PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 114 for the relief of Robert Ruff Martin.—Mr. Gray.

Bill No. 115 for the relief of Norah Kathleen Nevins Scott.—Mr. White (Mount Royal).

Bill No. 116 for the relief of Albert Thompson Johnston.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 117 for the relief of Isabel Catherine Rohrer White.—Mr. White (Mount Royal).

PRIVILEGE—MR. MULLINS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. MULLINS (Marquette): As a matter of privilege, I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question. I have received a letter from Manitoba from a former member of the house. The letter reads:

> There is a report circulating here, and in your constituency, that you contracted for all the available ocean space for cattle, and that the government had to bargain with you.
> Will you kindly let me know the facts, and oblige.

I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture if that is so, and whether I ever had anything to do with any contract for ocean space in any shape or form.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): So far as I am aware, the hon. member for Marquette has had nothing to do with the allotment of space.

EMBARGO ON RUSSIAN GOODS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Before the orders of the day are proceeded with, I promised the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) to lay on the table such documents as were in the possession of the department relating to the labour legislation of the Soviet Socialist Republic and other matters in connection with the embargo. There is a circular letter, one copy only of which is included among the papers, there being several hundred received by the department in printed form, protesting against the embargo. There were also similar letters in favour of it. That, I am advised, is all that is available.

ILLEGAL ENTRY OF JAPANESE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I wish to ask the Minister of Justice a question in regard to an investigation taking place in British Columbia. I have here an article which states:

> Illegal entry of hundreds of Japanese to British Columbia, forging and altering of passports, and questionable deals in fishing licences may be exposed by an investigation being conducted by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Has the Minister of Justice directed that inquiry to be held?

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): No investigation is going on at the instance of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Some investigation is taking place, I understand, at the instance of the Department of Immigration, and the police force, which is in the locality has offered its services to assist. That is all.

INCOME TAX

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I asked my right hon. friend yesterday whether he would consider giving to the house a statement which would make more intelligible the exact effect of the proposed increases and decreases in the income tax.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I have not had an opportunity to get it in the meantime.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my right hon. friend endeavour to let us have it as soon as possible?

Mr. BENNETT: I will.

DUTY ON MAGAZINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): May I ask the Prime Minister when we can expect to have laid on the table the briefs and representations made by the publishers to the government on tariff matters.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): There were two briefs, one last fall and one this year. Part of the submission was confidential—the question of cost—as I advised the hon. gentleman. The rest of it, I fancy, can be brought down at any time. I had forgotten entirely about it.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT AMENDMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the third reading of Bill No. 109, to amend the Income War Tax Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

TARIFF BOARD

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT, POWERS, DUTIES AND SALARIES

The house resumed from Monday, July 6, consideration in committee of Bill No. 47, to provide for the appointment of a tariff board.—Mr. Bennett—Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

On section 3.—Constitution of board.

Mr. RINFRET: Mr. Chairman, when this section was being discussed last night, along with the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Hanbury), I was endeavouring to demonstrate a few points in connection with the attitudes taken in this matter by the government and by the opposition. I wish to refer again to the very remarkable and convincing presentation of the case made last night by the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley). The hon. member showed very conclusively that in a matter of this kind it cannot be merely the question of recording facts in a mathematical fashion and he gave a number of examples taken from the work of the tariff commission in the United States. That body is composed of six members, three Republicans and three Democrats and the hon. member showed conclusively that on many occasions these commissioners differed as to the appreciation of the facts submitted to them. Following that remarkable speech by my colleague, and the examples he gave to the committee, I urge that it cannot be argued with any degree of conviction that the tariff board, now suggested to be set up by the Prime Minister will be merely a fact recording body. They will give more importance to some facts than to others; they will group those facts in accordance with their own conception of what the tariff policy should be, and in that grouping they will arrive at a conclusion which will naturally follow the working of their minds in the matter of tariff evidence. I do not think that there can be the least doubt about that. The Prime Minister says that you can have mathematical precision in the finding of facts, but I think he is contradicted by the very board to which he has drawn attention, that is, the tariff board of the United States. The hon. member for Hants-Kings has shown that every individual commissioner will bring his own conception of the fiscal policy to bear upon his appreciation of the evidence brought before him, and there can be no mathematical precision unless my right hon. friend is to argue that division is an integral part of mathematics.

I would refer to another matter which although not directly related to this bill, refers to the general matters which are now before the committee. The Prime Minister has urged that it is essential to have a tariff board to present conclusions or facts about the tariff before any changes are made. That statement is a direct condemnation of the attitude taken by himself and his government when they submitted last fall some four hundred changes in the tariff, all in the same direction, while two hundred additional changes are to be made during the present session. If we were to take the Prime Minister at his word, and agree to the passage of this bill, it would mean that we could ask him, with a great degree of logic, that he withdraw the resolutions concerning changes in the tariff until his own commission has considered those changes, Then, after this commission had passed upon the very items he is submitting at this session, they could be considered next year by the house.

The point upon which we differ is in connection with the character of this tariff board. The Prime Minister says that it must be judicial in character, and that therefore it is necessary to have an extended tenure of office. The Prime Minister states that a tariff board of this kind may well serve under one government or another because its work will be to find facts and submit them for the consideration of the government. We take a different attitude; we believe that this board will advise the government. It is true that it will gather facts, but there is a possibility that a conflict of opinion would be created which would be most regrettable. We take the stand that the framing of a tariff is not a judicial matter; that it is a matter of policy, a matter of responsibility. The government may use such a board to gather information and submit facts, but no government would desire to be hampered in its work of framing a tariff by a judicial board hearing evidence and coming to conclusions upon fiscal matters which might be in direct opposition to the views held by the government itself.

The Prime Minister has made many eloquent speeches, all exceedingly moderate in tone, in an effort to impress this house with the fact that he had no motives at all in this matter and that his only desire—a very sincere one, I believe—is to constitute a board which will be above any suspicion. May I say that his bill has not created a similar impression upon the public mind and upon the press generally. When we reached eleven o'clock last night I was just alluding to an editorial which appeared in the Montreal Star of June 29, which editorial dealt with the two tariff boards. The Star says that the issue is clear as crystal. I do not intend to read the entire editorial as probably hon. members have read it already, but I intend to allude to a part of it which impressed me very much and which no doubt will impress the committee. The Star takes the attitude that the tariff board which my hon. friend wants to constitute and the one which was constituted under the former government are very different in character. The Star states that the functions of the new board will be to obtain information from the chiefs of industry, from the experts on production, and from all those men who are connected with production. It charges the late board with intentions altogether different. Let me read what this Conservative paper says about the late tariff board. The editorial reads:

> The job of the late tariff board was to study the industrial situation, listen to the evidence of experts, hear the opinions of miscellaneous people such as theorists, students and consumers.

This editorial tries to create the impression that the late board paid too much attention to theorists and faddists such as consumers, who are infected with the dangerous disease of not desiring to pay more for any article than it is worth.

Mr. MANION: They were probably thinking of the Consumers League.

Mr. RINFRET: It does not say that; even if it did, I do not think that would change the aspect very much. The issue is as clear as crystal and as pure as water in the mind of this Conservative organ. The board to be constituted by my right hon. friend will listen to the producers, the manufacturers, the chiefs of industry and those who know all about it, while the late board had the weakness to listen to that class of faddists known as consumers, who came here with the little means at their disposal to try to demonstrate that there are two sides to the tariff question, and that perhaps their side might be worthy of consideration. Perhaps my right hon. friend has not paid much attention to that side of the question. Perhaps if this board works in the way it is understood by some of the Conservative organs in this country, he will be quite satisfied. But it is not without a certain degree of pride that I read this commentary which is supposed to be very offensive to us but which, on the contrary, is to my mind highly commendatory, that if not before the new board, at least before the old board, the common people could appear and present their case.

The Prime Minister has mentioned the Board of Railway Commissioners, and has tried to establish a parallel between this tariff board and the railway board. There is this difference, which I consider essential, between the two: we are not making railway rates. That power has been taken away from parliament. It is, on the contrary, highly desirable —and I think both parties are in agreement in that regard—that the rates of the railways be determined, not by a vote of the house, but by the decisions of the railway board, and so far as we are agreed on that, it is satisfactory that we have a railway board such as is constituted. But as regards the tariff we take the position—and I am not sure whether the Prime Minister does not take another position—that the tariff must remain within the responsibility of the government and that we should not by any means establish a board that will render final decisions, even if they may be only as to the grouping of facts, which will have such an impression on public opinion or on parliament that it might prevent the house from making a proper decision on fiscal matters. It is for that reason that I shall support the amendment.

I think the leader of the opposition yesterday made a most dispassionate and moderate appeal to the Prime Minister to amend at least this section of the bill and to consider carefully the amendment that we have moved. I am quite sure that the point made by the leader of the opposition is practically without any possible reply. As long as the government is in power, it remains within its ability to continue or to change the commissioners of the board; but surely when a new government is elected as a result of public opinion—and it may be returned to power on the very questions connected with the fiscal policy—it is highly desirable that the new government should not be hampered in its work by a commission established by the preceding administration and it should be at liberty to create a tariff board in sympathy with its views. For that reason I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. NEILL: When the substance of the amendment at present under discussion was before the house on the second reading of the bill, I voted against it and with the government because I thought that was not the proper stage to introduce it and, being very much of the opinion that we needed a tariff board, I considered that the amendment was not of such vital importance as to precipitate the defeat of the bill. But now that it is introduced in committee, in what I deem to be its proper place, I am more than willing to vote for it. I admit there is a good deal of logic behind the contention of the government that they have a mandate from the people to-day in the direction of high tariffs, but it is quite conceivable the day may come when that mandate will be withdrawn and I shall not willingly be a party to the initiation of a tariff board with its tenure of office so arranged as to perpetuate a system of high tariffs possibly long after the country has withdrawn its mandate in that direction and perhaps even, for stranger things have happened, after the party opposite has changed its policy in that regard.

I have just one other word to say regarding the personnel of the commission. I have heard a great deal about some features of it, such as what salaries they are to receive, and a hint has been given as to their geographical selection; but I have heard but little as to what the qualifications of these men will be. I should like to take this opportunity of placing before the committee a short resolution sent to me by one of the locals of British Columbia farmers. Although this is only a small local, it voices, I believe, the general wishes of the farmers in the district I represent and, I have good reason to think, in other parts of Canada as well. This is the resolution, endorsed by local No. 35, Wellington United Farmers of Canada, British Columbia section:

Whereas, the various branches of farming combined constitute one of the largest industries in the province of British Columbia—

And I should say of Canada also.

—and whereas, the different branches of agriculture have suffered to some considerable extent through inadequate tariffs and trade treaties, which place the producers of farm products in Canada and particularly in British Columbia in a market flooded with imported produce,

And whereas, the agricultural industry was not taken into consideration when negotiations were being carried on with regard to the lowering of tariffs and trade agreements with New Zealand—

I might also add Australia.

—therefore be it resolved, that this organization petition that there may be proper representation of the agricultural interests on any future boards created for the purpose of imposing tariffs, taxes, or formation of trade treaties.

That, of course, is not worded exactly to meet the present situation, but the suggestion is one which I would commend to the Prime Minister, namely, that at least one of the men on this board should have a thorough, practical knowledge of farming, not of one particular branch only but of as many of the different branches as possible. A good, all-around, practical farmer can be obtained and his services should be enlisted as one member of the board, especially when agriculture is such a large interest in Canada and is so vitally interested in the tariff.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have already, on the motion for the second reading, expressed my views on this bill and especially on the subject matter of this amendment, and I do not intend to repeat them. I have not been surprised to hear the Prime Minister every time he has spoken since the bill has been before the house and the committee, exemplify the tariff board of the United States as an illustration of the good work which such a body can achieve. My right hon. friend had to go to Washington for a model for his policy. He could not go to Britain because the policy he is trying to create, the machinery for organizing and carrying out, is truly one in which our neighbours to the south have excelled in recent years. The United States has been the Mecca of high protection; Washington is the capital city of protectionism, and it is no wonder that my right hon. friend has to go there for a model for the machinery to carry out his policy in this country. But the right hon. gentleman is going further than the men he is trying to imitate; the pupil goes further than the teacher and model, because in the United States they have made at least a semblance of impartiality in the constitution of their board. They have apparently tried, on the surface anyway, to establish a certain equilibrium as to the views shared by the members of that board. As has already been mentioned, three of the six members of the United States board shall be members of one political party and the others shall be members of a different party. But even apart from that, they have endeavoured to have another safeguard of impartiality or at least to have everybody consulted as to the personnel of the commission and the character of the men who may be appointed to that board. They are appointed by the President of the United States, but on and with the advice and consent of the Senate, which in the United States is the leading chamber. A man to be appointed to the tariff commission of the United States has to be accepted by the Senate of the United States. In their Senate all parties are represented, and a man who would be strongly objectionable to one of the groups in the United States Senate would have no chance of appointment to their tariff commission. I believe there might be less objection to the term of office which this bill provides for the members of the board if they were appointed with some impartiality by a body on which different views were represented; for instance, by parliament, as parliament appoints the chief electoral officer; or they might be appointed by a committee of parliament on which members having different and opposing views would be represented. But under this bill, which as the Prime Minister indicated will become law, they will be appointed by the government presently in office, by gentlemen having a trend of view on fiscal matters which they themselves admit and which is well known to the people of Canada.

My right hon. friend the Prime Minister still insists that this tariff board is a mere fact-finding body. He stated yesterday that facts are found with a mathematical precision. There cannot be two opinions, he said, in answer to a question from this side of the house. The findings of fact cannot be disputed; they are not in the United States, he said.

Mr. BENNETT: May I correct the hon. gentleman? Perhaps it will conduce to the expedition of the debate. The question was put to me, whether the findings of fact could be disputed, and I gave as an illustration that if the cost per unit in one country was 24 cents, and the cost per unit in some other country 20 cents, it was purely a question of mathematics that a 20 per cent duty on the 20 cents per unit would make that 24 cents, and thereby secure equality. As to the sufficiency of the evidence in finding out costs, there might be a difference of opinion, but the rate of duty to be applied to the facts as found can be ascertained with mathematical precision.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Perhaps I cannot do better than quote my right hon. friend. At page 3443 of Hansard he said:

> When it is said that these findings of facts are matters of opinion, I can only say that the findings of the tariff board in the United States, to which I referred, are not findings of opinions, but findings of facts as such.
> Mr. Young: Can they be disputed?
> Mr. Bennett: They cannot—not by minds that accept figures as having any effect when employed mathematically.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yet my hon. friend from Hants-Kings at last night's sitting showed in several instances that the members of the United States tariff commission were not of the same opinion as to their findings, and that they divided equally upon them.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what I was dealing with at all. With my hon. friend's permission only—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Of course.

Mr. BENNETT: It is a question as to the use of words. I was dealing with mathematical precision, meaning that the rate of duty to be applied to the facts as found could be ascertained with mathematical precision. That is, the cost of production in one country is so much, the cost of production in another country is so much, the cost of production in another country is so much. If the cost of production is 20 cents in the one case, and 24 cents in the other, that is a matter of finding. Then it is a matter of absolute mathematical precision that a 20 per cent duty applied to the cost of 20 cents per unit will make that cost 24 cents, bringing about equality. That is what I endeavoured to make clear I was thoroughly acquainted with the differences of opinion in 1929.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If they have differences of opinion, will not my right honorable friend admit that it is important, advisable, nay, even essential, if we want to have impartial findings, that gentlemen having different views should be appointed to the board? I think that that is a necessary conclusion

Apart from that, as I said before when I spoke on the second reading of this bill, the finding of fact is not purely machine work. Someone has to exercise judgment, and the attitude of mind and the personal views of the men who sit in such a court or tribunal certainly have something to do with the way in which they marshal their facts and decide which one must be placed foremost and stressed. The manner in which the investigation is carried on also depends to a large extent on the views and character of the men who sit on that board. Everybody knows what happened in this country not very many months ago when there was an investigation, or a so-called investigation, into tariff matters. The gentlemen other than those who made the application were not, according to press reports, given a very hearty welcome when they appeared before that supposed court.

The right hon. the Prime Minister is dressing his baby in the dignified garments of a court in order to make it more interesting. But that will not deceive anybody, and I do not think my right hon. friend has improved his case by so doing. My right hon. leader protested yesterday against the violation of the principle that tariff and taxation should be absolutely under the exclusive jurisdiction of parliament; but there are other principles that are being violated if we have to accept the theory of my right hon. friend that this board is a court. When you have a court dealing with matters of policy, a court which will act, according to the words of this bill, under the direction of a minister, what becomes of this fundamental principle of the British constitution, that the judicial power and the executive power must be independent one from the other as well as from the legislative power? You cannot mix them altogether as my right hon. friend is trying to do in this bill.

There is another thing which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister claims is essential, and that is the permanency of the board, for at least a period of ten years. Even there he is going further than the example of the United States, where, after an experience of twenty years with tariff commissions, the United States has adopted means of having new men appointed to the commission each year. The members are appointed for six years only, and one member gives way at the end of the first year, to be succeeded by a new man, another at the end of the second year, to be in turn succeeded by a new man, and so on, so that automatically every year a new man is appointed to the board. As I said before, he is appointed by the president, but upon the advice and with the consent of the Senate. I think there is a great deal to be said for that method. It gives more elasticity to the board, a greater opportunity to appoint men to the board who will be more in sympathy with the prevailing trend of views on fiscal matters at the time of their appointment.

I do not think I have anything further to say, but before resuming my seat I should like to repeat and support the warning given by the leader of the opposition which the Prime Minister has called a threat but which, in fact, is only a fair warning. The men who would go on the proposed board would do so at their own risk and take their own chances. When the people of Canada inflict upon my hon. friends opposite the ignominous defeat which they may expect on the first occasion which presents itself, we will find means of doing away with the machinery they are now trying to organize so that their policies may be kept in effect.

Mr. IRVINE: The extended discussion on the measure now before the committee certainly indicates the importance which both sides of the house attach to the legislation before us. I did not happen to be in the house when the vote on the proposed amendment was taken, but I understand that on that occasion the group to which I belong voted against the amendment. I believe they so voted because although they may have disagreed with some of the particular sections of the bill they believed in its principle, and did not wish to be a party to its defeat.

I wish to say that if the fears as expressed by hon. members in the official opposition were possible I certainly would be opposed to the bill myself. I think we must recognize however that facts will not change with governments, and if certain facts which have been discovered by the proposed judicial body are established they will not alter one iota whether a Conservative government goes out and a Liberal government comes in or vice versa. If the board were to be a Conservative board, appointed by the Conservative party to make Conservative findings, then of course I would be opposed to it and I have no doubt everybody would be. If the government were guilty of appointing a body of that character I hope the Conservative party would be opposed to it. That is the kind of board which I think my hon. friends to the left of the Speaker are contending for. What else could they mean when they say that they want a board which would be in sympathy with the policy of the government that appointed it? That is the kind of board

I understand my hon. friends on the left of the Speaker are contending for. Personally I cannot see the value of a board of that character.

Mr. ILSLEY: The words were "enjoy the confidence of the government."—not "be in sympathy" with it.

Mr. IRVINE: I would say in reply to that statement that if the proposed board measures up approximately to the status of a judicial body any other government will give its confidence to it. If on the other hand any other government might discover that this proposed body is not judicial, does not the act provide for the discharge of the individuals composing such a body?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. CASGRAIN: No, it does not.

Mr. IRVINE: Well, then, why not make that provision?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is all we want to do.

Mr. IRVINE: Why not? If I am not mistaken I think I heard the Prime Minister say, when discussing this bill, that men would not be retained on the board if, as a judicial body, they were not rendering proper service. If the body created was acting not judicially, but was outstandingly partisan and was endeavouring to embarrass the existing administration, I would expect the government in power to do away with it. On the other hand I canont see any use in the world of appointing a board to serve any particular government. To my mind such action would only involve unnecessary expense. If a government is doing what it likes anyway, no matter what a tariff board may find, why have such a body? That is the other side of the question.

On the other hand I do not wish to see any interference with the authority of parliament in respect to fiscal policies. We were assured last night by the Prime Minister that there was no such intention and that the proposed board would not operate in that way. If it does, surely it is time enough to object when the difficulty arises. I think we have the right to assume that in this connection the government is sincere in its efforts to secure a real fact finding body. I am assuming that, anyway; I must have confidence in whatever government may be in power. I would have as much confidence in statements made by the leader of the opposition, and I do not see why we should assume that every statement by a government is absolutely sinister, inclined to be purely political and more or less false. From my experience in parliament and having listened to responsible men holding responsible positions I feel inclined to accept at face value the statement of the government's good intentions. In the bill now before us provision is made for the appointment of a board supposedly of a judicial nature. In this corner of the house we have always contended that since we are to have tariffs, no matter which government is in power, those tariffs, as nearly as possible, should be regulated in a scientific manner. Following that belief we have contended that some such body as the one now proposed should be appointed to find facts and enable each government in power to regulate its fiscal policy with due regard to the facts found. I do not say that the proposed body will find all the facts accurately on every occasion; I do not suppose any hon. member thinks that the board would be omniscient in judgment or knowledge, but I would think that a board which devoted its entire time to the study of all the facts entering into the framing of tariffs would be expected to know a little more about that subject and to have gathered a few more facts than an ordinary governmental body which deals with the many affairs of state. To my mind if such a body could get some of the facts accurately they would perhaps justify their existence. I think, as in every other body, very much would depend on the nature of the appointments, the personalities and capacities of the men appointed. Next in importance would be the extent to which the government would give serious thought to the facts found. As to the appointments, I believe there is no other way of ensuring a non-partisan body than to remove such a body entirely from the possibility of being discharged by the next government which might hold office. For that reason, if for no other, I would be in favour of the bill, believing as I do that there should be a judicial body and believing that facts should be found.

I do not know what my hon. friend to my right is giggling about, but if my reasoning is faulty I should like to know wherein the fault lies. If he giggles because of political suspicions, he may keep them to himself. I have tried to reason this matter out in the best way I know, just as my hon. friend has done. He takes exception to the bill because of certain suspicions he holds which I do not wish to share. The day may come when it may be proved that he was right; in fact I am not saying he is wrong. I merely state however that at the moment I do not hold the suspicions held by him. When the board is in operation suspicions will not be necessary. I believe the proposed body as far as possible should be removed from political conflict, and I ask if there is any other way by which such a body can be removed except by the way provided in the bill?

Mr. EULER: Mr. Chairman, I have given careful thought to the provisions of this bill, and I have come to the conclusion that the Prime Minister would be well-advised in the general interest to accept the amendment. As is well-known, I, like almost every member in this house, have always been in favour of a tariff board. I need not go into that. I agree almost entirely with what the Prime Minister has said in the course of the debate as to the desirability of a board which will have fact finding powers, which will exercise those powers, and which will then place its information at the disposal of the government in the framing of the tariff. I believe in that absolutely, and it is but fair criticism to say at this time, that if the Prime Minister realized—as he has always realized—the necessity for such a fact finding body in order that the tariff might be intelligently framed, it does seem an anomaly that he should have made changes in all the important items in the tariff schedules, and then proceeded to create a tariff board. I say that is an inconsistency that has not been entirely explained. When the other day the Prime Minister spoke of the advisability of such a board and of the powers it was to have, I asked him how, then, could its services be applied to the changes made last September and to those to be made this session, but I received no reply. And yet if it is so desirable to have such a board in order that the tariff may be intelligently framed, how can we reconcile the absence of such a board with what has been done, how can we have any assurance that the tariff changes we are making by the present budget, as well as the changes we made last September, were intelligently made? But that is merely by the way.

The Prime Minister has advanced the argument in connection with the appointment of other officials, notably the High Commissioner in London, that such a commissioner should be one who is in sympathy with the purposes of the government. I have not any great fault to find with that argument, and I submit that if you want a partisan board—which I do not—that that principle might as well apply to the appointing of the members of the tariff board which is to be created. I will also say in passing—and I am absolutely sincere in this—that if the Prime Minister would give the house an assurance that he intends to appoint a board that is non-partisan in its character, I would not have a great deal of fault to find. But human nature is human nature, politics is politics, and I for one do not think in the absence of such an assurance on his part that the board will be other than a partisan board. By that I mean they will be men of the party to which he himself belongs.

Now we have heard this argument, twofold in its nature, that such a board will merely be a fact finding board, that mathematics are mathematics, and if they say a certain thing is so mathematically, it is so and cannot be anything else. I understand that when the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) spoke yesterday—I am sorry I did not hear him—he made some remarks with respect to the work of the investigators in foreign countries who are attached to the Department of National Revenue. I have had some experience of their work, and while I will say that costs in foreign countries may be ascertained approximately, such ascertainment is not an exact science by any means. I know that to be a fact. And this tariff board, no matter how competent its members may be, will find a great deal of difficulty in ascertaining absolutely correctly what production costs are in foreign countries, and perhaps even in our own country. That being the case, it will become almost of necessity a matter of opinion on the part of the members of the tariff board as to what such costs are and as to what the rate should be in order to establish the equality that is spoken of. That condition arising, I leave it to the common sense of every member to say if the board will not naturally be inclined to travel in the direction in which they feel the government would like them to travel. I think it is not possible for such a board to do otherwise. The Prime Minister has stated that the members of this board will be in the nature of a board of judges. Well, even judges disagree. In our own appeal courts composed of five or six members we very often find a decision given by a majority of one. We have seen the decision of a trial judge reversed on appeal, and that decision in turn reversed by a higher appellate court. I say that with the object of making plain that you cannot have any mathematical certainty with regard to the work of this board.

cannot obtain competent men to devote themselves to this work when they do not know that they will be retained in office for a definite or extended period of time. Perhaps there is something in that argument, but on reflection I do not think it conclusive. Members of this house, and members of this government, who do not receive greater remuneration than is to be paid to members of this proposed board, willingly undertake their duties when they know they are not certain at all of retaining office for a period of probably more than four years. I am quite sure members of the house, to say nothing of members of this government or of former governments, will not allow their modesty to prevent them saying that they are at least men of as great ability as we may expect the members of this newly created tariff board to be. I believe it would be possible to obtain men who are thoroughly competent and who are imbued with sufficient public spirit to serve on the board and do good work even though they have no certainty of ten years of office.

There is no absolute certainty in regard to the fact-finding of this proposed board, and there being no certainty their prejudice would very naturally lead them to do the thing which the government desired them to do. If that be true, in what situation is a new government? I am not now talking of high tariff or low tariff, but if we have then a board in office which perhaps at times will exercise a bit of prejudice—because we may as well say what we think—in favour of the policies of the government which appointed them, then when a new government comes in why should it be obliged to retain in office men in whom it has no confidence and who would act contrary to its wishes? It is impossible for that newly elected government to disestablish the board, and its members cannot be discharged. True, the new government might bring in a bill to repeal this legislation and disestablish the board in that way. But then it would have to contend with an antagonistic Senate. If I may without disrespect say so of that august body, it is perhaps the greatest anomaly of parliamentary government in Canada that when a new government comes in it almost invariably from the necessity of the case finds the upper house of a different political stripe from the House of Commons which has just been elected by the people, and which is supposed to represent the wishes of the people.

I can see no harm in establishing a board whose members would hold office during pleasure. Those men would hold office at least during the tenure of the present government—unless they were shown to be incompetent, and then I hardly know how the present government would get rid of them. I would say that it should not be the wish of the government, if unfortunately for themselves they failed to elect a majority to this house and were turned out of office, that their successors should be saddled with a board entirely out of sympathy with the wishes of the new government. I believe in the final analysis that if the Prime Minister and the government would give careful consideration to the question even now they might decide, except that it might be doing violence to their pride, that all their purposes would be gained by adopting the amendment as their own, assured that the board would do good work, assured that they could obtain good men, and assured also that they would be freed probably from the unjustifiable suspicion that they are playing politics in making appointments to this board.

Mr. BROWN: I have already spoken on this bill and my remarks will now be brief. I protest against what seems to me to be the worst fallacy I have ever heard of—that is, that this is a question of absolute mathematics. The Prime Minister seems to have admitted that there may be differences of opinion as to the relative costs of manufacturing in one country and another; but he does contend that once that difference has been admitted, or once a certain figure has been found to be a fact or a so-called fact, then the imposition of a certain duty is all that is necessary to establish equality. I protest most emphatically against that idea. The Prime Minister ought to know that when any tariffs are levied, when any restrictions are put on trade, there are a thousand and one unforeseen results that cannot be accurately estimated. In nothing is it more true than in the making of tariffs that:

The best-laid schemes o' mice an' men gang aft agley.

You may say that a certain percentage of duty will equalize costs, but there are many unforeseen factors entering into the problem which cannot be calculated mathematically. It seems to me a most absurd position to take, that this is a case of pure mathematics.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have not taken up any time discussing any stage of this bill, either on the resolution, on the second reading or on any other occasion, and therefore I feel justified in prolonging the discussion somewhat, to put before the committee a matter that has come to my personal attention. I refer to the way in which facts are ascertained in Canada by other countries. Before proceeding with that phase of the subject, however, I would observe that the emphatic manner in which the Prime Minister presented the case at its different stages almost convinced me that it was a mathematical problem: facts are facts he says and no change of government can alter them. The same dictum was repeated by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine). But it depends upon the angle from which you look at facts, and upon your preconceived ideas with regard to those facts. As indicated by hon. members, including the hon. gentleman to my left (Mr. Euler), different persons looking into the same facts will disagree in their conclusions. Judges disagree, courts disagree; even the railway commission sometimes disagree among themselves in the judgments based upon the same facts and evidence.

It has come to my attention on more than one occasion how difficult it is to ascertain cost of production even in one's own country. How much more difficult is it then to ascertain the cost of production of any article in another country where you have no status? All you can do is snoop around and get the so called facts as best you may. That is all. This board will not go to the United States and other countries, nor does the United States tariff board come to this country; it is the representatives of the board that visit other places. On one occasion, as I remember, a certain tariff board representative came to Canada to find out the facts regarding the cost of production of wheat, and I noticed at the time that they went into the most favourable places where they could get a low cost of production. It might have been that I was unduly suspicious, but the fact is that they went to such places as would show a low cost of production in Canada that would strengthen their case for reporting a higher duty against us. However that may be, my suspicions have been more than confirmed since then. Imagine getting the cost of producing wheat during these past three years in certain parts of Saskatchewan and comparing that cost with the production of the same article during the three previous years, then coming to a mathematical conclusion as to costs of production on the strength of such varying and unstable facts. Why, one might be a hundred times greater than the other, depending upon the year you took in which to secure the so called "facts" or cost of production. The cost of producing wheat in southern Saskatchewan this year is perhaps $100 per bushel—I have never worked it out but I venture that guess. And compare that with the cost in 1928. What a vast difference there would be. Yet it is variable calculations of that kind by which the Prime Minister argued the cost of production can be arrived at.

There was an unsatisfactory tariff inquiry regarding the cost of producing potatoes in the maritime provinces. I am not familiar with the details of that United States inquiry, but I am familiar with the attempt on the part of the representatives of the American tariff board to obtain the cost of producing milk and cream in Canada. As the committee will recall, it was evident at the outset, in view of the legislation adopted in that country under the Lenroot-Taber bill that the intention was to exclude cream and milk from Canada. That legislation was modified on the representations of the Canadian dairymen, but they persevered in their determination to exclude these articles, and they finally succeeded in practically shutting out our dairy producers. During that discussion I took the matter up with the secretary or the president of the American tariff board—I forget which—protesting against their method of securing costs in Canada. Wherever they went they were looking for certain costs—low costs—which would justify an increase in the tariff in the United States. Is that a mere suspicion, or has it been borne out by the facts? What I am saying in this regard, although I speak from memory, is substantially correct, as the files in the Department of Agriculture will show. I wrote to the secretary of the tariff board at Washington, pointing out that if they wished to obtain correct data and figures with regard to the cost of producing milk and cream, I would put at their disposal the experimental farm with all its records, or any other branch farm in Canada. They never took advantage of that offer. Two or three of their representatives did come to Ottawa some time afterwards but they did not go near our farm officers, nor did they attempt to obtain any figures from us. I was not in Ottawa the day they came, so I cannot speak personally with regard to their visit. I do know, however, that I invited them to come direct to us and get any data at our disposal where the figures would probably be more reliable than any such figures and data as could be secured elsewhere in Canada. But they never came near the experimental farm officers for it.

Now, so far as the United States are concerned, I have never known them to send their emissaries to Canada but for the purpose of getting evidence which would justify them in raising their own tariff. I cannot think of a single instance, except maple products in which, when they returned to their own country, they did not increase the tariff on the particular article with respect to which they had come over to make inquiries.

No one suspects this government, surely, of any intention of appointing such a board. Oh, no. But they might. How will they obtain the facts in another country? Over and over again, the difficulties involved have been pointed out. What kind of board will be chosen? We can only surmise by what has been done recently. We know some of the representatives the government put on the Stamp commission. We know that Sanford Evans was put there, and he delivered the goods very well on behalf of the cause he represented. If that is to be taken as an indication of the kind of board we are to get, we shall have to look elsewhere for that judicial body which the Prime Minister has so glowingly described. This trio which is to constitute the tariff board is to be a sort of glorified board of judges, only of a very much higher type: they would not have any political ideas or bias in their minds; they are to be totally impartial; they are to give their decisions quite regardless of the views or the wishes of the government. Can you imagine such a condition of things? Are we ready for glory, Mr. Chairman? Have we arrived at the millennium? We do not expect that of this government, at least, and we know that we shall not get such a tariff board from them—a body which is supposed to come to conclusions on data and figures that are so problematical in character and which are next to impossible to acquire in a foreign conutry.

I have no hesitation, in the circumstances, in voting emphatically for the amendment. This is one of those things regarding which you might very well say that the more you think of it the less you think of it; and if we keep on discussing it much longer the government, I fancy, is almost prepared to throw up its hands and discard this phase of the bill, the ten year board appointment.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Holding the fiscal views I do, I should prefer a board appointed at pleasure and not for a period of ten years as the Prime Minister is determined to appoint them. The Prime Minister might accept the suggestion of the ex-Minister of Justice. The board should be appointed either by a non-partisan committee of the house, or else it should be approved by the house before the actual appointment is made. Only in that way can we ensure that the personnel will be all and will do all that the Prime Minister intends. I agree with the last speaker, that it is stretching credulity too far to ask anyone in this house to believe that hon. members opposite, elected as they have been on a high tariff policy, will appoint anything else than a board whose sympathies will be all in the direction of high tariffs. The little red herring of fact finding which has been drawn across the trail is just so much fog to obscure the real purpose of the board.

Let us consider for a moment the finding of facts in connection with an industry in Canada, not to mention one outside. What factors will be taken into consideration in the ascertaining of facts? Will watered stock be considered, will that be one of the factors to be investigated? Will the earnings of the company be considered, the efficiency or otherwise of its management? Who will determine what is or is not efficiency in management? What about the factories in eastern Canada whose equipment is out of date? Many of those factories will attempt to operate for purposes of internal economy, no doubt mistaken, under a high protective policy which permits them either to peg prices or actually to increase prices. What about the location of factories? Is that not a factor to be considered in investigating costs? What about available markets or the possibility of the expansion of markets? I find it impossible to imagine that any board could determine what the facts are without a formula previously being prescribed. Even if a formula is prescribed, the facts themselves may in turn become mere doubts.

The work of a tariff board of this kind may be most important, but following the suggestion made by the hon. member for North Waterloo, it seems to me to be the height of absurdity for the Prime Minister to come forward with a proposal to establish a judicial tariff board to ascertain facts and to find out whether or not the tariff should be raised after he has mutilated the tariff schedules of this country. If the administration were sincere before raising one single item in the tariff, they would first reduce them to the former level and then submit them to this proposed fact-finding tariff board. However, I do not think there is the slightest intention on the part of the administration to do that sort of thing.

Another phase of this bill to which I take serious exception is the secrecy clause. I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in his contention that any industry, any manufacturer or any interest of any kind, whether it be agricultural or otherwise, applying to the government for special privileges of this or any other character should be willing to submit to public view every fact in connection with the administration, the earnings and the profits derived therefrom. Without the utmost publicity all governments will be subject to proper condemnation for interfering with taxation in the interests of privileged classes. Unless that publicity is given the people will not be satisfied that the privileges granted are justified.

Ever since the history of tariffs began there has been a clear division and cleavage of public opinion. There are men who because of a certain array of facts think that a high tariff is advantageous; there is another group who are agreed that a certain measure of tariff for revenue purposes may be acceptable; then there is a third group which is against tariffs in any form whatever, they regard the principle as uneconomical and unsound. How does the Prime Minister propose to bring together, even in a judicial board of this character, the opposing views of those who follow Henry George and of those who follow the right hon. gentleman himself? How is he going to coordinate and bring down to a point of compromise the viewpoints held by private industry and those held by sound economists every one of whom is opposed to a high tariff and who contend that the principle of protection is uneconomic in character?

I find it impossible to support this bill in its present form. I submit to the Prime Minister that if he is sincere, if he wants to convince this house or this country that he has in mind solely a board to ascertain facts in the national interest, then that board should not be selected by himself and his cabinet but either by this house or by a non-partisan committee of the house. I have no confidence either in the board or in the bill.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be very brief because I voiced my opinion on a previous occasion in connection with the appointment of this tariff board for a period of ten years. I want to reiterate that I have no complaint to make in connection with a board to advise. I am convinced that if the present government had appointed such a board they would be in a much better position before parliament and before this country than they are at the present moment. They have made increases in the tariff purely and simply for the benefit of special interests, and, so far as I am able to ascertain, without obtaining the viewpoint of the people who must pay for those increases. I am in favour of a tariff board but I am not in favour of a board which will be of a character to perpetuate itself upon a group of individuals who may secure the majority vote of this country at some forthcoming elections. The present government has, in my opinion, a perfect right to increase the tariff. They informed the electorate they were going to do that, but I have very grave doubts that the electorate ever anticipated that such drastic increases would be made. This government have received a mandate to carry out a certain policy, and they are doing it.

Supposing the government should submit to this new tariff board the five or six hundred items of the tariff which they have increased so drastically, and the board recommend in certain cases that drastic decreases should be made. I am confident that a proper board would discover that increases had been made to an unprecedented degree and that the consumers of this country were being bled white by such increases. Think what an awful position the government would be in? They would be in a much more embarrassing position than they are to-day in respect to the Stamp report on grain. The board must of necessity be in sympathy with the policy of the government which appoints it. I do not share the enthusiasm of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin in regard to this matter; this board will be composed of a group of men whose convictions are favourable to the government. Supposing at the next general elections the appeal is made, as it undoubtedly will be made—I shall make it if I am spared to be a candidate—

An hon. MEMBER: We suspected that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have not changed my opinion simply because this government happens to be in office. That has happened quite frequently in Canadian history; we have had reverses and I am confident there will be reverses. Then imagine the position we shall be in as a Liberal party taking their advice.

Mr. SPENCE: The hon. member will not be one of it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have just as good a chance as has my hon. friend of being elected. I know how zealously some of my hon. friends pleaded in connection with the potato question, hence the change in the order in council. They got too much tariff on that occasion and they will get too much tariff on many other occasions as they will discover when they go to the electorate to get their votes the next election.

An hon. MEMBER: That is a long time away.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, it is not.

Mr. MANION: The people gave their verdict at the last election.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I give my hon. friends credit for having put it over. There is no objection to that at all. But now that my hon. friends have put it over and the people are taking their medicine, it will come my hon. friends' turn to sit in opposition and we shall be back where we belong. All I am complaining about is this: that inasmuch as a tariff board will have to deal more with policies than with facts, no government should be handicapped by the advice of a group of men who do not believe in the policies on which that administration was elected. That is my chief complaint and that is why I am going to vote for the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Hanbury) negatived: Yeas, 44; nays, 68.

Mr. GRAY: Subsection 7 of section 3 of the bill reads:

No member shall be eligible to be a candidate for election to the House of Commons of Canada until after the expiration of two years from the date when he ceased to be a member of the board.

I propose, at the conclusion of my remarks, to move an amendment to this subsection. I have never been able to see the reason for inserting this subsection in the bill, and after listening to the Prime Minister and other speakers on the opposite side of the house who have pictured to the chamber the high calibre of the men they propose to appoint to this board, it is all the more difficult for one to see any reason whatever for introducing into our legislation a subsection of this nature. The Prime Minister has promised to appoint men of high calibre to this board and speakers on the opposite side of the house have stated that one of their reasons for making the term of office ten years is that men of that type will not accept such positions unless they are assured a term of office commensurate with their sphere in life. It is practically, according to the Prime Minister, men of the calibre of judges who are to be appointed to this board. These men will be asked to serve their country and then, should they see fit to resign or when their term of ten years is ended, they are to be placed on the Indian list. That is exactly what this means.

I wonder if there is any precedent for a clause of this kind. I have searched rather carefully; I have studied the constitution of other boards, and I do not find such a provision in connection with the Board of Railway Commissioners, the Pension Appeal Board, the Farm Loan Board, or, in fact, anywhere except in two particulars which I am going to cite. In the Dominion Elections Act, being chapter 53 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, I find under section 39 those who are disqualified as candidates for election. That is, I presume, exactly where we are going to class the members of the tariff board. I wish to call attention to paragraph (f) of section 39, dealing with men of exactly this type that we are appointing to the tariff commission. Paragraph (f) reads:

Every person accepting or holding any office, commission or employment, permanent or temporary, in the service of the government of Canada at the nomination of the crown or at the nomination of any of the officers of the government of Canada, to which any salary, fee, wages, allowance, emolument or profit of any kind is attached—during the time he is so holding any such office, commission or employment.

What I wish to emphasize is the fact that he is disqualified only during the time he is so holding such office. Again under paragraph (e) we have certain other public officers, as follows:

Every person holding the office of sheriff, registrar of deeds, clerk of the peace or county crown attorney—during the time he is holding such office.

Then paragraph (d) refers to members of legislatures as follows:

Every person who is a member of the legislature of any province—during the time he is such member.

And so on. I could read a number of similar paragraphs, each one limiting the disqualification to the time the person is holding such office. But there are two paragraphs which prescribe disqualification for election for a period of years and it is in this class of disqualified persons that the Prime Minister puts the members of the tariff board whom he has placed upon such a high pinnacle of distinction. These are paragraphs (a) and (b). Paragraph (a) starts with those who are guilty of corrupt practices. I am not going to read the whole paragraph, because hon. members are all familiar with it, but at the conclusion it specifies that a person who is found guilty of corrupt practices is disqualified:

During the period of seven years next after the date of his being so found, convicted, ordered or found guilty.

Paragraph (b) provides that those guilty of illegal practices shall be disqualified for a period of five years next after the date of being so found, convicted, ordered or found guilty.

Now I come to the bill constituting the tariff board in which the Prime Minister inserts a clause making every member of it non-eligible as a candidate for election to this house for a period of two years after he has ceased to be a member of the board. Is that provisions inserted, as was pointed out so ably by the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley) when he moved his amendment to the second reading, because the Prime Minister is afraid that these men will be guilty of corrupt or illegal practices. Is that the reason? He places the members of the board in exactly the same class with those who are found guilty of corrupt or illegal practices. I think that all members of the house will see at once the absurdity of such a provision. Surely, Mr. Chairman, after a man has served his country faithfully and well, on the tariff board, especially if he is of the calibre that has been suggested to this house, and if the people of any constituency desire him to represent them in this house, he is entitled to be a candidate. I would think he would be all the more fitted to be a member of this house because of the training he would have had as a member of the board. I do not propose to speak longer on the subject. I hope that the Prime Minister will see the force of my argument. When one searches, and I have searched diligently, to find some reason why this provision should have been inserted in the tariff bill, one can only come to the conclusion that it was done through some personal antipathy on the part of the right hon. the Prime Minister. I sincerely hope he will not allow personalities to enter in, and that he will permit this section to be withdrawn. I move, Mr. Chairman, that section 3 be amended by striking out subsection 7 thereof.

Mr. EULER: I may have missed the explanation of this subsection. I would ask the Prime Minister for what reason this clause is inserted.

Mr. BENNETT: For the reasons stated in the subsection.

The CHAIRMAN: All those in favour of the amendment will say "Aye".

Mr. RINFRET: I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that we should rest satisfied with the Prime Minister's reply. We asked what was the reason for a particular subsection being in the bill, and the Prime Minister replied, "for the reasons stated in the subsection."

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The question has been put, and the hon. member can only speak with the consent of the house. The hon. member was a little late in rising.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will the Prime Minister not give his consent?

Mr. BENNETT: It is not a question of the Prime Minister. The rules of order are not in the hands of the Prime Minister.

Mr. RINFRET: Then I will speak afterwards unless the house consents.

The CHAIRMAN: If the committee consents, the hon. member may speak now.

Mr. RINFRET: When an hon. member asks the Prime Minister the reason for a certain subsection being in the bill and the Prime Minister replies, it is because the subsection is there, well, I do not want to use strong terms, but I do feel that the Prime Minister's disregard for the house has got to a point where it certainly should be reprimanded. The objection that has been made by the hon. member for West Lambton is very strong. He has shown conclusively that there are three classes of men who are going to be disqualified from being candidates in an election; those who have been guilty of corrupt practices are disqualified for seven years; those who have committed illegal practices are disqualified for five years; and those who have been members of this tariff board are going to be disqualified for two years. Surely a reason should be given for doing that. I insist that before we take the vote on the amendment the Prime Minister refrain for a few moments from writing the letter he is now writing and stand up and give us an explanation. With all respect I do say that I realize that the Prime Minister is working very hard. His capacity for work is stupendous, but he has imposed upon himself this quantity of work. We are not responsible for that. We have urged him repeatedly to appoint a Minister of Finance and to let his ministers be other things than small messengers around him. We have urged him to give them a chance to take their stand in this house. Surely when a question is put to the Prime Minister in the manner in which my hon. friend from North Waterloo put his question, and when an amendment is before the house on such an important matter as this, which puts together in the statutes of the country men who commit corrupt or illegal practices and men who are tariff board commissioners, there should be an explanation before the vote is taken.

Mr. McINTOSH: I would like to have an answer, Mr. Chairman, from the right hon. the Prime Minister to the question that was asked.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): I had no intention whatever of speaking further on the provisions of this tariff bill. I thought I had put my objections sufficiently strongly during the discussion on the first reading, but when the right hon. the Prime Minister of this country takes the stand that he has taken in reply to the question from the hon. member for North Waterloo I am surprised. I think it is only fair to the members of this house and to the country that he should give a reasonable answer to the question.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I think it is my duty to the electors I represent in this house to protest against the attitude of the Prime Minister. I do not raise my voice very often in this house, but I must say that I feel that the Prime Minister is in honour bound to give an answer to the question that has been properly asked by my hon. friend from North Waterloo. Otherwise, the impression will go abroad that the Prime Minister has something to hide, and that he does not wish to give the answer or meet the wishes of the house.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) negatived.

Section agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If we are through with the discussion on section 3, might I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we take up the succeeding sections, subsection by subsection, and that the subsections be read?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Might I suggest before we proceed that as the Prime Minister is suddenly stricken dumb, the Minister of Justice should substitute for him.

On section 4, subsection 1—Duties of board.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I move to amend section 4, subsection 1, by striking out in line 2 the words, "under the direction" and substituting therefor the words, "at the request."

Amendment agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 1 (a)—Raw materials.

Mr. HEENAN: Mr. Chairman, the fact that at this time the government has introduced an amendment encourages me to ask whether they will accept another one. Section 4 deals with the duties of the board, and may I say that while those duties are many they do not as yet go far enough. In his discussion of the bill the Prime Minister pointed out that the cost of labour would be quite a factor in determining the rate of duty required. I think the Prime Minister will agree with me however that there are factors greater than the cost of labour. For instance the costs of the reorganization of companies with increased capitalization is one of the great factors. Inasmuch as these are the days of combines, reorganizations and mergers the capitalizations of companies have been greatly enhanced, and inasmuch as the capitalization of a company in a measure affects its earnings and dividends I think the Prime Minister may well agree that these factors may have a much greater bearing on the costs of production than would the labour costs. The Prime Minister, during his discussion of the question, pointed out that such factors as low wages and long hours of labour in certain countries must of necessity be taken into account by the board and subsequently by the government in arriving at a proper tariff against those countries. I was wondering if the tariff might operate in the opposite direction. If the tariff board should learn of some country wherein higher wages were paid, and a higher standard of living prevailed would the duties in Canada be reduced proportionately? That is a matter which at the present time is concerning me because I do not know what the government may have in mind in this connection.

With respect to the labour question however, I have in mind the discussions which took place in the regular session of 1930 and again in the special session of the same year at which time the present Prime Minister pointed out that any protection which was given to any concern in Canada should also carry with it a protection for the labouring men engaged in the industries concerned. I have in my hand one or two articles which, if he has not already read them, may surprise the Prime Minister. I refer first to an article appearing in a newspaper called Labor and particularly to a press despatch from Montreal, Quebec, dated June 25, 1931:

> The British American Oil Company's new $2,000,000 refinery plant, now under construction at Montreal East, is starting out to be a monument to cheap labour.
> A "hard-boiled" labour policy has been established—one that has probably never been equalled on a similar undertaking in Canada.
> Not only are wages lower than on any other construction job of the same type, but the ten-hour day, seven-day week prevails. The workers have no voice in determining their conditions and are bullied and discharged at the whim of the foreman.

The despatch was sent by a Canadian correspondent to this Washington publication. The same gentleman investigated conditions in the city of Toronto, and as a result I find in the issue of July 7 of the same publication the following:

The same hard-boiled policy which exists on the British American Oil Refinery project in Montreal seems to permeate the whole organization of the Toronto Iron Works, a close ally of the British American Oil.

A representative of labour visited this city this week and interviewed a number of men—some formerly employed by the company and others still on the job.

I shall not read the whole of the article, because it is too disgusting, and sets out in detail how this particular company is bringing into Canada American methods of bludgeoning, bullying and discriminating against men who would dare to organize along the lines of the protection afforded them by the treaty of Versailles, namely, freedom of association. I have an amendment to offer—

Mr. MACDOUGALL: How long have the conditions as described in the labour paper prevailed in the two industries to which my hon. friend has referred?

Mr. HEENAN: This is just a new industry which has commenced operations since it was given protection.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: When:

Mr. HEENAN: About a month ago.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: On the contrary I think the operations were commenced when my hon. friend was Minister of Labour.

Mr. HEENAN: Is that so? My hon. friend seems to be one of those gentlemen who know it all. If hon. members would listen to him long enough they would know that he does not know half as much as he thinks he does.

In moving an amendment I do so with the utmost confidence that the present government will be willing to accept it. To indicate the views of my hon. friends opposite in connection with matters of labour I wish at this time to quote the words of the present Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition. Turing to page 2506 of Hansard, 1930, I find the following:

Here we have a chance to say that these increases shall apply only to such mills as maintain the principles of the treaty of Versailles. Is it unfair to say that that should be done? I commend the matter to the government. I think it should be done. It may mean great differences, but an amendment such as this, I think, would meet the situation.

And further on he stated:

That is an amendment that I commend now to the government, and that I think at the proper time should be moved; because after all, Mr. Chairman, if we really represent Canadian democracy, if we are sincere in the expressions of our faith in our party conventions, if we really mean what we have declared unanimously in this house with respect to the provisions of the treaty of Versailles and at the League of Nations at Geneva regarding labour, there should not be a dissenting voice in this chamber. We have the opportunity and the jurisdiction; let us leave out all this talk about the province and assert that power affirmatively, and let it be understood in this country that when we agree to principles in treaties, in compacts and conventions, we mean what we say, and that our expressions are not mere sounding brass and tinkling cymbal.

The amendment I have to offer is practically the same as that moved in the year 1912 by Mr., now Sir Thomas, White. That amendment was as follows:

Whenever application is made on behalf of a manufacturing company for higher duties the commission shall investigate the capitalization of the company and all salaries paid to the president, directors and managers and the wages paid to their employees.

Because of the fact that we have since that time entered into treaties, the Treaty of Versailles in particular, declaring the number of hours per day that employees are required to work and whether or not freedom of association is permitted to them, my amendment will be this:

Whenever application is made on behalf of a manufacturing company for higher duties the board shall investigate the capitalization of the company and all salaries paid to the president, directors and managers, and the wages paid to their employees, the number of hours per day employees are required to work and whether or not freedom of association is permitted the employees.

Mr. BENNETT: What clause is the amendment to apply to?

The CHAIRMAN: We are discussing section 4, subsection 2.

Mr. HEENAN: To section 4. I commend this amendment to the Prime Minister with every confidence that he will accept it.

The CHAIRMAN: Is this an addition to subsection (a)?

Mr. HEENAN: I have not had time to look that up, Mr. Chairman, but I think it might apply as subsection 7.

The CHAIRMAN: Then the hon. member will have to withhold his amendment until we reach subsection 6, because the right hon. leader of the opposition has asked that we discuss this clause subsection by subsection. We are on paragraph (a).

Mr. HEENAN: As I have to leave the chamber at six o'clock, I should like my amendment to be taken into consideration when subsection 6 is under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN: The committee may allow subsection 6 to be discussed now.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no point in departing from the rules.

The CHAIRMAN: In that case the amendment is out of order at the present time. We are on paragraph (a).

Mr. HEAPS: I would suggest to the mover of the amendment that it might apply to paragraph (f).

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, when you reach that subsection, but at the request of the right hon. leader of the opposition it was understood that we should take the clause subsection by subsection. The committee is discussing paragraph (a).

Mr. GUTHRIE: We finished paragraph (a).

Paragraph (a) agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 1, paragraph (b) —production.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I beg to move:

That subsection (b) be amended by inserting the word "efficient" before the word "production" where it occurs in the first and last lines of the clause.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The object is to show that the production must be of a high and efficient standard.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Window dressing.

Mr. RINFRET: I submit that the amendment will only make more difficult the fact finding duty of the commission; for surely efficiency is not a question of fact, it is a question of opinion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think it is just as well to emphasize efficiency.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Oh, yes. Carried.

Mr. BUTCHER: I think there are two objections to be raised to this particular subsection, which reads:

In respect of goods produced in or imported into Canada the board shall, under the direction of the minister, make inquiry as to (b) the cost of efficient production in Canada and elsewhere, and what increases or decreases in rates of duty are required to equalize differences in the cost of efficient production.

My first objection to this subsection is that it is really impossible of performance; my second is that it confers powers that I believe even the Minister of Finance himself does not intend to confer upon the board. He has told us that it will not be within the province of this board to make recommendations or suggestions or deductions or to draw inferences, but that it shall find facts only. In my opinion the real effect of this particular subsection is to do even more than that. It gives the board power to make decisions of far-reaching importance. I believe it will not be very hard to prove what I say, for no matter how exhaustive the search, or how diligent the inquiry, it will be impossible to establish any one figure as the cost of production either in Canada or elsewhere, because the costs will vary in different countries, in different parts of the same country, in different plants in each country, and at different times in all of the plants in each country. I believe that has been proven by the tariff commission of the United States, a body which has been referred to so often during this debate, and I desire to quote from one of their reports made in 1919. I admit that is a long time ago, and I remember the Prime Minister told us they have a new board now, but I believe the board at that time had the same instructions as the board of to-day has—to find facts. Well, they set out to find facts in many cases, and I believe they came to the conclusion that it was next to impossible to establish any one figure as the cost of production even in the United States, let alone in other countries. I am bearing in mind what the Prime Minister told us the other night about the establishment of the cost of producing edible gelatin in Holland. I believe I am correct in saying he told us there was only one plant in Holland making edible gelatin—

Mr. BENNETT: One important plant.

Mr. BUTCHER: —and that that plant had an agency in New York. I conclude it would be comparatively easy under those circumstances to discover the cost of producing edible gelatin. Then I think he referred to the inquiry into the cost of producing maple sugar in Canada. I believe that that also would be comparatively easy to determine, because maple sugar is more or less of a raw product, slightly processed. I believe in most cases maple sugar is a kind of by-product, and I understand there are no plants devoted entirely to the production of this particular commodity. I notice the United States tariff commission in their report of 1919, series No. 9, gave the result of their inquiries as to the cost of wool. May I say here that I believe it would have been difficult for the Prime Minister to find many other articles, the costs of production of which would be as easy to ascertain as the production costs of the two particular commodities that he did mention; when we come to the more elaborate schedules I think it would be very much more difficult to ascertain the production costs. For instance, the tariff commission of that period were instructed to ascertain the cost of the production of wool in the United States and this is what they discovered: They discovered that in 1919 in Montana wool cost 76 cents per pound. They arrived at that cost by taking into consideration labour, interest on investment, cost of feed, fees and rentals, depreciation and miscellaneous charges. The same year, with the same method of computation, they discovered that wool in Wyoming cost 48 cents; in Washington, 35 cents; in Idaho, 32 cents. But even more singular, they discovered that whereas wool cost 76 cents in Montana in 1919, it cost 44 cents in 1918. It will be seen, therefore, how difficult it is to arrive at the cost of this one raw material which enters so largely into the production cost of woollen goods. In the same year they made the discovery that the cost of producing beet sugar was $66.40 per ton in one case and $139.80 in another, these being the extreme costs. This discrepancy is true of agriculture, but the tariff commission decided that it was even more marked in industry. Many of the facts to which I am referring I have gathered from a book written by one Thomas Walker Page, who was at this time chairman of the United States tariff commission. The book, he says, was written with the aid of the council and staff of the Institute of Economics of Washington, D.C. Referring to the cost of manufacture in connection with agriculture, he says:

> In many branches of manufacturing the problem of joint costs is even more confusing than in agriculture. In its study of the dye industry in 1919 the tariff commission found that the different producers used five different bases for distributing expenses, namely, the amount of labour directly used on a given product, the cost of the raw material going into it, the amount of superintendence chargeable to it, the sales value of the product, and the capital investment imputed to it. Naturally the costs show great diversity, and the commission on presenting its report found it necessary to strongly emphasize the uncertainty of conclusions drawn from the cost figures in this report, and the possibility of error in administrative action based upon such data.

And this brings me to my opinion that the tariff board is being given the power of making far-reaching decisions. It has before it the low cost, the high cost and many costs between. Shall the members of that board select the low cost or the high cost or the average? It is for them to decide; and as I have pointed out, this is a greater power even than would be conferred upon them if they were merely asked to make recommendations or suggestions.

I will not say much more because the matter has been so thoroughly threshed out by members on this side. In my opinion, however, the Prime Minister himself last night gave one potent reason why the concluding words of this particular section should be eliminated. These words are:

> What increases or decreases in rates of duty are required to equalize differences in the cost of production is simply a matter of mathematics.

If it were possible to establish definitely any one figure as the cost of production in this or any other country, I admit that it would be simply a matter of mathematical calculation to decide the rate of duty that should be imposed. But I believe that is one more reason why the words I have quoted should be deleted from the clause. Surely it is not necessary to impose on this highly paid tariff board—they will receive $32,000 per annum among them—the duty of making a simple mathematical calculation that might be made by a junior clerk in the office of the Minister of Finance. Moreover, it would derogate from the dignity of the board to instruct them to perform this simple mathematical calculation. For this reason I move that clause (b) of subsection 1 of section 4 be amended by striking out the words I have quoted.

Mr. HEAPS: The proposed tariff board will have an almost impossible task if they are to be asked to carry out the terms of this section. First of all they will be required to determine cost of production in Canada and elsewhere, which means that they will have to travel in all parts of the world to ascertain the costs of producing goods imported either directly or indirectly into the Dominion. This is one objection I have to the section. Further, the section provides that they shall indicate what increases or decreases may be necessary in the rates of duty. That ought to be the function of the government and of parliament. It is not something for an outside body to determine. I think we are delegating to an outside body responsibilities which we should assume as members of parliament. This delegation of the duties of parliament to such a body is something which ought not to appear in a tariff measure. When it comes to determining cost of production, I would point out that it is almost an impossible task to ascertain the cost of production in Canada alone, to say nothing of the rest of the world. Objection has been made in Manitoba to the importation of cheap goods from the province of Quebec. How will you deal with such a question? Suppose a manufacturer from Manitoba says, "I want this tariff board to inquire into wages paid in the province of Quebec, with a view to reducing the duty on textile goods coming into the Dominion." What would be the effect? Right away we are up against the wall of provincial jurisdiction. The federal government may have certain powers, but the question of wages, hours of labour, and so on are questions entirely within the provincial jurisdiction. And I imagine that if an attempt were made by the government through the tariff board to lower the duties and this board went into the province and asked for the production of documents with respect to wages and so forth, the corporation would be within its rights in refusing to submit such documents to them. The immediate result would be a conflict in jurisdiction between the federal and provincial authorities. I have no objection to that, but I would far sooner have the Prime Minister take the stand he took last year as leader of the opposition. He then made certain statements which I believe he would still stand by. He said that there should be no protection accorded industries unless they carried out in principle the ideas embodied in the treaty of Versailles. Let me quote a few words of the Prime Minister, uttered on May 21, 1930, to be found on page 2373 of Hansard, as follows:

> Now in my conception of protection as applied to the fiscal policy of a country, it is always understood that we shall maintain decent standards of living and reasonable hours of labour which certainly must not violate the condition under which we signed the great world-wide treaty of peace. That being so, what has been suggested in this house to-night is that inasmuch as we are increasing the measure of protection to industries to enable Canadian development to proceed upon orderly lines and upon equal terms with its competitors in other parts of the world, we should also maintain at least those reasonable standards of living and hours of labour that obtain in communities that are our competitors. The Conservative party has always advocated a measure of protection and the advocates of protection have always put forward the arguments that I am now submitting to the house.

I could go on quoting at considerable length from the statements made last year by the Prime Minister. At that time he claimed that there would be no increase in the duties then given to the steel industry of Nova Scotia unless it was prepared to give to those employed reasonable conditions of labour and living. According to this clause it is intended to hand over to the board the making of certain inquiries, although it will be doubtful whether the board has the power to make them. The board will be making inquiries which will necessitate its going to all parts of the world in order to obtain the necessary information. While I believe the board should have certain powers and functions, it should be made possible for it to accomplish that which it is asked to do. I am afraid that so much is being put upon it by this clause that ultimately the law will become a dead letter.

Mr. YOUNG: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that clause (b) of subsection 1 of section 4 marks a new departure in the framing of tariffs. It sets up a new principle that where an industry labours under a handicap, natural or otherwise, it is the duty of the government to offset that handicap by means of a tariff. By adopting such a principle I can see where we will encourage in this country the most exotic industries. There is no doubt that we could grow oranges in Canada. They could be grown under glass at a profit if the tariff were high enough. The vast majority of our people would never be able to have oranges, they would not even have the opportunity of seeing them in the shop windows—only the very wealthy people could purchase them—but we would be establishing an industry. Our modern industry and our modern standards of living are based upon the division of labour, the allotting to those who can best do a thing the doing of that thing; the producing of commodities in the particular districts or localities where they can be produced most economically. It is by the adoption of this principle that the present standard of living has been built up and that the world is able to sustain its present population. Under this bill we abandon that principle and we say that it does not matter whether the country is naturally adapted for the producing of a certain article, it does not matter whether the people have any aptitude for producing that article, we will offset all handicaps by means of artificial restrictions on trade. It will lead us into the establishment of the most exotic industries and lower the standard of living in this country. The goods we need will be out of the reach of many of our people.

Mr. MANION: Who in the Conservative party ever took such an attitude as the hon. member is ascribing to the party?

Mr. YOUNG: I do not ascribe that attitude to the Conservative party; I say that will be the result of the adoption of this principle.

Mr. MANION: It is not the result.

Mr. YOUNG: The hon. minister has not seen the result as yet. I have here the thirteenth annual report of the United States tariff commission, and in connection with the difficulty of finding domestic costs of production, it has the following to say:

> An additional difficulty in obtaining cost data is the time required to get the basic information and to tabulate and summarize it in usable form for purposes of the law. As a rule it requires many months of field and office work by a large number of experts of the commission's staff to obtain the necessary data in important investigations. "Cost of production" is by definition an exact and mathematical term, and to obtain it requires a careful examination of cost records, prepared and interpreted under rules of economics and of cost accounting.
> All these obstacles to obtaining costs-of-production data apply to both domestic and foreign industries, but they are multiplied when costs are to be obtained in foreign countries and in a foreign language.

That is the opinion of the United States tariff commission, of the difficulties in determining costs and the time necessary to determine such costs. We know that there is nothing static in industry. What it may cost to-day to produce this pen, may have nothing to do with what it will cost to-morrow. The production cost is a certain figure to-day, but as months go on a new process is invented, methods change, production costs are reduced, and the figures become out of date. I do not think there is any country in the world so disliked by other countries as is the United States. To a large measure that is due to the practice of sending experts into different factories in different countries to investigate costs. They enter a foreign factory and say: We want to know your production costs, but we will promise faithfully not to reveal any of your trade secrets. They inquire into the production costs and then go back to their own country and use the information so obtained to persuade their government to shut out the goods manufactured by those factories. That policy has brought upon the United States the ill will of nearly every other country in the world, and it will have the same effect upon us.

An increased tariff means increased costs of living and increased costs of production. An investigation is made into the cost of producing a certain article, and at the same time another investigation is carried on into the cost of producing other articles which are the raw material of the first. It is decided that in the case of the first article a duty of 25 per cent is necessary to equalize production costs, and at the same time it is decided that a certain percentage is required in the case of the second article. It will be found that the cost of the raw material has been affected by the increase in the tariff in one case, which will affect the production costs in the other. The figures will confuse each other. The most amazing feature about this equalization principle is that the Prime Minister is apparently prepared to abandon it because he realizes that it will not always work. Yesterday when he was discussing the American tariff commission and how they had found that a certain duty was required in order to equalize the production costs between Canada and the United States of maple sugar and maple syrup, I asked him if those figures could be disputed. He said that they could not, and I then asked him what he would do about it if it was found that the American figures were correct, which figures show that it costs less to produce maple syrup and maple sugar in Canada than in the United States. I asked him if he would equalize. If he did so he would have to make a downward revision of the tariff. We have a 20 per cent tariff on maple products and I asked him if this tariff would be removed if the board found that it requires less to produce maple syrup and maple sugar in Canada than it does in the United States.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Why not?

Mr. YOUNG: Perhaps he can tell the hon. member why not. He says:

> I have been endeavouring to point out that the government will not necessarily act at once upon the facts as found. The government may act to-day, it may act next session, or it may act the session after. The first thing to do is to ascertain the facts, then ascertain what the application of the facts may be.

I can take only one meaning out of that, and that is that when the facts are found, if they suit his purpose the Prime Minister will act on them and probably raise the tariff. But if it be found that the facts say that the tariff should be reduced, then the Prime Minister will use his discretion as to whether he should act on those facts or not. What is the use of going on with such a farce as that? If he is determined to continue to raise tariffs, why not proceed as he has been doing heretofore, by the method of trial and error? Let the Prime Minister try a rate. If he finds that he has made a mistake, let him try another. I think he can proceed much quicker and at much less expense and come just as near to the actual facts as he can by this method.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether there is any necessity at all for all these paragraphs, and, indeed, for the greater part of the entire section. I can understand that there is a reason for inserting them, which is to convey the idea that this board is going to do many things that will be of interest to, and in the nature of protection of all classes in the community, but which in fact it will never do, and never could do even were it desired it should. Is not the meaning of the section, stripped of all its verbiage, that the board may inquire into anything in respect to which the minister wishes to get information? That is the whole purpose of the section. You neither add to nor take away from the powers of the board by putting in all these paragraphs. Section 4 commences:

> In respect of goods produced in or imported into Canada the board shall under the direction of the minister, make inquiry as to—

Then there appear paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e) and (f). It really does not matter what these paragraphs contain when one reads the next subsection, subsection 2, which states:

> The board shall make inquiry into any other matter, upon which the minister desires information.

In other words, read together, paragraphs which constitute subsections one and two mean the board shall inquire into any matter that the minister wishes inquired into, and into any other matter on which he wants information. All that it is really necessary to say is:

> The board shall make inquiry into any matter upon which the minister desires information.

That unquestionably is the form in which the section should appear. Certainly the minister ought to have a right to have a body to secure for him information on anything that relates to the tariff and on which he seeks information. I suggest to the Prime Minister it would be much better to have the section so drafted and to leave out all these misleading paragraphs as to what the board may inquire into. I say they are misleading because obviously the board never in the world will be able to do the kind of thing that is suggested in these paragraphs. Let me take the subsection which we are discussing at the moment:

> (b) The cost of production in Canada and elsewhere, and what increases or decreases in rates of duty are required to equalize differences in the cost of production.

While with regard to maple syrup or edible gelatin, or one or two other items such as have been mentioned, a board might prepare a report, after spending a year or so in investigating, is it not a fact that as respects the great mass of commodities affected by tariffs they will never be able to consider them at all? All that can possibly be affected is that from time to time the minister will make references of particular subjects to the board and the board will report to him upon them. He would have that freedom by using the words I have quoted, and only those words. I do not see how any purpose, except a misleading one, is to be served by retaining all these paragraphs in the section.

The one subsection of the several set forth says that the board shall inquire in certain circumstances into what increases or decreases in rates of duty are required. That means that the board will be concerned with rates of duty. I contend that only the ministry and the House of Commons should decide on rates of duty. Duty is a form of taxation, and taxation is a matter that comes within the exclusive purview of parliament. I know my right hon. friend will say that the ministry assumes full responsibility when it makes a recommendation to parliament; but if my right hon. friend will tell us what is in the back of his mind, he will tell us that at any time he proceeds to make a suggestion about a change in the rate of duty he is going to base it on the fact that he has had this particular board make a report and that his recommendation is along its lines. He will ask parliament to accept that rate of duty because the board which he has appointed for this purpose, upon which large sums of money are to be spent and which is to be given all the powers here enumerated in detail, has, after working for a year or more, come to the conclusion that the rate of duty should be changed in such and such a way. If he does that he will in reality be having tariffs made by some body other than the House of Commons. My right hon. friend let the cat out of the bag the other day in one of his explanations; he actually stated that the board was to make the rates of duty. As reported on page 3083 of Hansard he used the following words in reference to this board:

It has to determine what duty is necessary—

That is plain English. The sentence goes on to say:

—to enable an adjustment being made of the differences between the cost of goods which compete with Canadian goods, and the Canadian goods themselves.

That addition is qualifying only to the extent of restricting the rate of duty to what duty is necessary to maintain the protective principle in the tariff, which, as I have already said, is the real purpose of the establishment of this board. This board is to be created to maintain the protective principle in the tariff and to do so by telling the Prime Minister what duty is necessary to that end. It has as he says to determine what duty is necessary; that in a word is the meaning of paragraph (b) which we are at present discussing. To delegate such a power to any board is to take away from parliament its first and essential duty, namely, to say how the revenues are to be raised and what taxes are to be imposed upon the people. Undoubtedly when the tariff is changed my right hon. friend will say it is done for purposes of protection rather than for purposes of revenue; but whether protection is incidental or not, revenue is one of the things that is going to be affected. Moreover, as a consequence of every tariff which is proposed there will be a certain additional restriction upon trade, with the result that where any board and not parliament determines such matters, the people will thereby be deprived of some of their freedom in the matter of saying how and to what extent they shall be taxed.

Let me come back to what I said before, namely, that the bill would be very much improved if my right hon. friend would drop all these paragraphs and the details he has about price and cost, raw materials, production, efficiency and conditions of labour, price to consumers and other inquiries by the minister, and simply say:

In respect of goods produced in or imported into Canada the board shall, at the request of the minister, make inquiry as to any matter upon which the minister desires information.

Does the Prime Minister by all these details seek in any particular to go further than that?

Mr. BENNETT: One would think, listening to the speeches that have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite, this was some Machiavellian device for the purpose of imposing upon the Canadian people legislation that had never been heard or thought of before. The truth is that this is a measure by which it is proposed that tariffs shall be based upon an appreciation of facts. Whether or not, as I have so often said, one's hopes are realized depends upon the personnel of the commission and the ability it discloses to deal with the problems submitted to it. The right hon. gentleman has suggested that we should strike out the paragraphs and subclauses in section 4, and say practically that the commission will ascertain such facts as the minister may wish to find. A few minutes ago his colleague the ex-Minister of Labour was asking us to add to the measure something more in the way of detail. Which one of these hon. gentlemen are we to take seriously—the ex-Minister of Labour and the hon. member for North Winnipeg, who supported his view, or the former Prime Minister who says: Let us be done with this, and let us put down in a few words what is required? There is a rule with respect to statutes and their preparation which I think finds force here. The draftsman of a statute endeavours very often to lay down a principle, proceeds to amplify it by details, and then seeks to make it clear that the details do not in any sense exhaust the principle. In this case it will be observed, as the right hon. gentleman has read, that:

In respect of goods produced in or imported into Canada the board shall, at the request of the minister, make inquiry as to——the factors mentioned in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), and (f), and report to the minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And shall make inquiry into any other matter.

Mr. BENNETT: I was dealing with subsection 1. I am coming to subsection 2 presently.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Subsection 2 is a part of section 4.

Mr. BENNETT: The first subsection is the one to which I have just directed attention. The board is to inquire into the price and cost of raw materials, the cost of working up the raw materials into the finished product. The very point which the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has stressed is also dealt with in paragraph, (c), the cost, efficiency and conditions of labour, includ-ind health of employees in Canada and elsewhere. The board further shall make inquiry as to:

(d) the prices received by producers, manufacturers, wholesale dealers, retailers and other distributors in Canada and elsewhere;

(e) All conditions and factors which affect or enter into the cost of production and the price to the consumers in Canada;

And lastly:

(f) generally, all the conditions affecting production, manufacture, cost and price in Canada as compared with other countries.

The clause was amplified in that way in part to meet the point of the very admirable suggestion made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, about which I am bound to say that he knew less than his observations indicated. If he had taken the trouble to read the section in question he would have seen that it is prepared for the purpose of enabling that tribunal to ascertain to what extent there has been watered stock.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is not compulsory, though. That is the difference between the section and the suggestion of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Hants-Kings says that it is not obligatory. If he can use any words stronger than "shall make inquiry as to" I shall be obliged to him. The word "may" is used in a statute sometimes in the permissive sense, and sometimes it is obligatory, but here the word used is "shall".

Mr. ILSLEY: But only at the request of the minister.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly. The board "shall, at the request of the minister, make inquiry as to" the factors mentioned in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f). One of the factors that enter into cost is the question of overhead, and overhead, of course, in these days, is determined almost as a matter of science. Let me put to the hon. member who moved the amendment, and who made a most moderate and reasoned and fair statement to this committee, that we are no longer living in 1919, and if the facts were as he alleged, then the conclusions he has offered would not be extreme. But I wonder if this committee realize the extent to which in modern business there has been improvement in the ascertaining of costs over eleven years. Compare 1919 with 1931. I had occasion about a year and a half or two years ago to examine the cost sheets of a very large enterprise, and I was amazed to find that costs are no longer worked out in decimals of one-tenth of a cent, but down to four decimal places; that is, for example, to ·8716 of a cent. In these days of modern competition the question of costs has become the all-important factor, and the costs director of a company is the man who very often determines its solvency or insolvency. When it is said that you can compare 1919 with 1931, no regard is paid to modern accountancy and to the relation which modern competition has created between the cost side of a business and its resultant product.

This section endeavours to provide, first of all, that your raw material must be considered. Is it found in Canada, or is it imported into Canada? Is it material that lies close to the factory which uses it, or is it thousands of miles away? Can you say that of the whole of the raw material so used, or only part of it? Must you add to the raw material which is the principal ingredient of the product other raw material from abroad or raw material found at home? Those are vital questions at the threshold of the inquiry.

Then you go into the next question of processes, and the hon. member was quite right when he said that the complicated processes of modern manufacturing are matters that call for extreme care in the accountancy department of any modern business. That is why the business that disregards it is in the hands of a receiver, while the business that cares for it flourishes. That is why I think the observation made by the hon. member for Hants-Kings the other day was worthy of attention, when he used the word "efficient" production. I know of one case that came before the advisory tariff board, so called, in which the standard was the standard of the lowest form of production in Canada. So long as you take such a standard you can justify almost any duty you want, but if you use a standard of efficient production, then you can make comparisons of efficiency. I have had some little experience in business; at one time it was rather extensive. I was privileged to have some knowledge of almost every branch of business, whether it was the packing business, the paper business, the insurance business, the electrical business, or what it might be, and I realized that the question of cost was an all-important one, because even if your profit be only $\frac{3}{8}$ of a cent per unit, if your volume is large enough you make an enormous fortune. I know of one case in which the profit on the single unit of production of the company amounted to less than $\frac{3}{8}$ of a cent, and yet the volume was so large that the return was magnificent and it looked as though it were too large a return upon the investment. Yet the individual unit return was small.

It is proposed that here you have a body that shall inquire into the cost of your raw material, the cost of your production machinery. Have you modern machinery? Are your conveyors proper conveyors or are they old-fashioned? Have you electric power attached to the shafts or do you rely upon power of another character? Are you using the latest and most efficient devices? Are you willing to risk the expenditure of large sums of capital for the purpose of making ultimate savings? Millions of dollars were spent by the Canadian Pacific Railway in building the viaduct at Lethbridge, and people asked, how is it going to be worth while to spend millions of dollars to cross this ravine by a viaduct? It was simply a cold-blooded matter of computation. The movement of so many trains per day by the old method meant an expenditure of so many dollars. The rapidity with which that movement could be made by means of a viaduct meant a saving, as compared with the old method, that enabled them to capitalize it and pay interest on the capital involved, together with the sinking fund required to meet that capital expenditure in a given time. In Canada to-day we have some enterprises which can compete with the world in manufacturing. They have not done it in a day. They have done it through the course of years, by the improvement of conditions, by adopting the most modern engineering practice, moderate cost production, and care in the management of their affairs.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River referred to the question of labour and conditions of labour. It is intended that regard shall be had to the conditions of labour The hon. gentleman also touched upon watered stock, which I conceive to be one of the most dangerous things in this country to-day, and I direct his attention and that of his party to the fact that all the great mergers in this country which have affected the life of the people have taken place under Liberal rule in Canada—every one of them—and there never has been a time when there has been more reason to pause and think than during the last nine years. I am besieged—not literally, but I do receive communications asking why we cannot have investigations into this or that industry where there has been a great watering stock and where securities have been sold to the public under the guise of shares of companies in this country. In 1912, while in my place in the old parliament, I directed attention to a method I thought might be used to accomplish some reforms in that regard. It cannot be done by resolutions; it cannot be done by an endeavour to make political capital in a purely political speech such as that delivered by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River a few minutes ago. No; it goes deeper than that. Regard must be had for elementary principles in connection with enterprises of this character—the splitting up of shares, the expanding of capital, the creating of added responsibilities with respect to those who manage the enterprises and who very often are left holding the bag after paying off the securities. When such conditions arise, as has been found in many countries—others as well as our own—then action must be taken to remedy them.

What has been done in the last nine years to remedy such conditions? Name a single step which was taken—mention even one. When I hear hon. gentlemen opposite suddenly become so solicitous about matters of this kind, I ask, first of all, if they know what they are talking about. I know by their very speeches that they do not. Secondly I ask them: What did you do to remedy the condition? I have a right to ask that question. This government has been in power less than a year and because of that has had very few opportunities to deal with legislation such as that now before us. There is no worry in this country to-day about watered stock except as concerns those who bought it—that is the trouble. I refer to those who found themselves with pieces of paper upon which dividends should be payable, and for which they paid fifty, sixty or seventy cents on the dollar, now to find themselves the possessors of something worth only about five cents. Under what government did they buy? Whose assistance or protection did they have in their transactions? When hon. members talk about these matters let them face the truth and know what they are talking about. I know. I see the fatal results which have followed the course pursued under the aegis of the government which held sway in this house for nine years.

This tariff bill is no make-believe; yet hon. gentlemen opposite cannot understand it. The difficulty with my hon. friends opposite is that they cannot understand anyone making a really sincere attempt to lessen trade difficulties in this country; they cannot understand anything of that nature. Here is a deliberate effort to have reports presented on facts as they are found. Do you mean to tell me that a business which is built up with a capital of $200,000 or $300,000 through hard work and toil is to be sold to the public for two or three million dollars? Not under this board.

Mr. POULIOT: Is this to be a blue sky law?

Mr. BENNETT: This is the position in regard to the matter: I submit to the committee and to the house that the details given in the form in which they appear in the bill have been prepared by the draftsman in accordance with the principles governing such matters; because since we have had parliamentary institutions it has always been recognized that where there are details which must be considered a general statement in a statute is not sufficient. Anyone interested in that, as is my hon. friend from Hants-Kings, will find the statement dealt with in a book dealing with the drafting of parliamentary statutes. Although I am not certain I think the book was written by the late Lord Thring, the man who drafted the British North America Act.

In the present instance we have details following a declaration of general principle, and then we find the instructions to the board to consider:

All conditions and factors which affect or enter into the cost of production and the price to the consumers in Canada.

What made the costs to you as consumers in Canada? Be it clothes, be it wool, be it boots and shoes, be it neckties or be it food—what were the factors and conditions which entered into the cost to you as consumers? That is the general condition provided for in the bill in addition to the specific ones. Then follows subsection (2), to which attention has been drawn. I shall read it:

The board shall make inquiry into any other matter, upon which the minister desires information. . . .

Certainly. As my right hon. friend has said, the minister has power to ask for information concerning "any other matters" in connection with which he desires information. However, the clause does not stop there. It continues:

. . . . in relation to any goods which, if brought into Canada or produced in Canada, are subject to or exempt from duties of customs or excise, ...

That is, we are dealing with a class of goods exempt from customs or excise—

. . . . and shall report to the minister, and the inquiry into any such matter may include inquiry as to the effect which an increase or decrease of the existing rate of duty upon a given commodity might have upon industry or trade, and the extent to which the consumer is protected from exploitation.

Those are the words to which I direct attention. Name any legislation the Liberal party ever offered the people of Canada which endeavoured to do what the present legislation provides. Name one thing that they ever did. When I hear the ex-Minister of Agriculture indulging in his coarse jokes I ask him: What did he ever do to protect the consumer of Canada? Name me one thing he ever did—anything—to protect Canadian consumers.

When I hear the hon. member from Weyburn (Mr. Young) from day to day indulging in his tirades I say to him: Are you serious? Are you sincere? Do you mean what you say? If you do, then, why do you not join with the government which is endeavouring to pass legislation to prevent the consumer from being exploited? That is the position I take in respect to this matter.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Because it is a humbug—the whole thing.

Mr. BENNETT: That is exactly what I expected my hon. friend would say. He is incapable of sincerity in connection with any matter, and he cannot conceive of anything being done which would not be humbug, because that is his stock in trade. Through all these years that has been his stock in trade.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What about the London conference?

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I thought my hon. friend would ask.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They were not long getting on to the right hon. gentleman over there.

Mr. BENNETT: All I can say to hon. gentlemen opposite is this: When legislation is offered to this committee in terms unambiguous, unequivocal, in conformity with every rule of governing the construction and interpretation of a statute, which is open to one meaning and one only, then I say there is something wrong with the minds of those who read into such a measure a sinister purpose. I say in all positiveness that there never has been legislation to which more time and thought has been given for the purpose of helping the ordinary consumer in Canada than that which lies before this committee to-day.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is not much to it.

Mr. BENNETT: There must always be some body to ascertain facts.

When the hon. member for Weyburn took his seat this afternoon he answered, I trust for all time, the right hon. the leader of the opposition. He stated the truth. This is not fiscal legislation; this does not make tariffs; this body has no legislative power and no parliamentary functions, but it is a body which shall report to the government of the day in answer to inquiries made by that government. That government in turn may pass or fail to pass legislation as in its discretion is thought desirable. Under our constitution, with which at least some hon. members opposite are familiar, we know that bodies such as the one proposed can in no sense make legislation respecting tariffs. That can be made only by this parliament sitting as a parliament with the Commons and the Senate and the third estate of the realm. Every hon. gentleman knows that. And that legislation must originate with the government of the day; no hon. member can submit legislation of that character unless he be a member of the government of the day. That is its function. There has been no derogation by this proposed legislation from the functions of government, there has been no lessening of the powers of parliament, there has been no restriction placed upon the plenary powers of the legislature. But the government has to assume responsibility. After reading the report that is given to it by this tribunal, in answer to the request of the Minister of Finance, that government decides whether or not it will go forward with its legislation and submit it to this parliament. Is that usurpation of the powers of parliament? Let us at least preserve a little of our intelligence in dealing with these things—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: —just a little. I ask any hon. member to stand in his place and say that this legislation in any sense lessens the powers of this chamber or the powers of this parliament.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Who said it did?

Mr. BENNETT: Who said it did?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Has the hon. gentleman suddenly lost his sense of hearing that he could not hear what was said by hon. gentlemen opposite a few moments ago? Does he not remember what his leader said yesterday, as he threshed the air and talked no longer of "feudalism," but of a "star chamber" functioning and usurping the powers of parliament? Does he forget what every other member recalls? There is not another member in this house who does not remember it. And this afternoon the others followed in his train. The lead had been given—parliament had been deprived of its functions, the high court of parliament was no longer sitting, matters had to be determined by a tribunal thus set up. What an absurdity! But it served the purpose—to endeavour to humbug the public—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: —it followed the classic policy of the ex-Minister of Agriculture. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have dealt with this section at some length. One would have thought that after the second reading of the bill and after the long discussion that took place thereon, and after the more ample discussion that took place later, there might not be the least difficulty in arriving at conclusions with respect to this section. The opposition is bound to oppose the section. It has done so. It has placed itself on record—but it did not vote on the second reading!—and I assume on the third reading it will place itself on record. I hope so. Let the people of the country know what all this talk is about. Let them know what is the conception of hon. gentlemen opposite of a tariff board. When they were the government they got two or three men together by order in council and called them an advisory board on tariff and taxation. That was their conception of a tariff board!

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): "And e'en the ranks of Tuscany could scarce forbear to cheer."

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT

On the order:

House again in committee on Bill No. 33, to amend the Companies Act (auditors).—Mr. Hackett.

Mr. HACKETT: With the permission of the house, I ask to withdraw this bill. It was incorporated in a bill introduced by the hon. the Secretary of State.

Mr. SPEAKER: With the consent of the house the bill is withdrawn.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

NATURE OF SPEECHES ON PUBLIC AFFAIRS TO DETERMINE UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY

The house resumed from Tuesday, May 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth for the second reading of Bill No. 19, to amend the criminal code (unlawful assemblies).

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Toronto Northwest): I want to place myself in direct opposition to Bill No. 19. I have given the subject considerable study and investigation, and the more I examine into it the more I am opposed to what I believe would result in this country if this bill were adopted. I listened to the speeches that were made in support of the bill and later read them, and to my way of thinking a very great deal of time was spent in attacking the city of Toronto, its peace enforcement department, and too little time spent in supporting the object of this bill—unlicensed free speech. There is altogether too much effort made to break down the traditions and principles which the people of Canada stand for almost unanimously, and a slackening of effort in defence of these principles.

In support of what I am going to say, I may observe that behind me is the almost unanimous opinion of the city of Toronto. In the municipal elections of 1928 Mr. Jack McDonald, an avowed communist, ran on a free speech platform for the board of control, and received, after having had the privilege of freedom, of all platforms in the city, 539 votes out of a population of approximately 700,000. Last winter again, Mr. Tim Buck, another leader of the communistic party, contested an election for the board of control and he too received an insignificant number of votes. This goes to show that the people of Toronto are not behind what they know to be the objective of those who are advocating so-called free speech.

In the debate that took place some time ago on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to amend the criminal code with respect to unlawful assemblies, several of the great cities of Canada were mentioned—Montreal, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Toronto, with the emphasis of attack principally upon Toronto. The people of Toronto are proud of their peace enforcement department; they are proud of the 1,200 men and women who comprise that department. We, in Toronto, are proud of their integrity, their attentiveness to duty, their civility, their loyalty, their earnestness and their courage whenever it is necessary for them to show it. And I believe I can say the same of the great cities of Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver in relation to their forces.

Commencing with Montreal, I wish to read what the official organ of the communistic party of Canada, The Worker, has to say in reference to these cities. I shall quote from the issue of May 16. Now, Mr. Speaker, every member of this house is in favour of free speech, but free speech within the law. We are opposed to free speech that tolerates sedition and revolutionary or blasphemous talk. And it is that kind of talk that has been prohibited, wherever it has been prohibited, or attacked after it has been made, wherever it might be. On the top left hand corner of the front page of this issue there appear these words:

> The defence of the Soviet union from the attacks of the imperialists rests with the revolutionary workers of the world!

The whole basis of this so-called free speech propaganda is revolution, and to that the almost unanimous public opinion of Canada is opposed. On two occasions already attacks have been made on the law and order of the country, attacks carefully organized. And there is one more coming shortly. The first was early in May. I am not sure whether it was the first of May or not, but this paper refers to it. The second date was June 26 last, when we had riots more or less in Windsor and Winnipeg and a disturbance in Toronto. There appears on the back of The Party Organizer, the publication of the central organization of the communist party in Canada, the following:

> Prepare For August First.

It would seem that the next day on which we may have riots of one kind and another connected with free speech will be August 1. The Worker, the official organ of the communist party in Canada, contains the following under date of Montreal, May 12:

> Indictments charging unlawful assembly and sedition were returned here Tuesday by the grand jury against—

Then several more or less unpronounceable names are given. The following, referring to the disturbance in Montreal, appears on page 4:

> Montreal, May 11.—The approaching trial of nine workers in Montreal charged with sedition and unlawful assembly is being prepared in an atmosphere of considerable prejudice which is being worked up to a high pitch by the Catholic church in its organizations. This institution is at present conducting an intensive campaign of anti-communistic propaganda amongst the broad masses of French Canadians.

The Catholic church is to be commended upon its attitude toward communism and its opposition to sedition, revolution and blasphemy. The article continues:

> This is the first time in twenty-five years that a case of sedition is being tried in the courts in the province of Quebec. The present framing of sedition and unlawful assembly in the case of the nine workers is part of an attack against the whole revolutionary movement.

More power to those in the city of Montreal who are opposed to the revolutionary

Now is the time for the railroad shopmen to act. The agreements between the division bureaucrats are scraps of paper. The strangle hold of the A. F. & L. machine can only be broken by committees of action organized around the Workers' Unity League.

This would show that these people—the communists—are against that great labour organization, the American Federation of Labour. The article continues:

Every militant in the A. F. & L. locals is duty bound to immediately organize around himself opposition groups of the Workers' Unity League that will pave the way for the struggle. The Canadian National railway men will be next. The move is already heralded. The miners of Alberta in voting for the W.U.L. on May 11 have shown the shopmen the way. Only militant struggle will avail.

The basis of the organization seems to be a struggle of some kind. The following article appears in connection with Vancouver:

Allan Campbell, militant leader of the Vancouver unemployed, and recently sentenced to one year for sedition has been released on $5,000 bail pending his appeal, which will be heard on June 20. The Court of Inquiry has ordered his deportation. A nation wide campaign is being staged by the national committee of the C.L.D.L. for his unconditional release, for quashing deportation proceedings.

On page 1, under the title of "Why Every Militant Worker Should Be a Communist," appears the following:

The communist party, however, is the central organizer of all the struggles, the general engineer for the wrecking of the ancient structure of decaying capitalism and for the construction of the new socialistic society.

To the readers of The Worker who have familiarized themselves to some extent with the activity of the party from coast to coast, the next step should be clear. Bearing well in mind Lenin's famous statement, "Without a revolutionary party there can be no revolutionary movement," they should during the present May recruiting campaign enter their application for membership in the communist party.

My observation has been that many movements which have caused trouble in Canada have been directed by some official in some foreign country. The following would go a long way to prove this contention:

The eleventh plenum of the executive committee of the C.I. met in Moscow. The plenum heard:

1. Comrade Manuilsky's report on the tasks of the sections of the communist international in connection with the aggravation of the economic crisis and the growth of the prerequisites of revolutionary crisis in a number of countries and the co-reports of comrades Thalmann, Lensky and Chemodanov on the situation and tasks of the C.P.'s of Germany, Poland and the young communist international respectively.

[Mr. MacNicol.]

We have in Canada a young communist party to which I will refer later on. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has moved a resolution to amend the unlawful assembly section of the criminal code. This is section 87 of chapter 36 of the revised statutes of Canada. It reads:

An unlawful assembly is an assembly of three or more persons who, with intent to carry out any common purpose, assemble in such a manner or so conduct themselves when assembled as to cause persons in the neighbourhood of such assembly to fear, on reasonable grounds, that the persons so assembled will disturb the peace tumultuously, or will by such assembly needlessly and without any reasonable occasion provoke other persons to disturb the peace tumultuously.

It is to that section that the hon. member moves his amendment, as follows:

Section eighty-seven of the Criminal Code, chapter thirty-six of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, is amended by adding the following subsection thereto:—

"(4) Nothing in this section shall restrict or interfere with the right of all persons peacefully to assemble for the purpose of discussing or hearing any discussion upon any matter of public interest, and such persons when so assembled shall not become an unlawful assembly merely by reason of speeches made to them or discussion carried on by them unless the general nature and character of such speeches or discussion would be likely, in the opinion of firm and reasonable persons, to cause an immediate breach of the peace."

If a breach of the peace has occurred, it is then too late for "firm and reasonable persons" to consider the matter. The only way in which this amendment, if it were adopted, could be effective would be that the speeches should be censored before they were delivered. Of course we in Canada will not tolerate the censoring of speeches. I read the amendment rather in this manner, leaving out words that I believe to be superfluous or of no effect:

Nothing in this section shall restrict or interfere with the right of all persons peacefully to assemble for the purpose of discussing or hearing any discussion upon any matter of public interest, and such persons when so assembled shall not become an unlawful assembly merely by reason of speeches made to them or discussion carried on by them to cause an immediate breach of the peace.

That leaves out the words that, so far as I can see, are irrelevant, and it reveals what would be the result of that amendment if it were adopted.

I should like to speak of Toronto for a little while, because that city was frequently mentioned when this matter was previously discussed. We have not had in Toronto just the same trouble that I have read about as taking place in Vancouver, Winnipeg and

Montreal, but the peace enforcement department of Toronto has issued an order to owners of public halls in that city directing them that they must comply with the law. The department has not, as has been said in the house, prohibited the holding of meetings in public halls, as I shall later show from evidence taken before an investigating commission; but it has sent this following notice to all owners of public halls in the city:

Chapter 36, section 98, subsection 5:

Any owner, lessee, agent or superintendent of any building, room, premises or place, who knowingly permits therein any meeting of an unlawful association or any subsidiary association or branch or committee thereof, or any assemblage of persons who teach, advocate, advise or defend the use, without authority of the law, of force, violence or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, shall be guilty of an offence under this section and shall be liable to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than five years, or to both fine and imprisonment.

The fact is that owners of halls, having in mind the situation they face and knowing that they themselves will be censured if they allow on their premises a meeting that causes trouble of that character, naturally inquire into the views of the organization asking for a lease of their halls, and after they inquire into some of them, it is not much wonder that they refuse to allow their halls to be used. It was said, I think in the earliest debates on this subject, that certain people had been refused permission to address the Fellowship of Reconciliation. Personally I have nothing to say about the Fellowship of Reconciliation. It may be first class, for all I know. I do not know any who belong to it or entertain their views, but I should like to read what the Globe had to say about it in an editorial under date of Friday, January 16 of this year. It says:

The Fellowship of Reconciliation presents itself as an international organization having forty-four branches, with headquarters in Vienna, born of the conviction "that all differences of race, colour and creed, and social problems in general, could be solved by conference and mutual understanding." It is not easy to see how there can be any quarrel with either the fellowship or its objective on this ground. The Toronto branch was formed last May. While it was functioning according to the principle laid down, it attracted little or no public attention; certainly no adverse criticism. But it was not content with this, apparently, and adopted a militant course, with a challenge to the police. Out of this has arisen the present controversy, and the introduction of an issue, which, by any stretch of the imagination, cannot be said to belong to the category of "reconciliation" with sincerity, for it presupposes and adopts an attitude of uncompromising partisanship.

The origin and purpose of the fellowship, as far as can be seen, had nothing to do with the present situation. The whole trouble arose when it was proposed to start an open forum by calling on the police to defend in debate their attitude toward the communists. It is true communists are not mentioned in the correspondence. Judge Coatsworth and Chief Draper were invited to uphold the affirmative on the question: "Resolved, that the Toronto Police Commission is justified in its present attitude in regard to free speech." Inasmuch as the so-called "free speech" issue arose between the police and the communists, and nowhere else, the fellowship might as well have used the word "communists" frankly and openly.

This matter of "free speech" which is agitating the fellowship and has brought forth the "protest" of sixty-eight college professors is but a 'red herring" across the trail. It is strange that members of the faculty of the university would attach their names to such a ridiculous document. Is "free speech" forbidden at Hart House? Was not the very subject of "free speech" debated there? Why, in any event, is the cause of a group of revolutionary agitators to be preferred to the welfare of a loyal, Christian nation? This is the only point involved in the so-called free speech issue. The police have taken action to protect the community against the invasion of foreign propaganda, openly promoted to supplant Christianity by atheism; the rule of democracy by the rule of a soviet which enslaves the population, and cannot be called representation of "the proletariat" in any sense, which intimidates the people by such farcical law administration as the world recently witnessed in the trial of eight engineers.

After the trouble in connection with that matter an investigation was held, and I should like to read what took place at it. This is dated January 23 and is published in the Toronto Globe under date of January 24 of this year:

Statement in connection with the appearance of deputation representing the Fellowship of Reconciliation before the Board of Police Commissioners.

Reverend Salem Bland, referring to the mayor's statement that at yesterday's meeting the board unanimously endorsed the policy of free speech, "but that free speech must be within the law and in accordance with British institutions" stated:

"Frankly that last statement leaves us in great perplexity. If that enunciation of policy stated by the mayor is and has been the policy of the board we are very much puzzled."

Mr. Bland was interrogated by Judge Coatsworth and Judge Morson as follows:

Judge Coatsworth: Do you know that is what I contended for at the board of control last year when you were lined up with other men opposing us, that there should be free speech, subject to British limitations; there must be no sedition, no slander and no blasphemy, and you were in the line-up of communists on the other side. You were with them; I don't say you were one of them.

Mr. Bland: Well, what Judge Coatsworth has just said is all we contend for, that speech should be permitted except it is seditious, blasphemous or indecent.

Again:

Mr. Bland: The hall owners have been debarred from renting halls to communists.

Judge Coatsworth: Not by us.

Mr. Bland: Why they have been threatened with the loss of their licences.

Judge Coatsworth: Only if they did not comply with the law.

Mr. Bland: There is no law against communism.

Judge Coatsworth: No, we are not proposing to make one.

Mr. Bland: Well, why should not communists be freely permitted to speak?

Judge Coatsworth: We have not interfered with them. All we do is say to the owners of the hall, you must keep within that law, and when the police have interfered it has been when they have been congregating on the streets, blocking traffic and raising disorder.

Again:

Judge Morson: You know, of course, the principles of the communists?

Mr. Bland: I know something about it.

Judge Morson: Would you say if they preach their doctrines as we know them or have heard what their doctrines are, would you say it was in violation of that section?

Mr. Bland: Some of the doctrines are, no doubt.

Judge Morson: I did not say some. I said if they preach their doctrines would not some of them be a violation of that code?

Mr. Bland: I have no hesitation in saying if certain communists were to advocate certain forms of communism they would violate the code, but that is not true of all communists.

Judge Morson: I am only asking you a question. You do not need to answer it. If a communist or anybody preaches the commonly accepted doctrine of communists, which is well known, if they do that publicly, isn't that a breach of that section of the act? Give us yes or no.

Mr. Bland: Any communist who preaches that kind of communism which is a violation of the act should be dealt with by the police.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said the same thing at page 1202 of Hansard of May 1, 1931. I quote his words:

Now, the police are there to arrest a man, if necessary, and then charge him. If he has said something seditious, let him by all means be condemned on that ground.

The newspaper to which I referred a moment ago—The Worker—refers to a long list of organizations into whose right to hire public halls for the holding of public meetings—the peace enforcement department might think it necessary to inquire. The list is as follows:

Industrial Union and Arbieter Ring.
Communist party of Canada.
Canadian Labour and Defence League.
Workers International Relief Association.
Workers' Alliance.
National Unemployment Workers' Association.
U.L.F.T.A.
F.S.U. (Friends of the Soviet Union).

[Mr. MacNicol.]

I should like to quote what The Worker says about this organization, called the Friends of the Soviet Union. It says in headlines:

Hundreds enlist in F.S.U. Branches set up through country.

It goes on;

The newly organized Canadian section of the Friends of the Soviet Union is well on its way towards becoming a real mass organization of all friends of the U.S.S.R. For the few weeks of its existence it has succeeded in forming branches in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and Hamilton.

That goes to show that these organizations are very busy. I will now continue with other organizations:

L. & A.W.I.U.
International Labour Defence.
N.A.A.C.P.
N.U.W.A.
Union Label League.
E.C.C.I.
Young Communist League.
Canadian Defenders.
Free Bread League.
Women's Labour League.
Farmers' Unity League.
National Children's Bureau.
W.U.L. Council.
Parents' Councils.
National Fraction and District Bureaus.
International Workers' Order.

That last organization may not be communistic, but is very much supported by The Worker, which would lead one to suppose that it might have communistic principles. The list continues:

The Circle.
International Workers' Circle.
Workers' Secret Circle.

I see my time is almost up. There is much more evidence that I could place on Hansard, showing what various organizations stand for, which would convince any reasonable man or woman that it is up to the police authorities in all the principal cities of Canada to be on guard to maintain the traditions for which this country stands.

In conclusion I should like to say a word as to what the people of the city of Toronto have done, and I do this only because on the last occasion when this bill was up two hon. members felt it necessary to rise in defence of Toronto. The people and citizens of Toronto need no defence. Their works speak for them. I should like to give a few facts as to what the people of Toronto have done:

Number of Toronto enlistments, 1914-18, 60,000; of whom 45,000 were bona fide residents of this city.

Number of Toronto citizens killed 4,707 and to whose dependents the city paid $1,000, $4,707,000 in all.

Contributions by the city toward all charitable purposes including hospitals:

In 1926, $1,325,169; which amount has been increased every succeeding year until last year the sum reached, $2,693,554.

The city of Toronto also paid out in life insurance for their troops, $4,791,000, and in wages to enlisted civic employees, $1,847,000.

Mr. Speaker, the people who do that kind of work for the relief of humanity need no defence in this house or anywhere else, and I say it ill becomes anyone to attack people who are so generous. I said a few moments ago that those two great labour organizations, the American Federation of Labour and the Trades and Labour Council, had been attacked in this official organ The Worker. Having had twenty-five years experience in industry both as a worker and as an executive officer I just wish to say that these two organizations, the one in the United States with affiliations in Canada, and the other exclusively in Canada, have done a very great deal to relieve the difficulties of the working men in Canada and the United States. I can support them in their just activities, and trust they will continue in their good works and withstand the attacks made on them.

In conclusion may I say that we are all in accord with the principle of free speech, but we insist upon free speech within the law. We are all opposed or should be opposed to the preaching of sedition, revolution and blasphemy.

Mr. G. B. NICHOLSON (East Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word or two in connection with this amendment to the criminal code. The explanatory note is as follows:

This bill is intended simply to provide a safeguarding clause to ensure that the general nature and character of speeches upon public affairs must be the ground for regarding any meeting as unlawful.

The last six lines of the bill contain the words:

. . . . an unlawful assembly merely by reason of speeches made to them or discussion carried on by them unless the general nature and character of such speeches or discussion would be likely, in the opinion of firm and reasonable persons, to cause an immediate breach of the peace.

I should first like to draw the attention of the house to the words:

—in the opinion of firm and reasonable persons.

Who is going to designate who are "firm and reasonable persons"? Then we find the words:

—to cause an immediate breach of the peace.

If that means anything it must mean that unless a riot breaks out immediately, it matters not what kind of speech may be made or, how seditious a speech may be, no breach of the peace or violation of the criminal code would be committed.

As the hon. member for Toronto North-west (Mr. MacNicol) has indicated, if we are to be guided by what has been said this bill is primarily directed at the police force of the city of Toronto. I am not a citizen of that city, and I know nothing more about its police force than does any other person in Canada. My only source of information has been the daily newspapers. We do know however that the present chief of police in that city has been attacked, is being attacked and I presume will continue to be attacked. In my opinion the chief reason for these attacks is that he is too great a menace to violators of the law, and he is not being criticized because he is endavouring to restrict anyone who does not deserve to be restricted.

The organization which has aroused discussion with regard to the curtailment of free speech is an organization with its base in a foreign country. The agents of that country are in Canada endeavouring to undermine Canadian institutions as well as those of every other country with governments similar in form to ours. I have in my hand the report of a commission which inquired into the activity of the communist organization of the United States, and at page 9, 10 and 11, I have found evidence given under oath before that commission by the leader of the communist party in the United States, Mr. Foster. I quote from the evidence as follows:

The Chairman: Does the communist party advocate the confiscation of all private property?

Mr. Foster: The communist party advocates the overthrow of the capitalist system and the confiscation of the social necessities of life; that is, the basic industries and other industries for producing the means of livelihood for the people. By the property of individuals, personal belongings, and so on, no; that is, in the sense of their personal property.

The Chairman: When you refer to the capitalist system just what do you mean?

Mr. Foster: I mean the system under which the industries of society are owned by private individuals.

Later on the chairman asks some further questions:

The Chairman: Does your party advocate the abolition and destruction of religious beliefs?

Mr. Foster: Our party considers religion to be the opium of the people, as Karl Marx has stated, and we carry on propaganda for the liquidation of these prejudices amongst the workers.

The Chairman: To be a member of the communist party, do you have to be an atheist?

Mr. Foster: In order to be there is no formal requirement to this effect. Many workers join the communist party who still have some religious scruples, or religious ideas; but a worker who will join the communist party, who understands the elementary principles of the communist party, must necessarily be in the process of liquidating his religious beliefs and, if he still has any lingerings when he joins the party, he will soon get rid of them. But religion, that is, atheism, is not laid down as a formal requirement for membership in the communist party.

The Chairman: Have you been in Russia?

Mr. Foster: Yes. Eight or nine times.

The Chairman: You are familiar, then, with the workings of the communist party in Russia?

Mr. Foster: Reasonably.

The Chairman: Well, can members of the communist party in Russia be married in a church. . . .

I would like hon. members to note this particular question. The question was:

The Chairman: Well, can members of the communist party in Russia be married in a church and maintain religious beliefs of that nature, and practise them?

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. Foster: My opinion is that a member of the communist party of the Soviet union who would be married in a church would not be of any value to the communist party.

The Chairman: Could he maintain his membership in the party?

Mr. Foster: He would not.

At its last meeting, Joseph Stalin was elected head of the Third Internationale in Russia, and the following resolution was passed:

We the communists have no need to hide our aims and our purpose is the absolute ultimate control of the entire civilized world. Our purpose is not to be conceived in mere words but it is a bloodsoaked reality; It is to overthrow every existing institution which is not communistic; It is to capture all parliaments, not by evolution but by revolution; not by ballots but by bullets.

The activities and propaganda of that organization have led to agitations in this country against free speech. The activities of the communist party remind me of the man who demands personal freedom in order that he may deprive other people of their freedom. The whole tenor of the agitation, all the speeches delivered, tend to one end only, namely the complete destruction of every civil and religious institution in Canada. I submit that instead of loosening the criminal code to make that easier, if there is anything necessary it is to tighten up the criminal code.

In the course of this discussion on another occasion an effort was made to link up the labour organizations and working men of this country with the campaign carried on by the the communists. I have in my hand an article touching on the relationship of communism to the workers in this country. This is what it says:

At the present time we are passing through a period of severe industrial depression and unemployment.—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask what paper the hon. member is quoting?

Mr. NICHOLSON: The Canadian Labour Press.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Where is that published?

Mr. NICHOLSON: In Ottawa.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: By whom?

Mr. NICHOLSON: By the publishers of the Canadian Labour Press.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Who are they?

Mr. NICHOLSON: My hon. friend has the same sources of information at his disposal as I have.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is a Conservative organization.

Mr. NICHOLSON:

The energies of our dominion government, our provincial governments, our civic governments, our social welfare organizations, and our trade unions are being actively used to remedy this severe industrial crisis. It is recognized by everyone who has given thought to the subject that any efforts by individuals or groups to wilfully increase unemployment is a ghastly social crime. Yet, that is exactly what is being done by the notoriety-seeking group of men and women associated and affiliated with the communist party of Canada.

Mr. HEAPS: What date is that?

Mr. NICHOLSON: April 15, 1931. My hon. friend says that this is a Conservative paper. Well, it is the Canadian Labour Press. But I have something else under my hand which I will quote for the benefit of my hon. friend with regard to the viewpoint of the communist organization on the North American continent in relation to organized labour. It has been my privilege for the past forty-two years to be a member of one of the bodies of organized labour in this country. I have kept in touch with their activities, and I know something of their aims and their aspirations and what they are trying to do. The organizer of the communistic body, Mr. Fred G. Biedenkapp, of the city of Chicago, had this to say with regard to a strike that was waged by two or three bodies of organized labour in an effort to improve their condition:

The true communist and labour leader rejoices more over one unsuccessful strike than over ten strikes that succeed. What the O.B.U. and smaller organizations aim to create is not asking better working conditions for the average man, but worse conditions. The workingman, or oraganization of workingmen, who strikes for higher wages and gets them, or for better working conditions and fewer hours of labour, and gets them, is not the material from which revolutionists are made. He is likely to be contented and take a conservative so-called sane view of a world in which the conditions have been easier and better for him. On the other hand, the striker, or group of strikers, who fails, are likely to be more embittered against the employers, the whole employing class and society generally and after repeated failures of this kind they will come to the conclusion that striking and voting are alike useless to improve the workingmen's lot, and they will listen to the red who talks intelligently of direct action and the overthrow of society and forms of government as at present constituted. We have already two million workers, members of the O.B.U.—

That is what this gentleman says.

—and our numbers continue to grow as one unsuccessful strike follows another. Therefore, we, of the new vision encourage strikes not because we desire to better the workingmen's condition, but in order that they may fail.

Now, I ask hon. members to listen to what follows:

Our first aim must be to destroy organized labour as it has previously existed. It is one of the chief obstacles to a successful revolution in any country where it exists.

Having some knowledge of organized labour in this country, let me say there never was a more truthful statement made. The great bodies of organized labour are bulwarks against revolution in this or any other country where these bodies exist. Having quoted that for the benefit of my hon. friend, will he permit me to follow it up with a statement of fact, which I think anyone who is familiar with what is going on in this country will admit is a fact. I am quoting from the same paper:

A strike was called by this communist organization and some sixty men and women workers responded, being a small minority of the workers employed. It failed, as it was bound to do, and as a result these sixty men and women workers lost their jobs and left to the legitimate trade union of their industry a much harder task in order to secure an agreement with the employers concerned.

The labour movement fully recognizes from past evidences of communist history in Canada, that the policy of this group is to bore from within the workers' ranks in order to keep industry in a continuous ferment, the result of which is, and only can be, the adding of further workers to the ranks of the unemployed.

As a member of one of these bodies of organized labour, constantly in touch with what they are endeavouring to do, I know that to be the fact, as does every representative of organized labour in this country. They know the greatest enemy their organization has is the communist organization, masquerading for a period as it did under the name of the O.B.U. but now openly and definitely proclaiming itself as the representative of the Soviet organization in Canada, in the United States and in other countries.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, may I ask, if the hon. gentleman understands anything about the labour movement, whether he does not know that the O.B.U. and the communists for a number of years have been at daggers drawn? All you have to do to realize this is to read any communist paper or any O.B.U. publication. It is absolutely ridiculous to say they are the same.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Mr. Speaker, when the hon. gentleman closes the debate he can answer what I have said. I have stated what I know to be a fact from my constant intercourse with representatives of the solid, sane, sound bodies of organized labour in this country. They know just exactly what the

O.B.U. was when it was organized in Chicago some twelve or fifteen years ago, they know what its aims are to-day. It is possible the O.B.U. may be trying to shift its position and take the ground that it is not now associated with the communists, because it may think by doing that it may strengthen communism. But the plain facts are these —and let me repeat in conclusion what I said at the beginning of my remarks—this whole agitation regarding free speech has sprung up from one cause and one cause only, that there are men and women paid in this country, with their headquarters in the city of Toronto, with another headquarters in the city of Winnipeg—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker. I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As the sponsor of this bill I will not tolerate the accusation—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I will not tolerate the accusation that seems to be directed against me. I am here—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Free speech.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, this is a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman suggests that those who are advocating the safeguarding of free speech such as is proposed in this bill, are in the pay of certain forces. I say that suggestion must be withdrawn.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER: I did not understand the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) to be directing his remarks in general or in particular to anyone in this house.

The hour for private and public bills having expired, the house will resume consideration of Bill No. 47.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of privilege, I have the right even after nine o'clock—

Mr. SPEAKER: The discussion will be resumed next Friday night.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I rise to a question of privilege, and I may do so even after nine o'clock. I may do so at any time.

Mr. SPEAKER: Will the hon. member state his question of privilege? I ruled against the point of order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. member who has just been speaking made a statement which might easily be taken to imply that those of us who are urging safeguards for the freedom of speech are in the pay of certain organizations situated outside this country.

Mr. SPEAKER: I did not hear a statement of that kind.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That statement must be withdrawn. I ask that the hon. member withdraw the statement.

Mr. SPEAKER: I did not hear the hon. member make that statement.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I say I heard the statement and I ask that a statement along that line, which assails me, be withdrawn. I have a right to make that request as a member of this house.

Mr. NICHOLSON: As a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I made no reference whatsoever to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). I was referring to the agitation throughout the country by paid agents of the Soviet government in Russia. Anyone who wishes to put on that cap and wear it can do so.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not regard that as a withdrawal.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have not asked the hon. member to withdraw any statement. I do not consider that his words were unparliamentary or were anything but fair comment.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The member's speech distinctly implicates me.

An hon. MEMBER: The Speaker has ruled.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In all fairness, Mr. Speaker, you will understand that, according to the rules of the house, he should withdraw his remarks. His very last statement was a reinforcement of what he said before.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not consider that any statement was made which should be withdrawn. That is my ruling.

TARIFF BOARD

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT, POWERS, DUTIES AND SALARIES

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 47, to provide for the appointment of a tariff board—Mr. Bennett—Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: About twenty minutes to six I asked the Prime Minister a simple little question, and for the rest of the time until six o'clock he favoured the house with what I am inclined to term an harangue—I hope he will not take exception to the word—or a tirade or something of the kind. He touched upon everything except the particular matter on which I was seeking information. If volubility and sound were the equivalent of argument, my right hon. friend might have impressed the committee. But after listening to all that he said, I confess that it seemed to me as applicable to any other section of the bill as the one under discussion or in fact to any other bill dealing with tariffs or prices or labour as it was to the particular section to which I referred.

May I again put the question to my right hon. friend, and I do so simply because I should like to have an understanding between us if that is at all possible. Would not the whole purpose served by the section, with all its subsections, be fully covered by a simple sentence to this effect:

In respect of goods produced in or imported into Canada, the board shall have, at the request of the minister, power to make inquiry into any matter upon which the minister desires information.

My right hon. friend said that the late Lord Thring would not have been satisfied with certain forms of drafting because they were not sufficiently particularized. May I point out that in the sentence I have just read there is a considerable amount of particularization. It particularizes with respect to goods as regards their being produced in or imported into Canada, and it particularizes further in indicating the right of the minister to get on inquiry any information which he wishes. I believe the late Lord Thring would have been thoroughly satisfied with a clause to that effect and would have been inclined to agree that it is better drafting even than the clause as my right hon. friend has had it drawn. Does not my right hon. friend think the clause I have suggested is sufficient?

Let me point out wherein I think the shorter and more direct statement is the preferable one. Note first that it does not withdraw from this court in the matter of inquiry anything in the way of latitude; indeed, it says that the minister may have an inquiry into any matter at all on which he wishes information with respect to these particular subjects. That is as broad as desire itself could possibly be. It has this advantage, that it does not deceive anyone with respect to what this court may be expected to do. No one will expect the court to inquire into everything. If my right hon. friend will read over what he said this afternoon regarding the number of matters that will need to be inquired into on behalf of labour, on behalf of capital, on behalf of manufacturers, on behalf of invested capital, on behalf of the consumers, he will see that if he had a hundred courts working a hundred years they could not possibly conduct full inquiries into one hundred of the items of the tariff which he is bringing before us at the present time in the detailed manner which he indicated might become necessary in regard to some of these things. When he particularizes here in the manner in which he does, he actually, though possibly not intentionally, does deceive the public as to just what the court can do. He points out, for example, that they may inquire into the cost of raw materials up to the time that they are used, and costs of transportation, no matter where such materials may come from. In regard to production they may go into the question of increases or decreases in the rates of duty necessary to equalize differences in cost of production. In respect of labour they may go into the question of cost of living and labour cost and into matters concerning the efficiency and the health of employees. And when he comes to prices, producers, manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers, and other distributors are all to be looked after. Then finally after all conditions and factors that affect costs and prices have been inquired into the consumer is to be safeguarded from exploitation in a multitude of ways. Each of these classes will be told that they are being well looked after by the court, once all these duties are assigned to it, and once these duties are to be found in a statute. I submit that it would be better, instead of raising the hopes of these classes only to have them dashed to bits, for the minister simply to have the court investigate anything in regard to which he wishes to have information. That would be straightforward, it would cover all these things, but it would not create that element of suspicion and leave that measure of disappointment which I am afraid will be the result of the legislation should it pass in its present form. May I ask my right hon. friend again: would not everything he has here, particularized as it is, be covered by one clause to the effect that in respect of goods produced in or imported into Canada the board shall have, at the request of the minister, power to make inquiry into any matter upon which the minister desires information?

Mr. BENNETT: The suggestion is not acceptable. The right hon. gentleman may say that it covers everything, but it is not usual in statutes to make such a provision. This follows the usual form, and we prefer it to the form suggested by my right hon. friend.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my right hon. friend think that the late Lord Thring would have taken exception to the form I have suggested?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Just a few minutes before Big Ben was announcing six o'clock the Prime Minister had ended a ranting, roaring, snorting, snoring speech fully characteristic of the right hon. gentleman, a speech that reminded me of two others of a similar nature for which he has been sorry just once since, and that is all the time. He told us men of the west how much money we had in the banks and how many cars we had bought and sported. Nothing could equal the sensation and disgust of that speech unless it be the speech which he made this afternoon. I do not know which of the two would take the cake. My right hon. friend need not think that his bluff and bluster will intimidate anybody. If every sheet of copper on this roof were a Bennett and every supporter of the right hon. gentleman were a bluffer, it would not make a particle of difference to us because the people of the country and we in this house now know my hon. friends. The calendar on the table, Mr. Chairman, indicates that it is now eleven months since they took office, and do you think that the people have not found the right hon. gentleman out in eleven months as the prince of humbugs? We do not need to go back to the economic conference for that evidence; it is being demonstrated right here in this house. There has never been a month or a day or an hour since they proclaimed their peculiar love for the British preference and intra-empire trade that they have not shown the kind of love they have in examples such as their anti-British tariff of last September. The duty was raised against British goods and there has never been an hour since that time when their whole record has not been one of continuous and well sustained humbug. There have been dozens of instances, and the right hon. gentleman knows it. It did not take Mr. Thomas long to find it out, and it does not take anyone who knows the right hon. gentleman and the crowd behind him long to find it out. I am receiving letters all the time complaining about this Bennett bunch. The writers thereof state that the government are loony and ask us to keep them groggy as long as we can. We do not want to overdo it; we have a little sympathy for them but we do not have to take the kind of speeches lying down we heard just before six o'clock, at least I do not. I have never in all my life had to submit to a bully, and I am not going to do it now.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have tried to show the absolute humbug of this bill. It would be impossible in a year like this to obtain the true costs of production of wheat in Saskatchewan. In many areas, some of them hundreds of miles in extent, it might be found that it cost $100 per bushel. What about the cost of mining? Does the right hon. gentleman think he could obtain a fair indication of the real cost now? What about the costs of production of pulp and paper with the mills running forty or fifty per cent of capacity? It would be absolute nonsense for a tariff board to attempt anything as foolish as that. My right hon. friend did not answer these questions, but kept inquiring as to what the former Minister of Agriculture had ever done for the consumer.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The remarks of hon. members show their ignorance; they do not know anything about it. Even this very minute I am endeavouring to the best of my capacity to fight for the consumer. If I know anything—

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. member does not.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The right hon. gentleman does not know anything about agriculture. This afternoon I attempted to indicate in the short remarks which called forth such fury from my righ hon. friend that the American tariff commission had attempted to find the costs of production in Canada of milk and cream. They went out of their way to find the lowest price in Canada, and then went back home, put the tariff up, and now these products are practically excluded from that country. I would have called for the file from the Department of Agriculture, but if there was the same delay as there has been in other cases I would not have received it until next session. The Minister of Agriculture can bring this file to the house tomorrow and disprove or prove my statement. If that action was taken by a board which was fifty-fifty Republicans and Democrats, what action can we expect from this board which we do not hope will be fifty-fifty Liberal and Tory? We can only judge our hon. friends by what they have been doing during the last eleven months. It has been rumoured that Mr. Sanford Evans is to be the chairman of this board, and why should he not receive some reward for the manner in which he delivered the goods when on the Stamp commission? Does the committee think the leader of the government cares anything for public sentiment? Has he not done something just as outrageous in the case of the Washington appointment? Did he regard public sentiment then or even that of his political friends?

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What about—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Order nothing. What about the appointment to London?

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He, the Prime Minister himself has said that the commissioner there was a joker. Of course he was about right. He should know. We have to judge this government by the kind of appointments they have made during the last eleven months. One of those appointments was the wine-bibbing joker who was sent to Canada House in London.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. BENNETT: I rather think that the hon. member is transcending the rules of decency in debate.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Which one am I to withdraw, the Washington one, the London one, or both?

An hon. MEMBER: Be a man and take it back.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The trouble with this country is that complete confidence has been lost in this government and in its appointments. This country has no more use for this tariff board than a dog has for two tails. If the people had an opportunity of expressing themselves to-morrow two-thirds of the seats opposite would be vacant. Knowing the type of investigation which has been carried on by the American tariff board, we know what to expect as far as the investigations of this Canadian tariff board are concerned. It is a big sham from top to bottom, it is hypocrisy personified, with humbug on top, it is only something for the government to hide behind.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Melville has stated that I referred to the High Commissioner for Canada as a joker. That is not correct and I would like to know what warrant he has for making any such statement.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The right hon. gentleman took about ten minutes to justify Mr. Ferguson's speech on July 1 upon the ground that he was disposed to be jocular. I agree that at times he is exceedingly jocular, but that is not always the case. I think my right hon. friend used that term half a dozen times, and surely I am to be permitted to use it once.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman referred to the high commissioner as a wine-bibbing joker.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did.

Mr. BENNETT: I submit that that is not a correct reference to be made to an official who is not in this house.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It may not be parliamentary but it is absolutely true.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But I know it is true.

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. member does not know that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. gentleman is an old member of this house and he has knowledge of standing order 41.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will withdraw my remarks, not because they are untrue but because, Mr. Chairman, you asked me to.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member knows the rules too well. Standing order 41 covers decorum in debate. I will quote from Bourinot at page 358, as follows:

> All references to judges and courts of justice and to personages of high official station, of the nature of personal attacks and censure have always been considered unparliamentary and the speakers of the British and Canadian houses have always treated them as breaches of order.

I think the hon. member should withdraw his remarks.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will withdraw, Mr. Chairman, but—

An hon. MEMBER: No buts.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I just wanted to say that there is nothing coming to the right hon. gentleman after the unwarranted attack he made on me this afternoon. Did he expect to get away with it? I do not intend to let him get away with it.

An hon. MEMBER: Don't abuse Ferguson because of that.

Amendment (Mr. Butcher) negatived: yeas 34; nays 50.

Paragraph agreed to on division.

On section 4, subsection 1, paragraph (c)—Labour.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and my colleague the hon. member for North Winnipeg both somewhat anticipated this paragraph in some remarks which they made on paragraph (b). I am very glad that there is at least some reference in this to labour, but it seems to me that it is really too slight to mean anything very much to the labour people. In the preceding paragraph there is a definite arrangement by which there is to be a report on increases or decreases in rates of duty which are necessary to equalize differences in the cost of production. There is, however, nothing definite here with regard to labour or that will ensure to labour decent conditions. Some hon. members may remember that a year ago some of us urged that increases in the tariff should be made contingent upon the maintenance of decent labour conditions, that is, proper conditions with regard to hours, wages, and labour condition in general. I should have liked to see something of that kind included in this legislation. The Prime Minister has all along in this debate been emphasizing that he intends to protect the interests of Canadians, but I think he has really had in mind Canadian industrialists, manufacturers. He has had very little to say with regard to workmen employed in industry, and even the manner in which this section is introduced would seem to indicate that he is thinking particularly of the cost of labour and not of the welfare of the labourer. We in this corner of the house have pointed out on previous occasions that protection to industry does not necessarily involve protection to employees in industry. It would seem to me that there is an opportunity for the Prime Minister to make it clear in the very phrasing of this paragraph that the workers in industry will be protected. I do not think it right to give under the tariff special privileges of any kind to any of these people unless they are prepared to afford to their employees a decent living wage, decent hours such as are supposed to be given under the Versailles treaty, and other proper conditions which we believe to be necessary for the maintenance of a Canadian standard of living.

Mr. McGIBBON: Are there in Canada industries that do not do that?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: A large number of them.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the hon. member be good enough to name one of them?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes; the textiles are an outstanding example. According to the figures given the other day by the hon. member for Beauharnois, not only have those industries made enormous sums of money, but at the same time they have paid extremely low wages and they have laid off their men very frequently; there has been great unemployment. If the hon. member wants another industry, there is one that became known to us all last year, namely, the steel industry. At the very time when they were being given increased protection a thousand employees of the British Empire Steel Corporation were being worked eleven hours during the day, thirteen hours at night, and every other week, twenty-four hours on end. I understand that after the discussion which took place in the house last year and after pressure which was brought to bear upon those companies by the provincial authorities, the hours of the workers in the steel industry, at least in Nova Scotia, were reduced to eight hours and ten hours. A number of them are still being worked ten hours a day.

Mr. McGIBBON: What wages do they get for the ten hours?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That does not make any difference.

Mr. McGIBBON: It makes a great difference.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It does not make the slightest difference.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is everything.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It does not make the slightest difference, and if the hon. member thinks the wage paid is the one consideration, that just shows his ignorance of the fundamentals of labour ideals.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is only my hon. friend's opinion.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is the opinion endorsed by every labour organization in Canada and, indeed, endorsed by the International Labour Office at Geneva. We believe workers ought not to work more than a certain number of hours in the day; that irrespective of the wages paid, men ought not to be worked as they were eleven and thirteen hours a day and on occasion twenty-four hours on end.

Mr. ROBINSON: Are they compelled to work ten hours a day?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: They are compelled to work those hours, or else they forfeit the job altogether. The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario asked for instances. I have given him some.

Mr. McGIBBON: The hon. member has not given me anything.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not dealing just now with particular industries; I am dealing with the general principle underlying, and I think there is an opportunity, in the creation of this board and the outlining the scope of their work, to ensure that among other duties that might be performed by a board of this kind, is a careful inquiry into wages and an insistence that wages, hours and other conditions of labour shall come up to recognized standards. I should have liked to see that included in this paragraph. As it is now drafted the matter is left in very indefinite form. Possibly the Prime Minister might give us some assurance that, even under the present drafting, he has this in mind.

Mr. BENNETT: The clause as it reads was drafted to meet the situation to which the hon. gentleman refers, without endeavouring by particularity to destroy the generality of its expression:

> The cost, efficiency and conditions of labour, including health of employees, in Canada and elsewhere.

The capital question that was raised by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River this afternoon was also dealt with in succeeding subsections. The question of hours of labour becomes vital; the question of conditions is important always, and the question of the capital structure of corporations to which reference was also made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is, I think, covered entirely by what the section states. There was a mistake which the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River made, to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did not refer, and it was this: under this bill the application is not made by a manufacturer for increases or decreases in the tariff. Under this section a reference is made by the Minister of Finance to ascertain the facts. The subsection is to enable the facts to be reported upon as to the very conditions to which reference has been made.

Mr. HEAPS: Will the method of procedure in investigating an industry be somewhat similar to that undertaken by the previous tariff board?

Mr. BENNETT: I could not answer that question.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: On this point I raised, has the Prime Minister in mind that increases in tariff or special favours of any kind will be made contingent upon the maintenance of decent standards of living? I think the Prime Minister has made it abundantly clear that the manufacturer is to be protected as against any external competition, but he has not made it so clear that the employee in the industry is to be protected in his living standards.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no provision in this measure, so far as I know, for special interests or special favours to anyone, and I do not know just why the hon. gentleman should make that reference. It was the intention of those responsible for the measure that there should be afforded before this tribunal an opportunity for ascertaining the facts to which I have referred, affecting capital and labour alike.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to be clear on this matter. By paragraph (b) increases or decreases in rates of duty may be recommended.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If they are required to equalize differences in the cost of production.

Mr. BENNETT: They cannot be recommended.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then the board may ascertain whether increases or decreases in rates of duty are required to equalize differences in the cost of production. I should like to ask whether it will also be required that certain recognized standards of living, wages, hours and general conditions of labour will be considered as essential before any tariff increases are granted. If the Prime Minister does not like my use of the word "favours", I withdraw that expression for the moment. I will put it this way: Is it understood that unless certain standards of living are maintained, increases should not be granted?

Mr. BENNETT: There is no emphasis attached to any subsection of this section. They all have equal emphasis, and they mean, so far as I know, exactly what they say. The government must accept responsibility for submitting to parliament any measure that involves an increase or decrease of duty, and the facts as ascertained by the board and reported, depending upon the testimony adduced and the information gained, will of course be one of the determining factors, but not necessarily the sole determining factor, in the action taken by the government. The very instructions to which the hon. gentleman refers are instructions with respect to which the government must assume responsibility, but the finding of the facts in question will be by this tribunal. I need hardly say, what the hon. gentleman must already know, that most of the recent tariff changes in this country have been made because the costs of production in competing countries were so much lower than they are in Canada on account of the standards of living that obtain in this country as compared with other countries of production.

Mr. VENIOT: Will this board have power, if the minister so requests, to look into the equalizing of freight rates? For instance, take a factory situated anywhere in Ontario. The freight rate from Ontario to the maritime provinces being so high, our people are compelled to import rather than buy the same article in Ontario—because of the difference in the freight rate as between Ontario and elsewhere to the maritimes, not because of the duty.

Mr. BENNETT: Undoubtedly, as the hon. gentleman has suggested, freight rates are a factor in determining costs, and as such the tribunal would have power to ascertain the facts and report.

Mr. VENIOT: I have a case in point, to which I might refer. In Ontario there is a tin plate factory at Ojibway. The freight on that article to the maritime provinces is 20 per cent higher than the freight by water from a place in the United States where tin plate is manufactured. The railway freight from Ojibway to Moncton is some 10 or 12 per cent higher than the freight by water from Wales, from which large importations of tin plate are made. The tariff has been raised to protect the Ojibway industry, and our people have to pay this extra tariff and are getting their tin plate from either Wales or Pittsburgh in the United States.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the hon. gentleman is aware of the fact that the formula adopted by business men generally is that one land mile is equivalent to forty water miles so far as the tariff is concerned. It being 2,800 water miles from Wales to St. John, that is the equivalent of about 70 land miles. The distance from Ojibway to Moncton being a little over 1,000 miles, necessarily the rail rate would be much higher than the water rate from Wales to St. John. That factor would, of course, be inquired into.

Mr. VENIOT: Another question. Did I understand the Finance minister aright this afternoon to say that under this act would be found means of preventing mergers?

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that.

Mr. VENIOT: I must have misunderstood my right hon. friend. Then I have no argument to make.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In case there were no tariff matters under consideration by the board, could the minister direct that an investigation be made into the wages or other conditions of labour?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. It will be observed by a subsequent section, when we come to it, shortly I hope, that the governor in council may direct the board to inquire into any matter affecting the trade and commerce of the country.

Paragraph (c) agreed to.

Paragraph (d) agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 1, paragraph (e).—Conditions affecting cost and price.

Mr. MacLEAN: In the very vigorous speech which the Prime Minister made before six o'clock, and in a great many other debates in this house, we have been given the assurance that the consumers of this country would be protected by this government. We have been led to believe that under the provisions of this bill authority would be given to the board to set up inquiries and to deal with the prices which the consumers of this country have to pay. That is dealt with in subsection 2 of section 4. What is not clear to my mind is how this government or any government can protect the consumer when it is setting up a high tariff and is thereby putting into the hands of the manufacturers of the country the one weapon through which alone they can best exploit the consumer. This government says: We are going to protect the consumer. Then immediately they raise the tariff right along the line and put into the hands of the manufacturers of this country the one weapon by which they can exploit to the full extent of the increase in the tariff the consuming public of this country. I would like the Prime Minister to answer this question. How is it possible in view of the tariff increases which ths government has made all along the line for this board to control the prices to the consumer? If the manufacturers are asking for an increase in duty, what are they asking it for? It is for the sole purpose of charging the consumer more.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MacLEAN: If it is not that, what benefit is the tariff? It is of absolutely no benefit in that case. That is why the manufacturers are asking for an increase in duty.

Let me give a concrete example. I have one before me on my desk now. Fertilizer was on the free list under the Liberal government, but when our good friends opposite came into power they put a duty of 10 per cent on fertilizer.

Mr. JONES: And it is $3 a ton cheaper this year.

Mr. MacLEAN: I am glad my hon. friend has said that. The spread betwen the price of the raw product and the price to the consumer is far greater this year than last, when the difference in the price of the raw product is taken into account mixed fertilizer should be $5 a ton cheaper this year. I have resolutions before me which have been passed by all the farmers organizations throughout the maritime provinces.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MacLEAN: I have one from the Potato Growers' Association of Prince Edward Island, the largest organization of its kind in the Dominion of Canada, in which the statement is made—

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): May I ask a question?

Mr. MacLEAN: My hon. friend may make his speech when I am through.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): Can my hon. friend tell me the ingredients which go into the composition of fertilizer upon which duty has been placed?

An hon. MEMBER: Radishes.

Mr. MacLEAN: Last year four tons of chemical cost $169. This year the same four tons can be bought for $139, or $30 less. A few moments ago some one shouted across the floor of the committee that he was buying fertilizer this year $2 a ton cheaper.

Mr. BENNETT: Three dollars.

Mr. MacLEAN: It should be $5 cheaper. It was stated in the press of this country that owing to the increase in duty, and to the fact that fertilizer mixing plants were beginning operations in Canada, the farmers of this country would be able to buy that fertilizer $2 a ton cheaper.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Three dollars.

Mr. MacLEAN: I am speaking about my own province, with which I am most familiar. That lowering of the price was attributed to the action of this government. What do we find? We find that the spread between the price of the raw product this year as compared with the price last year should warrant a reduction of at least $5 per ton for ready mixed fertilizer. That is one example where, owing to the imposition of the duty, the consumer is being made to pay $3 a ton more for fertilizer this year than he should have to pay.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Three dollars—we thought so.

Mr. MacLEAN: My hon. friends cannot get away with that. The public is too intelligent to listen to their remarks. They know perfectly well that raw material is much lower in price, and the same applies to gasoline and a great many other commodities which I could enumerate.

I would like to know before this item passes how our good friends in one breath are going to announce tariff changes and make the consumer pay increased prices, and in the next breath say to the people of Canada that they are protecting the consumer from exploitation. That is the question before this committee, and I should like to have it answered.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): I think it is only fair that the committee should be further informed concerning fertilizer in Canada. There is not a single ingredient which goes into the composition of the fertilizer to which my hon. friend has referred upon which any duty has been imposed by the present administration. A duty has been imposed upon the mixed product, with the result that industries have been located at St. John and in other sections of the maritime provinces so that this commodity may be mixed by Canadian workmen rather than by workmen on the other side of the line. The only duty which has been imposed is upon the mixed product. Our farmers do not want their fertilizers mixed on the other side of the line; they want them mixed in Canada. Quite properly I think, this government has placed a duty upon the products coming into Canada in the mixed form. The ingredients, however, bear no duty whatever.

Mr. VENIOT: Will my hon. friend tell the house how many manufacturers of ingredients there are in the maritime provinces? Are they not all mixing plants?

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): True, they are all mixing plants,—why would they not be mixing plants? Canada is not in a position to produce all the ingredients which go into the composition of fertilizers. Those ingredients come very largely from the city of Baltimore, as my hon. friend should know, and many of them come from South America, Germany and France. They are brought in and mixed in the city of St. John rather than in the United States.

Mr. VENIOT: My hon. friend seems to know a great deal about the mixing of fertilizers, but unfortunately he has not told the committee all he knows. If he had done so he would have said that the action of mixing plants at St. John and St. Stephen has had the effect of preventing the farmers and dairymen's association of his own constituency from going into the mixing business. As a matter of fact by importing the ingredients in a cooperative way and mixing them themselves they were saving $3 a ton as compared with the price they are now paying, when they are forced to buy their fertilizers already mixed. Further than that, if my hon. friend is thoroughly familiar with fertilizers he must know that ingredients are not imported for mixing purposes. Some are imported for use separately, unmixed, and upon those a duty has to be paid.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, a duty of so much a ton has to be paid on ingredients imported, not for mixing purposes, but for separate use. That is a fact, and there is no use contradicting it. The Dairymen and Farmers' Association of Nova Scotia at their annual meeting in the month of February last passed a very strong resolution which was forwarded to this government setting forth the fact that certain acids or phosphates used for top dressing, unmixed, were charged with a duty. Those people ought to know what they are talking about, because they had to pay the duty. I have a copy of the resolution passed by that association at their convention, and also a copy of the memorial sent to the government. So that ingredients for separate use are not imported free of duty. To that extent at least the importer is exploited by the manufacturer or the mixing company at home.

[Mr. B F. Smith.]

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): My hon. friend seems to know a great deal about fertilizers, but I am afraid he has only demonstrated the fact that after all he is not very familiar with his subject.

Mr. VENIOT: At least I know something about it, and I know my hon. friend is not telling all he knows.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): As I have previously stated, there is no imposition of duty upon ingredients which enter into the composition of fertilizers. If my hon. friend wishes to buy fertilizers for his own private use I am not prepared to say to the committee that there is or is not any duty upon it. I do say that the farmers of this country are interested only in what goes into the composition of their fertilizers, and on those ingredients there is no duty. When my hon. friend makes the statement that the mixing plants at St. Stephen and St. John and elsewhere in the maritime provinces were making it impossible for the cooperative associations of the maritime provinces to buy their fertilizers as cheaply as they otherwise would buy them, he makes a statement which cannot be substantiated by the facts, because all those mixing plants charge $1 a ton for mixing. The farmer has the privilege of mixing his own ingredients in his own barn.

Mr. VENIOT: One of these mixing plants was established in 1928, and the other at St. Stephen in 1929.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): Does my hon. friend know that they went out of business?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. VENIOT: The one at St. Stephen now employs four men during the summer time, and fifteen during the winter time, the mixing season. My hon. friend says that our people did not want their mixing done on the other side, they wanted it done on the Canadian side. The gentleman in charge of the plant at St. Stephen,—this is an American plant—is an American and lives across the river St. Croix on the state of Maine side. I do not care what arguments the hon. gentleman advances, those are the facts and they cannot be gainsaid.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): I have one further remark to add about this matter. My hon. friend knows, or does not know—

Mr. VENIOT: I do know.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): —because the member here from the county of Charlotte well knows—

Mr. VENIOT: He will not contradict me.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): He knows the mixing plant at St. Stephen went out of business while my hon. friend's party were in power, and were allowing mixed grades to come in free; but just as soon as this government put a duty on mixed grades the plant went into operation again. That is why I say the plant was out of commission the years there was no duty on mixed fertilizers coming into Canada.

Mr. VENIOT: It was only established in 1928.

Mr. MacLEAN: I hold in my hand a letter issued by the secretary of the Prince Edward Island Potatoe Growers' Association stating:

Charlottetown, P.E.I.,
February 4, 1931.

We submit herewith our prices on fertilizer for this season, and enclose blank forms for your orders of fertilizer, and for the corrosive sublimate.

You will be pleased to note the very great reduction in the price of chemicals. We cannot show as large a reduction on mixed fertilizers. This is because of the duty on mixed goods, which does not apply to chemicals.

There is a direct statement from the secretary of the potato growers association. At their annual meeting they passed this resolution:

Whereas there has been a duty of ten per cent imposed on mixed fertilizer imported to this province.

Whereas practically all fertilizers must be imported to Canada.

And whereas the work of a mixing plant is done largely by machinery, and requires only a few labourers in its operation.

I want the committee to take note of that, because my hon. friend's contention is that the farmers must pay this ten per cent duty in order that labour may be given to a few people in this country. Let me repeat that recital:

And whereas the work of a mixing plant is done largely by machinery, and requires only a few labourers in its operation.

The resolution continues:

And whereas fertilizer is a raw product, which must be used by the farmer in the growing of the finished product, and any increased cost is a handicap to the producer.

Therefore resolved that this meeting express its disapproval of the said duty, and respectfully ask for its removal—

The CHAIRMAN: This is out of order.

Mr. MacLEAN: A copy of this resolution was sent to the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Customs and to each federal representative.

The CHAIRMAN: Paragraph 306 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms makes this comment on standing order 41:

It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters, or communications emanating from persons outside the house and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member of expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house.

Mr. RALSTON: There is nothing in the resolution read by the hon. member for Prince reflecting on the proceedings in this house, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: To read communications from persons outside the house expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house is out of order.

Mr. RALSTON: Do you mean to say, Mr. Chairman, that if a newspaper criticizes some action in the house that newspaper cannot be read by an hon. member?

The CHAIRMAN: It cannot be.

Mr. RALSTON: Then, with all due deference, a lot of newspapers ought to be at the bar of this house.

Mr. MacLEAN: The right hon. Prime Minister promises that by this tariff bill he will protect the consumer from exploitation. Now that he puts into the hands of our manufacturers a weapon which, I contend, enables them to make the consumer pay two prices instead of one, I think the committee is entitled to an explanation from the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I would ask the hon. member for Prince to be fair. He has given the committee the impression that the Prince Edward Island Potato Growers' Association protested against this duty. It is a well-known fact—and the hon. member knows it as well as I do—that the potato growers of Prince Edward Island are very much opposed either to importing or using mixed fertilizers. Their importations are entirely of the raw chemicals, which even this spring they advised the farmers they should buy and mix themselves as by so doing they would get a fresher mixture.

Mr. MacLEAN: Nobody denies that.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): The hon. member gave the impression that this duty on mixed fertilizers was a hardship on the potato growers of Prince Edward Island. It is not so, because even this year they imported all raw chemicals and distributed them to their members, and those raw chemicals carry no duty whatever.

Mr. MacLEAN: My hon. friend knows perfectly well that the potato growers' association have every year advised the farmers to mix the chemicals themselves. This year they are forced to do that to a greater extent than before on account of the duty. But large quantities of mixed fertilizer were also used.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Not at all.

Mr. MacLEAN: On account of the duty on mixed fertilizers. I am not talking about chemicals.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): But the hon. member knows that the potato growers' association use straight chemicals entirely.

Mr. MacLEAN: Yes, and they recommend the use of chemicals; but they do not recommend the action of my hon. friend in supporting the imposition of the duty of ten per cent against the farmers of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): If my hon. friend went to the city of St. John and consulted the workmen employed there in the factory during the last season when unemployment was rife, I am sure he would find that they in common with the farmers of the maritime provinces at least were very strongly in favour of this tariff. We are providing work for Canadian workmen. My hon. friend opposite advocates that we should give that work to American workmen rather than to our own.

Mr. VENIOT: Nothing of the kind.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): He read into my remarks something that I did not say. He said I had stated that this ten per cent duty on mixed fertilizer had increased the cost of fertilizer to the farmers of this country. I made no such statement. My statement was exactly the reverse, that it had not increased the cost one iota. As a matter of fact, fertilizers are from $3 to $4 a ton cheaper than at any time in the last thirty years.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not say that my hon. friend had made that statement.

Mr. RALSTON: I think the discussion has brought out that at least there is a difference in the price of fertilizers on account of the duty. I do not think that any of this special pleading about raw chemicals coming in free to be mixed has anything to do with the point being made by the member for Prince. His point is that the government imposed a duty on fertilizers, while those goods came in free under the previous government. I can assure my hon. friend opposite that there are no apologies from this side of the house because fertilizers did come in free.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): They come in free now.

Mr. RALSTON: I beg the hon. member's pardon; they are not free. Mixed goods are not coming in free. We regard fertilizer as raw material for the use of the primary producer, and as such it should come in free. And my hon. friend, when he speaks about starting a mixing plant which may give employment to four or six or eight men, is not doing much to assist in connection with the unemployment problem, while he is supporting a new tax on the very people he is supposed to represent in this parliament. I wish to direct the attention of the Prime Minister to this. Time and time again it has been said in this house that duties are not going to affect prices—that the manufacturers will operate under the shadow of the tariff wall but that prices are not going to go up. I have in my hand a statement with regard to this very matter. This statement comes from the Prince Edward Island Potato Growers' Association—and by the way, I have a similar statement from the Nova Scotia Farmers' Association as well—with regard to fertilizers, indicating that the price of fertilizer is higher to-day on account of the duty. That is the point we are making.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Has the hon. member taken pains to ascertain the current market prices of mixed fertilizers last year and this year?

Mr. RALSTON: I have taken pains to obtain a statement made by the Prince Edward Island Potato Growers' Association, who are supplying fertilizer to their members. This is what they say:

> We submit herewith our prices on fertilizer for this season, and enclose blank forms for your orders of fertilizer, and for the corrosive sublimate.
> You will be pleased to note the very great reduction in the price of chemicals. We cannot show as large a reduction on mixed fertilizers. This is because of the duty on mixed goods, which does not apply to chemicals.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It does not follow—

Mr. RALSTON: That is exactly what they say, just as I have read it. I do not set myself up as an authority on fertilizer as some hon. members do, but I am content to take the statement of people who handle the commodity and who use it. And they state that the duty is what is keeping the price up. I commend that to the Prime Minister because this year, in his legislation, he is going further than he did last year. Last year we were told that the price was not going to go up as a result of the duty; this year he assures us that if prices are put up by reason of the duties he is going to resort to the old star chamber punishment of the peine forte et dure. In other words, he will see that protection is completely removed. But he cannot do this for the reason that it will hurt other industries. He will therefore have to fine them by imposing an excise tax equal to the duty. Here is an industry which ought to be fined, an industry which ought to come directly under the penalties of the section which he is going to introduce in connection with the budget resolutions. There is no use emphasizing the fact that chemicals are free when the duty on mixed goods remains, and when that duty is resulting in the price being higher than it was before.

The CHAIRMAN: May I ask the committee not to discuss the tariff in connection with this bill.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: Just one moment. I must ask the committee not to get away from the section under consideration for the purpose of discussing the merits of policies.

Mr. RALSTON: I was discussing.

The CHAIRMAN: I am not referring to the hon. member particularly.

Mr. RALSTON: With due deference to the chair. I understood that I was being called to order. I was referring to paragraph (e) which relates to:

> All conditions and factors which affect or enter into the cost of production and the price to the consumers in Canada.

The CHAIRMAN: That paragraph is wide, but it should not be made a pretext for discussing the budget.

Mr. RALSTON: It is not a question of using the paragraph as a pretext, Mr. Chairman, we must discuss everything involved in the question of cost of production. And that brings me to this other point. The Prime Minister has said time and again that an investigation into cost of production must be provided for in view of the fact that we are importing goods from so many countries where production costs are low. I have not had time to count them, but I could mention goods imported from the United States; and I submit to my right hon. friend that conditions of living—without running down Canada in the slightest—are in the United States practically equal to what they are here. So that if this is to be an investigation into costs of production in the United States, it is not going to get us very far. And a great many increases in duty will not be dealt with at all under this section, because my right hon. friend knows before he starts that cost of production in the United States will be found to be as high as it is here. Take gasoline, which has already been mentioned, and automobiles. The cost of production in connection with automobiles, from the standpoint of the standard of living, is the same as it is here. Then take steel, machinery, rope—articles which are in daily use and on which the duty is being raised by my right hon. friend on the pretext that living conditions in those countries from which we import are such that we should see to it that our manufacturers shall not be subjected to competition of that kind. The conditions in the United States in these industries, so far as I have heard, are the same as those in Canada. So that this provision is absolutely useless for the purpose for which it is put in, if it is to investigate conditions on the other side of the line.

The CHAIRMAN: The committee will recall that on a point of order raised by the hon. member for Gloucester I requested the Secretary of State not to discuss the tariff generally. I must ask hon. members to confine themselves to the section under consideration.

Mr. MYERS: I may be permitted to say a word with reference to fertilizer. With all due respect to my hon. friend from Prince, to the ex-Postmaster General, and to the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, I think I am in a position to know as much about the subject as any of them. I doubt whether they use any of this article, whereas I use tons of it every year. With reference to the cost of fertilizer, may I say that I have been a director for several years of the Prince Edward Island Potato Growers' Association, and every year our secretary and president have taken great pains to advise us against the use of ready-mixed fertilizers. They recommend the use of chemicals.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The question before the committee is whether section 4 shall be agreed to. The subject under consideration concerns the functions of the board.

Mr. MYERS: That is what I am coming to. One of the functions of the board when it is established will be to visit Prince Edward Island and inquire into conditions with regard to fertilizer. Now, we have been taught there to use chemicals, mixing them ourselves —that is, acid phosphate, ammonia, potash and soda. Since this government saw fit to impose a duty on ready-mixed fertilizers coming into Canada, it has not increased the cost of ready-mixed fertilizers in Prince Edward Island. It may have increased—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MYERS: —the cost of American fertilizers coming into Canada.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MYERS: But we are able to import chemicals as usual and mix them on the farm.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member may discuss the wisdom of giving certain powers to the board, but he may not discuss the question whether the government has or has not raised the duty on fertilizers. He is not in order in doing so.

Mr. BENNETT: He is merely replying to the observations of an ex-minister.

Mr. MYERS: When the board is established we should like to have them inquire into just what has been done with reference to this very thing in Prince Edward Island. Should they take a trip to Prince Edward Island they would find out that since this duyt was imposed on fertilizer coming into Canada there has been established in Prince Edward Island something which we never had before. A fertilizer plant has been established in Charlottetown, which plant imports its chemicals, mixes them and sells the product at a lower price than ever obtained before.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, you have stated that it is permissible at this time to discuss whether or not this clause should be in the bill. May I give to the committee the reasons why I think it is utterly absurd to insert any such clause, and with your permission may I deal at the same time with the clause which follows. In the light of the discussion which has just taken place, I ask hon. members to contemplate for a moment what this board will be charged with if called upon to make an inquiry in accordance with subsections (e) and (f). We have heard during the past quarter of an hour something of the difficulty with respect to ascertaining the effect of the cost of fertilizer upon costs and prices. That is one small ingredient that enters into costs of production and price. The board under subsections (e) and (f) is expected to inquire into all conditions and factors which affect or enter into the cost of production and the price to the consumer in Canada. Subsection (e) reads:

all conditions and factors which affect or enter into the cost of production and the price to consumers in Canada.

Subsection (f) reads:

generally, all the conditions affecting production, manufacture, cost and price in Canada as compared with other countries;

In other words, this board is to inquire into all the conditions and factors which affect cost of production and prices. Every hon. member will agree that at the present moment prices and costs of production are in part the result of world conditions. There is no hon. member who has not stated over and over again that we are suffering to-day from depressed prices the result of world conditions. World conditions then are the first thing the board will have to inquire into.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh yes, there is.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says, oh yes. The next thing this board will have to inquire into will be how far the policies of this and previous governments have affected conditions, prices and costs. The whole question of commercial crises, industrial depressions, panics and the like will have to be fully investigated. Every hon. member knows that these are factors entering into costs and prices, and the board will have to go fully into them. Up until the present time the world has been suffering from the direct and indirect effects of the great war. Costs and prices in all parts of the world are still being affected by what took place during the war, and the board will have to inquire fully into these factors because they constitute a part of the conditions and factors affecting costs and prices. Within a very short time the world hopes to have declared a moratorium with respect to international debts. Prices will be affected immediately and we assume that in some particulars cost will be affected as well. The board will have to inquire into these effects as being one of the conditions and one of the factors affecting prices and costs. There has been considerable discussion this session as to the extent to which currency affects prices, the effect of gold reserves, the quantity of silver produced and in circulation in comparison with gold. These matters also will have to be fully and accurately inquired into by the board if this section means anything at all. We know something of the effect of stock exchange panics and crises upon prices and costs; these things naturally will have to be gone into. The board will have to tell the minister the extent to which crises on the stock exchange in New York have affected each particular commodity, whether it be fertilizer or something else. The laws and tariffs of other countries as well as our own have their effect upon prices and costs; so also has credit; everything which enters into the law of supply and demand must of necessity be a factor in connection with costs and prices; all this will have to be gone into very fully and carefully.

These are only a very few of the things which under these sections the board will be expected to inquire into. I ask hon. members if there is any sense in enacting this kind of a clause in a bill such as the present one. I come back to what I said to the Prime Minister a little while ago; I think it would be much more sensible under this clause to make a simple direct statement that the minister shall have the right to obtain information upon anything he wishes. The right hon. gentleman should not particularize in this absurd way which really makes this legislation wholly ridiculous.

One of the things which as I have just said affects prices and costs is the operation of the tariff. Here we see the injustice of the appointment by a government that entertains one view with respect to the tariff, of a board to make investigations into the effects of tariffs for possibly another government which may hold a directly opposite view. I do not think I need to enlarge upon what I have indicated. It should be sufficient to say that all this kind of thing is so much in the nature of, I was going to say, window dressing, but it is something very much worse than that, it is absolute deception so far as the public is concerned. No board in the world, no matter how competent it might be, could begin to make a report to a minister with respect to all the conditions and factors which enter into costs and into prices in connection with any commodity.

Paragraph (f) agreed to on division.

On section 4, subsection 2—Inquiry by minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This subsection reads in part:

> and the inquiry into any such matter may include inquiry as to the effect which an increase or decrease of the existing rate of duty upon a given commodity might have upon industry or trade, and the extent to which the consumer is protected from exploitation.

This board is not as has already been said to be merely a fact finding board. Here again it is to draw inferences. By the subterfuge of this language it is in reality to be a price fixing board. It will indicate to the ministry of the day that a certain price is a fair price, that if it is maintained the consumer will be free from exploitation and as such it will be claimed that the price should be maintained. I repeat what I said the other day; that is going back to where we were when we had the Board of Commerce operating as a court to interpret the fair prices act. It was shown in actual practice that this board could not be of any service, and the legislation in addition was later on declared by the courts to be ultra vires.

Subsection agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 3—Inquiry into combinations which enhance prices.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This subsection reads:

> The board may be empowered by the Governor in Council to hold an inquiry under section fifteen of the customs tariff, in the same manner as the judge of the Exchequer court or any other judge therein referred to may be so empowered, and the said section shall include and apply to the board as if it were therein expressly named.

If an application is made to the government for an inquiry and if the applicant expresses a desire to have the investigation made by a judge under the Customs Tariff Act, will this subsection take away from the applicant the right which he now has of having his investigation made by a judge—the government having the power as an alternative to refer it to the customs board—or is it just an alternative power which will leave to the applicant the privilege of saying by which tribunal he wishes to have his investigation made?

Mr. BENNETT: Prior to the passing of the Combines Investigation Act, which was before the courts last year, there was in the customs tariff of the country the following provision:

> Whenever the governor in council deems it to be in the public interest to inquire into any conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement alleged to exist among manufacturers or dealers in any article of commerce to unduly promote the advantage of the manufacturers or dealers in such article at the expense of the consumers, the governor in council may commission or empower any judge of the supreme court, or of the Exchequer Court of Canada, or of any superior court or county court in Canada, to hold an inquiry in a summary way and report to the governor in council whether such conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement exists.

2. The judge may compel the attendance of witnesses and examine them under oath and require the production of books and papers, and shall have such other necessary powers as are conferred upon him by the governor in council for the purpose of such inquiry.

3. If the judge reports that such conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement exists in respect of such article, the governor in council may admit the article free of duty, or so reduce the duty thereon as to give to the public the benefit of reasonable competition in the article, if it appears to the governor in council that such disadvantage to the consumer is facilitated by the duties of customs imposed on a like article.

I think the origin of that was in 1907. This merely affords another judge to make the inquiry. It is not always convenient, as perhaps the right hon. gentleman knows, for judges of the exchequer court to hold such inquiries, and this would enable the governor in council to authorize this body to do so. I have no doubt, if the parties affected complained of this, a delay would follow that would enable a judge of the exchequer court to be named. That is the position so far as the statute is concerned, and in practice, as I have been told by the judges, their duties in the exchequer court are at the moment so onerous that some body should be created that would do this work. Judges of the supreme court are obviously not free for that purpose.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend has spoken only of the exchequer court. I believe the act mentions judges of the supreme court, the exchequer court, county courts and others. I can see wherein a body of consumers might have much more confidence in a supreme or county court judge who is wholly removed from any political considerations one way or the other, than in a board which my right hon. friend might appoint to deal exclusively with the tariff. What I want to make sure of is this: when the applicants ask for an investigation and directly advise the minister they would like to have that investigation before a county court judge or a judge of the exchequer court, will they be precluded in any way from having the investigation so conducted? Will the minister be free to swing the investigation into the other court he is here creating?

Mr. BENNETT: I am able to answer only with respect to the present administration. If a body of consumers asked that the inquiry be held before a judge of the exchequer court, superior court or county court, I would certainly advise His Excellency that an order be passed to give effect to their wishes in that regard.

Subsection 3 agreed to.

[Mr. Bennett.]

On section 4, subsection 4—Powers under Combines Investigation Act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I desire to ask the Prime Minister the same question in regard to this subsection. If preference were expressed by those who believed they were adversely affected by a combine to have the investigation made under the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act, would the government be prepared to have the investigation made under that act, or would they take advantage of or claim the right under this particular subsection to insist on the investigation being made by the tariff board rather than by the officers named in the Combines Investigation Act?

Mr. BENNETT: As the right hon. gentleman remembers, no judicial powers are reposed in the investigators or the registrar, and if two or three matters are being conducted at the same time, it is quite an expensive process, as we have learned in this country, to name lawyers to conduct them. But if those concerned ask that a registrar or investigators other than the tariff board should hold the investigation, I can only repeat that so far as I could direct the order in council it would provide that the investigation should be held by either the registrar or an investigator.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To put the matter briefly, I understand from the replies of the Prime Minister that the intention of these two subsections 3 and 4 is not to take away from the applicants for inquiry any rights they may have at present under existing legislation?

Mr. BENNETT: No; it is merely to provide that in case of activity of judges and investigators, there is an alternative. If that alternative be objected to, it will not be used.

Subsection agreed to.

Subsection 5 agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 6—Inquiries to be summary, and reports made.

Mr. YOUNG: On this side of the house we hold that the person who is most concerned in what will likely happen before the tariff board and in the result of its findings is the common consumer, because whatever increases are made in the tariff will have to be paid by him. Not only will he have to pay the increased price of the goods, but where the object of the legislation is attained and goods are shut out of the country, the government will lose the revenue which they are now deriving from duties and the common people will be asked to make that up under other forms of taxation. We therefore consider it important that the ordinary man on the street be allowed, not only to plead his case before this board, but at any time he likes to attend the sittings, listen to the proceedings and know what is going on. Therefore I have an amendment which is very moderate in its terms, and I hope the government will accept it. I move:

That subsection (6) of section 4 be amended by inserting after the words "manner" in the second line of such subsection the following words:
"and shall be open to the public."

Mr. BENNETT: This is a public court. As in all public courts the limitation imposed upon the publicity of the proceedings is the limitation imposed in the public interest. Courts sit in camera when dealing with certain matters; sometimes courts have to receive information that is mentioned in a measure such as this, and if the hon. gentleman will move that the subsection be amended to provide that inquiries under this section shall be conducted in a summary manner and shall be open to the public "except as hereinafter provided," I am quite content.

Mr. YOUNG: I can hardly accept that.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I thought. The hon. gentleman did not want it.

Mr. YOUNG: We take the stand that those cases should not be heard in camera. When applicants come before this board asking for tariff concessions, they are seeking permission to put their hands into the pockets of the people of this country, and before that permission is granted they should be prepared to lay all their cards on the table and show adequate reason why their demand should be met.

Mr. BENNETT: Notwithstanding all the discussion that has taken place, the hon. member for Weyburn still talks of someone asking for something in this court. That is not the situation. The reference is made by the minister, not the manufacturer, who is not a suppliant in this court, who is not the petitioner before this tribunal. That is what differentiates it from what has been done heretofore.

Mr. YOUNG: Do I understand that an applicant for increases in tariff will not appear before the board?

Mr. BENNETT: He is not making an application before the board.

An hon. MEMBER: He petitions to the minister.

Mr. BENNETT: It seems passing strange, after this bill has been read and reread, it should not be understood that the minister requests that an inquiry be made. That is the answer to the question.

Mr. RALSTON: Who petitions the minister?

Mr. BENNETT: There is no provision in the bill for that. The bill is clear in that regard; the leader of the opposition put the matter plainly. This is to inform the government, not in the way of recommendations or advice, but in answer to inquiries, specific answers to questions asked. I am not averse that the declaration should be made. As a matter of law that would be the case anyway. But there is a provision that certain information is confidential, and the court might not be an open court while that is being given. That is all. I say once more to the hon. gentleman: If he desires he can add after the words "in a summary manner," the words "and shall be open to the public except as hereinafter provided."

Mr. YOUNG: Will the right hon. gentleman explain exactly what that means?

Mr. BENNETT: It means it is open to the public except as hereinafter provided, which is a provision with respect to confidential information.

Mr. FACTOR: Which section is that?

Mr. BENNETT: Subsection 10 of section 5.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think the minister is over anxious about the necessity for secrecy of the hearings. Undoubtedly it might be necessary to regard as confidential trade secrets and, questions relating to patents and secret processes, but when an individual makes an application to the board, or the minister of his own accord asks for an investigation, the board must of necessity summon the individuals concerned in order to get the necessary information upon which to decide whether they will grant the application.

Mr. CAHAN: They have no power to grant.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Perhaps that was the wrong expression. I will use my right hon. friend's own phrase—power to find the facts, which personally I do not think they will. But we will suppose that they are going to come as near as possible to finding the facts. I cannot see why the hearing should be secret in any respect except the two I have mentioned. There may be trade secrets, patents and secret processes that it would not be desirable for a firm to expose to others engaged in the same line of business. As my right hon. friend has pointed out, the whole population of Canada are interested in these hearings because if the applications before the board for increases are granted, the consuming public is of necessity precluded from buying in open competition. I do not think it will tend to any good purpose to preclude the public from attending the hearings. Take the case of my right hon. friend's budget. The increases he has brought down are based upon information that for the most part is known only to the officers of his department. They have listened to the representations made and have read the briefs filed, and increases are brought down on the basis of those representations. Possibly the minister may have introduced some changes of his own personal knowledge, but I venture to say that they are not very numerous. The usual course is for representations to be made to the officers of the department, who in turn make representations to the minister, and the tariff changes are brought down on the strength of those representations. Parliament is not in possession of the information on which the increases are made, but undoubtedly the minister will inform the house why in his judgment the increases should be made. We have no access to that information, and until the information is before us we are in a measure dealing blindly with the subject. I maintain that it is not fair to the public or to parliament itself to have the hearings before the board of a similar character. We should have that information in our possession, and with the two exceptions I have mentioned I cannot conceive why any hearings should be other than public.

Mr. CAHAN: I would refer the hon. member to subsection 6 of section 4 which provides:

> Each report shall be accompanied by a copy of the evidence, if any, taken, and by a copy of all information obtained in connection with the inquiry.

Nothing could be more public than the presentation of that evidence and that information to the government and to parliament. The only limitation is in subsection 10 of section 5, which says:

> The evidence or information shall not be made public in such a manner as to be available for the use of any business competitor or rival of the person, firm or corporation, respectively.

The only limitation upon making public the evidence taken before the board and the information elicited by the board is that such evidence or information shall not be available for the use of any business competitor or rival of the person, firm or corporation. The provision is simply to protect the person who gives evidence from having that evidence made available in such a way as to enable his competitor or rival to destroy or injure his business.

Mr. RINFRET: Since the Secretary of State has joined in this debate I shall direct to him a question that has been in my mind while considering this section. The Secretary of State will remember that in his amendments to the Copyright Act, section 10 provides that a certain company controlling a large number of performing rights in musical productions must file a list of its prices, and if in the opinion of his department those prices are excessive, he may conduct an inquiry into such prices. Reading over this section, I think it allows the Secretary of State to direct such inquiry to be made by the tariff board. I put the question to my hon. friend whether that is his opinion. If I read the section aright, I have given a further example of how far the powers and duties of this board may go. I see no reason on reading this section why the Secretary of State would not be authorized to direct an inquiry into copyright to be made by the tariff board, and yet I think everybody will admit that it is going very far indeed to give the tariff board such extensive powers. Will the Secretary of State favour us with his opinion?

Mr. CAHAN: I have not been able to find in this bill any provision which would enable the government to refer the question of copyright, under section 10 of the new Copyright Act, to this board. If my hon. friend can point it out—

Mr. RINFRET: Do I understand the minister to say that he may authorize an inquiry by the tariff board into copyright matters?

Mr. CAHAN: I say that I do not remember any provision of any section or subsection of this act which would authorize the governor in council to refer to this board such issues as that which my hon. friend has suggested might arise under the recent amendments to the Copyright Act.

Mr. RINFRET: Let me explain. The Secretary of State may, under the Copyright Act amendments, authorize an inquiry under the Inquiries Act. Now, subsection 4 of section 4 of this bill provides that the governor in council may empower the board to make any investigation or hold any inquiry authorized by the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act, or of a relative nature. I maintain that this practically means any inquiry at all that is more or less in the nature of an inquiry under the Combines Investigation Act. My point in rising was to show this committee by a further example how far the powers of this board may go. I submit that the board may investigate matters of copyright, and I do not think the Secretary of State, except by giving his opinion, has said anything to the committee to refute my argument.

Mr. CAHAN: It is impossible to argue with gentlemen who trust to their imaginations entirely for their facts. I cannot pursue a discussion of that extent or of that quality or character. Under the Copyright Act there is a provision that under the Inquiries Act an investigation may be held, but I do not think that it is within the intent of this act that the tariff board should be authorized to make such inquiries as those which might arise under the Copyright Act.

Mr. RINFRET: I do not think that it will, but I maintain that according to the strict interpretation of the bill it would have that power.

Mr. CAHAN: Just restrain your imagination and everything will be all right.

Mr. RINFRET: Subsection 4 of section 4 says very clearly that the board may hold any inquiry authorized by the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act, or of a relative nature. The provision in the Copyright Act amendment is very clear. If the minister considers that the performing right society is exercising a monopoly, or is a combine, he may authorize an inquiry. How does my hon. friend maintain that that is not covered by this clause? My point is that the bill is altogether too sweeping and extensive in practically every one of its sections. I maintain that by a strict interpretation of this bill the Secretary of State may order the tariff board to institute an inquiry into a matter as germane to tariff as copyright matters would be.

Mr. NEILL: I do not feel like joining in the condemnation of the Secretary of State, because the ex-Secretary of State has an imagination. I never saw anybody go very far who did not have some imagination.

If I heard the Secretary of State correctly I think he said that there was no need to press that the hearings be held in public, because a subsection provided that the report would be accompanied by a copy of the evidence, and that would be all the publicity anybody would need. Would he kindly tell me, not as a matter of imagination but to enlighten my ignorance, where in the bill there is provision for the report to be made public? I presume that the report would go either to the cabinet or to the Minister of Finance. That is not making it public in the sense that the public would wish, and in the sense of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Weyburn. Would some hon. member opposite kindly advise me on this point?

Mr. BENNETT: I would refer my hon. friend to section 6 of the bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understand that the amendment before the committee at the moment is to insert after the words, "summary manner" the words "and shall be open to the public." The Prime Minister has indicated that if there were a further restriction which would safeguard cases in connection with which there should be secrecy he would not object to the insertion of the words, "and shall be open to the public." So that we may proceed a stage further; in view of the fact that later we may discuss the provision that certain matters should be heard in secret, may I ask my right hon. friend if the amendment I now have in my hand would be acceptable to him? I would move to insert after the words, "summary manner" the words "and in public, except as herein expressly otherwise provided." I think that would cover any exceptions my hon. friend has in mind and which the committee may agree to. When at a later time we come to a discussion of the section we may consider whether the words there appearing go too far or, from the point of view of my right hon. friend, do not go far enough. If that is acceptable to my right hon. friend I would hope that the hon. member for Weyburn would accept his amendment modified to this extent.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the suggestion of the right hon. gentleman meets the situation. If he desires we may let subsection 6 stand for the moment and proceed to the next section.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If the hon. member for Weyburn is willing to withdraw his amendment, and the committee would give unanimous consent, I should be pleased to move the amendment I have outlined.

The CHAIRMAN: With the consent of the committee the hon. member for Weyburn withdraws his amendment.

Mr. YOUNG: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I move in amendment that after the words "summary manner" in line 13 the following words be inserted, "and in public, except as herein expressly otherwise provided."

Mr. CAHAN: I should like to reply to the question of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. Section 6 of the bill states that within so many days the report must be laid before parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps my right hon. friend realizes that his suggestion does not go quite far enough. Probably the words, "except as hereinafter or by any statute of parliament provided" would suffice, because there are statutes which in connection with the production of documents provide that they can be produced only under the subpoena of a court, and there is no power to act otherwise. I should think the situation would be met if the words were added, "except as hereinafter or by any statute of Canada expressly provided."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That wording would be satisfactory to me.

Mr. BENNETT: The words I have given are about the same as those suggested by my right hon. friend with only a slight addition. I had not thought of the necessity for mentioning the statutes until my attention was called to certain matters by the Minister of National Revenue.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall subsection 6 of section 4 stand?

Mr. BENNETT: It may stand for the moment.

Mr. BERTRAND: Mr. Chairman, before we reach—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. member wishes to speak to this section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN: It stands.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, subsection 6 stands, but not the whole section.

The CHAIRMAN: Very well.

Mr. BERTRAND: Before we reach section 5 I wish to make an amendment which will be added as subsection 7 to section 4. As was brought to the attention of the house this afternoon by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) and later by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth)—

Mr. BENNETT: I think section 4 is passed, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN: No, section 4 is not passed; subsection 6 stands, and the hon. member is now proposing a new subsection 7.

Mr. BERTRAND: Following what has been said by the hon. members for Kenora-Rainy River and Winnipeg North Centre hon. members on this side of the house claim that the labourers are not getting full protection. The Prime Minister said a few minutes ago that the manufacturing interests would not apply to the board, but the minister would request the board to make certain inquiries. I should like to know, however, what would prompt the Minister of Finance to request the board to make inquiries into different matters which would result in the raising or lowering of duties. The Prime Minister may be prompted by personal curiosity, or there may be some other motives in his mind. The public would know however that those manufacturing interests would ask for an upward revision, and owing to the fact that the policy of the Conservative party is one of protection to the industries of Canada it is to be expected that the requests made would be for upward revisions. In the amendment I shall now propose we seek to learn the capitalizations of companies and the salaries paid to presidents, directors and managers. By so doing we may be able to learn what part of the overhead goes into the production of the article, and thereby learn what parties are deriving the most benefit. Also, I think it is only fair that a clause should be inserted dealing with the rate of wages and the working hours. Further. I think it is very important that our workingmen should be assured freedom of association. In many cases the workmen are not allowed to become members of a labour union. This gives the manufacturers a decided advantage, because it enables them to impose their own terms on their employees. Therefore I desire to move this amendment:

That section 4 be amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

(7) Whenever application is made on behalf of a manufacturing company for higher duties the board shall investigate the capitalization of the company, and all salaries paid to the president, directors and managers, and the wages paid to their employees, the number of hours per day employees are required to work, and whether or not freedom of association is permitted the employees.

Mr. BENNETT: This, it is obvious, would not be in order, for the simple reason that there is no provision in this bill for applications to be made by manufacturers to the board, neither is there any suggestion that this will ever be done. But assuming that the amendment were put in order, it endeavours by detail to cover what is already covered in the bill itself, the power of inquiry conferred on the board with respect to capital and labour, using the words in the broad sense. And the operation of labour in connection with the matter inquired into as well as capitalization are already covered by the statute. So that any endeavour to specify these particulars would be a failure as against the general terms that are employed. We cannot accept any such suggestion.

Mr. ILSLEY: I suggest to the Prime Minister that certainly there will be applications. The applications may not be made to the board; they will be made to the government, though. Time after time such applications will be made, and that will be the reason for directing that their subject matter be investigated by the board. I suggest that the idea of the mover of the amendment is this, that when persons apply to the government for increases of tariff on their products they should be put in a little different position from other persons whose businesses are investigated for the purpose of obtaining information or for some such reason. That is to say, when petitioners come to the government asking for increases of duties on their products it should be obligatory upon the board to investigate certain specified matters.

Mr. BENNETT: That is already covered by the bill.

Mr. ILSLEY: I submit, Mr. Chairman, it is not covered by section 4. The minister may request the board to make investigations into certain matters, but if this section becomes law it would be necessary for the board, irrespective of any requests by the minister, to insist on finding out all about rates of wages, and conditions in the industry of the persons who want an increase in the tariff. I think there is a good reason for making distinction between such applicants and those whose businesses are merely investigated.

Mr. RALSTON: I want to emphasize that point too, because the right hon. Prime Minister has certainly, I think, brought to the attention of the committee a new phase when he says there will not be any applications. I think everybody visualizes a sort of trial at least between those who are applying for an increase in duty and those who are opposing it.

Mr. BENNETT: It may be a decrease.

Mr. RALSTON: We have not heard of very many applying for decreases. But let us take it that way—a consumer is coming to the government and asking that a certain duty be decreased. The government then requests the board to make an investigation. Surely the person who is applying to the government becomes an applicant before the tariff board and one of the parties to the action. My right hon. friend shakes his head.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the way.

Mr. RALSTON: There can be no other way in which the investigation can be conducted. I want to assure my right hon. friend that the amount of work with which the pension appeal board and the pension tribunals are being crowded will be as nothing compared with the work which will be ahead of this tariff board, and they will not have time to hear applications submitted to them by the minister as of his own motion. There will be applications enough. There will be people coming asking for increases or decreases of duty, and there will be more than one party. I submit the only way in which you can have any semblance of a real investigation is by having someone interested in supplying information from his point of view and, on the other hand, having someone who is equally interested in opposing it because of the way he may be affected by the application being granted. That brings me back to the section which is standing for the moment, namely, the section which has to do with publicity. The very competitor of the man who is applying is most likely to be the one opposing the application. What is everybody's business is nobody's business. If you do not have an application, and do not have somebody opposing it from personal interest, you are not going to get very far in the way of an investigation. While it may be technically correct that there will be no applicant under the statute, there will be a very real applicant who will move the minister to make a request of this board, and that is the applicant to whom my hon. friend refers.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

To His Excellency Captain the Right Honourable the Earl of Bessborough, a member of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, Governor General and Commander in Chief, of the Dominion of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency:

We, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada, in parliament assembled, beg leave to approach Your Excellency with our respectful request that Your Excellency will be pleased to transmit in such a way as to Your Excellency may seem fit our joint address to His Most Excellent Majetsy the King; praying that His Majesty may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the parliament of the United Kingdom in the manner set forth in our joint address hereto attached.

2. If not, at what dates was he absent from Ottawa?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Mr. Speaker, I do not keep a diary, but if my memory serves me correctly I was not absent from Ottawa for a single day during the time the Prime Minister was away from Ottawa last autumn. At the same time I wish to say that I do not consider this a proper question to ask, nor do I think the hon. member has a right to this information.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

DEPARTMENT OF IMMIGRATION INQUIRY

Mr. BROWN:

For a copy of the report made by Mr. W. R. Little, of the Department of Immigration, covering an inquiry held in Glasgow, Scotland, in April, 1930, with reference to complaints made by Mr. A. M. Graham.

RIVIERE DU LOUP STATION

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between: (a) the Right Hon. Prime Minister; (b) the Hon. Minister of Marine; (c) the Hon. Postmaster General; (d) the Hon. Solicitor General; (e) the Hon. Secretary of State; (f) the private secretary or assistant secretary of each one of them and Mr. C. E. Dubé, regarding the construction of a new railway station at Riviere du Loup, from June 1, to June 30, 1931.

For a copy of telegrams and letters from the Hon. Minister of Marine and his secretary to Mr. C. E. Dubé and Mr. Leo Berube, arranging an interview with them in Ottawa on October 6, 1930.

ST. CHARLES DE CAPLAN LIGHTKEEPER

Mr. DUFF (for Mr. Marcil):

For a copy of the evidence and report of Commissioner Sirois in the case of Raymond Arsenault, of St. Charles de Caplan, Quebec, lightkeeper, charged with political partisanship.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

AIR MAIL SERVICE

Mr. McINTOSH:

For a copy of all documents, correspondence, memoranda, letters, and telegrams, exchanged between the Prime Minister's office and the Post Office Department in connection with the cancellation or continuation of the daily mail service now enjoyed by the city of North Battleford on the northern loop of western Canada's air mail system.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, this motion cannot be complied with as it relates to inter-departmental correspondence and the conduct of government. Such memoranda are never brought down.

Mr. McINTOSH: I was asking only for information; there is nothing in this motion connected with the policy or conduct of government.

Mr. BENNETT: The papers will not be produced unless the house says so.

Mr. SPEAKER: Upon objection being made by the Prime Minister, the motion will be dropped.

Mr. McINTOSH: I did not drop the motion; I want to know where the house stands on it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Nevertheless, it will be dropped.

Motion dropped.

ENTRY OF WORKERS FROM THE UNITED STATES

Mr. ELLIOTT (for Mr. Heenan):

For a copy of all telegrams and correspondence between any department of the government or any member of the government, respecting the entrance into Canada of workers from the United States at Fort Francis, Ontario, since April 30, 1931.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, this is an improper motion as it asks for interdepartmental communications and communications between members of the government. Such productions have not heretofore been made. Unless the house changes its attitude with respect to matters of this kind, the production will not be made.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is for the house to say.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I said.

Mr. LAPOINTE: His Honour thinks that it should be dropped because the Prime Minister says so; that should be for the house to decide.

Mr. SPEAKER: In the absence of the hon. member moving the resolution, perhaps it had better stand.

Mr. BENNETT: I think not, Your Honour. This motion should be discharged at once and there should be no question about it. The action taken heretofore, and I trust it will always be the case, has been that interdepartmental communications are not brought down. Otherwise how could the government be conducted?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Prime Minister, I think primarily it is a matter of courtesy to allow the resolution to stand when the member in whose name it appears is absent. It is quite possible that the hon. member asking for these papers may have some point upon which he would like to have information, and which information could be obtained in a few minutes. I think the motion should be allowed to stand at least until the hon. member is in his seat.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not desire in any sense to be discourteous to any hon. member. Motions have been allowed to stand for days in order to accommodate the views of hon. members, but when a motion is one to which the house has never acceded I do not think it should be asked to allow the matter to stand. However, if the leader of the opposition asks that this motion stand, certainly it shall stand.

Mr. SPEAKER: In the absence of the hon. member moving the resolution, it shall stand.

Motion stands.

SHIPMENTS OF CATTLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS McMILLAN (South Huron): Mr. Speaker, the following is a Canadian Press despatch dated Toronto, July 6:

Ontario cattle will be shipped to England this year in larger numbers than ever before, according to Hon. T. L. Kennedy, provincial Minister of Agriculture. The decision of the Dominion government to allot a generous share of available shipping space to the province is responsible for the improved export outlook, he said.

Is it the intention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) to allot space as is indicated by this despatch, or has he any space to allot?

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): As far as I am aware, the government has nothing to do with the allotting of space.

CENSUS IN ROCK ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. B. HOWARD (Sherbrooke): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In Hansard of July 1, at page 3237, this question appears:

What is the name of the party who is taking the census in Rock Island, Quebec?

The answer was:

Mr. J. W. Downing.

The second question was:

Does he live in Canada or the United States?

I should like to ask why the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not say that he was living in the United States, was appointed by the present government and was taking the Canadian census.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I thought it was desirable to give to my hon. friend as full information as I was able to give on the question. I am sorry if I have offended him by adding to the laconic answer of yes or no.

MINISTER TO UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I have noticed in the press mention of the fact that Canada's Minister to the United States has been having an interview with the president. As a general rule the minister interviews the Secretary of State. Evidently this is a very special matter. Perhaps the Prime Minister would be kind enough, if he is in a position so to do, to inform the house with respect to the nature of the interview.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I think the press further observed it was a call of courtesy and I have no further information to communicate to the house.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): With respect to the development of the St. Lawrence waterway, will my right hon. friend, before the house prorogues, have any statement to make as to the progress of negotiations with the United States?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): It will be absolutely impossible for me to answer that question, but I should say not, so far as my present knowledge goes. If I have any statement to make, I shall communicate it to the house.

DEPARTMENT OF IMMIGRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): I wish to refer to order No. 1 standing in my name under notices of motions for production of papers:

For a copy of the report made by Mr. W. R. Little, of the Department of Immigration, covering an inquiry held in Glasgow, Scotland, in April, 1930, with reference to complaints made by Mr. A. M. Graham.

It has been standing for a considerable length of time. I know there was some hesitation on the part of the Minister of Immigration to allow it to pass, but now that it has been passed by the house, may I ask him to expedite the return?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I had intended to refer to it, but it was passed before I had an opportunity to rise to my feet. It relates to a matter in which Mr. Graham was dismissed from the service before the present government came into power. The minister had no personal knowledge of the matter until he looked up the papers. I have a memorandum indicating that part of these communications relates to purely inter-departmental matters in connection with the conduct of the department and one of its officers and the return will not contain anything that is of a privileged character or which in the mind of the minister it is not in the public interest to bring down. The return, therefore, may not cover all that the hon. gentleman wishes and at the time the motion passed I desired to make that reservation.

PRIVILEGE—MR. R. K. SMITH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. K. SMITH (Cumberland): On a question of privilege I wish to say that in yesterday's Ottawa Citizen, under the caption "Senators make protest about Wellington street," there appears the following:

Senator R. K. Smith, K.C., Cumberland, Nova Scotia, remarked: "But it is better not to take any chances," and here the matter dropped.

I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that this report is inaccurate, in the sense that it is premature.

PRIVILEGE—MR. MANION

DISMISSAL OF CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAY EMPLOYEES AT JOLIETTE

On the orders of the day.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I rise to a question of privilege. May I say that in some sixteen sessions this is, I think, the second time I have done so. It is in regard to a number of statements, all wrong, made by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Ferland) in a political speech delivered, I think, on July 1 in his constituency. For fear that I may be accused of mistranslating the hon. gentleman's remarks, I shall attempt in my halting way to read it first in French and then I shall read the translation. The French version is as follows:

Le dernier orateur est M. C.-E. Ferland, député au parlement fédéral. Après avoir dit qu'il était heureux de prendre part à cette assemblée, il parle du renvoi de 46 employés du C.N.R. "Je veux dire", dit-il, "aux ouvriers affectés par cette décision funeste du gouvernement conservateur de jeter sur le pavé quarante six employés, tous pères de famille—plusieurs d'entre eux avaient droit à un fonds de pension—qu'il y a là une injustice considérable."

"Dès le renvoi de ces citoyens, on m'a notifié au moyen d'un télégramme. Je me suis occupé de cette affaire immédiatement et je regrette aujourd'hui de dire que je blâme le ministre des Chemins de fer, l'honorable Dr R. J. Manion parce qu'il a refusé de recevoir une délégation d'ouvriers de Joliette qui voulaient aller le rencontrer à ce sujet. Une lettre dans mon bureau à Ottawa atteste ce que j'avance.

"Je suis content ce soir de rencontrer les ouvriers du C.N.R. et les autres pour les mettre au courant de ce refus du ministre conservateur."

This is the translation:

The last speaker is Mr. C. E. Ferland, federal member. After saying that he was glad to take part in this meeting, he spoke of the dismissal of forty-six Canadian National Railway employees. "I wish to say," he said, "to the labourers affected by this disastrous decision of the Conservative government, throwing forty-six employees on the pavement—

I suppose that means the street.

—all fathers of families—a few of them entitled to a pension—that there is a terrible injustice."

That is the first statement that is not correct, because the federal government has nothing whatever to do with the laying off of employees by the Canadian National Railways. The management of the railways handle entirely the matter of employment, the maintenance of the road and work such as that without consultation in any shape or form with the government of Canada. Then the hon. member says:

I was notified by telegram as soon as these employees were dismissed. I took the matter in hand immediately and regret to say that I blame the Minister of Railways, the Hon. Doctor R. J. Manion, because he refused to receive a delegation of the labourers of Joliette, who wanted to meet him in this connection. A letter in my office in Ottawa confirms this statement.

I am glad to meet to-night the Canadian National Railways employees and to let them know the refusal of the Conservative minister.

He says that I refused to receive a delegation of the labourers of Joliette. I was never asked either by the hon. member for Joliette or anybody else, to meet a delegation so I could not very well refuse. Secondly, he says that a letter in his office in Ottawa confirms his statement. That, of course, is just as far from the facts as the other statement was, I am going to read his letter to me and the house will see whether he asked me to receive a deputation. I shall read my reply to him and then I shall make one comment. This was written by my hon. friend on House of Commons paper under date of June 26:

Dear Mr. Manion:

You will please find enclosed a telegram which I received this morning from Mr. Hector Mainville of Joliette, regarding the Canadian National Railway's decision to lay off forty men out of sixty men now employed in car department at Joliette, Quebec.

This shows that my hon. friend knew as well as I do it was the management of the railways that laid off the men. The letter continues:

May I venture to say that the above decision is in violation of the terms of an existing contract which obliges the Canadian National Railways to maintain in permanence at Joliette (one of its divisional points), not less than fifty men in that car department, according to the interpretation of Canadian National Railway officials.

I wish you would kindly investigate and see that no unlawful act or injustice is done.

With my best regards, I remain, sir,

Yours truly,

Charles E. Ferland.

He did not ask me to meet a deputation of any kind. I replied acknowledging that letter, and I will read my letter in a moment. He accompanied this letter with a telegram which had been sent to him by Hector Mainville, from Joliette, reading as follows;

Charles E. Ferland, M.P.,
Ottawa.

Officially decided by Canadian National officials that effective July first forty men out of sixty will be laid off in car department whereas at other points in this district reduction only amounts from ten to twenty per cent. Conditions most disastrous and delegation wants to meet you at your office soon as possible.

Hector Mainville.

In other words, they asked to meet Mr. Ferland. Mr. Ferland sends me a copy of this telegram, which speaks of a delegation wanting to meet him. My reply to Mr. Ferland was as follows:

Ottawa, June 29, 1931.

Dear Mr. Ferland,—

I have received your communication of the 26th instant, and will pass it on to the railway management for their consideration, as the matter is one entirely in the hands of the officials. You will, therefore, appreciate that the deputation should see the management and that there would really be no use in their coming to Ottawa.

To see Mr. Ferland, as the telegram said. I was not asked to meet any deputation. The ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) smiles, but so far as my statement is concerned, it is absolutely in accordance with the facts. I was not asked to see a deputation. Mr. Mainville asked to see Mr. Ferland, with a deputation and I told them that the best thing to do was to see the management. To show my good faith in the matter, I might mention that I wrote to Sir Henry Thornton, enclosing Mr. Ferland's protest and a copy of the telegram. I have brought this matter up, Mr. Speaker, because the hon. gentleman has been in the habit—this is not the first time—of making such mis-statements. I think there is decency and honesty in public life that should be respected even by that hon. gentleman.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): The Minister has quoted from a newspaper. He did not mention the name of that paper or the date.

Mr. MANION: I beg the house's pardon. I overlooked that. I was quoting from L'Etoile Du Nord, of Thursday, July 2, 1931.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Where is that paper published?

Mr. MANION: It is published in Joliette. It contains a regular report of the meeting. I am informed that it is a Liberal paper. However, I do not know about that.

QUEBEC LEADER OF OPPOSITION

STATEMENTS REPORTED TO HAVE BEEN MADE AT PUBLIC MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville): I would like to remind the right hon. leader of the government of a question that I put to him on Thursday, the 2nd of July, which appears at page 3298 of Hansard. I quoted the report of a statement of Mr. Houde, the leader of the opposition in Quebec, and asked if the federal government was involved in the promises which Mr. Houde had made. Mr. Houde promised, first, that he would see that the federal government gave a premium to encourage the production of butter and cheese, and secondly, that it would reduce the rate of interest to the farmers. I would like to have from the right hon. gentleman an answer, yes or no.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I am sorry that the hon. gentleman can hardly get a yes or no answer to that question, because it is something like the interrogatory addressed to the new candidate, "Had he given up beating his wife," to which an answer, yes or no, was wanted. My hon. friend's question is in the same category. I do offer him my apologies for not having answered the question on the succeeding Monday, because I promised that I would look at what he said in Hansard. I understood the newspaper report to indicate what Mr. Houde had suggested with respect to the functions and duties of the federal government. I did not understand him to say that he had any promise from the federal government that it would do thus and so, or that the federal government had indicated that it would do thus and so, but that he indicated that in his judgment the federal government, whether Liberal or Conservative, should do thus and so, and he expressed his views as vigorously as he usually does on questions of that kind.

Mr. DUPUIS: I would like to have some further explanation from the right hon. gentleman. The leader of the opposition in Quebec said: I will propose that the federal government do these things.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member has asked his question, and it has been answered.

Mr. DUPUIS: I am not satisfied. I want to know from the Prime Minister what the federal government will say.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. gentleman has had his answer.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

ST. MARY'S ROAD, P.E.I.—POSTMISTRESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): An order of the house was passed on June 1, relating to the Post Office Department. The return has not yet been brought down, and I would ask that it be expedited.

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Postmaster General): I am making inquiry into the matter, and the return will be brought down during the week.

TARIFF BOARD

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT, POWERS, DUTIES AND SALARIES

The house resumed from Tuesday, July 7, consideration in committee of Bill No. 47, to provide for the appointment of a tariff board —Mr. Bennett—Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

On section 4—Duties of board.

Mr. BENNETT: I think, Mr. Chairman, that we were dealing with subsection 6, and the leader of the opposition had suggested an amendment. We have put it in the form that I am submitting to you, and if that is satisfactory to the right hon. gentleman, and he will move it, we will accept it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I move the amendment which has been placed in your hands, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Mackenzie King moves to amend subsection 6 of section 4, by inserting after the word "manner" in the second line thereof the following:

in public except as otherwise expressly provided in this or any other act of parliament of Canada.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. RALSTON: When the committee rose, it had before it also an amendment moved by the hon. member for Prescott, and I was directing the Prime Minister's attention to the objection he had made and to the statement of the Prime Minister to the effect that there would be no applicants in connection with proceedings before this board. I made a statement as to what I thought the procedure would be, which appears at page 3503 of Hansard, as follows:

A consumer is coming to the government and asking that a certain duty be decreased. The government then requests the board to make an investigation. Surely the person who is applying to the government becomes an applicant before the tariff board and one of the parties to the action. My right hon. friend shakes his head.

Mr. Bennett: That is not the way.

I want to ask my right hon. friend just what is the policy which will govern the minister in exercising the power which he has under this act to request an inquiry by the board.

Mr. BENNETT: In the exercise of that discretion he proceeds according to the provisions of the statute.

Mr. RALSTON: The provisions of the statute are that the minister makes a request, and I am trying to learn from him what policy will govern. I am afraid however that I have not been very successful. May I ask this question: Will the Prime Minister give the committee an undertaking that before a change is made either to decrease or to increase duties, he will refer the matter to the board which is now being set up as an important adjunct to the administration of the tariff?

Mr. BENNETT: The minister will not.

Mr. RALSTON: Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Does section 4 carry? Carried on division.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Oh, just a minute; there is an amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: The statement was made that an amendment would be moved.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As a matter of fact I think there was an amendment before the house last night before we adjourned.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; the hon. member for Prescott (Mr. Bertrand) said he was not going to move the amendment in the absence of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan), and he was permitted to proceed because we were dealing with subsection 6 of section 4. His proposed amendment was to have been subsection 7 of that section.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The proposed amendment was to have been a new clause.

Mr. BENNETT: And it was not a proper amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The proposed additional clause is as follows:

Whenever application is made on behalf of a manufacturing company for higher duties the board shall investigate the capitalization of the company, and all salaries paid to the president, directors and managers and the wages paid to their employees, the number of hours per day employees are required to work, and whether or not freedom of association is permitted the employees.

Mr. BENNETT: I took the view, Mr. Chairman, that that section was out of order. Certainly the proposed additional clause No. 7 does not constitute an intelligent amendment because it is based upon the assumption that a manufacturer or someone on his behalf is making application to the board. The very section to which attention is now directed is the negation of that idea. In addition to that I have pointed out that the previous clauses of section 4 deal with the very matter to which the hon. member for Prescott directed attention. I do not think there could be two clauses in the same section dealing with a similar matter, and the committee has already passed the sections dealing with this matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What section has dealt with it?

Mr. VENIOT: The amendment does not say, "application to the board."

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. VENIOT: No, it says that when application is made the board shall investigate.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The amendment states:

Whenever application is made on behalf of a manufacturing company for higher duties the board shall investigate . . . .

The Prime Minister has risen to a point of order; does any hon. member wish to discuss that point before a ruling is given?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, that is what I am on my feet for. The amendment reads as follows:

Whenever application is made on behalf of a manufacturing company for higher duties the board shall investigate . . . .

It does not say that the application is made to the board. If per chance application is made, according to the interpretation we have heard from the Prime Minister the application if any must be made not to the board but to the minister. According to the proposed amendment the application can be made to the minister and when so made the board shall be instructed to investigate. I do not see how the amendment is out of order; in my view it is all right. The minister may instruct either for or against. Supposing an application is made to the—

Mr. BENNETT: Supposing an application is made to the mayor of Ottawa.

Mr. VENIOT: That is nonsense. I am surprised that the Prime Minister has advanced such a point as that. We are dealing with a tariff board and a minister and we are not dealing with the mayor of Ottawa or any other mayor. Again, an amendment of this sort cannot be out of order unless it destroys the original section, and in this particular case there is no attempt at such destruction. The proposed amendment merely adds to the original. Reading it I find that it does not say the application shall be to the board, and therefore I claim it is not out of order.

Mr. CAHAN: The clear implication of the proposed subsection is that the application shall be made to the board.

Mr. VENIOT: No it does not say that.

Mr. CAHAN: It deals entirely with the board, and states that when application is made the board shall investigate. There is no suggestion that the application is to be made to the minister and that the minister shall be bound by a statutory obligation to refer it to the board for investigation.

Mr. VENIOT: From what is my hon. friend reading?

Mr. CAHAN: I am referring to the proposed amendment.

Mr. VENIOT: I would ask my hon. friend to read what it says.

Mr. CAHAN: It says:

Whenever application is made on behalf of a manufacturing company for higher duties the board shall investigate the capitalization of the company . . . .

And so on.

Mr. VENIOT: It does not say that the application is being made to the board.

Mr. CAHAN: But the whole implication is that it has to be made to the board.

Mr. VENIOT: Not at all.

Mr. CAHAN: There is nothing in this bill from A to Z or from first to last which provides for any application being made except through the minister. Hon. members opposite have been suggesting that in their view the proposed board should be a partisan committee to which application might be made directly by any person. However that is not the wording of the bill, and there is no such implication in the proposed bill as hon. gentlemen opposite have imagined. The suggested addition would allow any manufacturer to apply directly to the board, and that is contrary to the other provisions of the bill and inconsistent with it.

Mr. VENIOT: There is nothing in the bill to prevent applications being made either to the board or to the governor general in council, and in my opinion that is where it is weak.

Mr. CAHAN: The only provision in the bill for third parties to approach the board is contained in subsection 2 of section 5 wherein it is stated:

The board shall give reasonable opportunity to persons who may not have been summoned, to appear before them and give evidence upon oath or solemn affirmation as aforesaid, on any matter relevant to an inquiry then being held by the board.

Mr. VENIOT: Only when the matter is referred by the minister to the board.

Mr. CAHAN: Quite so. And the clear understanding with respect to this proposed bill is that with respect to tariff inquiries the reference must be made to the board by the minister. Unless it is so made, with a request for the board to make certain findings, the matter does not come before the board.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my right hon. friend whether this would be the proper wording of a clause which might be inserted in the bill.

Whenever application is made to the Minister of Finance or to any other minister of the crown on behalf of a manufacturing company for higher duties said application shall be referred by the minister to the board, and before any increase is made in the tariff the board shall investigate the capitalization of the company, and all salaries paid to the president, directors and managers, and the wages paid to their employees, the number of hours per day employees are required to work, and whether or not freedom of association is permitted the employees.

At the moment we are discussing the propriety of the insertion of a particular clause. I now ask the Secretary of State whether from the point of view of appropriateness the section I have read might properly fit in as an additional subsection to section 4.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I suggest to the leader of the opposition that at the moment he is not in order. We are discussing a point of order raised by the Prime Minister which will have to be disposed of one way or the other. If the right hon. gentleman wishes however he is free to move an amendment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The point of order raised by the Prime Minister is that the proposed amendment for the reasons he has stated is not in order. We are now speaking to that point of order. I believe the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) wishes to address the committee.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Mr. HEENAN: I was going to suggest, Mr. Chairman, to the Minister of Finance practically what the right hon. leader of the opposition has already suggested. If the principle of this amendment can be accepted its phraseology can be put in such form as to satisfy all parties. The point we want—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The hon. member is not speaking to the point of order. We will have to dispose of that before we discuss the principle involved.

Mr. HEENAN: The phraseology I copied from the amendment introduced in 1912 by the then Minister of Finance, Mr. White, afterwards Sir Thomas White. As the Minister of Finance has said, all questions need not be submitted to the board—

Mr. BENNETT: Not all questions; all applications.

Mr. HEENAN: —but the finance minister might use his own discretion in the matter. The object of the amendment, however, is to make it mandatory that all applications should be investigated and reported on where increases are involved. If the Prime Minister will accept that principle now I shall be satisfied, and I think I can speak on behalf of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bertrand) who kindly moved the amendment for me last night, in my absence. I am satisfied to have the amendment drafted to meet the wishes of all parties.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Is the amendment dropped?

Mr. BENNETT: One minute, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley) in his speech on the introduction of this bill made some reference to the provisions of the bill introduced in 1912 by the then Minister of Finance, Mr. White, now Sir Thomas White. He is quite right in saying that a considerable number of these sections follow the provisions of that bill as it was ultimately amended. You, Mr. Chairman, will observe that in section 4, paragraph (c) the very point to which attention is now directed by the amendment is covered:

(c) the cost, efficiency and conditions of labour, including health of employees, in Canada and elsewhere;

That is, the whole question of wages, of association, of freedom of association, of everything that touches labour and efficiency and costs and general conditions, is to be dealt with by the board. In addition to that there is the factor dealing with the question of capitalization, the question of dividends and matters of that kind—all conditions and factors which affect or enter into the cost of production or the price to consumers in Canada. I may add that those paragraphs in that section were amplified to make it clear that the point that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) now endeavours to meet should be met and provided for. I think I mentioned that once before in this house.

Mr. ILSLEY: The Prime Minister is quite right, he did mention it, but he has consistently failed to deal with the point I made at the time, and that is that the investigation of those particular factors depends on whether the minister sees fit to request the board that they be investigated. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River says that this should not be left to the discretion of the minister, that when a manufacturing company applies to the government or to the Minister of Finance for an increase of duty on its product, and the minister sees fit to request the board to make an investigation in respect thereto, the board must, irrespective of any request by the minister, investigate certain matters, that is, wages, hours of labour, and conditions in the industry. In that respect the substance of the amendment is not dealt with before in the bill. It seems to me therefore that on the second branch the Prime Minister's point of order falls to the ground. There cannot be anything out of order in making imperative what is not made imperative in the bill elsewhere. The other point, that there will be no application to the board, has been spoken to by certain members, but the consideration that I put forward last night, and desire to put forward now, is that there will be thousands of applications; there will be an application in nearly every case whether the application be made to the government or to the Minister of Finance.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Does any other hon. member wish to speak to the point of order? If not, I rule that the proposed amendment is out of order as being inadmissible for these reasons stated in May at page 404:

> Amendments are out of order if they are irrelevant to the bill, or beyond the scope of the bill or of the clause under consideration;

On the latter ground I rule the amendment is out of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then I wonder if this amendment would be in order, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. CAHAN: May I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. We have not yet disposed of the two preceding subsections, and the right hon. gentleman is about to propose an amendment which will be subsection 7. Should we not dispose of the two already not disposed of?

Mr. BENNETT: I think they are disposed of.

Mr. CAHAN: I beg your pardon.

Mr. BENNETT: As I understand it, all the sections up to the end of the six subsections have been adopted, and it is quite competent to move an additional subsection.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then I beg to move, Mr. Chairman, the following amendment:

> Whenever application is made to the Minister of Finance or to any other minister of the crown on behalf of a manufacturing company for higher duties, said application shall be referred by the minister to the board, and before any increase is made in the tariff the board shall investigate the capitalization of the company and all salaries paid to the president, directors and managers, and the wages paid to their employees, the number of hours per day employes are required to work, and whether or not freedom of association is permitted to the employees, and report thereon.

To make quite clear the significance of the amendment, may I point out that this places an obligation upon the Minister of Finance to refer to the board for investigation any applications for increases of the tariff before such increases are finally made, and the board will be expected to report upon the various matters mentioned in the clause which I have submitted. As I understand the bill, in connection with the section we are discussing, the Prime Minister has stated that whether or not any matter shall be investigated by the board depends on the Minister of Finance himself, that he will exercise his discretion in this respect. I think that is the Prime Minister's statement. Now this amendment limits the minister's discretion. It still allows him discretion with regard to the innumerable matters which may be referred to the board, but it does limit his discretion in one particular with respect to one class of applications, that is, applications for increases of tariff. The amendment proposes that before the duty is finally changed those applications shall be submitted by the finance minister to the board, and that the board shall investigate and report on such applications with respect to the several features mentioned in the proposed amendment.

Mr. ERNST: May I ask the right hon. gentleman this question: if that amendment were passed, would it not mean that parliament would really delegate its power of taxation to the board in a manner against which the right hon. gentleman has been protesting for several days?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, parliament would at most be reserving to itself the exercise of that right with respect only to increases in the tariff until it had from the board information on the subject necessary for its guidance in a matter of the kind.

Mr. ERNST: And could not impose taxation without that information?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This is against increased taxation. My hon. friend has got so much into the habit of protecting only the manufacturer that he forgets that the consumer may want a little protection as well. This amendment aims at protecting the consumer.

Mr. BENNETT: Whatever may have been said with respect to the first amendment may be said with equal force with respect to the amendment now suggested. I do think the right hon. gentleman has overlooked the fact, which I again direct to his attention, that the section adopted yesterday provides that the inquiries held by the board shall deal with the very problems to which he has directed attention. It has never been customary in a bill which imposes a discretion on a minister to endeavour at the same time to impose upon him an imperative duty. One is quite at variance with the other, and the very language used with respect to the amendment of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River applies with much more force to the present amendment, because this is at variance with the whole principle of the bill. It imposes in mandatory terms an obligation upon the minister which by the bill is left to discretion, and with this amendment the bill would be of no advantage. If the amendment were adopted the mandatory duty cast upon the minister would negative the use of his discretion in dealing with matters of this kind.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then I understand that the principle of the measure is not to place upon the board any obligation to investigate anything other than what the minister himself places before it. That is the principle, is it not? Everything investigated by the board must be at the request of the minister?

Mr. BENNETT: Or the governor in council.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, or the governor in council, and other parties, no matter whom they are, who make application for investigation will not be entitled to have their question inquired into by the board unless the minister in the first instance, or the governor in council, so instructs the board. That is the fact?

Mr. BENNETT: That is it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then, if that is the principle of the act, I admit that this amendment may not conform to that principle. I should like to move it, nevertheless, as a section which I think ought to be in the bill, and if the Prime Minister and his party wish to vote it down, well and good. I believe the public generally have assumed up to the present that a tariff board was being created in order that all parties might be heard before tariff increases were made; if that is not the object perhaps the best way to confirm it is not only to accept the Prime Minister's statement, which I am quite prepared to accept as the final word, but to allow his party as a whole to say they are not prepared to have this board investigate applications before increases of tariff are made.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): In view of the admission of the right hon. leader of the opposition there is nothing for me to do but declare the amendment out of order.

Mr. RALSTON: The right hon. leader of the opposition has intimated that his amendment is opposed to the principle of the bill as laid down by the right hon. Prime Minister, but I suggest that it is quite within the competence of this house to introduce other principles into the bill. The one principle is that a portion of the powers of the board may be exercised under the direction of the minister, but another portion of those powers may be exercised under a mandatory principle. I have in my hand the Tariff Board Act of Australia, where those two principles exist. In section 15 of the act of the Australian parliament we have the provision that the minister shall refer to the board for inquiry and report the following matters:

(a) the classification of goods under all tariff items which provide for classification under by-laws.

I will leave out sections (b) and (c), since they have to do with the Customs Act, but subsection (d) continues:

(d) The necessity for new, increased, or reduced duties, and the deferment of existing or proposed deferred duties.

That is the very thing the minister says he is not compelled to do, but he says he is to have some sort of optional court, and when he decides to refer an application, that may be done. In Australia the provision is mandatory, and the Australian parliament has said the minister shall do so and so. Then I read section (h):

> Any complaint that a manufacturer is taking undue advantage of the protection afforded him by the tariff, and in particular in regard to his—
> (i) charging unnecessarily high prices for his goods; or > (ii) acting in restraint of trade to the detriment of the public; or > (iii) acting in a manner which results in unnecessarily high prices being charged to the consumer for his goods. . . .

All those matters are required to be referred to the board by the minister, and then follows these words:

> . . . . and shall not take any action in respect of any of those matters until he has received the report of the board.

The difference between that act and the proposed act before us now is that the minister says all these powers are to be exercised voluntarily, as he sees fit, and that therefore any such mandatory provision in the act is opposed to the principle of the measure. I almost understood you, Mr. Chairman, to have accepted that as a reason why this amendment should not be introduced. But let me point out that in the same section of the Australian act there is a further provision that the minister may—not shall, but may—refer to the board for inquiry and report certain matters which are optional with him, and I want to cite that to you, Mr. Chairman, as indicating that this amendment is perfectly in order. That is to say, it is quite within the power of any hon. member of this house to move an amendment which may provide that certain duties shall be exercised optionally while others are made compulsory. I point out the Australian act as supporting that contention, at the same time emphasizing the situation in which my right hon. friend finds himself. He has stated to the country that he is going to have a tariff board which will make all findings of fact with regard to these complicated matters, but now he says it is to be purely optional. He says, "When I see fit I may increase or reduce tariffs without any application to this board and with no finding whatever by the board, and in the odd case applications will be made to the board." I think it will be only the odd cases; I do not think he will have any trouble getting men for that board who will do all the work he will find for them to do. I submit that the amendment is perfectly in order.

Mr. CAHAN: I would suggest that it may be quite in order for hon. members opposite to introduce a bill to amend this tariff board bill after it has passed, but it is entirely out of order to introduce an amendment which is confessedly directly antagonistic to the principle embodied in this bill. I think there can be no doubt about that, and what is the suggestion of hon. members opposite? It is that in the future parliament cannot pass an act to increase the duty upon any commodity manufactured in this country unless there previously has been a reference to and a finding by the board. This infringes upon the discretion and power of parliament, and certainly should be voted down.

Mr. VENIOT: It is not a question of voting it down; it is a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Does any hon. member desire to speak on the point of order before I rule?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, I should like to ask the committee if the principle of this bill is not to establish a tariff board, and also if the committee did not understand from the Prime Minister and all hon. members opposite that the purpose of this tariff board was to advise the government on tariff matters. If that is the case this amendment must be perfectly regular, because it refers to the principle of the establishment of a board to advise the government; it insures that the government will be advised before acting. Surely it is entirely regular.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The position is that the committee has already established a principle in paragraph (c) of subsection 1 of section 4 of the bill, and as I read the proposed amendment it is inconsistent with the conclusion already arrived at by the committee. Therefore I am obliged to rule—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Just before you rule, Mr. Chairman, may I say that what the committee has decided is that the minister himself may refer certain things to the board, and a number of matters are enumerated which may be referred for purposes of inquiry and report. We are not taking away that power from the minister; he has the fullest latitude, to refer to the board anything he wishes. We are asking that when an application is made for an increase in the tariff, in addition to the board having the power to inquire there shall be the obligation, which is quite proper.

Mr. BENNETT: And that no action shall be taken until the obligation is discharged, and therefore parliament is impotent. That is what it means; parliament is to cease functioning in that regard.

Mr. RALSTON: Not at all. It will not make any difference to my right hon. friend, but I am surprised that both he and the hon. Secretary of State should suggest that there cannot be introduced into a bill, the principle of which is the establishment of a tariff board, a compulsory feature which parliament thinks it wise to introduce. It might just as well be said that where power is given to the governor in council to make regulations on a certain subject, it is inconsistent for parliament to say that on any particular point they shall go only so far.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member should know his trawler regulations, of which the supreme court disposed.

Mr. RALSTON: We will have something to say about those regulations before this parliament is over, as I understand the government prefers to hide behind the court rather than to take action. It is at variance with any principle of legislation or of law to say that there cannot be introduced into a bill a clause making it compulsory for some officer to perform certain duties which parliament may want performed. The chairman is an eminent member of the bar and I submit to him that a ruling of that kind will not help in the conduct of the business of this parliament.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): In addition to the reasons I have given already, I refer hon. members to clause (c) of subsection 1. The question has been dealt with already and this is not the opportune time to introduce an amendment. I am supported in this contention by May and, therefore, I rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask if it will be an opportune time at some other stage of the bill to move such an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): There will be the third reading of the bill but it is not for me to say what the hon. gentleman should do.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I understand, Mr. Chairman, you are limiting your ruling to the application of this particular amendment to this particular subsection.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): That is the result.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was going to appeal from your ruling if it was to the effect that this amendment could not be moved at any point.

[Mr. Bennett.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): It is not for me to say what the hon. gentleman should do.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I understand the ruling, it is made in connection with the principle of the bill and this amendment will not be allowed to appear as part of section 4.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I have given my ruling and it is not for me to advise what action the right hon. gentleman should take in the premises.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Do I understand that you, Mr. Chairman, have ruled that the amendment which I have moved is not in order?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): It is not in order for the two reasons which I have given.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will appeal against that ruling.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): It is quite open to the right hon. gentleman to do that.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

On Bill No. 47 Mr. Mackenzie King moved the following amendment:

Whenever an application is made to the Minister of Finance or to any other minister of the crown on behalf of a manufacturing company for higher duties, said application shall be referred by the minister to the board, and before any increase is made in the tariff the board shall investigate the capitalization of the company and all salaries paid to the president, directors and managers, and the wages paid to their employees, the number of hours per day the employees are required to work and whether or not freedom of association is permitted to the employees, and report thereon.

This amendment the chairman ruled out of order for the following reasons: the amendment is beyond the scope of the clause under consideration and inconsistent with the decision of the committee on a previous subclause.

An appeal having been made from the decision of the chairman just read, the matter is referred to the Speaker.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

The committee resumed, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

On section 4—Duties of board.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman I have a subsection here which I think will be in order and which you will not find it necessary to rule against. I have been careful in drafting it, having in mind the principle which the minister has laid down that he himself must have discretionary power with respect to what is referred to the board. This amendment relates only to things that are referred under this section to the board. I move, Mr. Chairman:

That section 4 be amended by adding as subsection 7 thereof the following:

When an investigation is being made by the board under paragraphs (b) and (c) of this section, the board shall investigate the capitalization of the company, and all salaries paid to the president, directors and management, and the wages paid to their employees, and the number of hours per day employees are required to work, and whether or not freedom of association is permitted employees, and report thereon.

May I point out that paragraphs (b) and (c) deal with:

(b) the cost of production in Canada and elsewhere, and what increases or decreases in rates of duty are required to equalize differences in the cost of production;

(c) the cost of efficiency and conditions of labour, including health of employees, in Canada and elsewhere.

[Mr. Gott.]

Section 4 authorizes the minister to refer to the board for investigation any matter under these two paragraphs. My amendment obliges the board when such a matter is referred to them, but only when referred to them by the minister himself, to make inquiry into the subjects mentioned therein.

Mr. COOTE: On a question of privilege, may I say that some members at this end of the chamber were in a little difficulty as to how to vote on the question which was before the house a short time ago, because it was impossible to hear most of the argument at the other end of the chamber. We had to make up our minds on the point of order as best we could from the statement given by the chair. It would certainly be appreciated in this end of the house if debate on the bill at the other end of the chamber were carried on in a louder voice so that we could hear what is being said.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The question is on the amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the house will agree that this is not an amendment that is in order. In the first instance, it limits the application of the amendment to paragraphs (b) and (c) whereas paragraph (e) is the controlling one with respect to matters of this kind. Paragraph (e) says:

All conditions and factors which affect or enter into the cost of production and the price to consumers in Canada.

And paragraph (f) reads:

generally, all the conditions affecting production, manufacture, cost and price in Canada as compared with other countries.

No overhead costs could be arrived at which did not take into consideration the salaries of the president, officers and directors. It therefore follows that this is but an attempt at the end of the section to amplify the terms of subsections which the house has already adopted, and which cover the principle proposed as clearly as language can express an intention. Why we should at the end of a section, after we have adopted the different paragraphs, endeavour to add to them something which is only an amplification of what they say, I cannot understand, and I think, Mr. Chairman, that it is out of order. But if not, we have already covered it by the paragraphs that have been adopted.

Mr. BOURASSA: I entirely sympathize with the objects in view in the amendment, but I am afraid that its phraseology may defeat its own object, because investigations as regards capitalization and the conditions of labour are much more generally covered by paragraph (e) than by paragraphs (b) and (c). If the amendment of the leader of the opposition were adopted it would restrict the board in their investigations of capitalization of a company to such matters as are mentioned in paragraphs (b) and (c), and they could plead that parliament had not indicated the investigation of capitalization as one of the factors which enter into the cost of production. If we introduce a subclause which enacts that the board shall investigate the capitalization of a company only in such matters as are covered by paragraphs (b) and (c), inferentially we do not require the board to investigate capitalization in respect to the other matters mentioned in the other paragraphs.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BOURASSA: I am afraid that that construction might be put upon it. At times it is very dangerous to make reference to special clauses when the intention is that a certain matter should be investigated in all cases.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am obliged to my hon. friend for putting his question in the way he did, because I think both the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) can be answered at the same time.

Section 4 sets out that the minister may request the board to make inquiry into certain matters. Those matters are enumerated in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f). Paragraphs (e), and (f), cover everything on earth that I think the minister could conceive of as bearing on the subject, and therefore would cover what I have proposed in my amendment. I do not deem it necessary therefore to say anything about paragraphs (e) and (f). I wish the hon. member for Labelle to observe however that whether or not there will be any inquiry under paragraphs (e) and (f) rests entirely in the discretion of the minister. This is all preconditioned on the statement made by the Prime Minister that he alone, as Minister of Finance, will say what is to be referred to the board.

Mr. BENNETT: Or the governor in council.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If under paragraphs (e) and (f) the governor in council refers anything to the board that body will have to go into the matters named in my amendment. Therefore in my amendment there is no need to refer to paragraphs (e) and (f).

Paragraphs (e) and (f) however have nothing to do with paragraphs (b) and (c) because the Minister of Finance may never make any references under paragraphs (e) and (f) at all. I assume that most of the references which will be made by the minister will be under paragraph (b). He will ask the board under paragraph (b) to inquire into the cost of production in Canada and elsewhere and what increases or decreases in rates of duty are required to equalize differences in the cost of production. If the board is willing to make an investigation under paragraph (b) it may use its own discretion as to whether or not it will inquire into the salaries paid to managers or directors, or the allowances to presidents. The members of the board may not feel that the hours worked by employees is a question they should investigate. The purpose of the amendment is to make perfectly sure that when the board is reporting under subsection 6 with respect to increases or decreases in rates of duty they will have to take into account the matters to which I have referred in my amendment, and which are of importance to labour. Similarly if the board is called upon to report upon the conditions of labour, including the health of employees, and so on, one of the unodubted factors in a full inquiry would be these special matters to which I have referred, namely, the amount of the total output that is going into the payment of salaries to managers, directors and so on. All those factors would have a bearing on the cost of labour. Despite the fact that they would have a bearing, unless specific instructions were given to the board it would be within the power of that body to ignore altogether the factors I have mentioned.

The Prime Minister would have the committee believe that because paragraphs (b) and (c), if carried out in the strictest manner possible, would probably include the matters to which I have referred there is no necessity for telling the board what specific matters they must take into account. I contend that as paragraphs (b) and (c) now stand the board may use the same kind of discretion as to what it will or will not inquire into as the Prime Minister is exercising in connection with what he will refer to the board. I wish to make absolutely sure that when the board is called upon by the Prime Minister to report concerning the increases or decreases of rates of duty and concerning matters respecting costs of labour, and the like, they shall take these all important factors into consideration.

Mr. BENNETT: Nothing is to be gained by prolonging discussion upon a point of order, if we are to proceed in committee with the bill now before us. As this amendment was in part, a few minutes ago voted down by the house and as the point of order has been discussed by the right hon. gentleman and myself I am content to withdraw the point of order and dispose of the amendment by a vote.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The question is on the amendment.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I should like to ask the Prime Minister one question. I take it from the words of the leader of the opposition that in any matter that the Prime Minister as Minister of Finance, or his cabinet, may decide to refer to the tariff board when created, it will not be necessary to undertake investigation into subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), and (f) together, but that a question may be referred for examination under one or more of the subsections, according to the wishes or will of the Prime Minister? Is that true?

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot anticipate the question which may be submitted, but obviously by the language of the bill discretion is given to the minister. An interpretation placed upon it by myself would not bind those who might afterwards administer the Department of Finance. As will be seen, a wide discretion is given, and one thing and one only is provided, namely, to enable every factor which enters into production costs of commodities in this country to be determined. The sections are specific with respect to labour conditions and costs of production, including salaries to presidents, managers, officers, directors and every other overhead which enters as a factor in determining production costs. The bill before us was drawn for that purpose and I believe effectuates that purpose. The amendment is brought forward merely to endeavour to place upon the record something which will seem to sound good but will actually contain nothing more than is now in the bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Speaking of sound, may I say with all due respect that there is no hon. member who likes more to hear his own voice than does my right hon. friend himself.

An hon. MEMBER: Four hours at a time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be in hearty accord with my last statement. The section is drawn with a view to having the public believe that many matters will be investigated so as to protect the different elements to be considered, namely labour, capital, manufacturers, consumers and the like. As a matter of fact, as drafted and as interpreted to-day by the Prime Minister, the section is meaningless, if the Minister of Finance decides that he will not refer any particular subject to the board. The Prime Minister has made clear to-day that the principle of this bill is to give to the Minister discretion as to what he will refer to the board. There is to be no freedom of application to the board to have matters investigated by that body. Therefore everything in the section now before us is conditional upon the desire, the determination, the willingness and the request of the Minister of Finance of the day to refer matters to the board. That is bad enough, but if on top of that, after matters have been referred to the board, that body is free in its discretion to avoid inquiring into certain features affecting labour and consumers which would help to secure a true report on the situation, then the last fault is worse than the first. The purpose of my amendment is at least to make sure that when the minister has referred a certain matter to the board that body will have to take into account in solving the difficulty the various factors involved.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish to ask this question: Under section 4 of the bill will it be possible for the Minister of Finance to refer to the board a question for inquiry under any one of the subsections, or any two or three of them, excluding the others?

Mr. BENNETT: The inquiry made at the request of the Minister of Finance will follow the language of the section.

> In respect of goods produced in or imported into Canada the board shall, under the direction of the minister make inquiry.

That means just what it says. I can add nothing more to it, nor can I take anything from it. I have not the slightest doubt in the world that we could sit here the rest of the day and part of the night and talk about questions concerning this, that and the other thing. The right hon. gentleman talks about the sound of his voice. Anybody who has taken four hours to make a speech must be tired of the sound of his own voice. But leaving that aside, the question put by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) is answered by the section itself. The discretion of successive ministers of finance will doubtless determine the application of that section. I remember the late Mr. Robb, standing in his place and answering a question as to whether a certain matter had been referred to the tariff advisory board, said, "No, it has been dealt with in the tariff." There are no findings extant of that board—and that was an advisory board! I suppose thousands of applications were received by the minister. At least he said that from time to time he had received a great many, and that some were referred to the board, some were not. That board sat thirty days one year, according to the last report; perhaps they may have sat for a greater number of days in other years. This is an endeavour to have the minister refer to the board such questions as he thinks should be investigated. He will exercise his discretion with respect to whether a question should be referred to the board. If it is referred to the board, it will be observed there is an obligation on the board to make inquiry. That is, the board shall at the request of the minister make inquiry, and the inquiry they make is indicated in those paragraphs, the sum total of it being contained in the last two:

(e) all conditions and factors which affect or enter into the cost of production and the price to the consumers in Canada;

(f) generally, all the conditions affecting production, manufacture, cost and price in Canada as compared with other countries;

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I know the right hon. gentleman will forgive me for pursuing this matter. After all, I am only a layman and he is a lawyer, and he is interpreting language in a bill. It is frequently found that even lawyers cannot agree upon the interpretation of a bill, so I may be forgiven if I am not quite as clear as I ought to be in regard to this section. Do I understand the Prime Minister to say that in every case referred to the board for consideration the board will have to investigate into (a), (b), (c), (d), (e) and (f)—every one of them?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The answer is no.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The answer can surely be made; it is simply yes or no.

Mr. BENNETT: The question of the interpretation of statutes rests with the judicial, not the executive body; but as I read that section:

In respect of goods produced in or imported into Canada the board shall at the request of the minister make inquiry as to—(a), (b), (c), (d), (e) and (f)—and report to the minister—

They have to make inquiry into all those matters that are mentioned in that subsection and report.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Upon every one?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly. It is provided later on how they may be able to make their report on evidence and on information. For instance, in one case evidence was submitted of the report of the League of Nations with respect to certain matters. Now, I assume from what the right hon. gentleman opposite said that the difficulty he was experiencing was this: the minister was going to exercise discretion in picking out or selecting these particular paragraphs of the subsection. If that is what the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) understood, it is not the question we are dealing with at all. The question is as to the submission, not as to the duty cast upon the board, for the minister cannot curtail the duty of the board nor limit it. His duty is merely to request the board to inquire and report, and this section provides what that inquiry shall be. If that is the difficulty I shall endeavour at once to clear it up.

Mr. LAPOINTE: When the request is made the board will have to inquire into every one of the questions mentioned in the subsection?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If that had been stated before it would have been better.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the Prime Minister's last statement makes the duty of the board perfectly absurd. If the Minister of Finance asks the board to inquire into the price and cost of raw materials, the board will have to report on:

All conditions and factors which affect or enter into the cost of production and the price to the consumers in Canada.

It means that the board in the simple matter of an inquiry about the cost of raw materials and transportation will have, as I said last night, to take into account world conditions, such as the present depression, they will have to take into account panics, they will have to take into account the effect of stock exchange crashes, they will have to take into account the effect of the tariff laws of other countries and of this country, and the like. I do submit that my right hon. friend by his last remark simply makes the functions of the board perfectly ridiculous. As I said last night, no board on earth can make successfully an investigation into all conditions and factors that affect costs and prices. When the minister seeks to have it appear that if a reference is made to the board they will have to take into account all the matters mentioned in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e) and (f) even if the reference is only to one of the subjects named, he just makes the functions of the board appear absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. BENNETT: If it is ridiculous, why waste so much time opposing it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We want to find out what it really means.

Mr. BENNETT: Last night he said he knew.

Amendment (Mr. Mackenzie King) negatived.

On section 5—subsection 1—Powers to summon witnesses, take evidence and produce documents.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Subsection 1 empowers the board to summon witnesses, take evidence and produce documents; subsection 2 provides that the board shall give reasonable opportunity for appearance to persons attending of their own volition to give evidence; subsection 5 provides that the board shall have the same power to enforce the attendance of witnesses and to compel them to give evidence as is vested in any court of record in civil cases. Is it the intention to allow witnesses who are compelled to attend to be represented by counsel if they are called upon to produce documents?

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend from Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) is a member of the legal profession and he knows that no court permits a witness to be represented by counsel except in most extraordinary cases, and I see no reason why the rule of law should be departed from here. If a witness fears that he may incriminate himself he has the right to claim the benefit of the statute in that regard, and I assume that every court would see that he received that benefit.

Mr. BOTHWELL: In this case the board are given pretty wide powers; they are able to compel any witnesses to attend, and to give any information the board may desire; witnesses are also compelled to produce all documents, confidential and otherwise. A question may arise as to what are confidential documents, and surely in such a case the witness should be entitled to be represented by counsel.

Subsection 1 agreed to.

On section 5 subsection 2—Opportunity for appearance.

Mr. NEILL: I have a little amendment here, which I am quite sure you will not rule out of order, Mr. Chairman. Might I take the time of the committee for one minute to make a suggestion that I hope will expedite business—and goodness knows that is a praiseworthy ambition.

I want to congratulate you, sir, on the way you handled the points of order which were raised. You allowed the hon. member to state his point of order and the other hon. member concerned to state his conception of the matter. Then you invited any other hon. member who wished to say anything in connection with the point of order to state his views before giving your decision. I consider that to be the ideal practice; if it had been followed at all times during this session we would not have had the very large number of appeals we have had from rulings of the chairman. The chairman is inviting a member to appeal to the house when he says, "You are out of order. Sit down! If you do not like it you can appeal." In this case there was an appeal taken, but if your practice were followed it would leave hon. members with the feeling that they had been given a fair run for their money and a chance to state their point before the matter was decided. I say if that had been done by the Speaker and Deputy Speaker there would not have been the very numerous appeals which have been made this session.

After that piece of flattery, Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure you will not find fault with the amendment I am going to suggest, and in any case it is so appropriate that it cannot fail to bring with it its own welcome. I propose to insert after the word "aforesaid" in line 26 of subsection 2 the words "or examine witnesses". If the amendment is adopted the section then will read:

> The board shall give reasonable opportunity to persons who may not have been summoned, to appear before them and give evidence upon oath or solemn affirmation as aforesaid, or examine witnesses, on any matter relevant to an inquiry then being held by the board.

The right hon. Prime Minister was courteous enough, and I think showed sound judgment in doing so, to accept an amendment to the effect that these hearings should be held in what is called open court, and the amendment I propose is so absolutely ancillary to that and so dependent upon it that it follows as a natural consequence that this amendment should be accepted also.

We have this situation: We have a court of record, which, in my layman's ignorance, I understand ranks at least with a county court, if no higher. We are to have public hearings, in accordance with the usual court practice. We are to have witnesses called to give evidence under oath, and then sudidenly this procedure departs from that adopted in the ordinary court of record; there is no provision made for examining the witnesses. Can you conceive a man taking a case into court with the understanding that his witnesses shall not be examined? It may be said that this is different from an ordinary court, but these commissioners have been alluded to as exercising judicial functions and as being in the position of judges, and I accept that statement. Then surely the judges cannot cross-examine the witnesses; that would show partiality or bias to one side or the other. To use the language of the courts, we might say there is in court a plaintiff directly or indirectly seeking the endorsation of the tariff board in connection with his proposed tariff increase. The plaintiff is heard under oath; the witnesses for the plaintiff can be heard, but the defendant in the case, the unhappy public, the consumer who must pay the piper in the long run, is not to be heard at all. There is provision that he may come in and give evidence but he cannot cross-examine the other witnesses, which is the vital point.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if this amendment is not accepted we might as well tear up the whole bill, because this will be only a one-sided court at the most. The pressure of public opinion is a very great thing, and if we are to have no publicity nine-tenths of the usefulness of this court will disappear. There will be no protection for the ordinary man in the street, to whom we refer so often as the consumer. We might as well go back to the old system, under which the representatives of the manufacturing interests met the minister in his office and told him any sort of story they wished to tell, leaving the minister to find out the truth as best he could. If we are not to have this provision in this bill we might as well let the minister continue as he has gone on in the past, aided perhaps by a committee of the cabinet and one or two technical men to get information on detailed points.

Why should there not be opportunity to examine witnesses? What objection can there be to this suggestion? If a man has a good case, I care not what court he is before, whether it is this parliament, the tariff board or some other court, he is not ashamed of anything he might be asked; he is anxious to present the whole truth and nothing but the truth to the men who are acting as judges or jurors. Take the case of two men charged with a major crime, say that of murder. The innocent man is only too willing to talk about his case to every person who will listen to him. He is not afraid to answer quickly because he knows he is telling the truth and he cannot be tripped up in connection with some previous answer. He is willing to go into the witness box himself, although it is not to his discredit if he does not do so. He is willing to tell all he knows, to tell it to everybody and at length. On the other hand, the man who knows he is guilty is not going into the witness box unless he cannot help it, and if he does give evidence he will be very careful of his answers. He will say to himself, "If I say this it may conflict with what I said before; I must be careful. I would rather not go into the witness box, and above all I would rather not be cross-examined." The innocent man knows he has a good case and is quite willing to tell his story and be cross-examined upon it, because he knows that the more he gets his facts before the court the better will be his chances of success.

I might quote one instance; I need not go into details, because I think I have already mentioned it in the house. A certain duly incorporated manufacturing company, which I believe was really more of a private company, came to the tariff board asking for an increase of tariff in connection with a certain product. I think the president, or vice-president, the accountant and one or two lawyers appeared to present the case of the company. I happened to be present; it concerned a product used by dairymen, and I took some interest in the application. The beginning, the end and a great deal of the middle of the argument of each gentleman was that the company had been in business so many years and had lost money consistently during the previous seven or eight years because of the lack of a proper tariff. That was the burden of their song; whenever they got stuck in some other argument they fell back on the statement that they were losing heavily and could not make both ends meet; they saw ruin, destitution and starvation before them because of the lack of the tariff they requested.

This went on for so long, and the argument was reiterated so often that at last it dawned even on my slow-acting intelligence that "the lady doth protest too much," and I asked to be allowed to secure from the gentlemen who were giving this evidence a copy of the balance sheet of the company for the last four or five years, in order to demonstrate just how much they had been losing and to see whether or not it was cumulative, because that was their argument. They said they lost so much in 1924 and so much in 1925 and the loss was getting bigger all the time. Remember, this was an incorporated company, but the president said, "No, not on your life; I did not come down here to spread my balance sheets before all and sundry." But my request was upheld, and he was ordered to produce his balance sheets within the next thirty days, or before the next hearing. Some very trivial excuse was made as to why the sheets were not presented at the next hearing, and again I was given permission to get them before the following hearing, but before that time came I was informed that the gentleman had thrown up his hands and would rather be without any more tariff protection than produce his books, which would have conclusively proved his own case if his argument had been sound. I will admit that he was not under oath, but surely that was only a detail. How would the board have obtained information on which to give a fair and equitable decision if they were not furnished with those balance sheets, and how would they have obtained them if I or someone else had not been there to ask that they be produced? That is a fair although trivial illustration of the need of someone being allowed to go there and ask a few simple questions.

Mr. BENNETT: Did he not subsequently get a tariff?

Mr. NEILL: No. He tried his best but he said he would rather do without it than to produce his balance sheet. This was not a personal company, he was not asked to divulge trade secrets or anything of that kind, it was just his published balances.

I have put the case in the best way I can. Recently the Prime Minister emphasized and reiterated at some length the fact that this legislation is motivated by a sincere desire to constitute a board which will be in the best interests of the manufacturer, the workman and the consumer. Up to the present moment I have been inclined to accept that view although it may have needed a little stretching of that imagination to which the Secretary of State objects. I am willing to concede that up to this point the Prime Minister has been sincere and the legislation may do what he says it is intended to do, but should this amendment not be allowed I must change my viewpoint because I could not then see how it could be sincere or how it could be successful. It would be one-way justice; the scales of justice will be loaded down against the consumer and in favour of the man making the application. A man may be applying for an increased tariff or for a reduced tariff, but there is an opposite side to any tariff application. The man on the opposite side should be given an opportunity to examine the witnesses who appear and swear, so to speak, against him, or at least in opposition to his own views. I earnestly urge the Prime Minister to consider the acceptance of this very small amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I suppose it is quite apparent to you that the amendment is out of order despite the very flattering testimonials which have been given by the hon. member to your rulings. Having made these flattering remarks he is assuming that you will decide that the amendment is in order. This amendment is out of order because it relates to a section which has to do with witnesses only. This amendment would have the effect of allowing witnesses to examine other witnesses. Subsection 1 gives the power to summon witnesses and require them to give evidence and produce documents.

Mr. NEILL: The right hon. gentleman is dealing with the wrong subsection; I was referring to subsection 2.

Mr. BENNETT: Subsection 2 states that the board shall give reasonable opportunity to persons who may not have been summoned, to appear before them and give evidence upon oath—

Mr. NEILL: I was not referring to witnesses, I was referring to those who may not have been summoned.

Mr. BENNETT: I am referring to those who appear to give evidence.

Mr. NEILL: That is subsection 1.

Mr. BENNETT: Any person who appears to give evidence is a witness. He is either summoned by subpoena or he appears voluntarily. The first subsection deals with compulsory attendance by subpoena, while the second subsection refers to voluntary witnesses who appear and give evidence under oath. The next subsection deals with witnesses who need not attend outside of the province where they are served. The next subsection covers a point to which the hon. member has referred. We are now dealing with a person who appears as a solicitor, counsel or amicus curiae, a friend of the court. This matter is covered by subsection 12, which reads:

> The board shall hold its sessions and conduct its proceedings in such manner as may seem to it most convenient for the speedy and efficient discharge of its duties.

The previous sections declare that the board is a court, and this subsection provides that the board shall have the power of making regulations for the conduct of his business

Everyone is not to be allowed to jump up on the back seats and ask a question, there must be some measure of decorum observed in the conduct of the business of the tribunal. The provision in that regard is that the board shall make the rules for the conduct of its affairs. I have no doubt that those who may be interested will be given the fullest opportunity to cross-examine or deal with these matters, but that must be done under the regulations of the court itself. In respect to the inquiry which is now being held in this building it was determined in the first instance who were the interested parties, whether or not they should be represented by counsel, and otherwise. This subsection provides that the first duty of the board will be to make rules with respect to these matters and to prevent someone jumping up and saying he is going to ask a question of the witness. The first procedure is to know who are the appearances, to use the language of courts, who is to appear for the different parties. This amendment of the hon. gentleman deals solely with the question of witnesses and would have the effect of introducing a practice which cannot be accepted in any sense as having any relevancy to that particular section.

Mr. NEILL: I acknowledge that the government has the power to defeat this amendment if it chooses to do so, but I would prefer to see it voted down rather than to be sidetracked by the use of a point of order.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not raising a question beyond saying that it is not—

Mr. NEILL: The right hon. gentleman has suggested that I might find my remedy or recourse under subsection 12, but it would take an imagination beyond that which I possess to see in that subsection any provision of this character. The subsection reads:

> The board shall hold its sessions and conduct its proceedings in such manner as may seem to it most convenient for the speedy and efficient discharge of its duties.

The board might decide that the hearing of witnesses without their being cross-examined would lend itself to the speedy discharge of its duties.

Mr. BENNETT: "Speedy and efficient" are the words.

Mr. NEILL: There is a difference of opinion as to the meaning of the word "efficient", and that difference might apply in view of the pre-supposed opinions of the members of the board with regard to tariff matters. I remember a few years ago when sitting on the opposite side of the chamber that a matter somewhat similar to this came up on a bill in connection with soldier settlement. I rose in my place and asked the minister in charge of the bill if it meant such-and-so. I wanted an amendment included to express my ideas, but the minister replied that it was not necessary, that it certainly meant such-and-so. Six months afterwards the department wrote me and totally disavowed the views to which expression had been given in the house, and said that they were bound by the letter of the statute. Of course it was open to me to say that I remembered it to be such-and-so and give my own conception of what was meant by the statute but that did not prevail. However, going back to the word "witnesses" I really think the Prime Minister has a misconception of where this amendment should be included in the bill. He states that I am giving the power to witnesses to appear and to cross-examine other witnesses. Subsection 1 reads:

> The board shall have the power of summoning before them any witnesses, and of requiring them to give evidence on oath . . . .

Subsection 2, to which I have been referring, reads:

> The board shall give reasonable opportunity to persons who may not have been summoned, to appear before them—

Mr. BENNETT: Who may not have been summoned; it refers only to witnesses because they are the only ones who can be summoned.

Mr. NEILL: It applies to people who have not been summoned. You summon witnesses but you do not summon everyone else. That is my point. It applies to people who have not been summoned to appear before them.

Mr. BENNETT: And to give evidence.

Mr. NEILL: Not necessarily. The subsection reads:

> The board shall give reasonable opportunity to persons who may not have been summoned,—

Who are not going to be witnesses at the request of the court—

—to appear before them.

The subsection grants only one thing, the privilege to appear and give evidence under oath, but I am asking for the privilege of appearing at the inquiry to examine witnesses. A man has the power to give evidence, but I want him to be given the opportunity of cross-examining his opposing witnesses, so to speak. This is very important as far as the consumer is concerned. With all due deference to the legal acumen of my right hon. friend, and allowing for my ignorance in the matter, I submit the point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York): The question is on the amendment.

Mr. YOUNG: Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister complained yesterday that we on this side of the chamber did not appear to be able to understand the obvious meaning of words. After listening to this debate for the last few days, I confess that I am in the dark as to exactly how proceedings will be carried on before this board. In order that the committee may have a clear understanding of this procedure, I would like to state to the Prime Minister a specific case and have him tell us exactly what would happen. Let us suppose that a manufacturer of steel plates makes an application to the minister for higher duties. The application will be accompanied by a brief in which they will set forth the reasons why they consider their application should be granted. They will state their investment, overhead, cost of raw material, wage costs, market conditions quantity of their product, quantity of imports and everything else that they conceive has any bearing on the question. The minister then, if I understand the matter aright, will submit that brief to the board and he will say to it: Get us all the facts in connection with the matter. The board will make an investigation and will report whether the facts as it finds them as outlined in the brief are correct or not as the case may be.

But there is another set of facts that should have a bearing on the case in so far as the government's decision is concerned, and that is how this decision, if rendered, will affect the consuming public. Those steel sheets that were mentioned are the raw material of the stove makers, the makers of kitchen utensils, of filing cabinets, of a hundred and one other things. Any change in the tariff consequent upon the advice given by the board in this matter will therefore affect the production costs of these other manufacturers. I want to ask the minister whether these other manufacturers, so affected, will be given notice that this case is coming up and an opportunity to appear either personally or by counsel; whether that counsel or whoever they send to represent them will be permitted to give evidence as to how this decision will affect their business, and also to examine the witnesses of those who are making the application. If the minister will answer that question specifically, perhaps I shall be able to understand how the board is going to proceed in such cases.

Mr. BENNETT: First, let us assume that the application is made and referred to the board with the relevant papers. Second, the board will be convened at a date to be named for the purpose of hearing the application. Third, witnesses such as might be required would be summoned, if necessary by subpoena, and directed, if necessary, to bring their papers—in other words, as we lawyers say, subpoena duces tecum. Fourth, reasonable opportunity will be given to persons not summoned, to appear and give evidence under oath. Five, the board would otherwise, I take it, in the conduct of the inquiry, comply with its rules and regulations as it promulgated them under the provisions of subsection 12 of section 5. At the opening of the inquiry, as I would expect it would be conducted, it would call for the appearances, and as the hon. gentleman said, if counsel appeared for the stove makers, in my judgment he would have an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses that had appeared and given evidence in the earlier part of the inquiry as it proceeded. I can conceive of no rules being made that would not make some provision for that, and if hon. gentlemen believe they would feel easier in their minds if the government were charged with the responsibility, they may add to subsection 12 that the rules and regulations promulgated by the board shall be published in the Canada Gazette, so that there may be no question in regard to that.

Mr. FACTOR: If anybody appears voluntarily, will the board have power under subsection 2 to refuse to listen to their evidence? To take as an example the case mentioned by the hon. member for Weyburn, if counsel representing the stove makers appears, will the board have power to refuse to listen to his representations?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is confusing the question of representation made by counsel and evidence presented by witnesses. His first question was whether the board would have power to refuse to hear a witness that appeared. In my judgment, if a witness appeared and said: "I am here to give evidence in this inquiry," this is made to meet that very case. If counsel undertook to make statements without evidence, I assume the court would treat counsel exactly as a court of record would do and say: Mr. So-and-so, please confine yourself to the evidence in the record. The hon. gentleman is familiar with the practice of courts in that regard.

Mr. YOUNG: I am not quite clear yet in regard to my question. If the stove makers in this case send a man to represent them before the board, will he be permitted to fulfil the dual function of giving evidence and examining witnesses?

Mr. BENNETT: The courts have universally held that except in very rare cases no man should be both witness and counsel. The reason is obvious, for the summing up involves the necessity of his referring to his own testimony. That has been wholly frowned upon by the courts of the country. I recall one case in which the court permitted counsel to go into the box and prove a fact that had to be proven merely as a formal matter, but where evidence touching the merits of a controversy is concerned, our courts have universally held that as a matter of sound practice and regard for the amenities between the court and members of the bar, no person should be witness and counsel at the same time. The case was very fully discussed on one occasion by the courts of the country. In a case before the Supreme Court of Canada on appeal from one of the provinces, counsel gave evidence as a witness, and was compelled during the argument to refer to the witness so-and-so and so-and-so. The court said that this was very unsound practice and I think practically no member of the profession in these days would suggest that it be followed.

Mr. NEILL: Would the converse be true, that a man could appear and represent any particular interest without giving evidence?

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I conceive will be covered by the rules and regulations governing the court. If it be thought desirable that rules so promulgated should be approved by the governor in council and appear in the Canada Gazette, I am wholly willing that an amendment to that effect be added.

Mr. YOUNG: When the Prime Minister speaks of representation by counsel, I should like to ask him whether representation is to be by counsel only or whether an agent could fulfil the duties. My experience in connection with the old tariff board was that frequently lawyers appeared before it whose understanding of the problems which were being inquired into was not as profound as that of laymen.

Mr. BENNETT: My conception of the duty of any court is when opening the inquiry and calling for appearances, to note the representatives that are present. It need not be a professional man who represents the parties my hon. friend has mentioned.

Mr. YOUNG: Thanks for that much.

Mr. NEILL: I thank the Prime Minister very much for his assurance. If he agrees with that, why not put it in the bill and make us happy?

Mr. BENNETT: Because I have seen it abused; that is the reason. I do think there must be some measure of decorum in the conducting of matters of this kind. It is wholly beside the question to have someone appear and claim the right to cross-examine and then to make statements, not under oath, which are not statements of fact, but which they ask to be accepted as facts.

Amendment (Mr. Neill) negatived, on division.

Subsections 3 to 6 inclusive, of section 5, agreed to.

On section 5, subsection 7—Powers of one member.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to make it clear that one of the powers conferred upon the board is to determine what increases of duty are to be made in certain cases.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was abbreviating. Section 4 says:

> In respect of goods produced in or imported into Canada the board shall, under the direction of the minister, make inquiry as to—
> (b) the cost of production in Canada and elsewhere, and what increases or decreases in rates of duty are required to equalize differences in the cost of production.

I was assuming that the finding of the board with respect to what increases of duty were required would involve the drawing of an inference upon which the government would act. The point I wish to make clear is that one member of the board alone, under the subsection that we are now considering, will have all the powers that in section 4 are conferred upon the board. In other words, the government may be advised on these matters by just one member of the board who may take the investigation in hand. It is not a full board.

Mr. BENNETT: On more than one occasion it has been found desirable, in a country as large as this, that there should be on the part of every member of a given tribunal the power to make inquiries. This subsection enables that power to be exercised by one member—the next subsection provides for two members having power to conduct inquiries in certain matters—the evidence being taken by one member of the board and not by all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understand the reason, that it may be desired to spread the members around a bit. But it comes down to this, that one individual exercises all the powers of this board for the purpose of the inquiry to be made under section 4.

Mr. BENNETT: For the purpose of the inquiry, but not for the purpose of the report.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The report is signed just as a matter of course.

Mr. BENNETT: No, they may agree or disagree. The report is by the full board.

Subsection 7 agreed to.

Subsection 8 agreed to.

On section 5, subsection 9.—Power to proceed on other than sworn evidence.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think this is an extraordinary section. It simply means that members of the board may make a finding on anything they pick up anywhere in any way. That goes very far for a court. I have never heard of a court being able to pronounce judgment on information that it has gathered in the highways and by-ways, but that is exactly what is being done here. It says:

For the purposes of any inquiry under this act, the board may obtain information, which in their judgment is authentic—

They have only to believe it is authentic.

—otherwise than under the sanction of an oath or affirmation, and use and act upon such information.

All they have to do is to believe the information is authentic, and then they may use or act upon such information. With this subsection in the bill what is the good of the other subsections of section 5, which provide that evidence shall be taken under oath?

Mr. BENNETT: The Supreme Court of Canada, in the case of the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company vs. McKinnon, a gentleman of the legal profession, decided that it was competent for a board of arbitrators to arrive at a conclusion of their own knowledge. Rightly or wrongly, the general rule has been that you must have regard, shall I say, to the common sense of individuals, and their sense of integrity and obligation. I have seen it happen that judges sometimes view the locus in quo for the purpose of ascertaining just how a machine may operate. They may hear the evidence with relation to it, and very often their own knowledge amplifies the evidence given. So that these words have acquired at least a general meaning. The League of Nations carries on very extensive inquiries, as I mentioned this afternoon. Evidence might be introduced with respect to that, but it is predicated upon the assumption that the board believes the information to be authentic. I recall thinking as the right hon. gentleman did, when that case went to the Supreme Court of Canada on appeal from the Supreme Court of Alberta. It did look a bit strange that after admitting that the evidence was very contradictory the arbitrators should of their own knowledge arrive at the conclusion that the land was worth so much. Mr. McKinnon appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada. Any student of the law will be able to find the judgment. The case was over fifteen years ago. I realize that this subsection is a broad one, but it is the only one that would authorize reputable men charged with a sense of their own responsibility and regard for their oath of office, and who cannot at all times secure evidence under oath with respect to matters of this kind, to act upon information which they believe to be authentic and to which full credence should be given.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. friend has cited the Calgary case.

Mr. BENNETT: The Calgary and Edmonton Railway.

Mr. RALSTON: I think he knows himself that it has not very much to do with what we are discussing.

Mr. BENNETT: It has everything to do with it.

Mr. RALSTON: I submit that it has not, as I shall show. My right hon. friend is talking of a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, that arbitrators might act of their own knowledge. The point made here is that this board, which is a court of record and has power to compel the attendance of witnesses and to pay their fees, is not obliged to do that but may obtain from any source information which they believe to be authentic. They may ask somebody in the street, or take information from newspaper articles or reports, so long as they believe it is authentic. I submit to my right hon. friend that is far from deciding that men may act on their own judgment, because every day the courts take judicial notice of matters within the knowledge of ordinary men. There are many matters in connection with which a complete knowledge of the facts and circumstances makes the taking of evidence unnecessary. That, however, is not what this section is for. It is not to authorize the board to act on their own knowledge; they have that power anyway. It authorizes them to act on the knowledge of somebody else without the solemnity of a oath. If the board so desires it has the right to issue subpoenas for the witnesses they wish to call. I am sure my right hon. friend has not given the true reason for this subsection.

Mr. BENNETT: I object to that statement, because I have given the true reason with respect to it.

Mr. RALSTON: I submit to my right hon. friend that if the subsection is placed in the bill for the purpose of allowing the board to exercise their own knowledge there is no need for it, because the Calgary case decides that such bodies may use their own knowledge. If on the other hand the board is to be enabled to obtain information elsewhere, then I submit such action would not be within the four corners of court procedure, with which my right hon. friend is so familiar. The subsection is entirely unnecessary, because through the powers given to the board by my right hon. friend, any man can be forced to come before the board, if it so wills, and give evidence with the solemnity of an oath. Why have a seal? Why have the board constituted as a board of record? Why have power to summon witnesses? Why have power to imprison? Why have all these powers if one member of the court may ask his friend, whom he regards as entirely reliable, a particular question and act on the information he receives in reply thereto?

Mr. BENNETT: But it would have to be reported to parliament.

Mr. RALSTON: I understand that. That is what this section does; unless the information is of a confidential character it has to be reported to parliament—and I shall deal with that feature in a moment. I submit that the section is entirely unnecessary if its purpose is to enable the board to act on their own knowledge. It is entirely foreign to the whole spirit of procedure, the functions and fundamentals of the tribunal, if it is for the purpose of enabling the board to act on information other than that taken under oath.

Mr. BENNETT: I have given my hon. friend an illustration, namely information required with respect to a foreign government. A communication is despatched to the proper officer and a reply is received. This section enables such a reply to be used because it is believed that such information is true, without the solemnity of an oath. Such provision is absolutely essential in the conduct of inquiries, and there has been a custom—not in courts, but in other bodies—to rely upon the authenticity of information supplied by the public departments of the government of Great Britain. Not every day, but frequently, we act upon information received from public departments in Great Britain and the other dominions. This information is not given under oath but is believed to be reliable and is acted upon. It will be observed that in section 6 there is provision that a copy of any evidence taken, and information obtained, except it be of a confidential nature, shall be laid before parliament by the minister. So it is incumbent upon the board to make a record of the information obtained. It will be observed in the reports of the tariff commission of the United States to which I directed attention that in two instances they gave illustrations of information thus obtained. This is to meet that situation.

Mr. RALSTON: If the provision is only to meet the situation of getting information from a foreign government, my right hon. friend should say so.

Mr. BENNETT: There are other cases.

Mr. RALSTON: He should not make the section world wide in character in order to get certain official information. As he knows, evidence of the actions of foreign governments and all official actions are taken judicial notice of by the courts through the solemnity of a seal and the certificate of a proper officer. I am sure he does not need this section for that.

Mr. BENNETT: This section goes beyond that.

Mr. NEILL: I suppose but for this section it would be necessary for the tariff board to bring before them the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Minister of National Revenue to take an oath every time the board referred to annual statistics.

Mr. BENNETT: That might be so. My hon. friend has given what seems to be a very clear illustration.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I point out that under this section the board may conduct its whole inquiry, make its report and act upon the information it secures, without taking any evidence under oath at all. Leaving out the words "otherwise than under the sanction of an oath or affirmation" the section would read:

> For the purposes of any inquiry under this act, the board may obtain information which in their judgment is authentic, and use and act upon such information.

That is all they need to do. Whoever is in charge may secure and act upon whatever information he wishes so long as he believes such information to be authentic.

Mr. ERNST: Does the right hon. gentleman seriously suggest any court would do that?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Whether any court would do it?

Mr. ERNST: Yes, would any court do that?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is an utter absurdity to assume that economic phenomena can be dealt with in the same manner as that in which legal phenomena or questions of property and civil rights can be dealt with. It would be much better to simplify the terms of the bill by providing that the minister may obtain such information as he desires from any source in which he has confidence. That would be a guide to the minister. When he comes before parliament he has to take responsibility with respect to his presentations to parliament, and to my mind if that course were adopted the matter would be dealt with in a straightforward way. To go to the trouble to pass an act of parliament creating a court with all kinds of powers, dignities and the like, and insert in the bill a provision that the court may ignore all the powers so conferred upon it and act upon information it picks up on the highways and by-ways, seems to me to be ridiculous.

Mr. POULIOT: Some people have complained that there are too many oaths in courts of law. Subsection 1 of section 5 states that evidence may be given on oath or on solemn affirmation. I believe the experience of lawyers is that they have enough trouble to get the truth when witnesses are under oath. I doubt whether the truth could be had at all if witnesses gave evidence only on solemn affirmation. I do not see how an inquiry could be conducted seriously by asking questions of witnesses who are only on solemn affirmation and not on oath.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether a case such as I shall outline would come under the provisions of subsection 9 and 10, which impose secrecy concerning confidential information. Assume the board has written to or requested the head of some firm to give a statement. The head of that firm has supplied the board with a letter or document containing certain trade secrets, and in asking for an increased tariff the firm has used arguments based upon such trade secrets. Could the board then take action based upon such a letter or document, which in its nature was confidential and could not be brought down before parliament, and of which no parties save the board and the interested manufacturer could possibly be cognizant? It seems to me that a provision which would permit of such a case would be very wide indeed. The conditions I have outlined are not at all inconceivable.

Mr. BENNETT: They are possible.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister says they are possible—I would say that in many case they are probable. Under this section the board may bring before it the president of a company. And if the president of a company does not wish to be placed on oath so that the examination can run all along the line with regard to any questions that may be asked, the board under this section can simply get such information from him as they desire and then act upon it. Under the next subsection they may take his evidence in secret and may act upon it. I said the other day that this court is a star chamber body, and I think that is amply borne out by these two sections. It can if it suits its purposes put certain persons under oath, but other persons it may exempt from testifying under oath, it may use such evidence and conduct its business in secret and act upon the information obtained in that way. I do not believe there was a court in the reign of Charles I that ever had wider powers than that.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is Tory policy.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The case that I mentioned is not merely a hypothetical case, it is one that is exceedingly probable, and I think it is such a case as should, if possible, be guarded against.

Subsection 9 carried on division.

On section 5, subsection 10—Confidential evidence or information not to be made public.

Mr. BENNETT: At the foot of the last line will be observed the words:

—to a penalty not exceeding $1,000 or to twelve months' imprisonment.

It is thought that the words "not more than" should be inserted before the words "to twelve months' imprisonment."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In that connection, Mr. Chairman, I should have added when speaking about this star chamber court that in addition to all that I have said, it has the power of fine and imprisonment. I think that is a perfectly ludicrous power to give to any court dealing with questions of this kind. Why do we need, with respect to questions affecting prices, powers of fine and imprisonment, especially where the body is an advisory body? I think it is going altogether too far so to trespass on the rights of the people in matters that affect their everyday lives—the prices at which they are to sell their commodities, the rates they are to get for wages, the cost of their living, taxation—all these things are involved, and the star chamber court is to have the right to fine and imprison persons from whom they think they are not getting all the information they ought to get and in the way they think they ought to get it. It seems to me it would be better to cut out fine and imprisonment and let the Prime Minister create a court that shall have power to investigate only. Let him go easy on the penalties.

Mr. BENNETT: This court has no such power. I am amazed that the right hon. gentleman should not at least do himself the credit of reading the words in this subsection.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have read the subsection.

Mr. BENNETT: Why did he endeavour to mislead the committee? This court has no such power to fine or imprison.

Mr. RALSTON: Has not a court of record power to fine and imprison?

Mr. BENNETT: Not on summary conviction.

Mr. RALSTON: I am not talking about summary conviction. The test of a court of record is whether it has power to fine or imprison.

Mr. BENNETT: It has power to enforce law and order in the conduct of its proceedings.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, and punish for contempt, which is by fine and imprisonment.

Mr. BENNETT: It may do either. But that is not the point. The hon. gentleman did not make that point.

Mr. RALSTON: I did.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth is taking his usual course. He is endeavouring now to squirm out of something that somebody else has done instead of meeting the issue squarely. As I said, the right hon. leader of the opposition has not taken the trouble to read the subsection, because had he done so he would find that no such power is conferred.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have read it fifty times.

Mr. BENNETT: The power of summary conviction is the power conferred upon magistrates under the criminal code, and when the right hon. gentleman suggests that this power should not be given, the extreme case that was put by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) is itself some indication of the reason why. If trade secrets are to be given away, if a man's business is to be destroyed, it is hardly to be expected that there should not be some punishment given to the person who did it. I rather think the right hon. gentleman on mature consideration will acknowledge that his use of the words "star chamber" is hardly warranted, for this reason; that he himself and some of his friends suggest that this should be a public inquiry, and we have agreed that it should be so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Subject to the further clauses.

Mr. BENNETT: Subject to the confidential clauses. But in a broad and general way a court that is a public court can hardly be termed a star chamber court—not very well. It was not the public quality of the star chamber which won for it that name. This is no more a star chamber court than the advisory tariff board was a star chamber court. Why is it there is such feeling about this legislation? One denunciation is that it is ridiculous. Well, if it is ridiculous, the responsibility rests with us. If it is useless, then why spend two or three days in opposing it? If it is harmless—as it is said to be—then why take all this time trying to prove that it is harmless? Time will demonstrate whether it is harmless or not. I have been very frank with the committee. I concede that very large powers are conferred, because very large responsibilities are being accepted, and very large efforts towards a given end are being made. Every now and then I hear hon. gentlemen opposite say there is some sinister meaning behind this, and they ask what is meant by it. I can only say to the committee that this means exactly what it says. When the right hon. gentleman suggests, why don't we pass a few sections and say that is the end of it, I ask why did Australia elaborate its position?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend is not following Australia.

Mr. BENNETT: But why did Australia elaborate its position?

Mr. RALSTON: Because it was a question as to whether it should be voluntary or compulsory.

Mr. BENNETT: In India a statute was passed with respect to one commodity, namely, steel, and the tariff was fixed for a given time. The evidence was published. I read it in England—I do not know whether I brought it with me—and I have no doubt the right hon. leader of the opposition is familiar with it. It is a most illuminating volume as to the methods pursued for ascertaining the facts. However great the difference may be between us with respect to this, cannot we realize that there is no sinister object behind this legislation? This bill represents a very great deal of toil, the perusal of many statutes, and an honest endeavour to secure an enactment that would at least represent the good qualities and virtues of all existing legislation, and eliminate that which was evil and useless. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that this will not work successfully. It may not, but if it does not it will not be because we have not tried to make it so. I have had strong convictions on this matter for longer years than I care to think of as I look back upon them, and having the opportunity I have endeavoured to crystallize those convictions into legislation, not as perfect as I should like it to be because of the pressure of time, but it represents an earnest effort to pass a statute whose operations will protect alike the consumer and the producer on the one hand, and on the other the public in the larger sense as representing the state itself. That is what we are trying to do. Why cannot we discuss the bill in that sense?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my right hon. friend that I do not think I would be as suspicious of the legislation as I am or have the feeling about it that I have if it contained a provision that the parties themselves might appear before the court, make application to be heard and have any question inquired into that they wished. But that is not the bill before us. This is legislation which will give my right hon. friend alone power to say what is to go before the court. He says he has been thinking over this matter for a long time—I believe he is right. He says he wants to give protection to the manufacturer, to the consumer and to labour—I believe that is true. But let me say this to him. These people are all able to protect themselves if you give them a chance; I do not think we need a new protector in this country. I do not think the interests of manufacturers, of labour and of consumers should be only under the guardianship of my right hon. friend, no matter how sincere he may be.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not quite fair.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is fair, because my right hon. friend knows, and has laid it down to-day as a principle, that all the investigations under this act depend in the first instance upon his say-so.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, within the limits of the act itself.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend admits it, and that being the case I say I am frankly suspicious as to the good the measure will accomplish. If it were a measure freely conferring powers upon individuals to appear and be heard when they felt they had a grievance I would have an entirely different view in regard to it.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): When the committee rose at six o'clock we were dealing with subsection 10 of section 5.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman, I intend to move an amendment to this subsection, which deals with confidential evidence. I submit that such a provision is entirely without precedent in legislation of this kind, and that it could be very largely dispensed with particularly in view of the explanation given by the Prime Minister in regard to the way in which the board will function.

As was pointed out just before recess, this subsection provides for a penalty on summary conviction of $1,000 or twelve months' imprisonment. That penalty is imposed upon not simply the members of the board, its officials, or those who are present and whose duty it is to refrain from making public any matter subject to confidence, but as the subsection is drafted it imposes the penalty upon anyone who may happen to have information and who parts with it in such a way as to make it available for the use of any business competitor or rival of the person, firm or corporation submitting it. The general term "confidential" is not exact enough to be put into a statute which imposes such a penalty as this. The decision whether or not the information is confidential will rest with a court of summary jurisdiction, which may consist of two justices of the peace. Such a power put in the hands of a court of this nature is far in excess of that contained in any statute. The only one concerned is the competitor or rival of the person, firm or corporation before the board. If a person, firm or corporation were appearing before the board to ask for a duty there would be every likelihood that their competitors and rivals would be there as well, asking for a duty in connection with the same commodity. It seems to me that the competitor or rival is the very one who would have to know all the facts. He would be before the board assisting in the presentation of the facts, and I fail to see what the draftsman of this section had in mind when he restricted "confidential information" to the sort of information which might get to a competitor or rival.

No information should be confidential in the sense that it should be kept out of the report of the board and thus withheld from parliament unless it be information which would be considered confidential in a court of record. Information as to costs is not confidential. Such information must be before this House of Commons in order that it may determine whether the industry in connection with which duties are to be imposed or increased is entitled to that duty or is earning sufficient to enable it to carry on without the protection such a duty would afford. Costs of production cannot be considered as confidential, and if my right hon. friend has that in mind I submit that he would be depriving parliament of one of the important elements in connection with tariff schedules. However, I do not think my right hon. friend has that in mind, because he excepts any information brought out at a hearing of the board when the board is taking the place of the exchequer court or other courts provided for in the Customs Tariff Act, that is, a proceeding against any person, firm or combination of persons or firms for conspiracy in connection with the price of goods or in connection with anything having to do with the exploitation of the consumer.

If this is to be a court of record, the rules which govern such courts should apply. The proceedings must be open to the public, except in two cases, with which my right hon. friend is familiar. First, the proceedings are not open where it would be against public morals to make them public, and second, where a trade or secret process is involved, the very object of having a trade or secret process would be defeated if the person possessing it were forced to put in upon the public record. It is a well known principle of law that the administration of justice cannot be made the instrument or vehicle for defeating justice, and that would happen if a person were forced to make public a trade secret. I submit that this is the only class of evidence which should be considered as confidential. This rule applies in the Australian act and is contained in the regulations in connection with the United States tariff board; in those cases everything else is made public, and I submit the same rule should apply here.

From what my right hon. friend has said it would appear there is to be no prejudice to anyone appearing before the board. The board will conduct the examinations and it will be tender and gentle enough to see that no one is forced to give any information which might be prejudicial in the sense that it would be disclosing information advantageous to his competitors. The whole thing is in the hands of the board. In the first place the minister directs or requests the board, and then the board itself conducts the examination so that there need be no fear on the part of anybody that they will be forced to disclose something that will be to their detriment in connection with any competitor. The amendment which I propose will ensure to the man who has a trade or secret process the same protection that he has in a court of record; that is to say, he will not be forced to give away information with regard to that trade or secret process. But I want to go one step further. If he is willing, in connection with the inquiry, to give particulars of his trade or secret process, waiving the privilege which otherwise would be accorded him, then the court for this purpose should be cleared, the public excluded for the time being in order that information with regard to trade or secret processes might not be made a matter of general knowledge. But it must be remembered that the owner of the trade or secret process has the matter in his own hands; he may not waive the right or privilege and he may not be forced to give evidence. Therefore I desire to move, seconded by the hon. member for Hants-Kings, to amend section 5 by striking out subsection 10 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

(10) (a) Nothing in this act shall make it compulsory for a witness to disclose to the board any trade or secret process of manufacture.

(b) In case any witness is willing to waive the protection of clause (a) of this subsection the board may exclude the public from any hearing while the evidence of such witness respecting such trade or secret process is being given.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I hope it will not be thought that because I have not risen before I have not had occasion to object strenuously to some of the arguments put forward on the other side. This amendment indicates to me—and I say this with charity—that there is an attempt on the part of some hon. members, forgetful of the law as it stands, to offer as much opposition as possible to the passage of this bill. I am sorry to make a statement of that kind in the presence of the hon. gentleman who spoke last, but he knows as well as I or any other hon. member that no one in business can expect that the conduct of his affairs, the way he gains an advantage, if he gains one, shall be spread before his competitors. There is no question on that score, and so far as legislation on this point is concerned, it has been on the statute books for a long period of time. It passed the revision before the last one, but I have not had opportunity to look the matter up. My hon. friend knows, because we have had it mentioned before, that it is against the statute law of this country for the Department of Customs to show any invoice to anyone, no matter who he may be, unless under a subpoena or an order of the court.

Mr. RALSTON: What has that to do with this?

Mr. RYCKMAN: If my hon. friend does not understand, I think I can very soon make my point clear to him. If this amendment were to receive the sanction of this house, what would it mean? It would mean that except in the case of a trade secret or secret process, everything would be public. The inference would be, if this subsection were deleted and replaced by my hon. friend's suggested amendment, that invoices—this illustration just occurred to me because it was referred to last night—would then be the property of the public and if brought in evidence before the tariff board would be open to the public. How ridiculous that would be! The customs branch of the Department of National Revenue during the administration of the previous Liberal government, prior to that under the adminstration of a Conservative government, if you call it such, and now under the administration of a Conservative government, has gained the confidence of the public. When we ask for information and expect to get it, they know it comes to us and to us alone. It is a splendid thing when the business of this country is carried on honestly and efficiently, and yet when every man in business knows no one can take advantage of him by using information given to the customs; otherwise all kinds of unfair competition would be set on foot.

What about the collection of income tax, if I may refer to it? The same thing might arise in connection with an investigation under this very clause that we have before us now. The income tax branch under both the former government and the present administration has maintained secrecy. There is a penalty for divulging information, and I believe this country collects hundreds of thousands of dollars because it is known that information can be given to the Department of National Revenue without any fear of its leaking out. If it does leak out, very drastic measures should be taken to deal with such a situation, and therefore there are penalties similar to those in this bill. I think the only thing I have to do to show the absolute futility of an amendment of this kind is to put it to any hon. member who is in business to say whether or not he would prefer, in the conduct of his business, that what he reveals and what he must reveal to the crown should be made known to his competitors. I know of no line of business, even in the professions, where one is compelled, or where it is thought to be fair dealing, to give to competitors information in regard to transactions in connection with private business. The amendment goes a certain distance, but it does not go far enough. It would strike at section 182 of the Customs Act; it would strike at the provision of the Income Tax Act which says that the business of any man shall be confidential as long as he is within the law and does not seek to step outside it. I ask that this one-legged amendment, which does not go far enough, be defeated, and that the section of the bill, which goes further should be adopted.

Mr. RALSTON: Following the example of my hon. friend, I shall endeavour to be charitable too. If he had read the section he would not have indulged in the worrisome portrayal of the difficulties of the manufacturer as he feared they would be found as the result of this amendment. May I point out that this amendment has not a solitary thing to do with the Income Tax Act; it has not a solitary thing to do with the Customs Act. It leaves them exactly as they were before. If my hon. friend had read the section, as he has not—and that is why I am charitable—he would know that. I will read the amendment for my hon. friend again.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I have read the section and the amendment, and this is later legislation than the Customs Act.

Mr. RALSTON: Then I shall have to withdraw my expression that I shall endeavour to be charitable.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I am not asking for charity.

Mr. RALSTON: Nor am I. This amendment says:

> Nothing in this act shall make it compulsory for a witness to disclose to the board any trade or secret process of manufacture.

This amendment and this act simply mean that if someone is asking for duties in order, to use the expression we have heard so often in this house, that the cost of production in this country may be equalized with the cost of production somewhere else, he shall have to tell his costs of production. That information will have to be put on the record and be available not only to the board but to this house when the tariff schedules are brought down. There is nothing unusual about that. It has been in this country ever since it was a country. Manufacturers and those who have been asking for duties have always been expected to give their costs; otherwise a case could not be made. Does my hon. friend think we should act blindly in connection with these matters, that we should not know what the costs are when we are asked to impose duties that will equalize the cost of production? I submit that the term "ridiculous" which my hon. friend used is properly applicable to that proposition, if that is the proposition he is making. All that is being done here is to provide that when a man comes before the tariff board, which is a fact finding board, to which is referred this question of the equalization of the cost of production, to which is referred the question of how much of an increase of duty is to be given in order that the cost of production may be equalized—

Mr. BENNETT: Not "is to be given."

Mr. RALSTON: The board which will recommend how much of an increase of duty—

Mr. BENNETT: Not that either.

Mr. RALSTON: How much should be given.

Mr. BENNETT: Not even that.

Mr. RALSTON: We have been over the section time and time again, and the house knows and the country knows what its meaning is.

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. member evidently does not understand it, or else he is misrepresenting it.

Mr. RALSTON: I have read it half a dozen times, and I can read it again, but the house and the country understand it to mean what I said. This board is to make a finding of fact, is to say what, in their opinion, is the increase of duty that shall be allowed in order to equalize the costs of production. If we have understood anything, we have understood that. Before that is done, surely we must have information as to costs.

Mr. CAHAN: The board must.

Mr. RALSTON: I have pointed out once or twice that the competitor is probably in exactly the same box with the gentleman who is making the application, and I do not think there is any particular reason why a man should be protected against his competitor when they are both applying for the same thing. I submit that in a court, as the Minister of National Revenue well knows, these things are not confidential. Nowhere else are they confidential. Why should they be confidential before the board? Nobody is asking anybody to make an application against his will. The Finance minister first of all has to decide whether anybody shall be asked even a single question; he need not make a reference to the board at all; the board need not ask a single question if they do not want to, and they can prevent any questions being asked. Is there any more protection that could be thrown around people who are asking for an increase in the tariff schedules?

My right hon. friend missed altogether what I tried to say. In the Irish act and in the Australian act you will find exactly this same principle and nothing more. There is no protection against confidential information in those acts, except as to secret processes, and in the Irish act I believe there is no protection of any kind. In the United States, where there would be a good deal of competition, and where the argument which my hon. friend made a few moments ago might apply, the only protection in their act is that no information shall be divulged that refers to any trade or secret process.

Mr. BENNETT: It is more than that. Just read the section.

Mr. RALSTON: Section 335 of the United States Tariff Act provides:

It shall be unlawful for any member of the commission, or for any employee, agent, or clerk of the commission, or any other officer or employee of the United States, to divulge, or to make known in any manner whatever not provided for by law, to any person, the trade secrets or processes of any person, firm, copartnership, corporation, or association embraced in any examination or investigation conducted by the commission, or by order of the commission, or by order of any member thereof.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the section I am talking about.

Mr. RALSTON: It is what I am talking about.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the section constituting the commission.

Mr. RALSTON: If there is any other section I wish my right hon. friend would refer me to it. It goes on:

Any offence against the provisions of this section shall be a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court, and such offender shall also be dismissed from office or discharged from employment.

There is a provision which has to do only with trade secrets and only with the employees of the board. It does not go the length of saying that confidential information cannot be made available to the competitor of somebody who is applying for an increase in the tariff. Further than that, it does not suggest for one minute, as this bill does, that somebody else who has nothing whatever to do with the board shall be subjected to fine and imprisonment. With that assurance I submit to my hon. friend that the strong expressions he has used and the apprehensions he has in mind are not well founded.

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. gentleman's amendment precludes the board from obtaining this information from witnesses before them without their consent.

Mr. RALSTON: Certainly.

Mr. CAHAN: Personally I desire the board to be placed in a position to obtain all information which it may regard as relevant. There should be no prohibition against the board obtaining any information that it regards as relevant and material to the inquiry it has in hand. The hon. gentleman reverses that and says, by this amendment, that hereafter a manufacturer or other witness before the board shall not be compelled to disclose the real facts with regard to his manufacturing processes or many other matters which enter into the cost of production.

Mr. RALSTON: Not many other matters; just that.

Mr. CAHAN: I know enough about manufacturing to know that a number of matters which are very relevant indeed would be precluded under this amendment. So far as I am concerned I certainly could not consent to this amendment. The very basis of the whole proposed enactment is that in making legitimate inquiries the board shall have all information, and if information is withheld it shall be in a position to compel its disclosure. The hon. gentleman's amendment would prevent that.

Mr. RALSTON: All that my hon. friend is saying is that my amendment goes further than he would go in protecting the manufacturer. I am sure that I did not expect that objection from the other side of the house. With all deference to my hon. friend the Secretary of State, this amendment does not deal with a whole lot of things to which my hon. friend has alluded. It deals with just one thing, that a man shall not be compelled to give his trade or secret processes to the board.

Mr. CAHAN: The difference between us is that under the bill as it stands the applicant is compelled to disclose to the board everything. He cannot hide behind some objection of his own that this or that or some other fact desired would disclose some secret process.

Mr. RALSTON: I have looked at this with some care, and I wish to assure my right hon. friend that the matter has been very fully considered. . This is one of the cases outside of the matter of morals of which I spoke a minute ago, and outside of some matters expressly provided for by statute concerning young persons where courts are quick to see to it that nobody is prejudiced who has to give evidence before them. The reason is that once a secret process is revealed and the details given, the very object of that secret process is entirely lost. I have moved my amendment in the form of the provision in that respect in the Australian act, but I have gone a step further and have sought to waive the privilege of that section where the witness is willing to give the information, in which case the public shall be excluded while the evidence respecting trade or secret process is being given.

Let me go one step further. Where the public is excluded from the court room, in other words where a trial before a court of justice is held in camera, my hon. friend knows as well as I do that it is contempt of court to discuss anything which takes place. In such a case the applicant before this board or whatever he may be called, would be surrounded with protection in regard to trade or secret processes. I admit quite frankly that this section is intended only to make such proceedings confidential, but I cannot conceive of anything mentioned in this bill which should be regarded as confidential in view of the fact that it has to be acted upon in the forming of a tariff schedule.

Mr. BENNETT: The section read by the hon. gentleman was a section dealing with punishment for breach of the observance of confidential relationships.

Mr. RALSTON: Which section?

Mr. BENNETT: The section dealing with the punishment of those who disclose confidential information. I read from a report which I have not now before me, but which will be found at page 3186 of Hansard, setting forth what the United States tariff commission did on the 12th of March of this year. It was from their act that this section is framed. At that time I referred to an application for a reduction of duty on edible gelatin, and these are the words of the report:

> The costs of production of the single Netherland concern for the calendar year 1929, were obtained directly from its books.
> To guard against disclosure of the Netherlands company's costs, either directly or inferentially, from the average cost of the domestic product, the commission has omitted the detailed cost data from this report.

If such information had been included the commission would have been doing what should not be done, namely, disclosing to the world the nature of a business. It is not intended that that should be done, but it is intended that the board shall get every form of information which may be necessary to arrive at a proper conclusion. There are some members of this committee, as there are people in all countries, who regard it as a matter of profound satisfaction to be able to nose into other people's affairs. That is always so. In this instance it is provided that no limitation shall be placed upon the knowledge which the commission may secure. If the knowledge disclosed is of a confidential character, then that confidence must be respected, and that is the action which was taken by the American commission in pursuance of the powers conferred upon it. That is the only way in which business can be carried on.

The hon. gentleman refers to the circumstances in court where the nature of the trial is such that the proceedings are held in camera. It is perfectly true that courts are hedged around with the safeguards he has mentioned, but it is also true that similar precautions are taken with respect to bank accounts. The English statute has been copied. It is also true that in courts of justice in such circumstances as my hon. friend has mentioned, unless it be essential to proceed otherwise because of fraud or for some other reason, names required in evidence are merely written on slips of paper, and various other similar precautions are taken.

The purpose of this provision is that without restriction or limitation the information shall be given to the commission. That knowledge, however, shall not be disclosed, because it might represent years of toil and the profit therefrom might be destroyed not only by competitors but by others.

Mr. RALSTON: That is not met in the bill, that is just the point.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that is met here.

Mr. RALSTON: I think not.

Mr. BENNETT: Not met here? I shall read the section:

> Should evidence or information which is in its nature confidential, relating to the business or affairs of any person, firm or corporation, be given or elicited in the course of any inquiry, the evidence or information shall not be made public in such a manner—

That contemplates the information being made public.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, go on.

Mr. BENNETT:

> —as to be available for the use of any business competitor or rival of the person, firm or corporation, respectively.

Mr. RALSTON: That is the only man from whom he is protected. My right hon. friend said that others were included.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, this section also protects against the disclosure of that evidence to others. That is what the punitive powers are for, just as they are in the American statute. This section combines three things:

(a) it ensures the obtaining of complete information; (b) it limits the publicity of such information to the board, and (c) it punishes for publication to other than the board.

Mr. RALSTON: No, for publication to a competitor.

Mr. BENNETT: No, the punishment is to any person.

Mr. RALSTON: But the publication is to a competitor. I presume my right hon. friend thinks he has made his point and has come to a decision. But the question is whether or not information which is absolutely essential to determine whether or not a duty shall be granted and tariff protection thereby afforded is to be available to this house.

Mr. BENNETT: The answer to that is very simple. If the information is of a confidential character, it is to be retained in the minds of the commissioners and not referred to in the report, just as was done in the American report in the case of edible gelatin. Comparisons may be instituted, but the information in the minds of the commissioners may not be disclosed.

Mr. RALSTON: How could my hon. friend institute a comparison if he had not the facts? I do not understand that. We have to determine now whether or not the house is to decide on the facts which are presented, but the information with regard to cost is left out. If the American commission say they withhold the information I will venture the opinion that the evidence was given to a congressional committee or someone having to do with tariff matters. My right hon. friend has not yet produced the section to which I thought he was going to refer.

Mr. BENNETT: My books are in the east block, but I read from the report.

Mr. RALSTON: But the report did not suggest it was being done under the authority of the statute.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, that is what it was done under.

Mr. RALSTON: I think my right hon. friend's remarks with regard to people minding other people's business are quite gratuitous. Every day before the courts facts concerning the business of private litigants are presented in connection with which remedies have to be applied; the courts must ascertain those facts in order to apply the remedy. There is no doubt whatever that when some one comes to this parliament seeking tariff protection or an increase of duties already in effect, parliament should have knowledge of the facts. How that can be so if they state the facts to a commission and the commission in turn does not pass the information on to parliament so that a vote may be taken in the matter is something I find it difficult to understand. My right hon. friend says he is protecting industry from disclosure, but the section provides only that the information so disclosed shall not be available to a competitor, and he is the only man against whom protection is given. The competitor is just as much interested as the applicant is in getting the same treatment with regard to tariff.

The CHAIRMAN: The question is on the amendment.

Mr. YOUNG: No, the committee is not yet ready for the question. No hon. member on this side of the house has any desire to nose into other people's business.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. YOUNG: And when an applicant comes before the government or the tariff board and asks for a handout from the public treasury in the nature of high tariff, then his business is no longer private, but it is our business. We are here to guard the business of the public, and when the public is asked to make a contribution to the business of an individual, it is the public's business to learn something about the business of that individual.

My right hon. friend says that costs will be treated as confidential. The section of the bill contains the words "information which is in its nature confidential." We know from our experience this session that the government has treated as confidential a good many things which are not of a confidential nature. For instance I placed a motion on the order paper asking for the production of certain papers which had passed between the government and certain oil refineries. That information was refused on the ground that it was of a confidential character. All I wanted to know was what the oil refineries had asked for, and I am informed by the government that such information is confidential. It seems that hon. members on this side of the house are not to know what was asked for. I have reason to believe that information which was given to the government in no confidential manner is being treated as confidential and is being denied this house.

This section of the bill provides that if any information is given to the board of a confidential nature, and if anyone reveals that information to the public or to some one who would make it available for that man's competitor, he would be liable to imprisonment. I cited a case in the house not long ago where a certain manufacturer refused to give information to the board in regard to his production costs except in confidence. The other party before the board said: "We can figure that out ourselves, we can get the information otherwise, we do not need to get it from him." Under this subsection, if he had done that he would have made himself liable to imprisonment.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. YOUNG: If a man reveals certain information how are you to know the source of it? He might say, "I did not get it from the board, I worked it out myself." The minister under this act is attempting to set up a board which he hopes will enjoy the confidence of the people.

An hon. MEMBER: So it will.

Mr. YOUNG: I think I am safe in saying that the confidence the people will have in the board will be in proportion to the confidence that the board will have in the people. If the attitude is taken that the public is not entitled to any information, that all that is expected of the public is that it shall pay the shot,—if the board should feel no more confidence than that in the public, then the first time that board makes a decision against what is conceived to be the public interest the board will be regarded as rotten. If the minister desires to inspire confidence in the board, he should at least show confidence in the public.

Mr. ILSLEY: Does not the right hon. Prime Minister think that the word "wilfully" should be inserted before the word "violates"?

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think it is necessary in this case.

Mr. ILSLEY: I have in mind a case where somebody before the board might think that evidence which came out in an inquiry was not in its nature confidential, and he might publish it in the firm belief that it was in the public interest, and yet under this subsection he might be prosecuted.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Those in favour of the amendment will please say "aye."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Aye.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Contrary-minded will please say "no."

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

[Mr. Young.]

Mr. RALSTON: There is no need to railroad this legislation through the committee.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I am not trying to railroad it through the committee. Stand up if you want to speak.

Mr. RALSTON: The hon. member for Hants-Kings was on his feet.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): No, he was leaning on his chair.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Go ahead.

Mr. RALSTON: I submit the suggestion made by the member for Hants-Kings is a perfectly proper one. In a penal statute the word wilful is usually employed, and you do not simply penalize somebody for violating a section by disclosing confidential information when he does not know it is confidential.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Hants-Kings I answered. I told him I did not think the insertion of the word was necessary in this case. The reason is simple. The evidence or information is known to be confidential because the section provides it must so be, otherwise the public get it. If anyone thus knows that the evidence or information is confidential, and deliberately makes it known, it is not necessary to say that he does so wilfully, because every man knows the consequence of his own act.

Mr. ILSLEY: Information may come out in the course of a public inquiry and be in its nature confidential, and yet if it is published by any person present in the belief that it is not in its nature confidential he is liable under the act. Certainly he should not be subject to twelve months' imprisonment in such a case unless there is some wilful violation.

Mr. BENNETT: Wilfulness is not the point.

Amendment (Mr. Ralston) negatived.

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That subsection 10 of section 5 be amended by inserting the word "wilfully" before the word "violates" in line fifteen.

Amendment (Mr. Ilsley) negatived.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, I propose:

That subsection 10 of section 5 be amended by inserting the words "no more than" after the word "to" in line eighteen.

Amendment (Mr. Rhodes) agreed to.

Subsection 10 as amended agreed to on division.

Subsection 11 agreed to.

On section 5, subsection 12—Sessions and conduct of proceedings.

Mr. NEILL: Will the right hon. Prime Minister make the appropriate amendment here that he promised?

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think it is necessary, but I said if it is the mind of the committee that they should be published in the Canada Gazette, it should be done.

Mr. FACTOR: The public may be interested in the rules and regulations.

Mr. NEILL: It would give a greater measure of information to the public. I understood the Prime Minister to say he would accept the amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say I would unless the committee thought it desirable.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with the exact wording quoted by the Prime Minister this afternoon but I would—

Mr. BENNETT: I am drafting the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Subsection 12 will stand. We will proceed with section 6.

Mr. YOUNG: Just a minute, Mr. Chairman, before you leave section 5. There is another amendment to be offered. Whatever information may be elicited by the board; whatever decisions may be arrived at by the government, the final determination must rest with this house, which will have to decide whether or not the tariff is to be raised or lowered in any particular case. Each member of this house will be answerable to his constituents for whatever action is taken or not taken. That being so, it is necessary that we should have full information as to what goes on, and the reasons for whatever action is taken. In the explanatory note opposite the first page, I find the following:

> The intention is to secure, as a result of the work of the board, a constantly increasing body of information which will be of service to the government and parliament.

It is with a view to having that information made available to parliament that I wish to move that section 5 be amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

> (13) All evidence and information given or elicited in the course of any inquiry under this act shall be printed and made available for distribution as soon as is practicable, except such evidence or information as is referred to in subsection 10 of section 5.

It will be seen that we are not asking for the printing of anything that has been already ruled out.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Mr. BENNETT: Much consideration has been given that point, and it is not thought any useful purpose would be served by this being done. Consider the reports that have been published and the thousands of dollars expended in their preparation and printing, in connection with the old tariff board; what use have they been? What service has been rendered? The evidence will be laid before parliament and if a parliamentary committee thinks it desirable to publish the evidence it will be published. The report is another matter; under the act the report is dealt with in this way:

> Whenever a report has been made under this act, a copy thereof and a copy of the evidence, if any, taken, and of the information obtained (except such evidence and information as was of a confidential character under subsection 10 of section 5 hereof) in connection therewith shall be laid before parliament by the minister within fifteen days after the opening of the next session thereafter, or within fifteen days after the making of the report if parliament is then in session.

Parliament will then decide what evidence it is desirable to print with respect to those proceedings. I think that is the proper and economical way in which to deal with this matter. I gave a good deal of consideration to the point, and when I looked at the volumes printed in connection with the old advisory board, I asked myself what value they have been, and I thought the thousands of dollars could be better used at this time. If it is thought desirable to print the evidence it will be printed, as I have said.

Amendment (Mr. Young) negatived on division.

Subsection 12 of section 5 stands.

Section 6 agreed to.

On section 7—Secretary to board.

Subsections (1), (2), (3) and (4) agreed to.

On section 7, subsection 5—Officers, clerks and employees.

Mr. BROWN: Subsection 5 reads as follows:

> There shall be employed in the service of the board such officers, clerks and other employees as the governor in council may see fit to appoint, and they shall respectively receive salaries or remuneration as may be approved by the governor in council.

This parliament, in its wisdom, has passed a civil service act, and while it may be true that certain government officers are not under that act, yet I think it is a principle to which this house should hold, and the act should be extended as far as possible to cover all officials in the public service. I think that is especially true in regard to the employees of this board, since it has been indicated by the Prime Minister that in all probability this will be a permanent board. It will probably last at least ten years, and undoubtedly will consist of gentlemen who are in harmony with the views of the Prime Minister in tariff matters. If this amendment is not adopted it will leave the appointment of the officers and employees of the board in the hands of the governor in council, and I think in view of all the facts and in view of the situation which will undoubtedly arise, these officers, clerks and employees should be appointed by the Civil Service Commission. Therefore I move in amendment:

That section 7 be amended by striking out subsection 5 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

(5) There may be appointed in the manner authorized by law such officers, clerks and other employees as the board shall deem necessary for the conduct of the business of the board.

Mr. BENNETT: This is a matter to which much consideration has been given, and I am sorry I cannot agree with my hon. friend. Our own experience has taught us that in a matter requiring technical advisers it is desirable to have the board make its own recommendations, from inquiries the members of the board may make. The late advisory board selected its own employees, who were paid out of the public revenue.

Mr. RALSTON: Not the clerks.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; the Advisory Board on Tariff and Taxation employed its own people and paid them.

Mr. RALSTON: That was an order in council board.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly. I quite sympathize with what the hon. gentleman has said but I could not ask the board to do other than choose the instruments with which it is going to work, and the government must assume responsibility for the appoinments.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is not the board; it is the governor in council.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, the governor in council necessarily must do that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But there is nothing which says they must be selected by the board.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, there are two clauses. First, in subsection 6, the technical advisers and officers are appointed on the recommendation of the Board. Subsection (5) refers to the clerks, and subsection (7) gives the board disciplinary powers. I think many reasons were advanced a few days ago why we must have recourse to this form of appointment. If, as my hon. friend suggests, the board is not going to last very long anyway, it might be better that it should be this way than the other way. Difficulties have been experienced because of the release of employees who are under the Civil Service Act and for whom positions cannot be made, notably the private secretaries of ministers.

Mr. YOUNG: Is that the reason for this form of appointment?

Mr. BENNETT: No, the reason is an obvious one. The board will have heavy responsibility and will be better able to select their own employees than the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I agree with my right hon. friend so far as expert technicians are concerned, but with regard to clerks and stenographers I do not see why they should be exempt from the provisions of the law. My right hon. friend has imitated the American law in all its bad features, but he has not imitated the provisions of that law which are fair. Under the American law the experts are appointed in the manner suggested by this bill, but all ordinary employees are appointed by the civil service commission.

Mr. ILSLEY: The Prime Minister has said that it is only fair that the board should have the chance to select its own employees. Subsection 6 provides only for employees of a technical character, and I do not think anyone can object, but subsection 5 is based upon an entirely different principle. The board has nothing to say as to the selection of its own staff. I understand the minister has based this subsection upon section 7 of the bill of 1912, which section provided that the commission with the approval of the governor in council appointed its own staff.

Mr. BENNETT: That is right.

Mr. ILSLEY: Apparently the right hon. gentleman in redrafting that section has deliberately changed the principle contained therein and has taken away from the board any voice in the selection of its own staff. In giving the reasons a few months ago for that subsection the right hon. gentleman told the committee that he thought the board rather than the Civil Service Commission should have a voice in the selection of its staff. But in this bill the board while having a voice in the selection of technical assistants under subsection 6 has no voice in the selection of clerks, stenographers, and other employees under section 5.

Mr. BENNETT: I am quite willing that those words be added.

Mr. ILSLEY: That the principle contained in the act of 1912 should be restored?

Mr. BENNETT: As a matter of fact when this bill was drafted I did consider the two classes. The class in subsection 6 is differentiated from the class in subsection 5, but I see no reason why there should be this difference.

Mr. CAHAN: There might be added the words "on the recommendation of the board".

Mr. RALSTON: That would not meet the suggestion which was made.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course not.

Mr. RALSTON: Has the Prime Minister any objection to having stenographers and clerks appointed in the usual way?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: There are what are known as stenographers' pools and long eligible lists from which suitable employees can be taken.

Mr. BENNETT: I made inquiry and that is why the section is in the form in which it is, although it is an oversight that it is drafted differently from subsection 6. I made inquiry of those who have to do with tariff matters and I was informed by a gentleman who has had much experience that it is not easy to get any stenographer familiar with tariff matters. This gentleman was good enough to mention to me a certain person who had by long experience qualified himself to deal with matters of this kind. I have had a particular person in my service continuously for seventeen years and I must say that I would find it extremely difficult to take someone assigned to me and hope to have the work turned out in the manner in which I would want it turned out. In connection with stenographers and clerks the board may have in mind particular individuals who are better qualified than anyone else to deal with matters of this kind. It may develop later that these employees could be put into the civil service. I think hon. members who have had any experience, professional and otherwise, will see the force of my argument.

Mr. RALSTON: Except that it was all done away with when the Civil Service Commission was appointed. I have tried to accept what my right hon. friend has said, both from a professional standpoint and otherwise, but the Civil Service Commission has been adopted and properly qualified employees could be obtained by giving to the commission a requisition setting out the qualifications desired. The procedure followed is for the department to send an examiner to determine whether or not a candidate is suitably qualified. I think that principle could be followed and it is a pity that my right hon. friend should violate it as far as, shall I say the ordinary members of the staff are concerned.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, all that is necessary in order to obtain the properly qualified employees is to see that the examination provided by the Civil Service Commission is agreed to by the board so that all the considerations necessary to the obtaining of qualified candidates shall be met. There should be no difficulty in reconciling the views of the right hon. gentleman with the views of those who wish to preserve an anti-patronage system.

Amendment (Mr. Brown) negatived on division.

Mr. HEENAN: I understand the Prime Minister made a suggestion.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member is preparing his amendment. We have just done with one amendment but there is still another one in connection with the subsection.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Shall subsection 5 carry?

Mr. ILSLEY: In view of the defeat of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Lisgar, which amendment I think should have passed, I move:

That section 7 be amended by striking out subsection 5 thereof and substituting the following therefor:

"(5) There shall be employed in the service of the board such officers, clerks and other employees as the board with the approval of the governor in council may see fit to appoint and they shall respectively receive such salaries and remuneration as may be approved by the governor in council upon the recommendation of the board."

That is the language of the 1912 act, with the word "board"" substituted for the word "commission."

Mr. BENNETT: That is agreed to.

Amendment (Mr. Ilsley) agreed to.

Subsection as amended agreed to.

Subsections 6 and 7 agreed to.

Section 8 agreed to.

On section 5, subsection 12—Sessions and conduct of proceedings.

Mr. CAHAN: I move:

That subsection 12 of section 5 be amended by adding thereto the following words:

"and may make such rules and regulations as it may deem expedient for the conduct of its proceedings, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act. Such rules and regulations shall be published in the Canada Gazette immediately upon the promulgation thereof."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 9 agreed to.

On section 10—Regulations.

Mr. BOURASSA: After the amendment that has been moved by the Secretary of State to subsection 12 of section 5, is there any necessity for section 10?

Mr. BENNETT: They are not quite the same thing. One deals with the conduct of the proceedings of the board, and the other with the provisions of the act as a whole. In one instance the board makes the regulations and they are approved by the governor in council. In the other the governor in council makes them because it is an administrative act on the part of the executive.

Mr. BOURASSA: Should these regulations not be published like the others?

Mr. BENNETT: I suggested last year—and I suppose I am to blame—that all these should be published. But this is not one of the matters that affect the public. This is purely the administrative side. It is the governor in council as distinguished from the proceedings in the court itself. That is why the amendment moved by the Secretary of State has just been adopted.

Section agreed to.

On section 7, subsection 5—Officers, clerks and employees.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Mr. Ilsley moves:

That section 7 be amended by striking out subsection 5 thereof and substituting the following therefor:

"(5) There shall be employed in the service of the board such officers, clerks and other employees as the board with the approval of the governor in council may see fit to appoint, and they shall respectively receive such salaries and remuneration as may be approved by the governor in council upon the recommendation of the board."

Mr. BOURASSA: So far as we can understand the amendment at this end of the chamber, the recommendation of the board would apply not to appointments, but only to salaries.

Mr. BENNETT: Both.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Part II—Tariff board substituted for board of customs.

Section 11 agreed to.

On section 12—Publication of decisions.

Mr. RALSTON: This deals with the decision of the tariff board as substituted for the board of customs. Is it intended that the decision of the tariff board shall be reviewable by the minister as was the decision of the board of customs?

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend has not used quite the exact term.

Mr. RALSTON: Approved.

Mr. BENNETT: Must be approved by the minister. So far as the tariff board is concerned, the report has neither to be approved nor disapproved. Action may or may not be taken.

Mr. RALSTON: I am talking now about the decision.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no change from the law as it stands in that regard.

Mr. RALSTON: The answer is that the decision of the tariff board must be approved by the minister, as was the decision of the Board of Customs.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no change in that regard.

Mr. RALSTON: As I understand the matter, one of the indices of a court of record is that the record of its proceedings is conclusive. Before, we were talking about a board of customs. Now we have a decision of a court of record. I want to be sure that the decision of that court of record is not supplanted in requiring the approval of the minister.

Mr. BENNETT: It is hardly necessary to take up the time of the committee to point out that this is the conferring of an additional power to that for which it was created, in order to expedite the conduct of public business, the tariff board being an alternative board to deal with this matter.

Mr. RALSTON: A substitute.

Mr. BENNETT: A substitute board to deal with the matter. In that instance it is a designated body rather than a court dealing with it. It deals with it as a designated body rather than as a court.

Mr. RALSTON: It is still a court of record.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not in dealing with this. It is as the persona designata it deals with this matter.

Mr. RALSTON: It is still a court of record.

Mr. BENNETT: But not qua this matter.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is subject to the revision of the minister.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is a queer court.

Mr. BENNETT: It does not sit as a court in this matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When the bill was introduced, the hon. member for North Waterloo asked this question as reported in Hansard of May 15, at page 1640:

Mr. Euler: Perhaps this question may have already been asked and answered. Under the old customs board there was an appeal to the governor in council. Will that be possible under the new legislation?

Mr. Bennett: Not as it reads at the moment.

Mr. Euler: But there is an appeal?

Mr. Bennett: Not at the moment in the bill as prepared. The provision is that it shall not come into force until an order in council is passed. The bill provides that the board shall cause its decisions to be published in the Canada Gazette, and part two provides that it shall not come into force until an order in council has been passed by the governor in council. It is left that way in order that the house may discuss the matter freely and fully and conclude what action should be taken in that regard.

Under the law as it is to-day there is an appeal from the board of customs to the governor in council. The Secretary of State the other evening rather took issue with me on that score and said that the appeal was to the minister. May I read to him the section of the Customs Act that I had in mind?

Mr. CAHAN: I was speaking from memory at the time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, but my hon. friend spoke with the same positiveness as he usually does, and I felt a little chastised when he directed his remark to me. I want to read to him section 54 of chapter 42 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, as follows:

Whenever any difference arises or whenever any doubt exists as to whether any or what rate of duty is payable on any class of goods, and there is no previous decision upon the question by any competent tribunal binding throughout Canada, the Board of Customs may declare the rate of duty payable on the class of goods in question, or that such goods are exempt from duty, subject in each case to an appeal within sixty days from date of such declaration, by any person interested, to the governor in council, and any such declaration of the board of customs when approved by the minister after the expiration of sixty days from the date thereof, or any such declaration when made by any order in council upon appeal, shall have force and effect as if the same had been sanctioned by statute.

Mr. CAHAN: That is exactly what I had in mind at first, that it must be subject to the approval of the minister, and there was an appeal to the governor in council.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understood my hon. friend to be emphasizing the appeal to the minister but denying the appeal to the governor in council.

Mr. CAHAN: The minister must approve, then the appeal is to the governor in council. That is what I had in mind. I will withdraw it if I am wrong.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend would not intentionally say anything that was wrong, and I do not think for one minute that he did so in this instance. It is section 54 of the Customs Act that I was quoting. To-day, when there has been an appeal, the board of customs decides, and within sixty days the minister may approve its decision. If the minister approves, the whole matter is published in the Canada Gazette, and becomes practically the law. On the other hand, if parties wish to appeal to the governor in council they may do so, and the decision of the governor in council is final and becomes the law.

Mr. CAHAN: I understood that to be the case.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister stated, I think it was on the second reading of the bill, that there was no provision for appeal to the governor in council. I want to make quite sure that the appeal does remain to the governor in council as is provided in section 54 of the Customs Act.

Mr. BENNETT: First of all, section 3 of the Customs Act provides:

There shall be a board of customs, which shall consist of the commissioner of customs or any officer for the time being acting as such, who shall be the chairman of the board,

And so forth. Then subsection 2 says:

2. The board of customs shall have such powers and perform such duties as are assigned to it by any act of the parliament of Canada or by the governor in council.

3. Three members of the board, of which one member shall be either the commissioner of customs, or the officer for the time being acting as commissioner of customs, shall form a quorum and be competent to transact the business of the board at any meeting thereof.

Section 54 of the Customs Act provides:

Whenever any difference arises or whenever any doubt exists as to whether any or what rate of duty is payable on any class of goods, and there is no previous decision upon the question by any competent tribunal, binding throughout Canada, the board of customs may declare the rate of duty payable on the class of goods in question . . . . subject in each case to an appeal within sixty days from date of such declaration, by any person interested, to the governor in council.

If no appeal is taken within the sixty days, the minister approves the decision of the board, and that becomes binding on all parties. If appeal is taken and there is a reversal of the view of the board of customs, that reversal is published in the Canada Gazette, and that is the end of it.

Sections 11, 12, 13 and 14 of this bill provide that on proclamation the powers and functions and duties of the customs board shall be assigned to and be transacted by the tariff board constituted by this act, and the board shall cause its decision in any case brought before it to be published in the Canada Gazette. The governor in council may make regulations as may be deemed necessary for carrying out the provisions of part II of the bill. Under these provisions section 3 of the Customs Act would be repealed from and after the date of the proclamation. There would then be under the Customs Act no such thing as a board of customs; section 54 would also go along with it, and there would be no appeal to the governor in council. I promised the hon. member for North Waterloo the other evening that I would look into that question. My view now is at variance with the view I first held, because the effect of these provisions is that when the proclamation is made section 3 of the Customs Act is repealed, and there is no such thing as the board of customs under the Customs Act, the tariff board taking its place.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is most unfortunate. That is the whole point. My right hon. friend now says that whereas heretofore the right of appeal to the governor in council has been reserved to anyone who felt that with respect to rates of duty the board of customs had given a decision not in the interests of those he represented, under this bill that right is done away with. I think that is quite wrong.

Mr. BENNETT: I will explain that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Probably my right hon. friend will say as the Minister of National Revenue said the other day, that the minister has to approve. I think I can speak for all governments when I say that the Minister of National Revenue is very likely to take the same view as the customs board or any body substituted for it, whereas the cabinet, representative of all classes in the country of agriculture and every branch of trade and commerce, may take a very different view when a matter is under review before it. As my friend the ex-Minister of Justice reminds me, that has happened before. We can speak rather feelingly upon that point. The governor in council, having a wider interest to consider and a larger view to take, is more likely to take a different view from the Minister of National Revenue, who is so closely associated with his board of customs. If there is any doubt about that appeal to the governor in council remaining, I think the Prime Minister ought to hold this section and see to it that when this court passes on any matter that affects a rate of duty there shall remain for a period of sixty days the right of appeal to the cabinet as a whole before that decision has the effect of law.

Mr. BENNETT: As I said the other evening, this is an endeavour to substitute an independent tribunal for a political tribunal —that is, the governor in council being always a political tribunal and the tariff board not being a political body. I said the other evening, and I say still, that if it is the view of the committee that we should provide for an appeal to the governor in council, as has been the case under former acts, I am perfectly willing that that should be inserted. But I did think, and I am still strongly of the opinion, that the statute would be better for not making that provision. You have in the one instance a political body, governed by all the considerations that influence political bodies; and we all know just what the pressure of contending interests may be to get a minister to make a recommendation to council. As against that, we have this body which is not interested in political matters, and makes its decisions free from political influence.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The same thing happens in appeals from the railway board.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, and that is why one of the hon. gentleman's colleagues said that there should be a limitation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thank the Prime Minister for undertaking to reconsider the matter with a view to preserving the right of appeal.

Mr. BENNETT: I say, if the committee so desires. It is an open-minded committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Quite so. I do not know that one needs to attach to the word "political" the sinister meaning—

Mr. BENNETT: Not sinister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —which my right hon. friend is rather placing upon it. In many of these matters that affect different parts of the country in different ways, and affect different classes in different ways, there is need to reconcile opposing views, and a strictly legal body, by giving just a legal interpretation, may make a terrible mess of the whole situation so far as the broad effect upon the country as a whole is concerned. I believe the Secretary of State spoke the other evening of the governor in council as a non-partisan body, and I thought he was stretching the point rather far with regard to his own administration; but still it is a final court of appeal. It represents all parts of the country and all classes, and I do think that in these matters affecting taxation, as tariffs do, it is wise to preserve that right of appeal.

Mr. CAHAN: What I meant to say was that I had occasion not long ago to look at all appeals from the Board of Railway Commissioners to the governor in council. I went through every one, and certainly the rules governing those appeals, and the manner in which the appeals were decided, do not bear the character or quality of decisions emanating from a partisan body.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is quite right.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend the Secretary of State is now joining with me.

Mr. BENNETT: One thing has been overlooked, and that is that there still remains on the part of any person aggrieved with respect to a decision as to rates of duty the right of action to recover the duty. One of the most important actions was one brought many years ago to recover moneys paid under protest with respect to a certain classification. This bill does not purport in any sense to confer greater powers of taxation than exist under the statute itself. As it now stands a body of civil servants make the decision with respect to interpretation of tariff items; and if the minister approves, after sixty days the decision becomes law. If on the other hand a person who does not agree with the finding of the commissioners sees fit to appeal to the governor in council, the governor in council may allow or disallow the appeal, as the case may be. Part II of this bill, as I said the other day, substitutes for the civil servants comprising the customs board, who are permanent officials of the department and necessarily have an interest in its administration, this tariff board, which is—I hope I am not offensive in saying this—a non-political body. If desired, from that body an appeal could be taken to the governor in council; or it might be said that the decision of that body was subject to the approval of the governor in council. If approval is not given, then the findings fail to take effect. If approval is given, that is the end of it. As the section reads, however, I think it is extremely doubtful whether there is any right of appeal to the governor in council. I say to my right hon. friend that if the committee is of the opinion that an appeal should be provided, I am content that it should be so. If my right hon. friend wishes to test the feeling of the committee, apart altogether from any party views, I have an open mind in the matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I appeal to the committee regardless altogether of party consideration, because this final decision or appeal for some little time at least will be left entirely to my hon. friends. As the bill now stands any decision will be subject only to the approval of the minister, but a case may arise in which the court has given a decision with respect to its interpretation of the application of a certain rate of duty. Hon. gentlemen opposite, or some whom they may represent, may feel that that decision, while no doubt made with the best of intent, is unfair. In the interests of primary or manufacturing industries they may feel it desirable to have the cabinet as a whole review the situation, the cabinet including a minister of agriculture, a minister of trade and commerce—ministers from all parts of Canada who may take a broader view of the matter. Not in a partisan sense, but from the point of view of the country as a whole, those ministers may take a broad view of what should govern in a situation of that kind. I believe that right of appeal should be retained, because without revealing any cabinet secrets I can say from experience that time and again the cabinet as a whole has taken a view different from that of the minister of customs when he has sided with the board of customs. In taking that view they felt they were acting in the interests of the public as a whole.

Mr. RYCKMAN: We have not yet had the whole story. Section 11, subsection 1, has the effect of merely transferring to the tariff board all the powers, responsibilities and duties of the board of customs. My right hon. friend referred to section 54 of the Customs Act which covers a small ambit of customs transactions and law. When does it allow an appeal to the governor in council? Section 54 provides that if any difference arises as to the rate of duty there may be after sixty days an appeal to the governor in council. The other section which I have no doubt was in the mind of the Secretary of State when he made his statement is subsection 4 of section 38, and in my opinion this subsection is of more importance than is section 54. It is as follows:

The board of customs may review the decision of any appraiser or collector as to the principal markets of the country, or as to the fair market value of goods for duty purposes,—

That is, I submit, the main ground of difference, the fair market value of goods for duty purposes.

—and the decision of the board of customs in regard to such principal markets, and the value of goods for duty purposes in any case or class of cases shall, when approved by the minister, be final and conclusive, except as otherwise provided in this act.

Mr. RALSTON: What section is that?

Mr. RYCKMAN: That is section 38.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the one my hon. friend had in mind the other night?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. RYCKMAN: As I understand it, this bill proposes to transfer to the tariff board all the powers and functions at present enjoyed by the board of customs. If there was an appeal from the minister I submit there would be an appeal if this proposed legislation becomes law. I can quite understand the anomaly suggested by the right hon. leader of the opposition that the decision of the tariff board acting as a customs board would have to receive the sanction of the minister. I submit no appeal which exists now and will exist when this bill becomes law, if it does become law, is lost by the mere substitution of the tariff board for the board of customs.

Mr. RALSTON: What is section 3 of the act?

Mr. BENNETT: Section 3 of the act constitutes the board of customs.

Mr. RALSTON: Section 3 is repealed.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the section creating the board. Obviously the board would disappear with the proclamation that this statute had come into force.

Mr. RALSTON: That does not confer any powers.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Section 3 says there shall be a board of customs and states of what it shall consist. That board shall have power to perform such duties as are assigned to it by any act of the parliament of Canada or by the governor in council. The section provides also that:

Three members of the board, of which one member shall be either the commissioner of customs, or the officer for the time being acting as commissioner of customs, shall form a quorum, and be competent to transact the business of the board at any meeting thereof, whether regular or special, called by the chairman.

Mr. CAHAN: I move, seconded by Mr. Ryckman;

That subsection 2 of section 11 be amended by adding thereto the following words:

Any right of appeal from decisions of the board of customs shall continue as provided by the Customs Act.

Mr. BENNETT: I think that makes it clear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is notwithstanding that this statute will repeal that part of the act?

Mr. BENNETT: It only repeals section 3.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: That covers it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend is such an eminent lawyer that I accept his opinion without question.

Amendment (Mr. Cahan) agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 12 and 14 inclusive agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS

WORLD DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE, 1932

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move that you do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of ways and means. My hon. friend from Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) had advised me that on such a motion she proposed to make some observations, and I arranged with her accordingly. So I assume before you leave the chair she will make those observations.

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak very briefly about the approaching world disarmament conference to be held in Geneva in February 1932. It is a conference long anticipated and hoped for, and I felt while the house was in session we should have some discussion upon it.

I think the importance of this disarmament conference can scarcely be exaggerated. Lord Robert Cecil, who has given such wonderful devotion to the cause of disarmament, and is probably the greatest authority in the world on it, spoke of the conference as follows:

> It is one of those crucial events in the history of the world that must either succeed or fail.

I feel that it is the most important thing that we have faced in a long time. If it fails, the faith of people in the sanctity of international agreements will be blasted; and I think it is not too much to say that the future of the League of Nations hangs upon the success of this conference.

At the close of the world war, the allies, as they were then called—our group of nations—disarmed Germany and her associates, and it was distinctly understood that having done that the allies would proceed to disarm themselves. There is no doubt about it that in the covenant of the league and in the peace treaty this was distinctly stated, and though now we have gone a long time past the signing of the treaty of Versailles and the setting up of the League of Nations, we have not moved on to do what we then said we would do. I will put on Hansard the preamble of the covenant of the league, because in it is pointed out clearly our international obligation in regard to disarmament, and if we have respect for treaty obligations we can do nothing but carry out the solemn promises we then made. This is the preamble:

> The high contracting parties in order to promote international cooperation and to achieve international peace and security by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war, by the prescription of open, just and honourable relations between nations, by the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among governments, and by the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized peoples with one another, agree to this covenant of the League of Nations.

Article 8 of the covenant lays down very clearly that the members of the league shall formulate disarmament plans. I will read the first paragraph:

> The members of the league recognize that the maintenance of peace requires the reduction of national armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety and the enforcement by common action of international obligations.

While I am not going to deal with the particular subject of increased armament; armaments to-day are greater than they were when this clause was written. It is also true that in part V of the peace treaty we sacredly promise, if we regard our promise as sacred, to disarm ourselves when we had disarmed our enemies. The opening clause of part V of the treaty of Versailles reads:

> In order to render possible the initiation of a general limitation of the armaments of all nations, Germany undertakes strictly to observe the military, naval and air clauses. . . .

And those clauses follow. In June of 1919 Mr. Clémenceau gave the following assurance to Germany:

> The allied and associated powers wish to make clear that their requirements in regard to German armaments were not made solely with the object of rendering it impossible to resume her policy of military aggression. They are also the first step towards the reduction and limitation of armaments, which they seek to bring about as one of the most fruitful preventatives of war, and which it will be one of the first duties of the League of Nations to promote.

Then there is the Kellogg pact as well. I need not give the exact wording, but in that pact we say we will never again use war as an instrument of national policy, and surely that means we are going to disarm. By all those promises we have made by international agreement we solemnly promise again and again to disarm. Not only that, but the council, the assemblies and the different committees of the League of Nations have, from year to year since 1919, dealt with disarmament, but still we are more heavily armed throughout the world than we were at that time.

I am not going to take time to go into the rather long drawn out and discouraging work of the preparatory disarmament commission which was set up by the League of Nations in 1925, and on which were representatives of the United States, Turkey and Russia. That commission finally made its report last winter—December, 1930—and they are ready now to submit a draft convention to the world disarmament conference which, as I have said, will meet in Geneva in February of 1932.

While we may not be as happy as we should like to be over the draft convention I think we may take the word of those who know most about it that the draft convention is such that any degree of disarmament can be written into it. Lord Robert Cecil, in commenting upon it, just at the conclusion of the deliberations of the commission, said:

> The conclusion to be derived from these weeks of strenuous work is that disarmament is a perfectly practicable policy. The issue now passes from the hands of the commission to those of the public. Do they or do they not desire that this policy shall be adopted? It only remains for an enlightened public opinion to insist that this greatest of all reforms shall be carried out.

Right Hon. Arthur Henderson, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Great Britain, speaking of disarmament in Queen's Hall on February 9 of this year, said almost the same thing:

> The figures will depend upon the public opinion of the world. At the disarmament conference the governments will do what the peoples want. If the peoples want disarmament, they can have it. If they will exert their will they can compel results.

It is certain that the public opinion of the world is ahead of the action that has been taken in regard to disarmament, and I think it is also ahead of the opinion of the governments of the world in that regard. Right Hon. Arthur Henderson expressed that thought, when he gave what is called the Burge lecture, printed by the Oxford Press, in these words:

> I do not fear what the peoples will say and think about us if we can but reach a disarmament agreement. . . . My doubts, my fears, are these: That the peoples will not understand the chance that lies before them; that they will not grasp the opportunity they have been given to fulfil the purpose which they all desire; that they will not make the governments understand that their delegations to the conference cannot be too bold, that they cannot go too far to suit their nations.

There is no doubt at all that Great Britain is most anxious, as I think every other thinking nation is anxious, that there may be real results from the conference to be held next February. Lord Robert Cecil says he would like to see a great many nations take a stand for a twenty-five per cent cut all round. I do not know enough about it to know whether that is enough to start, but I do feel that Lord Robert Cecil knows a great deal about it. However, we do know that if we can reduce by a substantial amount the expenditures of the world in armaments it will be a gain for everyone and we will have relatively as much security as we have now, even for those who depend upon armaments for security.

There are very many ways in which one could show how earnest the people of Great Britain are in connection with this subject. Next Saturday a great mass meeting on disarmament is being held in one of the great London halls, and that meeting is to be addressed by the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, by Mr. Stanley Baldwin and by Mr. Lloyd George. So you see they are not making it a party question there, and they are not leaving it just to the rank and file of the people. The first meeting they had in connection with disarmament was addressed by Right Hon. Arthur Henderson, from whose words I quoted a moment ago. This is the second large London meeting, and it is to be addressed by the three great leaders in the British House of Commons. I feel they are doing more than we have done here, but surely we can do no less than to say clearly and publicly—and I think our leading men should be careful to say it publicly—that we want to do our share in bringing about disarmament. These speeches to be made next Saturday will be recorded on sound films, and we will see and hear these three gentlemen in our own theatres very shortly.

I shall take only a very short time, because I hope some other hon. member will want to say something in connection with this matter. Lord Robert Cecil has written a most timely article in Time and Tide of April 25, 1931. He goes on to outline the possibilities of what might happen, and says that it will be a catastrophe if success does not come out of it. He says the conference might break up without reaching any agreement, which seems unlikely, but he goes on to say that when we think of 1914 we must remember that anything may happen. So he does not want to take any chances. In the second place, he says, the conference may result in a mere codification of armaments at their present level, and that means failure. He goes on to say that because of our treaty obligations—if we have respect for those obligations—there is absolutely no way out; we must disarm. We hear a great deal of talk about scraps of paper in this country, and many references to the fact that Germany did not respect her treaties. Up to the present we have not respected our treaties with her, and it is time we began doing in relation to disarmament. I do not want to quote a great deal from this article, because it would take too long, but supposing the conference does fail; only one thing can happen, and that is a race in armaments.

In commenting upon this possibility Lord Cecil says:

It is, then, no exaggeration to say that the most probable political consequences of an unsuccessful disarmament conference next year are that Europe will fall into two armed forces, and that the competition in armaments will revive; competition not merely between individual states, but, what is far worse, between two powerful groups of states manoeuvring for superiority.

Then may I give just one last quotation from Lord Cecil, because I do feel that possibly no one has done as much as he. He said:

Succeed we must. The alternative is too sinister for any man or woman of good sense and good will to contemplate. And there is a way to succeed. Let those who share the convictions which I have expressed refuse to be sidetracked by expert objections about the technical value of this particular form of armament or that, and concentrate upon the one form of reduction of armaments which the ordinary citizen can understand and which comes within the scope of every parliament. Let them demand a definite cut in the total military expenditure of the powers represented at the conference. I believe that it is perfectly reasonable and possible—with dogged perseverance—to achieve at the 1932 conference an all-round reduction of 25 per cent in the military budgets of those countries which did not have reductions imposed upon them by the treaties. This would be a first step—but a considerable step—towards that international equality which all serious students of European affairs foresee and accept.

Should this conference not succeed it would not be possible to go on increasing armaments over the world and still keep Germany and her allies disarmed to the degree imposed by the treaty. That would be neither possible nor right. If we are not going to keep our word then we should not bind Germany to an agreement which she made on the understanding that we would .

I believe much is being done in Canada and throughout the world at the present moment to arouse public opinion upon this question and focus that opinion upon the governments of the different countries. But all the good work of the people will come to naught if a delegation is sent to this conference which is not of the very highest calibre obtainable, not equipped to take part in a very difficult task. I think the Prime Minister and the government are serious on this subject and I feel sure they will want to send a delegation which will prove to be of real assistance in this work. In my opinion that delegation need not be made up of members of the government, nor even of members of this House of Commons. The Prime Minister and the government may not agree with me, but that is my opinion. The calibre of these delegates is very important. They need to be not only well equipped mentally but they should believe in disarmament by international agreement and be able to see the necessity of immediate action. If this matter goes another ten years, it will be ten years too late. A delegation could be sent from Canada composed of people who have made a detailed study of this subject. I have in mind four eminent gentlemen, whom I would like to name as the Canadian delegation. As this matter is not in any sense a party matter it would be much better if our delegation were not made up of members of one political party. I repeat, that would not matter so much, but the delegates should believe in disarmament by international agreement. They should not be military experts, because to send military experts would be the most futile thing to do.

I hope some other hon. member of the house will feel inclined to discuss this matter. We have talked a great deal about matters not so important, and I feel that as private individuals and as members of the house we should do everything we can to make this conference a success. On the power of the individual, I would like to quote some wise words of Sir Robert Borden, recently written:

Who are responsible for the world's future peace? Who, if not you and I and every individual unit in each nation? The sum of individual influences constitutes the public opinion of the nation; the public opinion of each nation enters into that of the world which determines war or peace.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec-East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to associate myself with the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail), and to support the request she has made on behalf of this great cause of disarmament. It is indeed a happy coincidence that she has started this discussion during the very week when a meeting is being held in Albert Hall in London at which the three leaders of the great political parties in England are to speak. Speaking in this house on the resolution to approve the general act for the pacific settlement of international disputes, I called attention to that coming conference on disarmament, and tried to impress the house with the necessity of Canada's being prepared to do her share at that conference. I called attention to the fact that in Great Britain the various parties in the British House of Commons were represented on an imperial defence committee, to arrange the representation to the coming conference and prepare the case for Great Britain.

We are facing many important problems. Unemployment has been referred to in this house from the national viewpoint, but it is an international problem. The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) was kind enough to let me have the report of the International Labour Conference, and I find that the whole time of that conference was occupied in the discussion of international unemployment and the making of an effort not only to find the causes but to apply the remedies. The problems which will be discussed at the international disarmament conference are of the utmost importance. I believe that the attention of this house and of the people of Canada generally has been drawn to the importance of the convention, and if it is not successful I am afraid that the edifice of international peace erected during the past ten years will be shaken to its very foundation.

The great work of preparation has been commenced. The hon. member for Southeast Grey referred to the draft convention which has been accepted and which is to be submitted by the preparatory conference to the various countries concerned. Reading the draft convention I notice that the personnel suggested, and as to which limitations will be made, is to be military in character, including customs officials, police of all kinds, forest guards and so forth. The same applies in connection with the air forces. An attempt will be made to limit the number and the horse-power of aeroplanes to be used in times of war even though machines not complying with these limitations are being used for civil purposes. But perhaps the most important feature is the creation of a permanent disarmament body or commission which will see to it that the various peoples live up to the agreement that will be reached and will submit to the League of Nations instances of any infractions that may take place. Viscount Robert Cecil was a member of that conference, as was Hugh Gibson, United States ambassador to Belgium, who generally represents the United States in international conferences, and Count Bernstorff, the German representative. Each one of them emphasized the necessity of arousing public opinion in the various countries to the importance of the conference. The representatives of the various countries, including the men and women who will represent Canada at the conference, will be in some way the custodians of peace for the Canadian people. They will work for the lives and happiness not only of the present generation, but of generations that are yet unborn. But Mr. Speaker, experts and delegates at conferences cannot save us in spite of ourselves. Public opinion must be behind the movement, the scheme and the conference. Peace after all is to a large extent a process of education. There was a time when kings could make wars with mercenary soldiers, hired troops, but those times are now past. In this democratic world, war cannot be successfully waged without the support of an overwhelming public opinion in the countries engaged therein. A policy of peace is not only an expression of views; it is a state of mind. It is a condition which is created amongst the various masses and classes in a country. Words of peace are needed, but they must be backed by deeds of peace.

I was pleased the other day to read that the American Legion had adopted a resolution in support of this disarmament conference and asked the United States representative to work for its success. They know what war means. I think Canadians generally should not and must not forget the pledges that were given to those who fought during the great war. "Never again" was the rallying cry. The soldiers who fought the war were told that they were fighting to end all wars and that their sacrifices would be made for peace. They fought on account of those pledges, and those pledges must be redeemed even more than those concerning pensions or material indemnities or other things of that kind.

May I add that Canada is perhaps more interested than any other country in the world in the cause of universal peace. We are a new country; we have a great future; there is nothing to block our progress except wars, and we all know that wars in which we would be engaged cannot come on account of anything for which we would be responsible. We would not be the cause of any war, but we are interested in the maintenance of peace by other countries, because we know we would probably have to take part in war if it came. Canada has taken the leadership in the British Empire in accepting arbitration, which has now been accepted by all the members of the British commonwealth of nations. I believe Canada should also take the leadership in this question of general disarmament, and we ought to do our best in order that the men who represent us at the conference shall speak the mind of all Canadians and endeavour to establishd universal peace.

May I in conclusion read the words of a great soldier who is also a great statesman? I refer to General Smuts, who said last year:

> Mankind has, as it were, at one bound and in the short space of ten years, jumped from the old order to the new, across a gulf which may yet prove to be the greatest divide in human history. . . . What has been done can never be undone. One epoch closes in the history of the world and another opens.

I join with the hon. member for Southeast Grey in asking the government to see to it that Canada does her share at that conference so that as a result of its labours this great divide spoken of by General Smuts may be crossed. Let the government appoint suitable representatives, men who believe in peace—because if they think wars are necessary they cannot work for the great cause of peace. Let the government appoint representatives who have the backing of Canada, and we shall all try to support them, to give them a mandate which will be concurred in by the people in the various sections of the country, so that they may go to that conference and speak there the united mind of the Canadian people.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The development of democracy depends upon the maintenance of peace. War is destructive of all democratic forms of government. The declaration that this country desires to maintain peace is not sufficient. It is idle to think that permanent and lasting peace can come in our time merely by our making declarations and speeches. We have passed in the house and elsewhere resolutions in favour of peace; we have become parties to treaties of arbitration, and we have joined with other nations in declaring that so far as we are concerned war is renounced as an instrument of national policy. But all these renunciations, all these declarations, all these resolutions in favour of arbitration and peaceful settlement of dispute, either by recourse to law in world courts or other peaceful means, are useless except to the extent that they influence people's minds to think in terms of peace. If we are to have peace we must have it by cultivating and maintaining the spirit of peace, not the spirit of war. The warlike spirit is not consistent with the maintenance of peace, and the spirit of peace is an attitude of mind that comes from continuous education. It is therefore useful that we should from time to time make declarations so that the youth of the country may see the glories of peace as distinguished from the heroic achievements of war.

No man who reads history, no one who is familiar with the growth of civilization and with the heroic achievements of men who have given their lives on battlefields in every part of the world for high principles and great causes, can fail to realize that their example has inspired generations in days gone by and will continue to inspire noble achievements that are consistent with the courage and enterprise of our races. But in this age we realize that war on any scale is destructive not only of the nations that engage in it but of the world at large. There can be no war of any importance now that does not become general in its effects and influences. There can be no war in these days of scientific achievement in the use of poisonous gases, artillery, tanks and aerial warfare that is not fatal to the very development of civilization itself. We now realize that far from being a virtue war is the negation of all virtues and is destructive of the world's civilization. But in the face of all that has been said, as illustrating the point I desire to make, it will be found that to-day amongst the European nations there are many men under arms; equipment is being provided for war; men are talking in terms of the next great conflict, as though we had not been at the world's Gethsemane.

How are we to bring about the end we have in mind? We must do it, as I have said, by creating the will to peace, which comes from continuous educational effort. I said on one occasion in this city that we were paying a tribute to a great man for what he had done for the cause of peace. It is idle to think that we can ever achieve our end unless we destroy the means by which these wrongs are wrought, and that means disarmament, but disarmament, as was pointed out the other day by Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, cannot be a one-sided thing. Hence it is that the conference to which the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) has referred becomes a matter of transcendent importance to the world at large. It is no longer a question of this nation or that. It is a question of the world itself. It is a question of the maintenance of our institutions, the maintenance of the life of our civilization. If this committee believes, and the public believe, as I am inclined to think they do, that peace can be brought about only by disarmament, it follows that disarmament must be achieved as soon as possible. But a one-sided disarmament is not possible. How is it possible to think in terms of disarmament if one nation has a million soldiers under arms and another has none? How is it possible to have disarmament when one country is in a position to ignite in a second a great conflagration, while another country will be destroyed by that very conflagration? No prairie fire of which we have ever heard could spread like the conflagration of military operations in communities divided only by imaginary lines. That being so, disarmament must be a world-wide state of mind.

This country in the northern half of this continent, this young democracy with its ten millions of people, freed from the horrors of all probability of war within its borders, its shores protected by the application of doctrines of an international character, has very little to disarm. I doubt if a disarmament conference could indicate any point at which we could disarm; for a police force is essential if peace is to be maintained and law and order preserved. The police force must be adequate to the task that is thrust upon it, namely, the preservation of law and order and the security of life and property. These things can be achieved only by an adequate and a disciplined and controlled police force. I do not think it can be said that either now or at any other time since the war we have had in this country more than an adequate police force for the maintenance of law and order and the security of life and property.

If all this be true, the extent to which Canadians can make a real contribution to the cause of disarmament is of course measured by the influence which they may exercise at any international gathering. The extent to which that influence becomes potent is not wholly measured by the number of muskets that it is possible for a country to create and maintain.

Miss MACPHAIL: You would not call that disarmament, would you?

Mr. BENNETT: I say that unfortunately the influence of countries has frequently been measured in that way. I am satisfied that this country, this new democracy, may exercise a real and a potent influence in international councils for the cause of peace. I pointed out this afternoon, as I frequently have in the past, and as I have heard my right hon. friend opposite and the hon. member who has just spoken frequently point out, that this country in international councils exercises an influence and an authority far beyond the extent of its population, its area or its material resources. It does that because it is itself a striking example of how peace may be maintained within one's own borders amongst people having their origins in different races, the one settled originally on the banks of the St. Lawrence, and the other on the shores of Massachusetts; and yet they have been able to fuse into one common sentiment their love of peace and their desire for the growth of democratic institutions. To the extent that our influence has brought peace and prosperity at home among men and women of divers races and creeds and of divers orders in life, to that extent it has increased from day to day amongst the peoples of the world in international councils. The gentleman whom we honoured to-day as president of the League of Nations, coming from Canada in the early history of that organization, has been a potent factor in stimulating public interest in the movement for world peace and in bringing the name of Canada to the forefront amongst those communities whose influence has always been on the side of organized peace. That I think is common ground with us all.

I can only say this to the hon. member for Southeast Grey: That in so far as it may be possible, having regard to the time of year at which this conference is held, this country will worthily discharge every obligation that rests upon it in that regard, and I trust that the representations we will offer will not be unworthy of the great traditions of Canada in her struggle to maintain peace, in her belief in peaceful methods for the settlement of disputes, in her conviction that by recourse to judicial and arbitral methods the differences of peoples having been settled, the differences of nations may also be concluded. With that hope and that inspiration and that conviction this government, when the conference is held, will do its duty by the Canadian people.

NEW WESTMINSTER PENITENTIARY

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I crave the indulgence of the house for a few minutes while I bring to its attention a matter of great importance to the constituency which I have the honour to represent.

I have telegrams and different communications here from New Westminster to-day to the effect that an investigation is to be held into affairs in connection with the penitentiary at New Westminster, principally with respect to some dismissals that occurred in 1928, when Inspector Jackson, now in charge of Kingston penitentiary, was temporarily in charge of the penitentiary at New Westminster. I am informed that the dismissals of two men in particular form the basis of this investigation. I would like to point out that there have been other dismissals, seven I believe, and those seven dismissals took place during the temporary charge of Inspector Jackson. These men had I believe asked for an inquiry, which had not been granted. I had not the honour to represent the New Westminster constituency in this house at the time these dismissals took place, or I would have pressed for an inquiry at that time. These men had given valuable service ranging from ten to over seventeen years, and were dismissed because at the time the regulations governing the penitentiary were, to use that word, violated by those higher up. They were refused an inquiry at that time. I am going to ask the minister now if he will be kind enough to tell me whether an inquiry will be held, and if so I should like such an inquiry to be of the fullest nature possible.

There is a further injustice concerning which many of the men are afraid to speak, namely that of long hours. Those men are working eleven hours at a stretch and are afraid to complain lest their complaints lead to dismissals. If an inquiry is to take place I should like an investigation to be conducted concerning the hours worked. I think however the injustice done to those men who have lost from $1,000 to $2,000 and were unjustly dismissed after serving from ten to twenty years should call for the fullest possible inquiry. I should like the government to be kind enough to make a statement regarding the matter.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): In reply to my hon. friend I shall make a brief statement. No inquiry has been instituted. My hon. friend is dealing with a newspaper rumour which was telegraphed to Ottawa yesterday or the day before.

Mr. REID: I received the telegram to-day.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And the contradiction was published to-day. No commission has been appointed. I have heard of some of the complaints about which my hon. friend has just spoken, and would say that these matters are being considered by the department.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of ways and means, Mr. MacDonald (South Cape Breton) in the chair.

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

Mr. BENNETT: Customs tariff—we shall deal with the administrative sections.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is it my right hon. friend's intention to move the resolutions?

Mr. BENNETT: I thought so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend will formally move the resolutions?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I thought that to-night I would deal with the customs tariff resolutions, considering first the administrative sections.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If it is my right hon. friend's intention to consider the customs tariff resolutions I should like to say a few words now; probably it will save some time later. My remarks will be directed to the views entertained by hon. members on this side of the house in regard to the consideration at this time of the proposed extensive changes in the customs tariff. On behalf of the opposition I should like to protest most strenuously upon being asked at this stage of the session to consider the vast changes proposed by the budget in the customs tariff of Canada. I take no exception to the government bringing in any changes it wishes to make in the tariff but I do submit in the public interest, unless those changes be other than nominal, or very limited in character, they should not have been brought in at this session of parliament, which was so late in meeting, and where there was no possibility of adequate discussion taking place until midsummer.

My right hon. friend has frequently stated that this is his first year in office. From the point of view of the general public I believe he has made the very serious mistake of trying to do in one year more than other ministries have sought to do not only in the life-time of one parliament but in that of several parliaments. He has not been satisfied with making changes in the tariff in a manner which he could himself explain, but he has sought to alter the complete tariff schedules of the country in a way which absolutely defies comprehension. If hon. members wish to applaud that statement I wish they would do so; however, that is the fact. Regarding the special session as part of the present one, the Prime Minister has sought in his first year in office to alter at least two-thirds—I think I am right when I say two-thirds—of the total tariff items of this country.

Mr. BENNETT: That is a slight exaggeration.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would one-half be any nearer?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister states that a half would be within the mark.

Mr. BENNETT: Nearer the mark.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He is seeking to alter half the customs tariff items at a session of parliament which comes within his first year of office, and to make those extensive changes in a way which renders it wholly impossible for the House of Commons adequately to discuss them or for that matter, to discuss them at all. That is the exception I take to the action of my right hon. friend at this session and at the special session.

Hon. members on this side of the house feel that at the special session he should not have introduced any tariff changes. At the special session he had no mandate to revise the tariff, but he took advantage of the fact that an Imperial conference was being held in London to end discussion in a manner which to all intents and purposes amounted to closure, and as a result the tariff changes then proposed were scarcely discussed at all. He promised at that time that we should have ample opportunity at this session to consider the effect of the changes then put into effect, but that opportunity has not yet come, although we have reached the 8th day of July. We have not yet had an opportunity to consider any of the changes involved in the resolutions which at the moment are before the committee. I have no doubt my right hon. friend will say that we have been discussing the tariff bill and one or two other measures, but such comment would be entirely beside the point. My right hon. friend has the direction of the business of government, and had he wished to be fair to the interests concerned and to the people of Canada at large he would have done one of two things: either brought down his budget early in the session and afforded ample opportunity for discussion throughout the early weeks of the session, or waited until next year. Had he taken the latter course he would have had plenty of time to prepare his tariff changes and submit them at the beginning of a new session. Obviously in mid-summer, having regard to conditions prevailing in the country and to the temperature of this chamber, it will not be possible for hon. members to devote any considerable length of time to an intelligent discussion of the proposed changes.

First of all, if my right hon. friend intended to make such extensive changes he should have called the session at an earlier day; secondly, he should have brought down his budget earlier in the session, and thirdly, he should have given us a chance to discuss these resolutions at a time much earlier than the present. That is the first protest which I wish to make most emphatically.

I desire next to protest with equal emphasis at my right hon. friend asking this parliament to make extensive tariff changes without any preliminary investigation whatever with respect to their significance. This action on his part constitutes a departure from the practice in Canada for years past under either Liberal or Conservative administrations. For many years where a government contemplated other than nominal changes the ministry of the day appointed a committee of the cabinet to go through the country and conduct what were known as tariff hearings. Interested parties were allowed to appear before the ministers and make their representations with respect to what were considered by them to be necessary changes, and those opposed to such changes were given an opportunity to present their side of the question. In other words before any important changes in tariff schedules were made all parties were heard by a committee of the cabinet of the day. It was found that to send a committee of cabinet ministers through the country was not the most satisfactory way of dealing with the situation, and in the day of Sir Robert Borden, the then Minister of Finance, Sir Thomas White, announced to the house that a tariff commission would be appointed for the purpose of hearing representations as to increases or decreases in tariff, to give all parties interested an opportunity of being heard before—not after—the changes were made. That board was not created formally by Sir Thomas White, the then Minister of Finance, he giving as an excuse that matters were running along so satisfactorily at the time that there was no necessity for any tariff changes of a material character, and hence no need for haste in the appointment of the board. The war intervened, and of course that was another reason why the board then proposed was not appointed.

When the Liberal administration came into office in 1921 a few changes were made in the first few years. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) reminds me that after Sir Robert Borden had resigned and Mr. Meighen was at the head of affairs, Sir Henry Drayton, as Minister of Finance, went through the country holding tariff hearings, with a view to the revisions that the government proposed to make later on. Every person was entitled to appear before him, and those who had opposing views were invited to express them. Then Mr. Fielding became Minister of Finance. I need not remind hon. members of the wide experience that Mr. Fielding had as Minister of Finance, and what that experience was worth to Canada; nor need I remind my right hon. friend of the great care which Mr. Fielding exercised before he made a single tariff change to see to it that all the parties who might be materially affected were given a hearing before himself personally or before officers of his department who were in immediate touch with him.

When far-reaching changes were proposed, such as the changes in the tariff on the implements of production and later with respect to motor vehicles and the like, the government of the day gave the fullest opportunity to the parties affected by those changes to be heard, and their views were fully known to the ministry as a whole and through the ministry expressed to parliament before those changes in the tariff actually were made.

Later the government appointed an advisory tariff board for the purpose of hearing the representations of those likely to be affected by the proposed tariff changes. It was the policy of the government that when an application was received with respect to an increase or decrease of the tariff, or when the ministry had in mind, for reasons of policy, making changes in the tariff, to refer the matter in the first instance to the tariff board. Then, the tariff board announced its hearings, which were held in public, and the parties in interest were allowed to appear and make their representations. Subsequently the board made its report to the minister, so that he had before him the point of view of all parties before he came into the house to present his proposed tariff changes.

The so-called Dunning budget, which went further in the matter of tariff changes than any other changes proposed by the late government, was not the result of a few hours or a few weeks study; it was the result of careful investigation that had gone on for a period of two or three years.

Mr. RYERSON: An election budget.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It was not an election budget at all. At the time the Dunning budget was being prepared the intention was that the government of the day would be represented at the Imperial conference and that the election would not take place until a year after that time. But circumstances alter cases, and it so happened that the election came, as hon. gentlemen know, somewhat sooner than otherwise would have been the case. But the tariff board had been considering very carefully for a period of between two and three years the changes that were subsequently embodied in the Dunning budget.

What is the position with respect to the tariff changes that the Minister of Finance is now asking the house to consider? None of these changes has been considered by anyone except the Prime Minister himself—even if he has given them consideration. I do not believe he has had time to give them consideration. They are the most drastic tariff changes that have ever been proposed in parliament. Whether considered from the point of view of the number of articles that are being changed or in relation to the extent to which the tariff rates themselves are increased, I think my right hon. friend has, from the point of view of the business interests of the country, done the most extraordinary thing that has ever been done by any minister of the crown. He has suddenly launched upon parliament vast changes, affecting half of the tariff structure, with the result that there is not a manufacturer, there is not a consumer, there is not a workingman who has any real sense of security at the moment with respect to the position of industry in this country. He has been making changes in such a precipitate manner that almost every few days he has had by order in council to cancel or amend those changes. In addition to that he has given to himself and his colleagues power to alter the tariff by order in council, so that what is done one day by parliament is altered the next day by the cabinet. I say that nothing of the kind has ever happened in the history of Canada before, and I cannot express too strongly the sense of injustice which I believe the country is labouring under through having its whole financial and commercial structure to some extent disarranged if not temporarily shattered, as a consequence of the violent changes in the tariff which my right hon. friend has made.

May I point out this further fact, that while under previous governments there was some opportunity for parties to be heard, the Prime Minister himself as a part of his own method of dealing with these matters has swept away entirely any possible consideration in advance of the changes he is proposing, vast as they are. It must be recalled that even the changes proposed in the resolutions we are considering have already been made and that the new rates of duty promised by them have been in force for some time. The Prime Minister abolished entirely the tariff board that was in existence when he came into office.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend says, "hear, hear." But, as I pointed out the other day, if he wanted any kind of investigation even by his own officers, there was a vacancy in the chairmanship of the board and he could have retired the other two members, and reconstituted the board to suit himself. To that board he might have referred the changes he was about to make, and the board might have advertised the fact that certain matters of the tariff were under consideration and given parties materially affected an opportunity to be heard. But my right hon. friend did not do that. He swept the board out of existence, substituting nothing for it. He did not even give his own colleagues an opportunity of considering what he was doing, but by a stroke of the pen he gave instructions as to how the tariff was to be increased and changed, and then presented it to parliament to be enacted within two weeks. That was at the special session last September.

This session he brings in a bill which he calls a bill to create a tariff board, but he takes care to see that all these tariff changes now being proposed, which go to make up half the total tariff, are made before that board is called into existence. So the effect of these changes is not going to be known at all until it is felt in the actual operation of the tariff itself.

May I say this to hon. members who think this kind of thing is helping the manufacturer, that in manufacturing one man's finished product is another man's raw material, and if you are going to permit tariff changes to be made in manufactured articles without any investigation in the first instance, you are operating in the dark as to the effect on manufacturing generally throughout the country. I think already my right hon. friend has heard from a good many interests as to the effect his tariff is going to have on their own and other manufacturing interests as a result of lack of careful and thoughtful consideration being given to changes before they were made.

But there is a point I must stress even more strongly in regard to the changes my right hon. friend is making to-day, and that is the effect of what he announced in this house to-day and which has become apparent to the country for the first time—that the tariff board he is now creating, the one we have been discussing for the last two or three days, is not to be a tariff board before which interests affected by these tariff changes are to be allowed to appear and be heard; it is a tariff board which in its operations will be confined just to those particular things which he himself refers to it. In other words, these changes are not only to be made in the manner they are now being made, without any preliminary investigation whatever, but after they have been made, no matter how aggrieved the parties may be, whether they be manufacturers, workmen, consumers, agriculturists—in a word, whether they be engaged in mining, lumbering, fishing and agriculture, or in any branches of the manufacturing industry, unless it suits the will, the wish, the caprice of my right hon. friend there can be no investigation whatever into the effects of these tariff changes. That is entirely wrong, and I do not think it can be defended on any ground whatever. I want to protest in the strongest possible way against the tariff being changed in this ruthless fashion, and at the same time against the lack of opportunity for redress being afforded to the parties themselves once the changes are made.

I know what my right hon. friend has in mind; he has said, "I am going to have a tariff policy which will prevent any commodities coming into this country which can be produced or manufactured in Canada, and I am going to put my tariff up to such an extent as to make that effective."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hon. gentlemen opposite say "hear, hear", so there is no dispute about it. That means, as far as international trade is concerned, that it is to be cut off completely so long as there is a possibility of anything being manufactured or produced in this country. I do not believe the people of Canada have any conception of what my right hon. friend is seeking to do. I have done him the justice all along of saying I thought he had in his own mind a pretty clear conception, but I doubted very much if his own followers had an idea of what he intends to do. He thinks his particular policy is going to work out for the good of the country. I have given him credit for sincerity in believing that making Canada into an economic unit will be of great service to the country. But before any such policy is put into force there should be afforded to this parliament the most ample opportunity for debate and discussion. I am perfectly sure that if we had an opportunity to discuss this policy on its merits many hon. gentlemen opposite who to-day applaud the Prime Minister for what they believe he is doing in such heroic fashion would be the first to ask him to move a little more slowly.

May I say that the changes my right hon. friend is making to-day are revolutionary in character. I think I am right in saying that changes with respect to economic matters, whether they affect prices, wages or the development of industry, should be along the line of evolution rather than of revolution. You cannot rip and tear up an existing system in a day or in a year without bringing about very serious consequences.

Mr. GOTT: You did it before.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish my hon. friend would allow me to speak; I am trying to make a dispassionate appeal to the committee. If my hon. friend had a little more experience in public life perhaps he would not be so rude. The country is entitled to know what the Prime Minister is seeking to do. I think his own followers are also entitled to know, but I say honestly that I do not believe they know even yet. I say this in no offensive way; what I am saying now is being said in the presence of the Prime Minister himself, and if it is untrue I hope when he replies he will make it perfectly clear that it is not correct.

I repeat, the policy of the Prime Minister is so to restrict trade that commodities from other countries will not be permitted to come into Canada if they can be produced or manufactured here. That policy is based on a conviction in the mind of my right hon. friend that trade must take place only as the result of some absolute advantage in production which one country possesses to the exclusion of another. I believe he is entirely wrong. Trade is based on no such doctrine. Trade is based on the doctrine of relative advantage, arising out of comparative costs of production. Countries have certain special advantages over other countries in the matter of production, and they devote their capital and labour more exclusively to the things in which they have that advantage rather than to those other things in which they are not so fortunate. They bring into their country even some things which they could produce or manufacture but which they could not begin to produce or manufacture at the cost at which they can be produced elsewhere. To make a simple illustration, if an individual has $100,000 to invest he might invest it in something which has a natural advantage in his own country in the matter of production or manufacture, and he would as a consequence be more or less sure of a return on his money. On the other hand he might put that $100,000 into something that has no special advantage, and probably he would get a very small return or none at all. International trade is nothing more than the result of that kind of thing on a vast scale. Production and manufacturing in a nation is the result of investment going into those particular fields in which special advantages are possessed, so that when trade is carried on internationally and there is more produced in any country than can be consumed there, the surplus is sent abroad in exchange for surplus products of other countries and the things which cannot be produced in that particular country under the same natural advantage.

My right hon. friend's policy is depriving the country of all the great advantages that come from extended international trade, and that despite the fact that for years past the policies of governments have been so to develop the national economic life of Canada as to make possible a vast international trade. Large expenditures have been made by this parliament on our railways and steamships, whereby travel and trade are expanded to all parts of the world. There has been a policy in the Department of Trade and Commerce under which agents are sent to different countries. Later there has been a development in the matter of opening legations to assist in the discussion of international problems, and so on. The whole development of communication between different parts of the empire has been with a view to expanding trade within the empire and beyond its borders. To-day we have the projected development of the St. Lawrence waterway, not in relation to a purely national trade confined to Canada alone but in relation to a great international trade with other countries.

My right hon. friend's policies are absolutely defeating the expansion of Canadian trade, and bringing about a crippling and restriction of trade in a manner that will be most serious so far as the future development of the trade and industry of the country is concerned.

I see it is eleven o'clock. I should like to say a few words on this matter when we resume to-morrow.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, July 9, 1931.

The house met at three o'clock.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

*PURCHASE OF LABRADOR

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont):

Since January 1, 1931, have any negotiations been undertaken directly or indirectly with the government of Newfoundland for the transfer or sale of Labrador from the Dominion of Newfoundland to the Dominion of Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: The question can be answered only in the way that conversations have taken place, but no negotiations have been entered upon.

*ACTING MINISTER OF MARINE

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Who was the minister or the acting minister in charge of the Department of Marine on October 4 and 6, 1930?

2. Was the minister in Ottawa on those dates?

Mr. DURANLEAU: As regards the first question, I was myself in charge of the Department of Marine on the two dates mentioned, October 4 and 6 of last year. As to the second question, whether I was in Ottawa or elsewhere on those dates, the 4th and 6th October were Saturday and Monday, respectively. I cannot say exactly whether I was in Ottawa or Montreal. Probably I was in Montreal on the Saturday, because as a rule I go there on Saturdays to attend to business. On the 6th October I think I was in Ottawa, but I am not sure as I have no record of my movements on that date.

*Mr. POULIOT:

1. On what date did the Minister of Marine leave Ottawa for the west last fall?
2. On what date did he return to the capital?
3. Was an acting minister appointed during his absence?
4. If so, who?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I left for the west on the 1st November and came back to Ottawa on the 18th. Nobody was appointed acting minister during my absence.

ACTING MINISTER OF RAILWAYS

Mr. POULIOT:

Who was the minister or the acting minister in charge of the Department of Railways and Canals on October 4, 1930?

Mr. MANION: The Acting Prime Minister.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—CARRIAGE OF MAILS

Mr. PECK:

1. Are the contracts between the government and the Canadian National Railway, for the carriage of mail, expressed in writing?
2. Are such contracts for a definite time or terminable by notice?
3. If terminable by notice, what is length of time required?
4. What were the terms of the latest contract for the carriage of the morning mails between Peterborough and Lakefield?
5. Was notice given by the railway of intention not to carry such mail after the twenty-seventh June last?
6. If so, when and to whom was such notice given?
7. Was the railway justified in discontinuing such service?

Mr. CAHAN:

1, 2, 3 and 4. No. The Railway Act provides that all railways must carry mails when required by the government.

5 and 6. No specific notification other than the railway time table indicating the withdrawal of these trains from service effective from the 27th of June, 1931.

7. The railway authorities believe a reduction in service to have been justified by the light traffic offering. There is still a daily mixed service between Peterborough and Lakefield and, in addition, the railway has made arrangements with a bus line operating between these two points at regular intervals daily to honour through-tickets from Toronto.

As required by the Railway Act, notice of the proposed change in service was filed with the Board of Railway Commissioners, and no exception taken.

CANADIAN HISTORY OF THE GREAT WAR

Mr. SPENCER:

Referring to order in council dated May 27, 1921, P.C. 1652, and to statements in Hansard, page 3077:

1. When will other volumes of the official History of Canada's part in the Great war be ready for publication?
2. How many other volumes will be published?
3. To whom is the task of writing the history given in each case?
4. As it is now ten years since the above order in council was passed authorizing the history to be written, how much of said history is now actually written other than the history of medical services, and when is it anticipated any other volumes will be issued?

Mr. SUTHERLAND:

1. No date can be given at present.
2. Not known.
3. The compilation and publication of the history is included in the duties of the historical section, general staff.
4. In addition to the heavy preliminary work of collection, classification and co-ordination of relative documents and material, which is well advanced, the following progress has been made:—

(I) the plan for all the general volumes has been laid out;

(II) the material for four of them has been selected and arranged;

(III) 104 detailed maps of the operations, required for illustration, showing units down to squadrons, batteries and companies, have been compiled from original documents;

(IV) the draft text of approximately one quarter of these four volumes has been written.

ALBERTA LAND SALE

Mr. SPENCER:

1. With regard to fraction of the N.W. quarter of section 20, township 54, range 2, west of the 4th meridian, did Mr. A. A. Hoath, Lea Park, Alberta, offer by letter to purchase the above land on the 14th November, 1911?
2. If so, what was the action taken by the department?

Mr. MURPHY:

1. No such application on Ottawa file. Agency file is now with province.
2. This fractional area was disposed of under the regulations in that behalf to the owner of the adjoining land.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—RIVIERE DU LOUP STATION

Mr. POULIOT:

Is the sum of $15,000 mentioned in reference No. 313 and included this year in the budget of the Canadian National Railways to repair the Riviere du Loup station, sufficient to cover the cost of renewing the roof and sewer system, of building a cellar and of solidifying the foundations and walls of the actual railway station at Riviere du Loup?

Mr. MANION:

The sum mentioned is expected to cover the cost of repairs and improvements sufficient to meet objections raised by the provincial health authorities and others with respect to Rivière du Loup station arrangements.

1. How many persons have applied for pensions to the board of pension commissioners during the last twelve months?
2. How many were successful?
3. What are their names and the pension received in each case?

THREE RIVERS HARBOUR

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine) moved: That the house go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to authorize a loan to the Three Rivers harbour commissioners not exceeding $700,000 for the construction of terminal facilities, upon approval by the governor in council of detailed plans, specification and estimates for such works, and the deposit of the debentures of the corporation to cover said loan.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the Prime Minister inform the house when we may expect whatever legislation is necessary in order to meet the needs of the unemployed? The session is now far advanced. It seems as if we might have something of that kind in the near future.

[Mr. Murphy.]

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I explained the other day it is proposed to introduce legislation of the character I then mentioned when we have practically disposed of the business of the house.

PRIVILEGE—MR. FERLAND

DISMISSAL OF CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAY EMPLOYEES AT JOLIETTE

Mr. C. E. FERLAND (Joliette) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. When the House met yesterday, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion), who seems to be more affected than any one else by the stifling heat which we are experiencing these days, forgot himself to the extent of using language, in referring to me, which I can only describe as improper. The hon. Minister of Railways asserted that at a public meeting held in Joliette, on July 1, last, I had made misstatements. He based his assertions on a report published in "L'Etoile du Nord" of Joliette, a well-meaning newspaper, whose report, however, is not complete and accurate on certain points. May I, Sir, correct the statement made by the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion). At that meeting held on July 1, I first expressed my disappointment to the people of Joliette as regards the decision taken by the management of the Canadian National Railways in dismissing 46 employees working in the railway shops at Joliette, 40 of whom were employed in the car-repair department, the other 6 belonged to the locomotive shop. I stated that this decision was arbitrary, unjust and illegal. It is unjust because, in this same section of the central division, when the Canadian National Railway's management found it necessary to reduce their staff in other localities they did so in a ratio of 10 to 20 per cent, while in Joliette, a reduction of two thirds was effected in the car-repair shops. I also stated that this decision was illegal, because it was carried out in violation of an existing contract between the Canadian National Railway and the city of Joliette, definitely binding the former, a contract which Sir Henry Thornton, President of the Canadian National Railway deemed it his duty to acknowledge and fulfil when previously a delegation made up of the members of the Chamber of Commerce and the city council of Joliette discussed the matter with him. Finally, I stated that on a question of vital importance and national interest to the town of Joliette, I thought that it behooved the hon. Minister of Railways to intervene when a request was made to him in order to prevent an injustice being perpetrated or a contract violated. I then publicly stated, that when I heard of the decision taken by the Canadian National Railways, I immediately communicated with the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals who to my great amazement, answered by letter that this matter came entirely under the Canadian National Railways management and that I should acknowledge with him that it would be useless for a delegation from Joliette to come to Ottawa.

In order to well establish the facts concerning the blame which I attach to the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion)—not with reference to his receiving a delegation, nor to having closed the door on a delegation which had arrived in Ottawa, but as regards his attitude on that occasion—I shall read the letter which I sent to the hon. Minister and his answer. I contend that this answer is evidence of his refusal to arbitrate in the matter and to listen to our grievances, and, even more, it is a declaration to the effect that it would serve no purpose for a delegation to come to Ottawa.

My letter is dated June 26, last and reads as follows:

(Text)
Dear Mr. Manion:

You will please find enclosed a telegram which I received this morning from Mr. Hector Mainville of Joliette, regarding the Canadian National Railway's decision to lay off forty men out of sixty men now employed in car department at Joliette, Quebec.

May I venture to say that the above decision is in violation of the terms of an existing contract which obliges the Canadian National Railways to maintain in permanence at Joliette (one of its divisional points) not less than fifty men in that car department, according to the interpretation of Canadian National Railways officials?

I wish you would kindly investigate and see that no unlawful act or injustice is done.

With my best regards, I remain, sir,

Yours truly,

Charles E. Ferland.

The telegram which I enclosed, and which was addressed to myself in Ottawa, reads as follows:

Officially decided by Canadian National officials that effective July first forty men out of sixty will be laid off in car department whereas at other points in this district reduction only amounts from ten to twenty per cent. Conditions most disastrous and delegation wants to meet you at your office soon as possible.

Again, on the 29th of June, I received a letter from the Minister of Railways and Canals reading as follows:

Dear Mr. Ferland,—

I have received your communication of the 26th instant, and will pass it on to the railway management for their consideration, as the matter is one entirely in the hands of the officials. You will, therefore, appreciate that the deputation should see the management and that there would really be no use in their coming to Ottawa.

(Translation): This letter, sir, is a vindication of my statement to the people of Joliette so greatly affected by the centralization of affairs in large centres such as Montreal and Quebec, and I think I was perfectly justified in stating—

Mr. SPEAKER (Text): The hon. member has explained his side of the incident fully. The Minister of Railways and Canals explained his side yesterday. The question is now before the house for debate, and I trust that the hon. member will bring his remarks to an end shortly.

Mr. FERLAND (Text): I was just finishing, Mr. Speaker. I was stating that the report contained in the newspaper l'Etoile du Nord was not entirely accurate, and so I have to make an explanation in order that all the facts may be known to the house and to the public.

(Translation): Now sir—

Mr. QUINN (Translation): That is all.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation) —the bitter speech of the hon. Minister of Railways delivered, yesterday, is the more to be regretted in my humble opinion, that my statement is consistent with his own letter. The wording of my statement has, perhaps, been reported with some variation because our local newspapers are not equipped to the point of having stenographers at their disposal, however, it is in keeping with the truth and raises a question of facts and rights which, in my humble opinion, is amenable to this house and the government, because the management of the National Railways is a service which comes under the administration of the affairs of this country.

Mr. MORAND: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Surely the hon. gentleman is not going to be permitted to make a whole political speech on this matter.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Now, sir, I shall also point out that—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Will the hon. member take his seat? As I have already said, the newspaper report was read yesterday by the Minister of Railways and Canals quoting remarks alleged to have been made by the hon. member for Joliette. The minister explained his side, and now the hon.

member for Joliette is explaining his side. The minister pointed out yesterday that the dismissal or retention of employees of the Canadian National Railways was beyond his power to regulate. I trust that the hon. member for Joliette has now given his full explanation and that the house will be able to go on with business. There is no resolution before the house. The hon. member I think has had an ample opportunity to explain his connection with the incident referred to.

Mr. FERLAND (Text): I rise to another question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I shall say only a few words.

(Translation): In the last part of his speech, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals—

Mr. SPEAKER: The question of privilege has been fully discussed.

Mr. FERLAND: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker is on his feet; sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER (Text): The hon. member has said that the statement by the Minister of Railways and Canals was not correct, and he has given his version of the matter. That is all that is necessary to say to the house, and the hon. member is not entitled at this time to argue whether or not the management of the Canadian National Railways is justified in what it did.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Text): The hon. member has said that he has another point he wishes to discuss in reference to the same matter.

Mr. FERLAND (Text): I rise to a question of privilege and say to the house that the last statement in the speech of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is incorrect.

(Translation): The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, made, in the last part of his speech, a statement which calls for a denial. He said:

> I have brought this matter up, Mr. Speaker, because the hon. gentleman has been in the habit—this is not the first time—of making such mis-statements.

I wish to say to the hon. Minister of Railways that it ill becomes him to make off-hand charges which he cannot substantiate. I have made certain speeches in the House, in the course of my short stay in Ottawa, and I have held joint meetings during the last election, in five or six counties, however, never was any body able to point out that I had made mis-statements. In concluding my remarks and in order to be clearly understood, I shall use towards my hon. friend the same language he used in making his charge against me: "I think there is decency and honesty in public life that should be respected even by the hon. Minister of Railways."

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I think I am justified in replying shortly after the lengthy remarks of the hon. member. He says that according to the letters his statement is correct. I shall leave the decision of that point to hon. members who will take the trouble to read those letters. I say that he had no right to make the statement he made to the effect that I refused to see a deputation. I refused no such thing at any time. Neither the hon. member nor anyone else asked me to see a deputation, and for that reason I could not refuse.

In regard to the question of privilege which the hon. member now raises concerning my remarks about his statements at other times, I make the statement that in the past few years in the province of Quebec the hon. gentleman was one of the worst offenders in regard to the supposed Turkish and Egyptian wars.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is a fine example to give.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to refer to the remarks of the Prime Minister in reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), concerning the measure to be introduced by the government dealing with unemployment relief. My right hon. friend said that such a measure would be brought down when the business of the house was disposed of. In making that statement I have no doubt he referred to other business already on the order paper, for certainly the measure for the relief of existing distress is as important as any matter before parliament at the present time. I assume my right hon. friend will in this connection, be introducing some legislation and I hope he will not wait until the last day or two of the session to place upon the order paper the resolution which would necessarily precede a bill to relieve unemployment. Hon. members ought to have a little time to consider any provisions before they are called upon to pronounce their views.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I shall afford the house every opportunity it may desire to discuss such a measure; my right hon. friend may rest assured of that.

TARIFF BOARD

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT, POWERS, DUTIES AND SALARIES

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the third reading of Bill No. 47, to provide for the appointment of a tariff board.

He said: The bill as passed through the committee has been reprinted.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when this bill was introduced and when the Prime Minister made his speech to the house on its second reading, hon. members and the public generally assumed that the tariff board which was being created was one which would hear the representations of parties who might be interested in any tariff changes proposed, or with respect to changes in the tariff which already had been made. I have no doubt they believed that once the tariff board was appointed the parties of their own volition or at least at the instance of the board itself might appear before the board to make representations with respect to proposed or actual changes in the tariff as they might affect different parties, either manufacturers, consumers, labour, those connected with the primary industries or any other class or any individual in the community.

The discussion on the measure however has made perfectly clear that such in fact is not the intention in connection with the proposed tariff board. The powers of the tariff board will of course be exercised in accordance with the provisions of the statute. Whether it will have the right to exercise those powers at all, however, will depend on the terms of the instructions given by the Minister of Finance. Such restrictions mean that so far as the board is concerned, as regards its relation to the public, its usefulness is entirely restricted to such purposes as the Minister of Finance may himself direct. Such conditions are, I believe, wholly at variance with what the public conceives to be the real advantage of a tariff board.

I notice that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) is about to leave the chamber, and if it is convenient I would ask him to remain a moment or two so that I may address a special word to him. As hon. members are aware the Minister of Justice has always had great facility for presenting an argument clearly and forcibly. In 1912 when a previous government brought down a bill for the creation of a tariff commission my hon. friend was sitting with the Liberal opposition, and at that time he presented the Liberal point of view with respect to the measures then before the house. The objections which the present Minister of Justice then urged in connection with that bill are in the main the objections which we are now making to the bill which has been introduced by the government of which he is now a member.

I shall read to hon. members a part of the speech delivered by my hon. friend on February 13, 1912, in connection with the bill respecting a tariff commission which was before the house on that date. I shall refer only to those parts of his speech which bear directly on similar features which appear in the present proposed legislation. In listening to his criticism the house may assume that I am stating the contentions of the Liberal opposition of to-day with respect to the measure now before us. The present Minister of Justice on that occasion spoke as follows. The quotation will be found at page 2940 and subsequent pages of Hansard, Vol. 2, Session 1911-12:

> The board has no power to initiate anything, no power to take a single step without the special instructions of the Minister of Finance or the governor in council. I understood, when the bill was first brought in that the board was an independent and permanent board of inquiry, and would be instituted to make, apart from any special instructions from anybody, the inquiries set out in subsection 1 of section 4. But when we come down to analyze the sections of the bill, we find that the functions of the board are subject to the direction of the minister. They cannot enter upon an inquiry, they cannot make a suggestion, they cannot do any of the things which the bill contemplates they should do, and which the public believe they are to do and which are made the main excuse for the introduction of the bill.

A little further on he said:

> Is it not so that the whole design and scope of the bill is to furnish the finance minister and his party with special information, in disregard of the rights of the house and of the people in general to receive that information? To my mind, the bill would be far less objectionable if these words were eliminated as I have sugested.

Then he proceeded:

> Here is a board of commissioners, a permanent and so-called independent board of commissioners who cannot make a move in gaining the information or facts which the government deems it important to know, which cannot even start an investigation without the positive direction of the minister. And when that investigation is completed, the report must be made to the minister. The matter starts with the minister, and, so far as this clause goes, it ends with the minister.

He continued:

> But where do the members of this house come in; where do the people of the country come in? I am very strongly of the opinion that if this commission is to report, it should report to parliament and not to the minister. It may be beyond the power of members of this house either to get the result of the inquiry or the evidence on which the results are based if the bill is allowed to go in its present form. It may be that a large fund of information will be available to the minister and his friends, but that surely is not the object of the bill.

Then he said:

—but we do object to these facts being elicited by any secret process and only by special directions.

Then after having referred to the superior advantages of the British method of gathering statistics, my hon. friend has this polite reference to the source from which that legislation—and this legislation also—seems to have been inspired—

They—

He was speaking of the way statistics are gathered in Great Britain.

They are collated and published under the authority of the board of trade, the president of which is a member of the cabinet. Why not adopt the British system in preference to this cheap Yankee device?

That was the contemptuous reference made at that time by my hon. friend to similar legislation inspired from the same source. Then a little further on he continued:

What is now proposed is a system modelled in fact upon the United States system. You appoint a permanent board the members of which are not clerks in any sense of the word. They are commissioners with high standing; you have exalted and dignified them, and you are preparing to pay them handsome salaries; you are giving them very wide and high powers; but these men, an independent board appointed for the purpose of acquiring information, cannot move hand or foot until the Minister of Finance beckons to them what to do; and upon getting the word from him as to how they shall proceed, there is no doubt that they will proceed in accordance with his wishes and those of the government of the day.

Finally my hon. friend says:

I want to point out this contingency: Suppose there is a demand on the part of the public to have a certain industry investigated, for instance, the shoe manufacturing industry, and the finance minister does not think it should be investigated. Should not the tariff commission of their own motion, be entitled to go into that question?

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, it is necessary for me to add a word after quoting what the present Minister of Justice said at the time he was expressing his honest convictions of a measure identical in the features to which I have referred with the bill which is now before the house. May I point out that when this bill was being drafted and considered in the cabinet the Prime Minister had sitting at his right hand the present Minister of Justice—the one who had pointed out these limitations, these shortcomings, these restrictions, these faults and these frauds, in a similar measure when brought before this house a good many years ago. So there must have been continuously present to the mind of the Minister of Justice and also to the mind of the Prime Minister all of these aspects of the legislation and their full significance.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it not true, however, that this bill differs from the other one in that the reports of this board must be made to parliament within fifteen days of the opening of parliament?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot say as to that offhand, but that is a wholly immaterial feature for unless the finance minister himself decides that there is something to be investigated, no report will be made, and the only report made will be on those particular things which the Minister of Finance himself asks the board to investigate.

I must say I am amazed, if the Minister of Justice was sincere in the objections he had to that measure in 1912, as I believe he then was, that he should have remained a member of the present administration while the ministry was proposing to bring into this house a measure of the kind. I will not say anything as to what it reflects of the consequence of keeping bad company, or of what the result of a surrender of one's convictions in one direction, may come to mean in other directions as well; but I do not hesitate to say that when my hon. friend expressed himself as he did in 1912 he was speaking his own mind with great freedom, and, I imagine, also with a glad and a clear heart. In criticism of a similar measure, his objections made at that time with so much force and direction are quite as formidable to-day.

I will not go so far at the moment as the present Minister of Justice went at that time, and say that the board should have the right of its own initiative to investigate any question it wishes without, in the first instance, special direction by the Minister of Finance; but I do say that, where parties believe themselves likely to be adversely affected with respect to proposed or actual tariff changes, they should be entitled to a hearing before the board. For that reason, believing that this provision will meet what the public at least conceive to be the first and main advantage of a tariff board where it is instituted for the purpose of protecting the parties that are likely to be affected one way or the other by tariff changes, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Lapointe:

That Bill No. 47 as amended be not now read a third time, but that the same be referred back to the committee of the whole house with instructions that they have power to amend the said bill by making provision that any person feeling himself aggrieved by any existing or proposed tariff revision shall have the right to present his case before the tariff board.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted just one single remark in reply to the speech of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), in which he quoted a speech which I made in this house some twenty years ago in regard to a measure similar in some respects to the measure which has been under discussion now for some days. I am only going to say that my answer to my right hon. friend will be found in the language of John Morley, an outstanding Liberal, afterwards Lord Morley, who on one occasion was questioned in regard to his change of views. He said: "I admit quite candidly that twenty years ago I entertaned many opinions which I do not now entertain, and if anyone can derive any satisfaction from my discarded opinions they are entirely welcome to do so".

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, on this very matter I could refer to a speech still older than the one quoted by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). But I agree with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie); in fact I think if every hon. member of this house examined his conscience he would find that in the course of twenty-five years he has changed his mind in connection with many things. Whether or not he stayed with one party is immaterial, because party allegiance and sincere expressions of opinion are two entirely different things.

I simply wish to point out what seems to me an important aspect of this piece of legislation which has received little attention. It is partly dealt with by the amendment proposed by the right hon. leader of the opposition, and for that reason I will support that amendment, but I do not think it goes far enough. During the course of this debate I have been struck with the repeated assertion of the Prime Minister that the object of this measure is to create a court of law. No one is more qualified than the Prime Minister to define what is a court of law, and of course from a purely legal standpoint it would be ridiculous and impertinent on my part to enter into a discussion with him. But I have given some time during my life to the study of constitutional developments, and if there has been one marked feature in the development of British institutions, representative or judicial, it is the tendency to separate judicial powers from legislative or executive powers. This has been done constantly, and for what purpose? It has been done to enable the citizens, the common people of the country, to have recourse to some body of supposedly impartial men to obtain justice, whether in matters of criminal law, civil law or administrative law. I think it may be stated that the basic principle of the judicial system in British communities to-day is that all courts of law should be available to all citizens of the country in order that justice may be done, provided that the matter referred to the court is within the jurisdiction of that court. Certain matters of law are within the jurisdiction of the superior court, while others come under district or circuit courts. There are other courts of still more limited jurisdiction. Certain types of cases come before the exchequer court, and we also have the various courts of appeal. But I think this is the first instance in the whole history of Canada of the creation of a court to which no citizen of Canada will be able to appeal. This is a court of law put up by the government for its own convenience, to which the only party who can apply is the Minister of Finance. The leader of the opposition suggests that whenever the government plans a change in the tariff this so-called court of law should be open to people who may be interested in opposing that change.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not only at that time but at any time; it should be open to anyone who has a grievance with respect to the tariff.

Mr. BOURASSA: Then I did not quite understand the amendment. May I see it, please?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It goes the length of suggesting that anyone who believes himself aggrieved should have the right to have his grievance heard by this board.

Mr. BOURASSA: The amendment reads:

By making provision that any person feeling himself aggrieved by any existing or proposed tariff provision shall have the right to present his case before the tariff board.

I did not hear the word "existing;" now I am enabled to support the amendment with all my heart. If this is adopted it will broaden the jurisdiction of this board to coincide precisely with what, in my young audacity, I proposed to the parliament of Canada at least twenty-five if not thirty years ago, when I found, to my amazement and disappointment, that, in spite of all professions of faith while in opposition, it was not true that there was a protectionist party and a free trade party, because the free trade party advocated free trade while in opposition but maintained protection while in power. At that time I made the suggestion to the old parliament that since protection was the accepted policy, and probably would remain so for many years to come, we should make at least some attempt to introduce into the management and application of our tariff some degree of efficiency, of scientific findings and of stability, with a sufficient degree of elasticity to permit such changes as might be necessary from year to year or from parliament to parliament to meet the exigencies of the situation. I then pointed out what for many years had been the policy pursued in France. In matters purely political I am not an admirer of the French system, but in matters economic I think there is no modern country that has been ruled more sensibly than the French nation, perhaps because they have been so foolishly ruled in other matters.

In France the situation was this: The politicians, feeling the uncertainty of the situation, with the very frequent changes of government, realized that at least the economic stability of the country should not be disturbed by changes in the composition of the parliament and of the cabinet. The result has been that although they have adopted the principle of protection and have followed it for many years past, they have not gone to extremes. In fact I think it might be said that apart from the short period of about one-half the reign of Napoleon III, after a treaty had been negotiated by Cobden between France and England, France has been the most consistently protective country in Europe. It did not go to the extremes to which Germany went or the extremes to which the United States has gone, or to which we are going now; but they have maintained the principle of protection. In the application of their tariff, however, they have introduced some practices which I think could be fruitfully studied by us and applied to a certain extent.

I have already pointed out the inconvenience of having only two models before us, England and the United States. Conditions in England are so different from conditions here that we cannot copy the economic policy of that country; that goes without saying. For many reasons which I am not going to expound now, I think it equally dangerous to copy as servilely as we have been doing for the last thirty or forty years the policy of the United States. If we do that with the idea that we will reap the same results they have reaped, then we are living and playing in a fool's paradise. We need not imagine that by following servilely the extreme protectionist policy of the United States—and reaping the same evil consequences—we are going to make of Canada a self-sustaining country. If we cherish that idea, then, I repeat, we are living in a fool's paradise: For we shall never make of Canada a cotton-growing country. We shall never make of Canada a coal-producing country, to the same degree as the United States, and supplying all the varieties of coal which are needed in a northern country like Canada. We can never make Canada a country geographically situated and composed like the United States with that enormous Mississippi valley crossing from north to south, which creates a current of trade in all directions. We cannot expect the same geographical conditions in Canada. We shall never be able to create and maintain an internal trade such as exists in the United States, where there is a population of 110,000,000 of consumers. We cannot hope to have such a trade in this country so long as our population remains as small as it is—and it will be comparatively small for many years to come—and scattered over an area larger than that of the country to the south of us.

We need foreign trade and therefore a tariff board like this should consider every question bearing upon trade. It should consider not only the conditions of production of industries; it should consider not only those various matters that are enumerated in the bill, but it should consider also what commercial results are likely to follow from the operations of the tariff on each industry. The board should consider whether by protecting this or that industry we are not hampering this or that trade, or the relations of Canada with this or that country that can produce similar goods at a cheaper cost than we can produce them in Canada—countries with a larger consuming community, enabling their industries to dispose of their surplus products under better and more advantageous conditions. In other words, you cannot view the simple question of industrial production without taking into consideration not only those factors which govern the production of the same articles in other countries, but the whole problem of trade internal and external.

Taking the economic situation as it is, considering the needs and the exigencies of all classes of our population, I say that a board of this nature should be open to all claimants in all the provinces of Canada. The gardeners of Canada should be in a position to come and petition the board. The consumers of the west and the producers of the east, so far as manufactured goods are concerned, or, vice versa, the consumers of the east and the producers of the west, with respect to farm products, should be perfectly free to appeal to this so-called court of law for a hearing, in order that justice might be done. Every class in the community should be free to appear before this body constituted by the government to find out all the facts bearing upon our economic situation. All classes of our population should be as free to appeal to this court of law as the Minister of Finance or the Minister of National Revenue.

It is too late in the history of our institutions for us to countenance the idea that a parliament, which claims to be a democratic body representing the people, which claims to reflect the views of all the people, representing the interests and the exigencies of the country at large, should disguise as a closed court of law of this kind, what as a matter of fact is and ought to remain an administrative body, but an administrative body subject, if you like, to the authority of the government. I have no objection to its being subject to the government, because the government is responsible to parliament and parliament to the people. And when the people find out that they have made a mistake in giving a majority to this party or the other they may change the administration. But pending such changes, I submit that it is contrary to the basic principles of our parliamentary and judicial institutions to create a body which will be under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the minister, a body which will act or remain idle according to the caprice of that minister, shutting its doors to all the interests of Canada. It is from that point of view and solely from that point of view that I object to the bill now before us.

If it was not for the reason I have given, I would entirely support the bill; because, as I have said, over twenty-five years ago I proposed the creation of a tariff board. I suggested it to my good friend, Sir Wilfrid Laurier; and he came very near adopting it, about the same time that he created the railway commission. I said to him: Since you are bound to maintain a tariff, why do you not establish a permanent board which will investigate all tariff questions whenever called upon to do so—a board which will receive requests and counter-requests, proposals and counter-proposals; a board which will give a hearing to all classes and individuals who are interested in the tariff, whether it be to have it raised or lowered. Such a board would reduce to a certain extent the volume of your daily labours and would furnish you with all the elements, if necessary, of a yearly revision of the tariff. You would have figures, statistics and findings, internal and external, from year to year upon which parliament could rely. It could be a court of equity, but above all it should be a court of record, to which all those who wished to appear, to submit their views, would have access. That is what I suggested to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. And if the present government had proposed a measure of that nature I would have supported it.

An hon. MEMBER: Never.

Mr. BOURASSA: I can understand why my hon. friends cannot appreciate my point of view, but I forgive them. For a short while I was myself a party man and I could not believe that a man could have a free mind. However, I freed myself and since that time I have determined to be independent. Of course, I have to make a choice. One cannot clasp one's hands all the time and pray for some extraordinary light to fall from heaven; one must decide on what is at hand. Until now I have not opened my mouth during the whole of this debate, because, being in favour of proper legislation along this line, I have been hoping that something would develop that would enable me to support the bill. But I find the Prime Minister bent upon making of this body a court of law empowered to do a great deal that a court of law can do, although its constitution is repugnant to the very principle of any court of law. Three men are here given the power to infringe upon individual or even political and civil liberty, putting men into jail if need be, as pointed out by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston). This so-called court of law is given all these powers; yet at the same time it is to be prevented from acting as a court of law, giving every man a fair hearing. If it were made simply an administrative body, a body constituted for the purpose of giving information to the government, with no powers which it might exercise over any class of our citizens, then, though I might describe it as rather impotent, it would not be obnoxious. But it is being given powers that are repugnant to all the interests of the people, and is given no powers which will make it useful to all classes and individuals in the country. For this reason I shall support the amendment and vote against the third reading of the bill.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): One wonders just where the capacity for changing, on the part of the right hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Mackenzie King), will end. One wonders whether that capacity is not being tested beyond endurance, for it is only in 1926 that the right hon. gentleman asked the house to believe that the tariff advisory board was the one thing that was desirable. Let us see what he gave Canada. I now read from the official record, the Canada Year Book, with respect to the Advisory Board on Tariff and Taxation:

> The Advisory Board on Tariff and Taxation was created under the terms of P.C. 530 of April 7, 1926, for the purpose of advising the Minister of Finance in regard to tariff, taxation and other related matters.
> The duties of the board are to inquire into and hear representations on all matters pertaining to the tariff and other forms of taxation, as may be directed by the Minister of Finance, and to advise the minister in regard thereto. The board is under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance and holds meetings whenever this appears to be necessary or desirable, and also whenever required by the Minister of Finance. It is authorized to avail itself of the assistance of the officials of the various departments, while the Minister of Finance, on the recommendation of the chairman of the board, may engage competent persons possessing special knowledge to assist the board in its investigations.
> The tariff advisory board does not take the initiative in tariff investigations nor does it receive applications directly from persons interested in tariff investigations, but deals only with applications referred to it by the Minister of Finance.

One wonders just why this sudden change of front! One wonders just why these sudden suggestions!

Mr. CASGRAIN: It was not a court.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly not, but it was what was set up as a tariff board in lieu of a court, and the reason why the initiative rested with the Minister of Finance is the reason which the house has heard ad nauseam during the last few days, namely. the supremacy of parliament. Why is it that these applications must originate from the Minister of Finance? Because the ultimate responsibility for all tariff action rests with the government of the day, and it is through that minister that the government takes the responsibility so that parliament may act upon the initiative of the government.

[Mr. Bourassa.]

That is the reason. We have heard, during the last four or five days, the right hon. gentleman declaiming to high heaven that parliament is having its power crushed, we have heard that echoed and reechoed, until we are sick of the echo—that this was so, and that that was so—and now we find him rising in his place and declaiming against that very principle and declaring that anybody may go to the tariff board and make application without reference to government or parliamentary control in any way, shape or form. That is what hon. members are driven to for purely political reasons. The tariff board was good enough in 1926, but no application could be made to it except through the Minister of Finance. That was the case in 1927, 1928 and 1929. I heard the right hon. gentleman in those days pointing out the soundness of the measure and what it meant to the consumers of the country, but yet no application could be made except through the Minister of Finance. The reason is so obvious, so clear, so plain; you are not going to create any organization to report upon tariffs that has no relation to the government of the day and the parliament of which that government is the committee. The committee of this house that is reponsible for government to-day is called the cabinet. It is a committee of the House of Commons, and the responsibility of that cabinet is that it goes out of office unless at all times it can command the support of a majority of the members of the house. That being so, it is provided that there must be somewhere some responsible minister for every action that is taken with respect to the government of this country.

The action taken in this case is that of the minister when he sets in motion, by making a request of the board, the machinery whereby the information is obtained. How can this be otherwise? Are you going to have this board cluttered up by having everybody send in applications for changes in the tariff, or to have a minister responsible to parliament to deal with those applications? Is it to be order or disorder, method or lack of it? Is it to be responsibility of parliament or not? Hon. gentlemen opposite say: Give us disorder; give us no method; give us lack of control; give us anything that will enable us to talk, to address the language of the demagogue to the populace about a government that denies them the use of a court. The right hon. gentleman has been declaiming to high heaven about the rights of the people being taken away from them and their having no opportunities to air their grievances. Everyone knows no government can remain in power that long defies public opinion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the reason why the last government went out of power. May I go one step further and add this? All the applications are made to the Minister of Finance by consumers' leagues, manufacturers, those who have agencies in this country and who desire reductions in tariff as well as those who may desire increases. Then the minister determines whether or not he shall refer them to this board. He exercises his discretion and for the exercise of that discretion he is answerable to parliament. If he fails to make the reference, he subjects himself to a vote of censure of parliament. That is parliamentary government. One method is chaos and disorder; the other is orderly government of the country's affairs. The latter is consistent and consonant with that principle upon which our institutions have grown up, of parliamentary responsibility and of every minister being responsible to parliament for the exercise, while in office, of his discretion.

In this case an amendment has been set lose which will violate every principle of parliamentary government, disregard every rule that has heretofore prevailed with respect to ministerial responsibilities, and say that everybody on the street may make an application which the board is bound to hear. That is not my conception of the idea the Canadian people have with respect to matters of this kind. The right hon. gentleman did not have to go back nineteen or twenty years to find, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) says, opinions which they are perfectly welcome to take now that he has discarded them. My right hon. friend did not have to go back that far. If he had looked at his privy council order of 1926 he would have found the opinion which he commended to the people of the country at that time and during the last few years, but which opinion now, in the full glare of to-day's sun, he stands up and repudiates and disowns. I congratulate him.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Shelburne-Yarmouth): Mr. Speaker, as usual, the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is trying by raising his voice and by gestures, to conceal the real argument and, by scolding and delivering a lecture, to omit altogether to answer the arguments which have been presented. My right hon. friend recently, during the debate, has been arguing that this board is not a board which makes any tariffs; that it is only a fact-finding board; that its powers are quite innocuous and only for the purpose of making researches with respect to cost productions and things of that kind. Now he has suddenly decided that it is part of the instrument of government and vitally concerns the principle of the responsibility of parliament. The argument which he has made all the way through this debate has been to the effect that this board is simply an economic research council, nothing more and nothing less, something to which people can go, in order, he says, that the facts may be established. As he says, the responsibility rests in the last resort with the ministry and with parliament in order to make tariffs, but the exercise of the responsibility of parliament comes after and not before the investigation by the board. The board makes its findings; the ministry then decides whether or not it will act upon those findings and bring them down in the shape of tariff legislation. That is no argument against the proposal that the board may be set in motion in other ways than at the behest of the minister. My right hon. friend quoted the argument that was made by the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie). The present Minister of Justice of course has by this time learned very pat that quotation from Morley. He has had to use it on a good many occasions, and it has become pretty threadbare. He knows it as we used to know Pitt's reply to Walpole which we learned from the schoolbooks. I do not believe that the opinions which my hon. friend the Minister of Justice gave utterance to in 1912 have really been cast off by him.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Oh yes, they have.

Mr. RALSTON: I think they are simply put away in moth balls, and if the necessity arises he might bring them out again. The chances are that he probably will not, but I do not think they are cast off; I think he believes in them to-day just as much as he ever did. My right hon. friend reads the constitution of the tariff advisory board. He has been saying right along that board was not worth the paper the order in council was written on, but now he has to invoke the organization of that board as a reason for the fundamentals and the foundation and basis of the court which he is setting up to-day. As a matter of fact, they are two entirely different things. One was a tariff advisory board. One was a board to which matters might be referred, a board before which—I do not believe any hon. member will contradict me in this—any man who asked that he might go was promptly allowed to go and present his case.

Mr. BENNETT: Only if the Finance Minister so directed.

Mr. RALSTON: And he always gave his consent.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not.

Mr. RALSTON: But what is the case today? I asked my right hon. friend yesterday if he would give an undertaking that before any change, any decrease or increase of duty were made, the case would be referred to the tariff board. His answer was in his usual dogmatic form: He will not. That means that it is going to depend altogether on the minister what applications shall go before the board, and that the minister does not propose to act in the way in which the previous advisory board was administered and permit people to go before that board when they desire to do so. That is the difference between the administration of the board to which he has referred and the administration of this new board.

May I say one thing more? My hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has made the point clearly and distinctly that this house is now being invited to sanction the formation and organization, not of some tariff advisory board, not of any committee, not of any research council, but of something that is going to have the solemnity of a court of record, of something to which, to use the words of the Minister of Justice, men are to be appointed with handsome salaries, eminent men, he said, men of great dignity. That is the way he described them in 1912. He went on to say: After you have got all this splendid organization, what is going to happen? It is not going to start at all. Those were the words of the Minister of Justice in 1912, and I say that unless this amendment passes, that is exactly what will happen in this case. We will have all the trappings, all the dignity, all the solemnity, all the formalities, but after all, the board, with all respect to them, will be all dressed up and nowhere to go.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment is absolutely necessary in order that this court, so called, may be useful in connection with tariff matters. I want to point out to my right hon. friend that the court, as he himself said, makes no finding. The court makes no tariff, the court does nothing which the ministry cannot correct if it pleases to correct it. So there can be no objection whatever to a man going before this court and saying: I want the facts investigated in this particular case. There is nothing binding on the government or on parliament, according to what my right hon. friend himself says about this court. But the amendment would give an opportunity for the public of this country to get information with regard to matters in connection with which they are paying money in the way of duties, paying money in the way of taxes and imposts, in order that they might see if those taxes were properly imposed. So I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment is one which should receive the commendation of this house. The comparison which my right hon. friend has made with the tariff advisory board has nothing whatever to do with the question. If he will say now that he will follow the same policy in the administration of this new board as was followed in connection with the tariff advisory board, he will go a long way towards meeting our views. But he has negatived that; he has said absolutely the reverse of that. He proposes to exercise jurisdiction in regard to this board just as the present Minister of Justice described it in 1912: It begins with the minister and ends with the minister. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that sort of board and that sort of court is not in keeping with the institutions of this country.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): May I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is very difficult for some members of this house to get at the actual facts in this case because there has been so much of politics injected into it that it is hardly possible to know when members are really sincere and when they are playing politics. If the leader of the opposition had simply given his own opinion without quoting the remarks which the Minister of Justice made some twenty years ago, I would have attached a little more weight to the reasons he gave; and if the Prime Minister, in replying, had not taken the trouble to quote the policy of the Liberals with respect to the tariff advisory board, but rather had dealt with the merits of this bill, it would have been a little easier possibly to decide how much weight should be attached to the points that he made. I was, however, very much impressed with the remarks of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). The Prime Minister, in putting this bill through its various stages, referred very often to the fact that the board was a court of record, and being a court of record I am inclined to feel at the moment that it should be open to everyone to appeal to it. The Board of Railway Commissioners, which is a somewhat similar organization, may be appealed to by anyone direct. I can easily imagine many circumstances under which the people of this country might like to appeal to the tariff board with respect to different cases which the Minister of Finance would not agree to submit to the board. Although, as I say, I have very great difficulty in making up my mind how I should vote on the amendment, at the moment, unless some further argument is advanced to change my opinion, I feel inclined to support the amendment simply because as I understand British law and the British system of justice anyone may appeal to any court. On that fundamental ground I feel this act should be amended in the manner suggested.

The house divided on the amendment, which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Bennett, seconded by Mr. Guthrie, moves that Bill No. 47, to provide for the appointment of a tariff board, be read the third time. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): When this bill was before the house for second reading the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley) presented the objections held by hon. members on this side of the house and concluded by a motion concerning more particularly the method of appointment of the members of the proposed board and their tenure of office. When the bill was in committee some hon. members said that they opposed that motion because they were in favour of the principle of a tariff board and hoped and expected that in committee their objections to the bill woud be removed.

The bill has been considered in committee and many objections have been raised to some of the provisions in it. Amendments have been offered but have all been rejected. Not all, but the main objections we had have not been removed and some of the questions asked have not been answered. If my right hon. friend will forgive me, I will say that when he spoke, to use words which he has employed but which were used by somebody else before him, he supplied more heat than light to hon. members of the house.

Hon. members on this side of the house are opposed to the bill in its present form becoming the law of the country and being placed on our statute books. For these reasons I move, seconded by Mr. Motherwell:

That the word "now" be left out and the words "this day six months" be added at the end of the question.

Amendment negatived on division.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the original motion carry?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the third time and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF RESOLUTIONS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. MacDonald (South Cape Breton) in the chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, before the house rose last night I was protesting against the lack of information with respect to the various tariff items which are before the committee at this moment, also against the little time that is available by way of discussion of these amendments this session. I was pointing out that the proposed legislation we have before us is only part of the tariff changes the ministry has introduced since coming into office, and that it was understood at the close of the special session last year that full opportunity would be given at this session to discuss the tariff changes that were then made. Obviously that opportunity has not yet come, and I submit that at this late stage of the session it will not present itself. Similarly with regard to the proposed tariff changes, there has been no investigation before any body with respect to the items that are going to be considered. In former years, as I pointed out, either a committee of the cabinet had held public hearings, or some board had listened to representations of different parties with respect to the effect of proposed changes, and the house had before it the printed evidence taken at those hearings as a guide to enable it to make up its mind as to what in the public interest should be done with respect to them.

I also took very strong exception to the extent of the changes in the tariff, both in range and in revision upwards, and pointed out as well the arbitrary manner in which all these changes have been made. They have not been made as the result of any investigation whatever, but simply at the instance of the Minister of Finance without hearings in the past as to their effect, and from what he has indicated on the tariff bill, without any possibility of future hearings as to their effects unless he so consents.

I desire further to point out in particular that these changes at this time are likely to emphasize the depression under which the country is labouring, and make relief from that depression infinitely more difficult and prolonged. The changes are all in the nature of further restrictions upon trade. In that regard they are in accord with the policy of the administration. I have said over and over again—and the Prime Minister has not denied it—that his policy with respect to these matters is to prevent coming into this country all commodities which can be manufactured or produced in Canada. He believes that the ideal for Canada is to make of this country an economic unit which will produce and manufacture everything that is required for domestic consumption, and he hopes to effect that by putting up the tariff walls high enough to prevent importations from abroad.

That there may be no doubt about that being the point of view of the ministry—though some of my hon. friends opposite seem to differ from their leader in that regard—may I quote a very definite statement made by the member of the administration who holds the portfolio of Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens)? Shortly after the administration came into office the hon. gentleman gave an interview in Vancouver to a representative of the Canadian Press, in the course of which he outlined the ideal of the administration of which he is a member. The despatch is dated Vancouver, August 31, and on September 1 appeared in the different papers of the country, including the Ottawa Citizen, from which I am quoting:

> "The new government led by Hon. R. B. Bennett aims first to build up Canada industrially and agriculturally by suitable protective tariffs," said Hon. H. H. Stevens, who left for Ottawa to-day to attend the special session of parliament called for September 8. "Our ideal is that nothing hereafter will be imported except what cannot be grown or manufactured or otherwise produced at home."

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And the Prime Minister says "hear, hear."

Mr. BENNETT: I beg pardon, I did not speak.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Some one opposite, one of his supporters said, "hear, hear"—I see it was the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Bell). I do not suppose the Prime Minister objects to the "hear, hear."

Mr. BENNETT: He does not.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That clinches the matter. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is further quoted as saying:

> And if Canada cannot produce it, then we hope to get the goods from Britain or from our sister dominions.

May I again stress the quotation I have just read, and point out that the tariff changes which this committee is being called upon to consider at the moment have been made with the view of realizing the objective therein set forth. That objective, of course, is what will be accomplished if and when hon. gentlemen opposite have had sufficient time to complete their program; but the tariff changes as introduced at the special session and at this session go a long way towards helping them to reach their objective by the method that they at present are adopting. Let me repeat, in part, the minister's words which I have already quoted:

> Our ideal is that nothing hereafter will be imported except what canot be grown or manufactured or otherwise produced at home.

Obviously the reason the administration has made these tariff changes as extensive and as high as it has is to further its policy of keeping out of Canada anything that can be produced or manufactured here. I wish to repeat that that is a policy of complete restriction of trade. If Canada is not to allow commodities to come in here from other countries, she cannot expect that other countries will purchase commodities from her. I need not go into the economic reasons why it is that in international exchange, imports ultimately must be paid for by exports, and that exports ultimately must be paid for by imports, but such is the undisputed fact; and I say that any policy which restricts trade to the extent of shutting off importations means that at the same time we are shutting off the possibility of exportations.

What necessarily is the effect of a policy of that kind? If effective at all, it will in a very short time bring about a condition of restriction of trade worse than any blockade in time of war. It will put an end completely to Canada's trade on the high seas, and will effect in a very material way our internal transportation as well. I pointed out last night that for years past this parliament has been seeking to improve the means for facilitating international trade by making large expenditures on our railways and our harbours and subsidizing steamships, in fact improving transportation and communication in all its branches at great expense, all with a view of extending our trade internationally. Now an administration comes into office which definitely declares it is going to prevent commodities from coming into this country if similar commodities can be produced or manufactured here, knowing when it makes that declaration of policy that unless we are prepared to admit imports from other countries they in turn will shut out our exports to them. It is for that reason we take very strong issue with hon. gentlemen opposite in connection with these proposed tariff changes. If they become effective and serve the object which hon. gentlemen opposite have in view we believe they will bring about in this country a very serious condition of stagnation so far as trade and business are concerned.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have an entirely erroneous conception of the means of enlarging the home market which they say it is their objective to promote by their policies. If the home market were a given locality a place, however large, one could understand the desire to further the purchase and sale of all goods within Canada itself, but a market is not merely a place where goods are sold; it is a place also where goods are bought. Unless there is purchasing power the fact that you have a locality in which men meet to exchange money for goods will not affect the situation very much one way or the other. What is needed is purchasing power, and that purchasing power in Canada will come in very large measure through what in the export trade of this country is sold abroad. As we develop the great primary industries of Canada, agriculture, manufacturing, lumbering, fishing and mining; as we conduct a large export trade in connection with the products of these industries, so there will flow into Canada from abroad the purchasing power which is necessary to create a market for the commodities which are manufactured here. May I make this further statement with respect to manufacturing. Canada has now reached the point where she is exporting manufactured goods to a very considerable extent; if I am not mistaken she is at the present time per unit of population with the exception of Great Britain in manufactures the largest exporting country in the world. If that is the case and this policy is carried into effect, what is going to happen to our manufacturers? Our manufacturers will be obliged to lose their foreign markets and to that extent, along with other industries and business generally in the country, that particular interest will suffer very greatly.

What I want to point out particularly to my right hon. friend is this, that he himself has indicated to this house that to-day international competition is such throughout the world that a very slight difference in costs may mean insolvency to particular interests, or may mean the total loss of markets. In order that I may do my right hon. friend no injustice I should like to quote his own words uttered in this house within the last two days. They appear in Hansard of July 7 at page 3473. At that time my right hon. friend said:

> I have had some little experience in business; at one time it was rather extensive. I was privileged to have some knowledge of almost every branch of business, whether it was the packing business, the paper business, the insurance business, the electrical business, or what it might be, and I realized that the question of cost was an all-important one, because even if your profit be only $\frac{3}{8}$ of a cent per unit, if your volume is large enough you make an enormous fortune. I know of one case in which the profit on the single unit of production of the company amounted to less than $\frac{3}{8}$ of a cent, and yet the volume was so large that the return was magnificent and it looked as though it were too large a return upon the investment. Yet the individual unit return was small.

That relates to the profit side; a very small margin, if spread over a wide enough field, may bring in a very considerable profit. But a little earlier my right hon. friend spoke about the possibility of loss, the effect of costs on markets together with their relation to competition, and I direct the attention of my right hon. friend and of the committee to these words as deserving the most careful thought and consideration. In order that their full emphasis may be appreciated I would point out that not only are costs of production and manufacture being increased by the very high tariffs created at the last special session and proposed in the resolutions before the committee at the moment; not only is the cost of living and the cost of production being greatly increased by virtue of the range and extent of increase in the changes which are being made, but there is being added to the taxation this year, for the first time, a one per cent excise tax on everything coming into Canada. That one per cent tax is over and above the customs duties, which are also in the nature of a tax, and I venture to say that the effect of these two things combined will be such that the costs of production with respect to almost everything, particularly when we have regard to the extent to which the cost of living will play its part in determining the wages item in cost of production as well, will be so great as to occasion many of those exporting concerns of to-day the complete loss of their markets abroad. Here are the words of my right hon. friend, also at page 3473 of Hansard:

> Compare 1919 with 1931. I had occasion about a year and a half or two years ago to examine the cost sheets of a very large enterprise, and I was amazed to find that costs are no longer worked out in decimals of one-tenth of a cent, but down to four decimal places; that is, for example, to ·8716 of a cent. In these days of modern competition the question of costs has become the all-important factor, and the costs director of a company is the man who very often determines its solvency or insolvency. When it is said that you can compare 1919 with 1931, no regard is paid to modern accountancy and to the relation which modern competition has created between the cost side of a business and its resultant product.

Think of the portent of that pronouncement. My right hon. friend, out of his own experience in business in this country, has realized that the difference of .8716 of a cent in cost may mean insolvency to a business which up to that time had been solvent. Here are changes in tariffs of not a fractional percentage but of many percentages, and an additional one per cent excise tax as well. Consider what these vast changes in tariff are going to mean when they are reflected in the production and manufacturing costs of the country. My right hon. friend says:

> . . . . the costs director of a company is the man who very often determines its solvency or insolvency.

May I say that he to-day is the costs director, in his present position and with the powers he possesses, not merely of a company but of a nation, and in that position the costs director of a nation is the man who very often determines its solvency or insolvency. I am genuinely afraid that if my right hon. friend is permitted to continue with his tariff changes to the degree to which he proposes to go, and the further extent to which he may wish to go; if he is permitted to make still more rigid interpretations of existing legislation by orders in council, by special valuations, by bulletin appraisals and the like, conditions will become such that not for one industry alone but for many hundreds of industries there will be a difference in costs so appreciable as to change what is solvency to-day to insolvency to-morrow. That is my real objection to these changes as they are now proposed, and I think this of all times is the last moment at which experiments of this kind should be made.

May I say further that my right hon. friend is having considerable difficulty, in raising revenues. I do not think he has considered for one moment the revenue feature of the tariff which he has brought down. With discernment and care and previous investigation, he might have found means through the tariff of raising a very considerable amount of revenue. But in most cases he has put the tariff up to such a point that he has destroyed anything in the nature of a revenue producing feature. I think he himself will say that avowedly it is not tariff revenue he is considering at all; it is protection pure and simple, protection carried to the point of prohibition of all commodities coming into this country which can be produced or manufactured here.

Now, whatever views he may hold on that subject, I submit again that the present condition of the country should have caused the Prime Minister to move very cautiously in regard to the extent to which he would go in seeking at this time to put his views into practice.

The extent of the change which at this moment my right hon. friend is making in the tariff structure of Canada is the more surprising in that it runs directly opposite to the trend throughout the world which it is becoming more and more apparent will for the future be the prevailing one. It is true that immediately following the war there was in different countries a strong nationalistic development which asserted itself by way of increased tariffs and other forms of trade restriction. But the world has had a few years' experience of the consequence of that kind of policy, and the leading economists and many of the leading statesmen of the different countries of the world are to-day not only recognizing but asserting that unless the world can free itself from these nationalistic tendencies on the part of the nations there will be nothing but loss for all concerned. They are pointing out that what is needed to-day is not an endeavour on the part of different countries to raise tariffs to such a point as to invite further reprisals, but rather so to lower tariffs as to make possible more in the way of international exchange.

May I in passing direct the attention of the committee to the praise which has been bestowed upon the President of the United States for his action in suggesting a moratorium in regard to the payment of international debts between the different nations. Why have the countries joined in that great movement, and why has it been so universally applauded? The reason is that it removes one more restriction to international trade. It recognizes the desirability, not of purchasing everything within the confines of any particular country, but of enabling the nations to purchase one from another those things which each may have a comparative advantage in producing.

If that is sound doctrine with respect to a great movement such as that which the moratorium suggests in relation to international debts, I submit that the same reasoning will apply to other forms of restriction in trade. I wish to place before the committee two statements which seem to me to be most significant in this regard. They come from widely different sources but they represent that point of view which is being more generally entertained by those whose immediate concern is with large business.

The first statement was made by Sir Arthur Balfour, who in 1930 was chairman of the British National Committee of the International Chamber of Commerce. Sir Arthur paid a visit to this country and he spoke in Winnipeg before the Canadian Club on April 23 of this year. I quote from the Canadian Press report as it appeared in the Gazette on the day following. These are his words:

"We have positively got to cease attempting to interfere with the laws of supply and demand," Sir Arthur Balfour, British industrialist and economist, said in an address to-day before the Canadian Club. "We have got to trade much more freely with one another if the world is to recover from its trade depression."

One of the greatest worries, said Sir Arthur, was that the agriculturist was receiving such low prices for his products, that he could not absorb the manufactured goods of the world. That was Canada's worry too.

"I think that tariffs have gone too far. They have their use and place, but when they are applied to inefficient as well as efficient industries they go too far."

That is from a British industrialist who was chairman of the British National Committee of the International Chamber of Commerce, and it gives his considered opinion, reflecting the views of that body. The International Chamber of Commerce held a meeting in Washington this year, and there were presented to the president of that body representations from a newly formed Council for Tariff Reduction which has come into existence in the United States. It is the representative character of this new Council for Tariff Reduction and the very representative character of this International Chamber of Commerce that give great significance to the paragraphs I am about to read. I am quoting from the New York Times of May 7, 1931, an article which appears under this heading:

Drive To Cut Tariff Started Here To End World's Depression
Economists, Editors, Lawyers, Manufacturers and Many Other Leaders Back Plan
Will Appeal to Congress
Reduction in Armaments is Called Second to Ending of Port Barriers
Letter Sent To M. Theunis
Council for Tariff Reduction Puts Case Before the International Chamber of Commerce

The article reads:

The Council for Tariff Reduction is being formed by a number of prominent economists, editors, lawyers and manufacturers, it was announced here yesterday coincident with the sending of a letter by the newly organized body to Georges Theunis, president of the International Chamber of Commerce, now meeting in Washington, informing him of the belief of the members of the council that tariff walls must be lowered if world trade is to be revived.

Despite the unwillingness of the political parties to press for tariff reform at the coming session of congress, the council declared in its letter to M. Theunis the intention of the new body is to press upon congress "the absolute need of prompt action at its approaching session in the reduction of the tariff of 1930, the ill effects of which have been immediately evident both within our borders and in international relations."

Among the prominent professors of economics who signed the letter and the announcement were Edwin R. A. Seligman, F. W. Taussig, David Saville Muzzey and Irving Fisher.

These names are all well known. Professor Taussig was a member of the tariff commission in the United States, and has been referred to by the present Prime Minister as the leading economist in that country to-day.

Mr. BENNETT: One of the leading economists.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes; and I am proud to say that he was a professor of mine at Harvard while I was engaged in the study of economics. Perhaps I am reflecting some of his views at the moment.

Mr. BENNETT: They do not seem to have been very popular in the United States.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think they are becoming increasingly so. The letter sent to Mr. Theunis I shall now quote. And here I am attaching importance not merely to the source from which this communication comes, as representative of this council, and to the body to which it is addressed; I regard it as important also because of the views themselves and the appeal which they make to the minds of reasonable men who are thoughtfully studying conditions as they are in the world to-day. The letter reads:

In view of the advocacy of tariff reductions throughout the world by the International Chamber of Commerce at its previous meetings, and of your own address at the opening of the current sessions, you will be gratified to learn that there is in process of organization here a council for Tariff Reduction, which already includes several hundred leaders in economics, ethics, trade and industry. Despite the unwillingness of our political parties to face frankly within our own country this foremost world question, this council proposes to press upon the congress the absolute need of prompt action at its approaching session in the reduction of the tariff of 1930, the ill effects of which have been so immediately evident both within our borders and in international relations.

The council has not yet advanced its formal organization to the point of official expressions, but the attitudes stated in the correspondence of the members are definite. While it is generally recognized that the reduction of armaments, military, naval and aerial, is an urgent requirement to keep down national expenses and avert recurring deficits, our members realize that the lowering of tariff walls is the paramount necessity to permit economic laws to act in restoring world trade and national prosperity, a necessity pressing upon the several nations, and especially our own country, which has, unfortunately, led in the enactment of skyscraping tariffs.

You may care to lay before the chamber or place upon its records the enclosed preliminary statement signed by the initiatory participants in the forming of the council. To these might be added the signatures of several hundred others, including many of the 1,028 economists who signed the protest to the president and the congress during the preparation of the Hawley-Smoot tariff

These signatures become the assurance that the opinions recently expressed in annual reports and public addresses by leaders in banking and industry have behind them the concurrence of an increasing number of our citizens, who recognize that to trade we must exchange and that to provide markets for our surplus manufactures, farm products, labour and capital we must be ready to remove the bars at our seaports which interfere so seriously with world trade. They are prepared to bring public opinion to bear upon our political leaders in favour of immediate tariff reduction and they desire to make known to those of liberal minds in other countries their sympathy and cooperation."

The statement of the organization of the council, with offices at 2 West Forty-fifth street, declared the tariff to be no longer a political, no longer merely a national, but a world-wide economic issue. It called attention to resentment engendered throughout the world by the Hawley-Smoot tariff, and declared that America, which has set the pace for high tariffs throughout the world, should now lead the way in tariff reduction.

Thus can our world market be extended, foreign customers increased, more home products demanded in exchange, unemployment decreased at home and abroad and a better home market developed through the increased purchasing power of our own workers in the wholesale round of economic progress promoting international goodwill and peace.

That statement, evidently most carefully prepared, sets forth as concisely and conclusively as any statement could, the argument for not increasing but decreasing tariffs if at the present time any change is to be made. I shall not repeat its arguments but allow the truth and force of them to speak for themselves.

May I conclude what I wish to say at this moment, by a further reference to the bearing of these tariff changes upon our own immediate pressing problem of unemployment? I feel that the government, by its action in making such extensive changes in the tariff, with their consequent trade restrictions, is pursuing a course which will not do other than increase unemployment. I know hon. members opposite sincerely believe their policies are going to result in stimulating manufactures and thereby increase employment. I am quite prepared to admit that at a certain stage of development in a country protection of a limited amount may under certain conditions with respect to particular industries have that effect. But may I point out that Canada is at a stage of development very much beyond that of a country which is just beginning to take its place in manufacturing and in world commerce and competition. To-day the industrial life of this country is very widely and largely developed and there was not as recently as two years ago any pronounced demand even from the manufacturers themselves for further increases in the tariff. I venture to say that had it not been for the introduction of the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill, we would have heard practically nothing from Canadian manufacturers in the way of a demand for additional increases in tariffs. May I say this further: I do not believe Canadian manufacturers have made any demand or request for the extensive increases in tariffs which are being proposed by the government. I believe they are in fact being greatly embarrassed by them.

May I repeat what I said the other day: In proposing tariffs as high as those which are before us in these resolutions, my right hon. friend is going directly opposite to what his predecessors in office of his own party always declared should govern in matters of protection in this country, namely: that it was not high tariffs; that it was adequate or moderate tariffs that were required, tariffs which would contain, if you like, the element of protection but certainly not tariffs which would go the length of prohibition. That is where I think my right hon. friend has made his mistake, and if instead of bringing forward of his own accord all these changes, he had in the first instance had his proposed changes carefully looked into and studied from the point of view not merely of the needs of the industry of the country but from the point of view of the incidence of taxation—where the ultimate burden of these duties is going to fall as respects industries and as respects consumers, and the effect of that upon the question of trade and unemployment in Canada at present—if he had done all these things, I believe he would have proceeded in a much more statesmanlike way, and at the same time in a way that would have served infinitely better to solve the great problem of unemployment, and to advance the interests of Canada, an end which at heart I know he desires to achieve.

Mr. BENNETT: My right hon. friend has for the third time this session repeated the observations which he has made to-day and yesterday. I know he has strong convictions about the matters with respect to which he speaks, but I do not think what he said yesterday or to-day is any more forceful than what he said in the course of a two-hour speech a few days ago. Nor can it be said that what he stated on that occasion differs materially in its terms or substance from what he said on another occasion. It is his privilege to repeat these matters as frequently as he thinks desirable; for he must be given the widest latitude in the conduct of the fortunes of his party. He assumes the responsibility and he knows best what course to pursue in that regard. But may I remind him of just a few facts, the first being that we are confronted with conditions and not theories?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is what I was saying.

Mr. BENNETT: The speech, however, was one dealing with theories and not with conditions.

When we came into power we found the trade of this country rapidly decreasing. During the seven months of 1930 it had very rapidly decreased, as regards both imports and exports, from the figures for the same seven months of the preceding year. During all of 1929 the warnings were given; the signals were set. Everyone who understands anything of economic signs realized that we were living in a world of increasing depression. I went so far as to point out what the net result of speculation would be in this country, and this, apart altogether from what I did with respect to balances of trade. The Minister of Finance of that time met the situation in a way which I think only accentuated its difficulties. Be that as it may, we came into power on the seventh of August confronted with the conditions to which I have referred: first, shrinking revenues; second, industrial depression; third, agricultural depression beginning because of lack of markets due to over-production and to the fact that one of the greatest world producers was throwing its products upon the market at a price which we had not at that time placed ourselves in a position to meet in the way of decreased costs of production. Under those circumstances we were faced with conditions and not theories.

I have recited very briefly the conditions at home; what were the world conditions? World conditions were somewhat similar. But remember this: in almost every country in the world tariffs were raised against our goods going into their markets. Those tariffs had been increased rapidly during the last few years, and we know on the authority of the League of Nations, as well as of the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and of the former Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) himself, that of all the countries in the world we were the only one in the last ten years that had reduced its tariffs. It therefore follows that while other countries were steadily enacting tariffs preventing to the point of prohibition the admission of our products into their markets, we were making it more easy and ready for their products to find a market in our country. Those conditions cannot be gainsaid. They are matters of record.

Now I put to my right hon. friend and his followers this question: Under those conditions what can be done for Canada? The supreme purpose of every government in this country must be to enact laws that enure to the welfare of Canada. Our international position may be talked of and glorified, but the government sitting on these benches owes primarily a duty to the Canadian people, and not to some other country; for the simple and obvious reason that the electors of Canada, not the electors of some other country, have selected a government to administer Canada's affairs. As long as that supreme purpose is the purpose for which this government exists—and when I say this government I mean any government of Canada—it follows that its legislation must be initiated first of all with regard to Canada, with regard to its growth and development, the employment and happiness and prosperity of its people. Confronted as we were with the situation to which I have briefly referred—a world of hostile tariffs about us, our markets for milk and cream lost during the few months previous, and lost because of tariffs against us—knowing that our agrarians had lost markets in that way and that our manufacturers had been absolutely prevented from selling their products in many countries where they had theretofore enjoyed a market, this government came into power. The right hon. gentleman is right in saying that we immediately took steps to place upon the statute books tariff legislation that would have the effect of more nearly according to Canadians an equal opportunity with their competitors than they had theretofore enjoyed. We did that in the only way I know of that it can be done. We gave to Canadians a measure of protection in a protected world. Having found this country admittedly with reduced tariffs, tariffs lower than those of the other country which was its chief competitor—men may shake their heads, but that is only an indication that they have not read the record. There is the record, and he who runs may read. There can be no gainsaying of it because it has been referred to time after time in this house and elsewhere.

Thus confronted with plain evidence of a world-wide depression and with plain evidence of what the other nations of the world were doing, and understanding clearly what our own country had done, this government, having a mandate clearly from the people of Canada if a government ever had; for in every part of this country as leader of the opposition I said to the people of Canada that if elected to office we proposed to enact tariff legislation that would give Canadians an equal opportunity with their competitors, that to do less would be to fail in one's duty, and that to do more would be to put a premium upon inefficiency—those were the words practically that I repeated in every part of Canada, in agrarian sections and in manufacturing centres—having thus received a mandate from the people to form an administration, and having done it, this government proceeded, when parliament was called together in September, to deal with unemployment.

Now, as one of the factors in unemployment it cannot be denied by any living man that if in area A, which happens to be the Dominion of Canada, you make it easier than in any other part of the world for the products of other countries to replace your own, you have to that extent denied your own people employment. Having found those conditions, having called parliament together, we proceeded to enact legislation of a twofold character; first, to deal on a national basis with the problem of unemployment, and second, by tariff legislation to give Canadians an equal opportunity with others in the development of our own country. That was our duty, and we did it by three methods, the only three that I know of: First, by tariffs that say to other countries with hostile tariffs that, while tariffs in themselves mean nothing, they being but an instrument to effectuate a purpose, we propose to use that instrument to effectuate a purpose, namely, to confer upon Canadians an equal opportunity with their competitors to develop Canada. That is number one. We did not ask that tariffs should be used for reprisals. We did not ask that tariffs should be used to punish others. But we said that tariffs shall be used to ensure to Canadians what tariffs are used for in every other country to ensure to their own people. That is all; nothing more and nothing less.

Mr. YOUNG: How is it working out?

Mr. BENNETT: I say that conditions in the Dominion as a result of the action taken are better than in any other part of the world to which reference can be made. Outside of the fearful havoc that has been wrought by conditions over which man has no control, no country is better situated than Canada to-day, and I say with some degree of pardonable pride that had the action we took last September not been taken I do not know what would have been the result so far as industrial conditions in this country are concerned.

Let me proceed to the next proposal that I make. There never has been a time in the history of this country in which its industrial and manufacturing life was threatened as it is to-day, and by to-day I mean both the months that have just passed, the present, and the future that lies immediately before us.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): What about the country's agricultural industry?

Mr. BENNETT: I will come to that in time. I have endeavoured up to the moment to indicate what the conditions were and the action that we have taken. We used tariffs, I said, to deal with one phase; we used dumping legislation to deal with another, in order to secure fairer competition. Then we dealt with the situation in a third manner, and this refers to agriculture as well as to manufacturing. It refers alike to manufactured products and to the products which the agriculturists of this country, through their organizations and societies, have asked us to protect and have sought from us legislation to that end, as I shall show as we go through the tariff schedules.

What did we do? We said that where you have goods coming into Canada at a price that makes it impossible for Canadians to compete, and where the dumping legislation is useless, we will confer upon the executive the power to place a price for duty purposes upon those products so that Canadians may still have fair competition and an equal opportunity. And we did that. We did it with respect to agricultural products. We did it with respect to fruits and vegetables. We did it with respect to dairy products, and with respect to every product of every kind that sought a market in Canada when we found that its admission to this market would destroy or seriously embarrass Canadian industry, be it agriculture or anything else. Under the circumstances those three measures were absolutely essential for the national life of Canada. I ask seriously: Will any hon. member of this committee say that under the conditions which he knows existed last fall the whole industrial and agricultural structure of our life could have been saved had some action of that kind not been taken?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): I think the right hon. gentleman has taken action which will destroy it.

Mr. BENNETT: Having taken that action in the methods indicated, let us watch their operations. In a world of great depression we find that we are able at least to stimulate our industrial life and our national life, and we have improved agricultural conditions by giving to that industry some markets which it did not theretofore possess.

Mr. McMILLAN: (Huron): Would my right hon. friend tell us what he has done?

Mr. BENNETT: None so blind as those who will not see. Having eyes to see, see not, lest seeing they should believe; ears to hear, hear not, lest hearing they should understand.

Mr. McMILLAN: (Huron): Let us have the answer.

Mr. BENNETT: Under those circumstances, with that situation confronting us and having passed the legislation to which I have alluded, we now reach another session. Does any hon. member of this committee for a moment believe that it is an easy task to deal with these matters? Last night my right hon. friend said that he doubted whether or not the Minister of Finance had studied the items in the budget or knew what they meant.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Could my right hon. friend tell us the effect of them.

Mr. BENNETT: My reply is that not only once but many times the Minister of Finance has gone over those items, and—

Mr. RALSTON: Repetition.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, repetition in industry, but not in speech. The Minister of Finance has gone over those items many times and endeavoured as best he could by calling upon every means at his disposal to ascertain just what could or should not be done to prevent the collapse of this country. When I say "collapse" I use the word advisedly.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my right hon. friend think that any one individual on earth is capable of taking upon himself so great a problem of interpretation?

Mr. BENNETT: While I make no professions of greater capacity than my right hon. friend opposite—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would not profess anything of that kind.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not a question of mere profession. Throughout my life I have learned that what I have to do I am usually able to do; I make up my mind and proceed on that theory.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is my right hon. friend always right?

Mr. BENNETT: No; I admit my own fallibility, and before I have concluded I shall say more in that regard.

My right hon. friend has said that this session of parliament was called very late; it was. It was called four days later than the first parliament called by my right hon. friend in the year 1922.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, but that was within three not eight months of taking office. At that time there was only a moderate program of legislation, and there was no attempt to change the whole tariff.

Mr. BENNETT: My right hon. friend called ministers of experience; he had no change of governor general to contemplate, and there was no protracted vacancy of that office. As I have said, this session of parliament met at a date four days later than the first session of my right hon. friend after the year 1921. On that occasion Mr. Fielding delivered his budget speech on May 28; the budget speech of this administration was delivered on June 1. On the former occasion, however, the discussion did not last as long as it did at this session. There were no two-hour or four-hour speeches; there were no long reiterations of the same tale day after day, day after day. Those hon. members who care to look at Hansard will find there the evidence of what I now state.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my right hon. friend tell me the number of tariff changes made in the budget of Mr. Fielding, and the number now proposed?

Mr. BENNETT: As my right hon. friend will remember, there was a very substantial number of tariff changes made by Mr. Fielding in 1922.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On the contrary, there were very few.

Mr. BENNETT: We must remember also that Mr. Fielding as a practical man clearly indicated then and later that faced with certain conditions he must apply practical means, not theories, and he proceeded so to do. As a result there was placed upon the statute books of Canada taxation with respect to stamps, with respect to cheques, with respect to money orders, with respect to transportation, with respect to a sales tax which at one time was as high as 6 per cent and was later lowered to 5 and then to 4 per cent. He placed all these imposts upon the people, and did so because he was confronted with certain conditions. Being a practical man and applying a practical mind to the situation, he proceeded in the manner I have indicated.

To-day we are faced with what I conceive to be the most serious situation with which Canada has ever been confronted. Why? Because the depression has not been limited to Canada, but has been world-wide in its effects.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend admits that now.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it has developed as I have indicated; there has been a gradual increase of depression.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That was not what my right hon. friend said last year.

Mr. BENNETT: At that time it had not begun in some countries.

The depression to which I have referred being world-wide in character it followed that every country used its best endeavours to lessen it. That meant that every country was endeavouring to sell its surplus product to some other country in order that it might relieve its own financial situation. Canada retained its position among the nations of the world as the fifth greatest trading country. Canada's position however is more difficult than that of any other nation, for the simple and obvious reason that we live side by side with a nation of 120,000,000 people, separated from them by only an imaginary line, a people who are carrying on the greatest industrial development known to the world of to-day, and which has riches to compare with those of any other country in the world. What happened? For months and months and months they declined to release their inventories by selling at home at low prices, and sought a market in this country at almost any price they could secure. Let me illustrate. I have in mind competition which came not from that country but from a country across the water. The other day there came into my office the proprietor of a pin factory which has been doing business in the city of Montreal for thirty-five years and to a large extent supplying the entire requirements of this country. He had with him a small wire ring upon which were 144 safety pins of graduated sizes ranging in length from two inches to about a quarter of an inch. That ring of pins manufactured in Germany was actually being sold retail for five cents a ring.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Does not the Prime Minister think that the consumers of Canada would like to buy pins at that price?

Mr. BENNETT: I put this problem to the committee: Can you take the responsibility of saying that that small industry which had developed in thirty-five years to become one of a very substantial nature, giving employment to a substantial number of Canadians, should now be crushed and destroyed because of a world-wide depression which enabled a competitor to place 144 safety pins on the market for five cents.

Mr. RALSTON: We want to be practical, not theoretical. How many men did that industry employ?

Mr. BENNETT: I understand upwards of fifty people.

Mr. RALSTON: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member laughs—fifty people are nothing to him. But I say to him that I am concerned about the welfare of one Canadian.

Mr. RALSTON: Will my hon. friend permit me?

Mr. BENNETT: I do not desire to be further interrupted. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will mention another industry that employs very many more hands, amounting to hundreds. For instance, pianos are no longer sold to the extent they once were, because phonographs and radios to some extent have displaced those instruments; but they are still manufactured in this country in a small way compared with the extensive production that once prevailed in the industry. To-day because of the economic depression to which I have referred and the keen intent and purpose of other countries to sell their products within Canada, foreign manufacturers are offering grand pianos at $180. We cannot buy the wood to make them at that price. Are you prepared to destroy that industry or not? Yes or no. That is the question I had to answer, and you will find in the schedules the answer to it—I am not prepared to do it.

I will give another illustration. We have invested in this country millions of dollars in the radio industry, but that industry is small and insignificant compared with the industry in—shall we say—the great republic to the south. Their inventories were enormous. They had manufactured and manufactured and manufactured; and they looked and looked for a market. Then it became necessary to get any price they could to reduce their inventories. Is this country's radio industry to be destroyed for that purpose or not? That is the question. Take fruit. Last fall I stood on the road at a small junction point in British Columbia and saw seven carloads of fruit that had just been brought in from Washington and Oregon. A few hours before I had been busy talking to those who have been trying to establish orchards in British Columbia and who are seeking only a fair return for their capital and labour. But they could not get a market for their fruit in competition with this imported product, because having obtained a high price for the requirements of their own people, the United States fruit growers had thrown their surplus upon the Canadian market to destroy Canadian fruit growers. Was that fruit growing industry a matter of importance to this country, or was it not? Was it important to develop in Canada a fruit growing industry, or was it not? Was it important that Canadians should or should not have fruit grown on their own land? That question had to be considered. It was considered. The answer was given in the seasonal tariff that we passed last September.

Go down to the eastern townships and ask the people there with respect to the application of the same principle. Take butter—about which there has been so much talk. The price of butter has been reduced throughout the world, but we said when we were in opposition that butter was a commodity which should and could be produced by Canadians because it is a natural product of a country such as Canada. In days gone by Canadians were exporters of butter to the markets of the world. Then what happened? Because of short sighted action on the part of the government that industry was destroyed, and we became importers of the commodity to the extent of $9,000,000 from one country alone. Because we made that treaty with that result it followed of course that the inevitable would happen, and the Canadian people so influenced the mind of the government of the day that they gave notice terminating the treaty, with results that are well known.

Now, those are facts. I could give other illustrations. I could start with the lowest form of agriculture, the small truck garden on the outskirts of our cities, and trace the industry up through the larger garden to the orchard and describe the great industry that is involved in canning fruit and vegetables, and finally deal with the manufacturing industries of various kinds such as I have indicated. I say that the government deliberately concluded that its duty was to pass such legislation as would prevent those who competed with us, whether they live far away or near-by, from destroying the national economic integrity of this country. By so doing we have added to the employment of our people; for every dollar's worth of goods brought in from abroad that might and could be made here, I repeat, means just that much less value in the way of work for a Canadian.

Mr. BRADETTE: I wish the Prime Minister could see the conditions in my own section.

Mr. SPENCE: Go behind a wailing wall somewhere.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is talking of the pulp and paper industry, over which this government could not have any control, this being an exporting industry. When we turn to our exports let us remember what they are and what they were. I took the trouble, just for my own satisfaction, to look at the figures. The agricultural and vegetable products of this country exported in 1929 represented a value of $255,307,675; in 1930, with decreased values, the exports of those products had fallen to $160,064,906—or a lessening of 37.2 per cent That was the net result of the depression to which I have referred and the reduction in value of our great grain products. The exports of animals and animal products decreased from $74,924,000 in 1929 to $52,779,000 in 1930, or 29 per cent. But during the first seven months of 1930 the exports of our wood and paper industry had decreased only to $150,000,000. The figure for the corresponding period in 1929 being $165,000,000. Then when the great overproduction of pulp and paper became apparent, through no fault of this government,—except with respect to one plant at least—because the provinces have sole control in regard to the matter, thousands of men who had looked to that industry for employment, small men who cut their pulpwood and sold it to the mills—mills that no longer were occupied in producing paper; the cost of production, lowered though it was in every possible way, did not compensate in any sense for overproduction, and there was no demand either for pulp or paper or for the pulpwood—those men found themselves without a livelihood, and so at once in Ontario and Quebec there was an increase of unemployment brought about by the creation of conditions over which the federal government, be it Liberal or Conservative, had no control. That is known to everyone. That is not a matter which touches upon our national life, except in so far as it touches upon our trade. I say to the right hon. gentleman that he must be aware of the fact that our exports—and I am coming to that phase of it in a moment,—are largely the natural products of this country, and in the very nature of things they comprise to a very considerable extent the raw materials of the industries of other countries. Look at the imports of paper into this country, made in many instances from our pulp.

Mr. YOUNG: What kind of paper?

Mr. BENNETT: Paper made from Canadian pulp in American mills for the production of Canadian magazines and farm journals. Does the hon. member want to know their names ? I shall be glad to give them to him privately at any time.

Mr. RALSTON: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. BENNETT: What we have already done; we have passed legislation by which that drawback has been removed, and Canadian magazines and papers are being printed on the products of Canadian mills.

Mr. RALSTON: Do we produce the magazines?

Mr. BENNETT: We produce the paper on which they are printed; that is what I am talking about. Does the hon. member forget what his Minister of Finance did with respect to a drawback on certain agricultural magazines?

Mr. RALSTON: I know exactly what was done.

Mr. BENNETT: Then my hon. friend knows that the net result was to give business to American mills to provide paper for those magazines, and that has been done away with.

Mr. RALSTON: Are those mills still buying Canadian paper?

Mr. BENNETT: They are doing so wherever possible, and before I finish I will come to that point. The necessity for other countries to buy our raw materials ensures us a market. That is the position and will continue to be the position if we only observe the elementary rules with respect to the government of our own affairs.

Mr. YOUNG: Can they not get it anywhere else?

Mr. BENNETT: In many instances they cannot. I wonder if the hon. member does not know that Providence has been very kind to this country. We have more wonderful resources than almost any other country in the world. There are some forms of minerals necessary for the production of high class steel that can be obtained in this and no other country. It is true that other countries have small deposits not easy of access, but these things have not yet come to light nor are they known to the commercial world.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BENNETT: When the committee rose I had about concluded the statement I was making. But I desire to answer one question that was raised, namely, with respect to export or external trade. I pointed out that our exports had consisted largely of natural products, partly or wholly fabricated, such as vegetables, animal products, wood pulp and paper and non-ferrous metals. The statistics of the country establish clearly that we sell the commodities we do because people must have them; and that is borne out by the fact that our sales of paper in the neighbouring republic are not curtailed except to such a normal extent, in the absorption of newsprint, as one would expect under the present depressed conditions. Its entry is free, and the total decrease in sales for the first seven months of 1929 as compared with the first seven months of 1930 was 8·9 per cent. The decrease in non-ferrous metals, which are produced in abundance in this country and exported in the condition I have mentioned, was only 6·6 per cent. This shows clearly that where the requirements of other countries are as I have indicated, we are still selling our commodities to them. And these commodities, in the main, consist largely of paper and pulp and non-ferrous metals. This is abundantly established by the evidence we have before us. It is also true that in some instances our lumber sales have been taken from us in other countries by the lumber of our competitors, and we have been forced out of those markets. That arises from the very circumstances to which I have alluded.

With respect to our export trade, it is idle for the right hon. gentleman opposite or anyone else to suggest that any government in Canada is not desirous of increasing that trade. But it might be well always to remember that every dollar of imports into this country represents, as I have said so often, the export trade of some other country; and to the extent to which we limit the export trade of another country into Canada, if we can supply the commodities ourselves, we enhance our own position. My hon. friend from Weyburn is constantly reminding us that tariffs can do nothing for agriculture—

Mr. YOUNG: Or anyone else.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad the hon. gentleman adds, "or anyone else." He is fair enough to make his statement universal in its application—that tariffs can be of no benefit to anyone at any time, in any place or under any circumstances. The statement means, of course, that all the rest of the world is wrong and the hon. gentleman right, which I am sure must be gratifying to one possessed of such extensive knowledge.

And now may I make an observation with respect to the last statement of my right hon. friend opposite with reference to revenue tariffs. Henry George, in his book Protection and Free Trade, has something to say in this regard, and I could not help recalling it this afternoon. If you are to have protection, he says, you cannot justify a revenue tariff under any circumstances; for if you believe in the principle you must apply it and not use it as excuse for raising a revenue. That, most economists are agreed, is but a subterfuge; it is nothing better than hypocrisy. You apply the principle of protection and then disclaim it, arguing that it results in revenue. As Mr. George points out, by extracts from others who hold similar views, that is an unsound principle.

This can quite fairly be said with respect to agriculture: that while the wheat grower as such cannot reap benefits from tariffs, every small community in eastern Canada does, to the extent that industry may develop, creating a demand for the products of the farm.

Mr. YOUNG: May.

Mr. BENNETT: And do—indeed must. For example, I heard the other day something about the conditions that exist in the two provinces of Quebec and Ontario, where the communities producing garden truck and similar commodities are close to large industrial centres. To the extent to which you are able to develop an industrial community you create a local demand for the products of farm and field, the products of the dairy, and the fowl that are raised on the farm. In other words, you have a ready and profitable market. If required to do so, I could give illustrations to show where, as a government, we had to make a choice between assisting industry in some community employing 200, 300 and sometimes 500 workers, and allowing that community, on the other hand, to go without that assistance. We had so to adjust the tariff to the situation as to give the Canadian fair competition and an equal opportunity with his competitor, without increasing prices, or allow him to be driven out, with a consequent loss to those who supply the food requiremnts of the population engaged in industry.

Industrial life and agricultural life are correlated. This, it is true, is not so with respect to wheat. It is true that in a purely cereal producing country, whose business is export, it does not apply. And in order to provide compensating adjustments we have, in this very budget, allowed five cents per bushel to the wheat producer. That in itself is a compensating adjustment until such time as the growth of industry and the development of manufacturing may offer the western farmer a local market such as exists in older and more flourishing communities. I need not dwell on that point; it is sufficiently well understood by most.

The figures prepared by the coal industry in Alberta and British Columbia indicate that the food requirements to meet the necessities of the mining population, who have been benefited by the action which has been taken, is sufficient to provide a very considerable business to the farming communities of those provinces—obviously, of course, not as regards vast millions of bushels of wheat produced, but with respect to vegetables, fruit, field crops and fowl raised on the farm.

I have taken some time going into these matters because I thought, from his language, that my right hon. friend was of the opinion, having stated and restated and stated again his position with respect to the subject, that no good purpose was to be served by spending any great length of time discussing each individual item. I have indicated the principles that govern us, and I have indicated that we are prepared to carry out those principles. And when people charge me or the government with changes, I can only say this: that since the first day of June the changed economic conditions in this country, through pressure of competition, which did not appear until inventory values were affected, make it incumbent upon this government, if it is to discharge its trust and it obligations, to meet those changes with corresponding changes. And I rejoice that we have the legislation that enables us so to do. We propose to meet the necessities by making such changes and alterations, not in principle but in the application thereof, as will meet the situation as we see it. If of course, as suggested, our conception of that situation is erroneous, if we have the wrong view, then we must suffer for it. But holding the views we do, realizing the situation as we believe it to be, and as I have indicated it, we propose to go forward and carry into effect whatever changes may be necessary to make the application of the principle for which we stand more and more complete in every phase of our national life in this crisis of our existence.

I am sorry that so much complaint has been made as to the late date of calling parliament. But no one knows better than hon. members opposite the conditions under which we have had to meet that situation. And when I compare it with what was done by the right hon. gentleman when he first took office, considering the difficulties we had to overcome, difficulties which did not face him, we might be forgiven for being slightly later than perhaps the house thought we should be in calling parliament. If, however, it is the will of parliament that we should meet in January we shall endeavour to carry out that will. If parliament thinks that we should meet in February, we shall do so. But I think the country, without being generous but only being fair, will not make any criticism of the government under the circumstances having regard to the difficulties it had to encounter in connection with the meeting of parliament on the 12th March of this year, especially in view of the fact that this was only a few days later than the date my right hon. friend first met this house in 1922 as Prime Minister.

As the discussion on the items proceeds, I shall endeavour to answer such inquiries as may be made, but obviously I can only repeat that they represent the application of the principle to which I have alluded. If it be thought that in some instances that principle is applied with too much rigour, I can give only this answer that on the facts as presented to us and on the analysis we have made of them, in no instance will it be found that protection has been used for the purpose either of increasing prices or of aiding exploitation, but only for the purpose of conferring upon Canadians what I conceive to be their right, the right of fair competition and of an equal opportunity with those with whom they compete.

Mr. YOUNG: Do not forget it.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall not forget it, because it is the basis of the right of Canadians to live; it is the right they have. That right we shall protect. I might say, if I were so minded, in regard to the observations that were made this afternoon, that with respect to export trade, we considered the matter from the standpoint of another country. That in itself concedes the soundness of our position. Go and ask any other country to give up part of its market to oblige the Dominion of Canada. Will it do so? Not one of them.

Mr. YOUNG: Is anybody asking us to do it?

Mr. BENNETT: I can say this: The only way in which that principle enunciated by the right hon. gentleman to-day can be carried out is just by doing that very thing. That is the difficulty in the world to-day. I have so often said that I am not tied to tariffs by any affection. Tariffs, I repeat, are merely the instruments that we use for our purposes, and as every other country is using them to the extent I indicated this afternoon, this country cannot remain unprotected in a protected world. Everyone admits that. When I talk to my friends from the other side of the line, they at once admit the soundness of our position, namely, to care for Canada and protect it in the midst of a protected world.

These schedules to which attention is now being directed we believe are prepared for the purpose of giving effect to the principles I have stated, and we have an assurance that prices will not rise by reason of their going into effect. We are confident, from our own experience and observation, that the competition which is created within our own borders will ensure us that measure of price-lowering which is essential for our development. Of that we feel certain. I cannot take time tonight, but I may do so before the session ends, to deal with some of the monstrously erroneous statements that have been made in connection with certain industries. In one instance it was indicated to the Canadian people that the loss by reason of prices which it is said they had been compelled to pay on account of the tariff is greater than an entire year's revenue of the company affected. This is a small detail, but it is important to bear in mind how easy it is to draw wrong conclusions from erroneous premises. I can only commend these schedules to the committee as an effort made by the government to advance the interests of the Canadian people as a whole, of agriculture, labour, the manufacturer, and every other interest within our borders.

Mr. YOUNG: I wish to protest on this occasion against the cold indifference with which the Prime Minister views any efforts on the part of hon. gentlemen on this side of the house to secure information. The very day his budget was brought down I placed on the order paper a resolution asking for the production of the briefs and representations made by the publishers in regard to tariff matters. Expecting that I might be refused that information, I at the same time wrote a letter to the publishers themselves, asking them if they would furnish me with copies of their briefs and if they had any objection to my using them in public. I received a reply from them stating that their representations had been given to the government; that they did not feel justified in giving them to me without consulting the government, but that they had no objection whatever to the government giving them to me or making them public. Nevertheless, although we wanted this information at this time in order to discuss these items intelligently, we have not got it.

Mr. BENNETT: I got the hon. gentleman's note after he had mentioned the question the other day. To what brief does he refer? The gentleman whom he mentions did not file a brief; he filed a short statement in connection with item 184 in the tariff schedules, the magazine schedule. I intended to ask my hon. friend just to what he did refer. I certainly did not quite understand him.

Mr. YOUNG: I have not seen all the documents that have been filed. I understand they have filed certain documents asking for particular considerations, and I wanted to know what they were. The gentleman referred to in the letter did not feel justified in giving me any information in confidence, but he told me to apply to the Prime Minister and he would ask his principals if they had any objection to giving it.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know exactly to what document the hon. member refers.

If it is the one dealing with the magazine duties, the gentleman whose name he mentions in the letter is the one who saw me and gave me some memoranda with respect to the matter. If it is that—and I know of none other at the moment—there is no reason why the hon. gentleman may not peruse it as much as he likes. If the gentleman has a copy of it he can give it to my hon. friend. Is that what is meant?

Mr. YOUNG: I have also the impression they applied for certain things in regard to drawbacks; at least they were interested in drawbacks. I have not seen the documents, but I should like to get possession of them. I do not believe my right hon. friend is trying deliberately to keep us in the dark, but he has such a refined sense of honour in keeping things secret, I think he is overstraining it a little in not giving us information that would be really useful to us and that would not hurt anybody else if it were in our possession.

He told us this afternoon that when he came into power last fall unemployment was rampant in Canada. He did not say that it is better to-day, but he said that if we were in power, it would be still worse. I think he told the people he would end unemployment if he came into power.

Mr. BENNETT: And he will.

Mr. YOUNG: I have under my hand the bureau of statistics figures of employment for June of this year and every other year since 1921, and this is what I find for the manufacturing industries:

Month—	Index number
June, 1930	113.6
June, 1931	99.4

This year it is the lowest it has been for many years. The figures for all employment are as follows:

Month—	Index number
June, 1930	116.5
June, 1931	103.6

Again it is down in a month where normally one would expect employment to be at the peak. It is lower in June in the manufacturing industries, which are the industries of my right hon. friend's special consideration.

For May and June of this year the figures for the manufacturing industries are as follows:

Month—	Index number
June	99.4

We find that employment in June is lower than in May. In other words, unemployment is becoming worse instead of better in spite of the new tariff launched last fall by my right hon. friend, a tariff which he seems to think has saved the country.

He said a short time ago that by lessening the trade of other countries with Canada we could improve our own position. I cannot understand the mentality of a man who takes that view. I cannot conceive how anybody can think that by injuring his neighbour he can help himself. Trade is exchange for mutual benefit. If it did not pay us to buy the goods of foreign countries, we would not buy them.

Mr. MANION: Is not home trade good too?

Mr. YOUNG: Yes, it is good, and if it did not pay us to buy home-made goods we would not buy them.

Mr. MANION: If two Canadians trade between themselves, then according to my hon. friend's theory, there are two profits for the two Canadians, but when a Canadian trades with an American there is only one profit. But apparently home trade does not matter to my hon. friend.

Mr. YOUNG: My hon. friend has heard of the jack-knife policy, where you trade your knife from one hand to the other, and expect to grow rich by so doing.

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman said that trade profits both parties to it, and I agree.

Mr. YOUNG: I say that we exchange goods for mutual benefit. When we buy goods from foreign countries it is because they have something which we want more than they do, and when we sell to foreign countries it is because they want our goods more than we do. We make an exchange and both parties benefit. My hon. friend asks why we should not exchange all our goods between ourselves. Why cannot we sell all our wheat to Canadians? Simply because they could not begin to buy it. That is why we have to buy goods from other countries if we wish to sell our goods to them, and when you shut foreign goods out of this country you are denying the whole of our exporters a market. How are we going to be paid for our wheat, our copper, our nickel, our pulpwood, our paper, if we do not accept foreign goods in exchange? The trouble in this country is that for the goods we export we cannot get much, and then when we buy goods from foreign countries the customs officer steps in and says that on the things that we are to receive in exchange for our wheat he will impose a duty of 25 or 35 or 40 or 50 per cent, as the case may be. When you shut goods out of this country you are simply saying to the exporters that they must take just that much less for their wheat, for their pulpwood, for their nickel, for their paper, and so on. How can anyone hope to benefit himself by adopting that dog-in-the-manger policy, by that beggar-my-neighbour policy, thinking he can benefit himself by hurting his neighbour?

The right hon. the Prime Minister has admitted that this protective tariff could not be of much benefit to the wheat farmer, but, he said, in this budget he has given the farmer a compensating adjustment to the extent of five cents a bushel on his wheat. Up to when? While this adjustment is being made, while the home market is being developed sufficiently to take care of the farmers' products. And this adjustment is to last for one year! Does my right hon. friend really believe that by giving the farmers of the west five cents a bushel on their wheat for this year, we shall at the end of that period have developed our manufacturing industries in this country and increased our population sufficiently to absorb the entire wheat crop? Surely he cannot believe that. I pointed out on a former occasion that this five cents a bushel on wheat amounts to about eight per cent of the price of the farmers' wheat, but the exploitation that he is made to suffer because of this tariff amounts to about 30 per cent of his entire income. And we are offering him what? Five cents a bushel compensation for 30 per cent spoliation, and you call that a compensatory adjustment to the wheat farmer.

My right hon. friend mentioned a number of articles this afternoon to illustrate what he had done for the people of this country. In the first place he mentioned safety pins.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: What does a bachelor want with safety pins?

Mr. YOUNG: Yes. My right hon. friend tells us that because somebody outside offered to sell safety pins in this country very cheaply he found it necessary to shut them out. I looked up the trade returns on pins, and I find that our import of pins last year amount to $128,000, on which a duty of $30,000 was paid. I could not find the domestic production, but looking up our exports I found that pins and needles were grouped together, and that we exported pins and needles to the amount of $502,000, and our imports amounted to $514,000. So our imports and exports substantially balanced. If we are doing ourselves harm by buying pins from abroad, surely we are benefiting by selling pins abroad, and as I said, our imports and exports are about the same. But my right hon. friend is going to shut out this $128,000 worth of pins, and in doing so he is going to lose some $30,000 of revenue.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. YOUNG: That is right. He tells us that by so doing he is going to keep in employment some fifty men. He could pretty nearly pay them their wages out of the revenue he is losing. I wonder if my right hon. friend has any idea how many women in this country, with children around them, find even such a cheap thing as pins very scarce and hard to get. It is all right for hon. gentlemen to laugh, but I know. Go into almost any house where there are children and you will find how scarce pins are. In order to carry out his policy, my right hon. friend will actually steal the pins from the little babies in the cradle.

My right hon. friend also spoke of what his government had done to encourage the piano industry in this country. He told us that the development of the radio and the phonograph had nearly ruined the market for pianos, that there was not much demand for pianos now, and the result was that other countries were offering to sell pianos in Canada cheaply, and he proposed to increase the duty to keep them out. Imports of pianos last year amounted to $288,000, and our exports to $218,000, so there is not very much difference. Here again my right hon. friend proposes to sacrifice revenue to the amount of $86,000 in order to encourage the making of pianos in Canada. Why are there not as many pianos sold in this country as formerly? Radio and the phonograph may account for it in part, but not entirely. There are thousands and thousands of people in this country who would buy a piano to-morrow if they could. Why do they not do so? Because the price of a piano is just beyond their reach. It is for no other reason on earth. If my right hon. friend wants to create a market in Canada for pianos, let him bring down legislation that will bring the price of pianos within the reach of the people. Let him introduce legislation reducing the price of pianos, and immediately he will bring new buyers into the market for pianos, thereby increasing production and giving more employment. But by increasing the duty on pianos he puts them out of the reach of just so many more people, and ruins the market that he is trying to create.

My right hon. friend also spoke of book and magazine paper which he had shut out. I am speaking from memory, but I believe that the history of book paper coming into this country is this. It carried a certain rate of duty. Then some two or three years ago a rebate was granted to the Canadian publishers on book paper, printing ink, the machinery that they use, and generally on the articles that enter into their production. The result was that our Canadian publishers were able to effect a saving in the production of their magazines, which saving they put into improvements and betterments in the magazines. By improving their magazines they increased their sales to such an extent that they multiplied by three the amount of book paper which they required to use in producing Canadian magazines. My right hon. friend told us that our Canadian publishers must use Canadian paper. I understand that it actually costs the Canadian publisher 10 per cent more to print a magizine on Canadian-made paper than on American-made paper, because the Canadian-made paper is of inferior quality. So my right hon. friend is compelling the Canadian publishers not only to buy paper at a higher price, but also to use an inferior product which adds 10 per cent to the publishers' production costs.

My right hon. friend also spoke of certain metals which we have, and which no other country has, and he thinks we can force the rest of the world to buy them at our own price. Let us take nickel, for example, which possibly my right hon. friend had in mind at the time. We own 85 per cent of the world's nickel.

Mr. GORDON: Ninety per cent.

Mr. YOUNG: All right; we will say ninety per cent. We can more than supply the entire world demand for nickel. The development of the nickel industry in Canada has reached the point where it is necessary not only to supply the present market but to create a larger one. The problem confronting nickel companies to-day—and I think hon. gentlemen opposite will agree—is how to find new uses for their product.

An hon. MEMBER: How about a five cent piece?

Mr. YOUNG: They have to find new uses—and in answer to my hon. friend I will say the five cent piece is to be given to the wheat farmer. If the policy of my right hon. friend is carried out, the cost of producing nickel will be increased, the cost on the world's market will be increased and the use of that commodity will be thereby limited.

Mr. GORDON: How does he do that, if he adopts the reverse policy?

Mr. YOUNG: If the reverse policy is adopted nickel will come into use for different things; more buyers will come into our markets; there will be a greater demand for nickel; there will be more men employed in its production, its refining, its transportation, and thus many other industries will be assisted.

An hon. MEMBER: Rot.

Mr. YOUNG: It is not rot—these are actual facts. However sincere my right hon. friend may be, his policy is having the very reverse effect. The other night I tried to explain that the production of manufactured goods per capita is much greater measured in dollars and cents than the production of primary products per capita. When manufactured goods are shut out to the extent my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) would sugest, namely $800,000,000 a year, you are shutting out goods and creating employment for 147,000 men, who will be required to produce those goods at home, but you would be throwing out of employment twice that many men because those $800,000,000 worth of imports must be paid for by $800,000,000 worth of exports. Those exports would be of primary products the production of which requires twice as many men as the production of manufactured lines. Therefore by increasing the prices in this country my hon. friend's policy is bound to restrict still further the buying power of the people, cause a further slackening up of business, and create more instead of less unemployment.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): Will the Prime Minister assure this committee that he will apply impartially to all branches of Canadian industry the policies he has so often emphatically announced to this assembly?

Mr. BENNETT: So far as it is possible to do so, he will.

Mr. EULER: Mr. Chairman, I should like to submit a question to the Minister of Finance, and I hope he will answer it more fully than he answered a question I directed to him a few days ago. I am sure he must have known that his reply at that time did not constitute an answer at all.

He has repeatedly stated, and said again to-night, that he wants such a tariff as will give a fair opportunity and ensure equal competition to Canadians. When I spoke on the budget I said that I had no fault to find with that kind of tariff. On that occasion I stated that the Prime Minister had repeatedly expressed his desire to have such a tariff as would ensure that all commodities possible of production in Canada would be made in Canada. If I am misquoting him I should be pleased to be corrected, because I find a difficulty in reconciling those two principles. I should like to ask the Prime Minister to make an explanation, because if he enacts such a tariff as will provide fair competition and give an equal opportunity to Canadians, he does not imply exclusion. If there is competition at all, goods must be coming into the country; if it were not so there could be no competition whatsoever. To my mind such a condition does not agree with his other principle, namely the imposition of a tariff which will shut out such goods as can be produced in Canada. I am honestly asking for information on this point and I would appreciate an attempt on the part of the Prime Minister to reconcile those statements and make his position clear.

Mr. BENNETT: May I remind my hon. friend (Mr. Euler) that I said all the Canadian required was an equal opportunity and fair competition, and I added, as has been my habit, that no Canadian asks more, if he is certain that he will at least have a market for his product.

Mr. EULER: Does my right hon. friend think that that necessarily follows?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. Give any Canadian an equal chance with his competitor; give him fair competition, as distinguished from unfair, and he will get the business.

Mr. EULER: All the business?

Mr. BENNETT: He may not get it all, but he will get all he wants. The reasons are quite obvious. I have said nothing about prohibitions, but did say I was anxious that the Canadian should manufacture everything he required if it could be produced in this country under conditions of fair competition and equal opportunity. To do more than that might mean on the one hand exploitation and on the other hand putting a premium on inefficiency. If you gave him less, it would be unfair; if you gave him more, you would be placing a premium on inefficiency. Unfairness and destruction would result in the first case and exploitation in the latter.

Mr. EULER: I thank my right hon. friend for the explanation he has given, but I think he will find, as most business men admit, that where there is equal opportunity and fair competition both competitors will sell some goods. I am not objecting to that, but I think the inference thrown out by the Prime Minister that if the Canadian has an equal opportunity he will get all the business is perhaps a little more complimentary to Canadians than I would care to be,—and at that I have a very good opinion of the Canadian people.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, as no item has been called this would appear to be a sort of supplementary budget debate. I am not going to prolong it, but I think it has some value inasmuch as at least it gives us an opportunity of understanding each other's viewpoints. We look upon the protection policy of our hon. friends opposite—especially their efforts of last fall—as something in the nature of a disease which will have to run its course before any remedy can be effected. My hon. friends opposite look upon low tariff men or no tariff men as those afflicted with another sort of disease. If at least we can reach the point where we respect each other's viewpoints the present discussion will not have been without some purpose.

May I point out to the Prime Minister that it is one thing to put up a tariff such as that of last fall, especially on farm implements, and it is quite another thing to make the farmers buy those implements, to buy implements they do not want to buy, or to use implements which they find are not best adapted for their particular purposes. Surely the Prime Minister remembers the reciprocity struggle and the bitterly disappointing effect it had on the farmers in the west. Although the reciprocity pact provided for a lowering of tariffs, western farmers were so disappointed because of losing the American market for their farm produce that many of them deliberately bought more farm machinery from the United States than they had ever done before. That may have been shortsighted, it may have been in some cases foolish, but it was very natural.

I do not think however that the experience at the time of the reciprocity pact will be repeated on this occasion. I have two reasons for making that statement. Although the tariff has gone up tremendously and we do not know where it will end, I do not think that the tendency to buy more farm machinery from the United States will grow. In the first place just now, the farmers have nothing to buy with; their purchasing power is lower than I have ever known it to be. They are tinkering up their old harness, patching up their machinery and making it operate as long as they can. If the tendency to which I referred does not revive—that is the buying of more American farm machinery, no thanks are due to this government because they have done everything in their power to encourage it. But it will not be done for another reason. During the eight or nine years that the King government was in power we believe our gradual reduction of duties all along the line—increasing the British preference and decreasing the duties on farm equipment and many other commodities—had the effect of promoting a better feeling between the west and the east, particularly between our western farmers and our eastern manufacturers. I wonder if anybody will deny that? That good feeling still largely prevails unless my hon. friends opposite have already driven it away entirely by their tariff policy. But, as I said before, no thanks to this government. They are inviting the west almost to do it, and when we think of the other things that the government have done, especially to the wheat pool, it will be surprising if there is not resentment shown in that or some other way—possibly by the ballot. I suggest to my hon. friends opposite their careful consideration of what I have stated before they go too far with their high tariff policy—they have gone pretty far already.

Since the Prime Minister has referred to butter, let me also refer to it. Why did he double the duty on butter that the farmers themselves asked for? The national dairy council asked for a duty of only four cents a pound when they appeared before the tariff board, and they got it. On more than one occasion in my presence they were advised by the late hon. Mr. Robb to take their case before the board. They did not do so at the time because they felt they had not sufficient evidence to justify an application; later on they presented their case for a four cent tariff, and, as I have said, their request was conceded at once by the tariff board. That was all the protection they wanted, and yet my right hon. friend went twice as high—he placed the duty at eight cents. I wonder if that is what he did with the manufacturers? When our administration went out of office I did not know any manufacturer who wanted a higher tariff. I was not around the year before, and they may have come to the government for higher protection. but I do not think they did. If the present government dealt with the manufacturers as they did with the dairymen, then they must have given them twice as much as they wanted. That is what we object to. We should like to know why the government did it. Perhaps the Prime Minister will tell us now why he gave the dairymen twice as much duty on butter as they asked for. The dairymen actually objected to that duty of eight cents per pound. If the right hon. gentleman carries out that policy all along the line in connection with other commodities, he might tell us so. We have been criticized for adopting a tariff for a revenue, because such a tariff embodies a certain amount of protection.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When asked in a nice way like that, certainly.

Mr. HACKETT: What duty did the Dunning budget impose on butter?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Four cents.

Mr. HACKETT: Against the United States?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Whatever the countervailing duty was.

Mr. HACKETT: It was twelve cents.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think so, but it did not matter very much—there was no butter coming from there anyway. For the past forty years our main source of butter supplies when we are short has been the Antipodes. When other Conservative administrations have been in power on more than one occasion our butter imports rose as high as 7,000,000 pounds a year, but this excited no comment until recently. My hon. friends opposite do not seem to know yet the difference between a protective tariff and a revenue tariff. A protective tariff is primarily for protection, the revenue factor being so incidental that it often almost disappears. That is why this government is short of cash and will continue so as long as it persists in its policy of higher and still higher protection. On the other hand, a tariff for revenue is primarily for revenue, with such protection as incidentally goes with it. That is all I desire to say. If my hon. friend from Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) wishes to ask another question I shall be glad to answer it if I can.

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Customs Tariff, being chapter forty-four of the revised statutes of Canada, as amended by chapter thirteen of the acts of 1930 (first session), and chapter three of the acts of 1930 (second session), by repealing sections two to eighteen, inclusive, thereof and by substituting the following therefor:

(b) "gallon" means an imperial gallon;

(c) "hoop, band and strip" when applied to iron or steel mean flat forms not more than fourteen inches in width and less than ·1875 inch in thickness;

Paragraph agreed to on division.

2. The expressions mentioned in section two of the Customs Act, whenever they occur herein or in any act relating to the customs, unless the context otherwise requires, have the meaning assigned to them respectively by the said section two; and any power conferred upon the governor in council by the Customs Act to transfer dutiable goods to the list of goods which may be imported free of duty or to reduce the rates of duty on duitable goods is not hereby abrogated or impaired.

Paragraph agreed to on division.

3. Subject to the provisions of this act and of the Customs Act, there shall be levied, collected and paid upon all goods enumerated, or referred to as not enumerated, in schedule A to this act, when such goods are imported into Canada or taken out of warehouse for consumption therein, the several rates of duties of customs, if any, set opposite to each item respectively or charged on goods as not enumerated, in the column of the tariff applicable to the goods, subject to the following conditions, viz:

(a) The rates of customs duties, if any, set forth in column (1), "British preferential tariff," shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of the following British countries when conveyed without transhipment from a port of any British country enjoying the benefits of the British preferential tariff into a sea, lake or river port of Canada:

(i) The United Kingdom,

(ii) The British colony of Bermuda,

(iii) The British colonies commonly called the British West Indies, including the following:

The Bahamas,
Jamaica,
Turks and Caicos Islands,
The Leeward Islands (Antigua, St. Christopher-Nevis, Dominica, Montserrat and the Virgin Islands),
The Windward Islands (Grenada, St. Vincent and St. Lucia), Barbados,
Trinidad and Tobago,

(iv) British Guiana,

(v) British India,

(vi) Ceylon,

(vii) Straits Settlements,

(viii) New Zealand,

(ix) Union of South Africa,

(x) Southern Rhodesia,

(xi) any other British colony or possession admitted to the benefits of the British preferential tariff in Canada, in the manner hereinafter provided;

Provided, however, that goods entitled to the benefit of the British preferential tariff shall be accorded such benefits when such goods are shipped on a through bill of lading consigned to a consignee in a specified port in Canada when such goods are transferred at a port in a British possession, and conveyed without further transhipment into a sea, lake or river port of Canada;

(b) The rates of customs duties, if any, set forth in column (2), "intermediate tariff," shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of any British or foreign country to which the benefits of such intermediate tariff shall have been extended in the manner hereinafter provided, when imported direct from such foreign country or from a British country;

(c) The rates of customs duties, if any, set forth in column (3), "general tariff," shall apply to all goods not entitled to admission under the intermediate tariff or under the British preferential tariff;

(d) Proof of origin, as prescribed by the minister shall be furnished with the bill of entry at the custom-house for goods admitted to entry under any of the tariffs in schedule A: and the decision of the minister shall be final as to the tariff or surtax applicable in any case to imported goods by reason of their origin;

(e) Goods for which entry is claimed under the intermediate tariff must be bona fide the produce or manufacture of a country which has been admitted to the benefits of the intermediate tariff;

(f) Every manufactured article to be admitted under the British preferential tariff must be bona fide the manufacture of a British country entitled to the benefits of the British preferential tariff, and a substantial portion of the value of the manufactured article must have been produced by labour in one or more of such countries.

(2) The governor in council may make such regulations as are deemed necessary for carrying out the provisions of the several tariffs mentioned in this section.

Mr. RALSTON: We will have an opportunity of discussing the items later?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, these are the administrative clauses. In the main they are just as they were before; for instance, in No. 3 we have in subsection (a) the words, "sea, lake or river port of Canada," instead of as formerly "sea or river port." Each item will have to be considered.

Mr. YOUNG: Referring to clause 1 (b)—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): That has been carried.

Mr. YOUNG: No matter; we did not have our copies before us. Clause 1 (b) reads:

"gallon" means an imperial gallon;

In a bulletin issued by the customs department it is said that with respect to gasoline "gallons" shall mean wine gallons. Why is a gallon an imperial gallon except when we import gasoline? If we went to a filling station and found the man filling up our tank with wine gallons of gasoline we would have him arrested. Yet when paying duty on gasoline we have to pay it on the wine gallon.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. gentleman is in error. The same standard sized receptacle is used in the main for the handling of gasoline. My memory is that forty-two wine gallons are equivalent to thirty-five imperial gallons, but I am speaking subject to correction.

Mr. RALSTON: One-sixth more, roughly.

Mr. BENNETT: At any rate the imperial gallon is defined by our standards and is fixed as the measurement. In order that there may be no misapprehension we insert in this statute that "gallon" means an imperial gallon.

Mr. YOUNG: Why does the customs department issue a bulletin saying that when importing gasoline for duty purposes the gallon shall be the wine gallon?

Mr. BENNETT: I think my hon. friend is wrong in respect to that. I apprehend he has in mind the question of the fixing of price for duty purposes where the gallon of the country of origin is the wine gallon; that is, the gallon measurement in the United States is the wine gallon, and as it is referring to that country's production the wine gallon may be used in that regard. I will ask the commissioner.

Mr. YOUNG: And does not that have the effect of still further increasing the duty?

Mr. BENNETT: I am informed that the imperial gallon is the standard for duty purposes.

4. The governor in council may, by order in council,

(a) from time to time, extend the benefit of the British preferential tariff to any British country not named in paragraph (a) of section three, and from and after the publication of such order in council in the Canada Gazette the British preferential tariff shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of such British country, subject to the provisions of this act;

(b) from time to time, withdraw the benefit of the British preferential tariff from any British country, other than the United Kingdom, which has received the said benefit, and from and after the publication of such order in the Canada Gazette, the general tariff or the intermediate tariff, as mentioned in the said order, shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of such British country, subject to the provisions of this act;

(c) from time to time, extend the benefit of the British preferential tariff to any territory administered under a mandate of the League of Nations by any British country, to which British country the benefit of the British preferential tariff has been extended; and from and after the publication of such order in council in the Canada Gazette the British preferential tariff shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of such territory, subject to the provisions of this act;

(d) from time to time, withdraw the benefit of the British preferential tariff from any territory administered under a mandate of the League of Nations which has received said benefit; and from and after the publication of such order in the Canada Gazette, the general tariff or the intermediate tariff, as mentioned in the said order, shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of such territory subject to the provisions of this act;

(e) from time to time, extend to any British country the benefit of rates of customs duties more favourable than those of the British preferential tariff, and from and after the publication of such order in the Canada Gazette, the rates of duties so ordered shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of such British country, subject to the provisions of this act;

(f) from time to time, withdraw from any British country to which they have been extended rates of customs duties more favourable than those of the British preferential tariff, and from and after the publication of such order in the Canada Gazette, the British preferential tariff or the intermediate tariff, as directed in the said order, shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of such British country, subject to the provisions of this act;

(g) from time to time, extend the benefit of the intermediate tariff, in whole or in part, to any British or foreign country the produce or manufactures of which have previously been subject to the rates of customs duties set forth in the general tariff, and from and after the publication of such order in the Canada Gazette, the rates of duty set forth in the intermediate tariff, so far as they are mentioned in the said order, shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of such British or foreign country, when imported direct from such foreign country or from a British country, subject to the provisions of this act;

(h) from time to time, withdraw the benefit of the intermediate tariff from any country to which it has been extended, and from and after the publication of such order in the Canada Gazette the rates of customs duties set forth in the general tariff shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of such country, subject to the provisions of this act.

5. The importer of goods entitled to the benefits of the British preferential tariff shall be entitled to a discount of ten per centum on the amount of duty computed under such tariff, when such goods are conveyed without transhipment from a port of a country enjoying the benefits of the British preferential tariff inta a sea, lake or river port of Canada.

(2) Goods entitled to the benefits of the British preferential tariff shall be entitled to the discount authorized by this section, when shipped on a through bill of lading consigned to a consignee in a specified port in Canada, when such goods are transferred at a port in a British possession and conveyed without further transhipment into a sea, lake or river port of Canada.

(3) The discount mentioned in this section shall not apply to duties on any of the following articles, viz., wines, malt liquors, spirits, spirituous liquors, liquid medicines and articles containing alcohol; sugar, tobacco, cigars and cigarettes.

(4) The said discount shall not apply in the case in which the duty does not exceed fifteen per centum ad valorem, or, in the case of a specific duty or a specific and ad valorem duty combined in which the computed rate does not exceed fifteen per centum ad valorem, or to goods admitted into Canada which have the benefit of reductions provided for in the Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 1926.

Paragraph agreed to on division.

6. In the case of articles exported to Canada of a class or kind made or produced in Canada, if the export or actual selling price to an importer in Canada is less than the fair market value of the same article when sold for home consumption in the usual and ordinary course in the country whence exported to Canada at the time of its exportation to Canada, or is less than the fair market value or value for duty thereof as determined under the provisions of section thirty-six of the Customs Act, or is less than the fair market value thereof as fixed by the governor in council under the provisions of section thirty-seven of the Customs Act, or is less than the value for duty thereof as determined by the minister under the provisions of paragraphs (a) and (e) of section forty-one of the Customs Act, or is less than the fair market value thereof as fixed by the minister under the provisions of section forty-three of the Customs Act, there shall, in addition to the duties otherwise established, be levied, collected and paid on such article, on its importation into Canada, a special dumping duty, equal to the difference between the said selling price of the article for export and the said fair market value thereof or value for duty thereof; and such special or dumping duty shall be levied, collected and paid on such article although it is not otherwise dutiable.

Provided that the said special duty shall not exceed fifty per cent ad valorem in any case, and the following goods shall be exempt from such special duty, viz:

Goods of a class subject to duty under the Excise Act.

Provided, notwithstanding, that on importations from Australia under the Australian Trade Agreement Act, 1925, the said special duty shall not exceed fifteen per cent ad valorem in any case.

Notwithstanding anything in this Act contained the levying and collection heretofore of special or dumping duty in cases where the fair market value of goods was determined by the minister, acting or purporting to act under the provisions of section forty-seven A of the Customs Act, as enacted by section three of chapter eighteen of the statutes of 1922 (section forty-three of the Customs Act, R.S., 1927), is hereby ratified and confirmed.

(2) Excise duties or excise taxes shall be disregarded in estimating the market value of goods for the purposes of special duty when the goods are entitled to entry under the British preferential tariff, intermediate tariff, or any tariff more favourable than the general tariff.

(3) Customs duties of the United Kingdom shall be disregarded in estimating the market value of wines for the purposes of special duty when the same are entitled to entry under the intermediate tariff or any tariff more favourable than the general tariff and are bottled in bond in the United Kingdom and imported direct therefrom.

(4) "Export price" or "selling price" in this section shall be held to mean and include the exporter's price for the goods, exclusive of all charges thereon after their shipment from the place whence exported directly to Canada.

(5) If at any time it appears to the satisfaction of the minister that the payment of the special duty by this section provided for is being evaded by the shipment of goods on consignment without sale prior to such shipment, the minister may in any case or class of cases authorize such action as is deemed necessary to collect on such goods or any of them the same special duty as if the goods had been sold to an importer in Canada prior to their shipment to Canada.

(6) If at any time it appears to the satisfaction of the minister that any person owning or controlling or interested in a business in Canada and also in any other country, or any person carrying on a business in any other country and owning or controlling or interested in a business operating in Canada, and by reason thereof is enabled to import goods for further manufacture or assembling or for resale, and while complying with the legal requirements on importation disposes of such imported goods, whether in the form as imported or as further processed, assembled or manufactured, at prices below the duty paid value thereof as entered at customs plus or including all charges upon the goods after shipment from the place whence exported directly to Canada, including sales, distribution and advertising costs, and plus, if any, the cost of processing, assembling or further manufacturing in Canada, the minister may declare that goods of such class or kind were and are on importation subject to an additional special or dumping duty not exceeding fifty per cent and authorize such action as is deemed necessary for the collection thereof.

(7) If the full amount of any special duty of customs as herein provided has not been paid on goods imported, the customs entry thereof shall be amended and the deficiency paid upon the demand of the collector.

(8) The minister may make such regulations as are deemed necessary for carrying out the provisions of this section and for its enforcement.

Mr. RALSTON: Is there any change in this?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, the one subsection has been slightly changed, though perhaps it has not been changed from what was the practice under the regulation. The duty paid value is now defined as the cost plus or including all charges upon the goods after shipment from the place whence exported directly to Canada, including sales, distribution and advertising costs. In practice I believe that rule has been followed, and it is now embodied in the statute itself.

7. Goods imported into Canada the product or manufacture of any foreign country which treats imports from Canada les favourably than those from other countries, may be made subject by order of the governor in council in the case of goods already dutiable to a surtax over and above the duties specified in schedule A to this act, and in the case of goods not dutiable to a rate of duty, not exceeding, in either case, thirty-three and one-third per centum ad valorem.

(2) Goods the product or manufacture of any foreign country imported into Canada in vessels admitted to registration under the laws of such foreign country may, if such foreign country imposes higher duties of customs upon goods imported into such country in vessels registered in Canada than upon the like goods when imported in vessels of such country, be made subject by order of the governor in council in the case of goods already dutiable to a surtax over and above the duties specified in schedule A to this act, and in the case of goods not dutiable to a rate of duty, not exceeding, in either case, thirty-three and one-third per centum ad valorem.

(3) Within the limitations in this section hereinbefore prescribed any such goods may by such order in council be made subject to a surtax or rate, as the case may be, differing from the surtax or rate to which another class of goods may be thereby, or by any other such order, made subject.

(4) The governor in council may make regulations for carrying out the purposes of this section and may by order in council suspend the surtax or rate in whole or in part from application to the goods of such foreign country or any class of such goods.

(5) The decision of the governor in council shall be final on any question which may arise regarding the application of a surtax or rate imposed pursuant to this section.

On the materials set forth in schedule B to this act, when used for consumption in Canada for the purpose specified in that schedule, there may be paid, out of the consolidated revenue fund, the several rates of drawback of customs duties set opposite to each item respectively in that schedule, under regulations by the governor in council.

12 (2) If pig iron imported into Canada mixed with pig iron made in Canada has entered into the manufacture of mowing machines, reapers, harvesters, binders and attachments for binders, the drawback payable in pursuance of this section, under regulations by the governor in council, may be computed on the total quantity of pig iron, including pig iron made as aforesaid entering into such goods; provided, however, that the total drawback payable shall not exceed ninety-nine per cent of the duty paid on all the pig iron imported and used by the manufacturer of such goods in manufacturing such goods and other goods.

13. The importation into Canada of any goods enumerated, described or referred to in schedule C to this act is prohibited; and any such goods

Any goods imported in violation of the terms of this section shall be forfeited to the crown and shall be dealt with as the minister directs.

Mr. BENNETT: The language of this section is somewhat more ample than it was previously.

Paragraph agreed to on division.

15. Whenever the governor in council deems it to be in the public interest to inquire into any conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement alleged to exist among manufacturers or dealers in any article of commerce to unduly promote the advantage of the manufacturers or dealers in such article at the expense of the consumers, the governor in council may commission or empower any judge of the supreme court, or of the Exchequer Court of Canada, or of any superior court or county court in Canada, to hold an inquiry in a summary way and report to the governor in council whether such conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement exists.

(2) The judge may compel the attendance of witnesses and examine them under oath and require the production of books and papers, and shall have such other necessary powers as are conferred upon him by the governor in council for the purpose of such inquiry.

(3) If the judge reports that such conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement exists in respect of such article, the governor in council may admit the article free of duty, or so reduce the duty thereon as to give to the public the benefit of reasonable competition in the article, if it appears to the governor in council that such disadvantage to the consumer is facilitated by the duties of customs imposed on a like article.

Paragraph agreed to on division.

16. The governor in council may from time to time, as he deems it expedient, order that goods of any description or class specified in such order, imported into Canada, shall be marked, stamped, branded or labelled in legible English or French words, in a conspicuous place that shall not be covered or obscured by any subsequent attachments or arrangements, so as to indicate the country of origin; and said marking, stamping, branding or labelling shall be as nearly indelible and permanent as the nature of the goods will permit.

(2) All orders made by the governor in council under this section shall have effect from and after the day on which the same are published in the Canada Gazette, or from and after such later day as is appointed for the purpose of such orders, and during such time as is therein expressed, or if no time is expressed for that purpose, then until the same are revoked or altered.

(3) All such goods imported into Canada after the date of the coming into force of any such order of the governor in council which do not comply with the requirements of such order, shall be subject to an additional duty of ten per centum ad valorem to be levied on the value for duty purposes, and in addition such goods shall not be released from customs possession until they have been so marked, stamped, branded or labelled under customs supervision at the expense of the importer.

(4) If any person shall violate any of the provisions so established relating to the marking, stamping, branding or labelling of any such imported goods, or shall deface, destroy, remove, alter or obliterate any such marks, stamps, brands or labels, with intent to conceal the information given by or contained in such marks, stamps, brands or labels, he shall be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding one thousand dollars, or to imprisonment not exceeding one year, or to both fine and imprisonment.

(5) The minister may make such regulations as are deemed necessary for carrying out the provisions of this section and for the enforcement thereof.

Paragraph agreed to on division.

17. In the event of producers of goods taking advantage of any duty imposed under this act to increase the price of such goods to the consumer, or using any such duty to maintain prices at levels deemed by the governor in council to be higher than should prevail, having regard to general economic conditions in the country, the governor in council may reduce or remove such duty.

(2) In the event of any one such producer violating the provisions of this section, the governor in council may impose upon all the products of such producer, or any of them, an excise duty equivalent to the amount of customs duty which would be paid by such goods if the same were imported into Canada under the provisions of the general tariff, and the same shall be collectible as a tax, and the provisions of the Income War Tax Act as to the collection of taxes shall be applicable hereto.

Provided, that neither subsection of this section shall apply to agricultural products.

2. Resolved, That schedule A to the customs tariff, being chapter forty-four of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, as amended by chapter seventeen of the acts of 1930 (first session) and chapter three of the acts of 1930 (second session), be further amended by striking thereout tariff items 2, 6, 7, 8, 10, 15, 16, 17, 20a, 28a, 29a, 35, 39, 48, 55, 63, 67, 69, 71, 71a, 72, 72a, 72b, 73, 74, 75, 76, 89, 90, 99a, 99c, 99d, 101, 105d, 106, 120, 139, 168, 184, 192, 195, 199b, 207, 210, 210b, 230, 238a, 265, 282, 296b, 296c, 296d, 305, 306, 306a, 306b, 307, 308, 318, 326b, 327a, 348, 348b, 348c, 356, 366, 368, 380, 386 (f), 386 (g), 386(m), 386 (n), 386 (o), 402a, 403b, 409e, 409q, 412, 422a, 427a, 438a, 438c, 438d, 440c, 440j, 445a, 445e, 446a, 451a, 451d, 461, 476b, 479, 506a, 507, 507a, 511, 516, 519, 521a, 536, 550d, 560a, 564, 569c,

578, 586, 588, 597, 604, 605, 605a, 606, 607, 608, 609, 613, 624, 651, 651a, 652, 653, 655, 665a, 670, 688a, 711, 796, 798, the several enumerations of goods, respectively, and the several rates of duties of customs, if any, set opposite thereto, and by inserting the following items, enumerations and rates of duty in said schedule A:

Mr. HEENAN: I should like to move an amendment, adding the following subsection to section 17:

The governor in council may direct from time to time that any industry, the products of which receive protection under this act, shall demonstrate to the satisfaction of the governor in council that freedom of association for employees for all lawful purposes is permitted in the operation of such industry, and that the hours of labour and rates of wages are observed consistent with the provisions of the labour part of the treaty of Versailles, concluded at Paris, France, on June 28, 1919.

Mr. BENNETT: I hardly think that would be in order on this section.

Mr. HEENAN: That is the amendment I intend to move. I might say that when the question was brought up at the regular session of 1930 the present Prime Minister suggested an amendment in similar terms, and after a good deal of discussion the then Prime Minister stated that he was willing to deal with the whole tariff measure rather than with any single industry, so it was left at that. The then leader of the opposition, the present Prime Minister, acquiesced in that decision. Again at the special session of 1930 I had the honour of proposing this same amendment. During the discussion the Prime Minister accepted the amendment at one stage—

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps it would assist the hon. gentleman if I were to say that we will let section 17 stand, because in any event it involves the numbering of the sections that are dealt with. While I think the hon. member is not strictly in order in proposing his amendment to this section, he might proceed if he wishes to do so, though it will be observed that in subsection 2 the various items dealt with are mentioned, and we will leave that in the event of some of them being slightly changed.

Mr. SULLIVAN: I did not exactly understand what the hon. gentleman was proposing. Had it something to do with the unions?

Mr. HEENAN: Did I understand the Prime Minister to say we might proceed with this discussion now? I will not detain the committee at any great length. In 1930, during the special session, I had the honour of proposing practically the same amendment, and the Prime Minister stated that he saw no reason why it should not be accepted after some changes were made in the phraseology A little later in the discussion the Prime Minister thought it would be reasonable if we left this matter over until this session, when we would be dealing with the whole tariff. This is the first opportunity we have had since that time, and consequently I offer this as a suggestion to the government.

I do hope the Prime Minister will take this opportunity of seeing to it that these industries which are protected by the people of Canada will be forced to treat their employees properly. I realize that there are different scales of wages in different parts of the country, and that different hours of labour are maintained in different industries and different localities, but the Prime Minister says it is wrong in many ways to have unfair competition from other parts of the world. It is equally unfair that industries in certain parts of this country should have an advantage over industries in other parts, through a different in the treatment accorded to the employees. I have in mind at the moment the province of British Columbia, where they have a minimum rate of wages for workmen in all industries and where they have the eight hour day. Yet we have industries in other parts of the country that will not pay a decent wage and that are working their employees long hours. It is just as bad for an industry in one part of the country to treat its employees unjustly as it is for one country to treat its citizens unjustly.

In addition, as has been stated, we are a party to the treaty of Versailles, to which we have affixed our signature. One of the provisions of the treaty of Versailles, with the conventions arising out of it, was that we should adopt an eight hour day. I had thought until last session that this was purely a provincial responsibility; I had never dreamed of associating it with tariff measures. But the present Prime Minister and some of his colleagues showed how it could be carried into effect by making it obligatory on the part of those industries that are receiving protection from federal legislation to apply the principle in their operations. If I recall rightly, the Prime Minister at the time twitted me, as Minister of Labour, for not taking part in the discussion. I may confess that I could not take part in the discussion because I was bewildered. For many years I had been led to think that questions of hours and wages were provincial responsibilities, and I could not understand all at once how the principle could be made to apply in connection with federal legislation with respect to the tariff. So that I could not take part in the discussion under those circumstances. But I agreed with what the Prime Minister, at that time leader of the opposition, said, speaking from this side of the house.

This matter has now been two years before the house. I submit that it will not work hardship on any industry which is treating its employees fairly to have this principle recognized, and it will in a measure equalize the conditions that obtain in industry throughout Canada. I make this suggestion in the hope that the government will now accede to it.

Mr. BENNETT: It is obvious that the hon. gentleman's reason for not engaging in the discussion to which he refers was not that he was bewildered at what had been suggested; it was his long attachment to the administration with which he was associated. However, I can only say, with reference to the measure which we have just passed, that we have endeavoured to meet the situation under the tariff board. It would be idle to add the provision to the customs tariff without having some machinery whereby the facts might be ascertained; and as the law now stands direction will be given to have inquiry made. The hon. gentleman himself will be the first to realize that no action could be taken unless an inquiry were made. Any action taken would have to be based upon the findings of that inquiry. Knowing that the hon. gentleman and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would have something to say about the matter, I did give it consideration, and I say again that the provisions under the tariff board with respect to inquiries meet, in our judgment, the case that has been indicated.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The statement of the Prime Minister is satisfactory only in part. We took the matter up the other day when the section in the tariff board bill relative to this subject was under discussion. In so far as provision is made for inquiries, that would seem to me to be satisfactory. But I note that in clause 17 now before us the Prime Minister is attempting to safeguard the consumer. Conceivably, clause 17 might not be necessary in view of the tariff board regulations as they were expounded to us the other day. Yet that clause appears in this measure, definitely providing that if any producers take advantage of the tariff to maintain prices at levels which the governor general in council deem to be higher than are warranted, then the protection may be removed. As I understand the remarks of the hon. member (Mr. Heenan), he is arguing that similar provision should be made with respect to the employees. If it is necessary in this legislation to insert a clause providing for the protection of consumers, it does not seem unreasonable to ask that the protection to be accorded to the employees should be definitely and explicitly stated. I have all along maintained that so-called protection of industries was no guarantee that the workers in industry would be protected, and it seems to me that if the Prime Minister is in earnest in his desire to protect Canadians—he has so frequently said that Canadians must be protected—there is no reason why, definitely and explicitly, Canadian employees should not be protected and provision be made guaranteeing that protection. We have machinery for inquiry, but we have no guarantee whatever that if wages are found to be insufficient, or if working conditions are not desirable, there will be any action to redress these conditions. It would seem to me that if this matter were entrusted to the governor in council and if it were stated definitely that, should the general conditions of labour not comply with a certain standard, then the protection shall be removed, that would give us something to work upon. The Prime Minister himself made a clear-cut statement in this regard when the steel schedules were being discussed a year ago. In fact, it was he himself who suggested a clause of this kind. He said that if a year went by and changes were not made he would see, if he were returned to power, that such provision would be made. As a matter of fact only modified changes have been made. In one of the factories under discussion the men, it is true, are not working eleven and thirteen hours they are working, some of them, ten hours. They should be working only eight hours. I have no information as to whether the hours have been reduced in the other factory in Algoma. I submit that the principles which were enunciated at that time by the Prime Minister, then leader of the opposition, apply to-day, especially now that the right hon. gentleman has the power in his own hands. I urge him to insert such a clause.

Mr. BENNETT: Clause 17 is not the appropriate place to take it up. I suggest that 17 be passed, the hon. gentleman reserving his right to take the matter up again by way of amendment or otherwise. I will afford him facilities for discussing it.

Mr. RALSTON: The Prime Minister's suggestion that the bill already passed provides for an inquiry of this kind is futile in connection with this tariff, because this tariff has been made without the intervention of the tariff board. It is not likely that there will be any inquiry on the part of the tariff board so far as these particular items now before us are concerned. Whatever inquiry was thought necessary has already been made and the matter has been disposed of, and therefore the benefit of such a section as has been suggested is lost in connection with these items. The Prime Minister suggests that there is no machinery. As I understand the matter, the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is that the governor in council shall have power to make an inquiry or shall make an inquiry, and there is sufficient provision in the Inquiries Act for that purpose.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman who has just spoken will perhaps realize that many of the applications now being made to the United States board are for reductions, and reference of particular items has been made to that board notwithstanding the fact that the tariff items were adopted by congress and approved by the president about a year ago. I have no reason to believe but that items in the tariff as it now stands will frequently be referred to the tariff board. I say that for this reason: I do not know whether the hon. gentleman was in the chamber or not all the time that I was speaking this afternoon, but I endeavoured to suggest —and I think my suggestion is warranted by the facts—that an emergency condition such as now prevails is the justification for the action that was taken; that in some instances mere tariffs are not ample for the purpose, and that in order to cover the situation regard must be had to the third measure that I mentioned, namely, the fixing of a price for duty purposes. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I contemplate that the Minister of Finance of the day will frequently refer matters of this kind to the tariff board—

Mr. LAPOINTE: He may.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; I give it as my opinion that he frequently will do so for the purpose of ascertaining just what the President of the United States has been able to ascertain recently in connection with several matters when the duty has been reduced all the way from 4 to 50 per cent. That at any rate is my hope.

Mr. RALSTON: That is only the exception rather than the rule.

Mr. BENNETT: That is true.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not want to indulge in political talk or I could very well quote what some hon. members on the other side said, indicating the enthusiasm they displayed in connection with this very same matter in the regular session of 1930. I remember quite well some of the present ministers of the government then taking the position that we could say to the industries: Yes, we shall give you protection provided you protect the workingman of the country, and only on that condition. Their enthusiasm seems to have died down since that time. I do not, however, want to go into that. I would much rather let the government or any party take the credit of doing what I wish, so long as it is done. We have in Canada industries—and I have experienced this myself—that will not permit their men, under penalty of dismissal, to join a labour organization, and this notwithstanding the fact that Sir Robert Borden on behalf of the Dominion of Canada appended his signature to the Treaty of Versailles giving these men freedom of association. We have United States companies establishing industries in this country and telling our Canadian workmen: No matter what the laws of your country are; no matter what the treaty of Versailles has to do with the matter, we are going to run this industry and you will work the hours we proclaim or you will leave this job. I think the Prime Minister himself would be the first to say that it is not fair for one industry in a province to make its employees work ten hours a day while another industry of a similar character in the same province is making its employees work eight hours a day. I do not think that is fair. The proposal that I make is not ambiguous. It says simply:

> The governor in council may direct from time to time that any industry, the products of which receive protection under this act, shall demonstrate to the satisfaction of the governor in council that freedom of association for employees for all lawful purposes is permitted in the operation of such industry.

All the government has to do is to ask the industry if they are allowing their employees the right to organize. If we had something like this, we would not be confronted with what I was up against when I was Minister of Labour, because I had nothing back of me except that I could say that Canada was a signatory to the Peace treaty. I had no law, not a sentence in the whole of Canada that I could find, to say to employers of labour that they should maintain freedom of association. If we had a clause like this in the tariff legislation, the Minister of Labour or the Prime Minister could say to those concerns that are discriminating against their employees: This is the law of Canada, and if you will not abide by the laws of this country, we shall have to take other steps to see that you do. This is all this clause will do, and I think if the Prime Minister will only consider my amendment, he will accept it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): I understand the hon. member is not pressing this as an amendment to section 17, but submitting it as section 18, an additional section.

Mr. HEENAN: I want to insert it where the Prime Minister thinks suitable.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman will perhaps recall the language of the then Prime Minister after he had taken time to confer with his legal advisers as to what the position was. Only the other day I had this matter looked into. The judgment of the privy council which stated that this parliament had acted ultra vires in declaring that to solicit insurance under certain circumstances was a criminal offence, and which carries the law to an extent that had not formerly been thought possible, has been looked upon by some as indicating that that power to solicit exists. I am bound to say I thought the difficulty the then Prime Minister pointed out was less than subsequent investigation would indicate would be the case.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that is perfectly frank, for you cannot single out a particular industry.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The difficulty has become more weighty now.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, the then Prime Minister had the advice of the Minister of Justice at that time, and I have the same. The hon. gentleman will find that you cannot select one particular industry. I have endeavoured under section 17 to provide for the selection of an industry, that is one of many that is exploiting the consumer. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth expressed some doubt about the value of the section. All I am endeavouring to do is to say that quantum valeat, for what it is worth, we are endeavouring to enact it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Whatever difficulty may have prevailed last year when a particular industry, that is the steel industry, was singled out, would not prevail in the insertion of a clause of this character in the schedule.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it would.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This would apply generally.

[Mr. Heenan.]

Mr. BENNETT: The difficulty is of industries being in different provinces. The hon. member pointed it out frankly a moment ago, but perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did not hear him. The difficulty was in applying it and the method by which it could be enforced.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It still remains true that if special consideration is given to any industry, whether located in British Columbia alone or in all the provinces, this is a special grant by the Dominion government or by the people of Canada, and the government has a perfect right to state the conditions under which the grant shall be given. I think that is true.

Mr. BENNETT: This is not a grant.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We would be laying down a general rule that would provide if any industry were seeking in any way to obtain special consideration from the government—and I do not think the leader of the opposition would say there is anything in the constitution to prevent a general provision of this kind—the Dominion government is competent to determine the conditions which must prevail. The government is already taking that power with regard to the fixing of the price of goods. If they are fixed too high, the government says they must be reduced or else the special privilege will be withdrawn. If the Dominion parliament has authority to do that, it has also authority to impose other conditions; all I plead for is that in making the general provisions the working men be not left out. Clauses protecting him ought to be as explicit as the provisions with regard to the protection of the consumer.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think my hon. friend does not realize that the matter of imports into Canada is one that comes especially under the jurisdiction of this parliament. The levy of a customs duty is not in the nature of a grant in any way, shape or form. It is a provision under which goods are admitted into this country, and the fixing of prices, which my hon. friend mentioned, is not the fixing of the price at which goods shall be sold in various provinces of Canada, but the fixing of a price at which they shall be valued for the purposes of customs duties. The difficulty in regard to hours of labour, joining associations and matters of that kind, is that these are not matters over which this parliament has any control or jurisdiction. If it were a money grant I assume conditions could be attached, but it is not a money grant. It is a matter affecting imports into this country, which is especially placed under the jurisdiction of the Dominion authority.

Mr. HEENAN: The hon. member for Bow River said the other day that he noticed that sometimes lawyers disagreed. That was a revelation to me. I always thought that they agreed. The present Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition in 1930 said that we had the power to attach conditions. He said, at page 2374, of Hansard of May 21, 1930:

> I confess, Mr. Chairman, that there is only one question in my mind: Have we the power? The answer must be in the affirmative. Having the power, then should we not exercise it? I put that to my hon. friends opposite, because here we have no division of opinion; we are all committed to it.

After the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition talked the matter over they decided that it had better stand over to a later date, when they might apply that provision to all the tariff measures. I remember that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked the present Prime Minister if he would support a move along that line at a later date, and at page 2740 of Hansard of that date the present Prime Minister said:

> The question is not an unfair one, and I have no hesitancy in saying that unless a reasonable excuse is offered I propose to do so.

I could quote from several other hon. gentlemen who took the position that we ought not to grant either a bonus or tariff protection.

Mr. BENNETT: It was a bounty in that case.

Mr. HEENAN: I know it was a bounty, but it is the same thing as a bonus.

Mr. GUTHRIE: A bounty is in the nature of a grant, and when we make a grant we can attach conditions.

Mr. HEENAN: I was coming to that. I heard someone behind the minister whispering that it was a bounty that was being dealt with at that time. I say that we were not dealing with a bounty at that time, but with a tariff measure. The trend of the whole debate in 1930 was that we could attach any conditions we liked with respect to any industry that was given tariff protection. I believed then that we could, and I believe so now. If we do not do it, it is because we have not the wish to do it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I fail altogether to follow the argument of the Minister of Justice. Let me read section 17.

> In the event of producers of goods taking advantage of any duty imposed under this act to increase the price of such goods to the consumer—

I ask, what producers? The Minister of Justice would seem to imply that it is producers in the United States or in Belgium or in some other foreign country. If his argument is worth anything it must be producers outside Canada, but as a matter of fact the producers which this clause has in view are the producers here in Canada, the producers of competitive goods produced in Canada, and if the producer in Canada takes advantage of his opportunity to raise the price above the level that is deemed proper, then the governor in council may act. I submit that the proposal made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is in principle very similar to this. If the producers in Canada undertake to produce goods under unfair conditions the governor in council shall have the right to cancel the tariff privileges that are being granted. Now if we have the right to cut down the price of goods, I think we have also the right to protect the people who are engaged in making them. It seems to me that the principle is the same, and I would hope that the Prime Minister would see the necessity of protecting the large body of workers who are involved in a matter of this kind. He has so definitely and emphatically stated that the idea underlying the government's tariff policy is to protect Canadians that I cannot understand why he should refuse to undertake definitely to protect that large body of Canadians known as labour men.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely the hon. gentleman realizes just what the issue is. He certainly has beclouded it. Last year the issue was the question of a bounty, the grant of a sum of money, and I expressed certain opinions with respect to it. To-day the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River endeavours to say that the governor in council can deal with specific industries. There are in this country, we will say, nine industries in nine provinces. In four of them every detail of the treaty of Versailles is observed; in the other five it is not. What are you going to do about it? That was a different case altogether from the one before us. In that case a bounty was given to an industry. There is an additional reason why you could not attach any such provision here. The defence of anyone affected would be that he was complying with the laws of the province, and that the province has complete control, as the supreme court said.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Might I ask if the right hon. gentleman considers that an adequate defence?

Mr. BENNETT: It is a complete legal defence, because this is not a grant.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is not a money grant, I will admit, but is it not the grant of a certain privilege? I shall not call it a special privilege if the Prime Minister objects to that phrase.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not a privilege. If there are nine industries, one in each province, and in four every rule and regulation of the treaty of Versailles is observed, how can we deal with the other five?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: On that very same basis, on the ground that the industry is asking for a "special favour," if I may use that phrase, although I will put a question mark after it if the Prime Minister prefers. Here is a certain concession which this industry is seeking. I would say that the general provision should be that all industries benefited must live up to the requirements of the Versailles treaty. It does not make any difference if only some of them are living up to it. We simply maintain the position that no one can have this privilege unless he lives up to the treaty.

Mr. SULLIVAN: It is not a favour that we are asking, but a favour that the government is giving to the people of Canada.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is the same thing, and I say that the government of Canada which is granting the favour has a perfect right to say under what conditions that favour shall be granted. That is my point.

Mr. SULLIVAN: The government of Canada is not asking for favours, but it is asking for the opportunity to give favours to the people of Canada. They were elected for that purpose and they are living up to their promises.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): They are giving the benefit to the manufacturers.

Mr. HEENAN: In order that there may be no mistake concerning the discussion which took place in 1930 I wish to make some further remarks. The Minister of Justice said that at that particular time we were not talking about bounties, and I think the Prime Minister has just made a similar statement. I said I could refer to several statements made by members of the present government to indicate that when the question was raised in 1930 we were not talking about bounties. I wish to quote from the remarks of Mr. Stevens as they are to be found at page 2371 of Hansard 1930. At that time that hon. member was taking some of the ministers to task because they had not taken part in the discussion. In that connection he is quoted as follows:

> I was referring to the three sitting in the front row. Not a minister has offered an explanation, not a minister has offered any sympathy or shown any interest in this matter. I am not sufficiently an expert to say that items 377a, 377b and 377c cover the ambit of this particular industry, but I imagine that they would

In that instance he was not speaking about bounties. The quotation continues.

> In connection with these items we have an opportunity of saying to this industry, "Yes, the parliament of Canada is prepared to give you protection sufficient to enable you profitably to produce these articles"—the minister could do that just as easily as sitting there lolling in his seat.

On that occasion he was referring to the then Minister of Finance. The quotation continues:

> —"but before such tariff will apply you will satisfy the governor in council that the conditions of labour, the hours of labour and the wages paid are such as will afford a decent living." That is what the government could do; that is what parliament could do, and I say right now that that is what parliament should do before it goes a step further.

We were not dealing with a bonus at that time; we were dealing with tariff items. At page 2374 the present Prime Minister said:

> I think it should be done. It may mean great differences, but an amendment such as this, I think, would meet the situation.
> "Provided, however, that the rates of duty set out under items 377, 377a, 377b, 377c shall apply only when the industry producing the articles enumerated therein have demonstrated to the satisfaction of the governor in council that there is maintained in the operation of such industry, hours of labour and rates of wages consistent with the provisions of the labour conference held under the treaty of Versailles.

That is not talking about bounty, but about a specific item.

Mr. BENNETT: And those two items were the bounty items.

Mr. HEENAN: No, they are tariff items.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought one was a bounty item.

Mr. HEENAN: No doubt my right hon. friend has forgotten about it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There was a discussion on the bounty and the tariff items.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. HEENAN: In fact, I think the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald) brought up the question about the bounty, and Mr. Mackenzie King said:

> We have not yet reached the bonus resolution. The leader of the opposition has been speaking of the Versailles treaty. That treaty is applicable throughout the whole Dominion and will be made applicable all along the line, or not at all.

Now we have the opportunity of dealing with it all along the line, and I submit the present is the proper time. Any industry treating its employees in a proper manner will not be dealt with harshly.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 17 carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, and my hon. friends may revert to it if they wish.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall it stand?

Mr. BENNETT: No,—carried.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is it understood that a section along this line will be introduced?

Mr. BENNETT: No, it is not. The hon. member may propose another section as No. 18, but we will not accept it.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 17 carried.

Mr. NEILL: Is section 17 carried?

Mr. BENNETT: We are passing section 17.

Mr. NEILL: The chairman said it was carried.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it is carried.

Mr. NEILL: I thought section 17 involved the items in the schedule?

Mr. BENNETT: No, that is contained in the next resolution.

The CHAIRMAN: Resolution No. 2 is now before the committee.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, instead of dealing with the first paragraph of that resolution, owing to the Australian treaty I suggest that we go on to item 54a, if the committee pleases. In that way we may proceed without interfering with the questions mentioned in the Australian treaty.

The CHAIRMAN: Very well, we shall go on to item 54a in the schedule.

> Customs tariff—54a. Indian corn, imported by manufacturers of starch or of cereal foods prepared for human consumption, for use exclusively in their own factories in the manufacture of starch or or such prepared cereal foods: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. BENNETT: In order to simplify that item it has been split up, and the Minister of Justice moves that the following be substituted for tariff item 54a—> 54a. Indian corn, not including Indian corn for purposes of distillation, when imported or taken out of warehouse by manufacturers of starch or of cereal products for human consumption, for use exclusively in the manufacture of starch or such cereal products, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Except for distillation purposes, Indian corn has been free. This amendment makes it clear that Indian corn used for breakfast foods and corn meal still continues to be free.

In reference to tariff item No. 55 I move that the following be substituted therefor:

> 55. Indian corn, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.
> On and after August 1, 1931, per bushel: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 cents; general tariff, 25 cents.

In connection with this amendment the date of August 1 was set because evidence was submitted to show that certain corn was on the ocean bound for the port of Montreal and other places. After August 1, 1931, it is proposed that the British preferential tariff shall be free, the intermediate tariff 20 cents and the general tariff 25 cents. For other purposes it will be free. I just wish to make that clear.

Mr. RALSTON: In the maritime provinces Indian corn used for feeding purposes is a very important item. Do I understand that Indian corn for feeding purposes will be free instead of having imposed upon it a 20 cent or 25 cent duty such as was mentioned in the item when the budget was brought down?

Mr. BENNETT: The answer to my hon. friend's question is that for feeding purposes and except for human consumption Indian corn will be dutiable.

Mr. RALSTON: That is an increase, is it not?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: I know my right hon. friend has decided what to do and I am afraid what I may say will be of very little use. But I wish to go on record as strenuously protesting any increase of duty on corn used for feeding purposes. Something like 700,000 bushels are imported annually into the maritime provinces.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that would be about the correct figure.

Mr. RALSTON: This increase means an additional tax of something like $140,000. Already the price has been raised. I have received information from one of the leading centres in the province of Nova Scotia to the effect that a farmer who has been paying $26 to $27 a ton for barley and $25 to $26 a ton for corn was quoted new prices, just after the bringing down of the budget, of $31 for barley and $32 for corn. I can only say that this is a very heavy tax on the primary producers in the maritime provinces. I think the suggestion is that possibly they may be able to use some other feed. My information is that barley cannot be used for the purposes for which they are using corn, particularly in connection with feeding poultry.

An hon. MEMBER: The corn used is mostly Canadian.

Mr. RALSTON: A good deal of corn is imported from the Argentine. I do not think this is a very good beginning in view of the mission we sent to Argentina for the purpose of promoting closer trade arrangements with that country. I understood from the newspaper reports that there had been an extremely fine reception given to the Canadian representatives. I read in the Free Lance of Pictou, a newspaper published by one of the gentlemen who was a member of the delegation from Canada that:

> He had had conferences with gentlemen holding high places in the governments of the Argentine and Brazil in regard to closer trade arrangements, and in both instances he was accorded a joyous welcome and given assurances that closer trade arrangements with Canada would find them ready at the halfway mark to deal in a sympathetic way with proposals form the Canadian government.

Nova Scotia sells fish and coal to the Argentine. This affects Nova Scotia particularly. My right hon. friend is not only shutting off that trade with the Argentine and making it more difficult for us to sell our fish and coal there, but at the same time he is imposing a heavy tax of 20 cents a bushel on the feed used by our farmers.

Mr. HACKETT: Is it not admitted that the coarse grains of the west are equally as good as corn for all purposes, with the exception of poultry feeding and starch making?

Mr. RALSTON: My information is that barley is not nearly as satisfactory as corn for the particular purposes for which our farmers down there use it.

Mr. HACKETT: Is that limited to poultry feeding?

Mr. RALSTON: They simply have to pay the additional tax.

Mr. REID: I rise, Mr. Chairman, to protest against the duty on corn. I am afraid this is going to be a great blow to the poultrymen of British Columbia. We of British Columbia, particularly on the Pacific slope, are peculiarly situated in that we are far removed from the grain fields, and we have great areas of land not adapted to general agriculture. We have the climate, however, and the soil is well adapted to the raising of poultry and small fruits. I do not believe any other province has specialized in the poultry industry to such an extent as has British Columbia. Ours is the only province that has gone into the poultry industry in a large way. Really it has become an industry pretty much along the same specialized lines as a manufacturing plant. Our poultrymen have specialized to such an extent that to-day British Columbia hold the highest records for egg production in Canada. But the poultrymen of British Columbia have to purchase all their grain from practically outside sources. As I say, the British Columbia poultry plants can be considered as being something like manufacturing plants—men go into the business with the sole object of producing eggs and poultry as a means of livelihood. This tariff tax is going to be an added cost on our production and we are now faced with a very serious state of affairs indeed. I believe I am right when I say some of our grain merchants have increased the cost of corn already. However, this duty will mean a difference of about fifty cents a sack or nine dollars per ton. I have heard it said in this house by many members that barley is as good a feed as corn for poultry. I hold in my hand the latest bulletin issued by the Department of Agriculture under the authority of the minister (Mr. Weir), entitled Canadian Grown Grains in Poultry Feeding. I am going to deal with only one or two items in this bulletin in an endeavour to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister that barley cannot be substituted for corn for poultry feeding. There is no one grain adapted for the production of eggs; we must have a variety of grains, and barley cannot be wholly substituted for corn. To begin with barley is not as palatable as corn, and it contains much more fibre. Barley is deficient in what is known as vitamin A. This bulletin says:

In so far as vitamins are concerned all four grains are good sources of vitamin B, considering this to be the antineuritic vitamin the presence of which prevents the occurrence of a deficiency disease known as polyneuritis in fowl, and corn is the only one which contains the growth-producing antiophthalmic vitamin A, which is of importance in poultry work particularly where growing stock is concerned and in the prevention of ophthalmia, a deficiency eye disease not uncommon to poultry.

According to the chemical analysis—and here may I point out for the benefit of the Minister of Agriculture that it seems strange to me that we have to go across the line to get an analysis of our grains, as in this bulletin the analysis is taken from a United States bulletin—I find the chemical analysis shows that the fibre content of barley is just double that of corn. As to suitable poultry rations this bulletin says:

Experiment has shown that the early stage of the chick's life, or that during which what are known as "starter feeds" are fed, is the critical period in so far as nutrition is concerned. Consequently the compounding of rations for this period, ordinarily the first eight to ten weeks of the chick's life, requires great care.

As pointed out above, owing to ahe chick's comparatively tender digestion at this stage the caution as to keeping down fibre in the ration applies particularly at this time.

I ask hon. members to note this:

As a consequence it is suggested that barley should not be substituted for corn meal to any extent in the starter ration.

Mr. MULLINS: Was that written by an agricultural student or by a practical man?

Mr. REID: You must ask the Minister of Agriculture for that information, this is his bulletin. It is true that the poultrymen in British Columbia did use a little more barley some time ago, but there were reasons for that: first, the farmers in Manitoba were practically giving their barley away so that it was much cheaper than corn; second, the poultrymen were practically giving their eggs away and were looking around for some grain at a price that would enable them to produce eggs much cheaper than had been possible before. I think they would have use anything had it been practicable.

The other day I was noticing our importations of corn from the Argentine. Last year we exported to the Argentina over $19,000,000 of goods, and we imported from them over $10,000,000 worth of goods, but I ask the committee to note that nearly half of our importations represented corn. I am afraid our good-will mission won't sound so good to the people of the Argentine when they learn that this duty has been placed on practically half of our importations from their country.

Mr. BENNETT: No, this does not touch importations of corn for distillation, for starch or for glue.

Mr. RALSTON: The farmer has to pay twenty-five cents a bushel, but for purposes of distillation—liquor—the duty is only seven and a half cents.

Mr. HACKETT: But it does not come into competition with barley.

Mr. RALSTON: We are talking about the farmer using the thing he can use, to the best advantage, and I do not think anything could be a more definite answer to the question of the hon. member for Stanstead than the statement which has just been read from the bulletin issued by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HACKETT: No, the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth is speaking to a point which I conceded, namely that corn might be useful to the poultry industry. I was suggesting that the large amount of corn imported into the part of the country from which the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth comes could not be and is not used in its entirety by the poultry industry and that in consequence barley, which is a substitute as far as cattle are concerned, might be used, and to that extent, its use might help the people of the west who wish to market a large quantity of barley for which there is no other market.

Mr. RALSTON: With all due respect to the hon. member for Stanstead and the Prime Minister, I think the farmers of Nova Scotia had better be consulted as to what they are going to use for feed rather than to have a tax and penalty placed on them for using the feed they think is best adapted to their purpose.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why should my hon. friend advertise barley?

Mr. HACKETT: Simply because it is a Canadian product, though I believe my hon. friend would not appreciate that argument. Corn is not grown here in quantities.

Mr. BENNETT: I should like to say to my hon. friends, that the difference between the distiller and the other users is that in the one case we get $9 a gallon in excise tax, so therefore the rate is much higher than 7½ cents.

Mr. RALSTON: But the $9 per gallon has nothing to do with the duty.

Mr. BENNETT: It has to do with the revenue. In the one case we get 20 cents a bushel, or 25 cents a bushel, and in the other case we get 7½ cents per bushel plus $9 a gallon on the finished product.

Mr. RALSTON: Then I will let my right hon. friend go down and tell the farmers of Nova Scotia that because the distiller has some other tax imposed upon him he has only to pay a duty of 7½ cents a bushel on corn while the farmer pays 25 cents a bushel for the same thing.

Mr. RYCKMAN: What would the farmers of Nova Scotia say if they were told that there are other farmers in Canada who would like to sell something to replace corn?

Mr. RALSTON: It is not corn we are talking about in particular. The government are trying to tell the farmers of Nova Scotia that they must use barley rather than corn, because the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Stanstead know better what they should use than they know themselves.

Mr. REID: On behalf of the poultry farmers of the Fraser valley I am only asking a fair chance to compete. We now compete in the world markets with our eggs; there are more eggs being produced in Canada than can be consumed here. We are looking for markets abroad, and on behalf of the poultrymen I am only asking that they be given a fair opportunity. Even if corn were grown in Canada the Pacific slope is too far removed from the corn area for that to be of much help. We are even far removed from the barley of Manitoba, and with the high freight rates barley costs between $26 and $30 a ton. This year we are able to buy greater quantities of barley because the farmers of Manitoba have been practically giving away that grain.

Mr. HACKETT: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? What would the poultry farmers of British Columbia think if the protection on their product were removed? This measure only extends to the farmers of the prairies the protection already given the poultrymen of the Fraser valley.

Mr. REID: I do not think the poultrymen would be very agreeable to that, but I assure my hon. friend that the protection given the poultrymen did not in any way hurt the purchaser of eggs on the prairies, because eggs have been cheaper there than ever before. The purchaser of eggs has been able to buy them for much less than ever before, even with the protection. The situation in the Fraser valley is almost pathetic this year. We have great areas of costly land there adapted only to this use, and I believe that since the first of January almost 100,000 birds have been slaughtered by men trying to meet their bills and others who have been forced to liquidate. This duty will be an additional burden, because corn cannot be entirely dispensed with. The four grains are required, and corn is a far more suitable ration than barley which, as I said before, contains too much fibre. I could go on at greater length and give further statistics, but I do not think it is necessary. If we in British Columbia are to be denied corn I think the Prime Minister should consider very carefully a reduction in freight rates when that question comes before the house. If we are to be compelled to use Canadian grains only surely we on the Pacific slope should be able to purchase those grains as cheaply as they can be purchased in Japan or China. I must protest as strongly as possible against the imposition of this 25 cent duty.

Mr. ILSLEY: I should like to associate myself with the protests expressed by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth and the hon. member for New Westminster. I realize that if the Prime Minister has set his heart on the imposition of a 25 cent duty on corn that duty will be imposed; I hardly expect my protest to have any effect, but in justice to my constituents who have written me in large numbers protesting against this duty on corn, I must say what I am now stating to the committee. I think there is nothing that has caused a greater outcry in my constituency than this proposed duty. The people who are raising poultry and producing beef and pork are up in arms against the government on this matter, and I wish to convey that message to the Prime Minister and ask him to reconsider his action.

Mr. WILLIS: Replying to the remarks of the hon. member for New Westminster, I want to speak particularly in regard to the efficacy of feeding barley rather than corn. The hon. member says that in the first place it is more expensive. I dealt with this matter earlier in the session, and I think I proved to the satisfaction of the house that barley is cheaper on the Pacific coast than corn. If the hon. member wants the exact figure I would say barley is 20 per cent cheaper than corn on the Pacific coast, and that statement also applies to the Fraser valley.

Mr. REID: If you take the hull off the barley would it be as cheap? Corn is a whole grain.

Mr. WILLIS: You can feed it as it is. In the first place I want to put this point before the committee, that barley is cheaper than corn, and in the second place I want to submit that barley is equally as good as corn for the feeding of poultry. I want to tell you why I make that statement. I refer to a series of pamphlets issued by the Department of Agriculture; if my hon. friend will turn to No. 128 of the new series he will find the material which on a previous occasion I placed before the house. In the second place I would refer him to experiments which have just been concluded at the Manitoba agricultural college, which have proved that for feeding purposes barley is better than corn. Those experiments were carried on over a period of two years.

Other hon. members have said that they cannot feed barley, that they must feed corn. That is a matter for experimentation; they do not feed barley because they have not done so previously. It is not because they cannot do so or because it is not equally good. Remember that the world's champion hen came from Saskatchewan, and it never had a bit of corn.

Mr. REID: It came from British Columbia, not Saskatchewan.

Mr. WILLIS: That is quite correct, but some three years ago the world's champion hen came from Saskatchewan, and it was not fed corn at all. So far as statistics are concerned, expert testimony can be given on both sides. But what the hon. member forgets is that on the coast he is getting protection for his fruit and his lumber and for everything which he produces and we are buying these things on the prairies. But when the tables are turned and we have something to sell which is cheaper than corn then he objects.

Mr. NEILL: What protection is there on lumber?

Mr. WILLIS: You get protection on various articles, particularly on fruit and vegetables; and there is also the question of freight rates. I say however that no one can prove, under any circumstances, that barley cannot successfully be fed as well as corn. Remember that there are in the west 100,000,000 bushels of barley which cannot be sold except to the Canadian people. Let the hon. member bear in mind that there are other provinces besides British Columbia which he must help, just as the rest of Canada helps his province. This is one of the best measures we have had proposed in this country looking to the creation of a market for barley.

Mr. HACKETT: I do not wish to enter into the controversy about the origin of the old hen. Whether she came from Saskatchewan or from British Columbia is a matter which history will undoubtedly record. The farmers in the eastern townships have always used corn and no doubt this duty will upset a very well established usage and trade in that area. I believe however that the farming community of the eastern townships, in the spirit in which they receive protection for their commodities, will be willing that the grain growers on the prairies receive like benefits for their products. I think I know my own people well. I believe that, despite any inconvenience they may experience, they will be willing at least to make the attempt to use Canadian barley as a substitute for American and Argentine corn. I wish in passing, however, to say that they are somewhat concerned lest the grain merchants who have imported corn duty free attempt to avail themselves of the duty with respect to corn upon which no duty was paid. I ask that the departments charged with inspection in these matters keep an eye on any who might attempt to make an unfair profit.

Coming back to poultry, I can assure my hon. friend from New Westminster that not all poultry are chickens—

An hon. MEMBER: Nor all chickens poultry.

Mr. HACKETT: Nor all chickens poultry. There are several very respectable members of the poultry family which do not glory in the name chicken. There are some that can swim. I am told that at Knowlton in the province of Quebec, in the county of my hon. friend from Brome, there is a duck farm on which there are raised from 60,000 to 100,000 ducks each year; I am sure it will be of consolation to the hon. member from New Westminster to learn that these ducks have been so well educated that they regale themselves on barley and yield a handsome profit without knowing the taste of corn. I make bold to suggest to the hon.

member that he initiate an educational campaign among the chicks of the Fraser valley and cultivate in them a habit beneficial to the barley growers of the prairies.

Mr. REID: You are speaking about a bunch of quacks.

Mr. WILLIS: The hon. gentleman is not speaking in either of the official languages.

Mr. RALSTON: We always enjoy the felicitous remarks of the hon. member for Stanstead, and I am glad that he is able to speak for his constituents when he says that they are satisfied with this tax which is being imposed upon them. I am sorry I cannot say the same for the farmers of Nova Scotia, judging by the protests I have received. This tax on Nova Scotians will amount to about 30 cents for every man, woman and child in the province, which is rather a heavy tax in connection with one commodity.

Mr. BENNETT: This is importation for all purposes. There are four cornmeal mills in one county.

Mr. ERNST: Is the hon. member assuming that the farmers will continue to use corn?

Mr. RALSTON: I am assuming that they will use corn. The Prime Minister might as well decide to put an embargo on tea because we produce milk, and so compel everyone to drink milk instead of tea. That would be just as logical. You could produce analyses to show that milk is an excellent food product and a good beverage, and on the strength of this my right hon. friend might compel us all to drink milk instead of tea. There is, I say, just as much logic in that as in compelling those engaged in a certain industry to use something else than the commodity which they require for their purposes. By the duty which he is putting on corn he is going to try to compel the farmers to use barley. In Nova Scotia we did think that the poultry business might survive. We have a water freight rate from the Argentine and we have an opportunity of selling to that country goods which we cannot sell to the central provinces, such as fish and coal. There must be food products imported into Canada against which my right hon. friend could impose an embargo, insisting that everyone eat fish, in order that fish produced in the maritime provinces might be sold.

Mr. HACKETT: There is a duty on fish.

Mr. RALSTON: The hon. gentleman knows we do not import fish.

Mr. HACKETT: Yes, we do.

[Mr. Hackett.]

Mr. ERNST: Is the hon. member willing, as a Nova Scotian, to declare in this house that he would like to see the duty on fish and coal abrogated?

Mr. RALSTON: I should not worry so much about the duty on fish so far as its benefit to our fishermen is concerned. There are a few items in the way of fish that are imported, and most of them do not compete with us. But I do not wish to see any abrogation such as the hon. gentleman suggests in connection with this industry which is already overburdened, not only as regards the conditions under which it works, but in connection with the duty on its implements of production. Now, I submit once more to the Prime Minister that he is going altogether too far in the policy on which he is embarking. Let us deal first with articles which people have used and are accustomed to using. Do not let us start in so early in this parliament to tell people who are engaged in an industry, who have been using certain products in the belief that they are the best, and whose judgment is backed up by the Minister of Agriculture in his bulletin, that they must use something else and impose a penalty or tax of this tremendous amount on them if they do not obey.

I do not know the price of corn, but 25 cents a bushel, it seems to me, must be nearly a fifty per cent duty on that commodity. This is a pretty high tax to impose on people in connection with farm products. The farming industry in the maritimes provinces is not in a condition to-day to stand a tax of this kind.

Mr. BOWMAN: Is the hon. member speaking for the party opposite?

Mr. RALSTON: I am speaking for the farmers in the maritime provinces.

Mr. BOWMAN: Is the hon. member not speaking then as the financial critic of the opposition?

Mr. RALSTON: I have answered my hon. friend.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Can the Prime Minister state the total number of bushels of corn shipped into Canada last year?

Mr. BENNETT: Approximately 10,000,000 bushels valued at $7,000,000, or seventy cents a bushel, the wholesale invoice cost.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Corn has been duty free in this country for, I think, twenty-five or thirty years.

Mr. BENNETT: The distillers' rate has been seven and a half cents, but otherwise it has been free.

Mr. ELLIOTT: At the time corn was made free in this country, it was regarded as a great boon to the farmers who were feeding dairy and beef cattle as well as to the poultry raisers. It is much more of a boon to-day owing to the fact that on account of the ravages of the corn borer we have not been able in recent years to raise corn in many sections of Canada. I want to say to the Prime Minister that it will be a distinct disappointment to many farmers who have been feeding cattle for both beef and dairy purposes to know that in the future a duty of 25 cents per bushel is to be imposed upon corn shipped into this country. The hon. member for Stanstead referred to the ducks and he referred to the chickens.

Mr. HACKETT: Not to the chickens.

Mr. ELLIOTT: He seemed to think for both barley was just as good feed as corn. He is quite wrong in regard to both chickens and ducks. There is no question that for poultry corn is much better feed than barley.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes; no matter what my hon. friends opposite may say, I prefer to take the statement of the Minister of Agriculture in his bulletin to that of some of those who sit behind him.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Just in a moment. My hon. friend has had the floor two or three times. For dairy cattle corn is much better than barley. I want to urge upon the Prime Minister that in view of the difficulty of raising corn to-day in many portions of Canada—and it is at present practically impossible to raise it in many sections of Ontario—

Mr. VENIOT: And also in New Brunswick.

Mr. ELLIOTT: —and I believe also in the east—to impose this duty means a prohibition of the importation of this commodity and this is going to cause hardship to those engaged in the poultry and cattle business.

Mr. GOTT: I have been waiting to hear a voice from western Ontario, the section of the Dominion of Canada which this duty particularly helps. I am absolutely surprised to hear an ex-minister condemn something that means an increase from 22,000 to 130,000 acres of corn in the counties of Essex and Kent alone, which are close to where my hon. friend resides.

Mr. RALSTON: It means $140,000 from Nova Scotia.

Mr. GOTT: I may say to the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth that we purchased 69,000 bags of potatoes from his section and paid forty-nine and a half cents freight per bag to have them come into our county. We can sell the maritimes all the corn they want if they will pay the freight to haul it there, and we can produce 10,500,000 bushels of corn, enough to supply the whole Dominion.

I am sorry to see an hon. member from western Ontario rise in his place and protest against a duty of twenty-five cents on corn. I think he will live to regret doing so.

Mr. NEILL: It is curious to note that this debate regarding corn and hens has been carried on almost exclusively by members of the legal profession, with the exception only of the last speaker, whose name is generally more associated with onions than with corn; and the hon. member for New Westminster who really knows what he is talking about.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the hon. member permit me to say that with regard to ducks —and I may tell the hon. gentleman I know nothing about chickens and made no pronouncement regarding them—I happen to know something of them and any information I gave to the committee rests upon experience.

Mr. NEILL: I do not quite catch the idea.

Mr. HACKETT: I did not think you did.

Mr. NEILL: The hon. member says he knows nothing about chickens, but the ideas he gave to the committee were founded upon experience. Experience of what?

Mr. HACKETT: Experience of ducks.

Mr. NEILL: I am not dealing with ducks at the present time.

Mr. HACKETT: The hon. member is not. I was.

Mr. NEILL: He did refer to chickens, and I will quote him presently. I just want to join with the hon. member for New Westminster in protesting against the imposition of this duty. People from the east do not perhaps realize the extent of the industry in British Columbia. In the old days hens were things that were generally kept around a farm in order to dirty up the machinery. When the farmer saw somebody coming, he grabbed one and killed it for lunch. I am told. We are sometimes told: If the egg market is low, why do you not keep a few cows? But it must be realized that these egg farms number up to 5,000 or 6,000 birds which are kept on five acres of land that, on account of their being suitable for chickens, are not adaptable for growing grain or potatoes. Such land, being high and dry, is good for chickens, but not suitable for any other form of agriculture, and indeed, it is quite impossible to go into dairying or mixed farming on such a limited area as five acres. If people in the east could get that into their minds, they would see how important this matter is. The hon. member for New Westminster said that egg producing had reached the basis of an industrial proposition. That is exactly the case and a difference of a cent a dozen in the cost of the eggs means the difference between loss and profit.

I spoke on this subject on the budget, and therefore I shall not detain the committee. I made the remark that there were three things you could not deceive: mother nature, a laying hen and a milking cow. I have seen people who have tried to do that and they made a dismal failure of it. I have in mind a man who got control of a farm. He was one of your patent expert book farmers; he did it all out of a book. He decided, according to the analysis of certain foods, he had to feed his stock only certain things. This worked beautifully on paper until the animals began to starve and die. If I recollect right, one of his book doctrines was that hogs should fatten on cabbages. It was all laid out according to the analysis that with cabbages and some other addition, the hogs ought to do beautifully. The trouble was that they did not do beautifully; they died, or at least starved. He had proceeded along certain lines laid down in a book, without having the practical knowledge of the farmer. You cannot deceive a milking cow. You may talk of expert knowledge and technique all you like, but the cow's milk will go down if you do not feed her the feeds adapted to a big flow of milk. The same with eggs. You cannot miss even a couple of hours in feeding a flock of chickens without it being recorded in a day or so in the egg basket. They are very sensitive, and fussy, if I may use the word.

It is ridiculous to suggest that you can substitute barley for corn. You can, of course, but at the expense of the eggs. Certainly you can substitute barley to a certain exent, but you always must have a certain quantity of corn, not only for the reasons given by the hon. member for New Westminster, but also because in winter there is a heat-giving property to corn that is not possessed by barley. Experience has shown that hens must have a certain quantity of corn.

We have heard again and again, almost to the extent of being tired of it, that the policy of the government is to give Canadians an opportunity of competing with their competitors on even terms. I presume that the proposition of Euclid holds good in this case, that the greater includes the less, and that the term Canadians would also extend to Canadian hens. What we are asking is that Canadian hens shall have an equal opportunity to compete with those hens that get their corn at a much lower price.

The hon. member for Souris claimed that barley was cheaper than corn. Probably it is; but it is the relative value that counts. Because a thing is absolutely cheaper, it does not follow that it is really cheaper to use it. There are plenty of things that are cheaper than corn, oats or potatoes, for instance, but you must take into consideration their relative value. Apart from the relative value, corn must be used no matter what the price is. My hon. friend from Souris spoke of a duty on fruit helping British Columbia fruit growers, and said that that ought to compensate us for the heavy duty on corn. I would suggest that some of the other members from British Columbia deal with that and say if it will appeal to the poultry raisers as a satisfactory argument.

We have also been told, and we have just passed a resolution to that effect, that if there is any rise in price in consequence of the duty, the duty will be taken off. Then better not put it on in the first place. This particular item is not to come into force for one month, but immediately notice of the duty was given the price of corn went up about $9 a ton.

The hon. member for Stanstead said that the members from British Columbia representing the poultry raisers should be content because we would fix our minds on the increased duty on the product we raise, on eggs. There is some logic in that, I admit. It was superior to all this talk about trying to cheat the hen by trying to feed it barley when it wants corn, but the answer to my hon. friend is this. It was very much thrown up at me during the campaign that I was standing for the Dunning budget, which I adhered to then and still believe in, although it is not so popular now as it was a year ago. I said in the campaign that I was adhering to the Dunning budget, which imposed, under the countervailing duties, ten or twelve cents a dozen on American eggs. They pointed out that my opponent advocated the fixed increased tariff that would be imposed by the party that he represented if it came into office, and in the budget of last September we find that the Prime Minister gave expression to that principle. But there was this difference. He did not raise the duty on eggs any higher than it would have been under the countervailing duties. I think he himself said that that was true, speaking generally, with respect to the whole budget. He took the figure as it would have been arrived at under the Dunning budget and made that a fixed rate, and pointed out that there was an advantage in having it fixed and known, that people could count upon it, that that was better than under the countervailing duties of Mr. Dunning's budget, where the rates were liable to go down at times. But there was this great difference, and this is the answer to the hon. member for Stanstead, that the Dunning budget did not ask the poultrymen to pay through the nose for this privilege. Under the countervailing duties of the Dunning budget they were given a duty of ten or twelve cents a dozen, as the case might be, against American eggs, and it might go higher if necessary, but the Dunning budget did not say that those duties were to be accompanied by a huge increase in the duties on everything that the poultryman had to buy, on his boots, his clothes, his incubators, and above all, on the feed that he feeds his hens. That is the answer to the suggestion that we ought to be satisfied with this duty. Under the Dunning budget we got the same duty against American eggs, and we did not have to pay this enormous tax—because it is an enormous tax—on the products that we use. When you remember how largely these feeds bulk in the cost of raising poultry, you will appreciate what a big difference it makes.

It is also correct what someone has already suggested, that in buying barley we are heavily handicapped by the excessive domestic freight rates on grain from the prairies to British Columbia. If the government would take cognizance of the case that has been put up in this house again and again this year for reducing the domestic rates to the same level as the export rates, a thing like this would not hit us so hard. Still the fact remains that we must buy corn even if the duty was one-half as much again as it is now. The person who has to pay this new duty is the poultryman, and he is already at his wits' end to know how he is to make a living.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: How much of this corn is expected to be displaced by the barley? Approximately ten million bushels of corn are imported. Will that be reduced to about five million bushels?

Mr. BENNETT: I stated to the committee that ten million bushels of corn were imported for all purposes, including distilling, starch making, and for other purposes. The returns in the department do not indicate the quantity imported for each specific purpose, so I cannot very accurately answer the question. But we know that the production in Canada last year of Indian corn was roughly six million bushels. The corn used for dairy purposes in the silos of course is grown in Canada, and will continue to be grown for dairy purposes. I cannot answer with respect to the other. I need hardly say to the hon. gentleman, who knows far better than I of the emergent condition existing with respect to coarse grains in Canada, that owing to conditions that need not be referred to again their value is practically nil except the product is sold in Canada. It is believed that this will assist to that end without placing any undue burden on those engaged in the production of chickens, upon which an extra valuation for duty purposes of thirty cents a pound has been given to protect the industry from unfair competition. The corn mills, which was the one thing urged on behalf of Nova Scotia, where small mills still continue to grind corn, will continue to require their raw material free of duty. So will the breakfast food producers, and, as I said, the starch makers and distilleries. The distilleries pay 7½ per cent. That may not sound very good in some counties of Nova Scotia, but it is a fact at any rate.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This duty is imposed to encourage the barley growers, but the question arises, how much of an additional market will it give them? If it will give them an additional market for only three or four million bushels, and even that is problematical, is it worth while disturbing the whole poultry business for that amount? I appreciate the purpose of this duty on corn. There is no question as to what it is meant for. The question is what effect will it have? How many poultry producers will stop feeding corn to feed barley? Mighty few. For the reason that they want corn, and are going to have corn even if it is 25 cents dearer. Again, if barley is not substituted for corn you are just upsetting the whole apple cart with respect to the poultry growers for an infinitesimal advantage to the barley growers. I do not think the proposed duty will affect the price of barley one iota. It will merely give an additional market of three or four million bushels—a very small item when we consider that Manitoba alone produced 100,- 000,000 bushels of barley last year. I think it would be well to look into the advantages as compared with the disadvantages of the poultry industry. There would be some advantage in getting a market for probably 5,000,000 additional bushels of barley at most if it materialized.

An hon. MEMBER: Is the hon. member opposed to a tariff being placed on corn?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am opposed if it does more harm than good.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If it does more good than harm I am supporting it.

Mr. MANION: We are having another exhibition of fencing.

Mr. BENNETT: A great deal of the corn from Nova Scotia comes from the Argentine. On that corn the duty is not 25 cents, but 20 cents less 10 per cent because of the treaty, making 18 cents.

Mr. NEILL: What about the Pacific coast?

Mr. BENNETT: The same thing applies. Purchases have been very considerable from ships coming to Vancouver.

Mr. NEILL: From the Argentine?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, through the canal.

Mr. NEILL: Do we not get a large quantity from Manchuria?

Mr. BENNETT: A very limited amount.

Mr. NEILL: A few years ago there used to be ship-loads of it.

Mr. BENNETT: The rate is 18 cents because under the treaty there is an intermediate rate of 20 cents less 10 per cent for direct shipment.

Mr. BROWN: I am afraid that statement shatters the hopes of some of the men on the prairies who have been thinking of 25 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: Twenty-five from the United States.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): My appeal to the Prime Minister would be that this is a very serious matter for the farmers of the province of Ontario. Over fifty years ago there was a battle royal on the part of those farmers to import feeding corn duty free. After years of fighting not only throughout the country but in this House of Commons that commodity was placed on the free list. I think that took place in 1897 and from that day to the present irrespective of what government has been in power, they have always seen fit to allow Indian corn to come into this country free of duty. I may say in the locality from which I come, throughout my life time we have fed a mixture of corn and grains to fat cattle and dairy cows.

Mr. BENNETT: The corn fed to the dairy cows would be ensilage, would it not?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): No; we have grown that corn, forty acres at a time, for silo purposes. We do not think however that it pays us in our section of the country to grow corn for grain purposes. There are some farmers who grow a small quantity for the feeding of poultry, and if they were not allowed to purchase it they might grow enough for their hogs. I would say to the Prime Minister however that this is a very serious matter. Hon. members who are engaged in agriculture know that we are looking to the British market for disposition of our beef animals and dairy products, and in that market we have to compete with the Irish and British farmers and the farmers from Denmark. All those men get their corn duty free, and they have always looked upon that commodity as one of their main grain foods. One of my cousins who was engaged in the grain business and the business of supplying feed to the dairymen of Paisley and Glasgow almost always made a practice of cutting up hay and straw and mixing grain with them. The manner in which they mixed those grains was determined by very careful feeding experiments which had been conducted for years by the experimental tables of the Rothamsted Experimental Station in England. That station has always been considered one of the most reliable in the world. Not only has that been the result of experiments conducted at that station but it is also the result of experiments conducted for many years by the farmers of Ontario.

With respect to the importation of corn I may say that owing to the very emergent conditions existing among the farmers of the province of Ontario importations were somewhat less during the last year. The following table will give an idea of the importations:

Year	Number of bushels
1928	14,999,000
1929	14,128,000
1930	14,839,000
1931	10,055,000

I may say that those figures are given for the fiscal years ending March 31.

Without exception in years gone by we have had imported into the constituency from which I come many carloads of corn for feeding purposes, and it will be a distinct disadvantage to the farmers of that section of the province of Ontario—

Mr. BENNETT: Would the hon. gentleman allow a question?—he is always most courteous in that regard. How many bushels of Indian corn did he purchase in the year for his farm and cattle? I should like to have an idea of an average purchase.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): I may tell you, sir, that until ten years ago I conducted my farming operations as vigorously as possible. However at the end of that year my eldest son passed away. For years before that time we used to buy two carloads of corn or about 2,000 bushels per year. Previous to the time Indian corn was allowed in free we purchased corn from the counties of Essex and Kent. For two years those purchases were made but were never a success because the corn of those counties had so much moisture in it that in large quantities it would not keep. After purchasing that corn for two years we discontinued the practice.

Mr. GOTT: The hon. member has spoken about moisture in Essex and Kent county corn. I should like to tell him there will be no moisture this year because in each county a drier has been installed.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): I wish to plead further with the Prime Minister. As farmers we should like to have the privilege, concerning which he has spoken many times in this house, of equal opportunity and fair competition. If this privilege is withdrawn from the province of Ontario it is withdrawing one of the greatest privileges the farmers in that province have enjoyed for many years in the business of live stock feeding.

Mr. SENN: I would suggest that the hon. member speak for his own county.

Mr. DONNELLY: I have been very much interested in this discussion in regard to the relative feeding values of barley and corn. We western farmers are interested in the duty because no doubt we have lots of barley to sell, and we are anxious to get our coarse grains on the market. But for the life of me I cannot see how this duty on corn is going to help us one iota. The member for South Essex tells us the farmers in his constituency are going to supply us with our corn and that this duty will boost the price.

Mr. GOTT: I did not say that.

Mr. DONNELLY: The economic condition of the farmers in western Canada and indeed throughout the country is so serious today that they want to get their barley cheaper. We want to get our barley down to eastern Canada cheaper. We want to lower freight rates so we can sell our barley and displace corn in the eastern markets. This duty will not enable us to do so. Many a farmer throughout the country believes firmly in his heart that nothing can take the place of corn when you come to fatten cattle. You cannot get the fat interwoven between the lean by feeding barley, you can only do it by feeding corn. Many of our farmers know this, and the abattoir men also know it. That is why so many of them believe that corn is better than barley for feeding cattle. This duty will not do the farmers of eastern Canada one particle of good, nor will it help the farmers of western Canada to dispose of their barley. We want reduced freight rates so we can get our barley down here to displace corn.

Mr. MULLINS: I have listened with a good deal of attention to these professional men, and I wonder how many of them have used barley and corn for feeding purposes. The Prime Minister is absolutely correct in placing a duty on corn in the interests of the farmers of this country. In my constituency of Marquette barley is selling at eight and ten cents a bushel, and the farmers all over Manitoba have been appealing to us to get a duty placed on corn. As to the relative feeding values of corn and barley, I have fed barley and I have fed corn, and I have made better gains feeding barley to my cattle than I ever did feeding them corn. I prefer barley to corn any time, if it is handled by a proper feeder.

I wonder if some hon. gentlemen ever think of any other part of Canada but just their own little home circles—there are other parts of the dominion. Western Canada pressed for this duty to be placed on corn to help the western producer of coarse grains, that is, the man struggling on the land.

Mr. NEILL: You were feeding big three or four year old steers were you?

Mr. MULLINS: I was feeding mature cattle outside the city of Winnipeg and made a gain of two and a quarter pounds a day feeding barley; when I fed corn that I imported from the United States in carload lots I made a gain of only two pounds a day.

Mr. DONNELLY: You were not giving them enough.

Mr. MULLINS: I can make better gains on barley than on corn; so can anybody if he handles the feed properly.

Mr. LOUCKS: As a farmer of western Canada I know something of the feed value of barley. I think hon. members from Saskatchewan will at least endorse what I am going to say in connection with the feed value of barley for poultry. We have heard a good deal about chickens—I am going to mention turkeys. I think the flavour of the turkeys that we raise in Saskatchewan is unsurpassed, and we feed them on barley.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Except those of the county of Charlevoix.

Mr. LOUCKS: I endorse what the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) has said. I have fed barley to feeder steers. I think hon. members from Saskatchewan will also endorse what I am going to say, unless they have had no experience, and it seems to me that some of them have not.

Mr. DONNELLY: Do you mean to say I am not a farmer?

Mr. LOUCKS: You cannot have had much experience feeding cattle or turkeys.

Mr. DONNELLY: I farm three times the amount of land you do.

Mr. LOUCKS: I am not a doctor, I am a farmer, and I am talking from practical experience as a farmer.

Mr. DONNELLY: So am I.

Mr. LOUCKS: I think the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) will have to acknowledge that we in the west more than hold our own in the feeding of cattle for export. It is surprising to me that hon. members on the opposite side take such an antagonistic attitude with respect to this duty on corn, especially after the speech which the hon. member for Willow Bunch made on the address, in the course of which he criticized the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Loucks) for not taking the active part he should take in endorsing what he had said in favour of protecting the agriculturist all along the line. Now he is opposing the very thing I endorsed in my speech on the address. At that time I said I had a mandate from my constituents asking for protection. I do not know what the people of Saskatchewan will say to the hon. member for Willow Bunch and his friends when they go back home.

Mr. DONNELLY: We will take a chance.

Mr. LOUCKS: I am glad we have a sufficient number of members on this side of the house to ensure the passing of these tariff increases. I know that in the constituency of Rosetown I will get a lot of credit for supporting the duty on corn. Last year during the campaign the Prime Minister said that portection meant protection for all, and I think his statement is being verified by the putting of this duty on corn. I should like hon. members from Ontario and from British Columbia to give us a little cooperation on these lines. We in the prairie provinces did not howl our heads off when British Columbia asked for protection for her fruit. We were willing to help them in that direction even if it cost us a little more for the fruit we consume on the prairies. I can assure my hon. friends from British Columbia that when once they get educated to feeding barley to their stock they will not go back to feeding corn. We have had such success in Saskatchewan in feeding barley to steers, turkeys and chickens that we are well satisfied.

We should have a uniform policy on the tariff. In my speech on the address I said I was confident that what I was recommending would be given consideration in due time, and here we are now given an opportunity to support this duty on corn. It will be a great pleasure to me to go back to my constituency and tell the farmers that, as the Prime Minister said during the campaign, protection means protection for all for farmers as well as for manufacturers. We have heard much from hon. members opposite against the various tariff items. As a farmer from Saskatchewan I should like to repeat that the western farmers are not all opposed to increased duties, as one might imagine after listening to members opposite representing western constituencies. As I have said before this session, in my constituency, I think I was up against one of the greatest free traders in Canada, although my hon. friend from Weyburn (Mr. Young) might compete with the gentleman who opposed me, Mr. John Evans, who I understand is quite a free trader. At any rate I am glad to say that we are well satisfied to give this change a trial to see what the result will be. Most of us in the west are still big enough to cooperate with the other parts of the dominion, and we only ask for fair play from the people of British Columbia. If we have a chance I think we will be able to educate the people of that province, so they have nothing to fear from the tariff on corn. The hon. member for Souris has spoken of the tests which have been carried on, and I hope the Saskatchewan members particularly will see their way clear to support this measure. We admit that things are bad in Saskatchewan; we would like an outlet for our barley. We are going to have that outlet now, and we are glad to receive the support of the east. I am not criticizing the hon. members from British Columbia; their opposition is due to lack of education and nothing else, and we will overlook that.

Mr. REID: I think too much has been said about British Columbia, particularly with regard to our lack of education; I cannot let that go by. No one could be more patriotic in buying Canadian products than the poultrymen of British Columbia, but they believe in fair play. When they see people in foreign countries purchasing Canadian grain for less than we in British Columbia can purchase it, naturally they protest against any imposition of this kind. With reference to the feeding of turkeys I can tell my hon. friend that in British Columbia turkeys fed on wheat and corn command a price much greater than that paid for turkeys from Saskatchewan. If hon. members do not believe that statement I can get the figures.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think our farmer friends are unduly alarmed about this duty. The poultrymen will have to pay a little more for their corn, but the price of barley will not be increased. If it is any comfort to my Conservative friends in western Canada they can go home and tell their constituents they have put a duty on corn which they hope will increase the price of barley, but their constituents will have to be very gullible to believe that this will help them in any way. Hon. gentlemen opposite told the people of Canada that by putting a duty on butter the price would be increased, and that the same thing would happen in connection with beef, but we are exporting these commodities and will continue to do so, and the prices in foreign countries will continue to fix the prices at home. So I am not very much alarmed about the duty on corn. The poor old poultryman will have to pay the duty, that is all; the Ontario farmer who of necessity must use some corn will pay the duty also. As far as we are concerned in western Canada it is just so much eyewash with regard to getting an increased price for our barley.

Mr. YOUNG: Could the Prime Minister tell us about how many bushels of barley he hopes to be able to market by this measure?

Mr. BENNETT: I intimated to the committee that since there was no separation of items I could not give any accurate information in that regard. That question was asked by the former Minister of Agriculture. Professor Grant of the Manitoba agricultural college gave a great deal of study to this matter. It will be remembered that he was employed as an expert by the former advisory board, and I am indebted to one hon. member of the house for a copy of the report he made upon the use of barley instead of corn. He closes his report with these words:

> The necessity for these imports in the light of our present knowledge may be seriously doubted. Evidently the traditionary practice or the aping of "corn belt" feeding outweighs other considerations. The Canadian wheat pool, backed by authorities and experiment station records is, at the present time, putting on an intensive educational campaign to sell the merits of Canadian barley to eastern feeders of live stock.

He deals with the question at some length. This is rather an interesting document to the layman who is neither a chicken fancier nor an agriculturist. All I can say is that I believe the result of this effort will be at least to ascertain with certainty the relative values of barley and corn for the purposes indicated. Other governments have had this matter in mind on previous occasions, when the emergency was not so great and conditions were not so bad. I believe this will stimulate the use of barley for the purposes indicated by the report.

Mr. YOUNG: Rather a costly experiment I think.

Mr. BENNETT: I think not.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): I was pleased indeed to hear the remarks of my right hon. friend the Minister of Finance but when he speaks of the results of experiments with regard to the feeding of barley in comparison with corn I am satisfied that those experiments have not been conducted for a sufficiently long period to give a justifiable result. I may tell hon. members of this house that I was brought up at the feet of men such as Doctor Mills, Professor C. A. Zavitz, Professor Panton and Professor George E. Day, and those men—

Mr. QUINN: They are all dead now.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): No, they are not, but those who have passed away, Professor Mills and Professor Panton, will be remembered as long as agriculture continues to exist in this country.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, July 10, 1931.

The house met at three o'clock.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. W. C. S. McLURE (Queens) moved concurrence in the second report of the joint select standing committee of both houses on the printing of parliament presented to the house on Thursday, July 9, 1931.

Motion agreed to.

STATUTE OF WESTMINSTER

JOINT ADDRESS TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That it be resolved that a message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that this house doth agree in the address to His Excellency the Governor General praying that His Excellency may be pleased to transmit our joint address to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, relative to a measure to be submitted to the parliament of the United Kingdom, and more particularly set forth in the said joint address; and have filled in the blank space therein with the words "and Commons."

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILL

Bill No. 118, to incorporate Service Loan and Finance Corporation.—Mr. Lawson.

Mr. STIRLING (for Mr. Lawson) moved that the bill be referred to the committee on banking and commerce.

Motion agreed to.

AUSTRALIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Before the orders of the day are proceeded with, I think I should inform the house that the cable arrangements with Australia contemplate a statement being made on Monday with respect to the trade agreement made between Canada and that dominion. Owing to the difference in time it will suit the convenience of the ministers there if the statement is made here about nine o'clock in the evening, and I trust that the house will afford us an opportunity for such a statement to be made on Monday evening at nine o'clock or thereabouts. I have not yet received the agreement. The mail apparently has been delayed, and if anything should intervene to prevent its being received between now and Monday the statement might be deferred, but I promised the house that I would advise it as soon as I received word as to the time at which the statement would be made.

BRITISH AMERICAN OIL COMPANY

MEMORANDUM WITH RESPECT TO COMPANY'S LABOUR POLICY

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I think I should direct attention to the fact that a few days ago the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) made a statement regarding labour conditions, and the attention of the president of the British American Oil Company, Limited, having been directed to his statement, quoting a statement which appeared in a newspaper not published in Canada, a memorandum was sent to me which reads as follows:

On page 3465 of Hansard, July 7th, are remarks dealing with the labour policy of The British American Oil Company Limited. These remarks are misleading and untrue.

The construction of the refinery at Montreal is, in the main, under contract to various firms, and such work as is being performed by the company is being paid for at rates prevailing for similar work in the city of Montreal.

No labour organization, or individual, for that matter, has made complaint to the company as to rates of wages being paid according to testimony of the Montreal office of the company.

The policy of the company has, since its incorporation in 1906, been very favourable to labour.

Employees, after two years' service have their lives insured in favour of their estate, or such beneficiary as they may name, the total expense being borne by the company; this insurance continued in force so long as the worker remains in the employ of the company.

The company contributes 50 per cent (the employees the balance), to a sick benefit fund which gives employees income during illness and carries with it payments in connection with funeral expenses to worker or any member of his family.

The present rates of wages are not below those effective during the war period, or subsequent thereto.

Employees have a works committee which meets with management, and never once has there been a demand for increased wages, and consequently there has never been a strike in any of the company's plants.

It is significant that the subject matter to which reference is made appeared in a United States labour publication, namely "Labor," Washington, D.C., June 30, 1931. If there were foundation for the charges then, why did not one, at least, if not all, of the Canadian labour papers deal with the matter? Canadian labour is not unmindful of the fact that through the construction of refinery at Montreal The British American Oil Company is contributing in this item alone over $1,000,000 directly to the workers.

Mr. Heenan mentions The Toronto Iron Works Limited as a close ally of The British American Oil Company. There is no connection between The Toronto Iron Works and The British American Oil Company. A. L. Ellsworth, the president of both companies, established The British American Oil Company in 1906, and The Toronto Iron Works in 1907. While A. L. Ellsworth and P. W. Binns are officers of both companies, yet they are inactive in The Toronto Iron Works Limited, and the companies have no community of interest through stock ownership.

The Toronto Iron Works Limited has done much work over the past years in the eastern provinces, including Quebec, and is paying today rates of wages at Montreal no lower than paid in the past. The maximum rate is 83 cents per hour, and the minimum rate for unskilled labour is 35 cents per hour.

The company, in common with most contractors, employs its men nine hours per day. No Sunday work.

There is not one iota of excuse for the use of the words, "bludgeoning, bullying and discriminating," as used by Mr. Heenan based upon the matter contained in the Washington publication.

I make no comment on this memorandum in any way, shape or form, but I think in all fairness I must, as minister, communicate it to the house in the same sense in which it was forwarded to me by the president of the company concerned.

Mr. LAPOINTE: May I say that apparently the right hon. gentleman does not agree with the ruling of the Deputy Speaker that we are not allowed to read in the house communications from outside reflecting on statements that have been made in the house.

Mr. BENNETT: I was not present, I think, Mr. Speaker, when that ruling was given. All I can say is this, that a sense of fair play must always govern deliberative bodies.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Both sides.

Mr. BENNETT: When a statement is made to this house by a member who has been a former minister, surely the people affected have a right to direct the attention of the government to it in order that equal publicity may be given to their side of an issue as was given by the minister.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am quite willing to agree, provided that my right hon. friend sides with us in future when the Deputy Speaker prevents us from doing the same thing.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): I sincerely welcome the remarks of the Prime Minister with respect to this matter because it is only fair that both sides of any question should be put before the house. I would remind the Prime Minister, however, that there was no statement made by me with respect to this matter. I was simply quoting from a labour paper.

Mr. BENNETT: Not published in Canada.

Mr. HEENAN: The conditions were reported upon by a Canadian corespondent, who is a very prominent man in this country. When he was making the investigation he had labour men associated with him. I propose when the labour estimates are discussed to bring up on the floor of the house that very same question.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to see in the votes and proceedings, at this late stage of the session, a notice for the introduction of a bill amending the criminal code. I do not know whether the measure is of an emergent character to cover a special situation, or whether the amendments proposed are extensive or important.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): There are no radical provisions in the proposed change, with the exception of one concerning Doukhobor parades in western Canada. The other amendments are of a simple nature.

Mr. POULIOT: The Ku Klux Klan should lend their nightshirts to the Doukhobors.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO BRINGING DOWN OF FURTHER LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Before we proceed to further business may I ask my right hon. friend if this bill will be the last of the legislation to be brought down with the exception of that which is to deal with unemployment relief?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend says "No." I do think it is about time he had a little appreciation for the position of hon. members in this house. Instead of acting as a Prime Minister he behaves as a dictator—and a disagreeable dictator, at that. All through this session he has been indifferent to the convenience of hon. members and has not seen fit even to bring down the proposed legislation in a manner which would enable it to be properly discussed. When, on repeated occasions, we have tried to accommodate him, all we have received by way of thanks has been a lecture or some rude remark.

I am speaking very plainly to my right hon. friend; he may continue to run the business of the house in the way he considers best, regardless of others, but it may be well for him to remember that there are two sides who have to do with and will have a say in the handling of it.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF RESOLUTIONS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose last night it was considering item No. 55 of the schedule. Shall the item carry?

Mr. DONNELLY: Mr. Chairman, when we were speaking about corn last night I referred to the fact that the western grain growers would like to have cheaper freight rates for grain and fodder so that their coarse grains may be shipped at lower rates to the markets throughout Canada. I wish to substantiate what I said by reading an extract from a publication by the National Dairy Council of Canada following its meeting of March, 1931. On page 76 I find the following:

> Cheaper feeds are essential if there is to be an expanding production of dairy products. These are attainable through:—
> (a) Cheaper distribution of grains and mill feeds. This involves lower freight rate to the extreme eastern and western parts of Canada in addition to bulk shipments and storage. The operations of the coarse grain pool promise to materially assist in this regard.

In other words the National Dairy Council is urging that there should be cheaper freight rates for coarse grain. I maintained last night and repeat to-day that the proposed duty on corn will mean added expense to those people who are carrying on the dairy industry, trying to fatten cattle or to raise poultry. My suggestion to the Prime Minister would be to leave the duty on corn as it is, namely, to leave it free for feeding purposes. As he has seen fit to allow a five cent freight rate on wheat I would suggest that he should make the same rate applicable to barley and coarse grains for domestic feeding purposes in order that the farmers in eastern Canada may be able to obtain barley at a cheaper rate. Either he should do that or cut the freight rates. It is absolutely essential however, if we are going to continue as a dairy producing and mixed farming country, that we should have our feeds distributed at cheaper rates throughout the Dominion. Either our farmers in western Canada must have assistance to bring their coarse grains at cheaper rates to eastern Canada and into British Columbia or assistance must be given either through cheaper freight rates or by the five cents which is being given to the wheat growers. In my opinion that should apply also to the barley growers so that their coarse grains may be delivered at cheaper rates. I should like to know whether or not the Prime Miinster will take into consideration the wishes of the National Dairy Council and the farmers throughout Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: Freight rates will not be dealt with by this legislation, because the government does not make them. They are made by the Board of Railway Commissioners. In my view the matters referred to by my hon. friend are not relevant on these tariff items. The remarks of my hon. friend with respect to freight rates have been repeated frequently, and sometimes I wonder whether hon. members realize the deficits with which the railways are faced at the present time and where those railway companies will find themselves if such deficits continue.

Mr. DONNELLY: What about five cents a bushel?

Mr. BENNETT: That is to help the wheat growers.

Mr. MacLEAN: If I may be permitted to say so, about the only way that coarse grains from the western provinces can be brought to the maritimes is by some change in the freight rates. A couple of years ago I thought I had made a good case concerning mill feeds and course grains before the railway commission on behalf of the farmers of eastern Canada. Despite that fact however we received no reduction and no benefit. The condition of maritime farmers in regard to mill feeds and coarse grains is this: The farmers of Denmark and other European countries can procure their feeds cheaper than the farmers of the maritime provinces. I would like the Prime Minister to say whether or not he thinks that is fair either to the producers of coarse grains in western Canada or the farmers in the maritimes. The export rate on grain and mill feeds is so low that they can be brought to the seaports in the maritimes, shipped to Europe and our friends in Denmark can get their feed cheaper than we can. That is the competition we have to meet on the markets of the world. I do not think any government in Canada should tolerate such conditions as that. Canadian farmers should be given a fair chance with the farmers of other parts of the world. If the party in power is a Canada-first party I think they should endeavour to see that all parts of Canada are treated fairly in this matter. I have no objection to five cents on wheat for export, but I think it should apply to coarse grains as well so that bran and millfeeds may be brought more cheaply to the farmers of the maritimes. As to the duty on corn increasing the sale of coarse grains in the maritime provinces, I do not think it will have this effect unless there is a revision of the freight rates. The fox ranches of Prince Edward Island use large quantities of corn meal, and if the price of furs continues to drop we may have to resort more than ever to corn meal, as it is the cheapest feed available. I understand the corn is imported and ground in Canada and shipped all over the Dominion.

An hon. MEMBER: Educate them to eat barley.

Mr. MacLEAN: I do not think there would be any chance in the world of the prairie provinces finding a market for their barley in Prince Edward Island, for our farmers already grow enough of this grain for their own use. I understand that the barley crop is not as large in Nova Scotia as it is in Prince Edward Island, and consequently there is a larger market there for the sale of barley than in my province. The only grain we bring in is corn, and naturally we would be opposed to the imposition of this duty.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Mr. Chairman, while I have no intention whatever of holding up this item, I wish to make another appeal to the right hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Bennett) to allow corn for feeding purposes to come in free of duty. When the committee rose last night I was saying that in my boyhood days I had been brought up at the feet of such men as Doctor James Mills, Professor Panton and Professor Day—men who did so much to make the Ontario Agricultural college and experimental farm the famous institution that it is to-day, for its reputation extends throughout the world. I have under my hand a pamphlet issued by the animal husbandry division of the dominion experimental farm which strongly advises the feeding of barley to our stock.

An hon. MEMBER: How about a little barley corn?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): It will take me just that much longer if my hon. friends of the opposition wish to interrupt.

Some hon. MEMBERS: We are not on the opposition side.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Although my friends are sitting on the government side they are in opposition to what I am saying at the present time. I would remind the committee that the men who direct the Ontario Agricultural college would not think of publishing a bulletin unless it were based on experiments carefully conducted over a period of years. May I call the attention of older members of the committee to a fact, which no doubt they will recall, that a certain variety of two-rowed barley was given to the farmers all over Ontario to test out on experimental plots. In those days I was conducting experiments on my father's farm. We experimented with that grain for four successive years and then considered it sufficiently good to recommend it to our fellow farmers. The second year, however, we found that grain was a dead failure, and I may add that after four or five years' further experiments by many farmers in Ontario as well as by the Ontario Agricultural college, that grain went out of use much more rapidly than it came in. In the light of that experience I am strongly of the opinion that a bulletin such as this should not be distributed until the experiments in the use of barley as a feed for stock had been conducted over a sufficiently long period to remove all doubt regarding its merits as a stock food ration. I notice a section of this bulletin headed Barley as a Feed for Horses. Let me quote:

> Another reason is the general impression that barley is a dangerous grain for horses, in that its use is frequently conducive to a scurfy condition of the skin and to itching, scurfy legs, —"too heating," the horseman says. Possibly a third reason is the comparative lack of palatability of barley compared with oats.

So far as the section comprising Ontario and eastern Canada is concerned, I am satisfied that barley in its raw state is a dangerous feed for our horses; boiled it is much more palatable and safe; although I do believe from information I have received that barley may safely be fed to horses in the United States on the Pacific slope. But for our dairy cattle and young growing animals, it is a grain which no one with any experience would recommend except as forming a very small percentage of the ration.

Speaking from my own experience and in view of the fact that corn is eagerly sought after by the farmers of the western section of Ontario, particularly in my own county, I would plead again with the Minister of Finance to allow this grain to come in free. I ask him to allow the farmers of Ontario to use their own judgment. They will not bring in corn if they do not think it pays them to do so. As I said last night, it was only after they had agitated for years that corn be put on the free list for feeding purposes that the government of that day, some thirty-five years ago, saw fit eventually to do so, and from that day to this corn has been allowed to remain on the free list. As my last word I would urge the Minister of Finance to allow corn to remain on the free list and so permit our farmers to exercise their own judgment as to whether they will purchase this grain or not.

Mr. BENNETT: I should be sorry to think that this was the last word of the hon. gentleman—

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): On the matter of corn.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh,—or would I be deprived of a very great pleasure. I think I forgot to say to the hon. members for New Westminster (Mr. Reid), Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), and Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley) that South African corn, which is now a very important factor in the world's production, will come in free, and therefore reach the ports of Halifax and Vancouver as heretofore under the British preference. I should also state, what possibly is fairly well known to some hon. gentlemen, that there was a time when we produced 15,000,000 bushels of corn, but the advent into this country of the corn-borer reduced our production to less than 5,000,000. Last year it was approximately 6,000,000 bushels. It was said last evening by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Gott) that it is believed the production will reach 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 bushels this year, and the area is being increased by thousands of acres during the present season. It is not improbable therefore that to some considerable extent the requirements of Ontario will be met by Ontario production, but to the extent to which it is not in other parts of Canada, having regard as I pointed out to transportation costs, there will be the opportunity for the use of coarse grains which will not bear the cost of export. Under these circumstances I do not know that I can add anything to the very laudable desire of the hon. gentleman, whose ripe experience and rich fund of humour contribute so greatly to the happiness of the government.

Mr. ROBINSON: I do not wish to prolong the debate, but I am anxious to relieve the mind of the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan). Last night the hon. gentleman spoke of getting Essex corn in his boyhood days, which would not keep because of the moisture content. In recent years Essex and Kent counties have been carrying on experiments, and now are growing a very high grade of corn, which is only 10 per cent greater in moisture content than Kansas corn, which is supposed to be the hardest and dryest corn on the continent. So I do not think the hon. member for South Huron should worry over a corn famine in Huron county because of this duty, since the county of Essex will be able to take care of their requirements, either by shiploads or carloads. In past years Essex county has shipped thousands of cars of corn to all parts of western Ontario, and personally I have never heard any complaint with regard to its quality. It is not the fault of the government if a shipment happens to be too moist; that is the fault of the inspector who ships the corn. I believe the 25 cents a bushel duty will help the farmers of Essex, Kent and Elgin counties very materially, since corn is one of the most profitable crops they can grow, therefore, I am heartily in favour of the proposed rate of duty.

Mr. BROWN: If the Prime Minister makes another speech probably he will shatter completely the hopes of the farmers of the west. Last night when he indicated that under the treaty with the Argentine corn would come in at 18 cents instead of 25 cents I thought I saw a look of dismay come over the faces of some of my hon. friends from Manitoba. Now he tells us that corn may come in from South Africa free, so I think the hopes of the farmers of Manitoba will be down 100 per cent by now.

I am not going to discuss this matter from the standpoint of the "dietetic eccentricities" of a chicken—and if Hansard will put those words in quotation marks I will not be robbing my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Willis) of that very choice phrase—but I do wish to discuss it from the standpoint of common sense. Before coming to this house, and since I have been here, I never pleaded for protection on any farm products, and I do not intend to begin now. In my judgment the farmer who links himself up with the principle of protection completely destroys his own position when seeking relief from the burdens which the protective system imposes upon him. I can well understand the attitude of some of the hon. gentlemen from the west, and in a measure I sympathize with them. They realize that they must go home carrying very little in the way of spoils and with very little to show in the way of the fulfilment of the promises made during the last election, so they are very anxious to have this little bit of a duty on corn which, in my judgment, really will amount to nothing as far as the western farmer is concerned.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): Will the hon. member permit a question? Is he opposed to this duty on corn; yes or no? Do not hedge, now; what is the answer?

Mr. BROWN: That is a question I do not object to answering, but before doing so I should like to ask another question of hon. members opposite; if I answer questions they should be willing to answer questions also. Before answering that question I should like to ask hon. gentlemen from the prairies if they are in favour of the 25 per cent duty on agricultural implements; if they are in favour of what has been done in regard to the raw material for the manufacture of binder twine; if they are in favour of what has been done in regard to barbed wire and a host of other things. I can put questions to hon. gentlemen opposite which will be just as embarrassing as questions they may put to me. I am going to answer that question, and I can do it with no embarrassment at all. I am opposed to the whole policy of this government in regard to tariffs. I am opposed to a duty on corn for the reason that I do not propose to hamstring myself when I come to advocate a reduction of the duty on those things which I use. In my judgment this proposition to put a duty on corn will be of very little, if any, advantage to the grower of western grain. When hon. gentlemen opposite from the prairies will answer the questions I have put to them as candidly as I have answered their question, we will have an interesting exhibition in this house.

Mr. MULLINS: Will the hon. gentleman permit me to answer his question? We gave a pledge to the electors in that country that we would support protection as long as the prices were not raised. • The prices of machinery and all other commodities have gone down under the policy of the right hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. BROWN: I said I could sympathize with hon. gentlemen opposite. They know they must go home with very little to show in fulfilment of the promises they made during the last election, so they want to carry home this little duty on corn and the five cent rate on wheat.

Mr. WILLIS: Are you in favour of that?

Mr. BROWN: That is another question of the same kind. I want to tell hon. gentlemen opposite that what they will have to show their constituents as a result of their labours will be but as dust in the balance compared with the duty on agricultural implements, the imposition in regard to barbed wire, the action of the government in regard to the raw materials entering into the production of binder twine, and a host of other things. For my part I am going to take good care that the eyes of the farmers are not blinded by these little things to the neglect of the many more important things in this budget.

Mr. BOYES: I should like to add just a few words to what has been said with regard to corn. Last night the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott) spoke on this matter and opposed the duty on corn. I am from the eastern portion of the same county, and I wish to say that I am decidedly in favour of the duty. Our people in the county of Middlesex can raise corn in abundance, and I am sure that they will strongly favour this duty. I believe the farmers of our country should receive protection on a great many commodities, and the duty on corn is one of the ways in which we can protect our farmers to some extent.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): As one of the members from the eastern part of Saskatchewan I think it is my duty to make just a few observations as to my position with respect to this duty. During the campaign last year one of the issues was the placing of a duty on corn and it met with favour. I have had many letters from my electors and they are very much in favour of the government's action in placing a duty on corn. In the eastern part of Saskatchewan we have been growing more and more barley, and, as the hon. member for Souris said last night, we have great quantities of this grain in storage.

As regards the comparative feed value of barley and corn, I do not think it is necessary to say anything further. Statistics have been given, and the hon. member for Souris in his first speech made a very good case in favour of barley. At any rate, the difference, if any, is so slight that it is not worth considering. Practical feeding tests have proven that you can get as large a percentage of gain on the average animal with barley as with corn. With respect to the feeding of poultry, a good deal was said in the house last night, and I would direct attention to the evidence given before the committee on agriculture on June 9 by Mr. Brown, chief of the poultry division of the Department of Agriculture, in which he stated that eggs from the western provinces had a premium in the Montreal market. He stated further that prairie extras on the Montreal market were a product to be proud of. At the present time hens in the west are not being fed corn.

I wish to refer to a point that has not yet been discussed in this house with reference to corn. I think hon. members will agree with me that the area in which corn is produced on the North American continent is gradually extending north. I think it was three years ago—the ex-Minister of Agriculture will bear me out—that we held a corn show in the town of Indian Head. We showed corn that was produced in all parts of the western provinces of Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and the exhibition proved conclusively that corn grown in the prairie provinces is equal in qualty to any corn produced in the states to the south of us. A representative from that corn area in the United States attended the show and he said that our corn was of equal quality with any corn grown in the United States. This spring farmers have had inquiries for corn grown in the western provinces for seeding purposes in the states south of us as far as Texas.

I venture to say that under normal climatic conditions we can produce a large quantity of good corn in western Canada. It would not take a very great amount of corn to supply even the demand for feeding purposes. Take British Columbia, for instance: two hundred thousand acres of corn would supply the demand. Under favourable climatic conditions, therefore, that industry could be developed right in our own country so that there would be no need for us to worry about corn coming from other parts of the world.

It has been suggested on the other side that it would be better to have a reduction in freight rates. I think the placing of a duty on corn is a very good argument in favour of an adjustment of domestic freight rates, and it would appear to be necessary. And if the extreme east and west would come in on it, that would be a great argument in support of such an adjustment. I am surprised to observe that many hon. members on the opposite side from the western provinces are quibbling on this question. They are trying to justify their opposition to the duty on corn. When their electors read the speeches they have been making on this question the impression will not be very favourable to them.

I am delighted to note the very ready response we have had on this side of the house from the extreme eastern and western members in supporting us with regard to this duty on corn. It is gratifying to see such a splendid spirit of national cooperation among the eastern and western members in this respect, and I am only too pleased to endorse and support the action of the government in placing the duty on corn.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think we are all agreed that the government is desirous of helping someone, presumably the barley growers. Now, however, we find it is the corn growers whom this duty is intended to help—maybe both. At all events, it will put up the price of corn. That is obvious. If you put on a duty of 25 cents a bushel, does anyone suggest that the result will not be an increase in price? I say it will put up the price; it will compel the buyers of corn to pay that much more for this commodity. And that will adversely affect the poultry industry. Now, the question is, what additional price will it require to move barley from western Canada either to the Pacific or down here? It cannot move itself; it will not pay for its carriage. The result is that a good deal of it is still on the farms. Low grade barley will have to be raised from 10 to 12 cents before it can begin to move. Will this duty on corn raise the price of barley 10 cents? If it does not, then the object of this duty will not be realized. You must get the barley to move, and it is not moving because of the low price. A good deal of low grade barley and low grade wheat did not carry itself to Fort William, and the farmer had not only to give the barley away for the freight rate, but he was even billed by the railways for more. He was minus some dollars for freight besides giving away his barley or his wheat. I say, therefore, that this assistance, with all due respect to the Prime Minister in his desire to help the barley growers, will be ineffective unless it extends sufficient help to get the barley moving. And that will take 10 cents a bushel. Again I ask, will a duty of 25 cents on imported corn raise the price of barley 10 cents? I do not believe it will raise it one iota. It may give a market for the best barley, the kind of grain that will carry itself, to the extent of four million or five million bushels if that much corn is shut out by this 25 cents duty. But I do not know whether it will do that. One thing is dead sure, however: it is going to hurt the poultry growers. They will have to cough up more for their corn. To talk about barley being a substitute for corn in the feeding of poultry is absolute nonsense; you cannot get the poultrymen anywhere, in the east or in the west, to support such a contention. Ask the poultry themselves by throwing a mixture of corn, wheat, barley and oats before poultry and see which they will take first. They will take first the corn and next the wheat and then either the oats or barley depending upon which is the better quality. Poultry do not like barley in the whole state. I have a friend in Hamilton who is a manufacturer of high class poultry feeds. I am told by the best authorities that just to the extent that barley is substituted for corn, thus increasing the fibre content of the mixture, there must be added a quantity of hulled oats in order to keep down the fibre content. Not only that, but those mysterious vitamins of which we hear so much are lost. If barley is fed you must make up for the absence of the vitamins by the use of cod liver oil. Hon. members should not laugh at that, because that is the fact. The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) referred to the duck farm at Knowlton. I had the pleasure of visiting this farm and one would think the whole top of the earth was a moving mass of ducks. The primary purpose of a duck is to be eaten. Enough eggs must be laid of course in order to perpetuate the species but the primary object is meat production. A duck is not very particular as to the palatability of its food; it will eat anything and that is one of the reasons why barley is used to the extent it is at the Knowlton farm.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They do not need cod liver oil.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that for the first three or four years this Knowlton farm was a failure because of an insufficient number of ducks. They had to get the quantity up and the cost of feed down, and I believe they have reached that point to-day and for some years past and are making a great success. This is an entirely different thing to feeding hens for egg-laying purposes.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Do I understand correctly that this item includes corn for seed purposes as well as for feed?

Mr. BENNETT: There is a certified or registered seed item.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Registered seed corn will come in free. In reply to the statement made by the hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Boyes), who referred to the wishes of the farmers of the county of Middlesex in regard to this duty, I would say that he is not as familiar with the wishes of the farmer in regard to a duty on corn as are some of the other representatives from that county. If he had been he would not have made the remark he did. When the agitation was on for the removal of the duty which formerly existed in regard to corn, no one was more anxious that that should succeed than the cattle producer of the county of Middlesex. These men produce perhaps a greater number of fat cattle in the northern and western portions of the county than do the farmers of any other county in Ontario and they were very active in the agitation to have the duty on corn removed.

An hon. MEMBER: When was that?

Mr. STEVENS: It was in 1896.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think it was shortly after 1896. It was a great boon to the farmers in that district and to the cattle raisers throughout the whole of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: I must correct the statement I made in connection with certified seed. The practice has been to refund any duty paid by means of an order in council rather than to make the item free. We have endeavoured to develop a seed corn business in this country, but where it becomes necessary or advisable to change the seed a refund of the duty is made.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Looking at the schedules I see that seed peas and seed beans come in free. I cannot understand why these should be permitted to come in free while a duty is imposed on seed corn.

Mr. BENNETT: I think they are free only under the British preference.

Mr. ELLIOTT: As I read the changes, they are free altogether.

Mr. BENNETT: They are free from the United Kingdom.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I notice some dashes here, what do they mean?

Mr. BENNETT: That means that they are not free under the intermediate and general tariffs.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What is the duty?

Mr. BENNETT: The ordinary seed rate, which I think is 22½ and 25 per cent.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I take it that I am being assured—

Mr. BENNETT: The rate is 10 per cent, under item 72.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I take it I am being assured by my right hon. friend that seed corn will come in free if properly certified.

Mr. BENNETT: It pays a duty, but where an application is made and the facts are established as to its being certified or registered seed, then the custom has been to refund the duty by order in council.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As I understand, the suggestion made by the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly), in regard to freight rates, it is that the five cents absorption policy, which my right hon. friend has with such good intentions put into effect on export wheat, be applied to all wheat and coarse grains. That would then take care of the barley situation and not penalize the users of corn with but problematical help to barley growers. I do not know whether or not my right hon. friend understands what I am driving at.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I do.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If I wanted to take any political advantage out of this matter I would allow the right hon. gentleman to go on and make this mistake.

An hon. MEMBER: Why don't you?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Because it is a mistake which would hurt the poultry industry. Even though I say it myself I think I have been privileged to do something to develop the poultry industry of Canada, and I do not like to see it prejudiced at this critical stage.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Mr. Speaker, before passing this item, it might be well to ascertain the policy of the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) in connection with the new tariff on corn. Considering the present prices for eggs, bacon, and butter, I think it would be detrimental to farmers to exact from them higher prices for the cereals they make use of in producing butter, pork, and eggs. I should like to ascertain what are the hon. Postmaster General's views on this question because, in Quebec, barley is not grown in any quantity.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for l'Islet (Mr. Fafard) has had a sufficiently long parliamentary experience to know that the policy of the Postmaster General is the same as that of the Government.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Good or bad?

Mr. MORAND (Translation): It is always a good one.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): You know what you did yourself in the past.

Mr. ILSLEY: Under what item would the drawback on corn imported for the manufacturing of cornmeal be found? Where can I find the provision which makes the duty 18 cents instead of 20 cents on corn coming in from the Argentine by direct route?

Mr. BENNETT: Those are two perfectly fair questions. The answer to the first will be found in the item itself as read last night by the chairman, item 54a.

Mr. ILSLEY: As amended.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. There is no drawback. It provides that it is free when used for human consumption.

Mr. ILSLEY: Is not most corn meal used for human consumption?

Mr. BENNETT: The term is broad enough to cover that at any rate. The corn meal mills in the part of the country from which my hon. friend comes number four or five. It is one of the few parts of Canada in which corn meal mills still continue. There will be no refund or drawback. It is free.

The second question is answered in this way: The Argentine has a trade treaty with Canada. The rate is therefore under the intermediate tariff, 20 cents, but it is provided that when shipped direct to a Canadian port there is a reduction of 10 per cent, which makes the rate 18 cents. That becomes the rate under the most favoured nation clause and the provision of the section which was read last evening.

Mr. ILSLEY: The treaty is not published in the customs tariff as so many treaties are. That is one of the old treaties?

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman will do me the kindness of recalling what I said when I brought down the budget, now some weeks ago, he will recall that I gave the Argentine treaty as an illustration of an old British treaty.

Mr. BOUCHARD: I fail to see how this new tax on corn is going to help the farmers. Of course, we were told during the campaign that if the Conservatives were put into power the farmers would receive every consideration, but up to now I do not see how this government has helped the farmers in any way. Most of the poultry men, on the contrary, will suffer because of this increased tariff of 25 per cent on incubators for hatching eggs and on brooders for rearing young chickens, and complete parts of such equipment. I shall not be as prudent as the Postmaster General. I want to express myself very clearly on this question. I agree entirely with the ex-Minister of Agriculture when he says that this tax on corn cannot help the poultry men in eastern Canada at least. I am surprised that barley as a substitute for corn is at all palatable to the members sitting on the government side of the house. I think it is really more palatable to them than it is to the hens. I was also very much surprised at the efforts of professional men in the house to convince the hen that barley was good for her. Thy may succeed in convincing their electors that barley is a good substitute for corn, but as a poultry man myself I challenge any one of them to make a trial of this substitute. In confirmation of this, let me quote from a very valuable bulletin published by the Department of Agriculture, under the genial direction of the Hon. Robert Weir, B.A., Minister of Agriculture, and of Dr. Archibald, director of the Dominion Experimental Farms. I quote from Seasonable Hints from the Dominion experimental farms, in its issue for the summer of 1931. It says:

> Owing to its extremely low price barley is making up a greater part of the ration than ever before. At the present time it is more satisfactory ground and incorporated in the mash mixture rather than in the scratch grain owing to the fact that it is not very palatable to poultry.

Note that: It is not very palatable to poultry. I hope some hon. gentlemen will read this statement, which is published by the Department of Agriculture, before making all sorts of statements in this house. It goes on:

> That this lack of palatability is due to the hull—

It is not often that a lack of palatability is due to Hull:

> —has been demonstrated at this division, where some machine-hulled barley has been used in an experimentental way with excellent results.

But note what follows:

> Providing that the cost of hulling can be lowered sufficiently, hulled barley becomes the logical form in which to feed that grain in the scratch grain mixture.

But it has not been demonstrated that the cost of hulling barley can be lowered.

We have other instances of the sort of action this government is taking. They raised the tariff all around before establishing a tariff board. They raised the tariff on glass, for instance, before they knew what was coming. Now they have raised the tariff on corn, to encourage the use of barley as a substitute for corn, and as I have just shown by the quotation from the bulletin issued by the Department of Agriculture, barley as a substitute for corn for feeding hens is still in the experimental stage. I wonder if the very learned Minister of Agriculture has been consulted about this matter.

But the bulletin, after dealing with the lack of palatability of barley, goes on to say:

> Barley may be substituted for corn in both scratch grain and mash mixtures providing that its deficiency in vitamin A be made up through the addition of good quality alfalfa leaf meal, green cut clover or alfalfa and cod liver oil to the ration.

Alfalfa is not grown to a very great extent in the province of Quebec. Its cultivation is, in fact, barely beyond the experimental stage, but I think there is a big future for alfalfa in the province of Quebec. It is recommended in this bulletin that there be added to the ration alfalfa leaf meal, green cut clover, or alfalfa and cod liver oil. I do not know if there is a tariff on cod liver oil. If not, it must have been forgotten and will no doubt be remembered next time.

I really fail to see how the farmers have been helped by this government. I remember distinctly my opponent in the last election, a very genial orator—it is my privilege always to have good opponents—promising that if the Conservatives got into power the price of butter would rise. But what is the price of butter to-day? It is all right to have the home market, but we are in the export market, and we will remain in the export market for a long while. What is the price of eggs? May I say that if the farmers as a last resort were able to sell a few dozen eggs at a good price they would be assured of at least a little cash. The government proposes to increase the price of corn by 25 cents a bushel. Unless the good Tories succeed in educating the hens I am very much afraid we will not be able to substitute barley for corn, because particularly in the winter time such a substitution would be impossible. On many occasions I have tried it, and as for nine years I have been president of the poultry association in the province from which I come I think I ought to know something about the matter. In different contests I have received many prizes for my hens, and have taken an interest in poultry raising. I fail to see in this instance what good the government is doing.

Later on when we reach the subject of wool I shall have something further to say because I believe that is the only commodity in connection with which a tariff will give an advantage to the farmers. Certainly it has not given any advantage so far as butter, eggs and grain are concerned. Now the poultry men are faced with this impediment, and I think I am voicing the views of the poultry men of the province of Quebec when I register my opposition to the proposed tariff on corn.

Mr. BURNS: To my mind it is rather amusing that some hon. members opposite should find fault with the action of the government when it tends to increase the price of farm products. For about three months we have listened to speeches from hon. members on both sides of the house and most of them have dealt with the depression with which this country is now faced. In the main I think the economic condition may be traced to the lack of purchasing power of Canadian farmers. Surely any steps taken by this government to increase that purchasing power should be in the interests not only of Canadian farmers but of Canadians as a whole.

I hope the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) will not misjudge my remarks when I say that I have been unable to follow the force of his argument. He has said that he is opposed to the proposed tariff because it will increase the price of farm products, and that among other things it will increase the price of corn. Hon. members have said that large quantities of corn are grown in Canada, and that when a demand is made more will be grown. If we wish to place the farmers in a purchasing position we must give them something more than the bare cost of production. One of the first acts of this government was to introduce legislation to increase the price of farm products, but strange to say that action has met with severe criticism by hon. members opposite. The ex-Minister of Agriculture has said that the price of corn will be increased, and that therefore the price of that commodity grown by Canadian producers will also increase. He has admitted further that to some extent, at least, the price of barley will increase.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. BURNS: I thought my hon. friend said that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. BURNS: I think it is evident that the price of barley will be increased. Let us suppose however that the price of that commodity does not go up and look at the matter from a different viewpoint. At present there are 100,000,000 bushels of barley in storage waiting for a market. If a feed market can be secured whereby the poultry producers and stock feeders of Canada will feed barley instead of corn surely the producers will be in a position to dispose of great quantities in storage. In western Canada money will be placed in circulation and the farmers will be in a position to make purchases, resulting in great benefit to Canada as a whole. To my mind that is a logical argument.

I would ask hon. members to place themselves in the position of the farmers in western Canada who have millions of bushels of barley in storage which they cannot sell. Their first thought is to find a market for their product and this government has taken a step which will secure a market for at least a portion of that great amount in storage. For that action I think the government is to be commended.

Something has been said concerning the palatability of barley. I do not wish to take up the time of the house in dealing further with that matter, but I wish to ask hon. members on both sides of the house who enjoy their fall shooting where they find the wild ducks? If hon. members wish to go out for a stubble shoot where do they go? Do they go to the wheat stubble; do they go to the oat stubble?—no, they go to the barley stubble. That is where they find the game, and as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has said, "You cannot fool a hen." Likewise, you cannot fool a duck. There they are to be found in their wild state, and they pick out barley every time upon which to feed.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): Before this item is carried may I say that I was one who wrote several letters last fall asking for a duty on corn. I come from the north country where we do not grow either corn or barley, although the Swan river valley in my constituency constitutes one of the best agricultural areas in western Canada. I wrote letters only after I had received communications from farmers in the Swan river valley asking that some steps should be taken.

During this session I have heard a great deal about the wheat pool, and as the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) is a member of the pool and a great exponent of it I shall read for his benefit and that of the committee a letter I received from the secretary of that body:

Manitoba Wheat Pool
Wheat Pool Building
Winnipeg, Canada
January twenty-sixth, 1931.

Mr. B. M. Stitt, M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir:

I was instructed by the board of directors of Manitoba wheat pool to send you the following resolution, which was passed at a meeting of the members of the Swan River wheat pool local held on January 6th:—

"Resolved:

That we petition the government to place an embargo on feed corn for one year."

Our board respectfully urges your serious consideration of placing restrictions on imports of corn into Canada.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) F. W. Ransom,
Secretary.

I have before me another letter from Kenville, Manitoba, which is also in the southern part of my constituency. At a meeting of the United Farmers of Manitoba held in that place the following resolution was passed:

Moved by W. C. Hunt, seconded by F. Wood that with a view to creating a better market in eastern Canada for our barley we ask the federal government to place an embargo on feed corn.

Those are the letters which were responsible for my asking the government to place a duty on corn. I do not wish to discuss the relative merits of corn and barley, because as I am not an agriculturist I leave those matters to the decision of the lawyers. I have felt it my duty to place these letters on the records of the house.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It seems to me we are spending a considerable amount of time upon this item and I just wish to reassure my hon. friends opposite in connection with a matter brought up by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) that in every case where duties are imposed there is to be no increase in price. Of course the government is pledged to that.

Mr. BENNETT: Not on agricultural products.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is agriculture exempt? The government will not intervene by order in council if the price of agricultural products increases?

Mr. BENNETT: We are not interfering with them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): God help us; the farmer gets it again. Well, it certainly worked that way with butter, and I see my right hon. friend is now taking in cheese. But if the farmer gets an increase in price then the poor consumer is not to be protected as he would be if textiles or boots and shoes for example, were increased in price. This is rather an astonishing doctrine, and it works invariably against the farmer.

Mr. BENNETT: No, for him.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If prices go up the consumer is not to be protected against the farmer, but if the price of agricultural implements goes up the farmer will be protected! This policy shoots two ways. An hon. friend of mine suggests it is a gatling gun policy, but the gun turns both ways. Am I to understand that no action will be taken by the government if the price of corn goes up?

Mr. MORAND: Would you object to the price going up now?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not talking of that, I am talking of the principle and how the government would apply it.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—63. Rice, cleaned, per one hundred pounds: British preferential tariff, 50 cents; intermediate tariff, 90 cents; general tariff, $1.

When in packages weighing two pounds, each, or less, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty.

Mr. BENNETT: The change is in the intermediate and general. The present rates are 50, 65 and 75 cents; they will become 50 cents, 90 cents and $1. This is cleaned rice, not uncleaned. We import a large quantity on the Pacific coast and an extensive industry is carried on in cleaned rice. We have an undertaking from the largest producers in this country that the price will not be increased.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What proportion comes in under the British preference?

Mr. BENNETT: In 1930, 168,200 hundredweight, valued at $565,000. Seventy-one thousand hundredweight came from Hong Kong and 56,000 hundredweight from the United States.

Mr. YOUNG: I want to draw the attention of the committee to the way in which the customs regulations work out, but not for the purpose of blaming the government, because it happened before this government came into power. Rice grown in British Burma used to be shipped to Holland and there the hulls were removed; then it was shipped to Canada. The importers claimed it should be admitted to Canada under the intermediate rate because we had a treaty with Holland, but the customs officials said, "No, there is not sufficient Dutch labour in it to qualify under the intermediate tariff." "Very well," said the importers, "if this is not Holland rice it must be British rice"—it came from British Burma —"and therefore it should enter under the British preference." "No," said the customs officials, "once this rice left British Burma and entered Holland it lost its nationality and now it cannot come in as British rice, nor can it come in as Dutch rice; it is rice without a country." As I said, I am not attaching any blame to the government in this case, but I just wanted to draw attention to the fact that our customs regulations are such that sometimes we get the most ridiculous rulings. Here is rice that ordinarily might come in under the intermediate tariff, but being denied that rate is not allowed to be admitted as British rice under the British preferential rate.

Mr. BENNETT: I happen to know the case to which the hon. gentleman refers and I did make inquiries with respect to it. The answer which I received at that time seemed to me to be a fairly good answer: It is not British rice because it did not come direct from a British possession to Canada, therefore it is not British for customs purposes. There was not sufficient labour of the country from whence it came to entitle it to the intermediate. It is not a question of nationality, it is a question of its being entitled to the benefit of certain tariff provisions. I have not yet been able to see that the answer given to me is not a fairly good one. The statutory requirement with respect to British rice is that it must come direct to qualify as such.

Mr. BROWN: How would that explanation fit in with the provision we have in the West Indian treaty, that where goods come direct to Canadian ports we give them a ten per cent reduction? Surely if that is a sound principle, then—

Mr. BENNETT: I am afraid the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) did not follow me. Had the rice come direct from British Burma to a Canadian port and the rate had been in excess of fifty cents, there would have been a reduction of ten per cent. That is so also with respect to West Indian commodities provided for by the treaty and the Customs Act. But the difficulty was that in the case mentioned by the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) the rice did not qualify with respect to either under the statutory conditions and therefore was subject to the higher impost. I felt, and I think I did indicate to the minister at that time, that the ruling should be changed, but it was indicated to me,—and I am bound to say it seemed to me to be fairly so—that if you make an exception in favour of direct importation into Canada from the country of origin, you never know where you will end, and that it is better to stick to the principle rather than depart from it. That is what the government of that day did. I am bound to say I thought the reason given me at the time was sound and I did not raise the matter in the house, for reasons that the hon. member can understand—that if I suggested an exception to the rule, and he suggested an exception to the rule, and some one else suggested an exception to the rule, then the rule with respect to direct shipment vanishes and the benefit disappears.

Mr. YOUNG: I think it is just a question of the wisdom of the rule.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is a substantial increase of twenty-five cents on the general and the intermediate. I suppose the usual pledge is given that the price will not be increased, but our experience in this particular commodity is that cleaned rice has brought the same price plus the duty paid.

Mr. BENNETT: In the United States they charge two and a half cents a pound. In this country that has not been the case. Last year our production amounted to $1,400,000.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not understand why we need such extravagant increases in order to establish the industry. I am perfectly willing to take the right hon. gentleman's assurance that the price will not be increased. But he will find the price will be increased to pretty nearly the extent of the duty. If that were not so, then what in the name of common sense is the use of increasing these duties so much? The question answers itself.

Mr. BENNETT: I will answer it again.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have a pretty good idea of what my right hon. friend's answer will be, although I should not anticipate it. But if it is necessary to put on an extravagant duty, and then have the trade give an undertaking that they will not make use of that duty, what is the use of imposing it? I know only one industry in Canada that observed its undertaking and that was the rubber industry.

Mr. BENNETT: I will not trespass too long on the time of the committee. I shall content myself with saying that the effort is to secure to the Canadian producers the cleaned rice market in Canada. Last year it amounted to $1,400,000. We brought in a substantial quantity from Hong Kong and a quantity from the United States. We can sell none to the United States, there being a duty against us of 2½ cents per pound, and as the export trade is thereby prohibited we have endeavoured to ensure that Canadian production shall be available for the Canadian consumer.

Mr. NEILL: Where are these rice cleaning plants located?

Mr. BENNETT: There is one in Vancouver and one in Montreal of which I know; those two come to my mind at the moment.

Mr. REID: But is it not a fact, Mr. Chairman, that this industry is not entirely in the hands of Canadians in Vancouver, and that this does not really help Canadians? My information is that the majority of workers are Chinese or Japanese who are not citizens of this country.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend has raised a question which is far removed from tariff discussion. I could not answer the question, but at least this is a Canadian industry. The question of employment is a matter with which the provincial authorities have power to deal. I can only indicate that this would not be so with respect to the Montreal plant, so far as I know, and it does follow that in a good many industries to which the hon. gentleman might refer there are employed men and women who have come from other parts of the world. In some cases they are naturalized and in others they are not, but in the main they are naturalized Canadians and I do not think the fact that their employers avail themselves of the services of some employees who may not be Canadians should militate against the soundness of the principle that if possible this industry should be allowed to supply the requirements of the Canadian people, provided the tariff is not used for the purpose of exploitation.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I wanted to direct the attention of the Prime Minister to the Canada Year Book, in dealing with this question of rice. I notice that there are six rice mills in Canada, having twenty-seven salaried employees who were paid $74,000 and fifty-one wage earners, who were paid $52,000. According to the government reports, for the year ending March 31, 1930, we imported 175,884 hundredweight of cleaned rice and 402,923 hundredweight of uncleaned rice; the cost of the cleaned rice was about $3.92 a hundredweight, while the cost of the uncleaned rice was $2.99 per hundredweight, leaving a difference of almost $1 per hundredweight which would be available for cleaning purposes. Having that in mind I wonder whether there can be any necessity for increasing the duty on rice to $1 a hundredweight which, if these figures are correct, would give the rice mills $2 per hundredweight for cleaning a commodity which is worth about 3 cents a pound.

Mr. BENNETT: It is worth nearly 4 cents a pound on invoices of importations, and the raw rice is worth nearly 3 cents per pound at invoice prices. To that must be added transportation costs, including insurance, freight and brokerage charges. The result has been what I have indicated, that at present rates the industry has been threatened by importations from other parts of the world. If there is no increase in price—and if there is an increase the benefits that may accrue from this duty will be removed—it is believed that the maintenance of that source of supply in Canada for Canadians is beneficial to this country.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Has there been any increase in the importation of cleaned rice?

Mr. BENNETT: Last year we imported 168,200 hundredweight, as I indicated a moment ago, and there was a slight increase. But I indicated yesterday, with respect to these matters, that where the consumer could be protected in this time of emergency in regard to prices we were going, as far as might be within our power, to maintain that Canadian industry for the supply of Canadian requirements. The question of salaries and wages is one that might be discussed at very great length, but this is a milling industry. There were 27 men or women who were paid $74,000 in that year, which it will be observed is an average of something like $2,700, and the work people apparently were paid over $1,000 on an average. That is a far closer approximation of similarity than you will find prevailing in many industrial plants in this and other countries. I do not think an argument can be founded upon that condition, except that presumably those who drew salaries were also risking their capital and those who obtained employment were, if this business were interfered with, running the risk of losing their positions. For that reason, among others, this legislation is offered to the house, and that is the theory running through most of these items to which attention will be directed.

Mr. YOUNG: What are the wage costs in cleaning a pound of rice?

Mr. BENNETT: I could not answer that question.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): What were the importations of uncleaned rice?

Mr. BENNETT: We imported from the United States 200,528 hundredweight; from British India, 106,083 hundredweight; from Japan, 50,413 hundredweight; from Hong Kong, 48,050 hundredweight and from other countries 44,383 hundredweight, making a total of 449,457 hundredweight valued approximately at $1,100,000.

Mr. NEILL: I fear that this will prove a very heavy tax on the housewife, because rice is a very common food.

Mr. BENNETT: There will be no increase in price.

Mr. NEILL: I am coming to that; it will be a heavy tax unless the minister takes advantage of his power to prevent any increase in price. But I would ask whether this does not come under subsection 2 of section 17, which provides that "neither subsection of that section shall apply to agricultural products." Is not rice an agricultural product in the strict interpretation of the word?

Mr. BENNETT: Not from our standpoint; it is not produced in Canada as such, and when it comes into this country it becomes a raw material to be manufactured here.

Mr. NEILL: I hope that will be duly incorporated in the law, because rice as a matter of fact certainly is an agricultural product.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not necessary.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. SANDERSON: Might I point out to the Prime Minister that rice is a food not produced in Canada. We are increasing the duty on a food largely used by wage earners and people in moderate circumstances. Was not the duty in force prior to this increase sufficient protection for these cleaning plants? It appears to me it is a small industry simply for the cleaning of rice. You are not protecting something produced in Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: No. There are nearly seventeen million pounds of cleaned rice imported into Canada. The facilities in Canada are ample for the cleaning of all Canadian requirements, there will be no increase in the price of the commodity, the enhanced protection being for the purpose of enabling those facilities to provide the seventeen million pounds, or all that they can of the seventeen million now imported from abroad. I cannot say more. That is the case for the increase.

Mr. BROWN: What will be the effect on the revenue?

Mr. BENNETT: I am bound once more to say that I still believe Henry George is right. Revenue is not a question to be considered with respect to the maintenance of a Canadian industry.

Mr. SANDERSON: The Prime Minister says there will be no increase in the price of rice. He bases that, I suppose, on the promises he has obtained from those who clean rice. Are those promises written or verbal? This is an article of food used by the common people of the country, and an increase in price under present conditions would be a serious matter. Will the Prime Minister put himself on record before the committee, that if there is an increase in the price of rice he will restore the old rate or allow the commodity to come in free, in order to protect those who are compelled to buy rice as a food?

Mr. BENNETT: The solicitude of the hon. member is pathetic. Rice is an article of food used by almost everyone; its use is not limited.

Mr. SANDERSON: It is a cheap article of food.

Mr. BENNETT: It is a cheap article which almost everyone uses; and so long as there is no increase in the cost of raw material, which of course is taken for granted as part of the undertaking, there will be no increase in the price of the finished commodity. The undertaking is given in writing. If it is violated action will be taken at once under section 17.

Mr. YOUNG: Will there be any increase in the price of imported cleaned rice?

Mr. BENNETT: If people prefer to send abroad for that which they may get at home, we presume that they wish to pay more for it.

Mr. YOUNG: Then you intend to have all rice cleaned in Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: As fas as possible, I said.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Who made application for this increase?

Mr. BENNETT: I believe it is the custom in the committee, when there is no monopoly, to say that the manufacturers, in this case the cleaners of rice, made application.

Mr. NEILL: The housewives of Vancouver will have to pay a good deal more to give employment to a few more Chinamen.

Mr. BENNETT: If I were not aware that the hon. gentleman knows better than that, I would not rise to contradict him. They will pay no more. But if they do, the provisions of section 17 will become operative. Those provisions will be used in the event of the raw material not increasing in price.

Mr. VENIOT: Has the Prime Minister any guarantee that those asking for the increased protection will be in a position to clean all the rice necessary to meet the Canadian demand?

Mr. BENNETT: We have satisfied ourselves that they have the facilities to meet the requirements of the Canadian people, as indicated by the production and imports of the past year.

Mr. VENIOT: In the event of their not being able to meet the requirements we shall have to import cleaned rice to supply the demand. On the quantity above what the cleaners will be able to furnish will not the price be increased as a result of this duty? How will you avoid it?

Mr. BENNETT: I have said that the facilities are ample for any likely increase in demand. When the time comes that they are not equal to the demand we will deal with the case, and not until then.

Mr. VENIOT: By reducing the duty on imports?

Mr. HOWDEN: How will you check up on rice if it is found that they are increasing the cost to the housewives? How will information be laid before the board? What will be the procedure?

Mr. BENNETT: I should assume, from what I know of the hon. gentleman and those beside him, that with the postal facilities of the country at his disposal he would at once acquaint the government of the fact.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): The humour of the situation is supreme.

Mr. HOWDEN: I was not joking.

Mr. BENNETT: Nor was I. I should expect the hon. gentleman to seize at once the nearest telegraph blank or write a letter advising us of the fact. If he does so we shall at once investigate the matter, and if the fact is established we will do what is always done in such cases: we will give an opportunity to those accused to be heard. If they do not satisfy us we will take action under section 17.

Mr. NEILL: We must go to the tariff board?

Mr. BENNETT: I should think it would be unnecessary, because it is one of those cases in which the exercise of a little intelligence on the part of whoever happens to be Minister of Finance will be sufficient to satisfy him.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Unfortunately, there might be a new minister.

Mr. BENNETT: It might be a new man. My hon. friend would not give me credit for possessing that intelligence.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I was thinking that we might be safer with the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. HOWDEN: It would require more than a little intelligence for the average housewife to make her troubles known to the Department of Finance if she found that the cost of rice had considerably increased. I was asking a very simple, honest question, and I am still somewhat at a loss to know just what my wife, for example, would do if she found that the cost had increased. What steps would she take? Should I telegraph immediately to the Prime Minister and Minister of Finance and inform him that the cost of rice had increased materially since this duty had been put into force? What steps are the common people of Canada expected to take in such an event?

Mr. BENNETT: My experience has taught me that there are no common people—

Mr. HOWDEN: We are all common people.

Mr. BENNETT: That is another matter. I presume that the hon. gentleman's good wife would at once tell her husband of the discovery she had made; and in all seriousness I said I thought the hon. gentleman would communicate at once with the Minister of Finance, whoever he might be, advising him of the situation. There might be a change of government; but despite the fact that the hon. gentleman would then be considerably older, he would no doubt communicate with the department and action would be taken accordingly. But the traders and those interested would make the matter known to the government. There is never any trouble about the government receiving all the information that may be necessary so long as the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) and others of his kind are living. And they serve in that regard a useful purpose, making known to the government any departure from what they believe should be the established rule. In any event the traders, those concerned in the business, are usually the first people to hasten to inform the government of any condition which they believe is at variance with the situation as they see it.

Mr. SANDERSON: Might not the traders put up the price themselves?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman's mind runs in "mights". I am dealing with something else.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): The Prime Minister has told us, with respect to this item, that the question of revenue is of secondary consideration, if of any consideration at all. Are we to understand that this opinion applies to all the other items?

Mr. BENNETT: Don't put it too strongly, my dear friend. There is no necessity of putting it any stronger than it was put. I am sure my hon. friend with his usual benevolent moderation and his lack of extreme views will realize that all I was endeavouring to indicate to the committee was that that had not been the primary consideration in dealing with the matter. Of course, revenue is important, otherwise how could we defray the expenses of this committee and provide for a record of the hon. gentleman's speeches?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): I think if the right hon. gentleman looks at his statement which will appear in Hansard to-morrow he will find that he told the committee that revenue was not the consideration.

Mr. SANDERSON: I did not catch the sarcastic remark of the Prime Minister—

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: It was not sarcastic; I said the hon. gentleman was talking of mights while I was dealing with facts.

Mr. SANDERSON: The Prime Minister said that the traders might get in communication with the government and tell them that the price had been raised or advanced, and my remark was to the effect that the traders themselves might advance the price. The right hon. gentleman will remember what took place in the glass industry a few months ago; it was not the manufacturers of glass who raised the price, it was the retail and wholesale men. The same thing might very well happen in connection with rice.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is quite right, but the government is not neglected. The Minister of Finance happened to be in England at that time but it was not long before he knew of what had happened, and action was taken immediately.

Mr. YOUNG: We told the right hon. gentleman before he left that it would happen.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps that confiding spirit which is so prevalent on this side of the chamber induced us to believe that the factory would be in operation sooner than it was, with the result that action was taken under the provisions of the law without delay.

Mr. BROWN: I am interested in the admission of the Prime Minister that perhaps the hon. member for Weyburn may serve a useful purpose. May I mention David Harum who said that a reasonable number of fleas was good for any dog.

Mr. MANION: That is a little hard on the hon. member for Weyburn.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) will notice that I did not make any such observation with respect to him. This merely points a moral and adorns a tale.

Mr. NEILL: I am afraid there will be great difficulty in searching out any overcharges which might be made. There is something approaching a combine in this matter and if a wholesaler or retailer gives the information which the minister suggests, he might speedily find that his supply of rice is cut off. He may give information once but he will not do it the second time. I am afraid it will be put up to these men that if they give information against what is practically a monopoly—it is practically a monopoly in the hands of two or three companies—their supply of rice will be cut off. How will the minister get around that situation?

Mr. MacLEAN: What was the total import of this commodity?

Mr. NEILL: I believe the hon. minister is considering his answer.

Mr. BENNETT: I have nothing to add to what I have said already. I have twice given the figures about which the hon. member inquires, but I can give them again. The total imports of uncleaned rice amounted to about 449,457 hundredweight, and of cleaned rice, approximately 17,000,000 pounds.

Mr. MacLEAN: I understand there is paid out in this industry an annual total of $126,000, and if it is going to cost the people of this country one dollar per—

Mr. BENNETT: Not a cent.

Mr. MacLEAN: The previous duty was 75 cents, to which 25 cents is being added. Any rice brought in will have to pay one dollar per hundred pounds, and the amount of the duty will be added to rice cleaned in Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: That is exactly what will not happen.

Mr. MacLEAN: This rice will have to be sold in competition with rice brought in, and it will not be sold below the price of the imported article upon which duty is paid. An added cost of one dollar per hundred pounds is being made for the sake of paying $126,000 to a few employees. This is much more than it is worth; it would be much better to pension these people and let the people of the country have their rice free of duty.

Mr. BENNETT: The observations of the hon. gentleman should have been directed to the government he has supported for the past nine years.

Mr. MacLEAN: They have been.

Mr. BENNETT: He has been so silent in this house on this subject that it must have disappointed him to have been vocal last year, but of which we have no knowledge. If the addition to the price is made, then the action I have indicated will be taken. There will be no increase in price; there will be no added burden on the consumer barring an increase in the price of the raw material.

Mr. ILSLEY: If there should be a decrease in the price of the raw material will the government insist upon the price of the finished product being decreased, and if it is not decreased will they remove this additional protection?

Mr. BENNETT: Section 17 reads as follows:

> In the event of producers of goods taking advantage of any duty imposed under this act to increase the price of such goods to the consumer, or using any such duty to maintain prices at levels deemed by the governor in council to be higher than should prevail, having regard to general economic conditions in the country, the governor in council may reduce or remove such duty.

That is the answer. The power is there and the only question is as to its exercise. I am speaking only for one government, but that government will exercise that power.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—67. Macaroni and vermicelli, containing no egg or other added ingredients, per 100 pounds: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, $1.25; general tariff, $1.50.

When in packages weighing two pounds, each, or less, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty.

Mr. BENNETT: The change is from free, free and $1.25 to, free, $1.25 and $1.50. The imports in 1931 were about 2,700,000 pounds valued at about $198,000, coming chiefly from the United States. There is no reason why this country should not supply itself with these commodities. The exports in the same year were about 750,000 pounds valued at $54,000, principally to New Zealand. The production is rather large, in the last year for which we have complete figures it amounted to over 18,000,000 pounds valued at over $1,500,000.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There will be no increase in price?

Mr. BENNETT: That is guaranteed.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—69. Straw, per ton: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, $1.75; general tariff, $2.

Mr. VENIOT: How much straw was imported from England last year?

Mr. BENNETT: There is no change in the straw item, but there is a change of rate in the general tariff with respect to hay. I need hardly say that hay is produced in large quantities in Canada, and it has been found that our market has been very considerably invaded and taken from our hay dealers. It is proposed to increase the general rate to five dollars.

Mr. LUCAS: What were the imports of hay and straw last year?

Mr. BENNETT: The imports were not large; last year they amounted to $66,000.

Our exports were much larger than that, but the imports come in at an inopportune time and place, and have the effect which I dare say hon. gentlemen who are in business would expect such importations to have. They break our own Canadian market, with the result that frequently a condition arises that is injurious to the hay producer; and particularly is that so, I may say for the information of the committee, in British Columbia and in the southern part of Alberta.

Mr. NEILL: It comes in there?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, from other countries.

Mr. VENIOT: I notice that hay and straw are free under the British preference. I distinctly remember that when the Dunning budget was brought down, the present Minister of Finance attempted to ridicule the idea of making hay and straw free under the British preferential tariff. I wonder why he made it free. Was it just to follow the example set by the Liberals?

Mr. BENNETT: No. He did not change it; he left it just as it was.

Mr. VENIOT: My right hon. friend condemned us for having it there. He said that it was only to blindfold the people, and he laughed at the idea.

Mr. BENNETT: I laughed at the idea of straw being made free under the British preference, and I do yet. But you have to put something there, and inasmuch as the item carried the word "free" before, the word "free" remains.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not see the right hon. gentleman smiling now.

Mr. BENNETT: He certainly is endeavouring to reflect the cast of countenance of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. VENIOT: He took up time last year condemning us for doing what he is doing now.

Mr. BROWN: In regard to the duty on hay, the finance minister admits that the imports of hay are insignificant compared with the exports. The imposition of this $5 duty simply means that that amount will be added to the price which the consumer of hay pays, and many importers of hay are actual farmers. I have no doubt that hay is sold in certain sections of Alberta and British Columbia to mining men and to lumber men, but it is also true that it is sold to farmers, and since the average price paid for imported hay is $15.54, it simply means that this $5 duty will be added to the price which these consumers of hay have to pay. It simply means that other industries will have to pay the duty. It is another illustration of how continually rising prices are going to raise production costs all around.

Mr. SPENCE: Cannot the farmers grow their own hay?

Mr. BROWN: The house should remember that this is an item that does not in any degree, or at least only to a very slight degree, affect the farmers of Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, northern Ontario.

Mr. BROWN: It may affect northern Ontario to a very limited extent. In Ontario the only importation of hay is by way of the Soo, I presume.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, the Soo.

Mr. BROWN: I tried to find out at just what point it entered Canada, and I was not able to get the information. While hay may be bought in northern Ontario by other than farmers, frequently it is bought by the farmers themselves. In the main, this added duty on hay will benefit only a comparatively small number of farmers in the southern part of Alberta and possibly in British Columbia. It will simply have the effect of raising the price of hay by $5 a ton. To show you the difference between imports and exports, and how little this means to the farmers of Canada as a whole, I will give the figures for just one year. In 1926 we exported 368,787 tons of hay, valued at $3,711,840, and we imported in the same year 8,510 tons, valued at $142,249. I have the figures for five years, but it is not necessary to give them, because the figures for 1926 illustrate the situation as it is. Probably it will be heralded all over the Dominion that the government is taking great care of the farmers by putting this duty on hay, but to the vast majority of the farmers of Canada it means nothing at all.

Mr. MALONEY: I should like to ask my hon. friend what is the present price of hay in Lisgar?

Mr. BROWN: I am afraid that if the present crop conditions continue hay may go to $40 or $50 a ton in Lisgar.

Mr. MALONEY: What is the price to-day?

Mr. BROWN: The hon. member does not understand conditions to-day. Hay is not a marketable commodity in Lisgar. It is neither bought nor sold under general conditions. This duty means absolutely nothing to the farmers of Lisgar.

Mr. NEILL: This is another case, Mr Chairman, where the poultryman in British Columbia is going to be made the victim. Not content with thrusting the sword into his vitals by putting a duty on corn, the weapon is now to be turned in the wound by increasing the price of another product that he buys largely, and must buy, and that is alfalfa hay. He cannot raise it on his scanty five acres, because it is not adapted to the growing of alfalfa. Only comparatively small areas of British Columbia are adapted to the growing of alfalfa. But the poultryman must have alfalfa hay, and of a particular grade. If I remember correctly, it is the second or third cutting that he requires, the first cutting being too rank and coarse, and not having the proper foliage. He obtains from the western states the alfalfa that he needs for feed. This duty may possibly, as the hon. member for Lisgar says, benefit a few hay producers in the southern part, presumably, of the interior of British Columbia. I would like, however, to point out to the house this fact, which is perhaps not generally known; it is very bad economics to encourage the farmer to sell hay, because when he does that he is selling his farm piecemeal. It has been calculated by government experts that when you sell a ton of timothy hay—and the loss would be greater in the case of alfalfa—whatever price you get for it you have depreciated the value of your land by ten or eleven dollars, because you have taken practically all the fertilizer value away and left nothing there in return. You have depreciated your farm. The expression is common among farmers that such and such a man will not get ahead because he is selling his farm piecemeal. There is nothing to replace the fertility that has been taken out of the soil if the farmer sells his hay. It is calculated —this is not my opinion; if you go to the Minister of Agriculture he will tell you the same thing—that the loss to a farm in fertilizer content by selling a ton of butter is somewhere in the neighbourhood of only 50 cents, and it takes a good many tons of hay to produce a ton of butter. That illustrates how short-sighted is the farmer who persistently sells off his hay. His farm cannot long endure it. It is bad farm economics to pursue. It is a well known fact that the man who buys feed buys fertilizer, and oil cake meal or other such feeds and brings them onto his farm increases its value. As the saying goes: More fertilizer more grass, more grass more cattle, more cattle more fertilizer, in an ever enlarging circle of prosperity. Those are matters however which effect the hay producer; they are his troubles, not mine. The proposed duty will add $3 a ton to the cost of one of the items of the poultryman's expenditure and will accrue to the benefit of some producer who has devoted his energies to the selling of hay.

Mr. YOUNG: The increase in the duty on hay is to the extent of 250 per cent. In the year 1930 we imported 4,502 tons of hay valued at $61,175, or at a rate of about $15 a ton. All of that hay came from the United States or from Alaska. During the same period we exported 162,000 tons valued at $2,007,944. Of that tonnage 35,179 tons went to the United States, valued at $321,000, or an average price of a little less than $9 a ton. From these figures hon. members will see that while our imports were valued at $15 a ton, our exports were valued at only $9 a ton. Why the difference? The explanation is that hay is not a commodity which will stand shipment across a continent; it is too bulky, and the freight rate is too high. If a part of Canada is suffering from a hay famine it will look for its supply to the nearest point from which that supply can be obtained, and purchases are frequently made in the United States. It is much cheaper to bring that hay in from the United States than to bring it across the continent and pay higher freight rates. That accounts for the fact that our imports are valued at a much higher rate than our exports. The few thousand tons we import are brought into different parts of Canada where there is no supply or where there may be a hay famine. I have said that while we buy only 4,502 tons from the United States we sell to them 35,179 tons. Are we going to jeopardize our market for 35,000 tons, in round figures, in order to shut out the 4,500 tons which we must have and which our own growers in other parts of Canada because of freight rates are not in a position to supply? Will the minister not learn anything from what happened in New Zealand? Will he not learn anything about what happened to his potatoes? Will he not learn about what is likely to happen in the Argentine when he shuts out their corn? Does he not think the United States will retaliate and shut out our 35,000 tons of hay because we are attempting to exclude their 4,500 tons?

Mr. ROBINSON: What is the duty on Canadian hay going into the United States?

Mr. YOUNG: I do not know. I have not the rate before me.

Mr. BENNETT: It is exactly $5, as increased by the last tariff.

Mr. YOUNG: Is this in retaliation?

Mr. BENNETT: No, it is an effort to provide conditions whereby Canadians and Americans may trade on a basis of equality. As my hon. friend has said, we are buying in smaller quantites from them than they buy from us. By their last tariff their rate was increased to $5; our rate will now be the same.

Mr. YOUNG: Surely my right hon. friend is not already abandoning the position he took the other day when he was speaking to the tariff board bill. At that time he said the object was not to equalize duties but to equalize production costs. If after investigation the United States have said that hay can be grown cheaper in Canada than in their country, and that a $4 or $5 duty is required to equalize the costs, surely my right hon. friend will not say that the very reverse is true.

An hon. MEMBER: That would not be true.

Mr. YOUNG: Yes it would. If their costs are higher than ours, ours cannot be higher than theirs. We do not intend to fix our duties according to the manner in which the United States fix theirs.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear. I would suppose that is the reason my hon. friend supported countervailing duties last session.

Mr. YOUNG: We are going to fix our duties to meet our own interests.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. YOUNG: Sault Ste. Marie and British Columbia were mentioned as places where hay must be imported, and it is to their interest to get their hay at the lowest possible cost. We should have a lower, rather than a higher duty. What do we care what the United States charges? What they do should not affect our rate at all.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): This is just another instance where the government is going to put behind the farmer the whole weight and power of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): They are not going to buy hay until they wish to do so, but if the Canadian live stock feeder wishes to buy any of that commodity this government will compel him to pay $3 a ton more.

[Mr. Young.]

Mr. NEILL: Will this come under the provisions of section 17 of the customs tariff resolutions, so that if the price is raised action will be forthcoming by the government?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—71. Hemp seed for agricultural purposes: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The last item represents another instance of my hon. friends opposite hunting around through the schedules to find some agricultural item which they think they may assist by imposing a duty.

Mr. BENNETT: The request was made in this instance by the province of Alberta.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I should not be surprised because some people in the province of Alberta would ask for almost anything.

Mr. BENNETT: Except the former Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart).

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Well, they have put up with me for quite a while—in fact as long as they have put up with my right hon. friend. I venture the prediction that since both of us are about the same age and I expect to live as long as he does, we may be even in that respect.

Mr. BENNETT: I think so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have managed to get along very well together, although we do not agree on different policies. I do say that there seems to be an attempt to place duties upon agricultural commodities so that we may secure that famous home market; but in actual practice it is amusing to see how the efforts of my right hon. friend work out. For two or three years we were bombarded by the people of Ontario to place a duty on beans. My right hon. friend has done that, and to-day they are cheaper than they have ever been.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend put that duty on.

Mr. MANION: What about your theory that duties always raise prices?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am just pointing out that there are certain commodities in connection with which duties cannot raise the price.

An hon. MEMBER: What are they?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Surely I do not have to run over the whole list of exports from Canada. My hon. friends seek to camouflage the matter by putting duties on articles we export. Why, the whole thing is so futile as to be unworthy of argument.

Mr. BENNETT: "Cut flowers and cast iron pipe."

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—71a. Timothy seed, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 2 cents; general tariff, 2 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: The changes in these items commencing at No. 71a and running down to No. 76c arise from representations made by the seed growers of Canada, who have given much study and time to the matter.

I may say that seed growing in this country has become a very substantial industry. Hon. members who have to do with agriculture undoubtedly are aware that the farther north seeds can be produced the better they are. Seed from Canada is gaining a very excellent reputation. The seed growers have given much attention to the production of their products, and the schedule now before the committee is one upon which they have agreed. In one or two instances the rate is lower, but in no instance is the rate higher than that suggested by these gentlemen.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is the rate not higher on timothy seed?

Mr. BENNETT: No, it is not higher than the rate suggested by the seed growers.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh, I beg your pardon.

Mr. BENNETT: The classifications have been made according to what is believed to be the best practice, having regard to the fact that these items are not easy to administer.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The information I have with respect to timothy seed is that we imported over 11,000,000 pounds from the United States. The change proposed by this item would mean an increase of duty on that importation of $220,000. No one but farmers purchase this seed.

Mr. NEILL: I should like to point out that while it is difficult to follow the percentage increase because the method of computation has been changed, it is a very heavy increase. Roughly speaking it would be half a cent a pound under the ad valorem rate before, now it is put up to two cents a pound. That is an enormous increase. The minister said that these changes from 71a onwards were recommended by the seedgrowers' association or some such body. That being so it is very natural that the changes are substantial. It is like allowing a man to write his own ticket. I think this is a case that it would have been highly advisable to have submitted to the tariff board.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): On the amount imported last year the duty was $101,459; under the present rate it would amount to over $220,000.

Mr. BENNETT: The truth is that the exports of timothy seed last year amounted approximately to $850,000, and the imports to $1,330,000. It has been abundantly established that timothy seed produced by Canadians is of excellent quality, and under proper conditions with respect to markets they can produce sufficient to meet our own requirements and a substantial export demand. The United States, from which timothy seed has been purchased, imposed a duty of twenty cents a pound, which is the rate here prevailing. If my memory serves me, it was suggested that a higher rate should be imposed. Timothy seed produced in Alberta is as good as, if not better than, timothy seed produced in any other part of the world. This increase is intended to be just what it indicates—an encouragement to the production of high class timothy seed to meet our own requirements and provide for the export demand.

Mr. NEILL: To what countries do we export?

Mr. BENNETT: Our exports are sent to two countries, Great Britain and the United States.

Mr. MALONEY: Are these spruce and pine seeds?

Mr. BENNETT: No, those come under item 71c, tree seeds for reforestation purposes only.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the total export of timothy seed?

Mr. BENNETT: Our exports are divided roughly between two countries, Great Britain and the United States; the exports to other countries are small and I have not brought the figures with me.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the quantity?

Mr. BENNETT: It amounts to 165,000 bushels; value $850,000.

Mr. SANDERSON: What was the importation of clover seed from the United States?

Mr. BENNETT: Timothy seed and clover were mixed under the former classification and it was not possible to separate them and ascertain what quantity was imported from the various countries. That is the reason this change is now being made.

Mr. YOUNG: Formerly the duty on this was ad valorem, now it is specific. Why was the change made, and what will it amount to on the ad valorem basis?

Mr. BENNETT: The duties are made specific all the way through, and it is believed that that is more in accordance with the best tariff practice. It is also in accordance with the views of the horticultural council—for which the hon. gentleman has such great affection—the seed growers and others interested in the development of that branch of agriculture. The practice is clear, specific and plain. It takes the unit which is well known to everyone and places the rate against that unit.

Mr. YOUNG: And enables one to charge a very much higher rate without its being noticed.

Mr. BENNETT: No; the ad valorem obviously would be higher. In these days of changing values the general tendency is to have recourse to specific rates with respect to commodities that are usually ascertainable by a standard or unit that is fixed by law—pound, ounce, yard.

Mr. VENIOT: What was the ad valorem?

Mr. BENNETT: Ten per cent.

Mr. YOUNG: What would two cents be, reduced to an ad valorem basis?

Mr. BENNETT: I have not the price beside me at the moment. It varies very greatly all the way across this country.

Mr. NEILL: It is easily figured. Suppose timothy seed is worth five cents a pound on import; ten per cent on that is half a cent a pound. The duty is now two cents a pound. There is the difference.

Mr. YOUNG: Forty per cent of the price, or a 300 per cent increase of tariff.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Carried on division.

Item 71a agreed to on division.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, South Cape Breton): Shall we deal with all the rest of the seed items together, 71b to 76c?

[Mr. Sanderson.]

Customs tariff—71b. Clover seed, including alfalfa seed, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 3 cents; general tariff, 3 cents.

Aromatic seeds which are not edible and are in a crude state, and not advanced in value or condition by grinding or refining or by any other process of manufacture, viz., anise, anise star, caraway, cardamom, coriander, cumin, fennel and fennugreek: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Customs tariff—76b. Seeds, viz. field, root, garden and other seeds, when in packages weighing one pound each, or less: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Customs tariff—76c. Annatto seed and mushroom spawn: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. GERSHAW: What is the amount of alfalfa seed imported? In the irrigated districts of Alberta the production of alfalfa seed is becoming quite an industry.

Mr. BENNETT: I indicated with respect to clover and timothy, and should have added alfalfa seed, that heretofore there was no separation of these items. With respect to the item referred to by my hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Maloney) seeds for reforestation are all free as is indicated. That is for the purpose of replenishing our forests and sometimes, if thought desirable, changing the type of seeds so used.

Mr. BROWN: This is a very high increase in the ad valorem rate on clover seed.

Mr. BENNETT: That is true. I will ask my hon. friend the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) to move an amendment to item 72.

Mr. RHODES: I beg to move:

That the words "n.o.p." be inserted after the words "per pound" in item 72, thus:

72. Field and garden seeds not specified as free, valued at not less than five dollars per pound, n.o.p., in packages weighing not less than one ounce each: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the committee desire to ask any questions on any of these other seed items down to 75c?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What is bent-grass seed used for?

Mr. BENNETT: It is used in the preparing of golf greens and lawns, I understand.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There must be considerable importations?

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, but there are no statistics available under the existing classification. It has developed into quite a business in this country, especially in Prince Edward Island, and I may say the representations from those interested in its production were for a higher rate than is proposed now. This is a rate comparable to that applying to other seeds of a similar character, and it was thought this change should be made.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Is this seed produced in any other province?

Mr. BENNETT: I believe so, in a small way, but there is no definite information on that point. I believe we import it largely from other countries.

In connection with item 76b there is a slight change. The rates now indicated, it will be observed, are 15 per cent, 22½ per cent and 25 per cent, but it is proposed to change to a specific duty. In looking into the matter, and having in mind the representations made by the horticultural council and the seed growers it is thought desirable to make the item read free, 10 cents and 10 cents per pound.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is this also the recommendation of the council with respect to seeds?

Mr. BENNETT: I said these rates represented the considered opinion of the seed growers, assisted by the horticultural council, except that the department, in going over the various figures suggested, have made some reductions. In no case has there been an increase over the suggested rates.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend stated a few moments ago that practically all these rates had been changed from ad valorem to specific duty, but that is not so. More than half are still ad valorem, and it is utterly impossible, without the information before us, to know what increases or decreases are being made.

Mr. BENNETT: I think I said there were a few exceptions.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): More than one-half are left under ad valorem duties. My hon. friend says he is changing this particular item to a specific duty, and it is almost impossible to know what the change means.

Mr. BENNETT: I was referring to item 76b, which covers a very large number of seeds, as the hon. member will see. The difficulty was with the very small packages of seeds weighing a pound or less, and it was believed that the proposed rates might cause a very great deal of difficulty. So the rate suggested is free, 10 cents and 10 cents per pound, which I think will operate in some instances as a reduction rather than an increase.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend may be right, but I do not think there will be any reductions.

Mr. BENNETT: We might let this item stand, and perhaps I will be able to get some further particulars.

Items 71a to 76 inclusive agreed to.

Item 76b stands.

Item 76c agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a new item which it is proposed to insert as item 76d.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I beg to move that the following item be inserted in resolution No. 2 of June 1, 1931:

76d. Seeds, viz.: canary, mustard, celery and sunflower, when in packages weighing more than one pound each, imported for use exclusively in manufacturing or blending operations: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. YOUNG: I notice in the large sheets item 83, which is not dealt with in the present budget but which was altered during the September session. When would the minister wish us to deal with those items, as we come to them, or later on?

Mr. BENNETT: With regard to the new item, obviously these seeds must carry a very low rate, since they are used in manufacturing or blending. It is regarded as desirable that these should come in under an ad valorem duty as indicated.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the definition of a package of more than one pound in weight? Will that include sacks and cartons of all kinds?

Mr. BENNETT: The one item deals with packages which are familiar to everyone; these are the packages bought by the housewife in the spring to be used in her garden. The other case is that of what might be called the wholesale gardener, who plants on a larger scale. You will observe that in the one case you may have packages weighing as little as an ounce, while the other deals with packages weighing more than a pound. I understand this to be purely a matter of administration.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But the point troubling me is that when you get beyond the tiny bottles and packages in which you buy your garden seeds, the next size is the small sack, varying from the size of a salt sack to that of a sugar sack, depending upon the size of the seed. I wonder if that is included in the definition of a package.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman will observe that items 73, 74, 75 and 76 deal with packages weighing more than one pound each, and that these perpetuate the form and description of the former items. There is a sharp distinction made between the package weighing a pound or less and the package weighing a pound or more; that seems to have been the line of division between bulk and package commodities. Whether or not it is right I do not know; I can only say it has been the habit of the department to use that division line for many years. There must always be a line of demarcation, I suppose, between articles in bulk and packaged articles. In a great many instances, as the hon. gentleman says, it comes in bulk.

Mr. YOUNG: What will be the rate in that case?

Mr. BENNETT: That will carry the bulk rate.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Suppose the seed is packaged, not in cardboard cartons or in envelopes, but in small sacks?

Mr. BENNETT: If they are less than a pound, the same rule applies.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It would be packaged in that case?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; that is what I am told is the practice.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then all sacks are packages?

Mr. BENNETT: When they happen to be less than a pound.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Under this, all packages are not sacks, but all sacks are packages.

Mr. BENNETT: When less than a pound.

Motion (Mr. Guthrie) agreed to.

Item 76d agreed to.

Customs tariff—89. Vegetables, prepared, in air-tight cans or other air-tight containers, the weight of the containers to be included in the weight for duty:

(a) Beans, baked or otherwise prepared, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 2 cents; general tariff, 3 cents.

(b) Corn and tomatoes, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 2 cents; general tariff, 3 cents.

(c) Peas, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 2 cents; general tariff, 3 cents.

(d) N.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. YOUNG: What about 83?

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman wishes to discuss it.

Mr. YOUNG: What is the status of the duty on potatoes to-day? Is it 75 cents per 100 pounds as shown in the tariff of last September, or are arbitrary valuations placed by the minister?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): It does not make any difference what the rate is; it can be changed at any time. It is an on and off tariff. You never know what is going to be done.

Mr. BENNETT: I am grateful to the hon. gentleman for being considerate enough to answer the question—

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Give us another lecture.

Mr. BENNETT: —and I appreciate it greatly. It is not an unfair answer to make. As I said yesterday, we have provided that wherever Canadian agriculture or industry is being attacked we may, by order in council, fix values for duty purposes. And whenever this is necessary it will be done so long as we are here. Hon. gentlemen opposite would do the same if occasion arose. They would not stand by and see Canadian industry or agriculture destroyed. In the meantime the duty is 75 cents per 100 pounds.

Mr. YOUNG: It is only 75 cents?

Mr. BENNETT: So far as I know. As the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) says, there is no outstanding order fixing permanent values for duty purposes.

Mr. VENIOT: Since the change has been made in regard to radishes, have any orders in council been passed or considered by the government with respect to potatoes?

Mr. BENNETT: Many orders in council have been promulgated. They appear in the Canada Gazette. It is not to be expected that I can carry in my head all the orders in council that have been promulgated, and knowing the hon. gentleman's industry, I am sure that, by perusal of the Gazette from Saturday to Saturday, he knows just as much about the matter as anyone else.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The difficulty is that they last only four days sometimes. One must be agile to follow the changes made by order in council fixing values. My right hon. friend apparently had suddenly brought to his attention the fact that a serious mistake had been made in the fixing of values on potatoes; because I notice that in four days' time—perhaps it was a little longer—the change was made from potatoes to radishes. I never was able to understand why that action was taken so suddenly by the government.

Mr. BENNETT: I have no doubt that necessary changes may be made in a single day; at least I hope so.

Mr. YOUNG: From potatoes to radishes?

Mr. BENNETT: No; that would not be quite sufficient for the hon. gentleman. It was not changed from potatoes to radishes. There is scarcely an hon. member who is not familiar with the fact that goods that were to be exported from Canada to the United States at a time when a bargain was made were subject to a higher duty before they reached there. In many instances, where it is found that a situation has suddenly developed threatening the life of a Canadian industry, whether it be potatoes or radishes or anything else, action will be taken as quickly as possible. And in the case of potatoes action was taken with respect to what I might call old potatoes—that is, the carry-over which the farmer was anxious to get rid of before the new season began. The statute was not intended to cover that particular class of potato. The order was put into operation and remained in operation until it had served the purpose intended. Radishes had nothing to do with that; it was an entirely different transaction. When potatoes were taken out of the item, radishes remained. There are other commodities to which I need hardly refer—cherries, strawberries, lettuce, asparagus, apricots, raspberries, peas, beets, cabbage, carrots, cauliflower, celery, cucumbers, and so on. With respect to these articles, I put this question to my hon. friends opposite who are agriculturists: Whether we should not have what I may call immediate tariff action to save the situation. The season in some countries is much more forward this year than last year, and the seasonal tariff must therefore vary with the season in the community affected. When our vegetables and fruits are ripe, it follows that south of us they have ripened previously; and if the foreign vegetables and fruits come into this country they will, unless some action is taken, displace our fruits and vegetables. The reason is a simple one. The season is ending in one country just as it begins in the other, and the surplus, the accumulated product which is left over after having satisfied the requirements of the country in which it is grown, is available for export to Canada. Now, unless we are able to take immediate action to prevent it, the effort and labour of our fruit growers and vegetable growers will be destroyed. Whenever it is necessary, therefore, proper action has been taken. And such action will continue to be taken. If we are wrong we shall be replaced by others who will do what is right. But so far as this government is concerned, it proposes to proceed on that principle and to endeavour, by the use of this instrument, which is the only one I know of adequate for the purpose, to secure to the Canadian vegetable and fruit grower an equal opportunity to compete with the producers of other countries. It gets back to that fundamental principle. It is the privilege of the house to censure the administration for taking such action, but I have no hesitation in saying that this is the principle upon which we shall proceed so long as we are here.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): For the year ended December 31, 1930, there came into this country $889,421 worth of potatoes, and we exported to the United States $4,720,946 worth. The Canadian Canners during the season of 1931 paid to the Canadian growers of fruits a lower price than had been paid for years.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, South Cape Breton): I would point out that this matter is not before the committee. There will be opportunity given at the proper time to discuss this question.

Mr. BENNETT: We agreed last year, and have done so again this year, that the items which appeared in the tariff of last fall would be discussed if the committee so desired. The hon. gentleman asked for permission to discuss item 83 of the September resolutions, and he was proceeding to do so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think it would be much better to take the September items one after another.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) asked that he might discuss this item.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): To take up the September item would give the minister an opportunity to have the information before him.

Mr. BENNETT: The proper thing to do would be to finish the June items, but I do not want to lessen the opportunity for discussion.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton): They are not before the committee.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not think the Minister of Finance is correct when he says that there was no substitution. I have in my hand a copy of the order in council, but without reading it I would like to point out to the minister and to the committee that the order in council distinctly says that radishes were substituted for potatoes. I was wrong in my deduction that it was in effect only for four days. The first order was passed on April 2, 1931, and the amending order is dated May 1. This order distinctly says that the Minister of National Revenue is authorized to fix the value of, for duty purposes, potatoes, and substitute therefor, radishes. I merely wish to draw the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the fact that there was a substitution.

Mr. BENNETT: What I meant to say was that it was dealt with as a separate item and not in the sense that radishes were substituted for potatoes. In the sense in which the word "substitute" was used it seemed to indicate that we were going to eat radishes instead of potatoes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): When the hon. member from Prince Edward Island was holding up the small potato, I did not have an opportunity of making inquiries; I wanted to be sure that it was a potato and not a radish which he was exhibiting upon that occasion.

Mr. BENNETT: I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 30, respecting the St. Lawrence River Bridge Company.—Mr. Rowe.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

Mr. W. G. ERNST (Queens-Lunenburg) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 97, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 1.—Requirements for certificates of service as masters and mates.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What is the purpose of this bill?

Mr. ERNST: Under the Canada Shipping Act a master without a certificate may sail a fishing vessel, but he may not sail a vessel that ceases to be a fishing vessel. Owing to the economic depression, which has affected the shipping industry in eastern Canada as it has, for instance, wheat growing in the west, a large number of vesels are not now fishing and are engaged in other lines. The masters cannot sail them although many of them own a substantial share in the vessels. The result has been that a great number of vessels of Canadian registry have been transferred to the registry of Newfoundland or Barbados, which do not require certificated masters. The purpose of this bill, which introduces no new principle—the principle was adopted in 1920—is to enable a man who de facto has had experience within any one of ten years previous to 1931 to go before the examining board and take certain examinations which are specified in the explanatory notes to the bill—as to his sobriety, experience, ability and general good conduct on board ship, and a sight test—and upon passing those tests he gets his certificate. The principle was adopted, as I say, in 1920.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Do the officers of the department approve of this bill?

Mr. ERNST: Yes. The minister appeared in person before the committee and accepted the bill.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT

DEPORTATION—RIGHT TO RETURN TO CANADA AFTER ABSENCE

The house resumed from Tuesday, June 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth for the second reading of Bill No. 44, to amend the Immigration Act.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. SPEAKER: If the promoter of the bill speaks he will close the debate on the second reading. If any other hon. member wishes to speak he should do so now.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is rather curious, Mr. Speaker, but I have not yet had a chance to speak on my own bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman's oportunity is now. Does he desire to speak on the bill?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but I understood that your ruling was that my speaking would not close the debate, but that it would be closed by my colleague who opened the discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER: The Clerk reminds me that another member promoted this bill, although it appears in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), so, if the hon. member speaks now, it will not close the debate.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the bill consists of two distinct clauses which seek to do away with certain anomalies in the present Immigration Act. In the last few years there have been a very large number of deportations from Canada. Last year 1,806 were deported as public charges; 701 because of convictions for criminal offences, and inmates of penitentiaries and gaols; 71 on account of convictions under the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act; 445 inmates of mental institutions, including insane persons, feeble minded persons, epileptics and mental defectives; 320 physical defectives; 97 because of misrepresentations and stealth; 5 on account of having been previously deported; 70 miscellaneous cases, and 510 dependent members of families accompanying deports.

I recognize quite clearly that it is very difficult to have passed by this house any public bill introduced by a private member. As a matter of fact in the last five years only three public bills introduced by private members have actually passed the house. Therefore I am under no illusions as to the possibility of my bill becoming law. I can quite readily understand that there are other sections of the Immigration Act which should be modified. I realize further that the proposals I am making may not be the very wisest conceivable, and that the department may see fit to bring forward others. I bring two matters to the attention of the house, however, in connection with what I believe to be certain hardships existing under the act. If the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) can find any better way of meeting the needs I have outlined I shall be very glad to accept his suggestions.

The first clause in my amendment reads as follows:

Notwithstanding anything in this act or any amendment thereof or regulations made thereunder, an immigrant who has completed ten years continuous residence in Canada, shall not thereafter be liable to deportation.

A large number of people have come to Canada in good faith, have lived here probably ten, fifteen or eighteen years and yet have had no opportunity to establish domicile or permanent residence. For that reason they are liable to deportation. It seems to me some limitation should be placed upon the period during which deportation proceedings may be taken. A year ago our attention was called to a number of cases concerning epileptic women who had been placed in institutions and at the request of the provincial authorities, who found their care a burden, were deported. Surely anybody who has been in Canada for fifteen years has acquired some rights. If before that period of time has elapsed the authorities have not discovered something wrong with them and deported them I think they ought to be allowed to remain, and we ought to accept the responsibility. In a ten-year period undoubtedly they will have severed their connections with the old country; the likelihood is that their families will have been broken up and they will have no home to return to should they be deported. Under the circumstances I think it but reasonable that we should place some limitation upon the time within which such deportations may be carried out, and I have suggested ten years as a reasonable period.

The second clause of the bill is of a different character. It attempts to recognize a right of citizenship on the part of persons who in good faith have come to this country and lived here for a number of years, but for some reason or another have been forced for the time being to go to the United States or elsewhere on this continent to seek employment. I do not suppose that from this time forward there will be so many of that class, because the people of the United States have put up the bars against immigration and it is not easy for people living in Canada to get to the other side of the line. In the past, however, a great many people have come to Canada, especially to the western country, intending to make it their home. There came a time when they were unable to find work; some of them were induced to go to Chicago. Detroit or other larger centres of the United States to seek employment. After a while their employment ceased and they desired to return to Canada, but were refused readmission. Apparently they had forfeited all rights, and some of them were confronted with the possibility of being forced to return to their country of origin whence they had departed a good many years before.

Mr. GORDON: Would the hon. member permit a question? When he says that the immigrant is forced to return to his country of origin, who would return him?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As I understand it, the Canadian authorities refuse to allow him to reenter Canada and the American authorities return him to his country of origin.

Mr. GORDON: Why?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Simply because they did not want him in their country.

Mr. GORDON: My hon. friend wants him to come back here because they do not want him in the United States?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, not because they do not want him. I know of a number of such people who were not of the undesirable type. A few weeks ago there was considerable comment in the newspapers concerning the case of August Gabert.

Mr. GORDON: The Gabert case?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes; the minister may recall it.

Mr. GORDON: I do.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It may illustrate the point I have in mind. Roughly speaking, the case was something like this: Twenty years ago August Gabert came to Canada from Germany. He rented a cottage, got work and one year later sent for his two sons, Edward aged eleven and Frank aged seven. In 1912 he entered Canada at the port of Quebec. He obtained work at the A. R. Williams Machinery Manufacturing plant in Toronto and reported twice a month as an alien. With Mrs. Gabert's money they bought a lot and have paid the taxes on it ever since. The boys attended school in Toronto. Mr. Gabert was receiving $13 a week and Mrs. Gabert worked in the New Method laundry. In 1924 Mr. Gabert went to Detroit, taking with him his wife, sons and his daughter-in-law. The one son, Edward, had married an English girl in Toronto. Mr. Gabert had no steady work. Mrs. Gabert said they had obtained visas from the American consul at Toronto to enter the United States, but they were not naturalized in either country.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Why?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I suppose they still considered themselves residents of Canada.

Mr. GORDON: Why should the hon. member say that?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well—

Mr. GORDON: I know the hon. gentleman is trying to be fair to the immigration department, but why make a statement like that when it is obvious that the man had dissociated himself from this country and had been years in the United States?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But he had not entirely dissociated himself from this country. He had property in this country and had gone over to the United States to get work. Perhaps I may be permitted to give the remainder of the few notes I have on the case; I think they are fairly correct:

Frank, motor mechanic, also Detroit. Mrs. Gabert and Frank motored back to Canada via Windsor (no papers).

There was some trouble over papers:

Signed "certain reentry papers" at Windsor. Gabert got work at Welland (for one year). Last fall Gabert went to visit his son in Detroit. Refused reentry to Canada (home not listed in the directory by an error). Gabert kept in jail in Detroit for six months. Then deported to Germany. Frank who was ill (twenty-six) charged with having reentered Canada illegally. Threatened with deportation. Never strong. Died March 12. Brother allowed to enter (for one week) after the death. Father, (still in jail) refused entry. Now Mrs. Gabert under threat of deportation (illegal reentry). Department says it has information which should not be divulged.

I have not gone further into the history of that case and have no personal knowledge with respect to it, but hon. members must have noticed a good deal about the case which appeared in the papers. Considerable popular sympathy has been expressed towards the woman on account of the very awkward situation in which she finds herself—she living in Toronto and her husband deported to Germany. In view of circumstances of that kind I have ventured to suggest this amendment to the act.

Mr. GORDON: Would my hon. friend give me some other instances so I may clear them up?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have notes of other cases that are somewhat parallel to that, but they are in my office. I did not want to go into the details of each case. I have simply given this case as an example of what I have proposed by my amendment to guard against, namely:

No immigrant who has resided in Canada for a continuous period of ten years, and thereafter voluntarily leaves Canada to reside elsewhere on the continent of North America for the purpose of seeking employment or engaging in any occupation, and who desires to return to Canada, shall be refused reentry into Canada by reason of such absence.

My thought is simply this, that a period of ten years' residence in Canada ought to entitle an immigrant to claim domicile here; he ought to have certain rights in this country after that period of residence.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Whether he becomes a citizen or not?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, I would say whether he becomes a citizen or not. But that is another matter, because it has been made very difficult for some of these men to become citizens. A great deal of the rough work across this country has been done by people who have never been able to become Canadian citizens; so that if a man has lived here for the long period of ten years and then is faced with the situation which faces a good many labouring people, is not able to find a job here for the time being—and anyone who knows the tragedy of labour drifting backwards and forwards over the international border in years past knows that such a man has to take whatever job he can get no matter where it may be—that man, I say, if he is obliged to go across the line and perhaps leave his wife here, should not later on be prevented from reentering this country. I am not blaming the department for their action in regard to such cases, for I think any one who has had dealings with the department knows they have a great many complicated cases to handle. But they have to deal with these cases and it does seem to me that it would be a good thing if we modified the law in this regard. I am not trying to make it easy for people to refrain from taking out citizenship papers. I think they should be encouraged to do so, and that this should be made easier for them than it is at the present time. But I would urge that we ought to look at this matter from a humane standpoint, recognizing that these people come over here from Great Britain or continental Europe, that they intend to become citizens, and that they ought by the very fact of associating with us and working in this country for ten years to have some rights of Canadian citizenship. Hence the reason for my two amendments. As I said at the beginning, if the department has any other way to suggest by which some of these difficulties could be overcome, I should be very glad to adopt their suggestion, but I have taken this means of bringing these cases before the house in order that we may do something to prevent their recurrence.

Mr. IRVINE: What would be the status of an immigrant who after becoming a Canadian citizen leaves Canada for an extended period and then seeks reentry?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My hon. friend will have to ask the Minister of Immigration.

Mr. REID: What would the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) do if a Chinese immigrant, a dope peddler, after eleven years' residence in this country drifted across the line and later sought to reenter Canada?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have not had orientals in view in drafting this legislation, but as far as I am concerned, I would not be inclined to deny those people all rights of citizenship in this country. If they come in here and do their work and are to all intents and purposes good citizens, I do not think we should discriminate against them; but I do not think there are many cases of the kind suggested by the hon. member.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, in regard to the first clause of this bill, I do not think it would be wise for us to dispense with the power that we now have of deporting those who have offended against our laws and whose deportation would be in the interests of the country. Of course, I think the department ought to judge any particular case on its merits. But in regard to the second clause, I have a great deal of sympathy with the purpose which the sponsor of the bill has in view. I have a case in mind, although I may not be correctly informed on all the details, and it does seem to me that in such a case there should be some modification of the regulations. For instance, I am informed that a man came to Canada from Russia in 1911, about twenty years ago. His family came with him. He himself became a British subject, and I am informed that three of his sons also became British subjects. I am not well-informed as to the status of the fourth son—he may or may not have become a British subject at the time his father became naturalized. We know that it is possible under such circumstances for a father to secure naturalization for his minor children. On the assumption that this young man did become a British citizen I will proceed with my argument.

If I understand the matter correctly, for the last seven years this young man has been going back and forth across the international boundary between Manitoba and North Dakota; I think the fact is that he has spent the greater part of his time on the United States side of the boundary during that period. The situation now is that he is in gaol in Grand Forks, North Dakota, for having violated the United States immigration laws. We are not informed that he has been guilty of any moral or criminal offence, but simply that he has violated those immigration laws. The United States authorities want to deport him; they have offered to send him back to Canada, but the Canadian authorities will not receive him because, according to the documents, he has lost what domicile he ever acquired in Canada.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Then he is not a Canadian subject.

Mr. BROWN: I am not dealing with the law as it is, but as I think it should be. That is an answer to my hon. friend.

Mr. LAVERGNE: That changes the case altogether.

Mr. BROWN: We are talking about changing the law, and this is the time to speak about this matter. I proceed on the assumption that this young man has acquired British citizenship. What does that mean? Does British citizenship mean something to a man who has been born in Canada, under the British flag, and something entirely different to the man who becomes naturalized? In my judgment British citizenship should mean the same to every person who is a British citizen; I believe it is a privilege that should be esteemed very highly by everyone. In the days of Rome it was the proud boast of a man to be able to say he was a Roman citizen, and I believe we should be equally proud to boast that we are British citizens. But is it or is it not a fact that British citizenship means different things to different people at different times? I am not one of those who think we should make the acquirement of British citizenship easy; I think we should exercise care in granting it, but once that citizenship has been granted it should carry with it to the naturalized person all the rights which are enjoyed by the native born citizen.

Mr. LAVERGNE: It does.

Mr. BROWN: Then take the case I have in mind, always going on the assumption that this young man is a British citizen. If a native born Canadian, say the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr LaVergne) or myself, should go across the line—probably his family has been in Canada for more generations than my family has been here—

Mr. LAVERGNE: Only ten generations.

Mr. BROWN: I am the third or fourth generation of my family. However, if I should go across the line, an absence of ten years would not prevent me from returning to Canada; I could not be kept out. Is a young man who has acquired British citizenship through naturalization treated differently? Is the case any different in regard to him? Can he be kept out, or should we receive him when he wants to come back to Canada, even though he is being deported by the United States, not because of any criminal offence but because of a violation of the immigration laws of that country?

As the Minister of Immigration knows, I have brought this matter to his attention on other occasions, and as yet he has not given me an answer. I placed before him the documents which were forwarded to me, but I have not had an opportunity to see him personally with regard to the matter. However, this is the case as I see it. I am not going to express an opinon as to what is the law at the present time, but I am expressing an opinion as to what I think the law ought to be. In my view section 2 of the proposed bill harmonizes with what I think should be the proper attitude on this matter. It reads:

No immigrant who has resided in Canada for a continuous period of ten years—

Perhaps we should make it "British subject."

—and thereafter voluntarily leaves Canada to reside elsewhere on the continent of North America for the purpose of seeking employment or engaging in any occupation, and who desires to return to Canada, shall be refused reentry into Canada by reason of such absence.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): With respect to this bill I must compliment the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) upon the moderation with which he expressed his views in connection with a subject which in large measure, has to do with the human equation. I am not unmindful of the interest the hon. member takes in questions of this character.

I am opposed to the bill. Section 3 of the Immigration Act is the one which would be affected if this bill became law, since that is the section which has to do with prohibited classes. With respect to prohibited classes some criticism has been offered in the recent past, and in fact for very many years past. In dealing with immigration we must bear in mind that heretofore the Dominion government has directed, encouraged and controlled —and I use the word "controlled" with a degree of hesitancy—migration into Canada. What responsibilities does that immediately create? If care is not taken in the encouragement of peoples to come to this country, and if no discipline is exercised, upon whom falls the responsibility? Once an immigrant is legally landed in Canada undoubtedly he acquires a certain status under our laws. He has a perfect right to go from one province to another, or from one city or town to another, and the responsibility for that person is cast upon the province or the municipality in which he happens to be. Therefore I suggest that parliament in a matter of this kind should exercise extreme care, though not by any means to the point of exclusion. While at present there must be a degree of rigidity which in normal times would not be exercised, yet at all times great care should be exercised, and particularly at a time like this, although under normal conditions desirable people undoubtedly would be welcomed in this country. Upon whom falls the burden? In a period of depression these matters come into bold relief, let me say.

During the two years prior to last summer new peoples came to Canada to the extent of almost a quarter of a million, including almost 100,000 adult males. Where are those people to-day? They either displaced Canadian labour or they themselves are to-day in the ranks of the unemployed. That is the situation that faces the people of this country. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is, I believe, and always has been an ardent advocate of the labouring man. I myself, while probably not as well known as he in my advocacy, am considered, I believe, in those restricted areas where I am known, as having been not unmindful of the labouring man's needs.

The introduction of new people into this country in large numbers, at a time when thoughtful Canadians must have known that we were approaching and were then, indeed, actually in a period of depression, was a direct challenge to the worker in Canada. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre, in his sincere advocacy of labour, must recognize that, I am sure. When this department was given to me to administer that was one of the first things I had to take into consideration, and it was not a time when one could allow one's sympathies to be unduly the guide. I have great sympathy for any human being who is having a hard struggle to get along. I have great sympathy for those new people who came into the country in years gone by and even for those who came in the near past, and it is no source of satisfaction to me to see them now in the ranks of the unemployed. But when it comes to changing the law of the country in the way proposed in this bill, I tell the house that my sympathy first goes to the worker of Canada, who needs the protection of a law such as our Immigration Act. And while in the administration of that act I may make mistakes, they will certainly be made in favour of the working men of Canada as against people from other countries, because those other countries have responsibilities of their own with regard to their own nationals.

Unquestionably one's sympathy often goes out to those who have to be deported. But let me point out that if this act became law and the officials of the Immigration department were divested of the authority to send back to their country of origin those people who do not comply with our law, then I should be obliged at this time to allow into Canada tens of thousands of people who are in a situation similar to that referred to by the hon. member. Of course those people would come into Canada, because the United States are determined to send them back to their country of origin. They would come to the border and declare that they had lived in Canada at one time and wished to come back. Why? Because, if they did not get the chance to come in, they would be sent back to their country of origin. They would not be allowed to remain in the United States, either because they do not comply with the laws of that country or because their presence in that country is not desired.

Now, can we in the interests of the labouring man of Canada take such steps as this bill would seem to contemplate? In view of the dispassionate way in which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has discussed the bill, I suggest that we can afford to take no such step as this bill proposes. From time to time, under the present law, deportations have to be made. The provinces and the municipalities have rights. In the poorer municipalities of northern Canada the burden of taking care of people who are not able to take care of themselves, by reason of physical and mental defects, is thrust upon the public. And those municipalities are having a hard enough struggle as it is to get along, without having that additional burden thrown upon them.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does not the minister think that the officials responsible at the gates should, in the first instance, keep out such people, or should discover within the first ten years that they are undesirable?

Mr. GORDON: That question has been asked me many times. Many cases have passed our immigration officials, and I doubt seriously whether the officials could possibly have discovered defects that existed without introducing a system of inspection that would be most irritating to many people who would pass with a very casual inspection. It is true, the time seems long; and it might be said with some degree of force that the defects should be detected. But it is utterly impossible for the Department of Immigration to employ a sufficient number of officials to follow up all immigrants coming into Canada to find out whether or not they entered legally. The onus is surely upon the immigrant seeking entry into Canada to see that he complies with the laws of the country, and not upon the Dominion to supply a preventive or investigating force to follow up each immigrant year after year to see whether or not on his arrival he complied with the law.

In cases of deportation every chance of appeal is given. Boards of inquiry are established and appeals are available. Evidence is taken. Nothing is done in a haphazard way, and while occasionally hardship ensues, yet if we founded our general law upon any provision to meet one or two cases of hardship, then we should be adopting a most dangerous principle; for a great number of people who come in legally would be immediately affected by the introduction of that general law made to apply to a particular case. That would not be at all desirable.

My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre spoke about the desirability of recognizing that a person coming to Canada should have the right freely to go over to the United States and return, crossing and recrossing the boundary as fancy suited him, in his search for employment. The hon. member suggested that a man who out of a job should have that right to cross and recross the boundary. That is not my conception of what should be done in that regard.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister asked me to give him a concrete case. This man Michael Corahe, a Pole, was ordered deported by the United States immigration authorities. He had served four years in the Canadian army. He came to Canada at the age of five and enlisted at sixteen. Eight years ago he went to the United States. He was unable to reenter Canada. He was a naturalized Canadian, his brother and sisters were born in Canada and are now in Toronto. It would seem to me that that is a case of real hardship.

Mr. GORDON: What is the name, please?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Michael Corahe.

Mr. GORDON: I have the record of that case. This man was allowed entry into Canada, but I may say that it was with reluctance I permitted his entry. He was born in Poland and came to Canada in 1907 with his parents. He was in the Canadian forestry corps between May, 1917, and July, 1919, being discharged at Winnipeg. He applied for admission to Canada from the United States in October, 1930, claiming to have resided in this country from 1907 to May, 1930, having proceeded to the United States to reside on the latter date. He was rejected, being unable to comply with the occupational and passport requirements of the law. The department, in view of previous residence, further investigated the case and it was ascertained that this man had not proceeded to the United States in 1930 but had been working in Detroit for approximately eight years. Despite the misrepresentation and the length of residence out of Canada, the department allowed entry in view of previous residence in this country from childhood and because of the man's military service. The hon member will see that his instructions in this case do not coincide with the facts. I reluctantly gave an order allowing this man to return to Canada.

Criticisms will be levelled from time to time at the Department of Immigration, but I propose to assume full responsibility, both for the policies of the department and the acts of its officials. At times I will make mistakes, and then I will have to rely upon the generosity of those who criticize. The rule in the department is to see that the laws of the country are observed. Every departure therefrom is a step forward in imperilling the position of the Canadian worker, whose cause is so strongly advocated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

I believe if the hon. member thinks this matter over he will agree that while there may be some merit in his bill, if it should pass it would be an added hardship to the man who has come to this country, established his home and is bringing up a family. The jobs of workers in this country would be imperilled by permitting any indiscriminate crossing between the United States and Canada, as times are better here or better there. I believe that the worker who has established his home and family in this country should get every bit of protection which our law allows and should be given preference against the transient worker who is ready to go wherever fields look the greenest.

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): Mr. Speaker, while I agree almost entirely with what the hon. minister has just said, that those who have established homes in and are residents of Canada should receive consideration, I should like to draw to his attention a case which I took up with the department before he assumed charge of it, which has caused me to feel that I should support this bill. This was a British subject, born in the old land, who came to Canada and had resided here for some twelve or thirteen years. He homesteaded just a few miles from me, and while pursuing his occupation as a farmer he met with an accident which brought about complications which, in his opinion, could not be successfully dealt with by the doctors in Canada. He went to the United States to some place where he was advised he could obtain treatment, but probably neglected to tell the authorities that he would be gone for more than six months. He stayed in the United States for eighteen months, and when he found that the treatment was not giving the results he expected he attempted to return to his home. He was stopped by the immigration authorities, who claimed that he was not a Canadian citizen. He had nothing to show that he was a Canadian citizen, although he was a British subject. I was wired about this young man, and I took the matter up with the then Minister of Immigration. I was told that if the United States was determined to deport him there was only one place to which they could deport him, and that was back to Scotland. Although this man had had twelve or thirteen years' residence in Canada, the authorities claimed that he had no domicile here. It is because of this case that I feel I must support the bill. It may be, as the minister has said, that the door will be opened wider, but I do not think it is fair to the minister or to the department to ask them to give special consideration to any one immigrant. For these reasons, I assure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) that I have a great deal of sympathy with his bill.

Mr. LaVERGNE: Was that man deported?

Mr. VALLANCE: No, he was not. However, it was not the law that prevented that deportation, it was simply the courtesy of the department in allowing him to reenter Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for public and private bills having expired, the house will proceed to government orders.

SUPPLY

MINES AND GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. MacDonald (South Cape Breton) in the chair.

Geological Survey—
For explorations, surveys and investigations, wages of explorers, topographers and others, $190,000.
For publication of English and French editions of reports, maps, illustrations, etc., $70,000.
For maintenance of offices and museum, expenses of special exhibitions pertaining to natural resources, purchase of instruments, chemicals, books of reference, miscellaneous assistance and contingencies, $65,000.
For museum equipment, $12,000.
For purchase of specimens, $2,000.—Total, $339,000.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the reason for the decrease in this item?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration): The decrease mainly arises from the curtailment of the number of geological survey parties sent out this year. The vote was decreased with some reluctance so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SPENCER: Were any survey parties sent out at all this year, and if so, what are they doing?

Mr. GORDON: Yes. There are about forty geological survey parties out in the field this year. They are keeping up the continuity of the geological surveys, and I hope that the coming years will see these parties increased.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the Imperial Institute, $9,733.33.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister explain what this is for?

Mr. GORDON: Under an agreement made at the Imperial conference some years ago between the British government and the dominions, each government contributes a fixed amount towards the Imperial Institute for the purpose of investigation of the mineral resources of the empire, and keeping a general set of records which constitutes something in the nature of a clearing house of information as to the mineral resources of the empire.

Mr. POULIOT: So long as there is unemployment I think that all immigration should be stopped completely. When people here cannot find work I do not see the use of bringing even the best class of people to this country.

Mr. DONNELLY: What is the reason for the reduction in this item?

Mr. GORDON: Australia felt that it was not desirable to put up the amount that had heretofore been subscribed by that country, and our contribution has been reduced proportionately.

Item agreed to.

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

Salaries, $312,555; contingencies, $40,000.

Mr. LAVERGNE: May I inquire from the minister whether the British Empire Settlement Act is still in force, and what the scope of that act is so far as immigration to Canada is concerned?

Mr. GORDON: The British Empire Settlement Act, of course, is an act of the imperial parliament. Generally it provides for assistance in the movement of British peoples to the various dominions. I think we are not alone just now so far as the dominions are concerned with respect to restrictions under the agreement.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I understand that under that act a certain amount is loaned to the settler-immigrant coming to Canada to tide him over his first years, and that he reimburses the money to the government when he has made enough money to do so. I think, and I believe this was understood by the convention at Winnipeg, that first aid should be given to the Canadian, and that the best way to settle our country is to settle it with our own people. We should profit by the mistake of the United States. It is years ago since I raised my voice in the house on this subject. I have not changed my opinion since then. I still believe that it is not by filling our country with foreigners that we are going to build it up. It should be filled up according to the traditions of the country. More important than material prosperity is moral and intellectual prosperity. I am not allowed to refer to a past debate, but only to-night we had an instance of what happens: some people who come here do not think enough of this country to become naturalized Canadians. They run about with their troubles and sometimes their diseases, physical, moral or intellectual. I do not know whether the British Empire settlement policy is still in force, but if we can afford to lend money to immigrants from other countries to settle here, we can very well afford to do it for our own people. I understand that to-day it costs less for a man to leave Liverpool and settle in the west than it does for a settler from the province of Quebec, the lower provinces or the province of Ontario. My opinion is that the best immigrant to fill up the west is the Canadian immigrant from the old provinces, who is already assimilated, who knows the traditions which the English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians have cherished in this country for the last one hundred and fifty years.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Might I point out that vote No. 125 deals specifically with what my hon. friend is now discussing?

Mr. LAVERGNE: I am very glad the hon. gentleman called me to order. I do not want to take up the time of the committee when I am not on the right item, but when that other item is reached, I shall have an opportunity to speak. I repeat that the best migration with which to settle Canada is Canadian migration, and if any favours are to be given they should be given to Canadians. It is very unfortunate that people should come here from foreign countries and receive special favours when Canadians cannot settle in another part of the country which so long has been theirs.

Mr. DONNELLY: We have been told that for the past few months immigration to this country has practically ceased, yet we find that while there was $324,000 spent last year, $312,000 is to be spent this year. Hon. members will notice that there is but a slight reduction, and I am wondering why the staff is being kept in service.

Mr. LAVERGNE: To keep them out.

Mr. DONNELLY: Nobody is being allowed to come in, yet we have this large amount being paid in salaries.

Mr. LAVERGNE: To keep them out.

Mr. GORDON: In answer to the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) may I say that I am thoroughly in accord with much that he has said. I assure him that no assistance such as he has suggested has been given by this government to people from other lands. In connection with the British migrants to Canada I trust—and I believe that the hon. member for Montmagny will agree with me—that the time will never come when the Britisher will not be welcomed in Canada. I think my hon. friend will join with me in welcoming all Britishers who have come to Canada "under their own steam" and are prepared to take care of themselves. That is the position to-day. We are not advancing moneys nor have we advanced moneys with the exception of certain cases where assisted passages have been given. Outside of existing agreements which will shortly expire that practice has been entirely discontinued.

Replying to the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly), I have found it much more difficult to keep people out of Canada than to bring them in. Even during this period of depression, strange to say, there are many people striving to get in. In fact if the effort to come into Canada is any indication of our recovery from the depression I should say that we are recovering very rapidly, because we require a large staff along our boundary lines to see that those who should not be allowed into Canada are with the least possible irritation kept out. I should like to indicate to my hon. friend the importance of the work that these men are doing. The records of the Immigration Department disclose that during the last calendar year the officers along our boundary line passed into Canada, either for temporary visits of only an hour or two or for longer periods, excluding immigrants and entries at ocean ports, over 32,000,000 people. Hon members will readily recognize the necessity for a well organized and disciplined preventive force.

Mr. SPENCER: In how many years did that number enter Canada?

Mr. GORDON: In one year. In the month of August alone the number was over 6,000,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I agree with the remarks of my hon. friend from Montmagny, and it is rather interesting that at the present time everybody seems to be endeavouring to discourage immigration. That, however, has not always been so, and the government of which I had the honour to be a member was strongly assailed because it was not taking steps to increase the population of Canada and to bring in immigrants. That criticism was made as recently as the 1929 session. I shall quote from Hansard of 1929, page 22, where the present Prime Minister is reported as follows:

> Is there any Canadian who regards this problem as being adequately dealt with by the present system? We have here one of the largest undeveloped areas in the world; we have a very pressing necessity for more people. There need be no misapprehension about that, notwithstanding what has been said from time to time to the contrary. It will be found that the increase of population in this country, brought about through bringing additional people in, will not only lessen unemployment for those who are now in it, but will increase all employment. Those who have studied the problems connected with the movement of people realize that instead of there being a diminution of opportunities for labour, the flow of new peoples into a country means the increasing of the opportunities for those who are there as well as providing work to those who may come.

In view of certain statements which have been made, more particularly in my province, I wish to remind the committee that we were attacked not because we were bringing too many immigrants but because we were not bringing enough.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I am glad to see that the memory of my hon. friend goes back at least two or three years. Probably due to the fact that I am getting old mine goes back much farther than that. I can remember in the good old days back in 1905 and 1906, when immigrants were coming to Canada at the rate of about 500,000 a year. I remember the time when I was assailed in this house because I thought that the ratio of immigrants to population was far too high. That was in the old days of the North Atlantic Trading Company and the Saskatchewan Land Settlement Company.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Who was in that deal?

Mr. LAVERGNE: I remember giving figures at a time when the population of the United States was about 52,000,000 and ours was about 7,000,000 or 8,000,000. We were begging for immigrants to come here, with the result that we filled up our country and to-day we are beginning to pay the piper. The theories which have certain currency out west, especially in the city of Winnipeg, were practically ignored in Canada at that time. When we imported those immigrants we imported their doctrines of very advanced socialism, and probably communism. We introduced into our country the famous Doukhobors and many others which have not greatly improved our population. I agree with the Minister of Immigration that we should build up our country with the two basic races, those of British and French descent, which are already assimilated. I hope my hon. friend's memory will go back to a time about twenty-five years ago, as it did to the resolution he read a minute ago, when I was laughed at in the house because I made the statement that we were sacrificing the intellectual and moral prosperity of our country for material prosperity which would prove in the future to be dangerous to Canada.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Two years ago my hon. friend would not have agreed with this program, either.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Certainly not. I am open to conviction, but until it is proved I am wrong I hold to my view. I think if my hon. friends went to the United States and talked with any patriotic American who belonged to the good old Yankee stock or belonged to the southerners—

Mr. LAPOINTE: One hundred per cent American.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I would interject at this point that the 100 per cent American of fifty years ago has practically disappeared. I should think that the smell of the melting pot in the United States should open our eyes and caution us to go slowly when we are filling up our country, and impress us with the necessity for building our citizenship with the Canadian races which are already assimilated. We know of the common traditions in Canada which are absorbed by the British and French people who should constitute our population. Let us fill up our country with the sons of the soil, the sons of people who are inspired by the traditions of 150 years of common life with our English-speaking compatriots. This is the best immigration. Why this hurry in filling up our country with all the riff-raff of Europe? In this way are we going to make Canada happier and more prosperous? I think Canada, especially the province of Quebec, is prosperous in a way that other nations may well envy. I do not think any people in the world enjoy more happiness and more liberty, and have a greater respect for the rights of others than the people of the province of Quebec. And that enviable condition is due to the traditions which have been handed down to us by our forefathers for the past 300 years. I think the democracy that has been built up in that province is an outstanding example to the world in freedom, in happiness, in contentment, and in respect for the rights of others, especially of minorities.

Mr. HEENAN: I had intended to deal with this question on votes 124 and 125, but inasmuch as it has been discussed on this particular item I suppose I may as well continue it. I was very happy to hear what I considered the very courageous remarks of the hon. Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) with respect to immigration, especially when he said he was not going to permit the dictation of railroad companies or of immigration agents to continue any longer. The only trouble I see is that he will not only have to offset their dictation, he will have also to offset their influence. I have had some experience in this regard, before I entered the cabinet, while I was a member of the cabinet and since I have tried to maintain the position that he is trying to maintain at the present time. If I failed in that regard it was because of the political manoeuvring of hon. friends opposite who now support the government.

I noticed in the Ottawa Journal of March 22, 1930, a despatch stating that the agent of one particular church wishes to double the number of our British settlers. I may say to the minister that the Catholic church, the United church and the Salvation Army are striving to bring in settlers. They have men engaged in that work, and those men seem to think that the greater the number of settlers they can induce to come to this country the more important their respective positions will become. In 1931, an official of the Salvation Army, Lieut.-Commissioner W. J. Barnard Turner, of London, England, visited this country and stated that he was seeking to move 2,000,000 Britishers to Canada. I see that votes 124 and 125 cover grants to assist that gentleman to carry out his plan.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, South Cape Breton): We have not yet reached votes 124 and 125.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I have already raised that point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, South Cape Breton): If the committee consent to finish this discussion on the item now before us, well and good.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not see why the committee should be asked to consent, because I am discussing the matter after other members have been allowed to do so.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, South Cape Breton): I do not know whether the minister is going to take up vote 124.

Mr. GORDON: The next item will be 125, I hope.

Mr. HEENAN: I am heart and soul with the minister in his endeavour to stop immigration, but I do not think for a moment that he is doing so. The minister admits that Britishers are permitted to enter who come "under their own steam" as he says. Why should Britishers or any other nationals be allowed to come into this country "under their own steam" and flood the labour market? I do not think we should allow Britishers to come in freely, especially when we know they are encouraged by the propaganda of immigration societies to come to Canada.

Mr. GORDON: What propaganda does my hon. friend refer to?

Mr. HEENAN: At the present time their agents are travelling throughout the British isles telling the people what fine prospects there are in Canada for intending immigrants. In my room only yesterday a young returned soldier from the British isles—from the same part of the country as I came from—

Mr. GORDON: I hope we did not deport him.

Mr. HEENAN: No, they are all decent people who come from that part of the country. He asked me to get him a job and I am trying to do so. I inquired why he came to this country. He told me that throughout Britain to-day there are immigration officers paid by the different churches and citizen's committees urging young men to come to this country, and offering to lend them money to pay their passage. Those agents are telling the people that immigration into Canada from continental Europe being practically stopped, now is the time for them to come in as a preferred class so that when conditions improve they will be right on the job.

Mr. GORDON: What churches?

Mr. HEENAN: All the churches; I am not speaking of any particular church.

Mr. PRICE: Nonsense.

Mr. HEENAN: There is no one in the house better acquainted with what is nonsense than the hon. member who has just interrupted me.

Mr. PRICE: Where do you stand on this question?

Mr. HEENAN: I do not want to be further interrupted. When I was Minister of Labour I was obstructed by gentlemen of his calibre who did not know the difference between common sense and nonsense.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, South Cape Breton): Do not invite reprisals, please.

Mr. HEENAN: There are citizen's committees going up and down the British isles, especially in the industrial centres in the north of England. The members of those committees make house to house calls asking the boys to emigrate as a matter of patriotism. This is the formula: You joined the colours at a certain time in 1914; it is just as necessary to join our band now and emigrate to Canada, Australia and other parts of the British empire in order to save the situation in England. There is an impression throughout the country that the government has stopped immigration and yet the minister tells the house that anyone who comes here "under his own steam" is received with open arms. I hope the minister will be successful in stopping political propaganda and overcoming political influence, because if there is anything that will tend to destroy Canada as a country for immigrants it will be political manoeuvring.

Mr. GORDON: Might I ask just what the hon. member means by political manoeuvring?

Mr. HEENAN: I will give it to you in a few moments, and when I get through you will not have any doubt of what I mean. In 1915 the Conservative government of Ontario thought it wise to appoint a royal commission on unemployment. The report of that commission was delivered in 1916, and from that time to the present propaganda has been circulated to induce people to come to this country from all parts of the world. I find the following at page 50 of the report of the royal commission appointed by the Ontario government:

> Your commission recommends such reform in immigration methods as will make directly for the settlement of Canada's vacant agricultural areas, stimulate the development of the country's natural resources and combat the universal tendency of population to concentrate in cities. Your commissioners would further advise such united action by the imperial and dominion authorities as will lead a greater proportion of British immigrants to the overseas dominions instead of to foreign countries, thus conserving the man power, and adding to the strength and wealth of the empire. For these economic and patriotic reasons the close of the war should find us ready with a courageous inter-imperial immigration policy in which the imperial, dominion and provincial governments and railway and other great employing corporations will have a responsible share. For Canada the primary problem is to bring the right sort of people to the land and to assist them in every way possible to make the land productive and themselves prosperous citizens of the dominion. If necessary, the governments interested should furnish such financial assistance as will enable the newcomers within a reasonable time to become self-supporting on the soil.

Carrying on from that point, we find the politicians interesting themselves in immigration, and during the last dominion election we had Mr. Ferguson saying too many people were coming to this country. I caught him deliberately misrepresenting facts, as is well known; he spoke of a protest he had made to Ottawa, meaning of course to the Dominion government, but finally he had to confess that he had protested to Sir William Clark, High Commissioner for Great Britain in Canada. I find the following editorial comment in the Brockville Recorder and Times of December 1, 1928:

> Mr. Ferguson addresses the transportation club in Toronto and says, in part, that:
> "In the first place, we cannot hope to populate this country with British people alone. There are only a few millions to spare at most, and when we talk about bringing people and putting them on the land one has only to learn that in the British Isles there are only three million farmers, to understand there is not much of a source to draw from in that respect. But there are large areas of the continent from which we can draw most desirable people, who have characteristics so much like our own, and who can be readily assimilated into our Canadian life and make good Canadian citizens and good British subjects."

Those were Mr. Ferguson's words, two years before the election.

Mr. MALONEY: My hon. friend quotes from the Brockville Recorder and Times. I should like to ask who is the owner, proprietor and general manager of the Brockville Recorder and Times.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not know. I do not know who owns or controls any paper in Canada, and I am not very much interested. But I can tell the hon. gentleman, who is a good friend of mine, that these are the words uttered by Mr. Ferguson; they are not the words of the editor of the newspaper.

Mr. SPENCER: When and where was Mr. Ferguson supposed to have made that statement?

Mr. HEENAN: If the hon. gentleman will just follow me I will give him all that Howard Ferguson ever said, and that is not much. In 1930 Mr. Ferguson said we were bringing too many immigrants to this country, but I quote his words from the Toronto Star of October 5, 1928:

> "There are splendid migrants in Britain," he said, "anxious and willing to come to the new portion of the empire. Some of them have cauliflower ears and hare lips; some have flat feet. But we have lots of fellows of that kind in this country and they get along splendidly. But as long as we take the position that there will be no more hare lips than what we produce ourselves, of course we are going to discourage immigration."

He wanted people with hare lips and bow legs and everything else.

Mr. PRICE: What do you mean by that?

Mr. HEENAN: I continue quoting:

"Let us be sensible about it. If it was not necessary when we brought out those harvesters to ask more than three or four questions, and tell them if they found jobs they could stay here, why ask four or five sheets of family history and set up technical difficulties for others? There are a lot of little, irritating things that can easily be removed, and I am quite sure, having had it brought to their notice, the government at Ottawa will see that they are removed."

Premier Ferguson intimated that if it lay in his power he would encourage any movement to Canada from Sweden.

"What they need in Norway," he continued, "and what all Europe needs, and what the British Isles need, is more accurate, truthful stories about the conditions that exist in this country, if we are to get immigration. In every country I was in I visited—

He had just returned from a trip to Europe.

In every country I was in I visited some of the transportation offices. In some, I visited a great number, and everywhere I asked for literature about Ontario. I found some agents had never heard of such a place, and where I did get literature it was Canadian literature—

You see, he does not think Canadian literature is worth much unless it has to do with the province of Ontario.

—it was Canadian literature and the illustrations were entirely of interest to the western people—wheat fields, threshing operations, cattle ranches—there was nothing to indicate the diversity of opportunity that exists in Canada for people who want to come here. I hope we have taken some steps to cure that, even at expense of the province.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Will my hon. friend allow one question?

Mr. HEENAN: No, I do not want to be interrupted. I do not mean to answer discourteously, but my hon. friend will talk about Quebec, and I do not know anything about that province. I am talking about Ontario.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I was only going to say I would be more interested in my hon. friend's opinion than in any opinion expressed by Mr. Ferguson.

Mr. HEENAN: My opinion is that we would be better off if we followed the Prime Minister's policy and kept Canada for Canadians, shutting out all immigrants. That is what should have been done years ago, and that is what would have been done if it had not been for the propaganda of the Tory party. According to the London Advertiser of July 24, 1930, I find that the province of Ontario spent the following sums in inducing immigrants to come to this country:

1925	$124,225
1926	165,830
1927	167,056
1928	171,129

Mr. MALONEY: Who spent that money?

Mr. HEENAN: The province of Ontario spent it, and in 1929 Ontario spent $181,049 to induce immigrants to come to this country. Just one year after that, in 1930, Mr. Ferguson, who had been spending the taxes of the people of Ontario to induce immigrants to come to this country, and who maintained an office in London for that purpose, went up and down this province protesting against all the people who had been brought into the country.

Mr. PRICE: What did you do?

Mr. HEENAN: No one is a better judge of jokes than my hon. friend on the other side. But let me tell the hon. gentleman who interjected that question that when the statement was made that we had room here for thousands of Britishers, I took it upon myself to point out, although it was a matter on which the Minister of Immigration should have made a statement, that this propaganda was not in the interests of the country or in the interests of the immigrants themselves, because when they came here and were unable to find employment they became dissatisfied, and someone had to take care of them. If they went back home they told of the hardships they had met in Canada; and I pointed out, as I have said, that this was not in the best interests either of Canada or of human beings coming to the country.

Let me read certain extracts to show what my position was. The Evening Standard of London, England, in its issue of July 28, 1928, made the following statement:

Canada Closed to Miners. Trade Union Manifesto Speaks of "Misleading Propaganda."

There is no opening in Canada for the 200,000 British miners who are declared to be surplus to the home industry.

This point is emphasized in a manifesto issued by the Canadian Trades Labour Congress.

The manifesto states:—"Too long has the Canadian government remained silent and allowed misleading propaganda as to opportunities for employment in Canada to continue without any official contradiction.

"The statement by Mr. Peter Heenan, Canadian Minister of Labour, that the records show a surplus at the coal mines already in Canada should give the quietus to those who seek to exploit the misery of the British miners by seeking to induce them to emigrate to Canada."

Following that statement, the great glorified agent of the Tory party, the Montreal Gazette, had this to say in an editorial in its issue of Thursday, July 26, 1928:

Mr. Heenan to the Rescue

The Canadian government's answer to British parliamentary criticism of Canadian immigration restrictions comes from Hon. Peter Heenan, Minister of Labour. That the Minister of Labour should be speaking for the Minister of Immigration and Colonization is significant in itself. It has been realized long enough in Canada that the voice of the Canadian government in immigration matters has been nothing more, or better, than a rebroadcast of the voice of organized labour. The views and aims of organized labour in this connection are too well known to call for much discussion; they have been defined and proclaimed upon every convenient occasion by labour bodies and labour leaders, and they can be summed up in the one word "restriction." That is why the operation of the Canadian immigration system in Britain has been confined to so small a field, and so barren a field. What Mr. Heenan says as to the complete absence of restrictions applicable to Britishers who are physically acceptable and willing to pay full fares to Canada is altogether beside the point, since it has nothing to do with the work of bringing over immigrants, as such, by means of assisted passages and the like.

It will be seen that at that time I advocated the very policy which the present Minister of Immigration is carrying out. And that is what I got from the Montreal Gazette. On December 7, 1928, the Montreal Star had something to say. I understand that this newspaper organized a soup kitchen at its own expense last winter and made capital of the fact that it was feeding a number of people in this country; and the Minister of Immigration—

Mr. GORDON: The people they were feeding were in large measure people who were brought into Canada by the government of which my hon. friend was a member.

Mr. HEENAN: By the propaganda of the Montreal Star and the Conservative party—

Mr. QUINN: It was done by your own government.

Mr. HEENAN: This is what the Montreal Star said:

> There is something tragic in the contrasts which the situation offers. Canada is calling earnestly for men and women to develop her matchless resources and to build up her agriculture and industry. This Dominion needs half a million men and she could absorb that number in a single year if the same effort was put forward that was initiated in the dark days of the Great war.
>
> These men who are out of work are able-bodied, physically strong and are trained to use their muscles through long hours.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Give us your own opinion, not the opinions of newspapers.

Mr. SPENCE: How many years back is that?

Mr. PRICE: What are you reading from?

Mr. HEENAN: Where ignorance is bliss it is folly to be wise.

[Mr. Heenan.]

They would make admirable settlers if they could get over the difficult period of the first year of settlement. They would find new homes here if they were encouraged and given a helping hand.

The Montreal Gazette of July 26, 1928 had this to say:

> Debaters in the British parliament appear to think that the Canadian government is not doing its best to secure immigrants from the old country but is giving preference to Europeans. The complaints here has been that the Canadian government has not been trying very hard to obtain immigrants anywhere.

That is the kind of propaganda we were up against during the last two or three years when your humble servant was trying to preserve Canada for Canadians, just along the line that my hon. friend from Montmagny—

Mr. CHAPLIN: Who is joshing you now?

Mr. HEENAN: —is advocating. The Montreal Gazette of July 31, 1928 made this statement:

> The Hon. Robert Forke, Minister of Immigration, has shown full realization and a right appreciation of the seriousness of the problem that confronts his department, and he has done all he possibly can to speed up British settlers in larger numbers. But Mr. Forke is bound by a government policy obviously influenced by the view of organized labour, openly confessed last week by the Hon. Mr. Heenan, a member of the government—that the minimum of people should only be allowed to come in until everyone in Canada is prosperous and in a job! Yet Canada has room and resources to maintain a productive population larger by millions than she has to-day.

That kind of propaganda was going on all through the British Isles. Men and women out of work were led to believe that a few of us in Canada were trying to preserve this country as a closed shop, and they preferred to believe newspaper propaganda rather than to take the word of those who were really interested in the Canadian working man. And so they came to Canada and found themselves deceived when they arrived here.

Mr. LAVERGNE: How many immigrants came in between 1900 and 1911?

Mr. HEENAN: I do not know, but I will give the figures later on.

Mr. LAVERGNE: It was almost two millions and a half.

Mr. HEENAN: Which was just two millions too many. The Sydney Post of October 11, 1928,—I am coming close to home, Mr. Chairman—had this to say:

> The leaders of the government have repeatedly stated that they prefer British settlers before those from any of the continental countries. Notwithstanding these reiterated assurances the official records show a steady relative decrease in the number of immigrants from Britain, and a constantly growing tide of settlers from eastern and southern Europe. If the professions of Mr. Forke are to be accepted that the government regards British settlers as the most desirable that can be obtained, the only conclusion one can reach is that the federal authorities do not know how to get what they want. Their attitude toward immigration seems to be that of helpless onlookers.

Mr. CHAPLIN: If that had been read to the immigrants they would have stayed out.

Mr. HEENAN: That was published in 1928, two years before the elections. The Hamilton Spectator of November 26, 1928, contained the following:

Lord Melchett Suggests Plan

Canada to Grant Land, Britain to Pay Cost

London, November 26.—A suggestion that Canada should make land grants and that Britain should finance settlement schemes on the instalment basis, is made by Lord Melchett, formerly Sir Alfred Mond, who says he would like to see a really big migration movement started which would bring out at least 100,000 people to Canada without undue hindrance.

An hon. MEMBER: Carried on division.

Mr. HEENAN: My hon. friend would like to have the item carry, but I intend to put a few more things on record before it is carried. This is the kind of propaganda indulged in by politicians, and which has been supported by politicians for the last few years.

Mr. GORDON: What politicians?

Mr. HEENAN: I will prove my statement.

Mr. GORDON: It conveys nothing to my mind when the hon. member says "politicians."

Mr. HEENAN: Politicians from the Conservative party, one member of which party is over in London representing the spirit, the voice and the soul of the government of the day.

An hon. MEMBER: Who is that?

Mr. SPOTTON: He will be back.

Mr. HEENAN: I hope he does come back, because I lost an asset when he left. Will my hon. friend tell me why he ran away?

Mr. SPOTTON: He will be back.

Mr. HEENAN: The Port Arthur News Chronicle, a paper in my part of the country, under date of October 1, 1928, had the following to say:

If Britishers will not come to Canada, we must look elsewhere for men and women who will come. Much of the dominion still remains to be settled. Much work has to be done. There is work that neither Britishers or Canadians will undertake if they can find other people to perform it. Large employers of labour know this. Thus we see on the railways in extra work, foreign labour with the barest sprinkling of English speaking men among them.

At this point I want to say that that is where the railway companies come in. I refer to both companies; they love to have a surplus of this kind of labour in order that they may encourage work at thirty cents an hour for any number of hours they like. They want to pay a wage which will not permit of a decent standard of living. The article continues:

We see the great construction works manned by non-English men in large proportions, simply carrying out instructions issued by the few supervisors. If the Britishers would come and do the work, there would be no necessity for the bringing in of so many non-English speaking men, but they will not come, and Canada cannot cease living until the Englishmen fulfil the original idea of the intention of making Canada a colony for the settlement of Englishmen alone.

The following is from a paper in my own riding, the Rainy River Record. Under date of November 11, 1928, they had this to say:

Saturday Review (London): (The report of the Industrial Transference Board shows that there are at least 250,000 more workmen in the British Isles than can be supported by the industries of the country). The remedy in which the Industrial Transference Board see most hope is in migration to the dominions. It would like to transfer to new careers 200,000 workmen with their families, for the excess of unemployed in the coal mines alone is probably at least 200,000—not one of whom has a chance of reemployment in his old work—and the migration of 200,000 abroad is therefore not an excessive transference, nor would it be throwing on the dominions by any means the whole of our surplus population. Since the war the stream of emigration from this country abroad has almost stopped, and the emigration of even 200,000 would do little more than make up the accumulated arrears.

In the Montreal Gazette of September 15, 1928, the following appeared:

It is largely because of the Heenan-organized labour attitude that one government after another in Canada has failed to evolve and enforce an immigration policy that will bring immigrants.

I draw this to the attention of the Minister of Immigration in the hope that the Montreal Gazette will not twist that around and say that the Gordon-organized labour attitude of one government after another in Canada has failed to bring immigrants to this country. Under date of March 10, 1928, the following appears in the Montreal Gazette:

Ottawa, March 9.—An impressive and constructive immigration program was submitted to parliament this afternoon by General A. D. McRae (Conservative, North Vancouver) in his contribution to the budget debate. His plan contemplates "the ultimate settlement of 60,000,000 acres of land by some 250,000 farmers. These, with their families and the urban population which will be required, and the consequent developments which will follow, will add 2,000,000 new people to the prairie provinces of Canada. I propose we start out to double the present population of the west. Do this and the rest of Canada will grow and prosper."

Mr. PRICE: Why is so much of the time of the committee taken up with the useless junk which the hon. gentleman is reading? Why should the committee be held up, at a time when we are trying to get legislation passed, with a reading of numerous newspaper reports? It is absolutely useless and of no interest to the general public at large. It is a nuisance.

Mr. HEENAN: Now that the hon. gentleman has got that off his chest, let me read something from the Montreal Gazette, quoting what the Toronto Mail and Empire had to say:

We are pleased to learn that General McRae, M.P., North Vancouver, who met with a serious accident in Ottawa last winter, has returned from England completely restored in health. He has for many years taken an active interest in immigration and settlement work, and shortly before his accident, presented a plan which attracted widespread attention. Briefly it was to settle three hundred thousand on fifty million acres of land at a cost of $30,000,000.

The Mail and Empire, which is a Conservative paper, goes on to say:

If, as estimated, it would add two million to our population in ten years the cost does not seem excessive. General McRae's was one of the few really constuctive plans proposed for public consideration, but unfortunately his illness prevented the discussion of it which it deserved.

I would ask the hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. Price) to take up the cudgels where General McRae left off, and advocate now the bringing in of 300,000 people at a cost of $30,000,000 a year to settle on useless land. I defy any hon. member on the government side of the house to get up and say that that is the policy that should be pursued in Canada. Yet they induced thousands of people in the old country to sell their little sticks of furniture and start off for this great, prosperous country of Canada, and when they got here and could not find employment, we had the spectacle of the Conservatives going up and down this country saying: These are the people that the King government brought over.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, South Cape Breton): Time is up.

[Mr. Heenan.]

Mr. HEENAN: I am sorry because I am only half through.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I agree entirely with what my hon. friend said, but I do not think that quoting newspapers puts the responsibility on the right people. I was in the house when I was almost alone in denouncing immigration, and I lived to see the whole Conservative opposition supporting me when I was combating the immigration policy of the Laurier government. Deeds of governments speak louder than quotations from newspapers, which are not responsible to the people. Who brought the immigrants to this country? That is the question. During the Liberal regime of Sir Wilfrid Laurier three million immigrants, paid immigrants, came into this country—advertised immigration, bonused immigration, and sometimes scandalous immigration. I recall, for instance, the North Atlantic Trading Company. I was in the house in those days, and it was precisely on one of those questions that I separated from that party. It was when the Liberal party was filling up this country with the riff-raff of continental Europe. That was the policy pursued by the Liberal party for at least ten or twelve years, and it was denounced in this house first by the hon. member for Labelle and myself, then by Conservatives from Quebec, and then by the leader of the opposition, Sir Robert Borden, and the whole Conservative party. And it was defended by whom? By Mr. Sifton and Mr. Frank Oliver, then Minister of the Interior and Minister of Immigration respectively. Thus, deeds speak louder than quotations from newspapers, which may be Conservative. My hon. friend quotes the Montreal Gazette. Everybody knows that the Montreal Gazette is the Taschereau organ in the province of Quebec. I do not know that Mr. Taschereau is so much of a Conservative. It may be so, but he is not supposed to be Conservative in the eyes of my hon. friend.

I remember reading to the then Minister of Immigration in the Laurier government a list of twenty-nine new races which had been brought into Canada by the immigration policy of the Laurier government. Those were the days when we had bonused immigration, premiums on immigrants, scandals involving different companies. I remember the North Atlantic Trading Company. You could not name those people because if their names were given out in public some of them would have to commit suicide. But the present Minister of Immigration has put a stop to that policy, which was ruinous to the welfare of our nation and to the best traditions of both races in this country, and I think the whole house should stand up and thank him for adopting such a policy. I have fought the Liberal party's immigration policy for the last twenty-five years, and I have fought many a battle alone. We should look at things squarely, and say that both parties have been guilty, both parties have gone the wrong way, the Liberal party more than the other; but the Conservative party was the first to put a stop to that policy this year.

Item agreed to.

Immigration salaries and contingencies, including grants to immigration societies, women's hostels, provinces, and loans for stock, equipment, etc., for Canadian boys, as may be authorized by the governor in council, $1,905,000.

Mr. HEENAN: I wish the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) had been in the Conservative party during the last two or three years, because he would have tried to stop this propaganda in the British Isles. I want to say this to him. He said that the Liberal party brought those people here. I say it was the Tory propaganda that brought those people to this country.

Mr. LAVERGNE: There was no Tory government in 1904, 1905 or 1906.

Mr. HEENAN: Let me read what the present Prime Minister said in this house in 1929.

Mr. CHAPLIN: May I ask a question?

Mr. HEENAN: No. You don't need to ask anything because I am not going to answer it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will you tell us who brought that bunch up into the northwest that do not wear any clothes?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, South Cape Breton): Will hon. gentlemen kindly address the chair and stop this cross-fire back and forth?

Mr. HEENAN: It would seem that hon. members opposite do not like the medicine they are getting, to hear that they are responsible for bringing immigrants into this country. They have misled thousands of people and brought them to Canada to suffer misery and starvation. They do not like to be reminded of the fact that they are responsible for lowering the wages of the working men in Canada.

I shall read what the present Prime Minister said as reported in Hansard of February 11, 1929:

> We have here one of the largest undeveloped areas in the world; we have a very pressing necessity for more people. There need be no misapprehension about that, notwithstanding what has been said from time to time to the contrary. It will be found that the increase of population in this country, brought about through bringing additional people in, will not only lessen unemployment for those who are now in it, but will increase all employment. Those who have studied the problems connected with the movement of people realize that instead of there being a diminution of opportunities for labour the flow of new peoples into a country means the increasing of the opportunities for those who are there as well as providing work to those who may come.

I have before me a similar statement reported in the Calgary Herald of February 1, 1929. In 1930 Mayor Webb of Winnipeg led a delegation of unemployed to this city. He and his delegation said that the reason for unemployment throughout Canada was the number of immigrants which had been brought in. Then he went back to Winnipeg and was invited to speak before the Sons of England society. His speech is reported in the Free Press of April 24, 1930. I would ask hon. members to bear in mind that this is the same gentleman who after blaming the government for bringing in too many immigrants left Ottawa, returned to Winnipeg and addressed the meeting to which I have referred, as follows:

> Mayor Webb told of a fine young Englishman who was in Winnipeg looking for work. He had been sent out to this country as a result of efforts made in his home city to help young fellows anxious to try their fortunes abroad.
> "That is the type of man we want in this country" explained the mayor, who expressed the hope that thousands more like him would be sent to Canada and given a fair chance to succeed when they got here.
> "The best thing for this country would be the arrival of a million Britishers," declared mayor Webb.

I want to point out, without mentioning further editorials of a like character—I do not wish to burden the committee because I know that it must be very trying to hon. members opposite to listen to this repetition—that this is the kind of propaganda that the King government and this country had to submit to for the last two or three years. I know that there were thousands of miners and other people in the British Isles who were thinking of the great opportunities which prevailed in Canada and who with the assistance of immigration societies borrowed money to come here. When they arrived they found conditions just as I pictured them in a public speech delivered before the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada.

Mr. GORDON: When were those miners brought to Canada to which my hon. friend refers?

Mr. HEENAN: Those miners were coming over here expecting to find work when they arrived.

Mr. GORDON: In what years did they come?

Mr. HEENAN: Continually.

Mr. GORDON: They are not coming now.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They came when the hon. member was in office.

Mr. HEENAN: They are coming because of the propaganda of my hon. friend and his friends.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Who brought those naked Doukhobors into the northwest? You and your government.

Mr. POULIOT: They are naked, too.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You don't like that, do you?

Mr. McINTOSH: That is ancient history.

Mr. CHAPLIN: May be it is, but they are still running naked.

Mr. McINTOSH: Why not go out and tell it to the world?

Mr. CHAPLIN: You are trying to dress it.

Mr. HEENAN: I believe my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) and his friends are rather excited.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): What about the unemployed?

An hon. MEMBER: Carry on.

Mr. HEENAN: I think I shall. I just wish to say that—

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): You were a fine lot of servants for the country.

Mr. HEENAN: What is my hon. friend growling about,—or is he grouching? Have you a grouch, too? Does my hon. friend not like this? I know it is rather hard medicine for the Tory party to take. I wish to say to the Minister of Immigration, however, that whether he believes it or not I am trying to maintain his position. I am trying to show that when I was in a position somewhat similar to his I had to withstand the criticism of editorials throughout the country.

[Mr. Heenan.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: You are not making it any easier for the minister.

Mr. HEENAN: They never changed my views because I still contended there were too many immigrants brought to this country. They came because of propaganda of the Conservative party, especially the branch of the party in the province of Ontario, and the taxes of the people were paid to bring those immigrants to Canada.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Why don't you speak out so that we can hear you?

Mr. HEENAN: When the minister was willing to allow a resolution to go through to provide for the eight hour day throughout Canada the hon. member who is now interrupting was the person who talked out the measure and thereby killed it.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Yes, after you were Minister of Labour for years and could not put it through. Now you are trying to stand up and defend it.

Mr. HEENAN: That might be true, too. The fact remains however that the hon. member prevented his own government from putting the measure through when they were willing that it should go through.

Mr. POULIOT: He is a hot wave.

Mr. HEENAN: He is the hon. member who undertook, after the minister had agreed—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, South Cape Breton): I would suggest that the hon. member keep to the subject before the committee.

Mr. HEENAN: I am going to, and I want you to keep the hon. member opposite quiet.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, South Cape Breton): I certainly shall. I ask the hon. member to the right kindly to keep order.

Mr. HEENAN: I wish to say again to the Minister of Immigration that I am heart and soul with him.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Deliver me from my friends.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not think, however, that the hon. member sitting to his left is with him, or he has changed his mind within the last year.

Mr. MANION: Whom are you talking about?

Mr. HEENAN: The Minister of Railways, more particularly.

Mr. MANION: I am wholeheartedly with him.

Mr. HEENAN: Well you and I are going to shake hands yet. I made a speech, Mr. Chairman, with respect to people being brought into this country, and the whole Tory party including the present Prime Minister took exception to my remarks. The Tory papers also objected. On November 22nd, 1928, the Moose Jaw Times contained this editorial:

The Montreal Gazette has been devoting considerable criticism to Hon. Peter Heenan, Minister of Labour, in connection with immigration matters. Mr. Heenan has been returning the compliment and seems to be no better pleased with The Gazette than The Gazette is with him.

To the Toronto Star there is nothing surprising about this. In coming into conflict The Gazette and the Minister of Labour are both attending to their jobs and upholding the beliefs that are within them. The Star says:

Mr. Heenan is censured by The Gazette for having said that any miner-harvester excursion next year would be contingent upon the demand for extra labour that might then exist. This does not please The Gazette and is taken as indicating a hostility to immigration, a subject which, it says, Mr. Heenan should not discuss, but should leave to Mr. Forke, Minister of Immigration. But the fact is that Mr. Heenan, as Minister of Labour, was talking of labour, not immigration, when he made the statement complained of. "Any bringing over of harvesters," said Mr. Heenan, "would be contingent upon the demand for extra labour that might then exist." No Minister of Labour could very well be attending more strictly to his own business than was Mr. Heenan when he made that statement.

I am reading these extracts to give the minister an idea of the character of the propaganda inspired by certain interests during the last two or three years in an attempt to bring in immigrants, and, conversely, to criticize anyone who would dare take the stand the present minister has taken. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I cannot see why the minister should still desire to pass this vote to grant financial assistance to immigration agents. Consequently I move that the vote be reduced to $1.

Mr. MALONEY: Mr. Chairman. I would not intervene in this discussion were it not for the fact that certain statements have been made reflecting on the capability of our high commissioner in London. We have as our representative in London the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, one of the ablest men that Canada ever produced. Undoubtedly since he has been in London he has placed Canada on the map. Never in the history of this country have we had a more capable administrator than the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, ex-Premier of Ontario, who to-day with such distinction fills the office of High Commissioner to London.

Mr. REID: I have a case to which I should like to direct the attention of the Minister of Immigration; and I ask the indulgence of the committee while I explain the details. This is the case of one Joseph Gordon Smith, who was dismissed from his position as temporary immigration inspector at Pacific Highway, British Columbia. In regard to his civil service examination I might say he obtained a mark of 85 per cent on the written examination and a very fair mark on the oral examination as well, and was placed sixth on the permanent list. I asked for the papers in connection with the case, and it is from these official records I am now giving the facts.

Complaints started to come in from the inspector in charge there with regard to this man, but at one time it was decided that he would make a fairly good officer. I read from a report dated October 16, 1930, from division inspector F. W. Taylor to the division commissioner at Vancouver. This is with reference to Inspector J. G. Smith:

The vacancy created by the transfer of inspector McNamara back to White Rock could, I am sure, be filled temporarily at least by officer Smith; and while I realize that the department would like to deal definitely with these appointments after the person concerned has been in the service a reasonable length of time, in the case of Mr. Smith if it is possible to have him continue at the Highway office for another few months to make up the quota of inspectors required at this port, I would recommend this action, as Mr. Smith is steadily improving in his inspectional and all-round work, and I feel reasonably sure that he will continue to do so.

So you see, Mr. Chairman, this man was progressing very well, and it looked as though he would make a fairly good officer. As I say, however, complaints started to come in with regard to his work, and the two chief complaints lodged against him were later proved to be entirely unfounded. I am going to read the first complaint made against him, and also give the real facts of the case. This is a report to Mr. A. E. Skinner under date of February 21, 1931:

Referring to Mr. Whiteley's recent report in connection with the employment of Inspector J. A. Smith wherein Mr. Whiteley makes reference to a couple of complaints in Mr. Smith's inspectional work; these complaints were inquired into at the time, the first one being made by a Mr. Louis F. Bachman, who claimed at the time he was being interviewed by Mr. Smith at the Highway that he was a Y.M.C.A. worker from Milwaukee, although he did not have any credentials to identify himself and very little cash for his maintenance during his contemplated somewhat lengthy stay in this province, and although the man was allowed to come forward he called at the United States consular office to ascertain why he should have been questioned so closely and on following the matter up we found that Bachman was arrested a few days later by the R.C.M.P. officials in Alberta, where on being liberated he lost no time in returning to his home in Minot, North Dakota.

That was the first complaint, which was later proved to be entirely untrue. I quote from the same report with regard to the second complaint:

The second complaint was made by Mr. H. A. Goodhugh, who was sailing from Vancouver on the ss. Aorangi on November 12th last, and this gentleman called here on the morning after being admitted at our Highway office to complain of the indifferent manner our inspector answered his many questions with reference to certain information he was endeavouring to secure concerning Vancouver and vicinity, as this was his first trip through British Columbia and it later developed that Mr. Smith unfortunately was not familiar with the particular things Mr. Goodhugh was asking about and when he secured the information from myself he was quite willing to overlook Mr. Smith's apparent indifferent attitude in the matter.

Those were two main complaints against Mr. Smith during the time he was temporary officer, and as I have stated they were not only proved to be unfounded and unwarranted, but I think were entirely uncalled for.

Now I should like to take up the further reasons given for his dismissal. The first is is because of his advanced age. He is an overseas active service man, and passed with a high mark, and there is a different age limit for those men than for others. His age when he passed the examination was 51, and when he was dismissed he was 53. The second complaint is that he would never make an efficient inspector, that he had always worked as a labourer or farm hand. This is entirely untrue. He had been a chef and always had followed that line of work; he had also been a chef in the British army during the last war. The only time he worked as a labourer, or anything of the sort, was when he took up a ranch at a place called Newtonbury, but this is what the inspector says:

He has always worked as a labourer or as a farm hand, and it is very hard for a man of his calibre to step into a position of this kind at his age and be successful.

I think that complaint also is entirely unfounded. Then the inspector goes on to state that this man never had any clerical experience. As a matter of fact the temporary inspectors are never given any chance to do clerical work; all the reports were filled in by someone else, so how can they say he has no clerical experience when he had no chance to do clerical work? Then there is another statement which I find in these official records. The inspectors says:

I am very sorry that for the past two years I have had to turn down all the temporary men but one, but I take it that the department wants efficient men appointed to the service, and I am doing my best to this end.

I ask the minister to take serious note of this statement. These men are appointed as temporary inspectors, and my information is that if they do not fit in with the other men there, it is openly stated that they have the skids put under them and out they go. One man by the name of Griffin was a temporary officer in New Westminster, and just before he was made permanent he was sent out to this port and the skids were put under him. This is not a case where one can blame any political organization; this is the fault of the officials in charge of this work. It is practically a closed corporation, and it is a common saying in that district that they can put the skids under any of the temporary inspectors and prevent them from becoming permanent officials.

Those were the most important complaints, but there is a further point which aroused the ire of myself and very many others. The officials looked around to see if they really could find a reason for dismissing this man. He was efficient in every way; he had been recommended a few months back, but just before he was to be made permanent they decided it was about time to get rid of him, so what do you suppose they found against him? I should like the minister to listen to this, because the middle name of this man is the same as the minister's name, and I am sure the minister will be interested in this complaint. I now read from the report:

There are two complaints against Inspector Smith, that I may say is not that he is discourteous, but his Scotch dialect is so broad that the majority of the travelling public cannot understand him when he is trying to examine them.

Do you blame me for being hostile? This is part of the official record, and to think we have come to a time in the history of Canada when a man with a Scotch dialect is to be discriminated against! I have heard the deputy speaker refer with commendable pride to the French race, but I can tell him that the record of the Scotch is not very far behind that of the French in the building up of this country of ours. I can go back to Sir John A. Macdonald and go right down the list of men of Scotch extraction who have done very much for this country. I think this is a gross insult, and I ask the minister that this case be investigated. I would ask the minister to remember this: they have not put on a permanent man for over two years. There are skids put under all those who do not fit in, but this is the last straw, and I am asking in the name of common justice that this slur on Scotland be removed. I have been quoting from the official records, and the only thing that they could find against the man is his Scotch accent.

Mr. GORDON: The hon. member need not fear; I will take the necessary steps to see that Scotchmen get their rights. I am told they get them anyhow. The case has not come before me, and obviously I cannot offhand go into all these various cases on the international boundary. I will look into this matter and if there has been any injustice I will see that it is attended to.

Mr. REID: This is not a dismissal under any political organization. The matter is more serious than that. I have here a letter from which I might quote the following:

You will be surprised to know that Joe Smith has been fired from the immigration service at the highway here under circumstances that merit some attention. The complaints have been fostered by another member of the staff, but of course the signing of the report was done by the man in charge. They complained of Smith's Scottish accent. I never thought the day would come when a Scottish accent would be a detriment in this world but more especially in Canada.

This letter is from a man who was a prospective Conservative candidate in the last provincial election, and therefore it shows that the matter is more serious than a mere political dismissal. It is high time that an investigation took place at the customs and immigration ports of British Columbia.

Mr. VENIOT: I wish to say a word or two in regard to this question of immigration, and I do so for the benefit of the hon. member for Montmagny, who in his speech blamed the Liberal party so severely for bringing so many immigrants into the country. According to the hon. gentleman the Liberal party was entirely to blame for all the immigrants brought into the country in the last fifteen or twenty years or more. Let me direct his attention to page 2746 of Hansard of May 22, 1929, reporting a speech made by the present Minister of Railways. That hon. gentleman was then criticizing the policy of the Liberal party in regard to immigration, and he was attempting to show that that policy had been a failure. In his speech he said:

During the first year of Liberal rule the British immigration into Canada amounted to 47 per cent of the total immigration; last year it was 33 per cent, which shows that the British immigration is decreasing, whatever the cause may be.

The following, particularly, is what I wish to call to the attention of the hon. gentleman:

During the last four fiscal years before the war, 1911 to 1914—

Our Tory friends were in power then, and the hon. member for Montmagny was supporting them.

—we received into Canada, 1,451,000 people.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Before the war?

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman was referring to the period before the war.

During the last four years during which this government—

That is, the Liberal government.

—has been in office—

That is, from 1922 or 1923 up to the time the hon. gentleman was speaking.

—we have received exactly 501,000, or a little more than one-third of the immigration during the four years before the war.

I wish to ask the hon. member for Montmagny to sleep on that.

Mr. LAVERGNE: My hon. friend asks me to sleep on his words. It reminds me of the old days. Let me tell him something that happened under the Laurier regime, when the Liberal party was making an attempt to bring in immigrants of every description—the Salvation Army, ex-convicts, prisoners and loafers. That was during the Liberal regime. The reason for that immigration which the Laurier government wished to bring in will be found at page 6151 of Hansard of April 9, 1907. That reason was stated by Mr. Smart, then Deputy Minister of Immigration, in Liverpool. He said on that occasion that this immigration was necessary to drown the French element in Canada. I would ask my hon. friend to sleep on that.

Mr. DONNELLY: There is an arrangement with the provinces for bringing in settlers, whereby we pay a certain proportion of the interest on the money loaned for improvements on the land. Can the minister give us some idea of what this is costing the government in New Brunswick and elsewhere?

Mr. GORDON: That applies to what is known as the New Brunswick scheme. Five hundred families are being brought in. All but about fifty of the families have come in, and I do not think there is any possibility of further families coming forward this year. I have not the figures with regard to what is known as the tripartite agreement with New Brunswick but I should be glad to get them and give them to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The other evening when these items were under discussion I was asking the minister a question with regard to the British Immigration and Colonization Association. I have since then received a return which gives a good deal of the information I sought. I note that this organization has brought in 5,358 boys. It has received in the past year from the government a total of $35,140.08.

Mr. GORDON: That is from the commencement.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The last six years.

Mr. GORDON: From the time we first took an interest in it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have no fault to find with the present administration with regard to this organization, but I do think that in the future the policy of the government should be to refuse to allow private organizations of this kind to bring boys to Canada. As I understand it, this organization is today on the rocks. They entered into a solemn arrangement with the government that they would supply after-care to the boys who were brought over. They have no financial resources and the responsibility for carrying on the work among these boys is left to the railroads—they were originally closely associated with the organization—and to the department itself. The Dominion government has been loaded up with a large number of boys who really are not needed in Canada. Throughout the west there are at the present time thousands of school boys who do not know where to find a job. I know something of old Ontario, and the same condition exists there. I had a letter only the other day from some people who stated that they did not know what to do with their own boys on the farm. In many cases our orphan homes are unable to place the children. I will admit that in the past many farmers got cheap labour by this means, and no doubt many boys of a fine type were brought out. However, at the present time we have sufficient boys right here in Canada to meet our needs.

Governments in the past have been willing to enter into negotiations with associations which may have had a certain financial backing but which have not been prepared to carry out their original arrangements, and the load has been passed on to the government. This brings me to the question of deportations. There have been deported 246 of these boys, and 199 have been returned under charity arrangements. A few weeks ago I gave an illustration to the house of one particular case that had been brought to my attention, a boy who had been brought to this country under some such arrangement as this and who had gone down hill and was likely to become a criminal. He was a mere tramp, drifting about, riding on freight cars, and so on. That is positive tragedy, even when confined to one individual, but it is an appalling condition when it applies to hundreds of boys who have been brought over here and allowed to drift about from place to place. A certain number of them will get into trouble; many of them have had to be deported, and it is a very serious condition. When we were discussing the question of deportations a little while ago the minister took the ground that we had to protect ourselves. Looking back over the past ten years I find that there has been no group in this house which has stood out so solidly for protecting our Canadians against immigration as has the group in this corner.

However, when these immigrants are brought in, the least that we can do is to give them a fair chance. I know the minister is faced with the task of clearing up a lot of the mess which was left for him as a result of the policies pursued for many years, but I think we must give a certain amount of humane consideration to this matter.

May I be permitted to give one or two examples which would not come under the provisions of the bill which was under consideration earlier in the evening? The following case in a western municipality came to my attention. A man from central Europe had come to Canada four years ago with his wife and three children, the eldest of which was ten years of age. He bought a home on Montreal street in Regina, and had it paid for. Last summer he was required to put in a couple more rooms, as well as water and a sewer system. This meant debt which because of unemployment he was unable to meet. He could not borrow money on the property, and he was forced to appeal to the city. He received relief to the extent of about fifty or sixty dollars, and then an attempt was made to deport him. Fortunately strong representations were made to the city council and the municipality did not urge deportation. I have no fault to find with the department in connection with this case as they had taken no definite action when I communicated with them.

Mr. MALONEY: Was the eldest child a girl or a boy?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Just at the moment, I do not recall. I do not understand what the hon. member's question has to do with this matter.

Mr. MALONEY: There is so much difference.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have not the telegram before me, but there is nothing in the information I have which refers to that particular point. I contend that it is not fair to the people whom we have asked to come here that we should force them out of the country when they get into a little trouble.

Mr. GORDON: There was no effort made to deport that particular man.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I said distinctly that I was not blaming the department.

An hon. MEMBER: Why bring that up?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We are dealing with the immigration policy of this country, and I suggest that we are reaching the point where we are not being fair with the immigrants who have been brought here.

I have another case, in connection with which I made inquiries of the department. This man was a printer who was arrested as he was about to enter Canada after spending some time in the sanatorium of the International Typographical Union at Colorado Springs. This man, by name James Reid, was ordered to be deported, and died in New York on Friday, May 29, before the deportation order could be made effective. I was told by the department that had this case been appealed, the man probably would have been allowed to die in this country. This man had been living in the city of Toronto where his brother and sister are located; he was sent to a sanitorium and when it was found that he was not doing so well he was sent to the sanatorium at Colorado Springs. When it was obvious that he had not very much longer to live he decided to come back to die at his sister's home, but he was refused entry to Canada. I suggest that in cases of this kind a little humanity should prevail.

Mr. GORDON: Wherein did the Canadian officials fail in that case?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would say that in a case of that kind the man should have been permitted to come back into Canada.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, South Cape Breton): An amendment has been moved by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan), that the amount of the vote be reduced to one dollar.

Amendment (Mr. Heenan) negatived.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, July 13, 1931.

The house met at three o'clock.

INDUSTRIAL AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Second report of the select standing committee on industrial and international relations.—Mr. Turnbull.

RIVIERE DU LOUP STATION

Mr. JEAN-FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I give notice that I place the following questions on the table. The first question is:

Was the proposal to build a new railway station—

Mr. SPEAKER: By what procedure does the hon. member undertake to give such notice? Questions to appear on the order paper do not require notice.

Mr. POULIOT: I make the present motion because I left several questions with Mr. Beauchesne about a week ago which have not been printed on the order paper.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has not adopted the proper practice in connection with this matter.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 113, to amend the criminal code.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Explain.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to give a brief explanation of the proposed bill. For the information of hon. members may I say that the bill consists largely of amendments to clauses which now appear in the criminal code. There are one or two new clauses, however, of which the first and most important is an enactment to punish what might be called nude parades or processions which sometimes take place in some of the western parts of the Dominion of Canada, and which have caused a great deal of trouble in the provinces of Saskatchewan and British Columbia. The present clause dealing with indecent exposure is not strong enough to prevent such parades and requests have come from the authorities in the western provinces asking that a new section be passed. The proposed penalty for taking part in nude parades will be up to three years' imprisonment.

The next section to which I shall refer prohibits the use of living bacilli as rat poison. The use of such bacilli is very dangerous and the Department of Public Health have asked that such use be prohibited.

The question of chicken stealing is one in regard to which the department has had a great many communications from all parts of Canada. I refer more particularly to the wholesale theft of poultry where organized gangs go out and clean out a poultry house in a few minutes. The penalty at present imposed is very slight and magistrates have taken a very lenient view of such thefts. The proposal is to increase the penalties.

The next change relates to the publication of false advertisements. Retail merchants' associations and better business associations have asked for the change, and there is a special clause protecting newspapers which in good faith publish such advertisements.

The next section provides for the adoption of Bill No. 34 on the order paper concerning the use of counterfeit seals, and applies chiefly to the liquor trade. This provision has been asked for by all the provincial governments with the exception of one, and by the liquor control boards of the various provinces. The section following concerns the same matter and is asked for by the Ontario Liquor Control Board whose seals in a great many instances have been forged.

The next section relates to the selling of goods falsely marked, and is placed in the act at the request of retail merchant associations throughout Canada.

Section 10 merely provides for the repeal of the section now in the criminal code in regard to the soliciting and carrying on of the insurance business. The section now in the code has been pronounced ultra vires by the judicial committee of the privy council and the present change merely provides for the removal of that section.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Section 11 deals with false fire alarms. In some of the larger cities of Canada the practice of sending in false alarms has become prevalent. It is proposed to provide penalties for those sending in such alarms.

There is an amendment to the section in regard to injuries to animals.

The next amendment concerns appeals to the supreme court from the courts of appeal in the various provinces where there has been a difference of opinion in the appellate courts of those provinces.

Section 15 adopts Bill No. 46 now appearing on the order paper concerning bail in cases under appeal.

I think there is another slight amendment to section 1025 which I seem to have omitted from the draft bill but which I shall ask the committee to insert when the bill reaches the committee stage.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*SITTING OF PRIVY COUNCIL

Mr. POULIOT:

Was there a sitting of the privy council on the date of October 4, 1930?

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I ask your direction as to whether or not this is a proper question. Certainly such information has never been given before. Looking at some of the decisions, it seems to be abundantly clear that this is not the proper kind of question to ask, but I am entirely in the hands of the house.

Mr. POULIOT: It is very inoffensive.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question will stand in the meantime.

*ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR—CONSUMPTION AND PRODUCTION IN QUEBEC AND ONTARIO

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

1. What is the total consumption of alcoholic liquor by quantity and value in the province of Quebec?
2. What is the total consumption of alcoholic liquor by quantity and value in the province of Ontario?
3. What is the total production of alcoholic liquor in the province of Quebec?
4. What is the total production of alcoholic liquor in the province of Ontario?

Mr. BENNETT: I think it might be difficult to answer this question in its entirety. I apprehend the hon. gentleman means the consumption as shown by the excise returns. Outside of that it would be impossible to say whether or not there might be alcoholic liquor consumed, because there are provisions for what is called "home brew," over which little control can be exercised.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is that to be the answer?

*MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION EMPLOYEES

Mr. SULLIVAN:

1. How many men were employed by the Montreal harbour commissioners previous to July 28, 1930?
2. How many men are now employed, and where do they live?
3. How many men have been dismissed from the Montreal harbour commission since July 28, 1930: (a) and what were their names and addresses; (b) why were they dismissed?
4. Were any permanent employees appointed by the Department of Public Works in the district of Montreal from 1926 to 1931, if so, how many were at the time of appointment over 35 years of age and not returned soldiers?
5. Have any employees, not residents of the district of Montreal, been appointed to permanent positions at Montreal under the control of the federal government in the following departments: (a) National Revenue; (b) Public Works; (c) Post Office?
6. Are there any positions in the federal government service in the different federal departments at Montreal not under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. CAHAN: As to this question No. 19, Mr. Speaker, it cannot be answered until the time is fixed with respect to the fifth paragraph, which in its present form applies to all appointments since Confederation.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

CANADIAN PORTS—TONNAGE AND CHARGES

Mr. PLUNKETT:

1. What is the tonnage entering and clearing from the following ports in Canada for the last completed fiscal year: Sidney, Nova Scotia; Halifax, Nova Scotia; Saint John, New Brunswick; Quebec, Quebec; Montreal, Quebec; Prince Rupert, British Columbia; Victoria, British Columbia; Vancouver, British Columbia; New Westminster, British Columbia?
2. What are the charges or assessments made against all vessels entering and clearing from the above ports?
3. How many of the above ports have harbour commissions?
4. How many of the above ports are considered free ports or have only minor charges upon entry and clearance?
5. Of the ports as enumerated in this questionnaire, which one has the least charges and what is the nature of such charges for vessels entering and clearing from such port?
6. What ports as enumerated in this list have compulsory pilotage charges, and what ports have not such charges?

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

TRANSHIPMENT OF CARGO FROM FRENCH OR SPANISH TRAWLER

Mr. RALSTON:

1. Is it a fact that permission was given to a French or Spanish trawler, within the past month to come into Halifax to tranship cargo?

The position was at once advertised for local competition, and Miss Vanderburg who was the only applicant, failed to pass the examination.

As it was felt that further advertisement might produce a better qualified applicant, the position was again advertised, and in the meantime Miss Vanderburg's temporary certificate was extended for another two months.

The second examination was held on February 7th, 1931, at which Miss Vanderberg and one other young lady were the only competitors. Both failed to pass the examination. In view of the great difficulty experienced in the past in securing qualified stenographers grade 2 at Indian Head, the department was asked to state whether Miss Vanderburg's services had been satisfactory, and as a favourable report was made, it was considered advisable to retain her services in a temporary capacity until another opportunity might be given her to qualify.

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): This matter is in the hands of the pension appeal court. I understand the question has been argued before them, but they have not yet brought down their decision.

WAYS AND MEANS

PASQUA INDIAN RESERVATION

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Minister of Finance) moved that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of ways and means.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Before this motion carries I should like to take a few moments to direct the attention of the house, and particularly of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy), to a grievance of rather long standing. I have taken up this matter with the Department of Indian Affairs and have been unable to get any satisfactory statement from them; hence the only course open to me is to bring the matter to the attention of the house. Being our wards, the Indians are without other recourse than an appeal to parliament. I for one have been always of the opinion that the government of Canada has sought to deal fairly with the Indians, and I should like to think that this position is maintained even in matters that may be considered by us of minor importance. It may be because I have been in the west for nearly fifty years that the Indians wrote me with regard to this matter. The unsatisfactory replies of the department led me to inquire more particularly into this case. With reference to a certain lease to the Antapa club covering a portion of the Pasqua Indian reservation, I asked the department:

Will said lease permit the members of the Antapa club to take liquor on to the Indian reservation?

The answer I received, on May 4, was "No." A letter from the department under date of April 23 went further and said:

[Mr. Neill.]

The lease to the Antapa shooting club does not permit the members to bring liquor into that portion of the reserve under lease, in fact the lease contains a provision directly to the contrary.

Yet clause 6 of the lease reads:

It is further agreed that the lessee shall not nor will sell or permit or suffer to be sold on the said premises any spirituous liquors, ale, beer, or any intoxicating liquors whatever, except . . . .

Let me repeat that word:

. . . . except to members of the said club.

That is, the liquor is permitted to be taken to the premises of the club, which is contrary to the Indian Act and also, I believe, a breach of the Saskatchewan liquor act. That, I would say, is the first misrepresentation of the department. Then the department replied to a question of mine:

The letter which you have received and which purports—

Purports:

—to be signed by the chief of the Pasqua band is almost identical with one or two communications addressed to the department by Mr. Galwey-Foley.

This statement is made notwithstanding the repeated protests of the Indians; in fact, I am informed that a delegation of Indians actually came down here, so evidently an effort is being made by the department to side-step any inquiry. According to the department the whole difficulty is attributable to the interference of a troublesome white man. The letter proceeds:

This lease to the Antapa shooting club has given the department a great deal of trouble, which I am convinced has in the main been caused by the interference of persons resident in that district but not members of the band. In this connection I would mention particularly a gentleman by the name of P. N. B. Galwey-Foley, a white man, who I understand now lives at what is known as Leader's Point adjoining the Pasqua reserve.

I have yet to learn that it is a crime to be a white man, or to protest against injustices on the part of official white men towards the Indians. I do not know anything personally about this Mr. Galwey-Foley except that according to the correspondence brought down I note that he is an ex-imperial officer. Further, to use his own words:

With regard to my integrity, I have the honour to suggest the name of Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor of Montreal.

Yet the department apparently takes the view that he is just poor white trash who can be disregarded.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the date of that lease?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I shall come to that in a few moments. Mr. Galwey-Foley wrote to the Hon. Charles Stewart under date January 4, 1930, as follows:

It is possible that you are unaware that prior to negotiations being opened for the lease in question it was customary for Commissioner Graham to furnish permits to his friends to shoot on the Pasqua reservation irrespective of the wishes of the Indians notwithstanding the fact that the number of persons supplied with these permits in many instances prohibited the Indians from availing themselves of shooting ducks on their reservation for their own immediate needs and I might further state that in the great majority of such cases the Indians received no compensation from those taking advantage of such permits. This state of affairs was in vogue for a number of years prior to application for a lease of the Antapa point being applied for and in my humble opinion constituted a very justifiable grievance from which however the Indians were unable to obtain any redress from the commissioner, notwithstanding their frequent protests; this phase of the situation continued up until the close of the shooting season just passed.

Now, some years ago there was an application from a Mr. McDonald for a lease and it was refused on the ground that it was for a millionaire of New York. Commissioner Graham, in a letter to the department dated August 27, 1926, stated that he had received an application from Mr. McDonald for a lease, and attached to this letter was a copy of one which Commissioner Graham had received from Indian Agent Dodd, intimating that Mr. McDonald wished to obtain the lease for a prominent millionaire of New York, a Mr. Bernard M. Baruch. A similar statement was made to the present Prime Minister by the former Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton) on May 20, 1929. I quote:

The present disagreement was brought about a year and a half ago by Mr. D. H. McDonald of Fort Qu'Appelle who without the knowledge or consent of the department held a meeting of the Indians and secured their consent to a lease of this point for, as we were subsequently informed, certain wealthy Americans including Mr. Bernard Baruch of New York.

It was considered by the department that reputable and responsible citizens of this country should receive first consideration.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Canada first.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes; reputable and responsible citizens of this country should receive first consideration. But I am sure my hon. friend does not want us to be deluded by the Canada first cry into doing a substantial injustice. Mr. McDonald is now deceased; but in the return I find this statement from him to the acting deputy superintendent general, Vancouver, September 9, 1927:

The statements that I am acting for United States citizens are untrue and evidently made to prejudice my lease. If necessary the department can confine shooting privileges in my lease to British subjects. I challenge the statements referred to in your letter. . .

I am a bona fide citizen and lifelong resident in province, and have complied with requirements of Indian Act in connection with lease.

The above telegram was confirmed and amplified in a subsequent letter, and I have no doubt that this gentleman was telling the truth. He definitely denies that he was acting for anyone in the United States, and he declares that if there is any doubt about it he is willing to have the shooting privileges given to bona fide citizens. The lease to him was rejected on this flimsy ground, and I should not mind it so much were it not that this misrepresentation is continually repeated. When I tried to get the letters from the department there was apparently a desire to withhold some of them from the return.

The department next invokes property rights and in a statement to me says:

For a number of years this club has owned and occupied a property on Dominion lands directly across from Antapa point, which is Indian land. Before the issue of this lease the members of this club, during a few days in each season enjoyed shooting privileges on this point and for these privileges were always fairly generous in their treatment of the individual Indians. As a matter of fact Antapa point is so located that had the shooting rights thereon been granted to other parties, the value of the club property for this purpose would have been completely destroyed, as the flight of the ducks from the marsh to the lake is directly over the point.

But let me point out that the property rights, so-called, were acquired after the negotiations. The final negotiations for the property referred to were completed only in the year 1927, when the five acres of land mentioned were purchased for the club from a local farmer. This was during the period when the late Mr. D. H. McDonald's application was under consideration. With regard to Mr. Graham's part in this matter, I wrote to the department:

It would seem to me that Mr. Graham could not in propriety occupy the dual position of being a member of the Antapa club and also the official responsible for the protection of the rights of the wards of the government.

To this the department made no reply.

It was then that I asked for that correspondence, and this gives still further ground for dissatisfaction. According to it it seems to me that Commissioner Graham cuts a sorry figure. I have read Mr. Galwey-Foley's charge of favouritism. Mr. Graham's letter to Mr. Scott, of January 14, 1928, with regard to one of his officials, says:

I may say I find fault with the agent for not first taking the matter up with the department either through this office or direct.

Apparently he is willing to let down one of his officials. Then Commissioner Graham, in a communication dated October 29, 1929, defending himself, states:

The two permits which I did issue were to friends from Winnipeg who were out shooting. . . . I would ask the department to let this matter rest in my hands, and to notify the chief, through the agent, that they understand the situation and that the matter should be left in the hands of the agent and myself, to do as we think best. If they are given to understand definitely that it is in the hands of the department, it might make them a little more satisfied.

Here is the commissioner, himself interested in getting the permit, asking the department to leave the whole matter in his hands, and saying that if it is left in his hands the Indians, in his opinion, will be more satisfied. This is a rather interesting attitude for a public official.

Next comes a memorandum from Mr. J. C. Caldwell, director of the lands and timber branch of the Department of Indian Affairs to the deputy superintendent general, with an annotation, "I agree." This annotation, I presume, is from the deputy minister—the initials are D.C.S. The letter states:

I am compelled to state that I do not think the situation is clearly set forth in Mr. Graham's letter. There is no doubt whatever but that someone gave permission or permits to a considerable number of outsiders to shoot on Leader's point and this the Indians of the reserve very keenly resent. . . . As Antapa point is now under lease to the Antapa Shooting Club of Regina, Leader's point is the only remaining shooting ground for the Indians and I do not think that any shooting privileges should be granted there other than that approved by the Indians themselves and given to Sir Frederick Haultain. I would suggest that Commissioner Graham be informed that such is the decision of the department and unless he is in a position to submit some very strong argument in opposition to also tell him that we propose informing Chief Pasqua to this effect.

Here we have the deputy minister taking the commissioner to task because of misrepresentations he has made to the department. Mr. Graham appears to be obedient but he is somewhat sulky. He writes to Mr. Scott, on November 16, 1929, as follows:

I shall see that your instructions are carried out to the letter, although I feel that we are now paving the way for a great deal of trouble for the agent and myself. I am disappointed that my way of handling the situation has not met with your approval. I note it is your intention to write direct to the chief, and I would point out that whatever letter you do write to the Indians will be passed round to the outside public, including the gentlemen I have referred to, and I would ask the department not to place me in an embarrassing position with the Indians by making it appear that I was in the wrong, as I still think I was handling the situation in the best interest of the Indians.

Here is an official who says that it must not be made to appear to the Indians that he is in the wrong. This man is himself a member of the club which receives the benefits which are in dispute.

Now we come to the lease itself. I will not take up the time of the house by reading in full the charges made by the chief. He states that the lease was granted not only without their consent but practically against their wishes and in contravention of the treaty act. This lease was granted to a syndicate known the the Antapa Shooting Club of Regina Limited, of which club Indian Commissioner W. M. Graham is a member. The chief complains that methods bordering on coercion were adopted for the purpose of endeavouring to force his tribe to surrender what they regard as their rights as contained in section 51 of the Indian Treaty Act. The chief states:

—and we have not to date received any compensation for loss of rental amounting to $1,150 which we were deprived of owing to the department refusing to sanction the lease which was far more advantageous to us and had been unanimously approved by my people.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the hon. gentleman refer to the terms of the lease itself?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I will come to that in a moment. The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) had some knowledge of this matter, as has the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart), who was formerly the minister in charge of this department.

An hon. MEMBER: Make it snappy.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am hurrying as quickly as I can. The history of the lease is briefly as follows:

In 1924 the Antapa club of Regina offered the Indians $150 per year for certain privileges. A lease was made out in 1925, which lease was returned. The reason is given. Under date of January 19, 1925, Mr. D. C. Scott wrote to Mr. W. M. Graham, as follows:

The agreement which accompanied this communication is returned herewith as it is of no use. It is not a properly executed agreement, neither is it a surrender from the band. If the enclosed surrender is approved by the Pasqua band upon return of the documents completed and attested, the question of lease will then receive consideration.

At that time the Antapa club had no rights which were recognized; it had simply made an application and had offered a form of lease which was not in fact a lease. In 1926 Mr. McDonald made an application for a lease and offered $550 per year payable in advance. This is shown in the letter of the hon. member for West Edmonton to the present Prime Minister dated May 20, 1929. This letter gave a history of the case and stated that Indian Agent Geo. S. Dodd had been present at the meeting of the Indians, who were unanimously in favour of the lease to Mr. McDonald on the terms offered. Mr. Dodd explained at that time that the lease would be subject to the approval of the department. So far everything seemed to be in order. But other influences were at work. The following is a memorandum of Mr. D. C. Scott, dated September 29, 1926:

The Antapa Shooting Club in their application suggested an annual rental of $150 for the privileges involved, which sum in itself would appear sufficient but as the Indians have now signed an agreement and have been promised an annual rental of $550, the matter is, as you will see, very much complicated.

I should think it would be rather complicated. This club had as a member the Indian commissioner. An offer had been made by another party to pay a rental of $550 per year in advance, and that offer had to be side-tracked. It was stated that the offer was made by a New York millionaire, but we have the statement of Mr. McDonald, a former member of the provincial house, now deceased, to the effect that he was not asking for any but Canadian citizens. The following is a letter dated November 23, 1926, from Mr. D. C. Scott to Mr. E. B. Jonah, who was acting for the Antapa club:

It will be necessary for your club to obtain the consent of a majority of the voting members of the Pasqua band before the department could give favourable consideration to your application. A copy of the agreement which Mr. McDonald made with the Pasqua band is enclosed herewith, and I may add that it bears the signatures of a majority of the voting members of the band. It appears that the Pasqua band is opposed to granting any formal release or surrender of this portion of the reserve for the purpose indicated, but if you succeed in obtaining the signatures of a majority of the voting members to a similar agreement, the department is prepared to agree to the terms and conditions set forth in your letter, but of course these terms and conditions must be approved by the band before any further action can be taken.

That was the attitude of Mr. Scott in 1926, an attitude perfectly correct and I believe in harmony with the Indian Act. The signatures for the consent of the band have never been obtained and yet a lease has been granted under date of January 14, 1928. The hon. member for West Edmonton wrote to the present Prime Minister under date of May 20, 1929, as follows:

It is the practice of the department whenever possible and within reason to act in accordance with the wishes of the members of the band, but in this case it was felt that in the general interest an exception should be made.

The hon. member practically states that it is the practice of the department to act in accordance with the law when it suits the department. The minister was there to carry out the terms of the Indian Act, but he puts it aside on the ground that this exception is in the general interest. How is it in the general interest? It was in the interest of Mr. Graham and other members of the Antapa club, but it was not in the interest of Mr. McDonald who stated that he was willing that the lease should be made out in such a form as to permit only British subjects to shoot in that territory. Cancellation was refused and Mr. D. C. Scott wrote to Chief Ben Pasqua, under date of February 16, 1931, as follows:

It has been decided that this lease is of decided advantage to your band and sufficient reason has not at any time been advanced which, in our estimation, would justify cancellation.

Apparently the department has reviewed the situation and has refused to cancel the lease which contains clauses opposed to the Indian Act, especially with reference to the importation of liquor into the reserve. This lease was granted after refusal of the application of another Canadian who had offered more advantageous terms. This action was taken after the department had definitely set aside the act under which it is stipulated that the consent of the majority of the Indians must be obtained before a lease can be granted.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to indicate the term of the lease? I recall looking into the matter, and I thought the provision with respect to the term of the lease, as compared with the usual lease, was very much in favour of the Indians. Would he look at it?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have the lease under my hand. I am not suggesting that on its face it is not a favourable lease.

Mr. BENNETT: As to the length of time.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The length of time is longer than might be expected and they get this money regularly. I would point out however that the club had to pay $550 instead of $150 because of the other offer that was made the Indians by Mr. McDonald.

Mr. BENNETT: I am relying only on memory, but am I not right in saying that instead of its being a lease of the land within the Indian Act, it is merely a lease of the right to shoot? I remember when I investigated the matter I became impressed with that fact.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I know the Prime Minister, when in opposition, made some inquiries, and I think, if I may say so, he was somewhat misled by the department, as I was misled by the letters which I received. It was not until I looked into the correspondence that I felt that the department had not been playing fair. That is my only reason for having taken the matter up in the house As a layman I am not prepared to say just when a lease is not a lease, but I would point out to the Prime Minister that the lease itself is in this form:

> By these presents doth demise and lease unto the said party of the second part. . . . and the lessee has hereunto affixed its seal.

And so on.

Mr. BENNETT: What did they lease—the land or the right to shoot?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The right to shoot.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I thought.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This is the point: In the earlier negotiations the department had clearly recognized the necessity of obtaining the consent of the band. The document is constantly spoken of as a lease and in the earlier correspondence it is shown that the department insisted that the consent of the majority of the members of the band should be obtained. May I say further in reply to the Prime Minister: although I am not a lawyer, I believe a recent decision in the courts of Saskatchewan would seem to indicate that I am correct in suggesting that this kind of document is a real lease as contemplated by the Indian Act.

I would charge this: that there has been a series of misrepresentations by the department; that Commissioner Graham, a member of the Antapa club, through misrepresentation, managed to secure the refusal of the lease to one party, and to secure the lease for the club of which he was a member. I think that is a matter which requires departmental action. I know this cannot be settled to-day, but I have taken this occasion to lay it before the house, and I think the minister would be well advised to consider the statement that his own commissioner, a public official, who is a member of the club, has managed to secure these privileges through misrepresentation of the general situation.

I have already pointed out that the clause with regard to liquor violates the terms of the Indian Act, a copy of which I have under my hand and which I can read if necessary. The lease is illegal as being granted without the consent of the band and undoubtedly the whole transaction constitutes a grievance which the Indians feel deeply.

That after all is the most important consideration that I could bring before the house, namely, that the whole manner of handling the situation constitutes in the minds of the Indians a very serious grievance. I know some members may say: They are only a few Indians; who cares? It may further be pointed out that some of the members of the club are quite respectable citizens of the city of Regina, I am given to understand that some of them do not know just the representations that were made in order that the lease could be secured; indeed I can hardly understand that any respectable citizen would want to take advantage of people who are, after all, wards of the government. I ask for a thorough inquiry on the part of the department, and since the present minister has had nothing whatever to do with the past, I would urge that he consider the question of the cancellation of the lease which, I believe, has not been obtained by a method that would justify itself to the members of the house and to the country at large.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): As my name appears very prominently in the observations made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) with regard to this lease, although I can speak only from memory and one does not want to depend too greatly upon one's memory respecting a multitude of actions of this kind—

Mr. BENNETT: I hope not of this kind.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If my hon. friend will read the Indian Act he will find that the department and the minister have full authority to deal with matters that are in dispute so far as the Indians are concerned. It is quite true the department invariably tries to secure the consent of the Indians, but that is not always possible, more particularly, may I say, when people get into a dispute in regard to certain privileges that are being granted upon these reserves. That was the case in the instance mentioned by my hon. friend. It ran over a period of some two or three years. The application was on behalf of a group of New Yorkers who desired to secure this privilege as against a group of gentlemen in Regina, some of them on the bench, and all, so far as I know, gentlemen of good repute. When the department was finally called upon to make a decision, it gave the lease at the same rental to the Canadian citizens living in Regina.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does the hon. member mean to sweep aside this declaration by Mr. McDonald?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mr. McDonald, when he found he could not secure a lease for the New Yorkers, later made an application for himself. I did not pay much attention to that. His first application, as is very clear from the evidence the hon. member has himself given to the house, was on behalf of a group of New Yorkers. Subsequently when he found that was to be refused, he made application for himself, but in the meantime, the Regina club was quite willing to accept a lease and pay the rental that was asked. I am not going to say that I would change my opinion one iota with respect to the granting of this lease. If my hon. friend will study the Indian Act, he will find full authority for every action taken by the department. As regards taking liquor on the reserve, the law is very clear and all that has to be done is to institute prosecution. It is an infraction of the law.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is permitted by the lease.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is not permitted by the lease. That is all I have to say in connection with the matter.

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior): I should like to ask the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) one question. If I understood him correctly, he based his remarks just made on a complaint made to him by the Indians themselves. Is that correct?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have based my complaint on the most unsatisfactory and contradictory answers which I have received from the minister's own departmental officials.

Mr. MURPHY: But in the first instance the complaint was made to my hon. friend by the Indians? That was the reason he interested himself in the matter?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes.

Mr. MURPHY: Following that, the complaint is that the terms of the lease are not advantageous to the Indians; that they could make a better disposal of their property?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No. I shall have to ask the minister to read my speech; otherwise I shall have to go over it again.

Mr. MURPHY: During the course of the hon. gentleman's remarks, if I heard him correctly—and I think I did—the complaint was that the department was not looking after the interests of the Indians who are the wards of the government. Therefore I ask him: Is it his complaint that the interests of the Indians are not looked after properly in the terms of this lease?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I made the statement—

Mr. SPEAKER: I must remind hon. members that the house is not in committee. Does the resolution carry?

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee of ways and means, Mr. Senn in the chair.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF RESOLUTIONS

Mr. BENNETT: When the committee rose I think we were at item No. 89. Item No. 76b had been allowed to stand; we had adopted item 76c, and in connection with the items between numbers 71 and 76b there was one in connection with which I would like to learn whether or not it was adopted. The rates under 76c are all free, and I presume there will be no discussion concerning that particular item. I think I am correct when I state that we had reached item 89.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Senn): Is No. 76c carried?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it was, and I added item 76d which was adopted.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, that is correct.

Mr. BENNETT: Very well, we shall proceed with item 89.

Customs tariff—89. Vegetables, prepared, in air-tight cans or other air-tight containers, the weight of the containers to be included in the weight for duty:

(a) beans, baked or otherwise prepared, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 2 cents; general tariff, 3 cents.

(b) corn and tomatoes, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 2 cents; general tariff, 3 cents.

(c) peas, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 2 cents; general tariff, 3 cents.

(d) N.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: If hon. gentleman will look at item No. 89 they will find that because of representations which have been made by the vegetable and other interests these items have been recast.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Senn): Is item 76b passed?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. Item 89 has been recast and hon. members will observe that at present it reads: Beans, baked or otherwise prepared, per pound, free, 2 cents and 3 cents. Corn and tomatoes are on the pound basis; pears are on the per pound basis and the items not otherwise provided are free, 27½ per cent and 30 per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What is the object of mixing the specific and ad valorem rates?

Mr. BENNETT: The ad valorem rate is necessary when dealing with items not otherwise provided.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I understand.

Mr. BENNETT: Personally I prefer specific duties in matters of this kind. The n.o.p. item might cover many commodities which could not otherwise be included. For the information of the committee I shall set out a comparison of the rates, although hon. members have before them this information. The (a) section of item 89 formerly held the rates of free, 1¼ cents and 1½ cents which has been changed to free, 2 cents and 3 cents. The (b) section of item 89 formerly held the rates of free, 1¼ cents and 2 cents, which has been changed to free, 2 cents and 3 cents. The former rates under section (c) of item 89, referring to peas were one cent, 1½ cents and 2 cents, and have been changed to free, 2 cents and 3 cents. In this particular case the British preferential tariff is reduced from one cent to free.

Mr. VENIOT: What quantity of canned peas were imported last year from Great Britain? I am referring to item 89.

Mr. BENNETT: I understand. As a matter of fact the importations from Great Britain have not been separated. The importations under the former item were valued at $373,000, coming chiefly from the United States and Belgium, and very few from Great Britain. The duty in that case has been reduced.

Mr. VENIOT: All right.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—90. Vegetables, prepared or preserved:

(a) dried, desiccated or dehydrated, including vegetable flour, n.o.p: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

(b) pickled or preserved in salt, brine, oil or in any other manner, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 32½ per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

(c) vegetable extracts or juices, liquid mustards, soy and vegetable sauces of all kinds: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 32½ per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

(d) pastes, hash and all similar products composed of vegetables and meat or fish, or both, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 32½ per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: In connection with item 90 there is a slight change, namely, the rewording of subsection (d). I would ask hon. members in the committee to look at that particular subsection. In administration some few difficulties were experienced, and as hon. members will observe the item now stands:

(d) pastes, hash and all similar products composed of vegetables and meat or fish, or both, n.o.p.

Goods of various kinds were classified indifferently and the proposed change is made for the purpose of aiding administration. Other than that there is no material change in the item, with the exception, of course, of the changes in rates.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: I must ask the committee to be good enough to let item 99a stand, because it is considered in the Australian treaty which will be dealt with in the house to-night. I would ask for similar treatment of 99c, if the committee pleases.

Customs tariff—99d. Dates, dried, unpitted in bulk, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, ⅜ cent; general tariff, ⅜ cent. Formerly in item 99a.

Mr. BENNETT: Item 99d is a perpetuation of an existing item with a slight change in connection with bulk dates. There is no change in the rates, and the change in the item is made merely for the simplification of administration.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: We shall now proceed to item 99e.

Customs tariff—99e. Dates, n.o.p., the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty, per pound: British preferential tariff, one cent; intermediate tariff, 1¾ cents; general tariff, 2½ cents.

Mr. BENNETT: Hon. members will observe that there is no change in the item, but it appears merely to simplify administration.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The changes as to reclassification were made in September?

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Is it a fact that the weight of the package has been changed, somewhat?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): And the effect is to raise the duty to a certain degree?

Mr. BENNETT: Very slightly. In this connection we are following the practice of other countries in connection with modern administration. It is difficult to consider the package as distinguished from the commodity so they are both included in weight for duty purposes.

Mr. VENIOT: There will be a slight increase on account of the slight additional rate?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. SPENCER: In regard to package dates, the weight of the package refers only to the cardboard package in which the dates are placed?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—99f. Figs, dried, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, ⅔ cent; general tariff, ⅔ cent. When in packages weighing two pounds each, or less, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty.

Mr. BENNETT: This is a new item to cover figs entered under the previous item 99a. The rate now is free, ⅔ cent and ⅔ cent, and takes care of package figs.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Do we get any appreciable amount from Great Britain or the dominions?

Mr. BENNETT: No, they come more particularly directly from Turkey and Smyrna. They also come from the United States, some of which are the product of that country and some the product of foreign countries.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry I shall have to ask the committee to let item 101 stand. The item would not appear if it were not for the Australian treaty.

Customs tariff—101a. Lemons: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no change in connection with this item, there merely being a separation.

Mr. VENIOT: Item 101 stands?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I see that formerly oranges and lemons were both in the same category, free, free, free; now oranges are free, 35 cents and 35 cents; while lemons remain free, free, fre. What is the reason for the distinction; has it reference to the Australian treaty?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. As I said a moment ago oranges are produced in substantial commercial quantities in South Africa, the British West Indies and Australia. I will go into details when the Australian treaty is under consideration. I hope to file a copy of the treaty to-night, together with the appropriate resolution, so when we get back to this item the committee will be seized of all the facts.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Then the item can be fully discussed?

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. COOTE: The items affected by the Australian treaty will stand until to-morrow?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I am purposing to table a copy of the agreement to-night so it will be in to-morrow's votes and proceedings. That will enable the committee to have some knowledge of it, and if it is not adequate the items can stand over until next day when they will have a clearer understanding of them.

Item 101a agreed to.

Customs tariff—105d. Jellies, jams, marmalades, preserves, fruit butters and condensed mince meats, per pound: British preferential tariff, 2¾ cents; intermediate tariff, 3¾ cents; general tariff, 5 cents.

Mr. YOUNG: Is the slight increase in the duty on marmalades attributable to the duty on oranges, item 101a?

Mr. BENNETT: We will discuss that when we discuss the item. This item is exactly the same as before except for the deletion of the words "fruit pastes." There is a change from 2¾, 3¾, 3¾ to 2¾, 3¾ and 5 cents.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is that not a pretty stiff rate on the general?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it is.

Mr. COOTE: That will include the weight of the tin container, I suppose?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Is it expected that there will be any increase in price on account of the added duty under the general tariff?

Mr. BENNETT: The only increase, it will be observed, is in the general tariff. No marmalades are imported under the general tariff. The increase really affects jams, with respect to which an undertaking has been given that there will be no increase in price.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does my hon. friend say there is no importation under the general?

Mr. BENNETT: Of marmalades.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But this covers jellies and preserves. I see under these two items we have imported 1,218,000 pounds.

Mr. BENNETT: Under the general tariff the imports amounted to $155,000, and they were chiefly from Great Britain—as a matter of fact 1,200,000 pounds.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: If the committee please, we will not discuss item 106 now because it is affected by the Australian treaty. We might pass on to item 120, which is not affected by the treaty.

Customs tariff—120. Anchovies, sardines, sprats, pilchard and herring (not including kippered herring in sealed containers), packed in oil or otherwise, in sealed tin containers, the weight of the tin container to be included in the weight for duty:

(a) when weighing over twenty ounces and not over thirty-six ounces each, per box: British preferential tariff, 3½ cents; intermediate tariff, 5 cents; general tariff, 6 cents:

(b) when weighing over twelve ounces and not over twenty ounces each, per box: British preferential tariff, 2½ cents; intermediate tariff, 4 cents; general tariff, 4½ cents:

(c) when weighing over eight ounces and not over twelve ounces each, per box: British preferential tariff, 2 cents; intermediate tariff, 3 cents; general tariff, 3½ cents.

(d) when weighing eight ounces each or less, per box: British preferential tariff, 1¼ cents; intermediate tariff, 2 cents; general tariff, 2½ cents.

Mr. VENIOT: Formerly kippered herring was included, and all fish preserved in oil was under a specific duty. Under this item kippered herring is excluded and is subject to an ad valorem duty under item 121.

Mr. NEILL: Item 123.

Mr. VENIOT: Under that item kippered herring would carry a duty of 20, 30 and 35 per cent. What are the importations under the intermediate tariff? I take it that kippered herring would be subject to the intermediate tariff under the favoured nations clause?

Mr. BENNETT: I take it my hon. friend has reference to paragraph (d) "when weighing eight ounces or less per box."

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: Under paragraph (d) we imported $453,000 worth, of which $393,000 came from Norway, $25,000 from France, $8,000 from the United States and $7,000 from the United Kingdom.

Mr. VENIOT: The $393,000 worth from Norway would come under the 30 per cent?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. VENIOT: What is the wholesale price in Canada of kippered herrings in boxes weighing under eight ounces?

Mr. BENNETT: As I understand it, the laid down price, including freight c.i.f. Montreal is 3½. This item has engaged the attention of the department for a good deal of time. Last fall a change was made in the rate that had theretofore existed. This practically restores the rate in force prior to September. There is a treaty outstanding with Norway, and representations were made by the consul general of that kingdom with respect to the matter, and we also received representations with respect to the industry in Great Britain. In view of the facilities for export provided for by our packers, one in particular, that sells the product in thirty countries, it was felt, having regard to the representations made last fall, which on investigation were found to be strictly accurate, that this item should be restored to its former position.

Mr. VENIOT: This item previous to September last was under a specific duty and all products of this kind coming in from any country whatever under paragraph (d) had to pay a specific duty of 2½ cents for an eight ounce box or under. Now, what are the facts? When this protection was given the kippered herring industry a few years ago the Norwegians could not compete with our Canadian products unless they reduced the size of their container. I do not mean competing in the matter of duty, but in the matter of trade and commerce. They could not sell their goods in Canada in competition with our own kippered herrings on a four-ounce basis, because if they put up a four-ounce can they had to pay the specific duty on eight ounces, since the item covered containers of eight ounces or less.

When they saw that our product could be put in four or five ounce tins and sold at retail for five cents—the poor man's cheap food—the Norwegian government undertook to see if they could not have a change made. An appeal was made to the government under the favoured nation treaty, with the result that it was changed from a specific to an ad valorem duty. It may be argued that the duty is higher on the ad valorem basis and that therefore the protection should be greater, but such is not the case. An ad valorem duty of 30 per cent on the goods heretofore imported into Canada from Norway would not be so great as the specific duty, having regard to the way the goods are put up. Therefore when it is put on an ad valorem basis on a four ounce can, you are lessening the protection to our own industry. On a can selling at 3½ cents wholesale the protection on an ad valorem basis will be less than one cent, whereas under the specific duty, on the class of goods Norway is putting up to compete with our Canadian kippered herring, the duty is over two cents. Therefore we are lessening the protection afforded our own industry and opening the door to keen competition from a foreign country.

This is not carrying out the policy laid down by the present government. While I am not a believer in high protection, I am a believer in protection to a certain extent, and since the government has adopted the policy of protecting our own industries I am asking that they stand by that policy. Why should they so arrange the duty on kippered herring that it is the only kind of fish which does not bear a specific duty? Why should they place it on an ad valorem basis in order to permit Norway to compete with our own industry? When kippered herring was put on a specific basis some two or three years ago those interested in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick made very large expenditures in order to prepare themselves to compete in the world market. One firm alone spent over $60,000 for that purpose; they are putting up their kippered herring in an elongated can, for the right to use which they had to pay over $10,000 to an American concern. They have gone into this business in good faith, but this change to an ad valorem basis will permit the Norwegian product to come into keen competition with these firms in Canada and will place them in a position where they will not be able to carry on in the same way.

I have already placed this matter before the Prime Minister, though not in detail. He was kind enough to give me a few moments of his time; I knew he was a very busy man and we did not discuss the matter at any length. Now I would ask him, before finally passing that item, to go into it once more. He may reply that he has already gone into it, but he has not looked at it in the way I have presented it to-day. It may be said that these people are complaining before they are hurt, but let me say that we know our business as far as fish is concerned. In the maritimes, and especially in New Brunswick, we take second place to no one in ascertaining how a duty of this kind will affect our business, and I am prepared to state that a thorough investigation into this question will prove my contention. I am quite ready to leave the investigation in the hands of officials of the Department of Fisheries instead of the Department of National Revenue; I am sure those officials will report that we are correct in the stand we are taking in this matter.

Let me go further; there should be no change in duty, under a protective policy, that will permit an outside nation to offer keener competition than has been the case in the past. If you are to give a fair show to our people, in competition with the other nations of the world, why should you allow an outside country to compete under a system which is adverse to those of our own people who produce similar goods. It is said that we have entered into world competition in connection with kippered herring, but it is not exactly world wide competition in the kippered herring branch of the fish industry. We have captured the principal markets of the world, as against Norway, in the sardine business; we have secured the entire Australian market, and we export sardines to some eighty-six other countries. Only within the last three years have we gone fully into the kippered herring business, and now the act of the government in changing the duty to an ad valorem basis will cripple that branch of the fishing industry in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman knows that this matter was carefully considered by the Advisory Board on Tariff and Taxation. Much evidence was given before that board, the chief witness on behalf of the industry in question being Mr. McLean, who admitted that in some instances the protection was in excess of 100 per cent. Last year, as the hon. gentleman will remember, the rate was 17½ per cent, 27½ per cent and 30 per cent, but the department ruled that this class of sardines should come under item 120 and carry a specific duty, to which reference was made, and it carried the rate that was embodied in the tariff of last September.

When that rate was published the Norwegian consul general indicated that his country would appeal from that decision as to classification. Norway has a treaty with this country somewhat older than the country itself, I believe, and they enjoy favoured nation treatment. The matter proceeded, and I personally explained to him that in view of the fact that the department had acted upon that assumption—whether it was legal or otherwise I was not in a position to declare—we would validate the rate and make inquiries before the next session of the house. He was content with that, or perhaps I should say he was very courteous about it and said he would take no further steps until the following year.

Mr. VENIOT: I said I would lay my views before the house.

Mr. BENNETT: I am referring to the consul general for Norway, who protested against the ruling of the department. He came to Ottawa and presented his case again, and an investigation indicated that as the item now stands it carries a rate of approximately 90 per cent.

Mr. VENIOT: But it does not apply.

Mr. BENNETT: It carries that rate—the ad valorem rate which existed before September last, except by ruling of the department, in connection with the obtaining of which perhaps the hon. gentleman is fully informed. The rate now is something over 90 per cent, in addition to which there is incidental protection in connection with the various matters that go into the production of the commodity in question. My memory is that Mr. McLean in giving his evidence before the tariff board—I speak subject to correction—stated that they carried on their export business in ninety countries in competition with this very product. Obviously we endeavoured to adjust this rate so as not to imperil the trade which by contract we had with Norway, while at the same time according a protection that amounts, as a matter of fact, to something over 90 per cent, which was the rate that existed before September last, until such time as the new ruling was made by the department, against which the Norwegian government protested and which we validated in order that no question of that kind might arise. We assured the government of Norway that we would consider the matter in the meantime, and as a result of that consideration it is felt that the original proposal, which carried a rate of over 90 per cent, is not unreasonable in view of the evidence given by Mr. McLean himself before the tariff board.

Mr. VENIOT: The statement that it carries a rate of over 90 per cent is true with regard to fish exported or imported in bulk. But it is not true when you apply it to the can. The 3½ cent can at the rate of 30 per cent gives you less than 1 cent duty, whereas under the specific rate it gives you 2¼ cents. That is the difference. Applied in bulk, it is 90 per cent; but applied to the cans, as the Norwegians are selling them to this country on the four ounce basis, at 3½ cents per can, where do you get 90 per cent? You do not get anything like 10 per cent. And there is where it affects us. Norway intimated that they wished to appeal from the decision to have the duty as it was before. Is the Prime Minister aware that to-day in England we cannot enter one can of sardines marked "Sardines" because of an old treaty between France and England?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: That is because they are not sardines.

Mr. VENIOT: Ours are sardines. The name sardine is derived from the fact that these smaller fish were caught near the island of Sardinia. That is how sardines got their name. But the question now being considered by experts is this: Is a sardine a herring or is a herring a sardine? That question has not yet been settled. The great bulk of the business we are doing throughout the world is being carried on under the name of sardine. The kippered herring is in a different class altogether from what are known as sardines. Kippered herrings are not known on the market as sardines; they are altogether different. What was commonly known as the smoked herring was a business largely carried on years ago in the maritime provinces, but owing to improved methods, specializing in the kippered herring, many Nova Scotian and New Brunswick producers went out of business. Under the new system, however, they are trying to come back into the business. They are adopting a new method of producing kippered herring, and it is an injustice to the business of New Brunswick that any change should be made so as to give an undue advantage to Norway in competition with our own people, notwithstanding the favoured nations treaty. England has never attempted to change that treaty between France and themselves to help us. Why should we change our system of protection to our own people in order to favour Norway, especially when there is nothing in the favoured nations clause that gives them the right to come here and appeal against our decision? They may protest; but where have they the right to appeal against a decision of that kind? They may enter a protest, have conversations and carry on negotiations with Canada in regard to the duty. But I insist that they have no right to enter an appeal. No country has the right to appeal against any decision of the House of Commons in regard to its tariff policy.

What should we look like if we went to the United States and appealed against any decision of theirs? To-day we have a favoured nation treaty with Norway. If they imposed certain high duties against us, could we go there and appeal? We might discuss the matter with them, but that is all we could do. If they can show us reasons why we should not follow a certain course in this matter, then we can consider their representations. But, I repeat, Norway has no right under the treaty to appeal from any decision we may make in regard to our tariff.

Mr. NEILL: With regard to kippered herring in sealed containers, not touching the question of sardines, under what item does the minister expect this article to come after he has struck it out of 120?

Mr. BENNETT: It will come under 123.

Mr. NEILL: That is what I was thinking. The hon. member for Gloucester suggested 121, but that is fish preserved in oils. I agree with the minister. With regard to the attitude of the Norwegian government, I understand that they protested under their treaty. Have they a treaty which gives them more favourable terms than the British preferential tariff? Even if they demanded the British preferential tariff they would still be subject to 120.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps I should amplify this matter. My hon. friend from Gloucester said, with perfect clearness, that it was contended that a kippered herring was not a sardine, nor was a sardine a kippered herring. That was exactly the attitude of the Norwegian government. Their contention was that a kippered herring could not carry the rate charged against sardines, in which class it was prior to September. That is the whole question, and the very argument which the hon. member for Gloucester has now made is the argument that was made by representatives of the Norwegian government—that you could not classify these two under the same general designation. The board of customs arrived at a conclusion. The rates theretofore were 17½ per cent, 27½ per cent and 30 per cent; and the producers in this country having prosecuted their claim with vigour, the department accepted their view and put a specific duty on kippered herring, classified within the sardine category. Against that the government of Norway protested. As I have said, we validated it last fall for the sake of regularity of administration, assuring them at the time that they would have ample opportunity to discuss the matter at length, which they did. The representations which my hon. friend has made to me personally have been made by the industry itself as well as in the evidence given before the tariff board, which I fancy has been read by most hon. gentlemen. Representations were also made by Scotch fishermen. As the matter stands, we believe this will afford reasonable protection to the industry in Canada. I need hardly assure the committee that I would be the last man in the world to do anything which would adversely affect an industry in Canada, much less one in New Brunswick. I would point out to my hon. friend that he is in error in assuming for a single moment that the government of Norway undertook to indicate to us that our parliament meant to do what it did last fall.

Mr. VENIOT: What about the basis of appeal?

Mr. BENNETT: Under the statute they had the right of appeal to the governor in council after the matter had been considered by the customs board. The hon. gentleman is thoroughly familiar with the circumstances and he must realize that it is in the interests of administration that it should not be arbitrarily declared that kippered herring comes within the sardine item. It could not be administered in that way without some statutory authority. When the statutory authority was granted it was indicated that the representations made would be studied. Evidence was given before the advisory board and as a result it is believed that ample security will be afforded to our own industry while at the same time there will be removed the grievances which the Norwegian government had presented both to our predecessors and to us, and which were threatening the friendly trade relations which existed between the two countries.

Mr. VENIOT: Why not put herring in the same class as kippered herring? A herring is not a sardine, so why leave it under the specific clause? Norway is not competing against us in the herring line.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend knows better than I that the general conclusions of one group of scientists is that all these fish should be classified as herring. He is quite right in saying that the classification of sardines is what caused the difficulty in the exporting of our herring into Great Britain. This difficulty became rather acute and if my memory serves me right, under the old Cobden commercial treaty—

Mr. VENIOT: That was in 1854.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. Under that treaty they were given admission into Great Britain as sardines. It was agreed that practically a monopoly existed with respect to French sardines, and the contention now made is that from a technical standpoint these are not sardines at all, they are only herring. It is needless to say that they sell much more readily by being designated as sardines. The question of kippered herring and sardines became rather acute at one time, and we believe that this classification will indicate quite clearly that like competition shall be met with like rates, that herring shall compete with herring, sardines with sardines and kippered herring with kippered herring. When I was a boy they were called Digby chicken; they were small smoked herring put up in wooden boxes. Then the herring was put up in oil after being smoked, and was called snacks or kippered herring. Only a few days ago I had an opportunity of seeing samples of the Norwegian and Canadian packages. The one is an elongated package, while the other is more rectangular. I cannot help but think that our domestic producers are more worried than the circumstances would warrant. The cost laid down of the Norwegian product is not less than 3½ cents, and I think it sells at five cents, so that there is a reasonable measure of protection.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not wish to delay the committee nor do I want to attempt to draw a herring across the trail.

Mr. BENNETT: A kippered herring.

Mr. VENIOT: From the experience which I have gained in the administration of the customs, in connection with the fisheries of my own province, and my knowledge of the method of doing this work, I am convinced that I am right. I am going to leave it at that because by the next session of this house we will have an opportunity of seeing just what takes place. If I am right I hope that the department will change its attitude.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. member will look at the item he will see that it includes not only sardines and sprats, but pilchard and herring.

Mr. NEILL: I would like to call the attention of the Prime Minister to item 116, upon which last year I was promised some consideration which has not eventuated. I notice that herring, pickled or salted, takes a rate of 50 cents per hundred pounds, while salmon, pickled or salted, takes a rate of one dollar per hundred pounds. I made the suggestion, in connection with which I thought I had the support of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) that this matter should be taken into consideration when tariff revision was under consideration this year. A change in rate would enable the pickled herring industry of the Pacific coast to reach a little further east in competition with the Norwegian product.

Mr. BENNETT: The matter has not been overlooked and will be dealt with when we take up the resolutions in connection with the Australian treaty.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—123a. Crabs or clams in sealed containers: British preferential tariff, 17½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 40 per cent; general tariff, 40 per cent.

Mr. NEILL: As this item has apparently been overlooked in making up the comparative statement, would the minister advise the committee what increase is being made?

Mr. BENNETT: The old rates were 17½ per cent, 27½ per cent and 30 per cent, which have been increased to 17½ per cent, 40 per cent and 40 per cent. After allowing for the 10 per cent of possible imports from other countries, the rates of increase are about the same. Whether or not this increase will be successful will depend upon the efforts of our own people to meet competition from the orient.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—139. Glucose or grape sugar, glucose syrup and corn syrup, or any syrups containing an admixture thereof, n.o.p., per pound: British preferential tariff, ¾ cent; intermediate tariff, 1½ cents; general tariff, 1½ cents.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What is the reason for the heavy increase being made?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member probably knows that glucose represents an advanced stage in the manufacture of starch. If the item had been allowed to stand as it was, while we would be affording some opportunity for competition on a fair basis with respect to the other commodities arising out of the use of Indian corn, we would not be affording an equal opportunity with respect to glucose, and the same might be said with respect to grape sugar and corn syrup, or syrups containing on admixture thereof. The old rates of 40 cents, 55 cents and 62½ cents per hundred pounds are being changed to ¾ cent, 1½ cents and 1½ cents per pound or 75 cents, $1.50 and $1.50 per hundred pounds. The imports amounted to nearly 2,000,000 pounds, chiefly under the general tariff. We produced in 1929, the last year for which we have complete tables, something over 40,000,000 pounds of glucose, and about 18,000,000 pounds of corn syrup.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): One half of the total is imports, is it not?

Mr. BENNETT: No, it is one-tenth.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): As against 40,000,000 pounds?

Mr. BENNETT: I said 40,000,000 pounds of production, the last figure we have of glucose, as against about 1,800,000 pounds of importations. We have no specific figures separating corn syrup from that item.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is a very heavy increase in duty. This is a case where it is more than 100 per cent of an increase which will undoubtedly have a tendency to increase the price, particularly on syrup. I do not think the question of starch is so important, but on corn syrup the increase runs 140 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: I hasten to assure the hon. gentleman that if there is an increase in price, there will at once be a reduction in duty. There is an absolute guarantee against an increase in price.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Why is such a terrific increase in duty imposed if it is intended to remove it if the slightest advantage is taken of it? One cannot disabuse one's mind of the idea that there must be some reason for such a heavy increase. Yet we are told in the next breath that if there is any increase over present-day prices the whole increase in duty will be wiped off. If there were an increase of 20 or 25 per cent, one could understand the matter, but when an increase of this character is imposed one cannot but be forced to the conclusion that some advantage will be taken of it or there would be no necessity for it.

Mr. BENNETT: I tried to tell the committee the other day, and I shall continue to state as we proceed with respect to a very large number of items: The increase is subject to the criticism which the hon. gentleman has suggested, namely, that it is a very large increase, but it arises on account of the emergent conditions under which the industry is now functioning. The slaughter of our market to-day, three months, four months from now, has the effect of discouraging business in the future and, in the end, the utter destruction of business. The government has intimated that if this structure of ours that I and others found here is to be maintained, there must be no increase to the consumer of the price that is charged, but we are perfectly willing, as I tried to make clear to the committee the other day, and, more than that, anxious to ensure that Canadians should have this market. This is an endeavour to meet the situation. I might say that the manufacturers asked for a much larger increase than that in view of their own experience of which they gave us a record, namely, the slaughtering in this market at given moments, not frequent, but just sufficiently often to imperil the stability of the market and the maintenance of Canadian industry. That is the reason for the action taken. I have met the situation frankly, and I tell my hon. friend what has been done has been done not by accident, but with deliberation and for a purpose which is quite clear and which I have no hesitancy in expressing.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think my hon. friend is somewhat safe in making the prediction, although one cannot tell what the fluctuations in price will be, that prices on secondary products will not increase, at least in the immediate future. Rather, indeed, they should go down, following the trend of the primary products. The spread is too great. Why in the world, in the face of a situation such as that, we need such excessive rates of duty, I confess I cannot understand, particularly as the government have very drastic authority to prevent dumping. The fixation of price is a weapon which they can use any day. While manufacturers can get behind duties such as my right hon. friend is imposing, there is bound to be a tendency to take advantage of them. I venture the assertion now without much fear of contradiction, that had it not been for the increases in duty last September in connection with textiles and other products, prices would have been lower in Canada to-day. The manufacturers have promised not to increase the price, but the protection which they enjoy by excessive rates of duty gives them the advantage of maintaining their products at a price level not warranted by the trend of events so far as manufacturing production is concerned. That is my complaint against these excessive rates of duty. This is a food product that everybody, particularly in western Canada and I presume in other parts of the country as well, must use. Why there is a necessity for such an excessive rate of duty as this I cannot understand.

Mr. GERSHAW: As the minister well knows, there is in southern Alberta about a half million acres of land under irrigation, and men living on that land are very anxious to develop the beet sugar industry. In view of its great potentialities, and in view of the business it will bring in the way of employing men to help the growers, farmers, dairymen, railways and so on, it seems this would be an industry well worth while assisting. Great Britain and the United States grow from beets about 20 per cent of the sugar they require, while we produce only about 6½ per cent. It would seem that most of our sugar comes from Cuba and Porto Rico. Refined sugar from Cuba enters the United States at a duty of $2.12 per 100 pounds and Canada at a duty of $1.89 per 100 pounds. In view of the fact that the duties have increased so much on grape sugar, can those who are hoping to get into the beet sugar industry have any expectation in the near future of help for them to carry on?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Medicine Hat has referred to a matter that required no argument on his part to convince me of the importance that should attach to it. I was privileged many years ago to do something towards establishing a beet sugar industry in the irrigation belt near Calgary. There is now at Raymond an industry which has flourished, but which has recently been acquired by the cane sugar interests. There was a beet sugar industry in eastern Canada; I think there were two in the county of Kent, and they have been acquired by cane sugar companies. The question as to just what assistance can be given and how it can be given to the beet sugar industry is one that is not as easy of solution as it appears. If it were, I am satisfied that my hon. friends opposite would have solved it years ago. It has been complicated in recent years by reason of the West Indian treaty. We have endeavoured by that treaty to ensure the purchase of our sugar requirements in the raw state from British possessions. A part of that sugar will undoubtedly come from Australia; a part has come from the Fiji islands; another portion of it has come from another part of the world in the Far East, and a large portion has recently come from the West Indies. The hon. gentleman is quite right in what he says with respect to Cuban sugar. The real truth is that Cuban importations have had the effect of very seriously injuring the sugar refining business in Canada. I suppose the hon. gentleman saw in the newspapers a few days ago a case in point. The truth is that sugar from Cuba has been dumped on our market at a tremendously low price, so low that our beet sugar people could not meet it at all. I had very definitely concluded that a bonus should be given to the beet sugar industry. I was satisfied from representations made that that was the only method by which we could ensure the development of the irrigation areas south of Medicine Hat and east of Calgary, a great district which has been settled in a small way but which might easily be settled in a much larger way. To my regret I found that it was not possible to carry into effect the idea I had in my mind, and having regard to our treaty obligations and other matters to which I have referred I need hardly tell the committee that what I would have been doing, had the original thought in my mind been given effect to, would be to bonus the cane sugar refineries.

Mr. NEILL: Beet sugar?

Mr. BENNETT: No, what I would have been doing would be to bonus the cane sugar refineries which at the moment I was not prepared to do. The matter is being carefully studied to ascertain if something cannot be done to meet the situation to which reference has been made. I might point out further that following the sale to the cane sugar interests of the industry at Raymond those who are interested in beet sugar are finding it difficult to secure the capital for another plant. It seems to me that it may be almost impossible for them to do so unless very considerable assistance is afforded by the government. I can only say to the hon. gentleman that I have not abandoned hope that some satisfactory solution may be found, but in all frankness, having regard to our treaty obligations with respect to the West Indies and to the ownership by the same interests of both the refineries and the factories in the centre west, we are faced with a matter of extreme difficulty. Having said this much I need hardly add that the matter has not escaped the attention of the government.

Mr. GERSHAW: Will the new owners of the refineries at Raymond continue to operate the industry? The Prime Minister mentioned that difficulty was being experienced in the securing of capital for new plants. I am wondering if the present plant will continue to operate at its present capacity.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend knows that a large quantity of beets has been planted for conversion into sugar, and my understanding is that at least for this season there is no question concerning the operation of the factory. Although my figure may be somewhat overestimated, I think the production is in the vicinity of 20,000,000 pounds.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): What is the investment in that industry?

Mr. BENNETT: Roughly speaking, refineries cost about a million dollars each. The one in question cost a million dollars, and when installed it was not absolutely new.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): I am referring to the investment in the corn syrup industry.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought the hon. member was talking about the beet sugar industry.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): I should like to know the number of employees and the wages paid.

Mr. BENNETT: I explained to the hon. member that the factories are not operated as glucose or syrup factories alone. Glucose is the advanced stage in the manufacture of starch, and corn syrup is a product arising out of the use of the raw material which enters into the manufacture of such products as starch, glucose and corn syrup. It is impossible to say how many hands are employed with respect to one particular part of the industry, but in the various parts of Canada, employment is afforded to a considerable number of persons. At one point in this Dominion which undoubtedly some hon. members have passed while travelling west, there is an idle factory. With improved general economic conditions the present proposed legislation would ensure its operation. I need not say there is any demand which at the moment would warrant its operation. I am sorry that I cannot answer my hon. friend's question in connection with the exact amount invested in these enterprises.

Mr. YOUNG: A moment ago the Prime Minister made a statement concerning the extension of the sugar industry in Canada. Would he tell us what percentage of the Canadian market is already supplied by Canadian refineries?

Mr. BENNETT: We are not dealing with the sugar item, and I am not at present prepared to go into that phase of the matter. A few years ago we were exporters of substantial quantities of refined sugar. Our factories and refineries would be capable not only of meeting our requirements, but of meeting them at least twice over; in other words we have facilities capable of taking care of our own requirements and of supplying an equal quantity in addition. While we are not discussing the sugar item yet I think the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw) adequately indicated why and how our export business was lost.

Mr. COOTE: In reference to the statement of the Prime Minister that there would be no increase in the price of syrup due to the increased tariff, I should like to ask whether there is any one in his department charged with the duty of ascertaining whether or not prices are advanced. It seems to me such provision would be essential.

Mr. BENNETT: Since last year an effort has been made to keep a record of prices, and if any complaint is received it is forthwith investigated.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Are there any reports on those investigations?

Mr. BENNETT: They are not that kind of investigation, being of a departmental nature.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Does the Prime Minister know that during the budget debate I made a complaint in connection with which I gave price lists showing that the prices of certain commodities had been increased, and that those commodities were the ones upon which the tariff had been raised at the last session. I gave the names of the firms and also the price lists for 1930 and 1931. I gave the prices prior to and following the tariff legislation of last fall.

Mr. BENNETT: Those were imported items.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: No, they were articles made by the Emerson people, of Winnipeg, Saskatoon and Edmonton.

Mr. BENNETT: The items in connection with which increases took place were all imported. The matters to which my hon. friend referred were investigated and subsequently the Massey-Harris Company, the Cockshutt Plow Company and one other concern published advertisements in the daily press indicating that there had been no increase in prices and desiring at once to correct the erroneous impression left upon this house and the country. The truth is that obviously imported items would be increased in price.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The commodity I refer to particularly was made by the Emerson people of Winnipeg, Saskatoon and Edmonton. I am informed that their factories are in the city of Winnipeg, and that the increase in the price of their product corresponded exactly with the increase in the tariff. What is the Prime Minister's information on that point?

Mr. BENNETT: The evidence was that there was no increase in the price of any implements made in Canada. That fact was clearly established, and the large manufacturing companies risked their reputations by making public declarations to that effect. The firm in Winnipeg certainly made it clear that with respect to goods produced in Canada the statement was not true.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The statement I made in the house concerned a matter which received a great deal of publicity in western newspapers. So far I have seen no denial by any firm. I believe my statement was accurate, namely, that the smut cleaning machine about which I am speaking is made in Winnipeg by the Emerson Manufacturing Company.

Mr. COOTE: Does the present item include the commodity commonly known as sugar syrup? If not, what is the rate of duty on that particular commodity?

Mr. BENNETT: Did I understand the hon. member to ask the rate on raw sugar?

Mr. COOTE: Does this include what is commonly called sugar syrup, as well as corn syrup?

Mr. BENNETT: No, this covers only the one class of syrup.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Would it not be natural for a Canadian manufacturer to take advantage of the tariff when his competitors in foreign countries are not able to compete with him? Would he not take substantial even if not full advantage of the tariff?

Mr. BENNETT: I have intimated to the hon. member and to the other members of the committee on more than one occasion that there is legislation in force to protect the country against such a practice, and I have no reason to believe that advantage has been taken of the tariff as has been suggested by the hon. member.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Suppose that is so, the Prime Minister knows the cost of raw material has gone down far more than the price of the finished product. It is very easy for him to say the prices of commodities have not risen since the special session last September, but surely in view of the decreased cost of production of the raw material which goes into the manufacture of commodities, he ought to be able to give the committee some information as a result of any investigations he has made whether those firms have taken advantage of the tariff, even if they have not increased the price of their commodities since the tariff was raised. I think the house and the country are entitled to know if the department through its officials has made any investigation along these lines, because, as I have said before, and I repeat it now, if the prices of the commodities which we have to buy do not come down to the level of the commodities we have to sell, I do not see how we are going to carry on—I am speaking of the agriculturists—for the Prime Minister has said that we cannot expect much higher prices for our farm commodities for some time to come. Unless the prices of the commodities that we have to buy come down to the level of the commodities we have to sell, I do not see how the farm industry is going to survive.

Mr. TOTZKE: At the special session last September the Prime Minister read a number of letters from manufacturers undertaking not to take advantage of the tariff and increase their prices. Has he any similar undertakings with respect to the tariff items which are now being increased?

Mr. BENNETT: I have not brought any here, but in considering this item I have stated to the hon. member that assurance was given that the price would not be increased.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: How can the Prime Minister say that if he has not made any investigation?

Mr. BENNETT: I have indicated to the hon. member that in no case where the undertaking has been given has there been any breach of it so far as we have been able to ascertain.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: But assurance has not been given in every case.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly not. The hon. member knows, perhaps as well as any member of this committee, that the economic stress has greatly decreased manufacturing production, and he doubtless knows that the unpaid liabilities for implements, due not only to Canadian producers but to producers outside Canada who have maintained branches in this country, amount to millions of dollars, and that at the moment there have been practically no purchases at all of agricultural implements in western Canada. It is obvious that a reduction in price can come about only if there is a demand for the article produced, for the cost of production will not decrease materially until increased requirements lower the unit cost of production. It is one of those matters which I am sure the hon. member thoroughly understands and which works in a complete circle. On the one hand you desire to obtain a reduction in the cost of production, and on the other hand it is not possible unless there is an increased demand for the manufactured article; and until there is such an increased demand as will enable the factories to operate at a lower cost per unit how are you going to get a decrease in price? In the meantime while raw materials may decrease in value, that decrease is more than offset by the increase on the unit cost of production, brought about by a curtailment of production due to the economic depression through which we are passing.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: In other words, it means that the only man who will be able to go through this economic depression will be the man who can hide behind the tariff. It cannot mean anything else. If the lack of business has increased the cost of production of the manufacturing industry to the extent the Prime Minister has intimated, and the manufacturer is going to make up that increased cost of production by putting the tariff on the price of his commodities, then we are back to the statement that has been made in this house time and again since I have been a member—that the agricultural industry and other consumers will absorb the whole depression. I do not see how it can be otherwise, if the Prime Minister's argument is sound, that through the depression having resulted in a lower volume of business the cost of production in our factories has increased, and consequently the prices of manufactured commodities will not go down materially. I think I understand the Prime Minister's argument rightly; if not, I am ready to be corrected before I proceed further. If I am not corrected, then my interpretation of the Prime Minister's remarks must be all right. If the cost of production due to the depression which exists to-day has placed the manufacturer in that position; if that be true, as the Prime Minister has said, then the people who buy those manufactured commodities, the agriculturists and consumers generally, are paying for the whole depression which the manufacturing industry is suffering from to-day. I have made this statement before, and I repeat it. The Prime Minister knows it to be true probably better than anybody else, because having lived in the west he knows that the wheat grower, the butter producer and the stock man are not going to be able to continue to produce unless they are able to buy what they require at prices comparable with the prices they receive for their own products. I think it is just as well that the argument of the Prime Minister should go out to the country so the people may know that the farmers and the consumers generally are shouldering the burden of the manufacturers who are able to get behind the tariff.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, it is idle to take up the time of the committee making statements so little warranted as that which the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) has just made. The other evening I read to the house that 15,000 manufacturers had made income tax returns showing that they have suffered a net loss of nearly $100,000,000, notwithstanding which they have maintained their plants and paid out $388,000,000 in wages.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Nobody denies that; I have not denied that.

Mr. BENNETT: If that is not bearing the burden I do not know what is. There they are maintaining their plants with the demand for their daily production not equal to the demand for wages and other costs; there they are, losing money steadily to the extent of nearly $100,000,000 and still paying out $388,000,000 in wages. And this effort on their part to bear their share of the economic depression is met by statements such as that to which we have just listened! That is one of the difficulties in this country—an endeavour to arouse one section of the country against another—

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I resent that statement.

Mr. BENNETT—an endeavour to make it appear that the agriculturist is suffering and someone else is getting the entire benefit. In my judgment that is not rendering any service to the country. There are the facts; they cannot be controverted or denied. In this period of distress it is quite obvious that the over-production of cereals was reflected in the tremendous reduction in prices, because last December there was sufficient wheat in the world to meet the requirements of the entire consuming population for twenty months, with no further production. That was the statistical evidence. The reduction in the price of wheat as a commodity is well known to every member of the committee, and that diminution in the selling price is reflected at once, of course, in the diminution in purchasing power on the part of those among whom the money circulates. If the producer of primary products is not able to purchase his implements, of course it follows that the manufacturer has his interest charges running against his inventory, which he cannot reduce. There is no doubt about that, and in turn he must absorb that loss; we have endeavoured to ensure under this legislation that he shall not pass it on to the producer, and the record of the financial position of the various enterprises engaged in the production of agricultural implements both here and elsewhere, whether they be in this country, in the United States, in France or in Germany, sufficiently answers the observations made by the hon. gentleman.

It is idle to make statements as wholly unwarranted as those which the hon. gentleman has made and endeavour to pass them off as facts, because the record of the Department of National Revenue makes clear what the position has been. I might go further, if I desire, and point out to hon. gentlemen what they must read in the press every day, that the condition of industry in this country is even worse than that of agriculture. Every thoughtful man knows that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Impossible.

Mr. BENNETT: Impossible? All I can say is that it is impossible with respect to people who for three successive seasons have had no crops; of course nothing could be as bad as that except the destruction of an industry by fire, without insurance. I am eliminating that, of course; that is disaster; that is not a normal condition. But if you apply the rules that should be applied with respect to normal conditions, and eliminate those which are due to what you might call acts of God, I think you will observe that there could not be anything in this country much worse than the condition which has overtaken industry; it is quite like that which has overtaken agriculture.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The Prime Minister is very fond of giving everybody a lecture when he says anything which does not agree with his own views. The Prime Minister can give me all the lectures he wishes, but he is not going to change my attitude with regard to legislation of this kind. In the first place, the Prime Minister admitted that industry was having a very hard time, and he almost admitted that the tariff legislation was brought down to take care of that condition. The Prime Minister talks about manufacturing being in had shape, but the picture he gave us the other day in regard to western Canada was fairly black also. This was what we heard from the right hon. gentleman who gave us two lectures during the session with regard to statements we had made as to conditions in western Canada. I do not think anyone could have drawn a darker picture than that of the Prime Minister.

I have no desire to hurt any industry in this country; my only desire is to give the primary industries a fair show. Under the tariff legislation which has been introduced since this government has been in power, the primary industries have no show. I made the statement that the manufacturing industries were taking advantage of the economic depression to hide behind the tariff concessions, and to a certain extent the Prime Minister has confirmed that statement by saying these changes were necessary to take care of the overhead. If many of these industries threw out their watered stock perhaps they would not be in such bad condition. In addition, many industries overbuilt and increased their capacity during the war, thinking it would last forever; now they must be protected in order to take care of that unnecessary expenditure. What about the farmer? What about his income tax? He cannot even pay his municipal tax or his school tax in order to give his children primary education. I resent any lecture from the Prime Minister accusing anyone on this side of the house, myself in particular, of trying to hurt any industry. The Prime Minister need not pose as the saviour of industry in this country, except through the tariff.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sen[illegible]): Shall the item carry?

Mr. BENNETT: Just a moment; there is one statement which must not be allowed to go unchallenged. The Prime Minister made no such statement with respect to the effect of the tariff on manufacturing industries as was indicated by my hon. friend. The Prime Minister did say that economic conditions had severely tried those industries, which the statistics clearly prove. It is equally clear that there is no endeavour to shift the burden of that economic condition on to the purchaser. On an average quarter-section of land consisting of 150 acres in grain and wheat, if the average production were 10 bushels per acre the total would be 1,500 bushels which, at 5 cents a bushel, would be $75. No farmer in western Canada has made any such contribution to tariff items this year.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: How can the Prime Minister ascertain how much the tariff has cost each farmer in western Canada? He has given nothing to this committee to indicate how he could come to that conclusion. The Prime Minister did say that industry was in very bad shape, and there can be no doubt that, if he makes that admission and gives them this tariff concession, they are going to take advantage of it. Those are not my words; they are the words of the Prime Minister.

Mr. BENNETT: No, just the opposite; I said they would not take advantage of it.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Has the Prime Minister ascertained whether prices should not go down in view of the lower prices of the raw materials which enter into the manufacture of many articles? The Prime Minister intimated that he did not expect the prices of commodities to go down because of economic conditions; I think I am right in that construction of his remarks.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: If I understood the Prime Minister correctly that is my interpretation of what he said. Therefore industry is taking advantage of the tariff in order to keep up prices, instead of letting the prices go down in conformity with the prices of the raw products. The Prime Minister cannot get away from that.

Mr. BENNETT: It is singular that anyone should continue to make statements such as those which have just been made. My hon. friend stated that the Prime Minister said the manufacturers had taken advantage of the tariff. What I said was that they would not be permitted to do so, and that the Massey-Harris Company and the Cockshutt Plow Company, our largest manufacturers of agricultural implements, have advertised lower prices. That anyone who can read can see and understand. That is the position to which I made reference, and as to my observations with regard to present conditions in western Canada, I do not suppose anything could more clearly indicate the unfairness of the remarks just made by my hon. friend. These conditions have arisen since June 1, and have been brought about through lack of moisture. Everyone knows that hope deferred maketh the heart sick, and the people of the west waited, waited and waited for rain. It came probably ten days too late to ensure a crop, but at least it may ensure some green feed. Now an hon. member of the committee stands up and says that his party were criticized for having talked of the condition of this country, but that the Prime Minister himself admits that condition. The condition to which I referred the other day as a national calamity has arisen, as everyone knows, because of a lack of rains in the month of June.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: But conditions were bad even before then. I know the Prime Minister does not want to bother with anyone, but he knows that the conditions as we depicted them in the debate on the address were not a bit overdrawn. They have been aggravated by a lack of moisture, I admit. But the conditions were absolutely as we depicted them at that time.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Prime Minister has said that the secondary industries need protection because of the terrific loss they have sustained in this period of depression.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am sorry I misunderstood the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the way I put it; that is the hon. gentleman's inference.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My understanding of the Prime Minister's remarks—

Mr. BENNETT: I said there was an emergency in the country.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Well, the Prime Minister is referring to the present condition, the depression through which every industry in Canada is passing. He might well say, however, that the primary industries have suffered a much greater loss, comparatively, than the secondary industries. I would ask any hon. gentleman who owns a considerable area of farming land in Canada whether he has not sustained a 100 per cent loss. If he were forced to liquidate at this moment, would not his loss amount to that? The Prime Minister says, "We are giving you 5 cents a bushel". But it is not only the wheat grower who is affected; it is not only western agriculture that is suffering but agriculture throughout Canada. And there are others who have been very seriously affected. The man who has put his money into the mining industry has suffered a loss. If he were to liquidate his assets to-day, what would they amount to compared to what they were two years ago?

Mr. MANION: What about all other industries?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is precisely my argument.

Mr. MANION: Why try to imply that the whole burden is being put upon the back of the farmer?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Of course it is being put on the back of the farmer.

Mr. MANION: Nonsense.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is put upon the back of the primary producer every time, as my hon. friend will find out if he keeps on with this policy. When my hon. friend who has just interrupted me was on this side his constant argument was that the reductions we were making in the tariff, small and irritating as he said, would ruin Canadian industry. But in no period of our history were secondary industries in a more prosperous condition than they were under that tariff. We are arguing in the light of facts; we are not arguing on theories. Now, the statement which is invariably made is that increases in the tariff are intended to benefit labour. May I ask how many people of the ten millions are employed in secondary industries in Canada? Not more than one million; yet you are taxing the whole nine million for the benefit of these, if you put your argument on the basis of employment.

An hon. MEMBER: What about their families?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But the fact is that labour does not get the benefit of these increases. Labour does not get any more employment, nor does it get higher wages. It has never so benefited under any system of this kind. When the Prime Minister says that he is doing all this for the sake of the secondary industries, I take issue with him, and I tell him that the primary industries are suffering to a much greater extent. And why load the whole burden on the primary industries? That is exactly what a policy of this kind does, and that is why we do not believe in increases that amount in many cases to complete exclusion. The Prime Minister says that if there are any increases in prices he will immediately remove the duty. But he is doing nothing for the primary industries, and by this legislation he is maintaining values in the secondary industries at a level beyond that which he can justify.

Mr. VALLANCE: The Prime Minister has stated time and again that the cost of implements of production will not be increased to the primary industries. I am going to cite some instances to show that they have increased. I know that he will say that the goods which I shall mention are imported, and I will admit that before he says it. But I want to show the difference that the tariff is making to the farmer. The farmer cannot to-day buy his implements at the prices at which he could obtain them last year. The Prime Minister has stated definitely that the whole object of these increases is to shut out imports, and the result is that the farmer cannot get his implements to-day as cheaply as he could a year ago. Let us take the catalogue of MacLeod's of Winnipeg, a firm doing a big business in western Canada. A 14 inch gang plough last year sold for $97.50, and in the 1931 catalogue it is $113.50. Yet the Prime Minister says that prices will not go up.

Mr. BENNETT: That does not apply to imported articles.

Mr. VALLANCE: But the fact is that the farmer has to pay so much more to-day for a gang plough.

An hon. MEMBER: Some implements have gone down.

Mr. VALLANCE: They have not. A disc harrow in 1930 was $39.25, and this year it is $46. Who pays for that? You are going to shut these implements out entirely, or you will make the producer pay so much more for them. Take repairs.

Mr. MANION: Why not buy Canadian goods?

Mr. VALLANCE: Why should we be taxed to this extent in order to buy Canadian goods? We have to compete on the open market with everyone else, and we have a right to expect some consideration. Take wagon repairs—

An hon. MEMBER: Give us Massey-Harris.

Mr. VALLANCE: We do not care where the implements come from or who makes them. We want to buy in the same market as that in which we have to sell.

Mr. MORAND: Even if your Canadian workmen die of starvation.

Mr. VALLANCE: We have to defend the interests of those whom we represent, just as my hon. friends over there must speak for those whom they represent. I have no quarrel with them. But I claim the right to speak for those in whom I am interested. Last year wagon wheels were $7.90; this year they are $11.50. Who has to pay that difference? Hon. gentlemen tell us to buy Canadian goods. But surely we should be allowed to purchase some of our requirements from outside Canada. The fact is that this tariff is made for the purpose of completely shutting out imports.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the size of the wheel?

Mr. VALLANCE: The size of the wheel makes no difference. These are comparative prices, as between 1930 and 1931, for the same articles. It would not make any difference if the wagon were as small as a baby carriage. I have the catalogue here and there are some items in the 1930 list which do not appear in the 1931. Because of the increased tariff importations have been made impossible. I object to these increases in the rates on implements of production.

Mr. POULIOT: During the last campaign it was stated that the farmers would find it easy to pay more for agricultural implements because they would receive more for their products. To-day they are receiving less for their products while they have to pay more for their agricultural implements.

Mr. YOUNG: The Prime Minister stated that 15,000 factories had lost $100,000,000. Were those factories all located in Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: They were all making returns to the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. YOUNG: Then all the losses were incurred in Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. TOTZKE: I understood the Prime Minister to say that these factories would not take advantage of the increases in the tariff. Will he assure the committee that they are not going to take advantage of the tariff or that they are not going to increase the prices of their commodities?

Mr. BENNETT: There has been no increase in the duty in the case of repairs, either at the last session or at this, so that increase cannot be made referable to the tariff.

Mr. VALLANCE: Would not wagon repairs come under the wagon schedule?

Mr. BENNETT: Repair parts.

Mr. VALLANCE: I have the catalogue here. I will pass it over to the Prime Minister if he so desires.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does the Prime Minister know of any other country which has quadrupled the duty on farm implements as Canada did last September, and then claimed that the prices will be kept down by the government so that the farmers will not be exploited?

Mr. BENNETT: I do not carry in my head the customs tariffs of other countries, but I do know that any country would have been warranted in taking the action which was taken in Canada last fall if such action did not involve a higher cost to the farmer for his implements. The undertakings that there would be no increase in price will be found upon the pages of Hansard. The Canadian market had been divided with foreign manufacturers, and the Canadian manufacturers felt that they could continue their business on such a scale as to ensure there being no necessity of increasing the price.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Are the prices not higher to-day than they would have been had the duty not been raised? If my right hon. friend takes that ground, then he will have to tell it to the marines, because we do not accept that statement.

Mr. TOTZKE: The Prime Minister admits that the manufacturers are taking advantage of the tariff.

Mr. BENNETT: He does nothing of the kind.

Mr. TOTZKE: He admitted that to me a moment ago.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not.

Mr. TOTZKE: I asked him if he had the assurance of the manufacturers that they would not take advantage of the tariff or would not increase their prices, and he stated to me that the manufacturers would not increase their prices. The gang plough which the farmer used to be able to buy for $95.25 now costs him $113.50. Those are the prices quoted for the same article, and the tariff is responsible for the increase. That price has to be paid whether we buy a plough which is imported or one which is not imported.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member is talking about an imported article. Why did he not say that?

Mr. VALLANCE: I did say that in the beginning.

Mr. BENNETT: Why does he not say quite frankly that he prefers to buy an article not made in Canada? If he buys anything not made in Canada he will have to pay that much more for it.

Mr. VALLANCE: I do not think the Prime Minister is justified in making that statement. I said I was willing to admit that I was dealing with an imported article.

Mr. MANION: Why not buy a Canadian article?

Mr. VALLANCE: Why should I buy a Canadian—

Mr. MANION: Why not?

Mr. VALLANCE: It is quite true that the government may not be responsible for our having to go out on the world market and meet the competition of everyone, but the government wants us to buy in a restricted market.

Mr. MANION: If my hon. friend can buy a Canadian article for the same or a lower price, why should he not do so? Why should he insist on an imported article?

Mr. VALLANCE: You cannot do it.

Mr. MANION: He quoted the prices on the imported article.

Mr. VALLANCE: You cannot go into the market and buy a Cockshutt gang plough for $95.

Mr. MANION: If a good deal of help will be needed in the province from which the hon. member comes, the necessary funds are not going to come from the United States; they will have to come from Canada. My hon. friends are not selling their wheat in the United States, so it is not a case of selling wheat and taking goods in return.

Mr. VALLANCE: I am not saying the imported goods—

Mr. MANION: Why buy imported goods when one can obtain just as good in Canada?

Mr. VALLANCE: Show the Canadian farmer that he can buy a gang plough to-day for the catalogue price quoted last year and he will buy the Canadian made article. The tariff has raised the cost of the imported article from $95 to $113.50, and the farmer has been deprived of that competitive price.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Minister of Railways and Canals forgets that there are certain implements manufactured in the United States which the prairie farmer prefers. These American companies have been in business a much longer time than the Canadian companies. We like to buy American ploughs and we intend to buy them whether the duty is on or off. On the other hand, we like Canadian binders. I would not buy any other binder, and I have not for years. The government wants to make me buy both articles from the Canadian manufacturer, and then pretends that the price has not been put up or kept up by the big jump in tariff. Why did not Great Britain put on a high tariff like this and then try to convince her people that it would not cost them any more? She did not do that because she knew she could not put that kind of stuff across.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. MANION: My hon. friends are arguing that the United States prices are so low, in spite of the fact that that country is the most highly protected in the world.

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): The item under discussion deals with corn syrup.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): We are discussing—

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): We have not reached the items covering agricultural implements, and this discussion should take place at that time.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): The question being discussed is whether or not the tariff has increased the price to the consumer.

Mr. VALLANCE: This discussion would have to be repeated, and I think it had better be finished right now. If the chairman rules accordingly, I should like to read from a book which I hold in my hand and which contains an address delivered by the Prime Minister. This portion is entitled "Canada from East to West" by R. B. Bennett, member of parliament, Calgary. The whole book is called "Addresses delivered before the Canadian Club of Montreal", so I suppose this was delivered before that club.

An hon. MEMBER: What year?

Mr. VALLANCE: Season 1911-1912. This is what the present Prime Minister has to say about tariffs. He talks about pitting one end of the country against the other, causing dissension. Listen to this:

> Then as to taxation. Nothing so tends to make men so discouraged and disheartened and unrestful as an uneven system of taxation, whether it be local or any other. Keep this maxim in mind, that all taxation should be borne in proportion of the ability of the man to pay it. The man in the west says he is paying too much. Last fall I went into the homes of these American farmers and talked to hundreds of them. I will give you the reply of a man which is typical of them all. He said, "Mr. Bennett, I came from Minnesota, and I can buy stuff from the store there and bring it in here for the price I have to pay for it here. The local cost is the price in the United States plus freight and duty. How long will they stand for that do you think? I am talking to you straight—that is a very serious problem. Do you mean to tell me that is just and fair, that on every article used in the west the price should be exactly the United States price plus freight and duty?"

Does he say it should be now?

Mr. BENNETT: Will the hon. gentleman finish his speech?

Mr. VALLANCE: The right hon. gentleman does not want me to read the whole book?

Mr. BENNETT: It would do the hon. gentleman good.

Mr. VALLANCE: Does the Prime Minister still hold those views?

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF RESOLUTIONS

The house again in committee of ways and means, Mr. Cowan (Port Arthur) in the chair.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cowan, Port Arthur): When the committee rose we were considering item No. 139, concerning glucose or grape sugar.

Mr. GERSHAW: The Prime Minister has explained that in southern Alberta the people interested in cane sugar have control of the situation. Supposing in one of the districts the farmers' local raised sufficient capital to start a beet sugar industry, could they expect help by way of bonuses, and would the right hon. gentleman indicate how much?

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw) realizes the great difficulty there would be in bonusing an industry in a particular locality, or in limiting the operation of such legislation. It is that difficulty which has stood in the way of something being done at the present session. Bonuses and bounties which heretofore have been limited to apply to particular industries, such as the lead bounties and copper bounties, would in this case operate over a very wide area, namely the provinces of Alberta, Manitoba and Ontario. I should be very glad to listen to any suggestion the hon. member may have to make by which we could work out a scheme to accomplish the end he has in view. During the recess I purpose to devote to this particular matter such time as I have at my disposal, believing as I do that without some assistance the industry in western Canada will not flourish and that it is important that there should be an opportunity for its development.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—168. Malt flour containing less than 50 per centum in weight of malt; malt syrup or malt syrup powder; extracts of malt, fluid or not; grain molasses—all articles in this item upon valuation without British or foreign excise duties, under regulations prescribed by the minister, per pound: British preferential tariff, 3 cents; intermediate tariff, 3 cents; general tariff, 5 cents; and, British preferential tariff, 25 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: This is an item which was introduced really at the instance of the importers, the effect being to increase the British preference. The product of the British manufacturers is very highly favoured in Canada. It will be noted that the ad valorem rates are not changed, but that the specific rates are changed to 3 cents, 3 cents, and 5 cents.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is no change here except the additional $1 per ton?

Mr. BENNETT: That is right.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—282a. Manufactures of clay or cement, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 12½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 22½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—296b. Magnesite, dead-burned, sintered, caustic-calcined or plastic magnesia; magnesium carbonate, basic or otherwise, excepting crude rock: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—296d. Feldspar, ground but not further manufactured: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—305. Flagstone, sandstone and all building stone, not hammered, sawn or chiselled, and marble and granite, rough, not hammered or chiselled: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff 306. Marble, sawn or sand-rubbed, not polished; granite, sawn; paving blocks of stone; flagstone and building stone, other than marble or granite; sawn on not more than two sides: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—306a. Building stone, other than marble or granite, sawn on more than two sides but not sawn on more than four sides, per one hundred pounds: British preferential tariff, 10 cents; intermediate tariff, 20 cents; general tariff, 25 cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—306b. Building stone, other than marble or granite, planed, turned, cut or further manufactured than sawn on four sides, per one hundred pounds: British preferential tariff, 30 cents; intermediate tariff, 45 cents; general tariff, 50 cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—306c. Marble, not further manufactured than sawn, when imported by manufacturers of tombstones, to be used exclusively in the manufacture of such articles, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—307. Marble and granite, n.o.p., and all manufactures of marble or granite, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 30 per cent; intermediate tariff, 35 per cent; general tariff, 40 per cent.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Do we import much in the way of stone and marble material?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, substantial quantities. I could give the importations under each item if desired. It is believed the operation of this tariff will encourage to a considerable extent the use of our own granite and marble. There is a very large deposit of marble in Quebec, and to a smaller extent in British Columbia, and there is stone in most of the provinces. We had imports under this item of $340,000; $78,000 under another item, and $450,000 of building stone and marble under a former item.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I imagine these duties would be practically prohibitive.

Mr. BENNETT: There has been great pressure from many quarters to give the industry a chance. If it is to be developed it must be given sufficient opportunity, and this tariff will provide the opportunity.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am not complaining.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Does the price fixing arrangement apply to these items as well as to the others that have been dealt with?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—308. Manufactures of stone, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—318. Common and colourless window glass: British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent. Provided, that the governor in council may, when satisfied that common colourless window glass is being manufactured in Canada in quality and quantity sufficient for Canadian requirements, by order in council direct that there be substituted for this tariff item the following: Common and colourless window glass:

(a) in sheets not exceeding 80 square inches in area, per pound: British preferential tariff, 1¼ cents; intermediate tariff, 1¾ cents; general tariff, 1¾ cents;

(b) in sheets exceeding 80 square inches but not exceeding 120 square inches in area, per pound: British preferential tariff, 2¼ cents; intermediate tariff, 3 cents; general tariff, 3 cents;

(c) in sheets exceeding 120 squire inches in area, per pound: British preferential tariff, 3¼ cents; intermediate tariff, 4½ cents; general tariff, 4½ cents.

Mr. BENNETT: Here is an item that I am sure hon. members will be glad to talk about.

Mr. HANBURY: Mr. Chairman, I notice under this item the governor in council are taking to themselves authority to change the duty when they are satisfied that common colourless window glass is being manufactured in Canada in sufficient quantities to meet Canadian requirements. Once again I should like to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to the fact that certain areas in Canada cannot procure to advantage their glass from the central provinces, and I would ask him to keep that in mind should he at any time decide to change the duty on this item. I realize the difficulty of having, you might say, sectional tariffs, but at the same time the situation in British Columbia, particularly with reference to greenhouses and building construction, is such that we do hope the minister will keep it in mind and make some provision so that the glass consumers in that province will be protected until such time as Canadian manufacturers of glass can meet their requirements economically.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not an unreasonable request. Might I also indicate that there are vast deposits of raw materials between the lakes and the mountains that should be utilized. For instance, at Redcliff, near Medicine Hat, there is a very extensive glass industry; in fact it is the backbone of that community at the moment. I have great hopes that within a reasonable time there will be a development of that industry to meet the position taken by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Hanbury).

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Let the item go through. The fact is, no importance or stability can be placed on any of these rates, as the minister can and will change them whenever he may feel inclined so to do.

Mr. HANBURY: With reference to the remarks of the Minister of Finance, I would remind him that the freight on glass is a very large item and that even glass produced in the area to which he refers would be very much more expensive than the glass now imported from Belgium and England.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—322a. Laminated glass, sheet or plate, and manufactures thereof, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 17½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I take it this is the finished product, otherwise known as non-shatterable glass for use in automobiles?

Mr. BENNETT: In a general way that is what laminated glass is.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Will my right hon. friend tell me what is the drawback on laminated glass at the present time?

[Mr. Hanbury.]

Mr. BENNETT: When we finish these items, if the committee will accept my view there will be none; the item dealing with drawbacks will provide for no drawback on laminated glass.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I believe it is 25 per cent at present, and I take it from the latter part of the clauses referring to drawbacks that it will be 60 per cent. I would refer to item 1055:

Materials, including all parts—when used in the manufacture of goods enumerated in tariff items 438a and 438b.

I take it that laminated glass is one of the parts of automobiles, and that it would come under those items, carrying a drawback of 60 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman will realize that the items with which we will deal presently will also deal with that substance. When we relate the two I think my hon. friend will see an improvement in favour of the Canadian development of the laminated glass industry. If the hon. gentleman desires to raise the point further when we come to the other items, I shall be glad to refer back to it.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—326b. Glass eyes for human use: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—348. Copper scrap, and copper in pigs, blocks or ingots; cathode plates of electrolytic copper for melting, per pound: British preferential tariff, 1 cent; intermediate tariff, 1½ cents; general tariff, 1½ cents.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: I wish to add, for clarity of administration, a further item, which I will read to the committee and which will be moved by the Minister of Fisheries:

Customs tariff—348b. Tin plate scrap, when for use exclusively in recovering copper from acidic mine waters in connection with copper mining operations: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

I suppose the committee realizes that in connection with copper mining operations there is often carried, not in solution but in suspension, considerable quantities of copper. This tin plate scrap which is to be allowed in free is for the purpose of assisting in the recovery of this copper held in suspension in the waters coming from the copper mining operations.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—348c. Brass scrap and brass in blocks, ingots or pigs; copper in bars or rods, not less than 6 feet in length, unmanufactured, n.o.p.; copper in strips, sheets or plates, not polished, planished or coated; brass or copper tubing, in lengths not less than 6 feet, and not polished, bent or otherwise manufactured: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—356. Nickel in bars or rods, not including bars or rods depolarized or otherwise processed for use as anodes, and nickel in strips, sheets or plates: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—366. Watches of all kinds: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent; provided that, when imported under the intermediate or the general tariff, the duty shall be not less than, each, intermediate tariff, 40 cents; general tariff, 40 cents.

Mr. YOUNG: What are the rates of duty on a watch casing, a watch movement, and a watch movement in a casing respectively?

Mr. BENNETT: Watch actions and movements, finished or unfinished, are dealt with under item 366a, and come in at free, 15 per cent and 15 per cent. When they are imported under the intermediate or the general tariff, the duty shall be not less than 40 cents under each tariff. The next two items I am going to ask to have stand, because the very point the hon. gentleman is about to make applies with respect to them.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—366a. Watch actions and movements, finished or unfinished: Bristish preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent; provided that when imported under the intermediate or the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than, each: intermediate tariff, 40 cents; general tariff, 40 cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff:—376a. Chromium metal and tungsten metal, in lumps, powder, ingots, blocks or bars, and scrap of alloy metal containing chromium and tungsten, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively for alloying purposes, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—377d. Billets of steel of Bessemer quality, when imported by manufacturers of seamless steel tubes for use exclusively in the manufacture of seamless steel tubes, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—380. Plates of iron or steel, hot or cold rolled:

(a) not more than 60 inches in width, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, $4.25; intermediate tariff, $6; general tariff, $7.

(b) more than 60 inches in width, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, $3; general tariff, $5.

(c) flanged, dished or curved, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent: provided that the governor in council may, when satisfied that iron or steel plates are being rolled in Canada up to a width of 120 inches, and that the same can be rolled in quantity and quality sufficient for Canadian requirements, by order in council direct that there be substituted for sections (a) and (b) of this tariff item the following:

(a) not more than 120 inches in width, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, $4.25; intermediate tariff, $6; general tariff, $7.

(b) more than 120 inches in width, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, $3; general tariff, $5.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—386(f). Hoop, band or strip rolled or drawn, coated or not, when imported by manufacturers of mats for use exclusively in the manufacture of mats, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a slight change to be made in the wording, to meet a question of administration. The amendment to be proposed by the Minister of Fisheries is that the following be substituted for item 386 (f).

Customs tariff—386(f). Hoop, band or strip, hot or cold rolled or drawn, coated or not, when imported by manufacturers of mats for use exclusively in the manufacture of mats, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—386(g). Sheets, plates, hoop, band or strip, not tempered or ground nor further manufactured than cut to shape, without indented edges, when imported by manufacturers of saws or straw cutters for use exclusively in the manufacture of saws or straw cutters, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—386(n). Hoop, band or strip, hot rolled, in coils not less than 100 feet in length, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of cold rolled iron or steel, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—386(o). Hoop, band or strip, cold rolled, electro-galvanized, six inches or less in width, in coils of not less than 100 feet, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of rolling doors of steel, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—399b. Tubing, of wrought iron or steel, not more than ½ inch in diameter, in lengths not less than 6 feet, coated with metal, not polished, bent nor further manufactured, when imported by manufacturers to be further processed in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: This item must be slightly modified.

Mr. RHODES: I move that the words "other than zinc" be inserted after the words "coated with metal."

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—399c. Pipes and tubes, not exceeding 2 inches in diameter, made from puddled iron, when for use exclusively in casing oil wells: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: I move that the following be substituted for this item:

Pipes and tubes, not exceeding 2 inches in diameter, made from puddled iron, when for use exclusively in recovering crude petroleum: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Would it not be free for drilling wells for water?

Mr. BENNETT: The effect of petroleum on a certain kind of pipe is to corrode it, and this puddled iron is to prevent such corrosion.

Mr. HANBURY: Is it not used in larger sizes?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What other articles will the amendment include?

Mr. BENNETT:. None.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Customs tariff—402a. Woven or welded wire fencing, of iron or steel, coated or not, n.o.p.; wire cloth or wire netting, of iron or steel, coated or not: British preferential tariff, 25 per cent; intermediate tariff, 35 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I protest against this item. It seems to me to illustrate—

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps I may anticipate the hon. gentleman's objection by informing him that there is to be an additional item providing for the importation of special fencing for use exclusively on fur farms, and under regulations to be prescribed by the minister.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Why for fur farming only? Why not for sheep farming?

Mr. BENNETT: This item is intended to encourage the production of wire netting in this country. Representations were made that the netting used for fox farming purposes was of a special kind imported from Great Britain. No other representations were made to the department, and so far as we know the Canadian product for other purposes has been quite satisfactory.

Mr. LUCAS: What were the importations last year?

Mr. BENNETT: They amounted to $400,000.

Mr. BROWN: I protest against the increase in wire fencing. This is one of the most important articles of farm equipment in the west, and now, if we are to follow the counsel of so many of our eastern advisers to go into mixed farming, we shall need more wire fencing. The sheep industry is becoming very general in Manitoba and the cost of fencing adds largely to cost of operation. I must protest against this increase.

Mr. BENNETT: This item does not touch the matter to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. IRVINE: Has the minister had any assurance that the price will not be increased?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; assurance has been given.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The largest imports of the commodity come from Great Britain. Is this ordinary farm fencing, or is it ornamental fencing, or fox fencing, or what? If the minister has that information I should like to get it.

Mr. BENNETT: The item has no reference to the class of fencing mentioned by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown).

The fencing to which he refers comes under another item, which has not been touched either by amendment or by rewording. This refers largely to ornamental fencing and fencing of that kind. It includes the fencing used on fox farms. The fox farmers in various parts of Canada represented that they had been accustomed to a certain type of fencing manufactured in Great Britain for which they were paying the rate now on the schedule, and they asked to have that rate maintained. It is maintained in the amendment which will be offered by the Minister of Fisheries. The only change is in item 402a, with respect to which assurance has been given that there will be no increase.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I presume that it is not ordinary barbed wire.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Having had some experience with the definitions of tariff items, I fancy that woven wire fencing is the ordinary fencing used by farmers.

Mr. BENNETT: That item, 402, is not touched. That item is woven or welded wire fencing, of iron or steel, from wire not more than ·144 inch and not less than ·080 inch in diameter, with tolerance not to exceed ·004 inch, also wire fencing, of iron or steel, coated or not, n.o.p. The rates are free; 12½ per cent; 15 per cent.

Mr. CAYLEY: I have received a wire from the John Morrow Screw & Nut Company of Ingersoll, asking that twist drills be placed under the tariff item carrying a duty of 35 per cent instead of 30 per cent as at present. I believe this matter has been called to the attention of the Prime Minister.

Mr. BENNETT: That is an application for an increase on steel used in the manufacture of certain tools. After careful consideration we concluded that it would open up too many items in the iron and steel schedule. That schedule had been before the tariff board and action had been taken. We endeavoured to disturb it as little as possible. We decided not to take the action suggested by the telegram brought to the attention of the department some months ago.

Mr. BROWN: There will be no increase in the duty on ordinary wire fencing used on the farm?

Mr. BENNETT: We have not touched that item.

Mr. SPENCER: Under what item would ordinary fencing come?

Mr. BENNETT: Item 402, to which I referred a moment ago.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Would that item cover most of the ordinary wire fencing?

Mr. BENNETT: I am advised that practically ninety per cent would come under that item.

Item agreed to.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Mr. Chairman, I beg to move that the following item be inserted in resolution No. 2 of June 1, 1931:

Customs tariff—402b. Woven netting, of iron or steel, coated, made from wire of 17 gauge or heavier, with meshes not smaller than one inch and not larger than two inches, with specially strengthened joints, when for use exclusively on fur farms, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. MacLEAN: I desire to thank the Minister of Finance for taking this action. This is a very important article in our province. Representations were made to the minister and to the Minister of National Revenue by the fox breeders' association. I received a telegram myself from the president of the association, which I forwarded to the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Revenue, and I am pleased to see that the minister has given attention to this matter and left the duty as it was.

Amendment agreed to.

Customs tariff—403b. Flat or woven flat, including steel strip, in the coil, coated or not, ·064 inch in thickness or thinner, with tolerance not to exceed ·002 inch, when imported by manufacturers of corset clasps, steels, wires and dress stays for use exclusively in the manufacture of corset clasps, steels, wires and dress stays, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: It is desired to make this item a little clearer, and my colleague will move an amendment thereto.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I beg to move that the following be substituted for item 403 (b):

Customs tariff—403b. Flat or woven flat, including steel strip, in the coil, coated or not, ·064 inch in thickness or thinner, with tolerance not to exceed ·002 inch, when imported by manufacturers of corset clasps, steels, wires and dress stays for use exclusively in the manufacture of corset clasps, steels, wires and dress stays, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—403(e). Steel wire, when imported by manufacturers of machine card clothing for use exclusively in the manufacture of machine card clothing in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409e. Spraying and dusting machines and attachments therefor, including hand sprayers; fruit or vegetable grading machines and attachments therefor; apparatus specially designed for sterilizing bulbs; pressure testing apparatus for determining maturity of fruit; pruning hooks; pruning shears; animal dehorning instruments; and complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: I think this item will be made somewhat clearer by the amendment which my colleague will move.

Mr. RHODES: I move that the following be substitued for item 409e:

Customs tariff—409e. (i) Spraying and dusting machines and attachments therefor, including hand sprayers; apparatus especially designed for sterilizing bulbs; pressure testing apparatus for determining maturity of fruit; pruning hooks; pruning shears; animal dehorning instruments; and complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

(ii) Fruit and vegetable grading, washing and wiping machines and complete parts therefor: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—409q. Complete parts for repairs, if imported on or before the thirty-first day of March, 1932.

(i) For the implements or machinery enumerated in tariff items 409c, 409e, 409f, 409g, 409j, 409o, 409p, and 439c: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

(ii) For the implements or machinery enumerated in tariff item 409b: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

(iii) For the implements or machinery enumerated in tariff item 409d: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 6 per cent; general tariff, 6 per cent.

(iv) For the implements or machinery enumerated in tariff items 409h and 409n: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

(v) For the implements or machinery enumerated in tariff items 409i and 409k: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 17½ per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) will look at this item he will see that it extends the time to which the old rates apply to March 31, 1932, the end of the next fiscal year.

[Sir George Perley.]

Mr. BROWN: It has been brought to my attention that the cream separator companies are charging an extra price claiming that the duty had been raised on repair parts for cream separators. I cannot discover that this duty has been raised at any time, but probably some change has been made by the department in the classification of these repair parts. It is clearly stated that they come in free when used by manufacturers in the manufacture of machines, but they are not free when sold to the farmers. In these days when farming is being carried on at a great loss we cannot afford to pay extra prices for repair parts for our machinery. The prices have been raised 15 per cent because of a supposed increase in duty, whereas I think a change has been made in the classification.

Mr. BENNETT: There has been no change made since the change in administration. I happen to know that these parts are free when imported by manufacturers in connection with their operations. I suppose in most cases the farmer does not import directly but buys through an agent. I am trying to ascertain if a change has been made in the designation because I know no change has been made in the tariff.

Mr. BROWN: I know that the DeLaval company notified their agents that the prices had been raised 15 per cent.

Mr. VALLANCE: I want to thank the Minister of Finance for drawing my attention to the fact that complete parts for repairs of all these machinery items are free. One would infer from his remark that I was discussing this before the dinner recess. I want to assure him there is nothing in the foregoing that I was discussing regarding repairs.

Mr. BENNETT: It was not my hon. friend. It was another hon. gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I presume the intention in this case is that after the 31st March, 1932, the increased duty applies. Is that so?

Mr. BENNETT: That does not follow.

Mr. CAMPBELL: While I appreciate the fact that the postponement of the higher duty has been put through in this budget, at the same time I think we should be prepared next year to consider a further postponement. Last year I drew the minister's attention to this and showed him the effect of increased duties on implement repairs, and the increased price this would mean to farmers who have United States-made machinery. At that time, of course, many of us thought these United States companies would establish plants in Canada, but owing to the depression many of them will probably never do so, at any rate, not at the present time, and if the high rates of duty went into effect the farmers would be penalized. I trust the Minister of Finance will see to it that no such rates are put into effect, at least until some of these United States companies have a chance to establish plants in Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: Some months ago the hon. gentleman directed attention to this matter, and what has happened is that we have dropped any change in the tariff until at least after the 31st of March, 1932. Obviously I would not venture to express any opinion as to what may happen after that. At any rate, until that time the hon. gentleman may be assured there will be no change.

Mr. CAMPBELL: What I want to be clear on is whether or not the increased rate went into effect automatically.

Mr. BENNETT: No. I should like to speak with further reference to the question asked by the hon. member for Lisgar. The commodities to which he refers are dealt with under item 442b:

Materials which enter into the construction and form part of cream separators when imported by manufacturers of cream separators, for use exclusively in the manufacture of cream separators, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister.

Then follows item 442c:

Articles of metal when imported by manufacturers of cream separator parts for use exclusively in the manufacture of cream separators parts, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister.

Free; free; free. This refers to both items. I cannot see just where the difficulty has arisen unless it be that the farmer has purchased from some importer other than one importing for his own factory.

Mr. BROWN: The usual way of buying repairs for cream separators is to buy them from the dealer in the town where one lives. I know the dealer in my town received notice last summer that the price for repairs was up 15 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: It would seem to me then this has nothing to do with the tariff, but by arrangement between the dealer and the factory producer, the former has increased his price.

Mr. BROWN: Well, they were blaming it on the tariff.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Lisgar knows that in his constituency everything has so often been blamed on the tariff since he has been there, naturally this is one of those instances.

Mr. BROWN: I thought they were wrong. They were blaming it on the coming budget.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—412. Machinery, being presses for use in the printing of newspapers, of not less value by retail than $1,500 each, of a class or kind not made in Canada: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no change in rates. It is only a change in the wording.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—422a. Concrete road-paving machines, self propelling, end loading type, with a capacity of 21 cubic feet of wet concrete or more; concrete and asphalt road finishing machines; form graders; sub-graders; trench and ditch excavating machines, round wheel or vertical or ladder boom, chain and bucket type, for digging vertical or sloping bank ditches; back filling machines and equipment, mounted on self-propelling wheels or crawling traction, semi- or full-revolving boom and scraper type; steam or air driven pile hammers or extractors; well-points; truck turntables; all the foregoing of a class or kind not made in Canada, and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—427. All machinery composed wholly or in part of iron or steel, n.o.p., and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—427a. Rolling mill rolls, when imported by proprietors of rolling mills for use only in rolling iron or steel.

Provided, that the governor in council may, when satisfied that rolling mill rolls for rolling iron or steel are being manufactured in Canada, by order in council direct that this tariff item be cancelled: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. BENNETT: There is an amendment with respect to this item, to remove any doubt. The amendment I have suggested is as follows:

427a. Sand cast rolls and chilled cast iron rolls, imported by proprietors of rolling mills for use exclusively in rolling iron or steel: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Provided, that the governor in council may, when satisfied that sand cast or chilled cast iron rolls, or both, are being manufactured in Canada, by order in council direct that this tariff item, in so far as it affects either or both of such rolls, be repealed.

We have not yet reached the stage in Canada where we are producing those steel rolls:

Mr. REID: There is no difference in the manufacture.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I move the amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no change in rates.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—445a. Electric head, side and tail lights; electric torches or flashlights and complete parts therefor: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—445e. Electric and galvanic batteries, n.o.p., and complete parts thereof, including separator walls of wood, cut to size or not: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—446. Electric steam turbo generator sets 700 h.p. and greater, of a class or kind not made in Canada, and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: This is to meet municipal installations of steam plants, and it will be observed that it takes care of them to 700 horse-power and greater, but not under, of a class or kind made in Canada, and complete parts thereof.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. COOTE: Do we import many of these from Great Britain?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This does not take the place of electric motors on which the British preference remains at 25 per cent?

Mr. BENNETT: This is the steam-driven turbine for the generation of electricity. The technical name is electric steam turbo generator. This is for municipal installation.

Item agreed to.

AUSTRALIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. BENNETT: The next item is one which would be affected by the Australian treaty, and I shall avail myself of the opportunity, with the permission of the committee, to make a short statement with respect to the Australian agreement.

After negotiations extending over several months a trade agreement has been concluded between Canada and Australia. Copies were signed on June 5 by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) and myself on behalf of the Canadian government, and by the Right Honourable J. H. Scullin, Prime Minister of Australia, and the Honourable Parker Moloney, Minister for Markets and Transport, at Canberra on July 8, on behalf of the Australian government. At the request of that government it was arranged that announcement of the conclusion of the agreement should be made here to-night and in the Australian parliament at 3 p.m. to-morrow, Canberra time, which is fifteen hours ahead of Ottawa time.

Since the adoption of a preferential tariff system in Australia more than twenty years ago, it has been the desire of all Canadian governments to secure for this Dominion the benefits of the British preferential tariff of Australia. Hitherto, this has not been found possible. The arrangement entered into by the late government in 1925, which is at present in force, secured the British preferential tariff on four items, or parts of items, only. The trade agreement signed on June 5 secures for Canada the benefits of the British preferential tariff on 415 out of 433 items which make up the Australian customs tariff. That is, out of a total of 433 items in the Australian tariff they concede to us a British preference on 415. In addition, it assures for Canada the benefits of the intermediate tariff of Australia on six items, or parts of items.

Moreover, on commodities of great importance in Canada's export trade Australia has adjusted her tariff to accord our producers a great margin of preference. On canned salmon, for example, we will get a preference of three pence per pound; on logs a preference of 10 per cent ad valorem; on many classes of lumber a preference of two shillings per 100 board feet. On newsprint paper Canada is accorded free entry and the preference over foreign paper is increased to £4 per ton.

Thus the great bulk of commodities exported from Canada is guaranteed, under the new agreement, a substantial tariff preference in Australia. All foreign countries are under the Australian general tariff.

In return, as set forth in schedule A to the agreement, Canada will accord to Australia its British preferential tariff and reduced rates or greater margins of preference on some 28 items, or parts of items, of the Canadian tariff. This compares with reductions on 20 items, or parts of items, under the agreement at present in force.

I purpose at an early date to introduce a bill, giving notice to-night. I thought it desirable however to circulate a copy of the agreement forthwith so that all hon. members of the house may avail themselves of the opportunity to study its content.

Throughout the negotiations which have now culminated in the conclusion of a broad trade agreement, we have sought to adhere to the principle of diverting to each other trade which at the present time is being done with countries outside the empire. For several years past Australian purchases of goods from foreign countries have averaged considerably more than $300,000,000 per annum. Canada is in a position to supply a large proportion of this great demand, and under the new agreement we believe she will do it.

In closing I cannot do better, perhaps, than quote the words of the letter from the Honourable Parker Moloney, Australian Minister for Markets and Transport, which reached Ottawa over the week end. Mr. Moloney states:

> The step which we have just taken is undoubtedly a very material advantage towards that ideal of inter-empire preference which we all consider is a vital necessity in upholding the position of the British Commonwealth of Nations amongst the great trading nations of the world. When it is remembered that the various dominions are keen competitors, the consummation of an agreement such as that we have just made is a lasting memorial to the goodwill and cooperation displayed between two sister dominions.

I sincerely hope and trust that this agreement will bear the fruit which we so earnestly desire and that we will do business with one another which at the present time is being done with foreign countries.

There is only one clause of the agreement to which I might be pardoned for directing attention. I think the present will be found to be the first instance in which any such clause has been placed in a trade agreement. We are of the strong opinion that in agreements between sister dominions of the same empire there should be some provision which would not make it easy to terminate such agreements. If there be differences with respect to one or two items those differences should not result in the termination of the agreement. Therefore by article IX of this trade agreement we have for the first time in the history of trade agreements endeavoured to formulate a plan whereby differences which might occur will not result in the termination of such agreements, but only in the cessation of activities with respect to the item concerned, and the maintenance of the agreement with respect to the other items contained therein.

Article IX is as follows:

> If—(a) at any time either party to this agreement gives notice in writing to the other party that, in consequence of the importation of goods of a kind specified in the notice, being the produce or manufacture of the exporting country, into the other country, the sale of similar goods produced in that other country is being prejudicially or injuriously affected; and
> (b) measures sufficient in the opinion of the government of the importing country to remedy the conditions complained of, are not put into effect by the government of the exporting country within three months from the date of the notice, > then, until the notice is withdrawn by the government of the importing country, goods of the kind specified in the notice shall, when imported into such country, be subject to the rates of duty under its general tariff.
>
> (2) The parties agree to endeavour to reach a satisfactory arrangement, with a view to the withdrawal of the notice with the least possible delay.
> (3) On the withdrawal of the notice, goods of the kind specified in the notice, shall again become subject to the tariff applicable to them before the notice was given.

It is but fair to say that under this agreement the dumping clause against Australia will not apply; further, their dumping clause against us will not apply. We believe that nothing is more conducive to the maintenance of good will than that differences with respect to one item should not imperil the whole structure which has been erected under an agreement. On more than one occasion I have pointed out how seriously we were affected because of the difference between Australia and ourselves with respect to only one item. There being no provision whereby we could safeguard our interests without terminating the whole agreement, the government yielding to the unanimous views of the House of Commons gave notice to terminate that agreement with results which have not been pleasant to contemplate. Now by the provisions of article IX in this agreement to which I point with, I hope, not too great pride, such contingencies are provided for. It is our earnest hope and confident belief that with an arrangement such as this our relations with the great sister dominion of Australia will be placed upon a permanent basis. Whenever slight differences arise which become so acute as to make it desirable that we shall no longer continue to treat one particular item as an item under the agreement, we may for the moment terminate the provisions of the agreement with regard to that item, and when we adjust our difficulties the agreement will continue with full force and effect.

I think it will be found that the provisions of this agreement with respect to the newsprint and the lumber industry, and also with respect to other matters to which reference will be made, are peculiarly acceptable to this country at this particular time. We will offer the bill confirming it for first reading at as early a date as is convenient, and meantime I am giving notice to-night to that effect. Hon. gentlemen will find a copy of the agreement with the first page only of the bill that deals with the confirmation of it. We could get only two hundred copies printed this morning, but our own people can defer securing their copies until my hon. friends opposite are provided for.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—560a. Woven fabrics wholly or in part of silk, not to contain wool, not including fabrics in chief part by weight of artificial silk, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 27½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 40 per cent; general tariff, 45 per cent; and, per lineal yard: intermediate tariff, 10 cents; general tariff, 10 cents.

Mr. YOUNG: In this case there is an ad valorem duty of 45 per cent plus a specific duty of 10 cents per lineal yard. What does that figure out at?

Mr. BENNETT: It depends on the value of the importation and the weight. I should like to say very frankly to the committee that this item represents a deliberate effort to maintain the silk industry. There are several small silk plants in Canada. They are manufacturing, I think, as economically and efficiently as any industries in this country. They have a substantial capital investment and in the very nature of things give employment to a large number of people as compared with the entire value of the product. I have reason to believe that the interests largely concerned in the success of similar enterprises in the United States have substantial stock holdings in these enterprises. I am further advised, and I am certain from my investigations, that under existing conditions they could put their product into this country and stop the activities of our mills. I have on my desk samples of the products of both the mills south of us and in Canada and of those in other countries. The mill at Louiseville, Quebec, is one of the industries to which I refer; that is not wholly, but in part, common ownership. There are others similarly situated, and after hearing what had to be said and investigating the matter as fully as possible, having regard to the apparent effort on the part of those who had substantial inventories in other countries to find here, if possible, a market, we concluded that it was desirable to maintain this industry, for reasons that I think are fairly apparent. The action indicated by the item in the tariff is the action which we believe will serve that purpose.

Mr. SANDERSON: What were the importations last year and from what countries?

Mr. BENNETT: The importations were 8,240,000 yards, valued at $4,366,000, of which $1,731,000 worth came from the United States and nearly $1,500,000 from Japan.

Mr. YOUNG: If I understood the Prime Minister aright he has revealed a most amazing situation. We have been told that it is desirable so to adjust our tariff that American manufacturers will establish branch factories in this country. Now we are told that certain American manufacturers who have established branch factories in Canada for the manufacture of silk will close them unless we raise our tariff still higher and allow them to make a still greater profit from their Canadian factories, out of the pockets of the Canadian people, to be taken to the United States. That is an amazing situation. I do not think we should tolerate it for one moment—to induce factories to come here by a high tariff, and then have them tell us that unless we give them a higher tariff they will close down and throw their workmen out of employment. I should like to ask the Prime Minister how many people are employed in the factories; what is the total wage bill; what percentage of the product represents wage costs; what is the duty he expects to lose by shutting out these products, and any other information which will give us a clear understanding of what this will cost us.

Mr. BENNETT: Might I ask the hon. gentleman to be good enough to read from his book the answer to the questions he has asked?

Mr. YOUNG: I only have some notes here which I jotted down while my right hon. friend was talking.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman has the information.

Mr. YOUNG: Where?

Mr. BENNETT: Right beside him, as I understand it.

Mr. YOUNG: No, I have not.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought my hon. friend told me he had it. I have not the information that has been requested; I did not undertake to prepare it with respect to all the industries in Canada. But my hon. friend did not quite follow me. I did not say they controlled the industry, but that they had an interest in it, and that they also had an industry in the United States. There are several thousand people employed in the industry in Canada, scattered over the two provinces of Ontario and Quebec. I have not before me at the moment the exact number, nor have I brought other information with me, because we are dealing with only one phase of the industry, not the whole of it. If it is desired, the item could stand until the information is forthcoming.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think it would be well if we had that information, because to my mind this is one of the very extravagant increases in this schedule, amounting to almost 100 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Depending on the value.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In the cheaper lines of silk it runs to approximately 100 per cent. There are mills already established under the existing protection, and I fail to understand the necessity for this very drastic increase in tariff. I should like to know how many people are employed in this industry.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall be quite content to have the item stand. Perhaps my hon. friend has that information before him, in his brief.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, I have not.

Mr. BENNETT: I can get it for the industry as a whole. I am sure the hon. gentleman understands that it cannot be segregated.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are asking for the information having to do with that part of the silk industry covered by this drastic increase.

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot give the information in respect to the portion of the industry covered by this item, but with respect to the silk industry as a whole, last year the silk production in this country was valued at in the vicinity of $12,000,000, speaking from memory. This is an exceptional condition now prevailing; it is really an emergency. I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman has said; the rate is very high as compared with the present rate, but I may tell my hon. friend what one of the gentlemen who came to us said to me about it. He said, "I am in this business in the United States in a very large way. My people have a small interest in Canada, only in one place. In the United States we have taken steps to prevent the importation of these goods by rates of 55, 60 and 65 per cent, and unless some action is taken, with our surplus inventories in the United States your mere dumping duty will not be sufficient to shut out these goods." Of course there are very large importations from countries other than the United States. After the matter was very carefully gone into it was realized that a specific duty was necessary in addition to an ad valorem duty, unless we imposed an ad valorem duty that seemed out of all proportion to what such a duty should be. Those are the facts of the matter, as it stands.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): So you are putting on a specific duty in order to deceive the people and not let them know the cost?

Mr. BENNETT: No, to give them knowledge.

Mr. YOUNG: Did I understand my right hon. friend to say that this was an American who came with this information?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, he said he came from New York.

Mr. YOUNG: And he asked that the Canadian duty be raised?

Mr. BENNETT: No, he presented the situation as it was. He did not ask for an increase in the duty; he put it in this way, that he had confidence in the intelligence of the Canadian people who desired to protect this industry from destruction, and I am inclined to think he was right.

Mr. YOUNG: This American is very much interested in Canadian industry.

Mr. BENNETT: No, he said quite frankly what I afterwards found to be true. I might correct my hon. friend's statement in regard to the money being made, because this industry has not yet made money. This gentleman told me he would make much more money if he were able to supply Canadian requirements from his mills in the United States, and it did not require very much arithmetic to see why that should be so. But, having made an investment here, not in his own company but in a stock investment which is rather widely held, he and his associates believed that the Canadian people would be interested in knowing what was the situation; from other sources I took the trouble to verify his statements, and this is the result. I hardly expected that it would commend itself to my hon. friend, but I still believe that in this time of stress we cannot afford to let that industry, employing several thousand people, suffer. One of the people who came to me represented a plant in the Welland district near St. Catharines, I believe, and he made the position perfectly clear. The other application, as I say, was from this gentleman from New York. He did not come with any group of people; he simply came up on the train and said, "Here is the position as to costs, and here is our position as to sales. We would be better off financially if we could supply the Canadian market from our American plants." I saw at once the force of that argument, because they could keep their large plants going to capacity, and would be much better off in that way. We chose this course.

Mr. YOUNG: My right hon. friend says this gentleman told him that he would make more money by supplying the Canadian market from his American factories, but he knew perfectly well that if the tariff were lowered so that the American product could enter, the products of factories in France, Germany and other countries could enter also. He wanted high protection so his Canadian branch factory could enjoy a monopoly.

Mr. BENNETT: He has not a monopoly, and I am sure my hon. friend knows that. There is no relation between the Welland plant and the other plant mentioned; they are competitors. One of the real objections urged against this tariff was what I daresay my hon. friend saw in the newspapers, that we had too many silk factories in Canada, that competition had grown too keen, and that they could not expect to make much money because ten million people could not absorb the products of the number of mills there are in this country. That was the position taken by some people. I put to my hon. friend the converse of the position which he took.

Mr. YOUNG: Let us accept that statement; let us say there are too many factories in Canada to have all their products absorbed by the Canadian people. What is the remedy? There is only one; that is to reduce production costs to the point where these products can be exported in order to capture some of the world market.

Mr. BENNETT: Our best hope of capturing some of the world market is to have a market at home. We shall capture some of the world market, as we have done in a small way, but we cannot hope to do so extensively unless we can produce something at unit rates of cost comparable with those of competing countries. As matters now stand, I think my hon. friend will agree that unless some such action as this is taken we shall certainly not have a silk industry in Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If with the duty at present in force we cannot have a silk industry in Canada, then it seems to me it is a pretty expensive luxury.

Mr. BENNETT: Under present economic conditions, with distress sales all over the country, I should like the committee to understand my view of the situation. Every business man opposite me, if he will take the trouble to investigate, will arrive at exactly the conclusion I have reached. This is an age, not of competition in production but of competition in reducing inventories; and in the effort to reduce inventories prices have been disregarded and commodities offered on a basis not heretofore thought possible. Now we have to conclude what action we shall take, not starting at the very threshold of these undertakings, but facing the fact that the undertakings are with us. For instance, the silk industry was not established last fall, nor the fall before that. It has existed in Canada for many years, having been slowly developed. Whether hon. gentlemen opposite or we ourselves, facing the issue to-day, would decide upon developing a silk industry in Canada, I cannot answer. I am sure some hon. gentlemen opposite would say it was not desirable; I am sure some of us on this side would say the same. But the fact is that the industry is here; the investment has been made.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have the raw product for rayon silk.

Mr. BENNETT: That is a separate thing. In this industry we had last year a production amounting to $12,000,000, and under the tariff of 1928, $10,000,000. I put to the committee the question I had to ask myself, and the only answer I could give was that I was not prepared to see the industry destroyed. I ask one question further: What action may I take in this emergent condition as will ensure the maintenance of the industry without permitting exploitation? What the committee sees before it is about as reasonable as we can do under the circumstances, high though it looks. I actually had in my desk—I should not care to say where they came from—samples from various countries, and the fact is that the price at which one of these articles, similar to one produced in this country, can be produced abroad represents just 50 per cent of what it costs to produce here.

Mr. HANBURY: Does not the dumping clause take care of that?

Mr. BENNETT: No. I asked myself that very question. The hon. gentleman is a man of business, and I could point out to him many cases in which the dumping clause will not effect the purpose we have in mind. That is why we put in force the section to which I referred the other day. I know of no other way to save the situation in the present emergency. This is not being done for the sake of doing it. If I thought there was any other method by which it could be done, my colleagues and I would not take this course. But because we can see no other way we are bound to proceed as we are doing. Not that we might choose to create this industry if we had the power to determine that. But the industry is here and I am not prepared to take the responsibility of seeing it destroyed.

Mr. YOUNG: Perhaps I may tell the Prime Minister what information we should like to have. We want to have the total investment in Canada,—

Mr. BENNETT: That might be difficult to get.

Mr. YOUNG: —the number of employees, the salaries and wages paid, the cost of raw material, the percentage of the total product paid in wages, total production, total imports, duty collected, and the number of factories which are under American control.

Mr. BENNETT: With respect to the last question, I am afraid I cannot satisfy the hon. gentleman's laudable curiosity. I observe that the questions he has put are in the sequence in which they appear in the last year book. I shall therefore endeavour to transfer to a sheet of paper the information contained in the year book and read it to the committee.

Mr. VENIOT: Does this discussion relate to the silk industry as a whole?

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend from Gloucester will perhaps have heard the observation of the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) that the rayon industry is entirely different; and the celanese industry depends on the chemical action of certain acids on cotton and wood. The experiments now being carried on at Drummondville and in the United States seem to indicate the possibility at an early date of treating wood in such a way that it may take the place of cotton. I believe the experiments have been reasonably successful and that we may soon expect wood properly treated chemically to be the raw material of both rayon and celanese. This item refers to what might be called the silk industry as distinguished from the artificial silk industry. My remarks had reference to an industry the raw material for which is imported.

Mr. VENIOT: There appeared in La Presse of Saturday, May 2, an interview with Mr. Brupbacher, manager of the Brupbacher Silk Mills, Limited, Valleyfield. Mr. Brupbacher said:

> A just protection established on a basis of equity cannot but help all industries of all countries. Canada will lose nothing by continuing this principle.

He goes on to give data with regard to this industry in Canada:

> The rapid expansion of the silk industry in Canada during the last eight years constitutes one of the major points of the economic development of our country. In 1922 Canada had seven factories. In 1928 this number reached twenty-two. The capital invested increased from $4,618,448 to $28,278,656. Our factory is the youngest in Canada.

This is one of the factories for the establishment of which credit was given to the new tariff. As a matter of fact, its construction began in May 1930, at the time the Dunning budget was introduced. According to this authority on silk manufacture in Canada, under a moderate tariff the silk industry has succeeded. In seven years it has increased its invested capital from nearly $5,000,000 to a little over $28,000,000. This gentleman, who is one of the founders of the silk industry in Canada, is certainly not asking for greater protection. It might be well to consider that.

Mr. BENNETT: Nothing could more clearly demonstrate the difficulty of the situation than the item which the hon. member has just read, a copy of which is on the files in the department. I said to the committee, what any hon. member can abundantly satisfy himself upon, that there was no break in domestic prices, with respect to many of the inventories of goods such as this, until as a matter of fact very recently. This is what happens in every crisis.

Mr. VENIOT: This was in May, 1931.

Mr. BENNETT: The crisis has occurred in Europe and there comes a time when the peak is reached and there is either a breaking up or an improvement. The position I desire to make clear to this committee is one I would like hon. members opposite, especially the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) to look into between now and to-morrow in order to satisfy themselves of what I have said. The inventories held by the silk and allied concerns were very considerable. Most of these companies did not believe that the economic crisis through which the world was passing would reach anything like the acute stage it has reached at the present time. They held on hoping against hope that they would not be compelled to sacrifice the price of their domestic production, but alas there came a time when other countries would not absorb their surplus production at any price, and the price of inventories dropped As a matter of fact the situation in May was not anything like it is in July, and in July it is worse than it was last month. The resolutions of which I will give notice tonight contain specific modifications; I only wish I did not have to take this action, but I am convinced as to the necessity.

Mr. VENIOT: The right hon. member states that this extremely high duty is being placed upon this commodity in order to meet an emergency which has arisen since May. How does he expect to meet the situation if the emergency disappears during the next four or five months?

Mr. BENNETT: Under the general statute we have the right to reduce duties.

Mr. VENIOT: I know that.

Mr. BENNETT: And that action has been taken before. If it were not that I and my colleagues were convinced of the necessity, the time of the committee would not be taken up in this regard. I do not blame any party for the condition which exists, but I believe the duty is cast upon the government to see that this industry is not destroyed. The provisions of the law are such that we cannot increase a duty by order in council, but reduction can be made. I commend this to the committee.

Mr. VENIOT: There is no other method of meeting this emergency?

Mr. BENNETT: Prices for duty could be fixed. That would be exercising the third power I mentioned a few days ago, which was vested in the executive by the legislation of last fall. Hon. members opposite have, not unfairly, criticized that form of action—

Mr. VENIOT: It is the law.

Mr. BENNETT: It is a form of the law which we will use as little as possible.

Mr. YOUNG: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: I say that to my hon. friend. If it were not for my firm belief as to the necessity, it would not be there, but being there we will use it as little as possible. I and my colleagues felt that the proper place to deal with this matter was in this committee. We felt that the committee should be told the exact position and be asked for its judgment.

Mr. VENIOT: The budget was submitted on June 1, and these various items were part of the budget. The emergency referred to by the right hon. gentleman did not exist on June 1.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, yes, it did.

Mr. VENIOT: There may have been some threat of it, but there certainly was no such emergency on June 1 when the budget was submitted. There was no such emergency existing at the time the interview to which I referred took place, and no change occurred between that time and the introduction of the budget on June 1. I am not convinced that the right hon. gentleman is correct when he says that this high tariff has been put into effect in order to meet an emergency.

Mr. BENNETT: In any event the item is to stand.

Mr. YOUNG: The right hon. gentleman has stated that our silk manufacturers, thinking the depression had reached the bottom and that prices would not go down any lower, held their goods off the market in the hope of being able to realize higher prices.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say the manufacturers in Canada; I said out of Canada.

Mr. YOUNG: Not in Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: I tried to make it clear that the manufacturers in other countries had enormous inventories which they are now attempting to push into this country or any other country in which it would be possible to gain entry for their goods. I ask my hon. friend to interview any merchant who has to do with these matters and find out what his experience has been during the last six weeks. My hon. friend's information is my information.

Mr. YOUNG: Would my right hon. friend tell the committee whether the Canadian manufacturers had large inventories?

Mr. BENNETT: I have asked that the item should stand in consequence of what the hon. member said.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Could the minister give the committee an idea of the range of prices of fabrics included in this item?

Mr. BENNETT: My recollection is that it runs from 40 cents per yard, or perhaps a little less, up to something like $5 per yard.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It strikes me that a duty of 10 cents per lineal yard on a silk selling for 40 cents per yard is altogether out of proportion to the same duty on silk selling at $5 per yard. There is a 25 per cent duty plus a 45 per cent duty, a total of 70 per cent which the poor person has to pay when buying a fabric costing 40 cents per yard as against the same duty per yard which is paid by the fortunate person able to pay $5 per yard for the fabric he purchases. It seems to me unfair that in one case the duty should be ten times as much as in the other.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, this committee is fertile in resource and I would ask it what suggestion it has to make in order to deal with the facts which I have outlined and which the committee can verify for itself, member for member. What suggestion has any hon. member to make with respect to a specific duty in addition to the ad valorem duty? The first suggestion was to apply the duty by weight; it was found that that would not work out. The next suggestion was to apply it according to the fineness of the texture of the fabric, as is the case with some of the woollen items; that was rejected. The next suggestion was to take length as the standard or yardstick; that one has been adopted. If the committee can suggest a better one, I hasten to assure it that I shall endeavour in anyway in my power to see that it is adopted.

Mr. BROWN: Is there any necessity for adopting a specific duty?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; in view of the circumstances to which I have alluded, I see no other way of dealing with the matter.

Mr. SENN: Before the textile items are all put through, I should like to place before the committee the condition of another branch of the textile industry, namely, the knitted goods industry. When the duty was raised last fall on different classes of textiles, there is no doubt this was a great benefit to various branches of the industry. As an example I may say that my Liberal opponent in the last campaign is engaged in the textile industry and at the time of the election that industry was working four days a week and short hours. The last I have heard about it is that since the duty was raised last fall, it is working twenty-four hours a day and six days in the week. That, however, is not the case with the knitted goods industry. When the duty was raised on other branches of the industry last fall, owing to the provisions of the French treaty it was impossible to accord the same treatment to the knitted goods industry. Schedule D of the French treaty sets the duty on knitted goods at 25 per cent and because of that it prevents any increase in the British preferential rate, as the rate on British goods cannot, of course, be any higher than that on similar foreign goods. In addition to that it prevents any increase in the tariff on this class of goods from some twenty-one other countries which enjoy the privileges of the French treaty. These countries include Japan and Czechoslovakia. The last available figures which I have for imports of this class of goods are as follows, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1930:

Country	Amounts
United Kingdom	$1,815,000
All countries	2,916,000
France	110,000

As the amount imported from France is only $110,000, the provision of the French treaty setting the duty at 25 per cent is of no immediate advantage to France, because only a very limited amount comes from that country, but at the same time is a very great disadvantage to the Canadian industry and to Canadian workers.

The artificial silk knitted industry is in the same situation as that of other knitted goods. Artificial silk yarns are coming into Canada to-day at a higher rate of duty than artificial silk knitted goods. For that reason it is increasingly difficult for the knitted goods industry to operate and carry on. I think in justice to the knitted goods industry some change should be made that would make it possible for the present administration to accord the same treatment to that portion of the textile industry as is being accorded to every other part of it.

Item stands.

Customs tariff—569c. Hat braids, of a class or kind not made in Canada, whether woven, knitted or plaited, not exceeding four inches in width, imported for use exclusively in the manufacture of hat bodies or shapes, but not for use in the ornamentation or trimming of such bodies or shapes, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tari, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—578. Regalia, badges and belts of all kinds, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 27½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 45 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—589. Charcoal, per ton: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, $7.50; general tariff, $7.50.

Mr. BENNETT: Purely as an administrative matter, and to remove any possible doubt, I wish to add to this item the words "from wood."

Mr. RHODES: I move that amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—597. Pianofortes and organs: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Provided, that when imported under the intermediate or general tariff the duty shall be not less than, each: British preferential tariff, . . .; intermediate tariff, $75; general tariff, $75.

Mr. YOUNG: I notice there is a duty of 30 per cent under the general tariff, with a minimum of $75. That is to say, if a piano valued at $200 enters Canada, the duty would be $60, but there is a special provision which says that it must be not less than $75. That is another way of saying that the cheaper piano shall carry a higher rate of duty than the more expensive one. In that there is a discrimination against the poorer people who cannot buy expensive instruments. In view of what the Prime Minister told us the other day regarding the situation in the piano industry, could he not do something for that industry by making pianos cheaper and thus bringing more buyers into the market?

Mr. BENNETT: To make pianos cheaper would mean that they would come from some other country than Canada. The hon. gentleman can satisfy himself, by going to the factories in Montreal or cities in Ontario, that the actual cost of the materials that enter into the production of a piano of the cheaper kind represents more money than the price at which, for the reasons I indicated a few minutes ago, they are now being offered for importation into Canada. I wonder if the hon. gentleman realizes that pianos are not dearer in Canada; they have become very much cheaper in the last few years. Of course there is a class of piano, the concert grand, that is highly expensive, costing thousands of dollars. We imported some of them last year from Germany. We have imported them from the United States. One of them made in Philadelphia has had a reputation for almost a century now. There is one of the same type made in New York state. What one might call a piano of general use is one that is being sold at a reasonable price in this country.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): A cottage piano.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but recently they have been dumped into this country at a price which we cannot possibly meet. The piano people waited upon the government; they produced evidence of the cost in their own factories, and I have no hesitation in saying to hon. gentlemen that they will be glad to show them their methods of production. These factories are not nearly as active as they were before the radio came into general use.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is that not the cause of a large part of their difficulty?

Mr. BENNETT: As I said to my hon. friend the other day, I do not desire to minimize that. After all, however, $75, is as the committee will realize, 30 per cent on $250, and on the basis of reasonable value for the commodity offered, I think the committee will say that a reasonable price for the production of pianos would not be less than $250.

Mr. YOUNG: In Canada a fairly good piano would cost from $500 to $700.

Mr. BENNETT: Less than that.

Mr. YOUNG: My right hon. friend could not get a piano he would be any more than proud of for $700. A fairly good radio costs about $200. If a $200 radio is displacing a $600 or $700 piano the only possible way for the piano to gain ground is to find some means of reducing the price. Every measure taken to raise the prices of the piano places it under a still greater handicap as compared with the radio.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff.—597a. Musical instruments of all kinds, n.o.p.; phonographs, graphophones, gramophones and finished parts thereof, including cylinders and records therefor; and mechanical piano and organ players: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—604. Belting leather in butts or bends; sole leather; and all leather further finished than tanned, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—605. Leather produced from East India tanned kip, uncoloured, when imported by manufacturers of boots and shoes for use exclusively in lining boots and shoes, in their own factories; genuine reptile-leathers: British preferential tariff, 12½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: In connection with this item the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) will move an amendment to clarify a difficulty concerning colour, which was raised by some hon. members opposite. The amendment will read as follows:

605. Leather produced from East India tanned kip, uncoloured, or coloured other than black, when imported for use exclusively in lining boots and shoes; genuine reptile leathers: British preferential tariff, 12½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Having had occasion to buy leather boots undoubtedly hon. members will know what kip is. Some difficulty arose with respect to the classification of this commodity, to overcome which the amendment adds the words "other than black." There is a special item with respect to the exception. The rates are not changed in the present amendment.

Mr. BROWN: How is sole leather affected by these changes?

Mr. BENNETT: Sole leather is dealt with by item 604, which has just passed. However if the hon. member desires information I shall be pleased to give it.

Mr. BROWN: In view of the fact that the exports of sole leather are enormously larger than the imports, an increase of that kind would seem to be altogether unnecessary. The imports are trifling as compared with the exports.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose the hon. member knows, as I should have stated with respect to another item this afternoon, that the action of our friends to the south has shut us out of that market entirely, with the result that we have to look to other markets.

Mr. BROWN: We are not entirely shut out.

Mr. BENNETT: Not entirely, but largely, since last year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What is the necessity for the change in the definition of the item?

Mr. BENNETT: The amendment adds the words "other than black," owing to the fact that the black leather is used for another purpose. There is no restriction of the use to which it might be put, because it is of a different quality and may be used for the manufacture of the boots and shoes themselves as distinguished from the coloured kip which is used only for linings. The change may appear to be very slight, but it is one of importance.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The black leather carries a higher duty?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. RHODES: I move in accordance with the terms of the amendment outlined by the Prime Minister.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—606. Leather produced from East India tanned kip, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent; and, per square foot: British preferential tariff, 4 cents; intermediate tariff, 4 cents; general tariff, 4 cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—607. Glove leathers, when imported by manufacturers of gloves for use, exclusively in manufacturing gloves, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent; provided, that the governor in council may, when satisfied that the glove leathers specified in this item are being produced in Canada in quantity and quality sufficient for Canadian requirements, by order in council direct that there be substituted for this tariff item the following:

Glove leathers, when imported by manufacturers of gloves, for use exclusively in manufacturing gloves, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) to move an amendment. If hon. members will look at the printed item they will at once discern the difference. The amendment is as follows:

607. Leather, when imported by manufacturers of gloves or leather clothing, for use exclusively in manufacturing gloves or leather clothing, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent; provided, that the governor in council may, when satisfied that the leather specified in this item is being produced in Canada in quantity and quality sufficient for Canadian requirements, by order in council direct that there be substituted for this tariff item the following:

Leather, when imported by manufacturers of gloves or leather clothing, for use exclusively in manufacturing gloves or leather clothing, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

The increase applies only in the general tariff. Undoubtedly the committee is familiar with the fact that leather is being used extensively in the manufacture of clothing. The rates are low, being only 5 per cent, 7½ per cent and 10 per cent. If we began to produce sufficient leather for that purpose the general tariff rate would be increased to 20 per cent rather than 10 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: I move in accordance with the amendment read by the Prime Minister.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I should like to know the meaning of the words "produced in Canada" as they appear in the item. I do not know whether the fact I am about to relate affects leathers which enter into the manufacture of gloves, but many other leathers finished in Canada are shipped in from various outside countries. Does the Prime Minister mean by the words "produced in Canada" that the skins shall be Canadian skins, or that they shall be shipped in from outside and finished in Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member has been following the items, I am sure, with great care, and he will observe that the classifications have been rather narrow due to the fact that leather is a commodity of so many grades and qualities that necessarily attention must be paid not only to qualities but also to colours, as we noticed with respect to kip. The words "produced in Canada" mean that the leather shall be produced in Canada as specified by the item, namely from hides or various other things of that sort, some of which might have been imported. In the case of imported leathers duties would be payable.

Mr. YOUNG: What is the object in charging 10 per cent under the general rate until a factory is established in Canada, at which time the rate jumps to 20 per cent, while there is no change in the British preferential or intermediate tariffs?

Mr. BENNETT: Because the competition will come from countries other than those covered by the British preferential and the intermediate tariff. In addition to that, the hon. gentleman will remember that we have endeavoured in this tariff revision not to make any changes in the British preference rates, and I think there are only one or two changes in the whole list. The reason was obvious. I think if my hon. friend will take a little trouble to look at the exporting countries, he will have no difficulty in seeing that this increase will become essential to maintain our industry if we develop it to the extent indicated by the proviso.

Mr. YOUNG: Will this change make any difference in the raw material of these glove makers?

Mr. BENNETT: We think not, and they have agreed not to increase the price.

Mr. YOUNG: They cannot have agreed not to increase the price; they are not in existence yet.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend is hardly correct there. For instance, I recall one plant at Kitchener where glove leather is being produced, and there is another in Quebec.

Item agreed to.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I beg to move that the following item be inserted in resolution No. 2 of June 1, 1931:

Customs tariff—607a. Leather, not further finished than tanned, in whole hides, in grains or splits, when imported by manufacturers of upholstering leathers, for use exclusively in the manufacture of upholstering leathers, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent. Provided, that the governor in council may, when satisfied that the leather specified in this item is being produced in Canada in quantity and quality sufficient for Canadian requirements, by order in council direct that this tariff item be repealed.

Mr. BENNETT: I need hardly say to the committee that this is the raw material for upholstery leather, and it constitutes a substantial industry in the province of Quebec.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—608. Leather not further finished than tanned, and skins, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—609. Belting, of leather: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—611b. Leather garments, lined or unlined: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 35 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In this case the manufacturer not only gets his raw product at a moderate rate of duty, but the duty on his manufactured product is increased to 35 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: I think I can satisfy my hon. friend from West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart). In reality it is a reduction. This is the first time the item has appeared in the tariff. In administration it was found that the leather garment lined with cotton paid a duty on that basis, lined with wool it paid a duty on that basis, and lined with silk it paid duty on that basis; in other words, the linings determined the rates of duty. The rates now proposed are really a reduction. What is pointed out by my hon. friend is for the purpose of assisting the industry with respect to the importation of the raw material.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I can never understand why the consumer when he gets the raw material for his own use has to pay a higher duty than the manufacturer, particularly when I find the finished product carries an excessive rate of duty. Presumably there will not be any importation of the finished article because the high duty is imposed to prevent that, and the whole difference goes into the pockets of the manufacturer.

Mr. BENNETT: The argument which the hon. gentleman has now made is one with which I am not unfamiliar, and members of the committee who read the reports of the tariff advisory board will find that argument frequently presented on behalf of the consumers league. It is an argument that should be directed to all countries which impose tariffs to develop their manufacturing industries. My hon. friend will find that from the very inception of tariffs in this country that general principle has been observed. I take it the desire was to stimulate industrial development, it not being thought likely that consumers would purchase in such quantities as to make them factors in such a market. I suppose other reasons might be given; for instance, drawbacks and rebates have been granted because export trade is conducted on a free trade basis. Great Britain has always allowed rebates or drawbacks, the United States has done so, and so have we.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I can well understand the use of drawbacks because the manufacture of the goods exported gives employment to our own people, and consequently the country is benefited. But where the discrimination is against our own people, as it must be in cases of this kind, I have never been able to see the virtue of such treatment.

Mr. BENNETT: It is universal in its application.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: There is a point in connection with tariffs that applies very clearly to this particular item. I wonder whether it would be possible without destroying the tariff structure itself, to establish a graduated duty on such articles as leather garments, and so forth, in order to induce the manufacturer to use Canadian raw material—hides, wool and other things. In that way it would pass on in some degree to the producer of raw material the benefit derived by the manufacturer from these tariffs. I think that might be a matter worthy of some consideration.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman has referred to something which, frankly, I should like to see applied, and I think he will find that one item in this tariff is a frank effort to apply it. In connection with automobiles my hon. friend will see, as we proceed to the end, an effort to apply that principle. It is a sound principle; there should be some incentive given to increase the use of our Canadian-produced materials, and I agree that it would be desirable to increase the use of the raw materials of this country in connection with the granting of tariff protection with respect to articles produced partly from domestic and partly from imported materials. As we deal with the item having to do with automobiles, not this evening but to-morrow, I would ask the hon. gentleman to remind me of this point, because I think he will find there an application in a small but effective way of the principle to which he refers.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am glad to hear what the right hon. gentleman has said; I have often thought of that, particularly in connection with wool and leather goods, where a certain percentage of our own raw hides and wool could be used. For years our raw hides have been simply a drug on the market, thrown into a fence corner and allowed to rot. Certainly I would like to see that principle carried further and applied to some of the raw materials produced by our farmers, in order to give them a little taste of tariff advantage in that way.

Mr. YOUNG: I should be very sorry to see the suggestion of my hon. friend from Red Deer carried into effect. If we try to compel our Canadian manufacturers of leather goods to use Canadian leather, whether or not it suits their purposes, the people who buy those leather goods will suffer for it. In Canada we raise certain animals; their hides are useful for certain purposes, but not for other purposes. My hon. friend is a farmer. I wonder how he would like to buy a set of harness made from the side of a steer which grows heavy, thick hair, as compared to a set of harness made from the hide of a Texas steer which does not grow much hair at all.

He would find that it made a big difference in the quality of the harness.

In regard to the question of the ex-Minister of the Interior as to why there should be a higher rate on the finished article than on the half-finished article, I have just one observation to make. In the manufacturing process only about 50 per cent or less of the cost represents raw material, and when a manufacturer pays 20 per cent duty on his raw material he is paying that 20 per cent duty on half his production cost. But in selling his goods, if he gets only 20 per cent it is on the whole of his production cost. He has an advtange there, and when you give him a higher rate, say a rate of 35 per cent which you give here as against 20 per cent, you are giving him a double advantage which I think is quite unnecessary.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I might say that the remarks of my hon. friend from Weyburn are perfectly correct, but those facts were so obvious that I thought it hardly worth while referring to them. I quite realize that there are many of our raw materials which are not suited for certain classes of work, and naturally I intended this to apply only where it could properly apply, to those raw materials which can be used.

Mr. BENNETT: I think perhaps the hon. gentleman did not hear me read item 607a, which contains this proviso:

> Provided, that the governor in council may, when satisfied that the leather specified in this item is being produced in Canada in quantity and quality sufficient for Canadian requirements by order in council direct that this tariff item be repealed.

That is the amended item, and that meets the very suggestion which, despite what my hon. friend from Weyburn says, I think is a sound one, that we should encourage the production within this country, at the earliest possible moment, of those which enter into the production of the finished article with which we are dealing.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The system of granting rebates of duty which has grown up in this country during the last few years has been one of the curses of the system of protection.

An hon. MEMBER: One of the curses?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes; there may be others as well, but if this could be corrected—and I understand from the Prime Minister he is on the way to correcting it—I certainly will approve of what he is trying to do. I do not believe in the rebate system. I believe in protection, and I think if we can do away with the rebate proposition we will accomplish something worth while.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—613. Manufactures of leather, including manufactures of rawhide, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 35 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—624. Bead ornaments, and ornaments of alabaster, spar, amber, terra cotta or composition; fans of all kinds; statues and statuettes of any material: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—624a. Dolls and toys of all kinds: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 40 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—651. Buttons of all kinds covered or not, n.o.p., including recognition buttons, and cuff or collar buttons: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 35 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent; and, per gross: British preferential tariff, 5 cents; intermediate tariff, 5 cents; general tariff, 5 cents.

Mr. YOUNG: Here again we have the dual rate, the ad valorem and the specific. I would suggest to the Prime Minister that wherever this occurs he come to the house prepared to tell us what this will amount to, or else reduce it to an ad valorem basis.

Mr. BENNETT: I think neither the Minister of Finance nor anyone else, without taking a very much longer time that I think he has at his disposal, could give the answers to all the questions and suggestions of the hon. gentleman. I may say to him that of all tariff items we have considered to-night there was no item concerning which such vigorous representations were made as was the case in connection with the items affecting buttons. We do manufacture buttons in Canada, and I suppose the hon. gentleman is as well aware as anyone of the raw material from which buttons are manufactured. But notwithstanding that we have been endeavouring to build up an industry of that kind in Canada, last year we brought in about $400,000 worth of buttons, and the change in the rates is from 22½ per cent, 30 per cent and 35 per cent to 20 per cent, 35 per cent and 35 per cent, and 5 cents a gross. I am bound to say to the committee that these are not the rates for which we were asked. We were invited to provide a much higher rate, and very representative gentlemen gave us instances of the difficulties they have experienced in connection with their industry. I believe there is at least one factory in the constituency represented by my hon. friend the former Minister of National Revenue. Investigations indicated that there was no doubt as to the soundness of their position with respect to the present danger to that industry, and this rate certainly does not provide an opportunity for exploitation. They still contend that the 5 cents a gross and the ad valorem rate will not enable them to meet the competition which is confronting them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Where do these buttons come from principally, Germany?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, and from Japan. We imported $185,000 worth from Japan.

Mr. TOTZKE: Has the Prime Minister assurances from these manufacturers that prices will not be put up?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, they gave us an assurance about prices.

Mr. SANDERSON: How many button factories are there in Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: I am afraid I cannot answer that question. I am moderately certain of five, but beyond that I cannot go.

Mr. YOUNG: Is this increase traceable to the investigation made before the former tariff board?

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend has found the reports of the proceedings before the tariff board very valuable literature, and if he will once more read the evidence he will realize how changed conditions are. This rate is slightly different from that which was requested at that time. But neither the rate then asked for nor any other was granted. As the hon. gentleman will recall, there was no decision upon the application.

Mr. YOUNG: The factories did not go out of business.

Mr. BENNETT: They did not and I hope they never will. I hope they will continue to function.

Mr. YOUNG: Nothing was done and they did not go out of business.

Mr. BENNETT: I need scarcely remind the hon. gentleman that such a statement can be made once too often. He will remember that the oldest book which we read records the story of those who declined to listen. There would be no flood, they said; and for a long time there was no flood. Then the deluge came and that was the end of them.

Mr. HANBURY: And then Noah built a tariff wall.

Mr. BENNETT: No, but he built an ark, and he pitched it within and without so as to make it watertight in order that those within might be saved. In this instance we are trying at least to make sure that those within our ark, Canada, shall be saved from destruction.

Mr. HANBURY: And the Australian treaty is the dove of peace.

Mr. BENNETT: That helps.

Item agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Item 651a.

Mr. BENNETT: No, that involves buttons manufactured from particular materials. There are one or two questions I want to speak to with respect to that, and it can stand.

Customs tariff—653. Brushes of all kinds: British preferential tariff, 17½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 40 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—655. Pens, penholders and rulers, of all kinds: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Mr. GIROUARD: What was the value of imports from Great Britain last year under item 655 and item 655a?

Mr. BENNETT: Under item 655, pens, penholders and rulers of all kinds, the imports were $1,126,000, of which $280,000 came from Great Britain and $580,000 from the United States.

Mr. GIROUARD: Has the Prime Minister received applications for an increased tariff against goods coming from Great Britain under that item?

Mr. BENNETT: We have not changed the rates at all. This is only the residue of the pencil item. The figures I gave included pencils, with respect to which there is no separate item. I did not quite catch the question in the first instance. My first answer dealt with all items.

Mr. BROWN: I presume that next year we shall not have on our desks Eagle pencils manufactured in the United States.

Mr. BENNETT: I commend the hon. gentleman's strong spirit of patriotism, and I may inform him that we have just received a sample of the Eagle pencil manufactured in Canada. I shall write the manufacturers to see whether the hon. gentleman can be given a sample so that he may take back to his constituents some of the first fruits of his repentance.

Mr. GIROUARD: Has the Prime Minister received applications from the Eagle Pencil Company, the Dixon Pencil Company of Newmarket, and the Venus Pencil Company, for an increased tariff against goods coming from Great Britain under this item?

Mr. BENNETT: We received representations from the manufacturers for increased protection against Great Britain, and we advised them, in view of the statements made in connection with the present revision, that we felt we were not in a position to comply with the request, because increases have taken place only in two or three instances and they were incidental to the general purposes for which the revision was made.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—655a. Lead pencils and crayons: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 35 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—665a. Fuse, not metallic; British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—670. Grinding wheels, stones or blocks, manufactured by the bonding together of either natural or artificial abrasives; manufactures of emery or of artificial abrasives, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—682a. Net floats of aluminum or glass of a class or kind not made in Canada, for use only in deep sea or lake fishing, not to include floats for sportsmen's use: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—711. All goods not enumerated in this schedule as subject to any other rate of duty, and not otherwise declared free of duty, and not being goods the importation whereof is by law prohibited; provided that duty shall not be deemed to be provided for by this item upon dutiable goods mentioned as "n.o.p." in any preceding tariff item: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. YOUNG: This is the basket item—"all goods not enumerated." I do not not know who particularly would be interested in this item. Can the Prime Minister say where the requests came from?

Mr. BENNETT: I should say there were no fewer than two score and ten applications, and if my memory does not deceive me, probably sixty. It was general throughout the country. The hon. gentleman will realize why the applications were made. This is an item of such importance that under present economic conditions if it were left at the rates at present provided the effect might be disastrous with respect to many matters that fall within it. In order to maintain some measure of uniformity between other items and this one the rates have been raised as indicated, from 17½ per cent to 25 per cent. Coming specifically within the item are certain drugs and preparations on which an increase was sought, and there are a great many items of that kind.

Mr. YOUNG: The position is something like this. The manufacturer of a certain kind of drug finds that his product falls into the basket and he asks for an increase in the whole basket in order that he may obtain a higher rate for his particular line. And that happened with sixty other commodities. Requests were made for increases on sixty different articles and the Prime Minister responds by increasing everything in the basket.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman does violence to his own understanding when he speaks that way. He does not mean to put it in that form. The item in its present form has stood for about twenty years, and although there has been a very general change with respect to most other items, especially during the present stress and strain, this item has remained without a change during all that period. It is therefore out of line with the other tariff items. My hon. friend will agree that, if we are to apply to items that have been enumerated the general principles to which I have alluded in the course of the discussion, the basket item, to be in line with the others, should be increased at least from 17½ per cent to 25 per cent. Of the importations under this item, $1,500,000 came from Great Britain and $18,250,000 from the United States. The total is much greater, but those are the largest items. The old rate was 15 per cent, 17½ per cent and 17½ per cent. It is not usual that the intermediate and general tariffs should be the same, but twenty years ago there was practically no protection such as that to which I alluded during the discussion this afternoon, and so this item has been increased to be brought in line with the other items of the tariff. Although my hon. friend may disagree with the general principle of our tariff legislation, I think he will agree that there is in this increase a general recognition of the necessity of maintaining some relative proportion between the various items which go to make up the tariff as a whole.

Item agreed to.

DRAWBACKS

3. Resolved, that schedule B to the customs tariff, being chapter forty-four of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, as amended by chapter seventeen of the Acts of 1928, chapter thirty-nine of the Acts of 1929, chapter thirteen of the Acts of 1930 (first session) and chapter three of the Acts of 1930 (second session), and by order in council, be amended by striking thereout tariff items 1050 and 1055, and by repealing order in council, P.C. 1201, dated the seventh day of June, one thousand nine hundred and ten, and by inserting the following items, enumerations and rates of drawback of customs duties in said schedule B:—

Customs tariff—1050. Sugar, viz.: raw sugar produced in the British Empire, or sugar refined in Canada from raw sugars produced in the British Empire.

When used in the manufacture of wine in Canada—payable as drawback, 99 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: When would the old law cease to be effective? A wine manufacturer may have in his storehouse sugar which he bought over one year ago; he has paid the duty and under the old law he was entitled to a drawback when he used the sugar. What provision is made for a case of this kind?

Mr. BENNETT: The item went into force on June 1, and it follows that the drawback of 99 per cent is referable to raw sugar produced in the British Empire or to sugar refined in Canada from raw sugars produced in the British Empire, when used in the manufacture of wine in Canada. Do I understand that the sugar in question was not produced in the British Empire?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Under the old law it did not need to be produced in the British Empire, and the manufacturer would be entitled to a rebate when he used it

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know that I can add anything to what appears in the item. If sugar is bought in Cuba at prices destructive to the maintenance of the industry in the West Indies or other British countries, and the tariff is changed to make the rebate applicable only to British sugars, the importer of the Cuban sugar would lose the rebate. That is the position under the statute.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: These sugars were bought months ago, and the old law has been in effect for a number of years. The manufacturer must look ahead in making his purchases.

Mr. BENNETT: The drawback is not earned until the sugar is used. The amount of drawback earned last year amounted to $276,000.

Mr. YOUNG: Do the wineries use raw sugar in the making of wine?

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think it would be unfair to say that they could, but they have not been using raw sugar of late.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Is this drawback given because the commodity produced covers a heavy excise tax?

Mr. BENNETT: It is a gallonage tax.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It seems to me that there should be some redress in a matter of this kind. These people found a law on the statute book. They took the ordinary business precautions and purchased a quantity of sugar to be used in accordance with the law. The law is changed, and what are they to do with their sugar?

Mr. BENNETT: Sell it and buy British sugar.

Mr. CHAPLIN: He has been told that if he does that he will be subject to the dumping duty.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The hon. member will have to vote Grit next time.

Mr. CHAPLIN: This is a serious matter. It is not a matter amounting to 75 cents or $1.50, it involves hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of sugar. These men are told that they must not sell this sugar. They have paid the duty but they cannot obtain any rebate, and they have been told that if they sell the sugar it will be subject to a dumping duty.

Mr. BENNETT: If I import goods and sell them there is no possibility of the dumping duty being applied.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am glad to hear that.

Mr. BENNETT I am advised that no such statement was ever authorized by the department. It is competent for any Canadian importer to sell goods and he will not be subject to the dump. He may sell them for less than what he paid, but the dumping duty will not apply.

An hon. MEMBER: Not if the goods are in the country.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I never said that the department had issued such a statement; what I did say was that the refiners had threatened this man that if he sold his sugar he would be taxed with the dumping duty.

Mr. REID: Last year when the producers of strawberries could not dispose of their crop, the government of British Columbia advanced the price of the sugar necessary to process these strawberries in cold storage. Has the minister considered sugar used for this purpose.

Mr. BENNETT: This item would not cover that. I would like to pay a tribute to the hon. gentleman's resourcefulness as this is the first time the suggestion has been offered.

Mr. REID: The government of British Columbia advanced the price of the sugar to the growers.

Mr. BENNETT: I will take up this matter with the departmental officials between now and to-morrow.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

AUSTRALIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I should like to table a copy of the trade agreement between Canada and Australia, in order that it may be printed in the votes and proceedings of to-morrow.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I was going to ask my right hon. friend whether it would be possible to give us the Australian rates,—preferential, intermediate and general, opposite the items which appear in the schedule of the agreement. Although the schedule states that the British preferential rate, for example, is the rate that will govern, we do not know what the British preferential rate in Australia is.

Mr. BENNETT: We are being advised daily of changes in the Australian tariff rates. One came in on Friday. Their tariff is engaging their attention at present, but to the extent to which that information may be available, my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) tells me that it will be given.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It has been pointed out to me that article II, section 1, paragraph (b) reads:

> To all other goods the produce or manufacture of Canada, when imported into Australia, the benefits of the British preferential tariff.

What are the items that would be included under that section?

Mr. STEVENS: All the items that are not set forth in the schedule.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Could the minister give us a list of them?

Mr. STEVENS: There are, I think, some 416 items. I shall endeavour to-morrow to give what the right hon. gentleman asks for but it may not be strictly accurate because the Australian parliament is now engaged in a revision of its tariff.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We shall be satisfied with whatever reservations the minister wishes to make so long as we get such information as may be available.

Mr. STEVENS: We shall do the best we can.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 10.58 p.m.

Tuesday, July 14, 1931.

The house met at three o'clock.

CANADIAN NATIONALS ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) if he intends to proceed with Bill No. 24, an act to define Canadian nationals?

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from St. James (Mr. Rinfret) very courteously gave me notice that he intended to ask this question, and I desire to make the following statement:

I regret that we will be unable to proceed, during the present session, with Bill No. 24, entitled "An Act to define Canadian nationals and to provide for loss or renunciation of Canadian nationality."

I think that the underlying principles of that bill meet with the general approval of this house. There is an increasing demand for such legislation from all Canadian religious organizations, which have missionaries in foreign countries; from Canadian commercial and industrial companies, which maintain agencies in other countries for the development of their overseas trade; and from representatives and agents of the dominion and provincial governments, who, necessarily, reside outside of Canada. They all desire that provision should be made in our statutes whereby they and their families while residing abroad, may retain their status as Canadian nationals, and maintain their permanent domicile in Canada, though temporarily resident abroad while representing in other countries Canada and Canadian institutions.

Obviously, they also desire to have and to maintain the right for themselves and their families to return from time to time to Canada to visit their principals and their relatives and their friends, and, when deemed desirable, to resume their permanent residence in Canada.

To assure Canadian nationals of this right will require certain amendments and modifications of our existing immigration laws. Inasmuch as the Minister of Immigration is now constantly engaged as chairman of the special committee which is investigating the Beauharnois project, it has been deemed expedient to postpone, for this session, further consideration of Bill No. 24, which has passed its second reading in this house, in the hope that some satisfactory compromise may be reached in respect of the amendments of the existing immigration laws, which should be made to protect fully the rights and interests of Canadian nationals and their families who are resident abroad and who may desire to resume their permanent domicile in Canada.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, might I inquire of the government when certain returns for which I have asked will be brought down? On May 11 an order was passed by this house for the production of certain documents with regard to an ice-breaker. I drew attention some time ago to the fact that this return had not been brought down. Also on June 1 an order was passed for the production of documents relating to the public building at Pointe-au-Pic in the county of Charlevoix. Also on June 18 an order was passed for the production of lists of all the officials and employees on the various ships or ice-breakers under the control of the Department of Marine in the province of Quebec, and a similar order was passed with respect to vessels under the control of the Department of Public Works. I should like to have these returns as soon as possible.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): A return was ordered by the house recently with reference to a report by Mr. Little concerning the dismissal of Mr. Graham. The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) said I was not likely to get as full a report perhaps as I wished. I should like to know as soon as possible just what will be the nature of the report to be furnished.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The report was, in part, an interdepartmental report and as such would not be brought down. So far as the balance of it is concerned, I understand it is in course of preparation.

Perhaps I should say to the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) that one of the returns he refers to necessitates an enormous amount of correspondence in order to get the names of all the persons employed in various parts of the public service throughout the province of Quebec. This information cannot be collected in a day or a week. As perhaps the hon. member realizes, the number of returns asked for this session has been so very great as compared with previous sessions that the staffs of the various departments have been very much overworked. However, I will make further inquiries with respect to these returns.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, yesterday you advised me that the clerk was looking into the matter relating to some questions that I desired to place on the order paper and that a decision would be arrived at in a very short time. I do not see those questions in votes and proceedings to-day, and I should like to be definitely informed on what authority my questions have not been placed on the order paper.

AUSTRALIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday evening I promised to table a copy of the Australian tariff; I do so now. I submit, however, that it would not be serving any very useful purpose to have it printed in full. I am tabling it for the consideration of the members interested. There are a few tabulations showing certain of the changes as far as we know; also a statement of primage duties and a statement showing certain prohibitions, which are all internal matters. I am having tabulated a list of the items affected by the schedules of the treaty, showing the comparisons, but that is not yet ready. At the moment I am drawing the attention of the house to what seems to me the inadvisability of printing the whole of this tariff.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will the other tabulation be printed?

Mr. STEVENS: If the house so desires.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

RETIREMENT OF COLONEL STARNES AND APPOINTMENT OF MAJOR-GENERAL MACBRIEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of general public interest, I desire to mention the retirement of Colonel Starnes as Commissioner in Command of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The retirement is to become effective on the first of August next.

As most hon. members are aware, Colonel Starnes has had a very long and a very active career in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He joined the force as a young man of twenty-two years of age and has now served continuously over a period of forty-six years. Since 1923 he has been in command of the force. He has at all times given most excellent and most efficient service.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would also announce that his position has been filled by the appointment of Major-General MacBrien, to become effective on the first day of August next. General MacBrien commenced his military career as a constable in the North-west Mounted Police. At the outbreak of the war in South Africa he joined the Canadian forces and served throughout that campaign, and at the conclusion of peace he spent about six years in the organization of the South African constabulary, which was organized very largely upon the lines of the mounted police in Canada. He has in that way had a great deal of experience in regard to police work. Subsequently he entered the permanent force of Canada and rose to a very high position as a military commander during the late war, and is to-day undoubtedly one of the most outstanding military men that this country has produced. General MacBrien will become commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on the first of August next.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to associate myself with the words of the hon. Minister of Justice in praise of Colonel Starnes, the retiring commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. His career should certainly serve as an example to all the servants of the crown and of the country. In my relations with him as head of the department for a few years, I may say that I have never met a more assiduous, devoted and loyal officer. I have no comment to make with regard to General MacBrien, who certainly is a fine officer and who has served his country faithfully; I have no doubt he will discharge his new functions with dignity and ability. My only reservation is that the system of promotion in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police might perhaps have been observed.

FARM AND UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

PURCHASE OF WHEAT TO BE GROUND INTO FLOUR FOR SALE AND DISTRIBUTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not improbable that hon. members, especially those who reside in western Canada, may be interested to know that the government, in view of the situation which obtains, has concluded to direct the purchase of 2,000,000 bushels of wheat, which will be ground into flour by the mills of the west, thereby enabling the municipalities and those requiring assistance to obtain flour at a very reasonable price. Where distribution has to be made, we will be in a position to do so without delay. This will produce approximately 450,000 barrels of flour, and the bran and shorts remaining also will be available if so desired. I mention this at once in order that hon. members who may be receiving communications from municipalities and other parts of the west may be able to reassure those who are so directly affected by the drought conditions in their provinces.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): May I ask whether this will be distributed in the usual way, by the municipal authorities?

Mr. BENNETT: That has not been settled as yet.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): I regret that the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) is not in his seat; I should like to direct to him a question to which he may possibly reply at a later sitting of the house. I notice that several newspapers are carrying advertisements of the Montreal harbour commission very similar to those issued early this year and last fall by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) in connection with the Canada first policy. I should like to ask the government, or the Minister of Marine, whether these advertisements have been authorized by his department, and whether they are to be continued.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF RESOLUTIONS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): If the committee will resume its deliberations on section 2, now that the Australian schedule has been presented to the house, we will be able to proceed continuously, I think, with the exception of one item, and clear up the various items to which attention was directed last evening.

Customs tariff—6. Live hogs, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 1¼ cents; general tariff, 3 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: The committee will perhaps recall that since some of the items between item 2 and item 48 were affected by the Australian treaty items, we began with item 54a. We are now taking up the items from item 2 to item 54a, and the item under consideration is item 6.

Mr. BROWN: I notice that the general tariff is raised from 1½ cents to 3 cents. What is the reason for this increase?

Mr. BENNETT: The request for this increase came from western Canada; various members representing western constituencies, as well as others interested in farming operations, believed that the tariff did not afford them that protection from unfair competition which is so desirable, and the item is being changed to free, 1¼ cents and 3 cents.

Mr. BROWN: I presume the demand for protection is based on the supposition that large numbers of hogs have been shipped into Canada; I imagine that is the only basis there could be for such a request. It would be very interesting for the committee to know just exactly what has been the importation of live hogs, and I have taken the trouble to look up the statistics covering importations from the United States for the last four years. I have assumed that live hogs imported would run about 200 pounds per hog; the figures are given in pounds, and therefore I have taken them on that basis. In 1928 there were 2,802 pounds imported, which would mean about 14 hogs. It is true that in 1929 the imports were a little larger; they amounted to 110,885 pounds, which at 200 pounds per hog would mean about 550 or a few more hogs. In 1930 the imports were 2,523 pounds, or 12 hogs, or a little more, and in 1931, 7,649 pounds, or about 38 hogs. That is to say, during the last four years, on this basis, the numbers would be 38, 14, 550 and 12. So that even the greatest number, 550, is so insignificant in comparison with the hogs produced in Canada that it is hardly worth while using printers' ink to make the change. Sometimes these demands for increases in duties come from people who do not know the facts, and I am sure that the representatives of western agricultural interests who made this demand for an increased duty on live hogs were simply not aware of the situation. This is not a matter of producing more revenue; it is not even a question of giving protection to the farmers. The increase is made simply for the purpose of fooling the farmers who allow themselves to be fooled. Let me point out to western members who are so anxious to have so-called protection on agricultural products that this is something which appears to give protection to the farmer while in reality it affords no protection at all. What do 12 hogs amount to, or 14, or even 550, the greatest number in the last four years, in comparison with the large number of hogs produced and slaughtered in Canada? This is in reality a duty to fool the farmers.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): In the same category as Dunning's cut flowers.

Mr. YOUNG: Are any of these hogs brought in for breeding purposes?

Mr. BENNETT: That is not covered by the item.

Mr. BROWN: I have the exports of live hogs to the United States, and the comparison is interesting. In this case the figures were given in numbers of animals shipped. In 1928 the number was 116,581; in 1929, 6,758; in 1930, 1,793, and in 1931, 244. It is true that the exports to the United States have gone down of late years but they still exceed the amount of imports from that country.

Mr. BENNETT: Hon. members of this house, who perhaps are as well able to judge as the hon. gentleman, were very much concerned over a situation that had rapidly developed owing to the economic stress in the United States. The number of swine produced there has increased by leaps and bounds during the last few months. The hon. gentleman knows that, for he keeps himself thoroughly familiar with what transpires. It will be remembered that only a few years ago we sold nearly $3,000,000 worth of swine products to the United States. That market entirely disappeared by reason of the Smoot-Hawley tariff, and this is a precautionary measure. It can do no harm, and at least it will do some good; because if the occasion arises, as apparently it may, we shall have provided against it. Let me ask the hon. gentleman, does he suggest that hogs should be free?

Mr. BROWN: It would make little difference.

Mr. BENNETT: Does he suggest that the item should be free?

Mr. BROWN: I have no objection.

Mr. BENNETT: That is all that is wanted.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—2. Domestic fowls, pure-bred, for the improvement of stock, homing or messenger pigeons, and pheasants: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. BENNETT: This item was passed but the fact is not recorded.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—7. Meats, fresh, n.o.p.:
(a) beef and veal, per pound: British preferential tariff, 4 cents; intermediate tariff, 6 cents; general tariff, 8 cents;
(b) lamb and mutton, per pound: British preferential tariff, 4 cents; intermediate tariff, 6 cents; general tariff, 8 cents;
(c) n.o.p., per pound: British preferential tariff, 2 cents; intermediate tariff, 2½ cents; general tariff, 5 cents.

Mr. YOUNG: The old rates were 2 cents, 2½ cents, and 3½ cents. The new rates are 4 cents, 6 cents and 8 cents. Why this large increase?

Mr. BENNETT: This is the first item that is reflected in the Australian treaty; tariff item No. 7, meats, fresh, beef and veal, 3 cents per pound, lamb and mutton, 3 cents per pound; canned meats, poultry or game extracts being included in another item. My hon. friend will see that there is a difference between the two items of beef and veal of 1 cent in the British preference, 3 cents in the intermediate and 5 cents in the general tariff. Our treaty proposed to give them that preference, and this item has been raised accordingly.

Mr. YOUNG: The preferential rate is higher than it was. The duty has been raised against Australia.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. STEVENS: The Australian rate is 3 cents.

Mr. YOUNG: I have not the same figure; what I have is 4 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: That was before the new treaty. Last night I pointed out that this was the first item, and if the hon. gentleman will look at schedule A, page 6, he will see the item.

Mr. YOUNG: In the September budget we had, in the beef and veal item, rates of 2 cents, 2½ cents and 6 cents. We have now 3 cents where formerly it was 2 cents.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The Australian treaty in regard to meats gave a rate of ½ cent per pound.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): One cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I have it before me; it is ½ cent.

Mr. BENNETT: I suggest that the hon. gentleman turn to the present Australian agreement. He had an erroneous figure a moment ago.

Mr. YOUNG: The present rate is 3 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. YOUNG: The old rates, after the September budget came in, were 2 cents, 2½ cents and 6 cents under the general. Now, 3 cents is higher than either 2 cents or 2½ cents.

Mr. BENNETT: The new rates are 4, 6 and 8 to afford a preference of 1 cent to Australia under the British preference. To effect that purpose our rates were increased.

Mr. YOUNG: We raised our rates so that we could lower them again to Australia.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what the late Minister of Finance desired but was not permitted to do.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: How much fresh meat of this kind came last year from Australia under the old treaty?

Mr. BENNETT: Of beef and veal we imported 2,000,000 pounds odd under the former item, valued at $198,000. There came from New Zealand, 1,336,000 pounds and from the United States 382,000 pounds. The Australian item covers lamb and mutton, and the imports from that country amounted to 1,257,000 pounds.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: How much came in last year from the United States? My object in asking this question is to discover if any trade has been diverted.

Mr. BENNETT: Under the lamb and mutton item 393,000 pounds came in from the United States; under the beef and veal item, 382,000 pounds; fresh meats, not otherwise provided for, 1,063,000 pounds valued at $156,800, chiefly from the United States.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The effect of the treaty has been to divert some of this trade from the United States to Australia.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—8. Canned meats, poultry or game; extracts of meat and fluid beef, not medicated: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—9a. Quails, partridges, and squabs, dead or alive, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—9b. Rabbits, frozen, when imported exclusively for fox-breeding purposes: British preferential tariff, 12½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: This is a new item to meet the suggestion made by Australia, it being free under the Australian treaty.

Mr. COOTE: How is the department to decide that these rabbits are actually fed to foxes after being imported?

Mr. BENNETT: The department has to deal with many matters of this kind where the use to which the imported article is to be put is defined by the tariff. The regulations have met the situation heretofore in connection with defaulting.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—10. Meats, prepared or preserved, other than canned:
(a) bacon, hams, shoulders and other pork, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 1¼ cents; general tariff, 5 cents;
(b) n.o.p., per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 3 cents; general tariff, 6 cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—15. Beswax: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Representations in connection with this item have been made to the house. I have received letters from concerns in the province of Quebec which are interested in the manufacture of candles, in connection with which they use a certain amount of beeswax. Two of these letters I will read in the French language.

(Translation): J.-C. Frenette, of Quebec, has sent me the following letter, dated June 18, 1931:

Together with other candle manufacturers I wish to protest against this increase in this tariff item from 7½ to 20 per cent, on beeswax.

It is unnecessary to repeat the reasons given by my fellow-manufacturers, however, may I state that I entirely agree with their request not to alter the tariff, at least on beeswax imported by candle manufacturers. This protection of 20 per cent will in no way benefit beekeepers or wax-bleachers, because they cannot supply us with the special product required in our industry.

Trusting that the request of the candle manufacturers will be granted, I beg of you to accept my sincere thanks.

J.-C. Frenette,
(sgd.) I. Hardy.

J.-B. Lasnier, Inc., of Levis, is another company which manufactures candles and utilizes beeswax. This company contends that the proposed changes to the tariff would really be detrimental to its trade. The following letter was forwarded to me by this company on June 18, 1931:

We wish to protest, together with other candle manufacturers, against this uncalled for increase of 300 per cent in the tariff of beeswax, from 7½ per cent for the intermediary tariff, to 20 per cent for the general tariff, which changes have been in force since June 1, the date of the budget statement.

This increase probably made at the request of the Beekeepers Association of Canada, at the suggestion of the Ruddy Mfg. Co. of Brantford (Ontario) will in no way benefit this association or the Canadian wax-bleachers, and it will not have the results expected; namely, to oblige candle-makers to purchase their supply of beeswax in Canada; on the contrary it will hinder our industry which already has to compete with foreign industries and particularly those of the United States; it will bring about a proportional increase in the price of candles in Canada, and will the more accentuate this competition.

Our churches already much in need of money, and as a whole, the congregation already otherwise taxed, will have to meet this increase without any compensation forthcoming to whomsoever.

The candle manufacturers will continue to purchase their supplies from the same source, because they exclusively utilize pure beeswax, bleached by the sun and air, and that special product cannot be supplied to them by the Canadian beeswax bleachers, because the summer, being the only season when this operation can be carried on is too short, the changes in temperature too frequent and sudden, and therefore detrimental to this work. This exposes the wax-bleachers to great losses. The other bleaching processes, whether chemical, mechanical or electrical, principally the latter, used by the Ruddy Mfg. Co. has the great defect of extracting the fat ingredient which renders it unsuitable for the making of candles, a defect which we were able to ascertain because, with the hope of encouraging this new industry, we made purchases from this company. However, the poor results obtained from their products force us to discontinue placing further orders with this firm.

May we further add that the Ruddy Mfg. Co. take advantage of this tariff increase to unfairly raise their price by some cents per pound when the market for beeswax is down and does not seem to pick up.

We place these facts before you in the hope that the tariff will not be raised, at least in respect to beeswax, which is imported by candle manufacturers. France seems to be the country which lends itself best to the bleaching of beeswax by the sun and air and the tariff of 7½ per cent should not be changed.

Kindly accept our sincere thanks.

In view of these representations I think this item should not pass.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member in his presentation of this case has fallen far short of my expectations.

An hon. MEMBER: He always does.

Mr. BENNETT: I am rather surprised that he has not made in this committee the presentation of the case which some of his colleagues made by circulars which were sent throughout the province of Quebec. I am rather astounded that he has not seen fit to assert that my hand is against the church, as has been stated in the circulars. I am rather amazed that it has not been said that in enacting this section I was acting for the Imperial Oil and the Standard Oil companies. That was said in the circulars, so why was it not said here? I have before me the circular put out by my hon. friends opposite in which it has been indicated that the tax on beeswax was a direct effort on the part of this man Bennett to make it more difficult to conduct services in the church, and that the price of candles would be greatly increased by reason of his action.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I never signed that.

Mr. BENNETT: It was stated that my purpose was to improve the Imperial Oil and Standard Oil enterprises. Let me hasten to assure the committee that such is not the case. I fancy that very few people have been misled by such statements but I desire to avail myself of this opportunity—I thank my hon. friend for providing the opportunity—to make a denial to the committee. I cannot hope that the same publicity will be given to the denial as has been given to the unfounded statements, but one becomes accustomed to almost any form of attack. Imagine an attack as far fetched as to make such assertions when the beekeepers of Canada, in convention assembled, producing as they do very large quantities of wax, have suggested that they should be given a little more opportunity to carry on their business under fair competition. This industry has assumed great proportions and when we met their suggestions it was circulated amongst the confiding and faithful people that this action was being taken to strike a blow at the mother church.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I never said that.

Mr. BENNETT: That is politics as practised by my hon. friends opposite. This is one item in which an increase has been made in the British preferential tariff. The rates have been increased from free to 15 per cent, from 7½ to 20 per cent and from 10 to 20 per cent. The proportion of beeswax entering into the manufacture of candles is not very great. I think hon. members know something of the enormous development which has taken place in this industry. In looking over the figures of production a few weeks ago I was amazed to find that the industry has assumed great proportions in every province of Canada. In the province from whence I come the production of honey has reached a figure which a few years ago would have been thought impossible. It is so in all the provinces. The gentleman, Mr. Baillargeon, is a manufacturer of candles. He has communicated his position to the department. He gave evidence before the tariff advisory board in connection with an application for increased protection on candles. Perhaps the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) will recall the testimony and the application. We believe, in taking the course we have pursued, we have done something that will be of incalculable benefit to a very large number of people in every portion of every province of Canada; its application is not limited to one. I again assure my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) that when he replies to the communications that have been directed to him, he may give the most solemn assurance that there is no desire or intention on the part of that legendary figure, by name Bennett, that is being held up to the view of the confiding people of Quebec, in any way to interfere with the use of candles in churches, to increase their cost or to increase the profits of any refining company in the world.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: What was the importation of beeswax last year? I assume that this is a laudable attempt upon the part of the government to maintain a high standard of living amongst our Canadian working bees.

Mr. BENNETT: Importations to the value of $76,000.

Mr. PARENT: I have listened with great interest to the remarks of the Prime Minister about beeswax. The duty on this commodity has been increased 200 per cent under the intermediate tariff and 100 per cent under the general tariff. Under the old tariff schedule the general rate was 10 per cent whereas now it is 20 per cent. Beeswax is a raw product which is used in the manufacture of candles, but it has to be bleached before it is so used. It has been said that beeswax is mostly used in candle manufacturing. May I say that 60 per cent of the candles that are used in Canada are made of paraffin; 40 per cent with the proportion of 60 per cent of beeswax and the balance other products, such as paraffin and acid. In order to manufacture high class candles, the beeswax has to be bleached, and I have been informed that on account of climatic conditions beeswax cannot be properly bleached in this country. The chemical process of bleaching beeswax for candle making has not been a success, and it has not given any satisfaction. Therefore the candle manufacturers have to import their beeswax mostly from Europe. Two hundred thousand pounds have been imported from France and Belgium and 40,000 pounds from England.

Sixty per cent of the domestic production of beeswax is used, or I might say, re-used in the honey-making industry, so that whatever balance is offered on the market is far from being sufficient to meet the Canadian demand for beeswax for candle-making, and this is the reason why so much is imported. At present there is a tariff of 25 per cent on manufactured candles, and this has not been touched. If there is an increase in the tariff on beeswax which is one of the primary products to be used in the manufacture of candles, and if the tariff on manufactured candles is to remain as at present, what is going to be the result? It will most likely be that candles will be imported from the United States. There will be no protection whatever and in this way the industry of candle-making in this country will be greatly affected. Therefore the committee should decide that this tariff should not be increased because it will not benefit the honey industry and it will not benefit the candle-makers; the duty on manufactured candles remaining at 25 per cent, importation of the finished product will result. More than half a million dollars of capital is invested in the candle-making industry of Canada and therefore the old rate of duty of 10 per cent on beeswax should remain.

Mr. BENNETT: I might say to my hon. friend that it was the Honey Producers Association and the Beekeepers' Association, national organizations, that pressed for this. The duty on beeswax in the United States is 30 per cent.

Mr. PARENT: It may be that the honey producers might ask for some further protection so that they might be able to sell their products a little dearer, but have they proved that the bleaching of their beeswax has been successful in this country? It is acknowledged that owing to climatic conditions beeswax cannot be properly bleached in Canada in order to be used in making high quality candles to the satisfaction of the candle manufacturers, and as long as this raw product cannot be properly treated for use in making the finished product, I do not see that a higher tariff will in any way protect the honey industry.

Mr. COTNAM: I should like to inform the hon. gentleman that a good quality of bleached beeswax is being produced in the factory of the Ruddy Manufacturing Company in the city of Brantford.

Mr. PARENT: The Ruddy Manufacturing Company may have asked for protection, but I have under my hand letters which I shall read to the committee showing that since the duty has been increased, they have increased their price three cents per pound on beeswax. I have other letters from candle manufacturers stating that their product is not giving entire satisfaction. I did not want to mention this to the committee, but I have to do so in reply to the observations of the hon. member.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—16. Eggs in the shell, per dozen: British preferential tariff, 2 cents; intermediate tariff, 5 cents; general tariff, 10 cents.

Mr. REID: Why is it that eggs should be allowed under the Australian treaty to enter Canada free in the months of January and February? Those are the months in which we expect a high price in British Columbia.

Mr. STEVENS: The reason is that those are perhaps the two months which would least affect the egg producers of Canada.

This was one of the few things we could do to assist in the passing of this treaty, and it will not seriously affect the egg producers of this country.

Mr. REID: Will it be possible for Australia to dump eggs during those two months?

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. member may rely upon there being no dumping by Australia of their products in our market. They treated us last year with singular generosity with respect to matters of this kind, and the provisions of article IX of the treaty contemplate the maintenance of friendly relations that will prevent the possibility of friction arising in connection with just such matters as my hon. friend has mentioned. I think we can, if no untoward event occurs, look forward to the most friendly administration of this treaty, and the fact that article nine appears in the document is in itself some evidence that that is the purpose and intent of both parties.

Mr. NEILL: We are going to get into a somewhat complex situation, Mr. Chairman, if we are going to discuss the Australian treaty in connection with these items. I think it would be better to wait until the treaty is under consideration. But now that the subject has been introduced, might I say with regard to the remarks of the hon. member for New Westminster that when he used the word "dumping" perhaps he did not mean it in the legal sense. The Prime Minister said that there was nothing to prevent dumping under the treaty. As long as eggs can be brought in from Australia during the months of January and February—those are the flood months of production in Australia—there is nothing to prevent enormous quantities being brought in and put in cold storage, and that, of course, would affect our market the whole year around. But as I say, perhaps that had better be considered when the Australian treaty is before us. But certainly that point is there, unless of course, you are going to specify that eggs brought in during January and February are laid in the month of January and February, which it would be practically impossible to do. The Minister of Trade and Commerce says that those are the months in which eggs can be brought in with the least interference with the Canadian poultry keepers. But those are the very months in which our poultry keepers hope to make up the loss which they have sustained during the rest of the year. If it is possible during those two months to bring in eggs in unlimited quantities, it may be a serious blow to the egg producers in Canada. It will work along the same line as the duty on cracked corn and on alfalfa hay.

Mr. BARBER: Under the old treaty eggs came in from Australia free the year around

Mr. BENNETT: No dumping duty applied against them.

Mr. CAYLEY: What quantity of eggs came into Canada in January and February in 1930? I presume that most of them came in from the United States under the three cents tariff.

Mr. BENNETT: I have not that information by months, but by years, and I am happy to inform the hon. gentleman that the action that was taken last year has seriously affected imports. They have fallen to 158,000 dozen for 1931, as compared with 2,853,000 dozen the year before.

Mr. CAYLEY: Was that under the three cents tariff against the United States?

Mr. BENNETT: No, that was the total importation.

Mr. LUCAS: What was the importation, if any, of eggs from Australia last year?

Mr. BENNETT: Practically none.

Mr. NEILL: From what countries does the bulk of the eggs come in under the intermediate tariff, and in what quantities? That is the item that is being raised.

Mr. BENNETT: Of the total of 158,000 dozen imported, 113,000 dozen came from the United States.

Mr. NEILL: Under the intermediate tariff?

Mr. BENNETT: No, under the general tariff.

Mr. NEILL: What country sends the most in under the intermediate?

Mr. BENNETT: There are many countries shipping eggs into Canada, but there have been no imports amounting to any particular value or quantity, because of the 158,000 dozen, 113,000 dozen came from the United States under the general tariff.

Mr. NEILL: Then why the need for changing the intermediate item if there is no movement?

Mr. BENNETT: Because of the treaty.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—17. Cheese, when in packages weighing two pounds, each, or less, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty: British preferential tariff, 3 cents per pound; intermediate tariff, 7 cents per pound; general tariff, 7 cents per pound.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—20a. Butter produced from the cocoa bean: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 2 cents per pound; general tariff, 2 cents per pound.

Provided, that the governor in council may, when satisfied that cocoa butter is produced in Canada in quantity and quality sufficient to meet Canadian requirements, by order in council direct that there be substituted for this item in schedule A to the customs tariff, the following:

Butter produced from the cocoa bean: British preferential tariff, 3 cents per pound; intermediate tariff, 4 cents per pound; general tariff, 4 cents per pound.

From and after the publication of such order in council in the Canada Gazette, this item as it appears in said schedule at the time of the passing of this act shall be repealed and the provisions of the said tariff item as it appears in the last preceding subsection of this section shall be substituted therefor.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—28a. Tea, imported direct from the country of growth and production or purchased in the United Kingdom: British preferential tariff, 4 cents per pound; intermediate tariff, 8 cents per pound; general tariff, 8 cents per pound.

When in packages weighing five pounds, each, or less, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty.

Provided, that tea shall be entitled to entry under the British preferential tariff upon evidence satisfactory to the minister that such tea has been produced wholly in the British dominions, colonies or possessions, and not otherwise.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What is the reason for this increase?

Mr. BENNETT: There has been a decrease in reality with respect to part of it. There has been so much misapprehension that once more may I direct the attention of my hon. friend from St. James (Mr. Rinfret) to the literature which has been sent out in regard to tea in the province of Quebec? There are two tea items which it might be well to consider together. There is item 28a, dealing with tea imported direct, and 29a, dealing with tea not otherwise specified or provided for. Under the tariff as it stood prior to the first of June all tea in bulk imported direct from the place of production or from the United Kingdom entered under item 28a at the rate of British preferential free, intermediate nine cents per pound, and general ten cents per pound. The importations in 1931 were as follows: 52,703,000 pounds, of which 21,375,000 pounds came from Great Britain, 19,651,000 pounds from British India, 8,546,000 pounds from Ceylon, and approximately 2,500,000 pounds from Japan. It will be observed that all other tea, including bulk tea not imported direct, as well as all package tea of all kinds, entered under the former item 29a at a rate of 10 per cent under the British preference, and 10 per cent intermediate, and 10 per cent general, with an additional specific duty of 10 cents per pound under the British preferential, and the same rate under the intermediate and general tariff. That was the tariff before the 1st of June. There has been a change of items as will be observed from 28a and 29a, the basis of the division being directness of shipment or otherwise in the first instance. In other words, the new 28a will cover all direct shipments of tea and all United Kingdom teas, whether in bulk or in packages, with a proviso that when in packages weighing five pounds or less the weight of the package shall be included in determining the weight for duty. Similarly the new item 29a will cover all indirect shipments of teas whether in bulk or in packages, with a similar proviso with respect to the weight of the package. It will be observed that the rates have been changed under old item 28a from free, 9 cents and 10 cents per pound, to 4 cents, 8 cents and 8 cents per pound, with the qualification that I have just mentioned as to directness of shipment and as to bulk and package tea. It will be observed in connection with item 29a, dealing with tea very largely consumed in the province of Quebec, that there has been a removal of the 10 cents per pound specific duty provided for under the former item as it stood prior to the first of June. The 10 cent rate has been taken out and the 10, 10, 10 cents left.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—29a. Tea, n.o.p., per pound: British preferential tariff, 10 cents; intermediate tariff, 10 cents; general tariff, 10 cents.

When imported in packages weighing five pounds, each, or less, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—35. Hops, per pound: British preferential tariff, 8 cents; intermediate tariff, 16 cents; general tariff, 16 cents.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What is the importation of hops?

Mr. BENNETT: The importation last year was 2,746,000 pounds, valued for duty purposes at $408,000. Our exports for the same period amounted to about $48,000 in value. The production is largely limited to British Columbia, where last year it amounted to nearly 1,200,000 pounds.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—39. Starch, including corn starch, potato starch, potato flour and all preparations having the qualities of starch, the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty, per pound: British preferential tariff, 1 cent; intermediate tariff, 2 cents; general tariff, 2 cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—43a. Powdered milk, the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty, per pound: British preferential tariff, 2½ cents; intermediate tariff, 5 cents; general tariff, 5 cents.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: What are our imports of powdered milk?

Mr. BENNETT: We have no detailed statistics. An application has been made for an item defining powdered milk, powdered cream, powdered buttermilk and powdered skim milk, but it is too difficult in this first effort to deal with an item of this kind to attempt to make that separation having regard to administration. So far as we know powdered milk produced in this country last year had a value of about $1,240,000; condensed milk, $2,700,000; condensed skim milk about $575,000. The rate provided will apply to all these powdered milk products. This item appears in the tariff because of the strong representations made by the National Dairy Council, and at the moment all forms of powdered milk will be covered by the item. It may be possible as we progress that a separation can be made, but at the moment all those products are covered by the broad term "powdered milk."

Mr. SPEAKMAN: What is the value of the imports under that general heading?

Mr. BENNETT: Unfortunately there is no method by which to determine what they are. An effort was made by going over some of the invoices, but it was impossible to determine it with any degree of exactitude as it now stands; hereafter it will be.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—48. Peas, n.o.p., per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, ¾ cent; general tariff, 1 cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—62. Rice, uncleaned, unhulled or paddy: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

The governor in council, when satisfied that Australia can supply Canadian requirements, may by order in council, direct that there be substituted for tariff item 62 in schedule A of the customs tariff, and the enumeration of goods and the rates of duties of customs set opposite the said item in schedule A the following:

Customs tariff—62a. Rice, uncleaned, unhulled or paddy: British preferential tariff, 25 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

From and after the publication of such order in council in the Canada Gazette, tariff item 62 as it appears in the said schedule at the time of the publication of the said order shall be repealed and the provisions of tariff item 62a shall be substituted therefor.

Mr. BENNETT: If the committee will permit—and it is entirely for the committee to say—we will proceed now with the items of which I gave notice last night and which hon. gentlemen have before them in votes and proceedings. The first item will be No. 62, rice, uncleaned, unhulled or paddy. Hon. members will recall I said that until the Australian treaty had been tabled I might not properly go on with it. I think what this item means is abundantly clear from the mere reading of it. We are giving Australia this preference, and as and when they are able to supply our entire requirements—which they believe will be within a reasonable time—it is provided that the rate of duty will be 25 per cent.

Mr. YOUNG: If we bring in rice from any other source Australia will not have this preference?

Mr. BENNETT: There is no limitation on the importation, but obviously the commodity would be imported from Australia. Last year I explained to the committee that we brought in about 449,000 hundredweight and we paid for it about $1,100,000. The effect of this is merely to give that preference to Australia.

Mr. TOTZKE: From what countries were our chief importations?

Mr. BENNETT: The largest importation was from the United States.

Mr. COOTE: Does the department believe that Australia will furnish us with rice at the same price as we are paying now?

Mr. BENNETT: The Australians agreed not to raise the price.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: The next item arises out of the seed group, 76b, the item that I gave notice of yesterday.

Customs tariff—76b. Seeds, viz: Field, root, garden and other seeds, when in packages weighing one pound each, or less: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) raised this question yesterday, and I stated that a new item would deal with these small packages of seeds. This is the new item.

Mr. EULER: May I ask whether this includes bulbs, or is there a separate item?

Mr. BENNETT: There is a separate item.

Mr. EULER: Is there any change?

Mr. BENNETT: No, bulbs are not dealt with in this tariff schedule.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—95b. Passion fruit (passiflora edulis): British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: I need hardly say this is an Australian treaty item, which will be found in the votes and proceedings. This fruit is indigenous to Australia, where it has become a highly popular ingredient in the making of salads. That country is doing a very considerable export trade in this fruit. At the moment we cannot trace the imports, since there has been a change in rates under tariff item 96. This fruit is now given a separate classification at the rates indicated.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—99a. Plums or prunes, dried, unpitted, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 1 cent; general tariff, 1 cent. When in packages weighing 2 pounds each, or less, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty.

Customs tariff—99c. Raisins and dried currants, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 4 cents; general tariff, 4 cents. When in packages weighing 2 pounds each, or less, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty.

Mr. BENNETT: These items were permitted to stand yesterday. If the Australian treaty is referred to it will be seen that these two items should be taken together. So I will ask my hon. friend from Argenteuil to move a new item which will conform to the treaty.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I beg to move that the following be substituted for tariff item 99c, as contained in resolution No. 2 of June 1, 1931:

Customs tariff—99c. Raisins and dried currants:

(i) for a period of two years from the date on which the Australian trade treaty comes into force, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 4 cents; general tariff, 4 cents;

(ii) thereafter, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 3 cents; general tariff, 3 cents.

When in packages weighing two pounds, each, or less, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty.

Mr. BENNETT: I know the committee is being put to great inconvenience through this method of considering these items, but necessity has arisen because of the delay in receiving the treaty, a circumstance over which we had no control. I am greatly obliged for the courtesy of the committee in permitting us to proceed in this way.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We understand, then, that for the first two years after the Australian trade treaty is in effect, the intermediate and general tariffs will each be four cents, and that after the two-year period the tariffs will be each three cents?

Mr. BENNETT: That is correct.

Amendment agreed to.

Customs tariff—99g. Apricots, nectarines, pears and peaches, dried, desiccated, evaporated or dehydrated: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: It will be observed that there is no change in the rates, but the item is new to meet the provisions of the treaty. Last year our imports were approximately 1,627,000 pounds, of which 1,300,000 pounds, in round figures, came from the United States. That is with reference to dried apricots. We imported 119,000 pounds from Great Britain, and 184,000 pounds from British South Africa. Our imports of dried peaches were 1,253,000 pounds, of which 1,187,000 pounds came from the United States. We cannot give in detail the figures of production in Canada of these dried and evaporated fruits, but the Australians feel quite confident that under this preference they will be able to supply a substantial part of our requirements.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I very much fear we will find considerably increased prices in the process.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): There is nothing said about pineapples; is anything being done about that fruit?

Mr. BENNETT: We are coming to that in a moment.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—101. Oranges, per cubic foot: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 35 cents; general tariff, 35 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: This is an item which yesterday I asked to have stand. As I explained yesterday this is a new item, oranges and lemons heretofore being linked together. The imports were 2,406,000 boxes, valued at about $9,500,000, coming chiefly from the United States. During the fiscal year 1930 the total value of our imports was $9,368,000 in round figures, of which $8,680,000 came from the United States, $361,000 from Japan and $211,000 from the United Kingdom. During the fiscal year 1931 there was a distinct development of trade with Australia and British South Africa, a considerable quantity of oranges from both countries being available last fall and winter in retail fruit shops both in western and eastern Canada. Perhaps it would be interesting to the committee to learn something of the imports for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1931, together with the places of origin:

Country	Boxes	Value
Great Britain	83,437	$ 373,700
Australia	25,189	97,475
Bermuda	75	225
British South Africa	17,589	64,324
British Guiana	30	66
British West Indies	807	2,447
Hong Kong	476	1,789
Jamaica	15,580	70,499
Palestine	179	348
Trinidad	101	236
Brazil	10,829	34,011
China	1	3
Honduras	346	2,072
Italy	41,171	147,519
Japan	104,219	319,698
Mexico	1,795	3,141
Portuguese Africa	1,130	5,487
Spain	23,261	88,141
United States	2,080,218	8,281,741

The separate classification is for the purpose of securing, if possible, a larger proportion of our requirements from empire sources, and the item in the treaty, it will be observed, is predicated upon that assumption.

Mr. MORAND: Is there a common standard of measurement throughout the world? I see that oranges of various kinds are coming in in bags. How is the value for duty purposes arrived at?

Mr. BENNETT: The measurement is by cubic feet and I understand that there is no difficulty in administration.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It seems to me that the measurement of oranges by cubic feet is going to present some difficulty to the department. I understand that at present if a box of oranges spreads out a little the customs officers insist on bringing it out even in order to get the cubic measurement. Evidently it will be a difficult matter to handle. Has the minister made provision for the manufacturers of jams and marmalade? Has any consideration been given to them in this matter?

Mr. YOUNG: Tariffs do not increase prices.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am not asking the hon. gentleman; I am asking the Prime Minister. I did not know we had a new minister over there.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) thinks he could at least make a better job of it than some of us, and under the circumstances he must be permitted to have his say. There is no special provision with regard to oranges such as the hon. member refers to. The yardstick of measurement is one that has been in vogue for a long time and the Australian treaty negotiators regarded it as preferable. As it was a standard with which we were well acquainted, the government, on the advice of its technicians, accepted it.

Mr. NEILL: Subsection 2 of resolution No. 17 provides that in the event of anyone taking advantage of the tariff the duty will be removed. Under that provision are oranges regarded as an agricultural product?

Mr. BENNETT: That provision applies to Canadian products.

Mr. BROWN: Is there any prospect that in the immediate future Australia or other British dominions will be able to supply our needs?

Mr. BENNETT: I gave the figures to indicate the extent to which in recent years various parts of the empire have been able to produce oranges. The information at hand is that South Africa is making very great strides in this regard. Our Australian friends were quite confident of their ability very soon to meet the difficulties of production now that they have some assurance of a continuing market; and from Australia and South Africa and Jamaica, to say nothing of other possessions in the West Indies and of that part of South Africa known as Rhodesia, the indications lead us to believe that a very substantial part of our requirements will be met within a reasonably short time.

Mr. BROWN: I have here an extract from the Jamaica Gleaner, the concluding part of which reads:

But it is scarcely to be imagined that the Canadian consumer would take kindly to any increase in the price of his oranges. Our output of oranges will have to show at least the probability of development on a large scale before the preference in Canada can come within the bounds of the practical.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What will be the duty on the ordinary box of oranges?

Mr. BENNETT: Approximately 70 or 75 cents.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am entirely in accord with the idea of inter-empire trade. But having sampled most of the oranges produced in the empire, I think it must be admitted that the oranges coming from British countries do not compare with the California fruit. It seems that we are adding a substantial duty on those oranges. Perhaps we may look upon California oranges as a luxury, and I am not averse to taxing luxuries. But we have been importing between eight and nine millions of these oranges annually and the duty does seem to be considerable. Naturally people have been buying the better quality of oranges, the prices having been almost equal. Now undoubtedly these oranges coming from the United States will be classed as a luxury fruit. I am inclined to think that the revenue will not suffer materially, because people will pay the extra 87 cents a box, or whatever it is, to secure the superior quality.

Mr. BENNETT: It is about 70 cents a box.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is a tax on a food which is becoming more and more popular every year in Canada. I have heard the importation of oranges criticized on the ground that it affected the consumption of Canadian apples, but I fail to see the necessity for such an increase in the duty to provide a market for imports from the empire. If empire countries produced the same quality of fruit then no one would suffer materially, because I think there is ample competition within the empire to regulate prices.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: How many oranges are there in a box?

Mr. BENNETT: It ranges from 180 to 320.

Mr. EULER: What would be the duty in ad valorem terms?

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps other hon. gentlemen could answer that more readily than I.

Mr. EULER: It is rather difficult to judge intelligently from the specific rate just what the increase in price will be.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Spence) informs me that the value of a case varies from $5 to $5.50; the duty would range from 70 to 75 cents, so that it would amount practically to 12 or 14 per cent. I would say to the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) that during recent years South Africa, including Rhodesia has so increased the export of oranges to Great Britain that last year they sent nearly one million cases. I took some little trouble to investigate the condition of the fruit coming in from South Africa, and I was amazed at what I found. Modern cold storage facilities have been so improved as to permit the ready movement of fruit provided the proper precooling steps are taken when the fruit is taken from the tree. The fruit is delivered to the ships under conditions which have become a matter of scientific exactitude and it is delivered in London in an amazingly good condition. I did not think it possible that fruit could travel such great distances and be delivered in such excellent condition, but it is being done.

Our friends in Australia, as do our friends in South Africa, feel quite confident that with the opening of this market to them so freely, they can develop a considerable trade. Orange juice has to some extent been superseded by tomato juice in the public use, but it is believed that this step will result in a great stimulus to the production of oranges within the empire and greatly improve our present position. Those who have tasted the oranges produced in the West Indies and Jamaica are amazed at the quality. I do not pose as an expert, but I do say that the oranges from South Africa appear to me to be as fine in flavour as any I have been privileged to eat. This is an experiment in the development of empire trade, and from the evidence before us, we believe it will be successful.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am going to surprise my right hon. friend by telling him that I am in favour of this item.

Mr. BENNETT: That statement delights me greatly but it makes me fear that I may be wrong.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I had the opportunity of investigating the possibilities of increasing not only the quantity but the quality of oranges imported from Jamaica. A policy of this kind will certainly encourage inter-empire trade. It is the same principle under which we raised the duty by 50 cents per stem on bananas under the general tariff, and allowed them to come in free under the British preferential.

Mr. CHAPLIN: This is the only item in the whole tariff where a duty is charged on the cubic measurement. This commodity will come in mostly by vessel, and ocean rates are charged on that basis. We should have a box which could be calculated easily as to cubic measurement, or else we will have trouble with the people handling these goods. There will not be two customs officials in the whole country who will measure these boxes alike, and a change should be made for the benefit of the traders of this country.

Mr. BENNETT: The administration has not been found to be difficult nor is it believed that it will become more difficult because this happens to be the standard or yardstick of measurement provided for in the treaty.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to enter a protest against an increased duty on oranges. Thousands of cases of this fruit are used in the hospitals in order to furnish drinks to the patients, thousands of doctors prescribe the juice of the orange for practically every patient they have and it is about the last thing that should be singled out for an increase. Orange juice is practically a medicine and it is needed by many people who cannot afford to buy oranges at their present price.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understood my right hon. friend to say that there were about one hundred oranges in a cubic foot, which would make the increase about one-third of one cent per orange. That is about the smallest possible recognition which could be given to empire oranges.

Mr. BENNETT: That is my understanding of it.

Mr. HANBURY: I understand that these oranges are to be imported into Canada in wooden boxes and I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the suggestion has been made to Australia that they use Canadian lumber in the manufacture of these boxes.

Mr. BENNETT: I hasten to assure my hon. friend that being wiser in our day and generation than were our predecessors, who did not include lumber in the last Australian treaty, the suggestion has been noted and I am happy to say that so far as may be reasonably possible, effect will be given to it. My hon. friend will remember the feeling of resentment which was expressed by some Canadians who had purchased commodities produced within the British Empire and found that they were packed in boxes made of wood which came from Sweden. I assume that that is what my hon. friend had in mind when he made his observation.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What is the relative price of the best Australian and best Californian oranges?

Mr. STEVENS: The business in Australia has not been developed to proportions comparable to that of California, but during the past year or two Australia has been shipping some oranges into Canada. I understand that there is a shipment en route of some 15,000 boxes, and the price must have been below the California quotation in order to meet that competition. Australia feels quite confident that within the next year or two she can secure a very substantial portion of this business, and then there are South Africa, the West Indies and other sections of the British Empire to be considered. This is looked upon as being one of the most hopeful developments which might be expected from this treaty. It must be remembered—this will appeal particularly to some hon. members opposite—that some commodities from Australia must find access to this market. This is one of the items where there is a very good prospect for development.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I thank the Minister of Trade and Commerce for his answers but I do not seem to get the information which I was desirous of securing with regard to the relative prices of Californian and Australian oranges. I understand he is unable to give it.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not happen to have it under my hand.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The great danger in connection with this is that we are imposing a duty of 35 cents per cubic foot on oranges and all we are going to be able to do is to increase the price by that amount to the consumer, not only on the oranges on which we collect a duty but on those that come in free. Is the Minister of Finance able to state whether or not in the different orange producing countries they have a system of grading similar, for instance, to our system of grading apples in boxes?

Mr. BENNETT: South Africa and Australia have perhaps gone further than most other countries with respect to grading. My hon.

friend will no doubt recall that in a grocery store in this city plums and peaches from South Africa were on sale during last winter and they arrived here in excellent condition.

Mr. ELLIOTT: When a box of oranges comes in from Australia or any other country, is it marked No. 1, No. 2 or No 3 in a way similar to that in which Canadian apples are marked when they are shipped?

Mr. BENNETT: It is putting it too strongly to say that there is an exact comparison, but broadly speaking, sizes determine No. 1 or No. 2 or No. 3. There is a fair degree of uniformity, but I should not like to mislead my hon. friend by saying that there is any absolute uniformity as between the countries.

Mr. TAYLOR: Could there be inserted in this clause a provision which would exempt oranges that go into the manufacture of marmalade? I have a telegram from a marmalade manufacturer in my riding, complaining of the additional cost to them of their raw material, that is, their oranges. I noted just a minute ago the minister mentioned that South African oranges were getting a market in Great Britain. This telegram reads:

New tariff on oranges if applied to Seville bitters is equivalent of reducing the import duty on orange marmalade from England by one-half cent a pound. This together with advantage English manufacturers have on buying sugar for export at two dollars and ten cents below Montreal prices and buying their containers at much lower prices than Canadian manufacturers as well as lower labour costs will prevent Canadian manufacturers from competing with English manufacturers in our own home market.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member has read a telegram the contents of which were communicated to me. The marmalade producers have perhaps overlooked the fact that last night we increased the duty on jams and this marmalade is so classified so that they have a measure of protection which is, I believe, quite equal to what they had before. The rate on jams under the new item which we passed last night is 2¾ cents, 3¾ cents and 5 cents per pound. The increase in the general tariff is 1¼ cents, so that I do not think there is any real cause for complaint in that regard.

Mr. YOUNG: My right hon. friend told me last night there was no marmalade coming in under the general tariff.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no traceable quantity.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. YOUNG: Marmalade under the preferential tariff is at the same rate as formerly?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. This is a small part of the production of jams.

Mr. FRASER: The item in the treaty reads:

Free during the months of May, June, July, August, September and October: British preferential tariff during the other months of the year.

Would these oranges not come in free during the whole year under the British preferential tariff?

Mr. STEVENS: That is quite true. The only answer is that we have undertaken with Australia to maintain that irrespective of what change, if any, we may make in the British preferential.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I quite realize, as I suppose all of us do, that in order to maintain or develop trade between this or other countries we must give a quid pro quo, and that possibly there is no more suitable commodity than oranges on which we can give a preference. I realize too, that this will bring about a substantial increase in our revenue, because the oranges will continue to come in and upon them that duty of approximately seventy-five cents a box must be paid. It is equally obvious that for some time at least, when you take into account the very large quantities imported from the United States, and the very small quantities imported from within the British Empire, this will mean simply an additional cost of these oranges in this country of about seventy-five cents a box, with, in all likelihood, an additional cost for orange marmalade or any kind of preserves made from oranges, because if the duty is not increased at the present time to meet the increased cost of the raw material, it will undoubtedly have to be increased in the near future. At this time when people find it so extremely difficult to pay for fruits or for fruit preserves at present prices, it seems rather deplorable that we are obliged to make a definite increase in the cost of that essential fruit and of the preserves made from it. Of course we cannot do anything about the matter. I realize we have to sacrifice something in order to obtain a market for some of our own goods, but again, just as has so frequently been the case, the result is that the general run of consumers—I am not speaking particularly now of the farmers—will simply have to pay a little more in order that certain industries may be able to climb on their shoulders over the tariff walls of other countries.

Mr. STEVENS: I might take a few moments to draw the attention of the committee to the history of tariff as it relates to oranges. About twenty to twenty-five years ago Canada used to receive a very considerable portion of her supply of citrus fruits, chiefly oranges, from the West Indies and other countries. Then the Citrus Fruit Union of California was formed, and this citrus fruit union became a very highly developed and efficient organization. The formation of that organization and its control, through the tariff, of the United States market resulted in the destruction of citrus fruit production, as far as oranges are concerned, in the West Indies. Most of the growers there abandoned the production of oranges because they were denied access to the United States market, and as a result Canada suffered. The price of citrus fruit rose considerably and for twenty years or thereabouts it has been I think entirely under the dictation of the Citrus Fruit Union of California without any competition. All this time or most of it this same citrus fruit was on the free list so far as Canada was concerned. The result to this country was the higher price that we have paid for the fruit. The standard price for lemons, for instance, a few years ago was 20 cents a dozen and less, while in recent years lemons have rarely dropped as low as 20 cents. I am not complaining; I am not criticizing the Citrus Fruit Union, but the effect on Canada was an increase in price. We believe that, not this year, perhaps not next year, but within a reasonable time, Australia, South Africa, probably all of the West Indies, and other parts of the British Empire, will again get into the citrus fruit business, and with a market such as we have to offer in Canada we really expect that as a result of this action the price of citrus fruit within the next few years will actually drop instead of being increased. I venture to say that even this year, at the commencement, when it is rather too much to expect it, there will really be no increase in prices.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think that the reason of that is that the duty is so small; it is less than one-third of a cent per orange. I am disposed to agree with the minister in this case, although I rarely agree with his deductions on tariffs, but in this case he happens to be Liberal, and I am not going to oppose him.

Mr. YOUNG: I confess I cannot understand the wording of this item. It says free during the months of May, June, July, August, September and October, and the British preferential tariff during the other months of the year. Now the British preferential tariff is free, so I would take it that these oranges are to be free in May, June, July, August, September and October, and free during the rest of the year.

Mr. STEVENS: I have already explained that. We are giving to Australia a guarantee that as long as the treaty exists oranges shall be on the free list so far as Australia is concerned. At the present time we are leaving oranges free under the British preference, but it does not follow that they will always be free under the British preference. We will be at liberty to change the British preferential rate, but the rate for Australia will be free whatever we do with the British preference, with the limitation fixed in the treaty.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Then why insert that stipulation?

Mr. STEVENS: I am afraid it must be my fault or my hon. friend would have caught the point, because I have already explained it twice. At present oranges are free under the Australian treaty and under the British preference. We have undertaken with Australia to keep oranges free during certain specified months no matter what we may do to the British preference.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Why insert this stipulation if you have made them free for the whole year?

Mr. BENNETT: I need hardly explain to the hon. gentleman, with his well-known qualities of understanding, that during the other months of the year this parliament might make the British preference one cent. This provision ensures freedom of entry during the months mentioned whatever the British preference may be. It would not be correct to say, free the year round, for the British preference might not some day be free.

Mr. YOUNG: Speaking from memory it seems to me that normally oranges are cheaper in the spring months, and if the government saw fit at some future time to impose a one cent duty under the British preference, we could surely let Australian oranges in free the year round.

Mr. BENNETT: They have not asked for it.

Mr. HANBURY: This item contemplates that there are certain months of the year during which Australia is not anxious to furnish our requirements, and in the other months there will be a surplus. It is reasonable to assume, if we give this advantage to Australia, that there should be storage facilities in Canada sufficient to take care of our requirements when Australia cannot supply them. Are the Australians contemplating providing storage facilities in Canada so that their oranges may be placed on the market evenly throughout the year, or if not, is the government contemplating any action to facilitate the marketing of these oranges, or will it be left in the hands of private importers?

Mr. BENNETT: We have not gone into that matter as yet.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—104a. Fruit pulp, other than grape pulp, not sweetened, in air-tight cans or other air-tight packages: British preferential tariff, 1½ cents per pound; intermediate tariff, 2½ cents per pound; general tariff, 3 cents per pound.

Mr. BENNETT: The item covered by this amendment, which will be found in the votes and proceedings of yesterday, is inserted in the tariff schedules by reason of the Australian agreement. It is a re-wording of the former item 781, under which the imports were nearly 500,000 pounds, all from Australia. If the committee will be good enough to read the item, they will observe that grape pulp is left out; that is pulp that is capable of being made into jams and preserves. It comes in in the form indicated, in air-tight cans or other air-tight packages. The rate fixed is the rate agreed upon with Australia.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Is this a new rate?

Mr. BENNETT: The former rate was free. The rates now are as indicated.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—106. Fruits, prepared, in air-tight cans or other air-tight containers, the weight of the containers to be included in the weight for duty:
(a) apricots, peaches and pears: British preferential tariff, 2 cents per pound; intermediate tariff, 4 cents per pound; general tariff, 5 cents per pound;
(b) pineapple: British preferential tariff, 3 cents per pound; intermediate tariff, 4 cents per pound; general tariff, 5 cents per pound;
(c) n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 2 cents per pound; intermediate tariff, 4 cents per pound; general tariff, 5 cents per pound.

Mr. BENNETT: This provides for an increase in the rate on pineapples, of which the hon. gentleman spoke.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): You intend to leave it at five cents per pound?

Mr. BENNETT: At 3, 4 and 5 cents per pound.

[Mr. Hanbury.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does this apply to pineapple alone?

Mr. BENNETT: This is the treaty item, not the budget item. The old rate was half a cent.

Mr. YOUNG: This is an increase?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. YOUNG: Even to Australia?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, half a cent.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): I would like to know the reason for this.

Mr. BENNETT: The Australian rate will be one cent, and in order to give them a preference the rate has been increased to other countries. The rate to other countries being three cents, and the rate to Australia being one cent, there is a preference of two cents to Australia under the British preferential tariff, three cents under the intermediate tariff, and four cents under the general tariff. On importations of pineapple from the United States, for instance, the preference in favour of Australia would be four cents, and under the intermediate tariff the preference would be one cent less than that. So far as other countries of the British Empire are concerned—this is one of the few items of which this may be said—Australia gets a preference of two cents more per pound on pineapple than would be available to those other countries.

Mr. YOUNG: Where does it say that the Australian rate will be one cent?

Mr. STEVENS: In the schedule to the treaty, page 7.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is giving Australia a considerable preference over the other British dominions.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it is. I thought my hon. friend would ask that question. It probably does not put them on an equality with their competitors in other British possessions, for the principal point of production of pineapples outside of Australia is Singapore in the Straits Settlements, from which considerable quantities are exported and where labour conditions are such that the cost of production is very much less than elsewhere. One might say that the native population there receives much less for its labour than does the population of Australia.

Mr. NEILL: Why not in that case make pineapples free from Australia and place the general tariff at four cents? We do not produce pineapples; therefore why put a tax on them?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was just going to suggest the same remedy. As we cannot produce pineapples, it seems to me that the duty should be very low, and if we propose to give Australia a preference over the other British dominions why not allow Australian pineapples to come in free?

Mr. BENNETT: It will be observed on reference to the item that these are:

Fruits, prepared, in air-tight cans or other air-tight containers, the weight of the containers to be included in the weight for duty:
(a) apricots, peaches and pears, 1 cent per pound;
(b) pineapples, 1 cent per pound;
(c) n.o.p., 1 cent per pound.

There is a very considerable business done in Canada in canning pineapple.

Mr. NEILL: Where?

Mr. BENNETT: In Canada, a very substantial business. This tariff is to prevent that business being entirely destroyed, while at the same time affording the preference I have indicated to Australia over other competing countries, the particular country being that to which I have just referred, where the wages of the native population are so low that even other parts of the empire have found it necessary to have recourse to the tariff to afford them fair competition.

Mr. BROWN: How are fresh pinapples affected?

Mr. BENNETT: They are not dealt with at all. If my memory serves me aright, they are free.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is any inquiry made by the department with respect to the sanitary conditions under which pineapples are canned in the Straits Settlements? In this country we have very strict food and factory laws and our canning plants are frequently inspected by government officials. Yet, as I understand it, we allow canned goods to come into Canada without any knowledge at all of the conditions under which they are put up.

Mr. BENNETT: I always hesitate to be too critical with respect to conditions under which other countries carry on their business.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am not criticizing, I am asking for information.

Mr. BENNETT: I have only said that I hesitate to be too critical with respect to it. My information is that some form of sanitary inspection is provided for by the laws of the Straits Settlements, but that the factory conditions are not such as obtain in modern factories in Canada and elsewhere. Certainly it is wholly within the mark when one says that the wages and conditions of labour of the native population in that community are very different from the conditions of labour and wages that prevail in other countries where we have stringent pure food laws. There are factory regulations in force in most exporting parts of the British empire, but obviously in Singapore they have not reached the same advanced stage in their canning operations as would be expected under the wholly different habits and modes of life that prevail in this country.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—109a. Peanuts, green, in the shell or not further processed than shelled: tariff on goods the produce of manufacture of Australia, free. The governor in council, when satisfied that Australia can supply Canadian requirements, may, by order in council, direct that there be substituted for tariff item 109a in schedule A of the customs tariff, 1907, and the enumeration of goods and the rates of duties of customs set opposite the said item in schedule A the following:

Customs tariff—109b. Peanuts, green, in the shell or not further processed than shelled: tariff on goods the produce or manufacture of Australia, free: British preferential tariff, 4 cents per pound; intermediate tariff, 4 cents per pound; general tariff, 4 cents per pound.

From and after the publication of such order in council in the Canada Gazette tariff item 109a as it appears in the said schedule at the time of the publication of the said order shall be repealed and the provisions of tariff item 109b shall be substituted therefor.

Mr. BENNETT: These two items will be found on page 7 of the Australian treaty, one being the complement of the other. The committee will observe that green peanuts under the British preference are free and 1 cent under the intermediate and general, while peanuts green in the shell or not further processed carry a rate of 4, 4 and 4 cents; under the treaty they are free.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Does the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) know how Australian peanuts compare in quality with those from North Carolina or Virgina?

Mr. STEVENS: I have not made a personal comparison, but I am informed that Australian peanuts are of excellent quality and compare very favourably with those produced in any other country. The Australians expect they will be able to fill our requirements as indicated in this item.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: The next items will be 115 and 116 on page 3 of votes and proceedings.

Customs tariff—115. Mackerel, herring, salmon and all other fish, n.o.p., fresh, salted, pickled, smoked, dried or boneless, per pound: British preferential tariff, ½ per cent; intermediate tariff, ¾ cent; general tariff, 1 cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—116. Halibut, fresh, pickled or salted, per pound: British preferential tariff, ½ cent; intermediate tariff, 2 cents; general tariff, 2 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: As will be observed, there is an increase in the rate on halibut.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: Items 184 and 184a may stand for the moment.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The leader of the opposition would like to be present when they are discussed.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Customs tariff—192. Tarred paper and prepared roofings (including shingles), fibreboard, strawboard, sheathing and insulation, manufactured wholly or in part of vegetable fibres, n.o.p.; blotting paper, not printed nor illustrated: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Hon. gentlemen will observe that this is item 192 in the budget resolutions, but owing to there being a slight amendment it appears in votes and proceedings at page 4. The words "blotting paper, not printed or illustrated" have been added.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: The next item is 200a at page 18 of the tariff resolutions, with respect to which it is proposed to make an amendment that I will ask my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes), to move.

Mr. RHODES: I beg to move that the following be substituted for tariff item 200a, as contained in resolution No. 2 of June 1, 1931:

Customs tariff—200a. Regenerated cellulose and cellulose acetate, transparent, in sheets, not printed: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Provided, that the governor in council may, when satisfied that regenerated cellulose, transparent, in sheets, is being manufactured in Canada in quantity and quality sufficient for Canadian requirements, by order in council direct that there be substituted for tariff item 200a the following:

[Mr. Stevens.]

Customs tariff—200a. Regenerated cellulose and cellulose acetate, and manufactures of regenerated cellulose or of cellulose acetate: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Here is a rather interesting circumstance which I feel it would be fair to bring to the attention of the committee. This is a chemical substance, the basis of which is pulp, upon which acids have operated. Since the budget was proposed the attention of the government has been directed to an entirely new production of cellulose acetate in sheets which cannot be distinguished, except by laboratory tests, from regenerated cellulose. The amendment brings this newest development within the terms of the item. Perhaps I might bring it more forcibly to the mind of the committee as to what is meant when I say this is that thin, transparent substance in which candy boxes are wrapped, and which is so much used now in the wrapping of cigars and food products of various kinds, since it enables them to be kept free from contamination by outside sources.

Amendment agreed to on division.

Customs tariff—219a. Non-alcoholic preparations or chemicals for disinfecting, dipping or spraying, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Mr. ILSLEY: Spraying materials have been free of duty since 1928, and at that time there was a drop in prices as a result of their being placed on the free list. These preparations are used very largely by the fruit growers of Canada, and I should like the Prime Minister to explain why he felt it necessary to restore the duty.

Mr. BENNETT: I think my answer will satisfy the hon. gentleman that the course being taken is one which he himself would pursue. As a result of the action taken previously, three Canadian plants were closed and have not since operated. Assurances have been given that prices will not be increased, and the plants already producing disinfectants of a certain type now will become increasingly engaged in the production of other forms of insecticides and disinfectants which are covered by this item. The horticultural society at their annual meeting supported this action, and if as a result there is any increase in price, as the hon. gentleman fears, the remedy lies in the hands of the government. I think when one contemplates the fact that at least one or two of these industries are equipped and will at once proceed to manufacture when they have an assurance that the Canadian market is available, it will be seen that we have at least taken the precaution to provide within our own boundaries for the production of a very necessary commodity without involving an increased price to the consumer. I believe that is worth while, having regard to the existing conditions and the desirability of being in a position to deal with a matter of such importance within our own country.

Mr. ILSLEY: Would the Prime Minister tell me whether dry dusting materials are dutiable at the rate of 15 per cent, together with liquid preparations? They were classed with liquid preparations at the time the duty was taken off, if my memory is correct.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman will observe that there is no change in the item.

Mr. ILSLEY: Could the minister give me an idea of how important these factories are which were closed as a result of the duty being taken off, and how many hands they employed?

Mr. BENNETT: Prior to 1928 these arsenical insecticides were dutiable at 15 per cent, 17½ per cent and 17½ per cent, with others dutiable at 10 per cent, 15 per cent and 20 per cent. I have some knowledge of only about a half dozen of these factories; I am bound to say to my hon. friend that I could not give him even approximately the number of people who would be employed, but I am informed that a substantial number of people would find employment. They sent a delegation here; I took a statement, which was investigated; they were willing to undertake not to increase the price, and they realized what would be the result if that were done. They were all manufacturers of certain types of disinfectants or insecticides, but I think two of the factories had been closed for some two or three years. They were endeavouring to start up again with respect to another line and wanted also to be able to secure this production. I am inclined to think that under similar conditions the hon. gentleman would have adopted the same course.

Mr. ILSLEY: I remember very distinctly the debate which took place when these articles were placed on the free list in 1928. Certain private members stated that factories would be adversely affected, and I tried to get an idea of how many people would be so affected, but was unable to do so. I formed the impression, perhaps wrongly, that the industries were not very important, and that is why I requested the information from the minister.

Mr. BENNETT: I think I can procure some little information for my hon. friend at a later date. One of the hon. members has a very large plant of this character in his constituency, and I will communicate to my hon. friend the number of people employed there, though I believe I can give the details with reference to only two factories.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Does this refer to animal dip, that is, sheep dip and cattle dip?

Mr. BENNETT: Any sort of dip; it is the same wording.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Has the right hon. gentleman received any representations from the Canadian wool growers' cooperative society with regard to the powder they use for dipping sheep? This powder is used all over Canada, and I should like to know whether the Prime Minister has been assured that a real substitute will be found for this preparation, which is called the Cooper dip powder. Has the minister received any representations from the wool growers' cooperative or the sheep breeders' association?

Mr. BENNETT: I am bound to say no such representations have reached me, and I am told by the officials that no such communications have reached the department. I will make a note to make further investigation, but certainly I have no knowledge of it myself.

Mr. BOUCHARD: I should like to have this information, because this is a very important factor in sheep raising.

Mr. ILSLEY: I want to place on record my opposition to this item. I am opposed to it because in 1928, although it was stated that no difference would be made in the price when the duty was taken off, immediately after the duty was taken off the price of these spraying materials dropped in my constituency. Advertisements appeared in the local press offering spraying materials at considerably reduced prices. It is all very well for the Prime Minister to say that the price will not go up as a result of the duty. But it is going to be difficult for my constituents to keep a check on the prices. I shall do the best I can to keep a check on it myself, and if there is the slightest evidence of an increase in prices I will bring the matter to the attention of the Prime Minister. This is something of great importance to the people I represent, and before the item carries I want to have it recorded that I am opposed to it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Was any intimation given to the fruit growers and others interested of the application made by the manufacturers of this commodity?

Mr. BENNETT: The horticultural council recommended that this be done.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Through the influence of the manufacturers?

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot say through whom. I know they made that recommendation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot help thinking that those who will be affected will learn too late, to their sorrow, what has happened to them.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: It is rather difficult to understand how it will be possible for those firms who have gone out of business to resume without increasing prices. Apparently they went out of business because they could not meet the prices. Is it expected that if the entire market is assured to them through a virtual monopoly they will be able to produce at a lower cost than they have been able to do? I cannot understand how they will be able to carry on, seeing that, unable to manufacture at present prices, they have been obliged to shut down.

Mr. BENNETT: The curtailed production has had the result I have indicated. One large firm had on hand a very considerable quantity of arsenate of lead which was used in the production of their commodity. When their business was curtailed, because of the circumstances to which I have alluded, they stopped operations. They still have that raw material and it is unimpaired; age has not affected it. They believe, as I do, that the increased production, resulting from a greater demand by reason of the domestic market being available, will ensure their being able to carry on their business. The hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley) places altogether too modest a value upon his own resourcefulness, for I am satisfied that if his constituents are called upon to pay enhanced prices—barring, of course, an increase in raw material, for which he will always make allowance—it will not be very long thereafter before the government is made aware of the fact.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I trust that the Prime Minister's hopes will be realized and that the manufacturers will be able to carry on. But I understand that they ceased producing when imports began to come in under the free list, because they could not meet the prices. I think it is rather doubtful that this tariff will enable them to carry on. It is an interesting experiment and—I have no axe to grind—I hope they will succeed.

Mr. ILSLEY: The Prime Minister says that the Canadian Horticultural Council passed a resolution or in some other way expressed themselves in favour of this increase. Has he a record of the stand they took?

Mr. BENNETT: No, I have not. The hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) is one of the members of that council and he can give some evidence on the point.

Mr. STIRLING: This question was considered at the annual meeting of the horticultural council. The fruit growers represented there by their delegates did not raise any objection to the increase in the protection on these spray materials for the special purpose of increasing production to meet their requirements.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does this item include chemical sprays used for the killing of weeds? If it does I have strong representations from those who manufacture these chemicals. They say that the change is going to increase the cost of chemicals which are being tried out generally in the west by the municipalities for the destruction of weeds.

Mr. BENNETT: Chemicals are not covered by this item. Some may come under the item and others may not: that is the only fair way to put it and be frank. The chemicals the hon. gentleman mentions will not come under the item; compounds will.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member for Yale represents an important fruit growing constituency in British Columbia and he follows with great care the proceedings of the horticultural council. I have tried to do so myself, and I understand that what happened in the council this year was this. Certain members desired higher duties on apples and they felt that they would be hampered in their demand if they objected to higher duties on spraying materials. That is the reason for the stand they took. The hon. gentleman says they took that stand because they desired an increase in the production of these goods—

Mr. BENNETT: In Canada.

Mr. ILSLEY: —in Canada, yes. But I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me when I say that the reason they took the position they did was that if they did anything else it would have an adverse effect on their own demand for a higher duty on apples.

Mr. STIRLING: I do not know where the hon. member met those individuals who desired a higher duty on apples. I have never met them.

Mr. ILSLEY: There is no question about it that demands have been made for higher duties on apples. In the Halifax Herald of Monday, July 13, 1931, there appears a report to the effect that the government has placed higher duties on apples for the purpose of protecting the home market. There is a long despatch reporting the paternal and beneficial action which the government has taken in connection with this industry. There certainly was a demand. The hon. gentleman and I look on these matters from different points of view. I think a better policy for the apple industry would be to keep down costs of production and place such articles as spraying and dusting materials on the free list. That would be better than attempting to keep up the prices of the product by these high valuations for duty purposes and higher duties.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—219c. Proprietary or trade-marked preparations, non-alcoholic, such as are used only for disinfecting, dipping or spraying, when in packages not exceeding three pounds each, in weight, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: I beg to move that the following be substituted for item 219c:

Customs tariff—219c. Non-alcoholic preparations or chemicals such as are used for disinfecting, dipping or spraying, when in packages not exceeding three pounds each, in weight, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. MacLEAN: Would anything under three pounds in weight come in free?

Mr. BENNETT: Over three pounds would be considered as bulk, under three pounds would be covered by this item.

Mr. MacLEAN: They would be in the same category as far as duty is concerned?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. BROWN: Is the item sufficiently general in its terms to include anything which might be brought forward as an insecticide? I notice that a discovery has been made which is likely to prove effective in the treating of warbles in cattle. Every hon. member knows that that disease causes a very serious loss to agriculturists, and if a preparation has been found which is effective for that purpose it is desirable that it be made as easily available as possible to all farmers.

Mr. BENNETT: This is the same language as has been used for many years. The item covers all forms of compounds used for the purpose of disinfecting, dipping or spraying. As the hon. member knows, there is a provision in the statute which permits action being taken by order in council to place a commodity on the free list or to reduce the duty.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—232c. Gelatine, edible: British preferential tariff, 17½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—366b. Parts of watch movements, finished or unfinished, not including plates: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) raised a question last evening and I said that items 366b, 368 and 369 might stand. This is a new item, and the rates have been changed from free, 12½ per cent and 12½ per cent to free, 15 per cent and 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—368. Clocks, time recorders, clock movements, clock-work mechanisms, and clock cases: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Provided, that when imported under the intermediate or the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than, each: intermediate tariff, 50 cents; general tariff, 50 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Weyburn was inquiring as to why parts of watch movements might be imported at a lesser rate than the finished product. It has always been the policy to encourage the importation of parts rather than the finished product in order that labour, which is an important item, should enter into the assembly of these parts. In connection with watch cases it has always been said that no advantage was ever taken of the duty. The largest producer in this country, now passed to his reward, was able to say that he had saved the country a considerable sum by not taking advantage of the duty. These items maintain the differentiation between parts and the finished product.

Mr. EULER: What was the valuation of the importation of clocks?

Mr. BENNETT: Clocks valued at $760,000 were imported; $275,000 from the United States and $350,000 from Germany. It may be of no interest to the committee, but I might state that the watch I carry is the product of a Canadian manufacturer, and I think it sells for $2.75.

Mr. EULER: I was referring to clocks.

Mr. BENNETT: I gave the figures for clocks.

Mr. EULER: I think there are only two clock factories in the Dominion, one of which happens to be located in my constituency. Have representations been made by the clock manufacturers since these proposals were brought down as to the sufficiency of the rate proposed?

Mr. BENNETT: There are three clock factories in Canada, one at Peterborough, one at Kitchener, and I believe one at Brantford. The brief filed by the clock and watch parts makers—I refer now to the cheaper watch which is something like a clock—asked for an increase over the existing rate. When this item was published these manufacturers indicated that an upward change would be highly regarded, but the largest producer, whose operations run to something over 2,300 watches and clocks per day, thought it worth while to allow the item to stand for a year as it gave a much better rate than had existed previously. I think the considerations which moved us to make this change might well have moved my hon. friend when he had the chance of doing the same thing.

Mr. EULER: I had not the opportunity of making a change. I understood that the small producers who have found considerable difficulty in meeting foreign competition were not satisfied and felt that the change did not do them very much good.

Mr. BENNETT: What does the hon. gentleman suggest?

Mr. EULER: I am not making any suggestion. I desire only to find out whether representations were made, and if so, what answer was given.

Mr. BENNETT: My memory is that one manufacturer said that he was pleased with the item and no further change was desired; another suggested an upward movement from 15 per cent to 27½ per cent, and another suggested that the rate should be 30 per cent. As a matter of fact, the differentiation between parts and the finished product has been maintained. My personal view was that it might have been increased a little, but having regard to the reports of the industry generally, the changes should afford to Canada an opportunity to compete on fair terms against importations from at least the United States, and, I believe, from Germany. That is, I think, the representation that was most strongly made. I am speaking from memory and subject to correction.

Mr. EULER: It has always been represented that the purpose of protective tariffs was to foster new or, as they are so often called, struggling industries. If any industry could go into that category it would be the clock making industry. As I know from the experience of a factory in my own town, it had a struggle for many years. While I am not necessarily advocating, if the duty is regarded as sufficient, that it should be higher, it is still comparatively low, may I say to some of my hon. friends on this side, as compared with the tariff that has been given to what can hardly be described as infant industries.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend will see that clocks, time recorders, clock movements, clock-work mechanisms and clock cases are now 20 per cent, 30 per cent and 35 per cent. The general tariff of 35 per cent is, I think, a fairly reasonable one having regard to the information we had as to, shall I say, large capacity for production. I cannot recall that any communication came from the particular industry in Kitchener to which my hon. friend refers, but I shall endeavour to find out during the recess if there has been any.

Mr. YOUNG: Can the minister give us any information as to what it costs to put a watch movement in a casing? How much labour is involved?

Mr. DUFF: Every little movement has a meaning all its own.

Mr. BENNETT: That depends entirely on the character of the movement. If it is a highly jewelled movement of a certain type, it costs a substantial sum of money. Everything depends upon the skill and care that has to be exercised with respect to it. These fine watch cases are of course now made in Canada, as the hon. gentleman may know.

It depends upon the skill of the workman, the quality of the movement, and the fineness of the case. I could not give an estimate of the price.

Mr. BOUCHARD: As we are speaking about clocks and watches, this will perhaps be the proper time to ask the Prime Minister: How is it that all the requests of the manufacturers are listened to and complied with while the requests from the farmers are not heeded? Will the Prime Minister allow me to speak on the question of wool, in connection with which the farmers put forward very strong recommendations for a tariff?

Mr. BENNETT: Can the hon. member name any other item than wool?

Mr. BOUCHARD: Wool is a big item. It touches nearly all the farmers in Canada. I have had no opportunity of discussing this item, because it has not been called, but I remember very distinctly hearing the right hon. gentleman tell us last session that any of the items—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. BOUCHARD: I hope, Mr. Chairman, you will let me finish this statement. I am just quoting the Prime Minister. He said very distinctly that any change that appeared in the tariff of the last special session might be discussed at a future session, and I have no other opportunity. I rise simply to ask the Prime Minister if he will give me an opportunity of discussing this question of a tariff on wool.

The CHAIRMAN: This discussion cannot come under the item of clocks.

Mr. BOUCHARD: I will ask the Prime Minister, who is so obliging—

The CHAIRMAN: I am sorry I cannot allow that except by consent.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, you were not following the discussion last evening. I said very distinctly to my hon. friends opposite that by reason of what was said at the short session they might avail themselves of the opportunity to discuss any item that they desired to discuss. I understand that the hon. member for Kamouraska is instituting a comparison between the tariff items that touch industry and those that touch agriculture. I should think he would be within his rights, having regard to the arrangement that was made, in instituting such a comparison at this time.

Mr. BOUCHARD: I am grateful to the Prime Minister for the permission he has just given me. I am not a firm believer in high protection as a means of helping the farmers, but if the government is going to do something in regard to raising the tariff, whatever advantage may accrue to the farmers should be taken by them. I suppose the Prime Minister is aware of the many representations that were made through the Minister of Agriculture in regard to having a tariff on wool. Wool is imported in very large quantities, and I should like to quote from a letter addressed to the Minister of Agriculture under date of December 26, 1930, and signed by the manager of the Canadian Cooperative Wool Growers, Limited. I will read just the last paragraph of this letter. It states:

> With the exception of carpet wools as described, all other wools imported into Canada, to all intents and purposes, may be described as competitive with Canadian grown wool, and any further exceptions would materially reduce any advantage to Canadian sheepmen in a general tariff on wool.

On the same date, the manager of the same cooperative wrote to the Minister of Agriculture another letter, and I am quoting just the fourth paragraph which states:

> When talking with Mr. Breadner on Tuesday, he stated that any tariff legislation should be specified, and that such a basis for duty as 20 cents per pound of clean content, would leave the amount to be collected on wool in the grease variable. That is true, at the same time it seems to be working out satisfactorily in the United States, where they have wool appraisers for this work, and where each invoice on imported wool, bears the estimated shrinkage figures.
> As explained to Mr. Breadner, if it was necessary to name a specific rate on wool in the grease, we would have to be guided by the 20 cent rate on clean scoured wool, using the shrinkage of 30 per cent which is the shrinkage on a large part of wool imported into Canada. In other words, on this basis the duty on wool in the grease would be 14 cents per pound.

Later I wrote to Mr. George O'Brien, manager of the Canadian Cooperative Wool Growers, Limited, to ascertain what has taken place, and I received this letter dated June 30, 1931:

> Dear Mr. Bouchard:
>
> We are in receipt of your message of June 26, and we are sending you copy of the letter sent the Hon. Mr. Weir, which contains in summary a report of the Sheep Conference in Toronto. We also enclose copy of letter and brief filed at Ottawa with respect to wool. Our correspondence on this subject has been large, and we have included the Department of Agriculture, Department of Finance, and Department of National Revenue.
> We also took up the question of lamb and mutton, and that has been dealt with, though we are not informed at this time as to where these products stand in the new Australian trade agreement.

The letter concludes with this paragraph:

The wool position is bad, and yet we use more wool in Canada than we produce, and even according to the Canadian Textile Journal, 85 per cent of the wool used in Canada is of the kind we grow in Canada.

G. E. O'Brien,
Manager,
Canadian Co-operative Wool Growers Limited.

The copy of the letter enclosed reads as follows:

Toronto, March 26, 1931.

Hon. Robert Weir.
Minister of Agriculture,
Ottawa.

Honourable Sir,—

At the conclusion of the annual meeting of the Canadian Co-operative Wool Growers Limited, held in Toronto on March 26, 1931, those in attendance went into special conference on problems relating to the Canadian sheep industry. There were present between fifty and sixty sheep farmers and ranchers from every province in the Dominion, representatives of the Dominion and provincial departments of agriculture, as well as representatives of the packing industry, live stock marketing and wool marketing organizations—a gathering that certainly represented a real cross-section of all the interests related to the sheep industry in this country.

A very full and free discussion was entered into by all present during the full afternoon and evening sessions, and it was pointed out that we are not producing nearly as much wool and lamb as we are using in this country, and that consequently there should be much room for expansion. It was unanimously agreed, though, that any such expansion was not possible on a profitable basis unless the home market was reserved and developed for Canadian producers by adequate protection on lamb, mutton and wool in all its forms.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair.

AUSTRALIAN TREATY

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): May I lay on the table a document which I have had prepared dealing with schedule B of the Australian treaty? This is for the information of hon. members, and if the house desires, I would suggest that it be printed in the votes and proceedings so that it will be available to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think it would be well to have it printed.

Mr. STEVENS: Then it is understood that it will be printed and appear in the votes and proceedings.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 99, respecting the Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company—Mr. Black (Halifax).

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from Friday, June 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Angus MacInnis for the second reading of Bill No. 45, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, while this bill was under discussion recently the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) assured the house that the Canada Shipping Act would be ready for revision next session. In view of that assurance I ask leave to withdraw the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: By consent of the house, Bill No. 45 to amend the Canada Shipping Act is withdrawn.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Unanimously.

Bill withdrawn.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT

PROPOSED PENALTY FOR VIOLATION OF PROVISION RESPECTING INTEREST RATE

The house resumed from Friday, June 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Spencer for the second reading of Bill No. 49, to amend the Bank Act.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: If any other hon. member wishes to speak on this motion he should do so now, otherwise the sponsor of the bill will close the debate.

Mr. SPENCER: When this bill was last under discussion, Mr. Speaker, I felt the house was not so much against the purpose of the bill as against the penalties that I was seeking to have enforced. My aim, of course, is to limit the rate of interest to 7 per cent as provided by the Bank Act, and if the penalties I propose are considered too severe, I shall be perfectly willing to have the bill amended in this respect. Therefore if this motion passes I will ask one of my colleagues to move that the bill be referred to the banking and commerce committee for further consideration.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those in favour will please say "aye."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Aye.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those opposed will please say "no."

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: In my opinion the noes have it. I declare the motion lost.

And some hon. members having risen in their seats;—

Mr. SPENCER: I think six members rose, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: I saw only four standing. I declare the motion lost.

Motion negatived.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

NATURE OF SPEECHES ON PUBLIC AFFAIRS TO DETERMINE UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY

The house resumed from Tuesday, July 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth for the second reading of Bill No. 19, to amend the criminal code (unlawful assembly).

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has already spoken on the bill—perhaps more than once. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I spoke in favour of my bill when it was introduced, but I have not spoken on it since that time; I think I have the right to close the debate. If I may say so, possibly you, Mr. Speaker, are confusing this bill with the amendment to the Immigration Act, on which I also spoke.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member sponsoring the bill has not spoken for the second time he has the right to speak now and close the debate.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Without at all discussing the merits of the bill I should like to rise to a point of order to enable me to obtain your guidance, Mr. Speaker. So far as I can see from both Canadian and English authorities the moving of a bill which is part of the orders of the day is not a substantive motion but an ancillary motion, as defined by Campion in his text book. I should like to have your ruling upon that point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. NEILL: It always has been allowed, since we have been in the house; the member moving the second reading of a bill always has been allowed to speak in reply, I do not care what the rules are.

Mr. SPEAKER: Prior to 1927 what is now standing order 43 was rule 21, subsection 2, and it contained the words "second reading of a bill." Standing order 43, citing the circumstances in which a member has the right of reply, did not include the words "the second reading of a bill" after the revision of the rules in 1927. This was not done with the idea of changing the rule, but because those words were considered superfluous. Notwithstanding what is stated in Campion, which I have examined, it has been the practice in this house to allow a reply on the second reading. It seems to me that, a second reading being a most important stage in the passage of legislation, a reply should be allowed. It was allowed on March 20, 1930, and again on May 30, 1930, and unless this house chooses to change its practice in that respect I would allow a reply on the motion for second reading of a bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am quite satisfied.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, during several of the occasions devoted to private bills this measure has been under consideration, and I think it has been viewed from a number of different angles. I would point out that there has been a great deal of misunderstanding as to the purpose of the bill. There have been those who have taken the stand that it has to do with sedition, but the clauses in the criminal code having to do with sedition will remain untouched. If any man utters any seditious words he is still liable to be charged with sedition. My bill was simply intended to safeguard the right of free speech, because of certain practices which have grown up in a number of our cities during recent months.

There is little for me to add to what I said when introducing the bill. It has been said that the bill is poorly drawn. Let me say that I obtained the best legal advice available, not merely the advice we have at our disposal here but outside legal advice in drawing the bill, and the phraseology to which a great many of the legal members have objected is supplied by those who have had considerable experience with the law. I remember very well a few months ago when a certain bill was before this house it was ridiculed by some members of the legal profession until they found that the draftsman was a man recognized as being in the very forefront of his profession. Ever since that time I have not had very much fear when presenting a matter like this, especially when I know it has been carefully prepared by a legal authority.

There was one point I should have liked to present earlier, and I think I shall add it now, because it seems to me to bear very directly upon the whole subject matter. I have reference to a decision appearing in the Ontario law reports, in the case of Rex vs. Patterson. It seems to me, if I may say so, looking at it from the layman's standpoint, that it is rather a serious blow at the freedom of the individual, and if this sort of thing is to go on unchecked we may find that our freedom of speech is curtailed. I shall read from the judgment of Middleton J.A., appearing in the Ontario law reports of December 11, 1930:

> All this satisfies me that the accused was a member of an assembly, lawful in its inception, but unlawful in its execution, because it was determined to meet force by force and to resist the officers of the law. It is quite immaterial that the officers of the law may have been mistaken in their interpretation of the police regulation, or that the regulation itself may be invalid. This does not justify the use of force against constituted authority, or even against any other, to the disturbance of public peace. The conviction must be affirmed. I would commend the learned county court judge for his good sense and moderation in dealing with this case.
> Mulock, C.J.O., and Grant, J.A., agreed with Middleton, J.A.

There are just two points I should like to mention, though perhaps the house will think I have considerable temerity in criticizing a judgment of this kind. I should like to direct attention to this sentence:

> It is quite immaterial that the officers of the law may have been mistaken in their interpretation of the police regulation. . . . .

That is going altogether too far. It is a most dangerous position when the officers of the law are upheld even though they may be mistaken with regard to their interpretation of a police regulation. Then comes the second part of that sentence:

> . . . . or that the regulation itself may be invalid.

Again I think we are proceeding on very dangerous ground. In this instance the trouble was that a group of citizens proceeded to have some sort of parade, thinking they were quite within their rights. As a matter of fact they were not disobeying any police regulation, yet the officers told them to disperse. As was shown by the evidence, the officers had no right to interfere because the men who were on parade were not disobeying any police regulation whatever. The officers were entirely mistaken, and when these men stood on their rights as citizens and said they had a right to walk through the streets they were arrested by the police, who were upheld in their act. I say that sort of thing is dangerous to our citizenship. Then let me read from the minority judgment of Magee, J.A.:

> This appellant, leading a peaceable procession, and said but not proved to have been acting in breach of some by-law, is arrested and, instead of being charged with breach of by-law, for which he might be fined, is charged with a crime for which he might be imprisoned. The hands of our peace officers endeavouring to enforce the laws should be upheld and strengthened, but I am unable to convince myself that on the evidence here presented this conviction should stand, and therefore I would allow the appeal.

Then Fisher, J.A. said:

> I fully agree with the conclusion of my brother Magee that this appeal should be allowed, and I desire to add that the crown has utterly failed to produce—as it was bound to—any witness proving that persons in the neighbourhood had reasonable grounds to fear that the peace would be disturbed tumultuously, or to provoke other persons to disturb the peace tumultuously.

The appeal was dismissed, Magee and Fisher dissenting. I thought it was well perhaps to add this Hamilton case which bears very directly on my contentions of a few weeks ago.

It chanced that in my presentation of the bill I mentioned the city of Toronto, and I instanced some of the practices of the police which I considered inimical to the maintenance of free speech. A number of hon. gentlemen from Toronto seemed to regard this as a direct attack on that city. That is not so. I also mentioned similar instances from the city of Montreal. I have just mentioned one that relates to Hamilton and I have mentioned some with regard to western Canada. But some of these gentleman seem to be very jealous of any criticism of Toronto. In fact, when the bill was last under discussion one hon. member declared that the city of Toronto did not need to be defended. He went on to speak of the admirable things that had been done in Toronto—the enormous amount given in Christmas relief and the sums contributed to the patriotic fund. Just what that has to do with the criminal code

I fail to see, but evidently he thought that something was needed to counterbalance the criticism of Toronto.

Now, I am a native of Toronto, so that I have nothing particularly against that city. My father and mother before me were natives of Toronto. I cannot therefore be regarded as altogether an outsider. But it does seem to me that in the last few years Toronto, more than any other city in Canada, has been adopting a great many of the most reprehensible practices which we read of as occurring in some of the larger eastern American cities. It is nothing to be proud of that these practices, which we denounce when we observe them in American cities, should be tolerated when they prevail in a city under the British flag. I should rather like to think that in advocating such measures as this we are in reality standing for the very best British traditions. I think we are. Unless I was entirely misled when I was a child, I was given to understand that Britain stood for freedom of speech. Yet I heard the other day one of those hon. members who are opposing this bill say that the people of Toronto do not believe in free speech. He gave as one evidence of this the fact that a very small number of electors had voted for a certain communist candidate. The hon. gentleman is confusing the idea of free speech with some sort of extravagance on the part of certain communists of Toronto.

I do not know that it is necessary for me again to dissociate myself from the communist party. Someone says it would not do me any good. That is a very smart remark. But let me say that if anyone would like to know how the communists regard me all he has to do is to read the columns of The Worker, the communist paper, or other communist publications circulated in the country. I am not a member of the communist party, but I do believe that we are in danger of being stampeded because of the prevalence of a number of communists in the country. And even though they opposed me and both my colleagues at the last election, I say none the less that I stand for free speech. It was only the other day when I was in the city of Windsor that a meeting which I was addressing was almost broken up by a group of communists. I do not like that kind of thing and I will not stand for it, because I believe that I should have the right to freedom of speech. If the trades and labour council call a meeting, as they did on that occasion, they should have the right to conduct that meeting without interruption by communists. That is only fair. But that is a different thing altogether from taking the ground that the communists have no right to speak in public or otherwise to voice their ideas. A number of the ideas of the communist party are not my ideas, but that does not mean to say that I should try to have them suppressed by force. If one set of opinions are suppressed by force it will be only a matter of time until other ideas are similarly suppressed. So that even though the communists are bitterly opposed to us we still stand for freedom of speech, and I trust that in this position we shall be joined by a great many other citizens.

An hon. MEMBER: Quebec is free.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not know whether Quebec is any freer in this regard than Toronto, because in recent times the city police have been very active in Montreal with respect to the communists.

Since one or two other members have had so much to say with reference to communism, perhaps I may be permitted to add a few words on the subject, although it seems to me to be apart from the bill before us. Someone the other day said that the O.B.U. was the same thing as communism. I am not and never have been a member of the O.B.U., but I have had occasion in the last ten years to study closely the various labour organizations in this country, and the man who states that the O.B.U. and communism are one and the same thing is absolutely mistaken. The O.B.U. is an organization in the industrial field. It was the result of an effort some years ago to get all the different trade unions into one large industrial body. It largely failed in its purpose although it is still in existence as an organization. But it was not a political organization at all, whereas communism is.

May I point out that however much some may dislike some of the doctrines of communism, there is after all no law in this country against it. It is not an illegitimate organization. Hence the communists ought to be allowed to carry on their meetings so long as they do not interfere with the freedom of others. If anyone is afraid of their talking sedition, the law is there and they can be prosecuted. Indeed, I often wonder why some of those who are opposed to the appearance of the communists in public do not adopt the reasonable course and charge them with sedition. The law, I say, is there and these people, if they preach sedition, can be dealt with under it.

It was only yesterday that my colleague from Vancouver called attention to still another infringement upon free speech. According to our information a prominent medical man of the city of Vancouver, who is also a member of the independent labour party, has been broadcasting. Some of the people in Vancouver did not like what he was saying, but a great many did. A complaint was made to the broadcasing company as well as to the department at Victoria. I have not as yet received the papers which would give me an accurate account of what took place or just who is to blame, but this doctor has been notified that he can no longer broadcast over this particular station. Here seems to me to be another danger to freedom of speech. When a broadcasting station is given a licence by the Department of Marine and Fisheries it has a certain general duty toward the public. If any man is willing to pay for the right of broadcasting he should be permitted to do so.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): And say anything he likes?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, and the hon. member knows perfectly well that that is not what I am advocating. If he says anything which is seditious, he can be charged with sedition.

An hon. MEMBER: What kind of doctor was he?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: A medical doctor belonging to the medical association of British Columbia.

An hon. MEMBER: Who was he?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Doctor Lyle Telford. I am just instancing this as being another instance of the curtailment of free speech. If this kind of thing is permitted it would mean that this new instrument for publicity, the radio, would be in the hands of a few, and if that few did not like what was being said or did not like the particular political doctrine which was being taught, they could suppress that speech and prevent that individual from giving any more broadcasts. To adopt that principle is to relinquish all our British ideals of freedom of speech.

There are laws against sedition, which laws can be invoked at any time. A man can be charged, regularly tried and convicted, and that is the proper method to pursue. We ought not to have a censorship such as some of our cities have been seeking to set up.

Regarding some of the charges made against the police of Toronto, let me direct attention to the fact that the hon. member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Factor) confessed that intimidation had been used in connection with the rental of halls in the city of Toronto. I know from those who have attempted to rent halls that that has been the case, that the hall owners have been told that if they permitted such and such an organization to rent their halls they would have their licences cancelled. When I presented this bill I instanced a number of cases in which that action was taken within recent months. I say that that is an unwarranted extension of the licensing powers of the police and a distinct curtailment of freedom of speech.

All I am asking for in this legislation is that certain safeguards should be set up which would give the citizens a right to free speech so long as he did not violate the law. Hon. members say that they are quite willing to have free speech within the law; that is all I am asking for. If he goes outside the law the man who is guilty can be prosecuted; all we are asking for is free speech within the law. Just how far this restriction of freedom affects organizations other than the communist organization was made quite evident in the case of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, whose only crime was that they wanted to hold a meeting in the advocacy of free speech. They were not trying to propagate the principles of communism, although that would not have been a crime; all they wanted to do was to hold a meeting in the advocacy of free speech, but they were prevented from obtaining a hall. I do not believe that such action is in the best interests of the people of this country.

This bill simply provides for the general right to assemble; it insists that before action can be taken there must be a danger of an immediate breach of the peace; that in judging of the character of the speeches an isolated word or phrase is not to be taken, but that the speech must be judged according to its general nature and character, and that the people called upon so to judge shall be firm and reasonable persons. The last phrase provoked a good deal of ridicule, the suggestion being made that there were no such people in the city of Toronto and that we would have to import them from other parts of the country. That particular phrase was taken from a judgment closely connected with this matter. I would not have chosen those words myself; I adopted them because of the legal advice which I had to the effect that they followed very closely a precedent in this regard. I am not seeking in any way to throw open the doors for seditious speech, I ask only, as is stated in the explanatory note, to provide a safeguarding clause to ensure that the general nature and character of speeches upon public affairs must be the ground for regarding any meeting as unlawful. Surely we are in line with the very best British traditions when we insist that whatever else happens in this country, in times of peace at least, we must preserve the fullest freedom of speech and assembly.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT

DEPORTATION—RIGHT TO RETURN TO CANADA AFTER ABSENCE

The house resumed from Friday, July 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth for the second reading on Bill No. 44, to amend the Immigration Act.

Motion negatived.

Mr. SPEAKER: The list of private and public bills having been exhausted, the house will revert to committee of ways and means.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF RESOLUTIONS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Mr. BOUCHARD: When the committee rose at six o'clock I was, through the courtesy of the Minister of Finance, discussing the question of wool. I do not desire to detain the committee much longer, but I should like to finish the letter I was reading. It continues:

The opinion was very freely expressed that such nurturing of the industry would result in higher grade produce and the introduction of sheep upon more of our farms. The necessity of some means of grading lamb and mutton was also strongly emphasized as an inducement towards better produce and as an assurance to the public of quality, resulting in greater consumption.

The following resolutions were accordingly drafted and unanimously agred upon:—

This meeting, called in conference on the sheep industry in Canada, with representatives of the producers of wool and mutton from every province in the Dominion, urges upon the government the necessity of the home market for their products, by means of a duty on all lamb and mutton, and a duty on the complete wool schedule from wool in the grease to yarns, and all waste therefrom, rags and shoddy. This duty to be sufficiently high to ensure to the producers a reasonable profit over and above cost of production.

These last few words would seem to anticipate what we find in the tariff board bill. The report on this meeting is headed:

Home Market Sought By Canadian Sheep Men

Ask Ottawa for safeguards against imports of wool and lamb—general conference follows annual meeting of Canadian Cooperative Wool Growers.

I will quote just a few sentences:

Preservation of the home market for Canadian grown lamb and wool was requested of the federal authorities at Ottawa in a resolution passed at the sheep conference which followed the annual meeting of the Canadian Cooperative Wool Growers in Toronto on March 26. Taking advantage of the presence of sheep raisers from all over the Dominion as well as representatives from the provincial and federal departments of agriculture, the packers, and others who attended the meeting of the cooperative, after the regular business, general questions were discussed and progress made in defining a sheep policy for Canada. It was pointed out that as we are not producing nearly as much wool and lamb as we are using in this country there was much room for expansion; that such expansion would be of great benefit in promoting sound mixed farming, but that unless the home market was reserved and developed for Canadian producers of lamb, mutton and wool in all forms, to ensure a reasonable profit over the cost of production, satisfactory progress could not be expected.

Just recently, on July 2, I received a letter which was forwarded to me by Mr. O'Brien, manager of the Canadian Cooperative Wool Growers, Limited, giving a little brief in regard to this question. This is the concluding portion:

Current wool prices to the grower in comparison with prices on white wool blankets at wholesale mill prices of 83 cents per pound f.o.b. Canadian mills, enjoying protection under British preferential tariff of 22½ per cent plus 20 cents per pound, give a true picture to the present position of Canadian grown wool.

May I quote from the general report of the last meeting of the Canadian Cooperative Wool Growers, Limited, held at Toronto on March 26:

In this connection it was encouraging to note the following editorial comment in a recent issue of the Canadian Textile Journal. It read: "Once development of the woollen industry is based upon development and expansion of domestic wool production it will be on firm ground, and we believe this can be accomplished over a period of five years without added cost of either mutton or wool clothing to the consumer."

The president of the Canadian cooperative concludes as follows:

We appreciate this note of encouragement and cooperation from our textile friends.

At the end of this convention, the Toronto Daily Star came out with an interview headed:

Ask Bennett's help in wool distributing.

Head of sheep raisers reminds premier of Liberals' promise of asistance.

The CHAIRMAN: I ruled before that the hon. gentleman was out of order in discussing an item not before the chair. I have ruled before that any newspaper comment on the debate is out of order.

Mr. BOUCHARD: May I say that according to this editorial the tariff board under the Liberal regime had promised a duty on wool? I will conclude by saying this: If I crave the indulgence of the committee to speak on this question, it is because in the Dunning budget there was a tariff of 35 per cent on woollen fabric. But when we come to the drastic changes that took place in the tariff last fall, we find under the item 554b, "woven fabric composed wholly or in part of yarn or wool or hair" and so on, a general tariff of 40 per cent, or an increase of 5 per cent; but in addition to this we have an additional specific duty of 35 cents a pound under the British preferential tariff; 30 cents a pound under the intermediate tariff; and 35 cents per pound under the general tariff. This is an additional specific duty which to my mind is to take care of a tariff that should have been put on wool. When I look up the United States tariff, I see that item 1108 covering woollen fabric, and so on, carries a duty of 50 cents per pound as a specific tariff, and 50 per cent ad valorem duty. I understand that the 50 cents per pound is imposed to take care of the tariff on raw wool. The inconsistency in our tariff is this, that you had a specific duty of 35 cents per pound on woven fabrics to take care of the tariff on wool in the fabric, but you have no tariff on raw wool. I shall not press this matter any further at the moment, but I draw it to the attention of the Finance minister in the hope that this question will receive further consideration when the new tariff board is functioning.

Mr. BENNETT: It was agreed, Mr. Chairman, that there should be an opportunity afforded for general discussion with respect to the items that were, in the view of my hon. friends opposite, but very inadequately discussed in the September session; hence the observations of the hon. member for Kamouraska, (Mr. Bouchard). May I say to him that he has overlooked just one factor with respect to wool, and it is the vital factor in determining the action of governments. It was the vital factor in determining that no action was taken by the tariff board.

This country has fewer sheep in it to-day than it had, say, twenty-five or thirty years ago. The entire number of sheep in Canada in 1928 was 3,415,000, and in the year 1871 the number was 3,153,000. The increase has not been at all commensurate with the demands. For instance, the entire wool production in this country is somewhere in the vicinity of 22,000,000 pounds a year, and the actual consumption of wool approximates 80,000,000 pounds. Part of the reason why there is an importation of wool is that the wool thus far produced in this country is not suitable for the purpose of producing the quality of cloth that is sought. In other words, in any event, with the wool we are now producing in this country, it would be essential to import wool from Australia, New Zealand or some other country.

The question is, what action can be taken to ensure (a) an increase in the number of sheep in this country, and (b) such a quality of wool as would ensure the production of a sufficient quantity to meet in the main the requirements of this country. I need hardly say to the hon. gentleman that the problem during the short period in which this government has been in power has engaged its serious attention. If during the nine years he was content to support the government of that day he can point to any action taken by that government which increased the production of wool or of sheep in Canada, I shall be glad to hear of it. No such action was taken. The sheep industry has undoubtedly suffered in Canada.

I need hardly say that we propose, if we are allowed a reasonable time within which to take action, to see that that state of affairs does not continue. One would think from such observations as those to which we have just listened that there had never been an opportunity afforded to the party to which he belongs to effect any of the reforms to which he refers. You would think they had been in the cold shades of opposition all their lives, and that this government had had for years and years an opportunity to effect the reforms which were much needed, and which are now rapidly being effected. I have not the slightest doubt in the world that when this matter has been carefully studied and all its implications are understood, we shall be able to devise a remedy to meet the situation. The reason that the duties were imposed upon the products of wool, namely, cloth and woollen goods, was that at the moment our factories and mills were closed absolutely by reason of the action taken by the preceding government, and we had either to stimulate and secure an industry that should be indigenous to this country, namely, the woollen industry, or let it perish. We took the course indicated by the schedules of last year, and if the hon. gentleman will give us, not as long as nine years, but half that time, he will find that the number of sheep in this country will have greatly increased, and that the production of wool will have been greatly adavanced, and we shall be producing the raw material from which our cloths are made to an extent that we have not heretofore done. No animal is more valuable than the sheep to a farming country such as this, and perhaps there is no country in the world where sheep could flourish more profitably than in some parts of Canada. The sheep is valuable alike for its wool and for the food value of its meat. The sheep is one of the most productive of the animals upon farms. The records are clear upon that point. The sheep enriches the soil upon which it flourishes. It serves the agriculturist for food and clothing. To the extent that legislative action may stimulate that industry it will be taken, but may I say to the hon. gentleman that had he in the first year he came to this parliament to support the government of that day shown the zeal for the industry that he exhibits to-night, we might have hoped for some little reform on the part of the government which he supported.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think I can show where there is a vast difference between conditions to-day and conditions when we were in power with respect to wool and the woollen industry. Go back to last September. I have not the tariff before me, but my recollection is that the tariffs were put up 35 and 40 per cent. That was on behalf of inter-imperial trade.

Mr. BENNETT: On behalf of the woollen industry of Canada.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Liberal policy on wool has always been to give the poor people, especially in the northern part of this country, woollen goods as cheaply as possible consistent with quality. That has been our policy, and the farmers were always willing up to recently to produce their wool free in order to make their contribution towards free woollen fabrics. But now it is a horse of a different colour altogether. We have woollen goods coming into this country now under a duty of 40 per cent, shutting out the cheap woollen goods that we have enjoyed during all these past years. Why should the farmer be expected to make a sacrifice on behalf of free wool when the woollen manufacturers are getting 40 per cent protection, which is the position to-day? So far as I am concerned I am still in favour of free wool, and I would rather see the duty on the manufactured article put back to where it was, so that our people could get cheap woollen goods, than have further sacrifices made by the farmers in supplying free wool, while the manufacturers are getting 40 per cent protection. That is going a bit too far in discriminating against the various classes in Canada, and I am not surprised that the hon. member for Kamouraska is struck by the disparity.

I should like to make a suggestion. There is a provision in the revised statutes of 1927 with respect to wool. It reads:

> Wool, namely, Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, Southdown combing wools, or wools known as lustre wools and other like combing wools, such as are grown in Canada:

The rates were 2 cents under the British preference, 2½ under the intermediate and 3 cents under the general. If we had that in force with a reasonable interpretation as to what constitutes good wools or wools corresponding to Australian wools—

Mr. BENNETT: That is not in force now.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I cannot see where it has been repealed. If my right hon. friend can show me that that has been repealed I shall have no more to say. The trouble is the tariff board has interpreted it as meaning that Australian wools did not compete with even the best Canadian wools, and my contention is that they do compete with our finer wools.

Mr. MANION: I do not wish to delay the proceedings, but before the tariff hearing a few months ago a Canadian manufacturer of woollen goods made the statement, and was not contradicted by any one, that good Canadian woollen goods in comparison with imported woollen goods are much cheaper to-day than they have ever been. So my hon. friend's statement about the price is just as erroneous as a lot of other statements from the opposition—that simply because you raise the tariff up goes the price of the commodity. That applies only to the imported article, and surely our Canadian-produced woollen goods should be good enough even for my hon. friend, provided their quality is equal to that of the imported.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend knows that if the tariff had not been put up woollen goods would be still cheaper than they are to-day.

Mr. MANION: No. Hundreds of instances could be given to the contrary. In the United States the higher tariff has lowered the prices of hundreds of commodities.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend argue that our woollen mills are putting out a larger volume than they did formerly?

Mr. MANION: I do not know about that. I am simply giving him the statement of a Canadian manufacturer of woollen goods, and that statement was not contradicted by anyone present.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is a good many moons since Canadian wools were as cheap as they are to-day. And why should they not be cheap?

Mr. MANION: That is what I am saying, but my hon. friend from Melville (Mr. Motherwell) has been arguing to the contrary.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The manufacturing of all Canadian woollen cloths is making excellent progress. Why should they not be able to manufacture cheaply? The point is, the producer of wool cannot live at the price he is getting for his product. Almost every article produced on the farm is in the same category.

Mr. MANION: That is on another line altogether.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I know, but when my hon. friend says cloth is cheaper to-day, I ask him why it should not be cheaper.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend from Melville asked when the item to which he referred was repealed. It was repealed by item 549 of the tariff which was enacted on February 17, 1928, by the government of which he was a member, and wool was put on the free list.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But the question raised by my right hon. friend was as to whether it exists at all now. I contend it does not.

Mr. BENNETT: It is free now.

Mr. YOUNG: The Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) said he had heard a Canadian woollen manufacturer make a certain statement at a tariff hearing with regard to woollen cloth, which statement was not contradicted. When he made that statement was anybody given a chance to contradict him or even to cross-question him?

Mr. MANION: Yes. Your friend, Mr. Deachman was present and able to butt in at every possible opportunity and make misstatements as he makes them on all possible occasions.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Surely my hon. friend would not call that a hearing?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MANION: Yes. Anybody who wished to speak at that hearing was heard, and heard gladly.

Mr. CASGRAIN: A Tory hearing.

Mr. LAPOINTE: An impartial hearing!

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Is the three cent duty levied on wool coming into Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Then it is free?

Mr. BENNETT: It is all free.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It depends upon the administration of it.

Mr. BENNETT: No. My hon. friend's government made it free in 1928 in the tariff of that spring abolishing the item. The item now stands free under all tariffs. That was the contribution my hon. friend made to the wool producers of Canada.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Nothing of the kind. This was in the revised statutes of 1906 and stood at a straight 3 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: It stood until 1928; then my hon. friend rescinded it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is standing still.

Mr. BENNETT: No, it has gone. It was repealed in 1928 and wool was made free. I am glad my hon. friend is sorry he participated in the execution of the wool grower, because apparently all this while he has been under the impression that wool carried the duty mentioned in the revised statutes of 1906. It will be recalled that Washington Irving's Rip Van Winkle did really wake up—and my hon. friend is another Rip Van Winkle.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Rip Van Winkle is awake enough on this question. No, it has been free all along, and what is more, if the tariff board want to interpret the present tariff on wool otherwise they have the authority to do so by levying a tariff of 2 cents British preference, 2½ cents intermediate and 3 cents general on any imported wool that competes with Canadian wool. They have that authority yet.

Mr. EDWARDS: What about taking the 12½ per cent duty off worsted yarns? That did more to destroy the Canadian wool industry than anything else.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—386m.

(i) sheets of iron or steel, cold rolled, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of sheets coated with tin: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent;

(ii) sheets, hoop, bank or strip, of iron or steel, hot rolled, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of sheets, hoop, band or strip, coated with zinc or other metal or metals, not including tin, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

On and after September 1, 1931: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: The only change made is to provide for the duty of 5, 7½ and 10 per cent, being effective after the first of September, until which date these articles are free.

Mr. VENIOT: The order in council was passed last August putting it into effect, and since then up to the present time it has been in effect at the rates specified here, 5, 7½ and 10 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the other way about. Orders in council were passed extending the time when the new rates became effective to the first day of September, 1931.

Mr. VENIOT: This statute perpetuates that—if I may use the term—because since last fall a branch of the American Steel Corporation has started operations at its Ojibway plant. How many men are employed at the Ojibway plant?

Mr. MORAND: Between three and four hundred right now.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not ask you; take your seat. I want authoritative information.

Mr. BENNETT: It has not been customary to deal with the number of employees at any particular plant. I have not the information before me, but the hon. member for East Essex (Mr. Morand), who lives in that vicinity, says there are four hundred. I have every reason to believe he is one man who would know.

Mr. VENIOT: I just heard him say about 350, so I do not know which one to believe. However, I will accept the lesser number.

Mr. MORAND: I may tell the hon. gentleman that at one time as many as 650 people were employed. Now the number is between 300 and 400.

Mr. VENIOT: When was that one time?

Mr. MORAND: Within the last three or four months.

Mr. VENIOT: Now I wish to point out one or two matters to the Prime Minister. We in the maritime provinces are very much concerned about this duty, since we use a great deal of tin plate in the canning of fish.

Mr. BENNETT: This is not the tin plate item.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, it is; it is the only item I see under which tin plate might come. Let me say that the same concern applied to the former government for a duty to protect them if they established a plant in Canada. The reply of the tariff board was, "Would it not be much better for you to manufacture the plate in Canada and dip it here as well?" That is what they are doing now; they are dipping it in a solution at Ojibway and calling it tin plate. Under the present tariff, and since the Ojibway plant has been established, the finished article of iron plate, so called, rolled at the parent factory in the United States, is imported into Canada free as raw material. What is the finished article of one industry may be the raw material of another, and at Ojibway they only process this finished article which they import as raw material. They do nothing but dip it, and thereby they get their tin plate.

It is said that these people have pledged themselves not to increase the price. Let me point out that the price has been increased, and in addition to the increase in price the maritimes are discriminated against in connection with freight rates as well. This tin is purchased in boxes weighing 112 pounds; the plates are generally 14 by 20 inches, weighing about 100 pounds per box. In 1929 the f.o.b. price at Pittsburgh, from which place this raw material is exported to Canada to be dipped and called tin plate, was $4.03 per box, and in 1930 it was $4.35. That was the price in the world market, where we were buying our supplies. The duty on that purchase now will be 64 cents. Ojibway quotations last winter, through Montreal, were $5, which shows that the duty is added to the open market price.

In the matter of discrimination in connection with freight rates, the rate from Ojibway to the maritime provinces is 20 per cent higher than the rate from Pittsburgh to any point in the maritimes, and it is higher than the rate on tin plate from Wales, where we buy the larger proportion of our imports. Instead of encouraging empire trade this extra duty will prevent Welsh tin plate being shipped to Canada, unless it can be bought at a lower figure than it has been selling for in the past, and the moment that is done the dumping duty acts. I hold in my hand a contract of the kind signed by people who purchase their cans, already made in different sizes, in Ontario. This is a three year contract, subject to tariff changes and so on, but the moment this duty was passed these people offered those for whom they were manufacturing cans to cancel their three year contracts, which had some months or perhaps a year to run, in order to enter upon a new contract beginning in January, 1931, under which, if the contract were made for a three year period, the purchasers might get a slight price reduction. I have a letter written by one of these firms located in Hamilton. The general manager of the company, in communicating with persons who desired to have their cans manufactured there as in the past, said under date of April 27, 1931:

Referring to your letters in connection with prices for lobster cans, we have given this matter some thought, and while there is no justification from the standpoint of cost of cans for making any reduction in prices at this time, we have decided that it is desirable in the interests of our customers to do so.

The reduction was made because they attempted to cut down the cost of their production and the tariff was taken advantage of in order to keep up the price. That is one case, but there is a worse situation. Not only are we in the maritimes compelled to pay higher prices for our goods, but I find an article in the press under date of June 7 last setting forth certain actions taken by the railway commission. This article proceeds:

Canadian railways have not filed lower freight tariffs on new automobiles to meet competition with trucking by road, as have the United States railways, but freight rates in Canada are constantly being revised to meet water competition. Railway rates on flour and grain eastbound from the head of the lakes to eastern Canadian points were recently reduced by 7½ cents per hundred pounds, the rate from Fort William to Montreal being cut from 32½ to 25 cents per hundred pounds.

This is the point I wish to emphasize:

Freight rates on tin plate from Ojibway to fruit and vegetable canning points all over Ontario have also been lowered.

It has never been the practice to lower freight rates on short hauls; the practice has been to lower freight rates on long hauls, but there is no cut in the rate on the 1,400 mile haul from Ojibway to maritime points, while the rates to centres of fruit and vegetable canning in Ontario, which are almost contiguous to Ojibway, have been reduced. Since the government are trying to see that our industries have a reasonable chance to compete, even among themselves, I claim it is the duty of the government to see that there is no discrimination against the maritime provinces in connection with freight rates. If there is to be a cut to suit those points in Ontario, adjacent to Ojibway, in order to help the fruit canning industry, why cannot we get a corresponding cut on tin plate to the maritime provinces, which will help us in the canning of our fish? In the maritime provinces, located at Port Elgin in the county of Westmorland, there is one of the largest fish canning factories in the world. We have also there, with branches in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, a factory that manufactures from tin plate large quantities of cans for fish. There is another in the county of Charlotte, New Brunswick, whose output of cans is also considerable. These people are faced with this discrimination, and I would ask the Minister of Finance to look into the matter, especially from the point of view of freight rates, to see whether the railway cannot give a cut in rates. If they can give reduced rates on short hauls to certain centres in Ontario, we in the maritime provinces should receive equal treatment.

Mr. BENNETT: The question of freight rates is too large for discussion to-night.

Mr. VENIOT: I just wanted to call attention to it.

Mr. MORAND: The freight rates were reduced not because there was any wish to discriminate but because the trucks were taking the entire business away from the railways. They were able to distribute from Ojibway by truck, and that is why the railways cut the rate. They wanted to retain some of the business.

Mr. VENIOT: That is a poor excuse.

Mr. MORAND: It is not an excuse; it is the truth.

Mr. VENIOT: It may be the truth, but it is a poor excuse. I did not say it was not the truth, but even the truth can be a poor excuse at times.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410d. Well-drilling machinery and apparatus, and complete parts thereof, of a class or kind not made in Canada, and seamless iron or steel tubing over eight inches in diameter, for use exclusively in drilling for water, natural gas or oil, and in prospecting for minerals, but not to include motive power: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. BENNETT: The only change is the substitution of the word "eight" for "four."

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—415a. Refrigerators, domestic or store, completely equipped or not:

(1) electric: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 35 per cent; general tariff, 40 per cent;

(2) other than electric: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: This divides the item into two parts in consequence of modern scientific discovery—electrical and other than electrical.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—422. Street or road rollers and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: There is an increase of 10 per cent under the intermediate and general.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—423. Electric dental engines: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—438a. Automobiles for conveying passengers, only, n.o.p., valued at retail at place of production, when new, with standard equipment complete, at more than $1,200 each but not more than $2,100 each; chassis for same: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. COOTE: It is often said that the tariff does not increase the price of goods to the Canadian consumer. In connection with this item I want to quote the words of Mr. J. C. Armer, vice president of the Dominion Forge & Stamping Company, in a recent article of his appearing in the press:

Canadians pay more for their automobiles than Americans pay for theirs. Canadians also pay more for all other manufactured articles than the selling price in some other parts of the world.

I want to refer particularly to this sentence:

They do this because it is the only way in which to build up a well-balanced nation which can provide work for all classes.

It goes on:

Few people in Canada, however, realize that this price differential in motor cars is less than in most other manufactured articles.

According to the unemployment figures we know that work is not being provided for all classes, but the tariff does provide work for one class. I have here a clipping from the Toronto Globe of February 4, 1931. It is a letter from Mr. T. Houston of Bruce county, and I will read one or two paragraphs with reference to automobiles:

As an illustration of how the Canadian farmer is handicapped—at the present time five fat cattle, weighing ten hundred pounds each, delivered in Chicago, will buy a light sedan car, while it takes eleven cattle of the same weight and quality delivered in Toronto to buy the same make and style of car in Ontario. Just think, six out of eleven of the Canadian farmers' fat cattle gone for nothing in this case.

He is making a slight mistake there—they have not gone for nothing, they have gone to provide some work. He continues:

Just imagine what the Canadian farmer could buy with those six cattle if he were given the same deal as the United States farmer. It would be more than enough to instal a water system in a farmhouse at the United States prices. And there are hundreds of other things in Canada worse than the automobile, only not so easily proved.

This man is of exactly the same opinion as Mr. Armer. There are hundreds of other articles where the price differential is worse than in the case of motor cars, only the facts cannot be so easily proven. He goes on to say:

No wonder the farmers' fields are being overrun with weeds, because it takes so much of what the farmer produces to buy the bare necessities that he has nothing left to hire help to fight this weed menace.

Where will it end? Let the politicians and the manufacturers beware. When you sink agriculture everything else goes down with it.

I took the trouble to figure out how many steers it would take to purchase a Ford truck in Canada, and how many it would take to purchase the same truck in the United States. I find that it would take seven steers, weighing 1,000 pounds each, valued at the average price being paid at Chicago for choice steers, to purchase a truck in the United States, while it would take eleven steers of the same weight and grade, valued at the average price being paid at Toronto, to purchase the same truck in Canada. It would take thirteen steers to purchase a certain make of sedan in the United States, while it would take twenty-four steers to purchase the same car in Canada.

It can be truly said that protection is providing work, but so far as I can see it is providing work for one class only. In this instance the farmer must produce four more steers in order to purchase a Ford truck or eleven more in order to purchase a sedan, and it takes considerable work to produce that number of steers. It is perfectly clear that the tariff is providing work in Canada, but it is providing work for a class which is already overworked. There is no unemployment amongst the farmers and perhaps this tariff is one of the reasons for that condition. The farmer is getting pretty tired working almost for nothing; if we had a little less employment on the farm and a little more remuneration for what we do, it would be greatly appreciated. I hope the government realizes the extra work which the farmer must perform because of protection.

This is perhaps the best item in the tariff to illustrate this matter because we know the actual prices prevailing in Canada and in the United States. The present budget is supposed to contain a provision under which the government can compel Canadian manufacturers to sell their products at the same price as though there were no tariff. I ask the government to enforce that provision in the case of the automobile manufacturers. I know nothing can be done to prevent this increased tariff going into effect, but we feel that we are entitled to ask the government to see that this provision is enforced and that the manufacturers of Canada be compelled to sell their cars at a price comparable to that charged in the United States.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mr. Chairman, this is one item in connection with which there is certainly no justification for an increase in the tariff. When reductions were made in the tariff on automobiles a delegation nearly four hundred strong came to Ottawa from the town of Oshawa and stated that if the reductions were persisted in the automobile industry of Canada would be destroyed. Any hon. member can read in Hansard the speeches made in this house upon that occasion by hon. gentlemen who were then on this side of the chamber. Citizens of Toronto came to Ottawa with the same plea, that the automobile industry would be ruined by the action taken by the then government. The government persisted in its course, and the automobile industry in common with other industries which enjoyed the tariff then existing and which was claimed to be too low, increased in volume, increased in output and increased in sales to an unprecedented degree. It could not be said by any process of reasoning that the industry was crippled by the action taken by the then government because at no period in the history of the industry did it expand so rapidly. In view of evidence of that character I fail to understand why there is any necessity for an increase in the tariff on automobiles.

Hon. gentlemen opposite came into office and one of the things they did under the authority granted in September was to increase the protection on automobiles, which was done by fixing the price for duty purposes. They have now abandoned that position and are increasing the tariff.

Automobiles, except possibly cars of the type in which some hon. gentleman opposite are riding, can no longer be classed as a luxury; and I doubt if there is sufficient market in Canada for that class of car to warrant its construction here without the price being increased beyond a reasonable degree. It is argued that this protection will give additional employment, but I do not believe the automobile industry has suffered any more than any other industry. Take agriculture or even the textile industry. The tariff on textiles was increased last year and now these factories have a glut of goods and no place to sell them. Automobiles are used by almost every individual in the country. Perhaps there are innumerable people who own automobiles who should not have them, but I cannot understand why this industry should be picked out and given increased protection. The statement that the price will not be increased does not go down, because, as the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) has said, there has always been a substantial difference between the selling price of cars in Canada and the selling price of similar cars in the United States. The Ford car is a splendid example. One factory is situated on the Canadian side, and another on the American side. A man buying a car on the American side has an advantage of nearly $100 over the Canadian who buys his car across the river.

I know it is useless to protest, as hon. gentlemen have the necessary majority to put these increased duties into effect, but I must state that in this particular the Canadian people have been bled ever since the inception of the automobile industry. They have been forced to pay too great a price for the privilege of owning a car in Canada, and now they will have to pay even more at a time when they can least afford to do so. I want to protest as strongly as I can against these increased duties on automobiles.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not quite sure whether either of the hon. gentlemen has taken the trouble even to read the items.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I took the trouble to read them.

Mr. BENNETT: First, there is no change in the price of a Ford car, nor is there any change in the duty upon any cars valued up to $1,200. That remains just at the figure that was fixed by the government of my hon. friends opposite.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does my right hon. friend make the statement now that the valuation fixed by order in council did not affect the price of the Ford car?

Mr. BENNETT: I shall come to that presently. I was talking at the moment about the question of the tariff. It is rather difficult to understand just why any hon. member should make statements in this committee about the tariff on these cars being increased.

I repeat: The tariff with respect to the cars about which all this discussion has taken place, namely, those that cost up to $1,200, has not been changed. Second, the tariff on cars that range from $1,200 to $2,100 has been increased 2½ per cent under the general tariff, and that is all. But there has been a decrease in the intermediate tariff, and in addition to that, item 438d contains provisions for free admission of a large number of the component parts used in the production of automobiles, thereby, in my judgment, making provision for a reduction rather than an increase in price.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend knows that very few machines come in under the intermediate tariff.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; but it will be found by reference to item 1055 that a determined effort has been made for the first time to ensure the utilization of Canadian materials in the production of cars in this country. I said last year, in answer to a statement made by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), that it was rather late in the day for us to determine whether or not we should have an automobile industry in Canada. There is now invested in that industry alone nearly $100,000,000, and in the production of automobile parts not less than $17,000,000 to $20,000,000 more. The time to determine what action should be taken with respect to an industry is not after you have permitted it to develop to the point where hundreds of thousands of people are directly and indirectly dependent upon it; the decision must be taken at the time you embark upon it. Whether or not Canada should ever have had an automobile industry is a question on which there may be diversity of opinion, but it is no longer a question. We have embarked upon the industry, and in 1926, the period to which the hon. gentleman referred, it will be recalled that the government of the day did change the items as they brought them down to parliament. It will be recalled that the Minister of Finance of that day stood in his place in this chamber and altered his tariff items in that regard, and that he made provision for what in the aggregate was as great protection as the industry had theretofore enjoyed. In fact, the industries themselves said that never prior to that time had they enjoyed more protection than they did under that item. Whether or not that be so, it is only useful to discuss it this evening for the purpose of indicating that the government of that day determined that was an industry they could not let go to the wall. That was the decision taken by hon. gentlemen opposite, and in pursuance thereof this government, finding itself confronted with the situation I have indicated, has not changed one iota the tariff items with respect to cars valued up to $1,200. But it has divided cars into three classes: (a) the cars to which I have referred, valued up to $1,200; (b) the class of cars in value from $1,200 to $2,100, and (c) the class of cars that exceed in value $2,100. The hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) has very properly referred to the fact that by order in council it has been provided that the commission reduction in value on cars imported into Canada should not exceed 20 per cent. That was for the purpose of preventing unfair competition with respect to those cars the production of which we had deliberately encouraged. When I say "deliberately" I mean just what I say, because parliament in 1926 affirmed that view and it reaffirmed it in succeeding years. With the affirmation of that principle, the declaration that the industry should live, we have, by providing that the discount should not be greater than 20 per cent, endeavoured to prevent a dumping of cars upon the market in competition with the production of those whom, by the solemn declaration of this parliament, we had given the right to live. All that was done was to prevent that unfair competition, and limit it to a discount of 20 per cent. Now it will be found that in the legislation that is proposed, by item 438d we are making free:

> Horns, distributors, instrument board lamps, oil gauges, gasoline gauges, thermostats, oil filters, carburetors, purifiers for oil, purifiers for air, annular ball bearings and parts thereof, lock washers, speedometers and parts thereof, vacuum tanks, composite gaskets of copper and asbestos, steering wheels and rims therefor, one piece welded axle housings, machined or not, instrument bezel assemblies, dash heat indicators, electric ignition locks, cylinder lock barrels and keys, bearing spring shackles and automatic radiator shutter assemblies, ammeters, radiator shells, body cowls, and body stampings of metal, including front, rear, side, door and seat stampings, not welded nor riveted nor further manufactured than as stampings, all of a class or kind not made in Canada, when imported by manufacturers of goods enumerated in tariff items 438a, 438b, 438c, and 438e for use only as original equipment in the manufacture of motor vehicles enumerated in tariff items 438a, 438b, and 438c.

Then in item 1055 hon. members will find we have provided for a refund or drawback of duty paid with respect to other items, in one instance a drawback of 60 per cent, in the other of 25 per cent. What is the net result of that effort? First, with respect to materials that enter into the production of a car and that are not manufactured in Canada, there shall be free entry into this country.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That was in existence before.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly. It is being extended.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): A few more items; that is all.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly, but very important ones.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The same provision, namely, if they are not made in Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: The point is that we are endeavouring by item 1055 to ensure that those component parts that are now being made efficiently and commercially in Canada shall be utilized, because the drawback against the imported articles would be only 25 per cent, and then with respect to another class the drawback would be only 60 per cent. The net result of that would be a car that would, we believe, cost less to produce. I cannot speak of this yet, because it is too soon to make any predictions with respect to it, but I believe there will be a reduction instead of an increase in the price of that class of car.

There is again this situation: Why after all, should we as members of the House of Commons have differences or disputes with respect to a matter of this kind? Both parties have said they want an automobile industry in Canada; we have deliberately said it. We have invited $100,000,000 of capital to put itself into the industry in this country. That capital is now producing cars, giving employment to thousands of people and indirectly to many thousands more in connection at least with the materials that enter into the ultimate production of a car. We are all agreed as to that.

Miss MACPHAIL: Will the Prime Minister not say that the capital invested in the automobile industry has had very splendid returns through the years?

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose the hon. member for Southeast Grey refers to what has been said so often as to the profits of the Ford Motor Company in the early days of its history in this country. This we do know, that the reports of the automobile industry during the last twelve months in Canada have been of lossess, not gains.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Miss MACPHAIL: Could they not afford some losses? Have they not had very great gains?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly they can afford to make losses, as all business can, until the receiver takes possession.

Miss MACPHAIL: Would the automobile industry not be safe for quite some time?

Mr. BENNETT: I would say that the automobile industry has no greater assurance of safety than has, for instance, a great paper industry that went into the hands of a receiver yesterday. If the hon. member were sitting in her place a few years ago she would have said with profound certainty that that particular industry could have afforded to take losses and there was no likelihood of its going into the hands of a receiver; but the receiver is there and the industry is in his hands. All we have endeavoured to do, with the best capacity we have, is to evolve a scheme which we trust will ensure, on the one hand, efficiency and effectiveness in production, with the utilization of the maximum of Canadian materials, and, so far as is possible consistent with that doctrine, to make the component parts that enter into the construction of the finished article free from any tariff levy.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): What were the imports, together with the valuation and revenue obtained, of cars valued at from $1,200 to $2,100, and over $2,100?

Mr. BENNETT: The figures as to the revenue are not here, but as to the value, under item 438a, 5,000 automobiles were imported, valued at $5,999,681, or approximately $6,000,000, the imports being entirely from the United States. Under item 438b, which the hon. gentleman presumably has before him, the imports were 2,987 freight automobiles, valued at $3,913,000, chiefly from the United States, the imports from that country amounting to $3,656,000. Automobiles under $1,200 came in to the number of 12,927, valued at $7,549,535, chiefly from the United States, the imports from that country being $7,534,728.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): If you are going to give the industry 40 per cent protection on high priced cars, has the government never thought it would be in the interests of the country to take at least 15 or 20 per cent of an excise duty and put it into the revenues of the country, rather than into the pockets of the manufacturers?

An hon. MEMBER: And increase the price?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): It is the old story over again. I am surprised at the disposition of members of the cabinet, as well as of their docile followers, who have become so credulous that they believe almost everything they have been telling us.

Mr. BROWN: Why does the finance minister fix upon 1926 as the time we were irrevocably committed to upholding the automobile industry?

Mr. BENNETT: I did not do that. I said that both parties had committed themselves to that industry, and I said that in 1926 we made a solemn declaration to that effect. The Minister of Finance of that day determined what action he would take, and he took it.

Mr. BROWN: I understand that the finance minister said that he was of the opinion that the automobile manufacturers never at any time had enjoyed such prosperity as they did under that tariff, or something to that effect.

Mr. BENNETT: I said that their protection had never been greater.

Mr. BROWN: That is about the same thing.

Mr. BENNETT: Not necessarily.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I want to deny the finance minister's assertion.

Mr. BROWN: The tariff on automobiles of the particular class referred to was reduced to 20 per cent, although we all know that part of the protection was put back again through customs regulations as to the discount to be allowed for duty purposes. The hon. member for East Essex spent the greater part of his remarks on the budget in an endeavour to prove that the automobile industry had suffered under that tariff.

Mr. YOUNG: The finance minister said a few moments ago that he would explain to us the orders in council setting up an arbitrary valuation of automobiles for duty purposes.

Mr. BENNETT: I have already indicated that. I said that in the case of automobiles up to a value of $1,200, the discount should not be greater than 20 per cent. That was what the order in council was.

Mr. YOUNG: We would like an explanation of exactly how that worked out, of how it succeeded in transferring revenue from the Dominion treasury to the coffers of American manufacturers.

Mr. BENNETT: It has not worked out that way.

Mr. EULER: I think perhaps the committee understands very clearly, or if it does not, it should, that by the action of the government the protection on automobiles has been twice increased; for the government have fixed the discount at 20 per cent, whereas, as a matter of fact, on various makes of automobiles imported, the real discount is considerably greater than 20 per cent, and in many cases runs as high as 38 and 40 per cent. I am not finding any particular fault; in fact I approve of maintaining the automobile industry in Canada, but during the session of 1930 when the old government was in office my right hon. friend was very much concerned, in the last week of the session, I think, as to whether the government of the day contemplated a uniform rate of discount. I know that he questioned me very particularly on the point. All I could say to him was that some consideration had been given to the application of the automobile manufacturers for the fixing of a discount at 20 or 17½ per cent, or whatever it might be. My right hon. friend was then very particular to point out that if anything were done—he was not particularly opposed to increasing the protection—it should be done by statute, with which I quite agree. But the question I wish to ask the Minister of Finance is this: Was the fixing of the discount at a uniform rate of 20 per cent on automobiles imported into Canada done for the purpose of giving further protection, or to simplify the administration of the Customs Act? I will admit right here there was considerable difficulty in the Department of National Revenue in establishing whether the discounts were bona fide discounts, and investigation had constantly to be made. All of that difficulty is now obviated by having the rate of discount uniformly fixed at 20 per cent. My point is this: If it is intended that the protection shall be greater —and I think perhaps that was the purpose of the present government—whether, instead of increasing the protection by reducing discounts and furthermore increasing the protection by increasing the tariff to 40 per cent on these higher priced cars, it would not have been just as well to say protection shall be given by one means only, and that is by the tariff itself? I should like to hear from the Minister of Finance whether that was the purpose, whether he intended to increase protection in two different ways rather than in one way only; or whether the two-fold purpose was to simplify administration and increase protection at the same time?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman has asked—what I would expect from one who has administered the department—a very fair question. The difficulty that he experienced in the department of having to investigate the discounts on each particular car made the work of the department very cumbersome and delayed it also, as he very well said. But that was not the only purpose—the hon. gentleman is quite right. The twofold purpose, as I endeavoured to indicate a moment ago, was, first, to ensure uniformity, and, shall I say, rapidity in the transaction of business; secondly, to ensure against unfair competition depending upon whim or caprice of each individual dealer as to the discount that might be granted under pressure of economic tress. I endeavoured to point out a moment ago that the second purpose as well as the first was to ensure fair competition for the domestic producer.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Greater protection, in other words?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. EULER: Is it not also true, then, with regard to cars priced at not more than $1,200, that the protection is increased by reason of the fixing of the discount at 20 per cent?

Mr. BENNETT: I think that is one case in which you could hardly say so, because that is about the discount allowed. The hon. gentleman knows that 20 per cent is the general rate of discount with respect to the cheaper cars; but in the higher class cars he is quite right, it did run to 35 per cent. I think there was one illustration of a high priced car on which the discount this year had gone as high as 38 per cent.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The Prime Minister a few moments ago made a statement which I think is correct, that in every part of the house we are in favour of the maintenance of an automobile industry in this country. There is no difference of opinion as to that. But there may be a distinct difference of opinion as to the measures which are necessary for the maintenance of that industry. A substantial increase in protection is given by these tariff resolutions, not so much by way of the tariff itself but by way of valuation and of free imports of certain parts—which lower the cost of construction to the manufacturer but do not necessarily cheapen the cost of the car to the consumer, because that again is set by competition from the outside. To my mind any increased protection to this industry might very properly have been left over until the new tariff board was functioning, because it is an industry which we cannot say is suffering intensely at the present time, and its condition vitally affects everyone in Canada.

I should like to make an observation while I am on my feet—an observation that I have thought of making a number of times. This session I have never criticized the government for their tariff policy. I made the statement on one occasion that undoubtedly the government did come into power on the pledge of increased protection. I for one have no criticism to offer with resepct to that increased protection, although I disagree as to its effect on the country. I think it is fair to say, speaking for the farmers of my part of the country, that they are not desirous of seeing any manufacturing industry suffer. They are willing to stand for a good deal to keep every industry running in such a way as to ensure employment to Canadian working men. The average farmer thinks—and it is difficult to convince him that he is wrong—that during this period of depression almost every industry and every activity in the country has the shock to some extent softened by legislation—every industry except the farming industry. The manufacturing industry has its prices safeguarded, as far as they can be safeguarded, by protective tariffs. I will admit at once that the difficulty of selling their goods to a limited market has caused them troublous times, and I do not say they are making profits now; but I do say that so far as we can do so by tariff legislation we are protecting them from the shock of this depression and making certain, as far as it is possible, that they shall sell their goods at profitable prices. In the same way transportation service is protected under the Railway Act, and it is administered to ensure that no matter what the value of the products they carry the railways shall at least receive profitable freight rates. Likewise our banks, our mortgage companies and our loan companies are safeguarded by law so that they may be able to conduct their operations on a profitable basis. But what about the farmer? He says, and very logically, that he is left unprotected to bear the shock of this depression. I say unprotected, because although this government is doing its best to protect our farmers, no one knows better than the Prime Minister that the tariff has been of very little benefit to them. The farmer is willing to bear his share of the depression, to tighten up his belt and fight his way through, but he does feel that so far as it can be fairly done every class in the country should bear its fair share of the burden with him, otherwise he will be overwhelmed.

Mr. McGIBBON: I was very much interested to hear the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) say that everything in the way of protection should be governed by the tariff. But I should like to ask him by what authority he changed the content of the Canadian car and applied it to all cars made in the shop instead of to the individual car. This change increases importation into this country and deprives the Canadian workman and the Canadian manufacturer respectively of thousands of dollars' worth of work and business. He did it absolutely without authority and without legislation.

Mr. YOUNG: Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago when I asked the Prime Minister if he would explain to the committee how the order in council fixing the discount at 20 per cent transferred the revenue from the public treasury to the pockets of the American manufacturers, he said it did not do so. I think I can demonstrate to the house that it does. Take the cost of the car that retails at $1,000, on which the discount allowed is 30 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: There are not any.

Mr. YOUNG: I am taking approximate figures. I have in my room accurate figures, but these will illustrate the point as well as any others. The discount on a car retailing at $1,000 would be 30 per cent. The importer of that car would pay to the manufacturer in the United States $700. When he brings that car to the border the duty at 20 per cent would be $140. The order in council says he must not accept a 30 per cent discount, but is restricted to a 20 per cent discount; it says therefore that the valuation of that car for duty purposes must be $800. It is valued at $800, and the duty being 20 per cent he pays $160 in duty. Very well; then the customs official comes to him and asks, "What did you actually pay the manufacturer for the car?" If he says, "I paid $800," the official will say, "Very well; you have paid the proper duty". If, on the other hand, he says, "I paid only $700," the official will pay to him, "You have violated the dumping laws of this country, and now we will fine you the extra $100 which you did not pay for the car." If the purchaser says, "May I pay that $100 to the manufacturer and so get away without paying the $160 duty?" He will be told that he can do so. What will be his decision? He has the choice of paying that $100 either to his principal in the United States or into the public treasury here in the form of a fine. Undoubtedly he will pay it to his principal in the United States, and the result of this order in council will be to transfer revenue to the pockets of the American manufacturer which might have come into the treasury of this country.

Mr. COOTE: I would not further prolong the debate at this late stage of the session were it not for the reference made by the Prime Minister to the large amount of foreign capital invested in the automobile industry in Canada which he said it was our duty to protect. I should like to direct the attention of the government to the statement contained in Hansard of March 29, 1926, in regard to the capitalization of the Ford Motor Company of Canada. It is shown that the original capital stock of this company amounted to $125,000, of which half, or $62,500, went to the Detroit company for certain rights they possessed. In 1926 the capital of the Ford Motor Company had increased to $7,000,000. No new capital had been put in; the balance of that $7,000,000 was taken from the profits which had been earned by the industry itself. A statement appearing in an article in the Financial Post of February 12, 1926, shows very clearly that all the capital stock of $7,000,000, with the exception of $125,000, was earned out of the profits of the industry, and at that time the company's balance sheet showed a total net worth of $41,000,000. I think that company has done exceptionally well in building up a total net worth of $41,000,000 from an investment of $125,000, half of which was foreign capital.

Perhaps we are unduly alarmed with regard to the necessity of seeing that profits are returned on all this capital. Although this situation may seem satisfactory to the Prime Minister and the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler), I believe the farmers of Canada are getting a little weary of maintaining this industry if it is to cost us as much as it has cost up to the present; for it takes seven steers at Chicago prices to buy a truck at Detroit prices, and eleven steers at Toronto prices to buy a truck at that point, and the difference is even greater when it comes to a sedan. The increased percentage of farm products necessary to purchase a car in Canada applies to many other commodities than steers; I think it would apply to butter, eggs, wheat and many other things. This is the problem facing the farmer, and it is a problem which the government must recognize. How can they increase the return to the farmer so that he may pay these increased prices?

Mr. EULER: The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) has made a statement which I am sure was made in good faith but which I hope is not founded on fact. He claims that the 20 per cent discount works out in this way: We will say a car comes in on which the exporter in the United States allows a bona fide discount of 30 per cent. The department here allows a discount of only 20 per cent, and if the United States manufacturer does not actually sell his car on the basis of the 20 per cent discount the statement is made by the hon. member for Weyburn that the department applies the dump. Under the old administration of course that would have been quite impossible and quite unfair, because the dump is never applied unless the selling price in Canada is less than in the country of origin. I should like to know whether there has been any change in practice in that regard. If there has been a change and the dump is applied in a case like that I think it is an injustice.

Mr. BENNETT: When I heard the hon. gentleman make that statement my belief was that he was in error as to the application of the dumping clause. I am informed that it does not apply, and that he is wrong.

May I say to the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) that for the first time in the history of the country an earnest effort has been made to make an adjustment between the farmer's production and what he may pay with respect to duties and tariffs. Even if he has a unit as small as a quarter-section of land on which he produces 1,000 bushels of grain he would get $50, which at least is some compensating adjustment since it is more than he will have paid with respect to customs duties. From whom does that money come, primarily and principally it comes from these very industries to which we are referring, from the men whom he says we cannot longer keep but who are not asking to be kept. That is unfair and unjust, and is not advancing the cause of those whom I think other people have at heart quite as much as those who talk so much about it when they say the farmer is always the man who is being held up. The farmer is being given a compensating adjustment which more than meets the sum which on the average he will pay in duties with respect to motor cars or any other items of this nature with respect to the tariff.

Mr. COOTE: I think he has already paid it.

Mr. YOUNG: If, as the minister says, this dumping duty is not applied to the man who buys his car for $700 instead of for $800, which he should pay under the regulation, then I ask the minister how he enforces his order in council.

Mr. MORAND: If that were true; if the automobile firms in the United States were making an extra $100 on each car, how would the hon. gentleman account for the fact that the Reo, the Graham, the Hupmobile and the Studebaker companies are all opening factories on this side of the line? Surely they would take advantage of that opportunity to make money. This legislation has forced these people to come over here and employ men on this side of the line, so that should be sufficient answer without going further into the matter.

Mr. YOUNG: I have not had any communications with automobile manufacturers in the United States, but I have received a communication from a manufacturer of cartridges, which have been treated in a similar way. This manufacturer asks, "Why am I compelled by your Customs department to charge my Canadian dealers 10 per cent more for cartridges than I am willing to accept from them or than I am charging my American dealers?" The same thing applies to automobiles.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not accurate to-day.

Mr. YOUNG: When did it cease to be accurate?

Mr. BENNETT: Some time ago.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I should like to refer to item 1055, which states in part:

> Provided, further, that no drawback shall be paid under this item on importations of any of the undermentioned articles.

Then follows a long list of articles on which under the old system no drawback was supposed to be allowed. With respect to the articles I shall mention, namely, a clutch, a universal joint, a transmission or a starting unit, I want to ask the Prime Minister what drawback is to be given. On what parts of these units is a drawback now to be given? Is it to be given on the parts thereof or on the material therein? If on the parts, I can say that if a drawback is to be allowed on parts of universal joints then there is no necessity for putting that there at all, for the reason that 95 per cent of that article is in parts. Every one can be imported as a part, and if they are to have a drawback they have no right to be there. It was understood that these articles were not to have a drawback at all. That was my understanding of the first reading; but this reading is changed now to 25 per cent. Why should there be a drawback? I am opposed to these drawbacks. This really means that you are paying a premium now to have parts made in the United States.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the answer?

Mr. BENNETT: The answer is there; they are on the exempted list.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I know it reads that way.

Mr. BENNETT: Is the hon. gentleman using the votes and proceedings of yesterday or of to-day?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am reading from the votes and proceedings of yesterday, and I find in regard to the third item the following:

Provided, further, that on all materials and parts used in the manufacture in Canada of the parts enumerated in proviso (2) to the item there shall be payable, when such parts are used in the manufacture of the goods enumerated in tariff items 438a and 438b, a drawback of duty for domestic purposes of 25 per cent.

I wish the minister would be kind enough to explain that. I know what it means, and perhaps he will confirm my understanding of it.

Mr. BENNETT: It means exactly what it says. There can be no misunderstanding of the language. At page 5 of the votes and proceedings of yesterday there appears the item, "materials and parts, n.o.p."; and, subject to drawback:

When used in the manufacture of goods enumerated in tariff items 438a and 438b: 60 per cent.

Then:

Materials and parts, as hereunder defined, including all materials or parts wrought into or attached thereto; engines, bodies in the white. . . .

When used in the manufacture of goods enumerated in tariff items 438a and 438b: 25 per cent.

Then there is the proviso:

(1) Provided, that no drawback shall hereafter be paid under this item unless at least 50 per centum of the cost of producing the finished article, not to include, after September 30, 1931, duties paid upon imported materials, has been incurred in Canada;

(2) Provided, further, that no drawback shall be paid under this item on importations of any of the undermentioned articles.

And among those articles are universal joints.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is there any drawback to be paid on the parts of universal joints?

Mr. BENNETT: The proviso is:

Provided, further, that on all materials and parts used in the manufacture in Canada of the parts enumerated in proviso (2) to the item there shall be payable, when such parts are used in the manufacture of the goods enumerated in tariff items 438a and 438b, a drawback of duty for domestic purposes of 25 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: So far as that is concerned, I can tell the minister this, that all a man has to do in respect to universal joints is to put up a bench that will cost ten cents and bring these parts in and he can get the 25 per cent drawback. He does not need a factory or anything of that kind. And the same thing applies to all those other articles I have mentioned, such as transmission, clutches, axles, and so on. By having that drawback you prevent the main articles from being made in the steel mills of Canada.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: I propose, if my right hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie King) pleases, to move that the committee rise and report progress. We have not been in supply on the Post Office estimates and if there is no objection the Postmaster General can spend the next thirty minutes on his department.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There would be no objection to having the Postmaster General go on to-morrow, by consent, if it suited his convenience.

Mr. BENNETT: Someone might object. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Post Office—salaries, $1,492,399.

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Postmaster General): Perhaps it might be well for me to summarize briefly the operations of my department since I took charge of it. I hope that these remarks will prove to hon. members on both sides that my desire has been to administer this department with economy but at the same time to give good administration and meet the urgent needs of the public. There must also be taken into consideration the general financial condition of the country. The deficit which has occurred in the department is due to the decrease of revenue brought about by the crisis affecting this and other countries of the world, while the increase in expenditure is caused by the obligations for the development of service imposed upon the department by the former administration and authorized by previous parliaments.

The deficit for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1931, is estimated at $5,293,000. The estimated expenditure for that year is $36,292,603, while the estimated revenue is placed at $31,000,000. In 1927-28 the expenditure amounted to $32,379,195, an increase of $1,371,497. In 1928-29, the expenditure amounted to $33,483,058, an increase of $1,103,863.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. minister is referring to net revenue, not gross?

Mr. SAUVE: The increase in expenditure in 1930-31 is about $300,000 less than the increase in 1929-30. The increase in 1930-31 is estimated at $1,255,974, almost $800,000 of which is due to air mail service. The balance of the increase is due to the fact that the facilities accorded to the public were not curtailed. Notwithstanding the decrease in revenue, all services have been maintained, existing services have been extended and new services inaugurated. The increase in expenditure cannot be said to be due to the present administration but rather to the extensive nature of the service accorded to the public.

The present indications are that the revenue in 1930-31 will be approximately $31,000,000, a decrease of almost $2,000,000 as compared with 1929-30. In 1915 the postage rate on letters, other than for local delivery, was raised from two to three cents. This one cent tax resulted in a net increase in revenue amounting to about $3,000,000. In 1926 the war tax was removed from letters other than local which caused a loss of revenue amounting to about $2,600,000. At the same time the postage rate on letters to Great Britain and other parts of the empire was reduced from four to three cents.

Mr. VENIOT: Not at the same time.

Mr. SAUVE: That is my information, but this matter can be discussed when we are taking up the details. In 1928 the source of postal revenue was again reduced when the rate on letters within the British Empire was changed from three to two cents. On July 1, 1930, the rate on letters to certain countries within the International Postal Union was reduced from eight to five cents. It will be seen that during the last few years several inroads have been made on the sources of postal revenue. Notwithstanding these reductions in postage rates, thereby diminishing postal revenue, the department has been obliged to maintain satisfactory services, extend existing services and establish new facilities, thus increasing expenditure.

The Post Office estimates show a decrease of $1,372,017.58. Part of this decrease is made up in salaries and allowances made possible by deleting for the present positions which have been vacant for some time and by decreasing the amount of mileage allowance made to railway mail clerks and the amount for temporary assistants. The reduction in salaries and allowances will not mean that post office employees will be released. The reduction in mail service amounts to over $700,000, $412,000 being in the air mail.

The vote for miscellaneous expenditures has been reduced by $427,123.18. These reductions naturally preclude the possibility of general expansion or development of existing services, or the inauguration of new services, but with extremely economical administration we hope to maintain an efficient and satisfactory service, and at the same time to keep expenditure within the vote.

Salaries and allowances have been decreased by $237,894.40. This is made possible by:

1. Deleting provision for 366 positions in post offices and sixty-two railway mail clerkships which have been vacant for some time. Employees who are placed on the retired list or who leave the service for other reasons will not be replaced unless absolutely necessary.

2. Reducing amount for temporary assistance by $120,000. This means that temporary employees will be taken on only in emergencies.

3. Reducing amount for mileage allowance by $35,000. This is made possible by a reduction in personnel, pooling of crews of railway post offices and close supervision of assignments. No change has been made in the rate of mileage allowed railway mail clerks.

In the mail service the total decrease is $707,000. In the railway mail service the decrease amounts to $150,000. This is the result of a rearrangement of mail services and railway train schedules as well as close supervision of space units; in addition, no new services will be established. The reduction in the steamboat service amounts to $45,000. This is due to a falling off in mails offered for transportation on both the Atlantic and the Pacific services. As regards the ordinary land service, including rural mail delivery, there is no change. The vote in 1930-31 was $6,625,000 and the same amount is asked for 1931-32. While no curtailment will be made in the present services, the department will be unable to provide new services or to make extensions in existing ones. In the air mail service the reduction is $412,000. The general policy in regard to air mail is as follows: Air mail to outlying districts is a permanent feature of the department's policy. As regards all other air mail the government has considered it necessary to review the situation and to institute economies. In regard to the supply and repair of mail bags, the reduction amounts to $100,000. This is the result of economy in the use of mail bags, the purchase of a supply of cotton duck for letter bags being unnecessary for the reason that red striped bags formerly used for registered mail are being converted for use of ordinary letter mail and again placed in service.

In miscellaneous expenditure there is a decrease of $427,123.18. This is made up of a decrease of $5,000 in travelling expenses, $375,623.18 in stationery and printing, $40,000 in stamps, et cetera, and appropriations not required for 1931-32, $6,500.

I think these explanations will satisfy my hon. friends opposite and also the committee in general.

Mr. VENIOT: I am a little surprised, though perhaps I should not be, that the new minister, the first time he deals with his estimates, should take advantage of the item under civil government to give an aperçu of the work of his department. The questions he has discussed have nothing whatever to do with civil government. If he had commenced with the estimates of the Post Office outside service, the rather full explanation he has given would have had its place or raison d'être. I did not desire, as the hon. member is a new minister, to raise the point of order that he has taken advantage of the civil government item to give this explanation, but under this item it is impossible, according to the rules of the house, for me to discuss the department in general or the report laid before the committee by the minister. It is now approaching eleven o'clock. I have no objection to the item under civil government being adopted to-night, but when the first item of the outside service is called I expect to have the privilege of replying to the statement made by the minister to-night. As one who is perhaps supposed to take a greater interest in the Post Office Department than other members on this side of the house, I will claim that privilege when we reach the items of the outside service.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): How many office appliance operators have you in the department?

Mr. SAUVE: There are 107.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Where are they located?

Mr. SAUVE: In Ottawa.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Guthrie the house adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

Wednesday, July 15, 1931.

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILL

Bill No. 125 respecting The Wapiti Insurance Company.—Mr. Weir (Macdonald).

AUSTRALIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

On the order being called for introduction of a bill respecting a certain trade agreement between Canada and Australia:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I am told this bill will have to stand in my name because it deals with the tariff, and I do not propose to move the first reading until the tariff items are all disposed of, which I hope will be done this afternoon. The clerk tells me that should be done before we proceed with the bill.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask my right hon. friend, just for the sake of information, why it is that in this instance we proceed to approve of an agreement by way of a bill which is not preceded by a resolution, whereas in the case of the Statute of Westminster we simply approved of the arrangement and no bill was necessary.

Mr. BENNETT: In 1927, I think, when the rules were amended, the necessity was removed for preceding a matter of trade by resolution, when it does not involve putting charges upon the people and things of that kind. I am informed by the clerk that this is the rule at present. With respect to the Statute of Westminster we were simply petitioning His Majesty to lay before his parliament certain legislation. In this instance a trade agreement has been arrived at which affects the future of this country, and parliament is being asked to ratify and confirm it, but it does not come into force until proclamations are issued in both countries. The only difficulty is that certain tariff items must be approved of before the bill is read the first time, and the committee on ways and means should have disposed of those tariff items first. I consulted the clerk at the table with respect to the matter, and he advised me that under the practice of this house the bill should not be proceeded with until such time as the tariff items in the agreement had been sanctioned by the committee, following which the bill to confirm the agreement will be introduced.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understood my right hon. friend to say that if a bill respecting trade and commerce does not place burdens on anyone, under the rules it need not be preceded by a resolution, but I would direct my right hon. friend's attention to the fact that this bill does impose certain tariffs, and since tariffs are in the nature of taxation certainly it imposes burdens on the people.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps I should have added to that sentence and said unless the resolutions had been considered by a committee of the house. These resolutions are now before the committee of the house, and the proper course is to take no further step until the committee have completed consideration of the resolutions which were placed in the votes and proceedings the other evening and proceeded with yesterday by consent of the house, for which I thanked the right hon. gentleman yesterday since it enabled us to advance practically all the items. I think there are very few items outstanding; we will dispose of those this afternoon and then take the further step in connection with the bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then I understand that if this bill does not impose any tariffs in addition to those in the general measure there is no need for a resolution.

Mr. BENNETT: That is it.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

[Mr. Bennett.]

CUSTOMS INQUIRY AT QUEBEC

Mr. LAFLECHE:

1. Does the government intend to proceed with the proposed inquiry in the Department of Customs, at Quebec?
2. Was an inquiry commissioner appointed?
3. If so, who is the inquiry commissioner and when was he appointed?
4. If the inquiry is not to be held, what is the reason?

Mr. BENNETT: It is not customary to give answers to questions concerning the intentions of governments, but I can say to the hon. gentleman that the matter is under consideration.

ST. LAWRENCE WATER POWER RIGHTS

Mr. FACTOR:

1. What is the name of the private corporation or corporations from whom application has been received by the government for further diversion of water-power rights in the St. Lawrence river, as refered to by the Prime Minister on page 2086 of Hansard?
2. What are the details of such applications and how many cubic feet per second does the applicant desire to divert?
3. Under what terms?
4. What disposition has the government made of such application?

Mr. BENNETT: The corporation referred to is the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company. The application was not formal in character, but there was indication that they had received from the government of Quebec the right to take a further quantity of water from the St. Lawrence river, and that, of course, would be followed by action on the part of the federal authorities.

4. What is the total production of alcoholic liquor in the province of Ontario?

Mr. BENNETT: This question is incapable of an exact answer, as I indicated the other day to the hon. gentleman. If he means the amounts paid in excise tax, the government is, of course, in a position to answer.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I should not dream of asking a question which the government could not answer. I expect only such information as they can give.

Mr. BENNETT: The question, then, will have to be amended.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question stands for amendment.

CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa): I wish to direct to the Prime Minister a question based on two press items that have appeared in the Ottawa Citizen. I shall read only what I consider relevant to the question I shall submit, and if in doing so I fail to place the question in its proper light I shall be glad to read the extracts fully. First of all I refer to the Ottawa Evening Citizen of Tuesday, July 14. On the front page there appears the following:

Replying to a query by The Citizen this afternoon, however, Mr. Bennett said: "I do not at the moment propose a further interim supply bill."

This is taken by some to mean that the salaries may have to wait until departmental estimates are approved by the house.

[Mr. Plunkett.]

That is the first quotation. The next one appears in the morning Citizen of July 15:

In view of his statement to The Citizen early yesterday afternoon that he did not, at the moment, propose a further interim supply bill, The Citizen again approached the Prime Minister on the matter in the evening.

"Does it mean that the civil servants will have to wait for their salaries until the main departmental estimates are passed by the house"? Mr. Bennett was asked.

"Well, you see, I had expected that the main estimates would have been passed by parliament in the regular way before this date, without a further interim supply bill being necessary, but four or five days' delay doesn't mean so very much."

"You think the estimates will be passed in that time"?

"Oh, I didn't say that; but I don't forget things like salaries," the Prime Minister concluded. "I will have to consider what will be done in view of the situation now existing."

In the light of these two quotations may I ask the right hon. gentleman whether civil servants throughout Canada will be paid to-day? If not, why not, and if not, when will they be paid?

An hon. MEMBER: Solicitude.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): An interim supply bill for one-twelfth of the main estimates was passed some time ago. There is no provision, without the passing of an interim supply bill, for the payment of salaries due to-day, and I asked the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) whether there was any objection to the passing of an interim supply bill this afternoon. He assured me that there was not, and I propose to ask the house to pass a bill to-day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

LEGISLATION TO BE BROUGHT DOWN—PROBABLE DURATION OF SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): My right hon. friend will remember that in our conversation I suggested that this would be an opportune time for him to make a statement with regard to the remaining business of the session. I pointed out that if we met him in one particular we hoped that he would meet us in the other.

Mr. BENNETT: This affords me an opportunity to say that my right hon. friend's consent is not meeting me at all. It may meet the convenience of the public. When we discussed the question as to the amount of the supply bill, whether one-twelfth or one-sixth should be passed, the right hon.

gentleman thought that a month was ample, and we acted on that consent. I believe that last year it was made one-sixth, at least on one occasion. I thought that probably the house might hope to prorogue within a week or ten days and it might not be a matter of tremendous importance. But in view of representations made to me this morning as to the situation in city communities, and the undesirability perhaps of credit being asked for, with a possible refusal, I said that I would ask the opposition for their consent to a bill being passed. If the opposition does not desire that it should be done in the public interest, then I assure them that as far as I am concerned personally, it does not matter because matters of this kind are never matters of personal interest. One who has to discharge a public duty discharges that duty as well as he can. It cannot possibly be considered a matter of accommodation to me, it is a matter of public interest. If it is thought to be in the public interest, and I believe it is, then I ask the right hon. gentleman to agree to its being done, as a matter of public interest and not as an obligement. There is no question of personal accommodation in this matter, and I never took that view while I occupied the position of leader of the opposition.

So far as the future business of the house is concerned, the measures to be dealt with are those arising out of the budget resolutions and those, with I think three exceptions, now before the house. There is a public measure dealing with an amendment to the Red Cross Act. A serious situation has arisen because of the proceedings before a committee of this house. I have not asked the house to agree to morning sittings because that committee is sitting. It is a committee charged with very important duties and in the light of what transpired to-day and with respect to which the government has not yet had an opportunity to consider its future action, it may be that legislation will have to be submitted to this house for the purpose of compelling the attendance of certain witnesses who have declined to attend. The passing of a statute may be necessary or it may be that the matter can be dealt with by a royal commission. I cannot make any statement as to what the future business may be until such time as we have had an opportunity to determine what course of action will be taken in connection with this matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, may I say to my right hon. friend that when I asked him if he would advise the opposition as to the future business of the house, I hope he did not think that I was seeking any personal consideration. It was in the public interest and in the interest of all hon. members of the house that I made the request. I know that when the right hon. gentleman asks for interim supply it is not to enable him to get through the rest of the month, but rather for the benefit of the community generally.

May I point out to my right hon. friend that he knows that the fiscal year begins on April 1, and if he were thinking of the public interest he would arrange to have his supply voted before that time, at least for the most part. He can call parliament at any date he likes and he should not have to come to the opposition in order to get his supply put through. I hope another year he will get the session started a little earlier and bring down any important measures earlier in the session, rather than leave them until the last ten days.

An hon. MEMBER: We will be doing that for the next twenty years.

HUDSON BAY RAILWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. L. BOWMAN (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) advise the house if the work at Fort Churchill is proceeding according to schedule, and what prospects there are for grain being shipped out of that port this year.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, the work is well up to schedule, in fact it is a little ahead. So far as the shipment of grain out of this port is concerned, I will probably give a statement to the house to-morrow which may deal with the whole question.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): Mr. Speaker, I would direct the attention of the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) to the question which I asked yesterday in connection with the advertisements published by the harbour commission of Montreal advocating protection and the policy of Canada first. Will he advise the house if these advertisements have been authorized by him and if they will be continued.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): Mr. Speaker, I noticed the advertisements to which the hon. member refers some days ago, but I would advise him that they were not submitted to me personally. I do not know as yet whether or not they were submitted to the department, but I will inquire and if necessary make a report to the house.

WHEAT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): Mr. Speaker, in view of an article appearing in this morning's Citizen quoting a letter purporting to be from the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) to the premier of Manitoba to the effect that the federal government could not see its way clear to set up a federal wheat board, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if the statements contained therein are substantially correct. If not, has the government any other scheme in view to assist in the marketing of this year's crop?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the statement appearing in the press is substantially correct. The premiers of the three western provinces were advised that the government did not propose to set up a wheat board. It offered an alternative in respect of which it has not as yet received a reply.

INQUIRY AS TO QUESTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, of nine questions which were left with the clerk during last week and this week, only one has appeared to date in the votes and proceedings. Will Your Honour advise me when I might expect to hear about these?

Mr. SPEAKER: I advise the hon. member that the clerk has looked into the questions which he submitted, as well as the notices of motion, and it has been found that they are out of order. They are unparliamentary; some have been answered already, others have been held to be irregular and were ordered expunged from the order paper, others were considered as being argumentative, others contained presumption of facts, and others contained insinuations. For these very good reasons they are considered to be out of order. The clerk declined to put them on the order paper, and I approved of his decision.

Mr. POULIOT: Could I have the authority?

[Mr. Duranleau.]

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member desires to appeal from my ruling, he may do so; otherwise no discussion is allowed.

Mr. POULIOT: I was not discussing—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: I wanted the authority for the refusal—

Mr. MANION: It is the authority of the Speaker.

Mr. POULIOT: For each one?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I take it that it is Your Honour who has decided that these questions are not to appear on the order paper, and not the clerk.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is the duty of the clerk to look over these questions and decide whether or not, within his knowledge, they are parliamentary and properly admissible. He decided they were not and he submitted his reasons to me as well as to the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot). As I said before, I rule the questions and the notices of motion out of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I desire merely to clear up a matter of procedure. I have looked into the practice which prevails in the British House of Commons and I understand that the rule at Westminster is that His Honour, the Speaker is the one who decides whether or not a question shall appear on the order paper, just as he decides whether or not a particular question should or should not be asked in the house. I submit that Your Honour is entitled to be advised from any source, you may desire, but I think the full responsibility for any decision should be that of His Honour the Speaker and not that of the Clerk of the House.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be fully in accord with what my right hon. friend has said if he had stated that the ultimate responsibility would rest upon the Speaker.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Certainly.

Mr. BENNETT: It frequently happens that the clerk at the table, both at Westminster and here, deals with questions and orders as they are referred to him, but the ultimate responsibility must be upon the Speaker.

Mr. POULIOT: I prefer a refusal to no answer at all.

Mr. SPEAKER: From what I said, I did not think there would be any doubt that the Speaker was taking full responsibility in the matter.

PRIVILEGE—Mr. DUPUIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. The "Bulletin des Agriculteurs" a weekly newspaper of Montreal, published, on July 9, 1931, an editorial dealing with my attitude towards the bill introduced by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil), amending the act in connection with the penalty provided for adulterating butter. I would have discussed this question last evening, when the bill came up; but seeing that the hon. member for Compton was not in his seat then, I find it necessary now to explain my stand by raising a question of privilege. It is stated, among other things, in this editorial that I am in favour of adulterating butter—

Mr. DORION (Translation): That is so.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): It is the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency, who says "that is so"! I had a higher appreciation of his judgment.

The editorial adds: "Mr. Dupuis, if you wish to foster adulteration, say so openly."

With your kind indulgence, sir, I shall refer to the remarks I made on June 30 last, when the bill was before the house. I then stated that I was in favour of the bill; that I congratulated the hon. member for Compton for having brought up this question; that as a lawyer, I was aware, through experience, that dealers in cities adulterated butter by mixing cocoa oil, and that to inflict a heavy fine would be only right. However, on the other hand, seeing that this bill imposes the same penalty on all those who violate the act, and that in sections 5 and 7 especially, it is provided that all those who are convicted of having more than 16 per cent of water in their butter must be punished, I stated that the minimum penalty of $500 mentioned in the bill introduced by the hon. member for Compton should not be pressed, in order to leave some discretion to the judge who could determine whether the farmers have—

Mr. SPEAKER: I would remind the hon. member that there is no motion before the house.

Mr. DUPUIS: I am just rising to a question of privilege.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member is making a speech.

Mr. SPEAKER: Will the hon. member come to the point?

Mr. DUPUIS: I just want to explain my position. Your Honour will allow me to say that this article published in this newspaper is malicious and not according to the facts as stated by me in the house.

SECOND NARROWS BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. MUNN (Vancouver North): On behalf of the people of North Vancouver and Greater Vancouver I wish to make a special appeal to the Minister of Marine in connection with the proposed loan towards the Second Narrows bridge, Burrard inlet, connecting Vancouver North and South. I have under my hand a press despatch which states that the Second Narrows bridge awaits Ottawa action. I realize the minister is a very busy man, but if he will get this agreement through speedily, I can assure him this will be appreciated by 99 per cent of the people of Vancouver North.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): This is a loan of $200,000 to be made by the Vancouver harbour commission to the Second Narrows Bridge Company. At the present time we are inquiring whether or not the harbour commission will have sufficient security. We are endeavouring to get the information as quickly as possible and there will be no undue delay.

SUPPLY—CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house, I move that you do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of supply to deal with an interim supply bill.

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER: I presume this motion is for the purpose of providing whatever sum may be necessary for the payment of salaries that may be due to the civil service of Canada. I wish to express my deep resentment at certain words that were uttered by some hon. members opposite when, as is my privilege, I rose to ask a question. In no sense is this a parochial matter. I do not think any hon. member can accuse me of having expressed any parochial sentiments at any time. During the eleven years that I have been a member of the house I have taken a broad, national view of all questions. My only concern in this matter is to see that employees in the public service receive their salaries, and in doing this I am but exercising the same right and privilege as may be exercised by any other hon. member. At the same time I resent the expressions of which I complain.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not think that it is becoming to the decorum of the house that when an hon. member desires to give expression to certain sentiments, he should be treated in this manner, and it does not behoove some hon. members who never exercise the right of free speech in the house to endeavour to stifle or restrict it. I hope that if this measure is for the purpose that I have indicated it will receive the unanimous endorsation of the house.

SUPPLY—TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Mr. THOMAS HAY (Springfield): I should like to quote from a communication which I received the other day from Mr. W. W. Childe, general secretary of the Manitoba-Ontario Trans-Canada Highway Association. It reads:

Thomas Hay, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Hay:

At a recent meeting of the Manitoba and Ontario committees of this organization, you were officially chosen as the party whom we would like to have address all members of the House of Commons, before prorogation, on our behalf.

You are asked that on the floor of the house you pass along an invitation to the hon. Prime Minister, his hon. cabinet, and the members for all the provinces to be present at the inter-provincial highway celebration on September the 7th.

This is the Manitoba and Ontario section lying east of Winnipeg, between that city and Kenora.

The official ceremony will take place at the Ontario-Manitoba border, and the celebration will be a two-day affair at both Kenora and Keewatin, Ontario.

I may say that the completion of this link in the Ontario and Manitoba part of this highway is a realization of a dream that has long been cherished by the people of eastern Manitoba and western Ontario, and this committee would therefore like to celebrate the event in a way in keeping with the occasion. It will be a historic event and to some extent national in character as it has to do with the trans-Canada highway, which is now in course of construction in parts of Canada. I therefore take pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in passing on this invitation to the members of the government and members of the House of Commons, and I trust that as many will be present on that occasion as are able to come.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

WAYS AND MEANS

THE FISHING INDUSTRY OF THE MARITIME PROVINCES

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of ways and means.

Mr. W. G. ERNST (Queens-Lunenburg): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to take the time of the house at this late stage of the session, and I would not do so did I not feel it were necessary in the interests of one particular industry in my own province and in the maritime provinces generally. I refer to the fishing industry. Nothing has been said during the present session of the house concerning the plight in which that industry finds itself. We have heard a good deal about the situation of the wheat farmers in western Canada, and rightly so, but their plight is not one bit worse than that of the fishermen scattered along the coast line of the province of Nova Scotia. What is more, these fishermen have had lean years in days gone by and for a considerable period of time, and they have no reserves on which to draw. In order that I may place the question with which I purpose dealing more fully before the house I shall briefly sketch the position of the industry. I am referring particularly to my own province, the province of Nova Scotia, which as hon. members know juts out into the Atlantic. Off the coast of that province are fishing banks equal to any in the world, and fishing communities are scattered along the entire coast line. For more than one hundred years the people of those communities have been going out in their boats and vessels to catch fish. Until recent years the method commonly used for the ground fish, those fish which swim near the bottom of the sea, has been the hook and line. In recent years another instrument of production has been introduced, the steam or otter trawler. The steam or otter trawler catches fish by drawing a huge purse-shaped net over the floor of the sea, scooping up the fish and hoisting them to its deck.

For some years past the industry has been declining, rather than improving, and for that condition there are a number of contributory causes. Before I give those causes I shall outline a particular illustration of the decline which has taken place in the county of Lunenburg from which I come. In 1918 the port of Lunenburg sent 140 fishing vessels to the banks, each vessel carrying a crew of from 20 to 25 men, earning on an average from $800 to $1,000 each. This year the number of vessels is reduced to 42 schooners. The number of men on each boat remains about the same, and while the average earnings for this year are not available the average earnings last year were less than $300 per man.

As I have said there are a number of contributory causes not only with reference to Lunenburg but to the whole province, because the decline has been general. In the first place there came the Fordney-McCumber tariff which shut out from the United States a substantial portion of our fish. That situation was further aggravated by the Hawley-Smoot tariff. There has been a world depression which has brought a decline in the price of salt cod fish similar to the decline in the price of wheat. Salt cod fish is sold almost entirely in the export market. This decline has further aggravated the domestic situation because men, vessels and boats which formerly produced entirely for the foreign markets have been driven into the home market. The home market has been unable to absorb the product. Canada in fact is absorbing less than it did in former years, and at greatly reduced prices.

Further than that there is the additional factor of an unsettling controversy which has been raging—and I use the term "raging" advisedly—in Nova Scotia between those who employ the different instruments of production. One may say that the controversy is age old—in a sense it is—but it is one which rages between those who employ the steam or other trawler and those who use the hook and line. The steam or other trawler came to this country from Europe about twenty years ago and was used unsuccessfully in pre-war days. During the war it established a foundation. Most of those however who had fished off our banks during the war returned to their countries. In post-war years however the steam or other trawler has established itself in the province as an instrument of production, and from year to year its numbers vary. At present there are six trawlers operating in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. SHORT: There are two.

Mr. ERNST: Six are licensed in the province of Nova Scotia and were operating last winter.

Mr. SHORT: There are two at the present time.

Mr. ERNST: I would suppose my hon. friend would know because he is a director of the company controlling them.

I draw this matter to the attention of the house because a controversy has arisen. There are different schools of thought as to what ought to be done. Evidence was given before the royal commission which investigated the maritime fisheries in 1927, and it was so conflicting that it led to both a majority and a minority report. The majority report favoured the abolition of the trawler, but the minority report favoured its retention as an auxiliary instrument of production. The report of the committee gave rise to legislation in this parliament passed in the session of 1929 as an amendment to the Fisheries Act. Section 69a of that act consists altogether of six subsections. In the first place the purport of the section was to place the trawler under licence. Hitherto they had been able to operate freely, but through the legislation there was an effort to compel operation under licences, and only under licences. There was a further provision that such trawlers could not fish within twelve miles of Canadian shores.

There is a fourth provision which I wish particularly to draw to the attention of the house:

(4) The minister may determine the number of such vessels that shall be eligible to be licensed.

Then subsection 5 is as follows:

(5) Regulations may be made under the provisions of section 46 of this act.
(a) prescribing the form of licences;
(b) specifying the evidence to be submitted with an application for a licence;
(c) fixing the conditions under which a licence shall be issued;
(d) making any other provisions respecting licences.

Under the provisions of subsection 5 an order in council was passed in October, 1929, which imposed certain restrictions which were termed licence fees. I do not purpose to deal with those because payment was resisted, and a case was heard before Mr. Justice Audette of the exchequer court in which he decided that the order in council is ultra vires, although no reference of course is made to the statute itself being ultra vires. From this decision an appeal has been taken to the Supreme Court of Canada by the crown. My only reason for referring to the case is that the contention may be raised that I am referring to a matter which is sub judice. I do not intend to refer to the question which is before the court, namely the validity of the order in council.

One of the prime reasons for dealing with the question is that the very uncertainty of having the matter before the court is creating an uncertainty in the industry. I feel it is essential to the progress, stability and development of the industry that some measure of policy should be announced, whatever that policy may be. Under the sections of the act which I have read power remains in the minister by which he may give effect to a fairly broad and moderate policy.

I have outlined the history of the matter so that the question may properly be understood by the house. As I have said there are two schools of thought in the province of Nova Scotia and I feel bound to place them both before hon. members. The constituency from which I come supports the school of thought which makes representations advocating that the trawler be abolished. They base their representations upon two grounds: First, the conservation of the fisheries and secondly what they call "glutting" the market —a condition to which I shall apply a different term. They say that the trawler destroys the fishing ground and that its use results in over-production. I have placed their views before the house because I have felt it my duty so to do. Having put those views forward I feel it equally my duty, grave though the responsibility and position may be, to say that I cannot accept them. I do not believe in the abolition of the trawler; I advocate restriction and regulation. With reference to the question of conservation, that can be disposed of very simply by saying it is entirely an International question, and that to restrict or abolish the trawlers of Canada whilst trawlers from other lands can fish on the banks of the high seas would not in any way tend to preserve fish life.

Furthermore, from study which has taken place in the North sea, it is not apparent that the method of production is wrong; it resolves itself simply into a question of the intensity of fishing. I believe the minister would serve a useful purpose to the fisheries of this country if he would endeavour to have an international convention called to deal with the question of conservation, so that there will not be depletion, and further to deal with what is even more important, the question of the destruction of fishing gear. I brought to the attention of this house this session one instance of apparently wanton and deliberate destruction of the gear of a fishing vessel by a French trawler. Such instances are not by any means uncommon, and any international arrangement which could be brought about tending to eliminate that practice would be to the advantage of those who use line fishing.

With reference to the "glutting" of the market, that resolves itself into a question of production. Undoubtedly many of our own fishermen have had to turn from the salt fish field to the fresh fish field, either wholly or in part, which has contributed to that condition. I feel that this fault, if it be a fault, does not call for abolition but for restriction and regulation.

I come now to the arguments of those who advocate unlimited trawling. In the first place they say it is an economic development and that you cannot stop the machine. May I say, sir, that usually with such economic developments cheapness of production is a prime essential. From the evidence given by those who own the trawlers there is no indication that they are cheapening production costs; their chief argument is not cheap production but continuity of supply, with which I propose to deal in a few moments. Even if this were an economic change bound to take place, in view of present conditions and in view of the fact that thousands of these men, scattered along the coast line, are ill-adapted for any other calling, such economic change should be slowed and regulated in order to cause as little dislocation as possible to those now engaged in the industry.

With reference to continuity of supply I may say that in part I accept that argument of those who advocate trawling. Continuity of supply, I am convinced as the result of four years of careful study, cannot be maintained without some use of the trawler. True it is that conditions have changed as they affect those who fish with boats and particularly with vessels. They no longer depend on sails; they are powered with crude oil engines, but still there are times of storm when the dory cannot be put over the side, and the fish are not forthcoming. In the present state of the fish market those who purchase fish, particularly in central Canada, insist upon fresh rather than frozen fish, and the result is that during the last winter there have been instances, as probably there will be instances during the coming winter, when the trawler was essential to maintain that continuity of supply which is necessary for the development and maintenance of market.

Having stated that I accept that argument, may I indicate one other circumstance which is aggravating the situation. As I have stated, there are six trawlers under licence at the moment in the province of Nova Scotia, of which the greater proportion are under the control of one corporation. Under the restrictions brought in by the previous government there is positive prohibition against bringing in further trawlers from outside. To build them at home would entail many times the cost of those already under licence, because they were imported from abroad. In addition, in the present uncertain state of affairs, no one would want to bring in a trawler even if he could do so. The result is a virtual monopoly by that one corporation. I am not finding fault with the corporation; this condition has been an accident, but it should not be allowed to continue, because it can result in only one thing. The firm which employs this mechanical instrument of production will gradually squeeze out of existence all the smaller fish firms scattered along the coast of the province, the fishermen who live in those localities where the smaller concerns operate will be deprived of their local market, and the last stage of the industry will be worse than the first.

You may ask what I advocate. I advocate a middle course. I believe that compromise will provide the solution, and I am going to venture to read one paragraph of a letter written by a gentleman with whom I very seldom agree but with whom, in this instance, I agree very cordially. I refer to the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff). This letter appeared in the Halifax Chronicle of September 5, 1929, dealing with this very question:

> Before closing may I say that although the arguments on this question are nearly all, if not all, in favour of the real fishermen of Nova Scotia, yet the question must be dealt with by practical men in a sane and sensible manner and with a view to protecting as far as possible any vested interests by endeavouring to compose the present extreme differences between the line fishermen and the steam trawlers. My experience in life has taught me that it is necessary and usually the best policy to compromise where the opinions of two opposing parties are diametrically opposite and to endeavour to find a means of mutual agreement which will partially satisfy both parties. This question is of such a grave nature that there should not be any arbitrary or hasty judgment made.

Well, Mr. Speaker, no arbitrary or hasty judgment has been given, because that letter was written almost two years ago. I say, as I have stated previously, that I favour restriction and regulation, and I desire to put forward some suggestions to the minister in the hope that at least some of them may meet with his approval.

In the first place I do not believe any trawler should operate out of the ports of Canada, or bring fish into the ports of Canada to be landed here, except under licence by the crown. I make that statement because I believe first of all there should be the element of control. The licence fee, of course, is a question for government determination in accordance with the ability of the industry to pay.

In the second place I do not believe there should be any increase in the number of trawlers operating at present; in fact I believe there should be a decrease, and that no one firm or corporation should be allowed to operate more trawlers than are absolutely necessary to insure continuity of supply. That is, the trawler should be used as an auxiliary aid to the vessel and the boat fishermen, because I am confident that if this policy is adopted, and the minister requires that he be satisfied before issuing a licence that it is solely for the purpose of enabling continuity of supply to be maintained, no firm will control or operate a large portion of the trawlers operating in the province of Nova Scotia. In fact I feel that this monopoly is one of the things which must be got rid of if the other firms are to survive. Under the section of the act which I have read undoubtedly the minister now has power to do both the things I have advocated, because the act itself was not called into question before the courts; only the order in council was attacked. Subsection 4 of section 69 (a) states that the minister may determine the number of such vessels that shall be eligible to be licensed, the word "vessel" in that instance referring to the trawler. Subsection 5 states:

> Regulations may be made under the provisions of section forty-six of this act,—
> (a) prescribing the form of licence;
> (b) specifying the evidence to be submitted with an application for a licence;
> (c) fixing the conditions under which a licence shall be issued;
> (d) making any other provisions respecting licences.

Now, sir, I wish to put forward a further view, which I grant is a personal view rather difficult of attainment, because it conflicts with vested interests. It is my own contention that no trawler should be eligible for licence unless it has been built within Canada. I so contend because these ships with which the trawlers compete are built in Canada and at Canadian prices. The trawlers are purchased mainly in England, where they are tied up at wharves or fish piers, and they are purchased at prices which in this country practically amount to dumping. They are then brought in to compete with our vessels.

I contend that it would be thoroughly in keeping with the policies of the Conservative party to accept the trawler as an implement of production under licence, but only when it is built in Canada from Canadian steel and with Canadian labour. This would give very much needed employment to Canadian workmen and shipyards. It would raise this further question: What are you to do with those which are here? Speaking altogether personally, I would suggest that they be sold and that the owners be reimbursed for any loss they might sustain; and I would make arrangements to have Canadian trawlers built. If I am asked why I make such a proposal, the answer is that I am convinced of the necessity for restriction. I have no doubt that the cost of building in Canada would impose sufficient restrictions to prevent the over-rapid development of a trawler fleet.

I put forward that view knowing that it involves difficulties and that it conflicts with vested interests. I realize that it is practically a confiscation of vested interests that have accrued in years gone by. If my view is not acceptable, however, I urge that for the future, having licensed those now in Canada, we license no more trawlers unless they are built in this country. This, as I have pointed out, would give work to Canadian labour and to our Canadian shipyards. When I make this suggestion I am conscious of treading on thorny ground. It will be immediately urged by those who are interested in the trawler companies that in advocating the interests of Lunenburg I am taking away markets which others have spent years in building up. In reply to that contention I say that in the first place, admitting that the markets in Canada for fish have been built up by corporations which to-day use the trawler, this has not been done without substantial government assistance in the way of plants, marketing and advertising. And in the years gone by assistance has also been given in the way of bonus on freight rates. In the second place, let me point out that I am not advocating the interests of Lunenburg alone. Anyone who will visit Nova Scotia to-day will realize what a live question this is in fishing communities. The only districts I know of which do not support abolition are Halifax and Digby; in almost every other section of the province abolition is demanded. Perhaps I am taking my political life in my hands in saying that I do not agree with them, but certainly I am not advocating the interests of Lunenburg alone. Even if I were, however, my county is dependent upon fishing. The industry has built up the county and maintained prosperity not only in the fishing communities but in the back country where the wood is obtained for building the vessels. And I should be doing a disservice to my county if, in order to protect interests in Halifax or elsewhere, I were willing to sacrifice those among whom I was born and brought up.

I have made my case as moderately as possible and as fairly as I can, in an absolutely non-partisan spirit but in the sincere hope that some announcement of policy will be made which will give the industry some idea of what it can look forward to in the future, and so that it can make its plans accordingly. I should like to see this problem solved for it is causing great unrest and agitation in Nova Scotia.

I know quite well that I have dealt with but one problem of the fishing industry, but it is more immediate and urgent than any other. What I am proposing is by no means a panacea for all the ills of the fishing industry; there are a dozen other problems that must be solved. But I put forward this particular one because of its urgency. The condition of the industry is grave; it has never been more so. I want to thank the Prime Minister for restoring to the exempted list under the sales tax articles purchased by the fishermen. It may not seem much, but even a slight straw sometimes will break the camel's back. I can assure him that the fishermen of my constituency appreciate his action. I am not speaking in any spirit of pessimism with regard to this industry. I believe it has a future far greater than its past would lead us to expect. And I have no doubt that, with wise development, the industry in the future can take care of far more capital and a greater number of men than it can do to-day. It is because of this conviction that I have presumed to take up the time of the house to bring before it this problem which is of so much importance to the people whom I represent.

Mr. H. B. SHORT (Digby-Annapolis): I am surprised that my hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg should bring up this contentious matter at this late time in the session. This trawler question is a very live one, having been before the house for the last four or five years. It was dealt with thoroughly by the committee in 1929, and as a result of their deliberations there was presented to the house and passed Bill No. 26 which proved perfectly satisfactory both to the trawler industry and to the fishermen. Had the regulations under that bill been carried out there would have been no difficulty on either side, either on the part of the shore fishermen or so far as the trawlers are concerned. But for some reason or other a commission was appointed to look into the situation and it made a recommendation. It was on their recommendation that Bill No. 26 was based.

Now, all the regulations provided for in that bill cover the objections made by my hon. friend to the trawlers. The regulations limit the number of trawlers that may be used, and that is left entirely to the discretion of the minister. The minister is empowered to collect a licence fee from the trawlers, and as I said before, the bill was satisfactory both to the fishermen and to the trawler interests. My hon. friend's constituency now comes forward with representations. The fishermen there are not shore fishermen; they are offshore fishermen, owners and operators of large schooners. It was not the shore fishermen who started this agitation of late. They are satisfied now with the way conditions are working. The trawler companies have been their best market for fish. There would never have been any trawlers operating in Nova Scotia if it were not absolutely essential to have them in the fishing business, to provide a regular supply of fish for the markets of the country. Prior to 1910, when the first trawler came to Nova Scotia, there was no fresh fish market in Canada. The supply all came from Boston and Portland; not a thousand pounds of fresh fish per week were shipped to the upper provinces from Nova Scotia. The government at about that time gave a rebate on the express charges amounting to one-third of the cost in order to try to build up a fresh fish business with the upper provinces. That was the beginning of the fresh fish business in this country. Previous to that practically every pound of fish was brought in from Boston because we could not supply the market with fish when it was required. When the trawler was brought into operation it was then possible to supply fish as required and the result is that a very successful fresh fish business has been built up. This business has been built up by the steam trawlers. These trawler companies buy from one-third to two-thirds of the catch from the boat fishermen, as is shown by the report of the commission which investigated the fisheries in 1928. Now that the trawler companies have built up a successful business, the vessel owners of the county of Lunenburg want to step in and reap the benefit. Both money and time has been expended by the trawler companies in the development of markets; they have spent years in working up this trade which is being endangered by agitation coming now almost entirely from the county of Lunenburg.

I live in a fishing county where not a single trawler is operated, but we have the best class of shore fishermen in Digby county that there is in the province of Nova Scotia. They operate the very best class of boats, but they have no objection to the trawler because they realize that a regular supply of fish is necessary to hold the market. My hon. friend has stated that modern vessels equipped with engines are being used. I want to tell him that in 1910 a fleet of vessels was operating out of the port of Digby. These vessels were equipped with engines, perhaps not as powerful as those used to-day, but I submit that an engine in a vessel has nothing to do with catching fish. In order to catch fish the men are obliged to go out in small boats in order to set their trawls and there are weeks at a time when it is impossible to put a small boat over the side. When the commission was sitting in Lockeport in 1928 it was shown that for four weeks there had not been a single fish landed by a schooner.

Is this modern industry worth millions of dollars, using modern methods of production, to be ruined in order that we may go back to line fishing? That would be a great mistake to make, and the business people of this country would not stand for it. My hon. friend is mistaken when he says that all these trawlers are operated by one company. Four trawlers are owned and operated by the company of which I have the honour to be a member. I take some credit to myself for the building up of the fish industry. When I was in business for myself I shipped the first carload of finnan haddie which ever went to the west, and from that beginning a great business has developed. The business carried on at Lunenburg has always been a salt fish business. It has not been so successful during the past few years and they want to convert it to a fresh fish business. They ask that the trawler be abolished in order that they may gain control of the markets of this country. What my hon. friend has said might have been said to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and to the department, and I presume he has taken that course. He has brought this matter up in the house simply because he represents a fishing constituency. I represent a fishing constituency but the interests who own fishing vessels in my hon. friend's constituency have told him that he must bring this matter up on the floor of the House of Commons, and that is the reason why he has done so.

Mr. ERNST: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I deny emphatically the statement made by my hon. friend, and I sincerely hope he will withdraw it. I have not brought this question up because the interests who own vessels in Lunenburg have said that I had to bring it up.

Mr. SHORT: The interests who own vessels insisted that the hon. member bring it up.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has a right to state his question of privilege, and the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) should take his seat.

Mr. ERNST: I have brought this matter up in the interests of the fishermen of Nova Scotia. I have in my possession resolutions from practically every community in the province where there is a board of trade.

Mr. SHORT: I will accept the hon. member's statement.

Mr. SPEAKER: Any suggestion that the hon. member is bringing this matter up as a matter of personal interest should be withdrawn.

Mr. SHORT: I will accept the statement of the hon. member, but at the same time we can draw our own conclusions.

Mr. ERNST: I must object to such remarks coming from an hon. member who is a trawler owner and who has a direct financial interest in this matter.

Mr. SHORT: I have no objection to stating that I am interested in the trawler business, and I am proud of it. If it had not been for the trawlers, there would be no fresh fish markets for the Canadian fishermen. Our company has done more for the shore fishermen of Nova Scotia than any other half dozen concerns.

My hon. friend brought up the question of conservation. Six small trawlers only operate out of the province of Nova Scotia and according to regulations they cannot fish within twelve miles of the shore. During the summer months we have from forty to fifty French trawlers, each one four or five times the size of our trawlers, fishing off our banks. The American fleet consists of some 170 trawlers, and they fish our banks. It is perfectly ridiculous to say that there is a need for conservation because of the trawlers operating out of Nova Scotia. If the countries of the world would agree to abolish trawlers as a means of fishing, I would be agreeable, but so long as other countries use that method of fishing, surely Canada is not to be denied the same right.

Another matter brought up by my hon. friend was the destruction of gear. I do not think a single case has been reported where a Canadian trawler has interfered with the gear of our banks fishermen; such damage has been caused by the foreign trawlers. Our captains are familiar with conditions and they take great care not to fish in close proximity to the vessels or to interfere with their gear.

My hon. friend stated that the vessel owners were prepared to ask for legislation to deny to trawlers the right to come to our shores to fish. No one wants that. Everybody realizes that there is a limitation to the trawling industry and I believe at the present time we have all the trawlers necessary to supply the demand of the market, which is all any one should desire. There is a trawler owned by a firm in Lunenburg, with which firm the hon. member for that constituency is in close touch. They built and own a trawler, but they could not operate her successfully with the result that she is lying tied up at her wharf. Four or five years ago they were not against trawling, but when they found they were operating something about which they knew nothing and which they could not operate successfully, they tied her up and said: All those people who are in this business must adopt our antiquated method of catching fish. That is the whole situation. I think it is a great mistake to bring this matter before the house. It is at present before the courts, and until a decision is rendered in connection with a case that was brought before the exchequer court and that has now been appealled before the full bench, no legislation can be passed by the house in connection with the trawling industry. Therefore I think my hon. friend was ill-advised in bringing the matter before the house.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg did not advocate abolition, but the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis understood that he did. What I want to ask is this: If you restrict licences to Canadian-built trawlers, would that be abolition? I know the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis, because of his wide experience, can answer the question.

Mr. SHORT: We have in Canada to-day four or five British-built trawlers that have been given Canadian registry. They are Canadian ships just as much as British-built ships that are owned by the Dominion Coal Company in Cape Breton and that are registered in this country as Canadian ships. They were given Canadian registry in good faith. What do you want to do with those ships? If the government gave a register to a British-built ship, she is certainly as much a Canadian ship as one built in Canada. Otherwise a very large question will be opened because many other industries have brought British-built ships over here and those ships have received Canadian registry. Why make any discrimination in regard to trawling as against any other branch of business?

Mr. BOUCHARD: That is no Canada-first policy.

Mr. SHORT: That has nothing to do with the matter. Those ships are already here. I would be quite agreeable to a proposal that we do not allow any more British-built ships to be given Canadian registry. Have all the trawlers that are to be used here in the future built in Canada, but what are we going to do with those which we already have and to which we have given registry in good faith?

Mr. QUINN: All those built in the future.

Mr. SHORT: I am in accord with that. But what we have we are going to hold, whether my hon. friend objects or not. I do not think it is advisable to take up the time of the house in discussing this question at present, because no action can be taken by the government at this session. Therefore I am not going to try to answer further the different points raised by my hon. friend, but at some future time, when he brings the matter up, I shall be prepared to meet him.

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): I do not think I can quite agree with the hon member for Digby-Annapolis, (Mr. Short), who has just taken his seat, that this question should not have been brought up. Parliament has now been in session for more than four months, and yet the very large and important industry of fishing has received no consideration whatever by the house. The hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) has made out a good case on behalf of the fishermen of his district, but I think my good friend, who is chairman of the fisheries committee, has been a little lax in his duty in not calling that committee together. If the fishing industry of the Dominion is as important as he and also the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis would lead us to believe, why was the fisheries committee not called together so that important questions in connection with the fishing industry might be discussed, my hon. friend has left it to the very last days of the session to bring this matter before the house.

Mr. ERNST: Has the hon. gentleman either by letter or in the house during this session made any representations prior to to-day about the fishing industry?

Mr. MacLEAN: That is not my duty. The hon. member is chairman of the fisheries committee and it is his duty. That committee was appointed by the house early in the session to deal with matters concerning fisheries and not one meeting has been held.

Mr. ERNST: Yes, there has.

Mr. MacLEAN: There was one that dealt with marine matters, but there has not been a meeting that dealt with fisheries. I think it is only fair to point this out. There are large questions that could have been discussed regarding the fisheries. While my constituency could not be called altogether a fishing one, still that industry is of importance in my district and we have many questions that we should like to bring before the committee. Resolutions were passed by the fishermen's association asking for assistance in connection with collecting boats so that our live lobsters might be put on the markets of the world in competition with those from other parts. This little request from the fishermen of my constituency was denied while, I think, in Nova Scotia assistance is given in this way. This is one matter that could have been taken up and discussed in the fisheries committee.

The question of trawlers is also one that should be discussed. My hon. friend says that it is still before the courts. It was before the courts and they have given a decision. Early in the session I put a question on the order paper asking what tax had been collected and what was still outstanding.

Mr. SHORT: The case has been appealed; it is still before the courts.

Mr. MacLEAN: I know that. There is a large amount of tax outstanding, and the government does not know whether it is in a position to collect that tax or not until, I suppose, the case is finally decided by the appeal court. But there are many questions that could be brought forward. During every session that I have been a member of the house the fisheries committee has been one of the important committees. Representations have been made before it by members from all parts of the maritimes and British Columbia; those questions have been thoroughly discussed and representations have been made to the minister. At the present time our genial friend, the former Premier of Nova Scotia, is Minister of Fisheries, and I know he would be only too glad to have suggestions from members on both sides in connection with the fishing industry. I believe his sole ambition is to give to that industry every assistance he possibly can. How is he to get that information unless members representing the different constituencies meet in the fisheries committee and discuss these matters? It is impossible for him to secure that information through his deputy or any of the officials. The viewpoints of the people in the different constituencies can be stated only by the members representing them.

The trawler question is a big one, and some action should be taken. If it comes to a question between the trawlers and the inshore fishermen, I am for the inshore fishermen every time. If it can be shown that the trawler has a part to play in the fishing industry of Nova Scotia, some restrictions should be put upon its use and the inshore fishermen be given a chance. I think my good friend from Queens-Lunenburg has done a service to this country in bringing the matter before the house, but I do wish to say to him that he should have called the fisheries committee together this session and have given it a chance to discuss these very important questions before they were brought up in the house.

There has been legislation put through the house regarding the tariff, and in that connection I have a clipping here from the Halifax Chronicle, which I think is well worth reading. It says:

> The Prime Minister of Canada stated from a hundred platforms that he would make the tariff "fight for the consumer." He repeated in parliament when he imposed new, higher taxes that the people would not have to pay more. How putting 50 cents a garment on the fisherman's oilskins is not going to cost him more, we would like to know. How putting a dollar odd on a dozen pairs of socks is not going to make them cost 12 or 13 cents more a pair, everybody would like to know. How putting a tax on fertilizer, spraying machines, farm machinery and all the rest of it is not going to cost the buyer a cent more, who can explain?

It goes on to deal with the question of falling prices of world commodities and claims that some consideration should be given to the fishermen.

I hope that if we are spared to see another session our good friend from Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) will call the fisheries committee together early in the session and give us a chance to discuss the situation from A to Z, so that we may be in a position to put before the minister any recommendations that we may decide upon in connection with these matters. There are very many questions to be considered. There is the protection service, which has always been a contentious question, and I believe that in our province to-day that service has not been handled in a way that is altogether satisfactory to the people there. They feel that the fishermen who live there should be engaged in the work rather than have outside men come in to do it. But I am not going to interfere in that matter, because it is a question of policy for the minister and for the department, and the minister can carry out that policy as he sees fit. In closing, I trust that the fisheries committee will be called together early next session and be given a chance to discuss these matters before they are brought up on the floor of the house.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, at this late stage of the session, having in mind the desire on the part of hon. members of this house to bring about a speedy termination of its business, I trust that my hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst), the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short), and the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacLean) will not consider me guilty of any discourtesy if I do not discuss this question at any great length, nor is the comparative brevity of my remarks to be taken as in any way an indication of a lack of appreciation on my part of the very grave character of the subject matter which has been brought to the attention of the house by my hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg.

May I say at the very outset, and I say it in the kindliest way possible, that I am rather sorry that my hon. friend from Prince, even in a mild way, has injected an element of controversy into the discussion which I think had better be absent, and for this reason: The matter brought to the attention of the house by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg dealt solely with the question of trawlers. He left all other questions dealing with fisheries to one side. The trawler question, of all questions, is one which ought not to be made the subject of political party controversy. It is a very serious and difficult question, and I may say frankly that it has given me very great concern, and I have given a very great deal of thought and attention and consideration to the subject. I think that perhaps we had an example in the house this afternoon, in the attitudes that were taken by two hon. members on this side of the house, which indicates that the subject is not one free from difficulties.

I take no exception whatsoever to the fact that this subject has been brought to the attention of the house by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg. I think perhaps my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis did not hear, or certainly did not follow, the trend of the remarks of the hon. member who introduced this subject, because my hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg in a very reasonable, very fair and very mild manner was at pains to indicate the conflicting interests as between the trawlers on the one hand and the line fishermen upon the other.

One of the greatest difficulties that we have in considering this question arises out of a number of collateral circumstances. In the first place, a marked change has taken place in the character of the fishing industry in Nova Scotia. The very backbone of that industry was for many years the salt fish industry, but owing to world conditions that I shall not enter into at the moment, inroads have been made upon that business and prices have fallen to inordinately low levels, in some cases to below the cost of production. My hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg has very properly stated that the fishermen were driven into the fresh fish business on the Canadian market, which is very limited at best.

When the royal commission presided over by Mr. Justice MacLean sat in 1928 they found a very serious condition in the industry. They recognized the difficulties of the trawler situation at the time. It is unfortunate—I say this with every respect—that that commission could not have arrived at a unanimous decision by means of a compromise. My hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg has referred to a letter published in the Halifax Chronicle quoting the remarks of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff). In the letter in question, which was published in the Halifax Chronicle of September 25, 1929, he takes that very position. I am not going to take the time of the house to read a paragraph or two of that letter, which I have before me at the moment, but he expresses in no uncertain terms his regret that the commission could not have compromised and arrived at a unanimous decision.

This is what happened. The majority of the members of that commission recommended the abolition of the trawler. One member, Mr. Justice MacLean, the chairman, took the opposite point of view. I think the late government made a mistake—I do not for a moment wish to be understood as finding any fault in the sense of political party controversy—when they did not follow the recommendation of their own commission, or of the majority. What they did was to attempt to meet the situation by order in council, which got them nowhere. In the first place the majority of that commission recommended abolition of the trawler, whereas the order in council itself was predicated upon the operation of the trawlers. Furthermore, while for nine months of the year fish brought into this country by Canadian vessels for the Canadian market, was to be taxed one cent per pound, although that tax was tentatively imposed under the guise of a so-called licence fee, yet at the same time under that order in council the government allowed fish to come in during the months of January, February and March, thus recognizing in the very body of the order in council the contention of those who advocated the use of the trawler; namely, that there are certain periods of inclement weather when we must have trawler-caught fish if we are going to have a continuous supply in the Canadian market. Furthermore, another very unfortunate circumstance resulted from the passing of that order in council, namely, that if the order in council was constitutional it imposed a tax upon one company alone of between $130,000 and $150,000 a year, or, as the books of the company disclosed, an amount sufficient to involve a very large deficit in every operating year. In other words, the company could not continue to operate. It is true that it refused to pay the tax and resisted to the extent of fighting the case in the courts. Unfortunately it was unable to finance and its failure recoiled upon the heads of the very fishermen who felt hostile towards the trawler, or those fishermen who believed that the trawler was in large measure responsible for the conditions in which they found themselves. The royal commission found that in the year 1926, which was apparently the last year for which figures were available, 90,000,000 pounds of fish were caught in the province of Nova Scotia. Of that 90,000,000 pounds 40,000,000 were caught by the trawlers and 50,000,000 by the line fishermen. Of the 50,000,000 pounds caught by the line fishermen, however, 72 per cent were purchased from them for cash by the trawler companies. Therefore to the extent that the financial operations of trawler companies were crippled by the order in council, to that extent was limited the purchasing power of the people of Canada to buy fish caught by line fishermen. Instead of operating as a help to fishermen the order in council recoiled upon their heads. Although I am prepared to give credit to the government of the day for proper motives in passing the order in council, it is an unfortunate fact that it recoiled upon the heads of the fishermen for whose benefit it was designed, to the extent that it prevented the companies from being assured of a future in the business and lessened their chances of operating. To that extent it crippled their opportunities to buy fish from the fishermen of the province of Nova Scotia.

I do not purpose to go into the merits of this matter at length, but there are one or two factors to which I think particular attention should be called and which ought to be borne in mind. This controversy is not new. Trawler fishing has been in existence for a hundred years, and the very agitation which we have had to-day in portions of Canada as a result of trawler operations is an old story in practically every country—well, probably not every country, but in a large number of the countries of the world. The mother country was faced with a similar condition and as a result there were numerous royal commissions and inquiries. Investigations have been held in the United States, but there has never been any demand in any of the different countries to abolish the trawler. In Canada we have just off the shores of the province of Nova Scotia, where this agitation is most acute, what is perhaps one of the greatest fishing grounds in the world. To-day we have only six licensed trawlers, while in the world to-day there are the following numbers of trawlers in operation:

Name of country—	Land, steam and motor trawlers	Small motor trawlers	Sailing trawlers
England	1,229	.....	270
Scotland	347	.....	....
Ireland	154	.....	....
Holland	336	.....	....
Portugal	70	.....	....
France, estimated	250	.....	....
Belgium, estimated	100	.....	....
Denmark	1	2,600	....
Germany	355	.....	....
Sweden	184	.....	....
	3,026	2,600	270

Hon. members will see that in Europe alone there are nearly 6,000 trawlers in operation.

Mr. SHORT: Has the minister the figures for the United States?

Mr. RHODES: Yes. At the present time in the United States there are 115 large trawlers in operation, 137 medium sized trawlers, or draggers, and 72 small inshore trawlers. In Japan there are 70 large trawlers in operation. So that in the world to-day there are 6,296 trawlers, while in Canada there are only six under licence. Those six are much smaller than many hundreds licensed in other countries.

I make mention of these circumstances because I think they practically dispose of the question of conservation—if that question arises. I think the matter of conservation arises only if there is over-fishing, when of course conservation is interfered with. If the number of trawlers is excessive it is pointed out that they are operating in international waters, and that if our six are withdrawn there will be no effect whatever upon the result.

As an evidence of the desire to inquire as fully as possible into this subject, in April last public hearings were held by the Department of Fisheries. One whole day was devoted to hearing the evidence of those opposed to the trawler, and another whole day to hearing the evidence of those advocating it. By reference to the evidence it was made clear that trawler-caught fish were more expensive than line-caught fish, so that the introduction by the fishing companies of the trawler could not be attributed to a desire on their part to get cheaper fish. In this connection I should like to quote two very brief paragraphs from the evidence, and I shall refer to the evidence of Mr. J. J. Kinley, who was at one time a member of the legislative assembly of the province of Nova Scotia, and also a member of the government of that province. To-day he is a very prominent merchant in the town of Lunenburg, from which my hon. friend comes. At page 26 of his evidence I find the following:

> The point I want to make is that there is considerable food for thought, where it cost the beam trawler $1.85 to produce fish, the fishermen in Nova Scotia are taking less than the cost to the beam trawler.

In that instance Mr. Kinley is referring to the price per 100 pounds. His complaint was that the line fishermen were taking less than the beam trawlers.

We shall now refer to the evidence of Mr. A. H. Whitman, a highly respected gentleman in the province of Nova Scotia engaged in the fish business. He gave very complete evidence as a result of experience in his own business where he had lost a good many thousand dollars in the operation of a trawler which he finally had to sell—or, as he put it "unload" —to the National Fish Company, with which my hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Short) is associated. In his evidence he said:

> They found it cost more to produce a fish by the trawler than it did by the Lunenburg vessel.

That evidence is to be found at page 9 of the proceedings. I wish to emphasize another point, namely, that the sole reason assigned by those who operated trawlers in Canada was that their operation was necessary to afford continuity of supply. Their argument is that you cannot build up a market for fish unless you have fish available to supply that market, and that the purchaser, the house wife, is not going to buy fish as and when it is the desire of the merchant to supply it or as the elements permit it to be supplied. In other words, to build up a market you must be able to supply it continuously, and I think the evidence submitted by those who appeared both against and on behalf of the trawler at the hearing of which I speak has made that abundantly clear. I desire to cite just one or two lines from the evidence given by one or two of the witnesses. I refer first to Mr. H. G. Connor, managing director of the National Fish Company, whose evidence I might summarize. He stated that the experience of the trade has made it abundantly clear that they cannot get a continuous supply of fish for the fresh fish market unless they have the trawler to fill in the gaps caused by inclement weather, when it is impossible for the line fishermen to go out. He referred to a contract between his company and a large chain store organization in the United States, under which the company sold 1,500,000 pounds of fresh fish during a period of the year when it could not have been supplied from any other source. Mr. Connor says:

> . . . . and if it were not for the regular supply from the steam trawler it would not have been possible to do this business.

Then he continues:

> This one connection offers possibilities of unlimited developments.

I put the question to this witness, as I put it to the other witnesses, as to whether it would not be possible to supply the market with fish caught by line fishermen and kept in cold storage or preserved by brine freezing, methods. He answered at once that it would not be possible, that a fresh fish is a fresh fish and that you lose the flavour of a fish when it is brine frozen or chilled, as compared with the flavour of a fish fresh from the water. He said the Toronto market, and other markets of Ontario, will not take other than fresh fish. This is made very clear by the evidence of Mr. Langskill, who is associated with the fish distribution business in Toronto. He said:

> I have seen a fresh Atlantic fish business in Toronto develop from a few cases weekly to several carloads per week due to the development of the trawler assuring us of a steady supply.

He referred to an incident which happened only last year, and stated that owing to the inclement weather off the Atlantic coast he would not have been able to supply his market but for the fact that he was able to get fresh fish caught by trawlers.

In any case it was my intention to have made an announcement as to my view and as to the policy of the government with respect to this matter at a reasonably early date. That I have not done so hitherto is very largely because of the fact that, very shortly after coming into office, I realized that we were not beginning to exploit our market possibilities for fish in Canada. If we increased the per capita consumption of fish by 10 pounds per person per year we would increase our market by over 100,000,000 pounds of fish yearly. Even if we arrived at that figure, which is by no means fantastic, we would be still consuming less than three-quarters of the per capita consumption of fish in the mother country, where the people are essentially meat eating people. It is true there are problems in our industry which are peculiar to Canada. We have a country covering half a continent, yet our population is only slightly larger than that of the city of London, and our problem of distribution is a very difficult one because fish is a highly perishable commodity. Realizing this, and with the view of enlarging the Canadian market, the department employed the firm of Cockfield, Brown and Company of Montreal, who were recommended to me as the best firm we could engage in Canada, to undertake under their research engineer a survey of the market possibilities in Canada and the other countries of the world with a view to our being able, as far as governmental activity permitted it to be done, to inaugurate such policies as would enable us to overtake as rapidly as possible that consumption of 100,000,000 pounds or more yearly. If we were able to do that we would go a very long way towards improving conditions among the fishermen and in the fishing industry.

I am satisfied, and I wish to state very clearly that I accept it as beyond reasonable doubt at least, that if we are to enlarge our production of fish in Canada to cover this market, and to supply large quantities to the United States, we must have the trawler as an adjunct to our industry in order to take up the slack of which I have spoken.

I do not propose to labour the subject further, because I have already taken more time than I would wish at this stage of the session, but I should like to say this: My hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) and myself are practically in entire agreement. I believe the trawlers should be limited to the irreducible minimum, and should be subject to strict regulations. I think the six we have at the present time are ample, and perhaps too many, but whether or not that is so I believe they should be limited to the lowest possible number. My hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg referred to the fact that one of the great complaints was that there was a monopoly in connection with the trawlers. That is so, and in large part it arose through accidental circumstances and not through any desire to create such a condition. This has been the cause of very hard feelings in certain sections of Nova Scotia. Under section 69 (a) of the act the Minister of Fisheries has very wide powers. I sometimes wish they were not quite so wide, because it would take a superman to administer that department in a way which would be reasonably acceptable to the majority of those engaged in the fishing industry. But I do believe that the Minister of Fisheries, under that section of the act and under the regulations which he can invoke, has sufficient power to be able to remedy that situation, if not fully at least in very large part. It will be my endeavour to see if some solution cannot be found which will bring about a little more equitable distribution of the trawlers. In that connection I might point out that one of the witnesses who appeared at the hearing of which I have spoken was Captain Myhre, who undoubtedly is well known to my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff). He appeared against the trawler, but strange to say, in his evidence, to which I will not refer now, he stated that he had a particular customer who wanted fish on a certain day and that he was unable to supply his customer because the elements did not permit the fishermen to work on that occasion. He said very frankly that it would be of distinct advantage to him, and would permit him to supply his best customers with fish whenever they required it, if he could secure a trawler to take care of the period when the line fishermen could not secure the necessary supplies.

My hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg said that he advocated the licensing only of trawlers built in Canada. I will agree with him, with this limitation: I do not believe it would be fair to apply that principle in Canada now, since of the six trawlers under licence four were imported from the mother country. They were imported in good faith and were purchased at a considerably higher price than that for which they could be purchased to-day. In addition to the cost, they have expended large sums of money on repairs. In one instance twice as much money was expended in repairs on one trawler as was paid for the trawler originally. Are we prepared to pass legislation confiscatory in its character? If we pass a regulation to provide that all trawlers shall be built in Canada and those now here be disposed of, the government will have to compensate. And if we compensate we hand over to the trawler companies an equivalent sum of money which they will turn around and place in Canadian trawlers. So that we put them in no better position, nor do we improve the condition of the fishing industry. A fairer method would be to license the trawlers we now have, deciding that hereafter any trawler to be licensed must be built and owned in Canada. I may say to my hon. friend that, with that reservation, I am prepared to recommend to my colleagues in the government that as a matter of policy this be adopted with regard to the trawler question.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER: Before leaving the chair that the house may go into committee of ways and means, I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following letter:

Ottawa, July 15, 1931.

Sir,—

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Hon. Mr. Justice Duff, acting as deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber to-day at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

F. L. C. Pereira,
Deputy Assistant Secretary.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF RESOLUTIONS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Customs tariff—451a. Spring-beard needles and latch needles: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent; and, per thousand: British preferential tariff . . . . ; intermediate tariff, $1.50; general tariff, $1.50.

(ii) Needles, of any material or kind, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—451b. Pins manufactured from wire of any metal, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent; and, per pound: British preferential tariff . . . .; intermediate tariff, 10 cents; general tariff, 10 cents.

Mr. YOUNG: The other night the Prime Minister said that pins were sold in this country at 5 cents per gross. That seems to be a very low price. Can he give some particulars?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Minister of Finance): I tried to indicate to the hon. gentleman the circumstances under which the matter had been brought to my attention, and I pointed out the tremendous effort that was being made to dispose of surplus inventories in this country. What I referred to was a small ring of fine wire on which had been attached 144 safety pins of varying sizes from an inch and a half to two inches in length, down to very small pins of perhaps less than half an inch. They were being sold in the stores at 5 cents per ring. The industry to which I referred is one that has been in existence in Montreal for upwards of thirty-five years. The hon. gentleman asked how many were employed; the number directly employed is 75. They have been subject to competition all this while and there has been no complaint either in regard to the quality of their product or of any tendency towards monopoly. Nor has it been complained that they were getting undue profit. Were it not for the reasons I gave, the industry would, I think, disappear. This tariff may or may not have the effect of preventing that. The imports last year were $171,000; from the United States, $65,000 and from Germany, $5,000. The imports from Germany of the ring I mentioned are materially increasing. I cannot give any further particulars. I need not say that the material in this country could not be purchased at that price.

Mr. YOUNG: I suppose that is the retail price.

Mr. BENNETT: I said it was the price at which they could be purchased in departmental stores.

Mr. YOUNG: Could an unlimited quantity be supplied at that price?

Mr. BENNETT: I could not answer that.

Mr. YOUNG: It seems to me that in the departmental stores pins cost several times that much. The price the minister has mentioned seems remarkably low, almost too low—

Mr. BENNETT: That was what I was saying; it is remarkably low. Whether or not one could buy them in hundreds of thousands of rings I cannot say. But that price did bring the matter most forcibly to my attention. There will be no increase in price by reason of this item, and it will enable this old established industry in Montreal to continue.

An hon. MEMBER: The minister hopes there will be no reduction.

Mr. BENNETT: I hope there will be.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: What is the duty on safety pins?

Mr. BENNETT: It is given in the item—30 per cent.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The Prime Minister the other day said that overseas manufacturers could land safety pins here for retail sale at 5 cents per gross. That will be found at page 3584 of Hansard. This morning I went into some of the stores in Ottawa to inquire into the safety pin business. At Murphy-Gambles I bought a card of 10 safety pins for 10 cents. At Schulte-United, I bought a ring of 50 safety pins for 15 cents. I went into Woolworth's and bought another ring of fifty pins for fifteen cents. I then looked up the number of births in Canada and I found that there are approximately 240,000 per year. On an average, a baby would use about one gross of safety pins per year.

Mr. DUFF: The hon. member means the baby's mother.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Yes, for the baby.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It would depend on how many the baby swallowed.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I was allowing for pins that would be lost, and those that would be discarded because they were too sharp and would prick the baby. These were the cheapest pins I could get, and the cost works out to approximately forty-five cents per gross. Taking the five cent per gross pin which the Prime Minister spoke of the other day, for this number of babies the cost for pins would be about $12,000. Based on the price which I had to pay to-day, the cost to the mothers of these babies would be $108,000. In other words, the difference between $12,000 and $108,000 will have to be paid for safety pins. This is putting a premium on large families, without mentioning the safety pins used to hold up the old gentleman's trousers and things like that. The Prime Minister said there are seventy-five people employed in this industry and the extra price which the Canadian people will have to pay is too large a tax. I think the proof is absolute that the tariff is taking a tremendous toll from the people who raise large families in this country.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—453. Metal parts when imported by manufacturers of covered buttons for use exclusively in the manufacture of covered buttons, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: This is maintaining the rate granted under the button item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—476b. Surgical suction apparatus including motive power; prepared surgical catgut; ethylene; ethylchloride; operating room lights designed to minimize shadow, not including bulbs; all the foregoing of a class or kind not made in Canada, and complete parts thereof, for the use of any public hospital, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. BENNETT: It has been found that nitrous oxide is being manufactured in Canada, and the item has been deleted.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—506a. Clothespins and parts thereof, per gross: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 cents; general tariff, 20 cents.

Mr. YOUNG: Some time ago I happened to be in a hardware store and the merchant produced one of these patent clothespins held together with a wire spring. He said, "This clothespin has been manufactured in Canada," and he took the two parts in his hand and pulled them apart without any trouble; he just gave a little twist and they fell apart. He told me that when this clothespin was used on a line of clothes it flipped apart and allowed the clothes to fall in the dirt. He said that the Canadian manufacturer was cutting down expenses and had cut off a little piece of wood where the spring used to come around over the edge. Is this the particular industry being protected by this duty?

Mr. BENNETT: The production last year of clothespins amounted to nearly $400,000. The industry is confined largely to the province of Quebec, although there is a small factory in British Columbia. I imagine the efficiency of the Canadian manufacturer will be improved by the hon. gentleman's remarks. I think the Canadian producers are endeavouring to produce an article which will commend itself to the public. This government is not granting protection in order to encourage inefficiency. In this particular instance it was a case of the factory closing down or protection being granted. The manufacturers will not take advantage of this protection, any more than will the manufacturers of pins. If the computations are predicated upon increased prices, an increase will be shown in the budget amounting to millions of dollars, but of course no one would do that who desires to make a fair computation of values.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—507. Single-ply, sliced or rotary-cut veneers of rosewood, mahogany, or Spanish cedar, not over five-sixteenths of an inch in thickness, not taped nor jointed: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: The amendment to this item is being made because of the provisions contained in the Australian treaty, the words "walnut" and "oak" being deleted. There are several items with respect to which varying rates apply. Under item 507a the rates were 5, 7½, and 7½ per cent; under 503, they were free, free, and free, while the rates proposed in the new item are free, ten, and ten per cent.

Mr. EULER: The increase is three per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: There was a combination of items.

Mr. EULER: I was thinking particularly of mahogany veneers used in the manufacture of furniture.

Mr. BENNETT: This is really a counterpart of the former item 507a except there is a little difference in connection with the thickness of the wood.

Mr. EULER: The raw material for mahogany veneers, as well as for oak veneers and some of the others, is imported.

Mr. BENNETT: There is an increase of 2½ per cent.

Mr. EULER: Did it meet with any objection on the part of the furniture manufacturers?

Mr. BENNETT: Not that I know of.

Mr. EULER: It is a raw material. This is done because of the Australian treaty?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—507a. Single-ply, sliced or rotary-cut veneers of wood, n.o.p., not over five-sixteenths of an inch in thickness, not taped nor jointed: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: We let this stand the other evening in order that we might await the Australian treaty. This is the n.o.p. item.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is an increase?

Mr. BENNETT: From 15 to 20 per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The government is giving the furniture manufacturers an increase on the finished product?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. The Australian treaty items touch it.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—507b. Veneers of wood of any kind, not over five-sixteenths of an inch in thickness, taped or jointed: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: That goes with the former item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—507c. Plywood made of two or more layers of veneer or lumber of wood, glued or cemented together, but not further manufactured: British preferential tariff, 17½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—507d. Veneers, viz.: Australian blackwood, walnut, silky oak, silkwood, blackbeam, maple, Tasmanian myrtle, and eucalyptii, single-ply and not over three thirty-seconds of an inch in thickness: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: The Australian treaty makes this item necessary. This is the item that necessitated our having the other items stand until the present.

Mr. NEILL: They are all Australian products?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: As I have to meet the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, and as the Minister of Immigration is in his place, he might go on with supply.

Mr. RHODES: I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

Immigration salaries and contingencies, including grants to immigration societies, women's hostels, provinces, and loans for stock, equipment, etc., for Canadian boys, as may be authorized by the governor general in council, $1,905,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Would the minister kindly give a list of the societies that are receiving grants under this vote?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): At the present time no society is receiving grants. They have all been dropped this year. The item went through in that language at a time when I was not sure to what extent the restriction would obtain.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What are the details of this vote?

Mr. GORDON: Salaries, outside service, $1,055,000, and contingencies, $850,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): None of this money has been voted to any society of any kind whatever?

Mr. GORDON: None.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the minister, then, for the total amount of money voted to this department for salaries, inside and outside services?

Mr. GORDON: Outside service, $1,055,000; inside service, $312,555.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Are any other salaries paid in connection with immigration work, Chinese immigration or the rest of it?

Mr. GORDON: These two items include all the salaries with the exception of the administration of the Chinese Immigration Act. That will be found under item 126.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The other evening I asked the minister if he would give the committee the details of deportations for the last year, the number of foreign-born and the number of British subjects deported.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. GORDON: The total number of deportations from August 1, 1930, to May 31, 1931, is 4,137; but going back to April 1, 1930, to date, the totals for the fiscal year are as follows: British deportations, 3,099; United States, 279; other countries, 998, making a total of 4,376. The causes of deportation are various—medical causes, criminality, public charges, other civil causes. In a large number of cases the deportations have been brought about through the deportees deliberately accepting public charity in order to be deported. We try to avoid that if we can.

Mr. EULER: How many persons have been deported at the request of municipalities because they were not able to support themselves and were in receipt of charity?

Mr. GORDON: I have not those figures. I am told that in order to procure them a special compilation would have to be made, but I would be glad to have that done—

Mr. EULER: I do not wish to put the minister to that trouble. Would the minister give a statement as to the policy of the department with regard to deportations of the kind I have mentioned? Does the department act only on the request of the municipalities, or does it take the initiative? I ask that because it seems to me it is pretty hard that people who have come to Canada in good faith, perhaps as the result of the activities of the Immigration department of a government, the preceding government, if you like, and have fallen on hard times, like many Canadians, should be deported against their will. That seems to me a hardship. I should like to know what is the feeling of the department.

Progress reported.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Honour, the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the house went up to the Senate.

And having returned,

Mr. SPEAKER informed the house that the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name the royal assent to the following bill:

Bill No. 124, an act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1932.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF RESOLUTIONS

The house resumed in committee of ways and means.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Customs tariff—511. Fishing rods, walking sticks and walking canes, of all kinds; golf clubs and finished parts thereof; skis; racquets and racquet frames and baseball bats; balls of all kinds, for use in sports, games or athletics: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: This is a consolidation, putting similar articles together, which were at varying rates previously. This includes former items 511, at 20 per cent, 27½ per cent and 30 per cent; 506, at 17½ per cent, 22½ per cent, and 25 per cent; 446, at free, 15 per cent and 20 per cent and 362, at 22½ per cent, 30 per cent and 35 per cent. Items coming under those different classifications have been grouped together, so there is a slight reduction in some cases and a slight increase in others.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—540b. Woven fabrics, wholly or in part of flax or hemp, not containing silk, artificial silk nor wool, viz.: table linen, towelling, sheeting, pillow casing, grass cloth and crash, and similar woven fabrics of a class or kind made in Canada, not provided for in tariff item 540c: British preferential tariff, 22½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent; and, per pound: British preferential tariff, 3 cents; intermediate tariff, 3½ cents; general tariff, 4 cents.

Customs tariff—540c. Table cloths, napkins, towels, sheets, pillow cases in the web or further manufactured, wholly or in part of flax or hemp, not containing silk, artificial silk nor wool: British preferential tariff, 25 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent; and, per pound: British preferential tariff, 3 cents; intermediate tariff, 3½ cents; general tariff, 4 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: These are the linen items. The fabric and the finished article are separated, and the specific duty is 3 cents, 3½ cents and 4 cents in each case.

Mr. YOUNG: This is another item where the two rates apply. Could the minister tell us how it will figure out?

Mr. BENNETT: The items vary in value, of course, from a very small price for a table napkin to a very large price for a large table cloth. It would be rather difficult; I suppose the values would run from 25 cents up. I am speaking from my general knowledge at the moment; my hon. friend may correct me if I am in error, but I think that would be it.

Items agreed to.

Customs tariff—560a. Woven fabrics wholly or in part of silk, not to contain wool, not including fabrics in chief part by weight of artificial silk, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 27½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 40 per cent; general tariff, 45 per cent; and, per lineal yard: intermediate tariff, 10 cents; general tariff, 10 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: This item stood at the request of the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) who wanted some information with respect to the industry. I assume that he has obtained the information from the source from which I obtained mine, namely the bureau of statistics. It would appear that the silk industry in Canada has developed very rapidly during the last few years. Ten years ago there were five establishments; in 1929 there were 23. In 1921 the total capital invested was $4,500,000, in round figures; in 1929 it was $28,278,000. In 1921 the employees numbered 932; in 1929 they numbered 4,372. Salaries and wages in 1921 were about $719,000; in 1929 they were $3,825,000, in round figures. In 1921 the cost of materials was about $1,890,000; in 1929 it was $6,091,000, in round figures. The value of the production in 1921 was $3,500,000, in round figures; in 1929 it was about $14,500,000. The bulletin issued by the bureau of statistics in 1930, containing the last information that had been collected, indicated that the total number of establishments in operation increased from 16 in 1928 to 23 in 1929, and of the seven new establishments three were in Quebec and four in Ontario.

I have already indicated to the hon. gentleman the principal figures for which he asked the other evening. The total capital of $28,278,000 was divided between three companies having a capitalization of $1,000,000 or over; six companies having a capitalization of between $500,000 and $1,000,000; five companies having a capitalization of between $200,000 and $500,000, and nine companies having a capitalization of less than $200,000. The average number of employees per establishment was 109. There were nine factories employing from 20 to 50; four employing from 50 to 100; four employing from 100 to 200; three employing from 200 to under 500 and three employing 500 and over.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): From what country do we get our principal imports of the finished article?

Mr. BENNETT: As I mentioned the other evening, this is a combination of other items. With respect to pure silk the largest importations are from Japan and the United States. We imported these goods to the value of $4,366,000 in round figures, of which $1,731,000 came from the United States and $1,423,000 came from Japan, with the balance coming from scattered countries.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): So the bulk of the importations would carry the heavy duty?

Mr. BENNETT: No, Japan carries the intermediate rate.

Mr. YOUNG: This is one of those items in which we have a dual rate; we have under the general 45 per cent and 10 cents a yard. I asked the minister the other night to give me some idea as to what that would be on an ad valorem basis. This is about as good an illustration as we can get of the ease with which tariffs can be raised by putting them on a specific basis. I have here a sample of Japanese silk on which, under the new rate, the duty will be 116 per cent of the value of the silk. The silk is worth only 14 cents a yard, and when you add 10 cents a yard to the 45 per cent you have increased the duty to 116 per cent of the value of the product. I have here another sample of silk on which the rate is increased to 90 per cent—

An hon. MEMBER: We cannot see it.

An hon. MEMBER: Hold it up.

Mr. YOUNG: Here it is. I think this is a good illustration, I will not say of deliberate deceit, because I do not think it was done deliberately for that purpose, but of the ease with which people can be deceived when you change from a specific to an ad valorem rate. If you told people that you had increased the rate to 116 per cent they would not stand for it; but when you say that 10 cents a yard is added to the 45 per cent they do not regard it as so much until they figure it out. But what is the effect? I have the index figures of prices of silk for September, 1929, September, 1930, and June, 1931. The September, 1929, figure was 77; the September, 1930, figure was 50·9; and in June, 1931, the figure was 56·5, showing a slight increase since last September. In regard to the prices for the last three months of the raw product as compared with the finished silk, we find that the price of raw silk has declined from 43·6 to 36·6 since the first of April, while the price of the finished product has increased from 46·9 to 56·5. This would indicate that the silk manufacturers are not suffering from any great reduction in prices. According to the figures given by my right hon. friend, the industry pays in wages 22 per cent of its total income. The tariff protection, taking the average rate on all silk goods—because you cannot discriminate between some goods and others given in the returns—was 29 per cent in 1929 on all imports. So that they enjoyed 29 per cent protection and paid only 22 per cent of their income in wages. And on top of all that we find an American who has a controlling interest in a silk factory in Canada coming and asking—

Mr. BENNETT: I have already twice told the hon. member that the gentleman to whom he refers did not have a controlling interest.

Mr. YOUNG: An interest, then.

Mr. BENNETT: Thank you. Why make the statement deliberately?

Mr. YOUNG: I did not make the statement deliberately. At any rate, he had an interest sufficient to persuade him to come to Ottawa and advise the minister that it was in Canadian interests to raise the duty on silk so that he could supply the Canadian market from his Canadian business. I wish to call the attention of the committee to that fact.

Mr. BENNETT: He had one factory as against twenty-three. I endeavoured the other evening to make clear what the facts were. The hon. gentleman has taken as an illustration silk valued at 14 cents a yard. If he had followed me he would have observed that the importations amounted to 8,000,000 yards valued for duty purposes at slightly over 50 cents. So that the average of the importations was over 50 cents a yard—approximately 52. The illustration which he takes of 14 cents a yard is hardly a fair one upon which to base a conclusion, and the figures which he gives of average costs in 1929, 1930 and 1931 are themselves conclusive against his contention, to say nothing of the figures he gave with regard to prices during the last three months. I will not go over the ground I traversed the other evening. I said that the gentleman in question had stayed here but a short time, and he did not come for the specific purpose my hon. friend suggests. He was interested as a shareholder and he told me of the conditions in the United States. As I said, a brief had previously been filed, and the information he gave me squared with the facts we had. He told me what their experience had been and I found that also to be true. I believed that there was nothing left for us to do, in view of the competition from surplus inventories, but to take the action we did. And that action we took for the reasons I explained at length the other night. I promised the hon. gentleman that I would try to secure the information for him and I have just told him what I know of the matter. If there is any further information I can get I shall be glad to give it to him.

Mr. YOUNG: My right hon. friend objects to my taking as an illustration the cheapest silk at 14 cents a yard. He says I should take into account the higher priced silks.

Mr. BENNETT: No, but the average priced silk imported.

Mr. YOUNG: Taking the average, we shall find that the rate of duty is lower than 116 per cent; that is true. But that illustrates my point that on the cheaper silk which the poor person must buy you are charging 116 per cent while you are not charging that percentage on the higher priced silks which the richer people buy.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—561a. Buttons of vegetable ivory: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 35 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent; and, per gross: British preferential tariff, 5 cents; intermediate tariff, 10 cents; general tariff, 10 cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—564. Woven fabrics, of a kind not made in Canada, wholly or in chief part, by weight, of silk or artificial silk, or both, imported, in the web in lengths of not less than five yards each by manufacturers of neckties, scarves or mufflers, for use exclusively in the manufacture of such articles in their own factories: British preferential tariff, 17½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: The former item covered neckties and scarves and this is extended to mufflers.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—567. Clothing, wearing apparel and articles, made from woven fabrics and all textile manufacturers, wholly or partially manufactured, n.o.p., of which silk is the component of chief value: British preferential tariff, 27½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 45 per cent; and, per ounce: British preferential tariff . . . . ; intermediate tariff, 7 cents; general tariff, 7 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: This is the complement of the silk article which we discussed at length the other evening. It is the raw material from which clothing is manufactured. Items 567 and 567a take care of the finished product against competition from outside. Our trade has substantially increased and this accords with the protection afforded under items 560 and 564.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): You are not changing it from the September schedule?

Mr. BENNETT: Oh yes; there is a specific rate of 7 cents per ounce. It is more imposing than it really is in these days when fabrics weigh rather less than some people think. In one instance to which the attention of the department was called the weight of the finished dress was something like—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): A quarter of a pound?

Mr. BENNETT: Fifteen and a half ounces. It was less than a pound. I cannot speak from personal experience regarding weights of dresses—

Mr. LAPOINTE: I was just going to ask that.

Mr. BENNETT: I saw that the hon. gentleman was about to ask the question and I anticipated it.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—571. Carpeting, rugs, mats and matting of straw, hemp or jute; carpet lining and stair pads: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Customs tariff—571a. Carpeting, rugs, mats and matting of cocoa fibre: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Provided, that the duty under any tariff shall be not less than, per square foot: British preferential tariff, 10 cents; intermediate tariff, 10 cents; general tariff, 10 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: It will be observed that the first item is unchanged while the second item is a separation. The first item is reprinted in order that there may be no misapprehension, and the second item contains a specific provision that the duty shall not be less than 10 cents per square yard.

Items agreed to.

Customs tariff—586. Coal, anthracite, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 40 cents; general tariff, 40 cents.

Customs tariff—588. Coal, n.o.p., including screenings, and coal dust of all kinds, per ton: British preferential tariff, 35 cents; intermediate tariff, 75 cents; general tariff, 75 cents.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I beg to move that the following item be added to schedule A of the Customs Tariff:

Customs tariff—588b. Coal, lignite: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. NEILL: Are we to discuss the three items together?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: I will take up the last item which strikes out the duty on lignite. This is another illustration of the scriptural expression:

> For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.

When the budget was brought down we in British Columbia, more particularly those interested in the coal mines on Vancouver island and in Comox-Alberni and Nanaimo constituencies, were bitterly disappointed at the treatment we had received, or shall I say the lack of treatment. However, in the midst of our bitterness and disappointment we gave the government credit for this one glimmering ray of hope, the duty on lignite, which would result in some little benefit. We anticipated that it would mean the sale of some 20,000 tons which at present are shipped in from the state of Washington to be sold in Vancouver in competition with the product of our coal mines. But now we have lost that, and whatever benefits remained to us are now taken away. Apparently the objective of the Prime Minister is to help the Saskatchewan lignite producers.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not it.

Mr. NEILL: The situation could possibly be relieved if the Prime Minister were to use his influence to have lignite properly defined. Some years ago it was necessary to define this product, but as the sale of lignite was of small proportion a rough and ready definition sufficed. It was not anticipated at that time that there would be any importation from the United States into Canada, so it was agreed that lignite should be defined as coal which contained a certain percentage of moisture. In time the trade from the state of Washington developed. These importations are coming in free but in fact it is really sub-bituminous coal rather than lignite which is being shipped in. I have in my possession a bulletin published by the state department at Washington in which an analysis of this coal is published, and it is frankly admitted that it is not lignite but sub-bituminous coal. I took this matter up with the departments of Mines and Customs, but for some time the buck was passed from one department to the other. After a time I came to the conclusion that the department of Customs was playing the game fairly. I was told that they were bound to follow the definition as handed to them by the Mines department, but they said they would check up from time to time on the importations to make sure that no misleading samples were provided. It was always found that the coal contained exactly the quantity of moisture to allow it to come in as lignite and escape the duty on bituminous coal. I took this matter up with the Mines department but so far as I could make out it is simply a matter of indifference with them; they could not be bothered to take the necessary steps to define this lignite accurately. If the Prime Minister would use his influence to have this matter adjusted I think it could be adjusted in such a manner as to permit the lignite coal from Saskatchewan to go into the United States as lignite and prevent this sub-bituminous coal coming from Washington into Vancouver as lignite. If it did come in it would come in as bituminous coal and would be subject to a duty of 75 cents per ton, which would be all that we would require. Then we would hope to regain this trade amounting to 17,000 to 20,000 tons per year.

Now I come to the main tariff item which raises the duty on bituminous coal from 50 to 75 cents per ton. If there is such a thing as provincial political gratitude, which has been cynically defined as a lively sense of favours to come, I should think the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia for many generations to come would adhere most faithfully and loyally to the right hon. gentleman who at present leads the government. It is hard to recall another industry which has received such a large—I was going to say hand-out, but that is the wrong word because there is nothing nefarious about it—present. It is almost without precedent. This object has been achieved by two methods, one of which is before us and we may have an opportunity to discuss the other a little later. I am afraid the right hon. gentleman will find himself in the position of Frankenstein who created a monster of such vicious appetite that it ultimately destroyed both itself and its creator. Once this sort of thing is started it is so easy to come back and beg for more and more. The Prime Minister is certainly entitled to the popularity he has gained in these provinces, but there is a possibility that those people not directly interested in the coal trade will realize that they are being put in the position of having to pay the piper. There are many people in this class, not only in these provinces, but in the central provinces of Quebec and Ontario.

The government have adopted what they call a national fuel policy in line with the pledges which they made before the election. The item I am referring to is No. 4 of the platform on which they went to the country, and it reads:

> We pledge ourselves to the development of interprovincial trade, and of a Canadian fuel policy and development of a foreign market.

I quote again from a speech in the campaign:

> The party would find the rates that would enable Canadian coal to meet competition, and would make up the loss by subsidization.

The method which they have adopted is that outlined in the speech, namely, of imposing a higher duty and giving transportation bonuses.

The Minister of Finance might have proceeded by other methods. He might have imposed an increased duty on fuel oil, which is really the competitor of coal in British Columbia; and he is aware that very strong influences have been brought to bear that the duty on fuel oil should be increased. But the minister has adopted a different method, and I am not here to waste the time of the committee in discussing the alternative. I am inclined to say that possibly he adopted the better method of the two under the circumstances, with a strong emphasis on "the circumstances", because under different circumstances fuel oil would have been the natural commodity on which to increase the duty. I shall take the opportunity of saying that while he may have been right in not imposing a greater duty on fuel oil, it was against the interests of the coal producers of British Columbia to boost the oil industry as he did when last September he increased the tariff on importations of gasoline. By that time we had almost but not quite reached the point where the oil refineries of western Canada could produce, in the distillation of crude oil for the production of gasoline, enough fuel oil to supply the wants of western Canada. Consequently a duty on fuel oil might have had some slight temporary effect, but increasing the duty on imported gasoline encouraged the introduction of crude oil as such and of course the greater manufacture of fuel oil in British Columbia, so that within a very short time it is reasonable to suppose that not only will they produce enough fuel oil to supply British Columbia and the west, but they will also have a surplus. There is only one answer as to what they will do with the surplus, and that is, they will cut down the price in order to force a market for it, the result being that the coal mining industry will be increasingly affected thereby. So much for that.

I now wish to consider the application of this policy of increased duty to the Vancouver island coal mines, some eight or nine in number, in Cumberland, Nanaimo and further south. I am not objecting to the policy provided that it is applied in a manner fair to all, but I cannot get into my head a conception of a Canadian national fuel policy which leaves out one-third of the coal mines, or, at least, one-third of the coal mining area in Canada. We are in the position of the profligate son who has been cut out of his father's will, and who, in order that the will could not be upset by the suggestion that he has simply been forgotten, finds that his name has been inserted and he is allotted the sum of one dollar. Our wants and needs have not been cut entirely out of the picture, but we have been allotted the sum of one dollar or its equivalent.

Mr. GORDON: On the basis of last year's production of island coal, the present bounty will assist island coal to the exent of at least $50,000. That is scarcely cutting you out of the will entirely.

Mr. NEILL: If the minister will allow me, I shall deal with that when I come to that particular phase of the matter. I am just coming to it. By the way, I do not know where the minister gets his figures. What I was saying was: What does this mean to us? And by "us" I mean the coal mining interests that I represent. I am quite entitled to stand up in the house and, at least in the first instance, consider the matter from that point of view. I have notes of my speeches made during the election where I predicted that something very much like this would be the natural outcome of the fuel policy as then outlined. I was countered by the accusation that I was taking a parochial view of the situation, and that I should take a broad, national viewpoint; that that was the aspect from which to look at it. As a representative of those people it is my duty to begin at least by seeing how these matters affect the district which I represent, being assured that the other districts of Canada will be looked after by the members who represent them.

This duty is an increase of twenty-five cents a ton, or a 50 per cent increase on the original duty, which was fifty cents a ton, and it applies against all countries importing coal into Canada, the United States principally, Russia, and to a somewhat smaller extent, Great Britain. That coal is all marketed in eastern Canada, so that the coal mining interests of the east get the whole benefit of the increased duty. I have the output figures under my hand. The minister will possibly dispute them and I cannot do more than say that I got them from the very best government sources. The output for Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, Alberta and that portion of eastern British Columbia which will derive a benefit from this duty and the transportation bonus, is something like 13,500,000 tons. There may be some little difference arising from the fact that some provinces record their coal output in long tons and others in short, but those are the figures which I obtained from the government bureau. An increase of twenty-five cents a ton on the present basis of production, provided there be no further increase in production—and the whole idea of this policy is to increase the quantity of coal mined in these districts, although possibly it may not do so—will provide an increase of price or of profit if you like, of $3,375,000 annually. While other parts of Canada are getting this sum yearly under this item, we stand to get absolutely nothing. I was going to say that we stood to get something from the duty on lignite, but in the last few minutes that duty has been taken away. In addition we lose the sale of 48,480 tons. There is no gainsaying that; that again is a matter of statistics. That is the quantity which we export yearly to the United States. Call it 50,000 tons and I shall explain how an increased duty on bituminous coal coming into Canada is going to prevent us from selling 50,000 tons in the United States. The reason is this: the United States tariff on coal entering that country is free, but if any outside nation imposes a duty on United States coal, a similar duty will be placed automatically on the foreign coal going into the United States. Therefore we see at once, now that the duty has been raised to seventy-five cents a ton on United States coal coming into Canada, the duty on coal going from Canada into the United States will, not by legislation but automatically, be raised to seventy-five cents a ton. We are working on a very close margin. On the island we have deep coal mines which are expensive to work. By scraping and cutting and paring down costs to the limit we were able to secure this market in the United States for 50,000 tons.

Mr. GORDON: What is the cost of island coal?

Mr. NEILL: Somewhere around $6.40 a ton, varying somewhat as to how acute the economic pressure is.

Mr. GORDON: What is the spread between the cost at the pit mouth and the sale price of the same coal in North Vancouver, sixty miles away?

Mr. NEILL: I do not know. I am talking about coal sold in Seattle.

Mr. GORDON: The hon. member will find there is about $5.25 of a spread between the two places.

Mr. NEILL: This is an old, old standby, to take the lowest, minimum, screwed down wholesale price and compare it with the price delivered in sacks, 200 yards away from the sidewalk, into a man's cellar. That is played out as an argument.

Mr. GORDON: Colonel Villiers does not consider it is played out. He stated that he was cutting down the price by establishing his own selling agencies in Vancouver and thereby cutting $1.25 off the price.

Mr. NEILL: What bearing has that on the question?

Mr. GORDON: It has a great bearing.

Mr. NEILL: The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity to explain it, but I cannot see it. By adopting a cheese-paring policy at every point, the coal mines have been able, under desperate economic pressure, to cut down costs so as to capture the local, domestic trade. But I am not talking about the domestic trade at all. If it is necessary, I shall discuss it. What I am talking about is that the increased duty of twenty-five cents per ton will prevent us from selling 48,480 tons in the United States, for this reason: We have either got to absorb it—and we cannot absorb it—or we must lose the trade. That is what the increased duty on bituminous coal is doing for our coal mines.

Mr. GORDON: What effect will that have on the Crowsnest pass coal mines?

Mr. NEILL: I am talking of Vancouver island coal mines.

Mr. GORDON: But the export from the Crowsnest pass coal mines to the United States is very much more than that from the Vancouver island coal mines.

Mr. NEILL: I am not dealing with the Crowsnest pass coal mines, nor with the Alberta nor the Nova Scotia coal mines. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. I am dealing with the poor effect that this supposed Canadian national fuel policy is going to have on the district I represent and on that represented by my friend from Nanaimo. As I said, the prices are too close to enable us to absorb the two bits a ton extra duty and we will have to lose the trade or sell at a loss. To be fair, I was going to say at that point that we must offset that by the lignite coming in from Washington, because we hoped to capture that trade, but by putting lignite on the free list again, to-night even that business has been taken away from us. That leaves us, as I say, with 50,000 tons of coal trade that we are going to lose, worth more than $200,000 to us. You can hardly expect me as representing a portion of the Vancouver island coal mines to be wildly enthusiastic about a policy of this kind. It is all very well to talk about being broad-minded, about taking a national viewpoint, but the idle miners in Cumberland or Nanaimo cannot trade off those lofty national sentiments at the grocery store for food for their wives and children. They are not negotiable there; they may perhaps pass here.

Now perhaps if anyone was in the chair who had a finicky obsession as to adhering strictly to the rules of debate, I might be forbidden to deal with the other phase of this matter. But I think the right hon. Prime Minister would admit that it would be better to discuss it under this item because the two phases are so intimately related. I refer to the transportation bonus, which is interlocked with the duty phase of the subject. It will save repetition of this argument when we come to the bonus item in the supplementary estimates if I deal with it now.

I said at the beginning that the national fuel policy had been applied in two ways: one, by way of increasing the tariff; the other—what I am now going to speak of for the moment—by a transportation bonus applicable to the different coal fields. It is there that one would naturally look for some compensation for us to make up for what we have suffered by an increased tariff. I quite agree that taking a national viewpoint it may be imperative in some cases to do one district harm in order to secure the greater benefit to some other place; but when that is done it is the act of statesmanship to provide by some compensating method so that the district which suffers at one point will be compensated at another. And here is the opportunity that arose for giving us a compensating advantage, but instead of that it has made our comparative position a great deal worse. We are worse off under that phase of the situation. We get 25 cents a ton transportation bonus on our bunker coal only, while other parts of Canada get from $1.25 up to $2.25 on their transportation costs. As a matter of fact we do not get this 25 cents a ton on all our output but only on our bunker and part of our export trade. The hon. Minister of Immigration mentioned some $50,000. I do not know where he got his figures, but I am prepared to produce statistics—in fact, I think I have a telegram from the head of one of the coal mines on Vancouver island—to show that last year the bunker trade of Vancouver island was 101,900 tons. At 25 cents a ton bonus that would give us $25,470. Now it is proposed, I understand, to allocate something like $2,000,000 towards this bonus transportation scheme, and it is figured that it will move 1,800,000 tons. If we strike an average of $1.50 a ton, then out of that $2,000,000 we ought to get $163,000—and we do not.

Mr. BENNETT: One is a rail haul; in the other case the mines are on an island and within a short distance of the shipping port.

Mr. NEILL: I will deal with that later on. We ought to get $163,000—and we are getting nothing. In fact we are getting worse than nothing. I am not in a position to prove it, but I firmly believe that in the past—and still worse will it be in the future—the bonus given the Alberta coal field has been used and will continue to be used in part in increasing the quantity they are actually shipping to Vancouver in competition with our island coal.

Mr. GORDON: What increase are they getting on their Vancouver coal?

Mr. NEILL: They are getting no increase on that movement, but they are getting so much to take it east that they are applying a certain amount of that money as a bonus rate on the coal that they ship into Vancouver. If that is not so, how is it that Alberta coal is sold within a few miles of our coal mines?

Mr. GORDON: Do I understand the hon. member to say that the Alberta coal mines are making so much money that they are able to make up the loss on their coal going to Vancouver out of the money they make on their coal coming east?

Mr. NEILL: I do not know how they figure it out, whether by red ink or black ink figures, but I do know that since the bonus was given to the Alberta coal mines there has been an increasing quantity of their coal shipped west as well as east. A few years ago an hon. member representing one of the Alberta coal districts stood up in his place in this house and said: "As soon as we get the bonus on our eastern shipments we will ship west as well." I objected to that, but he said he did not care whether I objected or not.

Mr. GORDON: The Alberta and Crowsnest pass mines were shipping coal into Vancouver long before this subvention was in effect.

Mr. NEILL: But it has been coming in increasing quantities since this bonus was granted.

Mr. GORDON: Has the hon. member any figures showing the increased quantity shipped west since the subvention was put into effect?

Mr. NEILL: No, but it is worse than it was before. As the man spoken of in the Bible said, "Whereas I was blind, now I see." Before the bonus was granted their coal did not come within five miles of our pithead; now it does. The national fuel policy—if it is the right policy—is intended to assist coal from various fields to reach its respective markets. In the east it was to compete with foreign coal. As the Prime Minister tripped me up the other day, it is not going to a foreign country. In the east they want to compete with coal of foreign origin. What we want is the same principle practically—we want assistance to go into a foreign market and compete there. What is the difference, in the long run? Our hoped-for market happens to be in South America, and if we could have got $1.50 or $1.25 or even a dollar we might have made shift. Instead of that where one province can get up to $2.25 a ton we have to be content with two bits. There was a time in the west when there was no smaller coin than two bits, and if one wanted any change smaller than that amount he got back a box of matches. For the information of eastern members I may say that two bits is 25 cents. If the Prime Minister would allow us a seventh of a cent per mile to our markets in Chile or Peru we would be satisfied, but such a rate to the water, which is only twelve miles away from our mines, is of no particular benefit.

Mr. BENNETT: The ratio of water to rail carriage is about forty to one.

Mr. NEILL: But the distance is fifty to one. Let us summarize what we get out of this—and I am not trying to overpaint the picture, because goodness knows it is bad enough without any trimming; when one has a good case there is no need for exaggeration. What do we get out of it? We get $25,470 in bonus. From that must be deducted, if possible, the loss of trade to the United States amounting to $293,000. If we take $25,000 from $293,000 we have somewhere around $277,000 of a loss. That is a dead loss, most of it probably in wages.

I should be glad to hear any argument which could upset those figures. Possibly by using different figures the absolute detail might be changed to a certain degree, but the principle remains the same. The increased duty will kill our trade to the United States, on the one hand, and 25 cents a ton bonus will hardly take it out of sight of the mine, to say nothing of taking it to South America. I wish to repeat, because I want to be fair, that I am not complaining of the adoption of the policy. I ask, however, that it be applied fairly.

The bonus to the various coal mines has been introduced by an order in council. That order in council recommended that the government put a sum in the supplementary estimates to meet the estimated expense. Of course that will be done. The only remedy is to increase the bonus in the supplementary estimates to take in this dollar a ton for our mines, and change the order in council. I trust that the government will yield to the representations—and I know they have had a great many of them—from British Columbia. I might quote a communication from Premier Tolmie as follows:

> After careful consideration, this government strongly suports the request of the British Columbia coal operators for some adjustment of coal policy, as set forth in your budget speech. Letter setting forth arguments sent by Hon. W. A. McKenzie to you June 5. Request first that bonus on bunker coal and export coal other than to United States, be raised from 25 cents to $1 a ton.

He goes on to say:

> Situation so desperate in coal mining that every effort must be made to protect all possible markets.

I have a further communication from the Victoria chamber of commerce, a very conservative body, which sent by air mail to their member, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Plunkett) a resolution which set out—

> —that if the bonus on the foreign-going coal from Vancouver Island were raised to $1 a ton it would be commensurate with the aid provided for on Alberta and Nova Scotia coal.

That is support for my claim for equality.

Mr. BENNETT: But the difficulty is that it is not. Seven cents a ton land transport applied to water transport would enable people to be paid for carrying the coal away.

Mr. NEILL: I did not hear my right hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. member applied the land transport rate to water carriage there would be a bonus so great as to enable people to compete to get the opportunity to take the coal away; they would compete for the privilege of carrying it.

Mr. NEILL: My hon. friend does me small compliment when he thinks I am advocating anything like that.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the suggestion.

Mr. NEILL: It is not essential to put it on an exact rate per ton mile. All that is needed is to say that a coal mine in Vancouver island shall get a straight bonus of $1 or $1.25 per ton. So desperate is our need we will come down to a dollar, although $1.50 would be more appropriate, and $1.25 would be the strictest justice. The provincial government take the matter up and say:

> These facts were emphasized when Nova Scotia operators two years ago applied to the tariff board for an increase in the duty, and the British Columbia government engaged counsel at Ottawa to oppose the application because the granting of it would strike a blow at the industry in this province. The application was refused.

That was two years ago. I have before me a wire of recent date reading as follows:

> Premier R. B. Bennett in a wire to provincial Premier Tolmie Thursday stated that the demand for a dollar per ton bonus on bunker coal would receive favourable consideration.

Mr. BENNETT: Favourable consideration?

Mr. NEILL: No, alas! it was not favourable; if it had been favourable I would not be on my feet now.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not so sure.

Mr. NEILL: If the Prime Minister would change the word "careful" to "favourable" it would be quite satisfactory.

I shall now quote the remarks of Senator Robertson, Minister of Labour in the present cabinet. The minister was in the west investigating the conditions of distress. While there he was told by men not specially interested in the coal industry that if he wanted in part at least to relieve distress in British Columbia all that was necessary was to grant $1 a ton on coal, and that the coal industry could then take care of their own unemployed. Although he did not tell me so, I understand from the press he expressed the opinion that that was a very reasonable proposition because it would enable the people to help themselves, and he stated that he would pass the information on to the government as soon as he returned.

Mr. BENNETT: Since the hon. member has dealt so carefully with the matter, has he considered what the effect would be of granting a bonus of $1 a ton in connection with the countries he has mentioned, and the question of the tariff rate they would have to pay?

Mr. NEILL: Coming from those places?

Mr. BENNETT: No, going into them.

Mr. NEILL: Do you mean such as the United States would charge—the United States with their reciprocal item in their legislation?

Mr. BENNETT: No, not countervailing, but something equivalent to our dumping duty.

Mr. NEILL: I did not think that conception of economics had yet reached South America.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, long ago.

Mr. NEILL: Well, they are not so far behind us in iniquity as I thought they were.

Mr. BENNETT: It is wonderful that the hon. member believes in bonuses at all.

Mr. NEILL: I am prepared to wade in economic iniquity, because the situation is so desperate—to wade in blood, if necessary. The $1.50 or $1.25 would be fully justified by the government to equalize what had been handed out to the other parts of Canada. The supplementary estimates should provide an increased bonus to take care of this matter. No tariff change would be required, but only an order in council. Until then I am not going to condemn the government or seek to make political capital out of the situation. I am going to assume that the Prime Minister—because after all he is the responsible party—is sincere in his desire to formulate a national fuel policy which will do justice to everybody. I have his written words to that effect, and in that connection I shall refer to the eighth item of the platform with which he went to the people. It says:

> We pledge ourselves to such compensating adjustments as will ensure the benefit of the above policies to every part of Canada.

To tell the honest truth, during the election I did not understand that plank; I went about rather ridiculing it and challenging my opponents to explain what it meant, but not one could make a stab at it at all. Since then, however, like Saul of Tarsus—though I do not compare myself to him in other respects —I have seen a great light, and now I understand the meaning of this somewhat obscure plank. It is the guarantee and the justification for the action for which I am now asking. The Prime Minister might have had this very situation in mind when he put those words in the platform. It is admitted that he cannot help us by an increased duty, but he is trying to help other parts of the country in that way, so I still hope he will come forward in the supplementary estimates and give us that compensating adjustment which is required. He has the support of his own platform and of the Conservative party in British Columbia. I am going to assume that he will do justice and will not be so unsportsmanlike, or so unstatesmanlike, as to inflict this injustice upon these mining districts.

Mr. EULER: As one who comes from a province which unfortunately has no coal deposits whatever, unless we have some in northern Ontario not yet developed, I should like to make a few comments with regard to the two items under consideration, the duty on hard coal and the increased duty on soft coal.

I do not desire to be regarded as one who would object to a well considered national fuel policy, so long as that policy does not entirely cut across all economic principles in its application. Nor do I wish to argue from a sectional point of view, representing as I do a province which, as I said before, has no coal deposits of its own. Coming from Ontario, I think I may say fairly that the people of my province always have been willing to bear their fair share of any burden that might have been placed upon them by way of taxation or otherwise. I think we realize—though perhaps some of my hon. friends who sit behind me may deny this—that if we do occasionally get some advantages by way of tariff which we consider necessary, we have no objection to doing our share when it becomes necessary to do something for other parts of the Dominion of Canada, and I quite agree with that view.

I should like to refer to the duty of 40 cents per ton on hard coal, which is not produced in Canada at all. Hard coal will continue for many years, I think, to be the fuel of the ordinary, plain people, if I may so designate them, in western Ontario at least. That is a very thickly populated section of this country, say from Toronto to Windsor, containing considerably more than one million people, or at least one-tenth of the population of this country. The people residing in that portion of Canada will find it necessary, for a long time to come, to use hard coal as their fuel during the winter months. A duty of 40 cents a ton on hard coal will inevitably result in an increased price to the people who use that hard coal for fuel. I can say that with assurance, because the price went up immediately after the announcement of the imposition of the duty.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Does that apply to all tariffs?

Mr. EULER: As I said before, I have no objection, and I think the people of Ontario would have no objection, to making some concessions provided some good will come to the rest of the people of Canada. If this is merely a revenue tariff then I would say that the government is ill advised to apply it on hard coal, because it will be paid by the people who can ill afford to pay that extra amount, especially under present conditions. If it were true, and the Prime Minister could assure us, that by placing a tariff of 40 cents per ton on hard coal the coal producers of other parts of Canada would be benefited, I think that argument might be sound and valid, but for my part I do not think there will be any other result than that the people of western Ontario at least, and in fact the people of the greater portion of Ontario and perhaps of Quebec, will be obliged to pay more for the fuel which they need during the long winter months. It may be that it was the intention of the Minister of Finance to transfer the business of supplying our hard coal from the United States to Wales, but I am convinced that it will not have that result.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): He never suggested that.

Mr. EULER: I am wondering whether that was his reason. If that is so; if it was his intention to promote inter-empire trade, at least that would be an argument, I fear that the imposition of this duty will not bring more Welsh coal to Canada but rather will result, as I have said, merely in an increased cost to those who must use it for fuel in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

The duty on soft coal has been increased from 50 cents to 75 cents a ton. Here again, if some good will come to other parts of Canada producing soft coal I might grant the validity of that argument if it were advanced. Soft coal is still used to a very considerable extent by the manufacturers in Ontario, and I suppose in Quebec as well. It is true that in western Ontario manufacturers are to a large extent using electric power generated at Niagara Falls and other points, but still soft coal is, to some extent at least, almost the raw material of our manufacturers in this province. If it were possible, in lieu of the soft coal now coming from the United States, to bring coal from the western provinces or from Nova Scotia, that argument might hold some appeal for the people of Ontario. I am open to conviction; that result may come about, but I am of the opinion that the addition of 25 cents to the former duty on soft coal will bring very few tons of that coal from Nova Scotia or the western provinces either to Quebec or to western Ontario, where we have an intensive manufacturing industry.

That being the case my protest is this: unless some real good is accomplished by the imposition of an additional duty on soft coal, why should our people—and even if they are manufacturers I think I might have the support of my hon. friend from Weyburn—be obliged to pay higher prices for that which they need in the production of their manufactured goods? If the Prime Minister is imposing the extra 25 cents for the purpose of increasing our revenue perhaps I would not have very much to say, but if he believes it will give more business to the maritime provinces I think he will find himself very much disappointed.

Mr. CANTLEY: It certainly will.

Mr. RHODES: In the first portion of his remarks my hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Euler), referring to the duty of 40 cents per ton on anthracite coal, directed his comments more particularly to the position of the householder in western Ontario who, according to his assertion, will have to pay 40 cents per ton more for his coal.

Mr. EULER: They are doing it now; they are paying more than that.

Mr. RHODES: I do not propose to discuss the effects of this policy as disclosed by a superficial examination made after it has been in operation only a few weeks; I do not intend to discuss what extraneous facts may enter into the equation with respect to the price of coal. That can be determined only after the policy has been in effect for some time. But I do assert this, that far from imposing a burden upon the householder of western Ontario, this tariff, in the final analysis, will prove a benefit and a direct saving of money to every wise householder in that part of the country. I propose to give chapter and verse for the statement I have made. The mines branch carried out a demonstration which left no room for error in their computation of the comparative merits of coke and anthracite, and that test showed that one ton of American anthracite coal could be replaced in fuel value by ·953 ton of Nova Scotia coal. The accuracy of that test was further established by a similar test which was made in the Nova Scotia technical college at Halifax where the figures were practically the same to the fraction of a decimal. What does that mean in terms of money? The householder who has been accustomed to anthracite uses, let us say, 10 tons, and we will put the cost at $16 per ton. It really does not matter what the exact price is inasmuch as the figures are comparative. Let us take coke at $14 per ton, which is a high figure compared to the average price, in Nova Scotia at any rate. This would mean a saving to the householder of $2.38 per ton. In other words, by the use of coke instead of anthracite he would save $23.80.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: On ten tons.

Mr. RHODES: Yes. These figures are well within the mark. Now many hon. members will say, "But you cannot use coke in a hard coal furnace."

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Does the minister consider changing the furnace?

Mr. RHODES: A furnace that burns anthracite can burn coke equally well.

Mr. SANDERSON: No, not always.

Mr. RHODES: I am speaking from both personal observation and experience. If any hon. member wishes to be convinced all he has to do is to consult the technical officials of the fuel board, who will substantiate the statements I have made.

Mr. SANDERSON: I have had experience with my own furnace.

Mr. RHODES: I do not intend to go into any technical discussion of the subject, but I may point out that the ordinary householder makes the mistake of using coke in exactly the same way as he uses anthracite. The secret of the successful burning of coke is to burn it in an incandescent form. In the use both of bituminous coal and of anthracite you must have a draft through the bottom of the furnace, whereas the proper method of burning coke is to cement the cracks and close the drafts in the bottom of the furnace, burning the coke incandescently. If you do that, as many householders have done, you will not only get better results but the cost will be lower. The householder in Ontario can save money by using coke.

I fancy my hon. friend from North Waterloo will rise and ask where the coke is to be got. Let me point out that in Ontario you do not even have to make it from Canadian coal. Under section 1049 of the tariff act there is a drawback of 99 cents per ton on American bituminous which is processed into coke. If the Ontario householder will use coke instead of American anthracite he will be creating an industry which, even if American bituminous coal is used exclusively, will be the means of securing an investment of hundreds of thousands of dollars, giving employment to a large number of Canadian workmen in the process of transforming that American bituminous into coke.

Mr. EULER: I am sure my hon. friend does not wish to leave a wrong impression. He says that the Canadian can buy American bituminous and get the drawback if that coal is converted into coke.

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. EULER: Does not the minister know that while the by-product coke ovens in Hamilton do get the drawback, the municipalities are discriminated against? When they produce coke from American coal they pay the duty and they get no drawback.

Mr. RHODES: The municipalities can construct by-product ovens.

Mr. EULER: But why should they be obliged to construct special ovens?

Mr. RHODES: The hon. gentleman has asked a question and I am replying. If the municipalities put up by-product coke ovens they will get the drawback.

Mr. EULER: They have the by-product from their gas-making plants and they get no drawback.

Mr. RHODES: I have been making statements of fact which can be verified by reference to the secretary of the fuel board in the mines branch. Now there is one other factor to be borne in mind, and it is this. It is not generally known that the American anthracite mines are nearly at the point of exhaustion. If hon. gentlemen will look at the report of the royal commission, under the chairmanship of Sir Andrew Rae Duncan, which inquired into maritime claims, they will find at page 36 the statement that the reserves of anthracite in the United States may be exhausted in thirty-five years, an unofficial warning to this effect having been given in 1921 by the United States bureau of mines to the Canadian Department of Mines. That was ten years ago. So that in the interests of a great Canadian industry it is well that we should anticipate that day; and the people of western Ontario, in patronizing a Canadian industry, would be benefiting themselves to a substantial sum each year.

My hon. friend spoke of the duty on soft coal and he said that if some good would accrue to other parts of Canada he would not offer any great objection.

Mr. EULER: I said it was an argument.

Mr. RHODES: Having regard to the cost price of coal at the pit mouth to-day, the duty of 75 cents per ton on bituminous coal represents less than 50 per cent of the protection afforded that industry thirty years ago. That is a statement which cannot be controverted. There is an important compensating factor; as you enlarge the production of the bituminous coal mines, to that extent you increase the opportunity for continuous operation and as you have continuous operation, so you bring down the cost of production. There is another important compensating factor, and it is this: there are large areas in this country which are dependent entirely upon the money paid in wages in the towns, cities and villages surrounding our coal mines. If those places are made into prosperous communities the buying power of the people will be increased for the products of the factories of Ontario. There is another important consideration. To the extent you bring that condition about, you provide return freights for our railroads from east to west. Instead of taking loaded cars down and empty cars back, which is very bad railway operation, you will have full cars both ways with a resultant benefit to the railways.

Mr. EULER: The increase in duty is only 25 cents per ton, as we have already a duty of 50 cents per ton. Does the hon. member think that the increased duty is going to move a great deal of Nova Scotia coal into the districts to which I have referred in Ontario and western Ontario?

Mr. RHODES: I would have preferred to see the duty made $1 per ton, but half a loaf is better than no bread.

Mr. EULER: I do not think the hon. member will get any.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is very sceptical, but the view he holds is entirely contrary to that held by men of all political opinions in the eastern portion of Canada. These men know something about the coal industry, and their view is that this is going to be of vast benefit when taken in conjunction with the bonus rates upon the western movement of coal.

Mr. EULER: We will know next year.

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member mentioned the industries of Ontario, but he overlooked the fact that there is a drawback upon every pound of bituminous coal used in all phases of metallurgical operations. This is a very material factor in manufacturing costs for the great basic industries of this country.

Mr. EULER: That would cover perhaps five per cent of the industries of Ontario.

Mr. RHODES: There are many other aspects of this question with which I would like to deal, but I do not want to delay the Prime Minister.

Mr. GORDON: Mr. Chairman, this is a matter to which I have given some thought since assuming the administration of the affairs of the Department of Mines. I am rather disappointed at the attitude taken by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). I will not say I am discouraged, but I must confess that I am disappointed. The representatives of what is known as the island coal industry saw me on a number of occasions with respect to possible assistance to the coal mining industry on Vancouver island. The request made was that a dollar per ton bonus be paid on island coal used for bunkering, based on the increased production over last year's figure. It will be remembered that last year the consumption of coal was on the decrease due to climatic and other conditions, and I came to the conclusion that the island coal operators could not and would not increase to any considerable extent the production of bunkering coal. They were looking not only for bunkering coal but export coal to Chile and Peru, and in order that they would be assured of some assistance the course indicated by the legislation brought down was adopted. When the hon. member says that he was cut off in the will with but a dollar, I am afraid he is using an extremity of language which under the circumstances is scarcely fair. An examination of the figures will disclose that this 25 cent bonus will apply even if there is no increase over last year's figures. The production amounted to 186,448 tons of coal, and the monetary relief will come to $46,612. That is quite different from being cut off in the will with but a dollar. This relief is not dependent upon an increased production but will apply to all production falling within this class.

Conditions are changing rapidly, and it may be that the situation of the coal mines on Vancouver island will have to come under review, but I think for the present we should wait to see what benefits will accrue.

I have no desire to make a criticism of the management of these coal mines as they are labouring under great difficulty in their operations. Their costs are high, in fact probably higher than any other coal mine. They run around $5.75 per ton, and any hon. member who knows anything about the cost of mining coal will realize what a huge cost that is. In spite of the short water haul from the island to the nearest and best markets, Vancouver and North Vancouver, there was a spread in the price of something about $5. This matter was taken up with the operators who admitted that that spread was too great. This matter arose over the invasion of the Vancouver market by some Alberta coal, and they agreed to take steps to establish their own selling agencies. If the press reports are to be believed, they have done this and the price of coal has come down.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni claims that this action is imperilling the export trade to the United States. If anyone will be hurt, I suggest it will be the Alberta and Crowsnest pass operators. What have they to say about the policy of the government? While I am not given much to reading quotations, I will ask the committee to bear with me while I spread a few letters and telegrams upon the record. The following telegram dated June 2nd was addressed to myself:

> First news of budget just received. Desire express appreciation action re extension markets Canadian coal.
> H. Stutchbury,
> Alberta Trade Commissioner.

The following is a letter from the International Coal and Coke Company Limited of Coleman, Alberta. It is dated June 15, is addressed to myself and reads as follows:

> Please accept the thanks of the writer for the improved subventions granted our industry. The increased duty will also help us, and I feel the industry as a whole in the west will benefit greatly.
> We will be anxious to cooperate with you in every way possible to the end that there need be no American coal burned west of Ignace.

That is signed by the general manager of the company.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Did the minister receive any local messages from the Saskatchewan coal fields, Bienfait and Estevan?

Mr. GORDON: I imagine from the hon. member's question he knows there is created with respect to the Bienfait and Estevan fields a difficult situation that will require a good deal of careful thought, and it is still under review in the Mines department. I have a letter from the West Canadian Collieries at Blairmore, Alberta, addressed to myself under date June 6, 1931. Hon. members from Alberta probably know a good deal about this concern and the size of it. This letter reads:

I have just read the last order in council, covering the movement of our coals to Manitoba and western Ontario (P.C. 1303). As the representative of one of the largest mining companies in the west, I want to thank you and congratulate you very heartily.

I feel just a little self-conscious over such eulogy, but I shall have to continue.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Be thankful for small favours.

Mr. GORDON: Listen to what the letter says, and see if they are small favours.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): To the hon. gentleman, I mean.

Mr. GORDON: The letter continues:

The subvention as now established must enable us to get all our natural markets. It is sound and well balanced in every respect. I consider all points in connection with your access to our books as wise and logical.

The reason that sentence is there is this: when I was in the west I thought it desirable, as the government had given assistance in the past and were contemplating giving further assistance in the future to our mining companies, that they should give me a definite statement of their mining costs, so that I might have them under review and at least try to prompt those mines that were operating with methods that were obsolete or that for some other reason were operating at too high a cost to adopt more efficient methods. That is what the writer is referring to. The letter continues:

If a man asks for relief, he must show what his earnings are; if he refuses to answer, he is not entitled to any relief.

This new order in council, coupled with Mr. Bennett's budget, gives our coal industry a wonderful chance; the best we ever had.

I am convinced now, that by next winter, all our men will be back to steady work; and you and your government will not only have relieved the unemployment conditions in the mining camps, but have done something that will go a long way to build up again the prosperity of the country.

I do not mean that I feel the coal companies do not need to worry any more; on the contrary, I realize it is our duty now to improve our costs, and our selling organizations; and through more efficiency and lower prices at the mines, coupled with the wonderful assistance we are getting from you, we must be able, by next winter, to show you and the country some really great improvements.

Thanking you again, I beg to remain.

Yours very truly,

G. A. Vissac,
General Manager,
West Canadian Collieries Ltd.

I shall burden the committee with just one or two other letters. This is from the McGillivray Creek Coal and Coke Company, Limited, addressed to me and dated June 12:

We wish to hereby go on record as thanking you for the efforts which you have undoubtedly put forth on behalf of the western coal interests, and to express our thanks and appreciation for the increased subvention and the favourable rulings which you have been instrumental in getting for us.

I am quite sure that the help which you are extending to us will be of very considerable advantage and my fully considered opinion is that a large tonnage of American coal will be displaced by Canadian coal.

Yours very truly,

McGillivray Creek Coal and Coke Company, Limited.

I have under my hand with respect to the Nova Scotia coal mining industry a statement by Mr. McNaught, the representative who met me, who represents those large interests in Glace Bay and elsewhere in Nova Scotia and who is probably better equipped than any other man in the maritimes to say whether or not what the government has done will assist the coal mining industry. This is what he says:

The position of the Canadian coal industry has quite evidently received earnest and sympathetic consideration. Mr. Bennett is to be congratulated on the sincerity of his effort to deal with the Canadian fuel question on a broad national basis. It cannot be expected that any benefits afforded under the budget proposals will be immediately effective in improving our coal operating conditions.

Any material improvements will be dependent almost entirely on the recovery of general business conditions in Canada but so far as coal is concerned Mr. Bennett's budget should accelerate the general recovery. The policy announced should be of considerable aid in preserving to our coal industry its Canadian market.

I am not in a position, nor do I know sufficient about the coal mining markets in Canada to make a statement of my own as to the effect of what the government has sought to do, but I hazard the opinion that the letters which I have read come from those in the coal mining industry in this country who must of necessity know that industry better than anybody else, and they all commend the action of the government with respect to its coal policy.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Will the minister tell the committee what government it was that began those coal subventions in both the east and the west?

Mr. GORDON: I have not the faintest idea.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, I shall tell the hon. gentleman. It was the Liberal government that preceded his.

Mr. GORDON: Let me read just one other letter; as follows:

Lancaster Building,
Calgary, Alberta.
23rd June, 1931.

Hon. W. A. Gordon,
Minister of Mines,
Ottawa.

My Dear Wes,—

I had delayed writing you with respect to the coal situation until I heard individually from my numerous clients. You no doubt know, but it will do no harm to tell you, that they are all very much pleased indeed with what has been done, and it is of some interest that they give the credit to yourself. May I add my own thanks and very sincere appreciation of your lively interest and excellent results procured by you in the matter? This letter does not amount to anything, unless that in times of so much grief for a person in your position, it might brighten the day just a little bit to know that there are some people who are very grateful to you.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely,
A. L. Smith.

Mr. DICKIE: I do not wish to delay the proceedings of the committee, but I feel I should be remiss in my duty to the coal mining part of my constituency if I did not say something with respect to the state of affairs which exists in Nanaimo and Ladysmith. I wish to associate myself in the main with what the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has said. I shall, however, try to deal with the matter from another angle. We are grateful for the assistance that has been granted. I believe it was wrong to remove the duty from lignite coal, but the matter can be very easily arranged by properly classifying the coal that comes from Bellingham into British Columbia. It is not a true lignite; it is a semi-bituminous coal, and if classed as such it would not have the advantage it has as lignite. We have in Nanaimo, Ladysmith and Cumberland, the latter a coal mining town represented by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, from 700 to 1,000 people out of employment. During the coming winter these men, many of whom are married and have their homes in those towns, will have to be looked after and it will cost the government a good deal of money to take care of this coal mining population. Colonel Villiers, the manager of the coal mines there, has told us that if they are given a bonus of $1 or $1.25 a ton, he is quite sure he can open up a market for coal in Chile, Peru and other South American countries. By doing so, he would employ perhaps several hundred more miners than he does at the present time. If what he says can be done, we would be fully justified in giving this bonus of $1 a ton. We are not asking as much as has been granted to coal mines in other parts of Canada. In Vancouver island it costs us too much to mine our coal, owing to structural difficulties in our mines; nevertheless we have our coal mining population there and they must be maintained. Supposing difficulties should arise with respect to the marketing of coal in Chile and Peru, this bonus would not be required. The manager of the coal mines on Vancouver island practically told us that a bonus of $1 or $1.25 on offshore coal, that is bunker coal in ships, to ports other than those in the United States, would put the mines on a much better basis than they are at the present time. If we can give employment to 200 or 300 miners, would it not be a good investment to try this bonus of $1 or $1.25 a ton? We are not going to lose anything by it, and if we were to lose anything, it is an easy matter to make it up. Last year we imported into British Columbia 160,000,000 gallons of fuel oil and raw petroleum. We have a duty of one-half cent a gallon on fuel oil which is a fairly respectable duty. But we bring the petroleum into British Columbia where it is refined and the residue is a fuel oil on which there is no duty. Let the government impose a duty of one-quarter of a cent a gallon on that residue and we would make twice as much money as would be required to give the coal mining industry the bonus it asks. I do not believe there is a man in British Columbia who would raise his voice against the imposition of such a duty. I do not believe the price of fuel oil would increase one iota. It is, as I say, a residue. They make their profits mostly out of the distillate product, the gasoline, and this fuel oil has to be got rid of. I have no doubt they would keep the price of fuel oil just about the same, even if there were a duty of one-quarter of a cent a gallon on the fuel oil content of petroleum. Were that duty, say, one-quarter of a cent a gallon, on 160,000,000 gallons of petroleum and fuel oil there would be a revenue of $400,000. Perhaps $100,000 will grant all the relief we ask for the coal-mining industry. I have endeavoured in a quieter way to persuade the government to see matters in this light, but unfortunately up to the present I have not succeeded. However, I have not given up hope, and although I lack the delightful, persuasive ability of my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni, I am still going to try to convince the government that it would be good business for Canada and an act of humanity on their part to grant that very moderate concession for the relief of the suffering coal miners of Vancouver island.

Mr. NEILL: I want to say a word or two in answer to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Gordon). His speech reveals more subtlety in argument than accuracy in fact. You can make a case out of anything if you make your premises to suit you. He said I had stated that a 25 cent bonus would produce a sum of $25,000 odd. He makes it $48,000. How does he do it?

Mr. GORDON: Divide four into 186.

Mr. NEILL: It does not give 48, even at that; it gives $46,000.

Mr. GORDON: That is what I said.

Mr. NEILL: He arrived at his figure by figuring on the total output. He is not deliberately deceiving the house, but all the same his figures are incorrect. I was dealing with the coal on which we could and would get 25 cents a ton.

Mr. GORDON: And so was I.

Mr. NEILL: Pardon me. I was dealing with the bunker output of Vancouver island; he was taking in the whole product of British Columbia.

Mr. GORDON: Not at all.

Mr. NEILL: Just a minute. He was taking in practically the whole product of British Columbia. Here are the figures, and they check up within 9,000 tons, a discrepancy that will often arise because of one place quoting the long ton and the other the short ton. Here are the department's figures.

Mr. GORDON: What department?

Mr. NEILL: The department that gives out these statements.

Mr. GORDON: My statistics came from the Dominion fuel board. They check their figures every day.

Mr. NEILL: They were based more or less upon estimates, and were not accurate.

[Mr. Dickie.]

Mr. GORDON: I have to take the Dominion fuel board's figures from time to time and have always found them accurate. They are relied upon by the coal operators all over Canada.

Mr. NEILL: Then in this particular instance I am unfortunate, for the fuel board told me the figures were mainly estimates.

Mr. GORDON: Not the figures I gave.

Mr. NEILL: These figures came from the Department of National Revenue, and as they collect the revenue surely their statistics must be accurate. Here they are for all British Columbia. They discriminate between shipments to the United States and to other countries. Shipments out of Nanaimo to the United States, 48,847 tons; shipments out of Nanaimo to other countries, 62,621 tons. If you add the two sets of figures together they give a total of 110,000 tons. Then: shipped from Cranbrook, 49,902 tons; from Fernie, 60,732 tons; then there are small shipments through New Westminster and Prince Rupert, which make up a bigger sum than he gave.

Mr. BENNETT: Over 200,000 tons.

Mr. NEILL: Yes; he said only 186,000. But both figures are for all British Columbia.

Mr. GORDON: But the bounty will be paid on 186,480 tons.

Mr. NEILL: Then it will be paid illegally because the bounty is only going to be paid on bunker coal mined on Vancouver island. Is he going to treat the shipments from Fernie as bunker trade? You cannot send ships from Fernie.

Mr. GORDON: I never said you could.

An hon. MEMBER: Airships.

Mr. NEILL: That is a very fine illustration of the subtlety of my hon. friend's argument.

An hon. MEMBER: He did not say so.

Mr. NEILL: He said they might do it.

Mr. MANION: He did not say so at all; another hon. member said it.

Mr. NEILL: Whoever said it was wrong anyhow.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. NEILL: This is no joking matter. I have statistics showing 101,900 tons; that is bunker coal.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the production on the island?

Mr. NEILL: It is much bigger. I think the whole island district production is something like 1,107,000 tons.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I thought.

Mr. NEILL: But that includes the domestic trade going into Victoria and Vancouver, on which no bonus would be paid. The minister spoke with a tone of reproach in his voice of the spread between the cost of the coal at the pithead and the price at which it was sold at Vancouver, which he thought was excessive. I happen to have been in the coal business myself and I know very accurately what are the costs of the retail coal dealer. First of all he gets short weight on his coal. That is a trade secret I can give the committee as I am no longer in the business; an allowance has always to be made for short weight. Then the coal has to be unloaded and screened, and that costs money. Then you cannot sell screenings at the price of run of mine coal. It is supposed to be screened when you buy it, but it is not too well screened, and you have to sell the screenings at a lower price. In many cases it has to be sacked—sacks do not last long in the wet weather of Vancouver—and that costs money. Then there is delivery; all these costs mount up, and I have never seen a retail coal merchant die a millionaire. I know there is always a howl on the spread between the rock bottom price wholesale of any commodity and the extreme retail price. When this comparison is made you do get a suspiciously large spread.

The minister was very kind to read out for the benefit and information of the committee a number of letters which he received commending the action of the government and wishing them godspeed in their good policy. But where did those letters come from? Alberta and Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia, as I said at the beginning, ought to support the present Prime Minister for all time to come on account of the benefits they are getting from this policy. Naturally these are the people who are writing to the minister and thanking him for what he has done. But did he get any letters of thanks from Vancouver island? There would have been the answer to my argument that it was not justified.

Mr. GORDON: If I might interrupt the hon. gentleman for a moment: I said the representatives of the island coal mines asked for a dollar a ton on their increased production over last year, hoping to get the Chile and Peru market. I am persuaded they would not benefit as much if they got a dollar a ton in such way as they do at present at 25 cents a ton on their total production.

Mr. NEILL: Was that application made in writing ?

Mr. GORDON: I believe it was.

Mr. NEILL: I am inclined to think it was not.

Mr. GORDON: It was made on a number of occasions.

Mr. NEILL: I was present at a meeting of the associated boards of trade of Vancouver Island at which the head of the colliery company was present. On that occasion there was no hint of making any such ridiculous suggestion.

Mr. GORDON: He made the suggestion to me last fall.

Mr. NEILL: There must be some misunderstanding. Probably the minister is not as well acquainted with the coal industry as—

Mr. GORDON: Probably there may be a misunderstanding between my hon. friend and the people in his province.

Mr. NEILL: Then, two men who knew the coal business misunderstood each other, and also a hundred people at a meeting of the associated boards of trade were under a misapprehension. However, that is a matter between himself and the minister. When this red herring was dragged in I was saying that we on Vancouver island had not received a square deal, and in answer a lot of letters were read. Whence do these letters come? They come from the people who did receive the benefit. I have never denied that some people have received a benefit, and those people would be very foolish and ungrateful if they did not acknowledge it. I would ask my hon. friend to produce a few letters from the coal miners on Vancouver island; let him produce a letter from one of them—because there is more than one. My hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Dickie) knows that, and I know it. The real fact is that we will stand a loss in trade of about $263,000 a year. If that is a national fuel policy for Vancouver island there is another guess coming to someone.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is one occasion upon which I can agree with the policy of the government, because that policy is merely an amplification—I do not wish my friends to become too enthusiastic—of the policy of the previous administration. We have heard a great deal about a national coal policy.

Mr. BENNETT: Fuel policy.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I thought we would have some brand new system of dealing with coal reserves and distribution, but I have found that the government has simply extended the bonuses on transportation; with that policy I fully agree. I doubt if there is any other remedy, if we are going to bring eastern coal westward to its proper market or bring western coal eastward to the market in Canada it should have. The government of which I formed a part began this policy in 1925, and from year to year we extended the assistance because we found it was beneficial.

My hon. friend the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) to some extent discussed the coking proposition. May I say to him that we were the fathers of that idea. We began operations in Hamilton, and I may say to hon. members that during the period of its inception that industry went through some very difficult stages. The recent terrific slump in the price of coke has jeopardized the position of that industry. While coke is not at present under discussion I understand that at a later stage we shall be dealing with the duty on that particular commodity. The encouragement to Wales and Scotland to ship anthracite coal into Canada has resulted in real competition in the anthracite field. The displacement of anthracite coal by coke in the last six years has cut down the importations from the United States by about one-half. At the present time we are importing anthracite to the extent of less than 3,000,000 tons. I do not think the 40 cents a ton duty on anthracite is required at all. The better quality anthracite from Great Britain is rapidly supplanting the market held by Pennsylvania anthracite. There is no question about the fact that coke is a cheaper fuel than anthracite and does everything my hon. friend has said it would do. The problem however is to educate the people how to use it. I think my hon. friend might have said that all that is necessary is to be careful not to shake the grates down, but to leave a bed of ash. In that way coke may be burnt in anthracite grates; that fact was proven long ago, and I may say that the experiment was tried in Hamilton. It cost us some money to educate the people to burn coke as a substitute for anthracite.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

I am in agreement with all the proposals of the government in this respect, but I doubt the wisdom of the imposition of the duty. I admit at once, however, that such duties will help Alberta coal. Last year the increased subventions were the means of capturing the market in Winnipeg, which formerly had not been enjoyed. There is a further competitor in southern Saskatchewan receiving the advantage of the subvention. I do not complain about that competition because I believe the Saskatchewan people are as much entitled to the market as are the Alberta people. Undoubtedly the added subvention will bring that coal at least one division point past Kenora and add to the market of the Alberta and Saskatchewan fields.

I wish briefly to congratulate the government upon the increase in subventions. Their action has been to add to a policy which we encouraged and were working out very successfully. I hope that policy will be equally beneficial to the eastern mining fields so that bituminous coal may be brought further west, into Ontario. There is an area in Ontario however which undoubtedly will have to pay an increased duty. I am bound to say that the hon. member for North Waterloo did not mention that the government have in other directions been extremely kind to the manufacturers by increasing the duties on the commodities they manufacture. Perhaps they can stand the added 25 cents.

Mr. DUFF: The consumer will pay.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The manufacturer is compensated by the increased duty on his product which in the past he has not enjoyed. For that reason I cannot feel sorry for him. If I have any criticism to offer at all it would be that there is an added duty placed upon this coal. From the Fernie area in British Columbia a considerable amount of coal is exported to the United States. As the coal duties are reciprocal, difficulty will be experienced in getting the product of that field into the United States. That, Mr. Chairman, is my objection to the duty.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): I come from a county which produces over 70 per cent of all the coal mined in eastern Canada. I have some knowledge of the industry and of the conditions under which those miners live. To-day in the town of Glace Bay there are over 1,000 people living on doles. Last Saturday the sum of $7,800 was paid out to those miners. Usually during the summer months we enjoy considerable prosperity in Cape Breton; the winter is our hard time. While the St. Lawrence is open and the Montreal market available, up to this year we have always enjoyed a fair measure of prosperity and comfort. This is the first year the miners of Cape Breton have had to be helped by charitable neighbours and their locals.

The simple question is this: Are we going to let that industry die? We must either let it die or take steps to rejuvenate and help it. In its platform this government gave a promise to the people of Canada that it would inaugurate a national fuel policy. What is meant by a fuel policy for Canada? It means that, as far as our resources will permit, Canada is to supply the fuel necessary to run its furnaces and stoves. This government has taken two steps in that direction; it has increased the duty on soft coal to 75 cents, and it has increased the subventions which will enable us to extend our markets further west into Quebec and Ontario. I want to say on behalf of the miners of Cape Breton that they appreciate what this government has done for them; they appreciate the fact that this Minister of Finance is keeping the pledge he made to the miners of Glace Bay when he visited there last year.

Hon. members opposite have asked how the additional 25 cent duty will help. Let me tell them that at many competitive points in Ontario a difference of 15 cents turned the scale; when a manufacturer could buy American coal for 15 cents less than Canadian coal, the order went to the American firm. The subventions will enable us to carry our coal a little further west in Quebec and Ontario, and it has been calculated that those subventions will net us something over one million tons a year, which to us means the difference between adversity and prosperity. The duty and the subventions are two elements only in a fuel policy, but they are the two fundamental and essential elements in the creation of such a policy; they are the evidences given by this government of its intention to keep the pledges it made, something I presume hon. gentlemen opposite do not understand.

It is possible that in some parts of Ontario the price the manufacturer will have to pay for his coal will be slighty increased, but I am bound to say from my personal observation and knowledge that the Ontario manufacturers are meeting the situation in a patriotic spirit. They realize that the maritime provinces have furnished them with a market for everything from hats to boots; we buy everything from them. They have taken from us all our banks, our trust companies and our financial resources, which are now located in Ontario and Quebec. We are the fringe of confederation, but we claim the right to live, and we ask the Ontario and Quebec people to make in a patriotic spirit any small sacrifice that may be necessary. In this world of ours we cannot take everything and give nothing. We are giving the manufacturers a market, and we ask them to accept, if necessary, a slight increase in the price of coal in order to enable us to live. The industry must have this assistance or it will perish. This government says it is not going to perish but that it is going to live, and those of us who come from the coal counties of Nova Scotia feel that in this government they have men who are determined that this industry shall have a fair chance to prosper.

The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat takes credit for introducing the subventions some years ago. At least he might have given some credit to those of us who worked on the coal committee in 1926, which suggested these subventions to the government of that day. He might also have given some credit to those of us who stood up on the other side of the house and fought for maritime rights, as a result of which we obtained certain concessions. Though at present, the skies are dark and the situation is very distressing, still we have hopes that when present contracts have expired and new ones are being made we shall be able to meet competition, no matter whence it comes, on an even basis, thanks to the good sense, the sound judgment and the patriotic effort of this government.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Mr. Chairman, so long as we have a policy in this country under which we give assistance to various industries by tariffs or bonuses, I am quite certain that those of us who come from coal areas cannot quarrel in any way with the assistance given the coal industry. At present I am not certain just to what extent the increased tariffs and subventions will extend the coal markets for my own province of Alberta. I hope the markets will be widened very considerably, because that extension is badly needed. Until it is clearly demonstrated just what will be the result of these changes I am content to take the opinion of those who are in the industry and who are best qualified to speak. However, may I ask the Prime Minister to what extent, if any, this assistance by way of tariffs and subventions will apply to the purely steam coal areas whose market is wholly restricted to one or the other of our great railway systems? So far as I can judge it will hardly apply in that regard.

There is a branch of the coal industry—and I will only speak of that part of it with which I am familiar—with which I should like to deal for a few moments. I refer to the steam coal areas in my own district, the Brazeau collieries whose sole market is the Canadian National Railways. The district itself lies in the mountains towards the British Columbia line and is accessible only by the Canadian National, and that railway, as I say, is the sole market. In former years these Brazeau collieries supplied a very large part of the coal used in that section of the country by that railway system. The operating costs are low. The method is known as drift mining as distinguished from shaft mining. They drive a drift in through the face of the mountain, slanting upwards, and the seams run to nine, seventeen and eighteen feet in depth. There is rock above and below, and the coal is so pulverized by pressure that it requires little further in the way of operations to dislodge it. It is shovelled out and is about as cheap a system as you could possibly have. Yet they could not hold their contract with the railways. The mines themselves are equipped to handle 75,000 tons per month, but the average in the last few years during the month of February, has been between 26,000 and 27,000 tons. But at present they are putting out from 10,000 to 12,000 tons per month Formerly they employed as many as 900 men and now only 300. That in itself will give a picture of the industry as it is to-day. But although one-third of the number of men formerly employed are now at work, these men are working only part time and their standard of living cannot be regarded as satisfactory. In order to be quite certain not to exaggerate I wrote not only to the heads of the workers' unions but to the accountants and the manager of the mine, and the information I received from them as to the present output and the number of men employed I have given to the committee. The manager sent me ten typical monthly pay sheets showing just what the men are earning, and the facts disclosed will show how impossible it is for men to live in decency under present conditions. Let me give some examples from the ten. The first case is that of a man whose family numbers seven and whose net earnings amounted to $34.83 for the month of February. Another, four members in the family, receive $34.41; another, five members, $31. And so on. In another branch of the work—men working on the ground—I find one man, six members in the family, receiving $19.54. I will not detain the committee by giving further particulars in that direction.

[Mr. Speakman.]

So far as I can understand subventions and the tariff, this will not give any assistance to that particular type of mine; yet it is at least as important a part of the industry, in proportion to the number of men employed, as any other. Last year during the short session I hoped that some assistance would be given out of the $20,000,000 voted for the relief of unemployment. At that time I pointed out the situation to the Prime Minister and asked him whether it would be possible, under the terms of that vote, to pay a small bonus or subvention to Canadian steam coal equal to the difference in cost to the railways as between Canadian and American steam coal. The amount required would be comparatively small, and I suggested that a bonus, from the point of view of employment, would perhaps be better than assistance in any other form. I had hoped that this would be done, for the Prime Minister at that time stated that one of the objects of providing the relief was to meet such a situation as I had described. When I wrote to the manager of the company a short time ago to ascertain the exact condition of the industry I asked whether anything of that kind had been done, and he said they had not received directly or indirectly one dollar of bonus or subvention, nor assistance in any other form to enable them to extend contracts. At present, unless there has been an increase during the last two or three weeks, the only contract outstanding is the contract with the Canadian National Railways for 10,000 tons per month, and obviously that will not improve conditions.

I confess at once I do not believe that, in the long run, bonuses, subventions or tariffs are an economic way of improving the situation. But while that system is in vogue and industries are receiving protection, while that policy is being put into force, it should be extended to cover the whole of this industry in all its peculiar operations. The same situation exists in part of the Crowsnest area; I am told that the Canadian Pacific Railway is their sole market. I would urge, therefore, that these particular districts, the Brazeau district and that Crowsnest area, be given consideration and that an attempt be made to extend to them some measure of assistance comparable to the assistance which the government contemplates giving to domestic coal in the other coal producing provinces.

Mr. HACKETT: An impression has gone abroad that a duty of 40 cents a ton has been placed on all anthracite coal. This is an inaccuracy as regards the very best anthracite coal that comes into our markets. The trade returns for the last few years show that we have purchased from the United States much more than we have succeeded in selling to that country; they also show that we have sold to Great Britain much more than we have bought from her. This tariff admits British anthracite coal free. It will enable anthracite coal from that source to come to Canada in ships which in the past have come in ballast. It is believed that these ships coming in cargo instead of in ballast will be able to take back to the old country Canadian products, and in particular wheat, at lower freight rates than in the past. This is a deliberate attempt on the part of the government to promote inter-empire trade. It is an attempt to establish here credits through which our commodities, and in particular wheat, may be purchased by the British people. Nothing but good can result from this policy, because it gives free entry into our markets of the very best anthracite coal and places a duty upon coal coming from a country which in the past has not favoured us with very extensive purchases, at least when compared with what we have purchased from it.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Mr. Chairman, representations have been made to me regarding the coal subventions. A short time ago I asked a question of the Minister of Mines (Mr. Gordon) and I was pleased to hear that the problem of the lignite coal miners of southern Saskatchewan was receiving some consideration. I notice in the budget speech that the subventions have been changed to one seventh of a cent per ton per mile on coal from Alberta going into Manitoba, and one third of a cent per ton per mile on coal going into Ontario. These rates apply also to Saskatchewan coal, but I would point out that this coal has obtained quite an extensive market in the city of Winnipeg. The people in that city are becoming more and more accustomed to the use of this coal, due to certain mechanical devices which have been installed and which make the burning of the coal much more profitable and beneficial. A short time ago I noticed in one of the papers that an engineer connected with one of the new central heating plants being constructed in the city expressed a preference for Saskatchewan lignite coal. The subventions now being offered are to replace the subvention of 50 cents per ton formerly given to our coal; instead of 50 cents per ton we now are to receive about 40 cents per ton, whereas the Alberta coal is to receive an increased subvention. It would seem as though the Saskatchewan lignite fields are being discriminated against to the extent of about 23 to 25 cents per ton. This business is carried on under a very narrow margin of profit, and this discrimination would mean that they will be excluded from the Winnipeg market. The minister has assured me that this problem is being considered and I would suggest that the subvention given to Saskatchewan lignite coal be the same as that given to Nova Scotia coal, that is, one fifth cent per ton per mile into Manitoba and one third cent per ton per mile into Ontario. I believe that that would enable our Saskatchewan lignite miners to retain the market in Winnipeg which they have established through hard work. It would be nothing more than justice.

Mr. YOUNG: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the worst feature of this system of granting bonuses and handouts to special industries or special localities is, to borrow an expression of the Prime Minister, the fact that it debauches the people with their own money. It is proposed to take money out of the public treasury in order to pay part of the freight on coal from Nova Scotia into Ontario. It is proposed to take money out of the treasury to pay a part of the freight on coal from Alberta into western Ontario. It is proposed to take money out of the public treasury to pay part of the freight on coal from Alberta and Saskatchewan into Manitoba. It is proposed also to take money out of the public treasury in order to bonus bunker coal mined in British Columbia to the extent of 25 cents per ton. The result is that every hon. member who has any coal industries in his constituency is clamoring for more handouts. Even the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) whom we have looked upon as being one of the incorruptible members of this house, so far forgets the principles upon which he and his party were elected as to ask for an extension of this principle to certain kinds of coal mined in his district. I would ask the government to tell me candidly upon what principle of equity one man's money can be taken to pay another man's freight. What right has the government to ask the farmers of Saskatchewan, who perhaps are suffering more from the present depression than any other class of people in Canada, to pay a part of the freight on coal hauled from Alberta right past their own doors to the city of Winnipeg in order that the people there may get coal more cheaply than it can be obtained in Saskatchewan?

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): Did not the hon. member support this identical thing last year when the Liberal government brought in its subvention?

Mr. YOUNG: I am not making any apology for the mistakes made by the Liberal party when they were in power.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the hon. member's own mistake.

Mr. YOUNG: If the Liberal party did wrong, they have suffered. I am not going to be embarrassed by any such question as that. I did not support this policy and I ask the minister upon what principle of equity he justifies this procedure.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, even at this late hour I am afraid I must intervene for the purpose of answering the observations made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). I think no more imperative duty rests upon any government than to assist the development of the natural resources of the country. Even the most rabid free trader will agree to that doctrine, with perhaps one notable exception and that only when in opposition. When not in opposition the hon. member espouses the cause of the protectionist and votes gladly for bounties to be paid to the coal industry when proposed by the ministry he supports; when that ministry is out of power, he finds it not convenient so to do, and he asks upon what principle the taxpayers of Canada are asked to contribute to the development of the resources of the country. The answer is a fairly resonable one—the greatest good to the greatest number. For the same reason that five cents per bushel is being paid to the farmer for his wheat, this contribution is being made with respect to coal. On the same basis that the producers of wealth in eastern Canada are willing to assist other sections of the country in times of crisis, I take it that when in an emergency we endeavour to develop the natural resources of the country we might expect that those who are most prone to dwell upon the necessity of the development of these resources would give their assistance to the policies so proposed.

There is no country in all the world so blessed with coal resources as is Canada. One can commence at the most westerly point, Vancouver island, travel to the most easterly point, Cape Breton, and he will find coal in every part of the country with the exception of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, where the geological formation is such that coal has not yet been found in substantial quantities. Coal is found on Vancouver island, and to the north of the Skeena river where there are deposits of anthracite coal unrivalled in the world. The late Lord Rhondda said that within a century he believed these deposits would be looked upon as being the most outstanding in the world.

East of the mountains we have the great deposits to which the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) referred. In the southern portion of British Columbia and extending into Alberta there are great deposits. Alberta is underlaid with three layers of coal. The upper layer is not so good, but of the second and third layers of lignite I shall speak presently. In the north, the hardness of the coal makes it a semi-anthracite, while in the south, outside of the Lethbridge field, we find the great fields of coking coal. The coke ovens at Hosmer and Fernie supplied coke for many years to the mines at Great Falls, Montana. This was continued until our neighbours put up their tariff and made it impossible for us to meet successfully their requirements. This field was opened up through the vision of the late J. J. Hill and Elias Rogers in order to supply the requirements of the Great Northern Railway. The deposits in that area supplied for many years the requirements of a great number of people and enterprises in the United States, but later on the tariff of the United States provided that if we imposed a tariff upon the importation of bituminous coal into our country, an equal countervailing tariff would immediately become applicable against our coals.

Lignite coal has developed a substantial market in the state immediately south of the province of Alberta. The grade of lignite coal at Lethbridge has the reputation of being the finest domestic fuel of that type that we have any evidence of in that part of Canada, and the result is that substantial quantities of that lignite coal are bought not only in the state immediately south but also a little to the west in eastern Washington. Those exports have grown to very considerable magnitude. If a duty be now imposed upon lignite, under a recent ruling of the treasury the effect would be the same as though it were bituminous coal and the countervailing duty would immediately apply.

The coal referred to by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni that reached Vancouver from Bellingham is not, according to my appreciation of the proper definition of the term, lignite coal. Lignite coal, according to the definition arrived at by our scientists, Doctor Haanel being our representative, means a coal that carries six per cent or more of moisture. Many tests of varied character have been imposed to determine what constitutes lignite coal, but finally scientists arrived at the conclusion that the fair and the only effective test that could be applied was that of moisture content. It was therefore concluded that if coal carried a moisture content of six per cent or more it should be classified as lignite. If it carried a less moisture content, it should be classified, as we speak colloquially, as semi-bituminous, or really as a bituminous coal. The result is, in my appreciation of the matter, that the plea which the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has expressed this evening as to the loss of market to the coal of Vancouver island, because of the effect of the application of the countervailing duty in the United States upon coal, is perhaps unwarranted. In other words, if the United States coal is not lignite, then it cannot be said that the countervailing duty shall apply to it. That is, if the coal coming in from Bellingham is not a lignite coal, it is not affected by this item. That is as far as that goes.

But let us proceed a step further as we come east. In Saskatchewan and Manitoba there is a further deposit of lignite coal. Scientists tell us that the quality of that coal is not as high as that of the lignite coal to which I have previously referred. It is now being briquetted. During the war and after we spent a substantial sum of money in experiments, in this connection, as a result of which, supplemented by more recent scientific knowledge, that area or measure of coal has been developed by the production of briquettes and a substantial market has been created in the city of Winnipeg and elsewhere in the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan for the products of those mines.

There are then no further coal deposits until you come east to the province of New Brunswick, where at Minto you have a substantial deposit of a soft quality of coal which has been utilized to some extent to meet the requirements of the railways and as a fuel for the population. Then there are the great deposits of coal on Cape Breton island and elsewhere in Nova Scotia. In fact, one might fairly say that the whole province of Nova Scotia is underlaid with coal. It is a singular circumstance that the cost of production of coal in Vancouver island has reached a very high mark, and it is undersea mining, and that in the island of Cape Breton the cost has also reached a high level and it is likewise undersea mining. Therefore you have, 3,000 miles apart, two great coal measures, the winning of coal from which necessitates undersea mining. Those are the conditions that confront the Canadian people.

When I say that there has been a universal expression of opinion on the part of Canada —and I speak broadly—that there should be developed a national fuel policy, I state but the bald truth. It is not quite correct for the hon. member for West Edmonton to take the credit to himself or to the administration of which he was a member, for, as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has remarked, this was not the outcome of the thought in the mind of one man or two men or a government. During the war it was realized it was absolutely essential for a country such as this, possessing the vast resources we have, to utilize and develop them, and the sums expended in Saskatchewan together with the sums expended for the production of tri-nitro-toluol during the war indicated, first, the value of our deposits, and, second, the necessity for their development. Under those circumstances I say that every part of Canada was agreed that we should endeavour to originate and maintain a national fuel policy. Spasmodic efforts had been made to this end. The question was: How was the result to be attained? I think we are almost in agreement when I say that two methods and two only offered themselves for the moment: one, the utilization of tariff as an instrument for that advancement, and, second, the payment of such moneys as would enable equality of cost to be established if possible to those who had to use the coal. It may well be said that bonuses and bounties are objectionable, and yet two of the greatest industries we have in Canada to-day owe their origin to a bounty. I recall the first session I was in the house that a bounty was extended to lead, and the great industry that has now developed to such an extent at Trail owes its origin to a small bounty that was given for the production of lead. The same thing is true with respect to copper refining, and there are other matters that one might mention. Bounties, bonuses, have been applied almost from time immemorial for the purpose of developing in the early days the great natural resources of a country—and when I say "early days," I mean the early stages of their development. In other words, to aid pioneering effort in that regard we have utilized the public purse, because we believe we are aiming to establish a national policy that in the end will be advantageous to every part of the country, east and west, north and south.

It is possible of course the price paid may be too great; but possessing as we do 12 per cent of all the known coal in the world, we do not believe it is at all reasonable that the Canadian people should have to send $25,000,- 000 or $30,000,000 abroad for the purchase of a commodity which exists in such quantities in our midst. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni quoted from observations that were made by members of the party which I had the honour to lead in opposition, and an extract, I think, from the platform adopted by the party at Winnipeg. I agree with the hon. member for West Edmonton that the consensus on the part of the Canadian people was that such a policy should be adopted. Having adopted it and having secured from the electorate a mandate, this government proceeded to put that policy into effect. The extent to which the government may be able in its first session to realize all its hopes and expectations in that regard is in the lap of the gods. But this at least we have done: we have, I think I may say without egotism, made a courageous step forward in that direction. If that be so—and I think most people will admit it is so—the letters read to-night are interesting, not because of their flattery of individuals or their tribute to what has been accomplished, but rather because they indicate an appreciation of the effort that has been made to develop a national policy in this respect.

That being so, let us see what the position is in detail. It has been suggested that as regards Vancouver island we should pay a bonus of $1 or $1.25 a ton for every ton of coal exported. Representations have been made to me by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Dickie). No man is more moved by the pain and suffering of others than the hon. member for Nanaimo, and in season and out of season he has urged upon me and upon other members of the government the desirability, nay the necessity, of action being taken for the purpose of providing against the calamity that threatened the miners in the Nanaimo and Ladysmith areas. I received a deputation consisting of himself, the member for Comox-Alberni and the candidate who opposed him in the recent election. They presented to me a petition signed by thousands of people. The gravemen of the petition was this: Here was an industry that might fall, and the calamity would be very great. There is one of the oldest coal mines in the country. The almost romantic circumstances under which that coal deposit was discovered will be recalled. A pioneer Scotchman crossed the isthmus of Panama and made his home on what is now known as the island of Vancouver. He disturbed with his foot a piece of coal, and having a true appreciation of the value of coal, he at once saw what he believed to be a great opportunity for development. He developed the coal deposit, and the family of Dunsmuir was associated with that development through I think two generations, when the industry passed into the hands of a corporation. Its securities were offered to the public under circumstances that put a very high value upon the deposit, shall I say, and it has been very difficult since for that corporation to make sufficient profit to meet its fixed charges. For a time it was in the hands of a receiver—I speak subject to correction as to that—

An hon. MEMBER: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: My friend corroborates my memory in that regard. To ask arbitrarily for a bonus or bounty for the purpose of saving an enterprise from disaster is one thing; to ask for a bonus or bounty for the purpose of promoting the development of a new enterprise is another. In Alberta the coal areas have been practically untouched and undeveloped until recent years. I remember when they used to haul a few dray loads and sleigh loads of coal from the carbon area to the central parts of Alberta. I remember when within the boundaries of the city of Edmonton coal was taken from the river banks and hauled to the city for use there. To-day Alberta produces 6,000,000 tons of coal. I remember distinctly the development that took place in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and I attribute the development of the last few years to the recognition by governments of the part that government must play in the orderly development of the natural resources of the country. This old colliery, as the hon. gentleman has admitted, has encountered many difficulties in meeting the new competition that has developed. Duties, long drives under the sea, the cost of winning the coal and raising it to the pit mouth—all these have been potent factors in increasing the cost of production. Nevertheless the government, desiring to assist the British Columbia industry as well as others, provided that it should be paid a bonus of 25 cents a ton on the product sold for bunkering purposes for fuel and for export to foreign countries except to the United States. It was felt that at least a reasonable purpose would be served in paying this bonus. The hon. gentleman from Nanaimo at once impressed upon us that this was not an ample recognition of the situation, and the argument that he has used to-night must appeal to every man who thinks of the starving families of the unemployed miners. Put on that ground, temporary assistance might be warranted; but that will not stimulate or create there an enduring industry, for the reasons that were dealt with by the hon. member himself.

Now it is said that to assist that industry we should have been willing to put a duty on fuel oil coming into this country. I have already said in this house, and I repeat it tonight, that the time has gone by when that remedy would have redressed the grievance complained of. The time to do that was when oil was a new fuel and before it became a serious competitor of coal. But that day went by. At present there is a duty of half a cent on fuel oil. That duty was imposed by the Minister of Finance of that day for the purpose of encouraging the coal industry of British Columbia and other parts of Canada. It was not a Conservative minister of finance that placed that duty on fuel oil. But great industries have been built up on the Pacific slope, paper mills, lumber mills and other industrial enterprises, in which the furnaces are arranged for the utilization of fuel oil, and this has created such a situation that to pass legislation that would have the effect of preventing the use of fuel oil for those industries would bring wreck and ruin upon them. In the early part of this year it was suggested that we should enact legislation placing a higher duty upon fuel oil. I should like to assure the house that within a few days after that suggestion was made in the press we were actually receiving from those industries telegrams by the score stating very frankly that to do so would spell ruin to them in these days. I mention that because it has been suggested—and the hon. gentleman did it very insinuatingly—that under the circumstances we could not be expected to place a duty against fuel oil. Now there is a duty against it. To have increased that duty would have brought about the conditions to which I have referred.

But there was a far greater difficulty than that. You had your duty on crude oil. The crude oil was brought in as a raw product. It was treated at the refineries on the Pacific coast—whether the Imperial, the British American or the Shell, matters not—and after the gasoline was extracted there was left a residuum that becomes the fuel oil of commerce. It was suggested that that fuel oil should bear an additional tax. Now, how would it be possible to put an import tax upon the residue after the raw material had paid duty and there had been extracted from that residue the commodity for which it had been imported? Clearly, it would have to be an excise tax, and to impose an excise tax would be injurious to the very interests that I have mentioned and would not, I think have given the redress which has been sought. At any rate, the government did study the problem and arrived at the conclusion that on the balance of economic results to this country it was not warranted at this time in doing so.

Recently the miners of England and Wales have been carrying on an agitation demanding that fuel oil should be no longer used on battleships, but that the admiralty should return to the use of coal, for the very reasons that have been given in this house. And yet Britain with her immense coal deposits and no petroleum deposits has been compelled by the very nature of things—the economic value of fuel oil, its cleanliness in use, its superiority in quickly raising steam, and its other advantages—to use it for her battleships and other naval craft. The great ocean liners that come into Montreal, Quebec and New York, and an increasing number of cargo ships are driven by fuel oil. It may not be improbable that in the laboratories of our great universities or in those of our research council there is some young man working on the problem of converting into liquid form the coal of these great western deposits. I hazard no guess, but I have every reason to believe that as progress is made in scientific research some such result will be achieved. In the meantime by subventions, by tariffs, or by any other means within the power of this government, we will use every effort to bring about an orderly sustained development of the great coal resources of Canada for the benefit of the Canadian people.

If it be felt at times that a given policy does not result in the uniform advantage that those in all parts of this vast Dominion seek and expect, we can say only that in a country so vast, with a population so limited, it is not to be expected, in the nature of things, that from the very inception of these efforts you can secure uniform results. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) referred to steam coal. The largest consumers of steam coal are the two great railway companies. The development of the mines on the Canadian National railways are for the use of those railways. For its own purposes the Canadian Pacific Railway has carried on great developments at Bankhead, Hosmer and other points. The Great Northern Railway has developed the Fernie mines for its own use. We have reached a situation where steam coal to be used by private enterprises other than the great transportation companies is almost an impossibility, because as we come east the demand becomes more limited. There is an increasing use of electricity. The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) referred to the white coal which has taken the place of black coal in western Ontario; that applies also in other parts of Canada. Around the city of Winnipeg industrial development has taken place; the waterfalls in that locality have been utilized and have brought about changed conditions. That applies in other parts of Canada, and British Columbia is no exception. I say to my hon. friends from that province that part of the difficulties under which they now labour have arisen from the utilization of electric power or energy in the development of the industrial life of that province.

I have dwelt upon these matters at greater length than I had intended, because after all I think it necessary that we should have a clear appreciation of these problems. It is not so much a matter of difference of policy, but sometimes it is a difference of methods and principles of approach. When my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni talks so strongly to-night I am wondering why he has been silent through all these years. What about the island in days gone by?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I say to my right hon. friend that the hon. member was not silent.

Mr. BENNETT: His silence at least was felt by those in the house, but not by those out of the house. His views were not put forward with that strength of conviction—

Mr. NEILL: Oh yes, they were, again and again, in Hansard.

Mr. BENNETT: Again and again in Hansard, probably, at an opportune moment —but certainly not with that vigour of presentation and strength of conviction with which he addressed the committee to-night. A plea for the suffering was not heard from his lips; on the contrary he made only a perfunctory presentation of conditions which had arisen in the hope that peradventure it might have the effect of securing for him a few votes at an opportune time. That difficulty is one which everybody administering a government experiences. Hon. members sitting to the left of Mr. Speaker feel that it is part of their duty to take that attitude. Now and then we find some slight differences of opinion, such as that expressed to-night by the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young), who said, "Well, what I did in the past has nothing to do with it; what those who led me in the past did has nothing to do with it; I am leader unto myself; my views are my own, and I shall express them as I please." Such courage is rarely found in Israel.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think my right hon. friend has been treated with a great deal more leniency than we were in former days.

Mr. BENNETT: These private discussions do not seem to have led to any public manifestations of conviction.

Mr. NEILL: I am afraid I cannot let that statement go without making some reply. My very first speech in the House of Commons was on that subject.

Mr. BENNETT: I have no doubt about it; it is wonderful how much more moderate those manifestations became as the days passed, the strength of the administration became more apparent and the power of the hon. member as a voting factor became less. My hon. friend from West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) can scarcely refrain from laughing heartily, because he knows the strength of the protestations—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have a great deal of sympathy for you.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. However, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. NEILL: Is this ward politics or a statement on the national fuel policy?

Mr. BENNETT: That is exactly the remark one would expect—exactly. There we have evidence of it. Now it is "ward politics"; but when my hon. friend first came into the house he was talking about a national fuel policy.

May I say to my hon. friend that this is a national matter and will be treated as such. Wherever compensating adjustments become necessary this government will endeavour to apply them. The extent to which they may be applied depends upon factors I have frequently presented to the house and which I do not purpose to present again.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Shall the item carry?

Mr. SANDERSON: No, it will not carry just yet. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he can tell the number of tons of anthracite coal imported last year from the United States and the number imported from Great Britain?

Mr. BENNETT: There were 3,950,000 tons imported valued at $28,500,000. Of that quantity 2,748,000 tons came from the United States; 918,000 from Great Britain and 284,000 from Russia.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is the minister in a position to tell the committee the number of tons of anthracite coal imported from the United States into the province of Ontario during the past year?

Mr. BENNETT: There are no separate items.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Shall the item carry?

Mr. SANDERSON: No, it is not carried yet. Can the minister get those figures?

Mr. BENNETT: No; separate figures are not kept. Probably they could be compiled in a week's time.

Mr. SANDERSON: I think those figures could be obtained within the next day or two; I do not believe any hon. member would wish to wait two or three weeks for them. To my mind this is a very important item, which affects the province of Ontario to a greater degree than any other part of Canada. It simply means that this duty of 40 cents a ton is a duty—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): It is now eleven o'clock.

Mr. SANDERSON: The item is not carried.

Mr. BENNETT: No, of course it is not carried; my hon. friend will have ample time to discuss it.

Mr. SANDERSON: I want ample time, and I will take ample time to discuss it.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, July 16, 1931.

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Mr. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury) presented the second and final report of the select standing committee on privileges and elections, as follows:

Your committee have had before them an order of reference of the house under date of June 4, 1931, namely:

"That all correspondence and other communications in the possession of the government relating to the preparation of the voters' list for the municipality of Port McNicoll, in the riding of East Simcoe, and a copy of the original list prepared by the enumerator, and of the revised list as prepared by him for use on election day, together with a copy of any communications exchanged between the chief electoral officer and the returning officer or any other person as to the conduct of the poll on election day, laid on the table of the house on Wednesday, the 27th of May, 1931, be referred to the select standing committee on privileges and elections with instructions to inquire fully into the registration and polling of the votes or other related matter in connection with the election in the electoral division of East Simcoe, on July 28, 1930."

Your committee have inquired into the matters referred to them under the terms of the above reference and have held five meetings in the course of which they have heard twelve witnesses. After having perused the evidence adduced before them, your committee beg leave to report as follows:

That in the opinion of the committee, having regard to the fact that it is the intention of the Dominion Elections Act to enfranchise as many voters as possible under the residence provisions if they have the other qualifications, those in situations similar to that of Messrs. Chidwick and Campbell, should have been entitled to vote.

Your committee therefore recommend that the necessary amendments be made to the Dominion Elections Act to enable persons similarly situated to vote at future Dominion elections.

Your committee also recommend that the proceedings and evidence, a copy of which is submitted herewith for the information of parliament, be printed as an appendix to the journals of the house for the present session.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

Hon. J. D. CHAPLIN (Lincoln) presented the third and final report of the select standing committee on railways and shipping, as follows:

Your committee, to whom was referred for consideration and for report to the house the estimates on the Canadian National Steamships and Maritime Freight Rates Act, the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, the Canadian National (West Indies) Services, and the Maritime Freight Rates Act requirements, held thirteen meetings in the course of which they examined sundry witnesses, including:

Sir Henry Thornton, K.B.E., chairman of the board and president, Canadian National Railways;
V. I. Smart, Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals;
J. E. Labelle, director, Canadian National Railways;
S. J. Hungerford, vice-president, operation and construction departments, Canadian National Railways;
D. C. Grant, vice-president, finance department, Canadian National Railways;
R. C. Vaughan, vice-president, purchases and stores department, Canadian National Railways;
R. L. Burnap, vice-president, traffic department, Canadian National Railways;
D. E. Galloway, assistant vice-president, Canadian National Railways;
S. W. Fairweather, director, bureau of economics, Canadian National Railways;
J. B. McLaren, comptroller, Canadian National Railways;
T. H. Cooper, assistant comptroller, Canadian National Railways;
C. B. Brown, chief engineer of operation, Canadian National Railways;

C. S. Gzowski, chief engineer of construction, Canadian National Railways;
Dr. W. J. Black, director of colonization, Canadian National Railways;
B. J. Roberts, comptroller of government guarantee branch, Department of Finance;
R. B. Teakle, vice-president, Canadian National Steamships;
A. H. Allan, general manager, Canadian National Steamships.

Canadian National Railways

Bill 79

Your committee have had under consideration Bill 79, "An act respecting the Canadian National Railways and to authorize the expenditures made and indebtedness incurred during the calendar year 1931" amounting to $68,500,000 and have agreed to report the same without amendment.

Bill 83

Your committee have also had under consideration Bill 83, "An act respecting the Canadian National Railways and to authorize the guarantee by His Majesty of securities to be issued under the Canadian National Railways Financing Act, 1931" and beg leave to report the same without amendment.

The committee have considered the general report of last year's operations of the railway made by Sir Henry Thornton as president of the company and chairman of the board of directors and were particularly interested in his expressed intention to reduce the expenditures on capital account and wherever possible on operation and maintenance. Your committee heartily approve of such proposed action and recommend that for the present projects entailing capital expenditure be curtailed as far as possible.

Your committee desire to call the attention of the house to the proposal made by Sir Henry Thornton at one of the sessions of the committee. He referred to the serious position of the transportation business generally and recommended that a commission be appointed for the purpose of considering the whole question of Canadian transportation. Your committee regard such a recommendation coming from such a source at this time as worthy of the serious consideration of the government.

Canadian Government Merchant Marine

Your committee have had under consideration item 379 of the estimates—loan to the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited, to be applied in payment of deficits in operation of the company and of the vessels under the company's control during the year ending December 31, 1931, amounting in all to $588,500.

Your committee also reviewed the balance sheet of the company and are of the opinion that the amount of $588,500 included under item 379 of the estimates, is required for the purposes of the company and should be granted by this house.

Your committee believe that the time has come when the government should very carefully consider the abandonment of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, and the making of arrangements with other shipping companies so that the external trade of Canada will not be jeopardized. In this respect we wish to point out that the total original cost of this enterprise which was undertaken solely as a result of the exigencies of the war was approximately $80,000,000.

After almost ten years of operation there has not been a single year in which an operating profit has been shown by the merchant marine.

Throughout the whole period, a deficit of over $57,000,000 has accumulated, including depreciation on ships sold and interest due the government, but does not include accrued depreciation on vessels remaining in the fleet, which depreciation amounts to more than $17,000,000 in addition. Your committee has been informed that the ships are for the most part obsolete and only part of the fleet is now in operation.

Canadian National (West Indies) Services

Your committee have had under consideration item 380, loan to the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited, whose steamships provide the services called for by the West Indies Trade Agreement.

Your committee note that the operations for the year ending December 31, 1930, resulted in an operating loss of $523,136.98, which is partly offset by the fact that previously a subsidy equal to $380,000 per annum was paid to a private company by the Dominion government for a similar service.

Your committee further believe that the steamship service established on the Pacific coast and known as the Triangular Service between Vancouver, Seattle, and Victoria should not have been established as it does not earn its operating expenses. We, therefore, recommend that serious consideration be given to immediate action looking toward the elimination of this loss.

Maritime Freight Rates Act

Your committee have also had under consideration item 382 of the estimates, to provide for the payment to the Canadian National Railway Company as required by the Maritime Freight Rates Act, of the deficit incurred during 1931 on eastern lines, the amount of the estimated deficit being $6,631,856, and in addition the sum of $2,450,632, representing the estimated amount by which the revenues of the eastern lines will be lessened during the coming year by the reduced rates granted under the Maritime Freight Rates Act in accordance with the recommendations of the Duncan commission.

By reason of the special consideration involved in the maritime railway situation, with which the house is familiar, your committee are of the opinion that these amounts are necessary to give effect to the Maritime Freight Rates Act in the operation of the eastern lines.

Your committee have also had under consideration item 381, to provide the sum of $900,000 from which privately owned railways operating in territory covered by the Maritime Freight Rates Act shall be reimbursed the difference between normal tolls and special tolls provided by that act. Your committee are of the opinion that this amount is necessary to implement the provisions of the act in that regard and should be granted by this house.

Certain questions relating to the salaries and emoluments paid to executive officers of the company were asked by members of the committee, and were by resolution of the committee submitted to a sub-committee for consideration. The report of the sub-committee has been received accompanied by a statement from the president of all salaries of $15,000 per annum and over, together with the names of the officials receiving them. The president, Sir Henry Thornton, has expressed the opinion that it is not in the best interests of the railway that the list of such salaries and the names of the recipients be published.

Your committee, while of opinion that many of the salaries are much too generous, and in some instances excessive, accede to the expressed wish of the president that the list be not published for the reasons given by him.

Your committee, however, are of opinion that the salary of the president stands on a different footing as he has a term contract calling for the payment of $75,000 per annum from the National Railways and all its subsidiaries, besides legitimate out of pocket expenses, which was negotiated by the previous government and approved by order in council. Therefore, to all intents and purposes the salary of the president is a matter of contract with the Dominion of Canada and is a public document.

Your committee also are informed that in addition to the contractual salary of the president above referred to, he is, with the approval of the former board of directors, in receipt of other substantial amounts in the form of salary and emoluments, which he receives in addition to his contractual salary.

It has also come to the knowledge of your committee that the late board of directors in the year 1929 passed a resolution recommending the payment of an annuity of $30,000 per annum for life to Sir Henry Thornton, if his services to the railway should at any time be terminated. Your committee are of opinion that such resolution was unnecessary and should be rescinded forthwith. If later on the services of Sir Henry Thornton are discontinued and his contract terminated, the matter of a retiring allowance may then be discussed on its merits, by the directors and the government.

In view of the decreased revenues of the company, and the economies being made in other branches of the service, your committee are of the opinion that the executive committee of the board of directors should immediately consider the whole question of salaries, allowances, disbursements, pensions and retirement provisions for executive officers and officials of the company, receiving salaries of $5,000 and over in order that every reasonable and proper economy should be effected.

Your committee recommend that immediate action be taken in these matters and a report be made to the select standing committee on railways and shipping, owned, operated and controlled by the government, at the next session of parliament.

Your committee strongly condemn the practice which has grown up under which the National railways are chargeable with large amounts for payment for the social entertainment and other activities of officials on other than official business. Your committee recommend that this practice should be discontinued forthwith. Expenditures for such purposes are in the opinion of your committee, wrong in principle and practice, and should never have been permitted.

When it is necessary in the interest of the business of the railway that moneys should be expended chargeable to the railway for entertainment, then it should be approved by the executive committee.

In reporting the result of the conferences of the committee with the president and officials of the railway, your committee would draw the attention of parliament to the magnitude of the task which was referred to them by the house. In the opinion of your committee, it is a practical impossibility to conduct an exhaustive inquiry into the affairs and management of the Canadian National Railways and Mercantile Marine within the time at the disposal of the committee. The result of the partial investigation conducted by the committee is by no means adaquate, complete or satisfactory. Full justice cannot be done in respect of an undertaking of so great magnitude without much greater time than the committee had at their disposal. The committee desire to emphasize this phase of the matter to the house, and recommend that in order that the operations of the company be fully scrutinized, a thorough audit by an independent auditor, appointed by the government, should be made from time to time of all such matters and accounts as may be designated by the minister and reported to him.

Your committee are glad to record that all the members present as hereinafter stated are unanimous in the foregoing report, namely:

Hon. R. J. Manion, Minister of Railways and Canals, Hon. J. D. Chaplin, chairman, Hon. Robert Rogers, Hon. W. D. Euler; and Messrs. Beaubien, Bell (St. Antoine), Bothwell, Cantley, Duff, Fiset (Sir Eugène), Fraser (Cariboo), Gobeil, Gray, Hanbury, Hanson (York-Sunbury), Heaps, Kennedy (Peace River), McGibbon, MacMillan (Saskatoon), Power, and Stewart (Lethbridge).

Your committee append hereto a copy of the proceedings and evidence adduced before your committee, for the information of the house and recommend that the same, together with this report be printed as an appendix to the journals of the house.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I was surprised to read in this morning's press the report of the special committee on railways and shipping. Perhaps the Prime Minister can give some explanation of the matter.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Like the right hon. gentleman opposite, I was greatly surprised to see the report published in the newspapers. I know nothing about the matter but I have asked that inquiries be made as to who is responsible for the publication of the document before it was laid before parliament. I am greatly annoyed that it should have happened. It is a reflection upon parliament, is an improper thing to have done, and whoever is responsible for the information having been given to the press is guilty of a gross error so far as the house is concerned.

Mr. CHAPLIN: If any error has been committed I must say to the house that I must take the responsibility myself. Unfortunately I gave to one of the press men a copy on the understanding that the report had not been presented to the house and that no use was to be made of it until it had been presented. I regret if any error had been committed, and I only and solely am to blame, and no other member of the committee.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Good sport.

SERVICE LOAN AND FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. J. E. LAWSON (West York): I move, seconded by Mr. MacNicol, that Bill No. 118, Letter L1 of the Senate, to incorporate Service Loan and Finance Corporation, the preamble of which has been returned as not proven, be placed on the order paper for consideration at the next sitting of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): The hon. member ought to give some reason for his motion.

Mr. LAWSON: This is a private bill which I undertook to sponsor, and having been engaged on another committee I was unable to be present when the bill came before the banking and commerce committee yesterday. I felt that it had not been presented to that committee in the light in which I should like to have had it presented, and I make this motion merely in order that I may have an opportunity to present the bill properly to the committee. If, when the bill is presented to the committee, the committee sees fit to withhold its support or still to regard the preamble as not proven, that will be the end of the matter.

Mr. IRVINE: May I point out that although the hon. member was not present in the committee, the company concerned was represented by learned counsel. The object of the bill was fully explained and the members of the committee present did not feel like supporting it. I do not believe that any explanation which the hon. member could give regarding the meaning of the provisions of this bill would differently impress the committee if composed of the same members who were then present. I do not think it is good parliamentary procedure to upset the actions of that committee, nor do I think the committee should be asked to go all over the matter again, especially when we are so near the end of the session.

Mr. SPEAKER: Under standing order 111, the hon. member for West York (Mr. Lawson) is within his rights in offering the resolution. Is the house ready for the question? All those in favour of the resolution will say aye.

[Mr. Chaplin.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Aye.

Mr. SPEAKER: Opposed, nay.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Nay.

Mr. IRVINE: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: In my opinion the ayes have it. The resolution is carried.

Motion agreed to.

AUSTRALIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 123, respecting a certain trade agreement between Canada and Australia.

He said: The items that affect the Australian agreement having been passed in committee yesterday, perhaps it will be in order to introduce the bill and move its first reading. It is not proposed to go further than the first reading this afternoon, but we can advance it that stage.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Can the Prime Minister give a word of explanation?

Mr. BENNETT: My right hon. friend asks whether I propose to make an explanation at this point. I had not intended doing so, the idea being merely to advance it one stage. The resolutions, although passed, have not been formally adopted. We can advance the bill so far and on the second reading I shall make, not an extended but an adequate explanation of its provisions.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps my right hon. friend will tell us whether the bill which is now being introduced is in the nature of a short measure simply approving the agreement in its entirety.

Mr. BENNETT: The bill which is now introduced is for the purpose of confirming and validating the agreement, making it part of the law of the country, and providing that it shall not come into force until proclamation is made to that effect.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The agreement is a schedule to the bill?

Mr. BENNETT: The agreement is a schedule to the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

That it is expedient to amend the Old Age Pensions Act by increasing the amount of the payment to the provinces for old age pensions from one-half to seventy-five per cent of the net sum paid out during the preceding quarter by such province for pensions, and to provide for the examination and audit of expenditure in the province and the accounts relating thereto.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

RELIEF FOR THE WEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS F. DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) which arises out of a telegram which I have received from Gravelbourg, Saskatchewan. It is dated July 15 and reads as follows:

No hay or fodder available in the prairie provinces this year to supply needs. Suggest that federal government enter into agreement with provincial government granting free freight on fodder from Ontario and Quebec provinces.

Rural Municipality of Gravelbourg.

I know of one municipality having to import during June thirty carloads of hay in order to keep the stock alive. This was necessary during a season of the year when pasturage is ordinarily at the best, and I would ask the Prime Minister to have this matter looked into with a view to taking steps along the lines suggested.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have been advised that there has been a considerable improvement in this section of Saskatchewan by reason of recent rains, and that green feed possibly may be available because of that fact. I assure the hon. gentleman and the house that any proposals which may be made in that regard by the competent authority, namely, the province of Saskatchewan, will receive the most sympathetic consideration.

HUDSON BAY RAILWAY

PROGRESS OF WORK AT CHURCHILL—POSSIBILITY OF TEST SHIPMENTS OF GRAIN THIS SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Bowman) asked a question yesterday in connection with the progress of the work at Churchill, and the possibility of shipping grain this season out of that port. I promised the hon. member that I would make a statement to-day.

I stated then, and I repeat now, that the work of developing the port is ahead of schedule, and there is no doubt but that by September 15, the date upon which the elevator is to be finished under the terms of the contract signed by the late minister, the elevator will be available. My officials state that the four-year construction program of the late government contemplated a test of facilities this coming autumn, and the completion of the port during the season of 1932.

As the responsible minister, I have taken every opportunity to press forward the work and we have reached the point where, barring accident, we will be in a position to handle sufficient grain out of Churchill between September 15 this year and the close of navigation to demonstrate the feasibility of the project.

There has been discussion in the press of western Canada as to the quantity of grain that should be handled in this test movement. I have made careful inquiry of my departmental officials, and the records have also been searched, and I am unable to find any statement as to quantity of grain to be moved in connection with the proposed test of terminal facilities. I am advised by officials of the department who have been constantly in touch with the matter that, in view of the necessity as far as possible to avoid interference with the dredging and construction program, it was never contemplated that more than two or three cargoes should be attempted in this test movement. Pending organization of the port next season any grain moving for export through Churchill this fall will have certain advantages, as no elevator or storage charges, port charges, or pilotage fees will be exacted. Partly due to this it appears probable, from investigations by the department, that grain may be shipped via Hudson bay this season, notwithstanding relatively high insurance rates, as cheaply as it can be shipped to Europe through present recognized channels. On this basis, the department has endeavoured to interest the western grain trade in the proposed movement, so far without success, due probably to the demoralized state of the grain trade owing to world conditions.

The position of the matter at present, therefore, is this: the government has fulfilled the implied obligation of its predecessors and will have the terminal facilities at Churchill available on September 15 as planned. The railway, the dock, the elevator, and the necessary aids to navigation have been provided. Vessels will not proceed to Churchill to load unless grain is sold abroad for delivery via that port. The matter is thus in the hands of the grain exporters. It is no part of the business of the government to undertake the purchase and sale of grain for movement via Churchill, any more than for movement via any other Canadian port. If the test movement is to take place, the responsibility is therefore on the grain dealers of western Canada. The facilities will be available and if the grain interests are not in a position to take advantage of the opportunity to give them a practical test after September 15, it will be necessary to postpone the handling of grain through Churchill until the formal completion of work next year.

Mr. J. P. HOWDEN (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, in connection with this matter I would direct the attention of the house to the following, which appeared in a western paper under date of July 9:

> No official announcement has yet been made as to the terms under which the test shipments carrying between 500,000 and 750,000 bushels of wheat will be made.
> The understanding is, however, that because of the route being new, the insurance rates consequently high, and the trips being of a special nature, as far as the ships participating are concerned, the charges per bushel in the ordinary course would be somewhat higher than via Montreal.

I have received a communication from the St. Boniface young men's board of trade under date of July 11, which reads in part as follows:

> The Leader-Post from Regina states that it is expected that the government will assume this extra cost. We are not satisfied to guess on a question of such importance and would be glad if you would ask the Miister of Railways and Canals to give a definite statement as to whether the government will or will not absorb this extra cost.

This letter refers to the newspaper article I have just read. Can the minister give the house any information in this connection?

Mr. MANION: I think the statement I have given to the house will cover pretty well the question of extra cost. This will be absorbed by the absence of elevator and pilotage charges which will not be charged this year upon the test movements of grain. I think my statement covers pretty well the question asked by the hon. member.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Notwithstanding the likelihood of certain charges being eliminated as an offset to high insurance rates on grain, unless the government takes the initiative to see that a trial shipment is made through somebody, no shipment will be made at all, because nobody will take a chance in regard to the matter without some assurance as to the relative cost.

Mr. MANION: We have already inquired of some large interests in the grain trade and we have not succeeded in getting them interested in taking grain that way, even at a rate, insurance and everything else covered, equal to the through rate from other portions of the western country to Europe. We have made some efforts in that regard.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As far as I understand the insurance rates, they will block any shipment going that way.

Mr. MANION: Only if it happens that they make the rates higher than those through other channels. It depends on the through rate, which way the grain goes.

DOCTOR LYLE TELFORD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis) which appears on page 3673 of Hansard, is that no action has been taken by the department or by anyone else on behalf of the department to prevent Doctor Telford from broadcasting over the radio in Vancouver, British Columbia.

GASOLINE DUTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. BOTHWELL (Swift Current): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. In the morning papers a news item appears with the following heading:

Announcement of new duties on refined gasoline was made yesterday.

What new duties are referred to there?

Hon. E. B. RYCKMAN (Minister of National Revenue): I am sorry that at the moment I cannot answer the hon. gentleman, but I shall make inquiries and refer to the matter again.

AUSTRALIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

SUPPLEMENTARY STATEMENT OF TARIFF RATES TABLED

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Perhaps with the consent of the house I may be permitted to lay on the table—I should have done so under motions—certain added information for the benefit of members who are interested in the Australian trade agreement. This gives the rates and comparisons regarding, not all the items but such items as perhaps we are likely to do business in as coming under the British preferential rates, and not included in the schedule or the statement which was supplied the other day.

Mr. NEILL: Will that appear in the votes and proceedings?

Mr. STEVENS: With the consent of the house I suggest that that should be done.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF RESOLUTIONS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Customs tariff—586. Coal, anthracite, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 40 cents; general tariff, 40 cents.

Customs tariff—588a. Coal, n.o.p., including screenings, and coal dust of all kinds, per ton; British preferential tariff, 35 cents; intermediate tariff, 75 cents; general tariff, 75 cents.

Customs tariff—588b. Coal, lignite: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Minister of Finance): Yesterday evening the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) asked for certain information regarding importations of anthracite coal by provinces. The bureau of statistics has not that information as yet, but I have secured it from the Customs department with, I think, approximate correctness. It may have to be verified, but in general it may be taken as being accurate. The statement is as follows:

Statement showing the imports by countries of anthracite coal entered for consumption in each province of Canada during the fiscal year ended March 31st, 1931

In regard to the importation from Great Britain, the tonnage entering Nova Scotia is some 11,000 tons less than that entering New Brunswick, but there is a difference in value, the value of that entering Nova Scotia being some $30,000 greater than the value of that entering New Brunswick. This is apparently due to the quality of the coal.

It will be noted that according to the statement Quebec is the only province importing coal from Germany, while Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec are the only ones importing coal from the Soviet republic.

Mr. SANDERSON: I want to thank the finance minister for producing those figures for me. I did not expect to get them so quickly, Mr. Chairman, and so in the meantime I did some figuring myself, and I do not think that my figures are very far out.

The finance minister informed the committee last night that the total amount of anthracite coal imported into this Dominion last year from the United States was 2,748,000 tons approximately. In order to arrive at some conclusion as to the amount that would go into the province of Ontario, and that is what I am more vitally interested in, I figured that 70 per cent of the total importations of anthracite coal from the United States last year found a market in the province of Ontario, and from the figures just given by the Minister of Finance I do not think I am very far out. Seventy per cent of 2,748,000 tons gives us the amount approximately of 1,950,000 tons of American anthracite which found a market in Ontario last year. If I am very far out one way or the other I hope the Minister of Finance will correct me, but I believe those figures are approximately correct. Now the duty of 40 cents a ton on the importation of 2,748,000 tons last year would bring in a revenue of $1,100,000 approximately, and taking 70 per cent of that we find that the people of the province of Ontario will have to pay in duty on coal, based on last year's importation, approximately $790,000. Again, if I am wrong in these figures, I hope the Minister of Finance will correct me.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. gentleman would be wrong, would he not? Forty cents on 1,973,000 tons would hardly give the figure he mentioned, and 70 per cent of that would give a much lesser sum than he mentioned.

Mr. SANDERSON: For the sake of argument I think I would be safe in calling it three-quarters of a million dollars, $750,000. I do not think that would be very far out. In the province of Ontario and especially in the western part of the province, the fuel question is a very vital one. We are absolutely dependent upon fuel that has to be transported a long way to reach our market, and the supply from the United States, whether we like it or not, is the nearest to the market, and consequently transportation charges on American anthracite coming into Ontario are less than the transportation charges would be on coal from either eastern Canada or western Canada. As to the quality of the coal, I shall have something to say in a few minutes. So far as assistance to the coal industry is concerned, both in the eastern part of Canada and in the west, I think I am voicing the almost unanimous opinion of the people of western Ontario when I say that they are perfectly willing in any way possible to assist the coal industry in both the east and the west of this country. I find no fault with subsidies or bonuses or subventions or other assistance that can be given to the coal industry of both eastern and western Canada, but when, on top of such assistance, you impose a duty of 40 cents a ton on anthracite coal, which burden is borne largely by the people of the province of Ontario, as the figures I have given show, it is piling on generosity a little too much.

I have not yet heard any explanation from the Minister of Finance why he imposed this 40 cents a ton duty. The finance minister has been very candid and frank in his explanations on all the other tariff items. Some of them I did not agree with, but I give the Minister of Finance credit for candour and frankness. To the best of my recollection he has not touched on this duty on anthracite coal. Although last night he did deliver a very instructive address to the committee on the coal industry, I do not think he referred to anthracite coal at all, and I should be very glad if, when I finish my remarks, he would give an explanation of just what reason he had for imposing this duty. He has already told the committee on several occasions of being interviewed by different people who were asking for tariff increases on different commodities. He told the committee, for instance, about the interview he had with an American citizen with regard to the silk industry. He also told the committee about an interview that he had with a gentleman from Montreal with regard to the safety pin industry, and with respect to those duties he was quite frank and gave the reasons for coming to his conclusions. I would be glad if he would tell the committee who interviewed him with respect to this duty on coal, and what were the arguments they advanced for imposing this duty of 40 cents a ton on anthracite coal.

The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) in his remarks last night referred, of course, to the coal industry in his own province, as did also the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald), and I find no fault with them at all in doing everything they can within reason to stimulate and develop the coal industry in their province. But the Minister of Fisheries said: "The people of Ontario can burn coke." In that he is not correct.

Mr. QUINN: He is absolutely correct.

Mr. SANDERSON: Do you live in Ontario?

Mr. QUINN: No, in Nova Scotia.

Mr. SANDERSON: In Halifax. I am afraid my hon. friend from Halifax is somewhat prejudiced in his views.

Mr. QUINN: Not a bit. I know what I am talking about, that is all.

Mr. SHORT: We use the same kind of furnace as you do in Ontario.

Mr. QUINN: I use a Hamilton-made furnace, and burn Nova Scotia coke in it, and I get splendid satisfaction.

Mr. SHORT: And so could you in Ontario.

Mr. GOTT: What part of Ontario is the hon. member speaking for?

Mr. SANDERSON: Not your part.

Mr. GOTT: I live in western Ontario.

Mr. SANDERSON: If there is one member I would not attempt to speak for—God forbid!—it is the hon. member for South Essex.

Mr. GOTT: Because you got enough when you came to South Essex; that is why.

Mr. SANDERSON: Getting back to the coal situation in the province of Ontario I wish to say to the Minister of Fisheries that there are some furnaces in that province in which coke cannot be burned; as a matter of fact there are very few places in that province where it can be burned. I should like to point out that in thousands and thousands,—yes, tens of thousands—of the homes in the province of Ontario, and especially in western Ontario, there are no furnaces. In those homes they use the old fashioned coal stove which will not with any degree of satisfaction burn coke.

Mr. SHORT: Has the hon. member ever tried it?

Mr. SANDERSON: Yes, I have tried it.

Mr. SHORT: The hon. member has had experience?

Mr. SANDERSON: I know whereof I speak.

Mr. QUINN: Apparently the education of the hon. member has been neglected.

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Chairman, are you going to attempt to keep order in this committee.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Order.

Mr. SANDERSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I should like to say to the Minister of Fisheries that in most but not all of the furnaces in the province of Ontario one may burn a mixture of coke and anthracite coal. In very few that I have seen however can coke be burned alone. Going back to the question of stoves I will admit that one could burn in them a mixture of anthracite coal and coke. It is not always convenient however for people to do that. The natural fuel for the people of western Ontario, I am sorry to admit, is the anthracite from the United States. Last night the Minister of Fisheries stated that in thirty-five years the coal fields in the United States would be depleted.

Mr. RHODES: Twenty-five years.

Mr. SANDERSON: I understood the minister to say thirty-five.

Mr. RHODES: I wish to correct my hon. friend. I read from a statement published in the year 1921.

Mr. SANDERSON: I understood the minister to say thirty-five; I am sorry if I am misquoting him. I do not know however that hon. members of the committee are particularly concerned whether in twenty-five or thirty-five years the coal in the United States will be depleted. I think that is a matter for the consideration of governments following the present one—because I do not expect this government will be in power twenty-five or thirty-five years from now.

Mr. QUINN: I think the hon. member has another guess coming.

Mr. SANDERSON: Owing to the advance in scientific methods and other like considerations I think the whole of the Dominion of Canada will be relieved from the necessity of using coal as a fuel. In the meantime however whether we like it or not we are dependent upon United States anthracite coal for fuel purposes. If it were pointed out to me that the imposition of this tariff of 40 cents per ton is for revenue purposes I do not know that I would raise any serious objection. So far however the Prime Minister has made no announcement whatever, and I wish to say to him that the proposed duty will not help the coal industry either in the east or in the west. As I understand it the coal in Nova Scotia is not adapted to the heating of houses as is the American anthracite coal. Then there is the further point of higher transportation charges. For years and years, even going back twelve or fifteen years, there have been commissions and committees which have investigated the matter of bringing Alberta coal to the province of Ontario. Trial shipments have been made, but the whole scheme has been abandoned for several reasons, one being the long haulage and transportation charges. A more vital reason however was that Alberta coal is not adapted to domestic uses. Had the people of the province of Ontario for purely patriotic reasons been able to burn Alberta coal they would have been glad to substitute it for the American product. That cannot be done however, and for that reason I say that in the present instance a duty or tax is being imposed on the people of the province of Ontario,—and why? I should be pleased to have the reason from the Prime Minister. He may be able to convince me that there is a reason, and if he succeeds I shall be very glad to tell him that I am convinced. At the moment however I protest vigorously not on behalf of my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Gott) but on behalf of the people of South Perth whom I represent and who are opposed to the imposition of the duty of 40 cents a ton on anthracite coal.

Mr. GOTT: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) has been engaged in addressing the committee in his usual insipid manner.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GOTT: He has proven conclusively that he knows nothing at all about coal.

Mr. SANDERSON: Well, we will hear something now.

[Mr. Quinn.]

Mr. GOTT: He has proven he is not a dealer in coal, and has also proven that he is not a dealer in common, decent every-day ethics or in political decency. The hon. member came into my riding, and I was pleased to see him there. I should like however to have just a few moments to discuss his manner when in that riding.

Knowing that the hon. member for South Perth would speak to-day and knowing that he always exaggerates his statements, last night I wired Mr. F. M. Falls at Amherstburg, Ontario, as follows:

Informed that the new duties on coal were conducive to you obtaining Detroit prices. Please wire me day letter early Thursday.

To-day I received from him the following wire:

Answering your wire. Detroit coke producers charged us 50 cents over Detroit price but reduced their prices to us from five ninety to five dollars when new duty added.

That wire is from a person who knows something about the coal business. Practically every furnace in western Ontario is built to use coke. The duty means a reduction of 90 cents a ton on coke used by the people of western Ontario.

Mr. EULER: Does my hon. friend state that Detroit dealers in coke or producers of coke have reduced the price 90 cents a ton to Canadians; is that right?

Mr. GOTT: Shall I read it again?

Mr. EULER: I wish to be clear; is that the statement made by the hon. member?

Mr. GOTT: That is the statement which came to me from F. W. Falls, a dealer in Amherstburg, Ontario.

Mr. EULER: That there is a reduction of 90 cents a ton on coke?

Mr. GOTT: Yes.

Mr. EULER: What about the $1 that the government is setting up against American coke; does that not wipe out the advantage?

Mr. MANION: It is being absorbed by the American dealers.

Mr. EULER: I do not wish to delay the committee, and I am not going to—

Mr. GOTT: Does the hon. member wish me to read the telegrams again?

Mr. EULER: No. Speaking last night I desired to learn from the Minister of Finance, if possible, just how the 40 cent duty on anthracite coal fitted in with his all-Canadian fuel policy. The Minister of Fisheries replied, but in all courtesy I am bound to say his explanation was not convincing. I should like to have from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Bennett) some substantial reason why the people of Ontario and of parts of Quebec will undoubtedly have to pay more for their anthracite coal than would be the case if the duty had not been applied. I said last night also, that if by reason of placing this duty on anthracite coal you can promote the coal industry in any other part of Canada, then there is an argument in its favour. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) has not said so. He did say that he thought it would promote the use of coke in Ontario, and that the people of Ontario and elsewhere by using coke would save, I think he said, $2.34 a ton. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. I know very well that a good many people in my own city and district and in western Ontario generally are already using coke; they have done so ever since anthracite coal went sky high during the war when its quality was so bad that we could hardly use it; some of them have continued to use coke, and occasionally others are using it. But I submit that the people of my riding in particular are pretty thrifty folks and they are not going to pay $2.34 more per ton for a commodity if they can get a cheaper substitute. Yet the greater proportion of them still use hard coal and I think they will continue to do so.

Then my hon. friend the Minister of Fisheries, proceeded, I think, to destroy his own argument, and some information came out from the Minister of Finance which had the same effect. The Minister of Fisheries said the people of Ontario should use coke as the people do in the maritime provinces. Am I right?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is quite wrong. I did not make any comparison of the use of coke in the maritime provinces as a matter of quantity. I merely referred to its use there to illustrate that it could be used as a substitute for anthracite coal, that as a matter of science it was possible to do so.

Mr. EULER: Then my hon. friend's argument is that the people of Nova Scotia are using coke and now he is recommending that the people of Ontario do the same.

Mr. RHODES: They are using soft coal largely.

Mr. EULER: His statement is rather contradicted by the Minister of Finance, who said that last year the province of Nova Scotia imported from Great Britain, the United States and Russia about 80,000 tons of anthracite coal. They are using it themselves.

Mr. RHODES: It simply means that that coal was imported through Nova Scotian ports; it by no means follows that the coal was used in the province of Nova Scotia. It is true some of it was, but no doubt the bulk of it was transported by rail into other provinces.

Mr. EULER: We will let that go. But the argument is very largely destroyed in this way. I take it that if we are to be discouraged in the use of anthracite coal in Ontario and Quebec, it is at least with this partial purpose in view—apart from revenue, perhaps—that coal from the maritimes shall be imported either in the form of coke produced there or to be converted into coke in Ontario.

Mr. MANION: Not necessarily. Why not give employment to the people who are producing the coke, even if it is produced from American soft coal.

Mr. EULER: But that does not touch the question of a national fuel policy. That deals with unemployment—an entirely different matter.

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. EULER: If it is the intention to develop a national fuel policy, and by discouraging the people of Ontario and Quebec in the use of American anthracite lead to the use of Nova Scotia soft coal in the form of coke produced there or in the form of coke produced in Ontario from Nova Scotia coal, then why does he say, as he did last night, that so far as the people of Ontario are concerned they need not use Nova Scotia coal at all, they can still bring in soft coal from the United States and get a drawback on the duty they pay on it? That merely means you are going to develop the soft coal fields of the United States, if you like, but it has not anything to do with developing a national fuel policy, and I think my hon. friend will admit this if he looks at it from that point of view. That does not help the Nova Scotia coal industry. And I am sure every member of the house, including those who come from Alberta, will admit that it has been absolutely proven to be impracticable to transport Alberta coal to the province of Ontario, to say nothing of the province of Quebec. I wish the Minister of Finance would give a reasonable explanation of how this policy of placing a duty on hard coal, which is not produced in Canada at all, fits in with the development of a national fuel policy. If there are no better arguments to be advanced than have been advanced so far,

I submit the whole effect of the policy will be that the people of my province and the people of Quebec will be obliged to pay higher prices for their hard coal at a time when they can little afford to do so. If it is a matter of revenue, I say again, as I said yesterday, that that revenue might very well be raised in some other way.

Mr. GOTT: May I inform my hon. friend that negotiations are under way at the present time for the establishment of two coke plants in western Ontario.

Mr. EULER: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance this—and in what I am about to say there is a criticism of the action of the former government of which I was a member—an action to which I was never a consenting party, if I may say so, as my hon. friend the former Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) knows. I stated last night that there was discrimination in the production of coke in Ontario. My hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Gott) said a moment ago that there is in contemplation the establishment of two more coke ovens in western Ontario. If the producers use a certain process, as I suppose they will, they will get a drawback of 99 per cent of the duty which they pay on American coal. Am I right in that assumption? But as I pointed out last night, there is discrimination in Ontario. For instance, there is a coke oven of the kind at Hamilton, and I think there is another at Montreal. And by the way, I think when the Montreal people received the privilege of the drawback it was never really intended that they should continue to use American soft coal; it was intended that they should use Nova Scotia coal. But they are still using American coal and getting the drawback of the duty they pay on that coal, and thus it is working against the interests of the Nova Scotia coal producers. But the matter I wish to come to is this. The coke producers at Hamilton receive the drawback of the duty paid on the soft coal from which their coke is produced. We have in western Ontario a considerable number of municipalities that own their gas plants as well as several other public utilities. That is true of my home city of Kitchener. They produce a very good quality of coke as a by-product of their gas. They import the soft coal from the United States in order to produce their gas and coke, but they get no drawback as do their competitors in the city of Hamilton. I submit that that injustice ought to be remedied, either by way of refusing the drawback to the Hamilton people—and I have no desire to offend my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Bell) nor of saying anything that might injure a legitimate industry, or, what would be fairer, by extending the same privilege of the drawback to the municipalities of Ontario that are using American coal in the production of coke.

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. STANLEY: I have no intention of entering into the dispute with regard to the relative fuel merits of coke and anthracite coal. The statement has been made that the domestic coal of Alberta cannot be transported economically to Ontario. I cannot allow that statement to go uncontradicted. Of course, that coal could not be brought here economically when the rates were up to $8 or $10 a ton; but now we have practically an assured rate of $6.75 a ton, and Alberta domestic coal can be sold on the markets of Ontario to provide a substantial portion of the fuel requirements of the people of this province.

Mr. EULER: That is not anthracite coal.

Mr. STANLEY: No, but it is a lot better than any anthracite coal that comes into Ontario. It has been abundantly proved that it gives far better results. It gives more for the money than any other coal that can be burned.

Mr. EULER: More than coke?

Mr. STANLEY: It is better than coke, but I am not going to enter into that dispute; hon. members can fight it out among themselves. The domestic coal of Alberta is superior to coke or to the anthracite coal that comes from the United States. This has been proved by test shipments which were brought down here by the government some years ago, when 33,000 tons were placed in the homes of Ontario. That supply gave splendid results. There has been no difficulty because of any complaint about the quality of the coal, nor was there the slightest objection on the part of the people of Ontario to the use of that coal; for in fact those who received it were highly gratified with the results and were extremely anxious to have further supplies. The difficulty was that there was no stability in the market; the $6.75 rate per ton was not fixed; it was only spasmodic. But recently this rate—I am not going into any details—has been established on a more permanent basis; and with a permanent rate of $6.75 we can secure a stable market. With such a market the dealers here would take Alberta coal and dispose of it to Ontario householders.

The difficulty in the past has been this. When the coal was shipped here and marketed the householder, having used it, was so satisfield with the results that later on he tried to get further supplies of Alberta coal. But he found that the dealer did not have it; he could not bring it in on account of the freight rates, which had gone up in the meantime. Once a permanent rate is fixed and stability established in handling the coal shipped to the dealers, the dealers will keep supplies of it; and we have every hope that, under these circumstances, Alberta domestic coal will take its place in the markets of Ontario. Let me repeat that it gives better results, as has been proved. The experiments carried out by the Ontario government and the Dominion Fuel Board have shown this.

The rate has now been fixed at $6.75 per ton until March 31 next, and I may say to the house and to the administration that in the meantime we intend to do everything humanly possibly to bring pressure to bear upon the government with a view to having that rate made a fixture for all time to come, as a maximum at any rate. In that event the dealers in Ontario, through such means as will be taken by the Alberta operators, by the government of that province and otherwise, will keep permanent supplies so that they may be able to meet the demands of regular customers.

I should like the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) to pass the news on to the many citizens of his excellent constituency and particularly to the people in the manufacturing city of Kitchener. I hope he will inform them that there is no fuel on the continent equal to Alberta coal. Those of us who have lived in Ontario where we burned American anthracite, and who have since been burning Alberta coal, know the difference. There is no comparison between Alberta domestic coal and other supplies; and, as I have said, we get better results.

Perhaps I might refer to the situation in Winnipeg. I have confidence in the use of tariffs; I have confidence in the dumping clause, and so on. They serve their purpose. But at the same time I submit that in Ontario, and in other parts of Canada, there must be a spirit of loyalty and a desire to help the producers of this country, wherever they may operate, to sell their commodities to the consuming public. In Winnipeg there is a large public utility in the central heating plant, and recently that concern purchased 43,000 tons of coal from the United States. I am subject to correction, but I believe that this coal was brought in a considerable time ago; and those who are interested in these plants in Winnipeg—they are American interests—gave the Alberta operators to understand that they proposed to purchase bituminous coal for their purposes. When the time came for their purchase, without giving the Alberta operators an opportunity to tender, they placed their orders with their friends in Virginia. Now, they made no money; they saved nothing; and they did not get as good coal as the Alberta operators could have given them. All they did was to assist some American friends in Virginia. And while they helped their American friends to the extent of 43,000 tons, they withdrew that much business from the coal mines of southern Alberta, at a time when the miners of that district are very much in need of employment in face of the coming winter.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I wish to refer to a statement made by the Prime Minister last night with regard to the Saskatchewan coal field. I fear it is misleading, although I do not suggest that he made it intentionally. The fact is, however, that those who do not understand the situation will probably be misled by that statement. It appears at page 3817 of Hansard:

> In Saskatchewan and Manitoba there is a further deposit of lignite coal. Scientists tell us that the quality of that coal is not as high as that of the lignite coal to which I have previously referred. It is now being briquetted. During the war and after we spent a substantial sum of money in experiments, in this connection, as a result of which, supplemented by more recent scientific knowledge, that area or measure of coal has been developed by the production of briquettes and a substantial market has been created in the city of Winnipeg and elsewhere in the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan for the products of those mines.

From that statement, those who do not understand the conditions might think that the only market we find for that lignite coal of southern Saskatchewan is the demand for the briquetted product. There is quite an extensive market in Winnipeg for the raw lignite, and that which is processed by briquetting is only a very small proportion of the coal mined in that area.

Mr. BENNETT: What I desired to say was that as a result of the expenditure of over a million dollars during and after the war, it was found that the coal could not be readily transported without briquetting. It is a friable coal and briquetting was resorted to in order to enable it to be carried considerable distances.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I understand that. But we have found a steady improvement in that coal, so that it is possible to market it now without fear of any appreciable disintegration as suggested by the Prime Minister. Moreover, as I said last night, even though it does disintegrate there is a mechanical device, now used extensively in furnaces, which creates a greater draft, with the result that this coal can be burned much more satisfactorily than before.

Does the one-seventh of a cent per ton per mile mentioned in the budget speech apply to briquettes as well as to the raw coal?

Mr. BENNETT: Some question has been raised with respect to this, and the matter is now in the hands of the Minister of Mines. I think it was intended that this subvention should apply to all the products of these mines, but the matter is being investigated by the fuel board and action will be taken at an early date.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I believe the one-seventh of a cent per mile will give some assistance in the case of briquettes, but I would again draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that when the subventions of last year were put into force, a subvention of 50 cents was given to the Saskatchewan lignite coal in the Manitoba market. One-seventh of a cent per mile on 280 miles would mean approximately 40 cents, a reduction of ten cents. My information is that the subvention allowed on Alberta coal will increase the old subvention by from 12 to 14 cents, which means that the Saskatchewan fields are being discriminated against to the extent of some 22 or 24 cents per ton. This is rather unfair and it will mean that the miners of southern Saskatchewan will not be able to hold the market which they have gained in Winnipeg. I hope the Prime Minister will take into serious consideration the suggestion I made last night when I said that I thought it would be nothing more than fair, considering the quality of coal produced, that the same subvention be given to Saskatchewan as is given to Nova Scotia. This amounts to one-fifth of a cent per mile which would mean approximately 56 cents instead of 40 cents to the Winnipeg market. This would be no more than justice to the coal miners of southern Saskatchewan.

Mr. CANTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I notice the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) has retired and is now carbonizing tobacco by induced draft in back behind the curtains. I presume the hon. member knows that gas coke is a by-product fuel of relatively low heating value.

Mr. EULER: I will not admit that.

[Mr. R. McKenzie.]

Mr. CANTLEY: This fuel runs about one hundred cubic feet to the ton. By-product coke runs from 45 to 50 cubic feet to the ton, anthracite from 30 to 35 and bituminous coal about 40 cubic feet. The value of these fuels can be estimated roughly from the cubical contents. Coke can be burned in any stove in which bituminous or anthracite coal can be burned.

Mr. YOUNG: No, it cannot.

Mr. CANTLEY: I say it can.

Mr. YOUNG: We say no.

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. member does not know.

Mr. QUINN: The hon. member burns only wood.

Mr. CANTLEY: All that is required to burn coke in any stove which will burn any other kind of fuel is a sufficient supply of oxygen.

Mr. SANDERSON: May I ask—

Mr. CANTLEY: I did not interrupt the hon. member and he should wait until I have finished. If he has any question to ask at that time, I will answer it, but in the meantime I intend to proceed with my lecture. The best anthracite coal from the United States does not run over 88 to 90 per cent fixed carbon. The coke manufactured in Nova Scotia, and I presume it is made equally as well in Hamilton, will run from 92 to 93 per cent in fixed carbon, and the fuel value is determined by the amount of carbon. The secret of burning coke, as in burning other forms of fuel, is to provide sufficient oxygen to burn the fixed carbon; the higher the percentage of fixed carbon, the more oxygen required to burn it. If this fuel is dealt with intelligently there will be no difficulty. I will admit that there is a little technique in addition to providing a sufficient supply of air, or oxygen; if it is continuously stirred up there will be difficulty; all that is required is to put fresh coke on top, keeping a relatively deep incandescent fuel body, withdraw what little ash or clinker there may be in the bottom, and supply sufficient oxygen. That is the whole story.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Mr. Chairman, while this item was being discussed last night, I laid before the committee as briefly as possible the situation obtaining in certain coal areas in the province of Alberta which supply steam coal to the Canadian railways. I asked at that time that some consideration be given to these miners, not by way of tariff changes because that would raise unfairly the price of coal to the railways who are forced to buy as cheaply as possible; not by way of freight subvention because this coal is used by the railways themselves and a subvention would be of no value, but rather by way of some form of bonus to equalize the difference in cost between Canadian and American coal.

The greatest handicap facing the miners of steam coal in this particular area, as well as in others, is the fact that coal is brought in from the United States at a slightly lower cost. When the Prime Minister was speaking, I had hoped that he would have made some reference to the matter and indicated that at least serious consideration would be given to this situation. I may offend the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) by saying that I am subject to corruption, although I would not go as far as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) and say that I was willing to wallow in iniquity to secure some assistance for the people in my riding, but there are times when one's convictions as to what is economically sound must be put aside, especially when facing certain facts. The facts in this case are that many of these people are out of work, and those who are working are working only part time and are not in receipt of sufficient wages to keep themselves and their families in decency. The little town of Nordegg, situated in the Brazeau coal district, is isolated from all other parts of the country. This is a country town which has no source of income save from the mines. When these mines are not working to capacity, the men suffer most severely.

It is not often that I bring up events which happened during the last elections, because such a course is not often relevant to the discussion nor is it of much value, but I would suggest that because of the very definite promises made, not by the Prime Minister, but on his behalf during the last election, I lost about four-fifths of the votes in that area. The miners were convinced that if the Conservative party was returned to power they would receive such assistance as would enable them to carry on. While it is true that these men voted against me, none the less, having been elected, my duty is to see that they should receive such consideration as will enable them to carry on and survive in this struggle for existence.

Mr. BENNETT: In view of the limited market for steam coal, what assistance does the hon. member suggest? This steam coal is absorbed by the two railways—in the case of Brazeau, it is only the Canadian National Railways—so what could be done short of granting a bonus on every ton produced?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That is the only thing that would be possible. The Canadian mines are not over producing; they are producing economically, but they are supplying only a part of the coal being used, the balance coming from across the line. Not as a matter of general or continuous policy, but in this time of emergency of which we have so often spoken, while unemployment is rife and those people are suffering, I would suggest that a definite bonus be paid which would absorb the difference in cost to the national railways between the use of Canadian coal and the use of United States coal which would supplant it.

Mr. BENNETT: May I ask a further question?—because I feel curious about this matter. United States coal comes in at Fort William and is used to a point west that meets the point to which western coal is used. There must come a point from which western coal would cease to go east and to which eastern coal would be used. That point by these subventions is extended as far east as Ignace, which is the divisional point between Winnipeg and Fort William. How could we carry steam coal from Nordegg in the Brazeau field any further east on the Canadian National ?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Am I to understand that the subvention is to apply to the steam coal used by the railway, thus extending the area in which Alberta coal can be used? If that be the case, my point is met and the subvention will take the place of that bonus.

Mr. BENNETT: The subvention does not apply to the railway. The hon. member is right.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I did not understand the subvention to apply to the railway and therefore I suggested that to take the place of that subvention a bonus should be paid—not sufficient to enable them to use coal throughout the whole area, because that would be economically unsound, but at least sufficient to extend the area eastward within which Alberta coal could be used, and before it came into competition with United States coal which takes its place I think a little bit west of Winnipeg; it is a varying point. It is a matter of policy, of administration, as to the extent of the bonus, as to the distance east to which this coal can be carried. But I believe a comparatively small amount would make up the difference between the cost of the two coals, particularly as I am not pleading for collieries which are working under any handicap as to cheap and economic production. Those mines are being operated very economically; the nature of the mines has provided that the coal itself is cheap, so that this is not a matter of bonusing a system that is economically unsound. There is no submarine mining there, no natural causes which would militate against the use of that coal. I am simply suggesting that a very small difference would be sufficient almost to double the output of those mines without imposing any undue burden upon the federal treasury; it would provide employment and thus would render unnecessary a good deal of relief which otherwise must be given next winter. As long as this proposal is not carried to an extreme, it is a sound one. It would meet the situation there; it would fulfil the implied obligation of the government as stated during the election, and it would restore to those collieries work which they have hitherto carried on. It would extend their contracts and enable them to employ more men and to employ them steadily. The men who are left there are not to any extent transient workers; they have their homes and families there. It is not a question of bringing in transient labour; it is one of providing for a settled community which is in need of assistance.

I am not asking for an immediate pronouncement, because this is a matter of serious policy, but in the interest of those whose situation I know and with whose situation the Prime Minister is familiar, I am asking that this question be given very serious consideration with a view to seeing whether or not this cannot be done on a sound basis, so that those men may be provided with work and the pledge made by my opponent on behalf of the government may be fulfilled. I should like to get some assurance in this regard.

Mr. RALSTON: I think it was one year and eight months from to-day that the Prime Minister was speaking at Inverness, and he delivered himself of the policies which would be put into force by his party. At that time he called attention to the steel industry and to the fact that $1,000,000 a day was being spent in the purchase of iron and steel products in the United States Republic. He said:

"Think what the expenditure of one-half of that money in this country, would have been to Nova Scotia, to Canada!"

The coal industry was in the same category and a samilar question could be asked. More than $56,000,000 for coal and coke had been spent last year in the United States, giving employment to workmen of another country. . . "Is there any way to meet it? Well I will undertake to meet it."

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Speakman.]

Mr. RALSTON: The undertaking is being carried out to-day, as was announced by the Minister of Finance in the budget speech, to the exent that he hopes that possibly in three years' time 1,800,000 tons of coal, which now come from the United States, or about 10 per cent of the total importation, may be produced in Canada. That was the full extent to which he hoped by any possibility to implement that promise. As a matter of fact I said before, and I repeat, that I do not believe the policy which he has brought down will move 600,000 tons, or even 500,000 tons more of Nova Scotia coal. To prove that, all I have to do is to go down to Nova Scotia and quote the speech of the hon. member for South Essex who tells us that what will happen is this: The United States will simply reduce their price, United States coal will keep coming in and this duty will be shouldered by United States dealers while the Nova Scotia miner will be left in the position he occupied before.

Mr. BENNETT: It was coke the hon. member mentioned.

Mr. RALSTON: The same thing applies to coal. The United States dealer will no doubt reduce the price on the anthracite in the same way so as to hold the market.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the hon. member's answer to the hon. member for South Essex.

Mr. RALSTON: One of two things will happen: either the price of United States anthracite goes up in Ontario or the United States dealer absorbs the duty and the price remains the same; in either case Nova Scotia coal will not be used.

Mr. GOTT: Ontario does not lose anything.

Mr. RALSTON: I am not talking of Ontario. My right hon. friend did not make this speech in Ontario; it was in Nova Scotia.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, in Ontario.

Mr. RALSTON: Well, in Ontario. You cannot play both ends and the middle in connection with this matter.

Mr. GOTT: That is what the hon. member is trying to do.

Mr. RALSTON: I am pointing out that I shall be able to cite as a comment on this fuel policy, the fact that as regards the $1 a ton on coke, the United States dealer will simply reduce his price on coke and coke wili keep on coming in as before. In fact it is not necessary to do that. All that is needed is to import United States coal, manufacture it into coke and get a rebate on the duty. I was pilloried in Nova Scotia because the then government did not repeal section 1049 and see that a duty was placed on United States coal for coking purposes. That is still missing in this budget and I rather suspect this is going to continue notwithstanding the protests of some of my hon. friends from Nova Scotia. I admire the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) for his support of the government, because there is nobody more heart-broken over this so-called national policy than that hon. member. He knows it is an empty gesture. The mountain has conceived and brought forth a mouse; there is nothing worth while in this policy for the Nova Scotia industry. At the same time he was sport enough to stand up and do the best he could, and I admire him for doing so. The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald) and the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith) feel the same way about the matter, because they know it is a policy that will be of no benefit to them. There is the promise that was made: "I will undertake to meet the situation." How has it been met? By imposing a duty of 25 cents a ton on bituminous coal, an action that will move practically no Nova Scotia coal. In addition to that, he is imposing a duty of 40 cents a ton on anthracite coal, which, however, will not permit Nova Scotia coal to take the place of American anthracite. He is also putting one dollar a ton duty on coke. I repeat, the answer of my hon. friend from South Essex. It simply means: My friends put on the duty they had previously taken off.

Mr. SHORT: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question? Is he opposed to the duty of 40 cents a ton on anthracite coal and one dollar a ton on coke?

Mr. RALSTON: My friend need not be asking questions at all. I am opposed to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister coming down to Nova Scotia and telling us that he is going to meet the situation, and then trying to make us believe he is meeting it by this policy.

Mr. BENNETT: That is typical of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. RALSTON: I certainly am opposed to it. I am going to point out the history of this matter. My right hon. friend made that statement in Inverness, and what has happened since? He was not so enthusiastic after he got into power. He met a delegation soon after from the Canadian chambers of commerce, I think, and he talked about national problems, and this is what he said to that delegation in January, 1931, about six months after he made the statement in Inverness that he was going to undertake to meet the fuel situation:

> Working out of a national fuel policy was an easier matter on paper than in actual practice, said the Prime Minister.

He is finding that out now. Why did he not tell the people of Inverness at the time he was speaking there that it was a difficult thing to work out? But then there was no trouble about it. I will undertake to meet the situation, he said. Then he met the delegation from Nova Scotia, headed by his friend the present premier of Nova Scotia, and according to a report in the Montreal Gazette of February 14, 1931, it was not a very enthusiastic reception which he gave them. The report says:

> It had been expected that the Prime Minister would be in a position to make a definite statement this morning to the deputation as to the government's intentions regarding the coal industry.

Why should it not be expected? He had been seven months in power. He had made that speech in Inverness, and had put a fuel policy in his pledges. It was one of the eight pledges. Here it is:

> We pledge ourselves to the development of interprovincial trade and of a Canadian fuel policy.

Quoting again from the Gazette:

> But the deputation had to be satisfied with the intimation that the problem of the coal and steel industries was a very difficult problem and could not be solved in piecemeal fashion.

Why did he not tell the people of Inverness and Sydney that? But he told the deputation:

> The present government, with its determination to do everything to develop the natural resources of this country first, could be depended upon to evolve a policy that would be in the best interests of coal and steel producers throughout the Dominion.

And this is the way he is going to do it:

> The fuel policy was not incapable of solution, said Premier Bennett.

One would not have thought that it was from what he said in Inverness:

> But the formulation of a fuel policy required a great deal of study and he favourably commented upon the results of the study given it already by Dr. Charles Camsell, Deputy Minister of Mines.

That study has been going on for some years, and my right hon. friend does not seem to have done much in this policy which he has brought down as a result of that study:

He had, he said, listened in London to rather convincing arguments as to the success of rationalization of the British steel industry and it was worth considering whether or not a similar system of limiting the production of various kinds of steel output in Canada and of thereby removing needless and costly competition could not be devised for this Dominion.

He concluded by reassuring the delegation that the government would give early and sympathetic consideration to the demands contained in their memorandum, which was explained to the federal cabinet at length by Premier Harrington.

One of the demands was that this subvention should be increased to half a cent per ton mile instead of one-fifth of a cent, and that the all-rail rate on coal should be reduced to two dollars, and that section 1049 should be abolished. But none of these things are being done. Instead, this very piecemeal legislation has been brought down.

What is the condition in Sydney, in respect to which the premier of Nova Scotia was speaking, and it is the condition which exists in Sydney every year. Their problem is a problem of winter employment, and that problem the former government tried to meet by the all-rail subventions. I have in my hand a statement by the chairman of the relief committee in Sydney last February. These were the conditions:

The chief demand is for food, Dr. Black says, and our supplies are running low. All who can do so are requested to donate food and money instead of clothing. Local merchants have risen to the occasion with famine packages which contain an assortment of groceries necessary to provide a balanced diet for a family, and many citizens simply buy these and turn them over to the committee.

Dr. Black discounted utterances made recently to the effect that there was no real need among the unemployed.

"There is real need," he declared. "We have met with some cases actually on the verge of starvation and are now dealing with them."

As a result of that, the representatives of the miners met and passed a resolution of which this is the preamble:

Whereas, the unfortunate position in which employees of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation find themselves has been brought to the attention of the provincial and federal governments on different occasions; particularly the serious situation of the nail and wire mill, which has been practically closed down for the past six months, and the yard department, getting from one to two days' work each week; and the workers of the city suffering in general;

And whereas all the departments are working on short time, with the result that all the employees are in reduced circumstances and many families bordering on starvation;

And whereas the present Premier of Canada and his supporters in this constituency, including our federal representative, as well as Hon. E. N. Rhodes, now Minister of Fisheries, and Hon. G. S. Harrington, now prime minister of Nova Scotia, in public addresses throughout the constituency promised adequate protection to the coal and steel industries and assured the electors of this riding that if Hon. R. B. Bennett were returned to power immediate steps would be taken to end unemployment and procure steady work for the workers;

Therefore be it resolved, that these gentlemen get in touch with their respective governments and place before them the urgent need for protection for the steel and coal industries, thus fulfilling their solemn pledges given before the election in July last, and giving the workers of this city that which they are after—work, not the dole.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): What is the date of that?

Mr. RALSTON: February 11, 1931. That was the situation in Sydney, and that is the resolution that was passed. We have had since then three changes in connection with the coal policy, culminating in the policy now before us. We had a temporary sort of fixation of prices for duty purposes on slack and run of mine, $1 and $1.25. That was reduced, and then this policy was brought down. Now I understand that the value which has been fixed on slack and run of mine for duty purposes is being taken off altogether. I want to ask the Prime Minister what he thinks the result would have been if at that time he had said at Sydney: I can only give you 25 cents on bituminous coal and restore the duty on anthracite to the extent of 40 cents, and I presume the American dealers will reduce their prices in order to meet that duty, and on coke I will put back the one dollar per ton that we took off the duty years ago, and I will do a little better in the matter of subventions—what does he think would have been the response?

What did he do? He did this: Under the former government the subventions on all-rail coal coming to Ontario and Quebec were figured in this way: the government undertook to pay all the freight on coal above three dollars. That meant that in some cases the bonus contributed by the government went as high as $3.70. What has my right hon. friend done? He has said that the maximum amount which shall be contributed in connection with all-rail coal shall be $2. He has taken off the maximum in that respect and made the contribution less. He has increased the maximum on one item. He has added 75 cents to the maximum on coal, water-hauled to Montreal and forwarded by rail to Ontario. In other words, he has taken off the bonus with one hand, and he is paying it out with the other. If he had proposed that policy at Inverness and Sydney, does he think that there would have been any enthusiastic response? Would the people have regarded that as meeting the situation whereby $56,000,000 was going every year to the United States for coal? I do not think so. He was faced with that position. He knew when he made that promise that there were difficulties in the situation with regard to the coal industry, and I believe that the people of Sydney are looking askance at the policy which my right hon. friend has brought down at this time and are asking: After all the delegations that we have sent to Ottawa, and after all the promises made, can this, after all be the national fuel policy? It amounts to two things. First, it puts the seal of approval on the Liberal policy of granting subventions by way of freight rates. It reduces the subventions in the one case but it increases them in the other. It puts on a paltry 25 cents a ton duty on bituminous coal, to assist my hon. friend from Pictou, my hon. friend from Cumberland and my hon. friend from Cape Breton South, in order that they may be able to say: We have done something. But, Mr. Chairman, it amounts to nothing so far as the moving of any substantial quantity of coal is concerned.

So I say to my right hon. friend that that is the situation in which this house finds itself to-day, and I do not think the country ought to be in any way deceived by the policy which has been brought down and by the items in the budget resolution that we are considering.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, I just wish to say a preliminary word with respect to the attitudes assumed by my hon. friends from South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) and North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) who called in question the position I took with respect to the use of coke as compared with the use of anthracite. Apparently they dealt with it from the point of view that it was a matter of their opinions against mine. I wish only to make it very clear that the position I took last night was merely to place before the committee the results of scientific investigations by the fuel board. In that respect I was not asserting my own opinions at all. Probably it is just as well that the discussion has developed so extensively. It will at least spare the necessity of making a formal answer to the hon. member for South Perth, who has complained that the people of Ontario would have to pay an additional duty of 40 cents on anthracite coal. My hon. friend from North Waterloo took the same position.

Mr. EULER: They are doing it now.

Mr. RHODES: Now Mr. Chairman—

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): They are doing it.

Mr. RHODES: Order. Now we have the answer from the official financial critic, who states emphatically that the people of Ontario will not pay the duty of 40 cents per ton, but that the price will be lowered to that extent by the people of the United States. So we are in the very happy position of having 40 cents per ton or an aggregate sum of about $1,000,000 handed to our treasury by the citizens of the United States. Surely that policy ought to be satisfactory to all hon. members. So my hon. friends have their answer from the financial critic of the opposition.

I rather enjoyed listening to the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), because in more respects than one his remarks reminded me of old times. Many a time and oft in the old days have I heard him preach the doctrine of freer trade and holding out the goal of free trade and lower tariffs. Now he refers to an increase of 50 per cent as a "paltry" 25 cents. In his budget speech my hon. friend referred to this increase of 50 per cent in duty as a mere gesture. Verily he has gone far from the political faith of his fathers since he left Nova Scotia and established himself as a citizen of the city of Montreal. I fear his becoming speedily contaminated by contact with those Tory barons of finance against whom in days gone by he inveighed so heatedly and forcibly. I do not purpose to labour the argument, so far as the general merits of the policy are concerned—

Mr. RALSTON: I did not think you would.

Mr. RHODES: How typical of my hon. friend to cite a resolution of a union in Sydney, if you please, passed before the present policy was brought down.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. RHODES: It appeared only after my hon. friend was asked the date of the meeting at which this resolution was passed calling for action.

Mr. RALSTON: I hope my hon. friend will permit me to correct him. He will find on Hansard that when I first referred to it I stated it was passed in February.

Mr. RHODES: Even so, I do not see what purpose could be served by reciting that resolution.

Mr. RALSTON: I was stating the conditions which have to be met.

Mr. RHODES: My answer is this: After this fuel policy was brought down the very people who passed that resolution, speaking not only as individuals but through the president of their organization—Mayor Morrison of Glace Bay, who is the head of the United Mine Workers organization in Nova Scotia —came out and announced the fuel policy as a great step forward. In Nova Scotia we take our politics more or less seriously, but to my knowledge this is the only time in the history of that province when Liberals, Conservatives and Labourites were of one voice in their approval of this policy.

I do not think the Prime Minister, who is more than capable of speaking for himself, for one moment would contend that the policy so far announced by this government has by any means gone the full distance in providing a full and complete national fuel policy for Canada. This government has made rapid strides in very many respects, but it must walk before it runs. I say to my hon. friends opposite that in the proposals so far placed before parliament we have taken very pronounced steps forward, and as time goes on and opportunities present themselves whereby we can take a further step to complete the national fuel policy I have no hesitation in saying I have no doubt that the government will bring down full and adequate additional measures.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Replying to the minister who has just taken his seat, I should say that the fuel policy of the present government consists largely in following in the footsteps of their predecessors. Certainly so far as subventions are concerned that is the case. I understand the policy of the present government is intended to go a little farther than that of the late government. That seems to be the contention so far as the maritime provinces are concerned, and I shall not discuss that point further. So far as Saskatchewan is concerned, however, the conditions will be worse. How can I go back to Saskatchewan and extol the national fuel policy when, so far as Saskatchewan is concerned, the subventions are not as satisfactory as they were under the former government? As I understood the Minister of Mines (Mr. Gordon) last night, the matter is still under consideration, and I believe the Prime Minister expressed himself in similar terms. I hope they will take the matter into serious consideration because in that province there is good lignite coal of a much better quality than that which the farmers travelled thirty or forty miles to get. At that time they were getting only the out-cropping of comparatively low grade lignite, but now when they are down several hundred feet they are getting good quality coal. In spite of the fact that it has a high water content and in spite of the small subvention it has been forcing itself on the markets in competition with other coals. Unless he has very good cause, I hope the Prime Minister will not discriminate against Saskatchewan coal. If he has any reasons to submit to the committee as to why he even proposes a lower rate in Saskatchewan as compared with that in Alberta, I should like to hear them.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): There are some observations I should like to make concerning the remarks of my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston).

Mr. RALSTON: Thank you.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): I think he typified the difference between the two political parties in this committee.

Mr. RALSTON: I hope so.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Last year when we were on the other side of the house asking for maritime rights we gave him credit when some concessions were made by the government of which he formed a part. We praised him and held up his hands. The time has now come when the present government has done something my hon. friend could not get his government to do. Does he come forward and give credit to the present government? No. Is he not actuated by a mean spirit of political partisanship? Is he playing the part of a true Nova Scotian or a great politician?

Mr. RALSTON: I am trying to hold this government to the promises it made to Nova Scotia.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): I would ask my hon. friend this question: Are not the increased duties and increased subventions the two fundamental elements in a Canadian fuel policy? I say they are. As the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) has said, they do not constitute a complete fuel policy, but they are two important elements in it, and those steps have been taken by the present government. The last government was given credit for its action. This government has gone farther; will my hon. friends opposite give credit for what it is doing? No, they discount and minimize the action of this government. Why are they not fair, honest and above board? Why do they refer to conditions in Sydney? Let me tell the committee about the conditions that existed in Sydney at the time the resolution was passed and the interview was given by Dr. Black. The people in Sydney, like the people in many other parts of Canada, are too fond of running to the government to do anything; they ask the government to do this and to do that. In the city of Sydney we took another course altogether. We appointed a community committee to handle the unemployment relief, and that committee headed by Dr. Black—a very patriotic spirited gentleman indeed—undertook the collection of clothing, food and cash. So well did they do their work that at the end of the season they had not called on the city of Sydney for one dollar, they had met every demand for relief from every source and they closed their accounts in the spring with a considerable cash balance. Not one dollar was obtained from the municipality, nor from this government, nor from the provincial government. That shows what can be done by a proper community spirit. All we want in this country is that that spirit shall prevail in every community. We do not want these demoralizing cries of, "What are you going to do about unemployment"? "When are you going to bring down your unemployment policy"? Our friends opposite are glorifying themselves by emphasizing the distress through which we are passing to-day, and they are trying to make political capital out of the poverty that unfortunately exists in certain districts.

Mr. COOTE: I have listened patiently to the debate and I think there are one or two points in connection with it which should be brought to the attention of the government. The case for the bituminous coal operators in Alberta has been very well placed before the committee by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman), and I will not go further into it. I would impress upon the Prime Minister that in order to give the bituminous coal mining industry of Alberta a fair chance to secure the Manitoba market, some reduction should be made in the freight rates between the mountain division and Winnipeg. The freight rate from Blairmore to Winnipeg, 846 miles, is $5.10, while from Sydney to Montreal, 980 miles, it is $4.50 a ton. If the rate from the mountains to Winnipeg were on a comparative mileage basis with the rate between Sydney and Montreal, the bituminous coal operators would not have very much trouble getting their coal into the Winnipeg market.

I was glad to hear what the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) said in regard to the national fuel policy of the government. I have no criticism to make of what they have done so far. I did not expect the Prime Minister would be able to fulfil some of the promises made by certain of his supporters in the campaign because in my constituency my opponent used this placard:

Vote for J. D. Matheson and steady work for Canadian miners. The fuel policy of the Conservative party will accomplish this.

Of course, I told the miners at the time that the Conservative party could not at this stage bring down a fuel policy which would give all of them steady work. I still feel I was right in making that statement.

I desire to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister the unfortunate conditions which are confronting the miners in my district. In 1929 the Bellevue mine worked 172 days, and some of the other mines for a slightly longer period. An outside man drawing $4.40 a day would earn that year $750. In 1930 I think the mine worked 126 days, and at the same rate of pay that man would earn $504. Some of the men have large families, and I am sure that members of the committee will agree that no man could maintain a family on such small earnings. Last winter when I was in Blairmore I secured a statement of the wages earned by about twenty of the miners for the previous month, and I find the average is $29.82. One man with eight children earned $29.10; another with nine children earned $27.50. That will give hon. members some indication of the very small wages with which these miners have been trying to carry on. Some of them have been out of work altogether and have been granted relief. I have before me a statement, signed by the mayor of the town of Blairmore, in regard to some of the men who were getting relief work. One of them with a family of five or six children had a balance due him from the Home bank of $1,513; another one with six children had a balance of $643 due him from the Home bank; another one with six children had a balance of $937 due him from the Home bank. I mention these bank balances to show that some of these men are of a very thrifty type. But no matter how thrifty they may have been, the lean years have wiped out any savings they had, even though they were fortunate enough to deposit them in some other bank. I bring this to the attention of the government in the hope that they will be prepared to give some direct relief unless more work is provided for the miners; and I do not think it will be possible to provide sufficient work in the mines to enable those men to make a livelihood. Just a week ago

I received a letter from the secretary of the Bellevue miners' union, in which he states:

> The mine here is still working very poor—we only worked fourteen days in May and eleven days in June with 100 of the crew not working.

Then he goes on to stress the need of some other relief work being started to deal with the unemployment situation.

The Canadian Pacific Railway take 90 per cent of the coal from that area, and there is only one way of giving these people material relief—more days' work in the mine. This can be done only by encouraging production on the farms of western Canada, because there is the source of the traffic which the Canadian Pacific Railway handle; and the volume of the coal which can be mined in that area depends very largely on the traffic which the railway can secure. The best method of encouraging production of more farm products in western Canada would be to adopt the amendment to the budget moved from this corner of the house. A suspension of the redemption of our notes in gold at this time would, I am sure, bring about a depreciation of our currency, which would put us on a basis where we could fairly compete with Australia and the Argentine; this in turn would encourage further production on our farms. That is the only way of dealing with the deplorable situation which faces us in western Canada, particularly in the mining area. The wheat crop this year is estimated to be about half that of last year, so we can look for comparatively little employment in the mining areas this winter. I desire to give the government credit for the efforts they have made to improve conditions in the coal industry, but at the same time I want to point out that it will be absolutely necessary that some unemployment relief be provided for that area this winter.

Mr. RALSTON: Just a word, Mr. Chairman, in reply to my hon. friend from South Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald). I listened with interest to his lecture on non-partisanship. It is really a new doctrine to come from him, but we accept lectures of that kind whatever their source may be. It is not so long since the hon. gentleman went about his constituency with a lump of Russian coal in his pocket, exhibiting it to the meetings there and telling everybody that these horrid Grits were destroying the coal industry of Cape Breton by permitting something like 100,000 tons of Russian coal to come in annually. And that representation I will not designate as mean partisanship—that, I believe, was the expression he used—but I will be charitable and call it enthusiastic party loyalty. I find no fault with him if he thinks it good politics to do that. But at the same time he must not lecture others on partisanship. We find, in fact, that the 100,000 tons of Russian anthracite coal, which did not compete with Canadian coal, has been embargoed by the government, but that $56,000,000 worth of American will still come in. Yet my hon. friend, in that spirit of non-partisanship of which we have had evidence, accepts that situation. In other words, he strains at a gnat and swallows a camel.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Hoof and all.

Mr. RALSTON: Another instance of his non-partisanship appeared in the fact that the other night he refrained from taking part in a debate when my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre suggested that tariffs on certain articles might be accompanied by a condition as to hours of labour and rates of wages. It was only last year that my hon. friend, when he was on this side of the house, in that spirit of non-partisanship which always actuates him, stood up and proposed to the then government a resolution that this should be done. It was due to the steel workers, he said.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): I was not in favour of that; I do not think it is possible. I should be only too strongly in favour of it if it were possible, but I do not see how you can couple such a condition with the tariff.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend has seen the light; since he has moved across to the other side he realizes the impossibility of it. That is the spirit of non-partisanship that moves him.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that it might be just as well for the hon. gentleman not to lecture other people about running down the country, implying that they glory in misery, and so on. I put on Hansard the other night a few statements made by the Prime Minister during his election campaign last year, and if anyone wishes to take the trouble to read those statements he can judge for himself whether or not what the Prime Minister described as the country's extremity was being exploited by him for political purposes. Let us give the right hon. gentleman credit for the highest motives; but do not let us have any lectures to other people when they happen to bring to the attention of the house conditions as they exist. Does not my hon. friend from South Cape Breton think that when the Prime Minister made a declaration about the cry of women and children being heard across the country—women and children calling upon us to ease their pain—he was rather encroaching upon the preserves which the hon. gentleman now regards as inviolable in debate? I have simply brought to the attention of the committee conditions as they exist, and I may tell my hon. friend, if he does not know it, that the same conditions that prevailed in Sydney last winter will occur again next winter. I give all credit to the community effort down there to meet the situation. But I repeat that there is a great difference between the promise given the people of Nova Scotia with regard to a national fuel policy and this first step, to use the words of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes), towards the fulfilment of that undertaking. When the Prime Minister made his speeches there he did not suggest anything like a progressive implementing of promises; it was the reverse: he was going to meet the situation at once. What he said was, "Put me in office and I will end unemployment". It is a year since these promises were given and we are no nearer their fulfilment than when they were made.

Mr. BENNETT: I must answer two or three questions asked by the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler). Last evening I did not deal with matters discussed by preceding speakers but confined myself to a general statement of the coal situation and the measures which this administration had taken in the circumstances. I pointed out, so far as subventions were concerned, that during the war very large sums had been expended to develop our natural resources in coal. This afternoon the hon. member for North Waterloo asks for an explanation with respect to certain questions, and the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) has raised the same issues. These issues were raised differently by other speakers as well. My hon. friend from North Waterloo has been answered by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston). One of these hon. gentlemen says that the result of this anthracite tariff will be to increase the price in Ontario, and the hon. member for South Perth says the same thing. The answer given by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth is that the American producer will absorb the 40 cents.

Mr. EULER: What is your answer?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman from North Waterloo pointed out that in cabinet he had had occasion to differ from his colleagues, and he called upon one of his former colleagues to witness to that statement. Whether or not it is intended this afternoon that we shall have an entire repudiation of doctrines which the hon. gentleman formerly held, I know not. But we have had a striking example of what one might call the remnants of a left-over administration. I have never in my lifetime listened to such severe condemnation of the policies of a government of which an hon. gentleman was a member. I have never heard so severe a condemnation as that which he made this afternoon, and my only wonder is that he did not resign from the administration which he so much opposed within and so violently supported without. At any rate, the answer given by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth is that the American producer will absorb the 40 cents for the purpose of retaining the market.

Now, there are three reasons for this tax.

Mr. EULER: The hard coal tax.

Mr. BENNETT: The hard coal tax. First, it is part of a national endeavour to establish and maintain a fuel policy in Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The admitted coal resources of the country have been referred to this afternoon by many hon. gentlemen, particularly the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Stanley); and when I said last night that the prodution of coal had reached over 6,000,000 tons in Alberta, I but stated a fact which everyone knows. And the quality of that coal is such that I have no doubt it will one day be the fuel used in Ontario. The first reason for the tax is, therefore, the fact that we are endeavouring to establish and maintain that policy. And when I say we are endeavouring, I mean just what I said in Inverness. At that time I stated that if elected we would meet the situation. And we have met it. Whether we have met it successfully or not will be evident hereafter; but we did say that we would meet it, and at the first session of parliament we have done so.

Mr. RALSTON: The Minister of Fisheries says you have not.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not intimate to the delegation what the policy of the government would be, for the simple and obvious reason that had I done so I should not have done my duty by parliament. For this was a matter with respect to which parliament had a right to be informed. It involved the revenues of the country; and, as I have been reminded so frequently by constitutionalists who are not lawyers, the duty of the government is to make these matters known to the house before they are disclosed to anyone else. I said, however, that I would take the matter under consideration, and we did so at the first regular session of parliament. We have not been in office a year and we have met the situation which I said at Inverness that we would meet. Whether or not it has been met successfully, time will tell; but at least we have met it, and we have not apologized for inaction, as for nine long years our predecessors had reason to do.

The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth always runs true to form; and, with eyes shut, if one did not recognize his voice one would still be able to identify him by his observations; for there is no one so querulous, and no one whose cynicism touching poverty and unemployment and this fuel question is so well known. This afternoon he is again running true to form. He quotes something from February to prove that what was done in June was not adequate. He said that the measure taken in June was not a fulfilment of the promise made in January to the delegation that came here. He quotes some resolutions, passing over others, content to leave by half truths the impression he always tries to leave with audiences whom he addressses. And the result of his campaign in Nova Scotia during the last election is fully understood by those who have listened to his speeches in this house.

The second reason is that we are endeavouring to do something to promote inter-empire trade. When I heard hon. gentleman opposite mentioning $28,000,000 and $50,000,000 and other sums as being the value of the coal imported from the United States, I can only say that they could not have been in the committee this afternoon when I gave the importations of anthracite from the United States for the twelve months ended March 31, 1931, as being $20,145,000. But I might have gone further. I want to give to the committee a comparison in tons, because there has been a decrease in values. The following are the importations of anthracite coal from the United States:

	Tons
1929	4,000,000
1930	3,710,000
1931	2,731,000

The reason for the decrease shown is very plain. The following are the importations of anthracite coal from the United Kingdom:

	Tons
1929	553,000
1930	786,000
1931	918,000

When it is stated that the province of Quebec will have to pay 40 cents more per ton, I would tell the committee that the duty upon Welsh anthracite is nil, and Quebec as well as Ontario will be able to purchase its requirements of United Kingdom coal free of duty. Last year the province of Quebec purchased from Great Britain 836,693 tons of anthracite coal. This year the encouragement to buy this coal will be still greater, and we are certain that over one million tons of coal will be purchased from Great Britain to supply the anthracite requirements of this Dominion.

Last evening the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) indicated a further benefit which would be derived. He mentioned the direct benefit which would accrue to every member of the rural constituencies in western Canada, namely, the reduction of the rate in the handling of grain brought about by the bringing of coal to this country. Instead of vessels being forced to come to Montreal empty in order to obtain a return cargo of grain, they will now have cargoes of anthracite coal which will ensure a lower freight rate on grain than has prevailed heretofore. Is not that worth while?

There is a third reason, the encouraging of the production of coke in this country. Right here, let me ask the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart): when the coke plant on the canal at Montreal was given assistance by his government, why was it permitted to be placed where a ship laden with Nova Scotia coal could not unload its cargo? Why was it, instead of giving some assistance and support to Canadian coal, this LaSalle plant was located so that only American coal could be used? Why, under these circumstances, was a bonus paid to this coke plant? These questions are being asked by everyone, but no answer has been given.

Mr. YOUNG: Cannot one ship go into the same place as another?

Mr. BENNETT: Not if they draw different depths of water. You cannot take a ship drawing fifteen feet of water into a 12-foot dock. I thought the hon. gentleman knew that, but apparently he is only a landlubber. He has not his life buoy with him—silk socks. As I say, the third reason is to encourage the production of coke, but I do not propose to enter into this matter at great length.

Mr. EULER: From what kind of coal, Nova Scotia?

Mr. BENNETT: Both or either.

Mr. EULER: Not as long as there are plants in Ontario which obtain a drawback of duty on the American soft coal which they use.

Mr. BENNETT: That is a matter for consideration. It may well be that as the people of Ontario become more fully accustomed to these fuels—the hon. gentleman has said that they are willing and ready to bear their part of the burden in every national purpose, and I believe that is true—then the situation alluded to may well take place. What I said last night, I repeat. If the scientific efforts now being made in laboratories result as I believe they will, in a complete revolution in the utilization of coal, I feel confident that an increasing quantity of Canadian coal will be used in the province of Ontario.

The hon. gentleman mentioned another reason, the necessity for revenue. In view of the subventions given to other parts of the country, this does provide some revenue. Just prior to June 1, a strong agitation was being carried on by representative citizens of the province of Nova Scotia. The contention was that all the benefits accruing from the tariff policy of this country were going to the people in upper Canada. It was contended that the people of Ontario and Quebec had no understanding or appreciation of their problems and had shown no willingness to help the province of Nova Scotia which consumed in such large quantities the manufactured products of the other provinces. The answer made was: has there ever been an appeal made to us when we have received protection for our industrial and manufacturing life and which involved our making a contribution for a national purpose or a national need, that we have not responded? The hon. member for North Waterloo has said that that is still the attitude of the people of Ontario, and I believe it is. Here is accorded one more opportunity with respect to revenue. Compensating adjustments are being made for the people of the lower provinces and far west who are large consumers of the products of central Canada, and the people of that section of the country are glad to avail themselves of the opportunity to advance the common interests of Canada as a whole.

These are the factors which have actuated this government in its effort to establish a national policy. I have never been blind to the difficulties which present themselves, and I have never indicated that I was blind to them. I said we would meet the situation. Do hon. members know of any government which has met its difficulties and the situations with which it was confronted during its life-time, as has this government during the last year?

We are making an effort to overcome the accumulated misery caused by the policies of preceding years. We have not dodged the issue.

Mr. RALSTON: There is no world depression now.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a world depression, and there being a world depression, we are endeavouring all the more to meet the difficulties of the situation. To hear hon. gentlemen talk, one would think that they and they alone knew what difficulties were. I know that there are those among them who say: How pleasant it is to think that the responsibility is not ours! That is their conception of their obligations. They were glad to be in power in the years of bounty and plenty; when there was no world depression they were willing to talk about their difficulties, but now that there is a world depression, they say: We are glad we are not over there. That is their idea of service to the commonwealth. They are glad to be in power in good times, and to be out in bad times. I said at Inverness, and I said last year, that if we came into power we would meet this difficulty. There is not an hon. member in this committee, or elsewhere, who can say that we have not met it. Whether or not we have met it successfully is a matter which time will tell.

Mr. RALSTON: When my right hon. friend said he would meet the difficulty, did he mean he would meet it successfully or unsuccessfully?

Mr. BENNETT: He said he would endeavour to overcome the difficulties, but no man can predicate success except upon effort.

Mr. RALSTON: What does "meet" mean, successfully?

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend knows--

Mr. RALSTON: To meet successfully, of course.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say any such thing.

Mr. RALSTON: Or unsuccessfully.

Mr. BENNETT: What could better typify the type of mind possessed by hon. members opposite than the observation just made by the hon. member? What a spectacle for the gods!

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: It is no wonder his friends laugh. He asks: What do you mean by it? It is something, I am prepared to admit, my hon. friends opposite are unable to understand, for they always dodge every issue and never meet any. There was not a time when they did not run around the corner and cut circles for the purpose of meeting no issue. When they were in power and the then Prime Minister went out for dinner, sometimes we did not know when he came back whether he would be able to proceed or not. I know why they do not meet issues. The hon. member for North Waterloo told us this afternoon. He said: "My colleagues knew I did not agree with that; that I did not sympathize with that; I kept my stand firmly and valiantly." We know the former Minister of Labour has been going around the country and saying what he fought for. He was the bold Horatio who kept the bridge for the unemployed. But that was all in the days when they were all together. They did not want to separate one from another, fearing they might hang separately, and so they hung together. There is the glorious spectacle we have this afternoon.

Without trespassing too much upon the time of the committee I have given to hon. gentlemen some of the reasons why this duty has been placed on anthracite coal. Shall I say more? We have taken action in regard to bituminous coal for the same reason, and lignite we have made free for the reasons I mentioned last evening. I say again to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni that the coal to which he referred in regard to the countervailing duty which he said might apply against British Columbia, is not lignite coal, and I understand on proper investigation it does not seem to qualify as lignite.

Mr. NEILL: I was talking then about bituminous coal, not lignite.

Mr. BENNETT: It is classified as lignite.

Mr. NEILL: But there are two issues; lignite and bituminous.

Mr. BENNETT: I was talking about the issue with respect to lignite.

Mr. NEILL: That is a minor matter.

Mr. BENNETT: A mining matter. Last evening I pointed out to the hon. member for Red Deer what he apparently did not understand, namely, that you cannot move Alberta steam coal by carload lots east beyond a point where you encounter coal that is moving west from Fort William and other points. There must come a point beyond which it cannot be moved further east. If he suggests that a bonus be given to encourage this movement further east, I can only say to him that matter did, at our instance, carefully engage the attention of the fuel board. He will recall that a meeting was held in Ottawa at which the presidents of both the railway companies appeared, and a statement was made by each of them as to how far east that steam coal might be moved. The action taken was predicated upon the view of the fuel board as to how far we could move that coal east. I shall bear in mind what the hon. gentleman has said; that is all one can do. There is much in his contention that if direct relief has to be afforded, it would be of great assistance to that province to see that men are engaged in activities useful to the province and to Canada generally rather than that they should receive a dole which will undermine the morale of the people more than any other single thing to which reference can be made.

Mr. COOTE: It is clear, then, no bonus is to be paid on railway coal east of Winnipeg?

Mr. BENNETT: I am speaking only from memory, but my understanding is—and I read the statement—the railways are not getting a bonus on the coal they consume; that is their coal.

Mr. VENIOT: They have no right to it.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman says: They have no right to it. That is conclusive, so I shall not deal further with that.

The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) spoke of conditions in the Crowsnest pass and of observations made by his opponent. Yesterday evening the Minister of Mines read a letter from the general manager of the leading mine in that locality. The hon. member heard the letter read, and I think it might constitute a very fair answer to his observations. Time alone will tell whether or not this great depression through which we are passing will lift. If it does, the general manager thought the assistance given would stimulate the industry so as to ensure its steady and increasing prosperity.

In addition to what I said last night, I have endeavoured to deal with the various points raised this afternoon. I did not purpose traversing the ground that had been covered by other members of the government and others on this side, because I did not conceive it to be part of my duty to deal with other than the general question and the outcome of the policy of the administration as I had outlined it weeks ago, which I again say is to ensure, so far as it may be humanly possible, that the people of this country will be self-sustaining with regard to fuel. That is the effort, and we shall meet our difficulties as they come. We believe that with courage and fortitude we shall overcome them. If we fail, we shall at least have the satisfaction of having honestly tried, but in any event we have not dodged them; we have kept our promise to meet them.

Mr. VENIOT: I hesitate to rise after listening to the lecture that has been delivered from the other side to members on this side of the house. I feel, however, I have a duty to perform, and notwithstanding the fear of receiving another of the lectures that have been so frequently given from the other side, I am going to venture into what is perhaps dangerous ground.

I notice an effort was made this afternoon to credit the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth with laying down the principle that the United States people would absorb the duty of 40 cents a ton on anthracite coal. Let me draw the attention of the committee to the record, so that we may have it clear. The Minister of Fisheries is the hon. gentleman who first propounded this principle. Speaking on the budget, he made this statement:

> I submit that that tax, which was held up as a burden placed upon the people of Ontario and Quebec, need not be paid at all by the people of those provinces. In the first place, even if they buy anthracite coal, the treasury gets the benefit of the tax. It remains to be seen, however, how much of that tax will be paid by the producer. I venture to say, owing to the highly competitive nature of the business, that the larger portion, if not the whole of that tax, will be paid by the producer in the United States.

Now hon. members are attributing that to the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth.

Mr. RHODES: He said so.

Mr. VENIOT: He said so only in referring to what was said by the hon. member for South Essex, who stated this afternoon that the United States producer, in order to retain the market, would absorb the duty. The Minister of Fisheries agrees. I wish to ask him: If this duty is to be absorbed by the United States producers, so that they can keep the market they have in Canada to-day, how is this going to help the coal producers in Nova Scotia or even encourage the use of their coal?

Let me point out something else. The Prime Minister has just made the statement: "No man will dare say we have not met the situation." That is a point-blank, determined, absolute statement that they have met the situation. Then we have the statement of the Minister of Fisheries: "We have not met the situation as fully as it should be met, but I am convinced that as time goes on this government will meet it."

Mr. RHODES: I have no exception to take to the latter part of the quotation, but the first portion is not in my words. I never said we had not met the situation.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not say that. I said the minister stated: We have not met the situation fully.

Mr. RHODES: If we have not.

Mr. VENIOT: I am using the words of the hon. gentleman. Hansard to-morrow will show who is right. Let me go further. We have the statement of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley), who, speaking on the budget, said that the situation was not met. When he was in opposition he asked for $1.50 a ton, and he still believes there should be a higher tariff on importations of bituminous coal; but he was pleased to accept as a beginning what had been given. Place those two statements against those made this afternoon by the Prime Minister. No man will dare say that we have failed to meet the situation. Whom are we to believe? The Minister of Fisheries, the member for Pictou, or the Prime Minister of Canada?

Mr. CANTLEY: Quote the member for Pictou correctly.

Mr. VENIOT: I did.

Mr. CANTLEY: You did not.

Mr. VENIOT: My hon. friend went further and said he wanted to advise the house that Nova Scotia would come back in the future for a higher tariff than 75 cents on bituminous coal. Is not that absolute proof that the hon. gentleman believes that the situation has not been met? If it had been met, why would he make the threat that the people of Nova Scotia would come back at a future date and ask for a higher duty on coal? No doubt he expects they will ask for the duty that he asked the Liberal government to put on, when he was sitting in opposition. He then asked for a duty of $1.50 a ton, and he said that the people of Nova Scotia would never be satisfied until they got it. But now he is satisfied with a measly 25 cents of an increase in the tariff.

In closing his remarks the right hon. the Prime Minister, in reply to an interjection that I made, said that was right, that it must be conclusive since I had made the statement. I am glad, Mr. Chairman, that I have been enabled to give something conclusive to the Prime Minister, because since the opening of the session we have not obtained anything from him of a conclusive nature in connection with the tariff. The tariff as introduced on the first of June will not be recognized after the Prime Minister gets through making all the changes that he has been forced to make in it; so I think he stands in need of someone to give him something conclusive.

Mr. EULER: I think perhaps I might congratulate myself in at last drawing out the Prime Minister and inducing him to give some reason for the placing of the 40 cent duty on hard coal, even if I did draw upon myself the usual lecture that he administers to those who do not agree with him. That is his invariable custom. I also gave him the opportunity of reflecting rather extravagantly upon myself, because I had not been always in agreement with my colleagues. I suppose it is quite natural for him to be surprised at that, because while he usually boasts of his own frankness he cannot understand that anybody on this side of the house might possess the quality of frankness to the same degree as himself. But I am not going to dwell on these personal matters or speak at length.

I asked the Prime Minister to give the reason why he placed the duty of 40 cents a ton on hard coal, and to tell the committee how it fits into any scheme for the development of a national fuel policy. I said the other day that the Prime Minister always makes a very good speech when he has a good case, and sometimes a pretty good speech when his case is not so good. His case to-day I think comes within the latter category. He has not to my mind made a case for the placing of 40 cents a ton duty on hard coal. The only attempt he made to show that this duty fits in with the development of a national fuel policy was when he tried to make out that it will mean ultimately —it certainly will not this year or next year—that Alberta coal will be sold in the province of Ontario and thus take the place of hard coal from the United States. He gave another reason, one that I myself suggested last night as possibly having moved him, and that is that it helps in the development of inter-empire trade, that it may bring more Welsh coal to Canada. That, however, I contend is not a factor in the development of a national fuel policy. Lastly, he said that he wanted to encourage the production and consumption of coke in this country. In order for that to fit in with a national fuel policy, it must mean the further development of the coal areas of Nova Scotia and in the west. I say to the Prime Miinster, in just a few words that there is nothing in that argument because just so long as he allows United States soft coal to come in here for the purpose of making coke, he is doing nothing to develop the soft coal business of the maritime provinces or of the west.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. friend as usual has indulged in a good deal of recrimination, squirming and wriggling, and blustering and scolding, but it does not phase anybody on this side of the house a bit. We are quite used to it, and if the Prime Minister wants to indulge in that sort of thing I suppose that we can just wait here till he gets over it. What we are dealing with is a particular item of the tariff. I commend his leader's speech to the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald) who is so keen on non-partisanship. I commend to him the statements made by the Prime Minister, having nothing whatever to do with this item—in fact, he went out of his way to lecture and criticize members of the former government in connection with the way they administered public affairs generally. But I want to point out to the Prime Minister that after he has gotten all through, we come back to the position from which I began when I made my few remarks. It was this: The Prime Minister said at Inverness that he would undertake to meet this situation. His Minister of Fisheries admits quite frankly that he has not met the situation. The Minister of Fisheries says: "This is one step," and then turning to the Prime Minister he said, "I do not think the Prime Minister himself would say that this is the complete national fuel policy, but it is one step in that direction." The hon. member for Cape Breton South said exactly the same thing, but the Prime Minister stands up and says: "No man in this house will undertake to say that we have not met the situation." Then later he interrupts and says, "I did not mean when I said, we will meet the situation, that we would meet it successfully."

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that. The hon. gentleman has no right to misquote; as usual—true to form again.

Mr. RALSTON: Hansard will show what he said. I repeat, and will be subject to the correction of Hansard, that he said, "I did not say that we would meet it successfully, but we would meet it." I do not know then, what you mean by meeting a promissory note, whether you mean not paying it or paying it, but I have always been given to understand by those who hold my notes that meeting a promissory note means paying it, and that is what the people of Nova Scotia and of Canada expect the Prime Minister to do. They expect him to meet the situation successfully, and not to make half a dozen bites, as he is doing now, or to dodge and abuse members when they direct his attention to the fact that he has not met the situation. Either let him meet the situation manfashion, or admit, as his Minister of Fisheries does, that "we are not meeting it now, but we will later." The Prime Minister is faced with the situation that I presented to him in the first place, and all the bluster and bluff and lecturing is not going to assist him or get him any further.

My right hon. friend speaks of cast of mind. For a gentleman of his standing at the bar and knowledge of the English language to start cheese-paring over the word "meet" and say it does not mean to meet successfully—well, that indicates the cast of mind that he has displayed in connection with this debate.

Mr. BENNETT: I forgot to say to the committee, when my hon. friend attacked the hon. member for Cape Breton South in connection with Russian coal, that during the year ending March 31, 1931, 14,340 tons of Russian coal were imported into Nova Scotia, valued at $95,000, so that the hon. member for Cape Breton South was correct.

Mr. RALSTON: He never mentioned Russian coal that I know of. I mentioned Russian coal.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman said that the hon. member for Cape Breton South had been running around with pieces of Russian coal saying that it was displacing Nova Scotia coal, and I am now giving the amount of Russian importations into Nova Scotia.

Mr. RALSTON: That does not say it displaces Nova Scotia coal.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I have listened with a great deal of amusement, and I know the miners of Nova Scotia will read with amusement, the remarks indicating the sudden change of attitude on the part of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston). Never was the conversion of Saul of Tarsus better exemplified. The hon. member stands in his place to-day asking parliament and the 13,000 miners of Nova Scotia to believe that he and he alone is the champion of their rights, that to-day when he speaks with a sob in his voice and a tear in his eye his heart is bleeding for them. May I point out, Mr. Chairman, that when my hon. friend was minister in the late government he did nothing for those miners, and again last winter when the miners were anxious to find a solution for their difficulties he did nothing. He in common with all other federal members from the province of Nova Scotia was invited by the head of the United Mine Workers' Association to attend a non-partisan gathering held at the city of Halifax to discuss this question and to devise means of solving it. There was the place and the time to make his suggestions; but where was he then?

Mr. RALSTON: This government will tell us.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: He was asked to attend that meeting, but he did not go. You were asked then—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: —in common with other federal members, because the meeting was non-partisan. Of course my hon. friend is non-partisan in his remarks.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: He was asked subsequently to go with that delegation to Ottawa, and it would not have been difficult for him to do so because at that time he was in the city of Montreal. He would not go that far even in the interests of the miners for whom to-day his heart is bleeding. I ask this question of my hon. friend: Are not the provisions in this budget dealing with coal the best provisions yet brought down in any parliament since confederation?

Mr. RALSTON: No.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: He refuses to answer.

Mr. RALSTON: I said that they were not.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The only answer he can give is "Yes".

Mr. RALSTON: I said "No".

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Show me a budget where they were better.

Mr. RALSTON: I shall wait until my hon. friend is through.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: You will wait a long time. My hon. friend spoke about the millions of tons of American coal coming into Canada. Surely we are opposed to that; but he stands up in his place and votes against a measure which will make more difficult the entrance of that coal into this country. He would have a tariff of 50 cents instead of 75 cents on American coal. If 50 cents helps to keep out American coal, surely 75 cents will help to keep it out to an even greater degree. All this eye wash and repentance after the fact is not going to deceive the miners of Nova Scota. They know where he stood when he was a member of the late government; they know where he stood when they asked him to attend a non-partisan gathering, which he would not do. They know where he stood when they asked him to come to Ottawa to help place their case before the government, which he would not do. Now he has decided to stand up and attempt to plead the case of those 13,000 miners.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not happen to be in the chamber when the Prime Minister made some criticism concerning the location of the coking plant in the city of Montreal. May I say to him that the late government took no responsibility for the locations of either the plant at Hamilton or the one at Montreal. We are very glad to think that they located at all because of the effect their output would have on the price of anthracite coal.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): May I ask a question?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Does my hon. friend suggest that there is any objection to the location of the Hamilton plant?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not say so. I wish merely to point out to the house that so far as the late government is concerned we take no responsibility for the location of those plants. We had nothing to do with bringing the companies into Canada; they came and located the same as other industrial concerns.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): My hon. friend is not offering any criticism.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No; not at all. I am answering a statement purported to have been made by the Prime Minister respecting the location of the Montreal plant, and suggesting that because it was located on the canal its location was detrimental to the unloading of Nova Scotia coal.

As I said before when speaking to this matter, I wish to congratulate the government upon their extension of the subsidies for the movement of coal. When criticized by hon. members opposite in this connection I said on many occasions that this was the only solution for the movement of coal both east and west. I repeat now that I think 50 cents a ton tax was ample to take from the people of Ontario. We received over $6,000,000 a year from the people of Ontario and Quebec through the duties collected on the importation of coal. To the extent to which you increase the subsidies on railways and steamships for the movement of coal both east and west, to that extent you will occupy the market. The additional 25 cents a ton placed upon bituminous coal will have the effect of jeopardizing the coal industry at Fernie; it will help the coal industry in the constituency of Red Deer, and to a very limited extent it will help the coal industry in Nova Scotia. The solution my hon. friends have adopted is merely an increase or an enlargement of the policy the government of which I formed a part instituted six or seven years ago.

My right hon. friend has said that they are anxious to encourage empire trade in coal. May I say to him that the increase of importations from Great Britain of anthracite coal during the last six years was from 10,000 tons to almost a million tons. So that the late government of which my hon. friends opposite are so critical began to do exactly what my right hon. friend is now continuing to do for which he is taking a great deal of credit.

I am critical only of the imposition of the duties. I do not think they will help the industry. I said last night, and I repeat it, that so far as bituminous coal is concerned, I have not a great deal of sympathy for the people of Ontario because they are receiving privileges by way of tariff increases and protection, and probably it is fair that they should pay the duty. I do say however that as a means of increasing the consumption of coal from Nova Scotia and western Canada the measure is not worth talking about and will not help a particle. The amount of 25 cents a ton added to assist the movement would have done far more for the coal industries in the east and west than the mere imposition of a duty.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend from West Edmonton rose for the purpose of correcting a statement of the Prime Minister to the effect that the government of which my hon. friend formed a part was responsible for the plant at Montreal.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what I said.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was so informed; I stand corrected.

Mr. RHODES: Let me point out to my hon. friend that although it may be news to him, his government was responsible for the location of that plant.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In what way?

Mr. RHODES: Because they placed in the tariff item No. 1049 which enabled that plant to secure a drawback of 49½ cents a ton on all coal used.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, but I am speaking of the location of the plant itself.

Mr. RHODES: I am speaking about that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The reference was to placing the plant on the canal instead of on waters from which vessels from Nova Scotia could unload.

Mr. RHODES: I am speaking about that. It was placed on the canal for the express purpose of using American coal.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friends had put coke on the free list, so that it was better to manufacture coke in Canada, if it was free anyway.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I take full responsibility for the drawback.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend should not have the assistance of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth. The plant was placed on the canal because of a provision made by the government of my hon. friend. Had it not been for this action they would have been compelled to use Nova Scotia coal, in which event the plant would have been located at tidewater where vessels of the Atlantic ocean could have had access to it. That is the story in a nutshell. My hon. friends opposite must accept their share of the responsibility for the location of that plant, which was designed and equipped for the express purpose of using American coal. This could not have done but for the item placed in the tariff by my hon. friend opposite.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The minister's argument is rather far-fetched. The drawback on coke has been in existence for years, and I think it is legitimate, quite irrespective of what he says.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend says the drawback on coke has been in existence for years. It has been in effect for metallurgical coke under item 1019; but the drawback to which I am referring was not put into effect until 1925. Here it is:

Bituminous coal when imported after the 24th day of March, 1925.

That was entirely new, placed there by my hon. friends opposite. It has no reference whatever to the drawback on coal for metallurgical purposes. That has been in the tariff for years.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I take full responsibility for recommending that by-product coke be put in the same category as metallurgical coke. It was done for the purpose of reducing the cost of anthracite coal to the people of the central provinces. Nova Scotia does not produce a pound of anthracite coal, neither does New Brunswick. The establishment of these two plants in Hamilton and in Montreal reduced by $4 per ton the cost of anthracite coal in the central region of Canada.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is going into the merits; I am not discussing the merits.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am pointing out why I did it. I take full responsibility. It did no injury to the coal industry in Nova Scotia.

Item agreed to on division.

Item 588 carried on division.

Mr. BENNETT: The next items are 587, 587a and 587b. There is no change in the duties. The former item 587 has been divided into three items, coke, petroleum coke, and coke used for metallurgical purposes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is the order in council for the fixation of the price of coke still in existence?

Mr. BENNETT: No. I will ask the Minister of Fisheries to move the necessary amendment.

Mr. RHODES: I beg to move that the following items be substituted for tariff item 587, as contained in resolution No. 2 of June 1, 1931:

Customs tariff—587. Coke, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, $1; general tariff, $1.

Customs tariff—587a. Petroleum coke: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Customs tariff—587b. Coke of a kind not produced in Canada or coke which, owing to transportation costs, is not available commercially throughout Canada, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in furnaces in manufacturing calcium carbide or in metallurgical operations, in their own plants: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item as amended agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: After recess we will take up item 622.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Customs tariff—622. Trunks, valises, hat boxes, carpet bags, tool bags and baskets of all kinds, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 40 per cent; general tariff, 40 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—623. Musical instrument cases and fancy cases or boxes of all kinds, portfolios and fancy writing desks, satchels, reticules, card cases, purses, pocketbooks, fly books and parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 40 per cent; general tariff, 40 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—651a. Buttons of vegetable ivory: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 35 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent; and, per gross: British preferential tariff, 5 cents; intermediate tariff, 10 cents; general tariff, 10 cents.

Item agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I move that the following be substituted for tariff item 1215, as contained in resolution No. 4 of June 1, 1931:

Used or second hand automobiles and motor vehicles of all kinds, manufactured prior to the calendar year in which importation into Canada is sought to be made.

Provided, that this item does not affect in any manner automobiles and motor vehicles:

(a) Imported under tariff items 702 or 705a, or under tourists' or travellers' vehicle permits;

(b) Bona fide purchased on or before the first day of June, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-one, by consumers for their own use and not for resale;

(c) Forfeited or confiscated for any offence under the customs laws or the laws of any province of Canada;

(d) Left by bequest.

Mr. BENNETT: Paragraph (a) refers to settlers' effects, as I explained the other day. In paragraph (b), "consumers" is the word usually used in the tariff. Paragraph (c) refers to cars that are taken and have to be sold, and (d) is to meet such bequests as one that has actually been made, in which an automobile was left by will to a Canadian. These four provisions meet such cases as may arise.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I beg to move that the following be added to resolution No. 5 of the first day of June, 1931, as amended by resolution No. 4 of the 13th day of July, of the same year:

Provided, that in the case of goods which were imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption, and on which duty was paid, on and after the second day of June, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-one, in accordance with the rates of duty set forth as payable on such goods in the resolutions respecting the customs tariff introduced in the House of Commons on the first day of the said month, the duty so paid shall not be affected, nor shall the person paying it be entitled to any refund or be liable to any further payment of duty, by reason of such rate of duty being altered by any resolution introduced subsequently to that in accordance with which such duty was paid and before the passing of this act.

Mr. BENNETT: This provides against any requests for further duties as a result of the amendment of the tariff, or for the recovery of any refund by reason of its being lower, which is a contingency that does not often arise under this budget.

Amendment agreed to.

Resolution as amended agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: There is provision in resolution No. 3 that tariff item 1034, which provides for a drawback, shall be no longer in force, because of the duty placed on sal soda. The amount involved last year was $289.87.

This exhausts the items except for 184 and 184a, magazines, which will be taken up tomorrow afternoon. The leader of the opposition wishes to make some observations with respect to the matter.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, the committee will recall that the items which remained were those dealing with the income tax. I do not propose to proceed further with them. I have not been accustomed to trouble this chamber with my personal affairs, but since I have been elected to the positions which I have occupied, either as leader of the opposition or as leader of the government, I have endeavoured to discharge my duties to the best of my ability. I have not thought of my personal fortunes or my personal advancement.

On June 1, I brought before the house proposals with respect to the income tax. I pointed out that in the main they would have no application, so far as revenue was concerned, until next year; they would be applicable then and not now. The usual course adopted by my predecessors has been to bring such measures before the house shortly before the end of the fiscal year so that the taxes would be applicable to that fiscal year and be paid on the rates fixed by the statute passed just prior to its expiration. I thought it well that the house and country should have the fullest opportunity to consider the measure which was submitted, and I shall now relate to the committee the circumstances under which it was submitted.

As Minister of Finance I realized that I had not the opportunity to study the operations of the Income Tax Act in all its ramifications. The officials of the Income Tax branch are trained men. The commissioner of that branch was appointed to that service by my predecessor. He is a competent official; from the study he has given to the matter he has a wide knowledge, of the operations of income tax legislation in every part of the world. While it has been said that one should not refer to an official in dealing with a matter of this kind, it has always been the custom of those who come and go to ask permanent officials to give, through the legislation framed by them, the benefit of their advice to the country. Accordingly I asked the head of the Income Tax branch to prepare a measure that he believed was the best in the interests of the Dominion of Canada, having regard to his experience, to his knowledge of the operations of similar taxes in other countries, and to what he has learned, on the one hand, as to the ability of our people to pay, and, on the other, of the encouragement of capital. He prepared a bill, and I should like the committee to realize that that bill was submitted to me on the night before the budget was presented. I handed to the clerk at the table the very sheets of paper which that official gave to me. It was my intention to have had the resolution passed in the house and to have had the bill referred to the committee on banking and commerce in order that hon. gentlemen might have an opportunity before that committee to question the officials of the department and to determine to what extent the bill as prepared represented what was best in the interests of Canada.

To my surprise I was personally attacked for this measure. If hon. members are interested enough to look at the speech delivered by a former minister of the crown, the ex-Secretary of State, the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret), he is reported as saying at page 2778 of Hansard:

> If . . . . he had told the people he was going to raise the sales tax from one per cent to four per cent; that he was going to impose a one per cent tax on all the imports of this country; that he was going to do that most infamous thing, relieve himself and his wealthy friends of 25 per cent of their income tax, not only would he not have won the election but in certain parts of the country he would have been stoned away from his meetings.

That in the French version is now being circulated throughout the province of Quebec, the interpretation being that by this "infamous" act I reduced by 25 per cent the tax on my own income, and so on.

Another former minister of the crown, Mr. Gordon of Peterborough, made the statement at a public gathering that the proposed income tax would save me $25,000 personally. On the one hand there is the statement made in this chamber that I was legislating to save myself 25 per cent of my income tax; on the other, there is the statement made out of the chamber that I was legislating by lessening my tax to prevent myself paying $25,000. I do not know at the moment what the effect of the proposed income tax legislation would have been upon my personal income tax. I have never been concerned about that. I have always paid with pleasure my income tax, and on three occasions I have been refunded overpayments. I have maintained no corporation; I have set up no personal or family corporation with respect to my affairs. I have paid as an individual I have maintained no trust funds abroad where my income should accumulate and where no income tax would have to be paid on it. But I do not think the committee is concerned about my personal affairs. I defy any man to make about any business of mine with respect to the Dominion of Canada a single criticism that would be warranted or to point to any departure from the letter of the law in favour of myself. Not only are the statements, the one made in the house and the other made outside, untrue, but I confess when I saw the rancour with which the attacks were made upon me with respect to the matter, I felt that in the public interest I must ask the committee to permit me to withdraw this resolution. The taxes will remain as they are. It does not follow that when the time for payment comes, whoever occupies the position of Minister of Finance may not think some action desirable, for I recall that the leader of the opposition, in addressing the people of Canada at Richmond Hill on September 5, 1925, had this to say.

> But is reduction already effected sufficient? Our income tax is still in some respects higher than that of the United States. . . . While aiming at a further reduction in the public debt, we must aim also at a further reduction in the income tax and the sales tax.

That is from the Globe of Monday, September 7, 1925. I am not now concerned about that matter. This measure did not touch the budget. That is what is the unexplainable point about it. It was introduced with the budget resolutions as a convenient place to enable the matter to be discussed, and if I ask the tolerance of the committee to make the statement I have made, it is because I have been hurt more than I have been in my life before to think that in a chamber such as this an ex-minister of the crown would charge me with having endeavoured to save myself from paying 25 per cent of my tax; and that out of this chamber a charge should be made that I would endeavour to save myself from paying $25,000. Neither is correct; if it were I should be unworthy of standing in the place I occupy.

I hope that I may be forgiven for touching upon my personal affairs as I have done. How can the state expect men with any means to serve it if their motives must be misconstrued and attacks such as this made upon them? I think in one great country the services of one of its richest men have been given in a way that will be remembered by posterity for a very long time. I have no such hopes in my own case, but I will continue as unselfishly as I know how, to serve Canada that has done so much for me, and I shall endeavour, out of the resources that a kindly Providence has permitted me to have, to make those contributions which the state justly takes. But I shall never become a party to having it thought in the house or by the country that any legislation fathered by me or resolutions moved by me in committee of ways and means have been actuated by any object other than the well-being of my fellow Canadians. I know not to-night what effect the resolutions would have upon my own fortunes, except that I do know it is absolutely untrue that they would affect my payment of income tax in the manner indicated either in this chamber or outside it.

Once more I ask the tolerance of the committee for having brought to its attention my personal affairs. Hon. gentlemen are not concerned with them except in so far as they touch the state, and if I ask the committee to permit me now to withdraw these resolutions that affect the income tax amendment, I do so in the firm belief that it is my duty under the circumstances to take this course.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know whether it is in order to make any observations on my right hon. friend's remarks or not. I do not know whether I heard my hon. friend aright, but whether I heard him aright or not, I am going to make some observations if I am in order.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: On the 15th of June, two weeks after my right hon. friend made his budget speech, I made my contribution to the budget debate. In the meantime I was very anxious to know what the income tax provisions meant, and I put a question on the order paper asking the Minister of National Revenue what amount of income tax would be collected under the provisions of the new act on a million dollar income, and what amount would be collected on the same income under the old income tax. About ten minutes before I started to speak in the budget debate a copy of the reply of my hon. friend the Minister of National Revenue was handed to me, the substance of which was that inasmuch as there had been no million dollar income taxable property for a number of years, he presumed that I meant the corporation tax, and he gave his answer accordingly. I considered that that was a smart Aleck answer. He was admitting more than he meant to admit, because he admitted right there that there had been some taxable incomes of a million dollars.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Not in recent years. My hon. friend was asking for something that he did not understand. He thought he had something with which to make a case, but he had not.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The very fact that there had been such incomes indicated the necessity of having the schedule. The income tax schedule was available to anybody at the office. There was no secret about it. Anybody could get it. The schedules indicated that on incomes from $3,500 to $8,000 there was a reduction of tax, on incomes from $8,000 to $137,000 an increase, and on incomes from $137,000 to $1,000,000 a decrease in the income tax. Those who were fortunate enough to hold taxable income property above $137,000 paid under the new act less income taxation than under the old. I did not know who had incomes above $137,000. I understood that there were about sixty individuals in Canada with incomes above that, and I took the ground and I take it now, that this is not the time for the man who had an income above $137,000 to unload any part of his former income tax on the poor people of Canada. As I say, there were a few incomes from $3,500 to $8,000 on which the income tax was reduced, the reduction amounting in the aggregate to about $50 a year. That is my recollection; I have not the figures before me. There were some sixty people who had taxable income property between $137,000 and $1,000,000. Who they are I do not know, but whoever they are my remarks applied to them, and they still apply to them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Needless to say, it is always best to be discreet and await an explanation of any legislation that is introduced. I confess that I heard a good deal about the reductions in income taxation. I presumed that we would discuss it when the legislation came before the house, but now we shall have no opportunity as the Prime Minister desires to withdraw the resolution. I think it is regrettable in public life that one is always subjected to suspicion. That is something that my right hon. friend is just beginning to realize now after many years of public service. As head of the government he will be subjected to all sorts of suspicions, but I would say to him as an old friend and former colleague that I would not feel too badly about it. One has to put up with that sort of thing. It is part of the penalty we pay for being in public life. One is bound to be attacked from every quarter. I am bound to say that in some twenty odd years, holding positions of some responsibility, I have sometimes been pained at the suggestions I have heard against my honesty and integrity, and in the higher position my right hon. friend occupies one can readily understand that he will be always subjected to criticism. I am going to say now, notwithstanding that he has withdrawn the resolutions; that I think it would have been much better had he gone through with them. I do not know what effect they would have or what changes they would bring about, but as my right hon. friend feels as he does about the matter and has withdrawn the resolutions, I do not suppose there is anything more to be said about it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): Shall the right hon. gentleman have leave to withdraw his resolution?

Mr. EULER: Does the Prime Minister withdraw entitrely all the changes he proposed to make in the income tax?

Mr. BENNETT: Except the one that has already been adopted with respect to increasing the tax on corporations from 8 to 10 per cent. That was adopted some time ago.

Mr. EULER: Does he mean that the only resolution that is withdrawn is that which relates to the change of schedules?

Mr. BENNETT: There were three resolutions dealing with income tax. One was to increase the corporation tax from 8 to 10 per cent; the other was the two per cent tax, and the other dealt with the schedules. I am withdrawing the two that I have last named. With respect to the two per cent tax the reason for withdrawing it is fairly clear under present conditions. Repercussions of the present conditions in Canada began to be realized fully after the middle of June, and it is the most inopportune time in the world to present such a resolution in view of these repercussions in Europe, as may be found from a perusal of the Times and continental papers of repute in Paris and elsewhere. That has nothing to do with the matter I mentioned with respect to the schedules. The resolution with respect to the corporation tax was adopted some time ago, if I remember aright.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Quite right.

Mr. BENNETT: That will leave the only change the one I have mentioned.

Mr. EULER: Is the one dealing with family corporations nullified as well?

Mr. BENNETT: I am leaving that just as it is.

Mr. EULER: I am not sure that I should make any comment after my two colleagues have spoken, following the Prime Minister. I can very well understand that the Prime Minister from the very nature of his duties is a very, very busy man, and I have no fault to find with his action in calling in the commissioner of taxation to assist him in making such changes in the income tax law as the experience of the commissioner had shown to be advisable. I believe this, however, that it is highly desirable—I am making no criticism—where legislation of such far-reaching importance, financial and otherwise, is to be introduced, that the finance minister should acquaint himself with the provisions of the proposed bill prior to its introduction.

Mr. BENNETT: I agree with that, but I said that I had proposed to send it to the banking and commerce committee in order that an opportunity might be afforded there to all members to discuss the matter.

Mr. EULER: I will admit further that it is a fairly good excuse, or reason, that the Prime Minister has been so busy that he finds it difficult to attend to all the work himself. I would make this further comment. If the changes that were proposed, and which the Prime Minister feels may be presumed to affect him personally, were changes which were right, I think it is still his duty to press through that legislation. While I am perfectly free to admit that the Prime Minister has a very fine sense of honour, perhaps he is exaggerating the effect so far as he is personally affected by the proposed change. I repeat, if the Prime Minister is now convinced, if he was not before, and the committee is convinced, that the changes proposed in the income tax are such as are right in every way and can be properly defended, then I believe in justice to the Canadian people and to other income taxpayers than himself, the Prime Minister ought to press the legislation through. At the same time I quite understand the feeling that influenced him because of certain criticisms which were made. As Prime Minister and Minister of Finance my right hon. friend has a great responsibility. I would make the statement, not by way of criticism, that his responsibility goes far beyond any personal feeling he may have.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. EULER: If in his opinion the legislation is right and in the interests of the country generally, I see no reason why he should withdraw the resolutions.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps my hon. friend from North Waterloo has not quite appreciated the first part of my statement. I would have much more seriously considered my obligation were it not for the fact that the course I proposed to pursue was one my predecessors had not pursued. If it is desirable the bill can be brought before the house for its consideration before the day arrives for the payment of the next income tax. The government of which my hon. friend was a member brought in such legislation and made it applicable to the return of that year. That opportunity still exists. Were it not for that fact I think the observations made by my hon. friend would have had much more effect. I owe a duty however not only to the country but also to my own friends, my party and my friends who are not in my party. I cannot view with equanimity the thought that in every back concession, every corner lot, every grocery store and every libellous and scurrilous sheet statements are being made that I have done so and so for my own personal advantage. Hon. members may consider the matter on its merits when I no longer occupy the position of Minister of Finance.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: May I make one or two further observations? Those of us who have commented on this matter also have friends before whom we wish to vindicate ourselves.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): What are you talking about?

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I find that there are sixty men with taxable incomes between $137,000 and $500,000.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Running all the way from $163—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Up to $41,827—reductions below the schedule under the Robb budget.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. gentleman should have an opportunity to say anything he desires to say.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I beg your pardon.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. gentleman should have the fullest opportunity to make any observations he wishes to make.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Thank you, but I had pretty nearly finished my statement. However, because of all the howling I do not know whether Hansard was able to get it or not.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Owing to a matter mentioned by the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) I feel it necessary to say a few words. I do not intend to take objection to any of his statements with the exception of the one wherein he said that I had given him a smart Aleck answer. The answer was true and I can quite understand that anything which was the truth to the ex-Minister of Agriculture may appear to be smart Aleck. A question was put and I gave the answer fully and honestly. He asked how many were receiving incomes of $1,000,000 and what would be the taxes thereon under the old and new systems of taxation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is right,—up to $1,000,000.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Now, I will admit that the ex-Minister of Agriculture may not be very alert mentally, but I think he should be able to make a simple calculation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Yes, a simple calculation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know what he is saying as I cannot hear him for the commotion.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The fact is that there was no one in the Dominion of Canada who received an income of $1,000,000, and if an answer had been given showing the amount of tax on an income of $1,000,000 it would be obvious that it was supposed there was a situation where $1,000,000 was assessed and the taxes paid thereon. There was no such case. I submit to the committee that it would have been improper for me to do the arithmetic for the ex-Minister of Agriculture when in fact there was no person in the Dominion in receipt of an income of $1,000,000 or paying taxes thereon. There was no one last year paying taxes on that amount, nor on $750,000. While on my feet I remember that there were two who paid a tax on $500,000. What was the purpose of the ex-Minister of Agriculture asking the amount of taxation on $1,000,000 under the old rates and under the proposed rates when as a matter of fact in the whole Dominion of Canada there was no such case. I think it may be said that an honest answer was given to a smart Aleck question.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There was no reason under the sun why my hon. friend should not have answered the question as to what was the difference between the tax on $1,000,000 under the new and old systems. There is no reason why the minister could not have answered my question. When I asked the question he had no right to assume that I meant anything about the corporation tax, and for him to make such a reply was a downright insult. It was nothing but a smart Aleck answer I received from my hon. friend.

Mr. POWER: I did not quite gather from the remarks of the Minister of Finance whether that section dealing with the exemptions of $3,000 being raised to $3,500 is to be proceeded with or not.

Mr. BENNETT: The measure increasing the corporation rate from 8 to 10 per cent has been considered and the bill introduced and passed. Beyond that no amendment will be made.

Mr. BOURASSA: In other words, taking these resolutions which have been printed and distributed, the whole of them with the exception of No. 1 on the first page are dropped.

Mr. BENNETT: I have not the resolutions before me.

Mr. BOURASSA: Down to "Special War Revenue" at the bottom of page 2.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. BOURASSA: I think the government is to be congratulated on this withdrawal. For my part, leaving aside entirely any personal question which I think should not have been brought up one way or another, I think the government in withdrawing these resolutions is giving way to an overwhelming public sentiment which has been expressed right and left throughout all parts of Canada. For my part I congratulate the Prime Minister upon his decision. On the other hand I think the observations made by the hon. member for North Waterloo are quite correct. It would be rather awkward for the government and parliament if legislation were to be affected because of warranted or unwarranted attacks lodged against the Prime Minister or any other public man.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Hear, hear.

Mr. BOURASSA: Personally I should have been the last to feel that the Prime Minister would have thought of himself when proposing any legislation of this kind. On the other hand, under the circumstances and because of public discussions which take place throughout the country, he must not be surprised if some comments are passed. I well remember the time when his predecessor in office—and that lasted a good many years—went through various elections facing charges of cowardice and lack of patriotism because he did not choose to enlist during the war. I respectfully suggest to the right hon. gentleman that in this respect as in all other respects he frame his mind, propose his policy and propound it before parliament and before the country, irrespective of any personal comments that may be made by this or that gentleman inside or outside the house. Besides, there were in these resolutions some measures which have no relation whatever to the personal situation of the right hon. gentleman, and therefore the personal attack that has been made upon him cannot have any relation to his present determination to withdraw the other resolutions. For example, the resolution which proposed to levy a special tax of two per cent on the income from foreign investments had nothing whatever to do with the personal attack. I think that was one of the resolutions which was commendable, and so far as that is concerned I am sorry it is withdrawn. That surely is not withdrawn on account of the observations that have been made?

Mr. BENNETT: I gave the reasons a moment ago, if the hon. gentleman had listened.

Mr. BOURASSA: Quite so. I do not blame the Prime Minister for having withdrawn that resolution with the rest; I simply say it had no reference to the personal attack.

Mr. STEVENS: The Prime Minister gave another reason.

Mr. BOURASSA: Quite so, and on the whole I approve of the government withdrawing these resolutions. But I say, if in the future any prime minister should come to a decision to withdraw certain measures because of personal attacks made upon him by some of his opponents, I think it would be detrimental to the course of legislation and to the proper administration of the country's affairs. If the accusation is false, then it falls of itself; if it is brought in such a manner outside of parliament that the Prime Minister or any other member of his government or of the house is capable of bringing before the tribunals of the country those who accuse him falsely, then, like any other citizen, he has recourse in law against his traducers. But to say that legislation should be changed because of personal attacks on a minister of the crown is, I think, pretty far-fetched and it seems to me it would be a very dangerous precedent. The right hon. gentleman could well have stated his personal position without taking the course that he has taken because of the attack, in which so far as I am concerned I do not believe at all.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: As is usually the case, I think most of us view this action with mingled feelings. Speaking for myself—and I think a great many other people—I would say this. To the extent that the proposed measures increased the income tax, we regret their withdrawal; to the extent that they lessened the income tax, whether at the top or the bottom, some of us, including myself, approve of their withdrawal. So far as the personal element is concerned, may I also say that although some of us may not agree with the Prime Minister's general policy, I think there are few of us but recognize that the Prime Minister, whether right or wrong in his policy, is too big a man to allow personal considerations to interfere with the performance of his duty; and that while we disapprove of the suggestion to reduce the income tax upon the larger incomes, we do not believe for one moment that these measures were introduced from any personal motive or from the point of view of the manner in which they might affect the Prime Minister's own personal fortune. I repeat, whether we agree or disagree with him, we regard him as too big a man to allow such considerations to affect his conduct.

Mr. SPENCER: In support of what has been said by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman), I want to draw the committee's attention to the fact that the Prime Minister in his budget speech mentioned that by his income tax proposals he expected to raise some $23,500,000. If those proposals are now to be dropped, it means we shall be short that amount of revenue.

Mr. BENNETT: No. You have it all wrong.

Mr. SPENCER: It will be lost, less the corporation tax. Therefore I trust that before another session the government will have prepared legislation to present to this house for increasing the income tax along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. POWER: May I join with my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) in expressing some regret that on account of the unfortunate circumstances that the Prime Minister felt himself personally attacked he decided—

Mr. BENNETT: Not "felt himself"—he was. Have you read what your colleague said?

Mr. POWER: I was not going to enter upon that ground, but if the Prime Minister asks me to, I am quite prepared to accede to his request.

Mr. BENNETT: Go on.

Mr. POWER: The statement was made that the Prime Minister was de-taxing himself.

Mr. BENNETT: Twenty-five per cent; which is false.

Mr. POWER: I did not know it was twenty-five per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: It is there on Hansard.

Mr. POWER: It does not matter; it is neither here nor there whether it was twenty-five per cent, five per cent or one per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: It does matter.

Mr. POWER: The point is that, owing largely to his friends, the right hon. gentleman has the reputation in this country of being a man of great wealth. It was perhaps fair on the part of the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) to assume that the right hon. gentleman would be one of those whose incomes would have been to a certain extent exempted from taxation by these proposals. I do not know whether or not it would have been. I have no means of finding out, nor do I care. But if that were the fact—and we have been assured that the right hon. gentleman is a man of great wealth—I think it was possible, without making any personal reflection on the right hon. gentleman—and so far as I am concerned personally he knows I have not the slightest inclination to do so—that if as a matter of fact he had an income in excess of $130,000 a year, by the act of this government he would pay less in the way of income tax than he otherwise would have done. I think that is a fair statement to make.

Now, I am extremely sorry that the right hon. Prime Minister took this attack to himself. It is inevitable in the political life of this or any other country that one's motives should be misjudged. I do not think any one on this side of the house would deliberately say that the Prime Minister in the exercise of the functions of Minister of Finance which he has assumed would have introduced this legislation for the purely selfish motive of diminishing his own income tax. I think all hon. members on this side of the house will back me up when I make that statement on their behalf, and so far as I am concerned I make it gladly and willingly. I do believe that the very last thing which would have entered into the mind of the right hon. Prime Minister would be to secure any personal advantage to himself. But that having been said—

An hon. MEMBER: Bluff.

Mr. POWER: There is no question of bluff. I have been in the habit of speaking frankly and honestly in this house, and I will do so now. But that having been said, with all due regard to the sensibilities and susceptibilities of my right hon. friend, I do not believe it is either fair or reasonable on his part to withdraw the really beneficial clauses in this legislation because he felt that he had been personally attacked.

Mr. BENNETT: It can still be passed in time for the taxing year, as was always done by the Liberal government.

Mr. POWER: I am not concerned with what was done by the Liberal government in the past; I am concerned with this, that the right hon. gentleman, on the first day of June, brought down a budget which he said was a real budget. That speech is divided into sections, under the general title "The Budget." I assume that it was so divided at his request or at least at the request of those who saw the notes of his speech. At page 2142 of Hansard we find the following:

The Budget
Annual Financial Statement Of Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, Minister of Finance

Mr. BENNETT: That was done by the Hansard reporters without the knowledge of anyone connected with the budget.

Mr. POWER: That was done by the Hansard reporters?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; they always do it with respect to the budget statement. You will see it in previous years. And there is another case in which the hon. member is running true to form. He has charged me with having done something, or having had it done on my behalf, and a little inquiry will indicate that it is not so. It indicates the purpose behind the statement.

Mr. POWER: I am not charging the right hon. gentleman with anything I cannot prove. I will stand my ground and I will not charge him with anything I will not prove to the hilt—every word of it. The speech is divided into sections. Whether it was done by the Hansard men—and I take his word—acting according to custom, as he implies, whereby they usually divide the budget speech—

Mr. BENNETT: I did not even re-read the copy of Hansard.

Mr. POWER: I do not doubt that if the right hon. gentleman had gone through it he would have found it most interesting reading. I wish he would read it now. There is a heading:

Financial operations during fiscal year 1930-31.

That is one chapter, a part of the budget speech; and I will guarantee, without knowing anything about it, that if this speech has been distributed to the right hon. gentleman's friends it is in this very shape. Then there is another heading, "Excise Duty," and a third section under the heading "Income Tax." The text reads:

The income tax ranks first in productivity,

And so forth. It goes on:

The fiscal year 1922 was also a dark one in respect to total revenues, but income tax assessments were on the earnings and profits of 1920, the peak year of the post-war boom. In the past year total revenues were again reduced, but income tax assessments were levied on the earnings and profits of a peak year, that of the stock market boom.

He goes on to describe the financial operations, and later on he says:

I may add that it is proposed also during the present session entirely to amend the Income Tax Act. Family corporations will be abolished; it is about time.

There is still time; why have we not done it? He continues:

In addition to that we propose to present a new schedule of rates based upon the experience of the commissioner of taxation. Mr. Walters was asked to prepare, with the aid of his officials, what he conceived to be a proper tax rate for this country, having regard to known conditions. He has done so, and the government proposes to adopt his recommendations.

The foregoing appears at page 2174 of Hansard of June 1. Could any language be plainer than that? The government knew what Mr. Walters' recommendations were, and they proposed to adopt them. The right hon. gentleman goes on to say:

The exemptions will be somewhat increased, but it is thought desirable that the rate should start at 1 per cent, with another 1 per cent added with each additional $1,000 of income until the maximum is reached, which will be 25 per cent.

Then he goes on:

It may amaze the house to learn . . . . that the amount of income tax collected in this country since the tax first was put on the statute books—

—was so and so. Then he proceeds:

In addition it is proposed that dividends from Canadian corporations, up to $10,000, shall be exempt from taxation. . . .

And he goes on further to describe and to elaborate upon his income tax proposals.

Now, the fault I have to find with the right hon. gentleman is this, to put it very plainly and in very few words: that because he felt aggrieved at being attacked in the house and in the country—and perhaps I am not blaming him for that—he has disregarded entirely those sections of the income tax amendments which would have brought considerable benefit to certain classes in the country who are badly in need of it.

An hon. MEMBER: Badly in need.

Mr. POWER: Will the hon. gentleman who interrupts say that the classes of people who under this proposed legislation would have benefited by an increase of $500 in exemption are not badly in need of it? If any hon. gentleman says so, he does not know the feelings of the people. It is to that class of people particularly that I refer, and I deeply regret the action taken by the Prime Minister. I would ask him, if possible, to reconsider the matter.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Stirling): Is it the pleasure of the committee that the right hon. gentleman shall have leave to withdraw the resolutions?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Resolutions withdrawn.

Progress reported.

Yukon Territory, $150,000.—Total, $36,339,975.

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Chairman, this item is subdivided into other items which include salaries and allowances; mail service, including mail service by air; miscellaneous expenditures, and so on, about fourteen different items in all. I thought we were to take the items up separately, but before going into the discussion of any item in detail, I wish to direct the attention of the committee to the time these estimates were last before it on Tuesday last. On that occasion the item taken up was salaries, and the minister made a statement to the house reviewing the administration of the department for the year ended March 31, 1931. As soon as the minister finished I called the attention of the chairman to the fact that I thought the minister had gone out of his way to make a statement under a civil government item which should properly have been made under an outside or general administration item. At that time I claimed the right of replying to the hon. gentleman at such time as we might reach the first item, and the chairman stated that this permission would be granted in view of the fact that the minister had made an extended statement without having gone into the details of any item. With the indulgence of the committee, I now propose to reply to the statement made by the minister.

In doing this it will be necessary to refer to many figures, and I intend to confine myself to a large extent to the notes and figures which I have before me. In reviewing the administration of his department, and in dealing with the deficit of approximately $5,000,000 for the year ended March 31, 1931, the minister said:

The deficit which has occurred in the department is due to the decrease of revenue brought about by the crisis affecting this and other countries of the world, while the increase in expenditure is caused by the obligations for the development of service imposed upon the department by the former administration and authorized by previous parliaments.

The admission that the world-wide depression is the cause of a great part of this deficit is a source of gratification to myself. A provincial election is being carried on in Prince Edward Island, and the papers which support the federal government are stating that the increase in postage has been necessitated by the maladministration of the former Postmaster General. We now have the admission by the present Postmaster General that the falling off in revenue, amounting to approximately $2,000,000, has been caused, not by the maladministration of the former Postmaster General, but by the world-wide depression which has affected every branch of the public service. I want to thank the Postmaster General for affording me an opportunity of showing that this deficit was not brought about—he has never made this accusation—by the maladministration of the department when I had the honour to preside over it.

The minister informed the committee that the decrease in revenue due to the world-wide depression amounted to $2,000,000, and I desire to draw the attention of the committee to what would have been the finances of the Post Office Department if there had not been a world-wide depression. If the revenue had increased in the year ended March 31, 1931, in proportion to the increases shown in the years 1928-29 and 1929-30, the net revenue for 1931 would have been $34,767,680 instead of $31,000,000. The Postmaster General gave the increases in revenue for the years 1928 and 1929, which show that the normal annual increase of revenue ranged from $1,500,000 to as high as $1,750,000. We were told by the minister that the increased expenditure in 1930-31 as compared with 1929-30 amounted to $1,255,974, which would make the expenditure for 1930-31, $36,292,603. All things being equal and with no world-wide depression, the net deficit for 1930-31, based on the proportionate increases for the previous years, would have been only $1,524,923 instead of approximately $5,000,000. This net deficit of $1,524,923 would represent just about the amount expended upon air mail service. It will be remembered by hon. members who sat in the house in 1929 that when as Postmaster General I submitted my estimates at that time, we fully discussed the question whether the administration of the Post Office should be one that would bring about surpluses or would be such as to give the greatest amount of service to the people and at the same time make both ends meet. Members of all groups in the house agreed at the time that no attempt should be made to run the Post Office Department on the basis of surpluses, and that should any surpluses occur, they should be used for the betterment of the service throughout the Dominion.

On that occasion I made the statement that if the revenues should continue to be buoyant as they were in 1927 and 1928 and prior to the end of March, 1929, I had every reason to expect that by the end of the fiscal year 1930 we would be able to make both ends meet, leaving out of the picture the air mail service, which had been inaugurated the year before. The statement submitted by the Postmaster General the other evening bears out the prediction I made at that time; if no world wide depression had struck Canada, the revenues of the Post Office Department would have continued to increase year after year as they had done prior to the end of the fiscal year 1929, and all things being equal, at the end of 1930 the Post Office Department would have been in a position to make both ends meet. That being the case, I fail to see where it can be charged that the present deficit is attributable to any maladministration on the part of the former Postmaster General or his officials. Notwithstanding the fact that in 1926, before I assumed the position of Postmaster General, the rate of postage on letters had been reduced from three to two cents, thereby naturally, one would think, causing a reduction in the revenues of the department, by 1928. The expansion in the volume of business effected by that reduction and the progressive state of affairs in Canada brought about such an increase in the revenue of the department that it still kept above what it had been at the time the reduction was made.

The minister in his statement the other night told the committee of the necessity of making certain curtailments in the postal service of the Dominion. May I say how deeply I regret the curtailment of the general mail service as indicated on that occasion by the minister. In view of the largely increased revenue which must come from the higher rate of postage in connection with first-and second-class matter, and the increased revenue that will be derived from the extra sale of postage stamps to be placed on postal notes, money orders, and cheques, all of which will reach the sum of at least $4,000,000 after the provisions have been in operation for a year, and in view of the contemplated rearrangement of the air mail service as indicated by the minister, there is no need of such curtail-ments as are being made; and especially is there no need for cutting from the railway mail service the sum of $35,000 as indicated by the estimates submitted to the house and referred to by the minister the other day.

The minister told the committee that the curtailment of railway mail service was brought about by certain changes in the hours, in the operations of trains and so forth. That is quite true. When I was Postmaster General the same changes were made in the summer time, but it must not be forgotten that when summer changes in the railway time tables bring about a curtailment of railway mail service, the department has to supplement the loss occasioned by that curtailment by the use of highway communication and other means of giving to the public the daily service they received when the trains were running regularly. When the railway service, as occurs in many cases, is reduced from daily to three times a week, the department cannot leave the mail service at only three times a week between the points affected. If they cannot give the service by rail, they must supplement it by highway or steamboat communication—the service must be maintained. I am not saying that the service has not been maintained, but it is no excuse to say that the estimates should be cut down because of changes in railway communication.

The policy adopted by the minister not to increase the mail train service will, I hope, not be put into effect. What is understood by not increasing the railway mail service is that in future there shall be no extension of services by rail or what is known as railway post offices to cities or districts which, with largely increasing populations, must have that service if they wish to keep up with progress. To close up the very necessary service which is known as the railway post office system is detrimental to the progress of the districts interested. Therefore I claim that the minister should not, and I hope he will not, refuse to give those extensions where the business of the country warrants them, even if this should bring about a deficit in his department. I appeal to the minister not to put that policy into effect except in cases where he finds it absolutely essential so to do. Let me add this to what I have already said in this respect: this service plays a large part in establishing better industrial conditions. I hope the government has not lost faith in the country to such an extent that because of the depression which has struck Canada we are going to curtail a service which will help in the future that industrial development so necessary under present conditions.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Another statement made by the minister was that the rural sections cannot expect any extension. Here again I would express the hope that he will see his way clear not to put that into effect. This service is one of the most important of the whole mail service, and no matter what the economic conditions may be, our rural population should not be sidetracked for the sake of practising small economies.

The minister tells us further that the increase in expenditure is caused by the obligations for development of service imposed upon the department by the former administration and authorized by previous parliaments. I am free, Mr. Chairman, to admit that to a great extent this is quite true. Certain obligations were undertaken which must now be carried out, but will the minister and his colleagues in the government claim that the department should have remained still and not have tried to meet the various demands made upon it for improved services, especially in the far-flung areas of Canada, for the opening up of new territory, for better rural mail service—which was to a great extent inaugurated under the administration of your humble servant—and for better train mail service? I appeal to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens). Would he find any fault—I am sure he would not—with the attitude of the department in bringing about improvements and efficiency in the train mail service and other mail services that we provided at large expense throughout British Columbia and sections of the territories, such as the Mackenzie valley, the district of Vermilion, and other districts that I could name, where at large expense the department undertook to give the people the service to which they were entitled, and for the lack of which not only had they been suffering individually, but the districts concerned had been handicapped in their industrial development?

Can fault be found because we gave better accommodation for the urban mail service? Will the members representing Toronto, Winnipeg, Montreal and other cities undertake to criticize the late administration and the Post Office Department for the magnificent extra service that was provided during my regime? Toronto, under the regime of your humble servant, was given a postal service and postal facilities unequalled on the continent of America, and that service was inaugurated in the main during the time your humble servant was head of that department. It cost money to do it, but parliament agreed to it. Everything was laid before parliament, and parliament was satisfied and willing that these improvements should be made.

Vast improvements were also made in the sub-postal service in the city of Montreal, and improvements were contemplated for the future in order to place Montreal on the same basis as Toronto. That system was started under your humble servant, and I hope the minister will see his way clear to carry out what was started in 1929. I hope he will not neglect the city of Montreal, that he will accommodate the people of that city with a better service than they have to-day, and that there will be no neglect because the government wishes to practise small economies. I trust that the improvements at Montreal will be gone on with, so that Montreal may be placed on the same footing as Toronto. True, it will cost money both to the Post Office Department and the Department of Public Works, but when that work is done you will have two of the largest cities in Canada occupying a position in mail service distribution that it will be difficult to equal in any part of the wide world. That is saying a great deal, but that Canada in its system of mail distribution stands to-day ahead of any other country in the world cannot be gainsaid. Not only do we stand ahead of any other country in our system of mail distribution by land and by sea, by rail and by boat, but we stand also at the head of the great American republic in the system that we have inaugurated for the distribution of mail by air. I shall not at the moment go into the details of the distribution of mail by air. I shall reserve my right to deal with that when the item touching the air mail service is before us for consideration. I shall then undertake to prove to the committee, and to convince them if it is possible, and the government of the day, that they would be making the greatest mistake if they curtailed the mail service by air to such an extent as to cripple what is becoming one of the most important mail services in the Dominion of Canada.

I was referring to obligations that had been imposed upon the government in my time, and will now have to be carried out by the department under its present administration. Yes, there were obligations undertaken, others than those I have mentioned. Take for instance the obligation of increasing the salaries and allowances of the rural postmasters in my time, amounting to practically $700,000 or $800,000 a year. Take the obligation of the increased remuneration of the railway mail clerks, amounting to somewhere in the vicinity of $150,000 or $160,000. Take the obligation imposed by the Civil Service Act of statutory increases, amounting to practically $200,000 per year. Take the obligation imposed under the Civil Service Act again of increases given to the inside service at the rate of $120 a year in some cases, and in other cases at the rate of $60 a year, amounting in all during the last three years of my administration of that department to at least $1,500,000. Had the government adopted a niggardly policy in connection with these matters, no increases would have been given to the postmasters in the rural districts, no increases would have been given to the railway mail clerks, and the department would have opposed the bulk sum of increases under the Civil Service Act. But no, we felt that these men deserved the increases they got. If these increases had not been granted, and we had gone on following in the ordinary course, there would have been no deficit in the department at the end of 1930, instead of a deficit amounting to around $1,500,000. The department in 1929, and before that date, would have been able to make both ends meet, even including the air mail service expenditure. But we accepted those obligations, and I know that no member on either side of the house will undertake to blame the late administration for having given these increases in salaries and allowances. I feel I can stand before this committee and the country and rejoice in the fact that I was able at that time, owing to the condition of affairs, to give those increases.

Right here may I correct a statement the minister made the other night. I know his error was not voluntary because I have faith in his integrity, although I may not have a great deal of faith in Conservative administration of the department. I knew he would not willingly make a misstatement to the house. Dealing with the question of reductions in postage the minister stated that the reduction for Canada took place in 1926 and that in the same year a reduction took place on mail rates to the British empire. The reduction in the British empire postage did not take place until December 25, 1928. In order that the record may be clear I wish to make that correction.

The minister made the following statement:

> Notwithstanding the decrease in revenue, all services have been maintained, existing services have been extended and new services inaugurated. The increase in expenditure cannot be said to be due to the present administration but rather to the extensive nature of the service accorded to the public.

I refer the committee to the words:

> All services have been maintained, existing services have been extended and new services inaugurated.

If I am correctly informed the demands for the inauguration of new services have been consistently turned down by the minister and his department. I fail to see where under his administration new services have been inaugurated. But if they were; and he attempted to take credit for them, how can he blame the old government for the total over-expenditure which has taken place since he assumed charge of the department? He who would eat the pudding should have it laid on his table at noon time each day; once it is eaten, however, it is gone. Therefore the minister cannot blame the old government for the entire over-expenditure and at the same time claim credit for inauguration of new services. May I say I have no apology to offer either for the obligation placed upon the country when I was Postmaster General, or for the obligations which the new Postmaster General had to assume when he took office. My only hope now is that the Postmaster General will continue the policies inaugurated by myself and the officials who so faithfully worked under me. I suggest that he continue to extend those services in Canada, notwithstanding the fact that he may fear a deficit; as the country grows, extension of mail services will help to bring about the change in economic conditions so much desired at the present time. My experience of four years in the administration of the Post Office Department has convinced me that there is not another branch of the public service which contributes so much to the expansion of industry and commerce as does the mail service, if properly administered.

The minister told the committee also that the reduction in postal rates made at various times during the regime of the former government has caused a reduction in revenue. It is true that when the postage was reduced the revenue became less. If it had not been reduced I believe the revenue would have been greater at the end of 1927 than it was at the end of 1926. As I pointed out a few minutes ago, however, notwithstanding the reduction the revenue increased by volume of business to such an extent that in the years 1928, 1929 and 1930 they exceeded those of the year in which the reduction was made from three to two cents. The estimates now before the house contain more reductions than those submitted to the house by the department when I was at its head.

I do not intend to take up more time of the committee in this general statement, but shall confine myself to an analysis of the various items as they are called, and especially those which show a reduction this year as compared with last year.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Mr. CASGRAIN: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to delay the committee, but I believe it to be my duty to make certain observations with reference to occurrences in the present administration of the Post Office Department.

For instance, in regard to the dismissal of postmasters, everybody knows that after the government of the day took office and my hon. friend the present Postmaster General was appointed, a certain letter was published by him in which the statement was made that during his administration he would be as fair as possible to all the postmasters and officials in the inside or outside service. Apparently he wished to leave the impression that the new Postmaster General would act in a way different from his predecessors. We were supposed to be in a new era, experiencing a new venture in politics as compared with previous administrations. However, when we learn what has occurred since the new government took office we wonder if it was necessary to change the government and to put a new minister at the head of the Post Office Department. In the early part of the session there were references to certain famous letters sent to postmasters in different communities asking that an oath be taken by them to the effect that during the time they had been in charge of any postal office in Canada they had not taken any part in the political affairs of the community. In answer to a question put by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) the leader of the government said that never in any case did the government act upon the refusal of a postmaster to sign an affidavit to the effect that he had not participated in politics. On March 31, 1931, the right hon. leader of the government expressed himself as follows—and I am quoting from page 553 of the French version of Hansard:

Mr. Bennett: Mr. Chairman, my attention was directed to the observations made the other day by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) and to the reply made by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie). I know that certain letters similar to that mentioned by the hon. gentleman were sent but they were sent only to those against whom charges of partisanship had been made. So far as I know in no case where they have declined to act upon them, unless they have written a communication in which they have admitted their guilt, has dismissal followed. I am bound to say to my hon. friend that there was a suggestion that if they declined to answer their action should be taken as an acquiescence and that they should be dismissed. Needless to say that suggestion was not acted upon?

Mr. Veniot: And will not be acted upon?

Mr. Bennett: Was not and will not be acted upon.

Those are very emphatic words and would give our postmasters a feeling of security as to the way in which dismissals would be made. On page 1067 of Hansard of April 27, 1931, will be found answers to questions that I put on the order paper. Those answers disclose that in the district which I have the honour to represent certain postmasters were dismissed. For instance, at St. Anne de Beaupré, Raoul Fortier was dismissed upon complaints that were made by my opponent at the last election. The reasons given for the dismissal are as follows:

(Translation)

No inquiry. The postmaster refused to sign a statement denying that he took an active part in politics. Political interference.

It is apparent that there is a discrepancy between this answer and the attitude taken by the right hon. leader of the government as stated in his remarks which I have quoted, that in no case would the government take action for the dismissal of any employees simply because they refused to sign the famous affidavit to the effect that they had not been engaged in any political activities. In this very case I submit there was no reason for the dismissal of the postmaster, the only complaint against him being that he had simply refused to sign that affidavit. This man was dismissed because he had refused to sign the declaration as requested by the officials of the Post Office Department. In this particular case there is something very difficult to understand. As soon as the present government took office apparently everybody from near and far who could make any claim to reward for political activity eagerly came forward to obtain a position in the public service, and at the post office in question there is a person in charge temporarily pending appointment by the Civil Service Commission. But we find that there is a difference of opinion among the various members of the Conservative party as to who should land this job, as is evidenced from a perusal of the return filed in response to my motion for papers and documents relating to dismissals of postmasters. For instance, here is a letter on September 22, 1930, signed by one J. G. A. Couture, addressed to the hon. Postmaster General:

(Translation)

Ste-Anne-de-Beaupré,
Sept. 22, 1930.

Hon. Art. Sauvé,
Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

Sir,—

We hear that it is practically decided to remove the post office of Ste-Anne-de-Beaupré and that Mr. Ratte, on the recommendation of Mr. Maher, of Quebec, will be appointed postmaster. If Mr. Maher wishes to favour a personal friend, all very well, we have no criticism to make, however, what we do find unreasonable is that this post office should be located at a considerable distance from the centre of the village, more than half a mile away from our famous basilica; we must protest against such a change and we trust that you may see fit to vindicate the interests of a whole village preferably to that of a private citizen, and that, if the post office must be removed, you will find a suitable locality in the centre of the village, convenient to the numerous tourists who visit us every year.

Trusting that you will give this matter your earnest attention, we beg to remain, sir,

A number of sincere Conservatives of Ste-Anne.

(Sgd. J. G. A. Couture.

There are, sir, other letters in reference to the same request. The following is another written by Mr. Raoul Fortier, the postmaster:

May I add that if you have in any way at heart the interests of the public, this post office should not be located in his residence and that you should insist that he chooses a suitable locality in the centre of the village.

I have other very interesting letters. For instance, we find that on November 20, 1930, Albert Godbout who was postmaster previous to the appointment of Fortier, in 1922 or 1923, writes to the Postmaster General as follows:

Who is entitled to have the post office? I am the only one who has a suitable place, in the centre of the village; I have the necessary qualifications and have always given entire satisfaction to the public during the years I was postmaster; I need the position because my work only lasts a few months during the summer. There is but one objection, which comes not from the citizens of Ste-Anne-de-Beaupré—you are aware of this through the requests and letters which were addressed to you—but from Mr. Maher, a novice in the ranks of the Conservative party, notwithstanding his ability, he is not in a position to know what the Hon. T. C. Casgrain, Belley, Forget and others, the old Conservative leaders, knew of the Simard and Godbout families in regard to the good work they carried on in their parish and how deserving they are. Certainly, they should not be dealt with unjustly. I wished to place these facts before you as you are the Postmaster General and we knew you long before the arrival of Mr. Maher in our county. We place our trust in you.

These comments, sir, show that all who seek the appointment of postmaster are somewhat divided as to the question of the best site for the post office and as to the choice, among the Conservative party followers, of the person who is most deserving under present circumstances.

The following is another letter, dated January 9, 1931, from Mr. Aimé Couture which was addressed to the Postmaster General:

We protest against placing the post office too far away and request that it be located in the centre of the village.

This is, sir, how the matter stands as regards the post office of the parish of St. Anne de Beaupré. You will first note the statement made by the leader of the government in the middle of March, to the effect that postmasters who refused to sign the requested declaration would not be dismissed unless an inquiry was held. If I be not mistaken, I think the postmaster referred to was dismissed before holding an inquiry. I am not certain whether an inquiry was held since then, however he was dismissed. The principal reason alleged for his dismissal was because he refused to sign the famous affidavit, asserting that he took no part in the election. Now, sir, a second question arises. Let us suppose that this affair is not entirely clear and that an inquiry was held—if it took place.

I think, sir, it will interest the house to know that at present there is a fight taking place in that county—according to the letters which I have just read—with the result that many persons, followers of the party in power, are seeking this position and endeavouring by all possible means to get the appointment, quoting, to establish their claim, their past services to the party. Others contend that the locality, Mr. Siméon Ratté's residence, is not as suitable and central as the present site is for a post office.

There are other questions, sir, which will be discussed shortly with the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General's estimates afford us the only opportunity we have to submit not all the so-called grievances which are addressed to us but the real grievances against the administration of the Post Office Department in the respective counties we represent. On April 27 last, I had the privilege of submitting to the Postmaster General a complaint as to the way things were run at the post office of St. Fidèle, in the county of Charlevoix. According to the letter that I had then received and which I sent to the hon. Postmaster General, this office was so badly run that it was necessary to make two or three trips in order to obtain one's letters, newspapers or parcels. The complainant, Mrs. Louis Desbiens, a widow, contended that there was a young girl employed in the post office as help to the postmistress, who assumed rights to which she was not entitled and bossed everybody. I requested the Postmaster General to remedy this state of affairs, if necessary to hold an inquiry and have this person cease bossing everybody, be fair and give satisfaction to the people of that district. My letter of April 27 has not yet been answered; perhaps the inquiry is being held at present; at all events, the people of that county would very much like to know how things stand and if the postmistress will really be replaced in that locality.

It is held, sir, that when we were in office we greatly made use of the guillotine and we endeavoured to dismiss every postmaster.

I can state that the person to whom I have just alluded was in charge of the post office long before I ever sought the mandate of the county I represent. She was not dismissed by the Liberal government. I am complaining of an existing grievance which should be remedied in the interest of the people of that section of the country I have just mentioned.

Another important matter. It is asserted that the postmasters who took an active part in politics may be dismissed after an inquiry is held—when the sitting member puts in such a complaint—it is well understood that it is generally the member of the county who puts in the complaint and requests the dismissal of certain postmasters after an inquiry is held, if deemed necessary. I protest, sir, because many of my constituents have asked me to do so. Quite a number of my constituents bitterly complain that notwithstanding the trust they placed in my humble person, the defeated candidate seems to have enough influence with certain members of the government to do what he likes and demand certain dismissals. This practice is indulged in by both sides of the house. Such a practice should not exist. My constituents have said to me: We have elected one candidate, we have elected him to represent us. That is the person whom we wish to represent us in the house, and we cannot see why another person who has not been entrusted by us with such a mandate has the power of dismissing or appointing postmasters or other public officials. At a place known as Sault-au Mouton, near Mille-Vaches, a postmaster had been appointed under the preceding administration, perhaps on the recommendation of the local people, vouched for by your humble servant. This person, evidently, during the last election, for one reason or another, actively took part in the election, and, on certain occasions, according to the information I have before me, made certain remarks in his store, in the post office and also at the church door, even in a political sense speaking against your humble servant and the party to which I belong.

This gentleman who evidently is a friend of the party in office is to-day in the service. I wonder if there are two weights and two measures. If those who took an active part in politics on the Liberal side must be punished because they have violated the Civil Service Act, I wonder why those who actively supported the party in power should go unmolested. Is it not unjust to dismiss only those who favoured the Liberal party? There must then be two weights and two measures. My request would probably be brushed aside by the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé), were I to ask him to hold an inquiry on this gentleman who took an active part in the election, even more so than others did in the interest of the Liberal party. I am not aware of anything having been done by the Post Office Department to call this gentleman to time. If it be wrong for a Liberal servant to meddle in politics, the same rule should apply to Conservatives who meddle in politics, in violation of the Civil Service Act.

I shall now point out another post office in the county that I have the honour to represent, at St-Irénée-les-Bains, where political activities have always taken place. Before I represented the county, postmasters were immediately dismissed after each election, this without an inquiry, simply because the elected candidate made a list of all those who he wished dismissed and another of those to whom he wanted to give these positions. I heard that such lists were on file in the Post Office Department under previous administrations, before the advent of the Liberal party in 1921. In the locality just mentioned, an inquiry was held as regards the political activities of the postmaster, the most important witnesses who gave evidence against the postmaster were: Miss Jacqueline Gauthier, a young girl of 12 years old and a Miss Alliette Gauthier, 16 years old. There was another witness of 70 years old, a Mr. Pit Gauthier, the latter was appointed caretaker, or rather postmaster.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Was he appointed postmaster or caretaker?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Postmaster.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I understood caretaker.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Postmaster. A good Conservative.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh! oh!

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Well! I respect those who have such convictions. He was appointed postmaster when 70 years old, at an age when civil servants must retire from the service and be pensioned off.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): At 65 years old.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): At 65 years old. He was appointed at the age of 70 and today he is still in the service. He was the person who gave evidence at that inquiry and I am led to believe that the two young girls bearing the same name and of the ages of 12 and 16 respectively, are his daughters. I do not wish to assert it, but I believe it.

There is another person, a man by the name of Elphège Tremblay, 36 years old, who also gave evidence. However, in his report the commissioner who held the inquiry especially relies on the evidence of the two young girls, whom I have just mentioned, in arriving at the conclusion that the ex-postmaster, Mr. Joseph Girard, truly meddled in politics and is supposed to have taken a much more active part, at election time, than one could in all fairness expect.

I bring out these facts in order to show that in numerous cases an inquiry is held with a well defined intention of dismissing the postmaster. The only thing then needed is one or two persons, whatever may be their age, to give evidence of an insignificant character in order that those making the inquiry may find an excuse for dismissing the postmaster. It was well understood, even before the inquiry, that the postmaster in question was to be dismissed.

In the case mentioned, the ex-postmaster had been called to give his evidence, as well as about ten of the most responsible persons of the parish and district. The ex-mayor, the Messrs. Napoléon Tremblay, Edmond Gauthier, Lucien Girard, Médéric Gauthier, Joseph Trudel, the present mayor, Michel Tremblay, François-Xavier Gauthier, had all given evidence that the postmaster, to their knowledge, had not meddled in politics and had not acted in a way that might be prejudicial to the interests of the Conservative party.

I am placing these facts before the house to show that often these inquiries are not seriously carried out and the conclusion is based on the evidence of individuals like those I have just pointed out: two young girls who, I have reason to believe,—I do not wish to assert it, in all fairness to the new postmaster —were the daughters of the new postmaster. The latter, who was seeking the position, was appointed later on, he also gave evidence himself against his predecessor. He had without the shadow of a doubt an interest in doing so.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): Carried.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Not yet; I have other cases to bring forth. Another dismissal took place in the county which I am privileged to represent, at a place called "Les Eboulements". In the latter place, the inquiry was held, and I wish to state in all fairness that there may have been some ground for the conclusions arrived at by the commissioner. However, I find in the correspondence placed on the table of the house that the parish priest wrote personally to the hon. Postmaster General, on October 21, 1930, and made certain representations as regards the special qualifications of the postmaster who was then in office and over whom an inquiry was to be held. He stated that the latter was the best qualified person to fill the post to the satisfaction of the entire population of the village. In this letter which follows, he specially points out:

Last year, we succeeded in obtaining a suitable post office kept by a competent and serious person. Mr. J. H. Tremblay, appointed postmaster five or six months ago, almost against his own wishes but on the insistence of all well thinking persons, he fills the post to perfection.

Moreover, I believe he is the only one in our village who measures up to the qualifications required by the Civil Service Commission. I take the liberty of writing to you these facts so as to earnestly request you to see that this gentleman is not dismissed, notwithstanding the intrigues of a small group of people who believe that after an election, the world must come to an end.

Mr. DUGUAY (Translation): This is no compliment to that group of persons.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): No, not quite. The hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Duguay), in the course of his long career—if he has had a long career in this house as representative of the people of his county—will learn that often people are specially fitted and qualified to fill certain posts, either because they are more temperate, more moderate or more conscientious and are held in high esteem by all in the locality, and this, in preference to others who may perhaps be possessed of a higher education, but who, owing to their character, their ways and in certain cases their life in the past, have not the sympathy and consideration of the public which they must serve. And it is, I think, with these considerations in mind that the parish priest wrote that letter to the hon. Postmaster General. I make this statement subject to correction of course.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Who signed that letter?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): The Rev. J.-C. Tremblay, parish priest of "Les Eboulements".

I take the liberty of writing to you to earnestly beseech you to see that this gentleman is not dismissed, notwithstanding the intrigues of a small group of people who believe that after an election, the world must come to an end. I do not care to know whether Mr. Tremblay is "red" or "blue," I place myself above party affiliations, from the viewpoint of the public welfare of our village. For a number of years, the post office here was, at certain hours, a disorderly place. We have remedied this, especially by having appointed as postmaster a man who has the authority of seeing that order is kept and that people behave. Nothing would be so regrettable as to see this good brought to nought through the whims of petty local political grudges.

Not wishing, sir, to take up any more of your precious time. I earnestly beg of you to allow Mr. J. H. Tremblay, the present postmaster of "les Eboulements," to carry on his work. I personally ask this favour, without being urged by anybody, nor influenced by political motives, but conscious of doing my duty and with the public welfare in view.

I know, judging by the public spirit which you have always shown in the past and which has always drawn my open admiration, that you are a man who understands the sentiments which have prompted me in the above request and have also induced me to place the common weal above petty party intrigues. . . . And I shall unceasingly pray.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Who signed that letter?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): The parish priest, the Rev. Mr. Tremblay. It is on file, I do not hide it; he did it in good faith and that is why I have read it.

I now wish, sir, to broach another subject. It cannot be further held that it is owing to the unsettled public finances that certain expenditure is not carried out in the Post Office Department. I am aware that the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) took up with the hon. Postmaster General the financial question of this department. I do not wish to venture on these grounds simply because I do not think I have the knowledge required, nor am I well acquainted enough with the work of the Post Office Department. May I, however, simply draw the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that last year, it was thought proper, following the policy inaugurated by the ex-Postmaster General, to establish certain rural mail routes in order to link certain centres, ranges (rangs), concessions and districts to certain villages. Many of these routes were provided under the Liberal regime. Last year, in 1930, a rural mail route had been decided upon and was to be established in a locality near Murray Bay, between Pointe-au-Pic and St-Irénée; another in the parish of St-Tite-des-Caps, county of Montmorency, and also at a place called Courcelette, in the parish of St-Fidèle, Charlevoix county. Many of these rural mail services are not in operation. I must add, in all fairness to the hon. Postmaster General, that after I had discussed this matter with him—he is very obliging, and when he can do something he does so—one of these routes was put into service, either by his orders or those of his deputy. At St-Tite-des-Caps the routes had been decided upon and were to be put into service, however, they are not in operation yet.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): Why did you not make this request when you were in office?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): These rural mail routes were ordered by the late administration, tenders were asked for last summer (1930), and contracts were ready to be given out. Since tenders were asked for and that it is a question which affects the whole district's welfare, it is in the public's interest, to my mind, that this mail service be established as soon as possible.

In this respect, I wish to point out to the Postmaster General what is happening in his department. In the present case both the present and the late administration must be blamed. When it is a question of rural mail service an endeavour is often made to induce contractors to tender at too low a figure so that they are left in a position to pay only miserable wages. In the interest of the Post Office Department and in order to obtain a suitable service throughout the country, the government should not be so sparing, it should show itself more generous in the grants of mail contracts and accept tenders which are sometimes not the lowest in order to provide a better service. Paltriness and parsimony in the administration of a department like that of the post office should not exist. When reductions are made in the budget of the mail service, as it was done this year, sooner or later the efficiency of the service suffers and considerable trouble follows throughout the country districts.

For instance, a Mr. David Morency, of St-Tite-des-Caps wrote on—

Mr. MERCIER (St-Henri) (Translation): Will you allow me a question? Would it not be possible with the new three cent stamp in force to obtain all you request?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I have my doubts, even with the excellent measures which the government intends to enact.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): You have not forgotten the policy of your own government.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): This gentleman wrote on April 8, 1931, to the postal service, at Ottawa, a letter from which I read the following excerpt:

By the same mail that I am writing to you I am forwarding my final tender to the Post Office Department, at Quebec, in connection with the rural mail contract. I am asking $795 in order that this contract will not be given to Liberals. Ever since December, the tenders have been getting lower every month. They must surely now be low enough, otherwise we shall have to appeal to the generosity of the hon. Mr. Bennett in order to provide for his mail carriers, if they are to have their three meals a day.

What I wish to bring out, sir, is that in connection with these mail contracts—whether they emanate from Conservative or Liberal governments—there should exist some standard upon which tenders should be based in order that those who are given these contracts should be afforded enough to provide for themselves and their families, and also be in a position, when the year finishes, to make both ends meet, thereby not be forced to declare a deficit.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): They must also provide for their horses.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): And also their horses. I would request the Postmaster General—I know he is well disposed, to be fair to everybody by providing such rural mail service and not discontinuing any, and this, in the interest of all the districts mentioned, because this rural mail service is indispensable to the good administration of the Post Office Department. I feel confident that the government will acknowledge its necessity and establish as soon as possible these various rural mail services.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Mr. Chairman, the speech of the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Casgrain), somewhat puzzles me. I understand, according to his remarks, that the hon. Postmaster General dismissed some postmasters. Could he tell us how many were dismissed in the province of Quebec?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I shall first give an answer to the hon. member for "l'Islet" (Mr. Fafard); his question is a serious one and I want my answer to be so. He must have read Hansard since the outset of the session and he must have noticed the number of postmasters who were dismissed since August, 1930, as well as their names. If he wishes I can give him the page of Hansard where he can read for himself the names of these postmasters, as well as where the post offices are located. If the hon. member for l'Islet desires I can give him an immediate answer.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): That is precisely what I asked for.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): 205.

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): Would the hon. Postmaster General speak a little louder and give us the number of dismissals?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): 205.

Mr. BRASSET (Translation): Have there been any dismissals since that time?

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): How many in the province of Quebec?

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): Is that in one day?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): 101 in the province of Quebec.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): I can hardly understand that out of 205 dismissals of postmasters, almost half belong to Quebec. I can only see one possible explanation: namely that the hon. Postmaster General held inquiries not only in respect to federal political activities but also as to provincial activities, and I think that some dismissals must have been made because certain postmasters would not vote for the hon. Postmaster General when he was a member of the Quebec Legislature. And what I have just stated is a more serious state of affairs than one imagines. I have before me a letter which will prove to the hon. Postmaster General that he has dismissed postmasters because they meddled in politics and that he is replacing them by persons who are taking a more active part in politics than the former. I shall read only an excerpt:

Will you be kind enough to take up this matter . . .

. . .The dismissal of the postmaster of St. Roch-des-Aulnaies, in my county, was requested:

Will you be kind enough to take up this matter without delay because our provincial elections will soon take place. If this matter was being acted upon, we would be in a position to obtain wonderful results in the parish of Saint-Roch.

And the person who asked for the dismissal of this postmaster, writes a long letter to the Postmaster General to assure him that he has been a Conservative all his life and gives proof of his honesty.

He ends by saying. . . .

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): He is a great partisan.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): He ends by saying.

I therefore rely on your best endeavours, and rest assured that you shall have your reward.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): What is the name of this gentleman?

[Mr. Veniot.]

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): It is a letter written by Mr. Arthur Ouellette, of St.-Roch-des-Aulnaies to Mr. Boniface Bélanger, an ex-candidate of Mr. Sauvé.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, among these 205 dismissals one must not forget that there are cases of bad administration and that they are not only cases of political partisanship. I am somewhat astonished to note that the hon. member for l'Islet (Mr. Fafard) and the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Casgrain) seem to be offended over these dismissals. I just took my cue from the leader of their party, the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), when he was Prime Minister of Canada; in 1923, he stated in this House that the policy to follow—a policy moreover followed by previous governments —was to hold an inquiry when serious complaints were made, appoint a commissioner and accept his decision. The hon. member for l'Islet and the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay may read in the Hansard of 1923, the statement of the right hon. Mr. King. It is also the rule to follow when the Postmaster General does not wish to take upon himself the responsibility of dismissing a postmaster without a serious complaint or without first having held an inquiry.

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): Did not the hon. Postmaster General state, following the election, that he would not indulge in political dismissals? He was given great credit throughout the country for having made this statement. However, does he not now mix up politics with these dismissals?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): The hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Bouchard) is a man of letters, an author; he will allow me to express to him my astonishment in noting that he has not carefully read the statement I made at that time. I stated, following my appointment to the cabinet, that no dismissals would be made by my department without having the proof of the guilt of a postmaster, either as regards bad administration or political interference. That was my statement and it seems to me that it is quite clear.

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): I wish to thank the hon. Postmaster General for the fine compliment he has paid me, however, I think he deserves these more than I do in the present circumstances, because of the admirable letters he wrote to the postmasters of Quebec.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): With reference to these letters.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): You clearly understand; you are also a man of letters.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): For a long time we have understood one another well.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): The inconvenient part of it, is that one is in the Post Office Department.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): And the other in the ditch!

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): As to the letters addressed to postmasters they were sent with the purpose of affording them a fair deal and also to avoid the costs of an inquiry. I loyally stated to a representative of the Toronto Globe, that the first letter had been altered, because the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) had drawn my attention to the fact that the French version did not convey the same meaning as did the English version. I altered this letter and I think that there is no ground to reproach me for having done so. I had in mind protecting the postmasters and notifying them that charges had been made against them. If they confessed being guilty of political interference, the costs of an inquiry were avoided. If they wished for an inquiry, it was granted. I think that such a course was but reasonable.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): If they said: Yes, no inquiry. If they said: No, you held an inquiry.
