For Her Sake; The Murder in Ferness Wood.

CHAPTER LXV.

The sick man wiped the beads of perspiration from his brow, and, after a few moments' pause, gave the following account of his crime to Lady Claronald, as she sat with her face buried in her hands, endeavouring to repress her sobs.

"I am quite sure that in acting as I did I was not wrong. Ah, Diana, you do not know, my dear, what thrilling voices urged me to do it—voices that never ceased! They called to me night and day. In the silence of night they seemed to break upon the air. I heard them in the daylight, when the sun was shining, and their message was always the same—'Kill him, and set Diana free!' I could not control them. Some unseen power must have sent them to me."

Diana's passionate sobs were stifled. She was listening intently, and was convinced that this was not the language of a sane man; and her heart beat with sensation of relief.

"I know you did not love him, Diana, and I also knew that you were not happy. I thought and thought of you, until I believe there were times when I went mad—quite mad—although I tried hard to hide the feeling that I should not like any one to know it. It took possession of me. It seemed to me that I awoke from my dreams at times, when I found I had been talking and laughing, fancying my room was filled with people, when in reality no one was there. Waking or dreaming, the voices were always calling to me. While you were mixing in the gayest of London society, I was forever haunted by those voices urging—'Kill him, and set Diana free!'"

"Suddenly, one morning, when they had driven me nearly mad, I answered them. I turned around like a man at bay. 'To kill is to murder, and murder is a crime,' I said.

"Then there was a chorus of laughter—oh, such laughter, Diana!—and above it sounded a voice, clear, grave, and sweet—'It is no crime to kill him. He has wrecked Diana's life; set her free! And in the whirl and the chaos those were the only words which I remembered—'It is no crime to kill him. He has wrecked Diana's life.'"

"When I looked at you, I used to wonder whether you knew of those voices. Once on that fete day I was going to tell you about them. I knew that he was cruel to you—not merely wicked, but cruel; and I saw my chance that day. It never seemed to me that I was going to commit murder—indeed I did not look at it in that light. My mission was to set you free,

Pains About the Heart

ANY derangement of the heart's action is alarming. Frequently pains about the heart are caused by the formation of gas arising from indigestion.

Relief from this condition is obtained by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Chronic indigestion results from sluggish liver action, constipation of the bowels and inactive kidneys.

Because Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills arouse these organs to activity they thoroughly cure indigestion and overcome the many annoying symptoms.

and I cared very little whether I lost my own life or not; I wanted you to be happy.

"On that day I saw your husband intoxicated and quarrelsome. I forgot everything but two things. I saw you and Sir Lisle walking to the house together, and I knew he was in the chestnut walk alone. 'Now is the time!' shouted the voices; and the chorus was louder than ever—'Kill him, and set Diana free!' Now is the time! Why, Diana, do you know that every leaf on the tree, every blade of grass, every flower that bloomed, cried out too, 'Now is your time! Kill him and set Diana free! It is no crime to kill him; he spoils Diana's life.' They shouted at me, they urged me, they urged me, they drove me mad with their impetuous demand.

"I went to look at him—the man it was my mission to kill. He had fallen asleep, his coarse red face hideous with drink. I thought of you. It is no sin to kill him!' sounded with a roar in my ears. 'Look at him! Set Diana free from such a man!'"

"I would have killed him in that moment, but there was nothing to slay him with. I went to the gun-room—you remember the old gun-room near the stables, Diana! Looking round, I saw a small revolver—one that I could easily carry in the pocket of my coat. From the fact that it was never missed, I should imagine that it was left by some visitor. It was loaded. Oh, Diana, what a hideous din there was in my ears when I took it up and put it into my pocket!

"As I passed through the grounds I met many people whom I knew, and who spoke to me. They little dreamed what I had in my pocket, or what my mission was. No one saw me as I went down the chestnut-walk. The hand nearest to me was playing 'Partant pour la Syrie,' and the voices were crying to me on all sides—'There is no time to lose! Now is your chance! Kill him, and set Diana free!'"

"I went up to him, placed the mouth of the revolver over his heart, drew the trigger, and he was dead in a moment. He did not suffer, he did not cry out; he only raised one arm, which quickly fell again. The voices changed, and the air resounded with joyful cry—'Diana is free—Diana is free!'"

"I put the revolver back into my pocket and went away. No one had seen me. I went to the tennis-court, and spoke to several gentlemen there. No one guessed; no one pointed his finger at me and said, 'This man has just taken the life of another;' while I heard nothing but exultant cries of 'Diana is free!'"

"I looked at your face, oh, love of my heart, when I had done the deed, wondering what you would say when you knew that you would weep and lament I was sure; but I thought that after a time you would be happy—you would be free, and marry Sir Lisle. You see, there was no selfish thought in it; I never cherished the idea that you would be free to marry me.

"I do not remember much of the night that followed; the events seem confused. I was amongst those who searched the grounds for traces of the murderer, among those who sought to comfort Lady Cameron, among those who sent for the police; yet no one turned to me, saying, 'Thou art the man!' I do not remember how I reached home; but—strangest thing of all—when I found myself in my room again, the voices had ceased, and I never heard them afterward. I have had that secret continually weighing me down; but I did not mind. Men would say that I had committed murder; I know that I freed the earth from a cruel tyrant, and set Diana free. What have you to say to me?"

"Oh, Royal, what can I say," sobbed Lady Claronald, "save that I am grieved beyond expression!"

"Do you think that I did wrong?" he asked, innocently.
"Yes, a cruel, terrible wrong," she answered, "one you must repent of with your whole heart, if you desire that eternal rest which is promised."
"But, Dian, if I had seen a reptile coiling his deadly form around you, I should have crushed him!"
"That is quite another thing," she answered. "No man has the right to take the life of another—and, oh, Royal, that you, of all men, should have stained your hands with blood!"
He looked at her piteously.
"It was no wrong, Diana, to kill him. My dear, I am sure of it! I tested the justice of it in every way. The voices bade me do it; how could I disobey them? I have never heard those same voices since I did what they urged me to do; that alone is a proof that I did right. Oh, Diana, my dear, I am not afraid that my act will be condemned!"

The Romance of A Marriage.

CHAPTER I.

There was no answer, and with a touch of impatience the girl called out again, "Bob! Bob! Where are you?"

This time there came a response. "Hello!" shouted a voice from the light mist; and the answering voice was, like the girl's, clear and ringing, but deeper, as a man's should be.

"What's the matter? Is that you, Paula?"

"Of course it's me!" retorted the girl, with a sneer of disregard of grammar. "Who else should it be? Why on earth don't you come in, instead of dawdling about outside there?"

"Well, I'm coming," is the rather reluctant reply.

"Yes, so is next Sunday! Do come on and get dressed. What are you doing there? Do you know what time it is?"

"No; what time is it?" says the voice, nearer now; and the next instant the owner steps on to the verandah.

He is a youth of some nineteen summers, as the novelists say—as if no one lived in the winter!—and a glance would prove him the brother of the girl beside him. There is the same tall, graceful figure, the same supple, self-reliant form, the same proud pose of the head and straightness of limb.

"What a row you do kick up," he says, knocking the clean country mud from his thick boots against the edge of the terrace. "Anybody would think the house was on fire. There's nothing the matter with your lungs, Paula!"

"My sweet child!"—she is a little more than a year younger than he—"this is nothing to the row there will be if you don't come in and get dressed. Alice has been at it for the last hour, and I've just put the last finishing touches to her war-paint. And here you stand, in those horrid farm-labourer's clothes, with your hands in your pockets, as if it didn't matter. But there will be a great row if you keep her waiting very long; she's not in the best of tempers now—something went wrong with the wreath, and it only wants the merest breeze to rouse a storm in the gentle Alice's breast. Come on!"

"Wait a minute," he says, with a youth's obstinacy. "I'm getting the mud off my boots; that's part of the way to dressing, you know. Why can't old Palmer give a hop without bothering us—or me, at any rate? Why can't Alice go alone?"

"There is nothing more ungrateful on the face of the earth than a boy!" exclaims Paula. "You ought to be very proud, sir—"

"I daresay!" sarcastically.

"Proud! Isn't this the Palmer's swell ball that they've been talking about for the last three months? Isn't half the county going to be there, and—wouldn't I give my ears to be in your place? And there you stand grumbling as if you were going to a missionary meeting! Besides, Alice go alone! As if she could! Someone must take her, and who has she got to take her but you, you ungrateful, sulky—"

Then she burst out laughing. "What will you do Bob? You can't dance, you don't care for ladies, you—well, Bob, you must make up with the supper! Don't drink too much of the Palmer champagne, Bob; and don't forget to be polite to the unfortunate wretch you have to take down to supper! Come in! You've knocked all the mud off those boots, I'm sure. Come in! There!—there's Alice's voice," and she runs in shouting as she does so: "All right! Bob's just going to dress! He won't be long!"

He follows her into the parlour—it is not a dining-room—and drops into a chair with a yawn that displays a set of excellent teeth, regular and white as ivory, and threatens, also, to swallow the girl as she stands impatiently before him.

"Now, then!" she says, looking down at him with a smile, half of impatience, half of amusement. "Take off those boots. I've got your things, and—she whisks a dress-suit and clean shirt from a chair—"here they are, and very pretty you'll look."

"Very," he says, eyeing the black evening-suit ruefully. "Ah! very like a waiter, or an undertaker anxious for a job. Why on earth can't a fellow go out to spend the evening without making such an idiot of himself? Give them to me, confound them!"

"No, I'll take them up for you," she says, snatching them back. "You'll drop half of them on the stairs. There—there are your shoes," and she touches a pair of dancing-pumps with the point of her small foot.

He takes them up and stares at them with an air of disgust and contempt.

"I shall never get into these," he says; "they're a mile too small."

"No, they're not. You didn't expect them to look like these—these—canoes, did you?" and she kicks the thick boots. "They are your size; I bought them. They are all right. Now, then, what are you going to do now?" for he had got up and was feeling absent about the mental-shelf.

"I was just going to have half a pipe," he says, rather shamefacedly. "There's sure not to be a chance all the evening—"

She snatched the pipe out of his hands and threw it, with a laugh of impatience, to the end of the room. "Don't I tell you that there isn't time? Alice is nearly dressed already! You are half-an-hour late as it is! But you are enough to drive a saint wild—"

"Do you call yourself a saint?" he queries.
"Never mind what I call myself," she retorts, with a stamp of the foot. "Alice will call us both something if you don't be quick. Now, Bob, please me! You know how wretched she'll make it—"

New Winter Footwear

Winter Models are distinctive

There is much to interest the discriminating woman in the newest models of fashionable footwear, for the style-makers have been alert to produce shoes of character and distinctiveness.

Smart looking footwear is recognized as the one important finishing touch to the costume of the well-dressed woman. And we could say much for the exceptionally attractive styles that will prevail this fall.

Graceful of line and correctly proportioned, the nine-inch boot will doubtless be the favorite. These will come in all-leather of the finer sort, while kid vamps, with cloth tops to match, will find increasing favor.

Really, the showing of new models was never more attractive or comprehensive. Your early inspection is invited.

MODIFYING THE PROTOCOL.

PARIS, Dec. 8. The clauses providing for indemnification for the destruction of the German fleet at Scapa Flow has been modified as to refer to the Hague question whether the delivery of the tonnage demanded will cripple Germany, it is understood. The understanding is that other features of the Protocol most objectionable to Germany have been eliminated and the expectation here is that German plenipotentiaries will sign the Protocol without much further delay.

EASING THINGS DOWN.

PARIS, Dec. 8. The Allies have consented to modify one of the terms of the protocol putting the peace treaty into effect to which Germany has made no objections.

PREMIER'S NOTES TO GERMANY.

PARIS, Dec. 8. The Supreme Council's notes dealing with the Peace Treaty were delivered to Baron Von Lersner, head of the German delegation, this evening. The first note denies that Germany demands for modification of the Treaty the surrender of Germans charged with crimes against international law and the return of the prisoners. It agrees to consider the economic effects of the indemnities required for the sinking of the warships in Scapa Flow (in a spirit of equity after a year by the Reparations Commission). The note warns Germany "for the last" that denunciation of the Armistice would give the Allied armies all the necessary military measures, and adds, "In this spirit we await about signature of the protocol and the exchange of ratification." Regarding the coercion clause of the protocol, the Supreme Council considers that signature to the protocol and ratification will make it effective, and that the protocol execution will be guaranteed by the general terms of the treaty.

Make Modifications in Protocol -- German Industries Booming -- Multitudes Returning to Work -- U.S. Coal Strike Near Settlement

MODIFYING THE PROTOCOL.

The understanding is that other features of the Protocol must objectionable to Germany have been eliminated and the expectations here is that German plenipotentiaries will sign the Protocol "with much further delay."

SUPREME COUNCIL'S NOTES TO GERMANY.

PARIS, Dec. 8. The Supreme Council's notes dealing with the Peace Treaty were forwarded to Baron Von Lersner, head of the German delegation, this evening. The first note denies that German demands for modifications of the Treaty are the surrender of Germans charged with crimes against international law and the return of the prisoners. It agrees to consider the economic effects of the indemnities required for the sinking of the warships in Scapa Flow (in a spirit of equity after a hearing by the Reparations Commission). The note warns Germany "for the last" that denunciation of the Armistice would give the Allied armies all the material for necessary military measures, and adds: "In this spirit we await without signature of the protocol and the exchange of ratification." Regarding the coercion clause of the protocol, the Supreme Council considers that the signature to the protocol and ratification will make it effective, and that the protocol execution will be guaranteed by the general terms of the treaty and by ordinary recognized methods. It rejects the Germans' "pretended right" to the modification of the treaty clauses as compensation for the absence of Americans from the commissions. It declares "that it is in vain for Germany to seek to delay" the Treaty effectiveness, because of the position of the Americans in regard to the Treaty ratification. The second note deals entirely with the Scapa Flow incident. It places the responsibility on the Germans for the sinking, and sees in the protest "only attempts difficult to explain to delay the Treaty." The note cites the secret message of the Chief of the German Admiralty, Admiral Von Trotha, to Admiral Von Reuter in command of the German crews on the Scapa Flow ships, dated May, telling him that the fleet's disposition "cannot be decided without us, it will be finished by us and delivery to the enemy avoided."

WHY GERMANY IS SAUCY.

BERLIN, Dec. 8. Herr Schmidt, Minister of Food and Economics, speaking here yesterday, declared the economic situation in Germany recently had improved to an astonishing extent. Workers have returned to their tasks in far greater numbers than was foreseen last summer, he said. He cited statistics to show that production in the mines, shipyards and general industries had reached a level approaching the pre-war basis. Some exceptions, he stated, were to be noted, but those were due for the most part to raw material shortage.

END OF STRIKE IN SIGHT.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8. The public, those most concerned, still were in the dark to-day as to the governments latest move to settle the bituminous coal miners' strike. Not a hint of the nature of the proposals had been made public either by the miners or by officials, but comfort was taken in the statement by Attorney General Palmer last night that he was quite sure the end of the strike was in sight.

PROPOSED LAW POSTPONED.

LONDON, Dec. 8. "It is believed that the proposal to abolish trial by jury and establish a commission of judges in Ireland has been postponed, says the Daily Mail's Dublin correspondent, "and that Downing Street has expressed doubt as to the wisdom of some of the military proceedings in Ireland. The possible resignation of the viceroy is talked about."

AND STILL HAS A LITTLE FOR THE FAMILY.

NEW YORK, Dec. 8. Henry Clay Frick, multi-millionaire, iron master and collector of art, left all but twenty-five million of his vast estate to public, charitable and educational institutions, according to the terms of his will made public here Saturday night. The value of the public bequests after an amount is set aside for his widow, son and daughter, is one hundred and seventeen millions exclusive of one hundred and fifty acres of Pittsburgh real estate left for a Public Park.

ALCHEMIST RIDDLE SOLVED.

PARIS, Dec. 8. Sir Ernest Rutherford Langworthy, professor and director of physical laboratories, University of Manchester, England, has solved the riddle of the transmutation of matter, the secret sought by the ancient alchemists, according to the Matin.

MILNER AT CAIRO.

CAIRO, Dec. 8. Viscount Milner, head of the British mission to Egypt to determine the nature of the new protectorate, arrived here to-day.

JENKINS' BONDSMAN.

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 8. J. Salter Hansen, who furnished bail upon which W. O. Jenkins, the American Consul Agent at Puebla, was released last Thursday night, declared in a statement to-night that he has acted in his own initiative.

HOPE EXPRESSED FOR SETTLEMENT.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8. Hope for the settlement to-morrow afternoon of the controversy between the miners, operators and government was expressed in a formal statement issued to-day at the White House.

War or League.

There is one strong point in favor of the League of Nations. Those who criticize it have no substitute for it. As Mr. Balfour said on Armistice Day, it is not to be expected to work a miracle, but if the propitious moment is seized a habit might be created, by a cumulative process, of dealing with international difficulties with an international machinery, so that disputes would be settled amicably instead of by the sword. The motive power behind the League must be the will of the peoples of the world that the abominable method of settling disputes by slaughter shall be stopped.—Montreal Herald.

Landmark of Devon Moors.

Brent Tor is a little bit of a stone church built high on the frowning cliffs of the wild North Devonshire coast in England. The church is so little that a Devonshire yokel with a keen sense of humor is said to have inscribed this cryptic warning which puzzled many a simple-minded Devonshire farmer: "If you get into the second aisle of Brent Tor, you will never get out again." There is no second aisle in the wee church at all.

Brent Tor was built centuries ago by a man who was lost among the steep cliffs and rushing waters of the wild North Devon coast.

The fog mists enveloped him. In his anguish as the roar and spray of the cold Atlantic assailed him he vowed solemnly that if he ever came safely out of the fog without pitching into the growling ocean he would build a church. Brent Tor was the result.

The good folk 'round about Devonshire tell how the Devil tried to hamper the building of the little church. At last St. Michael de la Rupe, to whom it was dedicated, grew weary with the proceedings and heaved a great mass of cliff at his satanic majesty. There was no further trouble.

A peculiarity of Brent Tor is the fact that it can be seen from all directions—it is a veritable landmark. Before it toss the restless waves of the Atlantic Ocean and behind it slope the undulating Devonshire moors.

The Truth About Prohibition

From the Viewpoint of an Eminent Professor.

By STEPHEN LEACOCK, Head of Departmental Political Economy, McGill University.

(In the New York World.) There can be little doubt that all of North America—or all of it that lies between the Mexicans and the Eskimos—is going dry. The United States has gone. The door of the beer cellar is locked and the key thrown away. In Canada eight provinces are at the actual moment dry. Only Quebec holds out—a will amid the waste.

There is every prospect that the Western world is about to go dry and stay dry. The moment is therefore fitting for one who thinks that we are making a sad error to voice a few words of regret.

To my mind the strange thing about the Prohibition movement is the queer psychology at the back of it. Few people really want it. But nobody cares to say so. Politicians wait in vain for the sign that is not given. Judges on the bench hand out reluctant sentences, wondering what they will do when the stock of wine in their own cellars is exhausted. Lawyers, doctors, professors and merchants sit tamely by awaiting the extinction of their private comfort. The working man watches the vanishing of his glass of beer and wishes that he was a man of influence with power to protest. The man of influence wishes that he were but a plain working man and might utter a protest without fear of injury to his interests. Nor is there, so far as I am aware, a single one of the clergy to stand up and preach a sermon on the wedding feast of Cana of Galilee.

Drunkenness is, of course, a very terrible thing. It has blotted out many a bright young life. It has slowly brained many a vigorous brain down to driving senility. It is a fruitful source of crime. It has desolated many a home. It has done, in short, all the things that are graphically depicted upon the lantern slides of the "temperance" lecturer.

But drunkenness is not here the point. The drunkard, after all, important though he is, does not fill the whole sky. It is a pity to destroy the comfort of the home and amenities of social life for the sake of so small and so worthless a fraction of humanity; the more so as the drunkard, under Prohibition, is apt merely to convert himself into a criminal, drinking illicit poison in place of honest beer and driving himself to ruin all the quicker.

The point that few people seem to care to dwell upon is, in the present crisis, the comfort and pleasure to be found in the ordinary and rational use of beer and wine and spirits such as is made of them by ninety-nine out of every hundred people who use them.

This cannot be measured in any scientific fashion, or submitted to the proof of a formula. It is a matter of experience. Those who have never had it are not qualified to speak. But there are countless thousands of people whose private opinions, if they would only speak it out, is that of all the minor comforts of life, from the cradle to the grave, beer and tobacco are easily first.

There has grown up in the matter a sort of conspiracy of silence. Nobody seems willing to bear witness to how widely diffused is the habit of normal wholesome drinking, and of the great benefits to be derived from it. The university where I have worked for nearly twenty years contains in its faculties a great number of scholarly, industrious men whose life work cannot be derided or despised even by the salaried agitator of a Prohibitionist society. Yet the great majority of them "drink." I use that awful word in the full gloomy sense given to it by the teetotaler. I mean that if you ask these men to dinner and offer them a glass of wine, they will take it. Some will take two. I have even seen them take Scotch and soda. During these same years I have been privileged to know a great many of the leading lawyers of Montreal, whose brains and energy and service to the community I cannot too much admire. If there are any of them who do not "drink," I can only say I have not seen them. I can bear the same dreadful testimony on behalf of my friends who are doctors; and the same, and even more emphatic, on behalf of all the painters, artists and literary men with whom I have had the good fortune to be very closely associated. Of the clergy I cannot speak. But in days more cheerful than the present gloomy times there were at least those of them who thought a glass of port no very dreadful sin.

And, conversely, I can say with all conviction that I have never seen drunken professors lecturing to inebriated students, or tipsy Judges listening to boozing lawyers, or artists in delirium tremens painting the portraits of intoxicated Senators. Moreover, among the class of people of whom I speak, the conception of how to make merry at a christening or a wedding or a banquet or at the conclusion of peace, or of any such poor occasions of happiness that mark the milestones in the pilgrimage of life, was exactly the same—I say it in all reverence—as that shown by Jesus Christ at the wedding feast of Cana of Galilee.

But these people, one might object, are but a class, and a small one at that. What about the ordinary working man? Surely he is not to be sacrificed for the sake of the leisure hours of the intellectual class? But here, as it seems to me, is where the strongest argument against Prohibition comes in. We live in a world of appalling inequality, which as yet neither philanthropy nor legislation has been able to remove. The lot of the working man who begins day labor at the age of sixteen and ends it at the age of seventy, who starts work every morning while the rest of us are still in bed, who has no sleep after his lunch and no vacation trip to Florida, is inconceivably hard. It is a sober fact that if those of us who are doctors, lawyers, professors and merchants were suddenly transferred by some evil magician to the rank of a workingman, we should feel much as if we had been sent to the penitentiary, and it is equally a fact that we would realize just how much a glass of ale and a pipe of tobacco mean to a sober, industrious workingman—not a picture-book drunkard—after his hours of work. It puts him, for the brief moment of his relaxation, on an equality with kings and plutocrats.

It is no use to say that tobacco shortens his life. Let it. It needs shortening. It is no use to say that beer sogs his oesophagus and loosens his motor muscles. Let it do so. He is better off with loose motor muscles and a soggy oesophagus and a mug of ale beside him than in the cheerless discontent of an activity that knows only the work of life and nothing of its comforts.

The employers of labor have hitherto, through sheer shortsightedness, been in favor of Prohibition. They thought that drinkless men would work better. So they will in the short spurt of efficiency that accompanies the change. But let the employer wait a year or two and then see how social discontent will spread like a wave in the wake of Prohibition. The drinkless workman, robbed of his simple comforts of life, will angrily demand its luxuries. A new envy will enter into his heart. The glaring inequalities of society will stand revealed to him as never before. See to it that he does not turn into a Bolshevik.

Lead were the plaudits of the Prohibitionist when Russia emptied its vodka into the Neva and declared itself bone-dry. Yet look at Russia now. But when all is said and done, there is little use in arguing or protesting against the new regime. The thing is coming. We must obey our masters. Ho! then for the merry days that are coming; when the lemonade shall pop at the dry banquet and the sarsaparilla foam to the top of the glass; when two old friends shall sit down,

Mike Welch of St. John's Was Unable To Walk a Step

Since Taking Tanlac He Can Get Around as Well as Anybody.

"I had rheumatism so bad before I began taking Tanlac that I couldn't walk, but now I haven't a pain in my body," was the statement made by Mike Welch, a well-known fisherman who lives at 12 Spencer St., St. John's, Newfoundland, in an interview with a Tanlac representative, recently.

"For two years I have been troubled with rheumatism in my legs and arms," Mr. Welch continued, "and the pains were so bad that I could not raise my right arm above my waist. At night I would ache so bad that I could hardly get any sleep at all, and I was so nervous that I would actually shake. I lost my appetite and what little I ate wouldn't digest but would sour and cause so much gas to form that I would have awful dizzy spells. I had terrible pains through my back and my kidneys troubled me a great deal; in fact I was troubled with something all the time. I could get no strength or nourishment at all and lost weight rapidly, going from one hundred-and-fifty pounds down to one hundred-and-forty-five, an actual loss of forty-five pounds."

"I tried all sorts of treatments and medicines but they did me no good and finally I made up my mind to try Tanlac, as I had seen so much in the papers about what it was doing for other people. In all fairness to this medicine I must say that it has completely overcome all my troubles and put me back on my feet in fine health and able to do my work. The rheumatism has all left, my legs and arms and the pains through my back have gone and my kidneys are in good condition. I have a fine appetite and can digest everything I eat perfectly, and am gaining back my lost weight and strength right along. I have not had a dizzy spell since I started taking Tanlac and at night I sleep like a log and get up in the morning feeling fine. I just feel better than I have in years, and I think so much of Tanlac that I wish you would publish this statement of mine, for I believe it will be the means of helping other people who are troubled like I was."

Tanlac is sold in St. John's by M. Connor, under the personal direction of a special Tanlac representative; in Harbor Buffet, by Thomas Wakely & Sons; in Placentia, by James Murphy & Son; and in Topsail, by J. K. Bursell.—adv.

side by side with a bucket of ice-water between them; when emergency cases shall be treated with a coffee bean, and wedding guests shall trip to the merry music of the victrola filled with unfermented grape juice.

But what's the use of writing about it? None that I can see. I call anyone who has read this article to witness that its tone is as fair-minded as its open daylight and as kindly as a jug of red wine under a hawthorn tree. Yet I know by experience that it will bring nothing to the surface except unmeasured condemnation from the intolerant. The editor of this paper will receive, perhaps, threatening letters from Mothers' Meetings and Children's Blue Ribbon societies for daring to print it. And for doctors who I have quoted will say that they never heard of me, and that they never took anything stronger than raspberry vinegar. Never mind. Perhaps I shall be able to get work in Hayti or in Dutch Borneo or some sensible country.

The Lure of the Pearl.

Bahrain, the remote Arab isle in the Persian Gulf, has played an important part in the eventful history of the Middle East. Tradition says the lustrous pearls that glistened on the breast of the Queen of Sheba were fished up from the hot, dangerous depths of these waters. And long before the food, a great creature half man and half fish, called "Cannes," came up from the waters of Bahrain, strode ashore, and went north to teach the Chaldeans culture.

A Babylonian Princess it is said had a necklace of Bahrain pearls which was so long that even when she stood upright it brushed on the ground. This fierce, hazardous pearl quest is pursued now, just as in years past. From June to November often as many as five thousand small boats, each carrying from six to fifteen men, are busy fishing for pearls off Bahrain and along the Arab coast. It is a precarious trade, calling for courage, skill and strength. Scores of stalwart divers die each season from shark bites, the stings of poisonous rays and from other accidents.

The divers work in from five to twenty fathoms of water, although seven fathoms is perhaps the average depth. The best pearls seem to come from the deeper water.

The divers usually remain under water a minute or more. One Arab writer solemnly asserts that long ago Arab divers could stay under water for two hours (?). But modern Arab divers are not so long-winded.

Black pearls of sinister lustre are often found in the Bahrain waters, many a times the tiny steel colored "seed pearls" are brought up.

Other superstitious beliefs prevail concern these gems of the ocean deeps. For instance, it is a common practice (only among the rich, needless to say) to powder a pearl and swallow it either as a tonic for failing vigor or to ward off impending disease or ill luck; or a maiden may rub her eyes with a pearl and thereafter, by merely gazing at a man, she may make him her slave! Black pearls, however, must be avoided, for Arabs see in them some sinister manifestation of the powers of darkness.

Wealthy Arabs have chains of pearls or "pecker beads," such as are carried by pious Moslems.

Left in the Train.

Things that people have left behind them in London and South Western Railway trains have been sold by auction. One odd lot that an absent-minded person forgot consisted of four nine inch thick stone slabs and pieces of slate and marble. A hamper of Bibles, prayer and hymn books, 140 bottles of ink, 24 tins of boot polish, 32 parcels of Epsom salts, 24 Seidlitz powders, 240 bottles of Worcester sauce, many umbrellas, two bayonets, a shield, a dummy rifle, and two dress swords were among the "left property." As a matter of fact most of the "heavy stuff" was "lost goods." It is not at all unusual for a truck to get mislaid, and not turn up for months afterwards. Meanwhile the owners have been compensated. When the property eventually turns up it is sold at the company's auction and the proceeds credited.

THE PUSH THAT HELD... Did you ever have something like this happen to you? You were way down in the dumps both mentally and physically. Everything you tried to do was an unbearable effort. Everything you left undone seemed to sit on top of your chest and oppress you.

There seemed a general savourlessness to life. You didn't know how you ever got into a state, and you didn't know how to go about getting out of it.

The Little Thing Gave You a New Grip on Life. and then some little thing happened. You had a chance to hear some wonderful music; a friend was moved to carry you off for an all-day trip on a perfectly heavenly boat, or some specially prized visitor came into your routine and filled your heart full of the joy of her presence and your mind full of new thoughts. And behold, when you went back to the routine you found you had a new grip upon life! Work was no longer an unbearable effort, work and yourself ceased to fret over each other, you began to feel a new power in yourself.

This is Just What Happened to Me Last Spring. For some unknown reason things seemed to have lost their savor to me. I had gotten into a "cul bon" state of mind. After all, what's the use of all this working and hoping, even of getting what one wants, if one is not happy? I found myself thinking. There doesn't seem to be much point to it, when you do get it.

The Big Little Things that Pulled Me Up. and then one of these big little things happened to me. A friend came down upon us and carried us in his machine for a two-day trip on an entirely new plane. My mind was filled with the images of new things, and on top of that he filled it with new thought suggestions.

THAT ROLL OF STAGE MONEY IS CERTAINLY GOOD IMITATION OF THE REAL THING. I CAN HARDLY TELL IT APART FROM THIS ROLL OF REAL COIN I'VE GOT.

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

THE PUSH THAT HELPS.

Did you ever have something like this happen to you? You were way down in the dumps both mentally and physically. Everything you tried to do was an unbearable effort. Everything you left undone seemed to sit on top of your chest and oppress you like a nightmare. There seemed a general savouriness to life. You don't know how you ever got into such a state, and you didn't know how to get about getting out of it.

When I came home from that trip I was tired. I don't see how anyone can ride a hundred miles a day without being. But it was a different kind of tiredness from that I had felt before. It wasn't a tiredness of living. And ever since then I've been climbing steadily out of the dumps. I don't suppose that trip meant such an awful lot to the person who gave it, but it meant everything to me. It was the one quick push that started an otherwise immovable load.

Help Them Out of the Rut.

I think we could all do this sort of thing for others often than we do, if we stopped to think how much such pushes helped and kept our eyes open to see when people needed them.

We can't all carry people off in machines like fairy godmothers (or fathers), but we can perhaps invite a tired mother for a few days' rest, or bring a flash of unusual pleasure—a matinee or a concert, perhaps—into an otherwise drab life. Your own circumstances will suggest the means. The point I want to bring out is how much more this one quick push out of a rut at just the right time may mean than just the momentary giving of pleasure.

Important!

Every man starting out in business will have to go over a hard road and find out its turnings for himself. But he need not go over his road in the dark if he can take with him the light of other men's experience.

"BETTER NOT TRY."

To many people give voice to this cry: "You'd better not try, you'd better not try." Whatever it is that youth ventures to do, they frighten him off with their old bugaboo: "There are dangers ahead; you may fall down and die—The thing is too risky. You'd better not try!"

These people comprise a most curious clan. They're forever foreboding great evil to man. Let some one propose an adventure that's new Or a change in the method, or big thing to do, They'll hold up their hands and then say with a sigh, "Twould be fine if it worked, but you'd better not try."

They're the gloom of the neighborhood, city or state. They're frightened by failure and fearful of fate. They kill all ambition, like water on fire. They quench the red blaze of an eager desire. As they shake their wise heads and they doubtfully cry: "Perhaps you would win, but you'd better not try."

What a fearful existence it really must be— Nothing but failure and danger to see! Never to venture except where it's sure. Never to know what your strength can endure; To long for a thrill as the days travel by Yet always to feel that you'd better not try.

Fashions and Fads.

The most chic type of belt continues to be the string belt tied softly about the waist. Bright red broadcloth laced with black cord makes the high collar of a black satin gown. Street dresses occasionally have long sleeves, but a sleeve about the elbow length is favored. A cluster of black, gynecized, burnt ostrich feathers makes an unusual corsage garniture. A cerise velvet evening wrap has a collar of skunk and a lining of a dull burnt orange crepe meteor.

Politics in Britain.

When the British Coalition breaks up, some party must emerge that can control a majority in Parliament. That majority will have to reflect popular demands on the great questions of reconstruction, which go deep in England, down to the roots of the industrial and social structure. England's leader will be the man who can assemble the fragments of old party wreckage, form them into a dominant party, and hold it within the controllable channels of parliamentary government. Mr. Lloyd George's ability to do that seems to be the hinge of his future political career.—Kansas City Star.

THE STRIKE FEVER.

My job is all I could desire, it yields me handsome pay; I wrestle with my blooming l y r e for eight brief hours a day. I ought to think myself in luck, to have a job I like; but all the other boys have struck, and so I think I'll strike. No stern oppressor grinds my face with cruel iron heel; to tyrants in the higher place I make no vain appeal. No rank injustice I lament, my spirit isn't sore; I have no grievance worth a cent, that makes me walk the floor. But I see all the striking lads parade along the pike; they've quit their work, in all the grades, and so I think I'll strike. I am the only man at work in all this lovely land, who does not find his labors irk, who makes no stern demand. I'm satisfied with what I do, and with the pay I get; each day I earn three bones or two, in damp but honest sweat. I'm treated better than a king, and life seems pretty slick, and as I sit around and sing I can't think up a kick. But I am lonesome all the day, the one contented guy; the rest have thrown their tools away, and they go marching by. I see 'em waving bright red flags as up the street they hike; and so my lifting labor drags—I rather think I'll strike.

Memories of Nelson.

At the Merton Easter Vestry Meeting it was mentioned that the parish register was being transcribed and indexed with a view to the publication for the benefit of the parish. The register contains many entries relating to Admiral Lord Nelson, who lived for a time at Merton Abbey. Among them is one relating to the attendance at the church of Nelson, at the baptism of a nephew, in which it is recorded that "this baptism has been postponed for two years owing to the father being out of the country on the King's business," which two years' service was the blockading of the French fleet at Toulon. Nelson returned to Merton for a month and left shortly before the battle of Trafalgar. Another entry relates to the baptism of a Nubian or Egyptian girl who was brought to Merton as a present for Lady Hamilton.

London Now Less Noisy.

Middle-aged Londoners who went to and fro in the capital in the sixties and seventies merely smile when we ask if London could possibly be noisier than it is at the present day, says the London Chronicle. For they say it was a far noisier place then, when nearly all the main streets were granite paved and all the wheels of the vehicles iron bound. There was a continuous roar then to which the present day sound is a mere whisper. One such Londoner says he often heard in the old days the roar of London's traffic from as far away as the Crystal Palace parade. The sound was like that of continual very distant thunder. He has many times in recent years listened for the sound from the same spot, but has never heard it. When you want Steaks, Chops, Cutlets and Collops, try ELLIS' Pork, try ELLIS'.

Italy's Difficulty.

The cession of the port of Fiume to Jugo Slavia by the Peace Conference, caused considerable opposition in Italy, and not even the efforts of the Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs, Signor Tittoni, were sufficient to calm the excitement or relieve the tenseness prevailing throughout the whole of the kingdom, the people having regarded the giving away of a harbor, hitherto regarded as their one big outlet on the Adriatic, as a clear and deliberate steal. So high did the popular sentiment against this arrangement run, that Gabrielle D'Annunzio, the Italian poet-aviator, and idol of the populace, was enabled with the assistance of certain kindred spirits and several thousand troops of the regular army, to make a sudden and audacious march upon Fiume, entering the city, in spite of remonstrances and opposition by the authorities, and holding it in the name of Italy, putting it in a fit state to resist attack, either by the Italian Government or that of Jugo Slavia. D'Annunzio's coup (Sept. 17), was made amidst great demonstrations from the citizens of Fiume, who welcomed him enthusiastically to the city, while the Allied forces in possession, remained quietly in their barracks and pretended not to see what was transpiring.

This descent of the poet-flyer was looked upon by the Italian Government as an act of sedition, and D'Annunzio and his following were classed as insurgents. But notwithstanding that Italy repudiated the action, no hostile manifestation followed. True the Government did despatch an envoy in the person of Admiral Badoglio to treat with the rebels, but it amounted to nothing, and ended in the French and British garisons of the town, hauling down their flags and leaving when commanded by D'Annunzio, who thereupon installed himself in the Army Command Bureau and defied the Italian Government and the Peace Conference alike. The former, in retaliation, put into execution a land and sea blockade, but its ineffectiveness was apparent from the beginning. Fearing that it in any way interfered in this domestic problem that the downfall of the Nitti administration would be brought about, the Supreme Council, after much and earnest discussion decided to leave the matter entirely with Italy, allowing her to deal with the situation as she pleased. This took the form of an ultimatum, on Sept. 20th to which D'Annunzio paid no heed. A second was sent with a similar result, and the expulsion of foreigners from the city began. Some nine hundred and twenty Jugo Slavs were imprisoned. The insurgents commandeered large quantities of food, which was augmented by supplies via water, the official blockade being slack in the extreme.

Through all the change and interchange of communication and protests, D'Annunzio sat tight and refused to evacuate the city, thereby causing great uneasiness in Peace Conference circles in Paris, which grew into the fear that the movement might spread to other parts of Dalmatia, and result in the occupation of Zara and Cattaro (which subsequently happened). All the while the insurgent leader was making his position stronger and extending his army cordons beyond the town. His proclamations were issued from Fiume, addressed to the population of both Italy and Dalmatia, and so grave had the situation now become (Sept. 25) that the Italian Crown Council was called together, a step rarely taken except for discussions of the most momentous consequences. The King of Italy, in person, opened the Council, the session lasting two and a half hours. The Roman populace had gathered in front of the Quirinal Palace, and as the members left, shouts of "Long Live Italian Fiume" were heard. The populace undoubtedly was wholly in favor of D'Annunzio and bitterly opposed to Fiume passing from Italian hands.

In the meantime D'Annunzio made a statement that a condition of war existed between himself and Jugo Slavia, and later on, his troops made a triumphant occupation of Zara, capital of Dalmatia, and since then the army of Fiume has been wandering up and down the Dalmatian coast, unopposed, entering minor towns here and there, with the Italian Government practically helpless, and Jugo Slavia afraid to take the war plunge, because it is thought by that country that Italian public sentiment is backing D'Annunzio. And it is to a great extent, Italy's difficulty being exactly because of the popular feeling that Fiume should be preserved to Italy. "But," to quote the New York Times, "if D'Annunzio is allowed to continue his promenades up and down the coast, he will sooner or later reach a town which the Jugo Slavs will not give up without a fight, and then there will be war. The D'Annunzio incident is proof of the urgent need for a prompt settlement of the whole Adriatic question." Italy does not care to take it up, fearing offense to the whole body of Italian citizens. The Allies do not consider it their quarrel and leave it to Italy to settle. And while neither acts, D'Annunzio is continuing his peregrinations of the Dalmatian coast, with a chip on his shoulder, the knocking off of which may again set the war torch ablaze. Europe is still sitting on a powder keg.

Killed by Falling Tree.

During the great storm of Saturday, November 30th, in Toronto, George Dowson, cartage agent, a former Newfoundland, was killed by the falling of a tree, his skull being crushed and his arm shattered. Mr. Dowson went from Newfoundland to Toronto, with his parents, some twenty-four or five years ago. His widowed mother, of whom he was the sole support, lived with him. Possibly there are some relatives in this dominion who will regret to hear of his sudden and untimely end.

Memorial Tablet Mural.

The Trustees of Cochrane Street Methodist Central Church at their last meeting, decided to erect a Mosaic Memorial Tablet to the memory of the brave boys of the congregation, both of the Regiment and Navy, who paid the supreme sacrifice during the war. At the Thanksgiving Services on Sunday next, the offering will be for the further reduction of the debt on the Tablet, which is being imported from England.

Nearly Drowned.

Yesterday afternoon a lad, 10 years old had a narrow escape from drowning, by falling through the ice while copying near Browning's Mill. Mr. Samuelson Cooper and Mr. Burridge, heard the outcry of the boy who was on the point of sinking when they reached the scene. The youngster was almost exhausted when fished out of the icy water.

Cathedral Tower.

A WAR MEMORIAL. Editor Evening Telegram. Dear Sir,—We saw in a recent issue of the Telegram, a reference to a discussion which took place recently at a Vestry meeting of the Cathedral Parish regarding the completion of the Tower and Spire of the Cathedral. Your informant omitted to state that the chief motive behind this proposal was the erection of a permanent war memorial to those who so gloriously fell on the field of honour; and for this reason it is expected that the project will have a universal appeal to the citizens.

The adoption of the scheme, which is at present tentative, will largely depend on its popularity and support. Can the people of Newfoundland think of a more fitting memorial than the completion of this prominent building in their capital city?

It is realized that the present time is inopportune from a financial point of view; but, on the other hand, it is felt that, if the project is deferred, lapse of time may bring with it a proportionate falling off of interest in the main object.

Yours very truly, LEONARD L. JEEVES, Rector. GEORGE A. DAVEY, T. A. HALL, Church Wardens.

St. Thomas's Women's Association Sale.

Some real nice and very useful articles will be on sale at Canon Wood Hall this afternoon, when the Women's Association will be in charge. There will be many things there suitable for Christmas gifts, and plain and fancy sewing. You may have your tea there and later listen to a pleasant little entertainment, at which it is rumored that singer new to St. John's and with a particularly sweet and powerful voice, is to make her first appearance.

"The Lady Gardeners."

The ladies of Littledale Academy, who have so often delighted our city audiences will, on to-morrow, Wednesday night, and the following night, produce that delightful opera "The Lady Gardeners," at the Casino. The opera is full of variety and action; comedy and mystery goes hand in hand to make a most fascinating story, and the way in which these young ladies portray the same, leaves nothing to be desired. Solo, chorus, dance and tableaux, has each its separate charm. Miss Krentzlin, a youthful vocalist of great promise, sings Gounod's Ave Maria with violin obligato by Mr. Frank Bradshaw, and this number in itself will prove so rare a treat, that we have no hesitation in saying, every one in the audience will be delighted to hear it. The performance is under the direction of Professor Charles Hutton and this should commend it to all lovers of a well finished work.

West Coast Notes.

At Channel and vicinity, the fishery of late has been poor. A succession of storms and scarcity of bait have kept the fishermen in harbor. The schooner Atlanta, Cedella and another have arrived at Port aux Basques from P. E. I. produce laden, and are disposing of their cargoes as fast as the vegetables can be hoisted from the holds: the prices asked being $4.50 per barrel for Potatoes and $3.50 for Turnips.

Not Dr. Gill.

A message was received in the city this morning saying that Dr. Gill, of Brigus, had died there as a result of injuries received by falling over a staircase, while visiting a patient. Inquiry, however, elicits the fact that the report was not true and that in delivering the message to the Justice of Peace, Mr. Russell, the messenger made a mistake. The correction was afterwards made, that a man had died suddenly, the victim not being Dr. Gill.

No Sympathy for Dope Sellers.

In the Magistrate's Court this morning a shopkeeper had a man up for breaking a pane of glass valued at about seven dollars. The man had been arrested by the police and was also charged with being drunk. For the latter offence he was fined $2.00, but in the case of breaking the glass His Honor told the plaintiff that any one selling dope would have to put up with the consequences of damage done on their premises by purchasers, and he dismissed the case.

Supreme Court.

King vs. John Duggan. Ball was taken for the accused in $2,000, and the two bondsmen, M. Duffy and T. Green, furnished bonds in $1,000 each. The accused is to come up for trial on Feb. 15th. Udell vs. the C. B. Mutual Marine Insurance Co. Several witnesses for the plaintiff were examined this forenoon. The case will be resumed this evening.

Police Court.

A drunk was fined $2. For breaking a pane of glass, another man who was drunk from drinking dope, was fined $2. A vagrant, arrested in a stable, was sent to the Penitentiary for six months. This is the same fellow who was up before the Court some short time ago. The charge was then the same, and he was told that if he were again arrested on the same charge he would be given a long sentence. A rather amusing little thing happened this morning in the Court-room in the same case. The Judge said that he would deport the man from the country. He at once became visibly affected and earnestly pleaded that this should not be done. "Very well then," replied the Judge, "I will send you to the Penitentiary for six months." "All right sir; all right, sir!" the prisoner exclaimed quickly, "that suits me fine!"

Something to Remember

(The Observer in Family Herald and Weekly Star.)

We need to keep before us, and to make our children understand, the wicked depravity of the Germans which led those strongest and best of all the world to go out and oppose with their very lives, Germans and all their works. I am greedy for their reputation, among us and especially among those of the coming generation. I want them to understand that it was not for a fad, nor for gain, nor for anything but righteousness which must always fight against wrong, that so many millions of the Allies suffered death and un-speakable miseries in this twentieth century at any rate, and that is why I should like to have those German films exhibited throughout the length and breadth of the civilized world, that men may remember why we hated the Germans well enough to send all that was dearest and most valuable to work their destruction. And another thing, during the war they were setting their prisoners and keeping their women and children at work, preparing toys and other merchandise with which to flood the world after the war, before other nations had time to work their goods onto the markets. Ship loads of Christmas goods have already made their way to some Atlantic ports. They are certain to creep into Canada one way or another. To me it would appear to be treason to the memories of those who lie dead in France and Flanders fields, to permit our little children this Christmas time to play with toys manufactured by German hands. Although defeated they are still the same Germans let us remember, and until they have shown us by their works that they have changed their wicked principles, I do not see how we can have truck and trade with them and preserve any shadow of consistency.

A GERMAN DENIAL. BERLIN, Dec. 8. Semi-official parliamentary news agency, yesterday, issued a statement denying rumours abroad that the committee investigating the war guilt of German leaders in 1914 had discontinued its meeting. On the contrary, the statement says, it is intended to conduct the investigation with energy and a conclusion, but new methods will be adopted, which will make it impossible for witnesses to misuse the accommodating spirit shown them for party purposes. The investigating committee intends to conclude its inquiry into the manner in which President Wilson's peace tentatives were received, as soon as possible, so that all possibilities of the spring and early summer of 1917 can be subjected to scrutiny.

 Georges Carpentier said this evening regarding the rumors of contracts for fights with Dempsey. "I have signed nothing; I am waiting for offers. I want a little time to think it over." Seldom has a boxer returned from a victorious campaign with such a well-known name as Carpentier got.

BROUGHT IN SURVIVORS.
 ST. JOHN, N.B., Dec. 9.
 The liner Mississippi arrived in port to-day from Havre. She had on board fifteen survivors of the French liner Colmar, which sank off the Nova Scotian coast on Saturday between Canso and Sable Island.

UNANIMOUSLY AGAINST.
 BERLIN, Dec. 9.
 The only voice in Germany, advocating immediately yielding to the Entente demands, that the protocol in connection with the Peace Treaty be signed, is an Independent Socialist newspaper, according to the diplomatic correspondent of the Nord Deutsche Zeitung. Apart from this newspaper, says the correspondent, there is, thank God, unanimity from right to left, contrasting with the sharp division of opinion occasioned by the signing of the Peace Treaty.

D'ANNUNZIO HAS NO WAR CHEST.
 ROME, Dec. 8.
 The Popolo Romano to-day says that Gabrielle D'Annunzio has assured the Italian Government that he will not undertake any new expeditions, or go beyond the Armistice line. It is rumored that D'Annunzio's funds are exhausted, and that he is in an embarrassed situation. There is much speculation in Rome as to how he will manage to pay his troops, unless an agreement is reached with the Italian Govt.

DEVOUTLY TO BE WISHED.
 LONDON, Dec. 9.
 Andrew Bonar Law, Government spokesman, declared in the House of Commons to-day that there was little reason to doubt that communications proceeding between the Allied and associated powers and Germany, with reference to immediate ratification of the Peace Treaty would have a satisfactory issue.

GREEKS HAVE REACHED LIMIT.
 SALONIKI, Dec. 7.
 Greek troops in Asia Minor have advanced to the line fixed by the Peace Conference, according to an official statement issued at Army Headquarters here. The zone of occupation fixed for the Greeks has thus been completely occupied.

BIG FIVE TO BIG FOUR.
 PARIS, Dec. 8.
 The Supreme Council to-day took up the unfinished business of the Peace Conference in an effort to dispose of the most urgent questions. It purposes also to decide upon the reference of the other pending questions to the proper quarters for decision, after the big five becomes the big four, as it is expected the Supreme Council, with the four principal Allied Powers represented, will continue to meet after the American delegates leave to-morrow. As far as the Americans are concerned, the Supreme Council will cease to exist after the signing of the Hungarian Peace Treaty. It is as yet not decided who will sign that document for the United States, although in all probability it will be Ambassador Wallace.

PARIS SHOULDERS CARPENTIER.
 PARIS, Dec. 7.
 George Carpentier, who defeated Joe Beckett of London, on Thursday last for the boxing championship of Europe, arrived at the Gare Du Nord to-night and received an enthusiastic welcome from 10,000 persons, who had gathered to greet him. Carpentier was hoisted to the shoulders of the crowd and carried along in a triumphant procession.

PLACING THE RESPONSIBILITY.
 NEW YORK, Dec. 8.
 Failure of the United States Senate to ratify the Peace Treaty is directly responsible for the refusal of the German delegates to sign the Peace Protocol, according to Ernest Maxheim, Professor of Political Economy and International Law at the University of Liège Professor Maxheim was one of the Belgian Government's delegates to the International Labor Congress.

CARRANZA IMPLICATED.
 WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.
 Evidence that Carranza in Mexico, with the knowledge and support of President Carranza, plotted to instigate a revolution in the United States, and to seize the border States acquired by the American Government in 1848, is contained in the memorandum presented to President Wilson by Senator Hall, Chairman of the Foreign Relations Sub-Committee, investigating the Mexican situation.

"ATLANTIC" LAID UP.
 CLEVELAND, Ohio, Dec. 9.
 The Handley-Page airplane, which made a forced landing here several weeks ago, while on a non-stop flight from New York to Chicago, will be stored here for the winter, and workmen to-day completed the dismantling of the machine. Repairs to the wings, which were damaged when the plane crashed, was postponed until the spring, because of the delay in the shipment of parts from England. The crew, headed by Vice-Admiral Kerr, former commander of the British naval squadron in the Adriatic, has gone to New York.

BOLSHEVIKS THIRTEEN POINTS.
 DORPAT, Dec. 9.
 The Bolshevik delegation, which is here to discuss the possibilities of peace with representatives of the Baltic States, to-day published their thirteen points for peace; their conditions declare that the Treaty must be based on the principle of self determination and without any indemnities. The terms prepared are, first, mutual recognition of independence; second, suspension of state of war; third, suspension of hostilities and determination of the time for withdrawal of the troops; fourth, declaration of the Estonian Govt. of the non existence of an alliance of the states warring with the Soviet; fifth, similar declarations with reference to other forces opposed to the Soviet Government; sixth, the interment and disarmament of General Yudenitch, Commander of the Russian Northwest army, and the empowering of his war stores under seal; seventh, amnesty for alliances condemned for support of the Soviet Government, or taking part of the third international; eighth, provisions for a commercial treaty; ninth, resumption of diplomatic relations; tenth, resumption of postal and telegraphic relations; eleventh, joining up of railways; twelfth, transit over Estonian ports bound for Russia, and thirteenth, the establishment of dockage facilities for Soviet Russian bound goods.

Of all the poisons taken into the blood, the germs and pus contributed by diseased gums (Pyorrhoea) are the most destructive to the human system. If every red blood cell is forced to fight against numbers of germs to the cell, the blood cannot attend to the building up of the body, and if allowed to continue the system is bound to break down and eventually you are an invalid. Kidney, stomach, heart trouble, rheumatism and many other diseases are brought on by diseased gums and teeth.

Songs o' the Sea.

Old Jock paused for a moment from his arduous labor of back splicing a hemp strop. Eagerly he relit his obstinate clay pipe. A smile of satisfaction shone over his weather-beaten old face as the smoke came anew in clouds, writes A. B. W. Curran Reddy, in Blighty, London. Without a moment's hesitation, he resumed his work with marlinspike and neatly whipped strands. At the same time he commenced yet another of those queer rhythmic jargons of his old sailing days.

As a boy Jock roamed around the Pacific in an old American wind-jammer. He retains much that is characteristic of clipper days. No word of his ever speaks in praise of steamships; he is an encyclopedia of sail. Turbines do not interest him, but he can spin a yarn for both dog watches on every yard of canvas from the main skysail to the flying jib. He swears by the old sailing ships.

Jock's particular weakness is for songs. He must know thousands of chantes, for he rolls them off unheeding like verses from the Book of Solomon. His voice is cracked, and his knowledge of music is probably negligible. Certainly he betrays little evidence of any. But as he hauls on the deck tackle or does something for which some effort is essential, a wheezy chorus instinctively bursts from his wizened throat:

Oh, was you never down Lima way,
Down Lima way?
There's golden rivers, so they say,
Down Lima way.
Heave 'er taut! Heave 'er taut!
An' clap on 'er stich fer Lima port.
Good-bye, my bonnie lassie,
We're off to Cal-la-o.

Down Lima way!
He has songs for every occasion. Movement inspires him to a fresh outburst. Most of his repertoire is crudely comic, a little of sentimental and some quite dimly maudlin.

When spoken to concerning his chantes old Jock relaxes into a uncommunicative mood. He thinks we are poking fun at him. The reserve of some old seamen is sphinxlike. Occasionally a few bare details will half unconsciously escape him, but only as a concession to a stolid perseverance.

Every line of his queer jargon smacks of the salt seas. The brine buffets in the ambling gait of them. He has snatches of song more or less appropriate to every job aboard ship, from working a capstan to "bowsing" a halliard taut. We sternly set our faces against ribald laughter simply to hear the wheezy old relic of bygone days "get under way" with a new inspiration.

In his unctuous way he is funnier than Coquelin or Dan Leno.

In a particularly confidential burst he recently related that in the old sailing days of his youth—"when seamen were seamen"—each crew of working hands was led by a chantyman, who sang a line or two of recitative, haphazard nonsense, to which the toiling seamen added a so-called chorus. Jock assured us that a chantyman he once knew who hailed from Florida could keep a crew singing for an hour without once repeating himself. Old Jock rates him a step higher than Nelson, side by side with Capt. Kidd and Paul Jones. We sometimes think that he once shipped under the Jolly Roger—But there's nothing about it on his papers.

Old Jock is still singing. His voice floats down from the boat deck above:

Er skipper's name was Aaron Rugg.
His face was ripe ma-hog-ny!
Aye! Aye! he loved a well-filled jug,
He'd keel a nigger an' string a thug;
But he wasn't the chap to log any.

Jock is going ahead with his quaint nonsense at a rate o' knots. The sea road is thronged with all sorts of queer folk, but Jock is the queerest to be encountered in many a mile.

By Air to the Pole.

Going to the North Pole by airship, a feat which is about to be attempted, is no new idea. In fact, it is very old; older, indeed, than even the balloon itself. True it is that, until Andre set off on his ill-fated expedition in July, 1897, no one had actually attempted the feat. But so far back as 1870, a French Jesuit, named Francis Lana, proposed to navigate the Arctic Ocean in a species of "aerial boat." This queer contrivance was to be raised above the ice by means of four hollow balls of thin copper, from which the air had been exhausted.

In 1785, two aeronauts named Roder and Romain, built at Calais a "fireproof" balloon, into the construction of which asbestos, or some similar non-inflammable substance, entered largely. In it they proposed to sail from Archangel across the North Polar regions to Alaska. While experimenting near Boulogne, however, their "fireproof" balloon burst into flames in mid-air, and both the experimenters were killed.

Nothing daunted, other "balloonists" continued to build innumerable "arctic airships," every one of them warranted to sail to the Pole in almost next to no time at all. But none of them got beyond the experimental stage, although Mr. J. B. Laeale's "aerial cruiser," which was worked by a crew, would undoubtedly have been dispatched in 1859 in search of the Franklin expedition, had funds permitted.

Professor Wise, too, in 1873, came within an ace of starting for the Pole in a pair of twin balloons, giving together a lifting power of 15,900 lbs., a carrying power of 9,500 lbs., and 7,500 lbs. of disposable ballast.

Queer Indian Ferries.

In a country where rivers are subject to sudden and heavy floods, bridges are in many cases so insecure that ferries must always be maintained in addition. Such is the case in India, and the methods of crossing streams to-day are what they have been from the earliest times, says an exchange. An American consular officer tells how he was taken across an Indian river at the time of a freshet. The contrivance was simple, and has been used in the Orient as long as history shows any record.

A cord having been fastened to a large, elongated gourd, and a smaller gourd being also tied to it, the native gets astride, and laying his breast up on the larger gourd paddles across with his hands and feet.

Women, too, avail themselves of this singular contrivance, under the escort of a ferryman, who similarly mounted, takes his charge in tow, carries her basket, with perhaps a child in it, on his head, and conveys them safely across.

Herd of cattle swim these flooded rivers like water rats, and the herd boys, as a matter of course, takes the tail of the hindermost bullock in his hand and thus gains a very comfortable lift across.

These methods of crossing rivers, however, are hardly in accordance with our ideas of comfort. So the American thought one day as he stood, after a long ride, on the bank of a wide and rapid stream which separated him from his halting place. He did not relish the idea of buffeting the muddy current on a horse of gourds, but as there was not a boat within twenty miles it seemed as if he must either do this or bivouac on the bank with his dinner.

While he was in this dilemma a native signified that he would soon get the foreigner right. From a neighboring hut he brought a native bedstead—not a four-poster such as westerners use, but a small light frame of wood having four little legs and held together by the interlacing of a piece of cord, which thus forms a sort of netted bottom to this simple piece of furniture. The native next brought out four round earthen pots, and after protecting the bottom of each with a few inches of sand he put the legs of the cot into the pots and signified that the vessel was ready to be launched.

As the American sat doubled up on this extemporized raft in company with his saddle, he found himself raised an inch or so above the level of the water, the earthen pots forming admirable floats. A couple of lusty swimmers then took him in tow and soon landed him on the opposite bank.

The True History of "Little Jack Horner."

A rhyme very familiar to young folks is that which tells how "Little Jack Horner sat in a corner Eating his Christmas pie; He put in his thumb, and pulled out a plum.

And said, 'What a good boy am I!'

Why Master Horner thought himself such a good boy is a question that may have occurred to many juveniles as requiring some answer, and when they have read the true history of his doings they will agree that the answer to that question is as great a puzzle as ever, for Jack Horner's conduct shows him to have been anything but a good boy.

The ancient town of Glastonbury, in Somersetshire, used at one time to possess a very beautiful abbey, inhabited by generations of monks, who spent their days and years in ceaseless prayer and praise.

This abbey was afterwards destroyed by the ruthless hand of Henry VIII, but when Jack Horner was a boy it was in all its glory.

The abbot was a great man, tremendously rich and the head of a great many monks.

Jack Horner was neither abbot nor monk, but only scullery lad in the great abbey kitchen. You might have seen him any day turning the spit, or running here and there at the beck and call of the abbey cooks—a red-headed, freckle-faced boy, with small, cunning-looking light grey eyes, and a big head.

Those were troublousome times for the abbot, for Henry VIII had sent to the abbot to demand that all the wealth which belonged to the abbey, together with the title deeds, should be delivered over to him on pain of death. This put the poor abbot in a terrible plight. At first he determined to resist the unjust exaction of the great monarch, but finding such resistance useless, he had decided to send the deeds to London, in compliance with the King's request.

But who was there to take them? It became known that the title deeds of the rich Abbey of Glastonbury were on their way to London, there was every probability of them being stolen. It was a perilous journey in those days from Glastonbury to London. Railways had not been invented, and there were no policemen. At length one of the monks, Brother Ambrose, by name, hit upon a scheme. He proposed that a large pie should be baked in the great oven of the kitchen as a present for the King, and that the deeds should be put inside it. This plan recommended itself to the abbot. But another difficulty arose; how was it to be conveyed to the King? Brother Ambrose's great mind was equal even to the solution of this. "There is in the kitchen," said he, "an honest country lad, by name of Jack Horner. Let us send him. He is not able to read a single letter, and is not likely to suspect the contents of the pie."

Jack was called in from the kitchen to the great hall, where abbot and monks were assembled. The abbot took a ring from his finger and hung it round the boy's neck, so that upon showing it he might gain admittance to the royal presence. The pie was placed in his charge, and he started upon his journey.

For a long time he jogged along comfortably enough, then the wolf in his inside began to make its presence known, and Jack felt those cravings for food which were never long absent from his hungry stomach. Then it seemed to him that a pie baked in the abbey kitchen expressly for the King must be good. First of all he put his nose to the pie, and then he peeped through the hole in the crust, but neither sight nor smell satisfied his craving; he inserted his finger and thumb through the hole.

The plum he pulled out was a piece of parchment covered with writing—a wonderful mystery to Jack. "Did ever anybody see the likes o' this!" he said, turning it over and staring at it with all his eyes. "It's a puzzle to I where the man's to be found as can eat this." With a shrewd wink he buttoned up the parchment inside his jacket, and continued his journey. In due course he reached London, and was admitted to the presence of the King.

There he broke the crust of the pie,

Maternity Home Campaign.

LAST NIGHT'S SUCCESSFUL END-ING.

With $87,329 in hand, and assurances received, of contributions, the committee can confidently count upon the Hon. M. G. Winter as able announcement at the Maternity Hospital last night that the objective of $100,000 would be reached.
The announcement caused intense pleasure, and the cheering was an enthusiastic as ever witnessed in the Hall before. It was a wonderful night and a fitting finale to what will be termed the greatest campaign ever undertaken in this cot-

When one considers the immense sum of money raised in St. John's last night on the part of the Salvation Army to attempt to raise this amount. They are to be congratulated, and the ladies and gentlemen who assisted them are also to be congratulated. All worked like triangles freely they gave of their time, and the gratitude of thankful hearts for the future will in some measure recompense them for their efforts.

and a delightful supper.

M. H. A. Col. and Mrs. Adby.

City Representatives:—His Worship
the Mayor.

Government Representative:—Head
of Government Health Department
when announced.

With a representative committee in charge the institution is certain to be properly conducted.

The chairman also announced that the entire cost of the campaign will be met by the Salvation Army, and as this would amount to several thousand dollars it was a splendid contribution. Not a single cent of the money subscribed will be used to defray the cost of the drive—the whole total will be spent on the erection of the building and equipment.

Mr. Winter complimented the workers one and all. Soliciting money is not a pleasant task under the most favorable conditions and with weather such as we have had of late it is anything but pleasant.

Col. Adby then rose and in an impressive speech thanked the workers for their grand efforts. The colonel overlooked no one and gave praise to
all. It was a great satisfaction to him, personally, to know the drive had carried out so well, and he was deeply grateful to all.

Mr. Dunbar was the concluding speaker and he briefly reviewed the work of the drive. He was thankful to the various committees and collectors for their co-operation. He paid tribute to the worth of the chairman, Hon.
Mr. Winter, to whose wholehearted interest and energy the success of the drive was mainly due. He also expressed his appreciation of the kindness and hospitality of the people of St. John's. He had visited many parts of the world and he could truthfully say he had never been so cordially received as here.

The drive had been an immense success. It was the greatest and most successful of its kind in the world.
This was a broad statement but it was a fact nevertheless, that according to the per capita nothing to compare with it had ever been accomplished anywhere.

The maternity hospital is now assured. Building operations will begin in the spring. A suitable site will be selected by the advisory board and in a year's time it is hoped to have the building running.

The Salvation Army deserved the support it has received in this big project. They succeeded in interesting workers of all other denominations—
Churchmen, Catholics, Methodists,
Presbyterians and Congregationalists.

The chairman stated that the following had been invited to accept appointments on the Advisory Board, and that nearly all had already consented.

Representative citizens who have been active leaders in the movement
since the start:—W. B. Grieve, M. G.
Winter.

Anglican Representatives:—Dr.
Carnell, Eric Bowring, Esq. Mrs. H.
Outerbridge.

Roman Catholic Representatives:—
Hon. Dr. Campbell, Hon. J. D. Ryan,
Mrs. (Dr.) Scully.

Methodist Representatives:—Dr.
Roberts, Reuben Horwood, Esq., Mrs. R.
A. Squires.

Presbyterian Representatives:—Dr.
Fraser, J. J. Mackay, Esq., Mrs. R. G.
Reid.

Congregational Representatives:—
H. E. Cowan, Esq., Mrs. Dudley.
S. A. Representatives:—W. H. Cave,
M. H. A. Col. and Mrs. Adby.

City Representatives:—His Worship
the Mayor.

Government Representative:—Head
of Government Health Department
when announced.

With a representative committee in charge the institution is certain to be properly conducted.

The chairman also announced that the entire cost of the campaign will be met by the Salvation Army, and as this would amount to several thousand dollars it was a splendid contribution. Not a single cent of the money subscribed will be used to defray the cost of the drive—the whole total will be spent on the erection of the building and equipment.

Mr. Winter complimented the workers one and all. Soliciting money is not a pleasant task under the most favorable conditions and with weather
such as we have had of late it is anything but pleasant.

Col. Adby then rose and in an impressive speech thanked the workers
for their grand efforts. The colonel overlooked no one and gave praise to
all. It was a great satisfaction to him,
personally, to know the drive had carried out so well, and he was deeply
grateful to all.

Mr. Dunbar was the concluding speaker and he briefly reviewed the work of the drive. He was thankful to the various committees and collectors
for their co-operation. He paid tribute to the worth of the chairman, Hon.
Mr. Winter, to whose wholehearted interest and energy the success of the drive was mainly due. He also expressed his appreciation of the kindness and hospitality of the people of St. John's. He had visited many parts of the world and he could truthfully
say he had never been so cordially received as here.

The drive had been an immense success. It was the greatest and most successful of its kind in the world.
This was a broad statement but it was a fact nevertheless, that according to the per capita nothing to compare with it had ever been accomplished
anywhere.

The maternity hospital is now assured. Building operations will begin in the spring. A suitable site will be selected by the advisory board and in a year's time it is hoped to have the building running.

The Salvation Army deserved the support it has received in this big project. They succeeded in interesting
workers of all other denominations—
Churchmen, Catholics, Methodists,
Presbyterians and Congregationalists.

Each night they have surrounded the banquet table and spent a pleasant hour, each day they have canvassed St.
John's and solicited the money which made the drive an unequalled success.
Everybody was pleased last night and they had just come to be. It has been a colossal and magnificent success and much good will be the outcome.

The writer again extends his congratulations to the Hon. Mr. Winter and his energetic workers.

Wedding Bells.
FOWLER-HIBBS.
One of the prettiest weddings of the season was solemnized at the Methodist Church, Topsail, on Wednesday, Nov. 26 at 3.30 p.m., by the Rev. James Nurse, the contracting parties being Miss Phoebe Florence Fowler, daughter of the late Thomas and Mrs. Mary Fowler, of Chamberlains, and Mr.
Reginald Hibbs, son of the late William and Mrs. Julia Hibbs, of Topsail, C.B. The bride was becomingly dressed in a costume of navy blue serge with hat to match, and entered the church leaning on the arm of her brother, Mr. George Fowler, who acted as father-giver, while Mr. William J.
Hibbs, brother of the groom, ably performed the duties of best man; Mr.
John H. Fowler, nephew of the bride, acted as bridesmaid. The chief bridesmaid was Miss Elsie B. Hibbs, sister of the groom, who was dressed in gray silk poplin; Miss Lilian Chapter, niece of the bride, also acted as bridesmaid, being dressed in navy blue silk poplin. Mrs. A. O. Nurse presided at the organ and rendered music appropriate to the occasion. After the ceremony the bridal party motored to the home of the brother of the bride at Chamberlains, where a sumptuous repast was partaken, only the immediate relatives of the bride and groom participating. A very enjoyable evening was spent, after which the happy couple motored to "Palaret Villa," Topsail, their future home. The presents to the bride were many and valuable, testifying to the popularity of both bride and groom. We wish Mr. and Mrs. Hibbs health, wealth, and happiness in their voyage over the matrimonial sea.—Com.

The 9th Day! Notching the Trail to Christmas! "Jaeger" Wool Goods First with "Kearney First."

KEARNEY SAYS:—
This is the second week of my "to the fore" effort. Here I ally with my famous Xmas slogan—"Kearney First"—another word of great power and meaning—"Jaeger". With the exploitation of my "Jaeger" goods has come the birth of a great confidence in what I sell. It is not only "Jaeger's" aim to be better than other makes, but to reach the highest height of minute perfection in wool manufacture.
"Jaeger's" care not for competition; they watch not others. They have no need to. No other firm, no other article of wool manufacture, has been proven to be better than "Jaeger". The little label "Jaeger, All Wool" on every article that comes from the "Jaeger" factory has cost a fortune in sterling to put there. It means what it says, "All Wool". No other firm has such a label.

I have these goods—all the famous "Jaeger" line.
With me this week it is "Kearney First"—"Jaeger First"! The greatest name in local haberdashery—the greatest name in wool manufacture allied together for my "Victory Xmas."

Give him one of the "Jaeger" products for Xmas.
"Jaeger" Wool; heat productive 100 per cent. alcohol.
Then he cannot say: "You could have bought better."

A Reasonable Argument
Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir,—Kindly allow me space in your highly esteemed paper for a few words concerning us returned soldiers. I have been refused help by the Re-establishment Committee, like many others, and I ask you are we getting a square deal? I think such treatment is an insult to the majority of the returned men. Of course we are not asking to be pampered or pitted in any way by some people think. The reason why so many of our boys are unemployed and leaving the country to-day, is because nobody seem to want the services of the returned soldier here in Newfoundland. I feel pretty safe in saying that the majority of the returned soldiers have to take what employment they can get, and start over again, much worse off than when they left to go overseas. Of course, some had their positions reserved for them. Regarding the extra gratuity, I should like to say that if a man who served three or four years with the colors, were to get an extra bonus, he would simply be on a level, as regards wages, with the man who stayed behind in Newfoundland. Am I not right in saying that Newfoundland is very ungrateful to her boys who gave up all for the cause of freedom?
In conclusion, I might say that it is quite possible for our Government to spend money in a great deal more foolishly than in giving larger gratuities to our returned soldiers. Let me suggest that they cut some of the Government officials salaries then.

A War Office Blunder.

(From the Toronto Globe.)

It's a dull day that does not contain at least one disclosure of how the British War Office does things better left undone, or the contrary. Capacity for surprise from that quarter had almost been lost, but a new revelation has shocked the Empire and many other sections of the world into a state of almost speechless indignation. It appears that the Solons who preside over His Majesty's armies actually proposed that the kilt should have no place in the new uniforms for peace service! It's a wonder the proposition was not accompanied by a circular suggesting that the Scotch accent be barred with the kilts, and that all regiments from North of the Tweed be named after flowers, so as to incite the love of beauty, the spirit of peace, and the fairness of allowing a reasonable proportion of Englishmen to occupy the best positions in the Empire. One cannot find words to comment fittingly upon the lack of imagination or anything else in the brain space of officials who would do away with the kilts. Poets and other writers would be deprived at one fell stroke of opportunities for glowing and picturesque descriptions of Highlanders on the march or in action. Few authors can write good poetry or impelling prose about trousers. Those garments do not lend themselves to that kind of treatment. And what about the feeling of the soldiers themselves? No matter how gnarled his knees, how far asunder or near together nature has placed them, how little of beauty they may have, or how cold they may be on occasion, there's not a man of the Scots regiments who wouldn't wear his kilts at any time, in any place, in preference to the bifurcated garment affected by other males who have never known the joys of anything in that shape of a kilt since the days of their helpless infancy. To the ordinary observer it might appear that the War Office would have all it could worry about at this time, in view of conditions in Europe and elsewhere, without provoking a rebellion in Scotland, assisted by every place in the world to its remotest corners, for there are Scotsmen in all of them. The officials who conceived

The London of the Romans lies buried about 18 ft. below the level of Cheapside, and still deeper than that is buried the earlier London of the Britons. The appearance of all fine gems is improved by gaslight. A perfect emerald, despite its color, which if anything else would turn to a dull bluish hue, is only intensified in brilliancy of color by artificial light. The blue sapphire, though darkened, remains true to its colour, as by daylight. The alexandrite is the only gem that changes, turning from a dark olive to a brilliant blood-red by candle or gas light.

Buoyancy of the Air.

Temperature Has a Great Deal to do With Buoyancy of an Airship.

Weather observations are even more important to an airship than to water-borne craft. Temperature has a great deal to do with the buoyancy of an airship. Here, however, we behold a paradox; for the officer, prior to a flight, carefully shades his thermometer from the rays of the sun before reading it, although his airship is going to be exposed to full sunshine.

It is the same paradox that gives rise to indignation in the average citizen when, at the close of a broiling July day, he reads the official weather report, according to which the highest temperature was only ninety. He feels positive it was at least a hundred—and so it was over a sun-baked pavement.

The universal practice of taking air temperatures in the shade is not sheer perversity on the part of the weather man. He would like to be able to answer the question, "How hot is it in the sun?" Unfortunately, this question merely prompts another, "How hot is that in the sun?" A thermometer exposed to the sunshine registers the temperature of the glass and metal of which it is made, not the temperature of the air.

The shaded thermometer registers more or less accurately the temperature of the air, perhaps the most important factor of weather. The thermometer is doubly protected by its wooden case. Perhaps there is also a ventilating device in the shape of a revolving fan.

An alternative to reading the thermometer in the shade is to whirl it rapidly in the air at the end of a cord. The excessive heat which the instrument absorbs is immediately lost by conduction to the air.—Popular Science.

Phosphate Industry of Ocean Island.

Ocean Island, a tiny dot on the Pacific Ocean, only five miles in circumference, is the richest tract of land, for its size, under the British flag. This island, which is really a vast deposit of exceedingly rich phosphate of lime, was discovered in a curious manner. A New Zealand concern, with an office on a back street in Sydney, New South Wales, had a but colored, irregular shaped piece of rock to keep its doors open. A man interested in guano, who knew a little about rock phosphate, put the stone in his pocket one day and subjected it to many tests at home. He returned and tried to trace its history, but all he could learn was that a trader from Ocean Island had left it there. He took the next steamer to the island and discovered that the place was literally covered with the phosphate, a small pinch of which will enable any plant, on any soil, to double its fertility. He offered some Australian capitalists the chance to form a company to work the fields, but they passed it up, and a group of London financiers accepted the proposal and have established a plant there which now employs over 2,000 natives. The total native population of the island is 500 and they are the wealthiest natives in the world. Much of the land still belongs to them and the company has to pay them a royalty of sixpence a ton for every ton of phosphate shipped. This royalty is used by the British Government to benefit the island natives.

Resents Report.

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly allow me space in your paper to contradict a statement which appeared in a recent edition of the Daily Star, where it stated in most sarcastic terms of a man going abroad in a naked condition, and likening him to Adam, in the Garden of Eden. The unfortunate person, it is true, is somewhat dejected, but he does not go abroad in the manner described by your contemporary. It is an affliction that comes to those so afflicted, by circumstances over which they have no control, and the unfortunate man in this case is one of the oldest and most respected residents of Freshwater, and the account given of him is much resented by the people of this part of the city. The report was no doubt given that paper, by some parties, who through ignorance or otherwise, are always ready to make amusement for themselves at the cost of others' misfortunes, but they should remember the old saying "we are all born, but not buried," and if it happened to them would they like such a report.

Thanking you for space,
Yours very truly,

Buying the Engagement Ring.

"I often wonder whether at any subsequent period of his life a young man feels more self-conscious than when he first proceeds to buy an engagement ring," said a jeweller to the writer. "There is, after all, nothing in the act to be ashamed of; yet, to judge from the behaviour of some of these love-stricken customers, one would think that they had to steal a ring instead of honestly purchasing it."

"Many a time have I watched a young man pass and re-pass, gazing furtively into my shop until it was void of customers, before venturing in, and even then, in nine cases out of ten, he has not the courage to ask for what he wants outright. He will buy some trivial object—a scarf-pin, perhaps, first; and on being asked if there is anything else, recollects that he wants a ring—a lady's ring. A question as to the size disturbs his equanimity terribly, but he is generally provided with the answer—another ring, a hole cut in a visiting card, a piece of string, the upper part of his own little finger, are still used as guides to this important point.

"Sometimes, but very occasionally, the lady accompanies her intended on this delicate errand, and then the efforts to conceal their relationship are most amusing. I remember one such pair pretending they were brother and sister, and buying the circlet for a third person. They consulted as to whether "Fred" would like this or that, and having finally made a choice, the lady slipped the jewel on her own slim finger, remarking that her rings always fitted "Lucy." They departed quite under the impression that their innocent little deception had proved successful."

The bouffant skirt of a coral velvet with tulle evening gown is bestrewn with silk rose petals.

Natural paradise on a tete de negre velvet hat is one of the most luxurious combinations imaginable.

A blouse of gray satin has short kimono sleeves and a new neckline cut very low and filled in with a sheer yoke.

Sheaves of plaited white organdie and bands of black velvet are some extremes to which collars and cuffs may go.

Although some of the evening gowns favor the high, transparent back, most of them are extremely décollete.

The waistline varies from those short and fitted effects to semi-fitted ones which join the skirt below the normal waistline.

A wrap of red duvetyne with cut-work and patent leather applique is a closely fitting sleeve cut in one piece with the cape back.

Buttons run from the throat to the hem of a smart gown of Poiret have the collar, turn-back cuffs, slit pockets and hand-bound buttonholes made of duvetyne.

Some War "Spy" Stories

The recent publication of stories of German spies who tried to obtain information regarding our defences and military and naval plans, recalls many strange incidents which occurred in the early days of the war. On one occasion a certain large town in East Anglia was receiving a great deal of attention from the "Zepps," and during that time thousands of troops were stationed on a heath situated on the outskirts of the town. Try as they might, the Zeppelin commanders could not locate the camp, and eventually one of Germany's agents had to come to the rescue. The first intimation that something was wrong was at the moment that a Zeppelin was steering direct for the camp, when from the dark, lonely heath a rocket mounted into the sky and burst. The result can be imagined, but although many bombs were dropped, none succeeded in hitting the camp.

For nine successive nights this was repeated, during which time a trap was set to catch the firework merchant. Watch was kept to locate the spot from which the rocket was discharged, and the following night a circle of men was placed round it. No sooner did "Mr. Zepp" appear, than up went the rocket from the centre of the circle of men, who—as pre-arranged—closed in. Great was the speculation as to how many spies would be caught gapping, but a meeting at the centre found nothing. The gentle spy was too clever to be caught by such a simple trap, but had our authorities watched during the day, instead of at night, the result might have been reversed, as it was quite clear that the rockets were set during the day and fired by secret means during the night.

Perhaps what might rank as one of the smartest tricks played on a spy was also carried out in East Anglia—the happy hunting ground of German agents. At a lonely spot on the Wash, a sentry had cause to report the mysterious doings of an equally mysterious individual dressed as a clergyman. As an officer was not immediately available, a senior N.C.O. circulated the man's description to the surrounding Coastguards, who very soon laid the suspect by the heels. Having secured his man, the N.C.O. wired to his Brigade headquarters that he had "caused the arrest of a suspected spy," to which came the reply "identify your prisoner." Gathering his witnesses, the N.C.O. began his cross-examination, and the supposed clergyman very soon admitted to telling lies. By this time the missing officer commanding the garrison—who was at one time a Secret Service man—arrived, and took matters in hand. After a few questions, the suspect was considered to be a spy, and arrangements were made for his removal to Brigade Headquarters, but the general there—who had not heard one word of the evidence—cancelled the O.C.'s order, by wiring "release your prisoner." Thunderstruck at such an order, the O.C. could not obey the general, but being a man of brains, he soon outwitted his superior officer.

Proceeding to the detention room where the prisoner had been lodged, the O.C., with apology written all over his face, craved the prisoner's pardon, and, in fact, did everything to recompense the man for any discomfort he had been put to. As a parting act of regret, he confided to the man that there was only "one road which could be travelled between A. and B. as the other two were alive with sentries and police," which would mean hours and hours of delay if not spending the night in a cell. Grateful for the hint, the supposed clergyman mounted his cycle and rode down the "clear" road; but, no sooner had he got away from the camp than the officer sprang to the telephone and rang up the Chief Constable at the nearest town.

This is what passed over the wire: "Is that the Chief Constable of N—? Good! Well, there's a clergyman coming your way down the main N— road. Riding a push bike with a small wicker carrier in front. Clean shaved; looks simple, but has got a bad memory. Can't touch him myself. Don't thank me, thank my general."

The result is obvious, but had the O.C. done exactly as ordered, the spy would have had a clear road to freedom. I found out afterwards that the general had got all his promotions through "influence"—whether German or through family connections, I can't say. But he never ought to have a responsible job.

The Earnings of Famous Billiard-Cueists.

It is far more difficult to earn a living as a professional billiard player or cricketer. Players of the first rank, and they number about a dozen, earn incomes which equal, if not exceed, the salaries of Cabinet Ministers and judges, while players of the second rank may make anything from £1,000 to £2,000 a season. Besides these two classes, there are men whose fame is confined to some provincial centre. They can be described as third-rate players, and their incomes may be anything from £200 to £500. As a rule the provincial professional's earnings are mostly derived from private lessons and exhibition games. It may come as a surprise to many persons to know that several professional exponents of the game have worked their way up from the position of ordinary markers in the billiard-rooms of public houses. As markers they were paid at the rate of 15s. to 25s. per week in addition to the tips they could manage to secure from their customers. Now, as professionals, their average earnings amount to something like £500 a year.

How People Carry Money.

It is marvellous when one considers the number and variety of things in which national characteristics manifest themselves. In the case of money, for instance, the average Englishman carries his gold, silver and coppers all loose in his trouser-pocket. When he desires to pay any given amount he pulls out a handful of mixed coins. The American citizen carries his "wad of bills" in a long, narrow pocket-book, in which the greenbacks lie flat. The American business man soon becomes an expert in the manipulation of this book. The Frenchman generally makes use of a plain leather purse with no particular distinguishing characteristics. The German, on the other hand, uses a fancy purse, embroidered in silks. The half-civilised capitalist from South America generally carries his dollars in a belt with cunningly-devised pockets. The Italian of the poorer class ties up his little fortune in a gaily coloured handkerchief, which he hides about his clothes. A similar course finds favour with the Spaniard, while the lower-class Russian exhibits a preference for his boots or the lining of his clothes as a hiding-place for his savings.

Remarkable Rents.

One of the most curious rents in existence is that paid yearly to the King by the Corporation of London. This consists of six horse-shoes, sixty-one nails, and two faggots—the annual rental for a moor in Shropshire and a forge in St. Clements Danes. Another strange rent is paid by the Duke of Marlborough in connection with his Woodstock estate. According to the ancient laws, the duke must send a new flag, embroidered with the fleur-de-lys, every year to the Sovereign of England. To fail in this respect would cause the estate to lapse to the Crown. Long ago St. Olave's Grammar School in Tooley Street, let a field in Horslevdown for a red rose, to be presented on Midsummer Day, annually, for several hundred years. Some three hundred years have yet to pass before this rent can be stopped. Some time since one of the London Borough Councils instituted a rent as remarkable as those in past years. A military band was permitted to practice twice weekly at a certain place in the borough in return for four free performances yearly in the local park.

THERE IS ONLY ONE GENUINE ASPIRIN

Only Tablets with "Bayer Cross" are Aspirin—No others!

If you don't see the "Bayer Cross" on the tablets, refuse them—they are not Aspirin at all. Your druggist gladly will give you the genuine "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" because genuine Aspirin now is made by Americans and owned by an American company.

There is not a cent's worth of German interest in Aspirin, all rights being purchased from the U. S. Government. During the war, acid imitations were sold as Aspirin in pill boxes and various other containers. But now you can get genuine Aspirin, plainly stamped with the safety "Bayer Cross"—Aspirin proved safe by millions for Headache, Toothache, Earache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Colds, Neuritis, and Pain generally.

Handy tin boxes of 12 tablets—also larger "Bayer" packages—Aspirin is the trade mark (Newfoundland Registration No. 761), of Bayer Manufacture of Monocetate of Salicylic acid. The Bayer Co., Sue. U.S.A.

In a Nutshell.

Like the sun, the modern gas fire warms solid objects—such as the furniture of a room or its occupants—without appreciably raising the temperature of the intervening air. At the same time the products of combustion in their passage up the chimney flue keep the atmosphere in a healthy motion. That is gas fire science and gas fire hygiene in a nutshell. There's something really fascinating about the nut-like flavor of Grape-Nuts. The strength and nutrition gleaned from this wheat and malted barley food make it a most sensible breakfast cereal, while its low cost adds true economy.
