sugar which had prevailed through most of the past financial year the over-all profits of the company had proven to be greater than normal. Then the company proceeded to send out bonus cheques to its employeees of $12 for each year of service, and the letter ends by asking them to keep it quiet. I do not wonder that the president should have asked them to keep it quiet, because this company virtually doubled its operating profit in the course of the past year.

This is the company which got into Alberta and obtained control of three small refineries there. Now it intends to close one of them in Raymond and concentrate production in the other two. At the very time when sugar beet acreage is being increased, at the very time when we ought to be increasing domestic sugar production, this company is closing one of its refineries and then saying that the reason it has had to increase the price of sugar is because the price of the raw material has gone up on the world market.

I hope the minister's department intends to give the sugar industry a most careful examination. The fact that three of the companies this year pleaded guilty in the course of prosecutions initiated by the restrictive trade practices commission, indicates that there is good reason for further investigation.

I also want to express the hope that when parliament meets again the minister will be able to give some further answer to the request we have made so often for an appeal board to be set up, a board to which persons who have been accused of being bad security risks can go to have their cases heard. The minister said nothing about that tonight. I think the government has taken a step in the right direction by providing some appeal machinery for employees in the government service, but the rest of the public are entitled to equal protection. I will not take the time tonight to go into this matter further, but I will be most insistent about this matter when parliament meets again because I have come across case after case of examples of people who have been discriminated against and who think they are unjustly accused of being bad security risks. They should have the right to appear before some body appointed by the government, to see the evidence and have an opportunity to clear their names.

I trust that when parliament meets again the minister will be able to give us some idea of what he intends to do about these various programs. I think the hon. gentleman has been very co-operative in listening while members of the committee have raised so many problems, but what we would like to get from him is a definite statement as to government policy on some of the questions which have been raised.

Item agreed to.

40. Bankruptcy Act administration, $166,900.

Mr. Peters: Before we pass this item, has the minister anything to say about contemplated changes in this act and its administration? There is a great deal of concern in the business world about the number of small companies which one finds going bankrupt with large involvements amounting, sometimes, to hundreds of thousands of dollars, though the assets may be only a few thousand dollars. There is a saying among some business people that you should have $100,000 in the bank after your third bankruptcy if you are any kind of a businessman. It may not be that bad. I am sure the minister has given some consideration to the abuses that are taking place in the bankruptcy field and I wonder whether there is in contemplation changes in the small bankruptcy field that will bring about much tighter controls than we have at present.

There is some problem with regard to trustees being available for the administering of bankruptcies. In many cases there is great delay in providing trustees for bankruptcies, because of the shortage of such people and the fact that the trustees have to have some experience in the particular field they are going to administer.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I dealt with that in the French language earlier and I think I stated that changes to the Bankruptcy Act are under consideration in the department now and that I expect at the next session of parliament to bring forward a bill other than the one now on the order paper.

Mr. Douglas: Will sympathetic consideration be given to the report of the banking and commerce committee on Bill No. C-5—I need not go into the details of it—to protect farmers who have sold their produce to processors who go bankrupt?

Mr. Chevrier: I am aware of it, and the answer is yes.

Item agreed to.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

40. Pensions to families of members of the mounted police who have lost their lives while on duty, as detailed in the estimates, $15,894.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, may I say a word on item 40. As the minister knows, some of us have expressed concern over the years about the pension position of retired civil servants. As a matter of fact, it is in the category of retired civil servants generally that this problem arises for the most part. I am informed there are some instances of retired officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who have been retired for some time and whose pensions have not had adjustments, such as have taken place in other cases.

As the minister knows, I have been pleading with the Minister of Finance to do something about improving the pensions of retired civil servants. I would hope that the Minister of Justice would participate in this discussion and put in a word for retired mounted police officers who have been retired for some time and whose pensions have not been improved along with others.

Mr. Chevrier: May I say to the hon. gentleman that I saw a delegation in Calgary on this very subject when I attended the Canadian Bar Association meeting in Banff and I had a discussion later with the then commissioner Harvison of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police about this whole matter. The matter is under study and when the opportunity arises I will discuss it with the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say that I think we all appreciate the genteel approach of the minister this evening.

An hon. Member: That is the trouble.

Mr. Howard: As one of my colleagues has interjected, that is the trouble. The minister has agreed with practically everything that has been suggested.

Mr. Churchill: It is a change, too.

Mr. Howard: This is appreciated, and we look forward at the next session to so many items on the order paper emanating from the Department of Justice that we will be here well into the fall before we dispose of them. As I have said, in his reply the minister has accepted practically everything that has been proposed to him. Unless he speaks to the contrary now, we will assume that his remarks were not of the same kind as he made to the railway brotherhoods the other day, and that this evening he was not speaking personally but was speaking for the government.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: Northern affairs and national resources.

Mr. Howard: Ten thirty.

Mr. Peters: Ten thirty.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, in view of the urgent preoccupation of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and as I understand the hon. member for Kootenay West is very anxious to ask the minister some questions and he would love to answer them right now, I wonder if we could continue for a while. I think there are only one or two more speakers. Could we not dispose of the minister's department in the few minutes before eleven o'clock?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, the minister may be preoccupied with some things but so are other hon. members. I think it would be best to call it 10.30.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, we are quite prepared, as usual, to go on for a few more minutes. The log jam has to be broken one of these days. There are eleven departments which either have not been considered by the committee or with regard to which the committee is still on item 1, seven departments which have been started and not completed and only five completed. That is why we of the official opposition are quite prepared to sit a little longer tonight and get on with the business.

Mr. Barnett: If the hon. member had been more willing to help break the log jam about six weeks ago I think we might not have had this problem.

Mr. Churchill: That is a falsehood and you know it.

Mr. Howard: That is a factual statement, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Woolliams: There is the old filibuster at work again.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Howard: The Secretary of State made such an impassioned plea the other day to abide by the rules that I think we should now agree with him that it is 10.30.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, just before you see the clock may I say that I appreciate very much the co-operation of all those who co-operate.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I hope that Hansard will record the fact that for the third day in succession now, or more than that, the opposition to sitting longer hours has come from the New Democratic party. In this regard I hope that the Hansard reporter will have got the names of the persons, and their party, who have asked the house to rise at this time.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, just in case the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, having lost his prestige, is also losing his hearing, may I again call your attention to the fact that you should see the clock. It is 10.30.

Mr. Churchill: As you did on other nights.

Resolution adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Will the house leader reannounce the business for Saturday, and also for Monday if he can do so?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think perhaps it might be better if I had a little conference tomorrow about the order of the proceedings we hope to have on Monday. I reiterate my request, for what it may be worth, that possibly we might have a frame of mind tomorrow when we reach orders of the day that hon. members would be willing to let the resolution respecting the world exhibition go through, so that the bill could be debated at the beginning of next week. But if there is not that consent there will not be the possibility. There has also been put on the order paper today a notice of motion to go into committee of ways and means with respect to a relatively minor matter that is, however, of some importance to the economy. I understand the Minister of Trade and Commerce has discussed it with representatives of all parties in the house and there is agreement to proceed with it at this session, even though it was not in the Prime Minister's list. This is something that has cropped up in the last little while. I want to explain that I appreciate very much the co-operation which was extended to the Minister of Trade and Commerce by all parties in agreeing, notwithstanding the fact it is an addition to the list, and I appreciate this. If the house were disposed, because the bill will be absolutely identical except in form with that resolution, to go into committee and get the bill introduced, it would save us one step. This is not extremely important and I am not insisting in any way at all on these things, but it would make the order paper a little tidier for Monday.

So far as the estimates are concerned, this is to be the main business for tomorrow. The Department of Citizenship and Immigration will, by agreement, be called first. When it is completed, the minister of northern affairs, who has been available on so many occasions for so long, and who is still hopeful that the committee will be willing to ask him a few more questions and dispose of his department, will be available. My amiable and long-suffering colleague, the Minister of Public Works is very eager indeed to get a chance to hear the questions that are to be asked of him. If we could dispose of those three departments it would expedite greatly the objective I believe we all desire to reach, despite some suggestions that are sometimes made, that is the orderly conclusion of the business of this session.

Mr. Churchill: Is the Postmaster General just as eager as the rest of these people?

Mr. Pickersgill: The Postmaster General is panting, but he is going to have to pant a little longer because hon. members took a little too long with another minister the other day when the Postmaster General was available. In so far as I can cast my mind ahead, Wednesday is the day I had in mind for the Postmaster General and two or three other departments as well.

Mr. Knowles: If we were successful in disposing of these other three departments tomorrow, to use the words of the Secretary of State, could we then dispose of the Secretary of State?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, but we could dispose of the Minister of Fisheries who really has been very patient also, and who is very anxious to be disposed of.

Mr. Winkler: I was wondering, inasmuch as the old faithfuls are present at this hour, if we might not agree to sit a little earlier in the morning, say nine o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: This might interfere with some of the committee work.

Mr. Knowles: There is such a thing as the rule of law.

It being fifteen minutes before eleven o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put.

Motion agreed to.

PENSIONS

DISCUSSIONS AT CONFERENCE RESPECTING AMOUNT OF DEDUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): First I should like to say to the Prime Minister that we are glad to see him back in the house. We were disturbed yesterday when the flag at 24 Sussex street was flying upside down. But in all sincerity I would like to say how very glad we are to see him back.

Now I wish to ask the right hon. gentleman a question arising out of press dispatches this morning to the effect that at the dominion-provincial conference the premier of Quebec insisted on Canada pension plan premiums to the extent of 4 per cent instead of the proposed 2 per cent as the price of its agreement to an amendment to the British North America Act permitting survivors and disabled to be included in the plan. The information has not been available to the house, and I now ask the Prime Minister to tell the house what actually took place and whether or not this statement represents the situation.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by thanking my right hon. friend for his welcome back to the house and to assure him that the flag was upside down at Sussex street only because of sympathy for myself, inasmuch as I felt a little upside down yesterday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So it was intentional?

Mr. Pearson: In so far as the question is concerned, the report in the Globe and Mail to which my right hon. friend refers, and which indicates that widows, orphans and invalids are at present included in the Canada pension plan, is inaccurate and based on a misstatement of the published facts about the Canada pension plan. The report, as I have just indicated, says that pensions for disabled people and for younger widows and orphans are at present included in the Canada pension plan.

That, Mr. Speaker, is not the case. The plan as described to the house on July 18 and subsequently, the plan as it has been discussed with the provinces, does not provide pensions for people below the age of 65. It does not require a constitutional amendment. It may be that in the future, if there is a plan in effect, steps can be taken along these lines and those steps would require a constitutional amendment. But that is not the case with the present plan, and there has been no discussion with the provinces of an alteration in the plan to that effect. No constitutional amendment is required for the plan that has been put to the house and to the provinces, and no province has ever claimed any veto over this plan as it has been put forward.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I then ask the Prime Minister to advise the house now whether Premier Lesage insisted on Canada pension plan premiums totalling 4 per cent instead of 2 per cent.

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Lesage did not insist on any such thing.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare on July 18, although she made it clear these other items were not included in the Canada pension plan, referred to them as matters to be discussed with the provinces, may I ask whether Mr. Lesage related the two in any way at the recent conference?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated a moment ago the government hopes that in due course the plan can be extended in the way that has been suggested in this article to cover widows with dependent children, orphans and disabled contributors, and the possibility of a future extension of the plan in that direction has been discussed with the provinces. This would require a constitutional amendment, and certain provinces have agreed to such a constitutional amendment in the future after the plan is in effect. But all the provinces have not agreed. The province of Quebec has not agreed to that yet, and the matter is still under discussion.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. I think the Prime Minister intimated there was no demand that the total deduction be 4 per cent, but was the possibility of a 4 per cent deduction discussed?

Mr. Pearson: Yes. In the course of discussion the question of an amount for deduction was discussed. It was pointed out that under the proposed Quebec plan there was to be a 4 per cent deduction and under the proposed federal plan there would be a lower deduction. The whole matter was discussed.

TRADE

WHEAT—FINDING OF GLASS IN SHIPMENTS TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Some time ago he said he was setting up a committee to look into the matter of glass in Canadian wheat shipments and I wonder whether he has a report ready. I also wonder whether he has seen the statement made by Montreal port manager Guy Beaudet to the effect that only one hold in each of the seven cargoes had been contaminated by glass, and not the entire shipments. I wonder if the minister would agree that the sooner a statement can be made to substantiate the statement by Mr. Beaudet, the more we can reassure Canada's wheat customers that the situation is not as serious as it had been made to appear in earlier reports.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I had a statement earlier in the week on this whole subject. Perhaps, in view of the item in this morning's newspaper, it would better serve the interests of the house if that particular statement I had ready earlier were brought up to date and included a reference to the statement in this morning's press. This could be done on Monday.

Mr. Douglas: I am sure the minister would agree that the sooner a statement is made the better, in view of the very alarming reports that went out initially. I am surprised the minister did not make the statement when he had it here.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH MANITOBA DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he now has an answer for the house with regard to the proposed meeting between representatives of the Manitoba government and this government concerning the Winnipeg T.C.A. overhaul and maintenance base.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the delegation is coming on Tuesday of next week to meet with the government.

Mr. Churchill: Could the minister indicate the time of the meeting and the room in which it will be held?

Mr. McIlraith: It is ten o'clock in the forenoon, but I do not know the room number.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the meeting be in a room where other members from Manitoba can be present, as was the case on June 18?

Mr. McIlraith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Manitoba group have requested the meeting with the government. So far as the government are concerned, we would be quite happy to have other members at the meeting. However, I would think we would have to clear that with the Manitoba delegation, because after all they are the ones who asked for the meeting. So far as this government is concerned, it is quite happy to have other members from Manitoba present.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister like to know that the Manitoba members have been advised by the delegation that they would like us there?

Mr. McIlraith: I am sorry that the Manitoba delegation did not do the government the courtesy of advising us at the same time of that fact.

INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION INTO RECENT CRASH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport regarding the recent tragic accident involving a T.C.A. DC-8. Could the minister inform the house whether the aircraft investigation branch of the R.C.A.F. has now assumed over-all control of the investigation into the accident?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, but I should add that every resource that can be thought of that could contribute to finding out the cause of the accident is being used. There are a great many activities going on and a great many resources being co-ordinated, which involves bringing in investigating teams from many segments of the public service.

Mr. Nielsen: As a supplementary question, can the minister inform the house whether any of the technical personnel from his department are in the United States as observers in connection with the investigation of the recent crash of a Boeing 707?

Mr. McIlraith: I would like to take that question as notice.

STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT RESPECTING CHANGE TO "AIR CANADA"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Would the right hon. gentleman give the house the benefit of his comment on the reported statement by Mr. McGregor in Montreal that it will take three years to change the name of T.C.A. to "Air Canada", and is this now government policy?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think I had better look at the record, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure that Mr. McGregor put his statement in that form at all. In any event I will look at the record, and perhaps the Minister of Transport will have something to say about it on Monday.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Since it is rather financial problems which prevent the immediate change in the name of T.C.A., would the Prime Minister contemplate having these expenses paid by the privy council or the Department of Transport, in order to promote bilingualism in Canada?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

GENERAL FOULKES—INQUIRY AS TO RE-EMPLOYMENT BY GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, but in his absence I shall direct it to the associate minister. Has General Charles Foulkes been temporarily re-employed by the government or called to Ottawa in any advisory capacity? If so, for what period?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. However, I shall have the matter looked into and report to the hon. member on Monday.

NATO—REPORTED GROUNDING OF CF-100 SQUADRONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): In the absence of the Minister of National Defence I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. According to news reports the CF-100 squadrons from Canada have been grounded, and I should like to know from the minister if this is a correct statement and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the R.C.A.F. CF-100 squadrons have been grounded. However, I will look into the matter.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISARMAMENT—VIEWS OF CANADA RESPECTING RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I should like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Will the government of Canada take advantage of the conciliatory statement of policy made in San Francisco yesterday by the United States assistant secretary of state for far eastern affairs in regard to negotiations between the United States and red China, to bring to the attention of the United States government the views expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that continued isolation of red China is dangerous and that effective disarmament is impossible as long as this isolation continues?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into that question. It is one of great importance, and I would not care to say anything more about it at this stage. Perhaps I could have a statement on Monday.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO COST OF OPERATIONS IN MIDDLE EAST

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question regarding a news item from the United Nations which appeared in the Toronto Telegram of December 13, respecting the contributions to be made by the members of the United Nations for the organization's Middle East force. It states:

> The difference between what the U.N. majority is willing to pay and what the west feels the majority should pay will be made up, of course, by the western countries, such as Canada.
> Canadian acquiescence to the "compromise" was announced yesterday by Senator T. D'Arcy Leonard of the Canadian delegation in a speech before the assembly's budgetary committee.

I ask the Prime Minister how much will be the extra contributions to be made by Canada to the peace keeping operations of the United Nations, and how much will Canadian taxpayers be called upon to contribute in view of the default among such nations as the Soviet union, some Latin American and some Asian and African countries?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I saw the report in the press to which my right hon. friend refers, and I have asked for a report on the matter from external affairs. I would be glad to say something about it on Monday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Could the Prime Minister say what instructions were given to Senator Leonard of the Canadian delegation which resulted in him agreeing to a compromise?

Mr. Pearson: I have not got those instructions in my mind at the moment, but I will include that in my statement on Monday.

FEDERAL DISTRICT

REPORTED EXPRESSION OF OPINION BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Can he tell us whether the Minister of Justice was expressing government policy when he said last night that he was very much in favour of a federal district for Ottawa?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister, in the statement to which my hon. friend refers, emphasized that he was expressing his personal views on this question.

FINANCE

REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER RESPECTING BUDGETARY DEFICITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that he was not here when questions were put about the statement he made to the Canadian Labour Congress endorsing deficit financing, does he not suggest now that his views are at variance with those of the Minister of Finance, and is he contemplating a change in that portfolio?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

COFFIN CASE—POSSIBLE ACTION AGAINST AUTHOR OF BOOK

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the serious charges made by Mr. Jacques Hebert in his book, which cast doubts on the honesty of the judicial authority, is it the government's intention to take legal or disciplinary measures against him, if his allegations are proven untrue?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I explained yesterday our stand on that matter. With regard to the second part of his question, the hon. member is aware that this matter does not come under the jurisdiction of the federal government.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CORRECTION OF NEWS BROADCAST RESPECTING INCREASES IN ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to address to the Secretary of State. Does he himself consider that the correction the C.B.C.

news gave at seven o'clock last night with regard to the vote on the assistance payments was itself a correct report of what occurred in this house?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I did happen to hear that particular correction, and I must say it was just as incorrect as the original report that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) made a question of privilege yesterday; because the statement was made that an amendment that was rejected referred to the date October 1. There was no such amendment proposed, and the amendment that was proposed would only have had the effect of delaying the increased assistance payments.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, would the Secretary of State take this matter up with the minister to whom the C.B.C. reports?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I do not think I will bother.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: I am afraid you will find him most unresponsive.

QUEBEC

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO VICTIMS OF LANDSLIDE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Louis Frenette (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Has any assistance been requested for the people who were the victims of a landslide in St. Joachim de Tourelle and, if so, does he intend to do anything to help out?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I assume that a request of that kind, at least in the first instance, would go to the provincial government.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TERM OF OFFICE OF PRESIDENT ON REAPPOINTMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell us what is the duration of the present term of office of the C.N.R. president?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend will look at the statement I made in the house at that time I think he will find this point is covered. I would prefer to leave it at that at the moment. I will send him the statement.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I have here the statement the Prime Minister made that day and it does not mention the duration of the term of office. My purpose in asking the question is to get that point cleared up.

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: I think it was made clear in that statement that he was appointed for a regular period but indicated his intention of retiring before the end of that period; I think it was after 18 months.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED QUARTERS FOR INTERPRETERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. My question is related to the one I asked on October 2 last.

Could the minister tell the house whether the government will provide, for the end of January, a new room for our interpreters, since their present room is very cold in winter and much too small?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I think I had better take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

SUGAR

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION INTO PRICES AND SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask him whether the government is now considering an investigation into the whole price structure and supply of sugar in Canada.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to discuss that matter with the Minister of Trade and Commerce. At the moment I cannot add anything to what he has said.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Prime Minister, then, if he would use his influence to keep the sugar factories going that are now in operation in Canada, rather than having some of them shut down.

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to do that.

INDUSTRY

HEAVY WATER—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEW PRODUCTION METHOD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry whether he has yet received a report from his experts who were in Toronto. If not, when does he expect to have it?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I have not received a report from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. As I said the other day, I expect to have this late on Monday, and I still have that expectation.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REFERENCE OF STATEMENT TO HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister or perhaps the Secretary of State. The understanding is that a statement will soon be made on the Columbia river with reference to the three governments. In the event that such a statement is made shortly, when will it be put to the house or to the external affairs committee?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The statement will be made as soon as it can be made. If circumstances make it possible, and if there is agreement, it will be sent to the external affairs committee as soon as that can be done, next session I presume.

Mr. Pugh: A supplementary question. With reference to the delay, if this statement is made shortly, which might occur just before the adjournment of the house, would there be a special call for that committee to meet during the recess?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid it would not be possible under the rules for a committee to meet between sessions.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

METHOD OF DEALING WITH CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENTS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, if I might just say a word before we proceed, from what I have been able to discover there would be no objection to going into committee of ways and means for the purpose of dealing with the government notice of motion which is on the notice paper and which has been, I believe, explained to hon. gentlemen opposite through the usual channels, and some less than usual channels. It pertains to the Customs Tariff, and if it could be disposed of without debate the bill, which will be in substance precisely the same as the resolution, will then be available for debate on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreeable to this line of procedure?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, might I just say that if the Secretary of State would conduct his affairs through the less than usual channels, as he referred to them, a little more often, perhaps more co-operation would be forthcoming.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Resolution reported and concurred in.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-129, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

1. Departmental administration, $976,200.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Chairman, I hope you will convey my apologies to the Speaker for having stood up for more than 30 seconds, as I did a few minutes ago, instead of just bowing when he was desperately trying to introduce the government motion pertaining to Indian affairs. It was a slight case of inexperience and absentmindedness.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, it has not been the practice of the house, when considering the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, to have a general discussion when the departmental administration vote is called. In the past it has been agreed, both by those who have held this portfolio and by members of the committee, that the most effective way of handling the estimates is to provide for discussion of each main area of the department's activities as the first item in that particular area is reached. These areas are the estimates of the citizenship and immigration branches on the one hand and Indian affairs on the other.

To follow this course, I believe, will facilitate the committee's consideration of a department whose activities are diverse and complex, ranging from the Yukon Territory to Cape Breton within our borders, and from Dublin to Hong Kong beyond our shores.

While the range of responsibilities of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration is a broad one, there is a common unity of purpose which binds it together. Each branch of the department is concerned with the most valuable and by far the most complex of our resources: our human resources.

The immigration branch selects future citizens for our country. The two citizenship branches encourage and assist newcomers to reach the status of Canadian citizenship, and the Indian affairs branch is dedicated to assist the Indians to achieve full citizenship.

As the former prime minister, the Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent, expressed it in 1949 when the department was formed:

> Having citizenship and immigration and Indian affairs in one department would indicate that the purpose of the activities of that department was to make Canadian citizens of those who were born here, of the original inhabitants of the territory, or those who migrated to this country.

I should like at this time to acknowledge the great contribution made by the officers and staff of the department in all its branches.

Despite the great distances which separate many of the activities at home and abroad and despite the variety of responsibilities, the members of the department seem to share in the common purposes and objectives which provide the basis of their organization. I have found that they are competent, that they work hard and that they are dedicated to the best traditions of the public service.

To make progress in the best way, let us start by discussing the first item on citizenship vote 5, the citizenship registration branch. I shall make a statement on citizenship and immigration, covering the general field of votes 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30 and 35, after which other members may make their general comments.

When the citizenship and immigration items are completed, we will then repeat the process when the first item is reached on the Indian affairs votes, leaving departmental administration to the end.

With the concurrence of the committee then, Mr. Chairman, I suggest we leave vote 1 and turn to votes 5 to 35 inclusive.

Do I have the consent of the committee?

[Text]

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Mr. Skoreyko: What is the purpose, again, of the minister's request?

Mr. Favreau: The purpose is to enable a more orderly discussion of the estimates. The department is composed of three main branches, citizenship, immigration, and Indian affairs, and I am given to understand that in the past it has been the practice to break up the discussion; to begin, with the minister's general statement, followed by members' discussion on citizenship and immigration, and then for the minister to make a general statement on Indian affairs, followed by a further discussion on that subject. I suggest we might proceed by considering the first item and debating it, and then proceed to item No. 35, after a discussion of which the committee could return to pass the first item.

Mr. Patterson: That may work out satisfactorily, but I recall that when a similar arrangement was tried the other evening it did not succeed too well. After all, if item 1 is not passed there is no minister and no provision for administration.

Mr. Howard: The minister has outlined the way in which this has been dealt with in the past, and what he has suggested does make for a more orderly approach. However, at this stage of the session there is, I understand, a rush to finish our business, presumably by next week end. This being the case the committee could easily find itself in the position of spending an inordinately long time in discussing citizenship and immigration at the expense of the time which might be available for the consideration of Indian affairs. We might find that everything had to be condensed into the last few minutes of the day. If there could be some guarantee that we would spend an appropriate amount of time on Indian affairs, without extending the hours of sitting as they have been unanimously agreed, I am sure we could look at the minister's suggestion favourably.

Mr. Favreau: The hon. member knows that my suggestion contained no intent to shorten the discussion of Indian affairs, but it is true, as he suggested, that this might be a possible consequence of any such arrangement. I am in the hands of the committee. If the committee would prefer to discuss Indian affairs first, I would have no objection. I think the passage of these estimates would take longer still if we were to have an extended discussion on the first item.

Mr. Howard: I gather the suggestion of the minister was that we should divide consideration of these estimates into two parts, first citizenship and immigration and then Indian affairs. Perhaps we should proceed to consider the citizenship estimates to a point of time about half way in the day's sitting. We could then devote the other half of our time to Indian affairs. That would be perfectly acceptable to me if it is acceptable to the committee.

Mr. Skoreyko: I can see no point in agreeing to proceed until a certain time in the afternoon and then entering upon discussion of another question. I think we should either abide by the suggestion put forward by the minister or else proceed along the line suggested by the hon. member for Fraser Valley.

The Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee that we proceed first to discuss citizenship and immigration; then when we have disposed of that item, go on to consider the Indian affairs branch, and then revert to item one?

Mr. Howard: I think in view of the objection which has been raised we had better do what was done in connection with the estimates of the Department of Justice and have a general discussion. I think we should include Indian affairs in the discussion on the first item.

The Chairman: Perhaps in that case we should accept the suggestion by the hon. member for Skeena and follow the course he has proposed.

Mr. Favreau: The Canadian Citizenship Act came into force on January 1, 1947, and provides for the legal status of Canadian citizens. The act is administered almost entirely by the Canadian citizenship registration branch, which has an establishment of 96 at headquarters in Ottawa, and 64 in the citizenship courts situated in various centres in Canada. The most recent citizenship court was established in Ottawa in March of 1963. There are nine other courts in Toronto, Montreal, Hamilton, London, Vancouver, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Moncton and Windsor.

These, along with the regularly constituted courts, provide facilities for persons wishing to apply for Canadian citizenship. In addition, 56 persons have been appointed to act as courts for the purpose of the Canadian Citizenship Act in remote areas. Four similar appointments have been made overseas for the assistance of servicemen.

At this point I would like to inform the hon. members who have expressed an interest in the qualifications which must be met by an applicant for Canadian citizenship, that a review is at present being made of the standards required of applicants from the inception of the Canadian Citizenship Act to the present time, with a view to establishing as far as it is possible uniform criteria across Canada.

In 1962, 72,080 persons became Canadian citizens. This is the third highest number for any one year, the highest being in 1957 when 95,462 certificates were granted, and the second highest is 1958 when 84,183 grants were made. From January 1, 1947 to December 31, 1962 a total of 654,379 persons have been granted citizenship in Canada. In addition, 389,586 certificates were issued to persons who wished to have proof of their status as Canadians.

It has been ascertained that approximately 40 per cent of the immigrants who entered Canada in the 10 year period 1953 to 1962 who are eligible for Canadian citizenship have become Canadians. Fitting and appropriate ceremonies for the presentation of certificates of citizenship can provide a most important symbol of the benefits to new Canadians and to others also of the acquisition of Canadian citizenship. For this reason consideration is being given to expanding the number of courts. Plans are at present being considered for the establishment of a court of Canadian citizenship in Calgary. Through these media and through appropriate publicity it is hoped to encourage a greater number of people to apply for Canadian citizenship.

With respect to the Canadian citizenship branch, it is responsible for two main programs; first, developing a greater degree of understanding of Canadian citizenship and of group relations amongst newcomers, Indians and Canadians generally through advisory and financial assistance to organizations and agencies engaged in citizenship education and community action; and second, for immigrant instruction by providing textbooks to provincial departments of education and others conducting classes for adult newcomers, and by providing matching grants to provincial and territorial governments for citizenship and language teaching costs.

The increase in this vote is minimal, about 3.5 per cent. It results almost entirely from the larger amount provided for payments to provinces for the conduct of language classes for immigrants. For such classes the federal government matches the contributions made to local school boards by the provincial governments. The increase results from higher teachers' salaries and increased efforts to reach immigrants in remote areas, housewives and hospitalized newcomers, and to develop language courses within the vocational retraining programs for immigrant workers. The only other allotment which has increased over the past year is salaries, up about 2 per cent as a result of the salary revisions. There have been no increases in staff.

There is one development in particular which I should like to bring to the attention of the committee. As hon. members are aware, persons of Indian status and ancestry have been moving to urban areas in rapidly increasing numbers during recent years. In general, Canadian communities have been quick to respond to the needs of these people, and their adjustment has been aided considerably by the establishment of friendship centres in a number of urban communities. The first of these centres was organized in Winnipeg in 1957 and eight more have been added since that time. Last year new centres were started in Toronto, The Pas, the Battlefords, Prince Albert and Edmonton. Interest in friendship centres is increasing. It is hoped and expected that many others will be organized within the next few years.

[Translation]

I should like at this time to outline some thoughts of the government on immigration matters and a few developments which have taken place since I took office several months ago.

That Canada should continue to encourage immigration is self-evident; people from other lands make a positive contribution to our nation's economic and social well-being. There are considerations of national interest for encouraging immigration and there are other more human considerations, such as family re-union, the reduction of discrimination based on origin or creed and the acceptance of charitable and humanitarian responsibilities. Through immigration we can do much to abolish antagonisms and to foster understanding.

Our manpower needs are changing and the needs of other countries are changing with conditions and circumstances. For this reason, immigration policies should be reviewed fairly frequently. There is another reason as well: it has been established for many years that immigration to Canada is not a fundamental human right, but a privilege, and that mass immigration should take into consideration the general economic and social factors of Canada.

With these considerations in mind, the government in 1963 has continued the policy initiated by the previous government early this year of pursuing a more aggressive program. It has been difficult to increase the flow of immigrants, but a beginning has been made.

During the first 10 months of this year, 79,628 immigrants arrived in Canada, and I expect that by the end of 1963, there will be about 92,000. This compares favourably with the 1961 and 1962 totals of 71,689 and 74,586 respectively. Our objective for next year is to revert to the pre-1959 figures of well in excess of 100,000, the exact number to be determined by the response to improved methods of recruiting immigrants of suitable types.

During the past months, we have been conducting an intensive study of immigration policy and procedures. We have particularly concerned ourselves with Canada's economic requirements for manpower and population and with Canada's humanitarian responsibilities. As for immigration from an economic viewpoint, we have concluded that it should consist mainly of young, skilled workers and of entrepreneurs with the capital and experience needed to become established in their own self-operated enterprises in Canada. Such persons fit into our economy and society with little or no difficulty and, far from taking employment away from Canadians, they can be instrumental in helping create jobs for unskilled Canadian workers.

To obtain such immigrants, the department will pursue a vigorous informational and promotional program in the countries which have traditionally been our principal sources, such as the United Kingdom, France and the U.S.A. To this end we intend to open two offices in France, in addition to that which has been at Paris for many years, if the necessary arrangements can be made with the French authorities.

We shall continue to provide service to immigrants in other parts of the world as interest and volume warrant. In this respect, we have recently established permanent offices in Cairo and Madrid, and an officer has been assigned to Beirut on a temporary, experimental basis.

In countries where our offices are not located, travelling teams of trained immigration officers will continue to make periodic visits to assess the qualifications of individual applicants and determine their suitability as future Canadian residents. So far this year, officers who visited the West Indies and central and South American countries, have selected 1,139 persons on the basis of individual merit. Travelling officers have also selected 1,106 persons living in various Pacific islands and countries in the Middle East.

With respect to humanitarian immigration, we have continued to give recognition to Canada's position as one of the more prosperous countries in the world community, by providing for special movements of persons in a refugee or quasi-refugee situation, as a result of war or other disaster.

To illustrate, 217 refugees sponsored by reliable persons were admitted during the first 10 months of this year, even though the immigrants could not meet the normal occupational requirements for admission, and arrangements are being completed for an additional 192 refugees in similar circumstances.

Also, Canada as a special project, in co-operation with the United Nations high commissioner for refugees, undertook to settle 24 physically or socially handicapped refugees. They have now been settled in employment by immigration staffs and I am happy to say are doing well. In addition to such special movements, of which these are but two, approximately 1,000 refugees have come individually for settlement; and I am at the moment giving consideration to a pilot project for the movement of 100 families from Hong Kong in co-operation with the council of churches.

It is important to achieve the best possible integration of policies relating to employment and to immigration, in the light of the most reliable economic studies that can be made.

Arrangements are in progress to establish an interdepartmental committee of senior officials of interested departments to assess the economic aspects of immigration policy on a continuing basis and to advise my department in this respect.

In the course of reviewing our policies I have also been attempting to bring the Immigration Act and regulations more into line with changes which have taken place in our economic and social environment and with advances in the field of medicine. This is a many-sided, complex and sensitive area. I am reviewing very carefully representations which have been made to me concerning certain of the immigration regulations which on their practical effect can create arbitrary distinctions in the privileges of sponsorships which are enjoyed by Canadian citizens.

Moreover, I shall be introducing within the next few days a system for assessing settlement arrangements for sponsored immigrants according to standard criteria. This should do much to clarify the requirements and obligations of sponsors and thus eliminate most of the uncertainty which has existed with respect to the matter in the past.

Finally, plans for integrating customs-immigration primary inspection at border ports of entry have been put into effect, with total savings to date of almost $300,000. In carrying out our integration plans, we have taken care to ensure that no immigration or customs officer at present employed will be deprived of his job.

This terminates my introductory statement concerning the citizenship and immigration branches.

May I turn now to the various problems affecting Indian affairs.

[Text]

In introducing discussion of the estimates of the Indian affairs branch I should like to pay tribute to my immediate predecessors in office, who maintained and developed many of the basic programs initiated prior to 1957 and who, in turn, laid the foundation for many worth-while projects which we shall be moving forward as quickly as possible.

I wish also to thank members from all sides of the house who have written and spoken to me about ideas and suggestions and who have sent forward constructive criticisms. Many of the members have shown their interest by well taken and searching questions, either put orally or placed on the order paper. This non-partisan interest and concern for the welfare and advancement of Indians has been heartwarming and encouraging for me in taking up the responsibilities of superintendent general of Indian affairs. I am confident we can continue to work together effectively in our efforts to find the best means of assisting the Indians of Canada to make the difficult adjustment required to meet the demands of a bewildering and complex time.

Indeed, it is only if we all work together in this house, and with the full co-operation and support of the provinces, municipalities, churches, voluntary agencies and private efforts of Canadian citizens, that success can be expected for the Indians. There are no single measures on which we can rely for a solution of the problems involved. The task calls for hard work and sacrifice. We must be ready to accommodate ourselves to the legitimate demands of the Indians, and to recognize and respect the different values and aspirations inherent in their culture. We must go much further and create bonds of confidence and mutual respect. We must listen as well as speak, and learn before we attempt to teach.

We know from experience here and abroad that doing things for people, giving them gifts and granting them favours, brings many evils; complacency and patronage on the part of the giver, dependency and loss of confidence for the receiver. Our primary task, then, must be to provide opportunities for the Indians to help themselves. At present many Indians rely heavily upon the federal government and upon the protective and restrictive provisions of the Indian Act for their economic and cultural survival.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired.

An hon. Member: Let him go on.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Favreau: I thank the committee. We must make it possible for them of their own free will and in their own time, to regain self-confidence, to maintain pride of race and achieve control under their own leadership. This result, when attained, will eliminate the need for special programs, special legislation and special services. As long as these are required, the goal of independence on an equal footing with other Canadians will not have been accomplished.

Not the least of the needs we face is a new look at Indian legislation. We are proceeding to review the Indian Act as quickly as a sound and thorough consideration will permit. Our objective in amending the act will be to give the Indian people a stronger voice in the conduct of their own affairs. The emphasis will be on Indian initiative and responsibility, and a loosening of the paternalistic ties. We also propose to follow the practice first begun in 1951, and repeated in 1955, of consulting Indian groups and bands before this new legislation is passed.

Another matter requiring attention is the establishment of an Indian claims commission. The joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Indian affairs recommended that such a commission should be established to hear matters of long standing concern and grievance to Indians. A resolution to introduce this legislation is now on the order paper, and it is my hope that this resolution will pass and that the bill will be given first reading before the house rises. Once this is done I intend to send the proposed legislation providing for the disposition of Indian claims to the Indian bands and organizations across the country for study and consideration.

One of the most encouraging aspects of Indian affairs today is the interest being taken by the provinces and provincial agencies in the welfare of the Indian people. I refer to the provincial and local school board co-operation that is enabling thousands of Indian children to attend integrated schools; to the increasing participation of Indian bands in provincial social and economic assistance programs; to the co-operation received from provincial governments in the road building program for Indian reserves; and to other examples of provincial interest and action which I shall mention further on in the course of my remarks. Also I acknowledge the very welcome aid being given by various private agencies who join with us in a desire to better the future for fellow Canadians of the Indian race.

Last month, for the first time in Canadian history, the question of Indian affairs was discussed at a federal-provincial conference. I am glad to report a large measure of agreement. It was agreed that Indians should be associated more closely with the life of other Canadians and that Indians have full equality of opportunities. It was recognized that the time has come to find the basis on which the widest possible range of federal, provincial and municipal services currently provided to non-Indians can be extended to Indians, and that the Indians must be consulted throughout. It was agreed that a further meeting should be held, if possible by May 1964, at which provincial ministers and their senior officials would discuss with us this whole question in greater detail. Preparation and planning for this next meeting is now under way. I sincerely believe that through this new development we are entering a new phase and have reached a turning point in the field of Indian affairs in Canada.

A sound body of knowledge is essential to the continuing development of effective programs. The government, therefore, is sponsoring a Canada-wide Indian research program. In announcing this undertaking in the house on December 2 last I mentioned that the study, conducted by social scientists from the universities, would cover four major areas concerning Indians; economic development; advancement in education; responsibilities that exist at various government levels; and band councils and the development of self-government. In addition to the main areas of research, a number of supplementary studies would be made on related subjects.

Basic to our efforts is the willingness of the Indian people to carry themselves forward. The great majority, I am certain, are determined to take advantage of every opportunity provided to them for advancement.

Opportunity requires sound training, both academic and technical. The 1963-64 estimates for the Indian affairs branch reflect the emphasis on education in that 57.1 per cent of the amount requested is designated for education purposes, including an amount of $25,294,810 for the administration, operation and maintenance of the school program and $5,792,000 for capital expenditures. There is an increase this year in the operation vote attributable to an over-all increase in enrolment and an expected rise in education costs for Indian children attending non-Indian schools. The number of children enrolled in non-Indian schools now exceeds 18,500, or almost 40 per cent of the Indian school population.

A scholarship program for Indian students has been continued from previous years with encouraging results. In addition other financial assistance, including the payment of tuition fees, was given to 3,344 students to enable them to complete high school, university and vocational training courses. Indian parents, too, are showing greater interest in education. There are now 40 Indian school committees which are in effect embryonic school boards, and which constitute a basic step toward Indian responsibility for the operation of schools on reserves.

Efforts toward the inclusion of Indians in welfare programs of the provinces must be continued and intensified. It is recognized that there is also a need for the establishment of services designed to help those residing in Indian communities to provide for their own needs. The establishment of such services is now under active consideration.

The opportunities for mature and competent Indian men and women, prepared to give leadership in the reserve community and elsewhere, are constantly broadening. Emphasis is being placed on training programs to enable Indians to develop more fully their potential capacity for leadership roles. Utilization of training facilities and resources offered by various governmental and private organizations has made possible marked expansion in this field.

Economic development programs are vital. In agriculture, provision is being made to continue and expand the practice of lending cattle on rotation to selected Indians. Agricultural conferences to stimulate interest and improve the methods used by Indian farmers have been successfully undertaken, and Indian farmers are being encouraged to avail themselves of the services offered by the federal and provincial departments of agriculture.

The number of selected Indians placed in permanent employment, with the co-operation of the national employment service, is growing year by year and has now reached a total of 1,617, including 477 in 1962-63. In addition there were over 5,000 rural and seasonal placements made last year with assistance from the national employment service. This does not include the many Indians who obtained employment independently or with assistance from their local agency superintendent.

Extensive assistance is provided those Indians who still pursue their traditional vocations of hunting, trapping and fishing, and harvesting wild crops. A ten year agreement with the province of Ontario concerning renewable resources development has completed its first year of operation and shows promise. Similar programs are being carried on in other provinces by formal agreement, as in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, or under informal working arrangements. Notable in the latter case are joint surveys of the renewable resources potential in British Columbia and Quebec.

The value of handicraft production as a supplementary source of income is recognized by inclusion in the estimates of an amount to provide for instruction and supervision, the furnishing of raw materials, and the purchase and sale of finished handicraft items.

Another matter of importance is the expanding economy of the Indians is the development of forest resources on Indian reserves. Provision is made in the estimates for forestry investigations and for the continuing costs of reforestation.

Various measures by which the government seeks to alleviate distress caused by seasonal declines in employment are being applied on Indian reserves throughout the country. Indian bands are participating in the municipal winter works incentive program and, up to the the end of November, 43 applications from Indian bands, totalling $143,000, had been approved. In addition 70 projects amounting to $383,000 will be carried out on Indian reserves located within designated development areas. A further 650 projects, totalling $1,200,000, have been provided for under a special Indian community employment program for bands which lack the funds to enable their participation in the winter works incentive program.

In all economic programs an effort is being made to involve Indians in planning and management, by recruiting as much as possible from the ranks of the bands concerned the help required to carry on day to day supervision, and by submitting proposals to band councils before programs are undertaken. It is hoped that through experience gained by these means, Indians will qualify for permanent positions in the activities of the economic development division and gradually take over management of their own affairs.

The need for more and better roads to facilitate access from Indian reserves to neighbouring non-Indian communities is recognized in the estimates. Such access is becoming increasingly important as the integrated school program proceeds. Similarly the adjustment of Indians to the general economy requires free movement between the reserves and centres of employment and marketing. Also recognized is the need for adequate water and sewage facilities in Indian communities. Substantial amounts will be expended for improving these services. Concurrently, emphasis will be placed on education campaigns designed to enlist the co-operation of Indian bands in improving sanitation facilities on the reserves.

In conclusion may I emphasize that the programs which I have outlined have one main purpose in mind; to assure the greatest possible measure of opportunity, equality and well-being for the Indian people. To be successful we need not only the assistance of all levels of government but also of voluntary organizations, private individuals and the general public, and above all the active support, co-operation and assistance of the Indian people themselves.

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest to the minister's somewhat lengthy statement because I believe, as he does, that this is a very interesting department indeed. I am glad he has enlightened us to some extent with regard to what he intends to do within the next year. I noted with interest that the minister was not at all pleased with the number of immigrants who had been admitted to Canada in the last three or four years and that the Liberal party is now embarking upon a program whereby some 100,000 or more immigrants will be asked to come to Canada in 1964. The minister did say specifically that advertising and immigration programs would be undertaken in countries such as the United Kingdom, France and the United States. He also said that the requirements for admission to Canada would be the same as those drafted by that very able minister of citizenship and immigration, Mrs. Ellen Fairclough, who unfortunately is no longer in this house.

I am wondering, of course, whether the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration intentionally overlooked the question of immigration from other countries. I say this because during the last election and shortly after numerous press reports in the country indicated that the minister was going to change the Immigration Act to favour the admission to Canada of Chinese in particular. In view of these promises I think we should have heard something today about these proposed changes. I hope that during the course of the afternoon he will be able to enlighten us in this regard.

I feel I would be remiss in my duty, Mr. Chairman, if I did not say that I sincerely believe the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is endeavouring to do a good job in his department. I have handled a number of immigration cases from my constituency and others, by reason of my ethnic background, so I have had considerable dealings with the minister and I thank him for his co-operation. At the same time I want to deal with some aspects of the act that I think are unnecessary or at least, to be less unkind, very dangerous.

I wish to deal specifically with two cases. One is the Weldon Chan case. Newspaper articles of as late as June 3 last indicate that the minister is going to determine what is to be done with this particular family. The following is reported in the Calgary Herald of June 3 last:

> Before reaching a final decision, the immigration department will have to re-examine the Chan case thoroughly.

Every one of us in this house knows there is sufficient evidence on file and sufficient evidence available to enable the minister to determine what is to happen to this particular family in the matter of a day or two. What concerns me is that I remember well what happened in this department when the present Secretary of State, who is not in the chamber at the present time, was in charge. I tell the minister that we will be watching these developments very closely. If there is any suggestion that some of the moves the minister has made—although I agree with him at the moment—have been made for political purposes, as has been the case in the past, I will be the first to question them in this House of Commons.

The second case, which is very similar indeed to the Chan case, is that of Irene Rebrin of Vancouver. I understand this young lady was also promised that something would be done with regard to her status in Canada. She was promised that her case would be reviewed very soon. This promise was made by the minister early in May. This is now December 14, and Irene Rebrin of Vancouver still does not know what is her status in Canada. I bring this matter to the attention of the minister only because we were bitterly criticized for our alleged lack of concern in these cases, and it appeared to a great many people in Canada that if the Liberals were in fact elected they would look after these matters immediately. As I pointed out earlier, some of these promises were made in May of this year; it is now December and we have heard no more about them. I hope the minister in his remarks this afternoon will enlighten us with respect to these two matters.

The other matter that I touched on very briefly a moment ago was the promise of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to change the Immigration Act to favour Chinese immigrants. An article which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of September 24 last has this to say:

> Sweeping changes to regulations governing the admission to Canada of Chinese immigrants were forecast Monday night by immigration minister Favreau.
> He also told a meeting of the Canadian Chinese community that he plans to visit Hong Kong later in the year to investigate problems associated with the movement of Chinese immigrants from that city to Canada.
> Mr. Favreau said he intends to "seek a fair and just solution to the vexing problem of Chinese immigration to Canada".

This statement was made in September of 1963. Has the minister now visited Hong Kong; and if he has, unknown to me, what were the results of that visit?

I now wish to deal with the act. It appears that some of the more difficult applications for admission which over the last three or four years were refused by the Conservative government have been approved in recent weeks. They have been approved under section 8(1) of the Immigration Act which, just to enlighten the house, reads as follows:

> The minister may issue a written permit authorizing any person to enter Canada or, being in Canada, to remain therein.

Since amendments are contemplated to the Immigration Act, I wonder whether it would not be advisable for the minister to consider a complete review of this particular section and to refer it, indeed to refer the entire act, to a committee so that some degree of unanimity would be reached as to a change which would be acceptable to the house. I think a change is required in this act which would favour the admission into Canada of people from any country in the world.

The other section I want specifically to deal with is section 31(d) of the regulations. I spoke about this in 1959, and it is the section dealing with the admission of people from behind iron curtain countries. This section cites a long list of countries to which it is applicable, and I am dealing in particular with Ukrainians and Poles, people from that particular part of Europe. Unfortunately under this section there is an age limitation of 21 years. I realize that we must take into account our security, our health, and I suppose many other factors; but I suggest to the minister that since he is using his discretionary powers under section 8, and in view of the many requests for admission to Canada of people over the age of 21 by childless relatives in this country, could the minister not use his powers of discretion in this regard? I say again that I do not like this power of discretion section and would like to see it eliminated; therefore I would also like to see section 31(d) amended.

I want to deal specifically with the problem under subsection (d) of section 31 of the regulations. I have in my city at least four cases of Polish, Ukrainian and Russian people who are childless and who have estates ranging from $25,000 to $150,000. Because these people are childless they made application to adopt a nephew or niece living in Poland or somewhere behind the iron curtain. We will not admit these people to Canada at the present time because they cannot qualify by reason of age. In one particular instance which occurred about three or four weeks ago a hotel owner who had made application for admission to Canada of one of his nieces died shortly after having made the application, which was refused on the ground that there was no provision under the existing regulations for the admisison of such a person. What will happen in this particular case? The hotel and estate are probably worth $150,000 at least. In this instance there are no other living relatives of this deceased man in Canada, so I suppose the money which accrues from the estate will go to Poland, will it not? In the light of what I have said I think certain changes are necessary and should be considered by the minister.

There are many other sections of the act with which I wish to deal, but we are very anxious to get on with the estimates. I understand there is a lengthy list of speakers on Indian affairs, and I do not want to detain the committee any longer than absolutely necessary. However, I do want to bring to the attention of the minister one more matter which comes under the Canadian Citizenship Act. It concerns section 18, which states in effect that a Canadian citizen who is not Canadian born may lose his Canadian citizenship if he has resided out of Canada for more than a period of ten years.

The position into which that section puts an immigrant Canadian is this. Let us suppose that a young chap emigrated to Canada and obtained a job with an international corporation. Although this man would be a Canadian citizen in due course of time he could not take a permanent posting in a foreign country and still remain a Canadian citizen were he to remain in that country longer than ten years. I suggest most sincerely that section 18 of the citizenship act should be repealed.

May I conclude by saying that I hope the minister will be in a position to answer some of the questions I have posed to him this morning. I know there will be other questions coming from the floor, and he will be in a position to deal with them more fully as time goes on.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, the subject of immigration is one of very great human interest as well as economic interest. It affects the rights of a great many Canadians who have come to this country, and many more who will come from all parts of the world; people who come here to aid in the development of the Canadian economy and to enrich the culture of Canada.

In opening my remarks I should like to compliment the minister and to congratulate him on his appointment and on the way he is carrying on his duties. I have had a good deal to do over the years with the department of immigration, sometimes in what might be called an adverse, if not a hostile, fashion; but I should like to pay tribute to the sympathy and to the liberal—with a small "l"—attitude with which the minister and his staff and officials have dealt with many cases of hardship which are from time to time called to his attention.

I want to congratulate the minister on some of the excellent speeches he has made on the subject of immigration. I have particularly in mind a speech he made on September 13 of this year to the annual meeting of the real estates agents of the province of Quebec. In that speech the minister dealt most effectively with the widespread myth that immigrants put Canadians out of jobs. I think we should nail that fallacy, because it just is not so. In fact, as the minister pointed out at that time, the more than two million immigrants who have come to Canada since the end of the first world war have brought to this country an immense addition of capital and skill.

The minister gave an example in the course of his speech. He pointed out that between 1952 and 1962 more than 9,000 of them established businesses of their own and paid $116 million for those businesses, creating employment for 45,000 people. He also pointed out in his speech that more than $1,117 million had been infused into the Canadian economy between 1946 and 1962 by immigrants in addition to nearly half a million dollars worth of effects and property brought into this country. Immigrants have contributed, and will contribute, to the welfare of Canada as a whole.

I have complimented the minister, but in case he should think I intend to continue in this vein indefinitely let me tell him right now that there are grave deficiencies in our Immigration Act and in the regulations governing the admission of immigrants to this country, as well as in administration. I was glad to hear the minister say that this question was under active review—I think that was the phrase he used—and that changes would be made. I know the hon. gentleman has been in office for only eight months. I know he has been handicapped by the fact that during part of that period he had no deputy minister. I might, in passing, congratulate him on the acquisition of Mr. Isbister as deputy minister. But there are these difficulties.

Let me try to summarize them. In my view racial discrimination remains both in the act and in the regulations. I intend to deal with this matter later on. We have, and I say this advisedly, farcical immigration proceedings. There is a lack of elementary justice about these hearings. We refuse entry on grounds which are not disclosed to the applicant, so that people often do not know why they cannot bring their wives or children into this country. An explanation is refused them. They are told simply that the applicants do not meet the requirements. I know there is an explanation of this, and perhaps the minister will give it to us later, but I still think the position is unsatisfactory. The requirements are so vague that it is often impossible for an immigrant or his sponsor to determine what conditions he has to meet in order to enter this country.

I have summarized some of these deficiencies. Now I want to discuss them in a little more detail. In another of the excellent speeches he made, on this occasion to the Chinese community in Vancouver on September 23 of this year, the minister made a statement with which I am heartily in accord. I am sure it does in fact represent his views on this particular matter. He said:

> I have been distressed by the accusations of discrimination which have reached me. If prejudice exists in immigration matters it must be eliminated. True Canadianism permits no discrimination. All citizens are equal in rights and responsibilities regardless of ethnic origin or creed. It is with this view in mind that I am most sincere in my efforts to wipe out discrimination and prejudice.

I accept this as being a sincere expression of the minister's attitude on this matter. However, I wish to point out that so far, in practice, the form of the regulations and the form of Canadian law do not bear out that excellent statement of principle. The Prime Minister of this country, commenting on legislation in the United States in answer to a question I asked him on October 18 concerning a Mr. Wayson Choy, a Canadian born citizen who was refused admission to the United States because it was said that half his ancestry was Chinese, made this statement as reported on page 3738 of Hansard, and I commend him on it; it is an admirable statement:

> At the outset I should like to make it very clear that as for Canadian law and policy the present government, like its predecessor, is firmly opposed in principle and in practice to racial discrimination.

The Prime Minister went on to say, as reported on the following page:

> While it may not be appropriate for the Canadian government to make official and formal representations to the United States government against the racial origins features of United States domestic immigration law, this does not mean that the Canadian government favours the inclusion of racial origin provisions in the immigration laws of the United States or any other country.

Again that is an admirable statement, but I think it is time we ourselves eliminated certain discriminatory features which are written into our laws. Before we try to cast out the mote in the eyes of our neighbours we should, if I am quoting the scripture correctly, cast out the beam which is in our own eyes. I wish to read one section of the act to see whether it does not fall directly within the condemnation of the Prime Minister with respect to United States legislation. Under section 61 the governor in council is given certain powers. I am not suggesting for one minute that the governor in council would use those powers in an arbitrary way, but the section does give him power to make regulations, among other things—

> (g) prohibiting or limiting of admission of persons by reason of
> (i) nationality, citizenship, ethnic group, occupation class or geographical area of origin,
> (ii) peculiar customs, habits, modes of life or methods of holding property...probable inability to become readily assimilated —and so on.

It is we in this parliament who have given power to the governor in council to restrict admission to this country by any order in council or regulation on account of the applicant's ethnic group, the geographical area from which he comes, and so on.

The minister may very well say, "We do not exercise that power; there is no discrimination left in the regulations themselves". I wish that were the case, but it is not the case. One of the former ministers of citizenship and immigration to whom reference has already been made in this debate, Hon. Mrs. Fairclough, used to say, when certain changes were made in the regulations, that discrimination had been eliminated from the regulations. Unfortunately that is not so.

I think I should explain briefly that there are two main streams of immigration into this country. First there are those admitted under regulation 31 by reason of their education, training and skill. I acknowledge that under this section no sort of discrimination is written into the regulations. But there is another stream of immigration into this country; that is, immigration on what might be called family grounds, the right to bring people in so as to reunite families.

What do we find there? With regard to the right to bring one's relatives into this country we find a clearcut discrimination against people of Asian or African origin. The regulation provides that people who came from any country of Europe, including Turkey, or from any country of North, Central or South America or the islands adjacent thereto, or from Egypt, Israel or Lebanon can bring in a son, daughter, brother or sister, as well as the husband or wife, and the unmarried son or daughter under 21 years of age of such son, daughter, brother or sister. But this list of countries eliminates a not inconsiderable portion of the globe. It eliminates the whole of Asia with the exception of Turkey, Israel and Lebanon. It omits, as I read it, the whole of Africa with the exception of Egypt.

What is the standard with regard to these people? If they wish to bring in their relatives they are far more limited in their power to do so. That discrimination, whatever the reason, remains in the regulations as they exist and are administered at the present time. I suggest that if the excellent words that have been used by the minister himself and the Prime Minister as to the elimination of discrimination are to be carried out in practice as well as in theory, those who come from Japan, China or other parts of Asia or from Africa, from whatever country it may be, should be put in precisely the same position, with regard to their right to bring in members of their family and connections, as those who come from South America, Europe or any other part of the world. I say that until that is done there will remain in the regulations, which are part of the law of this country and for which the government is responsible, the very discrimination which the government says, and I believe sincerely, that it desires to eliminate.

In the limited time I have I am not going to attempt to go into a whole series of cases. My colleague the hon. member for Danforth called my attention to a case that he dealt with where a Chinese gentleman of some substance in the city of Toronto, Mr. Sing

Chong, sought to bring in an orphan granddaughter, 17 years of age, who had got out of China and was in Hong Kong. Her father was dead and her mother had disappeared. He sought to bring the child into the country and he was refused. Why? Because the regulations say that people from that part of the world, no matter what their need is, no matter how appropriate it may be, cannot bring in their grandchildren; but if they came from some other part of the world they would be able to be admitted. My first suggestion then, Mr. Chairman, is that in the amendment of the regulations we should remove the last traces of discrimination that exist therein.

I also spoke of another matter which those who deal with the subject of immigration seldom appreciate. I refer to the question of whether a would-be immigrant or a sponsored immigrant is or is not entitled to have a proper hearing as to the reasons for the refusal of admission into this country. We have spoken a lot about the bill of rights, the right of a person to know what is the case made against him, the right to a fair hearing. We have talked of these things, but we do not practise them in this particular field. Let me say that any unfairness applied to people who seek to come into Canada creates a bitterness that does damage to Canada and to Canada's reputation throughout the world, and in the world of today we cannot afford not to live up to the principles which we expound so eloquently from time to time.

What is the situation in regard to this matter? I have to give a hurried summary, but the basis of the Immigration Act is that under section 5 there is a whole series of prohibitions of people who for one reason or another should not be admitted to this country. No one will complain about the fact that parliament has included these prohibitions, but it is not these prohibitions that are used as the instrument of selection with regard to who shall come into this country. It is that particular prohibition which says that those who fail to comply with regulations passed under the act shall not be admitted, and the control of entry into this country is based upon the existence of certain regulations made by order in council. Only incidentally and occasionally does the department call into effect the prohibitions that are made under the act.

In passing the Immigration Act parliament indicated that a person who sought admission to Canada was entitled to a hearing before an administrative officer with regard to whether he fell or failed to fall within these prohibited classes. But what is the actual practice in respect of this matter? I say that by administrative machinery many of these hearings have been turned into a complete farce because of the regulation that is applied. Even though the government and the department may have some reason for which they wish to exclude a particular immigrant, they do not advance that reason. They do not say anything about it. They say "You do not comply with the regulations because you have not got a visa", or "You have not got a medical certificate" or "You have not got a letter of pre-examination". Where do they get these things? They get them from the department and the department, without giving any reason, refuses to give them these documents they are supposed to have. So these people sit down in a hearing before a special inquiry officer, a hearing directed by parliament under the act, to decide whether or not they have a piece of paper which the department has given them no opportunity to get, which does not mean anything at all, which they know they have refused and intend to continue to refuse. The result is that people about whose health there is no question at all can be and are refused admission in the daily administration of the act on the ground that they do not have a medical certificate. When they ask where they can get a medical certificate they are told "You can get it from a medical officer we appoint, but we will not give you an appointment to find out if there is anything wrong".

I had a case come to my attention just the other day of a Scotswoman who was divorced from her first husband and remarried. Her first husband came to Canada and has lived here a good many years. In the event her second husband also left her but her first husband returned to Scotland on a visit. They resumed what had previously been lawful matrimony but now presumably was a common law union or living in sin. The former wife returned to Canada and has been living with her first husband, but she is now in the process of being deported. Why? Not for any crime she is supposed to have committed, not for any immorality that is alleged against her. I never have thought it particularly immoral for a woman to go back to live with her first husband if her second husband has deserted her. No such reason has been advanced, but rather that she has not got a letter of pre-examination. Nobody ever told her she was supposed to have such a letter. She came to this country as a visitor originally and stayed with her husband. She has a job working in a retail store and her husband has a job. They are perfectly able to look after themselves.

What has happened in this case? First of all she was told she could not come into this country because she did not have a medical certificate. However, as the hearing went on she produced her passport with a medical certificate stamped on it. So that reason did not stand up. The hearing was then put off for a few days, at which time she was then told she did not have a letter of pre-examination. She was asked "Have you got a letter of pre-examination?" She said, "No, I do not know what it is; I do not know anything about it". Then they said to her "You are to be deported because you have not got this letter that you do not know anything about and that only we can give you and which we have no intention of giving you".

This is not some person from some strange country. This is a Scotswoman who has a job and who is living, as I say, in sin perhaps with her former husband. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me to be one o'clock, so perhaps I can stop here and resume later.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, before lunch I was endeavouring to point out what I believed to be some of the weaknesses in the Immigration Act, regulations and practices. I did point out that the regulations were being used in a manner that deprives an applicant of the type of fair hearing that I think parliament contemplated when it passed the Immigration Act, and provision for which was made in a number of sections. The applicant is not given the real reason for the refusal. I do not think it was contemplated that the hearing would be farcical, but rather that it would provide the real reason why the applicant would not be allowed to come into Canada or join with his relatives in Canada.

I should like to add a further point on the right of appeal from the decision of the special inquiry officers. I would suggest that this right of appeal is too restrictive at the present time. I suggest that the appeal tribunal should include at least one person of judicial, as distinct from administrative, position, and further, that it should be given power to make recommendations on compassionate grounds, rather than merely dealing with the legal correctness or otherwise of the inquiry officers' findings. I further suggest that reasons for the decision of the appeal tribunal should be published, so that those concerned with these matters would know the basis upon which the act is being administered.

Another criticism made of the regulations, Mr. Chairman, is their vagueness as to the standards of admission. For example, regulation 31, which as I said is a key regulation, uses phrases like these: "By reason of education, training, skills or other qualifications, is likely to be able to establish himself in Canada"; "has sufficient means of support to maintain himself in Canada until he has so established himself". The sponsorship requirements contain equally vague language. I was very glad to hear the minister say that in the next few days the established criteria would be published. In my opinion, this is urgently needed because without these criteria the sponsors, the families of those who are brought in, do not know what sort of standard they are supposed to establish. They have hopes, but they have no means of determining how they fail to come up to those required standards, or what they must do to bring themselves within the standards that would enable them to bring their relatives into the country.

I should like to say something about the general economic implications of immigration. We have to recognize that, however desirable increased immigration into Canada might be on general principles, the continuance of large scale unemployment is bound to act as a brake upon immigration. When over 300,000 Canadians or 4.5 per cent of our working force are unemployed, the resistance to increased immigration is both natural, inevitable and to some extent justified. We have to plan for an expanding economy so that we can, in our own interests and in the interests of the world community, welcome a steady and increasing flow of immigrants into this country.

Some time ago, Mr. Chairman, I came across what I thought was an admirable statement of the principles upon which the responsibilities of governments in the field of immigration were based. This statement is taken from the report of a conference sponsored by the world council of churches in June of 1961, held at Leysin, Switzerland. There were represented 75 churches representing 30 countries. With regard to immigration they laid down the following principles:

(a) The need to avoid any exclusion of migrants on the basis of race, nationality or religion;

(b) The responsibility to help ease population pressures in situations where feasible migration can make a contribution;

I suggest the British West Indies is an example where that might be applicable so far as Canada is concerned.

(c) The humanitarian claims of migrants in situations of special hardship;

(d) The particular claim of the political refugee upon the help of the world community.

I stop there to say that I welcomed what the minister told us about the admission of refugees. However, I suggest it may be helpful to put in the regulations themselves some discretion on the part of the minister, or perhaps some indication as to the basis upon which refugees might be sponsored and admitted into the country so that the public could know what could be done to deal with this problem. Then, to continue the quotation:

(e) The vital importance of preserving the family as a unit, making every effort to avoid separating the wage earners from the rest of their families over an extended period and facilitating reunion when members have migrated;

(f) The responsibility for friendly reception and assistance in the adjustment of the migrant;

(g) The need to support the efforts of international organizations in the field of migration to increase their scope and effectiveness.

I understand that some years ago Canada withdrew from the United Nations organization that dealt with the problems of migration throughout the world. I suggest the government should take another look at this matter:

(h) The need for the speedy development of unused economic resources so that each country can make a maximum contribution to the welfare not only of its own citizens, but of those of other lands.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to acknowledge that the minister has told us of an intensive study of immigration procedures, and I would express the sincere hope that we see the results of this study brought into effect before too long. I have read in the newspapers that the minister may possibly be called upon to shoulder other responsibilities. I assure him we wish him well, if that is so; but nevertheless I hope he will stay long enough in his present job to introduce amendments to the Immigration Act and make new regulations which will embody the result of the intensive study which he says is being undertaken.

In conclusion may I summarize the recommendations we would make to the minister:

1. That the act and the regulations be amended to remove the traces of discrimination that remain, and perhaps I am being polite when I use the word "traces", because I think it is more than that.

2. That the regulations and practices be changed so as to give would-be immigrants and sponsors the reasons for the refusal of admission.

3. The abandonment of the practice of using procedural requirements of visas, medical certificates, letters of pre-examination as a means of denying the real hearings contemplated by the act.

4. The improvement of appeal procedures.

5. The clarification of the basic standards of admissibility.

No. 6, and this is one I have not mentioned before, is the inculcation in all immigration officials of the expansive and welcoming philosophy which has been so well expressed by the minister himself from time to time, but which sometimes does not seem to permeate to the lower levels of his department.

If these changes are made Canadians will be able to maintain a policy of immigration which remains selective but that is fair in its application, and which will encourage the continued flow of immigrants that will be required if Canada is to attain the prosperity and greatness of which she is capable.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I realize the committee is now working against time, and I do not propose to deal at length with all the important phases of governmental and administrative activity that fall under the jurisdiction of the minister. However I do want to make some observations with respect to two of them, and I shall be as brief as possible. No doubt some of my colleagues will also have observations to make and questions to ask pertaining to the various items as they are called.

I believe the minister has endeavoured to inject more of a humane element into the operations of the department. While we recognize the necessity for rules and regulations, in this department there should be a readiness to consider people as people, and not as cases. In private conversation some of my colleagues have said that the minister has shown an extreme willingness to co-operate in endeavouring to get certain applications cleared and uncertainties removed. That is to his credit and I hope with regard to a couple of the matters I have brought to his attention he will expedite them a little better than has been the case to the present.

Rather than starting with citizenship and immigration I want to refer first to the first inhabitants of this great nation of ours. Indian affairs require the vigorous attention of the minister—

Mr. Rheaume: On a point of order; the Eskimos were the first citizens of Canada.

Mr. Patterson: We will let that go on the record unchallenged. However, we do look upon the Indian people as the original settlers in the major part of the country. There are quite a number of Indians in Fraser Valley, and I enjoy good relations with them when endeavouring to assist them in working out their problems. The aspirations of the Indian people are becoming better known to the public in general.

I expect all hon. members received copies of the December 1963 issue of the magazine

"Human Relations." On page 4 there is an article written by a young lady, Kahn-Tineta Horn, from the Caughnawaga Indian reserve, Quebec, entitled "Indians seek to regain their rightful status." I should like to read the first and final paragraphs in it:

> Most readers know about Indians, but a very small percentage really know any of us personally. We were here for thousands of years before the white men came. We number about the same as some other minorities. Despite this, we are regarded as second class citizens by many, and we are blocked socially, economically and educationally.

The final paragraph reads:

> But we do intend to rise to our proper level in the scheme of life, socially, educationally, economically.

I believe that points out the aspirations of the Indian people, in spite of the views heard by certain people that the Indians do not look forward to filling their rightful place in society. The Indians feel they have been not so much discriminated against as neglected, and we have been indifferent to their plight. In spite of this they are endeavouring to rise above those obstacles and obtain their true position in our economy. It is our responsibility to do everything we possibly can to help them achieve it.

There have been various submissions made to this and previous governments, and I would like to refer to the resolutions presented at the 1963 convention of the North American Indian brotherhood, the first of which has to do with the court of Indian claims. We do not have to urge this any longer because, as has been pointed out by the minister, notice of legislation for it appears on the order paper today. I am sure the Indian people will be very happy and re-assured that the government has at least got to the point of placing it on the order paper.

I understand we are going to have the opportunity of studying the bill over the Christmas recess, or between sessions of parliament, and it will be discussed with the Indian people themselves with a view to ascertaining their views and recommendations in connection with it. Some time ago I received a communication in this respect which asked if it would be possible for the delegations to meet with the minister and discuss these serious problems. I am sure the minister will see to it that this opportunity is given to those who have worth-while contributions to make as far as proposals and recommendations are concerned.

Another resolution that appears here has to do with credit facilities. I should like to read section 2:

> Be it therefore resolved that Indian financing be reviewed and amendments made thereto to the aforesaid statutes and regulations so that responsible Indians will be able to improve their financial position in respect to business activity and other endeavour.

We are sometimes inclined to consider that the Indian people may not be too dependable as far as credit arrangements are concerned, but I suppose that is true of some white people as well. I feel sure that those who are in a position to make application for credit would be very careful that the credit rating obtained would be maintained and their obligations fulfilled. Other recommendations in this particular brief have to do with training in agriculture and other matters. Some of them have to do with provincial jurisdiction, and others with federal jurisdiction. I am sure the minister has a copy of this brief. We are expecting that in the working out of the program for the future, in an endeavour to re-establish, rehabilitate and provide development opportunities for the Indian people he will take all these things into consideration.

We have received a copy of the speech made by the minister in his role of superintendent general of Indian affairs to the Indian-Eskimo association conference held in Regina on October 25, 1963. We found it very interesting and believe that if this program is carried through we will see a real improvement in the lot of the Indian people across the nation. The minister states on page 3 of this document:

> Perhaps the most significant development of the post-war years has been the emergence of Indian leadership. The full significance of this new leadership is just beginning to become apparent.

Then on page 6 he continues on the same theme:

> As Indian leadership develops, we can expect to see more and more Indians voice their own views not only concerning Indian affairs but about other Canadian topics as well.

Then he goes on to mention that some of their criticisms may be severe, and so on. He expresses the view that all Canadians should have a right to make known their views in regard to the problems facing us. I do think the minister is cognizant of all these various problems and issues. I am not going to take the time of the committee to stress them at any length today, but I want to just say this. Now we have progressed thus far in regard to the review of Indian problems and matters connected with the native people, the native people themselves will be expecting the minister to proceed expeditiously in the implementing of these various proposals and the carrying through of the promises he has made and the plans he has drawn up in this connection. That is all I wish to say at this time, Mr. Chairman, in regard to Indian affairs.

I want to make just a brief reference to the other branches of the department. We notice on page 13 of the annual report of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration a reference to Canadian citizenship registration. It points out that applications for citizenship received by the branch ranked third highest in its history, exceeded only by the years 1957 and 1958. I think this is encouraging if it indicates that a greater number of people who come to Canada make up their minds to take up Canadian citizenship. I think it is rather paradoxical that we have in Canada, I would say, a considerable number of people who come here, take up residence, enter into various activities, earn their living, make their money, but yet never put themselves in the position where they can fulfil their responsibilities of citizenship. They want the privileges but they hesitate to accept the responsibilities. I am not suggesting that it should be mandatory that after a certain period of time they should take out citizenship papers; but I just want to point out that it seems to me highly unfair and perhaps illogical that these people who make Canada their home, who earn their livelihood, some of them raising their families here and seeing them established, have never themselves accepted the responsibilities of Canadian citizenship. I think everything should be done to give this matter some attention and some publicity so these people will realize we have recognized the problem and feel they would be making a far greater contribution, not just to themselves but to Canada, if they would accept the responsibilities of and perform the duties that rest upon Canadian citizens.

Attention has been called to the matter of immigration and the increase that took place—the comparatively small increase—in the previous year. We welcome the statement of the minister that he is looking forward to at least 100,000 immigrants coming annually to Canada. I think this is rather—I was going to say conservative, but I somehow do not like to use that term too much; but I will have to use it anyway and say conservative with a small "c", because I believe that a nation such as ours is well able to absorb a great many more than 100,000 people per year if our society were organized properly and if our policies made it possible for them to fit into our economy. We think of the great area that comprises Canada. I should like to refer to "Guide to Canadian Citizenship" which has been put out by the citizenship branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. I think it is a very fine little booklet, and if it receives wide distribution many more people would at least understand some of the basic facts related to Canada to at least a greater degree than is the case at the present time. On page 36 it is pointed out that Canada is the second largest country in the world; only the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics has a greater area. Canada covers close to four million square miles, which means that it is about the same size as Europe including European Russia. At least geographically we can lay claim to being a tremendous country, a tremendous nation; but the unfortunate part about it is that it is inhabited by only 19 million people. When we consider this in relationship to the population per square mile in other countries, it looks as though we are occupying an area that is far greater than our numbers warrant.

I recognize the fact, of course, that people cannot live in all parts of Canada. I was interested to note the other day that someone was suggesting we bring some of the Tibetan people over and put them up in the Rocky mountains. There is lots of room there. I do not know how they will get along, but it would not hurt if some people were living up there, if they could survive. A great part of Canada is uninhabitable, but we can absorb and have room for a far bigger population than we have at the present time. We talk, Mr. Chairman, of the future of our nation and we picture the place we occupy in the scheme of things. We talk of Canada's influence in international affairs. We build a glowing picture of the future that is ours. But I submit that if we are to reach that objective and achieve that destiny we will have to see to it that there are a great many more people in Canada to help us build a nation of that description.

We accept the statements of the minister with regard to his plans for immigration in the future, and we wish him well. I have here an article which originally appeared in the Abbotsford, Sumas and Matsqui News, in my home town, which is reprinted in the Hope Standard of October 30. Hope is another town in my constituency. The article is headed "More Immigrants Needed". I will not take time to read it all, but I would like to read one or two paragraphs of this interesting article.

> This ridiculous thought, voiced by some people, of keeping Canada for Canadians does not make sense...
> We have the resources—tremendous resources—but we do not have the manpower to make use of them.
>
> It is a fallacy to state that more immigrants will create more unemployment. They would do just the opposite, provided they arrived with some skills and some knowledge of the language.
> Of all the unemployed in Canada, few are recent immigrants. In fact the immigrants who have reached these shores in the last ten years have probably created more employment for others than the total of jobless now.

I think some of the figures, given by the minister in a speech to which reference has been made by the hon. member for Greenwood, emphasize this fact. I do not propose to take the time of the committee to put those figures on the record again, but they show the numbers of immigrants who have come to Canada, the skills and resources they have brought with them, the number of industries which have been established; and lest we think they all move into the industrial areas, the figures indicate that a great number purchase and rent farms. These people are making a real contribution to the Canadian economy. I agree that the bringing of more immigrants into Canada does not necessarily mean that there will be fewer jobs for the Canadian people; I believe there will be more.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest that if we are going to achieve the objective of increasing immigration to Canada, and if we are to build up this nation for the future, then we will have to see to it that our monetary and financial policies are adequate to meet the challenge. If we do not make these reforms then we are going to be faced with insurmountable problems in bringing more people into the country. We have to make these adjustments, and I suggest that if we are bold and venturesome enough to move out into this area into which so many are afraid to move, and that if we move forward with resolution and make these necessary monetary and financial changes, then we are going to be able to open our doors and accept an ever increasing number of immigrants from the nations of the world, thereby making a contribution not just to Canada but to the whole world and to humanity in general. It is unreasonable to assume that it is either desirable or proper for us to try and restrain population growth. We should move as quickly as possible in the opposite direction, consistent with the ability of our economy to absorb those who wish to come to this great country. With these observations I yield the floor, because I realize there are many others who want to speak about this seemingly interesting subject about which so much can be said.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, a department which employs 5,147 civil servants, its estimates amounting to $67,528,820, is certainly an important department and I congratulate the minister, Mr. Favreau, for having been chosen as its incumbent. In the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, the minister and his senior officials must act at all times with great diplomacy and be vigilant regarding the admission into our country of citizens from varied countries of the world.

Mr. Chairman, into the area which I represent, Villeneuve riding, have come a great number of immigrants from Germany, Poland, Ukraine and Sweden. There are also some Danes, Italians, French, Belgians, in short a cross-section of all the nationalities in the world.

The minister and his high officials must study each of the numerous requests they receive from people who want to settle in Canada, in order to prevent, as far as possible, the coming to Canada of subversive and undesirable elements, which happened in some occasions in the past. Therefore, immigration must be selective so that our country will have good people, respectable people, people who will not destroy our customs and our good name, but will increase our country's reputation by taking part in our various economic and social activities.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to draw the minister's attention to the fact that intensive publicity is made in some European countries to encourage immigrants to settle in Canada. Canada is represented to them as a garden of Eden where they can live without assuming any responsibility but having all advantages that can be possibly imagined.

And as mentioned earlier by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson), the migrants planning to settle in Canada must be made aware of the responsibilities that they will have to assume after coming to this country. They must also learn to carry out these responsibilities. They must not think that when they are in Canada, they will have nothing else to do but live in pleasant idleness in a garden of Eden where everything will come free.

Mr. Chairman, when immigrants arrive from overseas, they usually are guaranteed a job for a year or two. As a matter of fact, they start working almost as soon as they arrive, while there are thousands of unemployed in this country. All over Canada, we hear our jobless complain about this state of affairs, not because they are against immigrants, but rather against the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, which does not take into consideration the economic conditions prevailing in this country, when the government intends to receive 100,000 immigrants per year.

Mr. Chairman, may I refer to my own area as an example. Immigrants arrive with employment contracts in their pockets, which enable them to get a job immediately in one of the mines: Noranda, Bourlamaque, Sigma or Malartic. Try to imagine the reaction of Canadians who have lived in this area for 10, 15 or 20 years and have had to queue up at the unemployment insurance office for a year or two, because a few mines have closed down. As I said, those Canadian unemployed have nothing against the immigrants, but they have resentment against the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, which nevertheless authorizes 100,000 immigrants per year to enter this country when they cannot find jobs in the same industries.

Mr. Chairman, while 100,000 immigrants are coming in annually from different countries of the world, we have this paradoxical situation that, in the meantime, thousands of Canadians cross the border to the south to settle down in the United States. Surely there are reasons which prompt our Canadian fellow citizens to do so, especially at a time when the department is encouraging the immigration of 100,000 persons a year.

Why do Canadians emigrate to the United States? Surely there are basic economical reasons. Our people probably get better salaries in the United States, better employment opportunities, and so they leave Canada, their parish, their province and their friends to settle down in a foreign country. Mr. Chairman, I think the Department of Citizenship and Immigration should take those facts into consideration.

I completely agree with the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) when he says that it would be possible to bring in more immigrants than we are doing, but not at a time when we cannot even guarantee employment and security for our own citizens. If we had an economic system providing for the economic development of Canada, then, I think it would be easy to increase materially the number of immigrants coming to Canada, because I submit everything has yet to be done in our country, we have hardly begun developing its physical possibilities.

If our financial and monetary situation allowed us to begin those developments, security and freedom would be guaranteed to all our citizens within two years, and that, even if we were bringing in more immigrants than we are doing at the present time because then it would be sensible for them to come and live in a new country where everything remains to be done, where natural resources are practically undeveloped.

Mr. Chairman, as far as immigration is concerned, I call the minister's attention on this point: there are Canadians who are not satisfied and unfortunately, some of them blame the immigrants because they think they are taking their jobs. I do not think so. But it is obvious that we will have to try and solve that problem, about which our Canadian citizens are concerned, before going ahead with the immigration program. Our Canadian citizens should be our first concern, they are the ones who should get our first consideration. As for the immigrants, let us stop our immoderate and exaggerated publicity in Europe which leads people to believe that in Canada, they could make a livelihood without facing any responsibility. A few years ago, some Hungarians who had landed in Montreal lost no time in returning to their country because they had been misled over there before deciding to come to Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to dwell on the subject of immigration. I might say, in conclusion, that in our area immigrants behave like gentlemen. I had the opportunity on many occasions to meet in their clubs some Italian, Ukrainian, Polish and German people, and all of them, without exception, felt very much at home in our area. They are good workers who do credit to our district. We need immigrants like those, but I must stress one point: before bringing more immigrants to Canada, let us try at least to look after our own people.

I would like to add a few words about Indians. The Indian affairs branch in Ottawa and the department of natural resources of the province of Quebec seem to disagree on the question whether the Indians living in northern Quebec come under the jurisdiction of Quebec or Ottawa.

My good friend, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) has recently drawn the attention of the house on the small islands situated to the north of the province of Quebec and asked that these islands be granted to the province; the inhabitants of those small islands, whether Indians or Eskimos, would naturally become citizens of the province of Quebec. In northern Ungava, in the James bay area, there are also some Indians. I sincerely think that the minister is looking after their case and is co-operating with them. They need assistance.

A moment ago, an hon. member said that the Indians had been the first owners of our land. He was right. The government's duty is to make it possible for the various Indian tribes to acquire as much knowledge and know-how as possible, while retaining their own traditions and customs; their civilization may not resemble ours, but they have their own culture and education. It is up to us to help them become good citizens, people with confidence in the white man instead of fear. Indians have been taught certain aspects of history, transmitted to them from generation to generation over the years, and they have learned that three or four centuries ago, the white man has not always been very kind to them. Today, let us try to give them faith in us; they are human beings; let us help them to develop within the framework of a state which should be—and this is my closing remark—a shining example of respect for human rights held up for the whole world to see. That example, this parliament in Ottawa, and the Canadian nation, as a whole, are quite capable of giving.

[Text]

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, I will be my usual brief self. The minister has had a very easy time of it this morning and this afternoon, and well he should because I think he is one of the most able ministers of the government. I do not very often say things like that.

Mr. MacInnis: You do not have much chance.

Mr. Otto: I am particularly pleased that the minister is going to take a hard and careful look at changes in the immigration regulations. I think he should. The hon. member for Villeneuve has referred to the hesitancy that is prevalent to some extent in this country with regard to allowing immigrants to come to Canada when jobs are being sought by Canadians. However, those of us who have taken part in committees on this matter and who have studied some of the evidence given there, especially in connection with the population explosion in the world, realize the situation that is facing the world.

We should bear in mind that the Malthusian theory of population growth is almost correct for the last 7,000 years and that by 1980 we can expect the population of the United States and Canada to double. As Professor M. Bates has pointed out, every time one's pulse beats the population of the world is increased by one. We have to face the fact that there are a great number of people in the world and that we cannot remain an island unto ourselves. If we do not open the door it will be battered down. What we can do is to make sure that the people who do enter our country are the type we want or are people who can fit into our general scheme of things. No one is going to be able to hold back immigration, because it is just not going to be possible.

I should like to point out that there is some misunderstanding between new Canadians and those who have been here for decades or generations. In many cases I think it is a matter of communication. Communication between citizens is nothing strange to us and we know that if we cannot understand someone there is a feeling of mistrust. I have been in the construction field for several years and I am aware of the fact that the injustices meted out to new Canadians in the period between 1953 and 1956 were in many cases fairly severe. But the immigrant came to Canada without a command of the language and in some cases with very little education. He was a stranger with no money and faced complete insecurity. When he arrived in this country he was told just about everything and, having no sense of security, no knowledge of the language and not being able to communicate, there was a natural tendency for him to settle in an area where his people or his friends lived, such area being more or less of a ghetto.

We say that once such people are here they must study and learn to speak English but the man with a family has nothing to fall back on and when he is working 14, 15 or 16 hours a day for very little pay in order to make a go of things he has neither the time nor the energy to get a command of the language. And so it goes. Thirty years later he still has no command of the language.

I should like to make this suggestion to the minister. From the time the prospective immigrant, in the country in which he is then living, makes his application for entry to Canada, to the time when a visa is granted, a period of a year to two years generally elapses. Surely it would not cost Canada very much to arrange for instruction of such people in either French or English, depending on where the applicant wants to settle. This could be done right at our legation in the country of a prospective immigrant, or by some other method arranged through the legation. These people are at home. They know they are going to come to Canada after their applications have been processed, and this is the time when they would be most receptive to learning either English or French. I suggest that the cost would be very little. When they came here they would be able to read the newspapers. They would be able to read the regulations and learn that they did not have to work for 50 cents an hour. They would know what the rates were. They would know where they could live and how to get where they wanted to go. I suggest this would bring about closer communication with all other Canadians and I think that half of the problem would be solved. With great respect I submit this suggestion to the minister.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Chairman, I believe that members of the committee have listened with interest to the remarks of the minister in which he outlined the functions and achievements of his department. I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate him on being selected to direct the destinies of this particular department.

My remarks today will relate specifically to the Indian affairs branch and the future of the Indian people of Canada. However, with regard to the citizenship branch I should like to make one brief comment. I am sure we are all extremely gratified to see the ever increasing number of people who are applying for and receiving Canadian citizenship. In the northern part of our country the situation is no different. Each month we see more and more people from other lands, who have come to our newly developing areas to seek employment, make their homes and bring up their families, applying for Canadian citizenship and being granted this privilege.

The minister dwelt at some length on the achievements of the Indian affairs branch. I am sure that he, along with other members of the committee, would be among the first to admit that many of the achievements of the branch during the last few years have resulted directly from the policies of the former government. A number of firsts came into being in the last five years, not the least of which was the granting of the franchise to the Indian people of Canada. As Canadians generally know, this was done by the former government.

However, I want to bring out this point specifically because the minister, in speaking on citizenship in general in Canada, referred to the relation of citizenship to the Indian people and stated, as we all do from time to time, that he was looking forward to the day when they will become full-fledged citizens of our country. I am sure there is general agreement that the granting of the franchise to the Indians, giving them the right to vote in federal elections, was a big step toward their becoming the equals of everyone else in Canada.

A number of other things were done by the previous government, such as the setting up of the very important joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian affairs. The deliberations of this committee took some months and extended over the better part of three years. I am sure the many reports of that committee are going to be of considerable benefit to the officials of the Indian affairs branch and to people in general who are interested in bringing about a better way of life for our Indian people.

I think it will also be agreed that the subject of our Indians is one of the most important, if not the most important, internal matter that we have before us in Canada at the present time. Granted that such things as trade and other subjects are of high priority, the problem of establishing a better way of life for the Indian people is one which we must consider of primary importance. I say this particularly in view of the expanding Indian population. I do not have the figures for the total Indian population of Canada, but I would venture a guess that it must be somewhere in the neighbourhood of 170,000 or 200,000. This is just a figure I have pulled out of the air. I do know that the Indian population in the constituency which I have the honour to represent is increasing very rapidly. Figures were given to me in January, 1962 indicating that the Indian population of Churchill constituency was around 9,383. In October, 1963, the population had increased to 10,621. We have therefore, an increase of 1,238 in a little over 15 months.

There are 17 Indian reservations in the northern part of Manitoba and all 17 are in the Churchill constituency. I can assure you, therefore, that we in northern Manitoba realize the importance of this problem. We realize it is not one which is going to be easily resolved. I must admit that the educational facilities are available. The necessity for more and more educational facilities is also of primary importance. As we have all heard many times education, in itself, is not going to be the solution. However education, coupled with other measures, is a definite requirement. In that respect, it is gratifying to know that today practically all Indian children of school age in Canada have facilities of one kind or another available to them to enable them to receive an education. It is gratifying also to know that practically every Indian student who wishes to continue into the field of higher education also has facilities available to him.

As I say, the giant strides which have been taken to provide these greatly needed educational facilities are not, in themselves, going to be the solution. We hear a great deal of public criticism directed against the Indian people. We hear that they are shiftless, that they are lazy and will not try to help themselves. We hear that, when given an opportunity to work, they have a record of poor attendance on the job. This is one of the prime topics of conversation amongst white people when they get together in groups to try to see what can be done to better the situation of the Indian people. I am sure anyone who has had the opportunity of visiting these people, particularly the ones living on reservations in more isolated areas, will find all kinds of people there, just as you will find all kinds of people when you visit a white community. The vast majority of the Indian people, with whom I have come in contact in northern Manitoba, have every desire to better themselves. The main request which the chiefs and the councils make every time you meet with them is the need for employment.

As I said, we hear many people in Canada say that the Indian people are not interested in working. I can assure you that in the main, this is far from the truth. If it were possible, all we need to do is put ourselves in the position in which we have put the Indians, and then see just what sort of a transformation the white people would make if they were obliged to live under the same conditions as some of these Indian people live on these reservations. I am sure the people in the Indian affairs branch realize that many of these Indians have to go anywhere from a quarter of a mile to a greater distance than that to get water. It is true that many of the reservations, particularly in the north, are located on the shores of lakes and that most of the dwellings are close to those lakes. However, in many cases there are no dock facilities and the banks of the lakes are steep and rocky. When a woman or a small child is obliged to go for water, it is found that the most convenient place to get that water is sometimes more than a quarter of a mile away.

As I have said, I should like to see a test made to ascertain how some of the white people would fare if they lived under the same conditions as the Indians. I often wonder what their health situation would be, what the standard of cleanliness in a house would be, and other things. These are not the only things that confront people living on reservations. Many people say, why don't they raise a good deal of their own produce? I will admit that many projects have been carried out by the officials of the Indian affairs branch to try to get some of these people to have their own gardens and harvest the produce at the end of the season.

If you were to travel through northern Manitoba, and I imagine it is the same in most of the other areas, you would find a great many of these reserves are in areas where the land is far from arable. It is almost impossible, even with a tremendous amount of work, for more than one or two people to have small gardens. We hear this criticism of the Indian people from a lot of people who have not had the opportunity, or who have not taken the time to visit them. These white people take many things for granted and more or less write off the Indians because they say if the Indians will not help themselves there is no obligation on the rest of the people in Canada to do very much about them. Some people say that the Indians use some very queer methods in their attempts to live on the land.

For instance, we often hear it said by white people that the Indian will never cut enough wood to last for more than one day. This is quite true in a good many cases. However, there is a free trader on one reserve I visit who has adopted a plan to solve this problem. When I explain it to some of the people they say, well this is the most foolish thing I ever heard so far as the Indians are concerned. I should like to give you an example of how this plan works, and to say that the Indians have their own reasons for doing these things.

This man has adopted the idea of letting these fellows go out in July and August to cut 10 or 15 cords of wood, which they haul in and pile beside his store. He then pays them $6 a cord for it and they go away quite happy. When the trapping season comes around the Indians get a little more money and they save it until January or February, when they go back to the storekeeper and buy the wood from him at $9 a cord.

Most people ask why they do not cut the wood and haul it to their own cabins and so save $3 a cord. The reason is that in summer time these people need the $6 that they get, and during the trapping season they can afford to buy the wood back at a little more than they were paid for it. This is the kind of thing which makes white people say the Indian is a foolish person; but if we were to tell the Indian people about some of the tragedies white people get themselves into by taking too much advantage of credit systems, I wonder what the Indians would think of white people.

Generally speaking the Indian affairs branch has a large number of very capable personnel, including field men, agents, assistant agents and so on. But when a visitor goes to an Indian reservation he generally hears complaints against the agent. In the main these complaints are not justified. In many cases the agent just does not have the knack of gaining the confidence of the Indian people. When this happens, and when a series of complaints come in, the department should take a good look at the official in charge, and instead of moving him to some other area should call him in for a good talk, possibly provide him with some kind of refresher course, and impress upon him the necessity of gaining the confidence of these people and co-operating with them.

In northern Manitoba the personnel of the Indian affairs branch are dedicated people doing a very good job, but we do have complaints. Some people feel the agents need more instruction and a little more experience before they are put into these positions. Many of the areas need more field men. Usually an agent has a large territory to cover, and on top of that he has numerous reports to write. Therefore he does not have the time to cover the area properly and keep in constant touch with the Indian reservations which he administers.

This year at Thompson, Manitoba, a work project was undertaken in the Nelson House area in conjunction with the community development work of the province. The Indian affairs branch put a dedicated man in there to try and re-arrange the trap lines and assist the Indians to achieve a better way of fishing. Certain lakes were selected. Ice houses were built, and an overseer was installed to see that the fishing was done in a better manner for the benefit of the Indians. Several trap lines were re-arranged, and where capable trappers were not manning them, other Indians were put in charge, and things were improving greatly.

However, the main trouble was that the money allocated for the work was insufficient. The man in charge found he had to spend most of his time at Thompson because there was not enough money to enable him to travel to the lakes where he had these projects set up; and if he travelled to the lakes, the reports he was expected to send periodically to the branch were not going in, and complaints were coming from the head office. It was a case of one man, who was supposed to be in three different places at one time, trying to carry out a very worthwhile project; and if some changes are not made this project will go overboard. Having inspected it myself I can assure the committee it could do a great deal of good for that particular community.

One of the biggest problems is the lack of employment for Indians. This is understandable because mainly they are in isolated places where the only employment is self-employment, trapping and fishing during the respective seasons. Unless there is a little bit of brush clearing for a winter road constructed by a province, or some small work arranged by the branch on a reserve, there is no employment whatsoever for the balance of the year.

In the case of many reserves there are small lumber mills, possibly several hundred miles away, and work projects such as northern roads being built under contract. Generally, however, the people in charge of a contract or operating small saw mills are very reluctant to hire Indians. Now, the government is claiming a great deal of credit for its new program which provides financial assistance to employers who employ older workers. Possibly the same project could be undertaken by the Indian affairs branch in co-operation with the Department of Labour, to give some encouragement to these contractors and saw mill operators to hire Indian labour.

I realize my time is running out but, Mr. Chairman, I would like to see particular attention given to the formation of a separate department of Indian affairs. This is one of the most important problems we have, and it is becoming rapidly greater as the population increases. If we do not tackle it much more quickly than we are doing, then in 20 or 25 years it will be that much harder to deal with. Therefore consideration should be given to the formation of a separate department and, if not a separate department at least a special deputy minister who would do nothing but look after the Indian affairs branch.

As I said before, I would also like to see consideration given towards providing more field personnel in the outlying areas. There is a lot of work that can be done on reservations in the field of local improvements. Many suggestions along this line have been made to the Indian affairs branch, and it has been suggested that in lieu of paying out welfare, these men should be given some remuneration for doing drainage work, fencing, and other jobs on the reservations, such as a general clean up each year. In that way they could be paid instead of being handed welfare.

There may be immediate criticism of this. Some may say it would be setting a precedent. I do not think it would be setting a precedent at all, because I understand that in many of our cities where the city is handling relief measures, if they get a heavy snowfall or something like that, the able-bodied men who are on relief—they have a list of such people—are immediately put to work on snow removal. If they will not do this work of snow removal, they are taken off the relief roll. I think this could be adopted very easily by the Indian affairs branch in regard to improvement work being done on the Indian reservations. The Indians themselves could do the work and be paid for it, in lieu of welfare payments.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Simpson: I have a few more things to say, Mr. Chairman. I think some consideration should also be given to small financial assistance being provided to the chiefs and councillors of various bands. I do not think they should be given any great remuneration, and I realize they have band funds out of which the bands themselves can appropriate money. Chiefs and councillors attend a number of meetings each year, and many of these bands do not have a great deal of funds to their credit. Some of these chiefs and councillors have to do a considerable amount of travelling. For instance, in the Island Lake reserve in Manitoba there is one chief and his councillors, but the band is split into two separate communities which are approximately seven or eight miles apart; they have nothing but seven or eight miles of water between them. This means there is a considerable amount of going back and forth between the two different communities by the chief and councillors. Under present conditions the remuneration they receive does not cover the cost of this travelling, which is necessary to look after the needs of their people.

There is one final thing I should like to mention. With regard to a long term look at this picture and what can be done for these people, I would like the government to consider sponsoring a course of some kind in some of our universities, or at least in one of our universities. This should be a course for students to specialize in renewable resources, particularly the betterment of the quality of our fur-bearing animals, improvement in the methods of fishing, improvement in the methods of not only the harvesting of wild rice but in encouraging the growing of wild rice in larger areas. If some such course were available in the universities, graduates of that course could be hired by the Indian affairs branch and sent into the Indian communities. These people could give considerable assistance to the Indian people, not only in the trapping of animals but in the handling of the pelts and, of course, in better methods of fishing. I can envision, for instance, one good graduate taking eight or ten Indian families and making them self-sufficient all the year round, if they were put into good trapping and fishing areas. These people could also instruct the Indian people in the art of being capable and competent tourist guides during the fishing and hunting seasons. In that respect—

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Chairman, I should like to address a few remarks to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, particularly related to the management of Indian affairs in this country. The announcement that there will be a further slight delay in the setting up of the Indian claims commission I greet with some regret, even though I know it will certainly be done very soon. I am thinking of the convention of the national Indian council in Winnipeg, Manitoba, which the minister and myself attended, at which he assured the Indian people who were at the meeting from all across this country that this commission would be active before Christmas. I know the minister meant this. I also know that the Indian people who were at that meeting believed him. I merely want to say that in my country the person who says something and does not do it, regardless of the reason, is labelled as one who "speaks with a crooked tongue". I would like to suggest to the minister—in fact, I am going to insist that the minister and his officials notify those Indian people who came from all parts of Canada that there will be this further delay. If he does that, he will have the reputation of a man who speaks with a straight tongue.

I believe that most Canadian citizens have a vague feeling of smugness in believing our treatment of the Canadian Indian has on the whole been quite humane. In fact, however, there have been some examples in our development which, although they are not generally known—

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I do not wish to have it on record that any Indian in this country may even have occasion to say that their superintendent general has spoken with a crooked tongue. I have never said—and hon. members in this house can confirm this, those who have read the reports of my speech in Winnipeg will confirm it, and my speech will confirm it—that the Indian claims commission would be put to work before the end of 1963. What I said, and what I promised, after consultation with the Prime Minister, was that legislation would be introduced before the end of this year, with the intention of providing for the establishment of an Indian claims commission. I hope my hon. friend who has just made the statement will try to recall what he heard in Winnipeg and will correct the record in consequence, because the words he has uttered are an accusation which, as far as I am concerned, I am not ready to admit or accept.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Chairman, I merely want to put on the record that the belief of the people, after hearing the minister, whom they believed, and whom I believe, was that in fact some work would be done by the commission before the end of this year. I will certainly state for the record that I withdraw any suggestion the minister may feel I made that he was attempting to deceive these people. I believe quite to the contrary. My suggestion to him was that if there was to be a further delay—and there will be—let those Indian people know of the further delay, not just the members of this house; and let them know the new date on which in fact the commission will be at work. If the minister does that he will retain the trust the Indian people have in him right now, and I can assure him from my meetings with the delegates at the convention that they do trust him. My suggestion was made in a spirit of friendliness and co-operation, and I certainly did not want to suggest that I was accusing the minister of anything.

I was stating that Canadians generally tend to feel pretty smug about how humane we have been, but there have been some unfortunate examples of treatment toward Indians. You have only to think of the Beothuk Indians who lived in Newfoundland, true at a time when that part of the country was not in Canada, who were over a period of some 200 years purposely exterminated by the white settlers in that part of the country. Furthermore, there are many ways in which to destroy a race of people. Hunger, cold, tuberculosis and syphilis will destroy a race as surely as bullets.

When the Glassco commission examined management of Indian affairs in the Northwest Territories they recommended that services to the Indians be integrated. They further recommended that the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources in effect administer the affairs of all Indian people. Personally I disagree with this, and I wish the minister to be aware that I think there is no point in turning over the administration of the affairs of a group of people from one federal agency to another. Furthermore, with the extensive workload that the officials of northern affairs already have cut out for them in the Northwest Territories, I do not think they can handle it as well as does the Indian Affairs branch now. If the suggestion is at any time made that Indian affairs work in the Northwest Territories be handled by the territorial government of the Northwest Territories, and if within a year or two the government of the Northwest Territories is in fact elected by the people, I would be the first to support the idea that Indian affairs be handled by that agency.

In the meantime I think it is most important that the Indian affairs branch in the Northwest Territories revise their programs of assistance so as to bring them up to the level of assistance received by the Eskimo, the white and the Metis people who are in identical circumstances. At the present time we have several communities in which these three "administrative" groups live side by side. An Indian widow on relief with, let us say, four children, receives in welfare assistance substantially less than a widow with four children who is not an Indian. This creates friction and misunderstanding and confounds the officials of the department who are trying to do a good job. So that even though the day when we can integrate services to Indians in the Northwest Territories may be several years off, I beg the minister in the meantime at least to see to it that the scales of assistance and programs provided Indian people are as generous and as good as those offered to non-Indians.

I also want to bring to the minister's attention treaties Nos. 8 and 11. It is not generally known in Canada that the Canadian government has never lived up to the two major terms in those treaties. Under the two major provisions in these treaties we obtained from the Indian people of the day almost one million square miles of land. These two major terms have never been lived up to. It is well known among the Indian people that the Canadian government has defaulted in its responsibilities. The first treaty, No. 8, with the Indians of northern Alberta and the bands living just inside what is now the Northwest Territories, was made on June 21, 1899, and treaty No. 11 relating to the rest of the Indian peoples in the Canadian north was made on July 17, 1922. It is little wonder that the Indian people in the north do not trust the white man. In the Northwest Territories at the present time there are no Indian reservations as is the case in the south. While the bulk of the Indian people are quite happy not to be put on reserves or to have their homes built on reserves, they are unhappy because the reason for this is that the Canadian government has never lived up to its treaty commitments.

The original treaty signed by these people said that we shall provide for every five Indians one square mile of land. This has never been done. In 1957 the Indian chiefs met. They know that this land has never been given to them. They met in Fort Smith and discussed this matter, and the Indian affairs branch officials assured them that something would be done. In 1959 a royal commission was set up to examine the unfulfilled provisions of treaties Nos. 8 and 11. This royal commission made an extensive study, interviewed Indian people, and made recommendations. These recommendations were referred to the Indian affairs branch for action. In two and a half years nothing has been done with the recommendations.

The other major benefit which we promised the Indian people in these two treaties has also not been lived up to, and it is a source of concern all over Canada. When these treaties were signed the Indian people of the day expressed doubt that they would be allowed to continue to hunt and trap at will. I want to quote to the committee the words of the commissioner, Mr. Conroy, in 1922. This is what he said in the preamble to treaty No. 11:

> They—

—meaning the Indians—

> —were very apt in asking questions, and here, as in all the other posts where the treaty was signed, the questions asked and the difficulties encountered were much the same. The Indians seemed afraid, for one thing, that their liberty to hunt, trap and fish would be taken away or curtailed, but were assured by me that this would not be the case—

If you go back, Mr. Chairman, to 1899, the commissioner of that day—there were three commissioners at that time—also referred to this point in these words:

> Our chief difficulty was the apprehension that the hunting and fishing privileges were to be curtailed.

Prosecutions are still commenced by the crown every time Indian people hunt or trap out of season, Mr. Chairman. Yet here in the treaty it states that the Indians were afraid when they were asked to sign these treaties, and they turned over almost one million square miles of land, that they would not be allowed to hunt and trap at will. But they were assured by the commissioner that such would not be the case.

What has been the history of this matter? In a recent judgment of a court in the Northwest Territories it was ruled that the understanding of the Indians should take precedence over an earlier conviction. I believe Chief Justice McRuer of Ontario rendered a similar decision about the beginning of June. I remember that at the time this was brought to the attention of the Prime Minister. He was asked whether government officials would be instructed in future as to the findings of Chief Justice McRuer, and we were assured that they would. But, as I say, prosecutions are still being brought.

I know the Migratory Birds Convention Act, for example, is an international treaty. It was signed by the United States, Canada and Mexico, and under its terms it is an offence for an Indian to shoot a duck in the springtime or at other times of the year. However, I can also tell you something else about the Indian people, and that is when it comes to conservation they are more concerned about conserving Indians than they are about conserving little ducks. We can never expect them not to take game when it is available, when it is a matter of whether they take it, or a sport hunter in the United States or Mexico gets his bag limit a month later. That is the problem.

I am also going to suggest to the minister a solution to both these problems, the problem of land and the problem of hunting, trapping and fishing rights. It is this: Renegotiate the treaties. Go back to the Indian bands and renegotiate these treaties. They are not sacred. They cannot be sacred, because the Canadian government has never lived up to the provisions of them, anyway. Go back to the Indians and point out to them the conservation needs of the country. Indian people can understand these things, if they can trust those who are going to sign the treaty. Renegotiate the treaties on land. The royal commission made some excellent recommendations. I say to the minister that he should make up his mind about policy, then give these recommendations to the branch for them to implement. Hunting and trapping rights have been curtailed in spite of assurances given to the Indian people. I would renegotiate these. They will be quite prepared to do so. I can guarantee that if any of the officials of the government of Canada who enjoys the trust of the Indian people sits down with them and says, "All right, we signed some treaties in 1899 and 1922, we never lived up to them and we are ashamed of ourselves for not doing so but, let us sign a new one which takes into consideration the understandable need for the conservation of game and wildlife in this country",—things which the Indians understand—he will be able to reach agreement. I guarantee the Indians will sit down in good faith, bargain with him and renegotiate the whole position, because this is a matter as it now stands that only leads to a feeling on the part of the Indian people that they cannot trust any white man or government official.

I suggest that in many instances we are asking the Indian people to carry on as though we were in the middle of the 18th century. Everything we have done to develop the country has militated against the ability of the Indian people to live on the land. We have put in schools and impressed on the Indian people the importance of sending children to school every day. We cannot then turn around and say to them: Take your wife and the pre-school children and leave the settlement. Our missionaries have introduced a new religion. They have said: Go to church regularly; get married in church before you start raising your children. This militates against a life on the land because the churches are located in settlements. We have gone to the people and said: At the first sign of a cold, bring your children into the nursing station; don't get your feet wet; avoid extremes of weather. On the other hand we say: Why aren't you out trapping in the bush, miles away from all these services which we have told you are good.

We have to start giving the Indians more than advice. There is a saying in my country which goes like this: You cannot make soup out of caribou tracks. The Indian people need more than words; they need our technology. When I think of the kind of thing that is being done in other countries to help local people harvest their resources—and the hon. member for Churchill referred to this point—I am reminded of some of the things the Russians have done, if you will pardon the expression, in the harvesting of fish. They pump fish. They have ships with pumps that work like a vacuum cleaner. They use radar to locate the fish, and then they suck them in. When I hear that, and when I hear of an Indian agent along the Mackenzie river giving a man a three and a half inch net and telling him to go out and make a good living for himself and his family, I say it is time we got some new ideas in dealing with the Indian people and made available, not just our school facilities and health services but our 20th century technology.

Words are not enough. There are suggestions made regularly, not overtly, but none the less they are made, that the Indian people of Canada are second class citizens. Let me say this: They are second class citizens, but not because they are Indians. They are second class because anyone who is cold, hungry, unemployed and uneducated, any group of people who are weakened and despised and dispersed are second class. If you want to do something about this we shall give them an opportunity to take advantage of the technology we now have, to give them a little opportunity to be first class citizens.

In conclusion, let me say this: I should like to see the minister set for himself a plan which would exterminate this whole branch within a set time. The period I would like to suggest is a 20 year period—the great leap into oblivion—during which he should devote all the efforts of his department to making sure that the branch does not exist 20 years from now. I say 20 years, because this would give time for all the people who have careers in the branch to be retired. They would not be threatened. And all the new ones who come in could be told that there was a limited period in which they would be required to work. I am afraid, when I learn there are more Indians being born each year than either die or become enfranchised; because I see in this situation only the possibility of the Indian affairs branch continuing to grow and the Indian people always being controlled by a special department set up for them.

I know many of the minister's officials are working with the province now to see that health, education and welfare services are taken over by provincial authorities. I urge the minister to give his officials who are doing these things every encouragement, so that when he presents his estimates again—and I trust it is the same minister who is presenting them at this time, because I have confidence in him and his ideas—he may be able to include in them some kind of plan which will in the long run eliminate the need for his department altogether.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, after listening—

[Text]

Mr. Fisher: A grand speaker, fighting for the Queen.

Mr. Choquette: You may be a future king of Canada. You never know.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, after listening to the very sensible and objective arguments in favour of Indians, one would be much more inclined to believe that the minister heads a department of Indian affairs instead of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

However, I wish to start by commending the minister for the great competence he has shown in the performance of his duties, and I must say that members from Quebec are well justified in expecting great things for the minister.

There is a fundamental principle I should like to stress in the course of my brief remarks. If I failed to do so, I would feel that I have not done one of my most important duties as a member of parliament. On the whole, there will be nothing new in my remarks, but I take advantage of the new climate to make those remarks.

Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that immigration has always been detrimental to the French speaking group in Canada.

Mr. Caouette: Quite true.

Mr. Choquette: Statistics are there to prove it. A moment ago I said that I would take advantage of the new climate to say what I have to say. I am glad it is so. It is the present government which has set up the royal commission of inquiry on bilingualism and biculturalism. The statements of principle on bilingualism, biculturalism and "biethnism" which come from every corner are most interesting.

However, I am not satisfied with statements of principle. I should like to see the principles of biethnism, biculturalism and bilingualism translated into concrete steps. In my opinion, no department is in a better position than the Department of Citizenship and Immigration to do that, by promoting the principles of biethnism and biculturalism in the field of immigration.

Mr. Chairman, I said I would be brief and I will, but I should like to quote some figures—

Mr. Fisher: Why?

Mr. Choquette: Because we are in power. I would like to quote some figures based upon the 1961 census, which will illustrate my point.

From 1951 to 1961 the total population of Canada increased by some 4,230,000 persons. The French speaking population increased by 1,220,000; the English speaking population, by 1,290,000; and other ethnical groups by 2,720,000.

It is well known, Mr. Chairman, that minority ethnical groups tend to assimilate with the majority group, with the result that the French speaking element is left far behind.

That is the reason why I insist that this government—

Mr. Fisher: Why?

Mr. Choquette: —in view of the new climate which they have themselves created and of that policy which they have outlined on many occasions through their leader: "Let us be biethnical and bicultural in the field of immigration", become the promoter of a more intensive immigration of French speaking people in order to allow the two great races of our country to be truly recognized as such, not only in principle—but also numerically.

Mr. Chairman, other figures support the point I am making. Here are the immigration figures for the years 1951 to 1961: for the whole of Canada, 1,542,853; for the province of Ontario, 817,292; for the province of Quebec, only 325,329 new immigrants. So, the province of Ontario outbalances the province of Quebec by 500,000, that is half a million more citizens.

Mr. Chairman, there is some talk of redistribution. It is obvious, in the province of Quebec, that the French speaking element is definitely falling back. We have the right, a justifiable right, to ask that a new policy of immigration favourable to the French speaking element be applied.

I know that the minister can reply that the province of Quebec has a certain jurisdiction in the matter of immigration, under section 95 of the constitution.

However, it is unfortunate that the Quebec provincial government has been guilty for too long of inertia in the matter of immigration. I do not think that the federal government is justified in taking advantage of such a policy of inertia to pull back the French speaking element.

As I said a while ago, 817,000 immigrants settled in Ontario from 1951 to 1961. Besides, statistics indicate that out of 1,542,853 immigrants who settled in our country, 1,217,524 settled in the other provinces, but only 325,329 in Quebec.

Before concluding my remarks, I should like to quote an article by Mr. Jean Marc Leger, published in Le Devoir of November 21, 1963. Here is what it said:

> Demographers who have studied the question anticipate that unless there is an unexpected reverse in the trend of the birth rate and the break down of immigration, the French speaking element in Canada will represent less than 25 per cent of the population by 1970 and might go down to less than 20 per cent between 1980 and 1990.

Mr. Chairman, if we really want to practice bilingualism and biculturalism, we must stop making high-sounding statements of principle and get to work. In my opinion, there is no department better suited than the Department of Citizenship and Immigration to promote actively bilingualism, biculturalism and "biethnism" in Canada.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, it has been very interesting to listen to the hon. member for Lotbiniere, who has just taken his seat. It seems to me it is very appropriate that we are discussing today immigration and Indian affairs, because if the Indian people of this nation could have had the sort of immigration policy when Jacques Cartier came here that we have now, the hon. member for Lotbiniere would not be here to complain about this situation and our native Indian people would be a lot better off than they are at the present time.

An hon. Member: Not because of Jacques Cartier.

Mr. Howard: Not because of Jacques Cartier. It is a well known fact that while my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East, was a member of the British Columbia provincial legislature and since he has been a federal member of parliament he has had a very intense interest in the activities and affairs of this department. He would have liked to be here today to participate in the debate and listen to what the minister and others had to say. Unfortunately he is a member of the defence committee steering committee, and the steering committee is spending many long hours today attempting to prepare a draft report for presentation to the full committee. He asked me to express his regrets to the minister and others at not being able to listen to the debate as it proceeds.

I want to confine my remarks entirely to the subject of Indian affairs, because it has long been one of my own interests and, because the rights of people are involved, was long one of the prime interests of the C.C.F. Now those of us in the New Democratic party are maintaining that traditional interest. It should be remembered that when the C.C.F. party was in existence it introduced into the House of Commons the very first bill to give our native Indian people the right to vote in federal elections without any strings attached to that right. This was done in 1957, and I had the privilege of introducing that bill on behalf of the C.C.F. at that time. We were happy that finally steps were taken in 1960, I believe, to extend to our native Indian people the right to vote in federal elections.

As I said last night, it is interesting to note that, following upon the Indian people gaining the right to vote, we have had a much more active interest on the part of members of parliament in Indian affairs. I believe this is a welcome situation, because parliament will then become more enlightened and we are likely to have more advanced and progressive attitudes towards Indian affairs than have been evident heretofore. I hope, certainly, that the minister does not have any knowledge of a situation in British Columbia. I certainly do not believe he is a party to it. It is unfortunate, but there is an element within the Liberal party in British Columbia that is seeking, and has attained a bit of success in this regard, to infiltrate at least one of the Indian organizations that exists in that province. They are seeking to infiltrate it, not for the purpose of promoting a solution of the problems of the Indians, but in an attempt to use the organization for partisan political purposes. I think this is regrettable. I think it is unfortunate, and I believe the Indian people will suffer if they permit this condition to continue.

I was interested in the minister's statement, not only on immigration and citizenship but on Indian affairs as well. I should like to make some brief comments on some of the things he mentioned. He said that the Indian Act is under review and when the amendments are ready it is his intention to consult with the Indian people before those amendments are passed. This is a commendable course, and one which we have advocated for many years. We say that inasmuch as the freedom and rights of the Indian people are involved, the proper course to follow is to consult with those people who are being affected before any legislation which deals with their various problems is passed.

I should like to note here that I was told on rather good authority that the minister intended to introduce a resolution preceding the establishment of the Indian claims commission on December 14. I think the precision of that prediction is remarkable because that seems to be precisely what is happening. We have a resolution on the order paper now. I would have liked to have the substance of the bill before parliament at this time. When I saw the resolution today I was hoping the Secretary of State was going to ask, as he does so often, for unanimous consent to the passage of the resolution so that the bill could be introduced today. It is unfortunate that has not taken place. In so far as I am concerned, I am quite prepared, at any time the Secretary of State asks for that unanimous consent to the passage of the resolution, to grant it so that the bill can be introduced. I think every member in this party is of the same opinion. We would do so because we know that the bill is to be introduced but will not be proceeded with this session. We understand the government intends to bring the bill to the attention of the public so that the Indian people can study it, and at the next session we will have a better understanding of the reaction to the proposals contained in that legislation.

The minister made reference to a variety of activities of the department in the field of welfare, sewerage, water systems, education and the like. I do not believe it is necessary to comment specifically on them, except to say that I know of particular bands who have been somewhat miffed in years past by the activities of the Indian affairs branch in connection with water and sewerage systems. I certainly would not want to see repeated the experience which some bands have had. I know of one band in particular, right offhand I could not tell you the name, which has spent hundreds of dollars on a water system over a period of years in an attempt to make it efficient and effective. The reason for spending the additional amount of money is that when the water system was constructed in the first instance, the engineers or whoever was responsible for the installation, put the pipes in backwards. They put the small pipes at the source of the water supply and down near the houses they put the larger pipes, which is the reverse of what should have been done.

There is another Indian village on the coast, I do not want to mention the name of it, in which over a period of years some $30,000 has been spent in an attempt to instal a water supply system for the people. They have a beautiful looking water tank sitting up on top of a hill some distance behind the village and close to a creek upon which a dam was constructed. Perhaps more than $30,000 has been spent on this water system over a period of years, but not a single drop of water has come through the system. We do not want to see these things repeated, and I am sure the Indian people do not either. I do not want to go into specific cases, but I am sure that if the minister just asks for a review by his officers he will find that the two incidents to which I have referred were not isolated incidents. These conditions have existed for a long time in the operations of the Indian affairs branch.

The minister phrased his introductory remarks in fine language. I have read a number of press releases of speeches the minister made outside the house, and on every occasion these statements were phrased in fine words.

I do not wish to be unkind to him, but words are cheap, statements are easy to prepare, especially if one is learned in the language or learned in the law. Especially in view of the experience the native people have had in trying to solve their problems over the years, speeches, phrases and words must be backed up by action before the people will believe the minister. This is what we are waiting for, this is what we are looking forward to seeing.

At different times, I have had occasion to read the speeches made in this house by the minister's various predecessors. The Hon. Walter Harris, when he was minister, used to make some fine speeches. The present Secretary of State, when he held the post of minister of citizenship and immigration, spoke highly and emotionally about Indian affairs and the things that should be done for the Indian people. Incidentally, he spoke even more emotionally about those things when he sat in opposition. Nevertheless, his speeches make fine reading. Even the minister's predecessor, the Hon. Mrs. Fairclough, spoke nicely about Indian affairs. However, over the years, the actions that have emanated from the government have not met the expectations which the Indian people had as a result of these statements and speeches.

The native Indian people want to see some action. They are trusting people. They are fine, upstanding citizens of this nation and they should be recognized. I hope that action will be forthcoming, and when it does that it will meet the expectations of the people of this nation, especially in view of the great amount of the milk of human kindness that is contained in the speeches of the various ministers, including the present one. Unfortunately, I believe the fathers of confederation made a mistake in the British North America Act in confining the jurisdiction over Indians and lands reserved for Indians to the parliament of Canada. In one sense, this casts some doubt upon the legality of the various dominion-provincial programs that are in existence, especially those co-operative programs on education that have been increasing over the years. There is some doubt expressed as to whether the parliament of Canada is able to delegate its authority in this field because of the provisions of the British North America Act, but I do not want to cast doubt upon that because I think this is the course of action we should be following—that is, getting out of the business of Indian affairs and getting it into the hands of the provincial governments where the civil and other rights of our other citizens rest, and where the civil and other rights of the Indian people should rest.

So long as we have an Indian affairs branch, and that provision in the British North America Act, we are going to have two classes of people, one the native Indians who come under the jurisdiction of this parliament, and the other encompassing everybody else, whose jurisdiction is within the hands of the provinces. So long as we have a separate law on the statute books of Canada revolving around a group of people because of their racial background, it is going to beget discrimination in one form or another.

The mere fact that there is a separate law governing Indians makes people ask themselves whether the people covered by that law are different? If we had a separate act on the statute books covering the French people, and called the French act, people would say there must be something queer about the French. If we had a separate law relating to Scotch people, called the Scotch act, other people would say there must be something rather weird about the Scotch. I know many people have these opinions anyway, but if we had laws to such effect they would promote discrimination, in the same way as the very fact that we have an Indian Act does.

Unfortunately, no matter how much one may hope that the Indian affairs branch will have the initiative and momentum within it to be able to solve these problems, I do not think it can. To me the Indian affairs branch is an administrative organization. It is concerned with the keeping of files and records, the writing of letters and the preparation of documents. It does not concern itself with, and in fact it is impossible for it to be concerned with anything other than administration. It does not get into the field of developing policy, although there are some people who say it does; and it cannot get into the field of sociological research, and the like.

Accordingly, because it is bound by its own red tape and its own pyramidal structure, it is unable to do anything other than administer. It is a sort of conglomeration of office managers, and this does not help the problem of Indian affairs.

At one time the law used to refer to the individual in the field as the Indian agent, the implication being he was an agent of the Indian people. This was the concept of his original appointment, that he would be an agent to act on behalf of the Indian people in dealing with governments and other elements of society. Now the law has been changed. He is an Indian superintendent, and the very word superintendent carries with it the connotation of a supervisor, foreman, or boss of some sort. The minister himself has got an even higher faluting title: He is the superintendent general, a sort of super foreman over everybody else. This is precisely the attitude many superintendents have that they are there to supervise the Indian people in their daily life, to represent the administrative machinery, and that they are not there to help the Indian people themselves.

Because of all these factors, and regardless of how much one may admire individuals in the Indian affairs branch, regardless of how much their hearts may be set on accomplishing something worth while, and no matter how fine an understanding individuals may have in the Indian affairs branch, they cannot give full effect to their feelings. The branch, by its very existence and structure, is an incompetent organization to deal fully and completely with the various problems confronting Indian people, problems that have developed over the last 100 years and which started some time before that.

To a great extent the branch is a narrow neck funnel through which ideas eventually filter to the minister. The minister's predecessors were not too interested in trying to break out of these bonds, and in trying to establish something different. I hope the minister is interested in this.

Unfortunately the Indian people look to the Indian affairs branch from the point of view as expressed to them by the political head of that department, whoever the minister may happen to be. To them the minister, being a representative of Her Majesty in the old traditional sense, because their treaties were phrased that way, they look upon him as being the sole guiding light in Indian affairs. But because we have had a succession of changes of ministers we have a confused attitude both in administration and in the approach by native Indian people to the government's tackling of Indian affairs. This is partly because the fine phrases, to which I referred earlier, have not been carried out and formulated into action, and this has largely been due to the succession of changes of ministers.

I would rather that the minister would not accept the contention of the hon. member for Churchill and others to the effect that we need a separate department of Indian affairs, or that the chief director of Indian affairs should be a deputy minister and given more authority and power within the structure of government; and I say this because our goal and objective must be repeal of the Indian Act, must be the transfer of the jurisdiction of various activities of the branch to the provincial governments, and this at a speed to meet the desires of the Indian people, and not to be foisted upon them.

We will not be able to proceed in that direction if we proceed in the direction of building an empire around the minister in the government. If we establish a separate department of Indian affairs we will bring into being a group of empire builders and make it more difficult for the federal government to get out of the field of Indian affairs.

What I would like to see is that the government take steps to establish a board, commission or council—it does not matter what you call it—for the economic advancement of native peoples, a body that will be free from interference in its activities by the Indian affairs branch. It should be a body that will be free from political and ministerial influence in its day to day activities; which will have on it people who are native Indians representing the native points of view; which will have on it people schooled in the fields of sociology and anthropology, people well versed in the field of education—economists, representatives of the professions and the like —and this body should have as its guide posts the promotion of a variety of activities which the Indian affairs branch now conducts, or attempts to conduct, in the field of economic development activity.

Such a body should have a program of job opportunities and job placements within its sphere of activities. It should embrace the field of adult education, and the all important field of band council education, in an attempt to prompt band councils to become masters of their own destinies, rather than what they now are, minions of the Indian agent in whatever the agent can get away with. This body should have as its eventual goal an approach to working with the economic councils that exist in Canada, the various economic boards in the provinces and other agencies, with the hope of transferring as much of this activity as possible to the provincial governments, again at a speed which meets the desires of the Indian people.

We could then confine the activities of the Indian affairs branch to that which it knows best and does the most effectively, namely the dispensing of welfare or assistance of that sort, with the goal being to transfer these jurisdictions to the provincial governments, again at a speed which meets the desires of the native peoples themselves.

When it comes to the question of welfare I would like to make this comment. The amount payable now, in general terms, is $22 per month. This was established in 1957 or 1958, I believe, and replaced the old ration system of welfare assistance. This compares, again in pretty general terms, with welfare assistance payable in the province of British Columbia of $66 a month. So if you are an Indian, you get $22; if you are a non-Indian or an Indian living off the reserve, you are likely to get $66. We would like to see some sort of uniformity in this assistance, because it costs a native person just as much to eat and fill the bellies of his children as it costs a non-Indian.

While on this particular subject, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make reference to an agreement which was consummated the first part of this year between the federal government and the government of British Columbia. It was implemented on January 1, as a matter of fact. It is covered in what is called a statement of policy on social assistance and health services to Indians in British Columbia. So, even in this enlightened year of 1963 this is what the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia agreed to do with respect to welfare. They agreed to put into writing and permit a continuation of a system of paying welfare based on discrimination, based on racial origin, based on whether a person is an Indian or is not an Indian, and based upon whether a person lives on or off a reserve, which makes it even worse. What happens under that agreement? I do not think it is necessary to read it entirely into the record, but it says that an Indian who has lived continuously without social assistance directly from a municipal, provincial or federal government for one year off the reserve is the responsibility of the local area.

So if an Indian lives off the reserve for one year he is entitled, if he needs welfare, to receive welfare amounts from the provincial government; but if he lives on the reserve, what happens to him—he receives the $22 a month. Surely to heaven in the first part of this year, when we were talking about transfer of jurisdiction and equality, it would have been sensible for the government to have attempted to put into effect a system in the province of British Columbia which would be based upon equality of treatment for native people and do away with the old system of discrimination. As far as I am concerned, this system is also a bloody disgrace, if I can use that word, to this parliament and to the government of British Columbia; and it is a disgrace to all those people in Canada who allowed it to happen. I hope this government will take steps to have it repealed or changed, because after all, what difference is there between one person and another when it comes to his needs and requirements in order to keep body and soul together?

I think the mere word "integration" is a curse to the Indian people. "Integration" carries with it some very bad connotations, because it means and has meant in the past to many officials in government, a one way street. "Integration" means to the Indian people, "You give up your heritage, your culture, your language and your background. You give up what you know about your people's ancestors and how they lived in this nation, and you come into our way of living and accept everything that we have". To me this is not a sensible course to follow. What other word one can find, I do not know, unless it might be acculturation. But the approach in the relationship between Indian people and those of non-Indian origin must in all instances be based on mutual respect, mutual understanding, mutual trust and confidence and upon attempting to promote equality in all fields. It must be based on the desire of the non-Indian people—and this must emanate from government somewhere—to understand and respect the background of the arts that native people have. Incidentally, the only truly North American art form that has ever been developed is that of the totemic carving of the Indians along the west coast.

One must understand and have a desire to appreciate the participation of native people in the field of politics. One has only to read or talk with people who know about the Iroquois nation to appreciate what a remarkably fine political system and structure they have. It is one which would be well for us to copy and put parts of it into effect. We must attempt to understand and appreciate more the intense hereditary feeling of co-operation that exists amongst native people, because they far excel us in the field of co-operating and working together for the mutual benefit of all. In the past our forefathers destroyed the economic base of Indian native people. They did not do a single, solitary thing to replace it with anything else or attempt to train native people to fit into any other type of economy. Unfortunately, many of the missionaries in fact—although they did not realize they were doing this—destroyed to a great extent the religious base of native Indian people and replaced it with something which at that time was alien to them.

For all these reasons, together with a variety of others, the native Indian person has come, as the hon. member from the Northwest Territories said, to distrust practically every single thing that the non-Indian person, especially government and the Indian affairs branch, does. As I said earlier in my opening remarks, it will take more than fine phrases, it will take more than fine words, it will take more than long statements by the minister to counteract this distrust. It will take a long series of actions in a trustworthy way, carried out fully, before the native people will trust us as we should desire to trust and respect them.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if I could close by reading the attitude developed by the New Democratic party convention with regard to Indian affairs. Incidentally, ours is the only political party in existence which in open convention developed a concept about native Indian affairs. We say this:

> The New Democratic party has as a basic philosophy the recognition of the dignity of the human being; a respect for moral and cultural values; a belief in equality without regard to race, creed, colour, or religion; a deep desire to foster mutual trust and respect among all peoples; the will to promote advancements in the spheres of education, peace, security and freedom—

I know that the native Indian of Canada has in the past had his needs and hopes disregarded and sacrificed. Based on those words, we in the New Democratic party fervently hope that this parliament, this government, will find a way to solve the problems confronting our native Indian people and so assist all of us to reach a higher plane of dignity and work in this country.

Mr. Fane: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to discuss matters of citizenship, immigration and Indian affairs. My first remarks must be addressed to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, and what follows will be addressed to the superintendent general of Indian affairs. I must say that I am very thankful for the co-operation the minister and his able and co-operative young parliamentary secretary have shown in any of the dealings I have had with them. I do hope the minister realizes this is one of the most important portfolios in the government of Canada, and I hope that a man who has shown the interest he has shown in that department is not removed and somebody else put in his place, as has been mentioned in news items in various newspapers. It would be a travesty of justice, decency, and everything else were he to be removed and the person mentioned put in his place. My interest in citizenship and immigration is very great because I represent the constituency of Vegreville, in Alberta, which is populated by people from perhaps 40 different nations. This getting together of so many people from different nations has resulted in intermarriage; and we now have one culture and we are Canadians there. Yet there are still difficulties with the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

I should just like to mention three different types of situation, cases which I have picked out from my filing cabinets, concerning communications which have been carried on with the minister. The first one was brought to my attention by a man a little younger than I who was born in the same district as I was. His people came from Poland. By the time the last war had ended he had become fairly well provided with worldly goods, and he had a niece in Poland whom he wanted to bring to Canada. This girl was aged 20 years, although she is probably 22 now because this case commenced two or three years ago. This man has been refused permission to bring his niece to this country because he is not closely enough related. He has guaranteed to see that she never becomes a charge on the state. She is his niece, a daughter of his sister who was killed in the war. In fact her whole family was killed; she is the only one left. Yet this man cannot bring her to this country. These people, who are Canadians, have asked me as well as other members of parliament to help them, but we were not able to do anything for them. I think cases like this should get priority. There is not a chance in the world of this girl's becoming a charge on the state; and the people who want to bring her to the country are some of our best citizens.

I now go to the case of a Ukrainian girl born somewhere in the Ukraine. Both the minister and his parliamentary secretary know this case very well because I have a very thick file on it. This girl came to Canada in 1939 when she was between three and six years of age. In 1955 her mother, her father and her sister as well as she herself applied for Canadian citizenship. The mother got her citizenship but the father and the two daughters were refused. I have been working on this case for only about a year, and during that time I have discussed it with two ministers of citizenship, both of whom have been very interested; but because of certain reports gathered together, I presume by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, there is very great difficulty in this young lady's getting her Canadian citizenship.

This girl I am talking about is a bachelor of education from the University of Alberta. She has been a high school teacher for the last ten years, and her sister to whom I referred is a registered nurse, but she has now married a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and has received her citizenship. Why in the name of heaven can this girl, who is a couple of years older than her sister, not get her citizenship? I know there is a private file not available to people as far down the ladder as I am, but I think there must have been some error in the reports which were accumulated and gathered by the R.C.M.P. and turned over to the department of citizenship. I may say that the judge in the citizenship court in the city of Edmonton has, I am told, recommended each time that she has applied that this girl be given citizenship. We will have to smarten up and do something about cases like this. I say that we should have a judicial committee appointed which sits all the time to handle appeals from decisions like this; and this committee should be appointed forthwith. I am sorry I cannot go into these cases in too much detail because I am restricted as to time.

My third case concerns a man who came to this country from England. He did not come here direct; he came to the United States in 1950. He served with the British army, starting out as a private soldier during the last war. He was a commando, became a major and was decorated by the King with the military cross for conspicuous gallantry. This man came to Canada, as I say, through the United States in 1956, I believe it was. When he went to the United States in 1950 he had a British passport. When he came to Canada in 1956 the customs inspector at the point of entry did not stamp his passport. No record was taken of his entry. In 1958 he went back to England, and landed back in Gander, Newfoundland, coming through the Canadian customs at Gander. He was still carrying his British passport and it was marked with a stamp authorizing re-entry into Canada. This man wants his Canadian citizenship. He has been here seven years, so why in the name of heaven are so many difficulties put in his way?

These are only a few of the vast number of cases I have of this sort, and due to shortness of time I do not want to go into any of them too fully. I did remark that I thought there should be a judicial committee authorized to hear complaints against refusals to grant citizenship, and I know the minister and his assistants are doing everything they can. I am not complaining against that. I am complaining about the Canadian Citizenship Act and the fact that the Department of Citizenship and Immigration has to be so darn stuffy about allowing people to become Canadians.

Now I wish to address the next part of my few remarks to the superintendent general of Indian affairs. May I remark first to him that I am very pleased to notice on today's order paper the fact that he has at last got around to providing for the establishment an Indian claims commission, to providing for the duties of the commission, its decision and awards, and to providing for appeals from the decisions of the commission to the Indian claims appeal court, and to enact such financial provisions as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of the act.

I assure you that that is something I have advocated for a long time. The Conservative party has advocated that, but it was not possible to bring it into being. Had we been returned as the government this would have been brought in; if not earlier than this, it would have been brought in by now, anyway. I must say that when I speak of Indian affairs I am talking from experience, because when I was born out in the place in which I still live, our closest neighbours were Indians. Therefore I speak with experience when I speak of Indian affairs. As I have said so many times already, I regret that my time does not allow me to go into it fully but if the minister and his assistants wish to hear the whole story they can take a week off some time, and I will, too, and I will give them an earful.

The reserve I am most interested in at the moment is the Saddle Lake reserve, which is part of the Saddle Lake agency. This agency comprises some six or seven bands of Indians. The rest of the bands under the control of that agency are in the constituency of the hon. member for Athabasca. The same difficulties beset my Indians as beset his. In this Saddle Lake Indian reserve in my constituency there are between 1,200 and 1,300 Indians. I want to say that they are on the whole a very progressive people. As everybody should know, there is nothing the matter with the Indians for which the white man has not been responsible. There are a few of them of course, as in every race, who are shiftless but on the whole they are very industrious.

I may say that the Liberal opposition candidate in my constituency who ran against me was a treaty Indian on my reserve. He got his first vote, and do you know, we gave it to him, and he ran as a Liberal. We made it possible, and he became a Liberal candidate and he is a very—

An hon. Member: Be careful.

Mr. Fane: He is a very able man. But I am not out campaigning for him now because he is on some royal commission or something, I guess it was the Postmaster General who got his name. I am telling the committee this to show that the Indians can take their place alongside anybody, make no mistake about that. These people were the first Canadians and, really, they are the only Canadians. The rest of us are all immigrants. They have had a thin time since the white man came and took their country away from them. I know that out west the story only goes back as far as 1885 or 1889, some 80 years ago. Anyway, they were herded on to reserves. They did not get very much opportunity to progress. Only now are they beginning to come into their own and they are now, as I do not need to tell anybody here, a very vocal part of the Canadian population. They want to make up for the things they have been denied throughout all these years, and they will certainly be able to speak for themselves when they come before this Indian claims commission or any other commission to which they may have access.

There are several things I should like to mention and I am very happy that I helped to accomplish some of them. The two things I am going to mention first happened before the present minister took over this portfolio, that is, that the superintendent of the Saddle Lake agency is a fully blooded treaty Indian, which is a step in the right direction. If the Indians can rise to positions like that, they can help look after themselves, because a great many of the agents who have already been appointed in the past were civil servants and did not know much about the Indians. I do not know how some of them got into positions like that. But the agent there is doing an outstanding job. He is, as I said, a treaty Indian himself and he understands the difficulties with which these people are faced. That is one thing that was accomplished before the last election and since the 1962 election. There has also been medical supervision. There is a nurse on duty at all times on this reserve, now. Before she was established there, a nurse would be there for perhaps two hours on two days a week. It was a poor show, believe me, because people cannot organize their sicknesses to take place during the two hours a day on the two days of the week on which the nurse would be available.

One of the big complaints the Indians have is that their treaties have not been properly respected. They were made a long time ago, mostly, and the people who signed them on behalf of the Queen did not realize that western Canada particularly was going to reach the state of population it has now. They made deals about fishing and hunting. As the hon. member from the Northwest Territories remarked, if they shoot a duck out of season the R.C.M.P. are on their tail right away, and they are hauled into court. That is no part of any treaty ever made with them. With regard to fishing the situation is just about the same.

I realize that the federal government has turned over control of hunting and fishing to the provincial governments. This is something that should not have been done but I also appreciate that it perhaps became expedient to do it. In any event, these things worry the Indians a great deal, and it does not seem right that these people should be hauled into court for shooting a duck out of season. If they happen to come across a deer and shoot it a week before the official hunting season opens they are also hauled into court. If they fish in a lake where they are not supposed to fish, that is too bad, too. In any event, I will leave the matter there.

There is another matter that must be attended to, the provision of homes for the aged. I know these people get the old age pension but they have to live on it and cannot provide their own homes out of it. I realize that the minister wrote me a very sympathetic letter in which he said he was looking into the matter, but I want to emphasize that when the older Indians reach the age when they are no longer able to work they certainly need some place to live, and if they do not have a family to look after them they must find some place themselves. On the whole the accommodation provided for these old people on their reserves is no good at all.

The Indians are also not very happy because when the provincial government wants to put a road through their land they jolly well go ahead and do it. In some cases the provincial government has not made it stick, because in the case of the reserve in the constituency of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin I believe the Indians forced the provincial government to go around their reserve with the road.

The Indian Act should be reviewed again. I want to impress on the minister that whenever any changes are made in the Indian Act or in legislation which concerns the Indians these people must be consulted. They are very jealous of their rights and that is one right they should have. They say, and I agree with them, that nothing should be forced on them without their agreement.

The Indians are also troubled about the school situation. So far as the schools are concerned I am troubled about different things from what they are, but I will mention only what is troubling them. They are concerned about the fact that their children have to leave the reserve to go to school. They have to get up early in the morning to catch a bus and travel 25 or 35 miles to school. The bus is assigned to the reserve by the provincial government for this purpose. Some of the Indians think that the children are not ready for this. Some of the children go to a separate school and some go to the provincial Protestant school. Others are taken to schools closer to their homes but farther away from the main one in St. Paul. There are difficulties there, because in two of the towns to which these children are taken by bus there are only Protestant schools.

There is always trouble when the children of Indians who belong to the Catholic faith are forced to go to a Protestant school. They claim their children should not have to do this. There is great trouble with the church over this matter. I will not make any personal remarks about it but will simply say I think it is high time that the government of Canada recognize its responsibility—I know the department is doing a lot—in providing a proper education for these people. The government should take over the whole management of education for Indian children and not leave it for somebody else.

As there are many more who wish to speak I shall end my remarks by reminding the minister that the Canadian Citizenship Act needs a lot of review and many amendments. People concerned in cases like those I have mentioned have every right to expect a further hard, close look to be taken at their cases. They should receive the benefit of any doubt that may exist in anybody's mind, especially in the minds of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, for whom I have the greatest regard for very many reasons. Also, when the department reviews the Indian Act or brings in legislation concerning the Indians, please consult the Indians about it.

Mr. Moore: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon I should like to refer also to the original citizens of this country. Although the problems of Indians on reservations are similar throughout the whole of Canada, I should like to deal particularly with those in my area. One reserve, for example, contains some of the best farming land in the world and yet if the government is really looking for a depressed area they need look no farther. In recent years the population has been increasing rapidly. There is not enough farm land to go round and this situation will, of course, get worse.

Like people of any other racial origin, these people are not all interested in farming, nor are they all suited to it. Yet there is no other industry or technical training available. Many of the young men have great mechanical ability. They keep old wrecks of cars running week after week when I doubt that any of us could even start one of them. If training in mechanics was available to them they might make a good living in this or related fields.

Many of these families are attempting to make a living on a quarter section with little or no equipment and little chance of ever obtaining any. Certainly the land is not at fault, because many farmers in the same area have done very well on the same amount of land. I feel that the staff of the agency is very efficient. The farm supervisor is doing a fine job but the paper work alone in his office keeps him busy. It is a full time job. I have always felt that one farm would almost keep a supervisor busy, so how can he possibly give personal attention to so many units? These units need more personal attention than any other farming units.

At present much of the land has been leased to neighbouring farmers with large equipment. The leases are ordinarily for six years. If the land has not been broken, of course, the man who leases it retains the first two crops in the first two years. After that he turns the Indian's share into the band fund, ostensibly so that the Indian may, at the end of this six-year period, draw on this money to buy machinery to farm the land he owns. What he does, of course, in the six years he is waiting is sometimes a mystery to me. There is seasonal work available, naturally, on the surrounding farms, but this is rather on a piecemeal basis.

The new housing project seems to have been quite successful on this particular reserve. I remember that many years ago the housing situation was rather bad. The big problem, of course, is the low income of the people who must pay for these houses. Provisions for education are fairly adequate. However, I should like to point out one thing in this connection. The large Indian school on this reserve, an otherwise modern school with an enrolment of some 630 pupils, has no provision for an auditorium or a gymnasium, playroom or what have you. The weather in central Alberta, as you all know, is quite extreme at times. What do you do with that many pupils at recess or lunch hour when they cannot be turned outside? I might point out that eight miles away, in the city of Wetaskiwin, there are many schools and each one has an auditorium and a gymnasium. However, these Indian children are expected to grow up to be good citizens and to compete in our society.

I should like to mention hospitalization. For many years, the Indians have had their own hospital in the town of Hobbema, which is a village on this reserve. They were very pleased with this set-up. The more serious cases were sent to the city of Wetaskiwin or the city of Edmonton for treatment. When a new hospital was built in Wetaskiwin, it was decided that the third floor would be maintained for the benefit of the Indians, whether they liked it or not and the Hobbema hospital would be closed. I can assure you they did not like it, because they told me so. The opinion of these people had not even been asked. To be fair, of course, I should say the Hobbema hospital is still being held open as a clinic. It took a little persuasion to make this possible.

The chief objection from the standpoint of the Indians in so far as the new scheme is concerned is the additional travelling distance. Do not forget that to these people travel presents a real problem. The Indians also worry about going to a city hospital when they cannot be dressed as well as the other patients. Believe me, this is something about which they are genuinely worried.

May I suggest to the minister that when he visits some of our Indian reserves he cover the entire reserve area rather than being content to be shown some of the more prosperous areas. He should demand to see the other areas, and perhaps then he will get a better picture of conditions as they really are.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have read the minister's speeches and I have listened to his speeches in the house. As a result of that, I have informed a good many of my constituents in reply to correspondence relating to citizenship and immigration that the minister is apparently a human being and we can expect some results in the near future. I do hope that my optimism in that respect will be justified.

I want to say a few words in support of the excellent representations made by previous speakers from this group in respect of the need for an overhaul of the Immigration Act. I think that is very necessary if we are going to give justice to the many Canadian citizens who try, throughout the years, to bring relatives to this country. I can think of a good number of cases, and I am going to mention three cases to illustrate the necessity for amending the act, which illustrate the necessity of overcoming some of the rigidity in the act which causes some injustice to Canadian citizens.

There is an old Chinese gentleman who lives in my district who has had a market garden for some 40 years. He is respected by everybody, and he is getting on in years. He wanted to bring his son from Hong Kong to take his place and to do some carpentry work, things of that sort. I know the case is now being reconsidered. He has received a great deal of sympathy from the people in the area, and dozens and dozens of people have signed a petition urging the government to give favourable consideration to this case. They really believe this is a case which justifies favourable consideration.

Then, there is the case of Miss Irene Rebrin, which is still sort of hanging in the air. If I remember correctly the minister made a statement in respect of several cases —and this was one of them—about the middle of December, stating that a decision would soon be made. I hope this young woman will soon be relieved of her fears, and of the uncertainty that she has from day to day by a favourable decision on the part of the department. She is doing excellent work at the University of British Columbia as a lecturer in languages.

There is another case—I am only going to mention these two cases—which indicates the necessity for amending the act in various ways. There is a Miss Sarah Eichorn who came to the Kootenays some three or four years ago from the United States. She was doing excellent work in the Kootenay school of art, a school operated by the Society of Friends. She had had some illness and some difficulties in the United States, but she had overcome these prior to coming to Canada and establishing herself in the Kootenays. Her work was recognized by everybody interested in that type of work. Then, she went back to the United States for a period, and when she wished to return she was told she could not return because she could not qualify under certain sections of the Immigration Act. This caused great concern to the many people who had come to know this woman during her relatively short stay in the Kootenays. I understand she is not allowed to return as a visitor to obtain her personal possessions and that sort of thing. I hope every consideration will be given to a case like this. These are three cases that illustrate the necessity for an overhaul of the act, and a removal of some of these rigidities.

I am rising to speak on one other matter particularly, because during recent years I have had some unfortunate situations brought to my attention in the constituency which I have the honour to represent, largely as a result of the fact that there are two agencies of government trying to place persons in employment. The first is the national employment service, and the second is the immigration branch agency in the district. Now, the national employment service knows the needs of employers in each district. Applications for employees are turned in to the national employment service, and the officers know where different types of men can be placed. However, they are somewhat restricted as to travel.

This is what happens: The immigration officer in the district is notified—this is what has happened in the past in any event—that there will be 30 or 40 immigrants arriving at a certain time. He is asked to find employment for them. He has the right to travel all over his district. He goes to some employers and says, can you take one of these people? Often the employer has already sent in an application to the national employment service for an employee. However, the immigration officer is on his doorstep and says, can you place one of these people? The employer says, all right, send him along. He is just about to send in an application to the national employment service for an employee, and he does not do so because the immigration officer is visiting. I want to give these officers credit. They are pretty active people who know the districts well, and they go all over them.

But this is the result. Because these two agencies seek to fill applications for employment certain difficulties occur. I can give one illustration of something which has occurred on a number of occasions. In one of the small communities in my constituency a veteran born in the community, married and with four children, had been unemployed for seven or eight months. He was an electrician. He had turned in his application to the national employment service and visited its office nearly every day in an effort to get employment. Then an immigrant came in on the train, and the second day he was there the immigration officer found him employment in an identical position which this man had been seeking. He just happened to go to an employer who was short of a man that day.

One cannot blame the immigrant, but circumstances such as this can create a lot of unnecessary ill will and conditions that are most unfair to Canadian citizens, and to the immigrants directly concerned. In my opinion placement for employment should be undertaken by one government agency only, and that is the national employment service. Their officers know each district, the needs of employers, and where there is an opportunity to place a person. Incidents like the one I have mentioned have caused quite serious embarrassment to the officers in the service, and a lot of irritation at times.

What we require first of all is planned immigration. We should bring immigrants to this country only as they can be absorbed into employment, except in those relatively few cases where relatives undertake to be responsible for their maintenance for a period of time. We need a planned immigration policy, but we cannot have a planned immigration policy unless it is based on a planned economy, where we know the needs for employees, the needs of certain industries, so that we can bring the immigrants into Canada as they are required.

I mention this because it has occurred a number of times in my constituency and has been the cause of considerable unnecessary ill will. I urge the minister to have a look at this situation, where we have two agencies of government seeking to place persons in employment and working at cross purposes in many cases. I urge that this matter be investigated to see if something can be done to have placement in employment put directly in the hands, and only in the hands of the national employment service.

Mr. Olson: When the minister replies I hope he will deal with some citizens in my area who have been refused citizenship. On a number of occasions I have written to him respecting one particular case, which I also raised on the floor of the house. I presume the trouble has to do with security risks.

Subsequent to certain actions that were taken here by some hon. members of the house, the Prime Minister announced that there would be a board of appeal of some kind, quasi judicial, or otherwise. Since then I have asked the Minister of Justice how a member should go about bringing a case to this board of appeal, and he told me all I needed to do was write to him and he would initiate the action that would give this particular person an opportunity to present himself and have the matter cleared up.

I have done that. I have written to the minister of immigration on a number of occasions, but so far I have had no response from him, the Minister of Justice, or the Prime Minister that they are in fact going to hear this case. When he replies I would like him to tell me what I should do now.

Mr. Barnett: I am going to confine my remarks entirely to Indian affairs and because many of the things I might have said have already been said by the hon. member for Skeena, my speech will be that much briefer. The minister in his opening statement set forth a number of objectives with which most members of the committee can agree. Generally speaking I feel we should move in the direction he outlined. However, listening to him, my reaction was that life is going on with the Indian people of our country, and the state of affairs from which the minister suggested we should be moving away has existed for a long time. For example, it existed during the hearings of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Indian affairs in 1960 and 1961.

When the report of that committee was made public the Indian people in my area thought it had practically become law. I was not a member of this house at that time, but here we are almost at the end of 1963, and once more a minister is outlining some of the objectives which were set forth in the recommendations of that committee. Therefore while I am pleased, as many hon. members have been, with the ideas expressed by the minister, nevertheless I regret, even though he has not been in office many months, that he has not taken steps to institute what I would term a crash program.

As I say, the life of the Indian people goes on and their suffering continues, with its wastage of human talents. I am pleased to note that in supplementary estimates A, there are some supplementary votes devoted to matters of immediate concern to Indian affairs, but I would suggest that these moneys are a long way from being adequate. In correspondence I have tried to point out some of the inadequacies. At this stage of the discussion and at this late hour I will not outline them here, but I would like to give one illustration.

Under the west coast agency there is quite a number of Indian villages where housing conditions are appalling—and that is a mild word to describe the conditions. Some of these votes provide assistance for the development of better housing, but the funds being made available will hardly provide for the building of one house in each of these villages. Each of the villages needs more new houses than the entire agency can provide with its current level of funds. Therefore people will have to go on living in houses through which the wind blows and into which the rain seeps; and the rain sometimes does come down rather heavily on the west coast of Vancouver island.

That is just one little instance of what I describe as the inadequacies of what the people in the field can do with the funds, the sinews of war, with which we in this parliament are providing them. I could not agree more than I do with some of the suggestions and statements that have come from hon. members in this discussion, and we would like to see the end of the whole Indian affairs branch. The sooner, the better. When the hon. member for Northwest Territories suggested a 20 year plan, I think he was outlining a very realistic and worth-while program which many of us could support. But that, I submit, does not mean we should in any way seek to avoid dealing with the immediate situation.

This is why I would urge the minister to bring in, if he can, some further supplementary estimates for this work. I say that because I believe that in so many ways now the Indian people are just on the verge of a real breakthrough into a new era, and something in the way of a crash program at this time, with the understanding that the field people in his department know what they can do with it, could go a long way toward tipping the scales in the right direction to make the Indians willing and eager to become economically self-sufficient.

The hon. member for Skeena made reference to the welfare arrangement that came into effect in British Columbia on January 1 this year. I am not going to attempt to add to what he said, except to point out that because of the remaining disparities which exist in this matter, one of the effects has been that many of the Indian people are trying to move off the reserves and are creating an aggravated situation in the urban areas. I know of examples of Indian people who are ill-prepared for urban living and who are in effect becoming social delinquents because this particular half measure has been instituted between the federal and provincial authorities.

There is one other matter to which I should like to draw particular attention. The minister suggested in his opening remarks that we should be moving in the direction of providing for Indian people various public services on the basis that applies to the rest of the Canadian people, with particular reference to having the provinces assume a wider measure of responsibility in the fields of education, health and welfare, and so on. I would suggest that if we are to have federal-provincial conferences in this field, if we are to move in this direction with the provinces, perhaps one of the things we need is an interdepartmental conference among the various departments of the federal government, because I think the federal government should be providing a lead in this connection before it starts expecting the provinces to move along with them.

By way of illustration of what I mean I should like to refer to a letter which I wrote to the Minister of Public Works earlier this year. In this letter I asked him to have an investigation made into the provision of certain improvements to the harbour installations at Opitsat village on the west coast of Vancouver island. I will not go into the details of the particular proposal that I made, because they are not relevant to the point I want to make. I received a reply from the minister, dated October 22, which reads as follows:

Opitsat, B.C.

Dear Mr. Barnett,

Thank you for your letter of October 15, 1963, in which you make some suggestions for improving the float landing facilities at Opitsat, B.C.

This department does not maintain a public landing at this place. It is my understanding that Opitsat is an Indian settlement and that the landing there was provided by the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Your letter has, therefore, been referred to that department for consideration and reply.

I might add, Mr. Chairman, that I have received since then a letter from the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration saying he will have this matter looked into. But the point I am making is that if we are going to talk about provincial responsibility for Indian education, there should be federal responsibility through the Department of Public Works for federal public works in Indian settlements, the same as there is for every other settlement in this country. This is not a new matter that I am raising. In fact, I think the Secretary of State will recall that a number of years ago when he was minister of citizenship and immigration I asked him what the policy of the government was in this connection, because at that time—and this is apparently still the case—some installations for Indian villages were built by the public works department and others, as this correspondence reveals, were, and are, provided through funds of the Indian affairs branch. Apparently there is still no federal government policy in this connection. I would suggest this is one of the areas in which we should move to eliminate the kind of discrimination and disparity in the provision of public services to Indian people.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I have a number of things to say, but there are other members of this group who would like to speak, and obviously we cannot finish by six o'clock. I would therefore be quite happy if we could call it six o'clock.

Mr. Churchill: Let us go on for a few minutes, if the hon. member has a short speech to make. We are willing to listen to him very patiently.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I assume the minister is going to reply at some time or other. Certainly a number of matters have been raised upon which the committee will want to hear the minister's views and the replies the minister is likely to make to the various suggestions that have been put forward. I doubt if we could have that reply, plus any other statements, in the short time that is left.

Mr. Churchill: Well, Mr. Chairman, let us sit for one hour. That is long enough.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I think there was general agreement earlier in the day that at six o'clock it would be six o'clock, unless a moment or two would suffice to finish the business. I myself would be quite agreeable to pass the estimates, but the minister has not had a chance to reply. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is wont at all times to perhaps spend the afternoon napping in his office and then come down here and suggest that we should sit on.

Mr. Monteith: If you would spend some time in the house, it would be a lot better.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Monteith: Let us call it six o'clock.

Mr. Howard: Well, Mr. Chairman, they are saying it is six o'clock now. The hon. member for Perth said that if I spent some time in the house, things would be better. I would like to point out that the hon. member for Perth is a member of the privileges and elections committee, and the only time he attended that committee was to come in and defeat a legitimate request by the people on that committee which would have done something sensible for this country.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, on the question of privilege, I would like to state that I was present at the meetings of that committee more than the one time to which the hon. member has referred.

Mr. Peters: If it is the wish of the committee to continue this debate, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that tomorrow we sit for the same hours as we sat today. I think any hon. member would be quite agreeable to continuing this debate tomorow.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Peters: I would suggest that those who are saying "shame" should have a little understanding of the fact that the Hansard reporters, the translators and others have had an exceptionally difficult week, one which would not be allowed anywhere else. If we had a regular day's sitting tomorrow, hon. members might be agreeable to participate.

Mr. Pickersgill: I assume, Mr. Chairman, that if I attempted the unusual role of peacemaker I would not get very far; but if total abstinence would appeal to a few hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house, and if the minister were permitted about five minutes to make a brief reply, perhaps we could pass these estimates and we could then start something fresh at the next sitting.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: But I am not pressing that point at all. If there is any objection from any quarter the hon. member for Skeena is quite right. We got agreement to sit till six o'clock and I would not suggest anything more.

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that there is so much more legislation to be dealt with before prorogation surely you can get unanimous consent to sit another half hour, even if that is necessary. I say this because I know the N.D.P. would not dare obstruct, as I have before me a letter written by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to his constituents blaming the Conservative party for obstruction in this house. We have never been guilty of that and are prepared to sit tonight for the next half hour.

Mr. Knowles: If that letter is to be referred to I trust that the hon. member will read the entire letter; otherwise it is six o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not after six o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that the committee continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: Six o'clock.

Mr. McCutcheon: Obstruction.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I believe there would be a disposition on the part of the house to make an order now that on Monday next we sit until 10.30 instead of ten o'clock; that on Tuesday next we sit until 10.30 rather than ten o'clock; that if we complete the legislation that the government puts forward on those two days and there is any time left before 10.30 on either day the house would agree to go into committee of supply without question put; and that on Wednesday we would sit till seven o'clock. If my understanding of the will of the house is correct, I hope that that would be made an order of the house.

Mr. Churchill: We agree.

Mr. Knowles: This is in accordance with our understanding and we agree.

Mr. Patterson: We are in agreement with that plan.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: We also agree, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I think it should be understood that when we agree to these hours they should be kept. This constant business of trying to extend the hours another half hour or an hour is unfair to members who have stayed faithfully throughout the entire period. I think that if we agree to these hours we should adhere to them.

Mr. Churchill: Not necessarily.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to think that there is nothing but free consent in these matters and that that question would not arise.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it agreed that the hours of sitting next week be extended in accordance with the statement made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It is so ordered.

Mr. Churchill: Will the Secretary of State tell us what we are to fit into those hours?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be glad to tell the house what I should like to have fitted into those hours. I should like the house to find it possible on Monday to deal with the bill respecting the representation commissioner, I hope in all its stages; with the bill respecting the Customs Tariff; with the bill respecting salaries; with the bill respecting the national centennial; with the bill respecting C.N.R. financing; and with both the resolution and the bill respecting the world's fair.

In addition to that there are four bills which have already come from the Senate, three of them relating to the Department of Transport and one abolishing the Newfoundland Savings Bank, which has not existed for several years anyway, all of which we should like at some time during the week to get passed. They might be held over till after all the estimates have been passed to be dealt with during the interval while the other place is considering the appropriation bill. Those ten legislative items—the first six of which the government feels are essential, and the four Senate bills—we feel desirable to dispose of, and I do not think they are too controversial.

There are two other items on the order paper which might be taken if time could be found for them. One is the aeronautics bill, which is pretty well through incidentally, and the other the bill relating to provincial taxes; but the government would not hold up prorogation if neither of these measures is even touched during the week, much less completed.

On Wednesday, as I indicated last night, it is our thought that we should start with the eagerly anticipated estimates of the Postmaster General. About an hour later, when they have been completed we would take the Speaker's estimates, for which there seems to be some desire. We would also try on Wednesday to complete the Department of National Revenue. Some other departments would be available as well for the last hour or two after those have been completed on Wednesday.

As for the estimates for the other two days of the week I think it would be desirable to have some consultation when we have made more progress.

Mr. Howard: Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, could we perhaps get the sense of the house now with respect to the suggestion that we dispense with the debate on the notice of motion in the name of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Favreau) regarding the Indian claims commission in order that the bill may be introduced?

Mr. Pickersgill: In view of the debate which has taken place on the minister's estimates, if it was the desire to sit for another few minutes so that Mr. Speaker could leave the chair to go into committee to consider that motion, and then have the bill introduced, I think it would expedite matters a great deal and would be very much appreciated.

Mr. Churchill: Bring it forward in the regular way on one of the other days.

Mr. Knowles: Let us do it now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why wait for spring?

Mr. Peters: Agreed.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): When the leader of the house was announcing the business for next week I did not hear him mention the estimates of the Department of Industry. I believe there was a suggestion that they might be up for consideration on Tuesday. I see the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount shakes his head, but I believe the Secretary of State did say something to that effect. He knows the importance of this. The people of Nova Scotia are anxiously awaiting a statement by the Minister of Industry on the heavy water situation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I share the concern which the hon. member feels about this matter and every endeavour will be made to bring the estimates of the Department of Industry back again before the committee as soon as it is possible for the minister to say something constructive about that matter.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROVISION FOR DISPOSITION OF INDIAN CLAIMS

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the disposition of Indian claims and in relation thereto,—

1. To provide for the establishment of an Indian claims commission;
2. To provide for the duties of the commission, its decisions and awards;
3. To provide for appeals from the decisions of the commission to the Indian claims appeal court; and
4. To enact such financial provisions as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of the act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Favreau thereupon moved for leave to present Bill No. C-130, to provide for the disposition of Indian claims.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Churchill: Now we have made this concession, may we revert to committee of supply and go on with the estimates of the department?

It being fourteen minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 16, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ATOMIC ENERGY—TABLING OF AGREEMENT WITH INDIA

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies of an atomic energy agreement with India, the nature of which has already been indicated to the house, which is being signed in New Delhi today.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

NATO SECURITY SCREENING

Question No. 1,163—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Which NATO allies insist on a house to house check of neighbours before individuals have access to NATO information?
2. Does Canada make similar demands of our NATO allies before non-Canadian NATO personnel are given access to Canadian information and, if so, which NATO allies?
3. When adverse information is received about an individual from any source, is an opportunity given to that individual to refute or explain the circumstances before a decision is reached?

Mr. Pearson: 1 and 2. All parties to the north Atlantic treaty subscribe to a security agreement which requires them to protect each other's classified information. A common minimum standard of security procedures, methods and techniques has been established and adopted by all parties to the treaty. Each party is responsible for the security clearance of its own nationals irrespective of where they may be employed. Details of these arrangements which Canada has with its allies are matters of confidential agreement which it would not be in the public interest to disclose.

3. In some cases, when adverse information about an employee is received from sources which are secret and sensitively placed, it is impossible to discuss the information with him in order that he be given an opportunity to refute or explain it, either before or after a decision is reached. The reason, of course, is that divulging the information would jeopardize the source and his continuing ability to provide information essential both to the process of determining the degree of confidence which can be placed in employees being appointed to sensitive positions, and to obtaining continuing and accurate information about subversive organizations in Canada. In the majority of cases, however, where the source or sources of the adverse information are either public or capable of being adequately protected, the employee will be interviewed and given an opportunity to explain or refute the adverse information.

REDISTRIBUTION

Question No. 1,254—Mr. Mather:

What is the situation respecting redistribution of electoral constituencies in line with population?

REPATRIATION OF CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

Question No. 1,591—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

1. Has the government any plans for the early repatriation of Canada's constitution?
2. Have any negotiations been initiated with a view to repatriating the constitution?
3. What, if any, are the obstacles delaying the immediate repatriation of the Canadian constitution?
4. Is Canada recognized as a fully sovereign and independent nation at the United Nations?
5. What steps would be necessary to achieve the recognition in the U.N. of the Prime Minister as head of state?

Answer: 1, 2 and 3. As the Minister of Justice announced in Banff, on September 6, 1963 and at Quebec city on October 19, 1963, it is the intention of the government to convene a federal-provincial conference next year to seek agreement on an amendment to the British North America Act under which all amendments to the constitution may be made in Canada, and such further amendments as are necessary to meet the needs of today and to reflect the new concept of co-operative federalism. Agreement with the provinces to an amendment to the British North America Act is required to accomplish these objectives.

4. Yes.

5. It is not possible to have the United Nations recognize the Canadian Prime Minister as head of state because he is head of government.

Miss LaMarsh: The government is fully aware of the proposal made by a group of French scientists and other leading citizens that France, the United States, the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R. devote one half of 1 per cent of their military budgets to international cancer research.

No formal request for Canadian participation has been received but such a request would receive careful consideration by the government.

LITTLE ANSE, N.S., BREAKWATER

Question No. 1,710—Mr. Douglas:

Have representations been received concerning the harbour of Little Anse, Richmond county, N.S., and a breakwater to protect the fishing fleet and, if so, what is the nature of these representations and what consideration has been given to them?

Mr. Badanai: Yes; the representations were of a general nature requesting that the harbour at Little Anse be improved. The department has since considered various possibilities including a second breakwater but, because the department maintains a satisfactory harbour at Petit de Grat only four miles away, it was considered the expenditure involved could not be justified at this time.

GRADE CROSSING, SCARBOROUGH TOWNSHIP

Question No. 1,725—Mr. Scott:

1. Has the government received any representations for action to be taken to remedy the dangerous situation of the grade crossing on St. Clair avenue east in Scarborough, Ontario, between Kennedy road and Midland avenue?
2. If such representations have been received, who made such representations?
3. Has the government any plans in this regard and, if so, what is the nature of such plans?
4. To what extent does the board of transport commissioners take the initiative in these matters?

Mr. McIlraith: The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advise as follows:

1. No. However, a complaint was received to the effect that traffic tie-ups occur at St. Clair avenue crossing as the result of the number of trains passing over the crossing during the rush hour.

2. The complaint was made by Mr. J. R. Brash, Scarborough, Ontario.

The township of Scarborough suggested that further investigation be made into the operation of the gates at the crossing to ensure a free flow of highway traffic when the crossing is not being used by trains.

3. St. Clair avenue crossing is protected by two flashing light signals, two short arm gates and one bell.

The board of transport commissioners has requested Canadian National Railways to place a time recorder in service at St. Clair avenue crossing, in order to determine the number of delays to highway traffic at the crossing. Canadian National Railways advised that the recorder was in operation from 7 p.m. September 30 to 12 p.m. November 9. The recorder chart indicates that on some occasions the gates operated longer than necessary due to eastward extended approach being occupied while gates were being operated by some other train movements. The company advised that it is reviewing the operation of the circuits to determine the action necessary to reduce, as far as possible, the excessive operation of the protection.

4. As soon as the board is made aware of any dangerous condition at a crossing, an investigation is made to determine the appropriate action to be taken for the protection, safety and convenience of the public at such crossing.

It is not known whether or not any diversions have been made to Halifax or Saint John as it is the prerogative of the vessel owner or agent to load his ship where he considers it will best suit his purposes.

6. Is there any possibility the bridge structure may affect access or ease of traffic into the harbour of Three Rivers and, if so, in what ways?

7. Has the government examined the plans of the bridge structure and, if so, has there been an acceptance of these plans as complete, adequate, and designed for this specific place and problem?

Mr. McIlraith: Chapter 71 of the statutes of 1956 which received royal assent on June 7, 1956; and chapter 65 of the statutes of 1960-61 which received royal assent on June 22, 1961, refer to the bridge corporation and bridge project. Orders in council P.C. 1963-368, March 4, 1963, deals with the matter of approval of plans for the bridge.

2. Yes. It has been estimated that remedial works in lake St. Pierre to protect against this could cost up to $60 million.

3. Studies of protective works which might be required were developed during the past winter and the spring of this year.

4. No.

5. This question relates to a matter of legal interpretation.

6. Yes, because of the number and location of piers. The St. Lawrence river pilots have also raised objections with regard to handling of ships in the river at this area which would result from the bridge construction.

7. The order in council of March 4, 1963 had three different sets of plans attached. As previously indicated to this house, grave concern exists that any of these plans could cause serious problems relating to navigation, ice jamming, flood damage above and below the site of the bridge, impediment to harbour growth and other possible consequences which could only be resolved, and then perhaps only partly, by heavy federal expenditures on upstream protective works.

T.C.A. CONTRACT FOR DC-9 AIRCRAFT

Question No. 1,828—Mr. Marcoux:

Does the Minister of Transport intend to recommend that Trans-Canada Air Lines cancel their order for DC-9 aircraft until prototypes of the aircraft have been produced, tested and certified as meeting all safety requirements?

Mr. Macdonald: No, except in the case of veterans with overseas service who meet the health and physical fitness requirements. (a) Since the 18th of October, 1960, when the age limit for employment as guard was raised from 35 years of age; (b) no, because of the agility and physical fitness required of the custodial staff of the penitentiaries.

2. No.

3. Mr. Moore has served in various capacities in grain elevators since 1921, including positions as assistant superintendent in 1930 and elevator manager in 1958. He was appointed as general superintendent of grain elevators at Montreal harbour on April 1, 1963.

4. No.

RECREATIONAL PARKS DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 1,841—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Was the subject of recreational parks discussed at the recent federal-provincial parks conference?
2. Did the federal government propose a joint federal-provincial program of recreational parks development to meet the urgent needs for additional facilities of this kind and, if so, will this program supplement or supersede the federal-provincial camp grounds and picnic site program?

Mr. Laing: 1. Yes, in the context of possible measures to improve and extend park facilities across Canada to meet current and expected requirements.

2. Federal officials discussed with provincial officials the need to inventory all parks resources in Canada at the federal, provincial and municipal level. This was agreed and when the inventory has been concluded, it will be possible to determine what gaps exist in the present parks systems and what plans should be implemented to provide for future needs.

NATIONAL PARKS ZONING POLICY

Question No. 1,842—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. What are the basic features for the zoning policy for national parks announced last January?
2. Has the policy been applied to any of Canada's national parks as yet?
3. Is it intended that the policy shall apply to all national parks in Canada and, if not, what parks are excepted?

Mr. Laing: 1. In accordance with the principles of the National Parks Act and national parks purpose, most of the land area in each park is to be retained in a wilderness and near wilderness state. The act provides that these unique natural areas shall be preserved, yet at the same time they are to be made available for the use, benefit and enjoyment of the public. Reconciling these two objectives and solving the problem of a proper balance between character and intensity of public activity and the ability of various regions in a park to support such use without impairment of the natural resource is the crux of the planning objective.

The solution to this problem and the basis of long range planning is the zoning concept. The purpose of zoning is to give order to planning and development by delineating the most appropriate use for each area and setting forth policy objectives for each zone which will ensure protection of the primary resource yet provide appropriate facilities for public activity, understanding and enjoyment of the attractions.

2. A preliminary zoning plan has been worked out for the four contiguous mountain parks, Banff, Jasper, Yoho and Kootenay, showing ten wilderness zones encompassing about one third of the area. The remaining two thirds are classed as semi-wilderness. Present and planned facilities associated with access, accommodation and heavy use are contained within the semi-wilderness zones. While the preliminary zoning plan requires further development, current planning is proceeding on the basis of these principles.

3. Yes, as far as it may be reasonably applicable to each park, considered individually. In the smaller parks, large wilderness zones will not be possible, but even these parks afford scope for setting apart natural areas managed and used for public enjoyment in much the same manner as the wilderness zones in the larger national parks.

*TEMPORARY POST OFFICE EMPLOYEES—PAY RATES

Question No. 1,848—Mr. Knowles:

1. What authority set the rates of pay for temporary or casual employees of the Post Office Department for the 1963 Christmas period?

2. Was any reference made to the Department of Labour to determine whether these rates were fair? If so, what was the reply of the Department of Labour?

Mr. McWilliam: 1. The governor in council set the rates on recommendation of civil service commission in accordance with section 10 of Civil Service Act.

2. Not by Post Office Department.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS AND RETURNS TO ORDERS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Before the orders of the day are called there are one or two references I should like to make to questions that are still on the order paper, some of which have been there for a considerable period of time and to which we are most anxious to have replies. I am not going into particulars on this occasion except to say that question No. 1,374, by the hon. member for Acadia, asks how many leaders of parties are at present receiving the $4,000 provided for in Bill No. C-91 as assented to August 2, 1963. This question has been on the order paper since October 16. Then there is starred question No. 1,442 asked by the hon. member for Cumberland, which is along similar lines, and we are very anxious to obtain answers to these questions so the house will not be in the position of the hon. member for Red Deer the other day when he started to make a statement about something that had occurred, and to which the house and posterity will never have an answer.

I am sure these two questions could be answered. I am not going into particulars on the other questions to which I might make reference, but I will do that on a later occasion unless the government sees fit, by tomorrow or the day after, to bring down answers to these questions. The fact that some of them are starred questions and have stood on the order paper for quite a while is not in keeping with that degree of co-operation desired in the house.

The other day the Secretary of State told us about the number of orders that had been returned and those that were still outstanding, and he said this was some kind of a record. I do not want to go into that, but I do point out there is a large number of interesting returns outstanding, and I hope that within the next 24 hours they might be brought down. We are very anxious to receive some of the information sought. For instance, there is correspondence respecting the world fair, which I do not think has been brought down. At least it had not as of December 10, even though the order was passed on July 3. Then the Minister of Finance, who I am sure is desirous at all times of giving the house full information, has not brought in the return relating to sales tax on building material and machinery, which was also ordered on July 3.

A further return which has not been made relates to C.N.R. financing, and the hon. member for Acadia was the mover of a motion seeking correspondence regarding rail line abandonment, which was made an order for return on June 19. I shall not go into further particulars, but we are very anxious to have these questions answered and these orders for returns brought down.

We are endeavouring to co-operate in every way, but we ask that the government on its part bring in the answers to these questions and the returns that were ordered by the house, some of them months ago, relating to matters which should not have required such a delay in giving the replies.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think the right hon. gentleman is perfectly correct that every effort should be made by every government at all times to supply the house with all the information required for its services, and I will endeavour to impress upon my colleagues, and through them all departments, the desirability of making every effort to facilitate business between now and the time the session terminates. Of course these returns go on for the life of the parliament, and even if there should be a prorogation this week they would still be an obligation on the government.

So far as the questions are concerned, I believe there has never been a session of parliament in the history of Canada when so many questions have been answered and asked, but I will endeavour to do everything I can to see that as many more as possible are answered, even the most recent ones including, for example, question No. 1,890.

UNITED NATIONS

COMMONWEALTH SEAT ON SECURITY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. This morning's press carries a report from the United Nations saying that under heavy pressure Canada has given up on an attempt to preserve a formal commonwealth role in the United Nations. It also says this has come as a result of the desire on the part of certain nations to eliminate the commonwealth seat in reorganizing the 11 nation security council. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether the commonwealth is going to have a seat in the reorganized council, and what position the Canadian government proposes to take?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to give my hon. friend a reply to that question. The debate in the United Nations assembly on the question of enlargement and equitable representation in United Nations councils is to end tomorrow, and when the Secretary of State for External Affairs returns he may wish to report more fully on the results of that debate.

Meanwhile I can say that the question of future representation on United Nations councils is not likely to be solved at this session of the assembly because the Soviet delegation indicated that it would not ratify the amendments to the charter which would permit enlargement of those councils, especially the security council, and that kind of enlargement would go a long way to ensure that the commonwealth would continue to be represented by commonwealth members on the council.

The Soviet delegation links this question to the representation of China, in what I consider to be an unjustifiable stand, and resolutions adopted by the general assembly may not succeed in providing the necessary additional seats for new members from Africa and Asia. In addition, at the present session 55 African-Asian delegations proposed an enlargement of the general committee of the assembly—if you like, the steering committee—from 21 to 24 members, but omitted reference to the commonwealth in that enlargement. As a result of that omission Australia, New Zealand and Canada decided to table an amendment in order to restore this reference to the commonwealth.

I should add, Mr. Speaker, that considerable pressure was brought to bear on the Canadian, Australian and New Zealand delegations to withdraw this amendment, but that pressure was resisted. However, on Saturday last two African members of the commonwealth whose interests were designed to be maintained and protected by this amendment, Ghana and Nigeria, as well as other delegations, appealed during the debate for the withdrawal of this amendment, assuring the movers of the amendment both in the committee and behind the scenes that the commonwealth position would remain unchanged and that the commonwealth would continue to be represented on the general committee.

Under these circumstances Australia, New Zealand and Canada decided not to press the amendment to a vote, which I think was a very wise decision; because if there had been a vote on the resolution to protect the interests of the commonwealth, the commonwealth delegations themselves would have been divided on that vote.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I take it that the Canadian representatives at the United Nations will continue to press for the commonwealth having a role on the reorganized security council and general committee?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as I recall it, on November 28 when the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question on this matter, the Secretary of State for External Affairs stated that he did not expect there was any probability of the commonwealth losing its seat under the gentlemen's agreement that I think has been in effect for some 17 years.

I would ask the Prime Minister to say whether Australia and New Zealand suggested to Canada that this amendment should be withdrawn, or whether the suggestion came from the Canadian representative, the chairman of the Canadian delegation, the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart).

Mr. Pearson: To the best of my information and knowledge, Mr. Speaker, the decision not to proceed with this amendment was made after consultation among the Australian, New Zealand, Canadian and other commonwealth delegations, Ghana and Nigeria for instance, who would not have been able to support it if it had been proceeded with.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Into which of the proposed geographical areas does Canada fit?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, that question has not arisen and will not arise as long as there is an understanding that there should be a commonwealth seat on these councils. If that is abandoned—and I hope it will not be abandoned; we will do our best to prevent it being abandoned—I do not know into what geographical area we will fit.

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO COST OF OPERATIONS IN MIDDLE EAST

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday morning the right hon. Leader of the Opposition inquired about arrangements for financing the United Nations emergency force in the Middle East. The day previous the budgetary committee of the United Nations had approved certain proposals for financing this force for 1964. I have the details here and it might save time if I put them on Hansard rather than read them into the record, if that is agreeable.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: Text of the document above referred to is as follows:]

On Saturday morning the Leader of the Opposition inquired about arrangements for financing the United Nations emergency force in the Middle East. He referred to the position of the Canadian delegation as regards a proposal then before the general assembly.

On Friday afternoon the fifth committee of the assembly approved (56-10 Soviet bloc —13) a resolution co-sponsored by Canada, three Scandinavian countries, India and Nigeria, which contained an agreed formula for financing UNEF during 1964. The formula provides that the 1964 costs of UNEF estimated at $17,750,000 will be shared as follows: the first $2 million will be assessed at the regular budget rate; the remainder will also be assessed at this rate, except that the less developed countries will be allowed a 57.5 per cent reduction in their shares. For the past several years, it has been recognized that the less developed countries, having a limited capacity to contribute toward the costs of peace keeping operations involving heavy expenditures, should be allowed reductions in their shares. The gap created by granting these reductions is filled by voluntary contributions from the developed states.

These financing arrangements apply as regards the less-developed countries and are not related to the problem arising from the refusal of the Soviet bloc and some other developed countries to pay their share of the costs. These countries are assessed at the regular scale and their arrears of payment have been accumulating.

[Mr. Pearson.]

At the fourth special session of the assembly last June, the formula for financing both UNEF and ONUC allowed 55 per cent reductions to the less developed countries. The Canadian delegation at the current session was instructed to urge the readoption of the June formula and, in fact, it was adopted for the Congo force. In relation to UNEF, however, the less developed countries pressed for a slightly larger reduction. The voluntary contribution expected of Canada to fill the current gap has not been finally determined but it is estimated to be about $80,000.

Because of the importance which Canada attaches to the role played by UNEF in the Middle East, the government considered it desirable to support the modified formula. In agreeing once more to an ad hoc arrangement, the government has continued to insist that financing arrangements for peace keeping operations must be placed on a long term basis incorporating the principle of collective financial responsibility.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was kind enough to give me this statement in advance. I would now like to ask him what the Canadian government is doing in the United Nations to assure that the nations that are in default in their contributions will be called upon to pay them. At present a few nations including Canada, are willing to assume more than their share, but I would like to ask are the provisions of the United Nations charter to be flagrantly disregarded without any action being taken against the defaulters?

Mr. Pearson: I am sure the right hon. gentleman knows the steps that have been taken in recent years to do what can be done to ensure that all members of the United Nations discharge their financial responsibilities. The matter is under consideration at this assembly. I will have to look into the discussion and make a report to the right hon. gentleman later in the week.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

ROYAL COMMISSION—REPORTED REMARK BY CHAIRMAN RESPECTING JURISDICTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is he aware of the statement made in Quebec city last Saturday by the co-chairman of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, Mr. Andre Laurendeau, to the effect that the commission's terms of reference exceed the federal jurisdiction, and does he agree with it?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that statement. I will be glad to look into it.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. If Mr. Laurendeau's statement is justified, will the provincial governments be able, within their jurisdiction, to prevent the commission from inquiring into fields which come under the provinces or the school boards?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: I would not like to comment on that until I have seen the statement.

ROYAL COMMISSION INTERIM REPORT—ETHNIC GROUP REPRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister with reference to the commission on biculturalism and bilingualism. Has the Prime Minister received any report on the progress of the commission and, if so, does he not now feel that the membership of the commission should be increased by representatives of other ethnic groups as I have suggested to him on a number of occasions?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): It is not anticipated that we shall be receiving reports from time to time on the work of the commission, and this is in accordance with the normal practice with regard to royal commissions. We did receive a report some time ago from the commission, though I should like to check this, on how it proposes to organize its work. I will see if I can get a copy for the hon. member. But we do not anticipate receiving progress reports.

As far as the second part of the question is concerned, consideration was given to enlarging the membership of the commission but it was decided that this would not be advisable, at least at this time.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH MANITOBA DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister now tell the house the time and place of the meeting tomorrow between a delegation from Manitoba and the federal government with regard to the T.C.A. overhaul and maintenance base at Winnipeg? Can he also tell us whether he will be present, and whether it will now be possible for other hon. members from Manitoba to be in attendance also?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand the meeting is to take place at ten o'clock tomorrow in the west block, room 213. I expect to be present, together with my colleagues, and as I understand there is no objection by our visitors from Manitoba to the attendance of other members of parliament, they will be very welcome.

Mr. Knowles: Does the Prime Minister not agree, as a matter of fact, that instead of there being no objection, the Manitoba delegation would like us to be there?

Mr. Pearson: We would like them to be there too, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: We shall be there.

WORLD FAIR

COST OF REMEDIAL WORK TO PROTECT SITE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I should like to direct this question either to the Minister of Transport or to the Minister of Public Works; I am not sure which of the two is the responsible minister in this case. What is the estimated cost of the remedial work to be done in the St. Lawrence river by the federal government in order to protect the world fair site in Montreal?

Mr. Speaker: This question, it seems to me, should be placed on the order paper.

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TAX ON BUILDING MATERIAL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister?

Does the Prime Minister intend to implement the recommendations contained in the brief which the Montreal junior chamber of commerce submitted to the government last week, concerning the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials used for the world fair?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that so many of my hon. friend's questions are in a form that they cannot be answered on the orders of the day.

TRADE

VANCOUVER—REPORTED DIFFICULTIES IN FLOUR SHIPMENTS TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister heard any reports about difficulties in the shipping of flour from Vancouver to Russia. If so, what can he report to the house on this matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard these reports, but I will inquire and let the hon. member have a reply as soon as possible.

LUMBER—CANADIAN PROTESTS RESPECTING U.S. ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry. Can the minister give the house a report on the situation with regard to the bill before the United States congress pertaining to the stamping of lumber?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Forestry): I cannot add anything to what was said by my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce on Friday last on this subject, unless some news has come in within the last hour or so, in which case I would ask my colleague to supplement what I have to say. We believe that the bill which was approved by the Senate, particularly that aspect of it which deals with sawn lumber, is contrary to the obligations which the United States assumed under the GATT agreement. Representations to this effect have been made at the highest level in the United States, and we are still awaiting a report.

FOREST PRODUCTS—CANADIAN PREPARATIONS TO MEET WORLD DEMAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Forestry): May I take this opportunity to deal with a question which was asked on Thursday last by the hon. member for Dorchester. The hon. member referred on that date to some remarks I had made in San Francisco the previous day. He asked what the federal government was doing by way of helping the forest industries to take care of an expected increase in demand. That question covers a wide field, and to answer it would take some considerable time. However, I have prepared an answer for the information of the hon. member and of others in the house, and I would be glad to file it. It is about two pages in length.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: Text of document referred to above is as follows:]

As the hon. member for Dorchester and the other members of the house are aware, the responsibility for managing the forest industries of the ten provinces and for the sale of forest products generally rests with the industries and the provinces. The responsibility of the federal Department of Forestry is largely in the research field. In so far as my department is concerned, its methods of assisting the forest industries fall into three general categories:

1. We assist the forest industries directly through forest products research in our two well equipped and well staffed laboratories in Ottawa and Vancouver. The function of the two laboratories is to increase the industries' competitive ability through better wood products and the reduction and profitable utilization of primary waste materials.

2. The department is currently reviewing its role as a co-ordinator of special forest economics information in an effort to become a more effective and useful partner with industry in this vital area. With its special understanding of the forest industries, the department has embarked on a program of supplying forest economic data to industry that will be of direct and immediate benefit in such matters as increased plant efficiency, marketing research and analyses to provide new uses for wood, the development and exploitation of new markets, and the expansion of existing markets.

3. We also assist the provinces in securing and maintaining the resource itself through—

(a) Research on the better production and management of trees and their protection from fire, insects and diseases;

(b) Co-operative federal-provincial forestry agreements designed to improve access into the forests, fire suppression effectiveness, reforestation activities and various other projects proposed by the provinces which would assist in the preservation of the resource and its optimum utilization by industry. Millions of federal funds have been allocated to these activities over the last decade.

A specific recent example of practical assistance to industry is the $3 million being made available for the expansion of the research facilities of the pulp and paper research institute of Canada, at Pointe Claire, Quebec.

Another example of our program for greater assistance is the construction at Victoria, B.C., at a cost of nearly $3,000,000 more, of what will be one of the finest forest research laboratories on the continent. This unit is intended to provide constant and up to date practical research information on forest protection and management to that province's great forest industries, as is being done through other departmental laboratories and establishments right across Canada.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE FURTHER LEGISLATION RESPECTING BUDGET PROPOSALS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I will direct this question to the Prime Minister. No doubt he, as well as other members, has read of the continuing adverse reaction of business circles to the budget proposals, and also of the effect upon American investment which is shown in the recent dominion bureau of statistics returns. Is there any probability of the government bringing in, before this session ends, legislation to end the present punitive and restrictive policies which follow the acceptance of the budget by this house?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without accepting for a moment the qualifying adjectives of my hon. friend, there is no intention of bringing in legislation during the remainder of this session on the matter to which he has referred.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I cannot go as far ahead as the next budget, but is it intended, before the next budget comes in, to make a change in this regard in order to preserve foreign investment in Canada? Would the Prime Minister reply to that?

Mr. Pearson: Surely, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman knows that these matters are dealt with as matters of government policy and are not dealt with on orders of the day. This is true especially with questions concerning the next budget.

[Later:]

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): I have a question for the Minister of Finance, one which I deferred asking him the other day in his unavoidable absence. In view of the answer given by the Prime Minister to the Leader of the Opposition regarding investment curbs, I wonder if the Minister of Finance is now in a position to comment on the statement made by the finance minister of Quebec to the effect that these curbs which have been imposed are harmful and should be removed at once.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I have no wish to enter into controversy, now, either with the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings or with the gentleman to whom he has referred.

WATER RESOURCES

CONFERENCE TO CONSIDER REQUIREMENTS OF PRAIRIE PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has the minister received an invitation from Premier Lloyd of Saskatchewan to attend the conference of provincial ministers from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to be held in Regina on Friday, December 20, to discuss the future water requirements of the prairie provinces. If so, has he accepted this invitation?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the conference that is to be held in Regina embracing officials of the three prairie provinces has to do with the studies on the Nelson-South Saskatchewan rivers. We have deemed it sufficiently important that it is my intention to show up, and I am going to be accompanied by my colleague the Minister of Agriculture. I am also taking my deputy, Mr. Cote, and Mr. Clark of the water resources branch.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I wonder if I might address a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture which bears on this same question. Will the Minister of Agriculture be taking along the director of P.F.R.A. to this meeting?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): We will be taking along the chairman of the prairie water board.

COMBINES

REQUEST FOR SETTING UP OF MARKETING ADVISORY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question related to one I asked on July 30 last, as to whether the government was prepared to accede to the request by the distributive trades advisory council to set up a marketing advisory council and to repeal section 34 of the Combines Investigation Act.

At that time the minister said the matter was under consideration. I wonder if the minister can tell the house whether consideration has been given and whether a policy has been determined with respect to it.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Perhaps the hon. gentleman would allow me to answer that question tomorrow.

AGRICULTURE

APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER FOR EASTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Charles Lamb (Victoria, Ont.): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister on a matter which is of great concern to us in eastern Canada. Has the right hon. gentleman given further consideration to the appointment of a minister of agriculture to represent eastern Canada, as I understand was promised during the election campaign?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This matter is still under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

SUGAR

SALES BY B.C. REFINING COMPANY AT LESS THAN WORLD PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the hon. gentleman say whether the British Columbia Sugar Refining Company sold sugar substantially below the world price and the eastern Canada price throughout the sugar crisis and, in fact, used its inventories to peg the price of sugar in western Canada—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question is certainly one for the order paper.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—REPORTED STATEMENT BY SECRETARY GENERAL RESPECTING CANADIAN BOMBER BASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister taken cognizance of a statement reported to have been made over the week end by Mr. Dirk Stikker, secretary general of NATO, to the effect that it might be wise to base the Canadian bombers somewhere else if President de Gaulle refuses to allow their nuclear warheads to be stored on French soil?

[Mr. Starr.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, I heard that statement over television and I have also read it in the press. We shall be receiving a report on this statement, as well as on other matters, from my colleague the Minister of National Defence who is at present in France.

Mr. Martineau: Has the Prime Minister himself any comment to make on this statement?

Mr. Pearson: No, except to say that the secretary general's statement was very guarded. He simply said that in certain circumstances it might be desirable in the future for these squadrons to be moved from France to Germany.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—INQUIRY AS TO STORAGE ON CANADIAN SOIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement by the Minister of National Defence on November 20 in reference to nuclear weapons, I wonder if the Prime Minister has now been advised whether there are any nuclear weapons in any form stored on Canadian soil.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not been advised to that effect.

Mr. Woolliams: As a supplementary question, what negotiations are the Prime Minister and the government engaging in to negotiate Canada out of nuclear weapons?

Mr. Pearson: That certainly is not a question to be answered on orders of the day.

SUGGESTED REDUCTION IN ALLOWANCES OF MILITARY ATTACHES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence or, in his absence, to the associate minister. Under his expenses reducing program, is it the intention of the minister to decrease the allowances granted the military attaches in our embassies who, on top of their salaries, have received an average of $8,600 for entertainment and other social expenses?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is a question for the order paper.

NATO—STATEMENT ON GROUNDING OF CF-100 SQUADRONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday last the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) asked a question concerning the grounding of CF-100 aircraft. I am now in a position to answer it.

An investigation which was carried out subsequent to a recent accident involving a CF-100 aircraft revealed that the unsuccessful attempts by both crew members to eject were caused by a technical malfunction of the ejection seats. Similar problems were discovered in other CF-100 ejection seats. Consequently all CF-100 aircraft were grounded pending the successful conclusion of the investigation. At this time modifications to correct the malfunction have been designed and are in the process of being applied. It is expected that these modifications will be implemented and the CF-100 aircraft will commence flying within two days.

SPORTS

REQUEST FOR GRANT FOR 1966 QUEBEC FESTIVAL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Following an excellent recommendation made by the national council on fitness and amateur sport, does the minister intend to make the $500,000 grant requested by the committee on interprovincial winter games?

[Text]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. On the advice of the national advisory council on fitness and amateur sport, the Canadian sports federation was asked to carry out a study of the feasibility and desirability of holding a Canadian sports festival. As a result of this study, a recommendation, which has been endorsed by the national advisory council, was made to the federal government for the holding of a winter games festival in Quebec in 1966. A group in Quebec city is now working on this project and it is hoped that a successful games festival will result.

In projects of this kind the federal government ordinarily makes a grant to cover a proportion of the costs, subject to matching. If Quebec wished to hold the games, the proportion of federal backing would be subject to negotiation.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, does the minister intend to announce soon changes affecting the membership of the national council on fitness and amateur sport?

[Text]

Miss LaMarsh: The 30 man national advisory council on fitness and amateur sport was appointed in January, 1962. Fifteen members were appointed for a three year period and 15 for two years, which appointments expire in January, 1964. Whether appointments were for a two or three year term was decided on an alphabetical basis. The question of appointments to the council is now under consideration.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY INCREASES FOR INTERPRETERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): I have a question for the Secretary of State. Will there be a Christmas present for the interpreters? Oh, I see the Secretary of State is out. I will put the question anyway; perhaps someone else will answer. In other words, does the minister expect a report from the civil service commission concerning the pay status of interpreters and a consequent betterment of conditions in this branch of the service in this house?

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Now that the government is moving to increase the pay of the deputy ministers, what plans does the right hon. gentleman have in mind for increasing the pay of the civil servants in the lower categories?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Steps were taken to that end before the salaries of the deputy ministers were dealt with.

FISHERIES

VANCOUVER—CONTRIBUTION TO COST OF AQUARIUM BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Does the minister intend to honour a commitment made by the last government to pay a third of the cost of an addition to the aquarium building in Vancouver?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): I am pleased to advise the hon. member that not only does the present government intend to honour the commitment made by the last government to pay one third of the cost of an addition to the aquarium building in Vancouver, but treasury board has already approved an amount of $250,000, subject to equal contributions being made by the city of Vancouver and the province of British Columbia. It is understood, of course, that parliamentary approval will have to be received for expenditure of this amount, as of other items in the estimates.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

PROVINCIAL PARTICIPATION IN DEVELOPMENT OF FEDERAL POLICIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the federal government gave assurances to all or any of the provinces that their advice will be sought before federal decisions are reached affecting fiscal, monetary or tariff policies, all matters within the federal jurisdiction.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no such assurances were given.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then, Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. The premier of Quebec on "Inquiry" made this statement:

> As far as that is concerned, I am satisfied with the reply, obtained from Mr. Gordon. It was agreed that there would be consultation and exchange of information on fiscal policies, monetary policies and even tariff policies.

Is that statement correct?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on several occasions I have said that the government would welcome suggestions or proposals on all aspects of policy from any interested people. During the course of the recent federal-provincial conference there was a committee of the conference established to discuss economic policy. We met all day on it. I would hope there will be similar discussions each year if this is the wish of the provinces. However, I made it perfectly clear at the time and I should like to repeat now that obviously final decisions in the areas of fiscal policy, monetary policy or tariff policy are the responsibility of the federal government and the federal government only.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question. I ask the Minister of Finance this. Did he in reply to the premier of Quebec agree that there would be consultation and exchange of information on fiscal policies, monetary policies and even tariff policies, as asked for by the premier of Quebec on page 38 of his brief?

[Mr. Robichaud.]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I can add nothing to what I have already said, which seems to me a perfectly clear answer to the question asked.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It has all the clarity of evasion.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister did he agree with the premier of Quebec that before any fiscal, monetary or tariff policies were proceeded with by the government there would be consultation with the provinces? Surely he can answer yes or no.

Mr. Gordon: With great respect to the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes or no?

Mr. Gordon: —it is my responsibility to answer questions to the best of my ability but not to be subjected to cross-examination.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The old idea of divine right.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question. In view of what he said in his reply to the Leader of the Opposition, is the procedure followed now as enunciated by him any different from what it has been in the past?

Mr. Gordon: I would think very different, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Starr: In what way?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

RETARDED CHILDREN—REQUEST OF ASSOCIATION FOR GRANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Did the minister receive a brief from the Canadian association for retarded children, and what consideration and reply has she given to their request for a nominal grant of $62,000 for their work?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I did in fact receive such a brief. I have received a number of excellent representations from representatives of the retarded children, as well as from about seven members on this side of the house, for an increase in the grant from $5,000 to $62,000. I think the house will agree at once that this would be a very substantial increase in one of our health grants, well above anything heretofore given to a similar organization.

I should like to say that members of the government have given a great deal of thought to the matter of retardation, and letters have gone out to the effect that during the calendar year 1964 a national conference on the subject of retardation may be held with the assistance of all the provinces and all other interested parties in order that a Canada-wide program may be worked out. The association has been advised of the probability of such a meeting and the likelihood that a recommendation will be made to defer until another year approval of anything along the lines of the request that has been made.

Nothwithstanding that, I am very happy to inform the hon. member and those on this side of the house who have expressed such interest that a recommendation has been made to treble the present amount.

Mr. More: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that mental retardation touches the lives of approximately two million Canadians, does the minister not think that a request for a grant of $62,000 for this purpose is reasonable, having regard to the fact that $600,000 was recently approved to deal with problems arising from cigarette smoking?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I draw my hon. friend's attention to the fact that the $600,000 to be spent covers a five year period, and that it is a special amount which was recommended as the result of a considerable amount of study and a conference which brought together all interested individuals. I call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that such a special grant for retarded children might well result from a special conference. Nothing I have said should be taken as indicating that the government is not alive to the problem, but rather that the size of the grant requested for this specific program could not be met out of the appropriations for next year.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TORONTO—CONVERSION OF STATION CJBC TO FRENCH LANGUAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State arising out of some remarks he made on the orders of the day on Friday. In view of the fact that the 1961 census shows that in Toronto there are 1,647 persons out of a population of 672,000 who speak French only, and in view of the need to meet the legitimate rights of these people to have radio programming in their own language, I wonder whether the minister would ask the C.B.C. to investigate the cost of a relay station of the Radio Canada network for this group as opposed to the conversion of station CJBC from an English speaking to a French speaking station.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I will be very glad to draw the hon. gentleman's question to the attention of the C.B.C., but he could have done it equally well himself, of course.

Mr. Scott: I think it might be a little more effective coming from the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: I doubt it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question supplementary to the one that has just been asked by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott). Would the Secretary of State have the same investigation undertaken as regards the English broadcasting stations in the cities of Quebec and Montreal, so as to have a comparison made afterwards between the population and the number of English broadcasting stations operated in French cities?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. gentleman's question will come to the attention of the C.B.C., even without my doing anything about it. However, I shall take great care that it does. I feel that the board of directors are well aware of all the statistics, and that in the discharge of their responsibilities, they must take all these into account. I believe we should remember that this task was given to the board of directors of the C.B.C.

INDUSTRY

HEAVY WATER—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEW PRODUCTION METHOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, but as he is absent I will direct it to the Minister of Labour. Have the atomic energy commission scientists made known to the government any findings since the start of their investigation into the British American Oil Company process for the production of heavy water?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister of Industry has indicated in the house that he will be receiving a report later today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacInnis: Would the Minister of Labour then indicate to the house why he was so optimistic in his remarks in Cape Breton over the week end?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, optimism is an attribute of this government.

Mr. Nowlan: It is the only attribute you have.

TRADE

WHEAT—FINDING OF GLASS IN SHIPMENTS TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Last week I asked the Minister of Transport what progress had been made in an investigation into the quantities of glass which were found in Canadian wheat shipped to the Soviet union. I urged the minister to make a statement as soon as possible in the interests of protecting the good name of Canadian wheat abroad. I wonder if the minister has that report.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. On Saturday last the hon. member asked me a question on this subject with particular reference to the published report of a speech made by the Montreal port manager, Mr. Beaudet. There have been earlier questions on the subject. I think there was one arising out of my statement of December 2, a question by the Leader of the Opposition and another question by the hon. member for Calgary North, as well as one or two others. My answer, therefore, will be a little longer than would otherwise be the case.

An intensive investigation was made into this matter following the receipt of formal notification from the Soviet authorities that glass or bottles had been found in seven vessels going to the U.S.S.R. Two of these vessels had loaded at Montreal, one at Baie Comeau, two at West Saint John, one at Quebec and one took on cargo at both Montreal and Halifax. These vessels loaded during the period from October 12 to November 8.

I have read the reports of Mr. Beaudet's speech and have also spoken to the officials of the department who were present and heard the speech. In its references to this subject it seemed to accurately describe the situation. Reference was made in the speech to the fact that possibly only one hold in each of the seven cargoes had been found to contain glass. This statement was based on a verbal communication in Moscow to the chief inspector of the board of grain commissioners, which suggested that the contaminated grain was merely a part of the cargo and not the entire quantity contained on the seven vessels involved.

The investigation to which I referred earlier was conducted by an interdepartmental group consisting of representatives of the Departments of Agriculture, Transport, Trade and Commerce, and the board of grain commissioners and the national harbours board. Glass was discovered also in four railway carloads recently shipped from water and inland points in Ontario to port elevators.

I have come to the conclusion that it would be extremely difficult if not impossible to determine at this time where and by what means the glass was introduced into the grain. I am of the opinion that the unfortunate incidents were the result of carelessness, perhaps arising in part out of the pressures involved in handling the very large movement. I consider therefore that our efforts now should be mainly concentrated on avoiding a recurrence.

In previous discussion in the house the question has been raised as to where responsibility lies in a matter of this kind. There is no one government agency with complete control or authority and, of course, commercial firms are also involved in the movement of grain. The board of grain commissioners, under the Minister of Agriculture, is responsible for the quality and condition of grain until it is discharged from a licensed elevator into an ocean carrier. The national harbours board, under the Minister of Transport, operates elevators which, like privately owned elevators, are covered by the regulations of the board of grain commissioners. Its responsibility ceases when the grain leaves its elevators. Any change in the quality or condition of grain, or responsibility for the introduction of extraneous material after loading on a vessel, rests with the commercial firms involved in the transactions. It is obvious, therefore, that a number of agencies and private interests are involved in grain handling.

I wish to refer now to steps which are being taken to avoid a recurrence. It must be recognized, first, that some government departments and agencies have staffs working in and around grain handling facilities and have some authority over bottle or glass material on government premises. The board of grain commissioners, the national harbours board and the departments of agriculture and transport have notified their staffs involved in grain handling that the government takes a very serious view of the matter, and that they are not permitted to have glass bottles in any areas where grain is handled. They have been informed what disciplinary action will be taken if employees are found responsible for causing extraneous material to enter grain handling or storage facilities or holds of ships. Additionally, steps are being taken to prevent the removal of glass containers from canteens on property under government control where grain is handled.

I have also communicated with the commercial interests involved, namely the grain elevator operators, grain carriers, both water and land, shipping agents, stevedoring companies, maritime unions, independent port wardens and harbour commissioners, indicating the government's serious concern and pointing out the possible adverse effects on the economy. These people have been asked to take immediate steps to ensure that glass containers are not used in areas where grain is handled, and to advise the government of the action they are taking to ensure that no extraneous material is allowed to enter grain.

The board of grain commissioners is enacting a regulation, under the authority of the Canada Grain Act, making it an offence for any person wilfully or carelessly to cause or permit glass or other extraneous material to be introduced into or remain in grain, in any elevator or land carrier or in any vessel delivering grain to a destination in Canada.

As the minister to whom the responsibility for co-ordinating this matter has been given, I now appeal to everyone involved, both management and labour, government and private, to do everything possible to avoid careless or thoughtless actions which would damage the reputation of Canadian grain with serious consequent effects on our exports and on the economy as a whole. I am confident that the necessary co-operation will be forthcoming from all concerned. The high reputation and quality of Canadian grain are renowned throughout the world. I trust that with the measures now announced, and with the co-operation of all who are involved in the handling and movement of grain, Canada's record will be even better than in the past. I want to assure the house that this matter will be kept under close surveillance.

I must apologize to hon. members for taking a little longer than I would otherwise in answering this question, but I do believe the subject matter is of such importance to the grain trade and the economy of this country that I had a duty to answer the question fully.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure the minister did not have to apologize for the length of his statement. It was an important one and, with unusual clarity, he placed the situation before us. I should like to ask him whether it is a fact, as reported in the press, that there were two shiploads of wheat in June or July in which glass was found, before this matter arose in connection with shipments to the U.S.S.R. If that be so, what investigation took place at that time? What action was taken in order to prevent the difficult position that arose recently to which he alluded?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is a fact, and it was referred to in my statement of December 2 in answer to a question by the Leader of the Opposition, as appears at page 5320 of Hansard.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What action was taken at that time?

Mr. McIlraith: At that time there was an investigation, through the board of grain commissioners and the harbour authorities only because the ships were identifiable as were the points at which they loaded. It was confined to that area. Now there has been an extensive investigation of the whole subject matter, with the results that I have indicated.

Mr. Douglas: I thank the minister for his very complete answer, because this is a very important question affecting the good reputation which Canadian wheat has abroad. I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and ask him whether the Soviet union has filed any claim for reimbursement of money for the wheat alleged to have been contaminated.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, no claims have been filed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

RESPONSIBILITY FOR RED ENSIGN BEING FLOWN UPSIDE DOWN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Public Works. I would like to ask him who was responsible for the discourtesy and indignity to our official Canadian flag, the red ensign, which was flown upside down at the Prime Minister's residence and on two other buildings on Friday, December 13.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this was explained last week by the Prime Minister himself.

Mr. Smallwood: As a supplementary question, what steps are being taken to correct this situation and make sure it does not occur again?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

FAILURE TO RE-EMPLOY EXPERIENCED SEASONAL WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Is the Postmaster General aware that a number of persons who through the years have been employed as part time employees during the Christmas season, and are therefore well experienced in this type of work, are at a complete loss to know why they are being replaced in post offices this year?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in some cases where we have new people employed during the Christmas period it is because those skilled people were not available. Sometimes these skilled people are available, and those who are in charge of the post offices know the ones who are experienced and I think they give special consideration to them.

Mr. Webb: As a supplementary question, will the Postmaster General send out a directive to the postmasters that they choose them, and not defeated Liberal candidates?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

STATEMENT ON POSITION OF FUND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, last week the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) asked me about the resources of the unemployment insurance fund. At the end of November the amount in the fund was approximately $56 million.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR WINTER WORK BONUS ON RENOVATION WORK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) asked me about representations received with respect to incentive payments on renovations of old buildings. In reply to that question I wish to tell my hon. friend we have received representations. They are presently under consideration, but it is unlikely that a positive answer will be given to them at this stage.

PENSIONS

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE, BLIND AND DISABLED PAYMENTS—AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Have any of the provinces yet reached agreement with the federal government to pay the increases in old age assistance and in the allowances paid to blind and disabled persons, effective December 1, which were passed in this house last week? If so, which provinces?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we were keeping the provinces informed by telegram of the progress of the legislation through the house and of the royal assent to it. I have not checked this morning and I do not know whether any of them have notified us that they wish to reach agreement. However, they have been notified and we suppose they will answer right away.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister check this and make a report tomorrow?

Miss LaMarsh: I will be glad to do so.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED ADOPTION OF PRIVATE BILL RESPECTING COURT OF CLAIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the genial Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I would like to ask him, now that he has seen Bill C-130, respecting the disposition of Indian claims, in the cold hard light of day, does he consider it advisable to withdraw this bill from the order paper in favour of Bill C-67, introduced by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), respecting a court of Indian claims, which was given first reading on May 31?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in view of the full consideration that has been given to the bill we have introduced, and in view of the fact that we feel it is completely fair and of great advantage to the Indians, it is now time to give them a chance to consider it and to know their answer by the beginning of next year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO COMMENCEMENT OF NEW SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would advise the house as to the date of the reassembling of parliament after the new year.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that of course will depend upon when we finish this session; but perhaps later in the week, on Wednesday or Thursday, when we have a clearer indication than we have now as to when this session may be finished, there could be discussion with hon. gentlemen opposite as to the government's intention in calling parliament together next year.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for intruding into the question period at this late hour, but the matter I raise is one of considerable concern to thousands of Canadians. Would the Prime Minister inform the house whether the correspondence related to the Columbia, which was ordered to be tabled by virtue of a motion of this house on October 30, will be produced before this session ends?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will look into that matter, Mr. Speaker, and see whether I can give my hon. friend a definitive reply tomorrow.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR OFFICE OF REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-126, respecting the office of representation commissioner and to effect certain consequential amendments to the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, is the minister going to say anything in this regard?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I thought the right hon. gentleman made a very sensible suggestion when we were at the committee stage on the resolution, that we should have a full debate at that stage. The bill has been available for a week, and it seems to me there is nothing of a general character that I wish to say about the bill at this stage. I think it correctly represents what the resolution said it would; that it is to establish a representation commissioner whose primary function will be with respect to the redistribution and, to be frank, in the contemplation that a certain person who would probably be agreeable to the house accepts this position, it was felt to be desirable that the representation commissioner should have, for a period of years, a kind of appellate jurisdiction in respect of the office of the chief electoral officer. That is the principle of the bill. It seems to me, sir, that we could debate it much better clause by clause in committee, where in fact I shall probably wish to propose one or two amendments, as may other hon. gentlemen.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Could the minister indicate them now?

Mr. Pickersgill: The principal amendment that I have in mind at the moment is with respect to clause 22. Quite frankly, I do not like that clause in its present form, and I am going to suggest that a different method be employed to bring this matter to the attention of the House of Commons. The method I will suggest is that the Prime Minister should have the responsibility of bringing this matter before the House of Commons for a review.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to speak at length on this matter. As far as the general plan is concerned, it covers only the setting up of the office of representation commissioner, with certain consequential amendments to the Canada Elections Act. There is one clause that I think deserves consideration, and perhaps the house would allow me to make reference to it now. I refer to clause 10, which provides for the appointments and says:

> The commissioner may
> (a) appoint such officers and employees as are necessary for the proper conduct of the work of the office of the commissioner; and
> (b) prescribe the duties of such officers and employees—

I think the government would be weakening the provisions of the Civil Service Act by this clause, and I hope the minister will be prepared to agree to an amendment whereby these appointments would be made by the civil service commission. In so far as clause 11 is concerned, it provides that the commissioner may engage on a temporary basis the services of persons having technical or specialized knowledge of any matter relating to the work of the commissioner. I do not think that would be improper.

I am very glad this is the first step toward the assurance that we shall have in this country a redistribution made without regard to political bias or partisan considerations. We brought this question before the house in 1952. Hon. George Drew moved and I seconded an amendment when the bill was before the house. This amendment was:

> That the bill be not now read the second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house consideration should be given to the enactment of a measure to provide for the appointment of a commission to effect the redistribution of electoral ridings in accordance with the census of 1951, pursuant to the provisions of the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952 inclusive; such commission to be instructed to make its report to this session of parliament upon the resumption of the sitting.

It is quite interesting to note the change of opinion that takes place over the years, Mr. Speaker, for I see that those who voted against that amendment in 1952, when we endeavoured to bring about this desirable objective, included the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Garland), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer), the Solicitor General (Mr. MacNaught), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) among other distinguished members at that time. In other words, with the passing of the years viewpoints change in the light of discussion.

I was rather surprised today to hear the view expressed by the Minister of Finance, who is rather new to the house, that he was not going to be cross-examined. That was the view of Charles I. I thought it had ended with the unfortunate demise of that king, but apparently that view is still held among those who occupy positions of responsibility on the treasury bench and who are not fully conversant with the traditions of parliament.

I have studied the reports of the commissions appointed in Australia, and they are very revealing. Mr. Castonguay, who it is generally agreed will occupy the position to be created under this bill, visited Australia; and a reading of the reports by the commissioners on the way they have dealt with the matter in their country is of particular interest. I do not see any one of them occupying a position similar to the representation commissioner who belongs to all of the commissions as set up; the reports do not indicate that. But the report of the commissioners of the various states were in general acceptable with one or two exceptions, all of which are set forth in the reports. The grounds of protest are generally those of inequitable distribution of enrolments giving excessive numbers to metropolitan divisions, illogical inclusion of some urban metropolitan districts with adjacent rural areas, and matters such as that. In other words, in Australia the general complaint seemed to be that there was over-representation in the urban areas, a complaint that is the reverse of that sometimes advanced in this country.

Our attitude throughout has been that action should be taken in this regard. The setting up of the commissioner is acceptable. I think that was not the view we held when we were in office, but I am not going to argue that question again. I think a man of the stature and fairness of Mr. Castonguay will make a worth-while contribution toward making parliament more effective.

I have read in the press editorials to the effect that when the Secretary of State endeavoured the other day to bring before the house first reading of the bill on the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons, and to provide for the readjustment of such representation, I took objection to that course in order to stall, hold up or obstruct action in this regard. That was furthest from my mind. I know that no matter what you do it will always be wrong as far as some newspapers are concerned. I am speaking of editorial writers. If I were to read the metropolitan morning newspaper editorials this morning I would find that the present government is wrong in two matters. Well, that is par on that course. The criticism which was made of me as leader of the Conservative party was made without justification, rhyme or reason. I raised the question whether we should proceed with first reading of the bill at that time in view of the fact that the representatives of the various parties had met and had decided that this bill would not be proceeded with at the present session. I raised that question, as it was my right and responsibility to do. The terms of this bill would not receive consideration in the present session, and that was the understanding. There is no reason at all why, before the end of this session, which I hope is not too far removed—

Mr. Pickersgill: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Pickersgill: I said "Hear, hear".

Mr. Diefenbaker: So you agree.

Mr. Churchill: I wish the N.D.P. would say "Hear, hear".

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Secretary of State reveals a wonderful spirit of co-operation by what he has just said, which is appreciated very much. I simply want to make clear that we have no desire or wish to hold up redistribution, but arrangements have been made among the party representatives that the bill on the redistribution will not come up at this session. Therefore the suggestion in the minds of one or two editorial writers, or at least the criticism which was advanced, is devoid of that responsibility which one expects on the part of those who view us from positions outside of parliament. The suggestion of one paper was that if I, on behalf of the official opposition, were to obstruct this redistribution measure it should be pushed through by force of a majority in the house. That was a gratuitous statement, again without any foundation.

So far as this bill is concerned we intend to give it our support, asking, of course, that there be an amendment to the clause with regard to appointments to which I have made reference. We welcome the plan which is involved in the setting up of an electoral commission. We welcome any step which is taken to bring about an end to a system whereby political opponents are operated upon and their constituencies carved without anaesthetic. That was our idea when His Excellency, in the speech from the throne on January 18, 1962, used these words:

> My government will ask you to take steps to ensure that the forthcoming redistribution of electoral districts is made in an equitable manner upon an objective basis. To this end you will be asked to approve for the first time in our history a measure to create an independent commission to recommend the changes required in the electoral districts as a result of the decennial census.

We are at one with the government in this, and with the other parties as well. I hope that through discussion and examination, even cross-examination, we will bring about a bill that will be operative, effective, and generally will contribute to a better parliament in assuring a better basis of administration.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we agree with the Secretary of State and the Leader of the Opposition that it is not necessary to have a lengthy debate at the second reading stage of this bill. Indeed, we hope that debate on the entire bill at all its stages will not be lengthy and that we can get it passed in a reasonable period of time.

We have already indicated in an earlier debate on this whole question of redistribution that we welcome most heartily the main purpose of this piece of legislation. As hon. members who have looked at the details of the bill will be aware, it is a mixed bag. It deals with one aspect of redistribution and it deals with some aspects of our election machinery. Hon. members are also aware that there are features of this bill which cannot be fully implemented until another piece of legislation has been enacted. But even after all of this has been said, the fact remains that the main purpose of the bill before us today is to give parliament the opportunity to take the first step toward the redistribution of the seats in this house by an impartial body. I suggest that the day when we pass a first step of this kind is a red letter day for parliament. Some of the experiences of the past in connection with this subject are recorded in the pages of history, and some of those pages make dark reading. I think parliament will be doing itself proud when it recognizes that seats in the House of Commons should not be drawn by the members who are elected, but should be drawn by an impartial body, bearing in mind that the seats are the possession of the people of this country.

I welcome the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). I do not think I have very often made an observation like that, and I hope the right hon. gentleman will not faint, on hearing words of commendation from me—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will wait until you conclude before I intervene.

Mr. Knowles: But, as the Leader of the Opposition is aware, interpretations were placed on statements made earlier by him, or on actions taken earlier by him, which suggested that he was not prepared to go all the way with the proposals for impartial redistribution. He has set aside those doubts. He has referred again to the proposal made in the speech from the throne in the last session in which he was prime minister. He has told us he wants redistribution to be carried out by an impartial body. That is now the position of the present government. It has been our position throughout the years. It is the position taken by other groups. We are all agreed. I hope the day has now come when it will not be necessary for editorial writers to say to any party in the House of Commons: No politics, please, in connection with redistribution. It is up to us. We can demonstrate that we are united in this high purpose, and if we can carry it through it will be a good day for parliament.

I recognize that this is only a first step—that the other piece of legislation will also have to be passed. I recognize we may have difficulties about some of the details in the other bill. We have already indicated some of those difficulties during the earlier debate. I need not repeat the position we in this party took with regard to some of those details. However, I suggest that differences over detail will not justify anyone saying that anyone is trying to detract from the idea of redistribution by an impartial body. We like, in this House of Commons, to be in a position to attack right and left—to blame the Liberals, to blame the Tories, and that sort of thing. It is a happy thought that today we have no need to do that, and the sooner we make it clear that we are unanimous on this principle of redistribution by an impartial body the better it will be for parliament and for the whole legislative and democratic process in this country. I trust we can get on with this piece of legislation and, having passed it, that we can deal with the other bill at an early date when the new session starts.

Representation Commissioner

It was not clear from what the Leader of the Opposition was saying about the other bill what his attitude is toward its being introduced tomorrow, or some day this week, and being read a first time. I accept his suggestion, despite any previous difficulties we may have had, that the introduction of that bill should be held up until this debate is over. But after this debate is over and after this bill has been passed, I think there might be consent, tomorrow or later this week, to the introduction of the other bill so that it may be printed and we may know what the government has in mind for parliament at the next session.

When we get into committee on this bill there may be a few amendments moved from this part of the house to some of the provisions dealing with the details of the election machinery. We have no amendments to suggest to those features of the bill which deal with redistribution. I did intend to raise a question about clause 22, and I am glad, as I am sure Your Honour will be glad, that the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) has indicated there will be an amendment to that clause. We are not supposed to refer to clauses of a bill on second reading, but far be it from me to be outdone by the Secretary of State or by the Leader of the Opposition, who have both done so.

Before I am called to order, may I remind hon. members that clause 22 proposes the unusual course that something should be done on a motion in the name of Mr. Speaker. I am sure this is a situation we should try to avoid. We once had something done in this house on the initiative of the Speaker, something which is of sorry memory, six or seven years ago, and I think it would be far better that if a motion has to be made it should be made in the name of the house by the Prime Minister as the leader of the house. So I am glad the Secretary of State does propose to make an amendment with regard to clause 22, the only clause having to do with the redistribution aspect of this bill which we might have sought to amend. With regard to some of the other clauses dealing with the election machinery, we may have suggestions to make.

Because of the unanimity which has been demonstrated on this occasion, we are able to omit references to past history. The fact is we now have the party in power, the party which has been in power, and parties which would like to be in power all agreeing that the time has come for independent redistribution. This is an important step, and we support this bill.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): In the earlier debate on this subject I took the opportunity of placing on record the position of the Social Credit party with respect to the measure now before us. I rise at this time simply to say that we continue to support this bill. As far as the principle is concerned, we are giving it our full support though, possibly, we may have reservations with regard to some of the detailed proposals. We recognize that political and party views do play a great part in the operations of parliament, but we recognize, too, that recently there seems to have been a tendency toward co-operation with respect to some of these important questions. We certainly welcome the fact that the house is endeavouring to put this particular matter above political considerations. I believe that with a continuance of the co-operation we have seen we should be able to arrive at a definite conclusion on the matters now before us. I rise simply to voice our support for the principle of this measure.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Perhaps I might just say a word to close this debate—to express my appreciation for the unanimity which has been shown and, in particular, for the way in which the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) has expressed his unanimity, that is to say, by his silence giving consent.

I would not have risen at all except that I wanted to reiterate what I said earlier, namely that except for the monetary provisions contained in this bill, with respect to which the initiative of the crown must, of course, be respected, amendments which are put forward from any part of the house will be considered on their merits.

With regard to the question raised by the right hon. gentleman with respect to the appointment of staffs, let me say that I am perfectly willing on behalf of the government to consider a different procedure. But I would point out that the chief electoral officer stands in exactly the same relationship to parliament as does the civil service commission. This would be equally true of the representation commissioner, if the bill is adopted. He is not an officer of the government: He is an officer of parliament, and as independent of political parties as the civil service commission itself could be.

It may be there would be reasons why, in the case of certain members of his staff, and particularly in view of the fact that we are faced with some degree of temporal urgency in getting on with the work, it might not be as convenient to use the machinery of the civil service commission which, in the effort to be fair, is sometimes a little cumbersome. I would prefer to wait until we get into committee to consider the matter because, quite frankly, I do not disagree with the right hon. gentleman at all in principle.

I know he will not misunderstand me when I say that the only contentious note he introduced was his casual reference to the Minister of Finance. I am aware of the scrupulous desire the right hon. gentleman has always shown in the house to be absolutely and judicially fair in these matters. All the Minister of Finance was doing today was objecting to cross-examination on the orders of the day, which anyone who will read paragraph 173 of Beauchesne will see is completely out of order. The Minister of Finance, even though inexperienced, was completely right about the rules. The proper time to cross-question him is when he introduces a budget, when he brings forward estimates, when he introduces bills. But I think the Minister of Finance took—

Mr. Knowles: Speaking of the rules, what relevance has this to the bill now before us?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is perfectly right. It has none, and I am going to cease and desist at once. I was not making the remarks in a very serious vein, anyway, any more than the right hon. gentleman was. I think we should seek to preserve the spirit of unanimity and highmindedness which has characterized the consideration of this matter up to the present, and which I hope will continue throughout its passage through parliament.

Again in a very serious vein, I want to thank all hon. members for the assurances of support. Perhaps I could conclude by saying that I was possibly a little less than frank with the right hon. gentleman when I opened the debate. I have had another amendment to the bill prepared which, if the house wishes, I have the authority of the Prime Minister and my colleagues to propose. It would be made at the end of the bill and in this way we could save ourselves the trouble of having to introduce and adopt a resolution for the appointment of the first representation commissioner. In this way we could carry out right in the legislation itself, in so far as the first commissioner is concerned, what seems to have been and I hope will be reiterated to have been the intention of the whole house, to appoint the present chief electoral officer to this office.

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not by name but by office.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not understand it. If it is not by name, what does the minister mean?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps we can deal with this when we get to the committee stage, rather than entering into technicalities now, which might cause another breach of the rules. I simply wished to be perfectly frank and to indicate at this stage that if this could be done in this way it would save having to bring in a resolution later in the week to do what it seems to me we all want to do anyway.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles: Unanimously.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 3 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 4—Tenure of office.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the age of the potential appointee?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am told just a little bit less than half a century.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Almost the same diffidence that some women show.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 5 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 9—Report on methods of registration of electors and absentee voting.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, as indicated at the second reading stage by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, there are two or three suggestions by way of amendment that I should like to propose to clause 9 which, as was pointed out, really has to do with the instituting of a certain review and study of the methods of registration of electors and methods of absentee voting by electors. The suggestions I wish to make are by way of addition, rather than change in what is now set forth. They have to do generally with the idea that in addition to examining the methods of registration and of absentee voting which may be in effect in other countries the study should also include an examination of the methods followed in respect of these matters in the various provinces of our own country. I do not know what other members of the committee have found the situation to be, but certainly I have had a great many people suggest to me from time to time that we should be moving toward greater uniformity in respect of elections at both the federal and provincial levels. It seems to me that an opportunity is provided under clause 9 at least to consider this idea.

In order not to prolong the discussion I should like to move immediately:

That paragraph (a) of subclause 1 of clause 9 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

Representation Commissioner

"Review and study methods of registration of electors used in provincial elections and in elections in countries where continuous electoral rolls are maintained."

In line with the suggestion made earlier by the Secretary of State I would hope he will recognize that this amendment is put forward in a completely non-partisan way and I would hope that perhaps he might be the first to indicate his acceptance of the idea put forth in the amendment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the purpose that the hon. gentleman has in mind?

Mr. Barnett: With regard to the study and review of methods of registration, the purpose is to provide that the commissioner should also make a study of the methods of registration used in elections in the various provinces, or provided for in the election acts of the various provinces, as well as those in use in other countries.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the hon. gentleman say in what provinces there are permanent electoral lists?

Mr. Barnett: I can speak with some knowledge of my own province of British Columbia where there has been a form of permanent election list for many years. I am not saying that I consider it to be a completely satisfactory one.

An hon. Member: Far from it.

Mr. Barnett: Far from it; I think that expresses my sentiments as well. It is my view that one thing that might be achieved by including the provinces in this study would be a move toward uniformity of election acts and methods of registration and voting as between the provinces and the federal government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order. Before we have a discussion on the amendment I should read it to the committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could make a suggestion, Mr. Chairman? Before any of these amendments are put, could we save time if we had a little discussion? Perhaps these amendments could be put forward as suggestions and then the hon. member could move them after we had discussed them. This might save a little time.

Mr. Barnett: In line with what the Secretary of State has suggested, perhaps I should indicate at this point the other amendments I had in mind.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may say so, I think it would be preferable to put these forward as suggestions for consideration; then if there seemed to be no serious objection to them the amendments could be moved. I may say there seems to be something to this idea, but I believe the exact language does present some difficulties.

Mr. Barnett: The second suggestion would involve paragraph (b). Here again, it is simply a matter of inserting a provision for provincial elections. There should be a review and study of the methods of absentee voting used in provincial elections and elections in countries where provision is made for absentee voting. For many years we have had in the province of British Columbia a system of absentee voting in provincial elections. It is one that is considered to be quite satisfactory and which meets the needs of the province. It is one that would be well worth including in this study.

The next suggestion I wanted to put forward has to do with studying the methods of proxy voting used in provincial elections and in elections in other countries. I have been given to understand that one or two of the provinces of Canada do have some arrangements for proxy voting under certain circumstances. I am not familiar with the details, but I have been informed that is the case. The next proposal would need an additional paragraph (d), if it were put forward in this form. It would relate to the preparation of a report setting forth the recommendations of the commissioner as to whether the extent to which the methods of redistribution, absentee and proxy voting referred to in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c), might be applied or adapted for use in federal elections in Canada with a view to reducing the time required for the holding of federal elections. This, I feel, would make it clear that we would expect to have placed before us in a detailed way, the recommendations of the commissioner on these matters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I think what the hon. gentleman has in mind could be brought about by simply leaving out certain words in paragraph (b), to review and study methods of absentee voting by electors, who, by reason of absence, and so on. If you omit those words, it would enable the commissioner to look into a plan, whether provincial or national.

This certainly is a very important matter in so far as those who serve in external affairs, trade offices abroad or where other positions of extraterritorial responsibility are concerned. The people who serve their country abroad, with the exception of those in the armed forces, are placed in a very unenviable position in being denied their full rights of citizenship. Anything that might be recommended in that connection will be beneficial. Over and over again, as I have visited embassies abroad and met the Canadians who serve their country outside of Canada, I have found that one of the major objections they have to serving abroad is that it denies them the right which is essential to full participation in the government of the country.

I am sure the hon. gentleman will not misunderstand me when I say that I am not impressed by the suggestion that there should be proxy voting in this country. There are enough difficulties in the way now, without adding to them.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the right hon. gentleman would permit a question? Would he believe that perhaps there had been a little too much proxy voting sometimes in the past?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, I seem to recollect one famous example, without identification in any way of the member connected with the incident many years ago. I believe it was the Right Hon. Mackenzie King, in the election of 1935, who was visiting a certain province in which one of his grandfathers was buried. During the course of the day he said he would like very much to visit that cemetery. He said, "You know, he was a fine man but he was a Conservative; I never quite understood that. He voted Conservative consistently." The member, who afterwards occupied one of the highest positions on the treasury bench stated, "Don't worry about that, Mr. King; he has been voting in every election." This type of proxy exercise of the franchise is just one of those difficulties in the mind of the Secretary of State, otherwise he would not have impelled me to give that example.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to make it clear at once that in putting forward the suggestion that a study be made of proxy voting, I am not necessarily suggesting I should like to see it included in our federal elections act. However, if some provinces or some other countries have some provisions along this line, and as I say I did not realize that they had until recently, I would be interested in knowing more about them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am very much disposed to accept the view of the committee in a slightly modified form. I think it could be done by the omission of certain words, as the right hon. gentleman has said. It could be done also, by the addition of one or two words. I do not believe the hon. member's amendment, in its original form, to paragraph (a) and also to paragraph (b), would mean quite what he intended to mean. If the paragraph referred to a review and study of methods of registration of electors used in provincial and national elections, in provinces and countries, I think that amendment and the same amendment in paragraph (b), would meet the problem. I am quite sure from what discussion I have been able to have about this matter it was just taken for granted that anything being done in Canada would be studied. This amendment would make sure that it would be done. If there were no objection, I do not see why the hon. member could not move his amendment in amended form to paragraphs (a) and (b). There does not seem to be any disposition not to accept it.

I rather share the view of the Leader of the Opposition in respect of the proxy question, but for an additional reason to the one he has given. It is this: There is a time limit in this measure on these studies. If redistribution is done, and these studies are to be done, the whole business is to be reviewed, according to the provisions of this bill, in 1969. From what I am able to learn these two studies alone are going to take pretty well all the time that is required.

I think it is the unanimous view in the country, at least among those who have anything to do with elections, that if we can find a satisfactory method of having permanent lists to reduce the period of elections, we would all say hurrah. Anyone who values his citizenship, as we all do in this house, must feel that every Canadian citizen should have the opportunity of exercising the most important right of citizenship, the franchise, if it is possible to arrange to have that done.

These two studies seem to be of such transcendent importance, compared with the question of proxy voting, that I would prefer not to impose this further duty at this time upon the commissioner. If at the time the review takes place there is some feeling we ought to go on having other tasks for a representation commissioner, then it might be considered at that time. This is perhaps somewhat of a conservative approach to the matter, but on this day of unity perhaps I may be permitted to express that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I think we should do everything possible to assure that everyone has the opportunity to vote and will exercise his right in the future. When I spoke a moment ago about a former prime minister and his grandfather I neglected to say—and I know it was understood by members of the committee—that the member in question with whom Mr. King was travelling said he had been voting Liberal ever since he passed away. Of course none of us want to see that kind of proxy voting practised, but we do wish to encourage people to exercise their vote as far as possible.

I am not one of those who believe in compulsory voting. I do not think it has worked out well. Mr. Castonguay has been in Australia where they have compulsory voting, but in my opinion this idea has not worked out too well.

A few years ago I had a suggestion given to me by an old recluse farmer in Saskatchewan who had a plan whereby everybody would vote. He said that if at the time an elector registered to vote he were required to pay $1 there would be a 100 per cent vote, or as near 100 per cent as possible, provided provisions were made that at the time the elector was handed the ballot he received a counterfoil which would secure him a refund of the $1. While this is a system I do not recommend, it is an example of a citizen who was devoting his thoughts to the solution of a matter that is very difficult, and one that is most costly to all who participate in elections in getting out the voters, while keeping strictly within the law.

Mr. Fairweather: I wonder if the Secretary of State contemplates that overseas staffs would not be able to vote until 1969?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, not at all. The fact that a study of this kind is being made will not, and could not preclude this parliament from making any amendments it saw fit to the Canada Elections Act, to provide for as great a measure of absentee voting as was thought to be practical in the meantime.

Mr. Fairweather: I was in Japan recently, and our embassy officials told me that the military attache had the vote. He sat during election time taking the votes of the one sergeant and one major, while the other public servants watched. It is high time a solution was found for this inconsistency.

Mr. Pickersgill: I may say to the hon. gentleman that while he was visiting Japan and other interesting places, I am told that elsewhere in this building consideration was being given, in respect of the Canada Elections Act, to the very question he is talking about.

Mr. Prittie: I wish to make a brief remark with regard to clause 9 (b). The right hon. Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Royal have referred to absentee voting for those serving the government of Canada overseas. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni, myself, and others from British Columbia have more in mind the thousands of people in that province who, because of their occupations, are often away from their homes at election time. They are the people who work in logging camps, the fishing industry and the mines. I am fully sympathetic with the views expressed about Canadian public servants overseas, but there is a very large number of Canadians at home who need absentee voting rights, and I hope the potential commissioner will look into it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Like the hon. gentleman, I have a lot of loggers in my constituency and some of the recent elections were called at a time that was very inconvenient for them.

Mr. Douglas: I think we would agree with the Secretary of State that priority should be given to the two items which have been mentioned, the making up of a permanent list to prevent thousands of people being disfranchised because the enumerators have not been able to call on them when they were at home, and the other, to provide an absentee ballot for people absent from their constituencies, and even for people on holidays.

If an election is held in the middle of summer a large number of people are on holidays, and if they could vote at resorts through absentee ballots they would not be disfranchised. One election in 1945 was held in August—

Mr. Churchill: 1953.

Mr. Pickersgill: That was when I was first elected to parliament.

Mr. Douglas: I know that in that election thousands of people did not vote because they were on holidays.

Mr. Knowles: I think that is probably how the Secretary of State got elected.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I think all the people in Bonavista-Twillingate were on holidays.

Mr. Douglas: If it is not too much of a burden, someone should take a look at the question of proxy voting. There is a lot to be said for people who are in hospitals, bedridden. Polls could be established in hospitals if the hospitals are large enough, but people who are bedridden at home, unless their friends are prepared to carry them to the polls, cannot vote. Even if they are carried, if the polling station is in an upstairs room which requires the climbing of stairs, they cannot vote, although I know that in some of the provinces, at the discretion of the returning officer the ballot box can be brought out to them, provided the scrutineers come with it to make sure nothing untoward takes place.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member now like to go ahead and move his first two amendments? I would hope he would not press the other one.

Mr. Barnett: Seeing these two are being generally accepted, with the help of the Secretary of State I would like to move:

That paragraph (a) of subclause (1) of clause 9 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
"(a) review and study methods of registration of electors used in provincial and national elections—

Perhaps I might suggest that should read "federal elections".

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I think "national" because there are many countries that are not federal.

Mr. Barnett: Very well.

—in provinces and countries where continuous electoral rolls are maintained;"

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, may I proceed to move a further amendment. I would like to move:

That paragraph (b) of subclause (1) of clause 9 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
"(b) review and study methods of absentee voting used in provincial and national elections in provinces and countries where provision is made for absentee voting by electors who, by reason of absence, illness or other cause, are unable to vote at such elections in the polling districts or divisions in which they ordinarily reside; and"

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 9 as amended agreed to.

On clause 10—Appointment of staff of commissioner.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before clause 10 is carried, Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I may say a word about the point raised earlier by the Leader of the Opposition. I am now informed —I was not informed about this when the debate started—that from 1920 until 1949 the chief electoral officer had the power to appoint his own staff. When the present incumbent of that office took over in 1949 he recommended that the staff subsequently be appointed by the civil service commission, and that has been the practice ever since. The chief electoral officer has advised me that in order to get on with the very urgent task of preparing maps, collating statistical information, and so on, it would be a tremendous convenience if he could engage a staff—which could be done very quickly once the office is set up—to get this work done, so that no time would be lost between now and the time when, during the next session of parliament, we get around to dealing with the boundaries commission bill. It is for precisely this reason that we are so anxious to get this bill passed now, so that all that preparatory work could be done and no time would be lost. I think that if the practice which prevailed in the office of the chief electoral officer was the pattern, probably at the time this act is reconsidered it would be thought desirable, when the basic staff is established, to have recruitment carried out by the civil service commission. For that matter, that could even be provided for at a subsequent session of parliament at any time it was felt desirable, as undoubtedly it would be, once the original establishment was made up.

In any event, it is very probable that the representation commissioner will wish to draw upon some of the people in other branches of the public service for a good part of this work. I think we can rely on the chief electoral officer—if he becomes, as I believe we all hope, the representation commissioner—to show that same impartiality in this matter as he has shown in the matter of carrying on the elections themselves.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How many officers and employees are contemplated?

Mr. Herridge: May I ask the Secretary of State a question, Mr. Chairman? Would these employees be considered temporary employees?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will read the clause, Mr. Chairman:

The commissioner may
(a) appoint such officers and employees as are necessary for the proper conduct of the work of the office of the commissioner; and
(b) prescribe the duties of such officers and employees and, subject to the approval of the treasury board, prescribe the conditions of their employment.
(2) The officers and employees of the commissioner appointed as provided in subsection (1) shall be paid such salaries and expenses as are fixed by the commissioner with the approval of the treasury board.

I think this would make them public servants in the ordinarily accepted sense, and not temporary employees, because clause 11 appears to me to provide for the engaging of temporary staff of a technical nature.

Mr. Herridge: What I had in mind, Mr. Chairman, was this. The number of employees required in the early establishment may be far more than would be required when the program is rolling and established.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am told by the chief electoral officer that his estimate is that there would be about eight employees engaged under this clause.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I feel most strongly that recruitment should be through the civil service commission in general. But in all the circumstances and in view of the statement that the number of these appointments will be restricted to eight, and that to endeavour to recruit them through the civil service commission would take a considerable period of time, I am not going to press the point. I am quite surprised to learn, though, that there is dilatoriness or delay on the part of the civil service commission in the matter of making appointments. That is the conclusion inherent in the statement made by the minister. That was not the experience when we were in office, and I am just wondering what he meant by that. But I am not going into that particular phase today.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the right hon. gentleman that it is not as it used to be when I was appointed in 1937. I wrote the examination on October 14 and 15, 1936, and I was appointed on October 14, 1937. I believe the time lag is very considerably less nowadays. But it is still necessary, under the civil service commission regulations, to have examinations, to have someone correct the papers and to go through the formalities which ought to be gone through when a considerable number of posts in the public service are open for competition. We all know that those processes cannot be abbreviated beyond a certain length of time, just as we know that elections, under the law at the present, cannot be abbreviated beyond a certain length of time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Gregoire: Can we ask the Secretary of State to make an inquiry—

The Chairman: The right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, the civil service commission did not have knowledge of the precocity of the hon. gentleman at the time, or there would not have been that delay.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the Secretary of State whether it is possible that it took them a year to decipher his writing?

Mr. Gregoire: I should like to ask the Secretary of State why they hesitated for one year to hire him in the civil service.

Mr. Pickersgill: In view of my subsequent career, Mr. Chairman, I do not altogether blame them.

Clause 10 agreed to.

Clauses 11 to 21 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 22—Provision for review of act.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, in order to save the time of the committee my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce would like to move an amendment at once. The amendment is in these terms:

That Bill C-126 be amended by striking out clause 22 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"22. The Prime Minister shall, at the earliest convenient opportunity after the commencement of the first session of parliament commencing after 1968, propose to the House of Commons that an order be made and referred to the appropriate committee of the House of Commons for the review by such committee of the provisions of this act and for the recommendations of such committee with respect to any amendments, alterations or modifications thereto that appear to the committee then to be necessary or desirable, and upon such order being referred to it the committee shall consider the matter of the order and report to the house its recommendations with respect thereto."

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 23—References to representation commissioner.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wish to propose at this time the amendment which is the amendment I indicated earlier on second reading I was proposing to move, if I found the committee in the mood I hoped to find it in, and which I appear to have found it in. Again the Minister of Trade and Commerce is pleased to move:

That Bill C-126 be amended by striking out clauses 23 and 24 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

Appointment of first representation commissioner.

"23. Notwithstanding section 3 of this act, the person who upon the coming into force of this act held the office of chief electoral officer of Canada shall be deemed to have been appointed at that time pursuant to this act to hold the office of representation commissioner, and until the appointment of a person pursuant to the Canada Elections Act to fill the vacancy thereby resulting in the office of chief electoral officer of Canada, the representation commissioner has and may exercise and perform all the powers, duties and functions of the chief electoral officer under any law of Canada, and with respect to any period before the appointment of such a person, a reference in any such law to the chief electoral officer shall be construed as a reference to the representation commissioner."

This amendment will have the effect, if adopted by the committee, that on royal assent, as the act will not have to be proclaimed, the chief electoral officer will become the representation commission. He will also until such time as the house is pleased to adopt a resolution appointing a new chief electoral officer be able to perform all the functions of the chief electoral officer. I do not think it will be possible during the present session of parliament to appoint a new chief electoral officer. This is a matter to which very careful consideration must be given and on which I believe there must be consultation among the parties. We want someone as nearly acceptable to everyone for that office as is the present chief electoral officer. This provides for an orderly transition. It gives us knowledge right now, if we enact this legislation in this session of parliament, of the person who will occupy that position, and I hope it will commend itself both to the committee and to the house.

Mr. McWilliam: Will that be clause 23?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, before this amendment is carried, I would like to point out to the Secretary of State that he has moved two amendments to this bill, both worded in English. I wonder whether he would be kind enough in the future to have these amendments drawn up in both languages? I think that would also be appreciated by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher).

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I could easily translate it right here in the committee, but I am not quite sure that my French would be in the correct legal terminology. I think it would be preferable if we could adopt the amendment and stand the bill over for third reading until tomorrow, so that the amendments could be distributed in both languages. In case there was any objection to them there would be an opportunity to register that objection before third reading took place. I apologize for not having the amendments available in both languages, but I may say that it was only at two o'clock this afternoon that I was able to consult my colleagues about both these amendments, and they had been prepared only a very short time before. In order to prepare a proper translation it is necessary to consider and weigh carefully all the terms, as we discovered the other evening, as the hon. gentleman will recall.

Mr. Knowles: The Secretary of State would not have proposed this amendment had he not known that it would meet with the unanimous approval of the committee. Even so, I do not think it is out of place for us to say that we are unanimous. I am sure that on this occasion I speak for everyone when I say that we welcome the decision of the government to give parliament the opportunity to name Mr. Castonguay as our first representation commissioner.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I believe there might be time in the one minute remaining before five o'clock to deal with the Customs Tariff.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-129, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Schedule A amended.

Mr. Nowlan: Is the minister going to make a short statement just by way of explanation?

Mr. Pickersgill: As a guide for the senators.

Mr. Benson: I have a very brief statement, Mr. Chairman, if you wish me to make it. This bill involves two proposals, both of which I believe are of a non-controversial nature. The first is to remove all Canadian tariffs from tea on January 1, 1964, simultaneously with similar action by the United Kingdom and a number of other countries. This is part of an international initiative to assist the trade of developing countries. The second proposal is to extend the duration of three temporary statutory items which now bear expiry dates of December 31, 1963.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Knowles: Is it the hope of the government that when tea comes in free the price will go down?

Clause 2 agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

TRANSPORT

MINAS BASIN—SUGGESTED RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF FERRY SERVICE

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the re-establishment of the Minas basin ferry service with special attention given to the use of a Hovercraft in this operation.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Minas Basin Ferry Service

Mr. Coates: I would be quite happy to resume my seat if unanimous agreement were given to the adoption of this proposal. However, I feel somewhat doubtful that this is, indeed, the situation and I therefore consider it would be wise if I gave the house a little background information to show why I placed this resolution on the order paper.

The Minas basin ferry service was a service available to the people of Nova Scotia in the Annapolis valley, and the town of Parrsboro in my constituency. This service came to an end in 1940, after 90 years of operation. The federal government of that day considered it necessary to take the ferry which was used to provide this service and employ it in Newfoundland on duties which were considered to be of greater importance. At the time the ferry service was eliminated, there was no great hue and cry either in the Annapolis valley or in my constituency, mainly because it was a tidal operation and the trucking companies considered the type of service which had been provided an outmoded one.

Since that day there has been growing concern among the people of the Annapolis valley and my constituency that a more up-to-date service should be provided. The saving in mileage brought about by a ferry is considerable when one considers the area of Nova Scotia concerned and the time spent by trucking firms and others in going around the Minas basin rather than across it. If this ferry service were re-established it would mean the elimination of about 115 miles of travel, especially for tourists and transportation companies engaged in agriculture and fishing. The introduction of a practical transportation service would, I believe, be of real benefit to my area as well as to other areas associated with the Minas basin and the bay of Fundy.

In two different countries there have been significant advances which have made possible a type of ferry service far more efficient than anything which has gone before. In Britain they have invented the Hovercraft, a new type of craft which is capable of travelling at tremendous speed over water. It can travel as fast as 75 miles per hour, and a great deal of consideration has been given by the government of the United Kingdom to the employment of this type of transportation facility. In Russia there has been a tremendous improvement in public transportation consequent on the development of the hydrofoil, a vessel somewhat similar to the Hovercraft. Both these vessels hover above the surface of the water; they do not actually touch the water and they are capable of tremendous speed. It is my feeling that in a country such as ours, where so many transportation difficulties are encountered, and so much water has to be traversed, and where there is such a heavy demand for exploration in the northland, the adoption of one or of both these craft might well bring us tremendous advantages, as well as savings from the taxpayers' point of view. They would, of course, need to be capable of moving the heavy transport vehicles which are so much a part of the transportation system of this country today.

In May of this year I had the opportunity to take part in a demonstration of one of these Hovercraft in Montreal and I found myself moved over the St. Lawrence river at 75 miles an hour, an amazing speed when one considers he is moving over water. For that matter, the craft was capable of moving over land, as well, because, in fact, it operates two or three feet above the level of the water, or the land, and obstacles do not present any great problem. I think craft of this type would prove to be of tremendous benefit in operations in northern Canada. I believe, too, that the service I have in mind, the Minas basin ferry service, and the service provided between Digby and Saint John, New Brunswick, could be joined together if craft of the type capable of moving the type of transport we have in our country could be made available. At the same time we would eliminate the heavy cost of wharfage facilities, which faces the government at the present time.

It is my opinion that governments have not been as interested in the development of craft of this type as they should be. When I say that, I am not saying that the former government was any better or more realistic about this matter than the present one. I am simply saying that this government and maybe the provincial governments—because there is certainly a field here where they could become involved—have not in my opinion looked at this subject realistically enough, and have not taken advantage to the extent they should of the tremendous amount of information available today both in Great Britain and Russia, where great amounts of money have been spent to produce some significant vehicles in this field.

In the November, 1963 issue of "Soviet Union Today" there is a description of a hydrofoil motorship which has a seating capacity of 250 to 300 passengers and a cruising speed of 75 kilometers per hour. In England at the present time a Hovercraft is either in the planning stage or being constructed which will be put on the English channel run and will carry approximately 300 passengers.

It is my view that in Nova Scotia, where transportation is so very important, there is an opportunity to eliminate a good deal of the money that is now being paid out in government subsidies and also to eliminate the heavy wharfage problems that are always on the doorstep of the Department of Public Works by endeavouring to have a craft of this type constructed to provide service in the Minas basin, and also between Saint John and Digby. I know that at the present time the new ferry operating between Digby and Saint John is encountering difficulties because of the wharfage facilities at Digby. They simply are not satisfactory for the new ferry that has been placed in the service by the C.P.R. How much better it would be if we could eliminate the wharfage facilities altogether by using a craft that did not need them, and which could provide a much better and more efficient service and eliminate so much time.

There are also other areas in other parts of Canada, certainly along the St. Lawrence river, about which the same thing can be said and probably even to a greater extent. We have heard in recent days in the house about the problems in the Baie Comeau area of Quebec where ferry subsidies are being removed, and because of this the people may be deprived of transportation facilities which they consider they need very badly.

Mr. Regan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the remarks now being made by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) with reference to areas other than the Minas basin are not relevant to this notice of motion and that the hon. member should confine his remarks to that area.

Mr. Coates: I may have been straying somewhat. However, I feel that a ferry service for the Minas basin is very essential and in my view a Hovercraft or a hydrofoil craft might be able to provide excellent service for that area and for other areas as well. I hope the hon. member is not indicating by his remarks that he does not believe the government should give consideration to an investigation of these new types of craft. I hope he does not mean that we should not embark on the type of investigation that may very well benefit all areas of the country. I really do not think he does, because I know his home is in the Annapolis valley rather than in the constituency he represents, and that he knows the situation probably better than he might care to state at the present time.

What I am really trying to put before the house is a problem that we face in Canada today, and I would point out that recent announcements with regard to ferries generally would seem to indicate that the government is going to involve itself in very substantial expenditures of money. It may well be that we are away behind the times and that we could save a great deal of money, having regard to what we are spending in subsidies, maintenance charges and so on and the heavy cost of wharfage facilities, if we would make a thorough investigation into the possibility of using craft of this type, because it might well be that a great deal of benefit would accrue.

I do not think I have very much more to say. I have placed the facts with regard to the Minas basin ferry service before the house on other occasions. I hope the government will find some merit in the suggestions I have made. I should certainly like to think that not too far in the future the government will take a long look at both the Hovercraft and the hydrofoil as a possible means of providing a more efficient type of transportation at a lesser cost to the taxpayer than is the case today.

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this notice of motion may I say I was particularly interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates), knowing as I do that his area is affected by this problem of a ferry service as is the constituency of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan). I was interested in the various points of view and considerations put forward by the hon. member. However, in view of the need of that particular area for transportation I think that the possibilities of the Hovercraft are substantially better than those of the hydrofoil. Each of these types of conveyance has the drawback that it cannot carry a great amount of weight and, as the hon. member has said, one of the real needs between the Annapolis valley and the Parrsboro-Amherst area is for transportation that can handle trucks and a large amount of freight. The Hovercraft does have the advantage over the hydrofoil that it can operate irrespective of extreme tidal conditions such as prevail in that area.

Transportation across the narrow strips between Cape Blomidon on the Annapolis valley side and the Parrsboro shore on any regular basis has been suspended since before the war, but the transportation that was provided then in the form of a small car ferry would not solve the real need at the present time because I believe the previous ferry could only carry seven or eight cars. This area is considered as one of the potentially great tidal power development areas of the North American continent. The vast amount of water that comes in and goes out of Minas basin twice daily passes through the narrow gut between Cape Blomidon and Parrsboro with terrific force and it is generally accepted that this could be converted into a tremendous amount of power by a very extensive undertaking of the Passamaquoddy type. However, if that is ever done, that in itself might solve the transportation question across this stretch of water, because a road could be built across any such dam.

In the meantime, I cannot help but recall that Cape Blomidon was supposedly the home of Glooscap, a god of the Micmac tribe which inhabited Nova Scotia. I recall from my school days that he supposedly created two islands by throwing some earth at a beaver that was swimming by. The islands are there now in the bay of Fundy. If Glooscap really existed today, he could probably solve our problem very quickly. Unfortunately, this is not the case, so for a moment we might consider the area that would be served by truck and car transportation across this body of water.

In my view, it would not be of assistance or benefit to the metropolitan Halifax area since the route to Amherst by the main highway through Truro would be a much quicker route than travelling through the Annapolis valley. I think the only transport that would be affected would be the cars going from the Annapolis valley to the Cumberland area. Contrary to what the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) has suggested, this transport would involve no fish products whatever, but agriculture products would be helped if efficient transportation could be provided across this body of water.

In the days that have gone by, investigations have been made into the possibility of a conventional ferry service across this body of water. The problem has always been the cost of wharfage, and this problem arises as a result of the extremely high tides, probably the highest in the world, existing in the area. The cost of wharves would be $6 million or something in that vicinity, whereas the ferry itself would only cost a little over a million dollars. The total cost of this project would thus be in the vicinity of $7 million, and it has never been considered warranted in view of the amount of good this money could do if applied elsewhere to maritime transportation problems. I would comment that if this were the situation today, Mr. Speaker, the higher expenditure of $6 million or $7 million which the hon. member for Cumberland is proposing, would leave us in the same position, where the service would not be warranted, worthy as it is, in so far as the immediately adjacent areas are concerned.

[Mr. Regan.]

A Hovercraft service, while it would have a limited possibility in serving truck transport, would nevertheless represent a small investment in wharfage facilities. At any rate, it would probably be the answer to the question of automotive transport and small freight transport in this area. Unless it could take a substantial number of cars, there would be little in way of passenger traffic between points involved, because anyone going from the Annapolis valley, where the towns are spread out, into the Cumberland area, where they are again spread out, would likely be travelling by motorcar. I understand that the latest developments in Hovercraft would enable a reasonable number of cars to be carried across this body of water.

I think, therefore, that the suggestion made by the hon. member has some merit in this respect. It is, of course, not original at this time by any means, because the government of Nova Scotia has been exploring the possibility of a Hovercraft service. In this regard, I might say that since the areas that would be served are entirely within the province of Nova Scotia and the route would be, in essence, an extension of the highway system of that province, it would seem only reasonable to expect the province to participate in the cost of such a service. These few remarks, Mr. Speaker, represent my thoughts on this subject. I do say that the Annapolis valley is today an area of considerable prosperity and with the mixed farming that has developed in that area, the question of getting produce to market or obtaining a new market is of importance. If this ferry service could be established it would enable fresh products from the valley to be moved economically to places in the Amherst and Moncton region, and certainly that would be a step in the right direction. I feel, therefore, that this motion does have merit.

Mr. G. Roy McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): I feel I should say a few words with regard to this motion by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates). As preceding speakers have said, I feel there is some merit in what he has proposed because transportation in the maritime provinces has, I think, placed us at a disadvantage. I am thinking of purely local areas. However, in so far as the desire for transportation facilities is concerned, there is always the problem of cost involved. In most cases, this is the deciding factor in relation to whether or not the facilities will be provided.

The hon. member for Cumberland gave us the historical background of this Minas basin ferry service. I do not know how many members of the house are familiar with the topography or the geography of the Minas basin area of Nova Scotia. I suggest it would shorten the route if you entered the province of Nova Scotia at the New Brunswick border, at Sackville. If you wanted to go into the Annapolis valley, it would shorten the route by some 100 miles if the service were reinstated from Parrsboro to Wolfville. I believe it is true to say that, not only in the maritime provinces but everywhere, distances have not the same implication today that they had in days gone by.

I am sure that even if the Parrsboro ferry service were in operation today, unless one wanted the experience of going across the Minas basin, it is doubtful if he would take the ferry. The main reason for the trip by ferry would be to see the scenery around the Minas basin, but one could see this scenery if he were to travel by car. I think this is true particularly of the tourists. I do not believe the tourists would take the ferry if they came to the Minas basin, as they generally like to see the countryside through which they are motoring. I do not see a great deal of appeal in it for the tourists, particularly the tourists coming in from Bar Harbour or Saint John because they must cross the bay of Fundy to make the mainland of Nova Scotia, and I know that if they are proceeding to Truro or Cumberland county in Nova Scotia they would not care to embark on another ferry trip, when the distance around the basin is only about 100 miles.

As I listened to the hon. member speaking about the new types of transportation, such as the hydrofoil, the question occurred to me, is this really the type of transportation that is needed? If it is to be of any benefit the type needed is something that will take trucks and motorcars, and I doubt if much benefit would be derived from a purely passenger or light freight service. In that respect I think this whole thing should be given a great deal more consideration.

I would like to see a proposal coming from the government of Nova Scotia because the ferry service is within the provincial boundaries of Nova Scotia. If the province cannot finance it, then I think it should make some proposal to the federal government.

I believe that in prior debates this project was mentioned as something to which the Atlantic development board might give consideration. I do not know whether that board has come up with any suggestion. I do not even know if it has studied the matter; probably it has not because I think it would not have priority among the projects that are presently being considered by it.

I have no desire to block this motion. Actually it only asks the government to give consideration to the project. I do not see anything wrong in giving consideration to it, but I do feel much more study should be undertaken to decide the right type of ferry service that should be provided across the Minas basin, and to determine whether the expenditures would warrant it.

I do not know anything about these hydrofoil, or Hovercraft, but I would imagine that if they are the type that can carry trucks and motorcars they would be very expensive. Another expense involved is the building of wharves and ground development for a day and night service, which would be very expensive, considering that the tides run 30 feet high in the bay of Fundy. I know that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan) quoted something like $6 million or $7 million.

I suggest that this matter be thoroughly studied. As I said before, it is the prime responsibility of the government of Nova Scotia, and if representatives of the provincial government, the Atlantic development board and some people from the federal scene got together, then maybe a solution to this Minas basin problem might be found.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I understand there are some other members from the maritimes who would like to express their views on this very important motion, particularly the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare (Mr. Armstrong) who unfortunately is out of the house at present attending one of the committees which has to sit at this time. Therefore I move that the debate on this very important notice of motion be now adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

LEGISLATION

SUGGESTED OFFICER TO EXAMINE PUBLIC COMPLAINTS

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the creation of an office of parliamentary counsel, with objectives and manner similar to the office of ombudsman used in Scandinavian countries such as Sweden and Denmark, for the purpose of examining grievances of Canadian citizens which arise in their relations with the administration of the federal state in Canada, and reporting on the merits of these individual grievances to this house.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I see we have 22 minutes to devote to this topic, and I do not know what can really be resolved in that brief time. Just before the sunny Secretary of State departed from the chamber he told me he was in support of this motion personally, but of course he was not speaking for the government.

This subject has been a matter of some discussion for the last several years. I think I first put it on the order paper four sessions ago, but this is the first time there has been an opportunity to debate it. I do not know how important hon. members view it, but I fastened on to the conception because of a number of cases I encountered as a member of parliament and about which I was unable to do anything. I felt the administrators had gone as far as they could, but the individual citizen who had a complaint was still aggrieved and felt his grievance had not been handled impartially. In essence that would be the great advantage of creating this kind of office.

As I say, discussion of the subject has gone on in a lot of journals. Professor Rowat of Carleton University has written a number of articles about it, some in the popular magazine Maclean's, some in the public administration periodical, and in the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science.

Recently New Zealand has adopted the public defender plan. It is on the statute books of that country and is working. The British have examined the matter through a couple of non-partisan committees. The Conservative and the Labour party have groups studying it, and I have here a report which says the Conservative party in Great Britain indicates general acceptance of the idea. The unofficial group in England that has made a thorough report on it was called JUSTICE. There is a committee formed, largely of people with both political and legal experience who are concerned over the fact that discretionary powers allotted by statute to various boards and agencies have led sometimes to a conflict between individual citizens and the boards or agencies, with an inadequate form of redress or an inadequate form of appeal.

Very recently the royal commission on government organization in its report No. 5 had some statements to make on this very subject. On page 94 the commissioners write:

> In addition, because of the growing need for ministerial attention to the difficult problems of policy and the general direction and co-ordination of its execution, the public's recourse to ministers of the review of official acts and redress of minor grievances become less satisfactory. Moreover, because the minister is held politically accountable for all actions of his subordinates and it is the practice in party strife to make issues of such matters—however trivial—the minister may too often be impelled to defend official conduct when the real need is for a remedy.

To my Conservative friends I would like to point out the bad situation that was gotten into a few years ago by the then hon. member for Peel in connection with some property at Malton, vis-à-vis George Hees, who was then minister of transport, and the fact that you had the minister in essence denying one of his supporters. There was complete confusion. I believe we had a vote of confidence in this house. We certainly had an issue that was sparked by and interravelled with partisanship on the very kind of issue that would never have been raised if the people with the grievance, the citizens with the grievance, had had a grievance commissioner instead of depending upon their member of parliament. I continue reading this report:

> On questions of policy, public and parliamentary recourse to ministers is appropriate and necessary. But when what is at issue is a complaint relating to administration in the public service, more effective channels for public and parliamentary challenge may be devised.
> To weigh the urgency of these problems, and, if need be, to devise solutions are the tasks of others. Your commissioners wish only to suggest that, should new safeguards be judged necessary, they may be sought in all three of the historic branches of government. First, the role of the courts in checking the excess of official powers and in providing redress of official wrongs against the subject, may repay examination. Second, in the executive branch itself, there may be greater opportunity for the use of formal processes of inquiry, in which the principles of natural justice are observed, either in reaching or in reviewing administrative decisions that affect the rights and obligations of the citizen.
> The third course lies in parliament itself. Procedures might be developed for the closer scrutiny of statutory instruments—the orders in council and regulations by which statutory powers are elaborated and applied. Your commissioners have also noted the growing interest throughout other parliamentary countries in the office of parliamentary commissioner, modelled, with variations, on the long established Swedish ombudsman. The notable success with which this office has been adapted to the needs of the parliament of Denmark, the recent report by a group of eminent jurists in the United Kingdom, the enactment of legislation to establish a parliamentary commissioner in New Zealand, and the creation of machinery for a similar purpose in the United States, all suggest that the parliament of Canada may find here a means of bettering its defence against administrative defects in the public service.

I would like to point out that the Gazette reported, on May 23, 1963, this dispatch from Ottawa:

> The government suggested Wednesday that parliament itself make the decision on whether to establish special machinery to protect the little man from bureaucrats.
> Justice Minister Chevrier said in the Commons its rules committee might study suggestions of creating a parliamentary commissioner or ombudsman, such as they had in some Scandinavian and other countries. The ombudsman is an official appointed by a legislature to investigate complaints from the public of cases of alleged high-handedness by government officials. Sweden has two of them, one dealing in civil and the other in military law.

I would like to point out that we have had in Canada, and are still having, as the result of the actions we take here, a proliferation of agencies and boards which operate in areas that affect citizens, particularly with regard to licenses and applications, and which are at arm's length from ministerial control; that is, from political control. It seems to me this is particularly the kind of agency in regard to which grievances develop. I always remember one man down in Kingston who has a bit of inventive genius. He developed a particular kind of helicopter. He was satisfied that it was an excellent helicopter, that it would fly, that it had a number of radical provisions in it that might be of much greater use. But he could not get any certificate of airworthiness, or even freedom to test the craft in the proper kind of circumstances, from the inspectors of the Department of Transport; and he was not able to get any satisfaction at all from any of the normal licensing agencies. He took the matter up with the department, through the minister, and could not get any kind of consideration. Finally he took it up with a whole host of members of parliament through some kind of circulating letter. When enough of us had raised Cain about it, finally something was done.

I have another example with regard to what has happened in my own constituency. There was a lady acting as a matchmaker for her brother, and a friend was brought out from Italy. The arrangement was that her brother and this girl would be married when she got here. The girl arrived here, and for various reasons decided not to go through with the wedding. The prospective sister-in-law was outraged at this and demanded that the government carry through the normal immigration procedure and return the bride, who did not want to be a bride, to Italy. Various pressures were applied. There were very large families involved on each side in this matter, families that spread their networks out to Winnipeg and down to Toronto, and you had a situation wherein the minister and his officials were being bombarded and pressured by M.P.s from those areas, and with private representations; we even had mayors getting involved in the deal. Finally the minister, with all this pressure—and I do not blame the minister of the time—postponed any decision on it and just let the situation ride. This particular lady felt, and still feels, that she has a considerable grievance in that the law and the regulations of Canada did not apply in this case. This is the kind of case, I suggest, where this lady will never get it out of her head that she had been cheated, and cheated by her government, and her family has been held up to ridicule of a permanent kind that can only be settled by some kind of grievance procedure and some kind of person who is completely detached from both the ministerial framework and the influence of those of us who are politicians.

I do not feel there would be any tremendous number of cases right off the bat. I think every hon. member knows that each one of us will get letters from cranks in our constituencies and also from across the country. We know the kind of person who is always feuding and spatting with government agencies, particularly with the unemployment insurance commission or the workmen's compensation board in the province. It is all very easy to put a lot of these people down as cranks and write them off. But so often this tendency should be slowed up by a realization that you only need one case where there is real merit to make you see that these kind of people should at least have their opportunity.

I think the ombudsman would certainly apply. It is apparent that the British, in considering this matter, have felt that the whole question of ministerial responsibility and the joint responsibility of the cabinet has been a factor in their particular parliamentary set-up which would stand in the way of giving a parliamentary commissioner, a grievance commissioner, in Britain the kind of powers he has been given in the Scandinavian countries. This may very well be so; but we need to define the problem much more clearly. This is really what the motion suggests. We need to pinpoint the kind of things that a grievance commissioner could do. Professor Rowat points out, in effect, that the grievance commissioner could be the Auditor General for, you might say, civil and administrative matters as distinct from bookkeeping, cost and expenditure matters. I think that is a good comparison in that I do believe this person should have the freedom that the Auditor General has, to report to this house, rather than to any special minister. If we had such a parliamentary commissioner reporting to parliament and his report being dove-tailed in with a permanent house committee which met regularly every year, I believe you would really give many people in Canada the feeling that there was, in grievance matters concerning the administration, a court of last resort which would be extremely fair.

Proposed Office of Parliamentary Counsel

Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, there is not much more I want to say in case other hon. members would like to express opinions. I have a great deal of material on the matter. It is my impression that both editorial comment and the general feeling among people in politics are relatively favourable to this idea. It seems to me that what we need to know definitely, and I think it is up to both parliament and the government to find it out, are the limitations we should look for in this kind of office in Canada, so as to produce some concrete proposals as to the kind of legislation which would be required. I hope this study can be undertaken fairly soon, certainly within this parliament. It seems to me that one of the real things which will complement the bill of rights, and in a sense give the bill or rights a great deal of significance which it does not have at the present time where the private citizen is involved, in his relationship with the federal government, is this kind of office of a parliamentary grievance commissioner.

Miss Pauline Jewett (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad indeed that the motion the hon. member has had on the order paper for a very long time, and which I gather from his remarks today he has brought forward for several sessions now, has come up for debate today, even though I will not have very much time to discuss it. I am afraid other hon. members will be in no better position since it has come on, so to speak, only at the last minute.

The main credit for popularizing the idea of an ombudsman in this country should go, as the hon. member suggested, to Professor Rowat of Carleton University, who did a very extensive study, during the course of a tour of Europe on a Canada council fellowship, of the practice in the European countries which have an ombudsman, and who has published a good many of his findings. The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) did not mention—so I thought I would, in case other hon. members are interested—the most comprehensive of Professor Rowat's articles, which is the one to be found in the November 1962 issue of the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science. There has also been some writing on the subject by other academics. The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald) has just told me that the former member for Rosedale of some years ago, Charles Henry, Q.C., has been taking the initiative on behalf of the Ontario section of the Canadian Bar Association in studying the possibility of introducing the ombudsman scheme to Canada. It is of course, appropriate both at the federal and at the provincial level.

I have not time to go into the history of why such a parliamentary commissioner is necessary. Suffice to say that, with the great growth in discretionary powers at the administrative level of government, there has been a lot of feeling for some time that there should be some way by which the citizen could question by way of appeal the fairness, possibly even the reasonableness, of decisions which are taken in relation to him. We do not have a system of administrative courts in this country. We have the income tax appeal board, which is a type of court, but we do not have too many bodies like this. Even in those cases where we do, there are lots of grievances and problems which citizens have, which for one reason or another can never be brought before these tribunals.

Some European countries which already have a system of administrative courts have also felt the need for a parliamentary commissioner or ombudsman who would be the spokesman or the grievance commissioner for the average citizen. It is not, of course, the complete answer to the problem of the control of discretionary powers. As the royal commission on government organization pointed out, much more needs to be done both within parliament and within the administrative process itself, to try to bring us up to date and to ensure democratic control over administrative discretion. But I do agree with the hon. member that an ombudsman or a parliamentary commissioner or commissioners—I think Professor Rowat suggested that a commission of three would be appropriate in this parliament—should be set up.

The committee on procedure, which has already been established and which, I would hope, will be re-established in another session, will be taking under consideration—again I hope—the possibility of establishing an ombudsman or a comparable officer in this parliament. Indeed, if this is done, the committee should hold public hearings for those of us in parliament who would like to speak much more fully on this matter than we have time for today, and for those academics, lawyers and interested groups in society generally to present their views on the matter. I should think that a thorough series of public hearings would prove extremely useful before initiating a scheme like this; and as I say, I hope that if we go into a new session the committee on procedure will be set up again and will carry out this investigation.

In the meantime, may I make one suggestion to hon. members, and that is that they collect the major types of grievances they have received from their constituents and build up a file of them. Because in the United Kingdom one of the reasons the ombudsman scheme has tended to be shot down is that they have said there: You have not given enough specific examples of what an ombudsman would do; there have not been detailed grievances specified where citizens have suffered at the hands of the administrative process. I suggest it would be unfortunate if that were to happen here, because I am sure that I, as well as the rest of us here, have many illustrations of cases where individuals have a genuine grievance vis-à-vis the administration, and we will undoubtedly find more during the recess. I hope it will be possible for this matter to be discussed formally at hearings before the committee on procedure, and that all members of parliament will take an interest in this new parliamentary institution. I suggest that we leave it there, for the moment at any rate, and if all is well the decision to do something about it may well be made, and should be made, in the fairly near future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being six o'clock the hour for consideration of private members' business has expired. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

PUBLIC SERVICE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING SALARIES OF CERTAIN PUBLIC OFFICIALS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-128, to amend the Canada Grain Act, the Financial Administration Act, the Income Tax Act, the International Boundary Waters Treaty Act, the National Energy Board Act, the Railway Act, the Salaries Act and the Tariff Board Act with respect to the salaries of certain public officials.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks before this bill gets second reading.

[Text]

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): The purpose of this legislation is to bring salaries prescribed by statute into line with those now paid to judges and proposed to be paid to senior civil servants, including deputy ministers.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Many of these amendments concern matters to which we have given consideration in the past and I think that on the whole they commend themselves to the favourable consideration of the house.

One could make long and prolix speeches, if he wished, about the services rendered by these various organizations. I am thinking particularly of the tax appeal board. I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) might give some consideration to the reorganization of that board so as to place it more or less on a permanent basis, similar to that of the courts. After all, when this board was first established it was set up to deal with petty and minor income tax cases. Now it is dealing with cases involving very large sums. I have been conscious, ever since the days when I was connected with the Department of National Revenue, that careful consideration should be given to this particular board. I am sure the same applies to many of the other boards we are considering tonight, and without taking the time of the house further I wish to express support for the principle involved, as far as we are concerned.

It is, of course, for the government to take responsibility for the amounts of the increases recommended. We are prepared to accept the principle that there should be increases in the salaries paid to the members of these various boards and corporate structures. I deplore the fact that in doing so it should be necessary to amend five, ten or 15 statutes at a time, on the basis of one bill. When I was practising law—and perhaps, one day, the Secretary of State will himself be practising law in Bonavista-Twillingate—I was conscious that when considering a bill which set out to amend some 15 statutes, an advocate did not know where to turn or what to do. However, I realize that where the primary and, it seems, the only concern is with the salaries paid, there is scarcely any alternative open and we are prepared to accept it. It is a practice which all governments have followed; we followed it, too, though some of us regretted the practice. I think the principle involved here is sound and to be commended to the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we notice that this bill requests a salary increase for a number of people employed in the civil service of Canada. When the persons concerned are competent, we do not object to their obtaining a salary increase, but in the present case, an increase is requested for many classes of employees and I must say that we, in this corner of the house, object to clause 3 of Bill C-128.

We would rather have a distinct bill; we would have liked that clause 3 be taken out of this bill, that is as far as the salary increase for the chairman of the income tax division is concerned.

Among all the civil servants, he surely is the last one to deserve an increase; he would rather deserve a kick in the pants, as also those responsible for income tax in the province of Quebec, especially.

It was established last year that it was the least well administered of all the federal departments' divisions.

Tax inspectors go around in rural areas, conduct so-called inquiries into charity receipts and declare their inquiries over without having even consulted with the persons concerned. They reduce the amount of charity receipts, especially in the province of Quebec, and then they write the taxpayer: "Dear sir, you have produced charity receipts to the amount of $500 but, on inquiry, we can allow $250 only." What an inquiry. They have not even seen the person concerned. That is the way things are done by those income tax officers.

It is proposed to increase the salary of the chairman, the assistant chairman and the other members of the income tax division. This means that, afterwards, the salary of the other employees of that division will be also increased. We cannot agree to those increases in salaries; as to the other cases, it is all right, but not these, we cannot agree.

Those persons whose salary we are now asked to increase show an unwarranted zeal in the province of Quebec, and everywhere else in Canada, so as to make themselves noticed. Inquiries are made on small merchants and small businessmen, every record is investigated, every small detail is looked into in the hope of finding something wrong. And often, after a two or three week check, an error of $10 or $15 is found.

It is the small businessman who will then have to foot the bill.

That is what we cannot accept, Mr. Speaker. In the long run, it is always the small businessman who is hounded by those officials of the income tax divisions whose salaries it is now proposed to increase. Members of the income tax board prepare a case against Canadian citizens and hand down a sort of judgment without too much investigation. If the citizen is not satisfied, he is the one who has to appeal the judgment. However, since he is not familiar with the law, he does not want to get involved in a costly appeal of the decision of those officials whose salary is to be increased. He merely grumbles against the Income Tax Act and the people who enforce it, namely those for whom we are considering a pay boost.

It is for that reason and many others, because the members of the income tax division are far from giving satisfaction to the Canadian taxpayers that we are against any pay increase in their case.

We would even say that their salaries should be reduced. That is why, when we come to section 3 of the Bill No. C-128, we intend to move an amendment to reduce the salary of the chairman, the assistant chairman and the members of the income tax division.

It is my feeling that they have shown themselves unable to put themselves at the same level as the general public.

As the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) stated, they behave like extortioners of taxes. That is why, especially those who head that division, who give orders such as those received these days by inspectors with regard to receipts for charitable donations, do not deserve any salary increase, but rather a decrease.

The parliamentary secretary who is the sponsor of Bill No. C-128 should withdraw clause 3 from it so as to make a different bill. If he were to do so, I am convinced that all members of the house would be glad to consign it to oblivion.

If we compare the salary of those gentlemen which is to be increased, and those paid to persons who perform their duties much better, like interpreters, translators and house reporters, it is readily realized that they are out of all proportion.

Those are the remarks I wanted to make at this time. I reserve the right to move an amendment in that connection when we come to section 3.

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, if I may add one word it seems to me that the hon. member is under a misapprehension. As I understand the bill, it has reference to the income tax appeal board and really has nothing to do with the administration of the taxation division, which comes under the Minister of National Revenue. I can only say that if that department has fallen apart I did not think it could fall apart so quickly because, after all, it was very well administered under the last two ministers.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, for a minute or two I should like to direct the attention of the house to one aspect of the bill. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), with his usual lucidity, has spoken for the party and I agree with what he has said. I am concerned about the continuing disparity in the salary paid to the lieutenant governor of Prince Edward Island. Of all the provinces, I see that the lieutenant governor of that province is in a separate category. If I may make a confession, over the last six years I pleaded and endeavoured to cajole and argue with the former minister of finance, not the member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings but his predecessor, to no avail, and now it would seem that this legislation will not only continue the disparity but will enlarge it.

I do not see that there is any principle proclaiming why one province should be singled out. I will not argue the merits of the case at this stage. I could point out that Prince Edward Island is heading for one of the greatest celebration years in its history. I could point out too that there is probably no province in the country in which the citizenry are in closer contact with government house than in Prince Edward Island. I am sure the Solicitor General, my colleague from Prince, would agree with that.

It is the matter of principle I am concerned about. The salaries obviously are not on a per capita basis because you would not find British Columbia and Newfoundland in the same category. I as a private member cannot initiate steps to remedy this, but I appeal to the sponsor of the bill and the government. I am not saying whether they should bring the others down or put the province of Prince Edward Island up, but I do not see any justification for this discrimination. I never did get a satisfactory answer from the former minister of finance, and I am still alarmed and disturbed at this continuing discrimination.

I will not argue about the relationship of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec to the others. If it were not the yuletide season I would even argue about that; but with regard to the other eight it is most disconcerting to me to find the province of Prince Edward Island placed in a separate and lower category than the others. This is improper, and I would appeal to the government to rectify the error. I do not know how it came about. Perhaps the Secretary of State or the parliamentary secretary can give us the historic background on this seeming discrimination. I am very proud of the fact that in the face of many provinces having surrendered the official residences of their lieutenant governors Prince Edward Island, a small province, has through the years maintained its beautiful government house. It was not easy for a small province to do that. So I would hope that in a gesture of appreciation therefor, and of justice long delayed, my suggestion will commend itself to the government. Apart from that I have no criticism to make of the legislation.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, in clause 1 provision is made for increases in the salaries of the members of the board of grain commissioners, but as far as I can see no provision is made for the members of the Canadian wheat board. In the newspapers today there was a reference to the increases for the members of the board of grain commissioners and all the others included in the bill, but no mention was made of the Canadian wheat board. I have in mind Mr. McNamara, Mr. Riddel and the others. I should like to have an explanation.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, since I moved the motion I imagine if I speak now I will close the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must caution the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: First of all, while I am answering the question off the top of my head, I am pretty sure that the salaries of the chairman and officers of the wheat board are settled by the wheat board itself and are not fixed by statute. I notice that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who knows more about this than I do, is nodding his head in approval.

The purpose of the bill is to deal only with officials' salaries which are fixed by parliament. Most senior officials' salaries are fixed by the governor in council. The salaries of the senior officials of crown corporations are usually fixed by the crown corporations, sometimes with the approval of the governor in council. I was assured when the bill was recommended to us for presentation to the house that it covers all the salaries that parliament fixes, except the salary of the chief electoral officer which we dealt with in a bill that was before the house earlier today. I think that is the reason.

With respect to the observations made by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), and I think I can understand why he was under a misapprehension, this bill has nothing to do with the people who collect income taxes. It refers only to the income tax appeal board, to which a taxpayer can appeal if he thinks he has been unfairly treated by the income tax authorities. I would think that if the hon. gentleman has the view he has of the income tax collectors, which I must say I do not share, he should be glad to have an appeal board with good men on it to see that justice is done.

Mr. Gregoire: I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State.

[Translation]

Since the section may be ambiguous, would the Secretary of State be willing to add:

the chairman of the appeal board.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I would think that would be a proper thing to do, once I was sure I had the right title in both English and in French. I should be glad to do that when we get into committee. I hope there will be somebody who can give us the necessary designation so that it can be put into the bill.

Mr. Knowles: Before the minister makes one of those commitments, had he not better see what the language of that section is, and where it will be in the act?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right. I hope that someone who is a more competent draftsman than I am will be available when we get into committee. However, since we appear to be in committee in spirit, perhaps I should conclude my observations so that we can go into committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Salaries.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could clause 3 stand?

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) lent me a copy of the Income Tax Act. Now, section 86 of the Income Tax Act which is mentioned in Bill No. C-128, as pointed out a moment ago by the Secretary of State, stipulates that it is the "income tax appeal board".

I therefore note that the director or the officials of the taxation division or still the extortioners of taxes, as they are commonly called, are not involved but simply the chairman of the income tax appeal board. Consequently, I admit that I made a mistake, but I must give explanations. We had been told that not too much importance was attached to this legislation and I did not take the trouble of referring to the statutes to see what section 86 dealt with.

However, I repeat the remarks I made a while ago, concerning the director and official of the income tax division, and we shall resume when the estimates of the Department of National Revenue are introduced, within a few days.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

In the meantime, Mr. Chairman, I shall withdraw the amendment I put forward.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, as concerns article 3, I simply wish to point out it is time the salaries of the president and other members of the tax appeal board be increased, for I am advised the departmental solicitors who plead before that tribunal receive fees or salaries higher than those of the members of the board. Needless to say I am not speaking about solicitors who represent clients before the board, for they must get very high fees as compared to the salaries of the members of the board.

Mr. Chairman, I should also draw the attention of the house to the fact the members of that tribunal sometimes have to decide cases involving amounts up to $100,000 and even $1 million when, for instance, the cases have to do with estate tax duties.

Besides, the members of the board have to judge extremely complex cases of a technical and specialized nature, and after a few years, they become experts in their field. Now, under the present act, the members of the board are appointed for a ten-year period only, and their appointment may not be renewed, so that the experience they have acquired will be lost, at least as far as the state is concerned. Consequently, I feel that the government should not only increase their salary, but also consider seriously the proposal for making of the income tax appeal board a regular state court; its members would have the same status as the judges of the exchequer court, and they would try cases in a completely independent way, with the power and the dignity suitable to magistrates who judge such important cases.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall certainly draw the hon. member's views to the attention of my colleagues.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4—Salaries of Canadian commissioners.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I only have a word to say. I am in favour of increasing the salaries of the members of the international boundary waters commission as long as the commissioners publish as soon as possible their report, in order to hasten that great project, the Richelieu waterway, so that it could be completed by 1967, date of the confederation centennial.

If the Secretary of State could assure the house that he will be our spokesman in asking members of the commission to make haste, we shall be happy to endorse the increase of those salaries.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the minister of northern affairs has listened attentively to what the hon. gentleman has said. I promise that when the Secretary of State for External Affairs returns from Paris, the first thing I will do will be to draw his attention to the hon. member's remarks.

Mr. Pigeon: The only reason for making these remarks now is that we know very well on this side the leader of the house runs the government.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 5 and 6 agreed to.

On clause 7—Salaries of lieutenant governors.

Mr. Macquarrie: I hope it is not necessary to make lengthy and contentious interventions in order to draw a response of any kind from the sponsoring minister. I would be interested in hearing the comments of the Secretary of State who used to evince quite an interest in our province in the days when we had no Liberal members from that province, on the matter which I raised a moment ago.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can point out, sir, that the relative situation, I believe, is improving. The gap between the salaries of the lieutenant governor of Prince Edward Island and of the other lieutenant governors is less than it used to be. However I shall draw the eloquent plea of the hon. member for Queens to the attention of my colleagues. It may be that on another occasion, particularly after the causeway has been completed and the population augmented, his views will prevail.

Mr. Macquarrie: I should not like to see, Mr. Chairman, my poor eloquence compared with my friend's, but on the basis of mathematics I have the impression that the difference is greater. It used to be $1,000 and now it is $2,000, and I cannot see that that is narrowing the gap.

Mr. Pickersgill: The proportional difference is better.

Mr. Knowles: Maybe the hon. member for Queens could achieve his desire of equality among the provinces if he would move that the salaries of all the other lieutenant governors be reduced to that paid to the lieutenant governor of Prince Edward Island. I am sure he realizes as a private member he could move that. I suggest that he do it, and I will support it.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 8 and 9 agreed to.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL CENTENNIAL ACT

AMENDMENTS CHANGING NAME, ENLARGING MEMBERSHIP OF ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

The house resumed from Thursday, November 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lamontagne (for the Prime Minister) for the second reading of Bill No. C-107, to amend the National Centennial Act.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, this bill and the resolution preceding it were before us on November 19, 20 and 21, on which day I had the pleasure of adjourning the debate because I rejected the suggestion of two hon. members on the other side that two minutes would suffice for anything I might have to say—although I was in a very co-operative mood then, and had I been given an opportunity to speak the bill might have passed second reading. That opportunity was not afforded me.

Since that time I have examined the bill with very great care and I have carefully read over the debate up to this point. I have also read the debate on the national centennial bill of two years ago, the confederation debates, and the debates in the British house of commons at the time of the passing of the British North America Act—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: —and I have refreshed my memory with regard to the history of our country. I find it rather odd that two years ago, in 1961, the house accepted very favourably the proposition then before it, namely, the setting up of the National Centennial Council. The people who were then in opposition and who are now on the treasury benches spoke very favourably of the suggestion that was advanced by the prime minister of that day. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) and the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) all participated in that debate two years ago and found nothing at all wrong with the bill.

At that time the present Prime Minister said:

> A centenary is a...momentous occasion in the history of a state.

He went on to say:

> Our nation will soon be celebrating its one hundredth birthday anniversary.

The Minister of Transport used the phrase, "at this point in our national progress," and the Minister of National Health and Welfare spoke about, "the beginnings of our nation when we celebrate its one hundredth birthday." The hon. member for Hull used these words:

> All the politicians put aside party feeling to bring forth the fullest national unity possible.

That was the spirit two years ago with regard to the celebrations we hope to hold in Canada in 1967. There was no dissenting voice. There was no niggling objection to the use of any word. It was only this year, in 1963, that we discovered there were some objections, and so the government introduced a resolution followed by this bill, to make certain changes.

Strangely enough the people who have spoken on behalf of the government in the debate up to the present have been the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso) and the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette). The resolution stood in the name of the Prime Minister. In view of what he said in 1961 I would have thought he would have taken the resolution and the bill through the house on this occasion, lifted the debate to the high level that pertained two years ago, and drawn the attention of the Canadian people to our great history and the celebrations we hope to hold in 1967, with a look to the future. There was a chance for great leadership, such as was shown in 1961; but this year, 1963, the Prime Minister did not participate, has not participated up to this point; and I wish he would.

He left the job to the President of the Privy Council who introduced the resolution and the bill without any lift to the spirit at all. He pretended that only minor amendments were being made, which led the Secretary of State on to say that it was just an exercise in semantics. Consider the irresponsibility of a government bringing an exercise in semantics before the House of Commons.

I thought the President of the Privy Council was rather careless in his handling of this whole problem. He drew our attention to the fact that certain changes were desirable in the translation into French, and he said that those changes could have been made by the former administration. I ask him, why could those changes, to which we raise no objection, not have been made in the French version, if it was inaccurately translated originally, as he stated, instead of making a major change in the bill and, through his casual introduction, stirring up discord on a matter which should have no element of discord in it? Why could he not have done that, when what we are talking about is our country, our native land, the birth of our nation; and I am using the word "nation" in the sense in which people of English speech use it? We got the word from the French and it came originally from the Latin. There may be other meanings to the word nation but with us we consider it, and have done so for a long time, as the designation of a political entity covering an area, and all the divers peoples who are united together in that political entity.

Why could not the president of the council, when pointing out to us that there were some feelings among our French speaking brethren about the translation, have made that correction, instead of making a much more substantial change by way of the one which was introduced into the house? He has, by his actions—and he is acting, of course, as spokesman for the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson)—raised a certain discord which is incompatible with the nature of the future celebrations that we hope to hold in this country. What purpose is served by this type of activity? I think that upon reflection the Prime Minister and the president of the council would be ready to express regret that they did not follow the course that was so carefully plotted in 1961, and keep the whole discussion of this interesting subject on a very, very high level. Not content with doing that, the President of the Privy Council distorted history on November 20. He used these words, as is reported on page 4979 of Hansard:

> It is quite clear to me, as it should be to the right hon. gentleman, that our nation and Canada existed before 1867. What did happen in 1867? United Canada and two other separate British colonies joined together in a confederation to form a single British colony, which became sovereign in fact much later in the present century.

I suggest that is a distortion of history.

Mr. Lamontagne: In what way?

Mr. Churchill: I shall indicate in what way immediately. What the president of the council has overlooked is that a new state was formed in 1867. He does not want to call it a nation. I appreciate that point of view. But certainly a new state was formed in 1867.

Mr. Lamontagne: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I never said in my speech that there was no Canadian nation. I said that the Canadian nation was born before 1867.

An hon. Member: What is your point of order?

Mr. Churchill: In the sense in which the president of the council is speaking, he is using the word "nation" as we use the word "race".

Mr. Lamontagne: No.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Churchill: No one is prepared to say there was not a Canadian nation before 1867. Also, if you like, there was an English nation in this country before 1867; but we do not use that term at all. At the time of confederation one of the great leaders of that era, who was quoted by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he was speaking on this subject, used these words:

> The time has arrived to form a great nation. If we unite, we will form a political nationality independent of the national origin and religion of individuals.

We have always accepted that as the historical fact with regard to what happened in 1867. And the other fathers of confederation were not talking about forming a larger British colony; they were talking about forming a new state comprised of the former British colonies that were on the North American continent. They were thinking in terms of a new state. Their opposite numbers in the British Isles were thinking along the same lines. When the secretary of the colonies, Lord Carnarvon, was discussing the British North America Act on February 19, 1867, he used these words:

> We are laying the foundation of a great state—perhaps one which at a future day may even overshadow this country.

Mr. Adderley, who was a distinguished member of the British House of Commons, said this:

> The rest of this large continent, still British, is now asking us to assist them to develop their own strength and resources in retained connection and in partnership of allegiance to one common sovereign.

Mr. Cardwell, who had been in the former administration secretary of the colonies and was subsequently minister of defence, used these words:

> Time was when it was the policy of this country to exercise a strong imperial control over her colonies. If that policy continued it would be unwise to pass this bill...but that policy has now passed away and the sole object of our government now is to have the satisfaction, pride and pleasure of witnessing the growth under the crown of England of great and powerful communities attached to the mother country by no other ties than those of love and affection and a reciprocal regard, which will prove a source of strength in the hour of danger.

Mr. Gladstone, on March 28, 1867, said:

> It is impossible to conceive anything more complete than our acknowledgment of those rights of self-government.

He was referring to the changed conditions that were being brought about in Canada. Then he said:

> We have carried it to this point, that as far as regards the administration, I believe it may be said that the only officer appointed by the colonial secretary is the governor; and I believe there cannot be a doubt that if it were the well ascertained desire of the colonies to have the appointment of their own governor, the imperial parliament would at once make over to them that power.

There is nothing, sir, in the evidence of the debates in Canada at the time of confederation, or in the debates in the British house of commons, to indicate that just a larger British colony was being formed. It was the creation of a new state, with complete independence; and any vestiges of colonialism that were left in Canada were due to Canadians themselves. The chief vestige that was left from 1867 to 1871 was the presence in Canada of a considerable force of British soldiers who were kept here at the request of the Canadian government because of the threat of the Fenian raids from across the border. I hope that the national centennial council, when it makes its plans for 1967, will commemorate in some form or other the assistance and sacrifice of the long suffering British taxpayer who supported numerous British troops in Canada from 1867 to 1871 before the four million people who then comprised Canada were ready to undertake the responsibilities which certainly rested upon them.

I suggest it is wrong to distort history by pretending, as has been pretended now for so many years, that Canada was just a colony of Great Britain after 1867. For 25 years before that time self-government had been accorded the British colonies on the North American continent. We became a nation state in 1867, and that is the point in time to which we are looking back, to celebrate in 1967. The people of 100 years ago in Canada and in Great Britain looked forward with vision to the future and saw the development of a great self-governing dominion, which was almost called kingdom, on the British North American continent. Everything that Canada wanted by way of independence the people in Great Britain were prepared to give. So I suggest that the President of the Privy Council is distorting history in making the suggestion that he does.

Now I have a much more serious point to bring to the attention of the house. I have already indicated that in the debate so far, in marked contrast with the debate in 1961, the only people who have spoken on the government side are the president of the council, the hon. member for Hamilton West and the hon. member for Lotbiniere. I take it that, this being a government measure, these people were speaking on behalf of the government, and were setting out the policy of the government and of the Liberal party. At the time I adjourned the debate on November 21 I did so because, having listened very carefully to the speech of the hon. member for Lotbiniere, I thought that the right of reply should be accorded to people on this side of the house.

Let us consider, Mr. Speaker, some of the things said by the hon. member during the course of that debate. I heard him speak, but Hansard does not record the eloquence of his remarks, the fervour with which they were presented to the house and the emphasis that he placed upon them. Let us consider very carefully what he said. He picked upon the most important change in the bill, and as reported at page 5006 said this:

> But the most important change, in my opinion, is the new name that is proposed. Instead of celebrating the centennial of the nation, we are going to celebrate the centennial of confederation. Of course that implies rather different circumstances, because we are ready to celebrate the Canadian nation at any time, but to celebrate the centennial of confederation, that is not exactly the same thing.

So he based his remarks on this main portion of the act. Then in his peroration, which was very well delivered, he speaks with feeling and with fire. He went on in these words:

> Canada is an economic power; it has the right to transact business freely with other countries. It declared war in 1939—which is a sign of total independence—and since 1945, it has its own representative at the United Nations. Why should it still be subject to bonds of colonialism?

Thus he harped on the theme set out earlier by the President of the Privy Council, on the theme of colonialism, which is a misreading of history and is false to the history of our country. Then, Mr. Speaker, here is his final paragraph:

> Here is the nonsensical situation in which Canada finds herself in 1963: without a flag, without a national anthem, unable to amend its own constitution in some cases and a foreign sovereign is the symbol of its supreme authority.

Those were the words of the hon. member for Lotbiniere speaking, I took it, on behalf of the government, setting out the policy of the Liberal government. I call upon the Prime Minister of this country to come into this house and to make a statement. Does he agree with these words of the hon. member for Lotbiniere? Is that the stand that he takes with regard to this country? Or has he some different idea which he would like to put before the Canadian people? Will he speak in the terms in which he spoke in 1961?

Mr. Speaker, until I heard the remarks of the hon. member for Lotbiniere and the remarks of the President of the Privy Council on second reading, I was constrained to consider that the changes proposed, much as we regretted them, might be accepted; but I have reached the conclusion that we are being pushed a bit too far under the circumstances. I suggest to the Prime Minister of this country and to the members of the Liberal party that they reconsider their position. There is no one in Canada who is not proud of his country; and we use the word "country" as synonymous with "state" and "nation". There is no Canadian who is not proud of this country. There is no Canadian who does not like the idea—I hope—of celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of our country. This is something to lift the heart, raise the spirits and enable us to look to the future. At the time we do celebrate our one hundredth birthday, let us review the whole history, the prior history, of this great country of Canada. Why not? It is a fascinating history, and so many races have contributed to the development of Canada. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk) pointed out the contributions which had been made by people not belonging to the two original founding races. The whole opening up of western Canada, a vast empire in itself, has been due in very large part to the activity and dedication of people of races neither English nor French.

If we are going to have, or continue to have, as I think we have had in the past, a united Canada, why should we be exposed to the type of activity foisted upon us by the President of the Privy Council, who could have brought in the necessary amendment to the French translation of the act and left us with what we thought was established two years ago? Nobody in Canada two years ago, at the time the act was presented to the House of Commons, raised any objection. These objections came subsequently.

Mr. Lamontagne: In 1961.

Mr. Churchill: In 1961. This whole idea was grasped with enthusiasm by the people of this country. And now the president of the council, speaking on behalf of the Prime Minister, has brought discord into the discussion of something which should have been so much above that. This, I think, is deplorable. It is an unfortunate development, and I think it can only be corrected by the Prime Minister himself speaking here to the House of Commons and to Canada and expressing his views.

Let us see where we stand. Why are we to be pushed this far. Is the Liberal party of this country going to ask us to accept some of these statements which were made by the hon. member for Lotbiniere? Are we to sit silent when he talks about a foreign sovereign? I would say to the hon. member and to the President of the Privy Council and to the Prime Minister: the Liberal party and the government of this country are misjudging the temper of the Canadian people. We are prepared to be co-operative. We are prepared to make this concession and that concession. It may be perfectly all right. But I suggest that matters are being pushed to a crisis unnecessarily by the action of this government, based on the introduction of this bill.

I hope even now that the Prime Minister will accept his responsibilities, come here into the House of Commons and speak for Canada, instead of creating dissension and causing trouble in this country which we love.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I had not intended to take any part in this debate and I do not intend to take any extensive part now. But there was one observation made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) which I cannot allow to pass in silence. I happen, at the moment, to be the senior government representative in the house—

An hon. Member: The only representative.

Mr. Pickersgill: I also happen to represent the constituency to which the Europeans first came when Canada was first discovered, when that great Italian explorer, John Cabot was paid £10 by Henry VII for the discovery of Newfoundland—

An hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Pickersgill: It also happened that my constituency was the first landfall of Jacques Cartier. His first landing took place there before he went on to Gaspe or Quebec. Perhaps if I could have some quiet attention, the same courtesy as was given to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in a matter as important as this, where an appeal was made for unity, it might make for unity.

I have no desire to contribute to any kind of dissension in this country and I have tried never to do so. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre could hardly have been speaking seriously when he suggested that anyone could speak for a government except a member of that government. We are elected here as supporters of parties or groups, or even as independents; but outside of those who sit on the treasury benches and are sworn of the privy council and belong to the cabinet, no one else in this place is authorized to speak for the government.

Mr. Woolliams: Do you repudiate that Liberal, then?

Mr. Pickersgill: I repudiate any suggestion that the Queen of Canada is a foreigner—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: —as the Prime Minister has already repudiated that suggestion. Of course, this bill has nothing to do with that matter at all. The purpose of this bill is to make certain corrections in the French text of the act, to make certain other consequential amendments, and quite properly to take advantage of this situation to change certain expressions which have given offence in certain parts of this country, and to substitute other expressions which, it seems to me, can give no reasonable offence to anyone. While they are there in the form they are, they do give offence to some Canadians. I would hope we would all try, no matter where objections come from in this country—if people are sensitive about certain things, and if those objections can be overcome without creating irritation in other quarters—I hope we would all try to meet those objections. As the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre indicated in his opening remarks, I hope we shall not seek to exacerbate any differences there may be in connection with this matter but that, instead, we shall deal with the words and the expressions which are actually in the bill before us, so that any irritation or misunderstanding which may have been caused can be overcome as quickly as possible.

We all know, as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre hinted, that the word "nation" in the English language is generally used as a synonym for the word "state". We also know that in the French language it has two senses. Out of this comes, sometimes, misunderstanding. We also know that the word "foreigner" in English is translated in French by the word "étranger". There was one occasion when Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who had an almost perfect command of the English language—it was not a perfect command; indeed, few of us have a perfect command even of our own mother tongue—used the word "foreigner" when all he meant was the word "stranger", and thereby caused a tremendous commotion, though a person thoroughly familiar with both languages would easily have understood what had happened.

We in this country have a problem because we do have two official languages, but it seems to me that even those of us in this house who are familiar with only one of them should try to understand both the potentialities and the limitations of the other language, and try to make as much accommodation for them as possible. It seems to me that only in that way can we have the united country that we want to see; only in that way can we celebrate, in 1967 what I like to call, in the words of the British North America Act, the union which took place in that year.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to hear the speech made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill).

I should not want to leave unchallenged some of his remarks. We have witnessed a real war in the fashion of a modern Don Quixote, trying to break down a door already opened.

If I may make a suggestion to the government which wants to appoint a new Canadian ambassador to London, it should appoint to that post the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre on account of the assertions he has just made, in order to rid Canada of him.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot with a mere stroke of the pen, cross out 200 years of history, that is the two centuries which elapsed before confederation took place in 1867. We may have been able to create a confederation of two nations in 1867, but it takes more than a day to build a nation.

The founding of a country comes gradually as events go on and is the result of a succession of events which preceded it. It develops through all sorts of legislation which precede it. There were final statutes before the 1867 act, namely the act of Quebec in 1774, another legislation in 1791, one in 1842 and finally confederation in 1867.

A country is not founded overnight. Before confederation, we had a whole series of outstanding facts, of leaders in the political and cultural fields, etc. Natural resources were developed which enabled the country to develop by itself.

It is the blending of all those facts which made it possible to designate at one particular time the 1867 act by the name of confederation. But that was not the foundation of a new state nor the creation of a new nation. It was a progression through circumstances, facts and developments which made it possible for Upper and Lower Canada, having come to maturity, to form what we call today the Canadian confederation.

We can take as an example Algeria, which has just reached independence. Would it be right to say that Algeria has become a nation over night merely on account of the fact that France has given it its independence? Obviously not, for previous to that, there had been historic events, personalities and cultural developments. That is what made possible the formation of a new country and a new nation.

The same thing could be said of the Congo and of those Latin American countries which, for years, have evolved by themselves through their own culture and with the support of other colonial countries which succeeded in opening up new cultural vistas for them. After a series of events, the adoption of various pieces of legislation and the appearance of men who succeeded in imposing their personality, a new way of life was born in those countries. New legislation was the concrete evidence of all past efforts.

Confederation, Mr. Speaker, did not come into being spontaneously. It was not spontaneous generation nor a new state. It was the result of centuries of efforts, work and development. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, a former minister, must not find in the fact that a piece of legislation is being changed an excuse for a political debate.

We speak of confederation. A confederation is not born out of nothing, it comes out of something that existed beforehand. That is what gave birth to confederation. It is because some things existed before that those things could be united to form confederation. It is not a union of nothing, a union in a vacuum, but a union of principles, factors, human resources and natural resources, which at a given moment formed confederation.

Since it is a confederation built on principles, cultures, personalities and legislation that already existed, it was possible to make a concrete whole out of those things and to form confederation. There, Mr. Speaker, you have a confederation born out of something which exists.

Reference is made to the confederation centennial, to a nation. A while ago, I wanted to challenge the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre who, in doing so, was actually taking to task the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette). The Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) also deemed it advisable, after the Prime Minister, to repudiate the statement made by the hon. member for Lotbiniere. I do not mean to say that I approve 100 per cent the idea as expressed by the hon. member for Lotbiniere. But there is perhaps one thing that should be borne in mind. If a nation, in the sense the word is used by English speaking Canadians, a political nation, is to be built, we French Canadians believe it must be given an image in keeping with a real nation. How is that image of a nation which exists by itself to be achieved? At the present time, we have a geographical image of our country, with boundaries to the east, west, north and south. But, in the interior, what is the image of this country? Let us look at our public buildings. Were we able to give them names representing symbols for Canadians as Canadians? As a matter of fact, when the question of choosing a name for an hotel in Montreal came up, it was called Queen Elizabeth.

I agree, as the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) stated the other day, that the Queen of England is also the Queen of Canada, that she is bilingual and nice, but if we want to create the image of a Canadian country, why not give our public buildings names which represent something for Canadians, as Canadians and for Canada, as a country?

Let us look, for instance, at the name given to the street right in front of the parliament buildings in Ottawa: Wellington street, a name which recalls a great English general.

Put your hand in your pocket and take out your paper money. What are you going to find on it? Again the picture of the Queen.

Put a stamp on an envelope. The same picture again.

Streets, parks, public buildings are our symbols. Do we manage really to create a Canadian image favourable to each and everyone of the Canadian citizens? Are we trying to unite the Canadian people?

Here is another example, Mr. Speaker. About a fortnight ago, I had the opportunity to watch the Grey cup game on television. An interesting game, I agree, but it started with a regiment parading with the union jack while "God Save the Queen" was being played. Should anyone doubt the truth of what I am saying, let him get the tape recordings of that T.V. program and he will see that I am right. It was beautiful since it happened in Vancouver, but I, watching that television program in Jonquiere, that is, at the other end of the country, I heard the national anthem of another country whereas they displayed the flag of another country. What does it do for Canada?

Mr. Speaker, all that gives food for thought when we speak about celebrating the centennial of confederation, which others call the nation. Have we really created an image of the Canadian nation which displays the feeling of each and every Canadian? Or have we not, for too long and too often, drawn from foreign symbols?

Those are, Mr. Speaker, the points I wanted to make. I made these remarks as they came to my mind, particularly following the speech just made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill). I would have liked to answer some of the other remarks he made tonight, for I must admit I was somewhat surprised to hear them, particularly at a time when Canadians make a real effort towards understanding between the two great nations.

Recently, we saw—and I believe this is really relevant to the centennial of confederation, soon to be celebrated—the president of the Canadian National Railways suggest a program to promote bilingualism and biculturalism in our country, a program which was unanimously adopted. In fact, the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) and the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) seconded a motion I put forward to support that policy, which may be was only a project, but the results of which will be evaluated later on.

Those are, Mr. Speaker, steps towards understanding. But if speeches like that made tonight by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre were heard too often, then we would go backwards, retracing our steps continually.

The other day, the hon. member for Three Rivers deemed it advisable to make a speech on the state of Quebec during the debate on a motion I had presented. I am wondering if he will have the nerve to rise tonight and protest against the arguments raised a while ago by one of his former cabinet colleagues, namely the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

I am wondering also if the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) will raise his arms as high today as he usually does when he is putting questions to the Prime Minister or the President of the Privy Council, and if he will protest with all the vigour called for against the speech we heard a short while ago?

Mr. Pigeon: You will read the speech I made some time ago.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, it is very well to make nice speeches but you must also practice what you preach. If you let the arguments heard tonight go unchallenged, you can say that these are high-sounding speeches, principles being formulated, and that you do not want things to go any farther. In fact, you must not be afraid to protest if need be, even if members of your own party are involved.

Mr. Speaker, these things must be said to put the cards on the table and stop allowing those who do not want understanding or who want to break open doors to come here and make speeches like the one we heard tonight.

If it is the wish to appoint the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre as Canadian ambassador to England, I would be the first to second the motion. This would be an opportunity to send him for some time in another country.

Mr. Speaker, one of the best ways to celebrate properly the centennial of confederation would be to set about preparing it seriously. Recently, efforts were made to promote bilingualism and biculturalism in Canada. There is an exchange of ideas and I conclude my remarks by emphasizing this point. Let us not forget that the most important problem at the present time—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I notice that there are still a few backbenchers who did not understand; in short, they are ignorant. But when time comes for these hon. members to speak about wheat, then they can talk for 24 hours. And since we let them outline their problems, they should be as broadminded as we are and let us enjoy the same privilege.

Mr. Speaker, the last problem I want to raise is the most important, I think, since confederation. I mean the taxation problem which brushes aside all the others and about which our English speaking colleagues seem to have fallen into step. In my opinion, this problem must be settled if we do not want to witness the breaking off of confederation, even before the centennial celebration. The parties concerned must get together and settle the problem, so as to enable us to save confederation whose centennial we want to celebrate in four years from now.

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, just a few remarks.

We have been listening tonight to two speeches which, instead of being sources of agreement, are precisely sources of dissension.

As one complains on the one hand that some people lack breadth of outlook, on the other hand, one can complain about the same things even though one must keep those complaints for oneself.

I suggest that truths have been told tonight but that they could or should have been told in other circumstances. I believe that what we need is action rather than claims made at the top of one's voice, inconsiderately, without taking into account circumstances or varied factors that should be of interest to everybody.

Some say we should be acting instead of making speeches. I think that could be applied to those who talk that way and never do anything.

In a country such as ours, made up of various ethnic groups, of two official groups whose official languages are recognized, I think it is enough to know each other better, to better appreciate each other and to be able to recognize our characteristics in order to get along instead of always blaming each other and saying: if we cannot get along, there will be separation, or you are lacking co-operation.

There is exaggeration on both sides, but without going into more details, I should like to say that there still are probably in this house some people who have sound middle course principles, who know there are problems on both sides and who think it should be possible to find grounds for agreement instead of living in discord.

I think that the changing of this National Centennial Act into the Centennial of Canadian Confederation Act is a step forward towards the settlement of that problem. I think it is not by adopting rigid, unchangeable and die-hard attitudes that we can succeed in solving that problem. It is rather by admitting calmly the things that are done, like the project before us tonight, that we can finally arrive, not at a Canadian unity—it is quite hard to have real unity with so much diversity—but at co-operation and good understanding between the two majority groups which make up our country.

[Text]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am impelled to say a word or two in view of the contribution made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill). He, in turn, found it necessary to speak because of earlier speeches that had been made. I was particularly interested in the expression of his views, to which I shall make allusion in a moment, that only those who are members of the cabinet can speak for the Liberal party and the government of the day.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the right hon. gentleman does not want to be unfair. I said that only the members of the cabinet could speak for the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, I intend to refer to the fact that this cabinet certainly does not live up to the high aspirations that were designated by the minister during the course of his remarks. I think we have had a series of examples recently in this connection which would indicate that the cabinet of today has as many voices as the representations that are made to its membership require it to have. I am going to give some examples of that because I think it would be intensely interesting to understand how a government can express itself in unity, when amongst its members their voices are generally raised in disunity.

However, I am going back to the initial stages of this particular legislation. I introduced this legislation in this house, and it received general support. The then leader of the opposition, now the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), gave his views at the time, as did the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith). I am going to read a few of the remarks made by the Prime Minister, and when I read them it will be understood why it is that these amendments are brought in by someone other than the Prime Minister. I do not want to read at length, but I refer to the remarks made by the then leader of the opposition, because I gather that the word "nation" or "national"—either of these words—have a connotation that denies their use in the interests of national unity.

Mr. Lamontagne: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister, on a point of order.

Mr. Lamontagne: I challenge the right hon. gentleman to show me where the word "nation" is in the English version of the present act and also to show me that we are deleting the word "national" from the present act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; perhaps I should mention that, in my opinion, that is not a point of order but rather a point of debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a matter of fact it is a point of disorder. I read what the Prime Minister said:

> I think all members of this committee wherever they may sit would wish to give wholehearted support to this resolution.

Then he said:

> It is perhaps a happy coincidence that the Prime Minister on his sixty sixth birthday anniversary should be reminding us that our nation will soon be celebrating its one hundredth birthday anniversary. It is appropriate that we should prepare for that celebration.

Then a little later on again he said that Canada as a nation would be 100 years of age; and still later:

> The fact that we shall soon be celebrating our hundredth birthday makes us one of the older states in the world.
> As the Prime Minister has said, this celebration should encompass the whole range of Canada's history, not merely the achievement of confederation itself.

Then again, as recorded at page 8469 of Hansard for September 18, 1961, he said:

> Also, as the Prime Minister has pointed out, it would be appropriate to re-examine the values of our national society.

He spoke. The hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) spoke. The Minister of Transport of today spoke; and never was there one word of criticism among any of the members now sitting on the government side when this bill was before the house. They gave it undivided support. There was not one word of criticism in this house, not one word of criticism in the other place. Then, suddenly, ten days or so after the bill became law the first objection was raised by the premier of Quebec, who indicated that he would not permit his province to participate in the celebration of our anniversary unless there were changes made in the legislation.

Why was it that those sitting opposite today, when they sat over here, saw nothing wrong then? Why did they support it throughout? Why was there such unanimity, and why the change that took place within a few days after His Excellency had given royal approval? It was only because the premier of Quebec decided that the wording of the legislation did not meet his desires or wishes.

I want to be very clear on this. Over and over again, in an endeavour to bring about national unity within our country, when some of us disagree with other fellow Canadians we are immediately charged with being anti this or that. The suggestion has been made that I am anti-Quebec because I dared to say that I disagreed with Premier Lesage. Is he anti-Canadian because he disagrees with me? Was he anti-Quebec when he disagreed with Premier Duplessis? Surely there must be better arguments advanced than that, that every time you disagree with the premier of one province in Canada you thereby become anti-Quebec?

I was never anti-Quebec at any time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I point this fact out to the President of the Privy Council, that almost 40 years ago I argued a case in the province of Saskatchewan on appeal, whereby school trustees who were prosecuted for the use of the French language had been convicted. It was not a popular stand to take, but my belief was that the French had the right to their language in the schools of Saskatchewan. I took that case and at that time, 40 years ago, there was little thought of my being in politics. Those views represented my views, when it was unpopular to hold those views, and I emphasize that fact; but throughout the years it has been the prerogative of the Liberal party to charge those who may not agree with their viewpoints at any one time as being anti-somebody, anti-something. It is simply a continuation of divide and rule, which for so many years represented the reason for success of the Liberal party.

I was referring to the debate that took place on September 18, 1961. I think that above all in this nation we believe in freedom. We believe in the necessity of the preservation of those things that had their consummation in confederation.

When the Liberal party, under Mr. St. Laurent, was arguing in this house that the rights of language, religion and education guaranteed under the British North America Act could be amended by a majority of this House of Commons and of the Senate, the Conservative party took the stand that the rights of French Canadians, their religious and educational rights, were inviolate, unchallengeable and unchangeable. While we took that view, Mr. St. Laurent said that they could be changed by a simple vote of parliament, a principle that this party has never accepted, and which denies the basic agreements between Macdonald and Cartier and those who made confederation—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Please, Mr. Speaker; I will be glad when I conclude to answer any question that the hon. gentleman will ask. At the moment I choose to proceed, but he will get every opportunity.

The words of Sir George Etienne Cartier are pertinent today. This is what he said:

> The time has arrived to form a great nation, and I maintain that, as far as we are concerned, confederation has become necessary to our commerce, our prosperity, and our protection...
> The government is of the opinion that confederation is necessary, but it is ready to hear the honourable members on the other side who apparently intend to oppose it. I am aware that members of this house and a number of people in Upper Canada and the maritime provinces believe that a legislative union would be far more advantageous than a confederation. As far as I am concerned, I believe that a single government could not deal properly with the private and local interests of the various sections or the various provinces. No other system is practicable but a federal system. It is pretended that it will be impossible to carry out confederation on account of differences of race and of religion. Those who hold that opinion are in error. It is precisely on account of the difference in races and local interests that the federal system should be established and that it will work well.

He went on to say a little later on:

> Objection is made to our project, because of the words "a new nationality".
> But if we unite, we will form a political nationality independent of the national origin and religion of individuals. Some have regretted that we have a distinction of races, and have expressed the hope that, in time, this diversity will disappear. The idea of a fusion of all races is utopian; it is an impossibility. Distinctions of this character will always exist; diversity is the order of the physical, moral and political world. As to the objection that we cannot form a great nation because Lower Canada is French and Catholic, Upper Canada English and Protestant, and the maritime provinces mixed, it is futile.

Then he goes on to say:

> We cannot by law make the differences of race disappear, but I am convinced that the Anglo Canadians and the French Canadians will appreciate the advantages of their position. Set side by side, like a great family, their contact will produce a happy spirit of emulation. The diversity of races will in fact, believe me, contribute to the common prosperity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Those words of 1867 by the great tribune of French Canada in confederation are as true today as they were then.

Ever since there have been divisions from time to time, but the essence of Canada is tolerance in action and in fact, a recognition that while we will not always agree in all things, over and above the disagreements that sometimes separate us is a common dedication to freedom and a recognition that those of the English and the French race, and the other races that have come to this country, each has a part to play, the basic races with their constitutional rights and the other races having that freedom which gives to those of us who are Canadian a pride in the greatness of our citizenship.

Over and over again it has been the history of our country that too often for political purposes divisions have been created. I would like to say it was because I believed in the possibilities in that connection that I advocated the need of the questions in dispute on national symbols, and the like, being submitted to a dominion-provincial conference; a conference representative of all the political parties of the nation and of all the races of the nation—because no matter what the symbols may be, they cannot be pushed on to the people; they must be accepted nationally, by our people as a whole. In other words, there must be that feeling that each and all are endeavouring to bring about that Canadian citizenship, strong, vital and free. I think of the words of Sir Charles George Douglas Roberts, when considering some of the things that have happened in the last year or so in our country. I think these words are so applicable:

> Awake my country, the hour is great with change.

In other words, let us—and I make this plea—fight our political battles over the things that separate us; but do not let us start fighting political battles in order to get votes over the questions that separate us and are bound to separate us from time to time because of the different racial origins of our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Again I quote Cartier, who said this:

> —there will be Catholics and Protestants, English, French, Irish and Scotch, and each by its efforts and success will add to the prosperity of the dominion and to the glory of the new confederation. We are of different races, not to quarrel but to work together for the common welfare.

That was the spirit of Cartier and of Macdonald and of Laurier; and that is the spirit that we need today. But for some reason the President of the Privy Council has belonged to those that in the past several years have continued to activate division in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: That is not so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, yes. I cannot understand why it is that what was right on September 18 and later in September of 1961, what was accepted thereafter until changed by the premier of Quebec, suddenly becomes wrong, suddenly becomes discordant, suddenly brings about a division in the nation. I plead with the government that in these things we do not proceed in a way that can only leave wounds. I am not going to say more in that connection, but I point out once more that there was unanimity when the legislation was passed; there was acceptance. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) joined in the band, and, now—

Mr. Lamontagne: What about consultation with the provinces?

Mr. Diefenbaker:—what was good in 1961 has become an element of disunity in 1963. The Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) was going to ask me a question a little earlier. I will be glad to answer it, and then I want to say something about the cabinet in a kindly way.

Mr. Pickersgill: My question will, I think, be entirely non-contentious. The right hon. gentleman referred to a statement made by Mr. St. Laurent in 1949 about section 133 of the British North America Act. I am asking the right hon. gentleman whether when he made that statement he had forgotten that this same Mr. St. Laurent, in this house in the autumn of 1949, proposed an amendment to the British North America Act No. 2 of 1949, which safeguarded it for all time and took it beyond the power of a simple majority to do that. And to be fair to Mr. St. Laurent it should be pointed out that the defect he had mentioned in the constitution, he himself took the initiative in removing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I said that Mr. St. Laurent had stated that by a simple amendment of parliament those rights could be taken away. We said no, and then finally Mr. St. Laurent asked parliament to amend the British North America Act so as to remove the doubt which was in his mind, but never in ours in this party. I mentioned Sir Wilfrid Laurier a moment ago and I want to quote what he said, because I think it might be studied with interest by the President of the Privy Council:

> Below the island of Montreal the water that comes from the north, from the Ottawa, unites with the waters that come from the great lakes to the west, but uniting they do not mix. They run parallel, separate, distinguishable, and yet they are one stream, flowing within the same banks of the mighty St. Lawrence, and rolling on toward the sea...
> There is the perfect image of our nation. We may not assimilate, we may not blend, but for all that we are the component parts of the same country. We may be French in origin, we may be English or Scots or whatever, but we are Canadian—one in aim and one in purpose.

That represents the view that this party has always taken from the days of confederation, to which it contributed so much and has continued to do so throughout the years since.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) gave us a lesson in cabinet solidarity and responsibility, and told us how only the members of the government can speak for the government. I was quite interested in that, because we have had some examples in the last while which indicate that he has not been studying the situation as carefully as he might. In his speech on April 23 the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) used these words, which were to be descriptive of the events which would take place in Canada within the 60 days and thereafter. These are challenging words:

> This is a time to excite the daring, test the strong and give new promise to the timid.

They are striking words and they had national appeal. I am going to refer to some of the things which have happened recently in this regard—because the Secretary of State has chosen to bring this question up—and to indicate the unity which prevails over there.

This government, Mr. Speaker, is a collection of ministers who dispense contradictory statements about confusing policies. It is a government of uncertainty wherein each minister voices his private opinions publicly. It is a government in which principles or consistencies are not regarded as important. It is a government wherein the ministers, in a spirit of diplomacy, agree with whatever representations are being made at the moment. I am going to refer to some examples of this. We have the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) who, rumour has it, is about to take a diplomatic post. Well, he showed high powers of diplomacy the other day when the labour group met with him. This labour organization group asked for sweepstakes for the—

Mr. Lamontagne: On a point of order; could we come back to the discussion of the second reading of this bill?

Mr. Diefenbaker: He reported that he was speaking for himself on that occasion.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, could we come back to the discussion of the second reading of this bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am not too sure what is the point the minister is raising at this time, but certainly I am sure the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) will want to limit his remarks to the bill before the house.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I beg to rise on a point of order, if I may. The point is that we are on second reading of this bill. I know what the right hon. gentleman has in mind and what he intends to do. He did it on my estimates the other evening. I have no objection if he does it again, but I should like to remind you, sir, that the second reading of this bill is not the place, it seems to me, to discuss matters which the right hon. gentleman is discussing. He had an opportunity to do it—

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not a point—

Mr. Chevrier: I am on a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is no point of order at all.

Mr. Chevrier: I am raising a point of order and I think the right hon. gentleman—

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat. I wonder whether we could not first hear the minister on his point of order, and then I will be pleased to hear the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis).

Mr. MacInnis: I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member has a question of privilege I will hear him.

Mr. MacInnis: My question of privilege is this. As a backbencher, or as an ordinary member of this house, what obligation have I to give place to a minister of the crown rising in his place, when the Chair did not recognize him in the first place, or prevent my rising on a point of privilege? The minister was not recognized.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think I should bring to the attention of the hon. member for Cape Breton South that the Leader of the Opposition sat down and yielded the floor very politely to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier), who I think is trying to expound a point of order. He may or may not have a point of order, but I think we should give him an opportunity to state it to the house; after a ruling has been made we can hear out the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Chevrier: My point of order—

Mr. MacInnis: One word on my point of privilege. I recognize the Leader of the Opposition's surrendering the floor to the President of the Privy Council, but not to the Minister of Justice, who was not recognized.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If this will please the hon. member for Cape Breton South, I will now recognize the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Chevrier: The point of order I had raised is quite a simple one. We are discussing second reading of this bill. The Leader of the Opposition is trying to bring into this matter matters which are entirely extraneous and which were discussed on another occasion. They have nothing to do with the bill. I know what it is going to be. If he wants to talk about me and make sarcastic remarks he can go ahead—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Chevrier: —because I have been listening to this for almost six years now and I am used to it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. On the point of order I can only say that the Leader of the Opposition has the floor now. He is required, and will I am sure, as all other hon. members try to do, to limit his remarks to the subject matter under consideration before the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice came in just a moment ago. He did not hear the contribution of the Secretary of State. Your Honour did not see fit to raise any objection when the Secretary of State was speaking with such scintillating eloquence regarding this cabinet. I think it only fair, if it was proper for him to lecture the house on the cabinet of which he is a member, that we should be able to get the other side of the question. It is because the other side of the question will hurt which causes the Minister of Justice to rise as he just did.

Mr. Chevrier: It won't hurt me, go ahead.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not wish to enter into an argument at all and I am sure all hon. members want to hear what the Leader of the Opposition has to say. My understanding is that when the Secretary of State rose he made a very cursory remark about cabinet solidarity, saying that only a cabinet member can speak on behalf of the government, and I do not think he did much more than make this very brief remark. I do not think this would justify the Leader of the Opposition in making a general discourse on cabinet solidarity.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, we talk about a spirit of co-operation and good will. I listened to the Secretary of State this evening and I seem to remember a book which was called "The Wizard of Oz". He is the Wizard of Ooze. He speaks with such softness and consideration at all times. But he is the one who gave me the opportunity to do this. I am not going to press it at all. I was just started, and I have some awful examples to indicate the spirit of unity that exists. I should have thought the government would have been anxious to have this cleared up. Remember what the Secretary of State said. He said: We speak as one; we speak for the party; no one else speaks for it. And when one thinks of all the clashing statements which have been made in the last few days—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —when minister after minister has been challenged for making statements, and the answer given in every case was: I was speaking for myself, not for the government—

An hon. Member: On a point of order—

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member for Lotbiniere is not a member of the government, but I am sure he should have the same right to emulate their differences as they themselves have. I will deal with this, though, before the session is over, because I think an opportunity will occur which Your Honour will agree is in keeping. This should be clarified, because it has been an interesting session characterized by division and uncertainty, except in this one measure in respect of which a direction was received by a premier of one province to this effect: Unless you do what I want, I will not take part in the celebration of confederation.

I hope the day will not come in this country when the premier of any one province having taken a stand which is not acceptable to members on the other side of this house, pointing this out will be considered as an attack on the province represented by that premier. Indeed, the minister of health gave us a lead in this connection when, in the course of the provincial election in Ontario, she spoke in such derogatory fashion of the premier. No one charged her with being anti-Ontario because she disagreed with the premier.

Miss LaMarsh: I was pro-Ontario for the Liberals.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask for the same consideration. To suggest that, when we discuss issues objectively and reach conclusions which are not acceptable to the premier of any one province we are opposed to the province represented by that premier, is to endorse a doctrine which denies the very basis of confederation which we are preparing to celebrate in 1967.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): The New Democratic party does not intend to take part in this exercise in national disunity. It seems to me that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) has started a debate which has set back confederation by several years.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 3 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 4—Personnel.

Mr. Churchill: I regret to have to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that clause 4, which introduces an amendment to the French version of the bill, is not expressed in the same words as the French version of Bill No. C-107. This, I think, should be corrected. I have taken the opportunity to read the French translation as well as the English version and I found, on reading them through, that in line 9 of subsection 6 the conjunction shown in the French version is that which appears in the English bill, while in the French translation, instead of "et" we have "ainsi que". This is, perhaps, something which should be corrected.

[Translation]

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I think the French version of the bill should be amended by striking out the word "et" and replacing by the words "ainsi que".

[Text]

Mr. Chevrier: I move, accordingly:

That the words "ainsi que" be deleted from line 9, clause 4 of the bill, and replaced by "et".

The Chairman: Could we have that amendment in writing?

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, the Minister of Justice and the President of the Privy Council are aware enough of the niceties of the French language so as not to be influenced by someone who has not the faintest idea on the subject.

If the words "ainsi que" are replaced by the word "et", let us look at the results, and this, because someone wanted to give us a lesson in French:

...qu'il estime nécessaires aux fins de la présente Partie et fixer leur rémunération et les modalités et conditions de leur emploi.

The Minister of Justice and the President of the Privy Council should agree with me that such a sentence would not sound well in French, whereas the present wording is as follows:

...fixer leur rémunération ainsi que les modalités et conditions de leur emploi.

The meaning is exactly the same, but it sounds better.

That is why I suggest that the section should be left as it is and remain unchanged.

[Text]

Mr. Churchill: I wonder whether the hon. member for Lapointe would reconsider his discourteous remark that I have no knowledge of the French language. I happen to be able to read the French language. I am not suggesting that there be any change. I am simply asking that the two versions correspond.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say, in all fairness to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, that the committee should be grateful to him for discovering that the two bills are not identical and for wishing to make sure that there will only be one French version and not two.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, why not amend clause 4 in the English version and substitute the words "ainsi que" to the word "et", so that it may sound better.

[Text]

Mr. Chevrier: I so move.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Chevrier moved:

That the word "et" be deleted and replaced by the words "ainsi que" before the words "les modalités" in paragraph 9 of clause 4 in the English version.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 5 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Mr. Churchill: On division.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? Now?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Churchill: Next sitting of the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Next sitting of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Second Clerk Assistant to call now committee of supply so that we can go ahead with the estimates of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources who has to be elsewhere for the most of the rest of the week.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

55. Water resources branch—administration, operation and maintenance including Canada's share of the expenses of the international executive council, world power conference, and authority to make recoverable advances in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the amount of the shares of the province of Manitoba and of the province of Ontario of the cost of regulating the levels of Lake of the Woods and Lac Seul and the amount of the shares of provincial and outside agencies of the cost of hydrometric surveys, $1,762,100.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, if we had ample time there would be a great deal I would like to say on this item. I know the minister is anxious to get away but I do want to bring to the attention of the house some matters in connection with this item. The minister gave an excellent address to the Saskatchewan river development association on November 1 of this year at Moose Jaw, the title of the address being "Energy From Water". I wish to quote briefly from this address because I think these remarks are well worth putting on the record. The minister said, commencing at page 6:

This makes it imperative that every available drop of water must be used wisely. Waste is inexcusable even in the midst of plenty, but where an increasing demand approaches the limit of the available supply, waste is not inexcusable, it is suicidal.

The warning signals are being given us by many people whose reputations are such as to command our most serious attention. Among them Mr. David Cass-Beggs, general manager of the Saskatchewan Power Corporation, has recently said that it can almost be taken for granted that in the next 30 years or less much of the flow of the Peace and the Athabaska will have been diverted into the North Saskatchewan and in part into the South Saskatchewan. In addition to conserving and redirecting water flows from the eastern side of the continental divide Mr. Cass-Beggs has suggested the most serious study of proposals to use diversion of water from the west side of the Rocky mountains into the southern river systems where they are most needed. It is quite certain that to many Canadians who have always associated water with plenty, such proposals will smack of popular mechanics. They should remember that these forebodings, in time it is to be hoped, overdrawn if some would prefer to call them so, may deliver us from the crises by which water failures have pockmarked the pages of world history and even at this moment are threatening great areas of this continent. The conservation or wise use of our water resources should be the concern of every citizen.

I am sure everybody will agree with the minister's contention in that respect as those remarks were made directly applicable to the water requirements of the prairie provinces. Because of its keen appreciation of these circumstances the government of Saskatchewan had some surveys made under the direction of Mr. Cass-Beggs of the Saskatchewan Power Corporation as to the possibility of diverting some of the waters on the western side of the Rockies and in northern areas of the prairies into the North Saskatchewan and into the South Saskatchewan. The result of these surveys was published in a paper called "Energy And Water For Western Canada" by Mr. Cass-Beggs. In that connection I want to quote one paragraph and then make a few concluding remarks. On page 5 of this very interesting report there is a paragraph headed "Water Supply and Demand" which reads as follows:

> It is well known that the prairie provinces—Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba—are the most arid parts of Canada, particularly in the settled areas. It is not generally realized, however, how serious a problem the future water supply to these areas may be. The original source of water in a drainage basin is of course the total precipitation. But the net water available is the run-off after evaporation and transpiration by vegetable life has returned a proportion to the atmosphere. While the precipitation in the settled part of the prairies is the lowest in Canada, about 17 inches, the run-off remaining as a source of water is a much smaller proportion of the precipitation than in any other region, resulting in only 2.8 inches per annum. This should be compared with 11 inches in Ontario, 15 inches in Quebec and about 25 inches in British Columbia and the maritimes. It might also be noted that the settled areas of the prairies represent some 30 per cent of the settled area of Canada but has only some 6 or 7 per cent of the run-off.

In this study he goes on to indicate how water can be diverted from the Columbia into the South Saskatchewan river system and from the Peace and other rivers into the North Saskatchewan river system. I mention this particularly because the minister has recognized the seriousness of this problem to the prairies, particularly in the future and possibly in the near future, and because Mr. Cass-Beggs and the government of Saskatchewan recognize it. I understand that the governments of Alberta and Manitoba are also concerned. As I mentioned in a question this afternoon, the premier of Saskatchewan has called a conference of ministers of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to be held in Regina on December 20, Friday of this week, to give consideration to the water requirements of the prairie provinces. I know that the minister, according to the reply he gave to my question this afternoon, is going to attend this conference. We are very pleased that he is and we hope that when he attends the conference he will give very serious consideration to the views of the representatives of the provinces. We trust that as a result of the conference in Regina the water requirements of the prairie provinces will be assured for all time to come.

Item agreed to.

65. Fraser river—federal expenditures in connection with investigation to be carried out by the Fraser river board, $65,000.

Mr. Patterson: For several years now, the Fraser river board has been making surveys and doing studies regarding the use of the Fraser river, and looking at it from various points of view. I was wondering whether the minister could indicate now just when it is expected the Fraser river board will be able to make its final report? I understand that the work is essentially completed and I thought the report would have been brought in before this.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the report has been completed and is being prepared and printed now. I understand it will be delivered to the government in January or February. We have had some indication of its contents in preliminary reports, and I believe it will be a report of exceeding importance.

The hon. member knows, as I know, that in the great 1948 flood many characters of the entire river were changed. We had sandbars that disappeared at one point and came up in other places. Thereafter, a considerable amount of money was spent by the governments of Canada and British Columbia in reinforcing and raising dikes. There is a general admission that in an extraordinary year such as we have known before, the Fraser valley could be flooded again. I believe it is imperative that action be taken upon this report, and it will certainly be the intention of the government to be guided by the report when it is received, in co-operation with the provincial administration.

Item agreed to.

Northern branch administration—

75. Branch administration including authority to make recoverable advances for services performed on behalf of the governments of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory, $1,092,800.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to get a little information concerning the Eskimo affairs. I would like to ask the minister whether it is the intention of the government to offer in 1964 a gift to the province of Quebec, and more particularly to Mr. Rene Levesque, and to entrust the province with the administration of the Eskimo affairs?

I gather that some employees of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and employees of the Hudson's Bay Company as well exert pressures and tell the Eskimos to beware of the government of the province of Quebec, because if the latter takes over the administration of their affairs, they will lose plenty by that very fact.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that if that is correct, it is a most disgraceful form of blackmailing, and it should not be allowed to take place.

I am also informed that some textbooks used to teach Eskimos come from the United States. I would appreciate it if the minister would check those facts.

Mr. Chairman, when Newfoundland joined confederation, the administration of Eskimo and Indian affairs was put in the hands of the government of that province. Now, I wonder why the same procedure could not be followed with the government of the province of Quebec?

I conclude with these remarks, as I would not like to delay the passage of the estimates. However, I would appreciate it if the minister would tell us what he intends to do in 1964.

[Text]

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, this has been a very involved and, I think for both governments, a somewhat embarrassing question, in that there seemed to be a very honest feeling on the part of the government of Quebec that the demands of industrial developments in what they called "Nouveau Quebec" made it necessary for them to go in and administer the area. Indeed, they have, in respect of the development of lands, control of properties, police and so on. I want to assure the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm that up until very recently the interest of the province of Quebec in that area was practically negligible. Indeed, the federal government had gone in as a result of an award, as I would call it, of the Supreme Court of Canada in 1939 by which they deposed that Eskimos were a tribe of Indians and the federal government had responsibility for looking after them. The federal government has been in there ever since.

I think, in the main, we have done a very good job. We have at present almost $3 million worth of buildings, including schools. The annual cost of education and welfare of the Eskimos of the area amounts to approximately $1,800,000 per year. There was a request by the province of Quebec that we vacate the field to them, including the buildings. I made a trip there to see what the reaction was. I found that the Eskimos made the following demands upon me, that no change from the federal administration to provincial control be made without further consulting them. I found that their opinions were so definite that I told them we would not make a change without discussing the situation further with them. They said that they were eminently pleased with the federal administration; that there had been exceedingly rough times when many people had starved, and today people were no longer starving. They did not want a change made.

The province of Quebec sent in its officials, and I want to assure my hon. friend we gave instructions immediately to our people on the ground to co-operate with them in every respect. They have done so. I cannot credit that any of our people endeavoured to develop animosity amongst the Eskimos to the people from Quebec, and I do not believe the Hudson's Bay officials have done that. I have no doubt that continuing discussions will take place between us and the province of Quebec. We are quite prepared to go on with those. But I have made this commitment, and I do not want to involve the people who, in the interests of the government here and the government of the province of Quebec, are protecting the Eskimo people in an area where the resources seem very slight indeed. It is an area where a great number of people, I think, would have to be accommodated with houses, because I have seen some there who had no shelter whatever from the weather.

I say the arrangements between the governments, I have found honourable in every respect, and I think they will continue that way in whatever we do.

Mr. Pigeon: May I have an answer to the question of school books from the United States?

Mr. Laing: There are about 2 per cent of the books that are from the United States, and they were donated to libraries. Some of them have been donated from the United States, but less than 2 per cent of the books are United States books.

Mr. Pigeon: Why?

Mr. Laing: They were donated to libraries.

Mr. Churchill: In view of the circumstances could item 75 be held open? The hon. member for Yukon, who is taken a bit by surprise by developments tonight, has some remarks to make on this department. If the minister has to be absent on some public occasion, the parliamentary secretary could be available, and that would be satisfactory.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure that would be acceptable, sir, on the understanding the minister would be excused from being here if public business required his presence elsewhere. We would be glad to let the item stand.

Item stands.

80. Education division—administration, operation and maintenance including authority to make recoverable advances in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the amount of the share of the government of the Northwest Territories of expenditures on education and vocational training, $5,702,500.

Mr. Fisher: I want to ask the minister what decision he has come to about the three recommendations of the Glassco commission in connection with educational services offered in the north?

Mr. Laing: A number of recommendations made by the Glassco commission in respect of the north are still under study and active consideration.

Mr. Fisher: More specifically, could the minister say what is being done on the two that seem to me to require very little in the way of spending? One was the new co-ordination of the curricula used, and the other was the fact that the northern adult education program needed to be revised and administered in a different way.

Mr. Laing: Both of those are under active review and I would say that very probably improvements will be made in the new year.

Item agreed to.

90. Welfare and industrial divisions—administration, operation and maintenance including $20,000 for grants to Eskimos towards acquisition of boats for commercial fishing or resources harvesting and to authorize the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to provide, in respect of Eskimo commercial activities, for the instruction and supervision of Eskimos, the furnishing of materials, the purchase of finished goods, and, notwithstanding any other act, the sale of such finished goods, $3,074,400.

Mr. Fisher: I have the same question in connection with this vote. The Glassco commission made three recommendations. The first referred to a positive program for the rapid transfer of Indian health care for Indian communities and populated areas. I see no indication that this has been taken up by the department. As a matter of fact, I have seen indications where the spending program is going ahead with nursing homes and hospitals in populated areas where there are communities. The second recommendation was that medical and dental care be arranged through private practising physicians in the communities. I know something was done about this with regard to dentists on the prairies, but not much with regard to the physicians. The third recommendation dealt with the referral hospitals at Edmonton and Sardis, British Columbia. Could the minister comment on those recommendations?

Mr. Laing: Those matters are under review at the present time and are being studied intensively, particularly the matter of the referral hospitals, and I am speaking of the Camsell hospital in Edmonton.

Mr. Fisher: How long are these reviews going to take because these reports have been out for some time? I understand Dr. Davidson, who is experienced in these fields has been leading the consideration through a special administrative agency. I would have assumed that by now in view of the length of time some decisions could have been taken.

Mr. Laing: I must say there are some very real limits on some of the recommendations made by the Glassco commission in respect of resident doctors and dentists. Anyone who knows the north country knows there is not too much practical application to that recommendation, because there are not many doctors there. As a matter of fact, we have some nursing posts where there are no doctors at all, but the nurses are doing a magnificent job on our behalf. However, I can assure the hon. member that the recommendations of the report are being taken very seriously, and studies are being made in all these matters.

Before we close off these estimates, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the opportunity of reverting to a matter which the hon. member for Port Arthur was permitted to discuss, item No. 120, that we passed the other night out of its proper order and place. I have had an opportunity of studying Hansard since, and I want to state my position in reference to my deputy minister, about whom the hon. member for Port Arthur had a considerable amount to say.

He said, among other things, that Mr. Cote was deeply involved in bringing Dr. Rousseau into the museum, and that he was also deeply involved in all recriminations which followed. He went on to say:

I would judge from some of the things in which he has been involved that he has no idea where the museum should be going.

I feel, Mr. Chairman, that unless I answer these charges there will be a sinister connotation attributed to the actions of my deputy. I want to assure the hon. member and the committee that I have every confidence in my deputy. If it were not so I would not be in this post, or he would not be in his. I am going to suggest to the hon. member that everything Mr. Cote did, he did because he wanted to fulfil the directions and the policies of his minister, and because I have that confidence in him that he will endeavour to carry out those things I have in mind, I want to put this defence of him on the record tonight.

Mr. Fisher: Since the minister has been given the opportunity to do this I would just like to say I do not disagree with the fact that he should place confidence in Mr. Cote, but from a review of the proceedings I would like to point out that Mr. Cote was not the deputy minister at the time. He was the assistant deputy minister. It was not Mr. Robertson, the deputy minister, but the assistant deputy minister who had almost all the dealings with the museum, right from the time the whole Rousseau appointment came out; and in all the interference that took place with all the dissatisfied parties throughout those years it was Mr. Cote who was involved. In the whole question of whether Dr. Russell was going to leave or stay, again it was Mr. Cote. Since he was the one permanent administrator of the department involved in those matters, all the way through from the time Mr. Lamontagne, Mr. Lesage and Dr. Barbeau were supposed to have got the idea of bringing Dr. Rousseau in, right up to the resignations of MacNeish and Russell, I feel that the responsibility for the, I think, sick human affairs side of the museum rests upon Mr. Cote.

That is the reason I put the thing the way I did. I felt I could not make any comment on what he may be doing in the rest of the department, but the minister could not make a better move than to go ahead with his plans to get one director, one person in charge of the museum, and then deal with him directly or through another assistant deputy minister.

Item agreed to.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

Mr. Gregoire: I wonder would the Secretary of State be prepared to continue with some other business, some other pieces of legislation that we might deal with tonight?

Mr. Knowles: Ten thirty.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the house would like to oblige me by passing the bill concerning the Newfoundland Savings Bank Act, because I am sure we could do that in 30 seconds.

Mr. Knowles: Just because it is almost Christmas, we will agree.

NEWFOUNDLAND SAVINGS BANK ACT

REPEAL OF LEGISLATION

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-4, to repeal the Newfoundland Savings Bank Act, 1939.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

[Mr. Fisher.]

On clause 1—Repeal of the Newfoundland Savings Bank Act.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, how long has this bank been out of business?

Mr. Pickersgill: I cannot remember exactly, Mr. Chairman, but it is certainly between two and three years. It was sold to the Bank of Montreal and some of the profits were used to help the fishermen.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Pickersgill moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Knowles: Ten thirty.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, could we have the business for tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: Tomorrow we will take the third reading of the two bills that were stood over today, and I will endeavour to make absolutely sure that we check carefully to see that the French version is the same in both bills. Having done that—

Mr. Churchill: Don't leave it to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) to do that.

Mr. Pickersgill: —pursuant to the order of the house made on Saturday night we will move to go into supply at once, without question put, for the purpose of taking the estimates of the Minister of Public Works, of completing the estimates of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and of moving on from there and completing the estimates of the Minister of Fisheries; and then, if possible, those of the Minister of Labour.

As for Wednesday, whether or not we have finished all these other departments, I think we should go on, as I indicated last Saturday, first with the post office, then with legislation and then with national revenue. I think we ought to discuss after that what will be done from then on.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Secretary of State would say what has happened to the plans for the C.N.R. financing bill and the world fair bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the hon. gentleman; I did forget about the C.N.R. financing bill. That bill will be taken tomorrow before we go into supply, after the third readings. We will go into supply immediately after that.

Mr. Knowles: But not the world fair bill?

Mr. Pickersgill: Not the world fair bill; we are not going to proceed with that tomorrow. I believe, too, there is general agreement, which could be recorded now and made an order of the house, that on Thursday, instead of the house beginning its sitting at 2.30 in the afternoon we would begin at eleven o'clock in the morning.

Mr. Churchill: We agree to that arrangement for Thursday.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that on Thursday the house will commence its sitting at eleven o'clock in the morning?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: This is understood. We agree.

It being thirteen minutes before eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

BANKING AND COMMERCE—FOURTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Edmund Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace) presented the fourteenth report of the standing committee on banking and commerce, and moved that Bill No. S-47 be placed on the order paper for consideration in committee of the whole later this day.

Motion agreed to.

INDUSTRY

HEAVY WATER—REPORT ON NEW PRODUCTION METHOD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Industry. The minister informed the house the other day that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited had a team of experts in Toronto studying the proposals made by the British American Oil Company with respect to the manufacture of heavy water, and he hoped that he would have a report by Monday. I wonder has the minister had a report on this matter, and would he be prepared to report to the house at this time?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I have received a report from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited with respect to the British American Oil company process for the manufacture of heavy water. The report makes clear that British American have not developed their prospective process to a point which would warrant changing the decision announced in the house on December 2 last. Accordingly the negotiations between Deuterium Corporation of Canada Limited and A.E.C.L. leading toward a definitive contract are continuing on the basis of that statement.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSIST AIR INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry. Does the government intend to take any action to meet the situation exposed in the brief submitted by the air industry association of Canada, in which that association declared the air industry to be in a very precarious position and that drastic action should be taken by the government now?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to read this important brief. The government recognize that serious study must be given to the situation of the air industry in Canada, and such study is presently going on.

SHIPPING

INQUIRY AS TO REPAIRS TO COASTGUARD SHIP "NANOOK"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, and ask him whether the department has cancelled its order for the building of C.C.G.S. Nanook in the Pictou shipyard. If so, what is the reason for this action?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there was never any order for building the ship. It is a ship which was damaged in the ice in the north this summer, and tenders were called for the repair work on it. The lowest bidder was the yard at Pictou but the cost, as revealed by the competitive tenders, is so high in relation to the two weeks of work required of this ship in the summer in the Hudson strait that it was decided to delay the work, because it can always be done later if it is found necessary to do it. But in view of the prospective use of the ship it was thought inadvisable to go ahead with the work at that enormous cost.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question, in view of the high amount of unemployment in that area would the minister be prepared to reconsider the department's decision in that regard?

Mr. McIlraith: I am very well aware and very conscious of the high unemployment in the area. That is why I was so pleased yesterday with the public announcement of the contract for building flat cars there. But the point here is that it is very difficult to justify a repair bill of that sort for two weeks' use of a ship in the summer as living quarters for the crew while working unloading freight in the north, when there are other ships available that do not require any such expenditure.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Having regard to the minister's answer, would he at least see that this ship is left in the port of Pictou until a decision is made on whether to go ahead with repairs at a later date? I ask this question because I understand his department has decided to remove the ship from there, and of course if repairs were called for later the port would be iced in. Would the minister consider leaving the ship there for the present?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to do that.

POSSIBLE WORKS IN LAKE ST. PIERRE TO AID WINTER NAVIGATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can he tell us whether his department intends to build dams or have other engineering works done in the amount of $60 million, on St. Peter lake, in order to make winter navigation possible on the St. Lawrence river as far up as Montreal?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, no such project was mentioned.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Can the Minister of Public Works tell us whether such surveys were made by the engineers of his department these last few months?

Mr. Deschatelets: I do not know about that, Mr. Speaker. I will inquire and report to the hon. member.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

COFFIN CASE—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister or his legal advisers finished reading and analysing Jacques Hebert's book entitled "J'accuse les assassins de Coffin"? If so, have they come to the conclusion that a royal commission must be set up?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the high officials of the department have finished reading the book, but they are now examining the lengthy departmental file concerning the decision taken in 1956 to refuse the commutation.

There are two aspects to this question. First there is the purely provincial aspect and, considering it, there does not seem to be any reason to make an investigation in that field.

With regard to the commutation or rather the decision not to commute the sentence, I am studying, in co-operation with the officials of my departments, what happened prior to the refusal to commute the sentence, and I hope to be able to make a statement in that regard before the adjournment of the house.

[Text]

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister can tell us if he has recently received any representations from the government of the province of Quebec, or anybody on its behalf, expressing its views in this matter.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the last part of the question. Expressing what?

Mr. Scott: Expressing the views of the government of the province of Quebec in this matter.

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Speaker, I have received no representations from the government of Quebec.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If the supplementary question is really urgent I will allow it, but I do not think even the original question was urgent.

Mr. Pigeon: My supplementary question is, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

The Minister of Justice stated that the officials of his department have finished reading Mr. Jacques Hebert's book. Is he in a position to tell the house whether the allegations of Mr. Hebert are false or true?

Mr. Chevrier: No doubt I should have specified in my answer—and I thought I did so—that besides having finished that reading, they are now considering what happened and what is contained in a bulky file, in connection with the statements contained in Mr. Hebert's book.

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice related to his answers earlier in the day on the Coffin murder case, and in particular the suggested constitutional crisis between the then prime minister and the governor general. Did the minister investigate the alleged two day interval between the decision not to commute the sentence and the refusal or alleged refusal of the governor general to sign the necessary document?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I indicated the other day that I had communicated with the then prime minister, and I gave his report to the house. I was sorry that one newspaper report indicated that I had used the word "indignant" in respect of Mr. St. Laurent's conversation with me. That was not so. The reply I got from Mr. St. Laurent was not in the slightest degree one which denoted anything like that. He simply denied the report, and I am sure that as far as the house and the country are concerned that denial will have been accepted.

I might add that I did ask my officers to look at the records to ascertain if there had been any unusual delay in the matter. I find the facts to be as follows. The cabinet arrived at its decision on February 7, 1956. The order in council pertaining to the decision not to interfere with the sentence is dated February 8, 1956, and this decision was communicated to the provincial authorities early in the morning on February 9, 1956. The telegram from the sheriff confirming receipt of such advice was dispatched from Montreal at 10 a.m. on February 9, 1956. This contradicts and seems to dispose of the allegation that the governor general held the matter up for two days.

[Translation]

A moment ago, Mr. Speaker, when I answered a question directed to me by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), I might have perhaps expressed myself badly if I said that there was no question of a provincial investigation. I meant that I did not believe that the federal government should investigate on the provincial aspect of the matter.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CALGARY—CONTRACT FOR REPAIR OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Industry. Has the government informed the C.P.A. Repair Company at Lincoln Park, Calgary, that their contract for the repair of R.C.A.F. and other government aircraft will not be renewed when it runs out in March, I believe, of 1964?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I do not know the answer to that question. I would be glad to take it as notice.

INQUIRY AS TO CONVERSION OF DESTROYER ESCORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Defence Production. Has a decision been made yet whether the conversion of the remaining St. Laurent class destroyer escorts will be carried out in the west coast shipyards?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chatterton: Can the minister say when this decision may be expected?

Mr. Drury: As soon as possible.

FINANCE

SALE OF CANADIAN BANK SHARES TO FOREIGN PURCHASERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a report in today's Gazette regarding the possibility of the sale to interests abroad of shares in a Canadian bank? Will he tell the house whether this would require the authorization of the government, and, if so, is the government prepared to grant such authorization?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I have not seen that report. The answer to the second part of the question is that the government has no authority under any existing legislation to prevent the sale of any corporation or the sale of any other property to anyone.

[Later:]

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the reported intention of the Toronto-Dominion Bank to dispose of part of its assets to a foreign bank, and in view of the prohibition under section 99, subsection 2, of the Bank Act against such a transaction taking place without the minister's consent, can the minister tell us whether he is prepared to give consent to such a transaction if an application is made?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, there has been a certain amount of rumour that certain transactions of the Toronto-Dominion Bank might or might not be considered. The Toronto-Dominion Bank made an announcement at 11.15 this morning which perhaps hon. members have not seen. The announcement stated that the Toronto-Dominion Bank was making an investment in a bank to be known as the Midland and International Banks Limited, with head office in London, England, the other participants being the Midland Bank Limited, Standard Bank Limited of London, England and the Commercial Bank of Australia Limited. I do not know anything about any disposition of the assets of the Toronto-Dominion Bank. If there were any such contemplated, they would be dealt with in the ordinary course under the provisions of the law.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): I have a supplementary question on this matter which I believe should be directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I have not given him notice of this question. As the Minister of Finance said, a statement was issued by the Toronto-Dominion Bank at 11.15 this morning, with some preliminary rumours yesterday that some momentous statement was forthcoming; therefore I have not given notice to the minister of my intention to ask this question but he may take it as notice.

In view of the statement made at 11.15 that the Toronto-Dominion Bank, in association with banks in the United Kingdom and Australia, were forming a gigantic corporation for the financing of exports throughout the world, may I ask if this will be supplementary to or in competition with our export credits insurance.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): As the hon. gentleman has said, I have not had an opportunity to think about this question. My offhand opinion would be that there is room in this country for enlarged facilities for the financing of the export trade. I would hope that is the effect of this transaction.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG—EMPLOYMENT AT OVERHAUL AND MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct question to the Prime Minister. I am sorry he is not wearing the button that was given to him this morning. In view of the failure of the government and the delegation from Manitoba to reach a meeting of minds this morning with respect to the T.C.A. maintenance and overhaul base at Winnipeg, can the right hon. gentleman say what steps the government will now take to allay the dismay which all of us from Manitoba feel over this matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not feel there was a failure to reach a meeting of minds, and I do not think there is any cause for dismay with regard to the matter which the hon. member has mentioned.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Prime Minister give an assurance that a public inquiry will be undertaken, as suggested by the premier of Manitoba, concerning the proposed reduction of employment in this overhaul and maintenance base in Winnipeg? I suggest this is something which the Prime Minister could do and ought to do in all the circumstances.

Mr. Pearson: The proposal which has been made will, we hope, lead to no reduction in employment but to the maintenance of employment, so the question was wrongly phrased in that respect. As far as an inquiry into the matter is concerned, I told the premier this morning I would discuss with him whether there should be such an inquiry, what the terms of reference of such an inquiry might be, and whether it should be held by the provincial or the federal government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the Prime Minister for his general observations. May I ask, however, whether he will accept a public inquiry by the government of Canada jointly with the government of Manitoba to inquire into the peregrinations of this problem which have taken place since he took office.

Mr. Pearson: I have already stated I would discuss this matter with the premier of Manitoba, and the right hon. gentleman should surely realize that that is the proper way to proceed in a matter of joint interest of this kind.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): In November the Prime Minister made a statement that employment in Winnipeg would not be reduced. In January the former minister said there would be a freeze of jobs. Close to 200 jobs had disappeared in Winnipeg. Can the government direct T.C.A. to maintain the freeze until a policy is worked out?

Mr. Pearson: As I have already said, it is the policy of the government to do everything possible to maintain employment at the T.C.A. base in Winnipeg and, if possible, to increase it.

Mr. Orlikow: Would the Prime Minister convey that desire of the government to Mr. McGregor, who is ignoring it?

Mr. Pearson: I would be very glad to do that, and also to convey to him the proceedings at the meeting this morning.

Mr. Knowles: Is the Prime Minister aware that while this policy is in effect, employment at the base in Winnipeg is declining?

Mr. Pearson: I have asked for the figures with regard to employment in the base at Winnipeg, and for the figures of any decrease in T.C.A. employment in Winnipeg over the years. While there has been some decrease in recent months, there has also been a considerable increase in employment compared with ten years ago.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's statement that there has been some progress in recent months, may I ask him to clarify this particular point. I put a written question on the order paper on November 13, which was answered. The question read as follows:

> How many personnel have been transferred from the T.C.A. overhaul and maintenance base in Winnipeg to Montreal since April 22, 1963?

The answer given by the Minister of Transport was:

> The management of Trans-Canada Air Lines advise as follows. During the period in question there have been five transfers, all of supervisory category, four of these at the individual's request and one at company request. No non-supervisory personnel have been transferred in the period.

In view of that answer, and in view of the statement made by the delegation this morning at the meeting which the Prime Minister attended that 170 people have been transferred in this interval, would it not be wise to have a public inquiry to get the facts of the case?

Mr. Pearson: The information, Mr. Speaker, given to us this morning will be taken up with T.C.A. We will check the information against that which is available to T.C.A. and do our best to clear up this matter.

[Later:]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Earlier the Prime Minister indicated he would send a report of the meeting this morning with the Winnipeg representatives to the president of T.C.A. Will he, at the same time, send to the president of T.C.A. any recommendations made by the cabinet or himself?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if there are any recommendations to be made as a result of this morning's meeting, of course we will be glad to send them to the president of T.C.A.

Mr. Churchill: I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport relating to a statement he made on November 22, page 5055 of Hansard, to the effect that in the last ten years employment in T.C.A. at Winnipeg has increased by 23 per cent. This morning one member of the Manitoba delegation referred to that statement and said employment had decreased by 14 per cent. Was the minister misleading the house in his statement of November 22?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No, the minister spoke quite accurately. This morning that particular member of the delegation, in referring to 14 per cent, was making a point about the overhaul and maintenance base at Winnipeg and dealing with a different period of time.

STATEMENT OF PRESIDENT RESPECTING CARAVELLE AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does the government share Mr. McGregor's opinions concerning the Caravelle aircraft and the qualifications of French speaking Canadians.

[Text]

UNITED NATIONS

COMMONWEALTH SEAT ON SECURITY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It concerns the answer the Prime Minister gave to a supplementary question asked by the hon. member for Medicine Hat yesterday concerning the commonwealth seat on the security council. As reported at page 5927 of Hansard the Prime Minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, that question has not arisen and will not arise as long as there is an understanding that there should be a commonwealth seat on these councils.

Inquiries of the Ministry

My question is, is the Prime Minister telling the house that there is now an informal understanding at the United Nations that there will be a commonwealth seat in future, not only on the general committee but also on the security council and on the economic and social council?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the fact that the commonwealth has been represented on all these agencies, as my hon. friend knows, since the beginning of the United Nations shows that there has indeed been such an understanding up to the present. We hope that understanding can continue, and that if any change is made in these agencies the commonwealth will continue to have a seat on them.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question. I take it from the answer of the Prime Minister, then, that there is no assurance that this gentlemen's agreement on the informal seating arrangements on the security and economic and social councils will be continued?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult indeed to give that kind of assurance when the commonwealth itself is divided on the matter.

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED CONNECTION OF AIR TRAGEDIES WITH AIR TURBULENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he has an answer to the question I asked him the other day about jet planes and air turbulence.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I recall the question it had to do with air turbulence in connection with the accident involving a jet aircraft. I want to assure the hon. member that no possible cause is being overlooked in the investigations that are now going on into the aircraft accident which he mentioned. Air turbulence is one of the possible causes that are being examined, and is receiving careful attention along with many others.

CANADIAN OBSERVERS AT INVESTIGATION INTO RECENT U.S. CRASH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, on December 14 I asked the Minister of Transport a question which he took as notice. I wonder if he can answer it now.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member asked me whether any of the technical personnel from the Department of Transport were in the United States as observers in connection with the investigation into the recent crash of a Boeing 707. The answer is that since Canada is not involved in either the operation or the manufacture of this type of aircraft, and since the full results of the United States investigation will be available to us in any event, we have not requested any invitation to participate in the investigation.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LONDON, ONT.—CONTINUED OPERATION OF CAR SHOPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Millar (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister, notice of which has already been given. Would the Prime Minister confirm a statement in the London Free Press of Friday, December 13, 1963, by the president of the London Liberal association to the effect that he had received assurances from the Prime Minister and the cabinet that the present operation of the C.N.R. car shops in London will continue and possibly be expanded in the future, and that they will not be closed in 1965 as had been originally planned?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I received notice of the hon. gentleman's question just before I came into the house. To my knowledge I have received no such representations or requests from the gentleman named in the report, but I understand representations were made to the Minister of Transport and I believe he has taken up the matter with Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Millar: A supplementary question. Could the Prime Minister say whether these assurances have been given?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge I have received no such request for any such assurance, but I will be glad to make a further investigation because, as I say, I got the hon. gentleman's question just before I came into the house.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO COMMENCEMENT OF NEW SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he give any indication now when the house will be reassembling in January or February, or whenever it may be?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what I said yesterday. I would hope that by Thursday we will be in a position to know when we are likely to finish this session, and then be able to announce before the end of the session our plans for a return in January or February.

RETENTION OF SESSIONAL STAFF DURING RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Secretary of State has an answer yet to the question I put to him on December 11. My question related to the intersessional period and the retention of messengers, page boys, and other members of the House of Commons staff.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Yes, sir, I have. I understand, and perhaps I should have known this, that the decision of the commissioners of internal economy, the decision to which I referred on December 10 with respect to members' secretaries, applies to all sessional employees who may wish to work during the interval between this session and the next one. That means there will be continuous employment for the whole staff between this session and the next one.

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED QUARTERS FOR INTERPRETERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in the classic phrase, while I am on my feet may I also reply to a question asked on Saturday, December 14 by the hon. member for Quebec West about better accommodation for the interpreters. The hon. gentleman suggested that the room in which they are housed is small and very cold, and inquired whether they would get a new room. I am told it is the intention not to give them a new room but to increase the size of their present room—I do not know exactly how—and to put some heaters in so that they can be comfortable.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

POLIOMYELITIS—REQUEST FOR STUDY OF SITUATION IN QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In view of the recent publication of a report indicating that of the 111 polio cases in Canada this year, 101 cases occurred in Quebec, does the minister not believe that a special study of this condition should be made and that the types of grants paid to Quebec should be reviewed?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this question be put on the order paper.

COMBINES

REQUEST FOR SETTING UP OF MARKETING ADVISORY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might now answer the question put by the hon. member for Ontario yesterday, when he asked whether the government was prepared to accede to the request by the distributive trades advisory council to set up a marketing advisory council and to repeal section 34 of the Combines Investigation Act. The reply is that the matter is still under consideration, and the distributive trades advisory committee has indicated its intention to present a further brief which I have agreed to receive. Until I have those representations I do not think I can give a categorical reply.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—NUMBER OF CIVILIANS EMPLOYED IN MAINTENANCE OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, on December 12 I asked the Minister of Public Works if he could give the house his assurance that there would be no reductions in civilian personnel on the Alaska highway as a result of the take-over of maintenance operations by his department from the Department of National Defence. The minister indicated that he would probably be able to give me an answer within the next few days, and I wonder whether he has that answer now?

Mr. Pickersgill: His estimates are up today.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this situation will be carefully examined, but I cannot give any assurance of any kind to the hon. member today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

MEETINGS OF EASTERN FEED GRAINS COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister inform the house if the eastern feed grains committee set up in 1962 to work in liaison between the Canadian wheat board and eastern feeders has held a meeting recently?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that this committee held one meeting under the previous administration. Our present policy in this respect, that is liaison between feed dealers, feeders and so on in eastern Canada and the government, is set out in the statement made by my colleague the Minister of Agriculture on December 12, when he said, as found on page 5756 of Hansard:

> The government sees merit in having an administrative arm responsible for the feed grain policy and to act in a liaison capacity in feed grain matters, and intends to move in this direction.

TRADE

VANCOUVER—REPORTED DIFFICULTIES IN FLOUR SHIPMENTS TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle asked a question about difficulties in the shipping of flour from Vancouver to Russia. At that time I had not heard that report, but I have since inquired and I find that in general the shipments of flour to the U.S.S.R. have been progressing very satisfactorily. Some difficulty occurred in Vancouver last week as a result of condensation damage to approximately 5,000 bags of flour. This flour is being reconditioned. Notwithstanding the delay relating to this particular shipment, I have been assured by the flour milling industry that shipments from both coasts are ahead of the program agreed to in the contracts concluded by the milling industry with the U.S.S.R. trading organization Exportkhleb.

CANADIAN FLAG

COMMITTEE OF LIBERAL MEMBERS TO SUGGEST DESIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has a group of members been commissioned to design a particular flag for Canada?

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): If there is such a committee I am not aware of it.

FORESTRY

CONTACT WITH MAINE AND VERMONT ON BORDER OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Forestry or, since he is not here, to his parliamentary secretary?

Is the parliamentry secretary in a position to inform the house whether the department maintains constant relations with the Maine and Vermont authorities concerning the extensive logging operations now in progress on both sides of the border?

[Text]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Forestry): I really think that is a question for the order paper, and I will be glad to answer it if it is put on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Boutin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Concerning forestry operations between Canada and the United States, especially with the states of Maine and Vermont, could the minister have an investigation made to find out whether all customs duties are being paid, because again this year, approximately 150 million feet of lumber will be involved in those operations?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: That is a question for the order paper.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR ARMS—REPORTED CONFLICTING STATEMENTS BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister?

How can the Prime Minister reconcile the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), advocating in Paris measures intended to prevent the spreading of nuclear arms in the world and on the other hand, the storing of nuclear arms on Canadian soil?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no irreconcilability between those two statements.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Could the right hon. Prime Minister give us more information about the statement made yesterday by the minister of external affairs to the effect that Canada intends to strengthen the strike force role of its squadrons in Europe?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps when the Secretary of State for External Affairs returns, I hope on Thursday, he may be able to deal with the matter.

GENERAL FOULKES—INQUIRY AS TO RE-EMPLOYMENT BY GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday last I directed a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. I asked him whether General Foulkes had been re-employed by the government or brought to Ottawa in an advisory capacity. The minister said he did not know but would look into the matter and report to us on Monday. It is now Tuesday.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that General Foulkes has not been re-employed by the government.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND—WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour?

Since statistics indicate that 218,900 applications for unemployment benefits were made in October, and since this figure is likely to go up, could the minister inform the house about the present condition of the unemployment insurance fund and give us a broad outline of what is being done in order to reduce unemployment?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I announced yesterday that as of the end of November there was approximately $56 million in the unemployment insurance fund. It would be impossible on orders of the day, to outline the extent of the winter works programs now in preparation and in progress.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA'S STAND ON WESTERN AID TO RUSSIA AGAINST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister the nature of the assistance that might be given to the U.S.S.R. against communist China to help the Soviet union in its power struggle with communist China, as indicated yesterday by Mr. Rusk in a rather unusual statement. I shall read the statement and ask the Prime Minister what is the attitude of the Prime Minister in this regard, and whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs commented on it, in Paris? According to the press Mr. Rusk stated:

> In the quarrel between Chinese militancy and Russia's peaceful coexistence, our interest is to see that Moscow prevails.

What variety of international philosophy is this?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course if I started a discussion on orders of the day on the international philosophy involved in this question, certainly we would not adjourn before Christmas. This is important, and is not a question to be answered on orders of the day, but I shall be glad to look into the text of Mr. Rusk's statement in Paris and what the Secretary of State for External Affairs said there at this stage, and if there is anything in this statement that requires comment on orders of the day, I shall be glad to make it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is the second time today the Prime Minister has shown petulance and peevishness. I asked a reasonable question on an important matter—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Do you want to continue the session beyond Christmas.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I asked the Prime Minister whether he would make any observation on this matter, because it is a matter of deep significance and one that deserves attention. I am not saying that the Prime Minister can answer it today, but will he answer it before we conclude this week's session?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I already had promised to do that, but I would call your attention to the advice you gave us, as recorded at page 4206 of Hansard for October 31, to the effect that in putting a question a member must confine himself to the narrowest limits and not raise a matter of policy too large to be dealt with within the limits of an answer to a question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Sir, I am very happy to see that the Prime Minister has endeavoured to take over your position, but I still recognize you as the Speaker.

APPOINTMENT OF NEW AMBASSADOR TO FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to appoint a Canadian ambassador to France in the near future?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a Canadian ambassador in France at the present time. I believe he left for Paris this morning.

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, and it arises from the answer he made to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, in which he stated that a new ambassador for Canada had gone to France this morning. Some months ago I asked the Prime Minister what was the salary of the commissioner general, Mr. Dupuy, to which the Prime Minister answered that Mr. Dupuy was still employed by the Department of External Affairs as ambassador to France. Since there is a new ambassador, I want to ask what is the salary that is paid to the commissioner general?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry if my answer was misunderstood. I did not say a new ambassador had gone. I said the ambassador had gone this morning, Mr. Dupuy, who still is ambassador to France.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. As his excellency Mr. Dupuy is going to resign soon, and as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) missed the mark and has not succeeded in being appointed president of the C.N.R., is it the government's intention to appoint him Canadian ambassador to Paris in the foreseeable future?

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let us hear the answer to that.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Chevrier: You thought it was the other way around last week.

Mr. Balcer: The country is waiting for an answer.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ACTIVITIES IN LABOUR DISPUTE AT GRANDE PRAIRIE, ALTA.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice and ask whether any representations have been made to him expressing concern at the use of the R.C.M.P. in strikebreaking activities in the labour dispute which is taking place at the North Canadian Forest planing mill in Grande Prairie, Alberta. If so, what action does the minister contemplate taking as a result of these representations?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, no representations have been made to me in that respect, but I will inquire at once and have a reply before the house rises.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENT ON 1962-63 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I wonder whether the minister, in his discussions with Mr. McNamara, was able to learn the size of the final wheat payment which might be made to the farmers in March.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether Mr. McNamara himself yet knows the answer to that question. I was talking to him today and he indicated to me that he hoped to close out the accounts about the beginning of January.

PRIVILEGE

MR. COTE, LONGUEUIL—DESIGNATION OF MEMBER FOR LAPOINTE AS LEADER OF QUEBEC MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. While I do not share the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) concerning the statement made by Mayor Charlotte Whitton on bilingualism, I have no means of preventing the mayor from speaking her mind. My question of privilege is aimed at another part of the hon. member's statement, where he said that Mr. Gilles Gregoire was the leader of Quebec members in this house.

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I am on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does my hon. friend rise on a question of privilege, or is it his intention to put a question on the orders of the day?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I rose on a question of privilege.

As a representative from the province of Quebec in this house, I deny the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) the authority to impose the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) as my leader. I think I am speaking on behalf of all hon. members on this side of the house. I was referring to a report published in this morning's Le Devoir.

[Text]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): If I may say a word on the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Longueuil has read perhaps what has been misinterpreted. Specifically I said I did not think that the blatant and almost base antics of Real Caouette, his chief lieutenant, Gilles Gregoire, and others, was helping to do anything more than keep people away from their initial desire to understand. This construction in the newspaper placed the hon. member for Lapointe as the chief of Quebec, and I certainly would not want to promote him to that position.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that in the spirit of Christmas we proceed with orders of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I wonder whether the two hon. members who just spoke take for granted everything published in the press.

It is a fact that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) makes a valuable contribution to parliament and no hon. member has the right to criticize the way the hon. member for Lapointe behaves in the House of Commons.

PENSIONS

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE, BLIND AND DISABLED PAYMENTS—AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether she is now in a position to answer the question I asked yesterday, as to whether any of the provinces have reached agreement with the federal government in respect of increasing the old age and other payments effective from December 1 and, if so, which provinces?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have checked since yesterday when this question was put to me. We have received a couple of wires and a couple of the provinces have informed us of their intentions, but we have not heard from all the provinces.

It is suggested that it would be perhaps unfair to mention names, since some provinces did go so far as to send me a wire and others may have the same intention but have not notified me. Therefore, since at the moment the information is incomplete, I would ask my hon. friend to wait, and perhaps before the house rises for the Christmas recess I will have the information in full.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

LEGISLATION TO IMPLEMENT RECOMMENDATIONS OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON TRANSPORTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State with reference to the business of the house. My question refers to item No. 18 on the order paper, the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Transport which is a prelude to legislation to implement certain recommendations of the royal commission on transportation. I wonder whether the Secretary of State could arrange with the various parties of the house to advance this resolution one stage so that the legislation would be made available. I think most hon. members know this is a fairly complicated matter, and it would be a great advantage if we had the legislation to study between the closing of this session and the beginning of the next one.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to give consideration to this matter, although I am sure the hon. gentleman will understand that there are some other matters on the order paper to which I feel obliged to give higher priority.

National Centennial Act

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR OFFICE OF REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-126, respecting the office of representation commissioner and to effect certain consequential amendments to the Canada Elections Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL CENTENNIAL ACT

AMENDMENTS CHANGING NAME, ENLARGING MEMBERSHIP OF ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-107, to amend the National Centennial Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of an interruption made last evening which I did not hear. That interruption came from the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) and, as reported at page 5969 of Hansard, he said this:

> I challenge the right hon. gentleman to show me where the word "nation" is in the English version of the present act and also to show me that we are deleting the word "national" from the present act.

I did not hear that question and that challenge last evening. It comes to me as somewhat of a surprise, in view of the fact that when he spoke on November 19, in explaining the reasons for the amendments to this act he said, as reported at page 4911 of Hansard:

> Moreover, the word "national" in the English version is confusing in the context in which it is used, and resulted in another historical error in the French version. Thus, the latter constantly refers to the "centenary of the nation" rather than to the "centenary of confederation".
> The expressions "Canada centennial", "centenaire du Canada", "national centennial" and "centenaire de la nation" have given rise to perfectly justified objections on the part of the premier of the province of Quebec.
> He set down those objections in an exchange of correspondence first with the former prime minister of Canada and then with the present Prime Minister. That correspondence began on October 4, 1961, and has already been tabled in this house by the Minister of Justice, on June 27 of this year to be exact.
> That correspondence and the debates which took place last summer in the legislative assembly show quite clearly that the government of Quebec will refuse to participate in the centennial celebrations, unless the changes we are proposing today are accepted by the Canadian parliament.
> [Mr. Pickersgill.]

Now, sir, this challenge comes to me as rather a surprise, because I have before me the bill and it is apparent that the minister has not even read his own bill or the explanations therein. The challenge, I again point out, was to show the minister where they were deleting the word "national" from the present act. Therefore I commence by pointing out that clause 1 provides:

> Section 1 of the National Centennial Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

In the explanatory notes it says:

> The purpose of this amendment is to change the short title of the National Centennial Act.
> Section 1 at present reads as follows: "1. This act may be cited as the National Centennial Act".

Clause 1 says:

> "This act may be cited as the Centennial of Canadian Confederation Act".

So that "national" is removed twice there. Later on, in clause 2 it says:

> Paragraph (a) of section 2 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> "(a) "Commission" means the centennial commission referred to in section 3;"

Then in the explanatory notes we find these words appear:

> "Administration" means the national centennial administration referred to in section 3;"

Then it says in clause 3:

> Section 3 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

At the moment section 3 reads:

> There shall be a corporation to be called the national centennial administration—

That is now changed in this bill to the following:

> There shall be a corporation to be called the centennial commission—

Then it sets out the members who shall comprise the commission. Finally, under clause 6 it says:

> Subsection (1) of section 10 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> "10. (1) There shall be a special account in the consolidated revenue fund, to be known as the centennial of confederation fund, to which shall be credited the amounts appropriated by parliament for the purposes of the fund".

In the explanatory notes we find these words:

> Subsection (1) at present reads as follows: "10. (1) There shall be a special account in the consolidated revenue fund, to be known as the national centennial fund, to which shall be credited the amounts appropriated by parliament for the purposes of the fund".

Therefore, sir, the challenge has been answered by simply indicating that the word "national" is removed in at least four or five cases throughout the act.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, could I ask a question of the hon. gentleman?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have answered the challenge, and I intend to say something further.

Mr. Lamontagne: Could I ask a question of the hon. gentleman?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. Lamontagne: Would the right hon. gentleman care to refer to clause 7 of the new bill, dealing with section 17 of the act, which provides:

There shall be a national conference on the centennial of confederation—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now, Mr. Speaker, the minister is trying to squirm out of the position in which his smart question last evening placed him. In so far as that conference is concerned it says:

There shall be a national conference on the centennial of confederation—

That is a different organization altogether. The hon. gentleman now, having made that loose statement last evening, finds himself in a situation where he tries to get out of the impossibility of the position in which he has placed himself by reason of an aimless interruption. While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I ought to place on the record the letter from the premier of Quebec to the present Prime Minister. It is dated May 2, 1963:

Office of the Premier Province of Quebec

Hon. Lester B. Pearson,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Parliament Buildings,
Ottawa, Ont.

My dear Prime Minister,

You no doubt know that the government of the province of Quebec has been invited to participate in the celebration of the centennial of confederation. This government has already expressed its intention of taking an appropriate part in that celebration by undertaking to pay its share of the cost of the memorial which is being erected in Charlottetown.

Unfortunately, a serious difficulty has made until now any kind of agreement impossible with the federal government.

As I pointed out in my letter of October 19, 1961 to the then prime minister of Canada—

And I interpolate here, that was ten days or so after the law had been passed by both houses.

—the act passed by the parliament of Canada is properly entitled an "act respecting the observance of the centennial of confederation in Canada", but that title is contradicted by section 3 and 17 which mention respectively the "national centennial" and "Canada's centennial".

Then he goes on to say:

It is obvious that it is not the title of the act that will catch the eye of the people, but the names of the organizations set up to bring it into operation. ...We are therefore confident that you will admit the necessity of amending the act respecting the observance of the centennial of confederation in Canada in such a way as to eliminate the difficulties I have mentioned.

I draw attention to those excerpts from the letter as part of the answer to the challenge made last evening. I reiterate what I said then, that throughout the discussions, when the legislation was before the House of Commons, there was no objection raised by any of the members who sat opposite. Indeed, the present Prime Minister said on September 18, 1961:

The fact that we shall soon be celebrating our hundredth birthday makes us one of the older states in the world.

Then on another occasion, speaking in the house on the same date, he said, the reference being to myself:

As the Prime Minister has pointed out, it would be appropriate to examine the values of our national society.

In later speeches he said the same thing. For instance, speaking to the national federation of Liberal women—I emphasize the description of that organization; they have not had the feeling that "national" is a dangerous word—the right hon. gentleman said on October 29, 1963:

Canadians are going to grow together in national development, national purpose and national pride.

In all these cases "national" is used as it was used in the law passed by this parliament, the law which is now being amended. I simply wanted to clarify this and to point out that the hon. gentleman has not, apparently, read his own bill.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I am astonished beyond measure that the Prime Minister has not participated in this debate. His name appeared before the legislation on second reading. He was not present during that discussion. He is here in the house today, his name standing as the sponsor of third reading, and he has nothing to say.

I was at some pains last night to draw attention to the fact that in my opinion and in the opinion of many people the Prime Minister of this country should speak on this particular matter and clear up the situation which prevails within his own ranks, and clear up something of the difficulty and dissension which has been introduced into this problem by the President of the Privy Council and others.

I do not intend to prolong the discussion this afternoon, but the silence of the Prime Minister is an indication of the very thing that I feared and to which I tried to draw attention yesterday. I was afraid that the people who were put up as spokesmen for the Liberal party in the debate on the resolution and on second reading were, in effect, speaking on behalf of the Prime Minister and expressing his views. Now that fear is confirmed, because the Prime Minister has not taken the opportunity which was his when this motion was called to deny that these gentlemen were speaking on his behalf and on behalf of the Liberal party.

With all seriousness I drew attention to the speech made by the hon. member for Lotbiniere, and I questioned whether or not that speech represented the views of the Liberal party of Canada. Now, in the absence of any word from the Prime Minister, we are faced with the situation that those obviously are his views and the views of the Liberal party of Canada. Unless the Prime Minister will repudiate that hon. member and that statement he made, what other conclusion can we draw? No self-respecting Canadian is going to sit here in silence in the House of Commons and hear offensive statements such as were made by the hon. member to whom I have referred, without some explanation being given. And only from the Prime Minister of this country can such an explanation come.

I am speaking with the utmost seriousness about this situation. The Liberal party laughs. That is exactly what one would expect from that party. They approve of those statements of the hon. member for Lotbiniere and they laugh when I say this question should be treated with all seriousness. I ask the Prime Minister, does he approve of the statement made by the hon. member when he said the symbol of Canada's supreme authority is a foreign sovereign? Are we to sit here and have statements of that kind made in the House of Commons and recorded in Hansard? Are we to hear these reflections on our system of government and on our Queen and be silent about it? This, obviously, is the attitude which represents the policy of the Liberal party of Canada, and I hope all Canadians are now aware of it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, may I take a few minutes to try to calm down the few members who have just spoken about the matter under consideration.

At this time, when we in this house are thinking of celebrating confederation and attempts are being made to have us believe that we have succeeded in uniting the two great races into one nation, extremists have to take this occasion to try to push their extreme views one step further.

I think that the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) may have gone a little too far when he referred to the Queen, but if at this point an attempt is made to push this matter still further, to the extent of having someone state that this was right or that was wrong; if the word "national" is to become controversial with regard to confederation or centennial celebrations, then I wonder whether it would even be worth while to celebrate the centennial of confederation after all.

I admit that on some occasions, Quebec members have perhaps gone a little too far on the nationalist issue. This I recognize. But I would also ask the previous speakers to realize that on some occasions, other members have also carried their own brand of nationalism quite far.

I should also like to refer to the famous statement made by the previous speaker. Mr. Speaker, on a matter of such vital importance to the entire country, I wonder once again why petty politics has to be brought into this debate.

We earnestly wish to commemorate the centennial of confederation. We are anxious to show the world what a success this country has been. We want to show that it is possible for French speaking and English speaking Canadians to establish a true confederation. In that respect, I accept in good faith the explanation given by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) to the effect that Canada constitutes a political nation.

From the political point of view, we form a state, a country and a nation. I also agree with the minister when he states that from a cultural viewpoint, things are rather different, there being a French Canadian nation and an English Canadian nation.

Once again, I would ask hon. members of the opposition who spoke before me not to block this project which concerns all true Canadians who wish to celebrate a true confederation which has made it possible for two great races, two great nations, to establish so great and so fine a country as Canada.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, during the last few days, we have heard statements concerning the celebration of the centenary of confederation which were irresponsible in many respects.

Some members object and are deeply concerned because we are to celebrate the centenary of confederation instead of the centenary of the nation. As in the past, they have been trying to create a truly and fundamentally anti-Canadian climate.

On the other hand, others have said that there are two groups of extremists, one of which is French Canadian, the other English Canadian, and both working against national unity in Canada.

I do not think that in this house there has been on our part, or on the part of French Canadian members, any hindrance or obstacle to understanding in this country. If there ever has been a conciliating nation or race these last 97 years, it should be recognized that it has been the population of the province of Quebec and French Canadian members.

Personally I do not agree with the opinion expressed the other day by the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) to the effect that Canada recognizes the Queen of a foreign country. When we speak of Her Majesty the Queen, I see her as the Queen of Canada and not at all as the Queen of England. I think that Queen of Canada is her title as far as we are concerned.

We have to recognize more and more on the part of this sovereign, who is perfectly bilingual, that deep desire for unity, conciliation and understanding. Such an example might perhaps have been followed by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), who seems to have encountered many more difficulties than Her Majesty in the learning of French.

On the other hand, there are still people who talk about the adoption of a distinctive Canadian flag and of a national anthem.

More and more, throughout the country, people have come to recognize the importance and urgency of adopting those measures or that measure that will provide Canada with a national distinctive flag and not a flag relating to a foreign emblem.

In this connection, I shall give as an example the small countries that have just recovered or obtained their freedom and independence. The first thing they did at this solemn moment in their history, was to adopt a distinctive national flag. Such was the case with Jamaica and African countries where, only a few days ago, that first step was taken once again.

When it has gained or is about to gain its sovereignty, the first action a country should take is to give itself a distinctive national flag and a national anthem.

For my part, in 1967, whether other people like it or not, if a flag bearing the union jack is presented as an English flag, I shall be the first to salute it to show my respect for the English, but should this flag be offered as the Canadian flag, well, there is a limit, and if it should come to that, I will not salute it, no matter what flag it is, unless it is Canada's own distinctive national flag.

This does not apply exclusively to the union jack. I would salute as well, with joy and veneration, the American flag which is the symbol of a friendly nation; but nobody could get me to believe that the American flag is our own national flag.

We are not faced with a problem of dissent, but with a problem of decision. If we recognize self-government and liberty for the smaller countries of the world, let us try at least to set an example, after several decades of existence as a dominion. I am sure that there is not a single representative, be he English or French speaking, who will object to the adoption of a national flag and a national anthem, which would be distinctly Canadian.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) stated yesterday afternoon that Canadians are showing their attachment to the idea of national unity in Canada. Let us remember, however, that national unity is not a one-way street. There cannot be exclusively rights for some and nothing but duties for others. We have on both sides, some rights and corresponding duties. Our main duty is precisely to try and understand each other the best we can.

I have said it, and I shall repeat it once more: I do not believe that an Englishman can be turned into a Frenchman, nor that a Frenchman can become an Englishman. However, I believe that it is possible to have two good Canadians, practising bonne entente and mutual understanding. In order to reach that goal, if it becomes necessary to water our wine, let us not hesitate. We have done just that and we ask our partners to do the same, so that we can sit at the same table, the table of confederation, of bonne entente, of understanding and co-operation. That is what we are asking for.

Yesterday, I was listening to the whining by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) concerning the use of the phrase "centennial of the nation" instead of "centennial of confederation" and he criticized the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) and asked the Prime Minister to give his opinion. If the right hon. gentleman keeps silent, it may be that he understands that it is up to parliament to decide. The Prime Minister alone does not decide. He introduces his legislation, but does not take the decision.

We should have liked to have his views. If he does not put them forward, at least some official representatives of the government have spoken. The Prime Minister and the Secretary of State made some statements yesterday. There were also statements made by the Conservatives. Only, as far as confederation is concerned, the Conservatives could have acted two or three years ago when they were sitting on your right, Mr. Speaker.

Now, if the government introduces such legislation, why lay the blame on the Prime Minister and ask him what he intends to do when the problem is settled. It does not belong to the Prime Minister to decide, but to parliament as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing more to say for the time being, but I sincerely believe confederation, the centennial of confederation can be celebrated with enthusiasm in 1967, provided we are Canadians and not foreigners, provided we are bound to our Canadian country, and not to another country outside our frontiers, provided we play our part as Canadians and take our responsibilities in that respect, in order to reach the goal we are seeking, that is understanding, mutual co-operation and making Canada a greater country, where life is worth living.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Churchill: On division.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lamontagne: I assume, Mr. Speaker, that its support is unanimous?

Mr. Churchill: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, ISSUE OF SECURITIES, ETC.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-127, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system for the period from the 1st day of January, 1962 to the 30th day of June, 1964, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

Mr. E. J. Benson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this bill is basically the same as in previous years being in accordance with the practice followed since 1952 and only differs in form in that it covers two calendar years instead of the usual one. As hon. members know, ordinarily there is a financing and guarantee bill presented to the house each year, but inasmuch as the 1962 legislation was not dealt with last year and the fiscal year 1963 is nearing completion it was deemed expedient to combine both years' authorizations and to present the bill at this time.

The 1962 capital budgets and 1961 annual reports of C.N.R. and T.C.A. were considered in November, 1962, by the sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping, owned and controlled by the government. During the current session the 1963 capital budgets and 1962 annual reports of these crown corporations have been under consideration by a similar committee. The bill is intended to accomplish eight main purposes, each of which is similar in form to those of the 1961 act and preceding annual acts. These purposes are:

1. To authorize capital expenditures by the Canadian National Railways not exceeding $156,500,000 during the 1962 calendar year as well as capital expenditures not exceeding $157 million during the 1963 calendar year.

2. To authorize the company to make, prior to July 1, 1964, such capital expenditures as may be necessary to discharge obligations incurred under the 1962-63 act, but which become due for payment after January 1, 1964, as long as these expenditures do not exceed $56 million.

3. To authorize the railway company to enter into contracts prior to July 1, 1964 for new equipment and for general additions and conversions, where payment will come due after the calendar year 1963, provided that such amounts do not exceed $31,200,000.

4. To provide for the continued purchase by the Minister of Finance of Canadian National Railways 4 per cent preferred stock through to the end of the calendar year 1964. The 1961 financing and guarantee act extended to December 31, 1962, the expiry date of the authority granted by the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act, 1952, for the purchase of such stock up to the limit of 3 per cent of the company's gross revenue. In future years this provision might be among those affected if the government implemented the recommendations of the MacPherson commission and the proposals on the recapitalization of the C.N.R. While government decisions on these urgent and fundamental problems are pending, it is recommended that the bill extend the expiry date of this provision until the end of 1964.

5. For the same reasons the bill also will extend until the end of 1964 the moratorium on interest on the government loan of $100 million to the railway company authorized by the capital revision act, 1952.

6. The bill will contain a new section to increase to $480 million the limitation in the Canadian National Railways Refunding Act, 1955, placed on the authority to refund maturing or matured securities of the railway company. The limit is at present $230 million and it is necessary to increase this limit to allow the railway company to repay to the government a loan of $250 million which the government advanced to the railway company for the purpose of refunding a bond issue in the same amount which matured on the 1st of February, 1963. The only foreseeable way that the C.N.R. could repay this government loan of $250 million would be to sell a bond issue of like amount to the public. There are no plans for such an issue. However, it is considered desirable to provide in this bill for such a possibility, should debt management considerations ever point in that direction.

7. The bill will provide for the financing, either by means of the issue of new securities by the government of Canada or by way of direct loan, of an amount not to exceed $31,800,000. This amount represents the financial requirements of Trans-Canada Air Lines of $9,800,000 in the calendar year 1962, of $16 million in 1963 and $6 million during the first six months of 1964.

8. Finally, as in previous years, the bill provides authority to make temporary loans to the Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines to meet deficiencies in operating revenues up to June 30, 1964. As hon. members are aware, these loans to the two companies on income deficit account are of a temporary nature to meet deficiencies in revenue which regularly occur in the early part of each calendar year, and are repaid later either from annual revenues or, if these are insufficient, are written off by parliamentary appropriation.

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to prolong this debate since I know that, as is the case usually, this legislation concerns particularly financial matters. However, as former minister of transport, I simply wish to take this opportunity to ask the government to study as soon as possible the advisability of allowing refinancing of the operations of the Canadian National Railways.

I believe it is already too long since we had a thorough study of the possibility of allowing the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways to adopt a new financing policy, in order that the company may not have to show each year an illogical deficit, which undermines the morale not only of the directors but also of all the employees of the Canadian National Railways.

That is why I have no objection whatsoever to the bill as it stands at the present time. I do not think it includes anything really new. However, when he appeared before the sessional committee, the president of the Canadian National Railways repeated his arguments, which in fact are perfectly logical, in favour of a new capitalization policy for the Canadian National Railways.

[Text]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, we will support this bill, but in doing so we would also raise the matter referred to by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), the long delay that seems to have been necessary, not just on the part of this government but the previous government, in making up their minds about the recapitalization program of Canadian National Railways. On the two most recent occasions the president of the railway has been before a house committee saying that the presentation has been made. On the third most recent occasion he was before us he gave us a long pep talk on all the advantages of recapitalization and what it would do for the railway. But despite all this long preparation we still have not had any action.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) suggests that it is up to the Department of Finance. I do not know what the Department of Finance thinks about it, but it might be as well if we had some explanation at this time. Since the bill really has an almost retroactive effect I would hope that the debate on it would not be long.

One weakness of the capital expenditures set-up of Canadian National Railways from our point of view has been that, with the argument for recapitalization, it is very difficult to know just how well the capital expenditures program for the last decade has worked. This is particularly true since Donald Gordon took over the management, and it is difficult to know how well this capital expenditure program has worked in putting the railway into what he now claims would be an efficient position, as a matter of fact a position without deficit in 1963, if the MacPherson recommendations on recapitalization had been carried out. This claim of Mr. Gordon's is one that is difficult to understand or appreciate. It is easier to see when you look at the long term debt of Canadian National Railways and the fantastic interest payments which have to be made.

I suppose our Social Credit friends would have a solution for the most disturbing point, one which would be more apparent and easier than any that I could offer. However, I tend to go along with their line of reasoning on this. Over the last six or seven years Canadian National Railways have had too many debenture or bond issues floated at rates of interest of 5 per cent or more. This may have been necessary in order to meet the market of the time, but one wonders, when the government of Canada has such borrowing powers, whether this tremendous increase in the percentage of interest on the C.N.R. debt for these more recent capital expenditures is not too high. I would hate to think that in another ten years, if recapitalization does go through, another president of Canadian National Railways will be coming along to have the debt shifted again on to the back of the government of Canada, because of the high interest rates that were charged on Canadian National borrowings during the fifties and sixties. It is for this reason I think we would appreciate a statement from the Department of Finance as to its attitude towards recapitalization of the whole Canadian National debt structure.

In the meantime, this is a routine measure and only touches that other matter by implication. We have, therefore, nothing further to say.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I am taking the floor simply to say that we do not refuse in the least to support this bill since it is only legalizing expenditures incurred last year and this year. I think we would be playing a dirty trick on the C.N.R. and all other agencies related to it if we refused to support this bill.

However, it enables us to notice the financial situation in which the C.N.R. finds itself and to show to everyone—even to those who refuse to believe in the Social Credit theories —that those debts that keep piling up are incurred just to reimburse loans made previously.

If the people are happy with this system, they can keep it; but if they are not satisfied with it, nor with Social Credit, they should by all means find quickly a system that will rid us of those chronic debts which only increase year after year.

I would also like to say a word on the management of Canadian National Railways which, judging by what we hear, is most adequate. We are ready to recognize this, inasmuch as the directors will prove it to us but, as a matter of fact, this bill involves, besides Canadian National Railways, Trans-Canada Air Lines and it is difficult to examine its budgets and balance sheets, since they are included with those of Canadian National Railways, whose directors are unwilling to reveal the amounts involved, claiming that this is an altogether different company.

I think the government should hereafter consider separating these two crown corporations. Because these are public companies; hon. members, who are the representatives of the people, must be made aware, on behalf of the people, of all expenditures and; they must know what constitutes the income and what the resulting balance is.

I admit, as the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) said a while ago, that we now have a sham deficit, if we consider the operations for this year. Nevertheless, we are in a situation of chronic indebtedness which will prevent the C.N.R. and T.C.A. from making profits, because our economic system is no more adequate this year than last.

To conclude, I should like to make a short comment on the hotels operated by the C.N.R. Because the Social Credit party claims to be the party of free or private enterprise, its opponents tell us that private companies make exorbitant profits and are hurtful to some other concerns.

I have seen the operation reports of the C.N.R. hotels and I understand that only the Queen Elizabeth hotel, which is run by a private company, made profits, but so much so that it succeeded in erasing the deficits of all other C.N.R. hotels.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is food for thought. This is not a matter of demagogy, but only of recording facts and figures. If other hon. members can offer better solutions, they should better do it fast, since we are sinking into conditions which worsen year after year, and even if we still exist in 1967 to celebrate the centennial of confederation, we will find ourselves in a financial situation which will prevent us from doing so.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity we have of studying Bill No. C-127 to speak on a subject which made the headlines in papers all over the country, namely the decision of the president of T.C.A. in favour of the American DC-9.

I will try to be brief. I was reading in the Saturday, November 5, 1963 issue of Le Devoir a statement of principle, a testimony of faith by the Liberal members from the province of Quebec. The newspaper report is as follows:

> The Liberal members from Quebec will recommend to the federal government the purchase of the Caravelle jetliners.
> Ottawa—It is the intention of the Liberal members from the province of Quebec to recommend to the federal government the purchase of the French jet Caravelle instead of the American DC-9 in order to alleviate the tragic situation which prevails at the Canadair plant of Ville Saint Laurent, near Montreal.
> Under the chairmanship of Mr. Guy Rouleau, M.P. for Dollard, the Quebec Liberals have decided to form a study and working committee which will make recommendations to the government in that respect.
> According to them, there is serious unemployment at present in northern Montreal and especially in Ville Saint Laurent, because Canadair has no contracts. The company has kept only 3,187 of its 6,500 regular employees.

Liberal members from Quebec see only one solution to the problem, that is the purchase by T.C.A. of the Caravelle jetliner which would be built by Canadair.

Therefore, it will be the committee's mission to convince the federal government and especially the Department of Transport to choose the Caravelle instead of the American DC-9 which would be partly built in the Toronto area but which would be assembled in the United States.

The French company, Sud-Aviation, promised to conclude an agreement with Canadair for the construction of the Caravelle, if Trans-Canada Air Lines decided to buy a sufficient number of those jets.

The government of Quebec, the city of Montreal and Ville Saint Laurent have already submitted representations in that respect.

Local 712 of the international association of machinists has also submitted urgent recommendations to the hon. member for Dollard.

The committee is made up of Mr. Rouleau, the chairman, and of Messrs. Raymond Rock (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle), Pit Lessard (St. Henry), Gerard Loiselle (St. Ann), Prosper Boulanger (Mercier), Vincent Drouin (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes) and Jean Rochon (Laval).

Mr. Speaker, I was anxious to read to the house this press report published in nearly all our Canadian newspapers, because it is an ultimatum by the federal representatives from Quebec, to force the government to choose the Caravelle, so as to cope with the unemployment which besets Quebec, and more particularly the island of Montreal, which includes the town of Saint Laurent.

I was astonished to see that the pressures exercised by the representatives have come to nothing, and that when the Prime Minister told the house about the choice of the DC-9, the same members on the treasury benches, (all of them from Quebec), thunderously applauded.

Mr. Speaker, after that statement which, as I said, is really an ultimatum, I am amazed by the actions of the representatives who sit on the treasury benches and who signed the petition.

Mr. Speaker, pressures, supported by countless documents, had also been exerted by the authorities of the province of Quebec, by Mr. Lapalme and by Mr. Rene Levesque. The following account was given as to it:

Let us remember that Mr. Rene Levesque, who is the minister of natural resources in the Lesage cabinet, stated as early as October last: "The Quebec government will have recourse to all firm and friendly means of exerting pressure to endeavour to persuade federal authorities of the necessity to pick out the Sud-Aviation Caravelle aircraft, to modernize Trans-Canada's air fleet—

And Mr. Rene Levesque had this to add:

—that he had attracted criticisms from Ottawa for having stated that the Quebec government was exerting "polite but persistent" pressures so as to guide the company's choice, has disclosed yesterday that the cabinet possesses "well supported" files regarding the respective worthiness of the aircraft among which Trans-Canada Air Lines must make their choice and that the superiority of the Caravelle aircraft is undoubtedly unquestionable,

As I have said, Mr. Lapalme made those statements, supported by labour representatives in Canada and, especially in the province of Quebec.

However, Mr. Speaker, we were surprised by T.C.A.'s decision, concerning the choice of the DC-9 aircraft, which was approved afterwards by the government, and we were particularly surprised by the statement made by Mr. McGregor, president of this crown corporation whose salary is paid by the Canadian taxpayers. In my opinion, he should have been more careful in his statements and he should not have tried to foster trouble and stir up strife. The president of T.C.A. made unfortunate statements. I would refer to what Mr. Therrien, a member of the Glassco commission, said again recently:

It is not the ill-timed statements of a man like Mr. McGregor, president of T.C.A., who, more than anybody else, should refrain from evaluating the qualifications of the French Canadians in administration. No such statements can help settle the problem to the satisfaction of the French-Canadian nation.

Mr. McGregor even stated that it was quite possible that T.C.A. would remain unilingual, as it would be too expensive, and thousands of dollars would have to be spent to have the words "Air Canada" inscribed on the corporation's aircraft. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether intensification of bilingualism in this country should be measured by the amount of dollars likely to be involved.

However, Mr. Speaker, as I have said, it would have been so important to award T.C.A. that contract, to Canadair providing work for thousands of Canadian workers and their families for five years.

It should not be forgotten that Sud-Aviation would have built all the Caravelle aircraft here, whereas only certain parts of the DC-9 will be built here, while other parts will be built in the United States. The bulk of the work will be done in the United States. That was the opinion of a Montreal newspaper quoted earlier; and this statement was signed by many members from Quebec.

There is also something else, Mr. Speaker. The DC-9 still has to be tested. Moreover, American firms are being encouraged to build these aircraft themselves and in fact, most parts will be built in the United States, and this at a moment when we have a deficit with that country.

Mr. McGregor even questioned the efficiency of the Caravelle. In my opinion, he showed a lack of judgment and contributed to intensify the tension between France and Canada, at a time when our Prime Minister is going to visit France in a few weeks. I think that was a poor thing to say when one considers that the Caravelle has carried 7 million passengers over 60 million miles, which is equal to 2,500 times around the earth and 130 times the distance to the moon. Moreover, the Caravelle is used not only in France, but by 23 companies throughout the world.

Another statement made before the committee and which surprised me was when Mr. McGregor attempted to question the competence of French speaking Canadians.

I think he should first do like the president of another crown corporation, that is try to find at least one or two French speaking persons to appoint to the board of directors, consisting of nine members.

Furthermore, McGregor added that the Caravelle was an excellent aircraft eight years ago but that it is outdated today. I am quite surprised that the president of this crown corporation does not know that the Caravelle Super B which will be in operation in 1964, is a much better aircraft than the Caravelle now in use.

Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted in closing to give to the house statistics taken from the British magazine Flight International.

The following figures represent the activities of the different models of aircraft in the world and the number of accidents they have had. These figures are applicable up to the month of May 1963. They indicate, for instance, that the Boeing 707 with 210 aircraft in service, has had 32 accidents, 9 being fatal, since it has been put into operation. With 60 aircraft in operation, the Comet has had 16 accidents, 5 being fatal; the DC-8, 185 in operation, 15 accidents, 7 being fatal; the Boeing 720, 129 in operation, 11 accidents, 2 being fatal; the Caravelle, 151 in operation, 7 accidents, 4 being fatal; the Convair 800, no figures as to number in operation or number of accidents, but this aircraft has had one fatal accident.

And to complete this list, since May 30, 1963, the Caravelle has had one fatal accident. The BAC-111 has had one fatal accident and the DC-8 has had two accidents, one of them fatal, that is the recent accident at Ste. Therese de Blainville.

In the light of the statements made by the president of T.C.A. which have gone a long way to damage our national unity as well as the relations between France and Canada, I wonder whether the government could not compel this crown corporation to publish the report of its experts on the choice of the DC-9, in order to shed some light on the matter for the benefit of the public?

Besides, part of that report relating to the maintenance and repair base in Winnipeg was made known to the government of Manitoba.

I also wonder whether the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) or the government should not oblige Mr. McGregor to mend his ways, so as to put right not only the damage he brought to our national unity, but also the deterioration of our relations with a friendly country like France.

Mr. Speaker, those are the few remarks I wished to make.

[Text]

Mr. Loiselle: On a question of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. Is the hon. gentleman rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Loiselle: On a question of order, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The hon. member who just sat down read an article from Le Devoir and mentioned that the committee he was speaking about had been set up in order to bring the government to choose the Caravelle.

I want to tell this house that, though the newspaper published such a report, that statement is untrue. The committee was set up to study the problem in a general way, and established what aircraft would be best for Trans-Canada Air Lines, but certainly not to compel the government to accept the Caravelle.

I would not want the Canadian people to take that statement for granted.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. I would gladly accept the statement of my hon. friend, if he were to table the recent article published by the newspapers; that article has appeared in most of our newspapers, and all of them are quite emphatic on that point. I have two or three copies of it in my office.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is a rule of this house, which an experienced member such as the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) knows, that we are gentlemen in this house and when an hon. member, on his responsibility, states that something about himself is a fact, we accept it as a fact.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, my remarks shall be brief. We are presented with a bill for the year 1962-63 and also for new investments covering a period ending in July 1964.

I think it is important to mention here that the C.N.R., a crown corporation, shows a deficit every year, which entails an increase in its debt and new bond issues at quite high rates of interest, especially when you consider that only one or two issues carried interest at the rate of 5 per cent in the last ten years, while all others were over 5½ per cent and even 6 per cent in some cases.

While these deficits accrue from year to year, we are told that a substantial proportion of the new investments will be to help T.C.A. meet its obligations, expand and buy new aircraft, which represents quite a large amount.

But, as was indicated by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) at a meeting of the railways committee, a balance sheet of T.C.A. is not presented to us under the pretext that it is a completely different corporation from the C.N.R.

I note that the former minister of transport made a very brief statement on this bill, but when you realize that T.C.A. operates a transportation system in some parts of Canada in direct competition with companies which have invested large amounts of money in the last three or five years to improve their service and make it adequate to meet today's needs, you start wondering. And on that score, I could refer to the case of Quebecair which has made very large capital investments in the last three years following the promise that T.C.A. would give up the service between Quebec and Montreal and on the north shore, where service is also provided by Quebecair. Besides, it has been established that T.C.A. operates at a loss between Quebec and the north shore, and Quebecair has to compete now with a crown corporation.

The same thing exists in the trucking field. There were statements made by C.N.R. representatives to the effect that this year again they would continue to compete with private companies already existing through their road transportation system. It is the same thing again with the hotel business where, among others, the Queen Elizabeth hotel, owned by the C.N.R., shows a profit, and it is operated in direct competition with private enterprise. In short, that crown corporation branches out in three important directions, truck transport, air transport and hotel business.

Today, with this bill, we are called upon to vote rather substantial amounts in order to facilitate the refinancing of balance sheets in continuous deficit. Who will pay these amounts? It is always the Canadian taxpayer who pays the cost.

It seems to me, as mentioned by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) that some suggestions might be in order; therefore, may I offer you my own suggestion. A complete study of the refinancing of all the assets now administered by the C.N.R. should be undertaken as soon as possible to consider the advisability of financing that crown corporation in new ways less costly and, in the last analysis, cheaper for the Canadian people, so that we may have truly well organized services without having to submit measures that cost a lot of money to the country.

In short, we are seeing competition between crown corporations and private enterprise which has invested huge sums of money. We should give greater protection to private trucking companies, especially from organizations like the C.N.R. which asks us each year for rather large amounts when already adequate services are financed by private enterprise.

In my opinion, we should look for a new method of refinancing in full the C.N.R.

[Text]

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. I do not think there is much point in repeating in the house the discussion which took place in the sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping, especially the question raised by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon); that is, the question of the choice of the DC-9 aircraft over the Caravelle. I am a member of that committee and therefore am aware of the controversy that has been taking place in the country and in the house on the question of Trans-Canada's choice of aircraft. I hold no particular brief for Toronto and de Havilland, or for Montreal and Canadair. I come from a part of the country well removed from the rivalries between the two places for the employment which would ensue from the choice of a particular aircraft.

I wanted to be satisfied, as much as a member of parliament with a lack of technical knowledge could be, through questioning, that Trans-Canada Air Lines had made the correct choice. I was satisfied about this and practically all the members of the committee were so satisfied, including all those of the Conservative party, I believe. It was explained to us by the president of the company that six factors were applied in the choice of an aircraft. I believe five of them were under consideration. The airplanes were rated according to the six factors, and the airplane which had the highest rating—that is, which served T.C.A.'s interests best—was the one they chose.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) says there is no doubt the Caravelle is the best aircraft. I submit there is a great deal of doubt. Mr. McGregor did explain at one time that this might be a perfectly good aircraft for some air lines, having in mind the kind of work they would be required to perform, but that it was not suitable for the work of T.C.A. He told us that after these six factors had been applied, the DC-9 came out in front.

I will agree with the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm in one respect; the president of T.C.A. did make some unfortunate remarks about the Caravelle. It would have been far better had he not mentioned that accident record, because he did go on to say, afterwards, that most accidents are caused by human factors, not mechanical failure. But I think on Mr. McGregor's behalf it can be said that he was under considerable pressure from questioning, and perhaps he was goaded into saying more than he should have said on that occasion. But I am satisfied, and I am sure most of the members of the committee are satisfied, that on technical grounds the corporation made a correct decision. It would have made no difference to me had the report been available, because it was a technical report. I am not an aeronautical engineer and it would not have helped me very much if we had received a copy.

I believe the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Perron) complained about the lack of financial details in the C.N.R. and T.C.A. reports. I suggest that until the house committee is able to examine in more detail the reports of competing firms, such as Canadian Pacific Airlines and other operators, we should not press these publicly operated companies to go into more detail with regard to the financial side of their operations than is the practice at the present time.

There is a great deal of complaint about the competition which the public corporations are giving to certain private companies in transportation and other fields. Hon. members complain about deficits incurred by these public corporations, but they resent any attempt to decrease the deficits by moving into certain other fields of business, even though the public corporations have been interested in these other fields of endeavour for a considerable time.

I should like to correct one point made by the hon. member for Beauce. The Queen Elizabeth hotel is not the only hotel in the C.N.R. system which has made money. Half of them made money, although the profits were not very great.

I hope the government will proceed in the next session with the measures necessary for the refinancing of the C.N.R. When that takes place I think the operational statements year by year will be perfectly satisfactory.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I was quite pleased a moment ago to hear the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) who is perfectly familiar with the situation of Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines recommend a refinancing of the debt with a view to reducing the interest on it.

Well, we notice that the ideas advocated by our group in this house are beginning to find their way into the minds and this is a good thing. I know some of our good Liberal friends would be quite pleased to have certain monetary reforms carried out, when they find it impossible to administer the country according to their wishes and views.

Our ideas about the monetary reform are becoming increasingly essential to the administration of this country. Every day we find new evidence of this, especially with the study of the bill now before us, which reveals this enormous debt, impossible to pay, but that will have to be cleared some day, because we cannot continue, under such a system, to maintain so considerable a debt.

A while ago I heard the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) say: Of course I do not advocate the easy solutions of the Social Credit, but I favour a decrease and a refinancing of the debt of C.N.R.

So let me ask this question: Is it more difficult to create credit as a debt than to create credit without debts? Is the operation not exactly the same?

Now, I say that to write down figures in a book indicating an issue of credit at a 6 per cent rate of interest or an issue of credit at 1 per cent is the same kind of operation. In fact, what difference is there really in the writing down of figures and what technical problems can there be?

It seems to me that one does not have to be extremely bright to understand that.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I will say this: The Canadian National Railways will never be able to make any profits so long as they face a debt of that kind. This is one of the most important questions the government should examine in order to solve this extremely serious problem which, in my opinion, cripples much of Canada's economy.

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago I was blaming the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre for trying to increase the differences between our two great races. And now we are discussing the financing of the C.N.R., and this gives us an opportunity to congratulate the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) who, after the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), has once again raised a problem which is very close to our hearts, in the province of Quebec, and that to such an extent—I say so in all honesty—that it would be a service to render the house and the Conservative party if the hon. member for Three Rivers would take the seat to his left and the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm would move up to a front bench.

This decision has been highly talked about in Quebec and people in that province are disappointed. At that time, the government replied that it had chosen the DC-9 on the advice of experts.

To a certain extent, the answer was satisfactory but, later on, the province of Quebec asked the government why it had followed the advice of experts concerning the DC-9 but not in the case of the T.C.A. base at Winnipeg. Here again, we were told that the report was confidential and that it would be difficult to get further information.

That would have satisfied the province of Quebec but now, Mr. McGregor states that the report is confidential and cannot be made public. The fantastic thing is that he gave Montreal students explanations concerning the report which was too confidential to be communicated to members of the house.

The matter is being raised again and complaints are being voiced by the eternal martyrs of the province of Quebec who have been ill-treated once more.

I say the government has made a mistake. French Canadian members are complaining. I should like to tell other members who wonder why they complain that if the province of Quebec had obtained what so many of its members had been asking, that is the choice of the Caravelle and the transfer of the maintenance base to the Canadair plant, it would not have complained.

If we so often see Quebec members rising in the house to assert in very strong terms what they believe to be their rights, I say to the other members that if we have to do so, it is because the province of Quebec is aware that it has not always obtained its share. I am not suggesting that we are always right and that the other provinces are always wrong. But I say that the government, as matters stood, should have accepted the motion for the tabling of the engineers' report on the matter.

These were the comments I wished to make, and I feel that as long as one ethnic group will try to drive the other one to the wall, there will be ground for fearing that the Canadian confederation will not be properly commemorated.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Just one word, Mr. Speaker, concerning paragraph 2 of clause 3 of the measure now before us; it says this:

> (2) The national company, with the approval of the governor in council, is authorized
> (a) at any time prior to the 1st day of July, 1964, to borrow money by the issue and sale of securities or by way of loan from the Minister of Finance to provide the amounts required by Trans-Canada Air Lines for the purposes mentioned in paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection (1); and
> (b) by the issue and sale of securities, to borrow money to repay loans made under section 6.

Mr. Speaker, under clause 3, the Canadian National Railways is authorized to make capital expenditures amounting to $157 million and those expenditures are distributed as follows:

Road property	$114,134,000
Branch line construction	4,166,000
Hotels	3,797,000
Equipment	18,410,000

Mr. Speaker, I shoud like to point out that, this year, $3,797,000 are allocated to hotels compared to $1,480,000 last year.

Mr. Speaker, under paragraph (2) of clause 3, the Canadian National Railways is authorized to borrow money by the issue and sale of securities. But if a crown corporation has had deficits for many years, where will it take those securities to be issued? Where will it go and from whom will it borrow those amounts? In short, to whom will it sell those securities it will decide to market?

Mr. Speaker, the same paragraph stipulates also:

> —by the issue and sale of securities or by way of loan from the Minister of Finance—

Now, how will the Minister of Finance be able to finance the sum of $157 million required by the Canadian National Railways?

And at this point let me say incidentally that Trans-Canada Air Lines also shows a deficit each year.

Where will the Minister of Finance get the money to make a loan to the C.N.R.?

Mr. Speaker, reference was made a while ago to the fact that T.C.A. and the C.N.R., and especially the latter, often used those amounts to compete unfairly with private enterprise.

An hon. member mentioned earlier that in the hotel trade, only the hotels run by private enterprise were making profits. And yet, the government presists in competing with private enterprise in other fields.

The hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Perron) pointed out to the house that the trucking industry was subject to fierce competition from the C.N.R. I do not think it is in the best interests of Canada that crown corporations, including the C.N.R., should thus compete with private enterprise.

On the one hand, private enterprise is being taxed in order to finance the deficits of crown corporations, indirect taxes are levied, etc. In the provincial field, the trucking business must pay very high charges for truck licence plates, etc. And, with all those expenditures, it is almost a miracle that the trucking business can remain in operation throughout Canada and in every province.

Now, as the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Cote) rightly pointed out just now, if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), in order to finance the operations of crown corporations, were to borrow from the Bank of Canada at a nominal interest rate not exceeding administrative costs, he would not have to pay the same deficit two or three times, or two or three times the cost of building a railway line, and even twice the amount for repairs, because capital bears interest, that is, the interest reaches the same amount as the capital created at the beginning.

From a mathematical point of view, it is impossible to repay twice the amount of the loan.

Mr. Speaker, we suggest that the govenment should use the Bank of Canada, and not only to finance the C.N.R., but in all fields.

Mr. Speaker, we have said many times, and rightly so, that it would be cheaper to resort to debt-free money than to debt-tied money which requires that such amount be greater in the end than when it was first created.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that even if the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) does not understand all the principles or theories of the Social Credit, it is obvious that the Minister of Finance could at least try the experiment once, to realize to what extent it could help the Canadian people as a whole. Instead of levying taxes that grow higher each year, we could consider a possible reduction of taxes, precisely because we would create the equivalent for crown corporations or the administration of public affairs in all fields, educational, municipal, provincial and federal.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in a few years from now the government would be happy to be able to lighten the tax burden which now weighs heavily on the shoulders of the Canadian taxpayer.

Before resuming my seat, I would not forgive myself if I did not point out how important it is, for the parliament of Canada, to help private enterprise, as much as possible, because it has not failed in Canada. In fact, the trucking industry, as well as other private industries, has not failed in Canada. What has failed is the financial system, and the members of the cabinet, including the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis), should go to the Bank of Canada to finance the development which is needed from an economic and social standpoint as well as from a simple Canadian standpoint.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 14 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill he read the third time? Now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By leave, now.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-127, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system for the period from the 1st day of January, 1962, to the 30th day of June, 1964, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As there are a number of private bills standing for consideration in committee of the whole, is it agreed that in accordance with section 1 of standing order 54 they be referred to the committee of the whole in one motion?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, that would refer to items Nos. 1 to 5, I assume?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, items Nos. 1 to 5 plus Bill No. S-47 and Bill No. S-45, which were reported today. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. S-41, to authorize the construction of a bridge and a causeway over the St. Lawrence river near the city of Pointe-aux-Trembles.—Mr. Rouleau.

Bill No. S-48, respecting the Northern Life Assurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Morison.

Bill No. S-49, respecting the Canada North-west Land Company (Limited).—Mr. Wahn.

Bill No. S-51, to incorporate Family Life Assurance Company.—Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace).

Bill No. S-45, respecting the executive board of the Canada conference of the Evangelical Lutheran Augustana Synod of North America.

Bill No. S-47, to incorporate Royal General Insurance Company of Canada.

MORTGAGE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house in committee of the whole on Bill No. S-50, to incorporate the Mortgage Insurance Company of Canada—Mr. Cameron (High Park)—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few remarks on this bill. They will not be lengthy but there are a couple of aspects of the bill that I think it is worth reflecting upon and placing some information on the record. The purpose of the bill is to create a mortgage insurance company which will then be used to provide mortgage insurance for other loan companies which will operate in each of the ten provinces. As was explained to us in committee, the mortgage companies that will be incorporated intend to supply a much higher ratio of mortgage lending to private home owners and owners of duplexes than is now available. I understand they will supply about an 80 per cent mortgage and this mortgage insurance company is intended to provide mortgage insurance for the top 20 per cent of the loan.

It is interesting to note that this is a new experiment in the field of mortgage law and is really filling a vacuum which exists at the present time. Those of us on this side of the house and various people in the government when they were on this side of the house advocated that the National Housing Act should be extended to fill this vacuum. I can recall sitting in the other corner in 1962 and hearing the now Minister of National Revenue when he was in the opposition day after day on the orders of the day ask the very urgent question, because all his questions were urgent, when would the government agree to extend the provisions of the National Housing Act so that it could cover older homes in the cities. We now hear the same gentleman giving the answers as a member of the treasury benches that he received in opposition, that this is under study, active study, careful study, urgent study, all sorts of things, and that eventually we may see such action.

Mr. Macdonald: I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question. Is he not aware that there is an item on the order paper in the name of the minister proposing just such a measure?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, there are many items on the order paper, many of which we doubt will ever be presented to the house. I can refer to the great Canada Development Corporation, of which we have heard nothing more. I could refer to many items that have been placed on the order paper and which have never been put forward. This is a very urgent matter and I would have thought that with the great national importance that was attached to it in the last election it would have been drawn to our attention. With the spirit of unanimity and Christmas good will that is exhibited in the house, and inasmuch as everybody is in favour of this proposal, I am sure if the government will call the order right now there will be unanimous consent to put it right at the top of our business. If they will do so I will take my seat and I am sure we could pass it quickly.

Mr. Howard: Any more questions?

Mr. Scott: I merely wanted to refer to a booklet, "The Policies of the Liberal Party, General Election, 1963".

Mr. Baldwin: That is a bad subject for Christmas.

Mr. Scott: When I hold this document in my hands I almost feel I should bow, or perhaps wear gloves. I know it hurts—

Mr. Pickersgill: It hurts you more than it does us.

Mr. Scott: —that these matters should be placed on record. On page 9 we have these words appearing:

> Extend national housing legislation to provide insured mortgages for the purchase of existing homes as well as for building new homes.

The hon. member for Rosedale has said that this is on the order paper. We are glad to see it. We know that, like all commitments, it will be honoured. I am sorry, as I say, that the government does not consider it urgent enough to bring it forward now so we can pass it at once. As was pointed out in the committee, Mr. Chairman, I do think the government is doing a bit of a disservice to these gentlemen. The mortgage insurance company which these gentlemen have come here to have incorporated is going to have a very short life. These people are going to go to all the expense of setting up a mortgage insurance company and incorporating ten other companies, one in each of the provinces, and the government is then going to honour its election commitment at the next session. We will presumably extend the National Housing Act to all existing homes and this poor company will probably be wiped out. I do not feel particularly sorry for these companies. They are probably well financed. I understand that the Bank of Nova Scotia is behind them. But it looks to me as though they are going to have a very short life indeed because of the assurance I have received from the hon. member for Rosedale that this matter will be proceeded with after our Christmas recess. I am delighted to hear it, and I hope that the people who are incorporating these companies and going to all this expense realize that the life of their companies is going to be a short one.

THE PHARMACY EXAMINING BOARD OF CANADA

The house resumed from Tuesday, December 3 consideration in committee of Bill No. S-7, to incorporate the Pharmacy Examining Board of Canada—Mr. Mitchell—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, until now we objected quite vigorously to concurrence in Bill No. S-7.

However, after having sort of washed out the measure the first time, as the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Beaule) would say, I talked with my friend, the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Mitchell) and we agreed that the amendments made to Bill No. S-7 seem to satisfy the Quebec college of pharmacists, as we had no request or representations from that college since those amendments were made. If the pharmacists had continued to object, we would have likely taken their remarks into consideration, but in the absence of representations from them, we do not intend to prevent concurrence in Bill No. S-7 which leaves to an organization of pharmacists full discretion to accept or to reject what is proposed in Bill No. S-7.

Consequently, we do not object to Bill No. S-7 being concurred in.

Mr. Scott: I wonder if the sponsor of the bill has given any consideration to the suggestion which I believe was made by the hon. member for Greenwood, that persons whose certificates of qualification are cancelled have a right of appeal?

Mr. Mitchell: I would agree to the amendment if the hon. member wishes to put it.

GOOD NEWS BROADCASTING ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

The house resumed from Tuesday, December 10, consideration in committee of Bill No. S-15, to incorporate the Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada—Mr. Enns—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take the time of the committee for a few minutes to put on the record, certainly the views of this member and I think of a number of other members who constituted the committee which considered this bill in the miscellaneous private bills committee, and the reasons, apart altogether from the individuals involved in this particular case, why I think it would not be in the best public interest to enact this kind of legislation.

We discovered during the course of the rather prolonged hearings in the committee that this particular organization was one which arose out of a movement that had originated in the state of Nebraska, and which had ultimately achieved incorporation itself within the state of Nebraska. Subsequently the movement decided to undertake a Canadian operation and obtained a licence from the province of Manitoba, or rather, the Nebraska corporation obtained a licence from Manitoba to carry on its activities within that province. Subsequently the Nebraska corporation extended its activities throughout Canada, and I think the activities are adequately stated in the explanatory notes and in the powers of the bill. They basically involved the broadcasting of evangelical messages throughout Canada.

I would like to make it perfectly clear, and I am sure this feeling is shared by the other members on the committee, that we have no objection whatsoever to that type of broadcasting. We certainly have no criticism at all of the reverend gentleman who is responsible for the development of this particular organization in Nebraska. Indeed, viewing the financial statements of the Nebraska organization, and viewing the fact that he has in a period of approximately 15 years attained for that corporation total assets in excess of $1 million, one can only admire both his sincerity and his faith, and point out that the organization which he has built up to the present and the very broad activities which it carries out, is a tribute to his own personal character.

However, I would like to point out that in enacting this bill we would be creating not only a precedent, which might be taken advantage of by subsequent applicants for incorporations by way of private bills in this house, but we may also be creating a corporate body which, when the reverend gentleman to whom I have made reference, in due course passes on, might fall into the hands of a much less scrupulous and a much less devoted group of successors.

What the bill proposes to do is to create, by way of a private act, a corporation with no distinct congregation or body of members which will be able to control the directors or trustees, as they are referred to in this particular bill. In other words, a group of trustees or directors are being set up who are beyond the control of any particular group of supporting members. They will be entitled to carry on the corporation's activities, they will be entitled to solicit a very large amount of funds across Canada, and will be entitled to spend those funds and apply them for such purposes as they wish, without ultimately presenting their accounting to the control of any particular congregation.

Hon. members will at once see there is a sharp distinction here between the type of corporation proposed in this bill and the type of corporation such as the Lutheran corporation which we considered earlier today. In that case there is a congregation; there is a situation where you have a defined body of members who ultimately reserve the rights, and have property rights reserved under the law for the purpose of controlling that particular ministry.

There is no defined body of members in the Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada who will be in the position of controlling the board of trustees and controlling the ministry. Therefore the consequence is that there is no one basically to whom an accounting is to be made. There is no one to control the trustees in the course of their solicitation for public funds. There is no one ultimately to control the manner in which the funds are to be spent, the extent to which these funds shall be spent on expenses and the charitable purposes for which they are to be devoted, and in general terms to make certain the trustees in this particular case stick within the framework of their particular powers.

It is known that the corporate power conferred by this parliament can be withdrawn by this parliament, but I suggest in practical terms it will not be easy, or in fact practical, for any particular individual who may question the manner in which the corporation has been carried on, to come back to parliament and obtain a repeal of the statute.

I would point out that the problem involved in religious or charitable bodies of this kind has been met at various levels, and some of the provinces have various provisions, such as the province of Ontario, which has enacted a statute known as the charities accounting act. This act sets down a defined procedure whereby a body soliciting and applying for funds in the province must make an accounting to the public trustee of the province, a civil servant, an emanation of the government. They must make an accounting to the public trustee, as I say; they must explain how the funds have been applied, and when funds have been solicited or received they must make periodic returns of the amounts received and the persons from whom they were received. What is equally important are the provisions under section 6 of the Ontario charities accounting act whereby, to quote subsection 1:

> Any person may complain as to the manner in which a person or organization has solicited or procured funds by way of contribution or gift from the public for any purpose, or as to the manner in which any such funds have been dealt with or disposed of.

May I point out, Mr. Chairman, that machinery of that kind, and control provisions such as those contained in the charities accounting act of Ontario, are not paralleled at the federal level. There is no machinery such as is provided for by this Ontario statute which would enable individuals who are critical of the manner in which funds have been solicited or spent by a charitable organization to obtain any public review by any government body with regard to those particular activities.

I also point out that there is a very real question of doubt as to whether or not a provincial statute such as the one I have referred to would apply to a company incorporated under a private act of this parliament. Indeed, in the course of the committee hearings I expressly questioned the solicitor for the association as to whether or not the body, which is now authorized to do business in Manitoba and in fact is engaging in business throughout Canada, has raised funds in Ontario. He said yes, and he also acknowledged the fact that he made no returns under the Ontario law; and what is more, he said he did not have any intention of making returns under that law. He took the position that the provincial acts did not apply. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, there is a real doubt as to whether these provincial provisions can apply. Therefore, not only is federal machinery missing, but it is fairly clear also that the provincial machinery will be inapplicable.

It was suggested in the course of the committee's hearings that the various taxing authorities, who from time to time have the duty of conferring upon these bodies charitable status to entitle them to the tax deductions and exemptions available to charities, would in some way exercise some kind of police influence over the body in question. Without questioning the fact that the revenue will from time to time devote close consideration as to the amount spent by such a body or as to the manner in which it otherwise employs its funds, I suggest that the apparatus of the Department of National Revenue is, first, not available to question the manner in which funds are raised; and second, it is only partly available to look into the manner in which the funds are applied. Taxing authorities such as the Department of National Revenue may very well be interested in the amount of expenses, but there is no provision available for an individual to take exception to the manner in which the funds have been expended and to require some kind of accounting of the manner in which the funds have been used. He cannot require this through the taxing statutes.

It was also pointed out during the course of the hearings that there was a full audit of the operations of this particular corporation in Canada. I would point out, as I pointed out at that time, that no doubt it is true that an audit provides interested persons with a better understanding of the financial position of such a corporation, but an audit provides no kind of assurance at all as to the manner in which the funds may have been applied. An audit will tell us how much quantitatively was spent in what direction, but it has no way of qualitatively assessing the manner in which the particular funds were expended by the board of trustees.

Therefore I would submit, Mr. Chairman, that we would be creating a corporate body here which is in the position of soliciting large amounts of funds—and experience indicates they have had success in soliciting large amounts of funds—from people throughout Canada, and that the body will be substantially beyond the jurisdiction of any controlling authority in Canada, including the jurisdiction of the people who may actually provide the funds. There is nothing in this bill, as there is so often in the case of charitable institutions, under part II of the Companies Act of Canada, saying that a contributor of a certain amount shall become a sustaining member, that the contributor of a further amount shall become an honourary life member, and so on. There is no provision, in fact, decreeing who a member shall be, or that by reason of their financial contribution they shall be entitled to a particular right, such as to question the activities of the corporation.

I think it would be an unsound principle for this legislature to adopt the practice of creating such corporate bodies. It is for this reason that I personally expressed my opposition to this measure when it was before the committee. In doing so, Mr. Chairman, let me just reaffirm that I respect the good faith of the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa in bringing this matter before the house. I also respect the good faith, as I say, of the reverend gentleman who sought this incorporation and who has had such success in his evangelic methods. But I do not think this house should engage in the creating of such a corporate body, which substantially will not be responsible to the people from whom it receives its funds.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I want to say only a few words about this bill. I think that because it has been passed through the committee and is back in the house we should today express the opinion of the committee of the whole and of the house, if there is a difference of opinion, and come to a conclusion on this bill. I know that in the miscellaneous private bills committee the decision was finally made to report the bill with certain amendments, which are before us. I acknowledge that those who are opposed to the bill are opposed to it by virtue of honest belief that there is not sufficient control in connection with this company which seeks incorporation.

I would just like to make two comments, Mr. Chairman. First, I think this is a basic case of religious freedom. Second, we discussed in committee ways in which any improper action by the broadcasting company could be avoided. We brought in amendments in fairly large quantity which legally, I think would encompass the corporation with a great many limitations that were not originally intended. So I think there is no possibility of the corporation carrying on a business for which there is no supervision. I want to comment on one of the remarks of the hon. member for Rosedale in this regard.

In the committee there was no suggestion whatever of impropriety. This is a company which is making "Back to the Bible" broadcasts to the people, mainly in western Canada but also elsewhere in this country. There was never any question that the broadcasts were improper or were doing anything except providing the straight dissemination of the religious viewpoint of the Bible as seen by Reverend Epps, who appeared before the committee. There was no suggestion that Reverend Epps was not a straightforward and honest broadcaster whose messages are listened to in many remote sections of Canada where people have no opportunity of going to church. There is no suggestion at all that there is anything improper about these broadcasts. There were suggestions that perhaps the whole set-up was not tight enough to prevent abuses of the privilege that parliament was being asked to grant with regard to charitable donations.

One of the clauses in the bill states that the object of the corporation, among others, is to accept charitable donation. Some members of the committee feared that the inclusion of this object in the bill might give the broadcasting corporation automatic status as a charitable organization in the light of which they could say to those responsible for collecting income tax: We do not need to qualify as a charitable organization because we have been qualified by parliament. To prevent such a thing happening an amendment was introduced to subclause (c) of clause 4 stating that this provision would not relieve the corporation of the necessity of complying with the provisions of any other statute relating to charitable organizations.

Thus, this organization is still required to make returns to the income tax department in order to qualify as a charitable organization. I make this appeal to the committee. This is a progressive corporation with religious objects. No impropriety was ever suggested with regard to it. If we deny the request of this organization we shall be denying it equality before the law in the parliament of Canada. Other organizations are incorporated to carry out religious and charitable objectives and the same privilege should be extended to this organization, regardless of the fact that it has its origins in the United States. For these reasons I appeal to the committee to let this matter come to a vote and, when the vote is reached, to support this bill.

Mr. Macdonald: I wonder if the hon. member would permit me to ask him a question? Would he not agree that it would be desirable in the case of this religious body, as in the case of all others which come before the house, that there should be some ultimate control exercisable by those who give their financial support over the manner in which the ministry is conducted?

Mr. Aiken: The question is a reasonable one. It was raised in the committee. There are directors, all of whom must be Canadians, as provided in this particular bill. There is no church congregation in the ordinary sense of that word. It would be impossible to have one in the circumstances in which this organization is set up. The corporation broadcasts its appeals. It receives contributions, presumably in small sums of money—one dollar, or two dollars. People put these sums in envelopes and send them in to support the broadcasts and the missionary work. But by the very nature of the operation there is not a congregation in the normal sense of that word.

The operation must, therefore, be carried on by those who have banded together to run it. There are seven or nine general directors of the world wide organization, and there are three in Canada. I admit there is not a congregation in the normal sense; neither are we establishing a religion or a church. We are merely recognizing a state which exists; we are recognizing an organization which makes broadcasts and which requests funds. I point out again that in this bill, and particularly in the terms of the amendment, we have required this organization to make a return under the Companies Act and under the Income Tax Act. These conditions have been tightened up as far as possible, and although there is no congregation there is a governing body which is responsible to the organizations to which reports are made. There is no provision for an annual meeting. It would virtually be impossible to bring together all the people who have made contributions so as to hold such a meeting. It would be too much to expect those who had contributed a dollar, or two dollars, or even ten dollars, to travel the length and breadth of this country in order to take part in an annual meeting.

I think we have to recognize the existence of this organization. To say it is different is not to say we should not allow it to operate. I do not think we have a right to tell a religious organization how it should operate. I do not think we have the right to say who shall be the officials of such an organization or how it shall be set up. If we did that, we should be getting into trouble. I think we must recognize that this is a religious body, that it is set up in the best way open to us, and that we have to accept it.

Mr. Olson: There are one or two questions I should like to direct to the sponsor of this bill. I may say that from what I know of the Good News Broadcasting Corporation I agree with the remarks which have been made; it in sincere in its attempt to promote Christianity. I would not disagree with that. But I was not a member of the committee and I should like to know whether donations to this organization qualify at the present time for exemption from income tax, particularly in Manitoba. I should like also to know whether this body has encountered any resistance from provincial governments or other groups with regard to its activities in the provinces. I agree that an amendment such as has been described might answer many of the doubts some members have felt, but even though the technicalities of the law may have been met I believe we must be concerned to see that funds are dispersed in accordance with the wishes of those who contribute. It would be interesting to know whether, if this act were passed, the organization would have the authority from parliament to circumvent provincial statutes set up to control charitable organizations.

Mr. Aiken: I would like to ask the sponsor of the bill to answer those questions.

Mr. Enns: First of all, the hon. member asked whether contributions to this organization are deductible under the Income Tax Act. The answer is, yes. For a number of years the corporation has had the authority to issue receipts which are acceptable as showing that certain sums have been donated to a charitable organization.

The hon. member asked if there had been any objection from the provinces or provincial bodies with regard to the activities of this corporation across Canada. I would say there have been no registered official objections as far as any provincial government or organization is concerned. There has been no organized objection to this group per se. The very fact that it is expanding its services is testimony to the value these programs must have to the many citizens who listen to them. Donations are voluntary. No one knocks on any door. People want to listen to the programs or they do not. They can turn their radios off if they wish. Few church organizations can exist on the basis of so loose a financial structure. Many churches live on pledges. This is done entirely by voluntary support. Testimony was given before the committee that over one million letters had been received in the past year alone. This is good testimony to the usefulness of, or to the need for, an operation of this kind.

I believe the next question which the hon. member asked related to the availability of an auditor's statement, or of a financial statement. I think the undertaking is certainly present that any donor requesting a financial statement can have his request granted.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) has already mentioned how difficult it would be to conduct annual meetings when there are listeners from British Columbia to Newfoundland. This is entirely a national organization. You cannot very well bring people in to these meetings; you could not have a big enough hall to hold all the people who are interested. Therefore it is left to those persons desirous of getting a factual statement to see that this will be provided. I merely want to reiterate that the service of the Good News Broadcasting Corporation is widely endorsed across Canada, just as it is in the United States.

There was some objection raised about this company having a parent organization in the United States. I do not think this objection is relevant because religion is not a national item and we really would not want to object on that ground, I am sure. The fact that the organization has come to the parliament of Canada for incorporation means, by that very act alone, that it is accepting further imposition or restriction. Because whether or not parliament passes the bill the company will continue operating, and there is really nothing which can be done to stop them. What they are doing now is becoming a Canadian corporation and subjecting themselves to the further regulation that this implies. I appeal to all hon. members of the house to give favourable consideration to the passing of this bill.

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, might I ask the hon. gentleman a question. I think I am right in saying that the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa did not quite answer the question put to him by the hon. member for Medicine Hat. His question was, as I understood it, whether there is any anticipation that this corporation, by the act of its incorporation, will circumvent provincial laws. May I point out that, as I pointed out in my own remarks, counsel for the corporation indicated that the corporation, when it was licensed merely to carry on business in Manitoba, had not attempted to comply with Ontario law. Notwithstanding the fact that it had raised money in Ontario. And counsel indicated, it was not his intention to advise the corporation to comply with Ontario law if in fact incorporation is granted.

Mr. Enns: I certainly hope the hon. member for Rosedale is not imputing a lack of willingness to co-operate on the part of the corporation. I am sure that is not his intention. I think it is merely because there has not been a request made of the corporation by any province to file returns to comply with any provincial statutes in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, Bill No. S-15, an act to incorporate the Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada, raises a number of questions. Is it a new Christian sect? Is it necessary to introduce a bill in the house when a member rises and says that this association is already preaching the Christian doctrine in Canada? That is precisely the point which I do not particularly like.

In fact, quite often in the house, we are told: It does not matter whether you accept the bill or not, the corporation is already in operation in Canada.

Now, what are the aims of the said corporation? Section 4 states:

> The objects of the corporation shall be
> (a) to promote the dissemination of Christian knowledge and to promote, organize, establish, maintain and carry on, conduct and assist organizations or facilities for the dissemination of Christian knowledge in all its branches and activities, including foreign and home missions, publishing houses, seminaries, schools, colleges, public correspondence schools, hospitals, dispensaries, parsonages, orphanages and homes for the aged, and any other institutions and organizations for charitable purposes or any of them;
> (b) to supply and render charitable services to poor and needy persons.

At this stage, Mr. Chairman, one is justified to wonder whether this is an organization similar to the Salvation Army?

Is the activity of this corporation a duplication of that of the Salvation Army, which I will admit, renders tremendous services in all parts of Canada?

Paragraphs (c) and (d) of section 4 read as follows:

> (c) to give and to receive donations for charitable purposes and in connection therewith to do all things reasonably necessary in order to comply with any terms stipulated by the donors of gifts made from time to time to the corporation; and
> (d) to do all such other things as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects.

Mr. Chairman, the primary question, I believe, is to know since when this organization has been operating in Canada, in what provinces, and through what radio stations.

I understand that the headquarters of the corporation are located in Winnipeg, but it is always dangerous for us, in parliament, to pass legislation to give the right to receive donations for charitable purposes.

Quite often, so-called charity organizations were created here and there in Canada, but then people found they were organized rackets more than anything else.

I should not like this bill to make it possible for an organization of three or four men to form another racket.

If its purpose is to promote Christian doctrine, is it a new religion or is it just an organization like the Salvation Army that we are being asked to authorize in Canada? If so, I would say that our country already has numerous organizations to look after the poor and the destitute, in other words all those who suffer.

Mr. Chairman, if that organization is already operating in Canada, as the hon. member has stated a while ago, why is this bill presented to us and why are we told

"Whether you pass it or not, the organization will continue its operations just the same".

I feel we should have more information. We need explanations concerning the set-up of that organization and the number of years it has been in Canada or in the western provinces.

The Chairman: Order. Shall I rise, report progress—

Mr. Enns: Mr. Chairman, I know the hon. member for Villeneuve has raised certain questions, but these are the kind of questions which were discussed in committee and the committee did in fact come out with a divided vote in favour of the bill. I feel this is merely a repetition of discussion which has taken place in the committee, and I request that the question be put.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I have some comments I should like to make on this bill. I am opposed to the incorporation of this organization under a federal charter. I was a member of the miscellaneous private bills committee and I sat—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member would require unanimous consent of the house to go on now.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

The Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress—

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, do we have unanimous consent to continue?

Mr. Cowan: No, because I want to make some extended remarks.

The Chairman: We do not. Six o'clock has been called by a number of members.

Mr. Aiken: This is an outrageous breach—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Aiken: It is an outrageous breach of religious freedom in this country.

The Chairman: Order. Shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the house give leave to go into committee of supply?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

[Mr. Caouette.]

The Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

1. General administration including a grant of $2,000 to the Canadian good roads association, $10,695,000.

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, it is the third time tonight that my estimates come up for consideration by the committee, and I think it would be better if, at this stage, I answered as briefly as possible the various points which hon. members have seen fit to raise.

Before doing that, however, I should like to remind hon. members that, in my original statement, on the first night my estimates were under consideration, I did mention the important points to which in my opinion it was necessary to refer here in order to fully appreciate the significance of the various amounts submitted to the consideration of the hon. members.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) tabled the estimates, in May 1963, he announced that they would be revised in order to reflect, as closely as possible, the amounts that my department would be actually spending this year. Of the amount of $166 million, that is the sum of the general votes for the year 1963-64, $7,391,195 will not be required, and amendments will be brought up when we take up these different items. On the other hand, additional amounts will be required for new projects, which will be outlined in the list of supplementary estimates and which amount to $12,800,000.

In brief, I would ask you to approve a total of $172,300,000, that is $6,300,000 more than what was estimated by the previous administration.

That being said, I would now like to comment on the various points raised by hon. members.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) did not see fit to express his views on questions of such significance, for instance, as the part the Department of Public Works should play in the economy of this country; he restricted his remarks to purely local questions, of minor interest. I shall answer as follows the various points he raised.

I must first of all call his attention to the fact that the Department of Public Works was relieved of the responsibility for the administration of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. On the other hand, I am responsible for the world fair of 1967, I am answerable to the house for the national capital commission and, lately, I had to assume responsibilities which, up to now, belonged to the Department of National Defence.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm mentioned an incident which was reported to have taken place in the Montreal office of the Department of Public Works, at the opening of the tenders for a contract concerning urgent works in St. Vincent de Paul. The journalists were present then and I was very surprised to read in the Montreal Matin, the day after that incident, an article saying the minister had been in touch personally with the company that had submitted the lowest tender. I repeat here what I said then: That is entirely false but, since the work to be done at St. Vincent de Paul was so urgent, I had asked the acting deputy minister to call that company as soon as the tenders were opened to inquire if it could get to work immediately. That is why the acting deputy minister of public works made that call.

I would think that the hon. member linked that matter to some allegations of patronage, also with regard to my office in Montreal. Therefore, I would like to say this: The house should know that when my predecessor, the Hon. Mr. D. Fulton, introduced me to the officials of the department, when I arrived at the office of the Department of Public Works, he asked me if I was bringing my staff with me.

I asked Mr. Fulton whether he was satisfied with his staff. He answered in the affirmative. I then said: I willingly accept to keep all your employees. This was done with one exception, I think, of the private secretary to the minister who followed him in British Columbia for an election venture which did not prove successful.

Afterwards—I believe it was in May—the Department of Public Works needed a good stenographer. At that time, I heard that the secretary to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) was quite competent. I took the liberty to offer her a job in my office. So my present secretary is the girl who had been secretary to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm for a few years.

An hon. Member: Is she any better than the hon. member?

Mr. Pigeon: You have an excellent secretary.

Mr. Deschatelets: Then I say this: in that light, I think the allegations of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm in his remarks are not justified. I can assure him right here that we do all we can to avoid any discrimination, because we realize that we are at the service, not only of the public, but also of all hon. members on both sides of the house who are entitled to services like the ones a department like this one can provide.

The reason it looks as though I have a little more elaborate staff than usual in Montreal is that in view of my responsibilities as minister responsible for the world fair and for the public works department, I found out that I could not attend to my duties here in the house as I should, because I understand that the main concern of a member or a minister must be the House of Commons and, like all previous ministers, I opened an office in my home town. Since there was no public federal building in my constituency, I was offered an office completely separate from the Department of Public Works on Delorimier street, in Montreal. In that office, there are three permanent employees: a retired civil servant age 69, a young man of 22, and a girl working full time. For the last two months, there has been a part-time stenographer who will quit at the end of the month.

I want to give my hon. friend for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm the assurance that as far as decisions are concerned with regard to public works projects, only the need and the urgency of that need are taken into consideration to determine the time and place of such projects.

The hon. member mentioned a promise the Prime Minister made in Riviere du Loup, namely the development of a deep-water seaport. May I remind the hon. member that it was not a promise but a commitment and like all commitments made by this government and the Prime Minister, it will be kept.

A few days ago I sent to the hon. member for Riviere du Loup (Mr. Gendron) a letter which is perfectly clear on this matter. I wrote that we have decided to proceed with the development of a seaport at Riviere du Loup as soon as the best site is determined by our engineers, and that this important project will mean serious economic improvements for the whole area.

The hon. member has also mentioned the fact that we had, or that I had, through my behaviour, caused undue delays to the directors of the world exhibition. May I be allowed to point this out to the hon. member: while the previous prime minister was campaigning in western Canada last March, he sent to the directors of the world exhibition a telegram in which he stated he approved, in principle, the site that had been chosen by the city of Montreal, on two conditions.

In May 1963, we confirmed in principle the choice of the site, but we said at that time: "We shall give our consent only when the engineers have determined whether that site is appropriate and under what conditions."

I do not remember the exact date, but I clearly recall that we received—I think it was on a Wednesday or a Thursday—the reports from the experts of the Lasalle laboratory in Montreal, to the effect that the site was appropriate provided a breakwater were built above Champlain bridge. Within the next two or three days, we gave our approval, and our engineers then advised the government to proceed with a stationary structure instead of a mobile one, as had been recommended by the engineers of the city of Montreal.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has raised other points. I will take the opportunity to deal with them at the same time as those raised by other members.

The hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) alleged that there was patronage in the organization of the Montreal world exhibition. I will not take the trouble even to deny that baseless statement.

But I am glad that he raised the point because it gives me an opportunity to say this: The Canadian World Exhibition Corporation has the status of a crown corporation and, from the outset, whether it be to the former commissioner or the present, I said that what we expected from them was an exhibition worthy not only of the city of Montreal, but of Canada. Moreover, I clearly stated that they should discharge that responsibility and, for that purpose, they could count on us to give them complete freedom in their administration.

If my hon. friend had followed the appointments which have been made up until now in connection with the world fair, he would know that with the exception of the positions which are to be filled by the governor in council the officials of the fair have chosen their own staff and assumed the responsibilities we entrusted to them.

The hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) also mentioned the east-west trans-Canada highway in Montreal. That is a large scale project in which members on this side and I have been interested for a number of years. The question raised by the hon. member gives me an opportunity to say that we claim our fair share of this initiative. It will provide Montreal with a super-highway which will be second to none in North America.

I must point out to the hon. member that we entered into this agreement about four months after coming into power.

I should now like to say a few words about the remarks made by the hon. members for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe), for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) and for Macleod (Mr. Kindt). They referred to the Alaska highway for which my department will be responsible as of April 1 next.

It is understood that we shall be careful to see that the transfer of responsibilities from the Department of National Defence to the Department of Public Works will not cause any inconvenience to those who live or work in that area.

Those hon. members also mentioned a trans-Canada highway system.

[Text]

I do not know if they had in mind the construction of a second trans-Canada highway or a new highway program, but may I say their suggestion so far as the trans-Canada highway is concerned will be taken into consideration and, as they know, we are reviewing the position of the federal and provincial governments in respect to this matter. Discussions at the official levels have taken place, and we already have the intentions and wishes of every province in this regard.

Hon. members will recall that this matter was discussed at the last federal-provincial conference. It is still on the agenda and will be discussed again when the conference resumes in March next.

There was a reference by the hon. member for Cariboo to the entrance fee for national parks. Of course this is a matter which falls under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Mr. Barnett: Would the minister permit a question at this point. The matter was raised by the hon. member for Cariboo and myself, to the effect that this jurisdiction of the national parks administration over certain sections of the trans-Canada highway has created a toll charge on the use of certain sections of the highway. Will the minister interest himself in taking this matter up with the parks administration and see whether something could be worked out which would make it possible for people who desire to use the highway, and not the national parks, to travel along it without paying this charge?

I might point out that in the province from which I come this question of tolls on the trans-Canada highway has been the subject of some considerable discussion, and for a number of years was a matter of controversy between the federal and the provincial government in cases where the provincial government had some toll arrangements to which the federal government objected.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I understand that a fee is always an inconvenience to those who have to pay it, but the question raised by the hon. member will be discussed by the minister of northern affairs and myself, and later on I will let him know the result of that discussion.

[Translation]

Now, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni complained that I had dealt very briefly with the part, as I see it, which the Minister of Public Works is called upon to play in the economy of the country. He stated that this department should be an economic instrument to promote the economic development of Canada. Well, I will tell him that I agree with his views and that the only reason I did not raise this very important point is due to the fact that the estimates submitted to the hon. members' attention today are those of the previous administration and I thought that it would be wise to wait until I introduce my own estimates in a few months.

However, I want to mention right away that the Department of Public Works has a major role to play in the economic field and that the time is past where the department was only good to build post offices or other public buildings. Above all, the department must be one of projects, of construction work.

I have already visited several projects in the provinces and especially in the Atlantic region. At the next opportunity, I shall make it my duty to visit the other western provinces. I am now convinced that many distressed areas I have visited, that lack primary or secondary industries, are areas where the Department of Public Works, by means of some important works or projects, can create just those favourable economic conditions which would promote the development of private enterprise.

I am thinking now of harbour and navigation and communication facilities. I feel that large scale redevelopment operations should be carried out in some areas, including the means of communication which have been non-existent until now. That is why private enterprise has not been interested in settling in the districts concerned.

That is one aspect of my department's estimates and I thank the hon. member for having brought it up. However, I intend to say more in that connection when I introduce my estimates in a few months time.

Mr. Chairman, several members have spoken of the trans-Canada highway.

[Text]

I think I should mention here that four provinces have already completed their highways program, namely Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Prince Edward Island. British Columbia has nearly completed its program. As hon. members will recall, we have given to the Atlantic provinces a special program where it will be possible for them to complete their highways under the act with an increased share on the part of the federal government from 50 per cent to 90 per cent. Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the hon. member for St. John's West for his remarks. We have taken careful note of his suggestions for many projects interesting his riding.

[Translation]

For the information of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Hahn), I can say that we shall bring special attention to the improvement of architecture in public buildings. I have had several discussions with the chief architect of the department about that, and the hon. member can be sure that everything possible will be done to improve the building standards.

The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) dealt with the national capital commission. Following the speech he made, we announced various important projects concerning the capital.

As for the comments made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard)—

[Text]

May I say to the hon. member for Skeena that I appreciated and enjoyed the comprehensive survey he gave of his constituency and of its many needs. I will not attempt to deal with them individually but the hon. member can be assured that careful consideration will be given to the suggestions he has made.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I come now to the remarks made by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard). May I tell him that nothing is changed in the system of calling tenders.

The hon. member brought up the matter of the building of a penitentiary in St. Pie de Bagot, and I am informed that in the meantime an answer was given to him by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier). It is up to the Department of Justice to choose the site of a penitentiary.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the members who have spoken on my department's estimates and I do hope that the first item will be carried as quickly as possible.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) for what little information he gave me in reply to the questions I asked when he introduced his estimates.

In view of his answers, I feel I am justified in returning to the charge since the minister does not seem to have given me all the information I am entitled to.

First of all, as for the purchase of land by his department for the construction of a penitentiary in the parish of St. Pie de Bagot, I am convinced that my constituents wish to have much more information than the minister has given me.

Not taking into account the evasive replies I received from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier), I should like the Minister of Public Works to tell me what use will be made of the four farms which were bought for the construction of a penitentiary in the parish of St. Pie de Bagot.

Mr. Chairman, the officials of the departments of public works and of justice have spent a sum of $83,000 from the public funds to which you and I, and the workers and farmers of my constituency as well have contributed, and I believe that the evasive answers given to me do not warrant the expense.

So, I insist with the Minister of Public Works, because first I believe him to be less arrogant than his colleague, the Minister of Justice, and also because I am of the opinion that he will better understand the kind of information I am seeking. I just want to know what future use is contemplated for the four farms which were bought in St. Pie de Bagot.

Why, Mr. Chairman, have they put a stop to a project which was to bring to my constituency the construction of an institution at a cost of $4,500,000, which would have given work—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Ricard: Do you have something to say, my hon. friend? You will have the opportunity when I am finished, if you will listen.

I wonder why the project has been discarded after so much work has been done?

When the estimates of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) are under consideration, I will have to rise again to ask the minister a justification, for it seems to me bad economics to spend $83,000 and then to abandon the project.

I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) another question. Do inspectors on retaining wall construction projects have to be on the site 10 hours, eight hours or during the normal working hours of the workers? The minister has not replied to that question either. Yet, I feel that he should explain the conduct of workers who are paid out of the public funds which are entrusted to his department.

Referring to page 340 of the estimates, I should also like the minister to tell us why his department's 1963-64 estimates were reduced by $1,799,000 as compared with those of 1962-63?

In my opinion, that is a matter of some importance for the taxpayers. I feel they are entitled to some information concerning the way the government spends the money they pay in taxes either weekly or yearly. I would be happy if the Minister of Public Works would furnish this information, which might at the same time be useful to his colleagues sitting on his side of the house, since, no doubt for reasons of discipline or constraint, even though they do not know what is happening in their own constituencies, some members do not dare ask questions in the house.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I would like my hon. friend to give me some additional information concerning the third point he raised. I understand he wishes explanations on a reduction of estimates between the years 1962-63 and 1963-64. If this is what my hon. friend meant, I should point out to him that those estimates were made up by the former administration. But, before answering him, I would like to have more information, for I cannot answer that question now; perhaps I have misunderstood—it is about the amount of $1,799,000?

Mr. Ricard: I refer to the estimates on page 340 of the blue book. I ask the minister to give us explanations concerning the reduction of $1,799,000 between the estimates for 1962-63 and those for 1963-64.

I suppose that since the time he assumed his portfolio, the minister must have been informed of the projects to be carried out in the province of Quebec. Therefore, he should explain this cut in the expenditures. Why is the province of Quebec deprived of nearly $2 million worth of public works?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I shall give the hon. member the information he seeks in a minute but I should like to point out, first of all, that our predecessors were in power during those two fiscal years—

Mr. Ricard: The 1963-64 fiscal year is your baby.

Mr. Deschatelets: These are the estimates of the former government. Be that as it may, I shall give the hon. member a reply as soon as I have the information.

Now, I do not wish to go any further as far as penitentiaries are concerned. We are the building agents for the Department of Justice, and I think that during the session, answers were given to various questions by the Minister of Justice on that matter.

As regards inspectors, I must say that as a general rule, they should remain on work sites permanently. In a case where an inspector lives near that site, he would of course be allowed to go home at meal time.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I was quite impressed by the policy statement made by the Minister of Public Works concerning representation in parliament. He had fine words for us and in fact, I must admit that in the federal cabinet, he is one of the most courteous ministers to all hon. members. I do not agree with all his political opinions nor with his views concerning his departmental expenditures, but I must recognize that he is very human and easy to meet. He even anticipates and calls us to give information before we ask for it.

On that score, I sincerely congratulate him. But I bring to his attention the case of some officials of his who seem eager to play patronage in the administration of the public works department.

In my riding, for instance, I see departmental officials transact business with the former Liberal candidate, Stephen Cuddihy, or the general organizer for Val d'Or, notary Jos. Morin. Whenever there are public works to be done or transactions to be made for the building of post offices, we see right away the names of Mr. Cuddihy, of Rouyn, or of notary Morin, of Val d'Or. I wonder why officials of the Department of Public Works, when they write to those people, do not send a copy of their letter to the rightfully elected members in their respective riding. Why do they not send us a copy of those letters so that we may know at least what the Department of Public Works is doing in our ridings?

For instance, in Cadillac, near Rouyn, there was an agreement for the construction of a post office. The land selected will cost $2,000 to the government. Since the town of Cadillac could be termed a ghost town, because the various mines have been closed for several years, it is easy to find lots at lower prices and even a street corner, since a street corner was sought there.

The same thing happened in Duparquet—I just received a letter from Duparquet yesterday—where a post office will be built under the winter works program. Apparently, the people do not really need the proposed post office; they would need rather something else, such as a parish hall, a community centre, but they are quite satisfied with their present post office.

It seems to me that the officials, and the inspectors of the Department of Public Works should go there and ask the opinion of the Duparquet citizens and not that of the Liberal organizer to know how the available funds should be spent in the best interests of the people and the town.

A few days ago, I also asked the Minister of Public Works whether it would be possible to build a wharf at lake Boischatel. I was promised at that time that inspectors would go and investigate on the spot. So far, they have not been there.

There is another point I would like to speak about, while on the subject of Villeneuve county. I have in mind the town of Noranda. We have a level crossing, and I understand that this is a matter which concerns not only the Department of Public Works but also the Department of Transport, which has something to do in that field of construction; as I was saying, we have a level crossing with four railway tracks. These tracks paralyse traffic every day, for ten or twenty minutes, when it is not for a full half hour.

It would seem imperative to build an overpass in Noranda. Let the Department of Public Works confer with the Department of Transport or with the Canadian National Railways but, by all means, let us find a solution to that problem. We have been asking for an overpass in Noranda for the last ten years.

The other project I think the minister could consider and probably carry through, still under the winter works program, is this one. Between the two cities of Rouyn and Noranda, we have an exquisite little lake called lake Osisko. The waters of that lake have been poisoned by the acids dumped there by the Noranda mine and other mines in the surrounding area.

Now, for the past few years, they have stopped dumping those poisonous acids in the lake. The thing to do would be to clean it, which would give a brand new look to the cities of Rouyn and Noranda. In my opinion, instead of having our unemployed cut small twigs in wintertime along the trans-Canada highway, it would be better to start purifying that lake.

The Minister of Public Works claimed a while ago that his department was not, necessarily, a department of public works only but that it should also deal with projects and buildings, and I agree completely with him on that. The Department of Public Works will spend $178,906,000 this year. It is a very important department.

When you look under the heading "Public buildings—construction and maintenance—the breakdown of expenditures by province—you will find that one of his colleagues, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) was not too greedy: $130,000 for the province of Newfoundland. Nova Scotia, $700,000; New Brunswick, $200,000; Quebec, $2,105,000 compared to $3,940,000 for the year 1962-63. In a short while we will probably be given the reasons for this decrease of $1,799,000 in the case of the province of Quebec.

The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) asked a while ago the reason for that state of affairs and the Minister of Public Works told him that those were the estimates prepared by the Conservative government. I am inclined to believe that is true; we are studying the Conservative government's estimates at the present time.

We want to know the reasons for that decrease and whether it is possible to offset it by increasing the amount of construction in order to keep for the province of Quebec the million dollars which would be of great assistance. I think that the province of Quebec really deserves it.

As regards the Ottawa district or rather the city of Ottawa, $14 million are appropriated in order to carry out the federal program. The province of Ontario, excluding Ottawa, gets $5,280,000; including Ottawa, the amount comes to $19,685,000 for the province of Ontario. The province of Manitoba receives $75,000. The province of Saskatchewan, $190,000. The province of Alberta, $1,410,000 and British Columbia, $1,615,000. The Yukon and the Northwest Territories get $3 million.

Now the Minister of Public Works spoke about the attention the department, its officials and its architects devote to the architecture and appearance of public buildings.

Some years ago, the government ordered an extension of the post office in the city of Rouyn. At that time, we had a Conservative government. Now, when that annex was constructed to the post office of the city of Rouyn, the whole population wondered whether it was not a hen house, and this, because the appearance is terrible and entirely void of good taste.

I do not know who was the architect that made the plans for this extension to the post office of the city of Rouyn, but it is an eyesore, and located right in the center of the town. I would suggest to the minister to send his architects to Rouyn to give a better appearance to the post office, for that building, after all, shelters the post office of the metropolis of northwest Quebec, since Rouyn is the most important town in that area.

Mr. Chairman, I therefore submit those suggestions to the attention of the Minister of Public Works, as regards that part of the province of the county which is called the Villeneuve constituency.

The minister mentioned also the site of the world fair. The site has been chosen. The work is already progressing rapidly. The Minister of Public Works is not the only one responsible for the choice of this site, in Montreal.

I believe that the first steps for holding of the world fair in Montreal were made by His Honour Mayor Drapeau of Montreal who convinced every country in the world to hold the world fair in Montreal.

Mr. Pigeon: May I put a question to the hon. member for Villeneuve?

Mr. Caouette: By all means.

Mr. Pigeon: Does the hon. member not think that if the world fair is held in Canada and in Montreal in particular, it is also thanks to the former government?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Caouette: I wish to thank the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm for his question. He is so self-centred that no one can hold it against him. True, the Conservative party was in power when the question came up for the first time but it was not settled at that time. Even if the Conservatives were in power, it is the mayor of Montreal who took the initiative.

Mr. Valade: That is not so.

Mr. Caouette: The mayor of Montreal had set his heart upon holding the world fair in his city.

Mr. Valade: That is not so.

Mr. Caouette: The world fair will be very beneficial to the Montreal area, indeed to the whole province, and even to all parts of the country. Expressways will be built, as well as residential and commercial projects in the Montreal suburbs, and will extend as far as Quebec city. This will surely promote a great deal of economic activity in our province.

In that connection, I commend the former government and I also congratulate the Minister of Public Works and the present government for the stand they both took in order to help the mayor of Montreal and the province of Quebec in obtaining that the world fair be held in Montreal. I am sure that all hon. members and all the Canadian people will go to Montreal on that occasion because there will be several million visitors in Montreal during that year of the world fair.

So, Mr. Chairman, we are prepared to accept most of the estimates although we will have certain questions to ask.

In closing, I point out once again to the Minister of Public Works the matters I mentioned concerning my constituency. I hope that his officials will send us a copy of their letter when they write to someone in our riding. It seems to me that would be elementary courtesy. We have nothing against the officials but we wish to be consulted or, at least, be made aware of what is going on or what the government decides to do in our riding.

[Text]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, these are very important and interesting estimates, for one reason because the buildings and works of the Department of Public Works are one of the few physical manifestations of a federal government in most constituencies, and people take particular interest on that account. I am particularly interested in this department because I have had a close association with the officials of the department in British Columbia for over 50 years. I have had some experience in this field. As a matter of fact, some of the happiest days of my life have been spent around wharves, floats, dredges and things of that sort and that is why I am inclined on occasion to dredge things up. Anyway, I congratulate the minister on his appointment and I must say I appreciate his courtesy and promptness in dealing with any matters I have brought to his attention. I wish him well in all he undertakes in connection with the department.

I listened with interest this evening to his review and we shall look forward particularly to the introduction of his estimates next session because I am confident he is giving serious consideration to them on a planned basis. I think he has been influenced by this side of the house a bit in that respect. Throughout the years visits of federal ministers to the Kootenays have been somewhat rare. I do not know whether it is because we are off the beaten track to some extent, but we will not be when we get a second trans-Canada highway going through Lethbridge, Trail, Hope—

Mr. Baldwin: And the Kettle valley railway.

Mr. Herridge: —and parallel with the Kettle valley railway. I extend to the Minister of Public Works on behalf of the people of Kootenay West a hearty invitation to visit the garden of Eden and to meet with the representatives of the municipalities and other organizations. If he will only let us know when he is coming I can assure him he will be taken about the constituency, he will see all he wants to see and he will see first hand what is required from the federal Department of Public Works in Kootenay West.

I also want to express my sincere congratulations to his parliamentary secretary whom I have found most attentive and obliging in dealing with any matters I have brought to his attention. There have been occasions when I have wondered what the parliamentary assistants—pardon me, the proper term now is parliamentary secretary—were for. There have been occasions when I have wondered why they existed. However, I find that the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Public Works fully justifies his existence and I have heard other members express the same opinion.

At this point I am duty bound to mention the retirement of Major General Young, C.B., C.B.E., D.S.O., C.D., bachelor of science in engineering, who has rendered distinguished service to this country in two world wars and afterwards for his command of operation "Return of Troops" and the transportation of war brides. Thousands of war brides owe him a debt of gratitude for his handling of their transportation to Canada after the war under most difficult circumstances. I could tell a most interesting story about this operation but I do not have the time this evening.

General Young was responsible, with his associates, for the reorganization of the department and its improved efficiency. From then on the work that the department was required to do was done with more efficiency than the organization had had up until that time, and I am sure all members of the house wish him a lengthy and happy retirement coupled with the opportunity to serve Canada in the many organizations of which he is a distinguished member. I am glad to know that his service in peace and war has been recognized in the naming of a government survey vessel after him. I like to see that sort of thing. I like to see the services of people who have served this country well recognized in that way. If we cannot have other decorations let us name government equipment or geographical features after people. I can think of some good places to name after the Minister of Justice. There is a particular valley in our district whose features would be most appropriate.

I must extend my sincere congratulations to Colonel Lalonde on his appointment as deputy minister. I trust he will be as successful in supervising the treatment of disabilities of wharves, the clogged arteries of rivers and the repairs to the plumbing in public buildings as he was in supervising similar remedial measures in the Department of Veterans Affairs.

I wish to bring a few matters to the attention of the minister. I had intended to deal at greater length with some of these questions. I have always been interested in the department. I have seen it evolve from a very small department in British Columbia, particularly in the interior, to its present state of efficiency. I want to make a few suggestions and I should like to hear the minister's comments later.

First I should like to make a few comments on organization before I pinpoint the particular needs of Kootenay West. I thought that the royal commission on government organization made a few excellent recommendations, and I agree with them as a result of my own experience. I am going to deal with three or four of them particularly with respect to the purchase of property, the inventory required to know what property we have in Canada, and the management of property.

The first one was that consideration be given to consolidating, in a single statute, land legislation having general application to the acquisition by purchase or lease, and the disposal or leasing to others, of real property in Canada and abroad by all departments and agencies of the crown. I think that recommendation merits further consideration because I have noticed a growing need for this approach as the years go by.

The second recommendation was that the Department of Public Works be made responsible for the development of a complete inventory of properties owned or leased by the federal government and its agencies, and its maintenance as a perpetual record by posting to it all future acquisitions and disposals as they occur. I think that is an excellent suggestion so that we will know in total what our assets in public property are and what disposals have occurred throughout the year. There is some tightening up needed. I am speaking from local experiences on a very small scale but they do indicate the need for consideration of this recommendation.

The third was that the Department of Public Works, in its organization for real property management, assign staff to be responsible for land use aspects of federal property ownership and to consult and cooperate with other levels of government and their agencies for the future development of urban, rural and regional areas. There has been a big improvement in the last ten years with respect to property management in the property management division. You do not go into a public building nowadays as you might have ten or 12 years ago and find that nobody knows who is in charge. At that time you would find the janitor fighting with the postmaster as to who was in charge of the building and problems of that sort. There is a greatly improved state of affairs there.

An hon. Member: Perhaps it should be the janitor.

Mr. Herridge: Yes, that is quite correct, and rightly so. When a man is managing a building he should be in charge. But I have seen quite a contest between the district architect, the janitor and the postmaster as to who was in charge of a federal public building. These things are being cleared up.

There is a very interesting recommendation with respect to the need for decentralization and field organization. There has been a lot done in that direction but I think there could be more done. This is what the report has to say:

> The extent to which future activities of the Department of Public Works should be decentralized cannot be categorically stated at this time. While in general there are obvious advantages in transferring to the field certain operational functions and thereby improving the efficiency with which the needs of client departments and agencies in the field may be met, the extent to which the user departments themselves delegate authority to the field has a direct bearing upon what may be appropriate. Based on experience elsewhere, your commissioners believe that a fairly substantial delegation of authority to responsible offices, each with such satellites as may be required, will probably prove most satisfactory.

I mention that because throughout the years I have been informed there have been occasions when the district office or local people had to refer to Ottawa with respect to calling for tenders for piling, tenders for lumber or tenders for wharf floats or something of that sort and there has been unnecessary delay. If the people on the ground are competent they know better than anyone else which is the best purchase to make and which is the best value. There have been delays to such an extent that on one or two occasions the building of wharves was delayed until the next season because of rising water, and so on. I trust as a result of the recommendations of the commission on government organization, and the experience of the department, the minister will realize the need for a continuation of the district office in the Kootenays. There has been some suggestion that because steamer service has disappeared from the rivers, there is no necessity for a local office. I want to bring to the minister's attention the fact that we have a different type of traffic now. We have a large number of tugs towing timber. We have a great increase in pleasure craft. There is a need for a continuation of an office because of the requirement for the building and maintenance of wharves, the dredging of rivers, the placing of piles and everything that is necessary to carry on navigation successfully. I urge that consideration be given to the retention of the office in Nelson to serve the Okanagan and Kootenay areas.

I have one other suggestion that has to do with public relations. The report says:

> The reticence of many departments in publicizing their activities through the press inhibits the development of groups of specialists for this purpose. The Department of Public Works construction programs are frequently of intense local interest across Canada, but it had no organized information service until 1954—

I believe that is about the time Mr. Winters took over and General Young became deputy minister.

> —and the unit then inaugurated has been kept to a modest size. In the Department of Defence Production, which is a comparable source of frequent but low-keyed news, press releases and other necessary information services are under the direct supervision of the deputy minister.
> When relations with the news services are retained in the deputy minister, it is generally good practice to designate the responsible member of his staff by name, even if the duties are too light to justify a full time appointment. This is a convenience to the press and a safeguard against uncertainties and confusion within the department. For such an appointment, some knowledge of information techniques is desirable but not imperative; of greater importance is an intimate knowledge of policies and operations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in that connection I do urge the necessity for the improvement of the public relations of the department, not necessarily for the advantage of the department, however I believe that when interesting works are being built or interesting developments are taking place there should be an official press release from the department concerned, so that everybody knows exactly what is happening. You would be amazed how interested the people in these districts are in public works projects.

I urge the necessity for senior officials, when visiting the districts in connection with projects of importance, communicating with local organizations as well. They will get sound advice from local organizations. I found, on a number of occasions throughout the years, quite serious blunders had been made and then later, because of contact with local organizations, quite serious blunders have been avoided. I should like to give one or two illustrations of this point. I understand that the department and the district architect have been giving consideration to some alterations to the Gray building in Nelson, which is a federal public building in which the post office and other departments are housed. The sea cadets have been using the basement, and found it very useful indeed. Then, they heard that civil defence was going to take over. They were going to put in some windows, some ventilation and make some other changes. They heard other organizations were going to use this basement. Now, in order to avoid all this concern on the part of the navy league, the sea cadets, the city council and others who, like most organizations in Kootenay West, get in touch with their member to try to find out what is going on, there should have been some information given by the architect when he was visiting the district. He could have called three or four people together and said, "We are going to redesign the basement, but you need not be worried. As soon as it is done you will all be fitted in again." This procedure would have avoided a lot of concern.

Then, there is the question of sites for local post offices and other buildings. No one knows more about local conditions than the local people. I have had an illustration recently of a district architect choosing a site on a side-street in a small village. He may have had very good reasons for doing so, but there have been complaints about it. The parliamentary secretary is having the matter looked into, and he very kindly wrote to me to tell me the district architect was going to visit this small village, meet the local business people, and so on. I think it would be a good idea to do that before any final decision is made, and then the decision will be satisfactory all around.

I recall when the question of wharves came up on one occasion, and some $4,000 was being appropriated to dismantle a certain wharf. I know all these wharves and their condition. This was a sound wharf, good for another 20 years. It had good piling and good decking, and $4,000 was to be spent to destroy it. The local people in the district said they did not need it for the stern wheelers, but that about a hundred pleasure craft came up from Portland and other points north during the summer. This is the best 300-mile inland water trip in America. Some of these pleasure craft would stop at this wharf, which was going to be destroyed. The people got in touch with me and I said to the minister, why not spend that $4,000 in repairing the wharf? This was done, and so we have a sound and useful wharf which will last another 20 years.

This type of situation does not happen when the local organizations are consulted. This usually happens when someone comes from outside who does not know the people, is not used to dropping in and visiting the local storekeepers, and so on. These little courtesies make for co-operation.

In so far as dredging is concerned, if you want to know what dredging is required on the Columbia river, the Arrow lakes or the other waterways, the officials should keep in touch with the captains of the vessels that are operating on the lakes. They know where the shoals occur, and where the levels change with high and low water. The department should seek their advice and would quite often be able to avoid unnecessary checking. However, I have very little criticism in this respect. Years ago, and up to recent years, the men who visited the area would make a trip on a tug for a hundred miles or so, just to see how the channels were. I do suggest that this type of co-operation does not cost much, but it does add to the efficiency of the department and the appreciation of the work it is doing.

There is one other question I should like to mention. In the interior of British Columbia, and I suppose the same condition exists in a good many places, the department depends on a large percentage of so-called casual employees. In a good number of cases, these casual employees have worked for the department for 20 or 25 years, especially in dredging or on the docks. They are laid off when the water starts to rise and they are re-employed when the water goes down and dredging can begin. Throughout the years there has been some extra work found for some of them in the maintenance of wharves, and so on.

I know that in one case the question of this labour was raised and they built a wharf for some $4,000 less than the estimated cost by contract. I suggest that consideration be given to keeping these very competent men employed as long as possible each year. You cannot replace them nowadays. They are used to running pile drivers, handling equipment for the building of wharves, running dredges and things of that sort. They are particularly skilled, in so far as that district is concerned, because of their knowledge of the channels in the waterways and so on. I suggest that every effort be made to continue their employment as long as possible by planning the work so that when dredging is over they can be employed on wharf construction or wharf maintenance.

I should like now to say a word or two about architecture. I am interested in all types of architecture, mobile and immobile, Mr. Chairman. I recognize the need for functional construction. The first consideration has to be functional design in the erection of a building. I suggest that the time has come when some consideration should be given to developing types of architecture appropriate to the region in which the buildings are to be erected. A building that is appropriate on the prairies is not necessarily appropriate in the mountainous areas of B.C. One of these flat California-type buildings on the prairies fits into the landscape, with its horizontal lines, but it looks completely out of place if it is backed against two very steep mountain sides. I am not going to say very much about that, but I am very interested in architecture and I think more consideration should be given to designs appropriate to the regions in which buildings are to be erected.

Some mention was made of the role of the department and that it should be, as it were, an economic buffer in our society. Road work has been an economic buffer ever since Canada was established. In the early days people used to pay their taxes with road work, and later they got cash for it. I remember in the early days of this century you would not get work on the roads if you did not belong to the Conservative association. Then when the Liberals got in, you had to belong to the Liberal association to get work. That has all disappeared now. There is no patronage in my district. I have not seen any of that sort of thing for many years. There is great scope for the department to act as an economic buffer, particularly to provide winter employment on heavy rock work and bridge construction when the work is undertaken as a result of long term planning; but I warn that it is not possible to do this planning successfully on a year to year basis.

I cannot help saying a word or two about the trans-Canada highway. I know some of my colleagues do not agree with me in this connection, and we have different views as to where the second highway should be. However, I am going to suggest that every consideration be given to the development of the southern provincial highway as the second trans-Canada highway in British Columbia, because it goes through the most populated area of British Columbia and where the greatest proportion of the wealth of the province is produced.

Now, I come to a few local things in my constituency. I am only mentioning a few because I am expecting to see the minister out there soon and we will give him a good time, like we do with everybody, who visits us, and show him around.

Mr. Grafftey: If we all did this we would be here for years and years.

Mr. Herridge: Pardon?

Mr. Grafftey: If we all did this, touched on local topics, we would go on for years.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, surely the hon. gentleman does not deny the hon. member for Kootenay West the right to place representations before the minister that he has promised his constituents he would place before him. I just make a few suggestions. I think consideration should be given to the deeper dredging and the widening of the channel going into the wharf at Arrowhead at the head of the Arrow lakes, and also going into the Columbia river. We had a number of pleasure craft from Portland there last year and some got stuck on the shoals. Some dredging is necessary at the mouth of the river also, and some improvement in the navigation markers and so on.

I hope the improvements to the Gray building in Nelson will soon be undertaken so that civil defence members, the sea cadets and others can carry on as usual. Some further dredging and rip-rap are required at the narrows between the upper and lower lakes on the Columbia river, and I hope the minister will give favourable consideration to providing a launching ramp at Trout lake. There are only a few permanent residents there, but it has a big summer population and its principal income is from the tourist business. Whenever it is considered necessary to replace a wharf or remove a wharf the local people should be consulted, because very often these wharves, by cutting them in half, can be converted into launching ramps suitable for small pleasure craft.

I also want to bring the minister's attention to the fact that there is a necessity for a new storm boom around the launching ramp at a place called Boswell, and once again I emphasize the necessity for consultation with local organizations and local people who know their communities' requirements and have a knowledge of local circumstances and river conditions.

In view of the threatened Columbia river development, I wish to ask the minister, has any survey been made of the wharves that would be flooded, and have estimates been made of the cost of rebuilding these facilities between Castlegar and Revelstoke? I am sure the cost would run into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Another matter is the question of snow removal. Many wharves are on a 10 per cent grade, and if they are not sanded in winter they can be quite dangerous. There have been cases of difference of opinion as to whether a certain wharf was the responsibility of the federal government or the provincial government. I bring that to the minister's attention because it can be very serious when you have 20 or 30 cars going over an icy dock. I ask that the responsibility for snow removal be determined for every dock, before the winter season commences.

Mr. Chairman, I find a little restlessness on my right. I seldom rise in this house—

An hon. Member: The understatement of the year.

Mr. Herridge: —but now my concluding inquiry is this—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: I appreciate the applause I am getting from all sides. There have been some recent press references with respect to the restoration of lovers' lane to its former beauty and usefulness. In view of the unusual interest in Ottawa in this project, I would appreciate the minister informing the house of his department's plans in this respect. This restoration has been contemplated for many years and I have had a number of phone calls about it recently. I do hope the minister tell us what his plans are for lovers' lane.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure to follow the hon. member for Kootenay West and because I want to save the time of the committee I simply say I ratify and confirm his preliminary remarks with regard to the minister and his staff, save with respect to such part of the statement he made having reference to the constituency of Kootenay West, because after listening to the hon. member for six years I have come to the conclusion that short of Heaven no land could be as fair, nor no people as amiable as those who inhabit the constituency of Kootenay West.

Now, I will come directly to one specific issue, and I have already advised the minister of the matter with which I intend to deal. It is the situation apropos of the construction on the Peace river, in the vicinity of Hudson Hope, of a very large hydroelectric project involving the damming of the river and the ultimate setting up of a reservoir which will extend back over the channel of the Peace and up the Rocky mountain trench for several hundred miles.

As I assess the situation by an examination of the facts and the pertinent legislation, I can only say it would appear that the province of British Columbia is proceeding with this project in complete breach and in defiance of the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act, and that this government is indulging in a studied ignorance of this particular breach of the law. From time to time I have put several questions on the order paper, and up until several weeks ago the minister, in response to a question I put to him, said that no application for approval of this particular project had been received by him as the minister charged with responsibility under this particular act.

A short time after that, so that there should be no doubt about the matter, I asked the Minister of Justice whether in the opinion of the officials of his department this particular project was one which was covered by the provisions of this legislation. The minister replied to me on October 14 that the advice he had received was to the effect that the works in question were included in the class of works to which the Navigable Waters Protection Act applies. This simply confirms the research I made, the cases I studied and my understanding of what is concerned in this particular project. I make it quite plain, Mr. Chairman, that so far as I am concerned and the people in my country, we have no objection to this project and we have always given due credit to the government of British Columbia for proceeding with it. We feel it will serve a great need now and in the future to satisfy the hunger for electricity which will, I think, be greatly intensified in the southern parts of British Columbia and in the Pacific northwest. But there is a statute, and the thousands of people who live below where the project is planned along the Peace river are entitled, if there is a law and it is a good law, to ask that it be observed by the government of British Columbia, and that the federal government make certain that there is due observance of the statute. The statute is very simple. Section 4 of the act says:

> No work shall be built or placed in, upon, over, under, through or across any navigable water unless the site and plans thereof have been approved by the minister; and the work is built, placed and maintained in accordance with the plans and the regulations.

Then the act goes on to provide that a publication shall be made in the Canada Gazette and in two newspapers circulated in the district. I ask the minister now whether since I last spoke to him or directed any questions to him there has been an application for approval filed on behalf of the province of British Columbia, even though it is long overdue and there has been this breach of the legislation in the interval. I will be glad to resume my seat in the belief that this matter will be dealt with in due course, if such an application has been received. If one has not been received, I would like to proceed with the matter. Can the minister say whether any such application has been received?

Mr. Deschatelets: No application has been received, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Baldwin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I put this to the minister and to the members of this committee. This project, as I understand it, will involve the filling of this reservoir, which may take a period of 8, 10, or 12, or possibly even 14 years, depending on the run-off and the amount of water available. During that period the province of British Columbia, or the authority which is acting on behalf of the province, will have complete control—without having filed any plans, as it should have filed plans, as to what is proposed by its engineering plans with regard to this program—will be diverting water and will be interfering with the navigability of the Peace river. This river has been navigated from the time of Alexander Mackenzie, who in 1799 was the first white man to reach the Pacific coast from overland. The first trip I made on the Peace river in 1929 was on a boat which accommodated several hundred people. I have no doubt—at least I would so hope—that the engineering plans of the province of British Columbia are proper and suitable plans and will take into consideration the requirements of the people who live downstream.

I might only say here, sir, that I am informed that some time ago a departmental committee was established of different departments of this government—or it might have been of the previous government—to examine the extent to which this interference and diversion of the waters of the Peace might affect the navigation in the Mackenzie river area. The Peace flows into Slave river, thence into Great Slave lake, from which the Mackenzie emerges and flows to the Arctic. I do not know whether this committee has completed its deliberations and I do not know what results have been produced. But we have heard in the last few weeks, apart altogether from the question of navigation, the potentially serious situation which might develop in Canada as it has developed in the United States with regard to this question of the use of waters and large rivers.

I think it quite wrong, quite improper, that under these conditions the government of British Columbia has not seen fit to file its plans. There is an obvious recognition that this is a river in respect of which application should be filed, because I have here under the date January 26, 1963, an extract from the Canada Gazette which is a notice by the government of the province of British Columbia, through the minister of highways, that there has been deposited with the Minister of Public Works in Ottawa, under this cut, and filed in the office of the district registrar of the land registry district of Kamloops, a description of site and plan of a highway bridge proposed to be built across the Peace river near Hudson Hope. This, as I understand it, is a highway bridge to be used in conjunction with this project. I may be wrong in that, but that is my understanding.

Let me conclude, Mr. Chairman, by saying that I had occasion not so many years ago to be concerned in the case of a small farmer who had purchased land on the south shore of Lesser Slave lake and through whose land flowed a small stream which at certain seasons of the year was barely navigable. A fisherman who plied his trade in the Lesser Slave lake area wanted, on possibly three or four occasions in the year, to pass through this stream into the lake. The farmer had fenced this land and he was compelled, as a result of proceedings initiated by the Department of Public Works, to take down his fence. He was later assessed damages as a result of an action brought in the exchequer court. There is no doubt in the world that this type of work falls within the four corners of this legislation.

My submission is that if this is a good law—and I am satisfied it is a good law—it should apply to the rich as well as to the poor, to the strong as well as to the weak; and it would be my hope that before next spring comes around the government of the province of British Columbia will have purged its defiance of this legislation and will have filed its plans and will, I hope, proceed properly and to the satisfaction of the people of this country with this project—but under the law, and not above the law.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few very brief words about this difficult matter of selecting projects. We have heard tonight about a very large number of small projects, particularly projects in Kootenay West. We have heard about one very large project in northern British Columbia. There are projects all over the country of different characters, with different advantages and different costs, and this presents a very difficult problem of selection. In the United States and in some countries overseas this problem has been tackled on a reasonably sound basis. The type of analysis which has now begun to be reported extensively in the text books is generally described as benefit-cost analysis.

By and large this approach looks ahead over many years. It puts under one heading the benefits and on the other side of the ledger the costs. The benefits are assessed by the economists, who look ahead at the various requirements. They may be a single need or they may be several needs in the case of a multi-purpose project. These are evaluated in dollar terms. These are the incomes, the revenues, the benefits of the project in question. Then on the opposite side of the ledger are the costs. The costs are assessed essentially by the engineers but they may be reduced, for example, if there is a large pocket of unemployed in the area and the expenditure, for instance, by the federal government in respect of unemployment insurance is reduced.

There are, in other words, a variety of considerations to be taken into account with respect to cost. A project is basically economic if the benefits over many years, paid for in accordance with today's values, are greater than the costs. This does not mean that a project should always go ahead. Various alternatives should be studied and the project which has the highest ratio of benefits to costs is the one which deserves the highest priority. I confidently expect that with the passage of time more projects will be evaluated in this way in different parts of the country. Adoption of this method would mean that more objective and independent decisions will be made in deciding which are the most economic projects. It would mean that those with the greatest social as well as the greatest economic advantages would go ahead first. The most persuasive member might not manage to get as many buildings or other projects in his area, but the national interest would be better served if such an objective appraisal were made.

We have in the last few years made some progress along these lines in Canada. We now have a publication entitled "A guide to benefit cost analysis" whose production was one of the results of the resources for tomorrow conference. It is available to all government departments and it is now being used, I understand, in the Department of Public Works. It is certainly being used in various government departments in the provinces and I trust that in the future it will be used even more widely. I think there will be less controversy and less politics involved in establishing priorities and that, in the long run, it would lead to greater national advantage if this were the case. I certainly suggest to the minister that it be used more extensively than it is now in the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Fisher: I wonder if the hon. member would agree—I am sure he wants to be fair about this—that the booklet to which he referred arose out of the deliberations of some of those who were brought to Ottawa at the instance of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle when he was minister and that the proposal for liaison between provincial ministers was also one of the ideas brought forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. I thought the hon. member might care to comment on this in case one of his hon. friends later on might want to claim that this is a creation of the present government.

Mr. Davis: I will be glad to do so. Certainly, the resources for tomorrow conference was a product of the previous administration, perhaps one of its best accomplishments. I would say further, though, that a number of us from across the country participated, and as one of the authors of this book I advocate its extensive use throughout the country.

Mr. Crouse: It is not my wish to speak at great length and unduly delay the minister's estimates. However, this is the first opportunity I have had to publicly congratulate him upon his elevation to the cabinet, and I know that his years of experience in the house will enable him to carry out his duties in a fair and impartial manner so as to bring credit to him and his department.

I am sure all of us were pleased to learn that it is the intention of the hon. gentleman and of this government to continue the winter works program established by the Conservative government. It is said that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery and, certainly, the recent announcement that the government intends to proceed with the program to construct adequate post offices for rural areas will meet with general approval among Canadians. This program of post office construction began as a result of a federal-provincial conference held in Ottawa on July 14 and 15, 1958—a conference attended by nine provincial labour ministers, beside representatives of management, labour and various municipalities across Canada.

The winter works program is available to every municipality wishing to take advantage of it, and since it is a truly national cooperative effort I believe it is one which might very well be carried on every winter. In fact, it is gratifying to us on this side of the house to see the present government adopting a "me too" policy in so many fields. Not only is it continuing our winter works program, but it is carrying on with our program of providing aid for home construction through the central mortgage and housing corporation, it is continuing to use the devalued dollar, it is continuing to support the building of technical training schools so as to provide new skills for those who are unemployed; it has adopted our shipbuilding program and many other projects which were initiated in 1958 and 1959 when it became evident this country needed policies which would guide its great leap forward into the age of automation. These policies and programs were initiated by the then Conservative government.

Among the programs begun in 1958 was a scheme for the building of small post offices across Canada. I well remember, when I was first elected in 1957, visiting the post offices in New Ross, Lunenburg county, and Brooklyn in Queens county, and conditions in those offices were deplorable. It was evident to me at that time that the former Liberal administration had lost touch with the people, for little or no thought had been given to providing adequate buildings for this necessary public service. We realized of course, that something had to be done, and we initiated a crash program which saw 70 new post offices started across Canada in 1959. Not only did these offices lead to the provision of better facilities, but work on their construction contributed to easing the unemployment problem which plagued our government—a problem which still faces us today. We have at the present time well over a quarter of a million people unemployed in Canada and the government has yet to give us any indication of its plans to create full employment.

The recent announcement in Queens-Lunenburg that seven new post offices would be built is, of course, helpful. I am pleased to note that my request to the minister that every consideration be given to the needs of my constituents has fallen on such fruitful ground, as far as post offices are concerned. The minister is, of course, free to make these announcements in any manner that pleases him but I would have thought, in view of the friendly relations which exist between us, that he would have released this information through the elected member of parliament rather than through a spokesman for the Liberal party. In any event, the beneficiaries of this extended Conservative program are the people of Queens county and Lunenburg county, and I can assure the minister that regardless of the manner in which these announcements are made any project which will be of benefit to my constituents would be most welcome.

There are a number of questions which come to my mind. I am wondering whether these post offices will be built under the terms of the winter works incentive program, whether they will be constructed in the usual way and provided for in the estimates, or whether the spokesman on this occasion had some advance knowledge concerning next years estimates. This is a question I should like the minister to answer if he has time.

I should like to suggest that, when considering the erection of new public buildings, the minister should give some thought to the needs of the people in Bridgewater, Nova Scotia. At the present time the various agencies of the government are located in different buildings throughout the town. This creates difficulties for the citizens who must use these various services, as well as for the employed personnel. In Lunenburg, for example, we have a new public building and in this building provision has been made for officials of the fisheries department as well as for officers of the customs branch, officials of the unemployment insurance commission and the post office. This is a very desirable situation from the point of view of the public in that certain economies are effected with a consolidation of various services. This is the type of federal building required in Bridgewater. Here we have a town that is growing rapidly, it is the shopping centre of Lunenburg county serving a large agricultural area. The present facilities are overcrowded and inadequate, and I would urge upon the minister the need for carrying out a survey with the hope that a larger federal building, capable of housing all the government offices in Bridgewater, will be built in the near future.

I am also concerned with the minister's plans for a bridge over the canal at Chester, in Lunenburg county. We have in Nova Scotia only two canals. One of these is located at St. Peters in Cape Breton; the other is located in my riding at Chester. During the past summer the walls of this canal collapsed. Although it is still possible for small craft to proceed through the canal, it is evident that something of a permanent nature must be done to repair the damage that has been caused. The last plans I heard of from the department were to the effect that they would fill in the canal and at some future date would then dredge out this filling and build an adequate bridge to carry the traffic which must proceed from the town of Chester to the peninsula. However, to date no action has been taken in this matter. A temporary bridge has been built across the canal, but I am informed that this is inadequate to carry heavy trucks and that the people living on the peninsula are very much concerned in the event that a fire should occur; for there is the possibility that the existing temporary bridge could not carry a fire engine. Therefore I would ask the minister to give careful consideration to doing something about providing a suitable bridge over the damaged canal at Chester.

I could mention many other matters, Mr. Chairman, but I see that time is running out. However, one item I should like to bring to the minister's attention is the need for a further harbour development in Liverpool, in Queens county. This home of privateers in by-gone days is today showing new resurgence and growth. Formerly the wharves and docking facilities were adequate for the fishermen, but the shipbuilding program of the Conservative government has changed all this. Today the fishermen are building larger draggers and trawlers. In fact, the firm of Steel and Engine Products Limited at Liverpool recently completed the first steel stern trawler to be built in Nova Scotia. This new development has created two problems. The present harbour is not deep enough in certain areas to accommodate the growing fleet; and the present wharf at Liverpool should be lengthened by at least 300 feet to provide additional docking space for the new and growing fleet of fishing trawlers. I hope the minister will give immediate consideration to this problem so that the development of this primary industry in Queens county will in no way be curtailed.

[Translation]

Mr. Frenette: Mr. Chairman, consideration of the estimates of the various departments always results in interesting debates, and today's discussion has been all the more interesting because, in my opinion, it deals with a department whose action is felt immediately by the whole economy, stimulating as it does the activities in several fields.

The presentation of the estimates of the Minister of Public Works goes back to last October 18. At that time, he made a short statement, too short in my opinion, about his plans. There again, the word may not be right because in fact they are plans drawn up by the previous government and to which he made only minor changes. However, we were happy to read in Hansard that he expected his estimates to show a substantial increase next year.

We heard him say those same things a while ago. Of course that does not give much to all those who put their faith in the candidates of the present government during the last elections, hoping that they would look after problems immediately.

When he presented his estimates last October 18, he said he hoped to direct his department for at least 20 years. I am very happy to see that he has such good intentions. If through his work, his persistence, initiative and success, he reaches his objectives, the Canadian people will benefit from that desire because if he wants to remain in office that long he will have to show himself worthy of it through the efficiency of the means used to further his department's business.

I read with great interest the debate of October 18. There were very interesting discussions during which good suggestions were made by members of the opposition. Allegations and even charges were made against a certain type of patronage reportedly being practised at the present time in the Department of Public Works. But these charges were denied by the minister, and I was very pleased to hear that. A document dating back to 1954 was even tabled at that time. If nothing more recent can be found, I feel that the problem is not as serious as suggested, and surely the minister cannot be blamed for the situation prevailing at that time.

Besides, I have no intention of defending the minister at all. I am well aware that he can defend for himself, but I cannot resist the temptation to quote these words from the holy scriptures:

Let he who is without sin cast the first stone at him.

If these words were applied, I am sure that the accusations would come only from one corner of the house.

In any event, we know that there is a great danger of patronage in the Department of Public Works, where opportunities are perhaps more numerous than anywhere else. We take the liberty of urging the minister to use every means at his disposal to preserve us against that distressing evil.

We agree that defeated candidates of political parties deserve some recognition from the group they represented, but such party recognition should not be shown at the expense of the Canadian people or opposition members, because those members do represent the majority of voters in their ridings.

The Department of Public Works is extending its activities in many fields and on that basis, it is of vital importance in the economic life of the country. In my opinion, a budget of less than $200 million is much too small to enable the department to play its rightful part.

Everybody will agree that the money available is far from sufficient to enable the department to meet even the most urgent requirements.

As a matter of fact, a very simple calculation indicates that the budget of public works is only 2.8 per cent of the total budget. Such a percentage is definitely inadequate, considering all the responsibilities of that department.

In my opinion, that department could act as a stabilizer in the country's economy by maintaining in various parts of the country permanent work sites or development works of all kinds, capable of absorbing a certain proportion of the labour force unemployed at present or likely to become unemployed.

The minister also referred a while ago to this pet project of his and I hope that he will obtain the necessary co-operation from the cabinet to carry out this plan.

The needs of Canada are great. In a vast and young country such as ours, everything must be done, and considering the direction which seems to be taken by the present government, it is quite logical, in my opinion, that it should undertake and carry out an extensive program of public works which would provide work for the great number of unemployed.

As for us in the province of Quebec, this evil is still more acute than elsewhere. And surely there is no lack of needs.

The St. Lawrence river crossing the entire province is our pride and at the same time a vehicle for materials which we greatly appreciate. On the other hand, many dredging, cleaning, digging and development works are essential to maintain the seaway which is increasingly used. Traffic being heavier, it should be improved to speed it up.

I think I need not remind members of the committee and the minister of the accidents which occurred lately on the St. Lawrence to underline the urgency of certain work on this important seaway.

More and more, the shores of the St. Lawrence river are being lined with summer cottages and permanent homes, which means that retaining walls have to be erected as protection measures against tides, ice or damage due to navigation.

Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out to the minister that the building of retaining walls to check erosion of certain pieces of land, is an urgent matter, for heavy damage is caused to this land every year due to ice, tides or navigation.

Mr. Chairman, I represent a riding which is particularly affected by that problem. I get numerous requests concerning the building of those walls. Each time, we have to engage in discussions—not to say in a battle—with the engineers of the department in order to determine who is responsible for the damage done and ask the minister to intervene personally to speed up the investigations, etc., etc.

Far be it from me, however, to accuse the officers of the department of being incompetent or of working against the interests of the taxpayers. On the contrary, those to whom I addressed myself have always proved themselves to be quite competent and have shown a lot of good will. But those people, as I can well understand, work under particularly difficult circumstances and conditions and, not having the credit required to carry out the work, they are faced with the famous dilemma: either to recommend that the work be postponed or simply to refuse the job completely.

Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt about it, Portneuf is a beautiful riding that I am proud to represent. The area is greatly appreciated by tourists, who always like to go back there.

I do not want to insist, but I feel duty bound to ask at this time for special projects precisely to help my constituency to keep this high reputation. Numerous projects have already been carried out, others are being completed, and I wish to thank the people responsible for that. However, there are still many gaps to fill. I call the minister's attention on that situation.

The Department of Public Works is also responsible for the construction of public buildings. If each member of the committee were asked to state the needs of his riding, I am sure everyone would have something to say and we would be sitting here for quite a while. That goes to show that the needs are both urgent and numerous.

If buildings were erected to meet the present needs and, naturally, if the necessary funds were available, it would be possible to provide work for thousands of men in the building trades and thousands more in the building materials industry. That would somewhat palliate the disastrous effect of the famous 4, 8 or 11 per cent tax, call it whatever you want.

Mr. Chairman, the people who belong to the building trades are particularly dear to me. It may be because I am one of them. I should add though that a major part of my riding's economy depends on the building materials industry.

Wood as such or transformed into wall panels or plywood provides the livelihood of thousands of people. Hundreds of others work in my constituency's stone or granite quarries which are, in fact, the most important in Canada. Many others are directly interested in the building trades, to say nothing of the people who produce or prepare cement, this all-important building material.

All those people I have the honour to represent, regardless of party affiliation, insist that I submit their requests to the house.

Those people like their work; they have their own homes and lead an active social life. They wish to stay in their respective parishes, near their relatives and friends.

Of those thousands of workers, each and every one has felt at various degrees, the harmful effect of the tax on building materials.

At present, hundreds of unemployed live in anxiety and fear for the future. Many of them did not even succeed in accumulating enough unemployment insurance stamps during the summer and must now be content with small unemployment assistance benefits.

For all those reasons and many others and because I represent a group of workers, I would ask the Minister of Public Works to see to it that his department launch immediately a vast program of public works which would constitute a market for the building materials produced by some of my constituents and also a labour market for the workers who are available and who are willing to work.

The responsibility for the success of the Canadian world exhibition rests for the most part with the Minister of Public Works. We believe that the forecasts for this event are of primary importance to the Canadian people and give us a particularly well chosen opportunity to apply a vast program of work which could efficiently lessen the problems of the unemployed, provided, however, that the money so employed is not wasted, as is the case now.

Of course, we believe that the choice of the Montreal area is a happy one, and we commend that initiative on the part of the authorities who made the decision. But we must nevertheless express surprise at the fact that an island has to be built on the river to have an appropriate site for this exhibition. It appeared to us laymen that it would have been easy to locate this exhibition on the shore, without having to build an artificial island.

During consideration of the estimates of the Department of National Defence, a few days ago, numerous protests have been made following the announcement of reductions in that department. And the same word always comes back: unemployment. We do not dispute the fact that $74 million have been saved, but we are concerned, and justly so, about the repercussions such a saving may have on the unemployment situation.

Mr. Chairman, millions of dollars have been distributed among Canadian citizens, each year, in unemployment assistance and social assistance of all kinds. We certainly recognize that those sums of money made it possible for some families to live, but we believe that this money fills only half its purpose and that if the federal government, together with the provinces and the municipalities, were making this capital work by investing it in public projects, we would decrease the number of the needy in two ways, first by giving work to a large number of them, and second, by maintaining the operation of the industries which manufacture the products needed for the implementation of such work.

If we succeed, during and because of a war, to set up powerful enterprises, I believe more firmly still that the establishing of peacetime industries is not only feasible, but indeed desirable and advisable.

Mr. Chairman, one of my former teachers, Commander Beauge, launched, many years ago, a bold project which, at the time, seemed utopian and impracticable, but which could now be easily carried out owing to the scientific and engineering strides of our era. Everybody guessed it and I think the hon. member for Saguenay (Mr. Blouin) even mentioned it in the house during the last session. I am referring to the project of the construction of a dam between Newfoundland and Labrador which would completely change nearly half the country's economy because of its effects on the climate.

Such a project might make you smile at first sight, but I am sure that if the minister could afford it, he would be very happy to carry it out because I think that is a project worthy of him.

Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted at this time to point out to the house a notice of motion which was introduced by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) and which particularly concerns the activity of the public works department. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I shall read that notice of motion in order to draw the minister's attention to the problems involved.

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of taking steps to provide a plan whereby, in cases where over $50,000 is to be spent on constructing or renovating buildings belonging to the government, under the administration and management of the Department of Public Works or any other department at home or abroad, 1 per cent of the amount should be allocated for artistic work such as murals, sculptures, ornamental walls, flooring, mosaic work, frescoes, tapestries, paintings, fountains, lighting fixtures and other similar work, and that all such work be conceived and executed by Canadian artists; and, to provide further that such artists should work in co-operation with the architects in charge of the construction in order to bring about the closest possible integration; and further, that a competent and independent board be set up by the Canada Council to allocate the contracts fairly among the artists, and to ensure that all aspects of any such program are observed and implemented.

Mr. Chairman, I think that suggestion should be taken into consideration and to me, it looks like very proper action which would benefit our Canadian artists and would be an incentive for them to develop the renown of our country in the arts.

Mr. Chairman, during my remarks, I suggested several important projects. I realize the minister could not carry them out at the present time because of the limitations he must take into consideration in performing his duties, which necessarily involve a lack of credit.

Of course, to carry out these projects, considerable amount of money will be necessary. But if we consider the saturation point reached by the taxation burden, we realize that we shall have to seek the necessary credits elsewhere.

Our solution, on this side of the house, obviously appears too simple to some, while others find it too complicated; but I feel that the economists of the party in power should suggest a gradual adoption of these economic measures advocated by us, that is to say the creation of new, interest-free credit, as our economy is able to absorb it.

I am not astonished to see that some of our hon. friends opposite are smiling; but if they want me to lose what I call my illusions, let them find some other solution.

[Mr. Frenette.]

Actually, I do not believe in the spontaneous generating of limitless amounts of credit, but I stick to the idea that the infusion of new capital, through the Bank of Canada, into well ordered channels, is the only solution available to us. All other possible means have been tried, and they brought about the present situation. That is why I suggest that we adapt our financial system to our most urgent needs. Let us be up to date.

If this were done, I feel that the minister could fulfil his task adequately and, by so doing, have the wish expressed on the memorable evening of October 18, 1963, when he said he would like to remain at the head of his department for the next 20 years.

[Text]

Mr. Nesbitt: I very much regret having to bring up the subject I wish to bring up at all, and I particularly regret having to bring it up at this time towards the end of the session. However, I have tried every other method, and I have really no choice but to raise the matter before the committee. This case involves a rather elderly lady who suffered, I think, a great injustice at the hands of some of the officials of the Department of Public Works. This is an example of what I would describe as a disgraceful form of bureaucracy, and I wish to bring it to the attention of the minister, his parliamentary secretary and the members of the committee. I might add, Mr. Chairman, that I have already brought this matter to the attention of the minister and his parliamentary secretary but I should like to do so again.

I have a number of letters here and I had intended to read them into the record. However, in order to save time I shall paraphrase it. This case concerns a Mrs. Olive Showler of the city of Woodstock, Ontario who, on February 15 last, when entering a federal building in the city of Woodstock, slipped and fell on the icy steps causing some damage to her knee. Apparently that evening the caretaker—and this reminds me of the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West as to the difficulty in ascertaining who is in charge of these buildings—came around to see the good lady and take note of her injury. He instructed her to do certain things. In a letter directed to me dated May 1 last, Mrs. Showler wrote as follows:

The accident was reported to the post office February 15 and Mr. McCutcheon—

Presumably the caretaker.

—was speaking to my niece over the phone that evening.

On Saturday February 16, Mr. McCutcheon came down to the house to see me between one and two o'clock p.m. He admitted there had been salt put on the steps that morning, but it does not melt the ice as quickly on the north side of the street.

Mr. McCutcheon called again at the house February 19 and asked me to write three letters explaining how the accident happened for him to forward to the complaint department which I did and he picked them up the same evening.

Then, she goes on to mention another matter concerning her out-of-pocket expenses which amounted to $20.50. This is all the good lady is asking. There was some correspondence between me and the minister and his parliamentary secretary.

I only wish to read one letter which was sent to me from the minister on June 21, 1963. I realize the minister did not write it himself. It was drawn up by some of his officials and it is a masterpiece of what I call red tape and eyewash. It reads:

Dear Mr. Nesbitt:

This refers to our recent exchange of correspondence about Mrs. Showler's unfortunate accident on the steps of the Woodstock federal building.

As the director of our property and building management branch pointed out to Mrs. Showler, her claim cannot be considered because it was not submitted within seven days of the date of the accident, as required by the Crown Liability Act. Other requirements of the act must also be met. Such notice must be served upon a responsible official of this department and a copy of the notice must be sent by registered mail to the deputy attorney general. This does not appear to have been done in this case.

Notwithstanding the disqualification of her claim because of the time factor and the lack of official notice, there is no evidence of negligence on the part of the crown. The steps were cleared of ice and snow, and salted at 3.15 p.m. Mrs. Showler reported that she fell at 3.45 p.m. At that time, the steps were reported to be clear, but wet.

Bear this in mind.

A medical certificate dated February 19, 1963, on our file, reports that Mrs. Showler did not suffer any serious injury as a result of her fall.

Mrs. Showler's claim that Mr. McCutcheon told her the steps were, in fact, icy has been investigated. It does not appear, after verification of this point with Mr. McCutcheon, caretaker of the building, that such a statement was ever made to Mrs. Showler.

I'll bet it wasn't, after the verification was made.

Also, Mr. McCutcheon's suggestion to Mrs. Showler that she submit a claim should not be interpreted as an admission of negligence. It is simply a courtesy extended to persons in such cases in the interests of justice and fair play.

In these circumstances, it appears that the department exercised all reasonable care and precaution, that the accident was not due to any negligence on the part of a servant of the crown, and that therefore, there is no legal liability on the part of the crown.

Mr. Gregoire: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question. When did this occur?

Mr. Nesbitt: It occurred last February 15 and the correspondence went on last June and July.

Mr. Gregoire: Then the Conservatives were in office at that time. Why didn't they settle the problem?

Mr. Nesbitt: If it is of any interest to the hon. member the point was not brought to the attention of the department then. The first correspondence was on May 7, 1963, if that satisfies my hon. friend, who seems interested in disturbing the lady's claim.

This is one of the most offensive cases I have seen in the ten years or so I have been a member of parliament. I realize the minister must have many complaints and cannot personally look into them all, but this is a particularly unfortunate case. The lady is still suffering. She is still using a crutch. She is not seeking any permanent damages from the department and only asks that she receive out-of-pocket expenses of $20.50 for an X-ray.

Someone may ask, why is all this time being wasted in bringing up the claim of an elderly lady in Woodstock for $20? But, as has been said, this is a court of last resort. I fully agree with the hon. member for Port Arthur that if an ombudsman were functioning it would not be necessary for members of parliament to bring up such things, but until such an institution is brought into effect the ordinary citizen has absolutely no recourse against some of the procedures followed in some government departments, except to have their member of parliament bring the matter up in this house.

It is my contention that this lady has been very unfairly treated. I have talked to her on several occasions and I have no doubt at all her story is absolutely true. I think the correspondence I have read into the record will verify that, and I hope the minister will give this matter further consideration.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I want to talk tonight about Three Rivers and its famous bridge. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) must be just as interested as I am to see carried out that gigantic project which has been firing the imagination of the people of Three Rivers for more than 60 years. I appeal to the Minister of Public Works so that he will use his influence—and he is very influential, I think—with the government in order to settle, once and for all, that utterly ridiculous situation which is highly detrimental to the whole of central Quebec.

It must be remembered that it is a bridge which would connect the two shores of the St. Lawrence; it would be the only one between Montreal and Quebec city, which are 180 miles apart, to serve a population of about 250,000 people.

When I was minister of transport, I had the opportunity to study this question thoroughly with the engineers of my department and those of the Department of Public Works. We discussed it with the directors of the corporation, which is an independent corporation, created by the Quebec government, in which there are representatives of all parties, but mostly of the Liberal party.

So, I had the opportunity to study this question thoroughly and even organize meetings with the corporation of the Three Rivers bridge and the engineers of the provincial government. We considered all suggestions and there was never any mention of an expenditure of $60 million, nor of $30 million, not even of $10 million; mention was always made of an expenditure of $5 to $7 million. The engineers of the Department of Public Works had reached the conclusion that the federal government would be likely to pay an amount of $5 to $7 million in order to protect navigation on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. Chairman, I am told it is ten thirty. I would like to know whether it is the intention of the house to sit a little longer tonight.

[Text]

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, when we opened the negotiations with the representatives of the provincial government and those of the corporation of the Three Rivers bridge, the latter proposed that a bridge be built on a site which had been approved by the former minister of transport, Mr. Marler. There is no doubt that the construction of a bridge at that place could have interfered with navigation on the St. Lawrence and could have impeded the flow of ice on the river. Consequently, as minister of transport, I got in touch with the head of the corporation and the provincial authorities and I asked them to consider other alternatives.

That is how it was later proposed to build the bridge between the municipality of St. Angele, opposite Three Rivers, and St. Quentin island. If the project had been carried out at that place, it would not have cost a cent to the federal government; however, it would have involved an expenditure of $10 to $12 million for the provincial government and the city of Three Rivers. The bridge would have been built right between the town of Cap de la Madeleine and Three Rivers. It would have had to pass under the Duplessis bridge and would have necessitated the construction of another one on the east side of the St. Maurice and a third one over that river. There is no doubt that the project would have cost at least $10 to $12 million to the provincial government. Now, as the provincial government had given a statutory guarantee for the expenses of the corporation and since the cost of the bridge could reach something like $35 million, the province indicated to us that it could go no further.

That is why I feel that the federal government would be justified to provide $5 to $7 million for the construction of a bridge for the benefit not only of the local residents, but of all the people in the province of Quebec. That expenditure would help the economic and industrial development not only of the centre of the province of Quebec, but of the whole of Canada.

Work has started. The bridge corporation has hired engineers who, for the last 12 months or so, have been busy with their engineering work; the corporation expropriated the necessary land, and last week, it obtained from the provincial government a first loan of $1,180,000. The corporation officials have announced that tenders for the first stages of the work would be called in the very first days of January 1964.

Mr. Chairman, one can well imagine the feelings of the population of Three Rivers when they heard the new Minister of Transport state, that according to his experts, the order in council signed on March 4 of last year was not legal, or at least, that its legality was open to question. This is absolutely ridiculous, for everyone knows that once signed by the governor general, an order in council cannot be cancelled, as it is absolutely legal. If the government thinks that Three Rivers is not entitled to a bridge, let it take its responsibilities; let it issue a new order in council and deprive the population of that region of this very necessary bridge.

The Minister of Transport does not want to take his responsibilities; for more than a month and a half, we have been urging him to tell us whether the government intends to cancel everything which was done under the former government to carry out that ambitious program. The minister beats about the bush, gives vague answers and refuses to tell us what stand the federal government intends to take. It is quite clear that he creates all sorts of obstacles to stop the building of a bridge which is absolutely necessary to the development of that part of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Minister of Public Works, who is responsible for this, to have works carried out in the St. Lawrence river to protect the bridge against the ice, to control floods and help navigation. I ask him to take his responsibilities too, to co-operate with the bridge corporation and the provincial government, so that this ridiculous situation may be settled once and for all.

Mr. Chairman, today, in a reply to a question put by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), the Minister of Transport said that surveys had been made on the St. Lawrence river since last March.

This afternoon, I asked the Minister of Public Works whether surveys had been made in his department concerning the construction of dikes on lake St. Pierre. He answered no. Maybe my question was not clear enough—

Mr. Deschatelets: No survey was made by the Department of Public Works. That is what I meant.

Mr. Balcer: I would ask the Minister of Public Works to take his responsibilities once and for all and to help the Minister of Transport to extricate himself from all those difficulties which are his own doing.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the house for having been so kind as to let me have the floor so long.

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief. I simply wish to ask some information of the Minister of Public Works, concerning the St. Charles river project, in Quebec.

I know a delegation from Quebec met the minister in that respect, about a month ago. I should like to ask the minister what are the immediate projects concerning that river and the agreements reached or the arrangements made with the authorities of the city of Quebec, concerning the development of the St. Charles river, in Quebec.

[Text]

Mr. Forbes: Mr. Chairman, since this item deals with the appropriation for dredging I would like to make a very brief reference to a condition which exists in my constituency. It is with respect to the water level of lake Winnipegosis. I would like to refer to the amount of money the government is spending each year on dredging this lake. I am advised by the department that they have spent approximately $47,000 a year during the last seven years, which gives a total amount in excess of $310,000.

I would suggest to the minister that he could save his department a considerable sum of money over the next few years by the construction of a dam on the West Waterhen river to maintain the water level of the lake. At the present time it is just impossible for the dredge crew to clear channels fast enough to serve the industries on the lake. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I would like to place on the record a letter I have received from the Winnipegosis chamber of commerce outlining the drastic situation which has developed:

> The Winnipegosis chamber of commerce wishes to place before you the drastic situation the village of Winnipegosis and the surrounding areas are confronted with due to the low level of lake Winnipegosis. The residents of Winnipegosis are dependent on income coming from four sources, namely, lumber, fish, cattle and tourist. All four are in one way or another dependant on the water level of lake Winnipegosis.
> In the past years an income of approximately $150,000 was obtained from lumbering alone. All the lumber was transported on the lake to the town of Winnipegosis. Due to a terrific drop in water level this will soon be an impossibility. Second, the value of fish caught in lake Winnipegosis reached $956,023 in 1961. This catch is going down and to our understanding this industry will soon discontinue, mainly caused by low water level. Cattle ranchers from Salt Point are dependant on the lake for transportation of their beef to Winnipegosis. They hope that some dredging would soon be done in order to be able to load and ship their cattle. When the water had been higher, dredging was not necessary. In other places cattle cannot reach the waterline due to long stretches of muck into which they sink while trying to get a drink. In the winter, because of low level, the water freezes to the bottom, and once again ranchers are faced with a problem. To overcome this, we know of ranchers paying high prices to welldiggers but cannot reach water on land.
> Let us now turn to the tourist trade. Angling on lake Winnipegosis will soon be a thing of the past. Many fishing and hunting lodges are not accessible any more by boats. When you come to the lakeshore, all you can see are stretches of muck with some ducks beyond that. This will soon affect the duck population about which we are concerned, especially the redheads which make lake Winnipegosis their best breeding grounds...
> We must state once again that we are faced with a critical situation which, to our understanding and belief, can be corrected by a dam on the West Waterhen river.
> Hoping that you will give our plea your utmost consideration and give us some assurance that our problem will soon be corrected.

Since Dauphin is the only place in Manitoba declared a designated area, the construction of the dam would give employment to a great number of people this winter. To indicate the responsibility of the federal government in the matter, the Minister of Labour has interpreted a "designated area" as follows, and I will just quote in part from an answer he gave to a question by the hon. member for Churchill:

> This area will also qualify in connection with the supplementary federal government winter construction program, which applies to designated development areas and designated areas of high winter unemployment.

If the government are serious with regard to creating employment in a designated area, then I suggest that the construction of such a dam on the Waterhen river this winter, besides giving employment to a great number of people living in the area would help to maintain, as pointed out in the letter, the fishing industry, the lumbering industry, the cattle industry and it would help to conserve our wildlife, as well as the important tourist industry.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister to give this matter his most serious consideration with a view to getting the project under way in the very near future.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, my first words are to express my admiration for the Minister of Public Works. I thank him for all he has done and for the courtesy—

Mr. Pigeon: If the hon. member has so much admiration for the minister, it would be preferable to vote his credits.

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I object to what the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has just said. If ever a member has wasted the time of the house, it is the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I have a few comments I feel I should make concerning the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Taking a look at the estimates of this department for the year 1962-63, we find that they have been cut from $191 million to $178 million. Everyone knows how urgent it is that work be carried out to deal with unemployment. The minister, despite his good intentions, remains incapable of solving this problem with the small amount of money made available to him. He can only tell us that he has not got a penny left and it is impossible for him to consider any new requests until next year.

On the other hand, I find that national defence takes up 25.6 per cent of our national budget; the Department of National Health and Welfare, 19.1 per cent; debt charges, 13.5 per cent, that we have to pay in interests; payments to the provinces, 3.3 per cent —I approve of this expenditure and I know it will increase—veterans' affairs, 5.3 per cent; transport, 4 per cent; public works, only 2.8 per cent.

If there is one department whose estimates should be increased, it is the public works department, which must undertake huge works where they are needed. Instead of investing money in public works, the government prefers to leave families in such abject poverty that 19.1 per cent of the national budget has to be affected to the Department of National Health and Welfare.

We are not against giving help to families in need but we all admit that if a greater number of public works were undertaken, there would not be so many of them. In my riding, many farmers get help from the welfare department. They are no longer able to earn a living from their farms. There are also a great number of workers, in the cities, who live on social welfare. They look for jobs but they cannot find any because no public works are undertaken.

In my opinion, this government should direct its activities towards public works, particularly if it wants to alleviate the unemployment situation.

I admit that will only partially meet our problems. A great many citizens are only too anxious to have work.

In the riding of Megantic, where I live, we have a splendid city planning project which is admired by many people from abroad, especially Americans who visit us. We could welcome a great number of tourists. It would be and important incentive to our town and to all our county to find in the tourist industry an important livelihood for our families. Besides, one knows that where the government spends $3, it brings in more than six.

Mr. Chairman, we have great projects to carry out. In this connection, by improving waterways, lakes, etc., as needed, we could give plenty to work to many people.

However, there is not only the water areas that might be improved. It is true that there is a magnificent lake in my own city, and such lakes are not to be found in every town.

Finally throughout my constituency, people wonder what the federal government is doing about public works. They wonder whether the government invests money only along lakes and waterways. In several parishes of my riding, people cannot take advantage of public works. All kinds of suggestions are being made to us with a request to submit them to the government in order to help the citizens of my riding.

One can find in my constituency many abandoned farms where there is almost nothing left. The farms have been deserted. We are being asked to proceed to the reafforestation of those lands and, to do so, we are being asked to see the Minister of Public Works who, by extending the winter works period until May, for example, or until June, could rehabilitate those fertile and abandoned pieces of land. In view of the fact that many farmers having private properties are unable to do such a thing, the Department of Public Works could employ unemployed people in my constituency in order to undertake the reafforestation of those lands. Besides, according to federal and provincial engineers, reafforestation would be an ideal solution for the rehabilitation of those lands.

We are also asked to request the Minister of Public Works to build dams on the many lakes of that area.

I would also like to point out to the minister the damages owing to drought prevalent in my constituency in summertime. There should be an irrigation system and dams should be erected on lakes so as to regulate spring water and provide water all year round.

Moreover, in co-operation with the provincial government, we are asked to urge the Department of Public Works to build fish hatcheries to breed fish for restocking lakes. These lakes have been fished out, and tourists are no longer interested to visit them. It would therefore be necessary to launch all kinds of public works.

Thus, the winter works program could be used to improve level crossings which are quite numerous in my riding, especially in the populated areas. That is where improvements are necessary. However, nothing can be done because no funds are available. Yet, if there was money, it would be possible to provide work for the unemployed and improve those level crossings.

Numerous other means have been suggested to us, but I could not list them all tonight because that would take too much time. As I do not wish to delay the committee, I shall not insist on that point.

I would therefore ask the Department of Public Works to give serious consideration to those cases and to provide more funds to correct such anomalies.

In considering the estimates of the Department of Public Works, I find that the government allocates it only $178 million, when it should receive at least $400 million. The national defence estimates should be reduced by several million dollars to use them in the Department of Public Works. If that were done, the government would be in a better position to really do something for the country and the welfare of its citizens, not to mention that this will also develop Canada further.

The Chairman: Shall item 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I have the intention of making a few remarks before eleven o'clock, and I do not intend to be talked down by anyone.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order, as I think I am entitled to in view of the fact that it is after ten thirty. We are sitting here by consent, not noticing the clock. We had certain indications as to how many speakers there were but they keep on popping up. Personally I should like to know how many more speakers there will be on item 1.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Oxford said this evening that this was a supreme court of parliament; that every one of us has a right to speak on matters affecting his constituency. That being the case I presume that we should all rise and address ourselves to these problems. If we were to limit ourselves to ten minutes each, then forgetting the treasury benches that would mean there are about 220 members, which involves about 2,200 minutes, which is three and a half sitting days. I suggest that we sit here right through until tomorrow morning, and then possibly by Christmas we will complete the department with which we are dealing now.

Mr. Knowles: I do not agree with that at all.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I thought we had agreed to sit until eleven o'clock.

Mr. Nowlan: No, ten thirty.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope the hon. gentleman will be allowed to speak, because it seems to me that no one else wishes to, and then perhaps we could dispose of the whole department afterwards. Perhaps I might also draw to the attention of the committee the fact that I have looked over the list. There are 11 departments left in which not one item has yet been passed. There are a very considerable number of others in which the majority of the items have not been passed. I am not seeking to put any kind of pressure on the committee, but it seems to me that when practically the whole legislative program is over, with a little temperance it would be possible to deal with the estimates. I do not think there has been a session of parliament in which more time has been spent on the estimates than has been spent this year.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, there were a few more members in this corner of the house who wished to participate in the debate, but we agreed to the proposal which the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) made a while ago when he asked for our co-operation.

No other member of our group will speak tonight and we are willing to co-operate, because we wish to celebrate Christmas like everybody else.

Consequently, we would ask members of all parties to respect the agreement and to allow passage of the estimates.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: I am not trying to stop the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka from speaking; I am trying to stop the ones after him.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I intend to speak, and had I been given the opportunity to say what I inended to I would have been finished by now. I have quite a number of remarks to make in connection with public works, but in view of our efforts to get the work finished I am not going to make them extensively. I just want to draw some matters to the attention of the committee, and this is the reason I am speaking tonight.

I had it very seriously in mind earlier to make my speech and hold the government up, because of two very unpleasant things which happened today, both of them in connection with private members' bills. The first was a very fast trick played by the chairman of the banking and commerce committee in connection with a private bill which was passed on division this morning. The second is the fact—

The Chairman: Order. I am wondering whether the hon. member does not think that he is using language which is perhaps a little strong when he refers to a fast trick put over the committee of the house by the chairman of a committee.

Mr. Knowles: It would be irrelevant too.

An hon. Member: And out of order.

Mr. Aiken: Also, when this bill was passed at five o'clock there was only one private member's bill left, and the Liberal members talked it out, which I think is unfair. Now, I do not intend to go ahead with my remarks, because in holding up the government—

Mr. Teillet: On a point of order, we did not talk it out.

Mr. Aiken: —I would also be holding up other hon. members. I have explained this matter because I felt an explanation was necessary.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, could the Minister of Public Works tell us whether he intends to put this amount to another use since he is saving money to some extent.

Could he not use that money to carry out other works? For instance, the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) is pressing for the construction of a bridge in Three Rivers. He might use that money for this purpose.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I must point out to the hon. member that those are projects which have been reviewed, and that for the reasons I gave earlier, either because of the difficulties involved in the selection of a site or for any other technical reasons, we did not see fit to go on with them.

However, this money might very well be included in the estimates I shall be introducing next year.

Mr. Gregoire: Could the minister not allocate these funds to the carrying out of other works, since works are needed not only in the province of Quebec but throughout Canada?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, we cannot transfer any of these funds. If we do not undertake certain projects, we have to proceed as we now are doing, that is, reduce the estimates accordingly.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, item No. 205 is now under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Pickersgill: Let it be carried.

The Chairman: Transferred to the Department of National Revenue. Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

220. Payment to the national capital fund, $7,500,000.

Mr. Knowles: Can the Minister of Veterans Affairs tell us the total amount of money he has saved through his efforts tonight?

Mr. Teillet: My understanding is that the total reductions and the differences in addition amount to something like $6 million.

Item agreed to.

L50. Advances to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the purposes of subsection 1 of section 37 of the National Housing Act, 1954, in respect of the acquisition, development, construction and improvement of land and buildings, $118,000.

The Chairman: This item with regard to C.M.H.C. has also been transferred to the Department of National Revenue.

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed to thank all hon. members for their co-operative federalism which has enabled us to pass the estimates of my department.

[Text]

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, before the minister is finished with his estimates may I say I hope he has not reduced the items too far to fix my desk top here.

207d. To authorize Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, notwithstanding section 7 of the National Housing Act, 1954, to insure loans made on and after June 14, 1963 under that act to home-owners, to builders of houses who intend to sell to home purchasers, and to co-operative housing associations, where the amount of any such loan does not exceed,

(a) in the case of a loan made in respect of a house containing one family housing unit, an amount equal to the aggregate of

(i) 95 per cent of the first $13,000 of the lending value or any part thereof,

(ii) 70 per cent of any amount by which the lending value exceeds $13,000, and

(iii) the amount of the insurance fee paid in respect of the loan; and

(b) in the case of a loan made in respect of a house containing two family housing units, an amount equal to the aggregate of

(i) 95 per cent of the first $13,000 of one half of the lending value of the house or any part thereof,

(ii) 70 per cent of any amount by which one half of the lending value of the house exceeds $13,000,

(iii) 85 per cent of the other half of the lending value of the house, and

(iv) the amount of the insurance fee paid in respect of the loan, $1.

The Chairman: Item 207d, with regard to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, has also been transferred to the Department of National Revenue. This concludes the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before you leave the chair, since the house is in a very co-operative mood, since the hon. lady has been sitting here all day and as already we have had two or three opportunities to discuss her estimates, and there are only two or three items left and since I believe it is the eve of her birthday, I wonder whether we could not make her a birthday present by disposing of her department.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

55. Family allowances and old age security—administration, $2,890,000.

Mr. Knowles: This item is all right, Mr. Chairman. I want to speak on item 60 but at the speed things are going one has to watch.

Item agreed to.

60. Old age and unemployment assistance, blind persons and disabled persons allowances—administration, $188,800.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the government is considering any further changes in the requirements for these various pensions as set out in the different pieces of legislation. Rather than raise them individually I thought I could do it on one general item. I have in mind the question of residence, particularly with respect to old age security but also with respect to the others. One of the complaints that seems to have come to me from a great many people in recent months is that of elderly people who have lived in Canada perhaps 40, 50 or 60 years, but who have had to go elsewhere because of health, and find this one year requirement before they can qualify for the old age security pension a very difficult and awkward one to meet. There are other complaints.

With respect to the disability pension there is the question of the definition of disability and so on. If this were being done tomorrow I would take my 30 minutes and deal with it but tonight I shall do so very briefly. I should like to ask the minister if her department is considering bringing in amendments to these various pieces of welfare legislation to correct some of these difficulties.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, may I say my hon. friend knows that things are in a state of flux in my department. The question of the year's requirement is one on which I also have received some letters but not very many considering the million people in receipt of this benefit. When these letters are received they are discussed by me with my officials, but because of the incipience of the Canada pension plan they are perhaps not treated with as much importance as they might otherwise be.

[The Chairman.]

With respect to the disability definition I agree with my friend that it is a rather restrictive one and a number of hon. members have already mentioned this, as indeed I did when I was on the other side of the house. But with respect to the hopes that the government has regarding the disabled being added to the Canada pension plan, this means that these areas are open for considerable future improvement, and I would say to my hon. friend it is more likely when the Canada pension plan is in effect those who qualify in the future will be taken care of in that way and that the administration will look then to those who remain and cannot qualify under the plan. As my friend knows, I have only been a few months in this office and at the moment there is no suggestion by the government of any change for the next fiscal year in these particular matters.

Mr. Knowles: I have just one remark to make. I noted what the minister said the other day, I think it was during discussion of her estimates or on some piece of legislation, about the desirability of getting our pensions to the place where they are paid to certain people as of right and to all people who need pensions because of their need and not because they come in particular categories. I think she will appreciate that this is related to the sort of thing I have been asking her about, and I hope that in whatever recess we give to members of the cabinet between this session and next she will work very hard on this important question.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) concerning item 55, which has to do with family allowances.

I realize that these estimates were prepared by the Conservative regime which preceded the present government and that, at that time, no thought had been given to raising family allowances because they wanted to give the impression of being more on the conservative side.

But now that the Liberals are in office, does the minister intend, when the time comes to prepare the next budget—which will be a Liberal budget—to propose an increase in family allowances and to have it apply to all children as long as they keep on going to high school, technical school or university?

[Text]

Mr. Gregoire: Will the minister answer?

Miss LaMarsh: Briefly, I may say that my hon. friend is speaking on item 55 which is passed. However, he knows this government is committed to extending family allowances within the life of this parliament.

Item agreed to.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: What is the business for tomorrow, may I ask?

Mr. Pickersgill: Before I say anything about the business for tomorrow, sir, I should like to see whether it would be agreeable to hon. members in all parts of the house if we were to meet tomorrow at twelve o'clock. It seems to me that between twelve and one we could dispose of orders of the day and routine business, then when we resumed again at two thirty we would have quite a long go at the estimates until seven o'clock, and possibly make a great deal of progress. All that is involved would be to abbreviate somewhat the caucuses we have. I feel confident it would contribute a great deal to progress tomorrow.

Mr. Winkler: Could the minister tell us what departments are complete and what departments remain to be completed?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I would be glad to do that. I have a list here which was made up before northern affairs was completed last night. I could try to correct it as I go along. There are no items passed in the Department of Agriculture; citizenship and immigration, no items passed; defence production, they have all passed. No items have been passed for the Department of External Affairs; finance, no items have passed and the department has not yet been before the committee. Department of Fisheries, I am told there are 11 items to pass. All the items in the Department of Forestry have passed. Most of the items in the Department of Industry have passed, but there are some still outstanding. They have all passed in justice. Only two items have passed in the Department of Labour and there are 21 still outstanding; legislation is entirely outstanding. There are 28 items in mines and technical surveys, and none have passed. There are still eight items to pass in national defence. There are no more items to pass in national health and welfare. No items have yet been passed in national revenue. I think there is only one left outstanding in northern affairs, if I recall. Post office, of course, no items have been called as yet. It is the first department on the menu for tomorrow. Public works is completed. My own department has not yet been touched. There is one item outstanding in trade and commerce; and in transport, 58 items have been passed and 13 are outstanding. Veterans affairs, no items have been passed but the departmental estimates were considered very carefully in committee.

It will be seen there are still a considerable number of items to be called. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings gave us some prospective of what we would have to face if every hon. member spoke for ten minutes, and we would need a considerable number of hours. For that reason, I do renew my request, because I believe we would gain considerably more than one hour by sitting the hour between twelve and one tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles: I see the Secretary of State is looking in my direction as he renews that request. I might say we do not feel very happy about this business of having negotiated hours for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday as well as Thursday, and then being asked to change them. Members have made their plans accordingly. However, in the light of the situation and in the light of the general desire to get along, we in this party give our unanimous consent.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, we will go along with that.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, we agree to the suggestion of the Secretary of State that we sit tomorrow at twelve o'clock noon.

[Text]

Mr. Churchill: The main stumbling block has been removed, so we agree.

Mr. Knowles: I hope the Globe and Mail notices who is here.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I wonder if the Globe and Mail is here. However, that is said in a spirit of good, clean fun. Perhaps I am lucky that that newspaper has not got a great circulation in Bonavista-Twillingate.

The departments that will be taken tomorrow are post office, legislation, national revenue, and if we complete those departments, the Minister of Fisheries is eager to go ahead. If we complete all of those, I think the Minister of Agriculture would be willing to come in to complete his department, too, just before seven o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we will sit tomorrow from twelve o'clock to one o'clock?

Mr. Knowles: We have already agreed to that. In this connection, I just want to have it clearly understood what our hours are going to be on Thursday. We reached agreement last night, but both Hansard and Votes and Proceedings could be misleading on the point.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I ought to come clean about this. I did not notice the point until the hon. gentleman spoke to me earlier, but the language I used last night did not convey what I intended to convey, nor did it convey what I believe was the understanding. I think the understanding was that on Thursday we would start at 11, rise at one, continue at 2.30 and rise at 6, and continue at 7 and go on to 10.30. That, I hope, will be recorded as an amended understanding because I would not like to seem to be taking advantage of the sloppy language I used last night. I am not saying that when Thursday comes I may not ask hon. members to be generous in their interpretation of those hours, but those are the hours that were agreed upon and should be ordered.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, as it was mentioned earlier by the Secretary of State that it will be the birthday of the Minister of National Health and Welfare tomorrow, may we wish her sweet sixteen.

Mr. Aiken: The private members' hour on Thursday is not to be eliminated?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, there was no understanding to that effect and I believe there are some very interesting items up for debate in that hour. I imagine it would depend whether those concerned would want to debate them or not.

Mr. Aiken: There is only one bill left.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think the bills come before us. It is motions for papers on Thursday.

Mr. Aiken: Motions for papers last week; this week will be private bills.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps there should be some discussion about that, but there is no understanding as of now.

It being twenty four minutes after eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

The house met at 12 o'clock noon.

PRIVILEGE

MR. AIKEN—REFERENCE TO REMARK IN DEBATE ON DECEMBER 17

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a question of privilege. Last evening, as reported at page 6036 of Hansard, I referred to the actions of an hon. member by using the words "fast trick". On reflection, and after discussing the matter with the hon. member, I feel I ought to have described the situation rather as an unfortunate misunderstanding caused by a failure of communication.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Fifth report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines—Mr. Pennell.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF MOTION ON "VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS"

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, in Votes and Proceedings of today I ask:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the current agreement between the Department of Transport and Air Terminal Transport Limited, effective from August 1, 1960, for a period of ten years, for the provision of a ground transportation service between Toronto-Hamilton international airport and the two cities.

Inasmuch as we will not have another period before the house recesses for Christmas in which motions for the production of papers will come up, might I have the unanimous consent of the house to agree to the production of these papers before the Christmas recess?

Mr. Speaker: I do not believe this is the proper time, but with a view to saving time perhaps the house might be willing to give unanimous consent. Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

SURPLUS WHEAT

Question No. 1,670—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What was the volume and value of surplus wheat in Canada for each of the past five years?

2. How much of that surplus, was disposed of during those five years to underdeveloped countries?

3. How much of that surplus has been processed to produce wheat products, what were such products and (a) in what amounts were they produced (b) what was the processing cost (c) to whom were the sales made?

4. How much has the storage of that surplus cost yearly for the past five years?

5. How much of that surplus is stored in the province of Quebec, what is its value and, what are the carrying charges and the storage costs?

6. What are the carrying charges concerning wheat surpluses?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. There is no surplus wheat, as such, in Canada. Total stocks may vary from time to time but it is impossible to establish a quantity which may be considered surplus or in excess of requirements. This fact has been dramatically demonstrated this fall when an unprecedented demand for Canadian wheat developed. Accordingly, the only information available is the total available wheat supply situation each year. The quantities available for export and domestic use in each year commencing 1959-60 are as follows:

Crop Year	Carry-over	Production	Total Supplies
	(million bushels)
1959-60	588.0	445.1	1,033.1
1960-61	599.6	518.4	1,118.0
1961-62	607.8	283.4	891.2
1962-63	391.1	565.5	956.6
1963-64	488.8	723.4	1,212.2

2. During the last five years gift shipments of wheat and flour from Canada were made under three programs; the Colombo Plan, U.N.R.W.A. and in 1959-60, the special Chile relief program. Total shipments of wheat and flour equivalent under these programs were as follows:

1958-59	11.6	million bushels
1959-60	8.6	" "
1960-61	8.4	" "
1961-62	7.3	" "
1962-63	1.8	" "

3. As noted in part 1, none of the supply is classified as surplus. Within Canada the bulk of the wheat processed is milled into flour. The amount of wheat so processed for domestic and export use in the past five crop years was as follows:

1958-59	90,143,000 bushels
1959-60	91,390,000 bushels
1960-61	89,731,000 bushels
1961-62	88,241,000 bushels
1962-63	78,789,000 bushels

The milling industry's flour exports and volume available for domestic use in the past five years was:

	Exports	Available for domestic use
	(cwt)
1958-59	16,141,000	10,250,000
1959-60	16,074,000	10,544,000
1960-61	15,514,000	10,766,000
1961-62	13,893,000	11,275,000
1962-63	11,854,000	10,182,000

The bulk of the flour used in Canada is sold to be processed into bread, cakes, biscuits, etc. but other industrial uses include feeds, starch and adhesives and miscellaneous chemicals. The pulp and paper industry and the explosive manufactories also use small quantities.

Information pertaining to the processing costs of wheat is not available.

4. As indicated in part 1, a surplus of wheat does not exist in Canada; consequently a reply cannot be given relative to the storage cost of surplus wheat. The carrying costs for all wheat delivered to the Canadian wheat board in the last five pools that are now closed were as follows:

Pool	Paid by the producers	Paid by the government under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act	Total
	(million dollars)
1957-58	16.7	39.6	56.3
1958-59	18.4	42.9	61.3
1959-60	16.4	48.5	64.9
1960-61	16.5	39.7	56.2
1961-62	11.2	37.8	49.0

5. August 1 wheat stocks in store St. Lawrence ports in province of Quebec, 1958 to 1962.

1958	21.0
1959	17.5
1960	26.6
1961	26.9
1962	24.4

6. The carrying charges concerning stocks of wheat comprise storage costs set at 1/30 of a cent per bushel per day, together with interest charges.

COMMUNITY CENTRE, ESKASONI INDIAN RESERVE

Question No. 1,702—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Is consideration being given by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration toward the construction of a community centre at the Eskasoni Indian reservation which would be a joint financial project between the band council and the Indian affairs branch and, if so, what progress is being made and, what conclusions have been reached?

Mr. Munro: No. However, it is understood a committee comprising local residents has been formed to raise funds for a community centre.

*C.B.C.—EMPLOYMENT OF FORMER MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT AND EXECUTIVE ASSISTANTS

Question No. 1,709—Mr. Macaluso:

1. Have any persons who were former members of parliament and defeated in the 1962 or 1963 federal elections been employed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in any capacity and, if so, what are their names and, what are their duties?
2. Have any former executive assistants or other persons paid out of public funds on the staff of ministers of the crown who served since June 21, 1957 been employed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in any capacity and, if so, what are their names and, what are their duties?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. No former members of parliament, defeated in the 1962 or 1963 federal elections, have been employed on the staff of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. A check is being carried out at all locations to determine whether any have been engaged in any other capacity, such as freelance participation on single programs or series. Preliminary and incomplete information indicates Messrs. Egan Chambers and Hon. Howard Green were guest participants in programs originating from Vancouver for a total of three occasions. Hon. Frank McGee is being used as moderator of the series "The Sixties," usually originating from Ottawa.

2. Difficulty has been encountered in obtaining a list of persons formerly on the staff of ministers of the crown. With the assistance of Mr. Macaluso, this question was revised to deal only with executive assistants and senior personal assistants and a list of 63 names was obtained from the office of the privy council only December 13. None of these persons have been employed on the staff of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. A check is being carried out at all locations concerning this list to determine whether any have been engaged in any other capacity. Preliminary and incomplete information indicates that Mr. Roy Faibish is being used as a program contributor at Ottawa and that others have been used but current data is insufficient to establish whether this was before or after their association with ministers of the crown.

INDIAN CO-OPERATIVES

Question No. 1,767—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many people are there working in the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration in the promotion of co-operatives among Indians and what areas do they cover?

3. How much business do these co-operatives do according to reports received by the branch?
4. What plan has the Indian affairs branch for increasing the staff working on the promotion of Indian co-operatives?

Mr. Munro: 1. There are no staff assigned on a full time basis to the promotion of co-operatives in the Indian affairs branch. However, one of the duties of the field staff located throughout Canada is to encourage the development of co-operatives where conditions lend themselves to this type of organization.

2. Thirty co-operatives whose membership is wholly or substantially Indian have been organized through local efforts, usually with assistance from provincial government departments concerned with co-operatives, from co-operative organizations or from the Indian affairs branch, or a combination of these. Locations are as follows: Yukon Territory, 1; Northwest Territories, 1; British Columbia, 1; Alberta, 1; Saskatchewan, 13; Manitoba, 10; Ontario, 2; Quebec, 1. In addition, some 20 projects, mostly fisheries, are currently operated on a co-operative basis without a formal organization under the supervision of the Indian affairs branch, which in a number of cases employs seasonal supervisors for this purpose.

3. The Indian affairs branch does not receive regular reports from the Indian co-operatives, which are independent entities.

4. The Indian affairs branch plans to encourage Indian participation in co-operatives by co-operating with provincial governments and such organizations as the Co-operative Union of Canada and its provincial associates.

ADVERTISING AND PROMOTION OF DRUGS

Question No. 1,837—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering implementation of the recommendation made in the report of the restrictive trade practices commission on the manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs as to "the advisability of bringing under the supervision of the food and drug directorate all advertising and promotion activities related to drugs, including the distribution of samples and the content of advertising literature", and the establishment "under the auspices of the federal government, of an authoritative publication giving all necessary particulars concerning new drugs"?

Miss LaMarsh: The Food and Drugs Act, which is administered by the Department of National Health and Welfare, has provided considerable authority for a number of years to regulate the labelling and advertising of drugs. This authority is designed to prevent the false or misleading advertising of drugs, and the existing authority is quite broad and comprehensive in this field.

The 1962 amendment of the Food and Drugs Act clearly prohibits the distribution of drug samples to the public and also provides for a regulated distribution of drug samples to physicians, veterinarians, dentists and pharmacists. Regulations have been promulgated that set forth the conditions under which samples may be distributed to members of these professions.

The recommendation of the restrictive trade practices commission that an authoritative publication of new drugs be produced under the auspices of the federal government is still under consideration by the Department of National Health and Welfare.

STAFF OF FOOD AND DRUG DIRECTORATE

Question No. 1,839—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering implementation of the recommendation made in report of the restrictive trade practices commission on the manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs that "the staff of the food and drug directorate should be enlarged considerably to ensure thorough enforcement of the regulations"?

Miss LaMarsh: The establishment of the food and drug directorate has been increased to over 500 in the current fiscal year through the addition of 102 new positions. Further staff increases in future years are now being considered by the Department of National Health and Welfare and the treasury board.

REGULATIONS RESPECTING DRUGS

Question No. 1,840—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Has the government taken any steps to implement the recommendation made in the report of the restrictive trade practices commission on the manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs that there should be more stringent regulations under the Food and Drugs Act with respect to the manufacture, promotion and introduction of drugs, in order to give reasonable assurance that all prescription drugs offered for sale in Canada are safe to use and of good quality, and spelled out concretely by the commission in the following recommended changes in the regulations namely:

(a) All premises in which drugs are manufactured should be subject to inspection by the food and drug directorate;

(b) Requirements in connection with new drug submissions should be extended to include detailed reports of the tests made to establish the therapeutic effectiveness of the drug as well as the present requirement of reports of tests to establish the safety of the drug; such a change would make mandatory a joint evaluation of toxicity and efficacy before a new drug is put on sale;

(c) The food and drug directorate should be given the duty of inspecting and assaying samples from a sufficiently large number of batches of every prescription drug manufactured in Canada or imported from abroad to make it reasonably certain that it meets minimum standards of purity and therapeutic efficacy;

(d) All labels, advertisements or other descriptive material relating to single drugs and official compounds should be required to carry the proper name prominently and in type at least as large as that used for the brand name; and that a study should be made to ascertain if and to what extent a similar requirement would be feasible in respect of compound ethical drugs?

2. If so, what steps have been taken in each case?

Miss LaMarsh: The amendments during the past year to the food and drug regulations will be effective in achieving most of the objectives of the recommendations that were cited in the inquiry. More specifically, all premises producing drugs for sale in Canada are subject to inspection by the food and drug directorate. Regulations have been passed during the past year governing the manufacturing processes and quality control procedures in these drug manufacturing plants. Regulations concerning new drugs have been extensively revised, and substantial evidence of effectiveness is now specifically required to be included in the new drug submission. Samples of imported and domestically produced drugs are analysed and examined by the food and drug directorate. Without a tremendous increase in the staff and facilities of the food and drug directorate, however, its analyses cannot establish with certainty that every batch of prescription drugs sold in Canada meet minimum standards of purity and therapeutic efficacy. Also, as a matter of principle, the directorate should not assume the role of production control laboratory for drug manufacturers. The work of the food and drug directorate does encourage the manufacturers, however, to conscientiously fulfil their responsibility for the purity and efficacy of their drug products.

The regulations under the Food and Drugs Act have required for many years that the proper name of single drugs and officially designated compound drugs be clearly and prominently displayed on the label in type not less that one half the size of the brand name. In addition, the regulations require a readily discernible quantitative statement of the medicinal ingredients to be included on the labels of compound ethical drugs.

The possibility of identifying all compound drugs with officially designated proper names has been considered several times. It is believed that such an approach would only create more confusion, however, because of the infinite variety of compound drugs that differ both in constituents and in their proportions.

This and other aspects of drug labelling and advertising are being frequently reviewed in the light of the experience gained in administering the Food and Drugs Act and of the views of other interested parties.
