Henry & Morrison in their book on feeding farm animals have this to say in a paragraph on condimental foods: "Ifg animals are out of condition, they should receive special treatment according to their ailments. A good manager of livestock will have no use for these high-priced condimental foods or condition powders; a poor manager will never have fine stock by employing them."

A recent Georgia College of Agriculture bulletin on the subject contains the following conclusions:

The brand of stock food is no indication that it is what is required to put livestock in good condition.

The claims of condimental stock-food manufacturers, when not ludicrous and preposterous, are misleading and exaggerated.

No one remedy or combination of drugs will serve as a treatment for all diseases and ailments of all kinds of farm livestock.

When manufacturers do use useful drugs in compounding their feeds and tonics, the quantity used is insufficient to be beneficial.

A run-down condition or loss of appetite caused by overwork or an insufficient variety of food materials may often be corrected by a change of diet and a laxative. Common salt should be kept withmin reach of all herbivorous animals.

Value Of Eggs In The Daily Diet

From a bulletin published by the State Agricultural college, New Jersey, U.S.A., entitled "Milk and Eggs," we extract the following information re the value of eggs in the diet.

Composition of the hen's eggs compared with moderately lean beef:

	Hen's egg Per cent.	Lean beef Per cent.
Water	73.7	70.5
Fat	10.5	8.5
Protein	14.8	20.0
Mineral matter	1.0	1.0

The protein in the egg is nearly pure albumen. The yolk of an egg is of greater nutritive value than the white. It is rich in the following mineral salts: calcium, iron potassium and phospherous and contains them in such a form that they are readily absorbed and utilized by the body. The white of an egg is rich in sulphur.

Value as Food

By comparing the composition of the egg with that of lean meat it will be noticed that eggs make a good substitute for meat. Nine average-sized eggs weigh one pound and contain about the same amount of nourishment as one pound of beef. As eggs contain no starch or sugar they should be served with such foods as rice, bread, fruit, potatoes and other vegetables or made into desserts with sugar, tapioca, and similar materials.

Digestibility of Eggs

Raw eggs are very easily digested. The digestibility of cooked eggs depends upon the manner in which they are cooked. They should be cooked at low temperature. Egg albumen begins to coagulate at 134 deg. F., becomes jelly-like at 160 deg. F., and, when heated to the boiling point, 212 deg. F., becomes a tough mass and very indigestible.

ACCOUNT BOOK FOR THE FARMER

The Department of Agriculture has made a special effort to secure a farm account book which would be usable on the farm. It is thought that the women can be of great assistance in keeping the accounts of the farm which is so necessary in order to determine when and where their profits and losses occur. The account book is available to every farmer who desires to purchase it at the department.

CANADIAN HOMES OF CHARACTER

Prairie Builders, Calgary

THE size of this house is 25 ft. 8 in. wide by 34 ft. 8 in. deep, with a sun parlor at the left 10 ft. wide by 14 ft. deep. The construction is with brick or tile walls in the first story and frame above covered with cement stucco finished with a "pebble dash." The roof is low pitched hip roof covered with Spanish tile, the sun parlor also has a low pitch Spanish tile roof. The lower portion of this roof covering over the projected bay 'n the living room and connected with the porch room, alll covered with tile and give a very artistic appearance to the front of the house.

The vestibule entrance at the right has colonial treatment with semi-circle roof covered with copper, and with Ionic column each side of entrance. This vestibule opens into the main living room extending across the full front of house 24 ft. in length by 12 ft. in width. At the right end is an open fireplace with book shelves at either side and small ornamental windows over. At the rear of this room on the right is the main staircase with double platforms projected on the outside and well lighted with windows. These stairs are on the combination order with basement stairs and grade entrance underneath and short section of stairs from the kitchen to the main platform.

At the left of the living room and connected by wide glazed French doors is the dining room 12 by 14 ft. with sideboard at the rear and china closets on each side. Connecting directly with the kitchen at the right, which is 11 ft. 6 in. by 12 ft., is a glazed piazza. This house, though not large, is very compact, roomy and convenient. The first floor is finished in mission stain and natural oak floors. The basement is full under the main part. It is estimated to build this house for $7,500 to $8,000, exclusive of heating and plumbing.

The second story has three good-sized chambers, ample closets and large bathroom in the rear with a wide sleeping porch across the rear enclosed with glazed windows. The construction of this house and finish throughout is strictly first class. It is designed to use dark Oriental brick in the first story with deep sunk joints and tint the stucco above, staining all the trimmings, cornices, etc., a dark brown with the sash painted white. This combination, together with the tile roof (either green or red) will give a very striking and artistic appearance.

JOHNNY TOLD A LIE

None of our 14 Classrooms can contain more than 24 pupils.

After dissecting the contents of the different Business College advertisements, our teacher put the following problem up to our pupils:—

"If a Business College has only one teacher to each fifty pupils, and the principal guarantees the public that at no time shall there be more than 25 pupils in each class, and also that the student shall have the undivided attention at all times of the teacher."

Question: "How can that be done?"

One of our pupils answered: "Very easy, sir! The principal did like Johnny; and: Johnny told a lie."

We were rather surprised to hear this from the lips of this straightforward lad, and reprimanded him for this wicked suggestion.

"Well," he said, "look at the picture of their school, compare it with yours, and then go and see my sister. She will tell you more."

We did, and found out that after the girl had spent over $150.00 for tuition fees and books and nine months of her time, she is still working for a pittance in "THE CHEAP STORE."

Further investigation revealed many similar cases; that is why we decided to establish ourselves in Calgary. There is need for a better business college, where pupils are not crowded like sardines in buildings without adequate protection in case of a fire conflagration, and where electric fans are not required to "keep the air pure."

All we offer the public is better service. Our total fee for each course will be agreed upon when enrolling, and when you are efficient then our service is completed, not when your financial patience is exhausted.

These widely-advertised champion typists would have become typists if they had gone to a shoe shine parlor to learn it. They are gifted. The student to advertise is the one who had to be MADE a typist, regardless of her natural adaptability. We have no hopeless cases, as others claim in their circular. We offer courses in:

TELEGRAPHY and RAILROAD ACCOUNTANCY

Amongst our PUPILS are three persons who were allowed to teach telegraphy in a local business college (which advertises not to be deceived by the claims of others), as well as eleven C. P. R. employers, one of whom is the head of a department.

BOOKKEEPING, ADVERTISING, SALESMANSHIP

What is a business college that does not offer a thorough course in advertising, the backbone of business, and in salesmanship, of which the same can be said?

SHORTHAND, TYPEWRITING, PENMANSHIP

See OUR display of priceless masterpieces of Penmanship in Young & Kennedy's store.

Room and Board arranged for non-resident pupils under continuous supervision of the Directors of this College.

This advertisement is written by our expert advertising teacher, Mr. Harry Lumsden, of New York; and the Business Course is under the personal supervision of Mr. E. A. Cast, principal, graduate of Valparaiso, Ind., University, of whom such an authority as Mr. A. M. Shafer, President of U. S. A. California State Normal School, writes: "He is the peer of any Business Educator in the world."

NOTES ON THE ALBERTA RAILROAD COLLEGE

The Alberta Railroad College, situated in the Princess theatre building, Eighth avenue east, has installed in connection with its railway course, full courses in bookkeeping, penmanship, shorthand, advertising, typewriting and salesmanship.

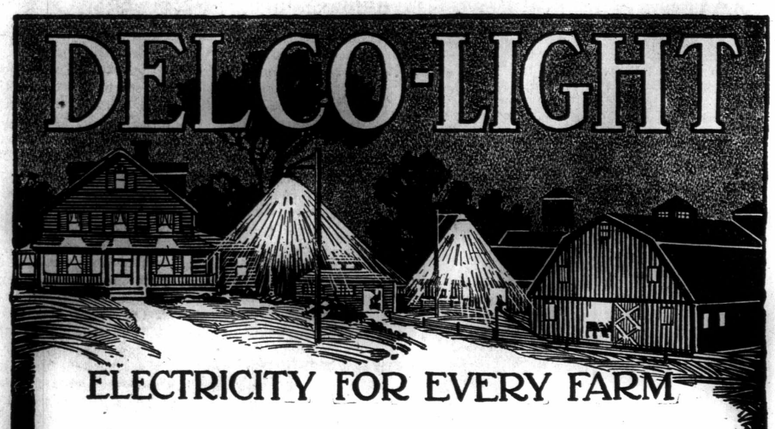
The college consists of fourteen classrooms, large, nicely decorated, bright, clean, with southern exposure and full glass front, accommodating classes of twenty-five, to which the teacher devotes his personal attention.

Equipment is very modern, automatic transmitters are already in use, and the installation of all up-to-date instruments is in progress.

Several makes of typewriters will be used to allow the students to learn fully the technical differences in the different machines.

The latest models of adding machines, dictaphones, compositors, etc., will be used by the student until proficiency has been attained.

The management of this new business college is just as progressive in its constitution as in its pedagogy.



Following the example of the "Great Ford," it is co-operative, guaranteeing the most splendid results and the greatest efficiency. Each and every instructor has proven to be master and expert of the subject he is teaching, as well of splendid physique and vitality, conditions so important for the successful pedagogue. They are young men, with new ideas, new methods and new experiences, who will be only satisfied with the latest devices as equipment for their school.

Mr. E. A. Cast, principal, assisted by a competent staff, is a graduate of the Valparaiso (Ind.) university, a penman of international fame, and has been frequently very flatteringly commented upon in educational papers. He has been successfully conected for fifteen years with the biggest business colleges in the States, and of him it was said that he was the peer of any business college educator in the world. The Telegraph and Railroad department is under the supervision of Mr. J. H. van Koolbergen, a graduate of the Holland Technical Government Institute (railroad department), who, previous to his coming to Canada, has had a world-wide railroad experience, and was for three years district freight agent of the C.P.R. in Montreal. He speaks seven languages fluently. One of its ex-pupils wrote a very typical letter: "Ask my wife what she thought of the Alberta Railroad and Business college, when I handed her my first pay check." Amongst its present students are eleven C.P.R. employees, some already occupying responsible positions.

MARKET AND FINANCE

WINNIPEG LETTER

Wheat Markets Not Very Active

(Thompson, Sons & Co.)

Wheat—There has not been much activity in the wheat markets during the week ending today. The weather all over North America has been favorable for harvest work, and threshing is reported as far north as Minnesota and South Dakota, and new wheat is being got ready for the markets. But until the food controlling authorities of the United States and Canada come down definitely with the prices they may be going to fix, and the regulations they will make for general trading, the grain and milling trades do not know where they are at, and grain business is being done on a small and narrow scale. In consequence of this, new wheat where it is being threshed, instead of being forwarded to terminal centers, is being stored in the elevators at the country shipping points by the farmers. The country dealers hesitate to buy it, and the farmers for their part don't want to sell it, as prices offered them are not satisfactory in view of the undecidedness as to what the price will be, which the controllers and supervisors are to settle upon. The farmers look for a price that will encourage them—in face of the higher cost and scarcity of labor, and the higher prices for everything they require to buy to carry on the work of farming—to increase production or at least to increase acreage. The gossip of the moment as to what United States Commissioner Hoover thinks about what the price should be, leads us to repeat what we wrote in our last week's letter, namely that he seems more inclined to lean towards the interest of the consumer in lower prices than to support the producer in getting a price that will make for larger production. No doubt definite prices and regulations will be promulgated by September 1. In the meantime in the winter wheat belt of the United States and along the southern line of the United States spring wheat country, the country elevators are filling up with new wheat. The movement of wheat in the United States from July 1 to this date, as shown by the receipts at 11 principal centers, compared with the same period last year, at same centers, is this year 19,093,862 bushels against 59,522,375 bushels last year. This again is reflected in the United States visible supply, which actually decreased last week 275,000 bushels against an increase of 2,238,000 bushels a year ago, and the total is now down to 4,943,000 bushels compared with 50,998,000 bushels last year. The United States visible at the present time is the lowest on record. Our Canadian visible supply made the big decrease last week of 4,402,896 bushels against a decrease of 2,055,368 bushels a year ago, the total now being only 4,707,683 bushels against 18,701,409 bushels last year. The large decrease in the Canadian visible last week is owing to the hustling forward of shipments for the imperial government, in order to fill ocean tonnage provided by them, and the great decrease shows how stocks are being cleaned down; therefore a keen demand for the first run of the new wheat is bound to show up as soon as ever the supervisors fix on satisfactory prices.

Last week world's shipments in the shape of wheat and flour were fair, equalling 9,663,000 bushels of wheat, against 8,747,000 bushels last week and 9,302,000 bushels last year. The quantity from the United States and Canada came to 7,217,000 bushels and a good part of that is in the shape of flour. Just at present flour shipments are preferred to wheat by the imperial authorities on account of the manufactured product saving vessel space as compared with the unground wheat. From recent statements by high authorities, the United Kingdom is well supplied with breadstuffs in spite of the submarines, but the French and Italian requirements are large, and these buyers are overbidding the United Kingdom. Australia keeps shipping an average of over 1,500,000 bushels per week, and has a big lot of old crop yet to ship and another new crop growing. India ships around 700,000 bushels each week, and has large stocks on hand, and is also preparing to send a new crop on an increased acreage. The Argentine is now a small shipper and will be so until February, but reports of her new crop are very favorable. Harvesting in the United Kingdom is making good progress and crops show improvement; the potato crop is said to be very large. In the United States there is also improvement in crops, and harvesting is now general up to the Canadian boundary. If reports are correct, the potato crop this year in the United States will turn out the largest on record; potatoes are going to be cheap the coming fall, everybody growing them and crop prospect good.

In our Winnipeg market there is a keen demand for wheat, but supply is down to about 100 cars per day, and, therefore, trade is on a very small scale, making it difficult to fill buying orders. The supervisors have fixed $2.40 as the price of old and new 1 northern up to Aug. 31. The three top grades, 1, 2 and 3 northern, are now all the same price, $2.40, and No. 4 only 4c under that. One month ago today 1 northern was $2.40, 2 northern $2.37, 3 northern $2.32 and No. 4 $2.20. The weather over the three western provinces has been very favorable in the past week, favorable for the grain not yet matured, and favorable for the progress of harvesting, which may be said to be general now. From practically every district come reports of surprising improvement in crops, particularly in the estimated yield of wheat. With a continuation of average weather, new wheat will be moving freely within three or four weeks. Today's cash prices are: 1 northern $2.40, 2 northern $2.40, 3 northern $2.40, No. 4 $2.36, No. 5 $2.18, No. 6 $1.93, feed wheat $1.72. The October futures closed $2.15.

Oats—The oats market continued to decline in sympathy with the decline in oats and corn in the United States, and on Saturday our October oats touched 60½c. A little reaction has taken place since, and today's close showed October at 62¼, 4c lower than a week ago. There is a fair demand for cash oats, chiefly of the lower grades, but receipts are small. The western oats crop is poor in yield. Today's cash prices are: 2 C.W. 62¼, 3 C.W. 60½, extra 1 feed 60¼, 1 feed 58¼, 2 feed 57¼. Futures closed: October 62¼, December 58¼, May 62¼.

Barley—The barley market is quiet and steady. Today's prices: No. 3, $1.22; No. 4, $1.18; rejected and feed, $1.13. The October future closed $1.15.

Flax—The flax prices had a decline of several cents towards the middle of the week, but walked right up again in the last two days, cash flax being 1c to 2c higher on the week. Today's prices are: 1 N.W. $3.35; 2 C.W. $3.29, 3 C.W. $3.19. Futures closed: October $3.35, November $3.29, December $3.24½.

All prices quoted above are based on delivery in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

WINNIPEG LIVESTOCK

Union Stockyards, Winnipeg, Aug. 23.—Livestockk receipts Thursday, 2,300 cattle, 450 hogs. Cattle trading was steady at unchanged prices on butcher steers, cows and heifers. Bulls and oxen also sold steady. Stockers and feeders were in fairly good demand at firm prices. Veal calves sold steady. Milch cows and springers slow. Hogs sold 10c stronger, selects selling at $18.50. Receipts light. Eighty cars of stock reported for Friday's market.

TORONTO LIVESTOCK

Toronto, Aug. 23.—Receipts at the Union stockyards were 260 cattle, 60 calves, 1,259 hogs and 491 sheep.

The market generally today was featureless, owing to the small receipts and many of the big buyers were not present. Hogs sold at $19.50, the same as paid by some of the packers Wednesday, but the sales were few, although there was quite a run of this stock. Some sales were made at $19.25.

In the lamb and sheep market prices continue high and unsteady. The receipts have been fairly heavy, but without any great demand. Prices are therefore subject to wide changes daily. Calves and sheep were selling around $15.00 to $15.25. Cattle were slow today, prices easing off 15c to 25c per hundredweight all round and the run was very light.

FINANCIAL

NEW YORK MARKET BUSY

New York, Aug. 23.—Latest aspects of the government's price-fixing program were assigned as the reason for the further weakenss of today's stock market. Important shares recorded additional declines of two to six points, but rallies in the final hour materially reduced many losses, some issues closing at net gains.

Trading was on the most extensive scale of any session for several weeks, aggregating 815,000 shares. Coalers, steels, coppers, all the active equipment and numerous specialties were most often the center of irregular bear drives.

The oil stocks, which are expected to suffer from drastic price revision, lost more ground than any other group, Texas company making an extreme loss of 13 points and Mexican Petroleum two. On the curb, Standard Oil issues registered gross declines of three to 30 points.

Many margin or speculative accounts were wiped out in the course of the day's operations. Liquidation for out-of-town interests, as evidenced by the heavy offerings of commission houses, contributed measurably to the severe setback of the morning.

Other factors favorable to the bears were furnished by fresh developments in the Russian military situation, the extension of domestic labor troubles and another reduction in steel price schedules, notably pig iron. United States Steel fell 2½ points to 118½, its lowest price in two months, but it closed at a net loss of ¾ of a point.

Bonds were heavy, the Liberty issue, however, showing firmness at 99.92 to 99.96. Total sales, par value, $2,432,000. Bonds were unchanged on call.

CAPITAL PLENTIFUL IN ALBERTA

In spite of the war and other drawbacks, Alberta seems to be growing. New concerns are springing up each day with capital enough to receive recognition, as an incorporated firm, from the provincial authorities. In Calgary alone during one week in July several companies were incorporated with a total capital of over $700,000, while other cities and towns in Alberta have done nearly as well. The following are some of the companies recently incorporated

The Alexandra Hotel Co., Ltd., office at Calgary, with capital of $10,000.

The Canadian Stewart Gold Mines, Ltd., office at Edmonton, with capital of $500,000.

The Davis and Chapman, Ltd., office at Edmonton, with capital of $20,000.

The Claresholm Light, Water and Power Co., Ltd., office at Calgary, with capital of $100,000.

The Universal Motor Cars, Ltd., office at Calgary, with capital of $50,000.

The Williamson Motor Co., Ltd., office at Calgary, with capital of $50,000.

The Machin Motors, Ltd., office at Calgary, with capital of $20,000.

The General Political Situation In Canada

such a procedure is evidently not in great danger of politics interfering with the management of the road—as has been shown in the conduct of the Intercolonial railway—is ever present. The only method would be for the government to appoint a strong commission, entirely removed from politics, to handle the transcontinental railway. This will be a fine opportunity for the proof of the statement put forth by advocates of public ownership that the people as a whole can successfully operate a system of Dominion-wide importance.

Soon the crop of candidates for the civic administration will be noticed. For the mayoralty there will be a race between two or three favored sons. It is not expected that Mayor Costello will offer for another term. The current political gossip is that he will be a candidate on the Conservative ticket for one of the Calgary federal ridings. At the present, Aldermen Ruttle, Adshead and Marshall are looked upon as possible entires. Alderman Ruttle has for a long time had the desire of being chief magistrate of the city, and his friends feel that now is the acceptable time. Ald. Adshead, who will have the support of the labor men, has been a strong man in the council and will have support throughout the city. Ald. Marshall has many friends who are anxious to see him in the field, but he has not stated that he will consent to run. Just now the outlook is very bright that the labor men will be represented by one of their number in the mayoralty chair.

PRAIRIE FETE TO BE HELD AUGUST 29

At a well attended meeting of St. Mark's guild on Tuesday, it was decided to hold a Prairie fete, August 29, weather permitting. Some of the novel features of entertainment which have been planned for this affair are a Maypole dance by 30 girls, to music by the Veterans' band; a Punch and Judy show in charge of Mr. Miller; an art gallery, in charge of Mr. Leslie; flower and candy stalls; a "Variety" booth, and numerous games. It was suggested that in the place of fireworks in the evening a huge bonfire be lighted, and an effigy of the kaiser be burned. The Crescent Heights band will play in the evening.

Miss Marjorie Postlethwaite was the hostess of a delightful tea last week given in honor of Miss Hattie English, who is leaving shortly for Gulelph to take up a course in domestic science. During the afternoon the honored guest was showered with travelling comforts for her journey east and dainty accessories for her dressing table at college. Among those present were: The Miss Hattie and Marion English, Miss Kathleen Montgomery, Miss Edith Silvester, Miss Romala Hortsman, Miss Gwyneth Vincent, Miss Francis McCaffrey, Miss Helen Findlay, Miss Dorothy Stavert and Miss Mary Postlethwaite.

MOUNT ROYAL COLLEGE NOTES

Preparations are being made for a large increase in out-of-town students for the fall term at Mount Royal college on the morning of September 10. The classrooms, corridors, dining room, etc., have all been decorated.

The staff of teachers is complete for next term. All vacancies have been filled by teachers of outstanding ability and experience. Among the new members of the staff will be Gordon V. Pook, M.A., teacher of Latin and history. Mr. Pook is an honor graduate of Toronto university, as well as an honor graduate of the Toronto University School of Pedagogy. Mr. Pook is thoroughly interested in young life and will be closely associated with the social and athletic life of the college.

Miss Dora Adams, who will be the new director of expression, physical culture and dramatic art, is a young woman of charming personality, wide experience in her work and bringing with her the highest testimonials from prominent educationalists of Toronto and other eastern cities. She is taking post-graduate work during the summer in physical culture at Harvard university.

Miss Edith Bloomer, B.A., graduate of Manitoba university, experienced teacher and fine personality, will have charge of grades VII and VIII.

The college has been very successful in passing a large number of students in the recent departmental examinations, both in the night and public school grades. And all last term's commercial students are occupying good positions in the city and province.

The Conservatory of Music is being reorganized and will be on a larger and better basis than ever, with a competent staff taking up all branches of music.

Present indications are that most of last year's resident students will be returning, while the inquiries from new students greatly exceed any former years. In addition to the out-of-town students, Mount Royal college has a large number of day students from the city each year in the several departments.

FLOWER SHOW AT VICTORIA PARK VERY BEAUTIFUL

In spite of the fact that so many people are out of town, a total of 2,000 persons attended the show on Wednesday and 3,500 on Thursday, which shows that the people of Calgary are very much interested in flowers and vegetables. This is the tenth annual exhibition that the Horticultural society of Calgary ever held. On entering the building a most beautiful array of flowers could be seen, colors ranging from pure white to all shades of red and other warm hues which are almost bewildering even to the uncultured observer. Special mention can be made of the display of George Ticehurst, gardener with Eugene Cost of Mount Royal. It is a greenhouse collection, comprising palms, ferns, coleus, begonias and many other indoor plants. The Emery Floral company are the only florists of the many in Calgary who have an exhibit at the horticultural exhibition this year.

A real treat was given to those who attended in the afternoon, for there was a class of seventeen song birds on display. Their music, combined with the band which was in attendance, made everybody feel happy and kept them in good humor all afternoon.

The entries were about the same in number as last year, but the volume of both flowers and vegetables was greater on account of the larger amount given in prizes for more extensive exhibits. In previous years the fire and police departments had exhibits, but this year nearly all are people who are interested in flowers and vegetables.

The Sydney Houlton Challenge cup was won for the third time by the Tuxedo Park exhibit, into whose possession it now passes permanently. The Glengarry and Killarney Ratepayers' association took second prize, and Crescent Heights third.

Refreshments were served for the benefit of the Ogden home, and musical selections were given during the evening.

All the winning gardens in the garden competition will be open for the inspection of the public on Sunday afternoon from 2 to 6 p.m.

WALLACE REID AND ANITA KING IN "THE SQUAW MAN'S SON"

Having scored such a pronounced success in "The Golden Fetter," Wallace Reid, supported by Anita King, will be seen at the Allen next Wednesday and Thursday in the Lasky-Paramount production, "The Squaw Man's Son," a sequel to the popular drama, "The Squaw Man," by Edwin Milton Royle, and prepared for the screen by Charles Maigne.

Wallace Reid is the most popular of the younger masculine screen stars and was recently seen in the Lasky-Paramount production, "The Prison Without Walls." As Hal, in "The Squaw Man's Son," he has a part exactly suited to his personality and wonderful ability.

Anita King, also one of the youngest of the screen favorites, is seen as an Indian girl, a character similar to the one in which she made her first screen appearance with the Lasky company.

"The Squaw Man's Son" shows little Hal as a young man. He has gone to England to enjoy his father's title and estates and is married, but the call of the west is so strong that he returns to his people and he is first seen as chief of the Indian police of a western reservation.

Here he meets Wah-na-gi, a young Carlisle graduate who is teaching the Indian school. The two fall in love. The Indian agent, who is the representative of the asphalt trust, attempts to rob the Indians of their valuable concessions.

How Hal thwarts this, returns to England only to be called back again to protect his people and how he is finally free to marry Wah-na-gi and saves her from death on the grave of his mother, is brought about in a most exciting and gripping manner.

A special musical score will be interpreted by the Allen Paramount orchestra at each performance.

PEARL WHITE IN "THE FATAL RING," COMING HERE SOON

Pearl white, surrounded by one of the best supporting casts she has ever had, plus a story replete with thrills and dramatic situations, plus production and camera work of the kind ordinarily seen only in the best feature, equal "The Fatal Ring," the latest Pathe Serial, showing at the Pantages theatre soon.

Manager Inverarity of the Pantages theatre is enthusiastic about "The Fatal Ring" and Pearl White. "She has drawn the crowds for three summers in 'The Iron Claw,' 'The Perils of Pauline' and 'The Exploits of Elaine,'" he says, "That's why I left no stone unturned to get 'The Fatal Ring.' Our patrons have become accustomed to demanding Pathe serials and they want Pearl White."

In "The Fatal Ring" Pearl White plays the part of Pearl Standish, a rich girl who has so much money she does not appreciate what it can buy for her. She is bored with life until a demand is made on her at the point of a gun by a man named Nicholas Knox, for the violet diamond, which he claims her father bought after it had been stolen from the Sacred Order of the Violet God. Pearl disclaims any knowledge of the violet diamond, and the followers of the Violet God begin forthwith to make life interesting for her. She is given fifteen days to live if she does not return the Violet Diamond of Daroon, but before the fifteen days pass she has become so involved in the affairs of the followers of the Violet God, in the villianies of Richard Carslake and in the adventures of Tom Carlton, a newspaper man, that her waking and sleeping hours consist of dodging death at the hands of the Order of the Violet God and Richard Carslake.

The story of the Violet Diamond of Daroon, as she learns it, is as follows:

The high priest of the Sacred Order of the Vialet God, in addition to following the duties of his office, experimented with various and sundry drugs and powders, seeking a solution or a substance that would give his order supreme power in the world. At last he found the powder which, when enclosed in a crucible of proper shape could deal forth rays that were literally rays of death. When human beings were exposed to these rays, they would fade away to nothingness and would be literally wiped out of existence, with no trace.

Death claimed the high priest, but before he passed to the world of the hereafter, he told his followers how the hiding place of the wonderful substance could be found. He forced them to name his daughter as the high priestess of the Sacred Order of the Violet GoGd and made them promise that they would not seek out his discovery until a year after his death.

On the walls of the temple of the Violet God, he had written the words telling where his discovery was hidden. The only way to obtain the secret was by putting the Violet Diamond set in a ring, into the right eye of the idol of the Violet God instead of into the left eye of the idol as the followers usually placed it. The rays of light emanating from the diamond would fall upon certain words in the inscription on the wall which tell where the wonderful substance was concealed.

For months, the Violet Diamond was worshipped by the followers of the Violet God, as through it the order was to obtain power over the world. Before the time arrived to fit the diamond in the eyes of the Violet God, a priest betrayed his trust and stole the diamond and the ring, sold it to Samuel Standish and so involved Pearl.

Surrounded by danger for the first time in her existence Pearl Standish takes an interest in life. She meets Tom Carlton, a reporter on the New York American, and the adventures of the two in the search for the diamond and in the fight with Carslake and the followers of the Violet God, continue through fifteen thrilling episodes. Pearl meets with "The Spider," a power in the underworld, who also enlists on her side to fight the Sacred Order of the Violet God and to learn more about the Violet Diamond.

In the supporting cast of "The Fatal Ring" are Warner Oland. Ruby Hoffman, Earle Fox and Henry Gsell Fatal Ring" he takes the part of Richard Carslake, the villian, who is forever frustrating Pearl in her attempts to secure the ring and immunity from the followers of the Violet God.

The complexion, the hair and the hands all play an important part to attract or derogate, and if any of these are permitted to go without proper attention and care, the charm will sooner or later be lost. The Elite Beauty Parlors have installed some of the latest and most effective apparatus to carry on this work, and they can give some good advice and help to those who care to appear more attractive.

FANNY WARD COMING TO THE ALLEN SOON IN "THE CRYSTAL GAZER"

In one of the most unique and thrilling photodrama in which she has ever appeared since the famous production of "The Cheat," Fannie Ward will be seen at the Allen soon in the Lasky production of "The Crystal Gazer," a picturization by Marian Fairfax of Eve Unsell and Edna Riley's gripping story.

In this production Miss Ward has three unusual roles—in that she plays the mother and her two daughters. This would be a most trying and confusing task for the average artiste But Miss Ward, with her wonderful knowledge of dramatic art and her usual cleverness, gives each a distinct and separate characterization which leaves no confusion in the minds of the audience.

"The Crystal Gazer" will be seen September 3 and 4.

BRIDGES BURNED The Story.

Mary O'Brien, the daughter of an Irish gentleman of declining fortunes, meets Ernest Randal, the younger son of an English baronet, when he trespasses on her father's land to fish. It is while he is whipping the stream for trout that he come supon her enjoying the same sport. His frank answers to her charmingly audacious questions prompt her to invite him home for dinner. Mary's father is delighted with him, and invites him for a deer hunt next day, the only entertainment of interest he still has the means to offer o visitor.

A poacher, mistaking Randal's peaked hat for deer antlers, shoots him through the shoulder. Mary and her father, attracted by the shot, ride up and discover the guest unconscious. Randal is taken to their home, where Mary nurses him. The young people fall in love with each other, and it is with difficulty thot Randal forces himself to leave to complete his course in surgery. Mary has given her heart to him without reserve.

See the rest of the story at the new "Liberty" theatre, Saturday, Sept. 1.

FIELD AMBULANCE DANCE A GREAT SUCCESS

The dance given by the 8th Field Ambulance club on Wednesday night was a grand success. Pte. Jack Smith and Miss Needham were the finners of the prize waltz. The total receipts amounted to $126, of which $20 is to be given to the "Prisoners' fund." The club extend their thanks to those who contributed the refreshments, etc.

For the purpose of erecting and equipping recreation huts for the boys overseas, the Salvation Army raised the sum of $1,254 with their recent tag day campaign. As no expenses were incurred, this sum will go almost as it stands. Adjutant Merritt and committee wish to convey their thanks to all those who so kindly offered their services.

JACKIE SAUNDERS IN "THE WILDCAT" AT THE ALLEN MONDAY AND TUESDAY

"The Wildcat," the second of the Jackie Saunders series will be seen at the Allen Monday and Tuesday.

Miss Saunders last appeared in "The Checkmate" and scored a brilliant success in that production when shown here recently.

"The Wildcat," her latest triumph, is somewhat of a novelty in pictures, for it is a drama without a single villain. Miss Saunders portrays the part of Bethesda, the spoiled, wilful tomboy daughter of a millionaire. She is in absolute command of the household and the servants. She is a wild, loveable girl.

Financial ruin faces her father, and Bethesda was brought face to face with the fact that she must marry, and marry money. She absolutely refuses to meet any prospective suitors. She tries to discourage father's candidate in a startling manner, but father and love combined forces.

Bethesda "the wildcat" is given a little taste of wild adventure, and then she actually begs for the privilege of marrying father's choice.

"The Wildcat" is a first-rate quick-action drama without a dull moment in it, and all sorts of original bits that are sure of wide appeal.

A new Christie comedy closes an excellent program.

COMING TO THE ALLEN SOON

DAINTY VIVIAN MARTIN AT THE ALLEN IN "A KISS FOR SUSIE"

Dainty Vivian Martin, who recently scored such pronounced successes in "Giving Becky a Chance" and "The Spirit of Romance," and who will be seen at the Allen next Friday and Saturday in the Pallas-Paramount production of Paul West's clever story, "A Kiss for Susie," prepared especially for her by Harvey T. Thew, and produced under the personal direction of Robert Thornby, has established for herself a unique position in the firmament of photodramatic stars. A little wisp of a girl, full of vitality and charm, and with a roguishness all her own, she has been hailed by many as the "elf" of the film.

In "A Kiss for Susie," Vivian Martin is seen as Susie Nolan, the energetic young daughter of Jim Nolan, an artistic bricklayer. Young Phil Burnham, of the firm for which Nolan works, decided to begin at the bottom by carrying the hod, but takes a different name. One day he meets Susie as she comes to bring her father his lunch. The friendship grows before long and the two youngsters are in love. Then Susie's uncle from Australia dies and they are left a lot of money and, as Susie expresses it, anything over six dollars a day makes a bricklayer dizzy, so her father and her older brother and sister immediately start out to be social butterflies. Susie sees that the gay life is wrecking their happiness, so she plans that her father shall make an investment and lose all of his money. This is done, and how matters are straightened out and how everyone is finally happy is brought about in Paul West's most clever and unusual manner.

READ THE STORY, THEN SEE THE PICTURE

Beginning next week, and for a period of eighteen consecutive Saturdays, an episode of "The Great Secret" will be published in the story section of The Calgary Western Standard. Each Saturday, after you read the story, see the film episode on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at the "New Liberty" theatre. "The Great Secret," Metro's new serial, contains abundant material to make snappy and exciting reading. It is a great advantage and adds much to the enjoyment of viewing the picture if a person reads the story first, in story form, and then a few days after while the incidents are still fresh in their mind, views the screen version, where the characters of the story actually take life form. The plot provides a mysterious organization of mental, physical and financial resource, a pretty heroine whose possession of much-wanted papers, rightfully hers, makes her the mark for the machine attacks. A hero, who is rich, as to appearance, bank account and courage, and a play that employs in the course of its breezy action, gun fights, fist fights, startling schemes that are aborted in the nick of time, mysterious sliding panels and staircases, and the most essential exotic touch introduced by Charles Fang, the Chinese actor.

REMEMBER SEPTEMBER 1; OPENING OF "NEW LIBERTY"

Saturday, Sept. 1, the opening day of the home of "Kosy Komfort," the "New Liberty," completely renovated and equipped with new ventilation system which makes this theatre one of Calgary's coolest theatres. Neither time or money has been spared in making the "New Liberty" os homelike and as comfortable as possible. Under new management and a new policy of first-run greater Vitagraph, Blue Ribbon and Metro productions, featuring such stars as Anita Stewart, Olga Petrova, Francis X. Bushman, Beverley Bayne, Charles Richman, Harold Lockwood, May Allison and many other famous stars and popular players. The management of the "New Liberty," respectfully solicit the patronage of the ladies and children.

Coming, extra special—Greater Vitagraph's "Fall of a Nation," by the author of "Birth of a Nation." Watch for dates.

A HOST OF INTERESTING EVENTS AT PANTAGES NEXT WEEK

Martin Brooks, the celebrated young New York producer has succeeded in scoring another hit with his latest girl and song revue, which will be the headline attraction at the Pantages for the coming week. "Bon Voyage," the title of the offering, is a spectacular scenic singing and dancing revue, containing a couple of funny comedians, a bevy of bewitching and sprightly maidens and a wealth of special scenery embellishing the production along the most advanced and futuristic lines.

The next feature on the bill will be "Saint and Sinner," an extraordinary dramatic playlet presented by a talented company, headed by Edna Earl Andrews, a well known actress. Telling a compelling story of domestic life—the struggle between a selfish, wordly wife who takes all and gives nothing; and the "other woman"—one that goes right to the very heart of domestic happiness. The dialogue of "Saint and Sinner" is sure to make far more than the customary appeal of a dramatic sketch.

Joe Drady and Tim Mahoney are offering a timely and laughable nautical satire which they call "The Cruise of the Doughnut." Characterizing a naval officer and a thick headed sailor. They deal, in a very comical manner with all the marine subjects of the day.

The Cromwells will present a quaint make even the most blase theatregoer little vaudeville conceit which should sit up and take notice.

Jessie and Dollie Miller have an artistic musical and dancing act. The two most talented and attractive performers, their number will add considerable to the general impression of the bill.

BESSIE LOVE IN "A DAUGHTER OF THE POOR"

As the heroine of "A Daughter of the Poor," Bessie Love takes the part of a young girl with an inherent hatred for wealth and all that wealth implies, who finally falls in love with the son of a millionaire, mistaking him for a poor chauffeur. Bessie keeps house for her lazy uncle, who would rather smoke his pipe and rail against life than utilize his muscles. Uncle Keeps telling her that he would be worth millions if it were not for his heortless employer, who forces him to work as a night watchman at beggarly wages. But Bessie finally gets a line on the real state of affairs when she visits the factory and finds her relative asleep on the job, while the owner of the factory works overtime. When the girl discovers that her lover is rich instead of being o downtrodden worker, an opportunity is presented for some of the most telling comedy that the little Fine Arts star has yet achieved.

With a keen appreciation of the requirements of the part, Miss Love again proves her right to be considered one of the natural stars of the screen.

HALL CAINE'S MASTERPIECE, "THE DEEMSTER," COMING TO REGENT SHORTLY

The long-heralded picturization of Hall Caine's famous novel fully lives up to the rosy promises mode by the Arrow Film Corporation as to its merits. It is one of the few photo dramas that does full justice to its length, and there is so much in it to hold the attention of the spectator hat it is sure o be a success wherever shown.

The cast of the picture, headed by Derwent Hall Caine, son of the author, who is known both on the stage in this country and abroad, has been very well chosen. Mr. Caine is every inch an actor, and there is never a time that he fails to score effectively. The sympathetic nature of his role will react strongly in his behalf, to the extent of winning his an unusual number of admirers.

The elaborate settings, picturesque in their atmosphere, the rugged exteriors of the sea coast, and the superlative photography, which includes some excellent light effects, all reflect to the credit of the production.

The picturization of Mr. Caine's novel has been done to clear any dramatic effect. None of its passages lack in the impressiveness and sincerity so noticeable in the novel. The costuming is well done, and never do the actions of the players betroy a trace of modernism that might spoil the convincing reproduction of a story of the early eighteenth century.

A FINE LINE OF VAUDEVILLE ACTS FOR PANTAGES THIS FALL

Alexander Pantages, owner and general manager of the famous Pantages circuit, is always on the lookout for novelties and something different in the entertainment line. After many months of tireless endeavor he has secured, for the fall season some remarkable attractions which he will offer to the patrons of his theatres. A great line of vaudeville features have been booked and will appear very shortly at the popular playhouse, among which can be mentioned such attractions as Mercedes, the Wonder of the Twentieth Century, assisted by the marvelous mystic Mlle. Stantone; Willard, the man who grows A Dream of the Orient; the Equestrian Lion; The Riding Ruttons; J. C. Nugent; The Six Piano Girls, and many others too numerous to mention.

GEORGE BEBAN IN "THE COOK OF CANYON CAMP," AT THE ALLEN, LAST TIMES TODAY

George Beban, the celebrated Morosco-Pallas-Paramount star, who will be seen at the Allen last times today, in one of his famous Latin characterizations, "The Cook of Canyon Camp," is seen as the cook in a lumber camp in the Canadian woods, and his greatest culinary achievement is making "flapjacks." His ambition is to own the most beautiful "flapjack" restaurant in the world, where men and women in evening clothes will perch on stools about his griddle and delight themselves with toothsome morsels, then in token of their appreciation make him many valuable presents. It is one of the most unusual and cleverly done bits ever seen on the screen.

A late war topical will also be shown with this above attraction, and a special musical program by the Allen Paramount orchestra rounds out an excellent program.

VULCAN AND CALGARY "B" TIED IN INTERESTING GAME

The first seven innings was just an ordinary one-sided game, with Calgary "B" team on the sliding side, the score being 7 to 3. However, the eighth inning brought life back into the game, when Calgary boys began sending out one, two and three baggers. Thus the score was tied in the eighth, while the ninth showed no marks for either side, and darkness crept on to part the battling teams while both were even.

The following is the box score:

Frederick William I, 1688-1740

William I, 1871-1888

Emperor and Empress of Germany

Frederick William III, and Queen Louise, 1770-1810

Frederick II, Known as Frederick the Great, 1712-1786

Ever Since the Beginning of Its Rule This Famous House Has Been Noted for Its Love of Militarism and Conquest.

One's ideas of right and wrong are largely influenced by environment and by family traditions that have been revered and observed for generations.

The militarism of Prussia has been the topic of discussion for many years and especially since July, 1914. It is not the conception of the present Emperor nor of his grandfather, who founded the German empire, but has its origin more than two centuries ago and its growth has been a part of the system under which that people has advanced and prospered. It is institutional with the political government of the race and comes to the present Emperor as an inheritance from his forefathers, all of whom believed in its efficiency for the upbuilding of the notion and the glory and honor of their subjects. Whether such a regime is in the interest of humanity and civilization and of the advancement of mankind, may or may not be entirely settled by the present conflict. Let us hope that it will be.

Early Princes.

The name of Hohenzollern is derived from the ancestral Castle Zollern or Hohenzollern in Swabia. The origin of the house is involved in obscurity. The family name occurs in history as early as the eleventh century and occupied a prominent place among the early princely families as far back as the first half of the twelfth century. Even at that early period their craze for militarism and conquest is recorded. During the fifteenth century the Hohenzollern dominions were divided between the electoral and Franconian branches of the house. In the sixteenth century both branches took the Protestant side.

At the beginning of the seventeenth century the Franconian line died out and all its possessions passed to the elder Electoral or Bradenburg branch of the house and in 1640 Frederick William, the Great Elector, became the head of the house, and when he died his son became Frederick the first king of Prussia, and the direct ancestor of the present Emperor William II. When this monarch came to the throne he found that his father had left behind him a war chest producing annually about $1,250,000, which meant at that time twenty times as much as it would today. He had thirty-six battalions of infantry, forty squadrons of cavalry, twenty-seven hundred garrison troops, a model artillery, well filled stores and a population of about 1,200,000 and a territory of 48,000 square miles. His African company was able to place twelve frigates to say nothing of smaller craft at his disposal which plied in time of peace between Emden and his forts on the Gold Coast. He had formed a school of statesmanship and some excellent general officers grew up under his system. While the Elector had exercised a careful stewardship and left the finances of his country in a condition of fair efficiency, the state of the people was deplorable. Drunkenness was universal, men indulged in nameless vices and thievery, and murder was common. Out of such unpromising material the Hohenzollern Kings began their reign.

The first ruler, Frederick I, was not remarkable for his statesmanship, and his financial methods were amateurish, his expenditures on pomp and dignity were particularly extravagant. He maintained his army and though his troops fought with distinction they brought little profit to the country.

Founder of Great Army.

An immense advance in the development of Prussia was made by Frederick William I, whom some historian declare to be the most unconventional monarch who ever occupied a throne. His strongest point was militarism and he devoted his entire life to the supreme object of creating the most powerful army, the biggest and most perfect in every detail. During the course of a reign, which lasted twenty-seven years Frederick William I built up an army numerically greater than England ever possessed even in the era of her greatest military expansion, when Marlborough was fighting in the Netherlands, yet the population of the Prussian kingdom was less than 2,500,000. Prussian militarism was the King's passion. He did not create a conscript army nor did he impose universal military service. He required every district to provide its quota of men and besides these he raised regiments by voluntary enlistments or supposed voluntary enlistments, though the methods used by the recruiting sergeants left little choice to the people. The King had a craze for giants for whom he sought and kidnapped from every region where big men were supposed to grow. He even kidnapped tall women and forced them to marry his giant soldiers hoping to raise a race of giants for his military service. His troops were commanded by members of the aristocracy. Discipline was rigid and each regiment was a perfected machine. The soldier was taught to be proud of his uniform and to claim superiority over the civilian—a custom which still exists in Germany, especially among the officers of the Germany army, who demand the right of way over civilians even when walking on the streets.

Freedrick William raised his army to the highest perfection and loved to watch them drill as a miser loves to count his gold. He was not anxious to lose them by having them go into battle. He was reluctantly drawn into alliances, as he was conscious of his limitations in diplomacy and was fearful lest he be duped by the other powers. He was not always "as good as his word" with other nations and was cruel in his family affairs. His conceit knew no bounds and he felt himself ordained by God to rule.

Frederick the Great.

He ill-treated his son, who became Frederick William II (Frederick the Great), and was anxious that the Crown Prince should be a replica of himself, but the young man was of a wholly different nature, for he hated routine as much as his father loved it, and he preferred French literature above all things, and surrounded himself with men of letters, among them Voltaire, who spent much of his time with the King at the famous Sans Souci palace at Potsdam. However, when the time came to use the army his father had perfected he threw himself into their work. He felt that he had the best army in Europe and that might and not right should prevail. When he had difficulties with Maria Theresa, of Austria, he marched his army into Silesia and informed her that if she would cede to him that province of her dominion he would maintain her claim to the Hapsburg inheritance and vote for the election of her husband as Emperor. If she refused he declared that he would take care of his own interests. The occupation of Silesia was not unlike that of Belguim today, and the history of the Hohenzollern family seems to be repeating itself under Emperor William. Later Saxony met the same fate because she resented the violation of neutrality when Frederick marched his army into Dresden. Austria was not ready to save Saxony and in the course of time the Saxon army was compelled to capitulate.

His nephew, Frederick William II, was one of the weakest of the Hohenzollern princes. He permitted himself to be dominated by his numerous female favorites. He violated treaties, sacrificed the interests of his country and almost put the treasury in a state of bankruptcy. His affairs with women were notorious and although he was married to Queen Frederika, he became a bigamist by marrying a woman whom he created Countess Ingenheim, and some of her descendants still survive under the name.

Frederick William III. and Frederick William IV.

Frederick William III, his son, succeeded him and is credited as being responsible for all the disaster sustained by his people at the hands of Napoleon. He was finally forced by Czar Alexander I to join in a coalition then being formed to curb the militarism of Napoleon. He then begged his subjects to join in clearing Prussia of the French, promising as a reward that they should have self government and a popular constitution, but as soon as Napoleon was sent to St. Helena, he forgot all about his promise and revived the Hohenzollern absolutism in all its force. His wife, the much loved Queen Louise, was one bright spot in his reign.

Frederick William IV, who was his successor, was an habitual drunkard and his reign of twenty-one years seems to have been one long succession of broken promises to his own people and broken agreements with foreign governments. When the people rebelled against this unfair treatment, he brought out his army to stop that rebellion, and many of his subjects including Carl Schurz sought refuge in the United States. Finally the people of Berlin rose against him and when he ordered his soldiers to drive them out they defeated his soldiers and compelled him to stand bareheaded on the balcony of his palace, while the bodies of the people who had been killed were borne past him for burial. He was afflicted with an incurable malady of the ear, and after much suffering became insane and was placed under restraint. His brother William became the regent and after the death of the mad King came to the throne as William I.

Willim I and Bismarck.

It seems difficult for historians to decide whether the questionable deeds of the Hohenzollern throne during his Bismarck, the prime minister, who seems to have dominated this ruler's reign. The seizure of the duchies of Schleswig-Holstein in violation of the treaty engagements of the annexation of the Kingdom of Hanover, and of the duchy of Nassau and the altogether inexcusable confiscation of the personal fortune and private possessions of the King and Queen of Hanover. The late Emperor William's cousins and his old time friends will always be blots on the reign of that ruler. Another shady transaction was Bismarck's falsification of the celebrated telegraphic dispatch from Elms which precipitated the Franco-Prussian War in 1870. The Iron Chancellor glorified in the act which in the eyes of the world was a disgraceful and cowardly forgery. He admitted that it brought on the war of 1870-1871.

The Present Emperor and His Father

Emperor Frederick, the father of the present Emperor, reigned but a hundred days, dying of cancer of the throat after teribrle suffering. This ruler was perhaps the most blameless of all the Hohenzollern rulers and was a striking contrast in temperament to his predecessor and to his son William the Second, who came to the throne at the age of twenty-eight, a versatile, ambitious and thoroughly self-conscious young man.

The young ruler had no intention of being overshadowed by his prime minister, and eighteen months after his accession he "dropped the pilot," Prince Bismarck, who seemed not unwilling to surrender the power he had held so long. Emperor William at once conceived the idea that it was Germany's destiny to rule the world and that the world was in a conspiracy for the destruction of his country. England he believed to be the prime mover in anti-German world conspiracy. Obessed with this idea he entered the war of 1914. His army was amply prepared for war, for like his ancestors the spirit of militarism has dominated his reign and for the first two years of the war "German efficiency" was noted at every turn. The men were mere machines and were sacrificed again and again to gain a few feet of ground. That the German people are tired of war and bloodshed is unquestioned, but they are loyal. When President Wilson, in his address to Congress said, "We have no quarrel with the German people. We have no feeling toward them but one of sympathy and friendship. It was not upon their impulse that their government acted in entering this war. It was not with their previous knowledge or approval," he struck the keynote of the German situation.

RECAPTURED FRENCH CITIES

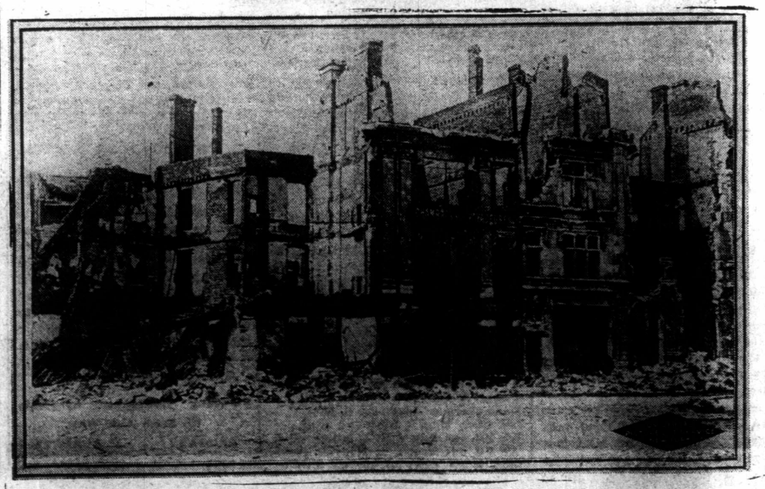

Photo gives view of condition of French cities after recapture by the British army. The Germans destroy and set fire to all buildings, blast up tracks and roadways.

What Have Been The Territorial Gains

Austria began the trouble by a declaration of war on Serbia. From the Austrian standpoint here's what has happened:

1. Serbia has been totally destroyed. Every foot of Serbian soil is now occupied by the armies of Austria and her allies.

2. Austria has lost a strip of territory on her southern frontier to Italy. This strip is unimportant. It begins on the east at Trieste, the north end of the Adriatic sea, and runs north and west around the point of Italy some 200 miles.

3. Austria has lost to Russia another strip, about 40 miles wide and 125 miles long, on her northeast frontier. It lies just east and south of Lemberg. It is in Galicia and was originally a part of Poland.

Germany

Germany's territorial gains are as follows:

1. All of Belgium except a small strip on the northwest about the size and shape of Kossuth county, Iowa. The little Belgian army still holds this. It lies just west of Ostend.
2. All of Serbia.
3. All of Macedonia.
4. A strip of northern France 70 miles wide and 250 miles long, that extends from the North sea to Switzerland.
5. About two-thirds of Rumania.

Germany's losses are:

1. A part of Alsace-Lorraine.
2. Practically all her colonies. The area of colonies lost by Germany is given by British authorities as follows in square miles:

Africa—Southwest Africa, 322,450; Cameroon, 300,000; Togoland, 33,700.

Pacific—Samoa, 660; Upolu, 340; Kaiser Wilhelm's Land and Pacific Islands, 70,000; Bismarck Archipelago, 22,840; Caroline, Pelew, Marianne and Marshall islands, 1,000.

The total area of the lost colonial territory is 730,990 square miles.

Another most important gain by Germany is the opening of a railway line from her northern boundary on the North and Baltic seas through Austria-Hungary, Serbia and Bulgaria into Turkey.

COMMENTS AND CRITICISM

GOOD FOR THE ALBERTA FARMERS

The construction of a 6,000-barrel mill in Calgary for the Alberta Farmers, is one of the most important moves yet made for the welfare of the farmer, as it gives each man who raises grain a chance to get the profit which heretofore the eastern milling concerns have swallowed up. The realization of this fact alone is enough to convince any man that it is one of the best things that was ever proposed for Alberta.

The directorate of the Alberta Flour Mills is composed of men whose names are sufficient guarantee as to the stability of the company. The fact that these men ar e actively identified with the management proves conclusively that the project will be economically and successfully managed. The project is worthy of the endorsement and support of all Alberta.

BREWERIES COINING MONEY

The old cry that when prohibition went into effect that thousands upon thousands of dollars would be wasted and the breweries would all go into the receiver's hands, has been dissipated by the fact that today the breweries are making almost as much money as in former years through the sale of non-intoxicating beverages.

In some cases the breweries are confining their efforts to non-alcoholic beverages that resemble beer in appearance and taste but still keep within the law as to the amount of alcohol they contain, the idea being that the beer drinker has been so wedded to the taste and appearance of beer that any marked deviation from this beverage would not be welcomed or used by the beer drinkers.

Whether there is any truth in this or not is hard to say. At least the fallacy that the breweries would fail has been dispelled and the fay in which the people are drinking soft drinks demonstrates that alcoholic drinks are not absolutely necessary to the average drinker's pleasure.

FARM ACCOUNTING

The new science of farm accounting is gradually beginning to assume definite shape. Such a science, producing the most practical results, is highly necessary. Our vast network of corporations, the immense volume of business done upon our exchanges, and, in particular, the elasticity of our industrial output, would not be possible without the highly co-ordinated system of accounting in use, which enables the heads of large enterprises to see at a glance how things are going, and to put their fingers on weak spots, thus saving immense sums.

Agriculture is more important than mills, factories, blast furnaces and railroads. It is from agriculture that these other activities arise. Yet in its system of accounting it has lagged behind all the rest. The farmer has been the sport of the financial charlatan, the fair game of the land shark, and all because it has taken us so long to perceive that farm accounting lies at the basis of all our national economic character.

When farm accounting, as a science of values, as an accurate indicator of loss and gain, shall rise to the same accurate standard as that of our leading corporations, a new era of solid and substantial progress will be inaugurated. Our yields per acre of all products will be steadily increased. The wide fluctuations in present-day values will cease.

Accounting bears the same relationship to the farm that the stabilizer does to the flying machine. The agricultural colleges have been a large factor in leading the way toward a higher agricultural level. Every experiment station testifies to the importance of farm accounting. Every man who stands upon his own ground should come to realize what it means.

BRAINS

One of the greatest illusions of life is that some brains are so much better than others. We are all too likely to excuse our own deficiencies by laying the result to our faulty brains. Our ambitions are overwhelming, our intentions are wonderful, our perseverance and insight and liberality are all conceded.

But when we come to apply these remarkable qualities we find ourselves woefully handicapped by brains that, like some motor cars—and of course through no fault of ours—are constantly missing. Thus we excuse ourselves.

Brains, however, are a good deal like kitchens. Some kitchens are lined with the finest tiles and shining brass, and filled with immaculate utensils. The stove is of the latest model. Everything is there that could be desired. Other kitchens have mean little stoves. There is only a single water spigot. The utensils consist of a broiler, a frying pan, a knife, a fork and a spoon. Yet a good cook will get the same results in either.

In kitchens, everything depends upon the cook.

In brains, everything depends upon the intention. The greatest men in the world, backed by flaming intentions, have changed the course of history with moderate brain power.

NO BACKWARD STEPS

The newspapers have been printing a good many editorials on the theme of war-time economies. Many of these have suggested new ethical standards in retailing.

It has been urged that all merchants should make a slight special charge for delivery of merchandise—aimed to encourage people to carry home with them small packages, through making it distinctly in their interest to do so.

No curtailment of buying is being advocated—properly; but more wisdom and consideration in buying are urged. The women are advised to buy what they need—and nothing more; but no ban is placed upon so-called luxuries, as to many people these things represent a need quite as surely as do so-called necessities.

The editors are pointing out to their readers that in order to eliminate waste, to conserve the food supply, and to generally restrict whimsical expenditures, it is not necessary to enter upon a period of privation and of stinting. That is sound doctrine.

Most of the suggestions as to ways and means of cutting down overhead expense, and thus permitting a merchant to sell more closely, are mistakenly aimed at the service features of merchandising. This encroaches upon a distinct danger-zone. Merchants cannot adopt a reactionary policy in serving the conveniences of their patrons. The good-will asset has been developed through nfinite pains. The progressive merchant seeks, through a policy of going far to please and to convenience a customer, to make his store of peculiar significance to that customer—to make it respond to every usual or unusual need. If a housewife is so situated that she cannot, at a particular time, come to the store, the store—in effect—goes to her. She may have goods sent to her home for selection. This does cost money. If a certain class of customers required this sort of service regularly, it would mean that a special charge would have to be made for it. But this phase of store-service is free to all of the store's customers alike. It is intended to make the store able, in spirit and practice, to meet the special need of the customer. It is emergency service—created to meet emergencies.

The idea of a special charge for the delivery of goods will not meet with wide approval among the merchants themselves—and it would be opposed by a majority of the people. If the big stores should adopt it, the little stores would adhere to the old delivery service, and would benefit accordingly.

In brief, it would seem that no good interests will be served through crippling store-service. The merchant who does that will lose trade. A policy leading to loss of trade, to slower turnover of stocks, will not lead to lower prices. The newspaper preachments to the people on economies in buying might be more useful if based upon the wisdom of careful buying, of a more careful study of the buying opportunities offered through the store advertisements—and of the folly of needless deprivation.

WHAT SORT OF FATHER ARE YOU?

"What sort of father are you?" is asked of every man applying for membership in a new organization known as the Fathers' club.

Mother and child are inseparably associated. But the fact that a boy or girl needs a good father as well as a good mother is frequently overlooked.

If there were a system of rating men as fathers as there is of rating their commercial standing, some fathers would no doubt be surprised at their score. There is the father who does not want to be bothered. He is willing to give his children a liberal allowance of pocket money in order that they may amuse themselves and do not disturb him. This man would be surprised to find himself rated as the father who allows his children to run the streets or get into trouble because he doesn't want to devote any time to them.

The father who has no time to be bothered with his children will find himself, as the years go by, increasingly lonesome. His own children will grow up strangers to him, too much absorbed in interests which they have found for themselves to have time or inclination to bother with father.

"Wait until your father comes home" is an all too common remark, and represents another type of father. In such a household father is law and order, generally synonymous with punishment. The children learn to look with displeasure or fear upon their father's home-coming. Those whose spirits are not cowed or broken by his stern administration of justice will seek a more congenial atmosphere as soon as they feel strong enough to strike out for themselves.

But the father who always has time for his children, and who can remember that there are no sorrows in the world so bitter as the disappointments of childhood, is the one who keeps them close to him. And he has his own life constantly renewed in the vigorous, pulsating life of his children.

A famous man once said: "If the kiddies press their noses against the window panes and shout with joy when they see Daddy coming, you can trust that man." And generally you can.

Being Tales of Those Who Reached the Front Page and Then Dropped Back to Obscurity

"General" Jacob S. Coxey

Twenty-three years ago the country was startled and amused by the announcement issued from Massillon, Ohio, that one Jacob S. Coxey was about to descend on Washington with an "Army of the Commonwealth" to voice a strenuous protest against government policies which Coxey felt were obnoxious.

Jacob Coxey soon became known as "General Coxey" and his "Army of the Commonwealth" as the "hobo army.' Coxey was pictured as a ragged, unkept, uncouth, vagabond, who was the poke of the age, but, notwithstanding the ridicule "Coxey's Army" left Massillon for its memorable march on the capitol.

Footsore and weary, but filled with the same spirit which prompted their leader, "Coxey's Army" arrived in Washington, only to be met by a troop of mounted police who proceeded to dispel any illusions the patriots might have had concerning the success of their venture. Coxey was arrested and put in jail for no more serious crime than tresspassing on the grass in Capitol Park. Carl Brown, his second in command, received like treatment, and the remnants of the army of invasion were scattered to the four winds.

Coxey was soon after released, and in the years that followed he earned his living through the medium of manufacturing. In 1915 he became an active participant in the Ohio Senatorial race, taking for his platform a large merchant marine and adequate coast defences.

The country then began to realize that "General" Coxey was far from the ragged vagabond it had been led to believe, and later he turned up in New York city as a guest at the Daldorf-Astoria, equipped with plenty of money and numerous diamonds.

In reality Jacob S. Coxey is a man of rare personal charm and great ability and is now well established as a business man with considerable financial interests in Ohio and other parts of the country.

When in Washington he is a familiar figure about the New Willard and is extremely popular. He was asked recently if his views on public affairs had changed since he led his little army on Washington in 1894.

"Not a bit," he replied, "but I'm no longer a 'crank' or an 'agitator. No one now can pick me out of a crowd. You see most of the people in the country have come around to my point of view in the last few years and see things as I saw them in 1894.

"Youll see men in both the old parties telling the country today just what I was trying to tell the country when I marched on the Capitol—and was hooted and jailed for doing it."

Coxey's army was the concrete expression of the unrest that prevailed throughout the land in 1894. His "soldiers" felt that certain laws ought to be changed, reforms were badly needed, and with dogged footsteps and a clear understanding of the national situation they started out o voice their proess in the only way that they knew.

The little comedy, for such it turned out to be, was dramatized by Coxey with a fine feeling for things theatrical in their influence on the country at large. His example was followed by others and numerous armies of unemployed sprang out of the ground like magic.

In this mental change, which has for the past 155 years become more and more and more evident, Coxey has perhaps unwittingly played a stellar role, for it was primarily his demonstration which encouraged like spirits to come out in the open and fight for what they considered right.

Coxey was never an anarchist. He did not believe in revolution, but he did believe in needed reforms and set out in his own way to get them.

Today the quiet, studious philosopher, that is just what Coxey appears to be, continues his talks and lectures in the hope that he will eventually bring the country to his way of thinking.

WILL GERMANY BREAK UP?

A writer in the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post considers that the German lines in the west and more particularly the lines of defence on the German borders, are practically impregnable. His idea is that victory will come to the Allies through the breaking up of the German empire, and he gives many incindents of a long residence in Saxony as a member of the American consular service, to prove his contention. The German people, he claims, are sick and tired of the war and only await the discovery of a strong leader to throw off the shackles of Hohenzollernism. The worship of the kaiser and the junker party that characterized Germanys initiation of the war, no longer exists, he claims. The people are discontented and the fires of rebellion are smouldering and liable to break out at any time.

One may hope that this writer is correct but a the same time we cannot avoid the feeling that a peace resulting from the military defeat of Germany is more desirable than one arising out of a revolt of the people. It may be true that a large section of the kaiser's subjects now see the folly of Prussian aims but it is certain that many of the people are still backing the war lords in their policy of murder and conquest. These people must have brought home to them by the most forcible means in the power of the Entente, the strength of their adversaries and the weakness of Germany. A peace resulting from revolution would not necessarily leave Germany in a weakened state. True her people have suffered many privations, hercommerc e has been shot t opieces and she has lost many of her citizens, but the enemy's power remains strong. That power must be destroyed before the world will be safe.

The contention that so-called impregnable lines of defence cannot be broken has long since been disproved on the western front where German positions, not meant to be taken, were converted ino dust by he big guns of the Allies. What has been done before can be done again and whether the German people decide to turn out their rulers or not, Prussia's defeat in a military way, is certain.

SWEEP AWAY PREJUDICES

The Irish Benevolent Society, of London, is a unique institution. It was established more than forty years ago, primarily for the purpose of assisting poor Irish Immigrants to get a start in this country. Today it is stronger and greater than ever and is benefactions are not confined t othose of Irish birth and ancestry. The society is unique because it is comprised of men of many shades of politics and religion. In the Irish Benevolent all Irishmen meet on a common footing, that of enjoying themselves and doing good, and they get along together in a way that brings joy to those who love unity rather than discord. In the Irish Benevolent, Protestants and Roman Catholics meet and are brothers; there is no talk of creeds and one man is as good as the next. This is as it should be.

SOUND ADVICE

Here is some sound advice for every employee, not merely for clerks:

"Every employee should be made to feel that he is an understudy of the men above him, and that whether he takes the place when the man above him is promoted depends very largely on his ability to fill it. He certainly is not the man for the position if he is one who is continually picking flaw's in the other fellow's work, and not co-operating with him for greater results. Petty jealousies and covert attempts to lessen the reputation of some fellow employee who is trying make his way. There is but one way to work, and that is to work for the general good of the business, planning and bringing about improvements wherever you see 'that they can be made to advantage."

The minute you get the idea you're indispensible, you aren't.

EDITH CAVELL'S LAST LETTER

Thoughts of life were stronger than those of death in Edith Cavell's last hours on earth. Her anxieties were directed toward the future welfare of a young girl friend afflicted with an appetite for drugs. A letter written to this girl on the evening of October 11, 1915, the night before the execution, is here reproduced:

"My Dear Girl.—How shall I write you this last day? Standing where I stand now, the world looks already far away. I worried about you a great deal at first, but I know God will do for you abundantly above all that I can ask or think, and he loves you so much better than I. I do earnestly beseech you to try and live as I would have had you live. Nothing matters when one comes to this last hour but a clear conscience before God, and life looks so wasted and full of wrongdoing and things left undone.

"You have helped me often, my dear, and in ways you little dreamed of, and I have remembered our happy holidays with mother and many small pleasures. I want you to go to England at once now and ask.....to put you where you can be cured. Don't mind how hard it is, do it for my sake and then try and find something useful to do, something to make you forget yourself while making others happy.

"If God permits I shall still watch over you and love you and wait for you on the other side. Be sure to get ready for then. I want you to know I was neither afraid nor unhappy, but quite ready to give my life for England.

"I am sending you my wrist watch by Mr. Gahan because it was always with me and I know you will like to wear it. I shall pray God for you at the last that He will keep you in His tender care. Forgive me that I have been severe sometimes; it has been a great grief to me to remember it. I think I was too anxious about you this last year and that was why. I am sure you will forget it now and only remember that I loved you and love you still."

AMERICANS TO CANADIANS

We're coming, brave Canadians,
With battleship and gun
And millions of munitions
To help you rout the Hun.

We fight for the same object,
A safe democracy,
That all the world from Kaisers
May be forever free.

We've long admired our courage,
Efficiency and skill
In driving back the monster
Who would sweet babies kill.

And we've desired to help you
Soon as we could prepare,
Now cheerily we're coming,
Equipped to do our share,

We've men upon the ocean
And thousands camped in France,
And millions more preparing,
Hoping to have a chance

To strike the German savage
And stop his bloody fight,
And teach him what is moral,
Benevolent and right.

To Milk Consumers

We wish to announce to our customers that in advancing the price of milk, we have not done so before conditions justified such procedure. From the information we have been able to secure, it appears that in most American and Canadian cities the price of milk is higher than in Calgary or Edmonton. In many instances it is from 20 to 40 per cent. higher.

If you are using two quarts of milk per day it increases your daily milk bill approximately two cents per day. If you use two pounds of meat per day, the difference in price, as compared with one year ago, is ten to twenty cents per day.

As shown by analysis, milk, in proportion to its food value, at present prices is fifty per cent. cheaper than meat, and one hundred per cent. cheaper than eggs or fish. You may economize by using more milk.

FASHIONS SOCIETIES

A Page of Interest to Women

GOSSIP HOUSEHOLD

JERSEY AND TUSSAH COMBINED IN BATHING COSTUMES.

There is no end to the novel and stunning models offered this season in the way of bathing suits. Illustrated is an unusual model developed in navy wool jersey and a lighter shade of khaki kool. The latter is confined to the full short skirt, the trimming and deep sailor collar. The lines accentuate the slenderness of a youthful figure, even though the waist is indicated by the belt, which is half jersey and half khaki-kool. Bone buttons afford smart trimming. Quite as interesting is the long cape with its broad border of plaid taffeta.

PRACTICAL FASHIONS NOW IN VOGUE

The hot weather has brought forth a multitude of light dresses and still lighter hats, says a New York paper.

There was a youthful and pretty young woman wearing a pink jersey with gray fur and a gray felt hat. The pink was very pale, and the fur trimmed the coat across the sailor collar behind and round the basque and pockets.

Another lady wore a very smart dark blue dress with floating panels of gray and bright blue embroidery, and a gray felt toque with a touch of blue on it.

There were a great many white jersey coat dresses and others in gray and beige, which had fur along the collar behind.

The rage for felt hats is quite at its height, and one wonders how long it will last. The furry string, the name of which I cannot remember, is a popular and smart material for toques in gray, string color, and cream, but the shape has to have that peculiar Parisian accent to make it smart, and the wearing of it is not for every woman.

Shoes are smart and high heeled, in all colors, but chiefly brown, black or beige with black vamps. They are very expensive, not good in quality, and, unless made by a first rate bootmaker, bad in shape.

There is no reason why the present simple fashions—the graceful long lines, the absence of "fussiness"—should be considered unbecoming and shunned by women whose figures may not be altogether faultless. And, really, whose figure is? Not one in a thousand.

Nothing is tight, and the clever looseness skips all corners in great shape and really lures the critical eye away from all faults.

Simplicity can be very expensive—we all know that to our sorrow—but it does not have to be.

There are many women who have just as clever a knack of making cheap and good loking simplicity as there are women who have the gift of wearing it well.

In the midst of really tremendous events women's dress seems to show at its best.

There are many notes in the styles which are quite without reason for being there, but this very unreasonableness of the summer fashions is perfectly fascinating.

The return of the perfectly plain, single breasted coat is a joy to many people. It is of easy fit, it buttons or it does not, it slips on and slips off with no effort whatever, it suits certain figures which have been unkindly treated for a long while, it is economical in the extreme and it wears admirably. Realy one can praise it all round!

And the prevalence of pleating is so pretty, for pleating has to hang loose and straight.

The transparent and translucent wraps for nearly every occasion, and for practically every hour of the day hang delightfully straight and simply, and suit thin and full figures equally.

We are more than lucky in our thin silks and stuffs at present and the glorious width of most of our materials makes the fashioning of these garments simplicity itself; once you know how they "go," they seem almost to cut themselves out and wear themselves when completed.

For these hot hours a cool house dress is a necessity.

For cotton voiles and muslins this type of frock is unrivalled. The blouse slips on over the head, the absence of hooks and buttons being specially welcome where easy washing is so much needed. Moreover, as the waist fulness is simply arranged with elastic through a slot, the blouse can be stretched out flat for ironing by simply removing the elastic.

The skirt is one of the new straight shapes merely gathered to the waist all around, the seams being as little on the cross as possible for prevention of stretching. The slip-on blouse, of course is equally suitable for making in crepe de chine to be worn with contrasting skirt.

Very attractive is this indoor frock of rose color tricotine, the much flounced skirt broken by a panel front and back.

FEATURES OF FALL HATS

Velvet will be the leading material for fall hats this year, says the bulletin of the Retail Millinery association of America, with panne velvet also in great favor. Combinations of panne an Lyons velvets are being shown here, too, often in contrasting colors.

I the small shapes close-fitting turbans will have the call, while Breton effects with flares are expected to head the line of popular medium shapes. The large hats will embody canotiers, or sweeping brim effects, as well as capelines, with soft crowns drooping to one side. Straight-line sailors are not at all in evidence. Rolled brim effects and styles turned up from the face are by far the most conspicuous. Mushroom effects have not been given much consideration.

The military note in the new season's styles is conveyed by the prominence of continental effects, ranging from very small hats to very large. Peaked effects appear little in the high grade goods. The Russian turban stands out again as a strong factor.

The crowns are larger than usual, the Cloche and an adaptation of the tam showing up strongly. The brims show a tendency toward irregular lines. Sometimes they are slit at the front, side or back, or in all three places. Coronet brims in soft effects are seen, and thick or double brims are much in evidence. The new models are "soft" to the face, and are distinctly wearable.

The leaning in colors is toward black, purple, sand, navy, corbeau blue, and negre and wood brown. Beige, alone and in combination, is also well considered. The trimmings show large wings for the fronts of small turbans. They are offered in many colorings. Feather bands are also offered for small turbans, usually in pheasant plumage. Bands of burnt goose and hackle are shown, as are pompons of all kinds and black and white burnt effects in coronets and stickups. Coque feathers look promising.

EMBROIDERY LINGERIE FROCKS.

A very dainty creation is shown here featuring filet lace and embroidered net. The arrangement of both materials adds distinction to the frock. One cannot overlook the fact that the sleeves are the new elbow length and the neck low and round. Rose satin ribbon forms a rosette in back at the waistline, thus introducing a summery color note.

FRUIT JELLIES

To obtain uniform and satisfactory results in jelly making it is necessary to understand the underlying principles of tre process. A good jelly should be clear, of good bright color, and of such consistency that it will retain the shape of the mold when it is removed. It should cut with a distinct cleavage, retaining the angles where cut and appearing sparkling and glistening. It should be tender enough to quiver without breaking.

The best fruits for jelly making are those which contain both acid and pectin. Pectin is the fundamental jelly-making substance found in fruit juices, but it does not exist in all fruits in sufficient quantities to make jelly without the addition of pectin from some oher source. In slightly under-ripe fruit pectin is more abundant than in fully ripe fruit, so fruits that are not overripe are the most satisfacory for jelly making. If half the fruit selected is ripe fruit and the other half is slightly under-ripe the ripe fruit will furnish a fine flavor and color while the under-ripe fruit will furnish will furnish a fine flavor and color while the underripe fruit will contain the jellying property and give a better consistency to the finished product. Avoid using too large a proportion of green fruit, since there is danger of an off flavor due to litterness. A combination in fruit juices of pectin, acid and sugar in the proper proportions is essential in order to make good jelly.

The juices of certain fruits, such as grape, apple, orange, kumquat, gooseberry and currant, are better suited for making natural fruit jellies than juices from other fruits. The peach, strawberry and cherry contain acid but are lacking in pectin. The pear, guava and quince contain pectin, but are deficient in acid. If the missing property is added to each of these fruits, a jelly with the color and avor of the fruit selected can be made.

In the process of extracting the juice, was berries, grapes and currants in running water before stemming or capping them to avoid loss of flavor and color. Then cap or stem, weigh, and add one cup of water for each pound of fruit. It is well to crush fruits and to have only enough water to allow the fruit to cook until tender. Less juicy fruits require more water and a longer time to cook.

It is well to know what to avoid before beginning work. A finished product which contains crystals or is cloudy, soft or tough denotes that the method usesd was wrong or he work was not done with care.

Cloudy Jelly is sometimes due to cooking the fruit too long before straining the juice. Sometimes when partly gren crab apples are used for jelly making the finished product, though clear when first made, becomes cloudy upon standing. This is due probably to the starch in this fruit.

Soft jelly results often because more sugar has been used than the fruit juice requires, or sometimes because cooking was not continued long enough after addition of sugar to drive off the excessive water.

Jelly should be tsored in a cool, dark, dry place. If it is stored for too ling a time it will deteriorate in texture, color and flavor. Fir thos reason, and because jelly containers are high priced, it might be well, this season ,o consider exracting and bottling fruit juices to be used for jelly stsock and other purposes later in the year. Larger quantities of fruit can be economically saved in this way. If jelly is made only as it is needed, fewer glasses will be required, since these containers will be refilled several times during the year. Allowing grape juice to stand will often cause tartaric acid crystals to fall to the bottom of he jar, and if he sediment is not disturbed when he juice is drained off a clearer jelly can be made from this juice, although the yield will not this juice as could have been obtained be so great from a given amount of from the fresh fruit juice.

PRESERVE YOUR OWN FRUIT

DO-YOUR-BIT

Toward Conserving the Food Supply

Canning is the most important topic of the day. Even politicians discuss it. Women should not only discuss it but also practice it, as it is one of the most patriotic works ever thought of. It also reduces the high cost of living.

During these war times when the question of food is the most important topic of the day, woman should do her part in helping along these lines, by reducing the cost of living which can be done by canning fruit during season. It is not only a saving to her but also a saving to Canada and the allies inasmuch as canning food, is conserving food.

Why? Food which is not canned will spoil, while food which is preserved, keeps.

In order to see the difference between "Home-canned" goods and "tin-canned" goods, one must compare the two. First of all, when you buy preserved goods, you pay for the tin, the labor, the goods, and the profit, while if you are canning yourself you only pay for the material used, and a little of your spare time. Then, too, you know what you eat when you do your own canning.

What Have Been The Territorial Gains

countries and Rumania with her allies.

Turkey

Turkey has lost a considerable portion of her northeastern territory to Russia. The most noted city in the conquered territory is Erzerum. The area occupied by Russia is probably larger than Iowa. She has lost a considerable territory in Mesopotamia, south of Palestine. The case may be stated on the part of the allies as follows:

France

Gained a portion of Alsace-Lorraine, about the size of Polk county. Lost the entire northern part of her domain as stated above. This conquered part of France contains her most important mineral products.

Belgium

Her entire territory lost, except the small portion referred to above.

Serbia

Every foot of her territory lost to the enemy.

Portugal

So far her work consists of taking over some 70 interned German ships, and sending a small army to France.

Macedonia

The King of Macedonia abdicated his throne and turned his country over to the central powers without fighting.

Japan

Captured Kiao Chau, Germany's only port in the Orient.

Italy

Captured a mountain range on the southern borders of Austria.

Russia

Lost practically all her old Polish territory on the west as stated above. Gained the small strip in Galicia, and the Turkish territory around Erzerum.

England

England has lost no territory, and has been the most potent factor in depriving Germany of her colonial possessions. While England was thoroughly prepared for war on the sea, she was utterly unprepared on land. The criterion in naval preparedness is not only the number of ships available but the facilities for speedily building more ships, and what is equally as important, equipping them. The facilities for making guns, armor, engines and ship munitions are as important as the facilities for building ships. Guns and armor must be ordered and assured before the keel is laid; it is useless to begin the building of a ship until its equipment is assured. A dreadnought requires thousands of tons of armor, eight big guns, 100 engines apart from the main engines of from 40,000 to 100,000 tons horse power, special machinery, tools, etc. In all these matters England was thoroughly prepared.

Various Forms Of Headache

"It is necessary in order to treat headaches properly to understand the causes which produce the affection," says Dr. J. W. Ray, of Blockton, Ala. Continuing, he says, "Physicians cannot even begin the treatment of a disease without knowing what causes give rise to it, and we must remember that headache is to be treated according to the same rule. We must not only be particular to give a remedy intended to counteract the cause which produces the headache, but we must also give a remedy to relieve the pain until the cause of the trouble has been removed. To answer this purpose anti-kamnia tablets will be found a most convenient and satisfactory remedy. One tablet every one to three hours gives comfort and rest in the most severe cases of headache, neuralgia, and particularly the headaches of women.

"When we have a patient subject to regular attacks of sick headache and when he feels the least sign of an oncoming attack, he should take two A-K Tablets. Obtainable at druggists in any quantity desired."

BLUE MONDAY

A horse that has had any experience as a regular week-day worker probably dreads Monday more than any of the other six days. It's a bad day for him because he hasn't been properly treated on the day of rest. Many men, thinking they are doing old Dobbin a kindness, feed him the same amount of grain on Sunday as on a week day, or they increase it a little, feeling extra generous on the Sabbath. The result is colic or something worse for the horse, which means a really blue Monday.

If the Sunday grain feed is cut down a half or more the horse may be peeved that day, but he will be relieved the next day.

The lawyer deals in brains and disposes of them by the case.

Synopsis of Canadian Northwest Land Regulations.

THE sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, who was at the commencement of the present war, and has since continued to be, a British subject or a subject of an allied or neutral country, may homestead a quarter-section of available Dominion Land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for District. Entry by proxy may be made on certain conditions. Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of land in each three years.

In certain districts a homesteader may secure an adjoining quarter-section pre-emption. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Reside six months in each of three years after earning homestead patent and cultivate 50 acres extra. May obtain pre-emption patent as soon as homestead patent on certain conditions.

A settler after obtaining homestead patent, if he cannot secure a pre-emption, may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.00.

Holders of entries may count time employment as farm laborers in Canada during 1917, as residence duties under certain conditions.

When Dominion Lands are advertised or posted for entry, returned soldiers who have served overseas and have been honorably discharged, receive one day priority in applying for entry at local Agent's Office (but not Sub-Agency). Discharge papers must be presented to Agent.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

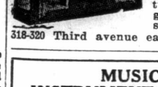
Canadian Army Medical Corps

The Canadian Army Medical Corps is that branch of the Canadian military service which looks after the health of the Canadian soldier, from the time of his enlistment, during the period of his training, and in the field on active service. From the time when a Canadian soldier is stricken down with wounds on the field of battle, until he is finally discharged from hospital, he is constantly under the care of the C.A.M.C.



In the present war, the C.A.M.C. has arrived at a very high state of efficiency, and operations have been performed and cures effected, which in former campaigns would have been deemed impossible.

The Canadian Field Ambulance, one of which is attached to each division of Canadian troops, have made a splendid name for themselves, and the units and drafts proceeding from western Canada to reinforce the field ambulances, hospitals, and so forth, have been specially commended. Of the western provinces, Alberta has done and is doing her share splendidly, in supplying men for overseas with the C.A.M.C., and as some indication of the efficiency of the men sent from this province, who have graduated from training depot No. 13, situated at Sarcee camp near Calgary, we would say that of the 100 men called for each month from Canada for overseas service with the C.A.M.C., Alberta supplies 40—a very creditable record indeed. The training at this depot, which usually lasts from one to two months, before men are sent overseas, includes squad and company drill, stretcher drill, physical training, first aid to the injured, lectures on anatomy, physiology, and kindred subjects. Sanitation, which has proved to be such an immense study, and of untold value to the troops at the front, is given special attention. When one considers the practical immunity from disease enjoyed by our armies, due to the excellent sanitary precautions, it is not difficult to realize the wonderful progress made along this branch of medical work, as never before in the history of the world's wars, has there been less fever or epidemic, than in the present conflict. The record is all the more striking in view of the fact that more men are engaged in this gigantic struggle than in all the wars the world has seen during the past 200 years.

Canadian medical units are to be found in every part of the war zone, France, England, Belgium and the Mediterranean. In the latter district alone, Canada has supplied 4,320 beds, and 1,264 medical officers, nurses and orderlies.

More men are needed at once for the C.A.M.C. to carry on this most necessary work. In order that sick and wounded Canadians may be looked after by Canadians, it is necessary that a steady stream of trained men be kept flowing from the training depot at Sarcee camp. The work is interesting and likely to be useful to anyone in after life. Drafts are leaving for overseas every month. Previous experience is not necessary, and any man of average intelligence is eligible for enlistment in this corps. Enquiries from men interested are invited, and will be cheerfully answered by recruiting headquarters, C.A.M.C. training depot No. 13, Sarcee camp, near Calgary.

CHAMPION CLEANED UP DRUMHELLER

Fully 3,000 people watched Earl Lewis and his band of baseball tossers wallop Drumheller Wednesday afternoon, scoring 17 to 2. After the first few innings the game was never in doubt, as the class of support handed the Drumheller pitcher was not to be compared with that accorded McMorran, who did the hurling for Champion. Only one fly was captured in the outfield for Drumheller, and that was taken care of by Lee Drumheller. Both teams trotted out first-class pitchers, and there was little to choose between the offerings of McMorran and Brown, but the former had the better team behind him, and the Champion team steadily surged ahead, and in the eighth inning they forced across eleven great big tallies and all hope was gone. McMorran made the hit of the day when he drove the ball past Chuck Henderson on a line and completed the circuit with two runners on the sacks ahead of him.

The heavy artillery for Champion was supplied by Frank Lewis and C Stark, the former hitting three times out of five at bat, producing a single, a double and a triple; C. Stark had two singles and a double.

Lacombe Defeated by the Calgary S. P. A. Team

The Calgary team easily scored a victory against Lacombe. The local team played rather a nifty game of baseball, and were never in danger, the one lone run that was scored against them coming in when they had tired themselves out running the bases. This was scored by Danner, the diminutive second sacker of the northern team. Joe Carnegie was at the plate on six occasions, and he drove out four safe hits, one of them a double; Gillespie was at the bat five times, and he made four hits, one a triple and one a home run; both he and Carnegie scored four times. Jack L'Evique was up six times, and he made three hits and scored a like number of runs. He was also the "white-headed boy" with his two thrilling running catches in left field that brought great applause from the 4,000 fans. Harry Carvel caught a fine game and is credited with no less than 15 putouts, two-thirds of the necessary number; 10 of these were on third strikes, which shows the gameness of Bruce, Knudson and Gill.

The Calgary team suffered a great loss when Bobby Bruce was injured in the fifth inning, when he attempted to stretch his double into a triple and wrenched his ankle on the third cushion as he made a futile slide for the bag. This will cost Calgary's chances for the first place title, for Bruce's value is great.

TRAPSHOOTING RIVALS BASEBALL

There is plenty of activity in athletic circles in spite of the fact that the war has taken away so many stars. Though baseball, as yet, holds the centre of the stage; trap shooting, golf, fly casting, roque and tennis attract unusual interest, while other sports also come in for attention.

It seems that with the flower of our athletes away in France or in the training camps, all activities in that line would cease. Not so. Instead their departure has been an incentive to the younger set, who are grasping hold of the opportunity. Formerly they feared to compete with the seasoned veterans, but now when they are alone they become champions, and establish new records.

A decade ago the trapshooters were few in comparison to the present number, but now there is such a marked change that trapshooting rivals baseball and other national games. Ten years ago there were only 100,000 persons shooting over the traps on the American continent. Five years ago the number had increased to 250,000, while in the last five years the number increased to 700,000 in Canada and the United States.

The money expended by these sporting men and women is something enormous. Practically 36 million clay rocks are killed each year, which costs in the neighborhood of $270,000. Each shooter, according to authentic estimates, shoots about 500 rounds of ammunition during the season, on this basis the cost of shells totals about $12,600,000 annually. Travelling expenses at the rate of $60 a person, accounts for another $40,000,000, while the price of guns, taking a low average of $40 for each weapon, is $27,000,000.

By taking note of statistics it can be easily seen that the sport is growing to crowding ahead so much that in the near future it will be the leading event in athletic circles. In 1913 the number of contestants in registered tournaments in America was 7,124, a year later it was 7,849; in 1915 it was 8,130, and in 1916, 10,228. The number of tournaments for these respective years were 336, 354, 392 and 446.

Aside from the glitter of the sport, which is the foundation on which is constructed the sports which have led to the popularity of trapshooting are to a great extent found in the recreation placed upon holding these tournaments and at short and convenient intervals so that shooters have only a couple of months during which to do their cross-firing. However, with organizing a regular sport shooting can be carried on practically the whole year round.

Practice has sent the standard of trapshooting well above what it was a few years ago. Going back, not too far, is a professional record for successive breaks made by Jack Fanning, one of the best known shots in America, in 1900 on the roof of Madison Square Garden, New York. He made a world's record of 235. A year later Bill Crosby of O'Fallon, Ill.,

Things An Autoist Should Know

AN AUTOMOBILE BRINGS ENJOYMENT TO ALL

Again comes the real automobiling season, bigger, brighter, and more places of interest to go. And again we tell all those who have been anticipating the purchase of an automobile to go out now along Calgary's automobile row and purchase a car. There are represented in Calgary today the cream of North America's automobiles. You may not be able to buy one of the higher priced machines, but Calgary offers everything from the second-hand car at $200 up to the luxurious Packards and Cadillacs. If you have a car, and can afford a better one, now is the time to purchase it. Or if you have none, get one this year if you can possibly afford it.

There is such a thing as foolish economy—and it includes depriving yourself or your family of a car, if you can possibly afford to own one.

Your first great thing is time—a car doubles time's value.

The one thing we all enjoy and own is this beautiful earth.

A car enables you, your family and your friends to know and see this earth and enjoy it fully.

Happiness demands that the family be kept united. The automobile is the second home, in which the family all together, enjoy things together.

The automobile is the delight of old people—their one pleasure.

It gives back to them swift motion and the feeling of youth. In all the family happiness it is about the only thing they can enjoy.

They must look on at games. But they, too, the old, can go motoring on the hundreds of miles of good highways throughout the great west.

The man who accumulates his money, content to put off the automobile day, instead of getting a car now, while the old mother or father can enjoy it and their son's prosperity, is not the best type of man.

To call a car "luxury" if you are able to own and enjoy it, is untrue economics. As well call running water and a bathtub in your home luxury.

You pay for running water as a matter of custom. Just as important as that this your home and your car should be of good service enough is.

But a car this year, if you have none, this a season the best you can afford, if you have one already.

An Every Need

They are made, literally, for every need and every taste. For about ratios as much as a good bicycle used to cost you can get a car that will give years of pleasure to an entire family. Or you can get a car costing as much as a nice little house, offering luxury that in the language of Ogden Armour would have made a Roman emperor feel like a gypsy. If you can afford the great expensive car—get it and encourage the genius of Canadian industry. But remember that the $5,000 car will get you no

CALGARY'S "BARNEY OLDFIELD"

Alf Mabee, a well known local boy, demonstrated the speed and efficiency of the modern automobile when he piloted a Studebaker six from Okotoks to the city limits in 35 minutes. The party, consisting of two Calgary oil men and a reporter from this paper, left the oil town at 1 o'clock Friday and reached this city at exactly 1:35. The car was not taken out of high gear during the run and some bad turns were negotiated at a high rate of speed. The driver took some long chances in his race against time and set a new record which any speed artist in this country will travel some to beat with a stock car.

GASOLINE SUPPLY AT LOW EBB

Joy riding, for unnecessary pleasure will have to be stopped suddenly, is the prediction of some local oil men. They claim that the government gasoline supply is nearly exhausted and that it is a risk to rely on American replenishment, so that some measures will be passed in the near future, prohibiting unnecessary motoring.

METHOD TO CONVERT KEROSENE INTO GASOLINE

Louis Hood Chaney, of Kansas City, Mo., a member of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, has submitted to the authorities at Washington a new method for converting kerosene into gasoline at a cost, the inventor says, of less than one cent a gallon.

The process is described as electrical, and is a test plant at Coffeyville, Kan., is now in operation. Kerosene has been converted into a gasoline capable of sufficiently high quality to run a motor of the kind that propels Mr. Chaney's car. As soon as some further experiments are completed he expects to be able to convert 10,000 gallons of distillate at the Coffeyville plant.

SUCCESSFUL MAN IS DEPENDENT ON AUTO

"The more successful a man becomes the more he depends upon his automobile to keep him so," says a well known auto official. "To him the purchase of an automobile is a means

$36,500 IN STAKES AT LAUREL

Laurel, Md.—The Maryland State Fair corporation has announced the most ambitious program of its history for its coming autumn meeting of 27 days of racing at Laurel park. Twenty-two stakes will be decided between October 1 and October 31 and they will have a total value in added money of $36,500. All stakes are worth running for.

TRAPSHOOTING RIVALS BASEBALL

There is plenty of activity in athletic circles in spite of the fact that the war has taken away so many stars. Though baseball, as yet, holds the centre of the stage; trap shooting, golf, fly casting, roque and tennis attract unusual interest, while other sports also come in for attention.

It seems that with the flower of our athletes away in France or in the training camps, all activities in that line would cease. Not so. Instead their departure has been an incentive to the younger set, who are grasping hold of the opportunity. Formerly they feared to compete with the seasoned veterans, but now when they are alone they become champions, and establish new records.

A decade ago the trapshooters were few in comparison to the present number, but now there is such a marked change that trapshooting rivals baseball and other national games. Ten years ago there were only 100,000 persons shooting over the traps on the American continent. Five years ago the number had increased to 250,000, while in the last five years the number increased to 700,000 in Canada and the United States.

The money expended by these sporting men and women is something enormous. Practically 36 million clay rocks are killed each year, which costs in the neighborhood of $270,000. Each shooter, according to authentic estimates, shoots about 500 rounds of ammunition during the season, on this basis the cost of shells totals about $12,000,000 annually. Travelling expenses at the rate of $60 a person, accounts for another $40,000,000, while the price of guns, taking a low average of $40 for each weapon, is $27,000,000.

By taking note of statistics it can be easily seen that the sport in general is crawling ahead so much that in the near future it will be the leading event in athletic circles. In 1913, the number of contestants in registered tournaments in America was 7,014, a year later it was 7,849; in 1915 it was 8,140, and in 1916, 10,528. The number of tournaments for these respective years were 286, 314, 333 and 546.

Aside from the liking of the sport, which is the foundation on which it commenced, the causes which have led to the popularity of trapshooting are to a great extent found in the restrictions placed upon hunting. Shooting seasons are so short and game laws are so strict that shooters have only a couple of months during which to use their guns. However, with trapshooting a popular sport shooting can be carried on practically the whole year round.

Practice has sent the standard of trapshooting well above what it was a few years ago. Going back, not too far, is a professional record for successive breaks made by Jack Fanning, one of the best known shots in America, in 1900 on the roof of Madison Square Garden, New York. He made a world's record of 235. A year later Bill Crosby of O'Fallon, Ill., made a continuous run of 345. This record stayed until 1904, when Crosby surpassed himself by breaking 419 in a row. It was only four years later that this mark was bettered when C. G. Spencer made a long run of 565 in a competition at St. Louis.

The amateur record run stands to the credit of J. R. Graham, who made 415 at Chicago in 1912.

Women, too, are breaking into the game with some very good averages. Records of their proficiency shows that they break better than 90 per cent. of their targets. The first trap shooting club for women was formed by Mrs. Harriet D. Hammond at Wilmington, D. C., in 1913. It has now more than 60 members.

The event which is now attracting attention is the Grand American handicap, the feature of the trapshooting world which will be held under the auspices of the South Shore Country club, the week of August 20. As in past years, this event will attract many shooters from every part of the country, with many new names this year. Representatives are expected from England.

Since the time that Veteran Tom Marshall, with a company of trapshooters, cleaned up everything across the other side, European shooters have been seeking revenge. Shooters from foreign countries who took part in previous events and who were unsuccessful attributed their failure to the fact that they had been used to shooting at live birds on the other side at different angles. For the second time in the history of the event, trapshooters will fire at birds sent over a lake. The traps will be installed thirty yards from the shore line, and only the water and sky will be the back ground instead of a wooden or concrete backstop. Consequently contestants cannot make the excuse that some dark portion of the backstop obstructed their aim.

The South Shore club, of which Everett C. Brown, one of America's best known athletic men is president, is doing everything possible to make the tournament a memorable one. Entertainment committees have been appointed, while Elmer Shaner, secretary of the Interstate association, will conduct the shoot himself.

AN AUTOMOBILE BRINGS ENJOYMENT TO ALL

Again comes the real automobiling season, bigger, brighter, and more places of interest to go. And again we tell all those who have been anticipating the purchase of an automobile to go out now along Calgary's automobile row and purchase a car. There are represented in Calgary today the cream of North America's automobiles. You may not be able to buy one of the higher priced machines, but Calgary offers everything from the second-hand car at $200 up to the luxurious Packards and Cadillacs. If you have a car, and can afford a better one, now is the time to purchase it. Or if you have none, get one this year if you can possibly afford it.

There is such a thing as foolish economy—and it includes depriving yourself or your family of a car, if you can possibly afford to own one.

Your first great thing is time—a car doubles time's value.

The one thing we all enjoy and own is this beautiful earth.

A car enables you, your family and your friends to know and see this earth and enjoy it fully.

Happiness demands that the family be kept united. The automobile is the second home, in which the family all together, enjoy things together.

The automobile is the delight of old people—their one pleasure.

It gives back to them swift motion and the feeling of youth. In all the family happiness it is about the only thing they can enjoy.

They must look on at games. But they, too, the old, can go motoring on the hundreds of miles of good highways throughout the great west.

The man who accumulates his money, content to put off the automobile day, instead of getting a car now, while the old mother or father can enjoy it and their son's prosperity, is not the best type of man.

To call a car "luxury," if you are able to own and enjoy it, is trivial nonsense. As well call running water and a bathtub in your house luxury.

You pay for running water as a matter of course. Just as important as valuable to health is the running air that fills your lungs and clears your blood as your car rushes through it.

Get a car this year, if you have none. Get a better, the best you can afford, if you have one already.

All Kinds Made

They are made, literally, for every need and every taste. For about twice as much as a good bicycle used to cost you can get a car that will give years of pleasure to an entire family. Or you can get a car costing as much as a nice little house, offering luxury that in the language of Ogden Armour would have made a Roman emperor feel like a gypsy. If you can afford the great expensive car—get it and encourage the genius of Canadian industry. But remember that the $5,000 car will get you no more fresh air, take you no farther, show you no more country, than the car for $2,000 or $1,000, or $600 or $500.

Get the car that you can afford. That is the car without regret. But get a car, there is one that you can afford, if you realize what a car means and what its place is in modern life.

For instance, a little inexpensive house in the country, a car in your own tiny garage in the back of the lot means a better, happier family than a city flat, twice as expensive as the country house, plus the car.

Unfortunately, and we regret it, to many that read a newspaper such as this, read by thousands, including those that cannot now think of buying any car, this may mean bitter disappointment. They will say, "It is all very well to talk about buying a car—but how am I going to get a car, when I can hardly take care of my family?"

Such men, especially, we advise to visit the many attractive salesrooms of Calgary automobile dealers. Men get what they desire to possess.

Wanting anything, makes men get a thing and work for it.

Take 1,000 negroes on the Congo, and not one wants anything. A good hippopotamus, not too fresh; a place in the sun, free from ants and snakes that bite—they ask nothing more, because they know nothing more.

Queen Elizabeth ate without forks, had no carpet on the floor, had 1,000 dresses and no bathtub. We should have advised her to get forks, carpet, a tub—and use it—we should have sent her a bathtub.

If you see the automobile, you will want the car, and to want a thing is the first step toward getting it.

CALGARY'S "BARNEY OLDFIELD"

Alf Mabee, a well known local boy, demonstrated the speed and efficiency of the modern automobile when he piloted a Studebaker six from Okotoks to the city limits in 35 minutes. The party, consisting of two Calgary oil men and a reporter from this paper, left the oil town at 1 o'clock Friday and reached this city at exactly 1:35. The car was not taken out of high gear during the run and some bad turns were negotiated at a high rate of speed. The driver took some long chances in his race against time and set a new record which any speed artist in this country will travel some to beat with a stock car.

GASOLINE SUPPLY AT LOW EBB

Joy riding, for unnecessary pleasure will have to be stopped suddenly, is the prediction of some local oil men. They claim that the government gasoline supply is nearly exhausted and that it is a risk to rely on American replenishment, so that some measures will be passed in the near future, prohibiting unnecessary motoring.

METHOD TO CONVERT KEROSENE INTO GASOLINE

Louis Bond Cherry, of Kansas City, Mo., a member of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, has submitted to the authorities at Washington a new method for converting kerosene into gasoline at a cost, the inventor says, of less than one cent a gallon.

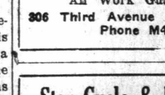
The process is described as electromagnetic, and in a test plant at Coffeyville, Kan., 78 per cent. of kerosene has been converted into a water-like gasoline of sufficiently high quality to run a motor or do first class dry cleaning, Mr. Cherry says. As soon as some further experiments are completed he expects to be able to convert 60,000 gallons of distillate at the Coffeyville plant.

SUCCESSFUL MAN IS DEPENDENT ON AUTO

"The more successful a man becomes the more he depends upon his automobile to keep him so," says a well known auto official. "To him the purchase of an automobile is a means of maintaining his personal efficiency.

"He knows it enables him to do more and better work In fact he has found that by owning a car he can do maximum work in the minimum time, and today it's the time saved, not the time spent that counts.

"With only sixty minutes in an hour, it's up to everybody to make each minute count. If the average man and woman will figure up the many hours an automobile will save them, think of the many things they can accomplish in that time, they will see why the automobile is one of the necessities of life."



POLO MATCH IS ABANDONED

Those who are looking forward to the polo tournaments will be disappointed to find that the games have been called off.

Although the national championships and other tournaments have been declared off for this season, the Polo Association of America has quietly been conducting arrangements for matches with an Argentine team in the east during August and September. A letter arrived from South America stating officially that the team will not come during the present year at least. It was signed by J. D. Newman, who played with the Argentines in Southern California two seasons ago, and is well known in this country. The letter was addressed to William A. Hazard, secretary-treasurer of the Polo association.

BY

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

SYNOPSIS OF FORMER CHAPTERS

In which Kazan, the wolf dog, is introduced to the readers of this story. Thorpe and his wife are living at one of the far Canadian settlements and Thorpe has just returned with Kazan, that he has picked up on his travels.

Kazan had never known the touch of a hand until Thorpe's wife caressed him for bringing her husband safely home. The touch was so strange and soothing that Kazan immediately became her devoted slave.

Sad to relate Thorpe did not understand Kazan in too close proximity he became alarmed and grabbed a club and struck Kazan beliving that Kazan intended to bite her.

Kazan became domesticated under the soothing influence of Thorpe's wife and all went well until one of the desperadoes of the wilds came to Thorpe's hut. Kazan evidently recognized the ruffian McCready and snarled at him. cCready likewise thought he knew Kazan but under another name, and he later tested him and found that he did.

During the evening McCready drinks heavily and a devil made plan is hatched in his mind. He wakes up Thorpe on a pretence that some one is about and they go out looking for the prowler. McCready gets Thorpe to hold the lantern and they disappear in the darkness. When McCready returns Thorpe is not with him. Kazan sees him come back and wonders at Thorpe's failure to return.

McCready then goes into the hut with a dep laid plan in his drunken head. Thorpe's wife screams on his appearance, caling for Kazan. Kazan is tied tight with an iron chain but on hearing his mistress scream he makes several attempts and finally breaks the chain, bounds into the hut and leaps upon the ruffian and buries his fangs into McCready's throat until he feels the warm blood oozing therefrom. Thorpe's wife tries to pull Kazan off and finally faints in the ordeal. Now go on with the story.

Kazan looks up after attacking McCready and sees Thorpe approaching with a club in his hand. He remembers the last licking he had from Thorpe and so he flies in tersor.

When Thorpe hears how Kazan has saved his wife he is almost overcome and they jointly go out to hunt for Kazan, but Kazan does not understand and the nearer that Thorpe approaches the faster does Kazan fly away.

In his flight he runs across the pack and the desire for companionship overcomes his training and he joins the band of wolfs.

The leader of the band disputes Kazan's admittance to the pack and a fight ensues in which Kazan is victorious, but wounded. A she-wolf attracted by his wonderful fighting ability comes to him and helps him to his feet. He recovers and goes off into the great forest, followed by the she-wolf. When he stops and the other draws up beside him he feels the same thrill that he experienced when the girl touched him.

For months they traveled together finding company in each other till one day they saw a man coming in a sled, with the result that Gray Wolf was wounded in the leg. For days they lived in the woods, when finally they went on, finding a trail—man-trail. Kazan with his call soon brought to his assistance a whole pack of wolves and they were off to vengeance.

They came upon the sleigh, fought the dogs and lost several of their number under the rifle fire. Kazan had nearly finished with dogs and man when he noticed the girl in the sleigh. Everything changed suddenly and Kazan and Gray Wolf supported the occupants of the sleigh. It was the girl that saved the day.

When Pierre Radisson, who was the owner of the sleigh, discussed the recent fight with his daughter, he concluded that Kazan had helped them. He also knew that the brave wolf was seriously wounded so he struck out on the trail and finally came upon the wounded Kazan. He wanted to touch the wounded dog but the snaps kept him away so he left, only to return with the girl. Joan moved closer and Kazan felt a new thrill, till finally he drew up beside her. When she saw the wounds on the dog's leg she asked Pierre to help her take Kazan to the camp.

After some time Kazan was taken to camp and laid beside the fire, where he was taken care of. All seemed strange yet familiar to him. A cry from the sled frightened Kazan and he answered with a low whimper, which Joan noticed. She uncovered the bundle and held it before the dog, that was interested. The dog dragged himself to the girl's feet.

Pierre and Joan name the dog "Wolf," and retired for the night. During the night Kazan heard Gray Wolf calling. Gray Wolf crept near to the camp and Kazan answered her. The next day they started north, the dog chained behind the sleigh and Pierre drawing the sleigh. He had a deadly cough, but he kept it to himself. At night they stopped for camp and Kazan heard Gray Wolf several times. The next day after a tiresome journey they reached the river in time to make camp before a storm. That night Pierre died and Kazan heard Gray Wolf's wailing cry.

In the morning Joan found her father dead, and though frightened she kindled a fire. Then she pulled down the tent, harnessed Kazan and started down the river. Exhausted she fell upon the sled and Kazan dragged the load himself till he came to a cabin. The inmates took Joan and her baby and Kazan and revived them. In the morning Kazan slipped out and met Gray Wolf who tried to keep him in the haunts, but he went back and followed Joan and the baby until they reached their own cabin. Then Kazan slipped back to Gray Wolf.

Joan discovers Kazan's name.

In the spring that followed Kazan was called by his name each day. The voice of Joan was very familiar and pleasing to him but not to Gray Wolf. One night Kazan was called as usual, and when he was leaving Gray Wolf seemed very strange, but he went any way. At night, as he lay in the cabin, he heard his mate's voice but could not get out till morning, when to his astonishment in arriving at the spot he discovered that Gray Wolf was a mother. New duties and responsibilities fell on his shoulders, so he had to go and get food. While away on a searching trip a lynx invaded the lair where Gray Wolf and the young ones slept, causing much destruction and trouble. As Kazan appeared with a rabbit he saw the lynx and Gray Wolf in a death grip, he rushed to her assistance and with his powerful strength hurled the lynx over the high precipice. However, he discovered that the wolf pups were all killed —torn to pieces—and Gray Wolf herself was blind. He led her away to a woded point after much difficulty and from there he was taken away by Joan down the river.

Now go on with the story.

Joan waved her hand back at the cabin, just disappearing behind the trees.

"Good-by!" she cried sadly. "Good-by—" And then she buried her face close down to Kazan and the baby, and sobbed.

The man stopped paddling.

"You're not sorry—Joan?" he asked.

They were drifting past the point now, and the scent of Gray Wolf came to Kazan's nostrils, rousing him, and bringing a low whine from his throat.

"You're not sorry—we're going?" Joan shook her head.

"No," she replied. "Only I've—always lived here in the forests—and they're home—home!"

The point with its white finger of sand, was behind them now. And Kazan was standing rigid, facing it. The man called to him, and Joan lifted her head. She, too, saw the point, and sudednly the babiche leash slipped from her fingers, and a strange light leaped into her blue eyes as she saw what stood at the end of that white tip of sand. It was Gray Wolf. Her blind eyes were turned toward Kazan. At last Gray Wolf, the faithful, understood. Scent told her what her eyes could not see. Kazan and the man-smell were together. And they were going—going—going—

"Look!" whispered Joan.

The man turned. Gray Wolf's forefeet were in the water. And now, as the canoe drifted father and farther away, she settled back on her haunches, raised her head to the sun which she could not see and gave her last long wailing cry for Kazan.

The canoe lurched. A tawny body shot through the air—and Kazan was gone.

The man reached forward for his rifle. Joan's hand stopped him. Her face was white.

"Let him go back to her! Let him go—let him go!" she cried. "It is his place—with her."

And Kazan reaching the shore, shook the water from his shaggy hair, and looked for the last time toward the woman. The canoe was drifting slowly around the first bend. A moment more and it had disappeared. Gray Wolf had won.

CHAPTER X.

The Days of Fire

From the night of the terrible fight with the big gray lynx on the top of the Sun Rock, Kazan remembered less and less vividly the old days when he had been a sledge-dog, and the leader of a pack. He would never quite forget them, and always there would stand out certain memories from among the rest, like fires cutting the blackness of night. But as man dates events from his birth, his marriage, his freedom from a bondage, or some foundation-step in his career, so all things seemed to Kazan to begin with two tragedies which had followed one fast upon the other after the birth of Gray Wolf's pups.

The first was the fight on the Sun Rock, when the big gray lynx had blinded his beautiful wolf mate for all time, and had torn her pups into pieces. He in turn had killed the lynx. But Gray Wolf was still blind. Vengeance had not been able to give her sight. She could no longer hunt with him, as they had hunted with the wild wolf-packs out on the plain, and in the dark forests. So at thought of that night he always snarled, and his lips curled back to reveal his inch-long fangs.

The other tragedy was the going of Joan, her baby and her husband. Something more infallible than reason told Kazan that they would not come back. Brightest of all the pictures that remained with him was that of the sunny morning when the woman and the baby he loved, and the man he endured because of them, had gone away in the canoe, and often he would go to the point, and gaze longingly down-stream, where he had leaped from the canoe to return to his blind mate.

So Kazan's life seemed now to be made up chiefly of three things: his hatred of everything that bore the scent or mark of the lynx, his grieving for Joan and the baby, and Gray Wolf. It was natural that the strongest passion in him should be his hatred of the lynx, for not only Gray Wolf's blindness and the death of the pups, but even the loss of the woman and the baby he laid to that fatal struggle on the Sun Rock. From that hour he became the deadliest enemy of the lynx tribe. Wherever he struck the scent of the big gray cat he was turned into a snarling demon, and his hatred grew day by day, as he became more completely a part of the wild.

He found that Gray Wolf was more necessary to him now than she had ever been since the day she had left the wolf-pack for him. He was three-quarters dog, and the dog-part of him demanded companionship. There was only Gray Wolf to give him that now. They were alone. Civilization was four hundred miles south of them. The nearest Hudson's Bay post was sixty miles to the west. Often, in the days of the woman and the baby, Gray Wolf had spent her nights alone out in the forest, waiting and calling for Kazan. Now it was Kazan who was lonely and uneasy when he was away from her side.

In her blindness Gray Wolf could no longer hunt with her mate. But gradually a new code of understanding grew up between them, and through her blindness they learned many things that they had not known before. By early summer Gray Wolf could travel with Kazan, if he did not move too swiftly. She ran at his flank, with her shoulder or muzzle touching him, and Kazan learned not to leap, but to trot. Very quickly he found that he must choose the easiest trails for Gray Wolf's feet. When they came to a space to be bridged by a leap, he would muzzle Gray Wolf and whine, and she would stand with ears alert—listening. Then Kazan would take the leap, and she understood the distance she had to cover. She always over-leaped, which was a good fault.

In another way, and one that was destined to serve them many times in the future, she became of greater help than ever to Kazan. Scent and hearing entirely took the place of sight. Each day developed these senses more and more, and at the same time there developed between them the dumb language whereby she could impress upon Kazan what she had discovered by scent or sound. It became a curious habit of Kazan's always to look at Gray Wolf when they stopped to listen, or to scent the air.

After the fight on the Sun Rock, Kazan had taken his blind mate to a thick clump of spruce and balsam in the river-bottom, where they remained until early summer. Every day for weeks Kazan went to the cabin where Joan and the baby—and the man—had been. For a long time he went hopefully, loking each day or night to see some sign of life there. But the door was never open. The boards and saplings at the windows always remained. Never a spiral of smoke rose from the clay chimney. Grass and vines began to grow in the path. And fainter and fainter grew that scent which Kazan could still find about it —the scent of man, of the woman, the baby.

One day he found a little baby moccasin under one of the closed windows. It was old, and worn out, and blackened by snow and rain, but he lay down beside it, and remained there for a long time, while the baby Joan —a thousand miles away—was playing with the strange toys of civilization. Then he returned to Gray Wolf among the spruce and balsam.

The cabin was the one place to which Gray Wolf would not follow him. At all other times she was at his side. Now that she had become accustomed to her blindness, she even accompanied him on his hunts, until he struck game, and began the chase. Then she would wait for him. Kazan usually hunted the big snow-shoe rabbits. But one night he ran down and killed a young doe. The kill was too heavy to drag to Gray Walf, so he returned to where she was waiting for him and guided her to the feast. In many ways they became more and more inseparable as the summer lengthened, until at last, through all the wilderness, their footprints were always two by two and never one by one.

Then came the great fire.

Gray Wolf caught the scent of it when it was still two days to the west. The sun that night went down in a lurid cloud. The moon, drifting into the west, became blood red. When it dropped behind the wilderness in this manner, the Indians called it the Bleeding Moon, and the air was filled with omens.

All the next day Gray Wolf was nervous, and toward noon Kazan caught in the air the warning that she had sensed many hours ahead of him. Steadily the scent grew stronger, and by the middle of the afternoon the sun was veiled by a film of smoke.

The flight of the wild things from the triangle of forest between the junctions of the Pipestone and Cree rivers would have begun then, but the wind shifted. It was a fatal shift. The fire was raging from the west and south. Then the wind swept straight eastward, carrying the smoke with it, and during this breathing spell all the wild creatures in the triangle between the two rivers waited. This gave the fire time to sweep completely across the base of the forest triangle, cutting off the last trails of escape.

Then the wind shifted again, and the fire swept north. The head of the triangle became a death-trap. All through the night the southern sky was filled with a lurid glow, and by morning the heat and smoke and ash were suffocating.

Panic-stricken, Kazan searched vainly for a means of escape. Not for an instant did he leave Gray Wolf. It would have been easy for him to swim across either of the two streams, for he was three-quarters dog. But at the first touch of water on her paws, Gray Wolf drew back, shrinking. Like all her breed, she would face fire and death before water. Kazan urged. A dozen times he leaped in, and swam out into the stream. But Gray Wolf came no farther than she could wade.

They could hear the distant murmuring roar of the fire now. Ahead of it came the wild things. Moose, caribou and deer plunged into the water of the streams and swam to the safety of the opposite side. Out upon a white finger of sand lumbered a big black bear with two cubs, and even the cubs tok to the water, and swam across easily. Kazan watched them, and whined to Gray Wolf.

And then out upon that white finger of sand came other things that dreaded the water as Gray Wolf dreaded it: a big fat porcupine, a sleek little marten, a fisher-cat that sniffed the air and wailed like a child. Those things that could not or would not swim outnumbered the others three to one. Hundreds of little ermine scurried along the shore like rats, their squeaking little voices sounding incessantly; foxes ran swiftly along the banks, seeking a tree or a windfall that might bridge the water for them; the lynx snarled and faced the fire; and Gray Wolf's own tribe—the wolves—dared take no deeper step than she.

Dripping and panting, and half choked by heat and smoke, Kazan came to Gray Wolf's side. There was but one refuge left near them, and that was the sand-bar. It reached out for fifty feet into the stream. Quickly he led his blind mate toward it. As they came through the low bush to the river-bed, something stopped them both. To their nostrils had come the scent of a deadlier enemy than fire. A lynx had taken possession of the sand-bar, and was crouching at the end of it. Three porcupines had dragged themselves into the edge of the water, and lay there like balls, their quills alert and quixering. A fisher-cat was snarling at the lynx. And the lynx, with ears laid back, watched Kazan and Gray Wolf as they began the invasion of the sand-bar.

Faithful Gray Wolf was full of fight, and she sprang shoulder to shoulder with Kazan, her fangs bared. With an angry snap, Kazan drove her back, and she stood quivering and whining while he advanced. Light-footed, his pointed ears forward, no menace or threat in his attitude, he advanced. It was the deadly advance of the husky trained in battle, skilled in the art of killing. A man from civilization would have said that the dog was approaching the lynx with friendly intentions. But the lynx understood. It was the old feud of generations—made deadlier now by Kazan's memory of that night at the top of the Sun Rock.

Instinct told the fisher-cat what was coming, and it crouched low and flat; the porcupines, scolding like little children at the presence of enemies and the thickening clouds of smoke, thrust their quills still more erect. The lynx lay on its belly, like a cat, its hindquarters twitching, and gathered for the spring. Kazan's feet seemed scarcely to touch the sand as he circled lightly around it. The lynx pivoted as he circled, and then it shot in a round snarling ball over the eight feet of space that separated them.

Kazan did not leap aside. He made no effort to escape the attack, but met it fairly with the full force of his shoulders, as sledge-dog meets sledge-dog. He was ten pounds heavier than the lynx, and for a moment the big loose-jointed cat with its twenty knife-like claws was thrown on its side. Like a flash Kazan took advantage of the moment, and drove for the back of the cat's neck.

In that same moment blind Gray Wolf leaped in with a snarling cry, and fighting under Kazan's belly, she fastened her jaws in one of the cat's hindlegs. The bone snapped. The lynx, twice outweighed, leaped backward, dragging both Kazan and Gray Wolf. It fell back down on one of the porcupines, and a hundred quills drove into its body. Another leap and it was free—fleeing into the face of the smoke. Kazan did not pursue. Gray Wolf came to his side and licked his neck, where fresh blood was crimsoning his tawny hide. The fisher-cat lay as if dead, watching them with fierce little black eyes. The porcupines continued to chatter, as if begging for mercy. And then a thick black suffocating pall of smoke drove low over the sand-bar and with it came air that was furnace-hot.

At the uttermost end of the sand-bar Kazan and Gray Wolf rolled themselves into balls and thrust their heads under their bodies. The fire was very near now. The roar of it was like that of a great cataract, with now and then a louder crash of falling trees. The air was filled with ash and burning sparks, and twice Kazan drew forth his head to snap at blazing embers that fell upon and seared him like hot irons.

Close along the edge of the stream grew thick green bush, and when the fire reached this, it burned more slowly, and the heat grew less. Still, it was a long time before Kazan and Gray Wolf could draw forth their heads and breathe more freely. Then they found that the finger of sand reaching out into the river had saved

CHAPTER XI

Always Two by Two

It was January when a guide from the post brought Paul Weyman to Henri Loti's cabin on the Waterfound. He was a man of thirty-two or three, full of the red-blooded life that made Henri like him at once. If this had not been the case, the first few days in the cabin might have been unpleasant, for Henri was in bad humor. He told Weyman about it their first night, as they were smoking pipes alongside the redly glowing stove.

"It is damn strange," said Henri. "I have lost seven lynx in the traps, torn to pieces like they were no more than rabbits that the foxes had killed. No thing—not even bear—have ever tackled lynx in a trap before. It is the first time I ever see it. And they are torn up so bad they are not worth one half dollar at the post. Seven!—that is over two hundred dollar I have lost! There are two wolves who do it. Two—I know it by the tracks—always two—an'—never one. They follow my trap-line an' eat the rabbits I catch. They leave the fisher-cat, an' the mink, an' the ermine, an' the marten; but the lynx—sacre an' damn!—they jump on him like you pull the wild cotton balls from the burn-bush! I have tried strychnine in deer fat, an' I have set traps and deadfalls, but I can not catch them. They will drive me out unless I get them, for I have taken only five good lynx, an' they have destroyed seven."

This roused Weyman. He was one of that growing number of thoughtful men who believe that man's egoism, as a race, blinds him to many of the more wonderful facts of creation. He had thrown down the gantlet, and with a logic that had gained him a nation-wide hearing, to those who believed that man was the only living creature who could reason, and that common sense and cleverness when displayed by any other breathing thing were merely instinct. The facts behind Henri's tale of woe struck him as important, and until midnight they talked about the two strange wolves.

"There is one big wolf an' one smaller," said Henri. "An' it is always the big wolf who goes in an' fights the lynx. I see that by the snow. While he's fighting, the smaller wolf makes many tracks in the snow just out of reach, an' then when the lynx is down, or dead, it jumps in an' helps tear it into pieces. All that I know by the snow. Only once have I seen where the smaller one went in an' fought with the other, an' then there was blood all about that was not lynx blood; I trailed the devils a mile by the dripping."

A PAGE FOR THE BOYS AND GIRLS

-: GREAT KING EAGLE :-

Once upon a time there lived an old king who was so selfish and stingy that his subjects hated him and called him King Hawk. Every time he saw a flock of fat, woolly sheep, or a field ripening for harvest, or an orchard laden with fine fruit, he would say, "No one has a right to own that except a grand king like myself. From this moment that flock"—or field—or orchard—"is mine, and the man who owned it can feel that he has added to the possessions of his king."

That was cold comfort to the man who had planned to feed his family with food from the fields and clothe them with wool from the sheep!

No wonder the people, who often watched the greedy hawks steal their fattest ducks and chickens, called the king after the cruel birds. The king heard the name, but instead of making him angry it rather pleased him, for he supposed his subjects thought of the hawk's fierce, black eyes, and his proud way of soaring through the air.

Gradually King Hawk had grabbed everything in the kingdom that was worth owning and sold it so as to fill his chests with shining, gold pieces. He lived in a dreary, old castle, and his one pleasure was to count the clinking gold, like the old miser that he was.

There was just one person he loved more than his money, and that was his only son. His wife had died when the prince was a baby and the king had brought the boy up to be like him and grab everything he wanted. The attending lords and ladies did not think it very pretty when the baby prince leaned across the table and snatched bits of cake or pastry from their plates, but the king only roared with laughter and cried. "You are just like your father, my son; isn't there something else you want?" For answer the child would tear a shining bracelet from a lady's arm or a ring from her finger, and to please the king she would have to smile and make believe she was amused.

But when the prince was growing into a young man the old king died, and the crown and kingdom, as well as the grim castle and its chests of shining gold, belonged to the spoilt prince.

He would have been a nice boy if he had been brought up better. He was tall and strong, with fearless brown eyes, and a clear ringing voice. But when the people saw him riding through the kingdom with his father's crown upon his head, they cowered within their poor, dingy houses.

"He is handsomer and prouder than his father," they said. "We will call him King Eagle. What will he take from us?"

But although the young king rode far and searched carefully he could find nothing in his kingdom but poor people, bare fields and mudy streams. Quite disappointed he rode back to his castle, and opening the chests of gold told his attendants to travel to distant lands and buy, since he could not grab them from strangers, costly tapestries and pictures, carved furniture and splendid robes. As he told them to buy also fine clothes for themselves, they were quite willing to carry out his orders.

The castle was transformed. Glowing tapestries covered the old stone walls, soft cushioned furniture filled the rooms, and crystal vases holding fragrant flowers were everywhere, even in the winter, when the price of a single rose would have fed a hungry family. Best of all the castle was full of music. Young King Eagle sang so beautifully that if his subjects had heard him they might have changed his name. Instead of an eagle's harsh cry his voice was as clear and sweet as a lark's. But his eyes were like an eagle's and he had a proud way of carrying his head as if all the world was made for him, which was very like the bird after whom he was named.

The subjects, hungry, cold and forlorn now that their possessions had been taken from them, never came near enough to the castle to hear the music. They were too busy trying to keep from starving to think of such a thing. But night after night musicians and singers met in the great hall lighted by hundreds of candles, and after feasting on delicious food served in golden dishes they played and sang. The young king's clear voice led them all until it sounded as sweetly as if the forest birds were singing their lovely songs in the flower-scented castle.

One cold night while the halls echoed with music a loud knock came at the castle door. When it was opened the snow came swirling into the large hall where the company was gathered, and half hidden in snow and sleet stood the figure of a shepherd, his crook in one hand, while with his other he drew his old cloak about him.

"Close the door, send the beggar away!" commanded the king, but there was a strange expression in the shepherd's eyes which made the attendants fall back, startled.

"Will no one obey my orders?" cried the angry king, and he sprang up, intending to slam the door in the stranger's face.

But before he reached it the shepherd had drawn a flute from beneath his cloak, and raising it to his lips played a melody so sweet and gay, so tender and yet so joyous that King Eagle stood still, enchanted.

"That is the most bewitching tune I have ever heard," he cried, when the last note died away. "You must stay here and teach it to me tonight."

"That tune cannot be learnt in a single night," answered the shepherd. "If you really want to learn it you must work hard. If you care enough for that meet me an hour before sunrise upon the hill behind the castle."

Then he was gone, and except for a few snowflakes melting upon the hearth there were no signs of his having been there. But the gay crowd was quiet; their finest songs seemed dull and poor after the exquisite melody they had heard, and yet strangely enough not one of them could remember a single note of the shepherd's music.

Soon they separated for the night, but the king could not sleep. He tossed to and fro until when the great tower clock struck an hour before dawn he hurried behind the castle. There in the snow and darkness he found the shepherd waiting for him.

"Teach me the tune now," demanded the king. "I kept trying to remember it all night; I can think of nothing else," and he shivered as he pulled his fur-lined mantle about him.

"As I told you, you must work hard before you can learn that tune," answered the shepherd. "Are you ready to go wherever I wish?"

When the king, puzzled at his own meekness, said that he was, the shepherd played another tune upon his flute. It sounded like the flapping of wings, the quick, upward flight of a bird, the scream of an eagle. Before it was finished the king's cloak fell from him, his arms changed to wings, his feet to claws, and at the last scream he sprang into the air, a great, brown eagle, uttering that bird's harsh cry. But beneath his feathers he was still the young king.

By his side flew the shepherd, his old gray cloak forming wings, and together they soared over fields and hills until they reached the city.

"Look below with your clear bird's eyes," said the shepherd, "and tell me what you see."

"I see miserable hovels," answered the eagle, "and through the windows I see pale children and tired men and women. The children seem to be crying; they are seated around breakfast tables, but I see no breakfast there. Is that why the children weep? Now I see a man going out to work. He has a crust of bread in his hand and he looks at it hungrily. But he is not eating it; no, he has given it to a crying child, and the boy has snatched it without a word of thanks and is gulping it down like a hungry dog. Selfish, ungrateful child!"

"Did you ever see a boy snatch before?" asked the shepherd, and suddenly a new feeling stirred in King Eagle's heart, a feeling of shame.

"Those are my subjects," he said, startled, "and they are hungry because my father snatched their flocks and fields from them!"

Swiftly they flew back to the castle. When they reached the hill they alighted and the king returned to his own form, but he did not ask again to learn the tune. Instead he hurried to the castle and gave orders for great kettles of soup to be made, and hundreds of loaves of bread baked. When they were ready he called his lords and ladies and they followed him out of the castle, each bearing loaves of bread and bowls of soup. They thought it was a new game and rode forth joking and laughing.

But when they reached the city their smiles died away, for the king insisted upon each dainty lady and proud lord entering a miserable house and leaving the food and a gold piece beside it upon the table with the promise that they should have food every day until their fields could be bought back and planted.

It was a quiet, puzzled train that returned to the castle. "What has happened to him?" they whispered. "Did the shepherd who came last night bewitch him?"

The next morning, as the shepherd had arranged, the king again met him upon the hillside before sunrise.

"May I learn the tune today?" he asked humbly. But the shepherd answered, "Not yet, oh, king; there 's still much for you to learn before you can carry that melody."

So again he played the eagle's music, and again the king took the great bird's form and flew with the shepherd over the bare fields to the city.

"What do you see this morning?" asked the flute player.

"I see children leaving well-filled breakfast tables to run to the fireplaces. They are stamping their feet and rubbing their hands as if they were cold. Alas, it is no wonder, for there is no fire in the chimneys. Now I see a mother who has taken off her cape, although her gown beneath it 's in scanty rags. She has wrapped it about a crying child who runs off without thinking how cold her mother must be. Heartless girl!"

"Where did you leave your fur cloak?" asked the shepherd, and without another word they flew back to the hillside. Although the eagle became a king again and the day was cold, he did not put on his fur-lined cloak. He threw it over his shoulder and ran to the castle. There every closet was searched and again the king rode forth, bearing wraps of all kinds. When they reached the city the king found the poor, cold mother and wrapped her in his royal mantle, and the lords and ladies who were beginning to enjoy this work as much as if it were a game, left blankets and cloaks everywhere. They also left a gold piece at each house with which the family could buy back their flock of woolly sheep.

The third morning the king met the shepherd again. Streaks of red and gold in the sky showed the approach of the sun, a little bird was singing, and there was a freshness in the air like the coming of spring.

"Am I ready to learn the melody yet, friend shepherd?" asked the king.

"Not quite," answered the shepherd; "there is one more lesson for you to learn, the best of all."

He played the eagle's music, the king became a great bird, and they soared together beneath the brightening sky to the city streets. Then they flew down to an open door, and there, to his surprise, the king's feathers left him and he stood upon the threshold in his own form. Only the shepherd had thrown his old gray cloak over the royal robes so that no one could have guessed it was the king.

Within the cottage a woman bent sorrowfully over a bed where a sick child lay moaning with pain and fever. The woman saw the king's shadow upon the white wall and she looked up eagerly.

"Are you a doctor?" she asked. "Can you cure my child. The fever has kept him tossing for so long that he will die if he cannot sleep."

King Eagle had never seen a sick child before and he had no idea what to do for him. Only he felt sorry, sorrier than he had ever felt about anything in his life, and he longed to help. He turned to the shepherd to ask his advice, but the shepherd had gone.

Then an idea came to the king. "Perhaps I could sing the little one to sleep," he said. So sitting beside the bed he sang a lullaby, so sweet and soothing that the fever left the boy, and turning quietly he fell into a deep slumber.

When he awoke the sun was high in the sky and the cheerful light filled the room. The king sat by the bedside in case he should be needed, and the child took his hand, whispering, "Sing again. I am well now, but I am so weak and sad; sing and make me happy."

Then outside the door the king heard the shepherd playing upon his flute the melody he had so longed to learn, and as easily as if he had known it all his life, King Eagle picked up the tune with his clear, joyous voice and sang and sang until the color came back to the child's pale cheeks and his eyes sparkled.

"I am happy again!" he cried, "I want to dance and sing. Teach me that tune."

"You will know it some day without being taught, little brother," said the king. "When you have learned the lesson your king has learned the tune will run in your heart always."

That evening as the sun set, the lords and ladies did no sing in the castle. They sang instead in the city streets, led by King Eagle; and the people and children, well fed and well warmed, sang also, until as the last rays of the sun lighted the old town it seemed as if it were a fairy city, full of comfort and warmth, color and music and happy love.

-: A SURPRISE IN COUNTRY :-

When vacation began Matt, strange to say, was sorry. Not that Matt was a "sissy"; no indeed, for he was as real a boy as ever twirled a ball or swung a baseball bat. But he always went away with his mother into the country as soon as school closed, and there he had no "fellers" to play with; so it is little wonder that he hated to see books closed and put away.

He felt that he knew the farm and the country roundabout so well that he could find nothing new to interest him. Really and truly, it was a forlorn little chap who stepped aboard the train with his mother one morning early in July.

The train sped along and as the last houses of the city faded from view and the broad fields of the country came into sight, Matt cheered up a little. The air smelled good and it was jolly to think of seeing the old farm again. If only he could find some chaps of his own age for playfellows, he thought, he wouldn't mind it at all. He began to think of all the things he could do with other boys, and he occupied himself with such fancies until he neared the end of his journey.

At the station, where Matt and his mother left the train, Farmer John, driving the old gray horse, Nelly, waited for them. The drive to the farm was about a mile long; and on the way Matt had a surprise, he noticed several new houses. His mother was talking to John about them.

"So the Browns have divided their farm and built five or six houses," she was saying, "well, that ought to give us some new neighbors." She turned to Matt. "Did you hear that, son?"

"Have the people got any boys?" Matt asked.

"Ya-as, lots of them; that's all they have got," sniffed the old man, who didn't like to see the old farms cut up and strangers come to live on them.

That afternoon Matt climbed onto Nelly's back and jogged down the road towards the new houses. And such a sight met his eyes as he approached them! There in the middle of a pasture was a diamond, chalked off as neat as any city chap could desire; and there in the pitcher's box was one of the "fellers," arm upraised, ready to toss a ball.

"Baseball," breathed Matt. "How'll I ever get 'in' with those kids?" He watched the play for a few seconds, but all the while no one paid the least bit of attention to him. The kids hardly noticed his presence. Discouraged and hurt, Matt turned Nelly's head around and rode back towards his house. He was usually the center of things and it didn't suit him at all to be entirely left out.

The next day he took Nelly and the buckboard to the station to get the trunks. As he drove near the houses he noticed that the pasture was deserted; not a feller was in sight. He felt sorry, somehow. At the station the old stationmaster, who knew Matt's father and mother ever since they were children, dragged the trunks across the platform and loaded them on the buckboard.

"Quite a load there, son," he said. "Think you can manage all right?"

"Sure," replied Matt, "old Nelly'll take it easy. I'll walk her back."

"Those trunks are strapped on good and tight," said the old man, "I guess you'll get along." And with that he turned away and Matt tightened up the reins. Nelly started off.

All went well, for Nelly was a quiet old horse. Matt almost went to sleep, as she dragged along. They reached the new houses, and Matt halfway opened his eyes to see if anyone was around. Not a person was in sight; so he settled down again to resume his nap.

Crash! Something splintered. Matt thought one of the trunks had fallen, so he hopped off to see what he could do. But he had guessed wrong. Something worse from his point of view, was the cause of that crash.

In the middle of the road, broken in two, was a new baseball bat! The heavy load on the buckboard had passed over it, and there it lay, a wreck.

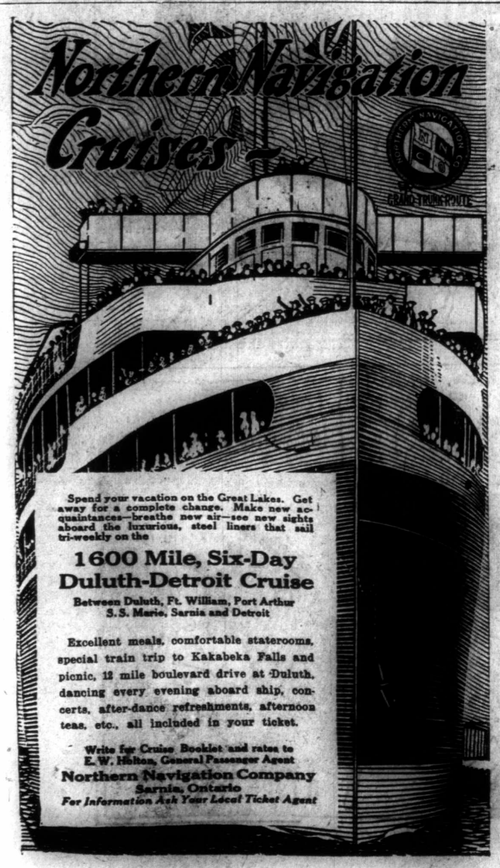
"What shall I do?" Matt questioned himself. "This bat belongs to those fellers. They'll be as mad as hops, because they can't play ball without it. And it's a brand new one, too!"

It looked like a bad situation. But Matt was quick to see that here was an opportunity to get acquainted if he squared things up. He walked up to the nearest house and knocked at the door. A freckle-faced little boy appeared and Matt told him the story.

"Gee," said the boy, "us fellers chipped in to buy that bat. 'Course, it was our fault to forget and drop it in the road. He looked to Matt for the next suggestion. Matt was ready.

"I tell you; you get all the fellers together and tell 'em about it," he said. So they both sauntered out to the road and the freckle-faced boy gave a blood-curdling yell which brought about six boys out of the houses in a jiffy, like firemen at the sound of an alarm. When they got together he showed them the splintered bat and told the story. Then Matt stepped forward.

"Say," he began, "I've got a good bat with my things in one of those trunks; and since it was my horse and wagon that broke your bat, I'll make good the damage. But you all were partly to blame because you left your bat in the middle of the road, so you oughtn't to make me do everything."



"What do you want us to do?" someone asked.

"Well," he answered, "I'd like to some down and play with you and your team. I'm a good pitcher."

"All right," they said together, for they knew they were to blame in leaving their bat in the road; and they didn't want to have their play stopped. Also, they were impressed with Matt's offer and already they liked his straightforward way. Happy and satisfied, Matt drove off.

That afternoon, when mother had unpacked the trunk and Matt laid hands on the beloved bat, he started out for the "big game." The kids were all gathered waiting for him. As he swung into view with the bat over his shoulder, they gave a whoop-ee. "Here's to our new captain," they shouted; and the freckle-faced boy took Matt by the arm and led him around to meet each one. Then they took places and began to play. "It looks like a good summer," said Matt to himself.

Calgary's Theatre Season Opens

The Noisy Side

Vaudeville fans are wondering now what is going to be "fashionable" in acts this season. For it must be remembered that each season there is some particular style of act that has a run. Last season it was dancing—how they did dance! Some on their toes, others on their heads; near-Hawaiians from Manhattan or some other tropical isle, compromised between the two and danced a sort of a happy medium in their own particular wiggly way; they danced dying swans and blind pigs; some attired in fumed oak stain and others in a leopard skin—but they all danced. Other seasons were all for sketches in which the many varieties of crooks get their innings. There are times when the "strong men" come into their own, and do some wonderful things.

What the harvest will be this coming season cannot be conjectured, but there is sure to be an "epidemic" of some kind. However, theatre-goers will survive it and some around smiling every week looking for more and getting it.

There is one thing that Calgary theatre-goers should do—that is, take a look over the best of the vaudeville bills in New York. There are some people in Calgary, when asked how they liked the show, will assume a blase air and in a bored tone admit that it is "fair"—if their egg has been a little stale that morning they are just as liable to say the show was rotten also. By looking at the bills in New York they will see that in practically every performance down there there are the names of some of those who have been over the Calgary way. Calgary is getting just as good vaudeville as any other city on the continent.

When the long summer evenings are shortening; when there is a chill in the air some mornings that makes a man wonder just what condition his "heavy ones" are in; when even the warmth of youthful affection will not keep a couple comfortable on a park bench every night—then it may be said that the fall theatre season has arrived.

Timing conditions very nicely, theatre managers have their houses all furbished up anew; the prolific press agent after his summer vacation has thought out some dandy stunts to put over on the receptive public, and the wise theatre manager decides that he will spend a little more in advertising than he did before. Fall announcements of theatre plans compete with the "creations" of the millinery departments, but the "dope" in the theatre page is scanned with more interest than it has been since last spring, when thoughts "lightly turned" to other things.

But there are confirmed theatre-goers who do not recognize any "close season" on theatre going. This year Manager D. G. Inverarity, of Pantages, kept the house going all the time and has been favored with satisfactory houses. Those who have not been going to the Pan since last spring will find the interior looking ever so much brighter. There has been a lot of decorating done—very well done, too—and those who are dropping in again these evenings are greatly pleased at the improvements. The regular patrons are promised some very fine bills during the season. Last season "Invy" put over some good ones, and this year's billing will be quite up to the mark. At least no person in the world would have any reason to doubt it after having him look you right in the eye through those new gig-lamps and say it was going to be a fine season.

NEW LIBERTY THEATER A SEETHING CROWD OF EXCITEMENT

At last the much heralded event is at hand—the opening of the New Liberty theater.

For days and days society and theatergoers generally have been all in a flutter over the reported opening of a new picture house that would vie with the well known theaters of the city for first honors.

The fact that rumors upon rumors have fluttered around the town regarding the sumptuous appointments of the house coupled with the fact that the attractions would be of the highest standard have kept the theater lovers on the qui vive of excitement. Coupled with this has been the fact that the various crowds that have passed the building have been kept at a fever heat of excitement through the activity that predominated all around the building.

Painters and carpenters, interspersed with experts in mural and interior decorations have been busy for days renovating, building and decorating this handsome pleasure resort so that every comfort would greet the crowds that will grace this beautiful house on its opening.

Nothing has been spared to please the public and add to their comfort. The appointments are perfect while the character of the shows will be the highest of any picture playhouse in Canada.

The management is sparing no expense to please the public and to add to their comfort. Such extraordinary means to cater to the public whim is sure to result in the popularity which the house deserves.

The Allen theatre is to have a new attraction in the near future. Oral Cloakey, the popular manager, can't possibly stay away from the stage, so he is going to give the patrons of the Allen theatre some of his music. During intermissions he expects to render solos of unusually high class order—similar to those that he used to give when he was the star musician at the Allen.

New Liberty Theatre

GRAND OPENING TODAY

A HOST OF NEW SURPRISES FOR YOU

MME. OLGA PETROVA

"Bridges Burned"

SAT., MON., TUES. and WED.

SOMETHING ABOUT THE OPENING BILL AT THE NEW LIBERTY

The opening bill at the New Liberty will be "Bridges Burned," a remarkable feature that will introduce Mme. Olga Petrova, the celebrated Russian actress, again to the Calgary public.

No comment is necessary regarding the remarkable acting of this celebrated actress. Words fail to adequately express the interest that has been shown by the public wherever this picture has been shown.

An actress of known talent who has few equals and no superiors in the theatrical world, she has won her laurels on the stage through sheer ability.

The fact that she will be the opening feature of this handsome theater will do much to attract and add to the pleasure of the patrons of the house.

Other feautres equally as entertaining if not quite as great will be shown from time to time on the screen at this emporium of pleasure.

The management are emphasizing one of the strong points of the house, "public comfort." In this precept will be coupled everything that the words embrace.

Things that are pleasing to the eye in the way of color schemes predominate throughout the house while the attendants employed will be equally schooled in catering to the public.

The man or woman that cannot find every wish gratified at the New Liberty will certainly be hard to please after the remarkable efforts that the management has put forth.

Mr. Wright, of the Regent theatre, has exclusive rights for several large features, such as the "Barrier," one of Rex Beach's best tales. Several of the newspaper men of Calgary had the pleasure of seeing this great feature, and each remarked favorably on the play. This picture is not only to be shown in Calgary but also in the towns of the western provinces. It is a wonderful production and will doubtless receive such recognition as the picture deserves.

The Silent Side

Miles of romance, drama, comedy and all other emotions are ready to be unrolled for the entertainment of the steadily increasing number of people who patronize the houses where silence reigns supreme on the stage and music plays its harmonizing part in keeping with the subject portrayed. Writers who think they know all about the effect of the pictures, and they nearly all arrive at a different conclusion—but the public keeps on going to see the films in greater numbers; the productions are more elaborately staged; the greatest stars are paid fabulous sums—and the photoplay houses continue to flourish.

The astute manager, and the wizard-like premonitions of the producers have resulted in some great pictures being ready for the season's rush of patrons. Commencing this week and continuing throughout the season, The Western Standard will print the stories of the many splendid serials which are to be produced in the local theatres this season. This special feature of the paper will be popular with readers and theatre patrons alike. It will be like reading a fascinating story in which every incident will be illustrated with the most lifelike presentations of the original characters.

A number of the leading theatres will run serials during the season, and they make special mention of them in another part of this paper.

Some information regarding the attractions which are in store has been secured from the film exchanges.

There is an abundance of high-class enjoyment bottled up in the fall and winter forecast of the Mutual Film Corporation, according to the prognostications of Manager W. R. Marshall, who reviews the forthcoming events for The Western Standard.

The chief offerings appear to be those in which the celebrated Charles Frohman stars will scintillate. Under the shrewd guidance of President John R. Freuler, the Mutual Film Corporation some time ago succeeded in obtaining exclusive producing rights to all of the late Charles Frohman's successes. To the seasoned theatre-goer it is needless to emphasize the importance of such an announcement.

For the purpose of perpetuating this master producer's works, the Empire All Star Corporation was organized. This company has been arduously at work for many months on a number of the most popular Frohman successes, with the result that it is now ready to announce a partial list of the forthcoming offerings. Among them are to be found such famed works as "Outcast," "The Runaway," "The Beautiful Adventure," "The Richest Girl," "The Imposter," "My Wife" and "Her Sister."

In the galaxy of stars will be seen such well-known Broadway names as Ann Murdock, Julia Sanderson, Olive Tell, Otis Skinner, William Gillette and others equally prominent in the Frohman field.

In addition to these there will be regular big feature releases, with such first-magnitude stars as "Big Bill" Russell, dainty Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fischer, Jackie Saunders, the topsy turvy tomboy of the screen, Gail Kane, Edna Goodrich, and others which will be announced from time to time. The Mutual's policy is "Big Stories for Big Stars Only."

Artcraft pictures, which have in the past included the wonderful "Joan the Woman" and other equally famous productions, will again present the carefully studied pictures which their artists so realistically produce. Mary Pickford, in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook

The New Liberty Theatre Throws Opens Its Doors Today

Today (Saturday) Calgary's newest moving picture theatre will open its doors for the first time to the public. Commencing today at 11.30 and continuing till 11.30 p.m., the "New Liberty" will offer its first production, "Bridges Burned," featuring Mme. Olga Petrova, a five-part Metro Wonderplay.

What was formerly the Monarch theatre, in the Elma block on Eighth street, has been completely remodelled and renovated, and equipped with a new ventilation plant that fills the theatre with fresh air every ten minutes, which will make the New Liberty very popular during the warm weather, and strictly sanitary at all times.

Mr. Charles Hansen, the new proprietor and one of Alberta's pioneer exhibitors, and proprietor of two of the most popular picture theatres in Lethbridge, decided that if he opened a theatre in Calgary he would give his patrons nothing but the best, and as a consequence he has entered into a contract with the "Greater Vitagraph" and "Metro" to have the exclusive showing of all their productions in the city of Calgary, which will assure the patrons of the best in the line of moving pictures.

In order that the patrons of the "New Liberty" may be assured of seeing the best productions well screened, Mr. Hansen has had two new Simplex machines installed at a great cost, and these machines in the hands of two capable operators, Mr. N. E. Stevens and Mr. James Miller, will surely mean a perfect picture.

Under the direction of Mr. A. J. Talbot, the "New Liberty" orchestra consisting of five pieces will greatly assist in the presentation of all productions. The placing of the orchestra in the "New Liberty" differs from other theatres in western Canada, as instead of the musicians being directly in front of the screen, they will be located at the extreme back of the theatre. This plan is adopted in order that no lights of any kind, such as used in the orchestra pit, will be playing on the screen, thereby assisting in the showing of a clear picture. As the orchestra will be upstairs, those waiting on the outside will be treated to the music as well as those viewing the picture.

Very dainty indeed are the interior decorations, and the effect is heightened by the inverted lighting system, which is now all the vogue in all the larger theatres in eastern Canada. Outside, the most striking eeffct is produced by life-like figures, each holding a large torch, and mounted on a marble pedestal in front of the box office. An immense glass canopy, which is now on its way, will be erected over the entrance, and when this is in place the "New Liberty" will present as fine an appearance as any theatre in the west.

Mr. H. R. Keele, formerly travelling representative of the "Greater Vitagraph" Film Co. of New York, who has just left the above firm to take over the management of the "New Liberty," assures the writer that nothing will be left undone towards making this one of Calgary's most popular moving picture theatres, and will endeavor to see that his patrons are at all times used with all possible courtesy.

In order that the "New Liberty" may be fittingly opened, Mr. Keele has invited all members of the Great War Veterans' society to be present at the opening. He has also invited the mayor and commissioners and aldermen, and it is to be hoped that a large number of "movie fans" will witness the opening production, Mme. Olga Petrova, in "Bridges Burned."

MARY PICKFORD, IN "THE LITTLE AMERICAN," STARTING SEPTEMBER 10

In undoubtedly the most gripping and thrilling photodrama in which she has ever appeared, the nation's sweetheart, Mary Pickford, will be seen at the Allen four days, starting Monday, Sept. 10, in her newest Artcraft picture, "The Little American." A vital story by Cecil B. De Mille and Jeanie Macpherson, and produced under the personal direction of Mr. De Mille, whose many creations have made him one of the foremost masters of photoplay technique, this film offers a particularly timely subject of patriotic theme.

Since her appearance at the head of her own company for the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, Miss Pickford has appeared in several strong, dramatic photoplays. Her recent production, "A Romance of the Redwoods," which, when first shown, proved a sensation, made a lasting impression upon the minds of her thousands of admirers. However, in "The Little American," she is given a story which for thrilling situations and great appeal outdoes anything the famous little star has ever appeared in.

The story deals with the present great war and offers various surprises that when seen on the screen will disclose remarkable effects. As the little American girl, marooned in a French chateau while the battle surges around her, "Little Mary" is given an opportunity to display the wonderful dramatic ability with which she is gifted. Although the story deals with the war, it is not of the same type as the ordinary war drama, as it deals more with the intimate than with the general. In keeping with the talents of the star, an exceptionally capable supporting cast appears in this production, including such well-known players as Hobart oBsworth, Jack Holt, James Neill, Raymond Hatton, Guy Oliver, Edythe Chapman, Littlian Leighton, Walter Long, Dewitt Jennings and Ben Alexander.

24,000,000 MEN FIGHTING.

The fighting armies of the belligerents today, according to Sir William Robertson, number twenty-four millions of men. Such a figure as this is impossible of realization, but a few familiar comparisons may help the public to grasp what it means.

If all the people in Greater London, in Paris, Berlin, Petrograd, Rome, Vienna and Constantinople were gathered together in one great crowd, they would still require the populations of New York, Chicago, Liverpool, Glasgow and Manchester to the very last new-born babe, to come anywhere near the total of the belligerents engaged in this unexampled war.

Supposed it was announced that this army should march along the Thames embankment, ten abreast, at a walking speed of four miles an hour, the spectator who had vowed to see them all pass would have to stand for two solid weeks, night and day, the men never pausing for a moment's rest, but keeping on the seemingly endless tramp.

Forget the business of making a living and be content for the day with just living.

VIVIAN MARTIN, IN "A KISS FOR SUSIE," AT THE ALLEN LAST TIMES TODAY

Dainty Vivian Martin will be seen in her latest photodramatic success, "A Kiss for Susie," at the Allen last times today.

In "A Kiss for Susie," Vivian Martin has a role exactly opposite to that she had in her last appearance on the Paramount programme in "Forbidden Paths." Now she is seen as Susie Nolan, the energetic young daughter of Jim Nolan, an artistic bricklayer. Young Phil Burnham, of the firm for which Nolan works, decided to begin at the bottom by carrying the hod, but takes a different name. One day he meets Susie as she comes to bring her father his lunch. The friendship grows before long and the two youngsters are in love. Then Susie's uncle from Australia dies and they are left a lot of money, and, as Susie expresses it, anything over six dollars a day makes a bricklayer dizzy, so her father and her older brother and sister immediately start out to be social butterflies. Susie sees that the gay life is wrecking their happiness, so she plans that her father shall make an investment and lose all of his money. This is done, and how matters are straightened out and how everyone is finally happy is brought about in Paul West's most clever and unusual manner.

Miss Martin is surrounded by a cast of unusual excellence, including Tom Forman, the clever and popular young juvenile who scored such pronounced success with Blanche Sweet and other stars. Others in the cast are John Burton, Chris Lynton, Jack Nelson and Pauline Perry. The production certainly is most artistic in every detail.

A good comedy will also be shown with the above attraction, which closes an excellent programme.

MOUNT ROYAL COLLEGE NOTES

Why Go to College?

This is the time of year in the city and country when parents and young people are considering the question of school and college. Where to go? When to go? As well as, why go? are the questions of vital moment. The life, the character, future usefulness of the boy or girl may hinge upon the answers that are given to these questions.

Will a college education pay? Ours is a practical age? A western business man said recently: "If you can show me how it's going to pay, I will talk to you about sending my girls to the college." This is the lowest basis, but it cannot and ought not to be ignored. The United States commissioner of education is the authority for the statement that "a public school education increases one's productive ability 50 per cent. A high school training increases it 100 per cent., and a college training increases it 200 to 300 per cent."

A wealthy farmer said the other day "that education spoiled most people because it rendered them unwilling to work." The facts are against that farmer. The best farmer today is the educated farmer. The reason is clear: The college boy is taught to observe, to reason, to draw conclusions.

A recent agricultural survey shows that a high school education is worth as much to a farmer as $6,000 worth of 5 per cent. bonds.

Education is the bulwark of the nation. Fitness for citizenship, especially in a democracy, implies discipline. A disciplined spirit means self-control, respect for the vews and rights of others, the power of discerning between sham and reality. Such discipline is what the college offers.

The need of the world is leadership. It is estimated that about one in fifty in the United States is a college man. Yet more than 50 per cent. of the leading representatives are drawn from this mere handful of citizens. College develops leaders, develops initiative, personality; helps boys and girls to find themselves.

Educaftion means happiness. The real purpose of education is not to cram the memory with facts, but to equip the individual to fulfil the purposes for which he was created. A trained mind can never be lonesome.

Education means happiness. The An idle mind is the devil's workshop. There is a direct relation between ignorance and crime. In a Chicago court recently, 588 immoral women were examined. The education of 28 of them equalled the eighth grade in a public school, 296 the fourth grade, 186 the third grade, and 78 could neither read nor write. The secret of a noble character is the cultivation of noble thought.

Education and service. Success today is measured by service. Yesterday we asked, "What is a man worth?" Today we ask, "What has he got and how did he get it?" Tomorrow we shall ask, "Not what he holds, but what he gives." More and more our boys and girls will be prepared for service in getting their education. They will be leaving college not so much to go into private business as into public service. To equip men and women for this higher service is the supreme task of education.

Mount Royal College, Calgary, trains young men and women for any vocation in life. It furnishes a sheltering influence to young people. It believes in the enthusiasm, the hope, the liveliness of youth. The life of real service is held up as the highest call that comes to a young man or woman. The young people of Alberta are awakening to the value of a college training. Several hundred inquiries have come into Mount Royal College office during the past few weeks. On Monday morning, Sept. 10, at 9 a.m., scores and scores of new and eager faces from the village, town, country and city will throng the class rooms and corridors of the colege and start a new epoch in their careers.

THE CITY AND THE COAL BUSINESS

The city commissioners yesterday resolved to advise the city council that no direct benefit to the citizens would be obtained if the city endeavored to supply them with coal, for according to a letter received from Rental Agent Crichton, who was instructed to negotiate with S. C. Lott & Co. for carload lots at $6.75 per ton, there would be no advantage in it.

He says that the company is delivering "nut" coal at $7.75 per ton, which is a pretty close rate, and if the city tried to do it at that purchase price it could only be done at $7.65, the cost being: Coal, $6.75; cartage, 50c; city scales, 25c; loss, 15c; besides which the outlying districts would be the greatest coustomers, and the cost of hauling to Capitol Hill say, would be a dollar per ton.

Mystery of Violet Diamond Is First Episode of Fatal Ring, Pantages Beginning Monday

CAST

Pearl Standish ..... Pearl White
Richard Carslake..Warner Oland
Nicholas Knox .....Earle Fox
The Priestess .... Ruby Hoffman

The mystery of a Violet Diamond is thrillingly portrayed in the first episode of Pathe's new serial, "The Fatal Ring," in which Pearl White is to be seen at the Pantages theatre next week. The story of this episode is briefly as follows:

Pearl Standish, the richest girl in America, has little interest in the things money can buy. Bored with the diversion of society, she longs for excitement. Leaving her home to attend a ball, she is held up by a masked man. Instead of becoming alarmed, she appears to be overjoyed. "I want the Violet Diamond of Darron—quick," the man tells her.

Pearl had never heard of the Diamond, but is sounds interesting, so she determines to learn all she can about it.

Nicholas Knox, the masked man, was sent by the Secret Order of the Violet God, to recover the Diamond, believed to be in the possession of Pearl. Knox had the setting for this mysterious gem, and he learned that Pearl had inherited the Diamond from her father, who bought it before his death from a villianous priest in Arabia.

Pearl's fathefr, while on a trip through Arabia, accompanied by his secretary, Richard Carslake, did purchase the Diamond, but had never mentioned the fact to Pearl, and shortly afterwards he died. So Pearl knew nothing of it.

The stone and the setting had a value which makes death preferable to their loss. Knox was elected to recover the gem from Pearl, and was given three days to accomplish his mission. "Death will follow failure," he was told.

The Priestess, the leader of the Secret Order, accompanied by two spies, determined to watch Knox's every move. Pearl tells him that perhaps her father has the Diamond stored in her Fifth Avenue home, and if he will go with her, they will search the house. Leaving the home, Pearl notices a suspicious looking man and suggests that he might have something to do with the Violet Diamond. Oertakinvg the man, Knox discovers he is a spy sent by the Priestess. The spy warns him "Your mission is the Diamond, not the girl," he says. In the fight which folows Knox is struck on the head and falls unconscious. Pearl has hib brought to her home, where he regains consciousness. He discovers Pearl with the setting. Jumping up, he snatches the ring from her, and quickly makes his getaway.

The only man that might know something about the Diamond would be Richard Carslake, so Pearl writes him a note. The next evening he appears. In spite of the knowledge that her father and he had had a disagreement, she requests him to give her the information concerning the Violet Diamond. Just then Knox enters. Pearl points to him and says: "There is the man who has the setting."

Immediately Carslake moves toward the door. Locking it and drawing his revolver, he demands the setting for the Diamond. Searching Knox, he finds the setting, and is about to escape, when through the window comes the Priestess, accompanied by two other spies who sneak behind Carslake and knock the revolver from his hand. In the struggle which follows, Knox recovers the setting.

After a desperate struggle, Carslake escapes and Pearl finds herself alone with Knox. Wishing to know the identity of the people who helped him, and the mysterious woman, Pearl asks Knox. "I can tell you nothing." "Well, then, if you can tell me nothing, I want you to hand over that apparently much valued setting for the Violet Diamond." Assisted by her Butler, Pearl secures the setting, but the spies come to Knox's assistance again and Pearl is attacked by an Arab. In a struggle with him on the stairs, she is hurled over the rail but catches on to the chandelier and falls to the floor. Knox is finally overpowered by the butler. Standing by a window, Pearl discovers a knife stuck in the wall. Pearl pulls this knife from the wall and discovers a note on it. "Fifteen days are allowed to you to return the Violet Diamond or die," it reads.

AN INTERESTING GROUP.

Both the kiddies are clad in an up-to-date fashion. The little fellow will don a khaki uniform and be-up-to-the-minute, while his sister clings to the dainty lace and net frock which is so invaribly becoming. As for "mama" she elects the gown of polka-dot foulard with double pleated skirt and dainty lace trimmed bodice. Nimble fingers have attached the collar and cuffs with threads of silk, making it an easy matter to change them.

THRESHING IS IN FULL SWING

In most plaecs the threshing is in full swing, as announced by the Alberta Farmers' Co-operative Elevator Company.

Milk River—Threshing has commenced and wheat is grading 3 northern.

Elzikom and Mannyberries—Wheat is being hauled to the elevators.

Foremost—Wheat is going 14 bushels to the acre.

Purple Springs—Wheat is yielding over 20 bushels to the acre.

Youngstown and Hanna—Wheat yield is 10 bushels.

Travers—Wheat is yielding well; threshing is in progress.

Standard and Alliance—Crops very heavy.

Wheat in the south country is grading well. Samples received here at the elevator office grades Nos. 1 and 2. Grains have not been touched with frost.

U.S. SPENDS $24,000,000 DAILY ON WAR

Washington—War expenditures of the United States, including allied loans, have amounted during August to more than $24,000,000 every twenty-four hours. The figures, minus $100,000,000 just loaned to Russia, are contained in today's treasury statement. Two-thirds of the great sum is represented by advances to the allies. The United States has been spending daily during August for its own needs an average of $8,088,652. The allies have been receiving an average daily allowance of $16,375,000, including cash already paid and the new Russian credit which will be paid shortly. The total daily expenditure during August this reaches $24,463,652.

THE "STAGE GAME" IS LIKE OTHER GAMES

Caustic Comments by A. Panman.

Only the manager of a vaudeville house knows the real vaudevillian; his demands and kicks, his opinion of his own act, the comparative unimportance of the others on the bill, and the various other ideas he has about his "art." He (or she) is apt to be more hard to please than the "legitimate" actor who adapts himself to conditions and surroundings with an ease and a courtesy usually proportionate to his own professional position. Therefore, the following letter which I received a few days ago is not only interesting in itself, but speaks well for the act which will be seen here next week:

"Pantages Theatre,
"Edmonton, Alta.,
"Aug. 28, 1917.

"Dear Sir,—The following facts about our act may interest you:

"No. 1: It is not the best d—— act in the world.

"No. 2: It did not knock them silly in the last town.

"No. 3: Keith & Proctor are not telegraphing us to come back east every day.

"No. 4: We will open the show if you wish, or we will close it if you wish.

"No. 5: We did not go to school with Alexander Pantages; he doesn't know us, and he does not call us by our first names.

"No. 6: If you find fault with our act, we will not threaten to report you and have you discharged.

"No. 7: Our act has not gone 'great' everywhere except Calgary, and the people did not 'tear up the seats east,' in fact, we have known it to go 'rotten' in several places.

"No. 8: I am not the son of a wealthy rabbi, and I do this act just for a living, and I promise that we will not tell you several times during the week that we are 'independent' and that we do not need to work, or that we carry seven times the fare back to New York in our vest pocket.

"Kindly have a place for us on your bill, and let us go on and do our act; that is all we ask of you.

"I am, yours faithfully,
"ARTHUR SILBER,
"Silber & North."

"P.S.—I am a member of the Hebrew Hod Carriers' Association, and also a member of the Affiliated Jewish Jockeys' Union, and carry both of the union cards of these orders, so you will have no trouble with us."

SCOPE AND PURPOSES OF A ROTARY CLUB

A Rotary club consists of men selected from each distinct business or profession, and is organized to accomplish:

First: The betterment of the individual member.

Second: The betterment of the member's business, both in a practical way and in an ideal way.

Third: The betterment of the member's craft or profession as a whole.

Fourth: The betterment of the member's home, his town, state and country, and of society as a whole.

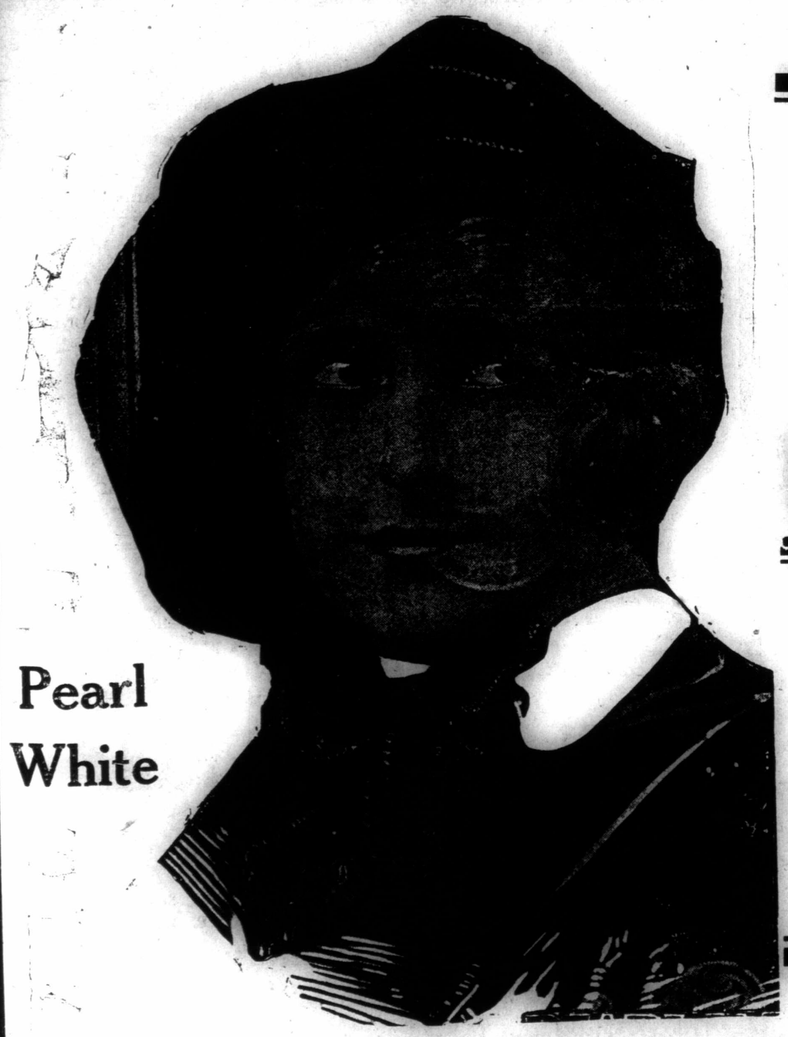
The betterment of the individual member personally.

For its members Rotary provides activities which will:

(1) Extend their horizon of business experience.

(2) Stimulate their minds to travel in unfrequented channels of thought.

(3) Arouse them to service for others



(4) Help them to attain their greatest possibilities.

(5) Make them leaders among men.

TO ISSUE WAR CERTIFICATES

A new war savings certificate is to be issued by the government which will sell at $8.60 and return $10 to the purchaser after three years. These will be placed on sale at banks and money order postoffices in Canada, immediately.

Already, to date, $10,000,000 has been made available for war purposes, through the sale of the certificates. However, it seems that the smaller the amount the more certificates are sold, as in the case in the following account: Over 140,000 certificates have been sold since January in the denomination of $25, $50 and $100. During the past several months sales have ranged from $200,000 to $300,000 per week.

"A Square Deal" Featuring Carlysle Blackwell At The Bijou Theatre on Thursday

Hugh Eltinge, a struggling young artist, and Mark Dunbar, a genius of the pen, whom the world has as yet failed to reward, live together in MacDougal Alley, down in the heart of New York's Bohemian quarter. Across the hall is Doris Golden, their staunch admirer, a reporter on the Evening Star, who enthuses over the work of both with impartial lavishness. But to Hugh's adoring eyes it is evident that Mark comes first and he is content to have it so, for down in MacDougal Alley friendship is as binding a feeling as love. He bravely puts his own disappointment aside and watches sympathetically the strengthening of the bonds between the other two.

Then Mark's novel is sold and the old order of things is changed forever. Hugh and Doris see a new Mark—an immaculate Mark, whom the best tailor in the city has taken in hand, but under whose fashionably dressed person the same impulsive heart beats as before. He begs Hugh to allow him to stake him until his pictures sell, but Hugh refuses—friendship to him means giving, not taking, and Mark's pleasure in his new popularity dwindles as he sees his old friends will not also profit by them.

Then a happy idea strikes him and he buys all of Hugh's paintings on exhibition at a local dealer's, promising to buy all the dealer can procure and requesting that his name be not mentioned. Mark rejoices with Hugh when he comes bounding home to tell the news. Then the two friends decide Doris must also share with them, and Mark again thinks of a scheme. Together they go to a lawyer, and, after much arguing, persuade him to send a letter to Doris saying her uncle in San Francisco had died, leaving her a thousand dollars.

In another section of the city, Mrs. Tralles and her daughter Ruby scheme continually to ensnare a wealthy husband for the girl. Mark's reputation has impressed them—he is invited to attend a meeting of their literary club and the girl is given instructions to attract him.

nd so Mark meets the young society girl, so totally different from his wholesome pal Doris, and mistakes her cloying sophisticated sweetness for the real genuine article. Hugh and Doris—she is reporting the meeting—are also there and to them evidences of Mark's awakening infatuation are pitifully clear.

Mark sees Ruby often. Ot a ladies' swimming regalia, he is the guest of her mother and watches with interest as the girl performs in her very attractive one-piece suit. Then at a sign from her mother she pretends to be drowning and Mark jumps in to her rescue.

short time later, she gracefully opens her eyes and smiles wanly to Mark, who bends solicitously over her. She murmurs her grateful thanks, and before he realizes it Mark has caught her tightly in his arms, kissing her passionately. The mother enters and tenders her surprised congratulations to Mark, who is dazed, but decided that on the whole he is happy rather than otherwise.

When Hugh hears the news, his first startled query, "What about Doris," wakens Mark to the realization that perhaps after all the girl cared more for him than he had imagined—he had never thought of her in any other way than as his pal. But Doris enters and wholeheartedly tenders her congratulations, hiding the bitter disappointment she feels.

Shortly after his marriage, Mark begins to feel the pangs of disillusion. Ruby is pettish and extravagant, and when he remonstrates with her, she breaks into tirades of scolding that drive him to silence.

Doris discovers her uncle is very much alive, and, perplexed, goes to the lawyer, who tells her all. She writes to Mark, enclosing a check for the whole amount she has left and promising to send the balance as soon as she can. His wife intercepts the letter and accuses him of infidelity. Her true vulgarity asserts herself and he flies home—to the little studio where poverty had been peace and happiness. Ruby follows and finds him with Doris and another scene is enacted. Mark, soul-sick and ashamed, begs Hugh to look after Doris, then leaves.

Hugh leaves a letter for Doris and a note in which he asks her not to read the letter before she has found happiness. In a nonchalant manner, Hugh tells a newspaper reporter with whom he is acquainted, that he has inherited a fortune from his grandfather, and the account is printed in the evening paper.

Ruby and her mother remember he is a friend of Mark's and ask him to call. Soon a closer intimacy than friendship develops and Mark comes home one evening to find Ruby dressed in a sheer negligee, clasped in his friend's arms. Disillusioned, his last ideal—friendship—completely shattered— Mark hurries away.

After the divorce, he seeks Doris and the two become engaged. She remembers the letter and opens it eagerly. Herein Hugh has outlined his plans—the story of the fortune was a hoax, therewith to entrap Ruby. For the sake of friendship, he had sacrificed himself to bring happiness to the two he loved. Mark telephones to him and when he comes the old feeling of happiness and love fills once more the little studio in MacDougal Alley.

WM. RUSSELL, IN "SHACKLES OF TRUTH," AT ALLEN NEXT FRIDAY AND SATURDAY

William Russell, the athletic star, in his latest screen play, "Shackles of Truth," gives a most thrilling exhibition of his boxing skill in the fight scene that Alfred Voshurgh, knocking his opponent out with a ripping uppercut that makes spectators gasp.

Mr. Russell's new play is one of the best in which he has ever appeared for the screen. It is a story of conflict between love and filial duty that affords the versatile young actor splendid opportunities for the display of his varied talents, all of which he accepts.

"Shackles of Truth" was written for Mr. Russell by Julius Grinnell Furthmann, one of the best known writers of motion picture drama. The play was directed by Edward Sloman, who has directed many of the Russell successes.

"Shackles of Truth" reveals Mr. Russell in the role of a young lawyer with a treacherous partner who tries to rob him of his sweetheart and blast his political future by taking advantage of a family secret which he threatens to reveal. The great fight takes place in the library of Gerald Hale's home when Luther Snaith, the plotter, stands at last exposed.

That Russell-Voshurgh fight bids fair to become one of the classics of the screen, for it it certainly a thriller.

The play is one of the most convincing examples of motion picture drama recently put forth, and it contains every element for popularity.

WELCOME RETURN OF ORPHEUM VAUDEVILLE ON SEPTEMBER 10

Monday, Sept. 10, will herald the opening of the new season of Orpheum vaudeville at the Grand, and the list of headliners and feature attractions for the coming season is even greater than ever before. If for no other reason than for alphabetical order, Julia Arthur in the patriotic appeal, "Liberty Aflame," might head the list. Nearer to the bottom of the alphabet is Emily Ann Wellman, another capture from the legitimate, who has an ideal vaudeville offering which combines thrilling drama with striking novelty. Sallie Fisher, too, will be another headliner suitably equipped. She has a sketch written by Clara Kummer, whose plays, "A Successful Calamity" and "Good Gracious Annabelle," put her among the headlights of playwrights last season. Emma Carus, Stella Mayhew and Anna Chandler have musical comedy and vaudeville laurels, but it is Orpheum vaudeville for them this year. Nana Halperin will have a welcome return and so will Sophie Tucker, Allan Brooks and Blossom Seeley. Eddie Foy and the Younger Foys will present their newest offering, Trixie Friganza and Elsie Janis are strong possibilities. The Kouna Sisters, the biggest singing sensation in New York since Calve came to vaudeville, will complete a tour of the Orpheum houses. Among dancers will be Nina Payne, Carl Randall and Ernestine Myers, a new combination, and Lew Brice and the Barr Twins.

There are novelties galore—George Marck and his Jungle Players, "Submarine F-7," "America First," "Rubeville" and Jasper, theonly dog headliner. Among musical comedy acts will be "The Four Husbands," Gus Edwarde's "Bandbox Revue," the Four Marx Brothers, "The Girlie's Gambol" and the new Howard and Clark Revue. "Milo" is an act about which nothing is told before the opening. Comedians include Al Hermann, Herbert Clifton, Charley Howard and Stuart Barnes.

The sketch offerings are plentiful. "Hit the Trail" and "The Night Boat" are two of John B. Hymer's writings. "The Headliners" was written by Aaron Hoffman, who, among others, wrote "The Cherry Tree," in which Harry Green will play a return engagement later in the season. Charles Withers in "For Pity's Sake" is another act of surefire fun.

These names only scratch the ground but, without a single addition, they would be certain to more than keep up the high standard of "Greater Vaudeville" on the Orpheum circuit.

The opening bill contains three headline features — George Marck's Jungle Players, an act which is an entire novelty and new to Orpheum patrons in this city. "The Night Boat" will be one of the laughing hits of the coming season. The characters are the captain and four travellers, while the situations and the dialogue of the skit are excrutiatingly funny. Charlie Howard and Company, in a new offering, will be the other feature of the bill. Charlie Howard, "the sawed-off" comedian, is returning to vaudeville with a new nevichle, "Cured." Other acts on the bill will be Miss Frankie Heath, a singing comedienne, who has for her numbers four song stories, which is a character study, as carefully constructed as the big scene in a great play and just as well told. Sense and Nonsense a la Norwood and Hall is a singing and talking novelty with costume changes. Novelty is a very much abused term these days, but it is said that Mr. Norwood and Hall do not abuse the word. The athletes on the bill will be Mang and Snyder, who appeared in this city a few years ago. To complete the bill, Col. Diamond and his granddaughter will appear in a series of dances, entitled "Youth and Old Age."

The Orpheum Concert Orchestra will be considerably augmented for the season, and, under the direction of Maynard S. Joiner, will render the incidental music for "The Best of Vaudeville."

MISS HAZEL WOOD

The "Girl with the Golden Voice," in "Step Lively," at the Grand theater, all next week.

"STEP LIVELY"

The United Producing Company will present "Step Lively," one of the season's newest and smartest successes, at the Grand for one week, commencing next Monday. This clever comedy drama, with its jolly times, unique dances and bright lines, kept New York, Boston and Chicago laughing for nearly two years. The cast is headed by Julius Velie, who will be remembered here in the title role of "Freckles." Other prominent principals are Hazel Wood, Zenaide Williams, Kathryn Sheldon, Lew Lawson, Nat Wentworth, Will F. Crockett, Howard Murrell, Clare Robinson, Al Shaw, Lelah Howard, Mildred Parker and May Wentworth,

One of the special added attractions of the piece is the whirlwind dancing of Miss Howard and Mr. Murrell, who created a sensation in the New York Winter Garden show last summer.

The seventeen popular numbers introduced constitute a song review of the latest music.

So many theatre-goers have become disgusted with the usual so-called musical comedy that it will interest them to know that "Step Lively" while possessing everything that makes this form of entertainment pleasing, has combined a real story that can be followed and which retains the interest of the audience from start to finish. It permits of many most pleasing character types, who provide both comedy and pathos, and in all constitutes the most satisfactory kind of theatrical fare that could possibly be served up.

This company is appearing in all the larger Canadian cities and is being brought here by the same concern which gave us "Freckles" and "Peg o' My Heart," although "Step Lively" is a much larger and more expensive attraction than either of those mentioned. The support that our theatregoers give "Step Lively" will be a criterion by which the United Producing Company will base their booking plans in the future, so far as this particular city is concerned.

"UNIVERSAL CITY"

The Wonderland of Filmdom, Where "The Gray Ghost," the Great Universal Serial Was Made.

Universal City, the capital of Filmland, is the only organized city in the world devoted exclusively to the manufacture of moving pictures. The Pacific Coast Studios of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, situated in the heart of the San Fernando valley, five miles north of Hollywood, a fashionable suburb of Los Angeles. The site of the largest moving picture stages in the world.

Universal City comprises 230 acres of the most rugged and picturesque hill and valley land on the south bank of the Los Angeles river. More than 50 buildings, most of which are of reinforced concrete; 3,500 employees, four and a half acres of stage space; one exterior stage, 50x125; one 300x100; one 400x100; one 125x100; two interior, electric-lighted studios, each 400x100 feet; a troup of veteran cavalry; several scores of rough-riding cowboys.

Universal City has its own zoo, one that ranks among the most extensive of such privately owned collections. Animal trainers, famous throughout the world; U. S. Postoffice; water system, phone service, carpenter and cabinet-making shops, tailoring establishment, auto service, express office, two restaurants, ice plant, $50,000 wardrobe department, arsenal, blacksmith shop, picture theatre, fire and police departments, dormitories and dwellings, telegraph sub-stations connected with every part of the continent via Western Union and Postal lines.

At Universal City, with its marvelous facilities and inexhaustible resources, the only one of its kind on earth, was produced the great serial, "The Gray Ghost," which promises to surpass in thrills and action, love interest and profits to exhibitors, any serial ever produced by any film concern in the universe.

The Gray Ghost opens at the Princess theatre, Calgary, Friday and Saturday, Aug. 31 and Sept. 1.

Three Weeks Hero In The Petrova Cast

In "Bridges Burned" the Metro Wonderplay starring Mme. Petrova, which will be seen at the New Liberty theatre on Saturday, Sept. 1, an unusually strong cast supports this famous star. The exactions of the story, which was written by Madame Petrova herself, necessitated a selection from the best actors available, and unusual success attended the efforts of Perry Vekroff, who directed the production.

In Mahlon Hamilton, Madame Petrova's leading man in this and other Metro features, the screen patrons will recognize a prime favorite. Mr. Hamilton is a native of Baltimore, and after going through grammar and high schools there he completed his education at Maryland Agricultural college. Although he is a favorite on the speaking stage, Mr. Hamilton's first dramatic work was for the screen, with Mabel Van Buren in "Music by Proxy," and "The Smuggler's Daughter," Kinemacolor productions made in California.

On the dramatic stage, Mr. Hamilton was the original Paul, of "Three Weeks." Later he was with Jessie Bonstelle, in "The Great Question," with Maxine Elliott, in "The Chaperone," and Constance Collier in her Criterion theatre production of "Israel."

After this, Mr. Hamilton went into vaudeville with William H. Thompson in a one-act play, "For Love's Sweet Sake," remaining a year. He then went back to the legitimate with Blanche Ring, in "Claudia Smiles," but again went into vaudeville with Rose Coghlan in a short play in which she starred for a season.

His first appearance in Metro productions was with Mme. Petrova, in "The Heart of a Painted Woman," in which he played the lead opposite this famous star. Then he appeared in a similar role with Ethel Barrymore, in "The Final Judgment."

Mrs. Mathilde Brundage, who is seen as Norah, first came into porminence because of her marvelous character work as "Mrs. Si Stork," in "Emmy of Stork's Nest," a Metro Wonderplay. Mrs. Brundage studied for the stage under Dr. Griffiths, stepfather of the famous Mary Anderson.

Little Maury Stewart, who plays the part of Mary's son, is among the most famous of the child actors in screen work. He has appeared in many Famous Players productions with Mary Pickford. His first appearance with Metro was with Mabel Taliaferro, in "The Three of Us." He played a remarkable role as Little David with Ethel Barrymore, in "The Awakening of Helena Richie," and also in "The Stolen Triumph," with Julius Steger—both Metro productions.

PETROVA'S ROLE AS WOMAN OF ENERGY SUGGESTS CAREER OF MRS. BOISSEVAIN

The activities of the late Inez Milholland Boiseevain in behalf of working people are suggested in the role Madame Petrova plays in the Metro production, "Bridges Burned," which will be seen at the New Liberty theatre on Saturday, Sept. 1. The spirit of reform and achievement of Mrs. Boissevain was the same that actuates Mary O'Brien (Madame Petrova) in her work in behalf of the factory girls with whom fate throws her into contact.

During the preparations for the taking of the picture, Madame Petrova spent much time in the manufacturing centres of the east studying the conditions and surroundings of the employed young women. She made friends of several of the workers and from them, at first hand, learned the problems with which they are battling.

"I was surprised to find the great good that has been done by the much-abused reformer," said Madame Petrova. "There are model factories in and about eastern cities, descriptions of which would seem like fables. All these changes have been brought about by the 'reformer.' The playing of a role wherein the sisterly spirit of help is shown always pleases, for the reason that it always makes for good."

After Mary O'Brien's rise to power because of her activities in favor of the workingwoman, she is again taken into hand by fate, and the result pleases and surprises and seems fitting as a reward for her efforts. The character of the man to whom she had given her love and trust makes for a wholesome solution of a problem that is often made unpleasant because of the lack of artistic handling.

MAHLON HAMILTON, SCREEN EXPERT, TELLS OF LOVE-MAKING IN MOTION PICTURES

Love-making in motion pictures is a new and difficult art, according to Mahlon Hamilton, leading man for Mme. Petrova in her latest Metro Wonderplay, "Bridges Burned," which will be seen at the New Liberty theatre on Saturday.

In making this statement, Mr. Hamilton talks as an expert, both on the speaking stage and screen. On the speaking stage he was the original Paul, the hero of Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks."

"There is the finest kind of art in love-making for motion pictures," says Mr. Hamilton. "On the speaking stage the hero meets the heroine and says, in a voice filled with emotion: 'I love you—Ah, I love you! Will you be mine?' And then the heroine either presents him with the 'mitten' or accepts him. But in either case she is able to sob or smile and tell why.

"Now, in motion pictures it is a different matter. When the hero meets the heroine he must let the audience know, by his actions, that he loves her and is asking her to be his bride. It is the pantomine of love, pure and simple. And the audience, in watching a love scene, is more critical than of anything else, for within the hearts of old folks and young folks lies a love chord which can be made to vibrate truly only by showing a sweet and pure passion.

"Love is the one primitive impulse of youth. It is the personal property of 'teens and past 'teens, and whether a play is spoken or silent, the spectator will resent any falsifying of a sentiment so dear to the heart."

Farm," should be so realistically rural that the mosquitoes will sting the audience. The Griffiths and DeMille productions will be announced later, and also pictures in which Geraldine Farrar and Elsie Ferguson will appear. George M. Cohan's "Seven Keys to Baldpate" will give picture goers the film version of a wonderful play.

The efforts of the artists of the Paramount studios will include Marguerite Clarke in "Amazons"; Billie Burke, in "Mysterious Miss Terry"; Pauline Frederick, in "Double Crossed"; Madame Petrova, Julia Eltinge, Cavalieri, Sessue Hayakawa, Wallace Reid, Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, Vivian Martin, George Beban, Ann Pennington, Enid Bennett, Charles Ray, these are all helping to make Paramount pictures.

be released by the Universay are "The Grey Ghost," featuring Eddie Pollo, and the "Red Ace," in which Marie Walcamp stars. Bluebird and Butterfly feature photoplays will also be shown at the Princess theatre. At the Liberty theatre, one of the latest things in fildom will be shown regularly—"Universal Current Events," which is to have the same release dates here as in New York and Chicago. Many other striking pictures have been arranged for local presentation, which include "Come Through," "Pay Me," "Even as You and I," "The Hand that Rocks the Cradle," and "Parentage."

Among the important feature and serial photoplays which the Pathe exchange will have running locally are "The Fatal Ring," "The Neglected Wife," and "Patria," in which those very popular and capable stars, Pearl White, Ruth Roland and Mrs. Vernon Castle will appear.

this year are up to the mark and a little over it. He is working directly under Martin Beck now, and between them Calgary will have some real shows. Calgary is lucky enough to be popular with Martin Beck for some reason or other, and he gives us the best of the breaks. Of course there is no need to say that Jack Spurr will work his head off to make the house as popular as it has been in past seasons—and a little more so, ifpossible. There is a splendid bill lined up for the opening which takes place on Sept. 10, and from then on Calgary will have all the good stuff that the booking office is able to get over the circuit, and it looks mighty good too.

During the summer months the theatre has also been "rolled up" somewhat, and the nicest theatre in the west will be looking at its best when the Orpheumites settle down to enjoying the bills again.

Filling in the open dates at the Grand when the vaudeville bills will not be on has been given the most careful attention by Manager Lydiatt, and he has a very nicely diversified list of attractions booked already. There is a splendid line of musical shows coming, which will arrive at intervals during the season, and there are a few return engagements of companies and performers who have made good and will be drawing cards again.

Running over some of the coming shows in the order in which they are booked there are: "The Barrier," and "The Whip," two very strong pictures. Cunning will be back for three days after playing Winnipeg for two weeks. Then follows "The Million Dollar Doll," "Robinson Cruso, Jr.," "In Old Kentucky," "Carter, the Magician," "The Lilac Domino," "The Girl Who Smiles," "The Isle of Dreams," "The Bird of Paradise," "Watch Your Step," and others which will be booked later.

Taking it all in all it looks like a good season, and here's wishing it luck. Also, hoping that the members of the audience who make a point of coming late will remember that the softest boot heel is harder than the hardest toe, and watch their step. Also that the first bar of the National Anthem is not a sign that there is a police raid and that they are supposed to make a wild rush for the door.

FANNY WARD APPEARS IN THREE DIFFERENT ROLES IN "THE CRYSTAL GAZER"

It is not unusual for photodramatic artists to be seen in dual roles, but the versatile Lasky-Paramount star, Fannie Ward, goes these one better by appearing in three characters in "The Crystal Gazer," which will be the attraction at the Allen Monday and Tuesday.

Miss Ward in this unusual story plays as the mother and two daughters, and with her splendid dramatic ability, gives each a distinct characterization, and at no time is one confused as to their identity. Several of the scenes require that one of the girls rescue the other from a burning building. How this is accomplished is one of the wonderful secrets of photography in which the Lasky studio abounds.

The news was recently sent forth to the astonishment of the photodramatic world that Fanny Ward had been injured during the filming of this production and had been confined to her home for nearly three weeks. This injury occurred when the terrific fight scenes were being filmed. Having won the plaudits of the world for her wonderful struggle with Sessue Hayakawa, in "The Cheat," Miss Ward was anxious to exceed this in the struggle scenes with Jack Dean in "The Crystal Gazer." The incident occurred in the studio of Calistro, a fake hypnotist, when he was trying to make violent love to her.

Persons watching the scenes will notice that Miss Ward suddenly gives a scream of pain. It was during this incident that she accidentally dislocated her shoulder, but in spite of the intense agony, Miss Ward continued the scene, only to drop in a faint at its conclusion. Immediately after the taking of this scene, all work on the production was suspended for three weeks, until Miss Ward's shoulder was healed.

An excellent cast supports Miss Ward in this thrilling production, among them such well-known screen stars as Winifred Greenwood, Harrison Ford, Raymond Hatton, Edythe Chapman and Jane Wolff.

LOU-TELLEGEN IN "THE LONG TRAIL" AT ALLEN NEXT WEDNESDAY AND THURSDAY

In presenting Lou-Tellegen and Miss Mary Fuller in the Famous Players production of "The Long Trail" on the Paramount program, it is felt that this stellar duo will be unusually popular with the amusement-seeking public when it will be seen at the Allen next Wednesday and Thursday.

This photoplay was written by Eve Unsell, and this fact, coupled with the fact that the production was directed by Howell Hansel and has for its stars two of the best known screen favorites, should more than vouch for its popularity.

Lou-Tellegen is seen as "Andre Dubois," a young Canadian trapper, living in the wilds with his little sister Richette. Mary Fuller plays Louise Graham, an orphan whose only living near relative is her scapegrace brother. The way Andre unconsciously compromises Louise and causes her hypocritical friends to desert her, and then marries her to save her from the advances of the uncouth lumberman of the place, makes a tale that is intensely interesting in its freshness and originality.

In the meantime Louise's brother and Andre's little sister Michette have had an unfortunate affair and complications of all kinds enmesh Andre and Louise, who all this time have been living a queer sort of double-housekeeping arrangement, and incidentally coming to care more and more for each other since their strange wedding.

Eve Unsell has brought the story to a most satisfactory ending, and the final "fade-out" shows us the two standing hand in hand watching the disappearing figure of the constable down the "Long Trail," leaving them alone in their long-delayed happiness.

Both Mary Fuller and Lou-Tellegen have had successful screen careers, and the latter has the distinction of having been Sarah Bernhardt's youngest leading man on the legitimate stage, and made a tour of this country with that famous actress several years ago. Mr. Tellegen also has the distinction of being Geraldine Farrar's husband.

It was agreed by the entire company on their return to New York after their trip to the mountains for the filming of this photoplay, that it was one of the most pleasurable trips they had ever made. Hair-raising tales of wolves, Indian and ski stunts have added interest to this production, and it is expected that it will be one of the most successful on the Paramount programme.

A new Christie comedy, which are becoming most popular each time of showing, will also be seen in addition to this exceptionally fine production, "The Long Trail."

"OVER THERE"

The Thrill and Hell of the Trenches Described by an American Boy

We have secured a series of six articles by Sergeant Alexander McClintock of Lexington, Ky., and the Canadian army. He has a gripping tale that every American will read, for he tells the facts, unadorned. Wounded, a Distinguished Conduct medal man, he was invalided home, but is going "Over There" again to fight for Uncle Sam and his allies.

Feb. 14, 1917.

Sergeant Alexander McClintock served in the Eighty-seventh Battalion Canadian Grenadier guards from September, 1915, until November, 1916, the last four months of that time at the front in France, where he gained the Distinguished Conduct medal by his devotion to duty and bravery under fire.

As his former commanding officer I can testify as to his good qualities, and I consider he would make a valuable officer.

(Signed) F. S. MEIGHEN,
Brigadier General, Commanding Canadian Training Division,
Bramshott.

NO. 1.—In Training. How the men are finally brought to the firing line. A description of conditions that our own boys and their parents will read eagerly.

NO. 2.—The Bomb Raid. The great preparations and rehearsing for this attack. Volunteers for the job taken behind the line where the German trenches are exactly reproduced. The days of preparation. Heretofore unwritten detail of modern trench raids. This article concludes with the men going out to their job.

NO. 3.—"Over the Top and Give 'Em Hell." The English Tommy's battle cry as he breaks from his trench. The bomb raid and what happened. Of sixty that started forty-six failed to return because the Germans had prepared and mined the trench. Graphic description of Sergeant McClintock's terrible experience.

NO. 4.—Shifted to the Somme. Sergeant McClintock takes part in the greatest of all battles and tells of the hell of it. "The front in Belgium was really a rest sector in comparison with it," he says. The extensive preparations of the allies for open warfare afterward abandoned because of the failure of expected developments.

NO. 5.—Wounded in Action. This article describes the terrible fight, the dead and dying, the loss of a pal and the final failing of McClintock in No Man's Land. Simply told, it is one of the most remarkable descriptions of a battle by a participant ever put together.

NO. 6.—Decorated For Bravery; Home and Uncle Sam. This concluding article of the series relates in detail how England cares for the wounded. How the king and queen came to the bed of an American boy and decorated him in a London hospital for gallantry. Interesting, intimate and amusing incidents told by and of the wounded Tommies Trying to fight for Uncle Sam.

We will print one article each week for six weeks. Watch for the first installment.

BILLIE BURKE TO APPEAR AT THE BIJOU

Billie Burke's Gowns Duplicated for This Year's "Follies."

America is the land of the free, the brave and the beautiful, but it is not the land where designers of beautiful gowns for lovely ladies flourish.

On the contrary they—the designers—have to be imported. They are those who can dream wonderful creations, but have not the gift to make them materialize—others have the executive ability, but are without the dreamer's fancy. Lucile alone has both, and when she consented to design the gowns for Billie Burke in "Gloria's Romance," the world of women who follow the fashion knew that the creations would be unsurpassable. And so it turned out. The gowns that grace the dainty little person of the irresistible Billie are masterpieces of imagination come to life.

This is so much the case that when Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., was casting about for the latest and most original designs for costumes for his famous "Follies" of this year, it was found that nothing even approaching the loveliness and originality of these famous Lucile creations could be found anywhere, so—with permission asked and granted from the powers that be—Mr. Ziegfeld had a replica of one of Billie's most beautiful gowns made for Ina Claire, and in her support are eight little Billies dressed in pyjamas—also patterned after the dainty pair that Billie wears in the earliest episode of Gloria's Romance."

Again there is seen in the latter part of the "Follies" a sextette of girls who wear dreamlike pink silk dresses with flounces and fairy hats of white tulle. Both of these are copies of Lucile creations dreamed for Billie Burke to wear as "Gloria Stafford."

While at the Theaters

THE PANTAGES

"Just laugh and laugh again" is the slogan at the "Pan" this week. The funny parodies sung by the comical, unconcerned sailor is something worth hearing. But, oh! it's not all funny; some is beauty. "I wish she would follow me around as she did that lucky drunkard!" was the exclamation of a man occupying a box seat.

The music was something worth bragging about, while the juggling was excellent.

THE GRAND

"The Ne'er Do Well," one of Rex Beach's greatest novels, has been appearing in picturized form at the Grand this week.

Like all other Beach stories "real" characters are introduced in this one. Humor and romance are the outstanding features which keep the people roaring. However the sad parting in the last scene is most pathetic.

This play, though of the south, has all the points to make t an Alaskan story. Lovers of photoplays speak in high terms of "The Ne'er Do Well."

THE ALLEN

The Allen? Oh, yes! "The Wildcat!" No, no, nothing to be afraid of. Did you see it?

"The Wildcat," as shown on the Allen screen this week, is not an animal picturization, as the title suggests, but instead is a story of a man who is financially embarrassed but who is coincidently saved by the wildcat and her admirer.

The daughter, through her wild ways earns the name "Wildcat," and naturally that means that some one has to tame her. If you've ever had anything to do with a wildcat you can easily sympathize with the young man who in conjunction with his sister and the wildcat's father, tames the wild one.

This picturization is one in which the young man has no other important rival than the girl.' wildish ways, which is plenty for one man. The play itself is humorous, romantic and pathetic. However, like all other plays it has its faults. First of all, the girl over-estimates fun; and secondly, the young man is too harsh toward the girl. Then, too, the change in the girl's ways is all too sudden to make it appear natural.

In summing up the situation, "the man in the audience when the show is over, cannot move—the "wildcat" grips him.

"The Squaw Man's Son" was the "Big It" at the Allen this week. Its a picture worth seeing, both from an enjoyment and moral standpoint.

Intermixed with western life is the aristocratical life of England, depicting scenery which is magnificent; but this is only a side issue for those who are lovers of "real romance."

The plot is very strong, while the actors interpret their respective roles to perfection. Wallace Reid, the young hero, wins the respect of the audience as soon as he appears, while Anita Stewart, hardly recognizable as the Indian maid, charms the watchers. Then comes the dope fiend, appertaining her true light after having gone so far with the use of drugs that she can't quit.

On the whole it is a wonderful play the plays at the Allen are on the same platform with "The Squaw Man's Son," each occupying an important place.

BIG STRIKE IN SEATTLE

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 31.—A strike of more than 12,000 workers in Seattle shipyards and plants engaged in fabricating shipbuilding material to enforce demands for a general increase in wages, was set for next Wednesday by officers of the 15 affiliated unions of the Seattle metal trades council in executive session today.

"A CHILD OF THE WILD"

June Grist (June Caprice) vows a girlish oath never to attend school. But that is before Frank Trent (Frank Morgan) undertakes to teach in the wild southern mountains.

June soon finds other attractions than love of learning in attending Frank's school. Their friendship soon grows into love.

Bob Gale (Richard Neill), a rough mountaineer, grows jealous and plans revenge. June's father (Tom Brooke) dies, and Frank undertakes to father the little girl. The arrival of his sister (Florence Crawford), and her child, Frank thinks, will give his little friend a foster mother.

But Gale tells June Frank's sister is the teacher's wife. June believes him, and when Frank comes to introduce his sister she drives him away.

The baby clears up the misunderstanding. June hears the child call for Uncle Frank.

June tells Gale he lied. He attacks her just as Frank returns for the baby. Frank rescues June, and as the little wild spirit nestles in his arms presents his sister to the "best little girl in the world."

"A Child of the Wild" comes to the Bijou next Monday.

PAULINE FREDERICK COMING TO THE ALLEN SOON IN "THE LOVE THAT LIVES"

Pauline Frederick, in her latest Famous Players-Paramount picture, "The Love That Lives," plays the part of Molly, the office scrubwoman. To this part she has brought all the charm and power of her great talent and made the role one of the finest she has ever depicted on the screen.

A prayer of Molly's in her sordid tenement, when her little boy wished to "fly kites like the boy in the picture book," shows the wonderful depth of character and forcefulness of the woman: "A kite might fly even here, but it would have to be a wonderful kite, and the breeze to fly it would have to be the very breath of God. God grant that you may be such a kite, little man. Pauline Frederick as Molly will appear at the Allen early in September.

MISS BILLIE BURKE

NEW YORK THEATRE GOSSIP AND COMMENT

Witter Bynner is writing a modern morality play for Henry W. Savage to follow in the long and golden path of "Everywoman," it is said. Small wonder that Mr. Savage wants such a drama, for ever since he produced Walter Browne's play at the old Herald Square theatre six years ago it has earned him much money. One and sometimes several companies have toured the country since its first year in New York, and it will be sent into the provinces again this season. "Experience," another play of this type, produced several years later, duplicated the experience of "Everywoman" and made a fortune for Elliot, Comstock & Gest.

A new edition of Mr. Ziegfeld's after-theatre revue is ready for those thought of going home when the final curtain has fallen. The list of entertainers includes some of the principles of former revues. Frances White and William Rock will sing and dance, and others in the revised version will be Van and Schenck, Sybil Carmen, John McGowan, and Mabel Ferry.

A week in midseason could scarcely be more full of a number of things than this. In the first place, there will be six new plays presented on the the first four nights of the week, not to mention the revival of another born last spring. The first performance in New York of Adolf Bolm's Ballet In time and the refurbishing of Mr. Ziegfeld's "Midnight Revue" will furnish enough variety to keep the confirmed first-nighters from growing stale.

David Warfield, with whom the movie magnates have been flirting for years and who will undoubtedly weaken some of these days, got as near the movies as the Famous Players studio the other day. It was one of those torrid days when the mercury hovered around the 100 mark and all the poor players could do was to pause at intervals and eat ice cream. In the contest, in which Marguerite Clark, Billie Burke, Thomas Meighan, and Nigel Barrie took part, Mr. Warfield proved himself a worthy opponent.

GREAT BILL PROMISED BY PANTAGES INCLUDING WONDERFUL SERIAL

Six acts of unequalled vaudeville and the first episode of "The Fatal Ring," the new episode featuring Pearl White, will be the contribution of entertainment given Calgarians during the coming week, commencing with the matinee Labor day.

"The Count and the Maid" is the title of the headline attraction featuring the well-known comedian, Teddy McNamara, and a bevy of beauties in a concoction of mirth and melody, displaying some gorgeous costumes and beautiful scenery and some very funny lines.

The Four Earles will present a whirlwind novelty, consisting of graceful work and dexterity.

The novel ventriloquist comedian, Tom Edwards, assisted by Miss Alice Melville, will present something different and amusing in the sub-vocalist line. Miss Melville is a sweet singer of great abil'ty.

Silber and North, a clever team, will present a comedy skit entitled "Bashfulology," which is a continuous laugh from start to finish.

Aileen Stanley will render vocal selections in her inimitable manner, and is sure to make a great hit with the audience.

Miss Georgis Howard, a violin virtuso of ability, will render a repertoire of classical and popular selections in a very pleasing manner.

For a climax to such an array of talent, will be offered the first episode of "The Fatal Ring," the new serial that defies comparison, it being so far superior to anything in serial ever exhibited that it is in a class by itself. The well-known serial star, Pearl White, is the heroine of this new photoplay, and it is said that she surpasses herself in this new offering.

Monday being Labor day there will be three performances given at the Pantages at the following hours: 3, 7.30 and 9.15, the seats being reserved for the 3 and 7.30 performances. By reserving seats early one will avoid the big rush and secure accommodation which will be at a premium all during the coming week.

U. S. Looking After Food Supply

Counties and Cities in Which the Supply of Provisions in Retail Stores Will Be Determined.

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Food stocks held in retail establishments in New York city and in the city and rural portions of forty-three counties in various parts of the country are to be inventoried on Aug 31 by a detailed and personally supervised survey, conducted by the United States department of agriculture. Estimates from these figures will make it possible to approximate the quantity of all of the food on hand in such establishments in the country. To get this result the counties have been selected with great care, including some as presenting conditions which will reflect varied types of life and industry. The survey of retail stocks is only one of the four now under way, the other three being the stocks on farms, in wholesale establishments and storages, and in the homes of the consumers. Aside from the cities and counties in which the detailed work will be done, the survey of retail stocks of food will be handled by schedules through the mails.

The actual work of making the surveys will be directed by the Bureau of Markets of the Department, assisted locally by the agents of the Bureau of Chemistry and of the States Relations service. Other local agencies such as boards of trade, chambers of commerce, retail grocers' associations, farm-bureau agents, and other state, county, and city officials have assured the department of their assistance. The blanks for detailed reporting of stocks on hand are distributed locally in cities by local health and police officials under the direction of the Bureau of Chemistry, and in rural communities by country agents and patriotic organizations under the general direction of the States Relations service.

Counties Selected

Aside from New York, where an inventory will be made, the largest city selected as a part of the basis of estimating is Cleveland, Ohio. Its county, Cuyahoga, was selected because Cleveland is centrally located with reference to large industrial centers and may be considered as a typical manufacturing and commercial center. A detailed survey of New York City will be made as a separate problem; but owing to its large size it cannot be used as a part of the basis for estimating for the entire country, since it would completely overshadow the total of all the other selected districts combined.

The second group of counties includes the cities of; Syracuse, N.Y. Dallas, Tex., and Altoona, Pa., with its outlying towns of Tyrone and Juniata. These three are thought to represent conditions as they exist in a city which depends on manufacturing, one which has a big agricultural backcountry, and one which depends on the mining industry.

The grouping, as a whole, is in accordance with population. The first group, represented by Cleveland (Cuyahoga Co.) is for metropolitan districts with a population of 200,000 or more, the second group includes counties with cities of a population of 50,000 to 200,000. The third group takes counties with cities 25,000 to 50,000; fourth, from 10,000 to 25,000; and so on down to 2,500, and then certain counties having no city or village of 2,500 population.

Other Group Divisions

In the third group of counties are the cities of Montgomery, Ala.; Topeka, Kans.; Binghampton, N.Y.; and Sacramento, Cal.

The fourth group includes Concord, N.H.; Butler, Pa.; Jackson, Tenn.; Iowa City, Ia., and Walla Walla, Wash.

Group five has five cities with their outlying county population. They are Oneonta, N.Y.; Americus, Ga.; DeKalb, Ill.; Bowling Green, Ky., and Provo, Utah.

Group six includes ten counties with cities of from 2,500 to 5,000, and the index cities are: Springfield, Vt.; Stroudsburg, Pa.; South Boston, Va.; Allegan, Mich.; Lake Geneva, Wis.; McPherson, Kans.; Marshall, Mo.; Canton, Miss.; Stillwater, Okla., and Marshfield, Ore.

The final group in counties having no towns as large as 2,500 population, includes 15 towns, as follows: Eatonton, Ga.; Carthage, N.C.; Seaford, Del.; Rosedale, Ind.; Pembina, N.D.; Marysville, Kans.; Hartford, Ky.; Lawrenceburg, Tenn.; Enterprise, Ala.; Fairhope, Ala.; Rector, Ark.; Mansfield, La.; La Grange, Tex.; Castle Rock, Colo., and Raymond, Wash.

Why the Places Were Chosen

These places have been selected because of the impossiblity of making a complete inventory of the stocks of the smaller retail concerns throughout the country. This careful and detailed stocks in the representative cities and rural districts, together with results obtained from schedules that are mailed out, forms the basis on which the retail stocks of the whole country will be estimated.

It is known, of course, just what is the actual population at each of the seven groups represented by the forty-three counties, and just what proportion their population bears to the population bears to the population of the group and to the country as a whole.

Calgary Is Enjoying The Greatest Prosperity

TIME was when Calgary and Alberta needed publicity agents, industrial commissioners and others of these two classes, to get the advantages of this city and province before the great outside world. These agencies are not so much needed today for more potent factors have been at work to advertise the best city in the best province in the confederation. Two years of big crops with abnormally high prices, not only for the grain but for the livestock, dairy and other products of the farms, have put Calgary and Alberta in the public eye and wise men from every direction are flocking this way.

They are not influenced by all the fulsome phrases the publicity expert can invent. They want facts, insoluble facts. They want statistics th t will stand the acid test. They want to know what land is worth, what it will produce, what the margin of profit is when cost of production, transportation and middlemen's charges are taken out and they want to know about the cost of living, conveniences, and the myriad little things that enter into modern home and business conditions.

Fortunately Calgary and Alberta can answer this lust for concrete information. The hub of the province, with an official population of 55,000, which is constantly increasing, and with approximately 10,000 soldier-citizens in khaki overseas or going there, is in a sounder state than it ever was before. Its bank clearings are averaging about $2,000,000 a week more than a year ago and about twice that amount more than in 1914. Business is on a stable footing and is growing in a satisfactory volume. New industries and new businesses are being established, not on shoestrings, as was the case in the merry, reckless days of half a decade ago, but on financial foundations that are unshaken by the most searching probings by the banks.

People are coming into the city from every quarter but more especially from the United States from which country have come hundreds of families well supplied with funds and with household and other gear.

The test of this statement is furnished by an examination of the "houses for rent" list. Scarcely an eligible house is to be found. If an eligible house is on the list, the rent asked rivals that of the boom days and the owner can get it.

Inside Calgary is filled up and the movement is from the center outward, which is the healthy trend. In earlier year , building operations were widely scattered and the city and the citizens suffered. Now the central portion is closely populated and in the not distant future the fringes will have their due quota of inhabitants.

In every department of activity in Calgary there is an access of energy and if it is true that women are performing in large measure the work that was formerly done by men now at the front, it is equally true that there is no deterioration in the quality of the labor and that consequently Calgary is better off than ever in respect to substantial industries and in respect to adequate and modern trading facilities.

The stores are carrying bigger stocks and although the prices have gone up here as elsewhere, the people have no complaint to direct at local vendors. It is recognized that the cause does not lie in Calgary, but, in the last analysis, in Germany.

In any case the situation adjusts itself as time moves on for as the cost of living ascends so do the wages and people have about the same margin for conveniences and luxuries as they had before the war.

Calgary's basic industries are becoming more valuable. The lumber mills and flour mills, woodworking establishments and so on are working at capacity and the demand for their products is growing since the buyers, both urban and rural, find their circumstances improved.

The soldiers' dependents are none too lavishly treated by the government, in respect to financial support, but they get enough to keep them if they live close to the line and they are a big buying factor since there are so many of them.

They have a steady source of income and this means a big cash turnover every week.

Then the Ogden shops recently gave their men an increase in wages and as they have been working steadily, another large money turnover is assured.

The ordinary railway staffs are very busy and in fact employment in practically all lines is brisk and consequently the "deadness" that was apparent at times during the first years of the war is absent. There is a snap and a vigor to business that augurs well for Calgary and for Alberta once the conflict is ended and people begin to adjust themselves to the new conditions that will exist.

When that day comes, Calgary and Alberta will offer the most alluring attractions of any city and province in the world. This will be the city and the province where men may live at peace, where they will be free in the most sublime sense of the word and where they can succeed in making themselves financially independent if they go about it the right way.

This city and this province are the centers of opportunities.

Now a word for the immediate prospects. As everyone knows Calgary is mainly dependent on the crops of Alberta for its well-being. Given good yields of grain and favorable conditions for livestock, this city will prosper. For two years conditions in Alberta have been excellent. This year they are even superior to those of 1915 and 1916. There is plenty of moisture, which is the greatest need, the grains are growing rapidly and the livestock conditions are unsurpassable. With average weather Alberta will take off a crop this year that will be fully as valuable as that of last year when all records were broken.

Alberta could wish for no better prospect except that the war were over and that our boys were at home safe and sound to participate in the prosperity which they so richly deserve.

The General Political Situation In Canada

With the refusal of the Conservatives to drop Sir Robert Borden and to allow a new leader to carry on the national government, there is little chance that Hon. Arthur L. Sifton will enter the Dominion house. So he will continue on in Edmonton as head of the administration, and the friends of the rival claimants for his position can rest from their labors. But there is no doubt that some changes will be made in the personnel of the House when it meets—and one of the faces on the front benches will be that of Brother Davidson, editor of the Morning Albertan. There seems no doubt that he is slated for the portfolio of education.

It would be a decent thing of the government to recognize Labor, which is represented in the person of Alex. Ross, who will sit as an independent Labor member, attached to neither of the regular parties. With him given some responsible work as member, the Labor men would feel that the government was really a government of all the people. Incidentally, the province would benefit.

To the casual observer it now looks as if the Conservatives in the House of Commons had been playing politics with a vengeance. The country seriously took up the proposition of a national government, and to many electors it seemed as if that would be the means of bringing together an administration that would effectually carry on the work that every Canadian is most anxious to see to asuccessful finish—the winning of the war. For a time the old Tory flag-wavers made it look bad for the Opposition, but after the Conservative caucus of Wednesday last it is quite clear that there was no intention of having a truly national government.

At the caucus the Conservative members refused to allow the proposition that Premier Borden should resign. No matter what else happened he must be premier. The western Liberals who had been approached and who were in favor of a national administration thought that another man than the present incumbent should be premier, and if another man were chosen they consented to enter the Cabinet. But when it came to actualities the Tories could not see their way to give up the reins, and so the statement comes that Borden must continue as leader of any government that may be formed.

Unless something unexpected turns up this decision should prove the impossibility of a coalition government, and both parties will now prepare for the election that will be fought on truly party lines.

And in the meantime, while the people of Canada are interested in the war, conscription, national government, meatless days, food control, bacon baronets and other matters, there is before the House of Commons one of the biggest questions that has ever been discussed by a deliberative body in the Dominion of Canada, and that is the proposal to take over the Canadian Northern railway. Experts have given their opinions on the matter and they declare that the stock which the government proposes to take over for the sum of sixty millions is valueless. In order to proceed with the measure, the closure rule has been applied and the Opposition is prevented from going into the deal as strongly as it wishes. Then there are the conflicting financial interest—the Montreal group who are said to be opposed to the deal, and the Toronto group who are anxious to have it go through. With both financial interests carrying on a lobby in the House there is a chance that the ordinary citizen will get an insight into some of the workings of the different groups. And it is not an impossibility that the C.N.R. deal will have much to do with the result of the next election.

The Manitoba Free Press has been publishing statements in regard to the recent Liberal convention in Winnipeg that are "illuminating." It must be remembered that the idea of a western convention originated in Winnipeg and was given its impetus by the Liberals of that city. But it appears that the Winnipeg Liberals, or those who had been so anxious for the convention, did not know the real spirit of western Liberalism. It was possibly thought that British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan would send a mere handful of delegates and that the meetings would be dominated by the eastern province. But the men from the prairies and the coast turned out in unexpected numbers and there was no chance of any party or any clique running the delegates. Hence the resolutions that were passed gave the opinions of the majority of the members and the majority of Liberals of the west.

Now that the convention is over, the Free Press intimates "that the Alberta delegation had been hand-picked by the machine." The Free Press is almost childish in its efforts to minimize the work of the convention, and the saddest blow of all is that the great impetus given to the convention was supplied by one of the owners of that organ—Hon. Clifford Sifton. Until Mr. Sifton wrote his open letter in regard to public matters and until he made his western tour the Liberals were in a quiescent state, but once he started on the path in behalf of the "national government" the Liberals took heed and new life was injected into the party. In the minds of nearly all the delegates was the idea that at all events the convention would have nothing to do with Sir Clifford, and the idea was carried out. The Liberals of the west needed just something to bring them together, and Sir Clifford entered at the psychological moment. It must be rather galling to the former minister to know that his entry into the fight was the cause of a united and enthusiastic Liberal party.

In regard to the "inside history" of the Liberal convention as given by the Manitoba Free Press, there is a warm tribute to J. G. Turriff for what that paper declares as his "single-handed effort to secure a straight expression in favor of conscription." The entire facts are as follows: Mr. Turriff was a member of the Resolutions Committee, and brought in his amendment before that committee. He could not find a seconder. It is rather odd that some of the valiant Manitoba men of whom the Free Press speaks would not second the resolution, if only to allow it to be discussed. But the plain cold facts are that Mr. Turriff was not able to find in the Resolutions Committee a man from Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta or British Columbia who would support him before the committee. Before the convention took place it was agreed that all resolutions should be submitted to the committee before being given to the convention. When Mr. Turriff failed in the committee he immediately repaired to the main body of the convention, and as soon as the original motion was put brought in his amendment in regard to conscription. The important portions of the resolution were: "In times of peril the entire resources of the country, moral and material, man-power and wealth, are justly disposable by the state for the preservation of its national liberty. The imperative duty of the Canadian people in regard to the war is its continued vigorous prosecution . . ." "By the maintenance, in unimpaired strength at the front, of our fighting forces, and the taking of all steps necessary to secure the required reinforcements for this purpose."

Mr. Turriff then arose and asked that four words be added to the latter part of the preceding paragraph—the four words being, "by conscription if necessary." He did not inform the convention that he had already placed this amendment before the Resolutions Committee, and that he could not find a seconder to it. He did not point out, either, that his amendment tended to weaken rather than strengthen the resolution. These facts did not become apparent and his amendment was defeated. His proposition was not unlike that of a judge who, on the application for non-support, might order some man to support his wife, adding a rider that he should support her by work if necessary.

THE "NEW BABY BEEF" COMPETITION WILL BE AN INTERESTING FEATURE

We are going to put on a new feature at the forthcoming winter fair at Calgary, to be held December 11 to 14, which will give special encouragement to boys, and girls too, if there are any who wish to enter. We propose to conduct a baby beef competition for steers of 1916, to be fed for at least one month by exhibitor between the ages of 10 to 16 years. We would suggest the feeding period be longer, but it will take some time to get the competition widely known. We hope to be able, with the assistance of a number of successful livestock men who would like to see such encouragement given to young stockmen, to make the prize $1,000, divided into twenty prizes. I have already had a splendid challenge shield, value $250, presented by D. E. Black & Co. jewelers, Calgary, to be held a year by the winner each year, and a gold medal will be given to the winner to keep in addition to the first prize, which would be $100 or $150. We expect the Canadian Shorthorn and Hereford associations will each give $50 for first, second and third prizes for steers which have competed in the open class, sired by registered bulls of each breed, and the Canadian Aberdeen Angus association has given a similar prize. The Alberta Hereford and Abredeen Angus associations have also given similar specials for steers entered from Alberta. Miss E. Cora Hind, agricultural and commercial editor of the Manitoba Free Press, has offered a special prize of a wrist watch for the best steer exhibited by a girl.

NEARING BANKRUPTCY

Zurich, Aug. 31.—The Austrian budget of 1916-17 shows a deficit of 344,000,000 crowns compared to a deficit of 49,000,000 crowns in the preceding year. Two of the largest items of expenditure are 1,761,000,000 crowns for interest on war loans, and 1,650,000,000 crowns for the support of soldiers' families. Special and direct war expenditures are not included in the budget.

HARVESTERS' EXCURSIONS FROM ONTARIO AND QUEBEC TO THE WEST

Montreal, Aug. 31.—Representatives of the leading Canadian railways met today in Montreal and decided that, in view of the continued shortage of farm labor in the west, it was advisable to arrange for a supplementary series of harvesters' excursions from Ontario and Quebec only. Those from east of Ottawa will leave on Sept. 11, and those from Ottawa and west on Sept. 12.

I.W.W. ILLEGAL ORGANIZATION

London, Aug. 31.—A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph from Melbourne says the government has declared the Industrial Workers of the World, which was endeavoring to foment strikes and blow up various works, an illegal organization, and that eight members of the organization have been sentenced to six months' imprisonment.

NEWFOUNDLAND HAS FOOD CONTROL

St. John's, Nfld.—A food control board for this colony was appointed today to co-operate with similar agencies in the United States and Canada, under an act passed by the recent session of the legislature. Hon. P. T. McGrath, president of the legislative council, is chairman of the board, and with him are Henry Lemesurier, deputy minister of customs, and George Grimes, member of the assembly.

WHAT AMERICA HAS DONE IN FIVE MONTHS

WASHINGTON — Entering today upon its fifth month of war, America found itself far advanced as a potent factor in overcoming Germany. About 400,000 National Guardsmen are in arms, ready to move into southern camps, opening Aug. 15, for intensive training. The regular army, gradually filled with volunteers, is only 3,000 or 4,000 short of its complete quota, while the American flag actually flies over European land and sea.

Pershing's division is rapidly shaping for actual trench service. American destroyers prowl the U-boat zone while scores of new destroyers are building.

Other things that America has done include the following:

Registered 10,000,000 youths who are now being selected for the first national army of 687,000.

Seized 91 German ships, started repair work on all of them, and actually put some into service.

Authorized without dissenting vote $7,000,000,000.

Appropriated $750,000,000 for merchant shipping and $64,000,000 for airship construction.

Agreed to loan the allies $3,000,000,000, and advanced over half of it.

eBgan constructing 32 camps for soldiers.

Authorized and is enforcing embargo to keep food from Germany.

Launched great food conservation measures.

Gave $100,000,000 to the American Red Cross and $3,000,000 to the Y.M.C.A.

GERARD TO BE FINED IF HE TAKES TITLE

Senator of U. S. Introduces Bill Which Prohobits Citizens to Accept Title.

Washington, Aug. 30.—A bill that would prevent former Ambassador Gerard from accepting the Order of the Bath, with the honors of Sir Knight, recently conferred by King George, was introduced today by Senator Overman, and referred to the judiciary committee. It would prohibit any citizen of the United States from accepting any present, office or title from any king or foreign government under penalty of a fine of $10,000 and forfeiture of citizenship.

The only prohibition of the kind existing now is constitutional, but it only affects persons holding office.

KERENSKY TO RESTORE ARMY DEATH PENALTY

London, Aug. 30.—At the conclusion of the Moscow conference, Premier Kerensky announced the partial re-establishment of the death penalty as a necessary measure of army discipline, according to the Central News' Petrograd correspondent, who quotes the premier as saying: "As minister of justice I abolished the death penalty, but as minister of justice I decided it necessary partly to re-establish it. This re-establishment hurts to the very soul, but for the salvation of the country we will kill all our souls. The army must be organized and disciplined, each combatant occupying his proper place, and each recognizing his duty as well as his right.

"The disciplinary tribunals will be conserved, and will receive the authority indispensable for the maintenance of the army as an efficient organization."

ALLIES TAKE 167,780 PRISONERS SINCE APRIL 9

London—The British, French and Italians and Russians have captured 167,780 war prisoners since April 9, when the 1917 campaign opened, according to a statement issued by the British war department this evening.

The text of the statement follows:

"The number of prisoners captured by the entente allies since April 9, when the 1917 campaign opened with the battle of Arras, up to August 22 is:

"German war prisoners captured by British, 46,155; German war prisoners captured by French, 43,723; chiefly Austrian war prisoners captured by Italians, 40,681; chiefly Austrians captured by Russians, 37,221; total, 167,780.

"The total number of German war prisoners captured by us since the beginning of the war, 102,218.

"The total number of British prisoners, including Indians, captured by the Germans is approximately 43,000, but exact information as to small captures made by the enemy in recent fighting cannot be given until the necessary information is received from Germany.

"The total number of prisoners captured by us in all the war theatres since the beginning of the war, exclusive of African natives, is 131,776.

"The total number of prisoners lost by us since the beginning of the war, exclusive of African natives but including Indians, is approximately 56,500."

A Summary of the War For the Week

War is war! So they say.

In one sphere our armies are advancing while in another we have such trouble that advance is impossible.

The Canadians have been making headway for the last few days gaining hundreds of yards of German trenches. The Alberta soldiers have been instrumental in adding to the captured ground, according to the following dispatch:

"Another carefully planned minor operation by an Alberta battalion which holds that part of the line east of St. Theodore, in the region known by our men as the cricket pitch, on account of its flatness, gave us possession of 250 yards of German front line with light casualties today. The attack was made at 2 o'clock this morning and the enemy resistance was weak compared with former defensive efforts in this sector. The trench captured, and a communication trench were found to contain a large number of German dead, many of them killed in the fighting two days ago when we failed to drive them out."

Such accounts of the deeds of the Canadians show the people the value of our local boys. Other results of the heavy fighting on the Canadian front are reflected in the casualty lists, totalling more than 1,000 for the last engagement.

The British and French are also making great headway on the western front, gaining trench after trench—prisoner after prisoner. As a result of a British attack on the Flanders front the British lines have advanced along a front of more than 2,000 yards astride the St. Julien-Poelcapelle road, capturing a few guns and men. The Malda, a vessel of 7,884 gross tons, was sunk last Wednesday. The fate of the crew is unknown as yet.

Important gains are in progress on the Italian front. A desperate battle has been in progress for some time on the Bainsizza plateau, on the front north of Gorizia and the Austrians have been repulsed each time.

The Austro-Germans in the eastern theater are successful on the Russian front but are losers on the Italian front. The fight continues on the Bainsizza plateau but the Austrians are on the defensive. New positions have been lost to General Cadorna's forces as acknowledged by the Austrians themselves.

On the frontier of Bessarabia, in eastern Bukowina, the Russian troops are showing signs of disaffection, having near Boyany deliberately quit their trenches and retreated east; the Austro-Germans taking the trenches they evacuated. Near Novoselica, also on the Bessarabian frontier, the Teutonic allies have begun an offensive against the Russians and have captured several positions. In lower Moldavia, the region of Fokshani, Field Marshal von Mackensen's army has taken height positions from the Rumanians. In northern Russia no fighting of importance is taking place, evidently indicating that the German offensive east of Riga was not the forerunner of a strong attempt to capture the Russian seaport and naval base on the Baltic.

The Germans in the Verdun sector have ceased entirely their counter-attacks against the newly-won French positions, evidently having found that the task of trying to rehabilitate themselves was useless. The infantry of both sides have been quiet in their trenches, and only on the Meuse has there been even artillery activity.

IN BRIEF

Washington.—Secretary Daniels expects to submit to congress this week estimates of $350,000,000 for the great number of destroyers which will make the American navy the leader of the world in that type. The money will be used to expand shipbuilding plants and also to build additional engine and boiler factories.

Winnipeg.—According to J. K. L. Ross, chairman, and Colonel R. H. Labatt, of the board of pension commissioners, about 14,500 are on the pension list and 30,000 are benefiting therefrom; for the last month over $450,000 was paid out, and it is estimated that for the end of the current year the sum distributed will be in the neighborhood of $8,000,000.

Winnipeg.—It is stated that for the absorbing all the infantry units here and at Calgary and thus providing a direct channel to reinforce regiments at Shorncliffe, a depot battalion will be shortly authorized in this city and Calgary to total 2,054 officers and men at each point.

Buenos Aires.—Germany's reply to Argentine's note embodying demands in connection with the submarine campaign as affecting Argentine shipping, has been received. In official circles it was stated that the reply was satisfactory—the German note meets all the demands.

Athens.—A vote of confidence in the government was passed in parliament at the conclusion of the debate on the speech from the throne. Premier Venizelos spoke for six hours. The majority report of the speech was accepted and the chamber adopted a resolution extending greeting to Serbia.

London.—The August weather has had a disastrous effect on the British crops. The month began with tremendous rains, which beat down the cereal crops to an extent compelling reaping to be done with the scythe and sickle instead of machinery. The downpours have been frequent and heavy throughout the whole month, while the unfavorable harvesting weather has now culminated in a savage gale of a velocity at times of 100 miles an hour, accompanied by sweeping deluges of rain.

SECOND ANNUAL AUCTION SALES OF DAIRY CATTLE

The second annual aucton sales of dairy cattle, sheep and swine, will be held at Calgary, Oct. 30 and 31. The animals will be judged on the 29th. It is expected that the usual special rates will be in force for these events, and that the sales will show a very considerable increase over those of the previous year. In addition to pure-breds of the various breeds being offered, both male and female, entries are accepted for grade dairy cows, ewes and sows. The entries close the end of September. Entry forms may be obtained from E. L. Richardson, secretary of the associations, Calgary.

COAL PRICES FIXED BY THE PRESIDENT

Washington.—The president of the U. S. fixed the bituminous coal prices the other day, for every coal mine in the U. S. The next step will be the fixing of prices to be changed by the middlemen and retailers. The prices named for the run of mine coal in the largest producing districts averages slightly more than two dollars. In a few districts they are lower and Washington state is highest at $3.25.

Yellowstone Park— It's Geysers and Its Bears

Tourists Crossing the Morris Geyser Basin

Feeding the Pet Bear

A Short Sketch of the Wonderland of The Northwest---One Of The Greatest National Parks.

FEW places in the world present to the traveler such a combination of natural wonders and magnificent scenery as does Yellowstone Park—that great National Playground in the northwestern part of the United States, for there one finds weird canyons, beautiful waterfalls, huge geysers, boiling springs and wild animals living in their natural environment in the virgin forest of the Rocky Mountains and as harmless as domestic cats if unmolested. The park embraces a tract of thirty-five hundred square miles set apart by our government "for the benefit and enjoyment of the people." Most of the park lies within the boundaries of the State of Wyoming, with a strip of the northern and western border extending over into the States of Montana and Idaho.

Discovered by Colter.

The park was discovered in 1807 by John Colter, who had branched off from the Lewis and Clark Expedition on their return after having blazed a trail to the Pacific. As the lone adventurer passed northward from the mouth of the Big Horn to the forks of the Shoshone River he came across an immense tar spring; he continued on through a country where much of the hot springs and geyser phenomena exist and down the Yellowstone River to Tower Falls, and out near the northeastern corner of what is now known as Yellowstone Park. After four years among the Red Skins he had a miraculous escape from the Blackfeet Indians and returned to St. Louis. His stories of the remarkable boiling springs were thought at that time to be products of his imagination and led to the place being named "Colter's Hell."

In 1870 a company of distinguished scientists were sent out by the government to investigate the "falls and rivers of the Yellowstone." They returned to Washington filled with delight over the great natural wonders of the place and their report was so favorable that Congress decided to preserve the tract and protect it from hunters and persons who might fence off the geysers for personal gain, and on March 1, 1872, the Act making it a National Reservation was passed.

One Round of Beauty

From the time the tourist enters the park at Gardiner and travels down the handle to Mammoth Hot Springs, and swings around the pan and down the handle again to Gardiner there is one continuous round of scenic beauty, for the park has been rightly named the Wonderland of America.

Terraces.

At Mammoth Hot Springs where the hot springs and terraces occupy several acres on the slope of Terrace Mountain one is treated to a sight to be found nowhere else on earth. These terraces begin with a queer formation known as the Liberty Cap—an extinct hot spring cone now standing forty feet above the surrounding formations. The terraces are formed by deposits from the hot water, consisting almost exclusively of carbonate of lime, and are essentially different from those in the geyser basins. The colorings of the terraces and springs are exquisite, being delicate blues, greens, pinks and browns, frequently due to a low form of vegetable life which will grow in hot water up to a temperature of one hundred and eighty degrees. The pools above catch the reflection of the sky and are like a huge turquoise, which blends with the coloring of the terraces and forms a perfect riot of color. While many of the pools are boiling others are agitated by the escape of carbonic acid gas at the surface. Small articles left in these springs for five or six days will show a deposit a sixteenth of an inch in thickness. The terraces have been given such names as Minerva, Hymen, Mound, Pulpit, Cleopatra, Angel and Jupiter, the latter being formed from Jupiter Spring and is the largest and prettiest. At one point the traveler may descend into a sort of hot cave known as the "Devil's Kitchen."

All over Terrace Mountain one finds these vividly colored hot springs, but perhaps the queerest of all pools is the one near Old Faithful Inn and known as the Handkerchief Pool. There every day tourists can be found dropping handkerchiefs into the hot water. If the article is made of silk it disappears and seldom returns to the surface, but a linen one is sucked down, whirled about and tossed to the surface thoroughly washed except for the strong odor of sulphur. Another spring at this point is known as the Butterfly, so named from its shape and beautiful coloring. The Morning Glory Pool, the perfect counterpart of a huge blue morning glory is the prettiest spring of the entire park.

Geysers

The geysers for which Yellowstone is so noted are found in detached groups occupying basins or valleys of the great tableland forming the central portion of the park, which has an average elevation of about eight thousand feet above the sea. The volcanic activity that resulted in the formation of the park may be considered as extinct, yet the hot springs so widely distributed over the plateau are convincing evidence of the presence of underground heat and there is no doubt that the waters derive their high temperature from the heated rocks below, and that the origin of the heat is in some way associated with the source of volcanic energy. The Upper Geyser Basin is a valley about a mile and a half in length along the Firehole River. The valley floor is covered with the white deposit of silica caused by the overflowing hot waters.

About thirty geysers are clustered in this basin, among them Old Faithful—that great geyser which since its discovery in 1870, has never failed to send up its graceful shower of jets at intervals of sixty to seventy-five minutes. It is beautiful beyond description whether the sun or the wind is playing on its graceful spray, which shoots up from one hundred and twenty-five feet to one hundred and fifty feet. It plays for eight minutes and during that time one is treated to a kaleidoscope of coloring which fairly overwhelms with its grandeur. The mound at its base is filled with little basins, like shallow pools with rims exquisitely beaded—the bottoms showing delicate tints of rose, saffron, orange and white. The throat of the geyser is a peculiar shade of brown. A big searchlight at the hotel is played on the geyser every night. Old Faithful is the greatest geyser in the world and is alone worth a trip to the park.

The Castle is another "spouter" of rare beauty as its cone is formed of delicate cauliflower or coral-like geyserite. Its eruptions occuer every twenty-four hours, when it plays for half an hour followed by an emission of steam which can be heard for miles. The Bee Hive with its nozzle-like opening is remarkable but rather uncertain as to the time of playing, while the wonderful Riverside sends up its hot water once every day. The Giant, the Sponge, the Cascade and the Chinaman are all in this section and each has an individual beauty.

The Chinaman is named in memory of a Celestial who is said to have established a laundry in the park and who put clothes and soap into the geyser's pool and was annihilated according to the story, by the violent eruption. It is a remarkable fact, however, that a bar or two of soap will cause practically any geyser to play in a few minutes. The practice of causing eruptions in this manner became so common a few years ago that the government put a stop to it as it was feared that some of the best geysers would be ruined. This whole basin with the weird whiteness of its floor, the gaunt trunks of pine trees killed by the hot waters, the myriads of steaming crystal pools and the spouting geysers, is a scene never to be forgotten.

In Norris Basin the geysers steam directly out of the rocks, having no mounds whatever. Several are what are known as mud spouters, shooting up hot masses of wet, pasty earth of a blueish color. The BBlack Growler is a steam vent only, and all day and all night there is a continual roar and hiss of steam from this opening in the rocks. The earth is so hot at this point that it is deemed unsafe to step directly upon it. A walk has been built across the entire basin and tourists are forbidden to step off of it. A United States soldier always accompanies them to see that the rule is obeyed. Each geyser has its own individuality and beauty and no two are alike, and weeks are sometimes spent by travelers in studying the moods of these marvelous natural wonders.

Animals.

To many the animals of the park are as popular as the geysers, for nowhere else in the world can one come so close to wild animals as in the Yellowstone. Persons are not permitted to carry firearms and are warned against teasing the animals, and the rigid enforcement of this rule has created a feeling of security on the part of the animals, and big black bears may be seen feeding on the garbage dumps near the hotels like domestic animals. They will frequently follow carriages along the roads becoming so insistent in their begging for sugar or candy that they have to be driven away by the soldiers. Their thieving is proverbial and the campers have the greatest difficulty in keeping their supplies out of reach.

The park buffaloes are kept in a corral—staggering remnants of the statelest hoofed animals in the world. But a few years ago they grazed over the West in countless thousands, but now they are rerely seen except in captivity, so the government has very wisely set apart a large corral for these fast disappearing animals.

Antelopes, mountain sheep, deer, elk and smaller animals roam through the forests unmolested and are often seen from the roads.

Petrified trees and fossils are another of the park's natural wonders, some excellent specimens of the former being easy of access from the Tower Falls. The largest tree is about fifteen feet in circumference and stands upright. Although the trees have turned to stone the rings of growth can easily be counted and the external structure of the trunks is nearly as perfect as when the trees were living.

Glass Roadway.

At another point in the park there is a roadway made of volcanic glass—the only one of its kind in the world. It was built from the Obsidian rock which rises two hundred and fifty feet above the road and presents a glistening, mirror-like effect when illuminated by the sun's rays. The greater part of this mineral glass is jet black and opaque. The construction of the roadway along its base was carried out in a unique manner and after many difficulties. When it was found that blasting powder was ineffectual great fires were built around the huge rocks of glass and when they were thoroughly heated cold water was thrown on them; the sudden cooling causing the blocks to shatter. The material makes an excellent road. Many arrowheads used by the Indians of the Rocky Mountain tribes were made of this material. Beaver Lake, where the beavers make their homes and live undisturbed, is under the shadow of this queer glass mountain.

The Eyes Of The Canadian Army Has To Be The Best

The Flying Corps Takes Only The Best of Men---More Qualifications are Necessary Than In Any Other Branch of Service.

WINNIPEG—F. W. Russell, Canadian Pacific railway land agent, accompanied by his wife, has returned from Toronto, where they saw their son, Francis J. Russell, a cadet in the air pilot service of the Imperial Royal Flying Corps. He had just completed a strenuous five weeks' course of discipline and instruction at the school of military aeronautics conducted by the corps at Toronto university under the supervision of the Imperial officers of the very highest standing, each of whom has had notable experience in air service at the front, and is besides eminently qualified to impart the necessary knowledge and enthusiasm to the young cadets. The course of study includes such subjects as wireless (both sending and receiving), engines, rigging ,theory of flight, meteorology, astronomy, artillery, observation, map reading, reconnaissance, bombs and photography, and the cadets, under the conditions that prevail at Toronto, find it a most interesting and attractive introduction to the real business of flying. At the close of the course the cadets are required to pass a searching examination in all the subjects taught, after which they proceed to one of the flying camps. Cadet Russell is now at Camp Rathbun, Deseronto, where he will remain, probably about two weeks, during which time he will have several hours of dual training in actual flying (training under an instructor) and five hours solo flying (flying alone). From Deseronto a successful candidate proceeds to Camp Borden, where for six weeks he will undergo higher training, at the close of which he will if he passes a further examination, proceed to England.

The Royal Flying Corps is the first Imperial government venture of the kind in Canada. Its operations are directed and maintained by the British government, and it has no connection financially or otherwise with the Canadian department of militia and defence. No branch of the Imperial service is so hard to get into as the Flying Corps, for none but young men of undoubted qualifications, which include education as well as physical fitness, are accepted. All candidates for the cadet (pilot) wing of the corps must fulfil the following conditions:

(a) Be between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five.

(b) Be of good education and show evidence of good up-bringing.

(c) Be physically fit in accordance with the standard of fitness laid down.

Need Education.

Technical knowledge is not an essential, but a good college education is required; in a word, a candidate for admittance to the cadet wing of the Royal Flying Corps must be a youth of self-reliance, courage, moral force, with a high sense of his responsibility.

The conditions under which the cadets live while in training are ideal. At Toronto they occupy the university buildings amidst beautiful surroundings, and at the flying camps the quarters are specially constructed bungalows, which are artistic, spacious, comfortably furnished, airy, well lighted and attractive. The mess arrangements are of the very highest class.

There are three grades in the Royal Flying Corps—the officers, cadets and the men. The men are those who keep things in running order; the mechanics, the fitters, the clerical staff, etc. There are about three thousand now on the payroll in Canada.

The Flying Corps have an office at 298 Main street, Winnipeg, where full information as to all branches of the service is available.

ENCOURAGING HORSE BREEDING IN ALBERTA

The Alberta Horse Breeders' Association has awakened to the fact that the horse industry is an important one and deserves special attention. Their idea is to see that the stock men of this province adopt such measures whereby sooner or later the raising of horses will be first rate. With this in view the association has decided to hold a sale of horses under three years of age bred in Alberta, during the holding of the Winter Fair which commences at Edmonton on December 11th. The sale is to be open to both pure-bred and grade horses, but foals under one year will have to have been registered.

Here is a chance for the stockmen of Alberta to show their respective products—a chance also for those who contemplate starting in the business, to buy some registered product which by all means will be passed upon by the provincial authorities.

TRAINING FOR WOUNDED BELGIAN SOLDIERS

Th Belgian government carries the idea that though a man is disabled, he is fit for some kind of work whereby he, instead of being a burden to the country, can be an element of prosperity. In connection with this idea the authorities have organized a school for those people where technical training is a specialty and where the disabled soldiers will be compelled to attend. This will enable the partially wounded soldiers to undergo a technical training which will be suited to their respective injuries—in some cases the trades which they have already followed and in others the tastes and aptitudes which may be discovered in them.

This scheme would be a very wise one for the province to adopt as it would not only be an asset to the soldier but also to the country, for it would lift all the present and future dead-weights which are burdening the country. The system is a timely one and deserves attention.

THE FRENCH SITUATION IN CANADA

Why allow the Quebecians to carry on as they do, declaring against the Allies? Why not follow the example of the United States? Here we are taking all that the French in Canada are giving us and taking no steps to quell the movement though we are in the majority, while in the United States where there are over 25 million Germans, order is kept, by keeping down not only spies but also publications that are of hostile nature. The point which they argue with in the States is this: If the American language is not good enough for the Germans who live in this country, they should be shipped back immediately to their Fatherland. However, if the German language and German publications intend to thrive in this country henceforth they must by all means support the cause of democracy.

Arguing along the same lines: The French publications, with their outrage, should be stopped immediately, while French schools, where only the French language is taught, should be closed immediately and reopened only on condition that English teachers are employed.

The Germans can be shipped some place when they are undesirable, but where would we ship the French from here?

OPPORTUNITY FOR EVERYBODY

There is plenty of opportunity for everybody who wants to help. One way of helping is to lend a hand to the farmer and gardener in gathering his crops; another is to put him in the way of getting a fair price for his produce; and another is to contribute, in some way, toward preventing the fruit of his labor from going to waste. This advice is directed particularly toward those who really want it.

PRESERVE FIELD PRODUCTS FROM LOSS BY FIRE

The empire's call is for greater production. It is equally important to preserve our products from loss by fire. The fire waste of the province of Ontario for the first three months of 1917, as shown by reports to the fire marshal, amounts to $3,321,931. In 1916 it amounted in round figures to $12,000,000, and if the waste is not stopped, the year 1917 threatens to be as disastrous as its predecessor.

The unfortunate part of the whole matter is that the waste comes largely from the destruction of field products in barns, elevators and warehouses, or in canning factories, cereal mills, and other places where the raw product is being turned into food for our own needs and for the armies of the allies. It is equally true that many fires, probably one-half of them, could be avoided by a little care and thought. Surely, as a people we should be ready and willing to take up this empire call and preserve what we produce.

By way of example reference is made to barn fires. Last year in Ontario alone, over six hundred barns were destroyed, involving a loss of more than one million dollars, of which six hundred thousand dollars was on produce, implements and livestock. If by a little care we can save one-half this loss we should be doing the equivalent of that much extra production, and who is there among us who is not prepared to do his "bit" on this line?

Fire is always the enemy of the human race, but in war time, it is a traitor in camp, a foe in the trenches. Not only is the waste of food by fire an unmitigated calamity, but any fire waste is just that much of a burden at a time when the last straw may break the camel's back.

THE FARM LABOR PROBLEM

In surveying the labor situation of today certain people have erroneous ideas as to who is to blame for the shortage of farm hands. Some declare that the war is to blame while others say it is the labor unions. Both of these are wrong when the farm labor proposition is in consideration, for no one is to blame but the farmer himself—usually the farmers who farm on a large scale, and who care very little for the welfare of their hired help.

Anyone who has been around a farm for a short while can easily see that the farm hands are not cared for at all. They have to carry their own bedding wherever they go and sleep anywhere—in a barn, chicken coop, granary or some other place that is out of the way. With such invitations very few of the better class of people care to take positions with farmers. Furthermore, the other accommodations are also lacking at these places. Have you seen a bath in connection with a bunk-house?

If the average farmer would take a little care of his men by accommodating them he would find that hired help would not only be more plentiful but also cheaper—men who now think it below their dignity to work on the farm would flock to the farms in large numbers if they had the accommodations they get elsewhere. Have any of the farmers considered the value of the hired man? Is he not just as important as the horse.

With a little more care and possibly expense the farmer could remedy this great fault which is proving more harmful than ever since the outbreak of the war. A bunk-house can be constructed with very little expense and furnished simply. A bath in connection would add materially to the accommodation prospects, which would cost very little, as the farms all or nearly all have mills to pump water with, while plumbing fixtures can be simple and inexpensive. The food generally is the best, so one can easily see that it is just the accommodation which needs remodelling. If the farmers consider farm help necessary they should look after the welfare of the farm hands.

GIVING THE SOLDIERS A FAIR CHANCE

A nation owes much to its citizens who have fought its battles and to their families when they have been killed or injured so as to destroy their capacity to provide for their dependents. United States has usually recognized this fact and is doing so at the present time. One of the proposed uses of the "Liberty Loan" is to give the soldiers and sailors life and indemnity insurance, also to provide for their families while they are serving in the ranks.

The plan for this scheme was worked out by Secretary McAdoo and his coadjutors and was approved by President Wilson. It is now before congress pending trial. As to the justness of this insurance for the soldiers the secretary says:

"Military service in the U. S. is obligatory; those who imperil themselves have no election. The insurance companies do not and cannot permit this to affect their calculations. They must protect themselves by charging premiums so high that they are secured against loss no matter how severe the rate of mortality may be. Consequently the very men who are called into the service because their physical condition is the best and who as civilians would for that reason be able to secure the most favorable insurance rate in peace times are denied as soldiers the necessary life insurance to enable them to protect their families and dependents. The extra hazardous risks of war puts insurance beyond the reach of the conscripted soldier.

"The government which subjects these men to this insurmountable discrimination should itself supply insurance to soldiers at cost upon the peace basis. It would be dastardly and undemocratic if the government should penalize the soldier who is forced to render the highest duty of the citizen, by failing to provide for him war insurance upon peace terms and at net cost. The pay of the enlisted man in the army and navy is less than the wages and salaries generally earned in private life and government insurance and protection is a necessity in order to give the soldiers and sailors a fair deal."

Canada should also realize the necessity of this measure and should take steps to do something for the men who have been good enough to offer their services voluntarily. As stated by Secretary McAdoo the governments care very little for certain essentialities which fighting soldiers should have. To think that the slackers who do nothing have every opportunity for protection, while the real citizen, who fights for his country, has nothing!

Izaak Walton, who was born at Stafford, 324 years ago, is, surely, one of the most interesting characters in English literature, and few books are more certain of an abiding place in the literature of the language than his masterpiece, "The Compleat Angler." Thousands of people, the English-speaking world over, who know little about angling, and care less, have learned to love the simple, lovable character of this book, with its quaint conceits, its happy quotations, its poems and its anecdotes, and to find refreshment in its leisureliness. It was, of course, in a pre-eminent degree the reflection of the man. Few books, indeed, reveal their author more clearly, and the more one knows of the character of the genial and gentle man, who wandered for many years of his life from one country rectory and from one bishop's place to another, spending his time, as Wood has left record, "in the families of the eminent clergymen of England, of whom he was much beloved," the more one sees how inevitably he just expressed himself in the pages of his famous book. His writings are made all the more interesting when it is remembered that his days were cast in troublous times, and that the greater part of "The Compleat Angler" was written during the period of the Revolution and the years of unrest and unsettlement which folowed it. Then again, in his early days, Izaak Walton's lot was cast well away from the haunts of the countryside. He had settled in London as an ironmonger, and at first had a little shop, seven and a half feet by five feet, in the upper story of Gresham's Royal Bourse, or Exchange, in Cornhill. In 1614, however, he had a shop in Fleet street, two doors west of Chancery Lane, and it was here, in the Parish of St. Dunstan's, that he gained the friendship of Dr. John Donne, the vicar of that church, a friendship which filled so large a place in his life.

After the Royalist defeat at Marston Moor, he retired from business. He had bought a piece of land near his birthplace, Stafford, and he went there to live. That is to say, he made Stafford his headquarters, for he spent most of his time in visiting his eminent clergymen, a welcome guest everywhere, compiling the biographies of his friends, and steadily adding to the "Angler," a first edition of which was published in 1653. Writing biographies of his friends was, indeed, Izaak Walton's literary forte. His friendships were deep and earnest and, after the manner of the days in which he lived, very spacious. There was, with him, no such thing as short visits. His friends would be satisfied with nothing less than that he should make his home with them. Thus, in 1662, he found a home at Farnham castle, with George Morley, Bishop of Westminster, to whom he dedicated his "Life of George Herbert," and also that of "Richard Hooker." Then, from time to time, he would visit his great friend, Charles Cotton, in his fishing house on the Dove.

His love of angling, indeed, brought Izaak many friends, but, as has been well remarked of him, he had much more than a love of fishing, and a humorous temper to recommend him. Men of letters, and men who appreciated good writing, paid much respect to him, and trusted his literary judgment. Then, some fifteen years before "The Complete Angler" passed through the press, Izaak Walton, at the instance of Sir Henry Wotten, the famous British ambassador, wrote a life of that friend of his early days in London, Dr. John Donne. He had already contributed an elegy to the 1633 edition of Donne's poems, and he completed and published the life, "much to the satisfaction of the most learned critics," in 1640. In the course of his long literary career, Izaak Walton wrote many other lives, all done with the same loving care, and after the same delightfully leisurely fashion as the "Angler." They may not always be exact as to the facts, but they make happy reading by reason of the strangely rounded pictures of character which they present.

TRIP TO SUN CLUSTER 330 BILLION YEARS BY FAST TRAIN

By Garrett P. Serviss

Astronomers do not like to deal with miles any more than millionaires like to count their wealth in cents. The unit of measurement must bear some convenient proportion to the magnitude of the thing measured. So the astronomer, when talking or writing of the distances of the stars, employs a standard suitable length, which he calls a "parsec." Formerly he used a "light-year."

A parsec is 206,265 times the mean distance of the earth from the sun, and turned into miles it amounts, in round numbers, to 19,000,000,000,000! It takes light, which travels 186,300 miles per second, about three and one-quarter years to cover a parsec. In other words, a parsec is equal to about three and one-quarter light years, and a star situated at that distance would require three and one-quarter years to flash a signal to us.

But there is no known star so near as a single parsec. The nearest star is Alpha Centauri, a double sun, each of whose components is about equal to our sun. The distance of the great double sun Alpha Centauri is about one and a third parsecs. The distance of the still greater star Sirius is about two and a half parsecs. But these are near neighbors when compared with millions of stars in the milky way, which are probably a thousand or more parsecs away.

We can make a still greater jump into space with some fair degree of probability that we have not overestimated the distance. For instance, there is reason for thinking that the globular cluster of suns in the constellation Hercules, which glows in a large telescope like a ball of frosted silver in an electric beam, is at a distance from the earth of as much as 10,000 parsecs; or, to put it into miles just to tickle the imagination, 190 quadrillions of miles.

It would take you six billion years to count 190 quadrillions if you counted one every second and never stopped to eat or sleep!

On the wings of light you could ride to the Hercules sun-cluster in about 30,000 years, but if you went on a swift cannon ball it would take eleven billion years, while a mile-a-minute express train would be 330 billion years making that trip! It would take a string of 23,750 billion earths to reach from here to the great sun-cluster.

Counts of stars in a photograph of the Hercules cluster made recently with the 60-inch reflecting telescope on Mount Wilson, in California, indicate that that "ball of suns" contains not less than 50,000 blazing orbs, every one of which may be as large as, or larger than, our sun. But their apparent crowding together is an effect of their immense distance from us. Still, they are evidently much nearer together than are the suns in our part of space, so that they constitute a system of their own, which must present a spectacle of amazing splendor to the inhabitants of any planets that it may contain.

There is no apparent reason why there may not be planets circling around the suns of the Hercules cluster, imagine yourself to dwell upon one of those planets at the centre of the cluster. The nearer stars of the assemblage would be three times as near and nine times as bright as Alpha and Centauri is to us. Beyond them, at gradually increasing distances, would be seen arrayed in concentric spheres the other 50,000, like stellar armies, with ranks receding in the distance.

It is the arrangement of these stars in a globular group which constitutes the chief wonder. The universe as a whole is not arranged in that way. It appears to be a flattened system, based upon the spiral of the milky way, and our sun happens to be situated at present somewhere near the centre of the relatively open and empty space within the spiral, and at a great distance from the inner edge of the milky way.

Within this space suns are flying in every direction and yet not without strange relationships of motion. One after another there have been discovered in recent years groups of stars (suns), which keep company in their journeying. One of these is known as the Tarus group, because many of its members are stars in the constellation Taurus, although others of its members are situated in far distant parts of the sky. There are 39 stars of this group now recognized, and they are travelling along parallel lines, without regard to the motions of other stars which, as seen from the earth, seem to be mingled among them.

All of these stars are "giant suns," from five times to 100 times greater than our sun. Immense distances separate them from one another, yet they acknowledge the mysterious link that binds them, and each holds the common course, as if they were a handful of orbs which had been flung out by the Creator by a single motion. They are receding from our point in space and it has been calculated that in 65,000,000 years they will appear, as seen from the earth, as a compact group, a glimmering speck of stardust, like the far mightier assemblage in Hercules.

Neckwear Notes

There is just as much material in the new coat collar of washable fabric—it is the shape that is different. Put away all your wide sailor collars, unless they are of fine, delicate fabric—these you may wear with indoor costumes—but the smart outdoor collar now, the one you wear with your tailored suit for fall, must be very long at the front and rather narrow in width all around. White collars in this shape give the modish touch, and the longer the points at the front, the smarter the effect. Such collars do not taper to a V from shoulder line to bust, but outline the front of the coat with straight edges, and at the place of joining the collar is cut straight across, making a square edge, or is pointed downwards in the well-known Puritan effect. This style is well illustrated in the coat collar trimmed with stitched bands of narrow braid, pictured today. Note how long the collar is, and how comparatively narrow at the shoulder line. Any day in New York you may see these collars on smartly dressed women; though the materials of the collars differ the shape is always the same. A square-edge collar, also coming well down the coat front, is of white washable satin and on the squared ends are square motifs of couched silk cord. Gauntlet cuffs, trimmed with the square motifs, come well up toward the elbow.

A Jabot, if Not a Collar.

Some women dislike coat collars of washable fabric and never wear them; other women are never seen, in tailored costume, without the fresh bit of white turning back over the coat collar of the suit. It is all a matter of taste, though it seems a pity that so many stout women, to whom such collars add nothing and detract much, should be the ones who are most wedded to them. A great deal is being done for the stout woman in the way of new sveltine inspired modes that adapt current fashions to the proportions of the stout figure, and make coats and frocks graceful in spite of obstreperous curves; but the stout woman spoils it all when she spreads a white expanse of collar over her shoulders. She should select, rather one of the new stock and jabot effects which swathe the throat trimly and give a narrow line of white between the coat-fronts.

These stock and jabot combinations have come in with the vogue for military fashions. The modern soldier does not wear a tall stock with soft frills and pleatings of fabric below; but other soldiers in other days have affected the style and, somehow or other, the effect is simply trig and pleasing with a severe tailored suit and military hat. The jabot-stock pictured is one of the exclusive models of the season—the sort one looks for not on the neckwear counter but under it, where high priced bits of daintiness are displayed on glass shelves under inverted lights. Real filet insertion is joined to fine white net, the net stock tucked to give it more body, and the net jabot pleated thickly into the front of the stock. These pleats are pressed all the way down and fall softly, giving the jabot a slight flare at the edge. A beautiful feature, worth noting, is the hand embroidered design which covers the joining of filet banding and net, in the jabot.

Jabots are mostly of net or net-top lace in the best models. There are plenty of lawn and organdie jabots lack the exquisite softness and grace of the jabot made of filmy material, and they give an effect of stiffness and severity rather unbecoming to most women, who require softness and grace in neckwear belongings. A jabot stock is the easiest thing in the world to make at home and a pretty model to copy is one of allover embroidered net. The stock is simply a straight strip of he net long enough to go around the throat and about nine inches wide, the net crushing down to proper height on the neck. The jabot is a big square of the net, caught up by the center and shirred to the front of the stock, the four points falling in soft drapery. Such a jabot and stock must be daintily made, the material hemmed with tiny hand-stitches and the stock fitted with exquisite nicety. At the back the stock should be hemmed and fastened with snaps or very small hooks and flat eyes, and strips of collar stiffening may be run into the narrow hems.

A Pretty Collar and Chemisette of Wash Satin and Filet

Another smart jabot is of net top lace, gathered to a straight foundation stock of net. Over this foundation stock goes a high, turnover collar of white satin, and a black satin cravat passes under the white satin turnovers. Lastly, these are joined by a plain or jeweled bar pin so that all may be trim and tidy in line.

Starched Eatons With Trotteur Frock

There is another sort of collar that is very smart in Paris just now and which is being worn by a few women over here, and that is the very small, starched eton collar accompanied by a softly knotted silk tie. Parisians wear this chic little touch of white at the throat with serge trotteur frocks—and just now the smartest and most expensive thing in Paris is the serge frock; one chooses a silk costume to be economical. A dark blue mohair and satin frock just brought over has one of these little white etons and the tie is of black satin. Just because large collars are so prevalent here the little white eton with its flowing black tie is very chic and different. ff With indoor dresses of dark worsted material, later in the season, the white eton accompanied by narrow white cuffs is likely to have much favor.

Outdoor neckwear cannot be passed over without mention of the new waistcoats which abound now on all neckwear counters. Very good looking they are, to be sure, these natty white waistcoats for wear with fall tailored coas, and one of the newest styles is pictured, a model of rather heavy white linen crash with oblique front closing and a long, narrow collar that turns over the coat collar. Waistcoats are to be had in finely twilled pique also, and in washable satin; and sometimes there is no collar, the top being finished with narrow turned down flaps that are ironed perfectly flat.

Neckwear for Indoor Wear.

Fichus are extremely popular and there are many new fichu styles. A wide Georgette collar, drawn in by hemstitching to give the narrow fichu line from shoulder to bust, is shown in an illustration. Unless a fichu wrinkles a bit, to suggest the softly folded fabric of olden days, it is not worthy of the name, and though there are many so-called fichus of frilled net, made for wear with V necked surplice bodices, they are really collars and not fichus, since they lie perfectly flat, without folds. The fichu picured is made of flesh pink Georgette crepe. Nothing is so becoming to the "tired face" as flesh pink, and a shade just off the white is very lovely with frocks of black or dark blue silk. There are elaborate collars, too, for wear with indoor frocks; one is shown in the model of cream satin and cream filet which adds daintiness to an afternoon dress of black satin and chiffon. This collar was designed for a square neck opening and there is a chemisette to match, collar and chemisette outlining a square decolletage.

Collars for All Shapes of Neck-Opening.

It is always well to try on a collar before buying. Otherwise you may find yourself with a collar for a V cut bodice when you need something to finish a square neck opening. The shape of any collar is determined by the inner curve that comes around the neck—never by the line at the outer edge. An experienced home-dressmaker who has cut many collars is not likely to be led astray, but any other woman will be wise to try on her collar in one of the mirrors always provided plentifully at a neck-wear counter. The voile and filet collar illustrated was intended for a V shaped opening. If worn with a square cut bodice it would wrinkle badly—unless the fronts of the collar were turned under considerably. This can sometimes be done when the collar you want comes only in the wrong shape. But do not try to make a collar intended for a square neck fit a V necked waist; that feat is quite impossible!

The Practical Convenience of Garnitures.

What the saleswoman at the neck-wear department styles a garniture, is really a semi-finished blouse—if you have the imagination to see it. One may buy a chemisette and collar which can be set into a plain blouse with lines of hemstitching; a jet-embroidered, sleeveless tunic for an elaborate blouse, and dozens of other useful affairs of the sort.

APPLES

Firm, tart apples are best for canning, but any may be used. Grade them carefully for quality. Apples tarnish when exposed to the air and therefore should be dropped into a pan of cold, slightly salted water until ready to pack into the jars. Perfect fruit should be cored, blanched in boiling water for two minutes, and packed whole in the jars for baking, breakfast dishes, and so on. Whole fruit will pack best in the larger-sized jars.

Syrup made in the proportion of one cup of sugar to four cups of water should be added, rubbers and tops placed in position loosely, and the product sterilized for 20 minutes in a hot-water canner, 15 minutes in a water-seal outfit, 10 minutes under five pounds of steam pressure, or five minutes in a pressure cooker. Remove from the canner and tighten the tops.

Sliced for Apple Pies

Slightly imperfect apples, those having bruises and small decayed spots, should be washed, cored, pared and quartered. Pack into glass jars and add syrup made in the proportion ofone cup of sugar to four cups of water.

Put rubbers and tops in position and sterilize for 12 minutes in a hot-water canner, 10 minutes in a water-seal outfit, six minutes in a steam-pressure canner, or four minutes in a pressure cooker.

The apples may be sliced rather than quartered if desired, and are perhaps best for making apple pies when cut in this manner. Small pieces of apple may be placed in the jars, syrup added in the proportion of one cup of sugar to two cups of water, and sterilization done for a similar period. The apples are then available for apple sauce, perk relish, and similar uses.

Apple jelly is so easy to make that it is used by commercial jelly makers as a base for nearly all other jellies. Best results are secured when sour apples are used. Extract the juice by cooking, strain this through a cloth, and add three-fourths as much sugar as juice.

Boil in a wide, shallow pan until the jelling point has been reached. Many housewives test this by allowing the juice to run off the side of a spoon. When two drops form on the edge the jelly should be poured immediately into sterilized glasses. Melted paraffin poured over the jelly will prevent mold.

If desired, sour apple juice may be bottled, sterilized for 10 minutes in boiling water, and corked tightly for future use in making other jellies which require the addition of pectin and acid. Fresh apple cider may be sterilized in a similar manner, but a tablespoonful of sugar should be added to each quart for flavoring.

Apple Syrup for Winter

Apple pectin for jelly making may be made by adding one-fifth of an ounce of tartaric or citric acid to five pounds of apple pomace or apple pulp, and combining this with 20 pounds of water. Boil slowly for one hour and press the liquid from the pomace.

A very palatable apple syrup may be made for winter use by adding two and a half ounces of powdered calcium carbonate—a harmless chemical—to seven gallons of sweet apple cider and boiling the product in a kettle or vat vigorously for five minutes. Pour this liquid into glass jars and allow it to stand until perfectly clear, which will require about seven hours.

Fill a preserving kettle two-thirds full of this liquid, being careful to eliminate all sediment which has collected in the bottoms of the jars.

Add one-half teaspoonful of lime carbonate for the seven gallons of liquid and boil until the product reaches a temperature of 220 degrees, or until it has the consistency of maple syrup. Allow to cool slowly, and when again clear fill the jars with liquid, avoiding all white sediment. This sediment is perfectly harmless and results from the acid in the apple, but will cause the syrup to be cloudy unless eliminated.

Put rubbers and tops in position and sterilize for 12 minutes in a hot-water canner, 10 minutes in a water-seal canner, eight minutes under five pounds of steam pressure, or five minutes under 15 pounds of steam pressure. Remove from the canner and tighten the tops to the jars.

Raisin Cakes

These delicious little cakes require one cupful of butter, two cupfuls of sugar, two cupfuls of milk four cupfuls of flour, one cupful of chopped raisins, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one teaspoonful of vanilla—but no eggs. Bake as drop cakes in little tins.

PRESERVE YOUR OWN FRUIT

DO-YOUR-BIT

Toward Conserving the Food Supply

Canning is the most important topic of the day. Even politicians discuss it. Women should not only discuss it but also practice it, as it is one of the most patriotic works ever thought of. It also reduces the high cost of living.

During these war times when the question of food is the most important topic of the day, woman should do her part in helping along these lines, by reducing the cost of living which can be done by canning fruit during season. It is not only a saving to her but also a saving to Canada and the allies inasmuch as canning food, is conserving food.

Why? Food which is not canned will spoil, while food which is preserved, keeps.

In order to see the difference between "Home-canned" goods and "tin-canned" goods, one must compare the two. First of all, when you buy preserved goods, you pay for the tin, the labor, the goods, and the profit, while if you are canning yourself you only pay for the material used, and a little of your spare time. Then, too, you know what you eat when you do your own canning.

MOUNT ROYAL COLLEGE NOTES

The Conservatory of Music is being reorganized under the direction of Dr. J. E. Hodgson, who has had special experience and training for this class of work.

All branches and grades of musical education will be supervised by him and will be ensured the best possible results. Studios are now open at the college and at the Mason & Risch block. Dr. Hodgson will be available for interview and to give advice to prospective music students from now on—morning, afternoon and evening.

Miss Gladys Campbell, of the Commercial department, has been spending the summer in post-graduate work in high accountancy in the east. Miss Campbell will be back two or three days previous to the opening of the college.

Miss Edna L. Carder, the new teacher of fine art, is en route from the east and will be in Calgary in a few days. Miss Carder comes of a family of artists. Those who have seen her work in china painting, water colors and oils, etc., are enthusiastic over the prospects of having in Calgary a teacher in fine art of Miss Carder's ability and experience. Miss Carder's studio will be in the college building.

The college has a flourishing junior department, grades 2 to 6, inclusive. The teacher in charge is Miss Alice Edwards, a young woman of the highest qualifications and large experience in this work.

Last year the registration of students reached 208. From present indications the registration this coming year will create a record. The staff for this year will number seventeen teachers for all departments.

Inquiries and applications continue to come in from students for the opening of the fall term on Sept. 10, on which date the college will begin the seventh year of its history.

A BAG OF VIOLETS

An odd new bag appeared on the street the other afternoon. It was one of those popular circular ones, hung over the arm by long drawstrings. The curious thing about it was that the entire lower half of the bag was one solid mass of deep purple violets. The upper part was of silk, just the right shade of green for violet leaves. It was finished with a deep ruffle, as a heading, and with long drawstrings of purple ribbon about three-quarters of an inch wide to match the violets. The woman who carried this wore a hat which harmonized with the bag. The crown, which was round, was covered with violets and the broad brim was of a fine soft purple straw. There was just a flat touch or two of green on this brim for decoration.

A bag, made similarly, might have little pink roses or buds, or any other flowers of the maker's choice and, with a hat trimmed to match, would be a dainty addition to a summer wardrobe.

WEDDINGS

Leith—Gallay

The marriage took place of Mr. Albert Leith to Miss Mary Gallay on August 26th, at Montreal. The bride was beautifully attired in a pale pink crepe de chine gown and carried a bouquet of American beauties. She was given away by her father, Mr. J. M. Gallay, and was attended by her sister, Miss Rebecca Gallay, while Mr. Jack Gallay attended the groom. The young couple left right after the ceremony to spend their honeymoon at New York and other eastern states. Mr. Leith was formerly a prominent business man of Calgary, but now has his home at Sydney, N.S. Mr. Leith is a brother to Mrs. Herman Gallay of this city.

DO YOU KNOW

That all household pans should be kept on shelves made of strips of wood, so that plenty of air can get to them? This keeps them sweet and fresh for use.

That stale bread for puddings should be soaked in cold milk or water? If put in a hot liquid it becomes heavy.

That finely crushed egg shells applied with a damp cloth are excellent for scouring pots and pans? Be sure they are crushed fine, as large pieces will scratch.

That you can remove perspiration stains from your clothes by soaking the garments in strong salt water before laundering?

BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

One thing which, if war develops it, will do much to help compensate for the war is that women are in reality more beautiful in plain clothes than in gaudy clothes. The delusion among women that extravagance in dress attracts men is what psychologists might call a "holdover" from some previous racial period. It is deep seated, but it is not true in the best and highest sense, as women invariably discover when they adopt simplicity. Nothing is more appealing to a man than the severely plain costume of the trained nurse.

Let us hope then that out of this war this great truth will be more thoroughly understood—that the simpler and more inexpensive the costume of women, if it sets forth her personality, the more effective and beautiful it is to men.

CAPABLE WOMEN

The cotton factories in Japan employ more than 125,000 women.

A woman is said to be the wisest at the age of 30.

Women employed in journalism in Japan receive from $10 to $25 a month.

Nearly all of the pulpits of England are now occupied by women ministers.

Queen Mary of England recently made a visit to the war front.

Mrs. P. G. McEvoy is known as the "Apple Queen" of Illinois.

Mrs. Tracy Fielding Story of Groton, Conn., can trace her ancestry back to Chief Uncas.

Mrs. Ad Topperwein has defeated all of her sex and many male shots for target honors.

More than 31,000 women are employed in amusements and hotels in Great Britain.

Some female munition workers in Great Britain smoke as high as 250 cigarettes a week.

Japan has very few female doctors, with the best ones earning as high as $3,000 a year.

The municipal councils in Berlin and other large German cities now include women among their members.

The killing of male heirs in the war has made it imperative that many women in England be made peeresses.

HOW QUEEN MACHA MADE HER PRISONER HER KING

Ireland, called by the ancients, "the Isle of Destiny," is also the mythical land of romance. Irish history is tinted with a romantic glamor of poetic beauty equal to that of any fairy-tale.

The story of Macha "of the Golden Hair," one of the early warrior queens, is a general favorite with the Irish bards.

The Princess Macha was the beautiful daughter of Aodh Roe. No other maiden in the kingdom could boast of such wonderful shining tresses, so she was called "Macha of the Golden Hair."

King Aodh Roe, however, took even greater pride in the marvellous courage and sagacity of his daughter than he did in her beauty. He consulted her upon all affairs of state, which aroused bitter jealousy in the hearts of his kinsmen.

When Aodh Roe died, Macha "of the Golden Hair" mounted the throne. But Cimbaeth, her father's cousin, and his brothers took up arms against her. The Queen led her army to meet the enemy and defeated Cimbaeth in a great battle, taking him prisoner.

Now, Macha had never seen Cimbaeth, who was a handsome, noble-looking man, with dark hair and eyes that burned with the fire of courage and pride. When he was led before her, a helpless captive, the Queen thought him more princely than any other man in the kingdom. Cimbaeth, on the other hand, forgot that he had suffered defeat and humiliation as long as he could gaze upon such queenly beauty.

Macha, refusing to pronounce the sentence of death advised by her councillors, bade her warrior-captive take his brothers and their retainers and build her a great castle near Armagh.

For many months Cimbaeth directed the building of the enormous stronghold. Finally it was completed and named by Macha, "Emania." She took up her royal residence there, highly pleased with the work of Cimbaeth.

Desiring to thank her captive and to reward him for having faithfully carried out her command, Macha of the Golden Hair summoned Cimbaeth to her presence.

In the presence of her court and of the visiting ambassadors she offered to give him his liberty and a princedom elsewhere.

Much to Macha's surprise, Cimbaeth knelt and kissed her hand, saying:

"It will please me more, most beautiful of queens, to remain your slave for all time than to reign over a kingdom banished from your presence."

Macha was overenjoyed to find that her love was reciprocated. Descending from her throne she offered her hand and crown to Cimbaeth, the bravest knight in all Ireland.

The royal romance pleased every one at court, and the wedding was celebrated with fitting pomp and ceremony.

Macha of the Golden Hair and Cimbaeth, the warrior, shared the throne of Ireland until death parted them. Their reign brought such great happiness and prosperity to the country that the bards of Armagh never ceased to sing of their love and goodness.

To Milk Consumers
We wish to announce to our customers that in advancing the price of milk, we have not done so before conditions justified such procedure. From the information we have been able to secure, it appears that in most American and Canadian cities the price of milk is higher than in Calgary or Edmonton. In many instances it is from 20 to 40 per cent. higher.
If you are using two quarts of milk per day it increases your daily milk bill approximately two cents per day. If you use two pounds of meat per day, the difference in price, as compared with one year ago, is ten to twenty cents per day.
As shown by analysis, milk, in proportion to its food value, at present prices is fifty per cent. cheaper than meat, and one hundred per cent. cheaper than eggs or fish. You may economize by using more milk.

THE C. P. R. GIVES YOU TWENTY YEARS TO PAY
An immense area of the most fertile land in Western Canada for sale at low prices and easy terms ranging from $11 to $30 for farm lands with ample rainfall—irrigated lands up to $50. One-tenth down, balance if you wish within twenty years. In certain areas, land for sale without settlement conditions. In irrigation districts, loan for farm buildings, etc., up to $2,000, also repayable in twenty years—interest only 6 per cent. Here is your opportunity to increase your farm holdings by getting adjoining land, or to secure your friends as neighbors. For literature and particulars apply to Allan Cameron, General Superintendent of Lands, Department of Natural Resources, 925 First Street East, Calgary, Alta.

If you can't have your own way in everything read the third chapter of St. James.

Women Should Be Just as Good Farmers as Men

Professor Spillman declares that there is no reason why women shouldn't make as good farmers as men. He expects to see at least 30,000 women taking men's places next year.

"I see no reason why women should not make just as good farmers as men," declared Prof. W. J. Spillman, expert in the bureau of farm management of the United States department of agriculture. The professor was nearly surrounded by maps splotched with colors that interpret the present crisis to the initiated eye. One covered with large yellow splotches represents the government mobilization of farm labor that is now going forward in all parts of the country who had come in search of advice on farming as a career.

"Is a woman strong enough?" she asked doubtfully. "Isn't plowing very hard?"

The professor explained that in these days of machinery plowing was not very hard. When you planted your crops you rode in a tractor and kept the side boxes full of seed. Plowing was accomplished without even this effort. Even without the tractor, he said, plowing was not difficult. Neither was harvesting. All you had to do was to occupy a seat and drive a couple of horses, or failing a seat, to walk along in back of the horses with the reins in your hands. Women might have some trouble stacking heavy bundles of grain, he thought, but it was sometimes possible to hire men for that particular task.

"Furthermore," declared the professor, "next season I expect to see at least 30,000 women taking the place of men on farms. It is estimated that about 40 per cent. or 250,000 of the young men drafted will come from the farms. Male labor is already scarce. Women will be needed to help harvest the crops."

In view of this, Prof. Spillman thinks the present training camps for women might do well to teach agriculture instead of shooting, so that in time of need they might prove really useful. An inexperienced person is of little use on a farm. Hence, if the women's clubs will organize classes in milking, gardening, driving horses and poultry feeding, in addition to a few lectures on agriculture, it would ultimately be of great service to the nation.

This opinion is also shared by several other experts in the department of agriculture. Already it is becoming so difficult to obtain male labor for the farms that the idea of hiring women presents itself as a natural alternative. There are others who agree with Prof. Spillman that women make just as good farmers as men. One man in a sudden burst of generosity said he thought they were likely to achieve even greater successes than men for the reason that women were the principal buyers of the nation and therefore knew what other women liked in buying food.

Women have been farmers, of course, ever since there were farms. In a way it is not a new question. If you consult the last census reports you will find that out of 8,000,000 women in occupations in the United States, 1,500,000 are in agriculture. But the majority of these are women whose homes are on farms. Their work is not agriculture, but housework. Thus women agriculturists, women who own and manage their own farms or women who choose agriculture as a profession—are still rare, though the number is increasing almost daily. Iowa and Missouri now have women farmers' associations, with a central headquarters and annual conferences at which the women meet and talk over their various farming problems.

Should you condemn our nation
And the president's acts refute,
What would you do if you were he?
Just name the substitute.

And if he told you all he knew
No doubt you'd change your mind,
For he has all the evidence,
And we go at it blind.

No man as yet was perfect,
Mistakes will make us right,
We'll stick to Woodrow Wilson
While he is in the fight.

And until that fight is over

BE AGREEABLE WHEN VISITING AND VISITED

There are rules for the visitor as well as for the hostess. The one duty is to please and be pleased.
Invitations should be either accepted or declined promptly. If accepted, arrive in time, and at the expiration of the visit depart, unless you are requested to prolong your stay.
Be stone blind, deaf and dumb to all family matters of an unpleasant nature in a household.
Be punctual at meals. To be late is a disrespect to your hostess—bad form for yourself.
Never interfere with inferiors when visiting. It is a breach of good manners.
To be constantly correcting your hostess's children will in time make you an objectionable visitor. Mothers resent this.
Always express a willingness to retire at the family bedtime. In your own room you can remain up as long as you choose.
All visitors should recollect that the evenings belong to their host and hostess, and they are expected to add to their enjoyment.
Never take novels or magazines from the bookcases unless permission is asked. When finished, return them to their shelves.
To ask questions of a private nature is very bad form.
Recolect the host's chair and the host's desk are not to be invaded.
It is bad form to lounge on sofas at all times in the day, reading novels and taking no interest in those around you. You are a visitor, and formality should be observed. Besides you are expected to be entertaining.
Absent yourself some hours in the morning, so that the mistress of the house will have a chance to settle her affairs. This sort of consideration is appreciated.
If a pleasure is proposed, accept 't. You are expected to be entertained.
Recollect that the amenities of life are many. But by abiding by them you are saved many trials, many annoyances.

She can board and room in the College as I did, and not have to walk through the snow and face the icy winds in the winter time when it is 40 below zero. She can stay indoors, go to her room where it is nice and warm, study or read, get her lessons, then go down to the big parlor with all the rest of the girls and enjoy herself.
"You know, last winter, we had the grandest time. Do you remember my chum? (She has a position now as a private secretary.) She and I would find a seat on one of the big divans and listen to the music. Some of the girls had lovely voices and a few could just do everything but make that piano talk. Dr. Hodgson, our music teacher, is grand. He would drop in sometimes when we would have a regular musical treat. I wished then I had taken up music, but I must be satisfied as I am making a fair salary and good chances for a raise.

JOHNNY TOLD A LIE

None of our 14 Classrooms can contain more than 24 pupils.

After dissecting the contents of the different Business College advertisements, our teacher put the following problem up to our pupils:—
"If a Business College has only one teacher to each fifty pupils, and the principal guarantees the public that at no time shall there be more than 25 pupils in each class, and also that the student shall have the undivided attention at all times of the teacher."
Question: "How can that be done?"
One of our pupils answered: "Very easy, sir! The principal did like Johnny; and: Johnny told a lie."
We were rather surprised to hear this from the lips of this straightforward lad, and reprimanded him for this wicked suggestion.
"Well," he said, "look at the picture of their school, compare it with yours, and then go and see my sister. She will tell you more."
We did, and found out that after the girl had spent over $150.00 for tuition fees and books and nine months of her time, she is still working for a pittance in "THE CHEAP STORE."
Further investigation revealed many similar cases; that is why we decided to establish ourselves in Calgary. There is need for a better business college, where pupils are not crowded like sardines in buildings without adequate protection in case of a fire conflagration, and where electric fans are not required to "keep the air sure."
All we offer the public is better service. Our total fee for each course will be agreed upon when enrolling, and when you are efficient then our service is completed, not when your financial patience is exhausted.
These widely-advertised champion typists would have become typists if they had gone to a shoe shine parlor to learn it. They are gifted. The student to advertise is the one who had to be MADE a typist, regardless of her natural adaptability. We have no hopeless cases, as others claim in their circular. We offer courses in:
TELEGRAPHY and RAILROAD ACCOUNTANCY
Amongst our PUPILS are three persons who were allowed to teach telegraphy in a local business college (which advertises not to be deceived by the claims of others), as well as eleven C. P. R. employers, one of whom is the head of a department.
BOOKKEEPING, ADVERTISING, SALESMANSHIP
What is a business college that does not offer a thorough course in advertising, the backbone of business, and in salesmanship, of which the same can be said?
SHORTHAND, TYPEWRITING, PENMANSHIP
See OUR display of priceless masterpieces of Penmanship in Young & Kennedy's store.
Room and Board arranged for non-resident pupils under continuous supervision of the Directors of this College.
This advertisement is written by our expert advertising teacher, Mr. Harry Lumsden, of New York; and the Business Course is under the personal supervision of Mr. E. A. Cast, principal, graduate of Valparaiso, Ind., University, of whom such an authority as Mr. A. M. Shafer, President of U. S. A. California State Normal School, writes: "He is the peer of any Business Educator in the world."

BY

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

SYNOPSIS

Kazan, the wolf dog, is picked up by Thorpe and his wife. Kazan immediately becomes Mrs. Thorpe's devoted slave. He is struck by mistake by Thorpe. McCready, the desperado, leads Thorpe into the woods, strikes him unconscious, and then comes back into Mrs. Thorpe's tent, but Kazan kills him.

Running away from Thorpe, who later comes back, he joins a wolf band where a little she-wolf is attracted by him and follows him everywhere.

Kazan and Gray Wolf strike a man's trail, and there discover Pierre Radisson. Kazan is wounded and is nursed back to health by Pierre's daughter Joan. Gray Wolf is left behind while Kazan goes on with them. Pierre dies and Kazan brings Joan and the baby to safety. Gray Wolf follows Kazan. She becomes a mother, but her little ones are killed by a lynx who also blinds her.

Joan and her husband go back to civilization. Kazan is left behind and travels many miles with Gray Wolf. While travelling they are caught by a forest fire and take refuge on a sand bar. Kazan and Gray Wolf make their home in a strange land where Henry Loti and his friend are trapping lynx.

Close along the edge of the stream grew thick green bush, and when the fire reached this, it burned more slowly, and the heat grew less. Still, it was a long time before Kazan and Gray Wolf could draw forth their heads and breathe more freely. Then they found that the finger of sand reaching out into the river had saved them. Everywhere in that triangle between the two rivers the world had turned black, and was hot underfoot.

The smoke cleared away. The wind changed again, and swung down cool and fresh from the west and north. The fisher-cat was the first to move cautiously back to the forests that had been, but the porcupines were still rolled into balls when Gray Wolf and Kazan left the sand-bar. They began to travel up-stream, and before night came, their feet were sore from hot ashes and burning embers.

The moon was strange and foreboding that night, like a spatter of blood in the sky, and through the long silent hours there was not even the hoot of an owl to give a sign that life existed where yesterday had been a paradise of wild things. Kazan knew that there was nothing to hunt, and they continued to travel all that night. With dawn they struck a narrow swamp along the edge of the stream. Here beavers had built a dam, and they were able to cross over into the green country on the opposite side. For another day and another night they traveled westward, and this brought them into the thick country of swamp and timber along the Waterfound.

And as Kazan and Gray Wolf came from the west, there came from the Hudson's Bay post to the east a slim dark-faced French half-breed by the name of Henri Loti, the most famous lynx hunter in all the Hudson's Bay country. He was prospecting for "signs," and he found them in abundance along the Waterfound. It was a game paradise, and the snow-shoe rabbit abounded in thousands. As a consequence, the lynxes were thick, and Henri built his trapping shack, and then returned to the post to wait until the first snows fell, when he would come back with his team, supplies and traps.

And up from the south, at this same time, there was slowly working his way by canoe and trail a young university zoologist who was gathering material for a book on The Reasoning of the Wild. His name was Paul Weyman, and he had made arrangements to spend a part of the winter with Henri Loti, the half-breed. He brought with him plenty of paper, a camera and the photopragh of a girl. His only weapon was a pocket-knife.

And meanwhile Kazan and Gray Wolf found the home they were seeking a thick swamp five or six miles from the cabin that Henri Loti had built.

CHAPTER XI

Always Two by Two

It was January when a guide from the post brought Paul Weyman to Henri Loti's cabin on the Waterfound. He was a man of thirty-two or three, full of the red-blooded life that made Henri like him at once. If this had not been the case, the first few days in the cabin might have been unpleasant, for Henri was in bad humor. He told Weyman about it their first night, as they were smoking pipes alongside the redly glowing stove.

"It is damn strange," said Henri. "I have lost seven lynx in the traps, torn to pieces like they were no more than rabbits that the foxes had killed. No thing—not even bear—have ever tackled lynx in a trap before. It is the first time I ever see it. And they are torn up so bad they are not worth one half dollar at the post. Seven!—that is over two hundred dollar I have lost! There are two wolves who do it. Two—I know it by the tracks—always two—an'—never one. They follow my trap-line an' eat the rabbits I catch. They leave the fisher-cat, an' the mink, an' the ermine, an' the marten; but the lynx—sacre an' damn!—they jump on him like you pull the wild cotton balls from the burn-bush! I have tried strychnine in deer fat, an' I have set traps and deadfalls, but I can not catch them. They will drive me out unless I get them, for I have taken only five good lynx, an' they have destroyed seven."

This roused Weyman. He was one of that growing number of thoughtful men who believe that man's egoism, as a race, blinds him to many of the more wonderful facts of creation. He had thrown down the gantlet, and with a logic that had gained him a nation-wide hearing, to those who believed that man was the only living creature who could reason, and that common sense and cleverness when displayed by any other breathing thing were merely instinct. The facts behind Henri's tale of woe struck him as important, and until midnight they talked about the two strange wolves.

"There is one big wolf an' one smaller," said Henri. "An' it is always the big wolf who goes in an' fights the lynx. I see that by the snow. While he's fighting, the smaller wolf makes many tracks in the snow just out of reach, an' then when the lynx is down, or dead, it jumps in an' helps tear it into pieces. All that I know by the snow. Only once have I seen where the smaller one went in an' fought with the other, an' then there was blood all about that was not lynx blood; I trailed the devils a mile by the dripping."

During the two weeks that followed, Weyman found much to add to the material of his book. Not a day passed that somewhere along Henri's trap-line they did not see the trails of the two wolves, and Weyman observed that—as Henri had told him—the footprints were always two by two, and never one by one. On the third day they came to a trap that had held a lynx, and at sight of what remained Henri cursed in both French and English until he was purple in the face. The lynx had been torn until its pelt was practically worthless.

Weyman saw where the smaller wolf had waited on its haunches, while its companion had killed the lynx. He did not tell Henri all he thought. But the days that followed convinced him more and more that he had found the most dramatic exemplification of his theory. Back of this mysterious tragedy of the trap-line there was a reason.

Why did the two wolves not destroy the fisher-cat, the ermine and the marten? Why was their feud with the lynx alone?

Weyman was strangely thrilled. He was a lover of wild things, and for that reason he never carried a gun. And when he saw Henri placing poison-baits for the two marauders, he shuddered, and when, day after day, he saw that these poison-baits were untouched, he rejoiced. Something in his own nature went out in sympathy to the heroic outlaw of the trap-line who never failed to give battle to the lynx. Nights in the cabin he wrote down his thoughts and discoveries of the day. One night he turned suddenly on Henri.

"Henri, doesn't it ever make you sorry to kill so many wild things?" he asked.

Henri stared and shook his head.

"I kill t'ousand an' t'ousand," he said. "I kill t'ousand more."

"And there are twenty thousand others just like you in this northern quarter of the continent—all killing, killing for hundreds of years back, and yet you can't kill out wild life. The war of Man and the Beast, you might call it. And, if you could return five hundred years from now, Henri, you'd still find wild life here. Nearly all the rest of the world is changing, but you can't change these almost impenetrable thousands of square miles of ridges and swamps and forests. The railroads won't come here, and I, for one, thank God for that. Take all the great prairies to the west, for instance. Why, the old buffalo trails are still there, plain as day—and yet, towns and cities are growing up everywhere. Did you ever hear of North Battleford?"

"Is she near Montreal or Quebec?" Henri asked.

Weyman smiled, and drew a photograph from his pocket. It was the picture of a girl.

"No. It's far to the west, in Saskatchewan. Seven years ago I used to go up there every year, to shoot prairie chickens, coyotes and elk. There wasn't any North Battleford then—just the glorious prairie, hundreds and hundreds of square miles of it. There was a single shack on the Saskatchewan river, where North Battleford now stands, and I used to stay there. In that shack there was a little girl, twelve years old. We used to go out hunting together—for I used to kill things in those days. And the little girl would cry sometimes when I killed, and I'd laugh at her.

"Then a railroad came, and then another, and they joined near the shack, and all at once a town sprang up. Seven years ago there was only the shack there, Henri. Two years ago there were eighteen hundred people. This year, when I came through, there were five thousand, and two years from now there'll be ten thousand.

"On the ground where that shack stood are three banks, with a capital of forty million dollars; you can see the glow of the electric lights of the city twenty miles away. It has a hundred thousand dollar college, a high school, the provincial asylum, a fire department, two clubs, a board of trade, and it's going to have a street car line within two years. think of that—all where the coyotes howled a few years ago!

"People are coming in so fast that they can't keep a census. Five years from now there'll be a city of twenty thousand where the old shack stood. And the little girl in that shack, Henri—she's a young lady now, and her people are—well, rich. I don't care about that. The chief thing is that she is going to marry me in the spring. Because of her I stopped killing things when she was only sixteen. The last thing I killed was a prairie wolf, and it had young. Eileen kept the little puppy. She's gotit now—tamed. That's why above all other wild things I love the wolves. And I hope these two leave your trap-line safe."

Henri was staring at him. Weyman gave him the picture. It was of a sweet-faced girl, with deep pure eyes, and there came a twitch at the corners of Henri's mouth as he looked at it.

"My Iowaka died t'ree year ago," he said. "She too loved the wild thing. But them wolf—damn! They drive me out if I can not kill them!" He put fresh fuel into the stove, and prepared for bed.

One daf the big idea came to Henri.

Weyman was with him when they struck fresh signs of lynx. There was a great windfall ten or fifteen feet high, and in one place the logs had formed a sort of cavern, with almost solid walls on three sides. The snow was beaten down by tracks, and the fur of rabbit was scattered about. Henri was jubilant.

"We got heem—sure!" he said.

He built the bait-house, set a trap and looked about him shrewdly. Then he explained his scheme to Weyman. If the lynx was caught, and the two wolves came to destroy it, the fight would take place in that shelter under the windfall, and the marauders would have to pass through the opening. So Henri set five smaller traps, concealing them skilfully under leaves and moss and snow, and all were far enough away from the bait-house so that the trapped lynx could not spring them in his struggles.

"When they fight, wolf jump this way an' that—an' sure get in," said Henri. "He miss one, two, t'ree—but he sure get in trap somewhere."

That same morning a light snow fell, making the work more complete, for it covered up all footprints and buried the telltale scent of man. That night Kazan and Gray Wolf passed within a hundred feet of the windfall, and Gray Wolf's keen scent detected something strange and disquieting in the air. She informed Kazan by pressing her shoulder against his, and they swung off at right angles, keeping to windward of the trap-line.

For two days and three cold starlit nights nothing happened at the windfall. Henri understood, and explained to Weyman. The lynx was a hunter, like himself, and also had its hunt-line, which it covered about once a week. On the fifth night the lynx returned, went to the windfall, was lured straight to the bait, and the sharp-toothed steel trap closed relentlessly over its right hindfoot. Kazan and Gray Wolf were traveling a quarter of a mile deeper in the forest when they heard the clanking of the steel chain as the lynx fought to free itself. Ten minutes later they stood in the door of the windfall cavern.

It was a white clear night, so filled with brilliant stars that Henri himself could have hunted by the light of them. The lynx had exhausted itself, and lay crouching on its belly as Kazan and Gray Wolf appeared. As usual, Gray Wolf held back while Kazan began the battle. In the first or second of these fights on the trap-line, Kazan would probably have been disemboweled or had his jugular vein cut open, had the fierce cats been free. They were more than his match in open fight, though the biggest of them fell ten pounds under his weight. Chanse had saved him on the Sun Rork. Gray Wolf and the porcupine had both added to the defeat of the lynx on the sand-bar. And along Henri's hunting line it was the trap that was his ally. Even with his enemy thus shackled he took big chances. And he took bigger chances than ever with the lynx under the windfall.

The cat was an old warrior, six or seven years old. His claws were an inch and a quarter long, and curved like similtars. His forefeet and his left hindfoot were free, and as Kazan advanced, he drew back, so that the trap-chain was slack under his body. Here Kazan could not follow his old tactics of circling about his trapped foe, until it had become tangled in the chain, or had so shortened and twisted it that there was no chance for a leap. He had to attack face to face, and suddenly he lunged in. They met shoulder to shoulder. Kazan's fangs snapped at the other's throat, and missed. Before he could strike again, the lynx flung out its free hind-foot, and even Gray Wolf heard the ripping sound that it made. With a snarl Kazan was flung back, his shoulder torn to the bone.

Then it was that one of Henri's hidden traps saved him from a second attack—and death. Steel jaws snapped over one of his forefeet, and when he leaped, the chain stopped him. Once or twice before, blind Gray Wolf had leaped in, when she knew that Kazan was in great danger. For an instant she forgot her caution now, and as she heard Kazan's snarl of pain, she sprang in under the windfall. Five traps Henri had hidden in the space in front of the bait-house, and Gray Wolf's feet found two of these. She fell on her side, snapping and snarling. In his struggles Kazan sprung the remaining two traps. One of them missed. The fifth, and last, caught him by a hindfoot.

This was a little past midnight. From then until morning the earth and snow under the windfall were torn up by the struggles of the wolf, the dog and the lynx to regain their freedom. And when morning came, all three were exhausted, and lay on their sides, panting and with bleeding jaws, waiting for the coming of man—and death.

Henri and Weyman were out early. When they struck off the main line toward the fall, Henri pointed to the tracks of Kazan and Gray Wolf, and his dark face lighted up with pleasure and excitement. When they reached the shelter under the mass of fallen timber, both stood speechless for a moment, astounded by what they saw. Even Henri had seen nothing like this before—two wolves and a lynx, all in traps, and almost within reach of one another's fangs. But surprise could not long delay the business of Henri's hunter instinct. The wolves lay first in his path, and he was raising his rifle to put a steel-capped bullet through the base of Kazan's brain, when Weyman caught him eagerly by the arm. Weyman was staring. His fingers dug into Henri's flesh. His eyes had caught a glimpse of the steel-studded collar about Kazan's neck.

"Wait!" he cried. "It's not a wolf. It's a dog!"

Henri lowered his rifle, staring at the collar. Weyman's eyes shot to Gray Wolf. She was facing them, snarling, her white fangs bared to the foes she could not see. Her blind eyes were closed. Where there should have been eyes there was only hair, and an exclamation broke from Weyman's lips.

"Look!" he commanded of Henri. "What in the name of heaven—"

"One is dog—wild dog that has run to the wolves," said Henri. "And the other is—wolf."

"And blind!" gasped Weyman.

"Oui, blind, m'sieur," added Henri, falling partly into French in his amazement. He was raising his rifle again. Weyman seized it firmly.

"Don't kill them, Henri," he said. "Give them to me—alive. Figure up the value of the lynx they have destroyed, and add to that the wolf bounty, and I will pay. Alive, they are worth to me a great deal. My God, a dog—and a blind wolf—mates!"

He still held Henri's rifle, and Henri was staring at him, as if he did not yet quite understand.

Weyman continued speaking, his eyes and face blazing.

"A dog—and a blind wolf—mates!" he repeated. "It is wonderful, Henri. Down there, they will say I have gone beyond reason, when my book comes out. But I shall have proof. I shall take twenty photographs here, before you kill the lynx. I shall keep the dog and the wolf alive. And I shall pay you, Henri, a hundred dollars apiece for the two. May I have them?"

Henri nodded. He held his rifle in readiness, while Weyman unpacked his camera and got to work. Snarling fangs greeted the click of the camera-shutter—the fangs of wolf and lynx. But Kazan lay cringing, not through fear, but because he still recognized the mastery of man. And when he had finished with his pictures, Weyman approached almost within reach of him, and spoke even more kindly to him than the man who had lived back in the deserted cabin.

A PAGE FOR THE BOYS AND GIRLS

-: THE GOLDENROD :-

ALONG a road in Spain, over four hundred years ago, a mule was cantering, bearing a rider in a crimson cloak. His eyes were dark and thoughtful, his face noble and strong. He was travelling to the royal palace where King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella were expecting him, and as he rode between fields and vineyards his thoughts were far away. He was thinking of an adventure, which was his one longing in life, an adventure across unknown seas in search of gold.

"The earth is not flat, it is round!" he declared to himself for the millionth time. "If I sail across the sea I shall reach India, the land of gold and gems and spices, and I shall bring back treasure to fit out an expedition to the Holy Land to rescue the tomb of the Lord Jesus from the pagans."

For years this had been the dream of Christopher Columbus, for the traveler was none other, and for years his dream had been laughed at. "How can the world be round?" his hearers scoffed. "Can men and animals walk upon their heads? He is crazy!" and they tapped their foreheads and winked at one another.

But at last one wise man listened and believed. He was a friend of the Spanish Queen Isabella, he had written to her of the dreams of Columbus, and this mule Columbus rode, and the scarlet cloak he wore had been bought with the money the Queen had sent to him, so that he could travel to the palace and tell her of his scheme.

So the son of a poor cloth weaver stood before the King and Queen, and after many days and changing of their royal minds, Isabella at last caught the excitement of the dreams of gold.

"You shall have the ships and all you need for your adventure, even if I have to sell my jewels to raise the money!" she cried.

But she did not sell them. The King and his courtiers began to picture vessels laden with gold sailing back to Spain; they also became excited and Columbus was given his three ships and men and set sail to fulfill his dream.

You know the rest of the story. How he discovered the land of South America and believed it to be India, thinking he had sailed around the world when he had only gone half way!

You know, too, how sadly the story ended. The Queen died, the weak King was ready to believe false stories against Columbus told by envious enemies. Poor, despised and ill, the great explorer died of a broken heart. Where were his dreams of gold?

Although he knew it not, his dreams came true a thousand times more wonderfully than he had ever imagined. He had dreamed of coming home laden with treasure, and upon one trip he came back from America in chains, placed there by a haughty Spanish courtier. Yet even thus, poor and in chains, his dream was more than fulfilled. He had discovered a new land, a whole new continent, upon which one day our own glorious country was born.

Thus did the dreams of Columbus gain for the world treasure far greater than mere gold.

Upon a clear autumn day in England, more than a hundred years ago, a group of people stood upon a beach watching a little vessel make her way out to sea. Those left behind waved and wept. Would they ever see their friends again, their friends who were sailing away to the unknown world for nothing but a dream?

It was the same trip Columbus had made all those years before, but no dreams of gold sent this little throng across the ocean in the ship called the Mayflower.

Their dreams were golden though, for they were dreams of freedom.

In England, where they lived in comfort and plenty, they were miserable, and life did not seem worth living. For they were not free to speak and pray to God and sing the hymns about Him which filled their hearts with courage.

Crowded together in that small ship, tossed by the waves and beaten by the winds, they were happy, for their dreams had begun to come true. Already they had found freedom. No officer of the English king's was there to tell them how they must say their prayers or punish them by imprisonment or death. Here God was their only King.

You know of their long weary trip, and of how they landed in a cold storm upon Plymouth Rock in New England. You have read of their sufferings from cold and illness, while one long log hut was built to shelter them, and before it was finished many had died. Only a few of that brave band was left alive to start life in the new land, and they were saddened by the loss of many of their loved ones.

Their dreams had been so splendid, so golden! Were they all shattered?

Ah, they had come true more wonderfully than they ever knew! From that band of brave travelers sprang our nation which stands for their dream, their golden dream of freedom!

Over four years ago a man, chosen president of the United States, took the oath of office. As he did so, he had a dream of what he hoped would come to the country while he was it's leader.

It was a golden dream, of great books written, discoveries made, wealth and success, and a chance for every man to lead a useful, peaceful life.

Has President Wilson's dream come true?

Instead of living peaceful, prosperous lives we have been drawn into a great war. Books are written, indeed, but they are not the work of students writing in quiet colleges. They are the letters and reports of those who have left their safe, peaceful homes here to fight, or care for those who fight in the trenches in France.

Discoveries are made, but they are how to build the best fighting aeroplanes, the strongest battleships, the destroyers of the U-boats.

Doctors are working night and day, not on new blood tests and violet-rays, but on how to treat wounds, to replace bones shot away, to save lives almost gone.

And money is spent too. Not, as President Wilson dreamed, in building up a great nation. But money is poured out in millions to build up an army and navy ,to send help to the suffering ones across the sea.

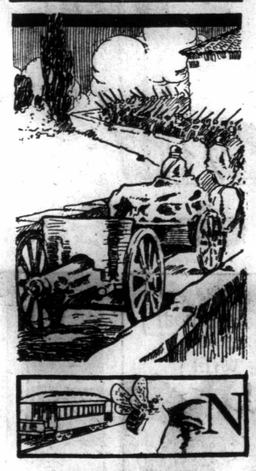
Peaceful lives are left to very few. Men and women and children, too, are giving their money and strength and time in helping. Others have sailed across the sea to give their lives for their country, and their homes are left, empty and darkened.

Where is the President's golden dream?

It has come true more gloriously than he ever imagined as he stood in the Capitol taking his oath of office.

He dreamed of freedom and peace for one nation, and lo, God has given us a chance to bring peace and freedom to the whole world. Could any dream be more magnificent?

Soon, over the country the roads and fields will be shining with the flower of America, the goldenrod. "What does it mean; why is it our country's flower?" you ask.



It means just this. The goldenrod blooms in every State in the Union. It blooms, not in fine gardens, but among weeds and thistles and along dusty roads. It belongs to every man, woman and child in the United States. It is their flower, because to each of them may come golden dreams of freedom, dreams as great as any which came to Columbus or the Pilgrim Fathers, to any President from Washington to Wilson.

And these dreams will come true! If each one lives his life for his God and his country, they will come true more splendidly, more enduringly than we may ever know, but—our children and our grandchildren will rise up and bless us for our dreams come true.

The children are sick, Mother is up with them all night; father is sick, and Mother is up with him; but when Mother is sick does anybody know of it but the Lord?

The only human being in the world whose duties and obligations are not bound by the clock is Mother.

-: Fuzzy, The Little Boy Bear :-

He was big for a baby bear, but hardly big enough to be taking care of himself, which he seemed to be doing. A curious thing had happened a few days before; he was following his mother as she lumbered along the mountain trail, when she stopped, sniffed the air and gave him a cuff, which in bear language meant hide and keep still. As he scrouged behind a rock and almost quit breathing, his mother rose up on her hind feet and wrinkled her nose as she sniffed and sniffed, trying to locate the direction from which the danger scent came. Just then from across the gorge came a dull report, and a little blue whiff of something like fog drifted away. There was a spiteful thud, his mother gave a whistling intake of her breath, lost her footing on the narrow trail, tumbled limply over the brink and went rolling and crashing down the hillside, loosening a regular avalanche of stones in her course. Fuzzy, for that was his name, waited and listened a long time, but no sound came to his ears—everything was as still as things can be in nature's great solitude. Without knowing how he did it, Fuzzy made his way across gulches and up mountainsides to the distant hollow log that to him had been home. It seemed very new and strange to be by himself, with no big warm mother to hug him up when the cold mists began to creep up the ravines and wrap the whole mountain in its chilling folds; but he was a brave little chap, so he crept in the log and rolled himself up in a round black ball and was soon asleep.

When he waked up in the morning he started out to rustle up a breakfast for himself; first he wandered down through the thicket of huckleberry bushes and managed to get enough of the dark blue fruit to put a good taste in his mouth. He then came across a big rotten log that was no trouble at all to tear to pieces with his paws; in this were regular colonies of fat white grubs, besides regiments of bettles and bugs that were too much surprised to get out of the way. He feasted on these to his heart's content, and just as he was about to leave he came upon a million of brown ants, the kind with the delicious acid taste so dear to the palate of a little boy bear. He put his paws down and let the ants swarm over them, and then he would shut his eyes and lick them off by the thousand. As he was passing a hollow log his quick ears caught a buzzing sound that spelled bees and honey.

Crawling in, he pushed his paws up to the very elbows in the sticky mass, and, drawing them out, he licked off bees, honey, wax and trash with an equal relish. Of course, the bees did their level best to sting him, but his thick fur and shaggy hair made the best kind of a protection, and, barring an occasional sting on the tongue, his dessert was a blissful dream. Not satisfied with eating all his stomach would hold, he actually lay down and wallowed in what was left; and so for a day or two after whenever he licked his feet he got a taste of honey. Finding that mother nature had plenty to spare for little orphan bears, if they only had the energy and woodcraft to go out and get it, he grew bigger and bigger every day, and in a few months was able to rear up against a hemlock and scratch the measure of his height, just a little above that of the tallest bear in all the range.

Mayor's Greetings

August 24th, 1917.

The Officers,
United Grain Growers.

Gentlemen:—

It is a great pleasure for me, as Mayor of the City of Calgary, to extend a cordial welcome to yourselves on the occasion of your business visit to our city.

Our citizens have followed, with a great deal of interest and admiration, the splendid organization built up by the hard-working officers of your association in Western Canada.

We are also pleased to find that our community is finding favor in your eyes as a distributing center, and trust that your organization will continue to meet with splendid success in the future.

Kindly accept from me, on behalf of the City of Calgary, a kindly welcome to our community, and a profitable, business-like and enjoyable time while in our midst.

Yours very truly,

Mayor.

CROWN AND BRIDGE WORK

OUR GREAT SPECIALTY

ARE you contemplating Crown and Bridge Work? If so, do not make the mistake so many others have made, namely, having the work done by other than a specialist in this branch of dentistry. In order to be successful in Crown and Bridge Work, an intimate knowledge of this work, combined with mechanical skill and years of experience is required.
¶ The lack of these qualifications explains the failure to attain strength, durability, its natural appearance, and sanitation, all of which are so very important.
¶ By visiting our offices you will readily appreciate the fact that we are thoroughly equipped with the most modern appliances for the proper execution of this work, and a test of skill will convince you, as it has hundreds of others, who have been wearing our crowns and bridges for years with perfect satisfaction, that all the assertions we have made are entirely justifiable.

WRITE FOR OUR FREE BOOK

¶ If you cannot call conveniently for a few days, send a postcard, and a useful and interesting book, "The Care of The Teeth," will be sent by return mail. It tells you a great many things about your teeth, and shows how many thousands suffer from bad health through no other cause than defective teeth

DAIRYING AND POULTRY

Rejecting The Government Wheat Prices

Canadian Farmers, 75,000 Strong, Rebelled at $1.30 Offer, As Recorded by C. W. Stokes in The Country Gentleman — The Government of Canada Is Doing Everything in Its Power to Encourage More Grain Growing.

THE farmers of Western Canada did an extraordinary and a significant thing not long ago—they refused an offer of $1.30 a bushel for their entire 1917 wheat surplus. Five years ago that price would have seemed like an El Dorado to most of them.

The farmers of the three great wheat growing provinces of Canada—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—had created a union of prime producers, and almost immediately they displayed their enormous strength by rejecting the British government's offer for their 1917 crop, before it was known, at a price that appeared reasonable.

The government of Great Britain, wishing to assure to itself and to its allies a sufficient quantity of wheat, made a broad survey of the possible sources of supply. As is well known, it first fixed a flat price of sixty shillings a quarter for home-grown wheat—equivalent to about $1.82 a bushel, and not at all, according to British writers, an unhandsome price or one unlikely to discourage a great production within the British Isles. But by no imaginable process—least of all at the present moment, when the labor market of Great Britain is drained dry—could this stimulated production meet even one-tenth of the requirements. So the British Wheat Commission ranged afield, and one of the maxims that it laid down for its own guidance—the United States not yet having entered the war—was that so far as practicable it should confine all its purchases to the British empire.

Farmers' Refusal a Great Shock.

The government commission then began by buying the whole available surplus of Australia, for both last year and this year, at, roughly, $1.12 a bushel, delivered to port of export. It also sought to control the surplus crops of India and of Egypt. But the greatest and nearest source of supply was still untouched—Canada, with a wheat production last year, a bad year there, as everywhere, of 200,000,000 bushels.

Acting, therefore, as on intermediary for the British government, Sir George Foster, the Canadian minister of trade and commerce, approached the Canadian council of agriculture, representing large associations of growers in the west, where more than ninety per cent. of Canada's wheat is grown. His proposition was that the British government would buy the entire 1917 surplus at $1.30, f.o.b. Fort William, the terminal at the head of Lake Superior, where Canadian grain really enters commerce.

The council, very much to his surprise, refused this offer, and named as the lowest acceptable a flat rate of $1.70 for No. 1 northern, or, preferably, a guaranty of prices from a minimum of $1.50 to a maximum of $1.90. The minister was shocked almost beyond adequate expression, but he had enough breath left to invoke the sacred cause o fpatriotism and to invoke it well.

More to the point, he quickly let fall some powerful hints as to the scarcity of transportation that might mean the entire loss of the allied market if the farmers did not come across. And it was inevitable that aspersions of nationality, disloyalty and pacifism should arise, because the head of the Canadian council of agriculture, although a twelve-year resident of Alberta, is by birth an American.

But the western farmers stood foursquare behind their executive's decision. Their defence, mainly, is that there is no moral obligation upon the Canadian farmer to produce wheat for the allies at a lower price than the British farmer or the farmer elsewhere in the empire will receive. H. W. Wood, the president of the council—he is also president of the United Farmers of Alberta—defines the position in his own words:

"They have in Australia a very much lower internal freight rate than we have. The price of $1.12 is for fair average quality, which would probably net the Australian farmer more for his crop on his farm than the price which Sir George Foster would pay to the Canadian farmer. Take again the price guaranteed to the British wheat raiser, which is about $1.82 a bushel. In recent quotations I have seen from Liverpool, No. 1 northern was quoted at 32c a bushel higher than the British wheat. Add this to the 12c difference between $1.70 and $1.82, and it will be seen that the British farmer is getting 42c a bushel more than we asked.

"The price suggested, if present conditions continue, will be fixing the price of the average of the different grades of Canadian wheat at a figure no better than the price of feed. It is impossible for me, and I think I can speak for the entire council, to understand how anyone expects to encourage the production of wheat by putting a feed price upon it."

The Wheat Producer's Dilemma.

During the past two years, incidentally, the Canadian government has been conducting a big advertising campaign in order to induce the western farmer to grow more wheat—to seed it on the stubble, if necessary, so long as the area of production was enlarged.

To grow more wheat is, of course, an injunction that is economically unsound and unjust and menaces the future of sane agriculture by diverting the producer's energies from the surer path of mixed farming. The injunction is also obscure, because it contains no guaranty of prices.

Practically alone of all prime producers the farmer cannot base the price at which he sells upon what it costs him to produce; he must accept the price dictated by the visible supply. The farmer is about the only man who, the harder he works, gets less in ratio; it might almost be said that every bushel of wheat he produces in excess of sheer famine requirements tends to reduce the income of the whole community of wheat raisers.

The council of agriculture, however, had an interesting counter proposal. The growers were willing to accept the $1.30 price provided the Canadian government fixed the price of some other things.

The western Canadian farmer is, I imagine, a unique individual because he is so utterly radical. Drawn by immigration from practically every country in the world, fraternizing with neighbors of different nationalities, creeds, politics, habits and prejudices, he has gradually involved an attitude toward political institutions that could scarcely be reproduced elsewhere. It has been mentioned that the president of the council is an American; there are two others with him out of twenty-seven, the remainder being more or less evenly balanced between British and native-born Canadians.

The collective spirit of the 75,000 members they represent could be termed as peaceable anarchism—lawabiding fanaticism. The resolutions they pass unanimously at their annual conventions, the political platforms they adopt, make what a mere urban reformer would regard as Utopia while he yaps at the heels of the most minor abuses. Here is a sample—the platform endorsed by the United Farmers of Alberta at their 1917 convention at Edmonton: Wholesale reductions in the imperial tariff, reciprocity with the United States, direct taxation of unimproved land values, income tax, proportional representation, nationalization of railway, telegraph and express business!

In the days of his sudden power the western Canadian farmer as suddenly remembers all these resolutions, to which, in post-convention days, no one in authority paid any attention at all. Looming in the forefront is protection. There must be something peculiar in the atmosphere of rural Canada that it produces so many ardent free traders; but it does.

When the western farmer finds himself a political factor, as he does at present after so many lean years of yearning, he remembers protection first of all and all the time. There is a heavy tariff on farm machinery, for instance. Hence the Canadian council of agriculture's counter proposal, which it probably never expected to be taken seriously, seeing that Canadian politics are still numerically dominated by the eastern manufacturers heavily interested in protected industries.

Naturally enough, the Canadian government could not be expected to let the 1.70 answer stand. Sir George Foster has denied Mr. Wood's statements in toto; but the controversy seems to have lost its edge, and can be ignored, together with the considerations of patriotism implied, in favor of the circumstances that gave it birth.

The farmers' movement in western Canada, of which the council of agriculture is the mouthpiece, is one of the most interesting that has arisen on this continent during the past decade. It is also probably the largest and most closely co-ordinated movement of its kind.

With the co-operative marketing organization such as exists in Denmark of California we are all familiar; but this organization is quite different. Originating as a protective organization, with no primary object other than to secure better transportation facilities during the annual "grain blockade," it has grown until its atmosphere is now largely political.

The Saskatchewan Grain Growers' association was the first in the field. Founded in 1901, largely by the instrumentality of W. R. Motherwell, now minister of agriculture for that province, it sprang into being through the inability of the Saskatchewan farmers to obtain cars for shipping grain, and was intended to test the validity of what was then the new Grain act, designed primarily to help the farmers in this very connection, but largely ignored by irresponsible railway officials. Successful at all points, it was followed in 1902 by the Manitoba Grain Growers' association, and in 1906 by the United Farmers of Alberta.

"They have fought," says a recent Canadian writer, "transportation companies and financial institutions—they have flourished and grown strong and formidable on such stern diet."

The movement is almost entirely confined to the west. In only one other province, if we except the scattered and quite isolated fruit growers' organizations of the Pacific Coast provinces of British Columbia, is there to be found anything similar. In Ontario there has just been launched the United Farmers of Ontario. Each association is separately recognized and is restricted in its activities to the porvince from which it takes its name; but the need for co-ordination—and, it may be, for a more imposing front—has recently developed the Canadian council of agriculture. This latter is an affiliation of the chief executives

HON. SIR JAMES LOUGHEED SENDS CONGRATULATIONS ON RECENT CONSOLIDATION OF GRAIN COMPANIES

Ottawa, Ont., August 27, 1917.

Editor, Western Standard:

I share in the sentiments which finds such strong expression throughout the Province of Alberta that the United Grain Growers are in the forefront of the great national movement which has for its object the development of our natural resources and particularly that of increased agricultural production. I extend my congratulations upon the extraordinary progress and success which has marked the great undertaking they have assumed. May the prosperity which has been associated with their work be felt throughout the entire province.

JAMES A. LOUGHEED.

Apple Crop Report

The apple crop seems to be rather short this year all over Canada except in a few parts of British Columbia. The following is a general summary at different points.

Annapolis Valley, N.S.—Early estimates of damage by wind probably too low. General opinion that over 20 per cent. of the crop was destroyed. Digby and Yarmouth countries report 75 per cent. of the crop on the ground.

Oshawa—Fruit crop one-third less than last year. Fungus very bad. Bulk of crop will be Ben Davis, Stark and Spy.

Picton—Apple crop not more than 20 per cent. of normal. Scab prevalent. Buyers very active.

Trenton—Apple crop about one-third of normal and quality irregular. Weather conditions good. Pears and plums about a medium crop.

Meaford—Scab developing fast. Early apples very small and ten days late. No barrels shipped yet.

Port Hope—Apple crop 25 per cent. of normal, with no spies. Lots of scab developing and codling moth quite bad. The crop is two weeks late.

Vancouver—Apples dropping fast in this district and not sizing. Crop possibility 75 per cent. Weather extremely dry. Plums, prunes and pears light.

British Columbia (inland).—Apple crop at Walhachin fairly good.

Salmon Arm, Enderby and Armstrong report all fruits light. Okanagan Valley and Keremeos report an increase over last year in irrigated sections. McIntosh particularly good, crabs heavy, pears medium, peaches, plums, prunes, and apricots above medium, tomatoes medium with increased acreage. Grand Forks and Kotenay districts report apple crops 75 per cent. of last year. Weather very hot and dry. Present indications point to ready sale and good prices.

United Grain Growers Combine Goes In Effect

On September 1st the Alberta Farmers' Co-operative Elevator Co. and the Grain Growers' Grain Co. Will Appear as One Company Under the Name United Grain Growers, Limited—Mr. C. Rice Jones, of Calgary, Is First Vice-president.

The amalgamation of the Alberta Farmers' Co-operative Elevator Co. with the Grain Growers' Grain Co., under the name of United Grain Growers, Limited, has been quite a discussed topic of the day as it reveals to the public the value of co-operation even where large concerns are involved. The following shows the old and new boards:

Old Board

President—C. Rice Jones.
Vice-president—C. F. Brown.
Secretary-treasurer—E. J. Fream.
Directors—J. J. McLellan, P. S. Austin, Rice Sheppard, R. A. Parker, E. Carswell, H. C. Wingate.

New Board

President—T. A. Crerar.
First vice-president—C. Rice Jones.
Second vice-president—John Kennedy.
Secretary—E. J. Fream.
Executive—Manitoba, T. A. Crerar, John Kennedy; Saskatchewan, J. Reid; Alberta, C. Rice Jones (Calgary), R. A. Parker (Bow Island).
Executive agent—C. F. Brown.

By discussing the value of co-operation we can find no better way of explaining than to quote the progress and development of the Alberta Farmers' Co-operative Elevator Co.

That the farmers of Alberta appreciate the services of the Alberta Farmers' Co-operative Elevator Co is shown by the support which they have given to the company in the past. It is through the supply department that the farmers are enabled to purchase supplies on the best possible terms. This department was started in a small way in 1913-14. It grew rapidly. The following year, 1914-15, the business transacted was 400 per cent. greater than during the first year. In all $400,000 worth of goods were handled, not including binder twine. This represented a total of 705 cars. Last year, 1915-16, there were 998 carloads of goods shipped. This included 133 carloads of binder twine, 160 cars of flour and feed, 204 cars of posts and 372 cars of coal. During the first ten months of this year we have handled 1,825 cars of goods, worth $858,488.

It used to be hard for the farmers to dispose of their livestock profitably, but when they co-operated with the Co-operative Elevator Co. by giving their support, they got the best of prices. In 1913-14 the company opened the livestock department and handled up to June 30, 1914, 141 cars of stock, or about 11,000 hogs and six cars of sheep. During 1914-15, farmers sent in 344 cars of livestock, including 27,529 hogs, 897 cattle and 91 sheep. Between August 1, 1915, and August 31, 1916, there were sold 628 cars, representing 36,224 hogs, 3,545 cattle and 659 sheep. In ten months this year, there have been handled 1,367 cars, or 56,750 hogs, 10,709 cattle and 2,260 sheep which were sold for $2,092,409. This business represents a large saving in expense to the farmer and a profit to the Alberta Farmers' Co-operative Elevator Co.

Yet all the foregoing schemes have been side issues, as the great business was the handling of grain, in which line they have laid the foundations for the big co-operative development. The first year, when they started, 1913, they had 52 elevators; in 1914 the number grew to 79; in 1915 to 87 and in 1916 to 103. This year they are to have 143. In 1913-14 the farmers shipped through the Alberta Farmers' Co-operative Elevator Co., 4,119,813 bushels of grain, in 1914-15, 5,149,092 bushels, and last year, 19,123,486. Year by year as the farmers realize the value of co-operative shipping this company rapidly comes forward.

The aims of the company has always been to give the farmer-shareholder and patrons better service, and at less expense than they could obtain elsewhere. Through their loyal support and co-operation the company has succeeded. This is shown by the growth of the business. In 1913, when the company was organized, there were 3,500 shareholders. Today there are 15,640. In 1913 the subscribed capital stock was $360,000. Today it is $1,315,500. In 1913 the paid-up capital stock was $72,000. Now it is $552,179. Three years ago the assets were $953,849. On July 31, 1917, they were $2,580,000. But better than this: the Alberta farmers have been given better service for less money. In 1915 the net profits of the company were $36,229. Last year they were $282,484. Thus it can be seen that by co-operating the farmer gets a better deal and the company itself gets a substantial share of the profits.

One of the officers of the company states:

"The great co-operative movement among the farmers of Canada is only in its infancy. It has not more than started. As we progress we discover many new lines along which we should advance as opportunity permits. Our success, so far, has been largely due to the fact that we have not hesitated to pay liberal salaries in order that we might secure and retain the services in our business of men of marked ability. The progress made so far has but laid the foundation for future enterprices, the size and scope of which none can estimate or foresee. Thus we hope the day is at hand when farmers' sons will no longer leave the farms of Canada to make names for themselves in business in our great cities, but, instead, will identify themselves with our own great undertakings, and thereby assist in making farmers the most prosperous, contented, progressive class of citizens in Canada. In the accomplishment of this ideal we ask only for your co-operation."

SUMMER FALLOWING

"If I had a hundred acre farm I'd never summer fallow any of it," said a good and successful farmer who only operates 50 acres, and who never does summer fallow any of it.

"It always seems to me a waste of good land, a waste of fertility, and a waste of a crop. I rely on a hoe crop to clean my land, and on manure and commercial fertilizer to supply the plant food, and I'm building my farm up so that I get bigger crops, without the summer fallowing."

Many farmers—good farmers too—will disagree with him. An expression of opinion, and an exchange of ideas on this point would be of interest, and value.

HON. CHAS. MITCHELL EXTOLS ON THE MERITS OF THE UNITED GRAIN GROWERS, LTD.'S GREAT FUTURE

On September 1st, next, the amalgamation of the Alberta Farmers' Co-operative Elevator Company with the Grain Growers' Grain Company, Limited, under the name of the "United Grain Growers, Limited," will be complete, and in this connection it might not be out of place to give a brief review of the history of the Alberta institution which has done so much to improve the grain marketing conditions for the farmers of this province, and at the same time to express the hope that the new and greater organization which is about to start upon its career of serving the farmers of Alberta and Manitoba will meet with the undoubted success which it is the desire and expectation of the two provinces shall be the case.

The Alberta Company was organized by statute of the province in March, 1913, provision being made for the first time in the history of the province whereby the credit of the province was specifically pledged for the purpose of enabling the farmers to co-operate in the matter of obtaining better grain marketing facilities.

During the last four years the Company has progressed by leaps and bounds, and now has to its credit the establishment of some one hundred and fifty splendid elevators at as many shipping centers in the province. The consequent competition thereby afforded the farmers, as well as the providing of elevator facilities at points theretofore without such have been the means of adding materially to the price of the farmers' product, and in many other respects has been an advantage to him. Contemporaneously with the tremendous growth of the local institution it became aparent that further extensions would be necessary involving direct communications at the head of the lakes and other eastern points. This opportunity presented itself when the Manitoba Company offered to join hands with the Alberta Company, and by the amalgamation which will shortly be in effect there will be created an organization of its kind second to none in Western Canada, from the standpoint of service to the farmers and financial ability to successfully carry out its undertakings. The Alberta Company has proven a decided success and much of the credit is due to the splendid service given by its president and the present board of directors. It is not too much, I think, to hope that the same measure of success which has been manifest from the beginning will continue under the new conditions. The Manitoba Company has won a splendid reputation for efficiency and there appears to be no reason why the united companies should not give to Alberta and Manitoba even better service than in the past.

FOOD CONTROLLER'S ADVICE

Following are suggestions put forth by Hon. W. J. Hanna, Canadian food controller:

1. Use perishable foods. Save garden truck that has been produced so abundantly this summer. Preserve, dry, can and store.

2. Eat more fish.

3. Substitute other cereals for wheat products — cornmeal, buckwheat flour, rice flour, and above all oatmeal.

4. Don't throw good food into the garbage can; $50,000,000 is wasted every year in this country by carelessness in the kitchens.

5. Preach once more the good old-fashioned gospel of the clean plate. Do not let children waste food at their meals. Do not waste it yourself.

6. Organize. Various women's organizations are already active. Their leaders will tell you what to do. Get in touch with the workers in your own district.

Money doesn't always lead to happiness, but it helps materially in the search.

FARMING AND LIVESTOCK

POULTRY DISEASES RESPONSIBLE FOR BIG NATIONAL LOSS

At least fifty per cent. of the chickens, young ducks and turkeys and ten per cent. of the adult birds die each year from diseases, many of which are preventable. This is an annual national loss of probably millions of dollars that could be avoided to a large extent.

War conditions make it imperative that farmers and poultrymen, as far as possible, stop this enormous leak and in order to assist in this connection Dr. Wickware suggests that every breeder pay strict attention to the general conditions of his flock in order that any ailing birds may be immediately isolated. When anything unusual is noted in a fowl, it is advisable to place the affected individual in separate quarters. If within a short time recovery does not take place, it is unwise to destroy the fowl without first ascertaining the cause of the disorder. The prevalence of diseases is more often the cause of the poultrykeeper's failure than is the lack of practical knowledge. The extreme importance of keeping the quarters clean; isolation of all ailing fowls and immediate action in regard to finding out the cause cannot be too strongly impressed upon the poultryman.

When trouble occurs, forward to the Biological Laboratory, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, Ont., a live but sick fowl, or in the absence of such, a dead bird. In the interval, disinfect the quarters, runs, drinking fountains and feed dishes to check the spread of any infectious disease.

Disinfect the poultry houses by spraying the interior with a limewash solution (50 lbs. stone lime slaked in a barrel of water plus one gallon of a good commercial disinfectant). Fill cracks and crevices to destroy mites, lice, etc. If a smaller amount is required it may be prepared by adding two and a half pounds of lime to a pail of water plus half a teacupful of disinfectant.

The Yards.

Keep a crop growing in some part of the yards and alternate poultry and crops. If the runs are small cover with a coating of air-slacked lime and dig up. If the runs are too large to dig, plough and cultivate before sowing. Rape sown in the early part of the summer, after the breeding season, or early in September, makes a good crop for this purpose. Rear all chicks on fresh soil.

Although these precautions may appear unnecessary it is the only way of combatting many disease conditions affecting the poultry, which, if left to themselves will undoubtedly prove decidedly costly in the long run.

DISEASE CAUSING GREAT DESTRUCTION AMONG DAIRY HERDS

Abortions among dairy cows are due either to an accident or to a germ. The amount of loss due to the former cause is slight, while abortion due to the germ, that is, infectious abortion within the last few years, has resulted in one of the most serious losses suffered by the dairymen. It is a great misfortune to the dairyman that, while this trouble is prevalent and increasing in all parts of the country where cows are kept, as yet no effective treatment has been developed, and the control of the disease is greatly hampered by lack of knowledge of just how the disease is most often spread.

The disease is characterized by the dropping of the calf prematurely, due to an infectious catarrh of the womb caused by the abortion germ.

Abortion may take place any time from the third month to within a few days of completion of the term; most commonly during the fourth or fifth month of pregnancy. Sometimes the fetus is retained in the uterus and becomes mummified. That is, the dead fetus dries up in the membrane surrounding it, and may be carried for months beyond the normal period. Cows which have aborted once develop enough immunity to the disease to carry the calf longer the second year than the first, and the third year they will generally complete the term and give birth to healthy calves and show no ill effects of the disease. Still such cows are not as good as sound animals since they may still carry the germ and can infect other cattle.

Detection of Infected Animals.

Cows infected for the first time often carry the calf but three months and the expelled fetus may easily be removed, with the manure and bedding, unnoticed. However, when the fetus is carried the greater part of the term a yellowish discharge usually occurs. Also, all the signs of calving will begin to develop prematurely. After the abortion, a yellowish discharge may continue for several weeks. Retention of the after-birth usually accompanies an abortion where the fetus has been carried from seven to nearly nine months. It is considered that the very unhealthy condition which necessarily accompanies retention of the after-birth often results in sterility. In purchasing animals the best means of getting information as to their infection with the abortion germ is to have the blood of the cow tested. This method of detecting the disease has not become commonly used by dairymen, as no wide campaign for controlling the disease has been started.

Spread of the Disease.

It is quite generally accepted that the modes of spread of the disease are by the bull, by the vaginal discharge, and by the milk. The occurence of abortion in cows having been served by the same bull has repeated itself so often that this mode of transmission has been assumed. That the characteristic yellowish discharge from aborting cows will cause the disease, has been definitely proven.

Control of Abortion.

Not enough is known about the spread of abortion at present to satisfactorily control it. There is no cure for the disease known Many who wish to sell a remedy have taken advantage of the fact that a cow will develop an immunity in from one to three years, and thus cure herself; the remedy getting credit for the cure, where this fact is not understood. The best recommendations for the control of the disease seem to be:

1. Isolate infected cows and bring up their calves on the milk of the cows known to be uninfected.

2. Disinfect the navel of the newborn calf from an infected mother.

3. Burn or bury in lime the fetus and afterbirth and disinfect stable and all litter after an abortion.

4. Wash thoroughly the hind quarters of an aborting cow and irrigate the vaginal tract with a good antiseptic daily until all signs of discharge have passed.

5. Disinfect the bull before and after every service.

6. Add new animals to a sound herd of calves only.

7. Keep clean animals and clean stalls.—P. W. Allen, University of Illinois.

WHO'S WHO IN FARMING

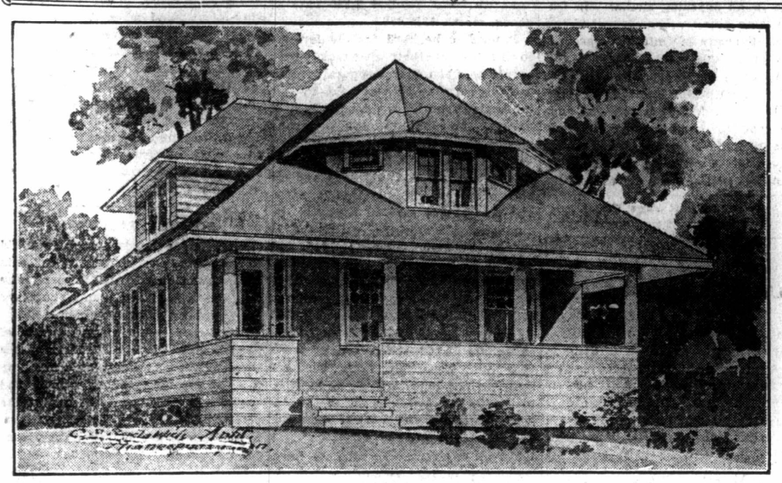
ALBERTA'S AGRICULTURAL SCHOOLS ARE MONUMENTS TO DUNCAN MARSHALL

Western Canada is the bread basket of the empire. The price of grain together with the easy and quick way of raising a grain crop induced a large proportion of farmers growing grain almost exclusively, not only to their own loss but also to the destruction of their farms. The younger generation of farmers are recognizing the necessity of doing mixed farming and including live stock in the farm business.

The one man in Alberta who has done most to encourage this same system of farming is Hon. Duncan Marshall, minister of agriculture, in the Alberta government. Duncan Marshall in addition to being a journalist and busy public man is a practical farmer, and finds considerable time to devote farming pursuits. He has a great liking for the farm, and not only puts up-to-date methods into his own farming operations on a large farm at Olds, but he also works his ideas into the policy of the department over which he has control.

Upon his appointment as minister of agricultural for Alberta, more than seven years ago, Hon Mr. Marshall proceeded to work out a scheme for the improvement of farming conditions in the province of Alberta. His idea was to educate the boy to stay on the farm rather than to leave it. With this end in view Mr. Marshall established three agricultural schools, situated in different parts of this province. He figured that these three schools, situated in small places, would bring the educational advantages in agriculture nearer to the farmers than one large city or town where cost of living and so on would be higher to the student.

The three schools are located at Vermilion in the north, Olds in the centre and Claresholm in the southern part of the province. At these schools the young men are taught all branches useful to make a successful farmer, including animal husbandry, horticulture, blacksmithing and carpenter work, veterinary science, dairying, poultry raising, farm management and engineering, together with a good course of English, mathematics and bookkeeping. A two year's course is given in the schools and the student, if he wishes to go higher, can take an advanced course in the department of agriculture in connection with the University of Alberta at Edmonton. Girls from farms may also take a course in the household science. These schools have only been in operation about three years, and the students are rapidly increasing in numbers from year to year. Each school has connected with it a demonstration farm where students may work out the various problems that crop up.

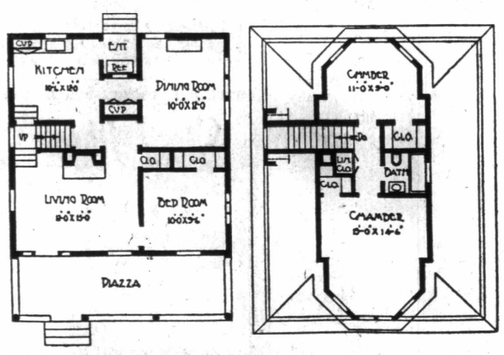


In addition to these schools and the demonstration farms connected with them. Other demonstrations farms are in co-operation at Athabasca, Stoney Plain, Medicine Hat, and Sedgewick. Many of the schools contain purebred herds and lessons in stock raising are given in a practical manner.

Hon. Mr. Marshall has gathered about him a faculty consisting of the best instructors in the different lines of agriculture.

It is not going too far to say that no province in the Dominion has a better system of agriculture instruction or one better adopted to the needs of the people of Alberta.

This shows what a live, progressive young man can do when he sets to work with a will. Hon. Mr. Marshall should be proud of the work which he has founded in Alberta. It will be a monument to his energy and ability as well as of great benefit to present agriculture generations.



CANADIAN HOMES OF CHARACTER

THE small cottage shown is 27 ft. in width and 34 ft. in depth including a wide piazza across the front. The eaves have a wide overhang, giving a low "cottage" appearance. There are four good rooms in the first story and two bed rooms and bath room in the second story. The outside studding is 12 ft. in height, the first story is 9 ft. The rooms on the second floor are 8 ft., located in center of roof and lighted by wide dormers. The rooms are moderate in size but very conveniently arranged.

There is one central chimney with a fireplace in the living room and large flue for heater and kitchen. There is a bed room on the first floor that may be used for a library or den. There is a full basement with laundry and furnace room.

The finish of the first story rooms is of Washington fir in mission stain, the second story is pine finish and painted white. Floors throughout of birch, natural, except in kitchen which has linoleum. The estimated cost is $2,500 to $3,000, exclusive of heating and plumbing. The general construction is good, of No. 2 pine and sheathed, papered and sided on the outside with wide "Colonial" siding. The roof is shingled and stained with creosote and all the outside painted white.

of the three western associations, the Ontario organization, and the three great farmers' trading companies.

And now a word may be permitted regarding the last. They constitute one of the most successful examples to be found in North America of the benefits of co-operation. Their extraordinary rapid growth, both in volume of business and for the benefit of those whom they serve, explains largely the growth of the whole grain growers' movement.

In 1906, its first year, the one company handled less than three per cent. of the total volume of grain exported from western Canada. In 1916 the three companies handled about twenty-four per cent. They now have altogether a subscribed capital of more than $4,500,000, with $2,500,000 paid up, and operate between 500 and 600 country and terminal elevators. Two of the companies paid last year to their farmer shareholders an eight per cent. dividend; the other paid ten per cent.

The first company, the Grain Growers' Grain company, whose head office is at Winnipeg, Man., but whose ramifications are everywhere, at first simply handled grain on commission. In the succeeding ten years it has entered into practically every branch of the grain business, including the export end, with a subsidiary in New York.

In 1912 it leased the country elevator system inaugurated by the government of Manitoba, which until then had been hovering on the verge of failure; it has built, acquired or leased others, including three terminal elevators at Fort William with a storage capacity of more than 2,500,000.

The Saskatchewan Co-operative Elevator company was established in 1911, and the Alberta Co-operative Elevator company in 1913. The governments of the respective provinces gave material assistance by advancing eighty-five per cent. of the money necessary to build the elevators, on a twenty-five year repayment basis; the shareholders put up the rest, and are gradually paying the government out. They organized themselves into "locals" wherever an elevator was wanted; and they kept at it all the time, starting new locals and building new elevators. This year's building program will probably run from seventy to one hundred new elevators.

But the interests of these companies are not confined only to the grain business. They sell livestock for their members. The Alberta company, which is perhaps the most successful along that line, sold nearly $900,000 worth of hogs, cattle and sheep last year. They have entered—I speak with a certain amount of looseness, because hitherto the trading activities of the Saskatchewan co-operator have been exercised through the executive organization and have only recently been transferred to the elevator company—upon a considerable scale into the handling of a large portion of the staple goods necessary for the farmers' requirements.

Report Of Canadian Food Controller's Office

Apples, peaches and tomatoes are promising articles in the Canadian exports this year. The Niagara district is raising an exceptionally large crop this year, and a great number of newcomers have settled in the region to carry on the fruit industry. The war has had the effect of increasing the production in this section and the problem now is to conserve the supply, and save waste.

"Can, preserve, dry and store," advises the Canadian food controller.

A food conservation exhibit in the government building of the Canadian National fair will be held this year.

"Buy intelligently; learn how much food value is secured for money spent. Plan meals ahead and avoid constant small orders. Take an inventory of your garbage can. If it reveals unnecessary waste, plan to avoid this in future."

These rules are those of the women's war-time thrift committee of Ontario.

"The price of bread has been too high," says the Canadian food controller, "particularly in some sections. Whatever is necessary will be done—we hope agreeably to all concerned. But it must be done."

"My idea of economy in feeding is to make a little of the usual meat foods go further by preparing them with vegetables and cereals," says a distinguished Scotch dietitian.

It is very advisable in hot weather to make a meal of uncooked foods, for example, cheese, lettuce, brown bread, or hard biscuits; or figs, bananas, nut biscuits, apples, dates, nuts and biscuits.

"Growers and shippers of potatoes should see to it that the crop is carefully graded and sacked," said Mr. Lou D. Sweet, the potato expert of the American food administration.

Though the crop this year is big in both the United States and Canada, owing to the uneven quality of the seed used the crop may also be uneven and therefore should be the more carefully graded to insure a stock that will keep over winter.

Food is being wasted in Canada and it is a plain fact that every pound of bread and bacon that is saved in Canada can be eaten in the war-ravaged countries of Europe. It is no news to you that the people of France and Britain have submitted cheerfully to an unheard-of restriction in their food supplies. The people of Canada stand for the same cause; let us then be determined to help our heroic allies to the finish.

Optimistic views as to Manitoba's crops were set forth lately by the deputy minister of agriculture for Manitoba. There have been reports of black rust, but fortunately there is no indication that it is dangerous.

After the garden project here comes another suggestion of supreme interest: In September, on opening the schools all over the country, the teachers will teach their pupils four things: To conserve wheat, fats, meats and milk, and the reason why. Such suggestion is timely, being uttered by the advisory committee on home economics at Washington.

The statistical reports show that the campaign of the kitchen garden has been extensively carried out in the United States; 222 per cent. more were planted in 1917 than in any previous year; that the area planted amounts to 1,175,000 acres more, and that this garden truck means $350,000,000 worth of foodstuffs.

Fat and trimmings are too often thrown away from meat bones, especially in the case of families who do not like fat meat. But remember many will eat fat meat in the form of dripping and suet in puddings, who refuse it when cut off meat.

The provincial representatives of the food controller are; J. C. Stewart, Nova Scotia; J. A. MacDonald, Prince Edward Island; R. E. Armstrong, New Brunswick; W. S. Weldon, Quebec; George A. Chipman, editor Grain Growers' Guide, Manitoba; Hon. C. W. Brown, Saskatchewan; J. H. Lamb, Union of Municipalities, Alberta, and Charles MacDonald, British Columbia.

Reports from the west do not give encouraging news of this year's wheat crop. Drought has done great damage in southern, Manitoba, southern Saskatchewan, southeastern Alberta. The Goose Lake country of Saskatchewan has also been affected. Canada will have to make up for this shortage by substituting other foods for white wheaten bread.

The women's war fund thrift committee have issued a splendid bulletin entitled "Food Facts"; help win the war by patriotic housekeeping.

Baron Rhondda, food controller of Great Britain, is considering the fixation of the price of a 3½ pound loaf of war bread at 8 cents. This compares with 11 cents for 1½ pound loaves in many Canadian cities. That is, in Britain, bread from Canadian wheat or flour after travelling 3,000 miles at high rates, will sell at 5 cents a pound, while in Canada the price is 7 and 8 cents and often more, and not a submarine in sight. This is a situation which the Canadian food controller is seeking to remedy, and if necessary he will fix prices. But first he must be sure of all his facts. In any event, however, Canadians must eat less bread and substitute other foods, for the whole world is short of bread.

BUREAU FOR SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH

In the supplementary estimates given to the house of commons today provision is made in a vote of $91,600 for a bureau of industrial research. The money will be spent as follows: For salaries and expenses, $43,600; studentships, $12,000; fellowships $5,000; special problems, $25,000; forestry studies, $6,000.

MARKET AND FINANCE

WHEAT MARKETS VERY QUIET LAST WEEK

(Thompson, Sons & Co.)

Wheat—The past week has been probably the quietest week of the year in the wheat markets of the world. From the United Kingdom they tell us that stocks of bread stuffs are increasing, and there is little or no easiness as regards a continuous liberal supply, for the submarine menace although still serious enough, does not seem to be increasing. For some weeks up until today the weather in the United Kingdom and western Europe has been favorable for harvest operations, and although the grain crops are scarcely up to the average in yield, the quality is good and in being harvested in good weather much waste has been avoided. Today a severe storm of wind and rain is reported. France and Italy are less well supplied than the United Kingdom and are paying better prices. Large preparation is being made, especially in England, for increasing the acreage under wheat. The weather over western Canada and the western United States has been generally favorable for the work of the farms at this time of year. There have been some good rains, especially in western Canada, where harvesting has been making good progress. These rains have made very little interruption to harvesting operations, and at the same time they have been very beneficial for the filling out of late fields, and for the swelling out of the root crops and vegetables, and it can truly be said that there is a wonderful improvement in the prospective yield of all farm products, compared to what could be estimated at the end of last month. In the United States, between the Mississippi river and the Rocky mountains, especially in the country south of North Dakota to Texas, a good deal of wheat has been threshed, but the movement from farmers' hands is still slow, as can be seen from the record of receipts at 11 principal primary points. These from July 1 this year to date amount to 24,148,374 bushels, while in the same period last year the quantity totaled 70,499,449 bushels. The quantity moving in the last two months cannot suffice to keep American mills going in a normal way, to say nothing of wheat for export. No doubt the delay in the government's propounding the prices they are going to set for wheat has much to do with the slow movement. At this time of year the visible supply of wheat in the United States usually increases liberally week by week. But not so this year. Last week another decrease took place of 544,000 bushels against an increase of 1,568,000 bushels a year ago, and the total at 4,399,000 bushels is again the lowest on record and compares with 52,566,000 bushels a year ago. The Canadian visible decreased 965,480 bushels on the week against a decrease of 3,016,792 bushels last year, but the total is down to 3,742,203 bushels against 15,684,617 bushels last year. Except for the summer of 1915, it is many years since the combined visible supply of wheat in the United States and Canada was anywhere near being as low as it is at present, and indicates to what an extent the old wheat has been cleaned down. Owing to this scarcity values during the past week have tended upwards, but the prohibition of speculative buying in American and Canadian markets, prevents any upturn such as would have taken place otherwise. Much has been talked of and written about the liability of a serious shortage of breadstuffs, and much is being done, with a view to increasing production especially of wheat. A great deal of propaganda has also been organized and instituted with the view of conserving foodstuffs generally and cutting down waste of food, and these in the aggregate must lead to considerable reduction in the quantities actually required. With the spur of high prices, and should these be accompanied by seasonable and favorable weather conditions, we think we may before long see some cessation in the feverish eagerness, which is over a great part of the world, for regulations regarding trading in various commodities, and the fixing of prices on this, that and the other, for it may turn out that the arbitrary fixing of prices is a greater evil than just letting them fix themselves, according to the law of suply and demand. The prohibition of speculative buying is a wise measure in the endeavor to prevent unreasonably high prices in commodities of universal necessity but the only fair and reasonable way of regulating prices is to fix them for all products and commodities and to fix the price of labor as well, and all that is no doubt too big and complicated a job for even the strenuous and discursive energy of those who have suddenly been given the duty of regulating and controlling the movement and prices of necessary commodities.

In our Winnipeg market there has been no change in conditions during the week, except that a sharp decline has been made in prices of low grades. The receipts from the country are now very small, the old crop is practically cleaned up, and a few cars of new wheat are being rushed along in the hope of being sold on the basis of $2.40 for 1 northern, the price fixed by our grain supervisors for old and new 1 northern up to and including August 31. The price to be fixed from September 1 onward, is not to be announced until the last minute, and up to the present no one seems to know whether the board of supervisors has decided in its own mind what the price is to be. Dr. Magill, the chairman of the board, is at present at Washington consulting with Mr. Hoover, the American food controller, on the subject. Today's prices are: 1 northern, $2.40; 2 northern, $2.38; 3 northern, $2.33½; No. 4, $2.22; No. 5, $1.97; No. 6, $1.71; feed, $1.50. The October future closed at $2.14. The board of supervisors has issued orders that no public market is to be open after August 31 for trading in wheat for future delivery.

Oats—A good demand has been had during the week for oats, both cash and future delivery, at prices moving within a moderate range of fluctuation. Today's prices are: 2 C.W. 62⅞c; 3 C.W. and extra 1 feed 61⅝c; 1 feed 59⅜c; 2 feed 58⅜c. Futures closed, October 62⅝c; December 58⅝c; May 62⅛c.

Barley—There is less demand for barley and cash prices are down 4c to 5c on the week. No. 3, $1.15; No. 4, $1.14; rejected and feed, $1.10. The October future closed at $1.15.

Flax—There has been a strong market in flax. The Duluth board of trade had some weeks ago fixed the highest price of their September and December flax at $3.30, and they took this off again on Thursday last and their price shot up over 40c per bushel. In sympathy our prices advanced also and after erratic fluctuations have closed today at 9c to 14c higher than a week ago. The flax crop in the United States and Canada is this year smaller than even the last two year's small crops. Today's prices are: 1 N.W., $3.49; 2 C.W., $3.40; 3 C.W., $3.30. Futures closed, October, $3.44; November, $3.42; December, $3.28.

WHEAT PRICE FIXED AT $2.20 IN U. S.

Washington.—The price of No. 1 northern spring wheat was fixed at $2.20 a bushel at Chicago for the 1917 crop. The wheat price committee, headed by H. A. Garfield, submitted this price to the president, who has canctioned it.

The labor men fixed the price at $1.84 while the farmers fixed it at $2.50, however the compromise of $2.20 was accepted unanimously.

The price differentials are as follows: No. 1 dark, hard winter, $2.24; hard winter basic, $2.20; red winter basic, $2.20; yellow hard winter, $2.16; soft red winter, $2.18; dark northern spring, $2.24; red spring, $2.18; humpback, $2.10; amber durum, $2.24; durum basic, $2.20; red durum, $2.13; red walla, $2.13; hard wheat basic, $2.20; soft white, $2.18; white club, $2.16; No. 2 of each grade is three cents less; No. 3, six cents less; No. 4, ten cents less.

Relative market bases—Chicago, Galveston, New Orleans, basic; Kansas City and Omaha, five cents less than basic; Duluth and Minneapolis, three cents less; St. Louis, two cents less; New York, ten cents more than basic; Baltimore and Philadelphia, nine cents more; Buffalo, five cents more.

Basic grades are No. 1 hard winter, red winter and northern spring.

WINNIPEG LIVESTOCK

Winnipeg, Aug. 30.—Livestock receipts at the Union stockyards today totaled 2,000 cattle and 593 hogs. Cattle market held steadily. The run of cattle was heavy, with the bulk of the offerings below the quality of yesterday's run. The bulk sold from $7 to $9 for steers, with the tops ranging from $9.10 to $10.50. Butcher cows and heifers sold at steady prices, ranging from $6 to $9.50. Bulls and oxen sold steady; bulls brought $5 to $6.50, while oxen went at $5 to $8. Stockers and feeders steady; one extra choice bunch of 70 head sold at $7.60. Veal calves, sheep and lambs, slow. A great many feeders are going to the abattoirs for light butchers.

Thirty-one cars of cattle went south and seven cars east, also six cars of hogs east.

The hog market was steady at $16, but the market has a weak undertone.

TORONTO LIVESTOCK

Toronto, Aug. 30.—Receipts at the Union stockyards today were 382 cattle, 94 calves, 828 hogs and 913 sheep.

A light run of all kinds of stock and a comparatively sharp trend of business in all sections of the market characterized today's trading at the Union stockyards. Prices were weak in the sheep and lamb sections to firm in the cattle and hog sections.

As during the previous two days, practically no first-class cattle were offered. In the hog pens, howeevr, an extra special fine lot, constituting half a deck, was sold at $17.6c, or 35c above the market price.

The demand is only fair, sufficiently active, however, to take in all the hogs that are offered at this price.

The small meats were practically all sold out in the first two hours of trading, but the run was fairly light. Lamb prices went off about 50c, the best stock offered bringing only $15.

Springers were in special demand. Very few good ones were offered. One sold at $120, but the majority went at prices below the century mark.

AT SOUTH ST. PAUL

South St. Paul, Aug. 30.—Hogs—Receipts, 2,000; 10c to 25c higher. Range, $16.50 to $17.25; bulk, $16.75 to $17.00.

Cattle — Receipts, 4,800; killers steady, lower. Steers, $8.00 to $13.00; cows and heifers, $6.00 to $9.50; veal calves, steady, $5.50 to $4.50; stockers and feeders, steady, $5.00 to $8.50.

Sheep—Receipts, 900. Lambs, 15c higher; sheep steady. Lambs, $8.00 to $16.00; wethers, $7.00 to $10.00; ewes, $5.00 to $9.50.

CHICAGO LIVESTOCK

Chicago, Aug. 30.—Hogs—Receipts, 7,000; top, $18.50. Bulk, $17.15 to $18.35; light, $16.50 to $18.45; mixed, $14.50 to $18.50; heavy, $16.50 to $18.50; rough, $16.50 to $16.75; pigs, $12.00 to $16.25.

Cattle—Receipts, 4,000; steady. Native beef cattle, $8.20 to $16.50; western steers, $7.00 to $14.00; stockers and feeders, $6.00 to $9.25; cows and heifers, $4.65 to $14.15; calves, $12.00 to $16.00.

Sheep—Receipts, 6,000. Wethers, $7.90 to $11.25; ewes, $7.40 to $10.50; lambs, $11.25 to $17.50.

MONTREAL PRODUCE

Montreal, Aug. 30.—The demand for buter was quiet and the market is easy. Cheese firm and fairly active. A fair trade was done in eggs in a wholesale jobbing way.

Cheese—Finest westerns, 21¾c; finest eastern, 21¾c.

Butter—Choicest creamery, 41½c to 42c; seconds, 41c to 41¼c.

Eggs—Fresh, 52c to 53c; selected, 48c; No. 1 stock, 44c; No. 2 stock, 38c to 40c.

Pork—Heavy Canada short mess, barrels, 35 to 45 pieces, 51c to 52c; Canada short cut back, barrels, 45 to 55 pieces, 46c to 48c.

FINANCIAL

NEW YORK STOCKS SLUMP

New York, Aug. 30.—Stocks fell with extreme violence in the course of the short session, professional traders taking advantage of the half-holiday in honor ofthe city troops to renew their selling operations with increased vigor.

The setback ranged from two to five points in numerous shares of importance, and as much as seven to 13 points in the more speculative class, notably Industrial Alcohol and Texas company.

While the decline was at its height the financial district, was agog with reports to the effect that the war boards at Washington had fixed upon very drastic cuts in prices of such products as steel, copper and oil.

Rails were the first to break, Delaware and Hudson's 3¼ point decline to 99¾ establishing a new minimum for that stock, and bringing out many "stop orders" in other issues.

Equipments folowed in the sharp decline in Bethlehem Steel new stock to 105¼, representing an extreme reversal of 3¼ points.

United States Steel was next offered in lots of 1,000 to over 2,000 shares down to 116¼, a gross decline of 3¼, with virtually no recovery.

In some parts of the list short coverings reduced losses by one to four points, but the tone at the close was extremely weak. Sales, 400,000 shares.

Call money developed stronger tendencies, opening at 3½ per cent., but advancing to 4 per cent. before the end of the sesion. Time rates were quotably unchanged, but offerings were less liberal.

The bond market was heavy, some industrial and railway shares making lowest quotations of recent months. Liberty 3½'s moved in the narrow range of 9.92 to 99.96. Total sales, par value, $2,240,00. United States bonds, old isues, were unchanged on call.

Drilling should be resumed at Southern Alberta No. 2 early next week and a few days drilling should finish this well. This stock has been in strong demand during the past week. Record has obtained cable, and drilling will be started at once. Drilling is still delayed at Mount Stephen though we understand some progress is being made of late, but the stock is very weak. Alberta Petroleum Consolidated continues in fair demand with every prospect of a rise in price. Offerings in all stocks continue very light.

SELLING OF CANADIAN SECURITIES ANNOUNCED

Montreal, Aug. 30.—Another sharp decline in the New oYrk market this morning brought in further selling of Canadian securities, the bulk of it centering on the few issues which had been prominent in the recent upturn here. Dominion Iron, which led the advance, continued to lead the decline, with Steel of Canada and Canada Steamship following more slowly and more quietly. Other stocks were quiet and heavy, the one exception in the former respect being Wayagamac, in which the liquidation of a week ago broke out afresh and in somewhat larger volume.

The entire market was entirely under the influence of Wall street. That was clear enough in the decline of the morning, and was doubly clear in the afternon, when New York closed, the local list coming virtually to a standstill with few changes of importance from the closing levels of the morning session.

Dominion iron, which was again the day's leader, broke two points to 62¼ on sales of 1,000 shares in the first session, with lowest price at noon. In the second session business contracted to less than 400 shares, and a further decline of ¼ to 62 was followed by a recovery of that fraction before the close.

30⅛, Detroit at 107, and Ogilvie at 115 were other stocks in the list to show some selling pressure, with declines running from small fractions to two points. A good demand for the third war loan, which was active at 95⅛ to 95¼, was the feature of bonds.

Total business today: 4,634 shares, $78,200 bonds.

Various Forms Of Headache

"It is necessary in order to treat headaches properly to understand the causes which produce the affection," says Dr. J. W. Ray, of Blockton, Ala. Continuing, he says, "Physicians cannot even begin the treatment of a disease without knowing what causes give rise to it, and we must remember that headache is to be treated according to the same rule. We must not only be particular to give a remedy intended to counteract the cause which produces the headache, but we must also give a remedy to relieve the pain until the cause of the trouble has been removed. To answer this purpose anti-kamnia tablets will be found a most convenient and satisfactory remedy. One tablet every one to three hours gives comfort and rest in the most severe cases of headache, neuralgia, and particularly the headaches of women.

"When we have a patient subject to regular attacks of sick headache and when he feels the least sign of an oncoming attack, he should take two A-K Tablets. Obtainable at druggists in any quantity desired."

Synopsis of Canadian Northwest Land Regulations.

THE sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, who was at the commencement of the present war, and has since continued to be, a British subject or a subject of an allied or neutral country, may homestead a quarter-section of available Dominion Land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for District. Entry by proxy may be made on certain conditions. Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of land in each three years.

In certain districts a homesteader may secure an adjoining quarter-section pre-emption. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Reside six months in each of three years after earning homestead patent and cultivate 50 acres extra. May obtain pre-emption patent as soon as homestead patent on certain conditions.

A settler after obtaining homestead patent, if he cannot secure a pre-emption, may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.00.

Holders of entries may count time employment as farm laborers in Canada during 1917, as residence duties under certain conditions.

When Dominion Lands are advertised or posted for entry, returned soldiers who have served overseas and have been honorably discharged, receive one day priority in applying for entry at local Agent's Office (but not Sub-Agency). Discharge papers must be presented to Agent.

W. W. CORY, Deputy Minister of the Interior.

N.B.—Unauthorized publication of this advertisement will not be paid for.

SHOE SOLE INVENTION IS ECONOMICAL

The old leather sole is now practically impossible to buy. The army is using almost 90 per cent. of the best oak tanned leather manufactured. The result is that the best shoe repairmen, rather than use an inferior grade of leather have turned to the composition sole.

This sole costs them more money than the inferior leather but the repairmen who value their future reputation would rather take the quick dime now in profit than get a quarter and have the customer dissatisfied.

Mr. Clark, owner of the Boston Shoe Hospital, makes the statement that the Neolin sole he is recommending, put on by his new special sewing machine, will outwear any six leather soles ever put on a pair of shoes.

Some people today grumble about this, that and if nothing else the weather. Have they ever thought what really wonderful things have been invented for our pleasure and use? Mr. Clark took a Standard representative through his big plant, explaining the many little machines that go to make up a perfected repair job. He was just as much interested in every little step each sole is compelled to take as if he were making some mighty machine. That is why he has built up one of the largest shoe repair businesses in Calgary.

FORD MOTOR TRACTOR ON THE JOB

At the Central experimental farm at Ottawa there was lately given an exhibition of a Fort motor car converted by the addition of an attachment into a light farm tractor. After operating on the light soil of the orchard a demonstration was arranged to test the capacity of this converted motor car. The ground selected by the director, Mr. J. Grisdale, was a piece of stiff clay that had been used as a run for hogs. Three-quarters of an acre of this land was plowed, the converted motor car drawing a two 12-inch bottom gang plow, cutting to a depth averaging 7½ inches. The time taken was one hour.

CHAMPION WINS THE SERIES BY DEFEATING VULCAN TEAM TWICE

The Champion Nine, Led by Earl Lewis, Win 6 to 4 in the First Game and 7 to 2 in the Second —$1,000 Piloted Away by the Champions.

Champion turned the tables on the Vulcan team Tuesday when they won the first game of the series, the score being 6 to 4. Siler, for Champion, hurled great ball, but really won his game by knocking a home run out over the fence on the roof of the railway barns. Webb was in fine shape but his supporters were lacking in vim at times.

In the second game of the series on Wednesday, the 1,800 fans were surprised to see the Champion team finish again in the lead. The winning team showed in the last game that there was no fluke in Tuesday's win, by trimming Vulcan to the tune of 7 to 2.

Following is the box score which tells the tale:

FIRST GAME

WILLARD'S FIGHT FOR HIS FREEDOM

NEW YORK—Supreme Court Justice Rendrick reserved decision yesterday upon the application of Jack Curley and Tom Jones for an injunction to restrain Jess Willard, heavyweight champion pugilist, from "appearing" anywhere except under the management of Jones.

Willard's attorney explained that all he did was "to come out and show himself to the public" in his own show.

"That's all he did under this contract, as nearly as I understand it," remarked the judge.

Attorneys for the plaintiffs declared Willard is seeking freedom from a contract under which he has taken in approximately $300,000 by alleging it is illegal in this state because it deals with pugilistic exhibitions.

"LICORICE BALL" PENALTY

Chicago.—Pitchers in the American league found guilty of using the "licorice ball" or otherwise discoloring it will be automatically suspended for five days, President Johnson said recently. Warning was issued to umpires and managers to enforce the rule against discoloration of the ball.

KID LEWIS BEATEN

Chicago.—Mike O'Dowd, of St. Paul, was given a decision over Ted (Kid) Lewis, world's welterweight champion, in a 12-round bout at Boston, on Wednesday night, by those at the ringside.

MIKE GIBBONS MEETS HOWARD

Duluth.—Mike Gibbons, St. Paul, and Jimmy Howard, Philadelphia middleweight, will meet here in a 10-round, no-decision boxing match, September 14, according to Curley Ulrich, St. Paul boxing referee.

JOHN McGRAW FINED $1,000

New York.—John J. McGraw, manager of the New York National baseball team, was fined $1,00 and censured by the board of directors of the league here today, for authorizing an interview with newspapermen in Pitsburg, attacking President Tener, of the National league.

Sports At Banff On Labor Day

It will no doubt interest the citizens of Calgary that a fine program of sports will be held at Banff on Labor day. A fine line-up of military sports will be the main feature and will be worth seeing.

The program will open on Labor day with a mounted police drill. Tent pegging, sectional and individual, will follow. The usual sprints and jumps will be staged and other minor amusements, such as bucket tilting and ring and peg will be offered.

Other events include: Victoria Cross race, boot and saddle race, relay race, sack race, obstacle race, wheelbarrow race and tug-of-war. The women of Banff will have a busy weekend and will participate in a golf tourney, tag day, rummage sale, tea, and a Red Cross dance.

Barney W. Collison, the magistrate, said Wednesday, he had not heard whether the boxing bout between two local welters would be pulled off. In passing it might be well to say that in event the promoters expect to stage a bout, it would be well to make arrangements with the said magistrate, who, unless there is a thorough understanding of the conditions, might stop the proceedings before they get started.

An excursion will leave here on Monday. The parade in Banff will start at 10:30. The afternoon will be taken up with sports. At night there will be a masquerade ball and drawing for an automobile.

THE LIGHT JUST WHERE YOU WANT IT

New Dirigible lights Are So Adjusted That They Light the Road Ahead of you—Large Shipment Coming In This Week.

Now that all arrangements have been completed for the manufacture of the dirigible headlights, the company which comprises Messrs. Waring and McLean, are going to give the people a device which will not only be useful but also pleasureable. They expect the first shipment to come in some time this week or early next.

On account of labor troubles the device has to be made out of town by the Messrs. Litson and Burpee Co., of Vancouver, which company had to instal new machinery in their factory in order to be able to turn the orders out fast enough. According to Mr. Waring's statement, the manufacturers are going to turn out five hundred each day, at which rate the orders will possibly be supplied by the new year. There are four first class salesmen in Alberta taking orders rapidly, while Saskatchewan and British Columbia have as many also. Already there are sereval thousand orders waiting to be filled.

This new firm which now has branches established at Vancouver and Regina, will be one of the best business assets for the city. It will be a progressive concern, also popular, as is already proven by the patronage which they are receiving from the public.

The device is made of steel and brass with interchangeable parts and adjustable bearings. Mechanically speaking, it is perfect, and can be attached to a car in a few minutes without cutting or drilling new holes.

Aside from the fact that it is a safety first to all concerned, it is a pleasure and a delight to drive a car equipped with this system. The light shines just where it is wanted, as the lamps turn at the same time as the steering wheel.

WORLD'S CHAMPION TRAPSHOOTER

Chicago.—Mark Arie, of Thomasboro, Illinois, champion of Illinois, won the national amateur trap shooting championship in the Grand American handicap tournament recently after three shoot-offs, breaking 75 targets in a row.

Clarence B. Platt, of Bridgeton, N.J., won the national amateur championship in doubles by smashing 96 of 50 pairs of targets, equalling the world's record for the event.

Things An Autoist Should Know

THE DIRIGIBLE HEADLIGHT FOR AUTOMOBILES

For years the motor-driving public have been aware of the inefficiency of the stationary headlight when turning corners or rounding curves, the danger points of all highways and trails. With the stationary headlight, a driver turning a corner can only wonder whether or not their are obstacles in the road around the turn, as he cannot see the road owing to the fact that the light is shooting away off across the field, leaving the driver and other occupants of the car liable to dangerous accidents. Now the problem is solved and we can enjoy night driving with as comparative safety as we do in the daytime. The Dirigible Headlight device, when attached to a car, connects the regular headlights to the steering gear underneath the car, causing them to turn automatically as the wheels are steered. Consequently, the light is always thrown in the same direction in which the front wheels point. The device not only eliminates all danger at the corners and curves, but it also throws the glare of your lights away from other drivers making it a safety first device under all conditions. The device is strong and durable, and has no complicated parts to get out of order. It can be attached to a car in a very short time by anyone, and the retail price is fifteen dollars places it within the reach of all.

PARIS WILL BE THE BOXING CENTER IN NEXT FEW YEARS

"When the war is over and things have settled down to something like normal, Paris will be the greatest boxing center the world has ever known." This is the prediction made by Dick Klegin, international pugilistic promoter.

"They appreciate boxing to the fullest in the great French capital. And don't for a moment think that the French republic will not produce some great men, too," he added.

"Carpentier is not the only great fighter they have had. He naturally attracted the most attention because he was a big fellow and had a meteoric career. He came up practically from a featherweight, fighting his way through all the classes as he took on weight.

"Jack Johnson intends to fight again. I saw him in Spain less than two months ago. He is doing well and takes part with great success in the bull fighting in and around Barcelona.

"England always has boasted of its great boxers, but that nation will have to step some to hold its own with the French after the war."

CLEVER WINDOW DISPLAY ATTRACTS ATTENTION

The outstanding feature of school opening week is undoubtedly the model school room, depicted in "The Bay" window. Mr. MacLacklan, the window dresser who built this window, deserves especial praise. Everything is in order, teacher, pupils, even the bad boy, and the teacher's favorite pointer. It recalls to the elderly the days of youth, when that "favorite pointer" was used with great gusto at times by the exasperated tutor. How our fancies could roam!

To the boy and girl of today, interest is intense, the books, etc., required. The expectancy of all that that room intimates brings home to every boy or girl the full responsibility of coming days.

Ever since this window has been prepared, crowds of children have been "inspectors." To read the different thoughts passing through the minds of the children as their little faces express their admiration or amusement would do anyone's heart good.

If Mr. W. MacLacklan could hear all the congratulatory remarks passed he would know that his work was being highly appreciated.

"LESS WORRY" DOES THE WORK

"Less Worry" is a chemical manufactured in Calgary by a local chemist deserving your patronage from a home industry standpoint. It is an engine cleaner and carbon remover. It saves money, gasoline, work, and much worry.

Mr. Holly Peden, the manufacturer, has been given many testimonials by leading chemists in the city and elsewhere, Mr. F. C. Field, says:

"It is the best compound on the market for engine cleaning and carbon removing."

Every auto owner in the city will be anxious to get a bottle of "Less Worry" when they see how easily it can be applied and how much good it does. The following directions give one an idea how to use it:

Remove spark plugs and put in about half of contents of bottle when the engine is luke-warm; then turn the engine over two or three times and put in remainder and let stand five hours or more.

The scarcity of chemicals is the only obstacle which keeps Mr. Peden from turning out a large supply. However, it is hoped that in the near future he will be able to get all the necessary chemicals for "Less Worry" is essential for the auto owners.

AUTOS HAVE A TENDENCY TO KEEP BOYS ON THE FARM

"Have you noticed," asked John Tainsh, general sales manager of the Mitchell Motors company, of Racine, Wis., "that you no longer hear very much about the boys leaving the farm?"

"A few years ago every farmer with a son grown to manhood was at his wit's end to keep the boy on the farm. Young men could not be induced to remain in the country, and farm papers were constantly deploring the 'lure of the city.'

"That the automobile has been responsible for the change there is not the slightest doubt. Many farmers in all sections of the country have admitted so to me.

"But while the country boy has a fondness for automobiles, he is in no sense a 'joy rider.' He is merely putting his automobile to the use common to 90 per cent. of the machines sold and using it in a practical, sensible way.

"Every day of the year the farmer finds good use for his car in his farm work. Should a trip to town be necessary during the day, his automobile will not only transport him to the city and allow him to return to his work in but little time, but he does so without interfering with work on which horses are used. And every one knows that no farmer keeps a surplus of horses these days.

"Were I to enumerate the many uses a farmer finds for an automobile it might surprise the city man. In marketing his produce, placing him in a better position to assist his neighbors with their work, affording his family increased social advantages, permitting the family to come to the city to shop more frequently, and in many other ways the farmer finds an automobile indispensable.

"And the benefits a farmer derives from an automobile directly benefit his city neighbors in many ways.

"There has been a marked increase in the purchase of better class cars by farmers recently, and they are considered shrewd buyers."

EXCLUSIVE GIRLS' SCHOOL; ST. HILDA'S COLLEGE

The environment of this school is enough in itself to attract any young lady to its premises. The campus and recreation grounds afford every opportunity for home life; furthermore, the residents surrounding the college are in every way a credit to the community, consequently girls are not led into any bad ways. Girls, when once initiated, regret to leave.

The school has been perfectly arranged in every detail and affords every chance for advancement that any school can give, for besides teaching the everyday subjects—the three "R.'s—the students are given training in etiquette and other social lines which fits a young lady among her already experienced friends. However, with a staff of six thoroughly experienced teachers the pupils are prepared for the regular matriculation exams. with such thoroughness that many pass with honors.

The musical department, conducted by Mr. W. H. Montgomery, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., is a regular treat for any young lady.

For the little children of the city a kindergarten has been carried on where the little kiddies have a chance to learn music and games.

In short, this college is a place where one gets every training necessary to fit her for the world.

ARE COMING HOME

Miss Marie McDonald, honored at Columbia university, New York city, where she and her mother, Mrs. Agnes McDonald, of the McDonald academy, have taken the summer course. Miss McDonald was requested to create and dance a clog to the university song, which she did at the closing festival. She received such hearty applause that Dr. Williams was forced to address the audience on Miss McDonald's behalf and thank them for their great appreciation of the dance. She also did beautiful posing in "The Sun," a classical dance. Mrs. and Miss McDonald are now attending the Normal course and convention of teachers at the McAlpine hotel. Here again, Prof. Norman, of Montreal, has demonstrated the Scotch dancing at his session for his class. Calgary has in Mrs. and Miss McDonald, teachers who are up to the minute, in every branch of the art. They are expected home about September 8.

BRITAIN'S PART IN THIS WAR IS IMPORTANT

Five million men enrolled in the British Isles, said Premier Lloyd George to a number of editors of important French papers; so Britain is playing a vast part in this war. It is safe to say that at the present time no English industry is working for individual interest except agriculture.

SYNDICATE OF BREEDERS PAY $25,000 FOR PRIZE BULL

The Alberta Purebred Holstein Development Co., of Calgary, a syndicate of Canadian breeders, completed the purchase this week of a $25,000 bull known as Albina Josie King, which is one of the highest-priced champions imported into the Dominion. The bull came from the farm of Aliver Cabana, Erie county, N.Y.

In all the consideration involved $30,000 and included the famous sire and two yearling daughters of Ragapple Korndyke, 8th. The sale is not the largest made by the New York man, as he recently sold an 8-months-old bull for $53,200.

U. L. Appleford, of Airdrie, and N. E. McCutcheon, of Edmonton, made the deal and went south in person to close the transaction. Mr. Appleford has been in the dairy busines for years and believes thoroughly in the possibilities of the Holstein herd.

He is of the opinion that there is not a better bred sire in the world than the new acquisition, Albina Josie King. The fact is that the Holstein herds have been gathering in all the prizes for butter and milk records.

Mr. Appleford asserts that Canada is rapidly forging to the front in the development of Holstein cattle, many fine records being made at the fairs this year in the Dominion. Notwithstanding this, cattle experts assert that Albina Josie King will be the greatest sire imported into the Dominion and that great breeding will now follow.

SEPTEMBER EIGHTH

At the conclusion of our drawing for three suits of boys' clothing on Tuesday, August 14th, we mentioned the fact that a further contest was not far distant.

Any boy attending school, between the ages of 12 and 18, may compete in this competition.

Three suits of clothing will be given away absolutely free as in the last contest. They will be valued at $15.00, $12.00 and $10.00 respectively.

The time given to complete the solution of the problem is from Thursday, August 23, to Friday, September 7th. Write on one side of paper and sign name and address in ink. Address all answers to Boys' Clothing Department, Hudson's Bay Company, Calgary. Out-of-town boys may enter.

To the boys turning in the First Three Correct Answers will be given the prizes. All judging will be Saturday morning at 9 a.m. in the Boys' Clothing Department, September 8th. The judge appointed is Mr. J. Sparrow.

This Is the Problem

A business man of Calgary buys a suit wholesale for $10.00. It costs him to do business (heat, light, rent, etc.) 18%. He desires a net profit (over all expenses) of 10%. At what price will this suit have to be sold in order to net him 10%?

Blouses

Advance styles now on display, including the popular crepe, Georgette, crepe de chine, taffeta and charmeuse. The styles for the season are exceptionally smart, and feature the new shawl collar; flat collar, with reveres, jabots with high collars, also high choker effects. Sleeves with deep, tight fitting cuffs, and tailored finish at arm holes. Some are prettily embroidered with beads in contrasting colors. Others are hand embroidered, and medallions of fillet lace effectively used. Satin stripe Georgette crepe in all the new shades is represented. Flesh, silver, taupe, Java brown, gold, Annapolis blue, navy, rose, maize, plum, white and black. Prices from

MY CANADA

I LOVE my country. There is nothing that she can ask I will not do. I am ready to live or die for her. She is the realization of a dream and the fulfillment of an ideal—this Canada of ours. She is the embodiment of what a country should be—and right or wrong, it is my home, my country—the one I love.

Review of the War For the Past Week

Some Comment on War Matters Here and Abroad---Happenings at the Front

ALLIES HAVE HUNS ON THE RUN

The success that the allies have enjoyed the past week on land and in the air has been very evident. The French have had one successful drive that counts a great deal and another is now contemplated which will bring the French forces within a short distance of Laon. In this last drive the enemy left large quantities of war stores which they were unable to destroy tifgrietihw..125..rcehe..... N troy their flight was so hurridly taken. Since the last offensive movement the French have taken over 12,000 prisoners of which a large number were officers. While the allies have the enemy on th run at this point, sad to rlate the huns are making some progress against the Italians. If the French continue to make gains in the Aisne regions the losses in the Italian quarter will be more than counterbalanced.

DISCONTENT PREVAILS THROUGHOUT GERMANY

Discontent seems to be the word among the workmen of Germany. It is said that labor has declared that they will leave the munition factories if war i scarried into the winter. It seems that in many instances the pangs of hunger are making big inroads into the country. There is an insufficient amount of food and the demonstrations that have been held from time to time by the population is now being joined by the soldiers who have been more or less conspicuous in such gatherings. The reports say that Teuton life in the far west present an awful picture of destitution and hunger among the populace. Things have gone so far that today the Huns are insisting that the interned aliens in Germany shall work in the amunition works, and they are compelled to do this on insufficient food and nourishment. If it was not for the fact that many are helped out through private sources the suffering would probably be unbearable.

GERMANY'S NAVY HAS MUTINIED

If the report is true that was issued by one of the news bureaus in the states in which it says that over 12,000 German sailors had mutinied and refused to work any longer along the lines they were going it means that the inevitable for Germany is slowly taking shape. This story is published on the authority of a former German officer, and reached the United States through a brother socialist who sent the details from Germany. The matan official invsigaioncmfwhrdlmfwmfer was of such a grave nature that an official investigation was held by the Kaiser's official family who endeavored to hush the matter up and was particularly strict to have the story censored before being published in Germany. A social in Germany however, succeeded in sending the story through to a brother in New York, form which source the story was made public.

HUNS MEETING WITH BAD LUCK IN AIR RAIDS

The disastrous results of the last air raid by the Hun's will probably have a distressing effect on f uture raids. English airmen and land gunners are beginning to learn some of the tricks of the trade and the manner in which they meet and overcome the German airplanes and Zeppelins are making the enemy more cautious than heretofore. In the last raid the French brought down 5 Zeppelins which was a serious loss to Germany. The Zeppelins seem to be lost whenever their is a counter-attack on them. The big aircrafts are more or less helpless when quick action is necessary, and the French airmen in their lighter machines find them easy prey to combat with. It is predicted that when the United States with its thousands upon housands of airplanes and lighter machines are finally settled in England and France it will practically settle the air raids for Germany.

PROVEN THAT GERMANY PAID FOR INFLUENCE

Quite a surprise was sprung on the German element in the United States this week when the news was published that the late German minister, Dernberg, was a contributor to the funds of the Staat-Zeitung newspaper in New York, to the tune of $15,000. It is becoming more apparent each week as the news is unearthed that Germany was a big contributor to publicity in the States and paid heavily for the right kind of stories. It has been intimated for the past three years that Germany was paying for publicity but it could not be proven until the United States came into the war and now the stories are being substantiated with real evidence. Money was circulated plentifully to influence the press, there was little doubt, but whether this money ever left the German henchmen is a matter of conjecture. So far it has not been proven that any United States publisher has accepted any money.

WELCOME FALL FAIR OCTOBER 30 AND 31

Farmers, ranchers and others should not fail to remember that Calgary will have a rousing big sale of cows, swine and sheep on October 30 and 31.

Experts from all over the country will attend this mammoth sale and exhibition of livestock. Everyone is welcome. Special rates on all railroads.

Potato Raisers Are Much Disappointed

The local potato growers may be disappointed in getting the high price for their crop in the spring that they are expecting, is the opinion of a prominent local grocer. Word has recently come from England, that owing to a surplus in all Europe of these table necessities, no more will be required this year from Canada or the United States. Contrary to promise of the early year, the potato crop of the old land has outstripped anything of previous years. The British isles alone will have a surplus of 1,000,000 tons it is said.

United States also, has a crop almost twice as large as last year, while Canada's potato crop is said to far exceed last season's. All this will be good news to everyone but the producer. The fact that there is a surplus of anything in the food line in these days of world-famine talk, will be cause for relief for the apprehensive. But the producer will not welcome the news that potatoes are likely to be cheaper, instead of dearer, when spring comes.

NEW POSTAL RATE BETWEEN U. S. AND ENGLAND

Washington.—Great Britain has agreed to a modification of the postal treaty, which fixed a two-cent letter rate from the United States, so as to increase it to three cents for practically all foreign letters now taking the two-cent stamp.

MERCHANTS AND STANDARD CHANGE INSPECTION OFFICES

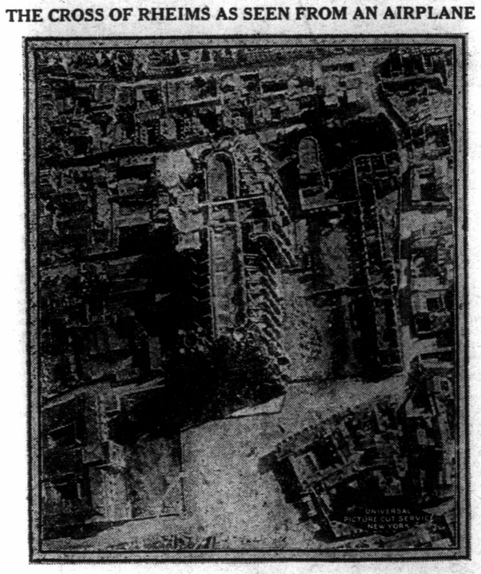
Announcement came this week that the Standard and Merchant banks realizing the great importance of Calgary as a financial centre have removed their inspection offices from Edmonton to this city.

GIANT CARLOAD OF WHEAT

Previous Record Eclipsed

The heaviest car of wheat yet handled so far as there are records, was unloaded by the United Grain Growers, Limited, at Port Arthur, on October 20.

The car, U. P. 121750, was shipped from Red Willow by Mr. Neil McCorkindale, and contained fully 133,200 pounds, or 2,220 bushels. The wheat graded 2 northern and was sold to the Wheat Export company at $2.18, the fixed price for this grade.



When it is considered that 94,000 pounds is the maximum capacity of the big C. P. R. cars, an idea of the immense load is given.

Approximately $5,000 is the value of this shipment, and the car will probably constitute a record for some time.

Victory Loan To Be a Popular Movement

Present indications of the forthcoming Victory loan point to the fact that the loan is going to be the most popular one we have put out. The union government officers are all working tooth and nail to help in the work and the interest displayed by the officers from Calgary show that they mean business at Ottawa. While very little of the real publicity has appeared yet the plans which have come to light indicate that it will be a Dominion-wide campaign the like of which has never been known in this country. Politics are to be forgotten and party affiliation laid aside when the question of the war loan comes to light and woe betide the politician who argues against this popular movement. It is a movement that is thoroughly in accord with the people's views everywhere and there is no question that it will receive generous support from the Liberals as well as the Conservatives everywhere.

THE CROSS OF RHEIMS AS SEEN FROM AN AIRPLANE

Shattered and despoiled by the continuous German bombardment, Rheims cathedral still bears some resemblance to its once magnificent state. Here is an interesting picture taken from an airplane showing the famous cathedral.

SUNDAY U. S. WILL PRAY FOR WAR SUCCESS
LET ALL CANADA JOIN ON THIS AUSPICIOUS OCCASION

President Wilson, in conjunction with Congress, has set aside Sunday, October 28, as a day of prayer for the soldiers at the front. Such an impressive thought is worthy of emulation throughout the world. Let all Canada join in this great movement for our boys who are fighting our cause. President Wilson's proclamation is as follows:

Whereas, the Congress of the United States, by a concurrent resolution adopted on the fourth day of the present month of October in view of the entrance of our nation into the vast and awful war, which now afflicts the greater part of the world, has requested me to set apart by official proclamation, a day upon which our people should be called upon to offer concerted prayer to Almighty God for His divine aid in the successes of our arms; and

Whereas, it behooves a great free people nurtured as we have been in the eternal principles of justice and of right, a nation which has sought from the earliest days of its existence to be obedient to the divine teachings which have inspired it in the exercise of its liberties, to turn always to the Supreme Master and cast themselves in faith at His feet, praying for His aid and succor in every hour of trial, to the end that the great aims to which our fathers dedicated our power as a people may not perish among men, but be always asserted and defended with fresh ardor and devotion and, through the divine blessing, set at last upon enduring foundations for the benefit of all the free peoples of the earth.

Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, gladly responding to the wish expressed by the Congress, do appoint October 28, being the last Sunday of the present month, as a day of supplication and prayer for all the people of the nation, earnestly exhorting all my countrymen to observe the appointed day according to their several faiths, in solemn prayer that God's blessing may rest upon the high task which is laid upon us, to the end that the cause for which we give our lives and treasure may triumph and our efforts be blessed with high achievement.

Comment on Politics Here and There

Edmonton is "Sawing Wood" and the Union Government is Working in Close Harmony

Very few reports are coming from Edmonton about the new provincial officers. The old members of Premier Sifton's official family seem to have transferred their allegiance to the new head without any discord. Those that have any grievances are not airing them publicly so that so far as the ordinary layman is concerned all is serene. The fact that Mr. Cross is reported to be retiring savors of an under current that is not in harmony with the present regime but be that as it may the real facts are not being hurried into print. There is no doubt that the new premier is a very able man and that he will fill the office with credit to himself as well as the province. He is a man of striking personality and with an immense amount of executive ability. During his tenure in office no scandals have been connected with his reign and this, coupled with the fact that he is very popular with the rural population substantiates the prediction that he will have a successful term of office.

PREPARING FOR THE COMING ELECTION

Dispatches from Ottawa say that election before Christmas is most certain. The work preliminary to an election is now going on because the government realizes the immense amount of details that will have to be taken care of. The new machinery must be set in motion to provide for the military and naval polls and for the taking of the women's vote which will be no small matter. The date has practically been set for election day which is said to be Monday, December 17, just a week before Christmas. Thousands upon thousands of ballot boxes are now being made in Canada as well as England. The old country had to be called upon as Canada could not supply sufficient number in the allotted time. Preparing the list of oters is another tremendous task which is giving the officials much worry and trouble owing to the many different kinds and character of the voters that this election will embrace.

LIBERALS TRYING TO PROFIT BY SCANDAL

In the coming election the Liberals will probably make much ado over the war profiteers. Already they are helping to give publicity to the scandal regarding the profits made by the Wm. Davies Co. Flavelle has been raked over the coals and has come into much unfavorable comment owing to the attitude he has taken in this matter. The Liberals are trying to fasten the blame on the Conservatives but somehow this particular scandal has not materially affected the party. Possibly the people realize that whether it was Liberals or Conservatives that were in power such occasions would occur and profiteers would reap the harvest irrespective of party.

PLANS OF THE UNION GOVERNMENT

The new union government has issued a manifesto to the people in which it says that to win the war is the first consideration of the government. The new ministry have outlined a big program on which lines the election will be fought out. Among the principal planks in the platform will be Increased Income Taxation, Reform of Civil Service, Abolition of Patronage, Measures to Reduce Cost of Living, but no mention so far has been made regarding the tariff. Two cabinets will be in evidence at Ottawa. One to look after the war problems and the other to carry out the details of our Canadian difficulties at home. Following several days of careful consideration by the new ministry, the manifesto has been promulgated. Upon the broad lines of policy which it enunciates, the coming election will be fought. Apart from an increased war activity the program is varied and extensive. The civil service is to be reformed and the evil of patronage eliminated; women are to get the vote; there is to be adequate taxing of profits; the immigration and colonization policy is to be accompanied by measures providing land settlement; soldiers are to be cared for and assisted vocationally and aided in settling on the land, and there are to be adequate pensions.

NOW COL. J. S. DENNIS THE CANADIAN ARMY

A much merited appointment has been made by the militia department in Col. J. S. Dennis who is now a full fledge colonel with no strings tied to it. This honor came in appreciation of the services rendered by Col. Dennis in the United States in securing recruits for overseas.

Siam Declaring War Not So Much of a Joke

Notwithstanding the Common Impression This Diminutive Country Will Give a Good Account of Itself—Some Stories of This Far-away Country of the Sun.

The news that Siam had declared war against Germany was taken as a good joke. This little kingdom in southeastern Asia has a population of less than 10,000,000 in her entire territory.

But, although the Siamese are the most charming Asiatics in the world more ready to smile than to smite, account must be taken of the man they call "king" and "lord"—for their owner is the ruler of heir bodies and their souls.

Vajiravudh is not yet forty. He is the only eastern monarch with a western education. One third of his life was spent in England and Europe, and while there he did everything that any other democratis son of a democratic father could or should do. He played football at Rugby, drilled as a common soldier at Sandhurst, took his chances with the dare-devils at Heidleberg, and at Oxford wrested the highest honors away from the brainest Britishers who dared enter the lists against him.

That he has a will of his own the following examples will demonstrate: Siam is a polygamous people. The gentry of the country may have as many wives as they can reasonably support, while the King is entitled to such numbers as his royal will dictates Vajiravudh's father, Chulalongkorn, had between seven and eight hundred members in his household.

When Vajiravudh returned from his long sojourn in Europe his faher suggested that it was high time for him to settle down, and mentioned the names of a number of suitable ladies with whom he might begin his home. But, to the amazement of his father and the court the, young man swept away all precedent, and declared that he would wed whom he chose—"but one wife, and that one the one whom I shall love and cherish as the one woman in the world." So far, Vajiravudh has remained a batchelor.

In Siam the dead are not buried but cremated. The crematory ceremonies of a monarch are full of pomp and majesty. Custom has decreed that he who is to occupy the chair of the departed ruler must light the funeral pyre of his predecessor.

At the cremation of his father, Vajiravudh was noticeably impressed. When the time came for him to light the sacred fire, he hung back as if doubting his power of carrying out the royal order. Finally however, he stepped to the altar, closed the heavy curtains, and remained closeted with the dead. Seconds seemed minutes to the waiting crowd—minutes hours. But suddenly a tiny flame shot up over the top of the catafalque, the curtains were parted, and there appeared before them a new personality.

In that moment of communion with the dead the boy had become the man—the Western collegian had changed to the Eastern ruler.

This is the man who has sent word to the Kaiser that his country is at war with the ruthlessness and disorder this is the ruler who followed up his war message with the immediate "taking over" of all German shipping lying in the harbor, and the immediate arrest of all Germans and Austrians living within the radius of his schrdli living within the radius of the sway of his scepter.

Vajiravudh means business. Siam is at war.

Good-Bye to the Kaiser's $100,000 Throne

Thrones are going into the discard There is one in particular that we have our eyes upon, in the imperia palace at Berlin, and it will be second hand furniture by the time this wa comes to an end.

It is a remarkable chair. Massive; built of costly woods, much carved, i is said to have cost $100,000. Th arms are in part of solid gold, set wit emeralds. Its very high back i adorned with the imperial coat o arms, in gold, and the kaiser, whe he occupies it, sits beneath a canop of cloth of gold, with one foot resting upon a cushioned stool covered with the same material.

One is interested to consider that a throne even more gorgeous was unti recently occupied by another autocra at Petrograd, and that circumstance compelled him to vacate it, so to spea overnight.

This now unoccupied chair of the czar's stands on a dais, approached by several steps, at one end of a vas room lined with costly marbles. I is of gold, ivory and precious wood and glitters with jewels. Four pillars with huge carven bears' paws for feet support a canopy above it. The sea is upholstered with ermine.

It is common talk that as the King of England often expressed it—"He rules but does not govern." Being a king however ht must have a throne

His really-truly throne, however, i in the house of lords. It is of oak adorned with ivory, gold silver and i draped about with priceless tapestry On the back of this chair of state ar the emblematic lion and unicorn, care ed and gilded. The arms of the throne terminate in a pair of lion's heads of gold with open jaws.

Presumably, however, there wil never be a throne to compare with that of the Mogul emperors of Hindustan. The famous "peacock throne at Delhi cost at least $20,000,000—possibly twice that sum. Behind i stood two life size peacocks, enameled with rubies, sapphires, emeralds an other precious stones of colors appro priate to represent the birds in life.

The trone was of solid gold, sur mounted by a canopy upheld by twelve golden pillars. On either side of it was an umbrella (an orienta symbol of sovereignty) of crimson vel vet, embroidered and fringed with pearls. The whole affair was profusely etudded with gems.

But thrones pass away. This one was carried off to Teheran in 1739 by Nadir Shad, the Persian conqueror, after the sack of Delhi, and was eventually broken up.

What are Canada's Victory Bonds?

CANADA'S Victory Bonds are the solemn promise of the Dominion of Canada to the holders that Canada will repay, at the time stipulated in the bonds, their full face value in money, and will pay interest at the rate stated in the bonds, every six months.

As a financial investment Canada's Victory Bonds are in the first rank of the world's investments because:

—the security of the principal and interest is certain as anything human can be, being nothing less than the entire assets of Canada, the pledged honor of the people of Canada and all the assets of all the people of Canada.

—they are the most "liquid" form of investment; they can be promptly turned into cash at any time.

—they bear interest which, if saved and compounded, at ordinary bank interest rates would double the amount of the original investment in about fourteen years.

They are also free from Dominion taxation, present or future.

FOR the investment of estate funds, trust funds, sinking funds and all other funds which by law or other necessity must be invested in unquestioned securities, Canada's Victory Bonds are the premier investment.

Executors, trustees, municipalities and public service corporations and all others with trust or sinking funds to invest, can render to Canada valuable patriotic service by investing their funds in Canada's Victory Bonds.

AND because of the high rate of interest they bear, coupled with their supreme security, there is every reason to expect that Canada's Victory Bonds will increase in value, when peace is declared.

The English Rothschilds laid the foundation of the fortune of that branch of the family by buying British war bonds before the battle of Waterloo, thereby making huge profits from the increase in value which followed the declaration of peace.

BUT Canada's Victory Bonds are much more than merely a sound money investment; they are Canada's renewed pledge to fight the war to a finish, till victory is with the Allies and lasting peace is secured to the world.

Every one of Canada's Victory Bonds bought by you is a new assurance to every Canadian soldier that Canada stands behind him ready to send him food and munitions, and to care for those he has left in Canada.

Canada's Victory Bonds guarantee that Canada will keep on producing the food, the munitions and machines to bring victory to the Canadian soldiers in France, and that Canada will keep the home-fires burning for their loved ones while they are fighting for our freedom.

SO when you buy Canada's Victory Bonds you help Canada finance the war,

—you help to maintain the production of food, munitions and supplies which our soldiers must have,

—and the money paid for those products helps to maintain business and industrial conditions by which the productive efficiency of Canada can be kept at high pressure.

Your investment in Canada's Victory Bonds will be a link in the complete chain of helping our soldiers, helping the country and thereby also helping yourself.

Investment in Canada's Victory Bonds is Sound Business Patriotism

Issued by Canada's Victory Loan Committee in co-operation with the Minister of Finance of the Dominion of Canada.

Estimates of the Yield of the Crop for This Year

Ottawa.—The census and statistics office published the second or provisional estimate of the yield of the principal grain crops of Canada in 1917, a statement of the quantity of these crops at the time of harvesting and the condition of root crops on September 30. The report is compiled from the returns of crop correspondents made at the end of September.

Yield of Principal Grain Crops

The estimates of the yield per acre of wheat, oats, barley and flax are somewhat lower than those reported at the end of August, and the reduction applies to all the provinces. The later returns being based to a larger extent upon threshing results appear to indicate that the first estimates, based upon the appearance of the crops in the field, were too high. The total yield of wheat for Canada is now provisionally estimated at 231,730,200 bushels, the average yield per acre being 15¾ bushels, as compared with 16¾ bushels reported a month ago and with 17 bushels the yield of 1916. Of oats the total yield is 393,510,000 bushels, as compared with 410,211 000 bushels in 1916, the average yield per acre being 29½ bushels in 1917 as compared with 37.30 bushels in 1916. Barley yields 51,684,000 bushels, as compared with 42,770,000 bushels in 1916, the average per acre being 21½ bushels as compared with 23.72 bushels in 1916. The yield of rye is 4,239 800 bushels, which is slightly more than the quantity returned a month ago; the yield per acre is 20 bushels as against 19.3 bushels in 1916. For the three prairie provinces the yields are as follows: Wheat 209,794,200 bushels, oats 237,925.000 bushels, rye 2.534.000 bushels, barley 36,727,000 bushels, flaxseed 6,747.000 bushels. The total yields of the remaining grain crops, now reported for the first time this year, are as follows: Peas 2,786,600 bushels from 151,030 acres, an average of 18½ bushels per acre; beans 635.700 bushels from 43.000 acres, average 14¾ bushels per acre; buckwheat 7.189,000 bushels from 336,400 acres, or 12¼ bushels per acre; mixed grains 15,741 000 bushels from 469.140 acres, 32½ bushels per acre, and corn for husking 6 193.000 bushels from 173,609 acres, an average of 35¾ bushels per acre.

Quality of Grain Crops

Correspondents were asked to report on the quality of the grain crops at the time of harvest, as measured against a standard of 100, representing grain well headed, well filled, well saved and unaffected to any appreciable extent by frost, rust, smut, etc. The average results for the whole of Canada are as follows: Fall wheat 76, spring wheat 72, fall wheat 73, oats 74, barley 75, rye 79, peas 69, beans 71, buckwheat 63, mixed grains 79, flax 67, corn for husking 67. The figures are generally high for Ontario, wheat being 80, oats 92 and barley 89. In Quebec wheat is 67 and oats are 74. In the prairie provinces wheat is 75 in Manitoba, 70 in Saskatchewan and 75 in Alberta. Oats are 62 in Manitoba, 57 in Saskatchewan and 56 in Alberta.

Condition of Root and Fodder Crops

The condition of root and fodder crops, measured against a standard of 100 as representing a full crop, was, on September 30 as follows: Potatoes 64, turnips 72, mangolds, carrots, etc., 77, sugar beets 76, corn for fodder 72 and alfalfa 81. The condition of the potato crop by provinces was on September 30 as follows: Prince Edward Island 81, Nova Scotia 77, New Brunswick 57, Quebec 47, Ontario 81, Manitoba 69, Saskatchewan 71, Alberta 89 and British Columbia 70.

Rheumatism

A Home Cure Given by One Who had It

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar, but, understand I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write today.

United Grain Growers Say Market Is Dull

No change of any import has been seen in the wheat market this week. The Wheat Export company continues to take all the grades on which the price has been set, as fast as the grain is unloaded at Fort William. The demand from the mills has eased off a little and their requirements seem to have been pretty well taken care of for the time being. The Wheat Export company is not buying, we understand, anything in transit or anything for future delivery. With the price set, however, this makes little or no difference to the seller. The price will be the same upon arrival of the car at the head of the lakes.

The price for the low grades is practically unchanged. All grades below three northern (while not being taken by the allied governments' agents, the Wheat Export company) are finding a ready market at about the same spreads as have been quoted this week and last week. The receipts continue to run very largely, one, two and three northern.

Oats

Up till the last of the week the market for oats was dull and showed very little movement. Towards the end of the week the market showed some strength, particularly for spot oats. For further away deliveries the improvement was not so noticeable.

The receipts at Winnipeg continue larger than was generally expected, and for a crop of oats that were considered practically a failure, the amount coming forward has been somewhat unexpected.

For stuff on track in Alberta, if not too far north, some fancy premiums over Fort William values are being paid. These premiums have been more conspicuous since the recent spell of bad weather, which held back the movement temporarily.

For the most part we believe the demand for oats in our own province has made the price for oats on track several cents over the Fort William price. One day three cents over was offered but very few cars were available. Many stations in the southern part of Alberta and Saskatchewan require oats for feed and seed, but whether this demand is going to be sufficient to force a general advance in prices or not is very problematical at the moment.

Stocks are large at Fort William, and Chicago oats have been underselling ours right along for export. The immense corn crop in the States is a big bearish factor.

Barley

Barley has been in fair demand for export but very little change has been registered in values. Many look for a little stronger market for barley with the placing of an embargo on shipments of corn into Canada. Feeders in the east will be substituting barley for corn but as the crop in the east was far from being a small one, no sharp advance is expected.

Flax

Flax has shown considerable strength being up about 20 cents per bushel over the low point of the week. Prospects of a bumper crop in the Argentine with prospective shipments from there to America has tended to check our market, but this influence during the week has not been noticeable. The movement of flax to our markets has been very slow but there has been no pressing demand to date.

SEED GRAIN AND POTATOES

From the Dominion Experimental Farms

By instructions of the Hon. Minister of Agriculture a free distribution of superior sorts of grain and potatoes will be made during the coming winter and spring to Canadian farmers.

The samples of grain for distribution will consist of spring wheat (about 5 lbs.), white oats (about 4 lbs.), barley (about 5 lbs.), and field peas (about 5 lbs.). These will be sent out from the Central Experimental farm, Ottawa, by the Dominion Cerealist, who will furnish the necessary application forms.

A distribution of potatoes in samples of about three pounds will be carried on from most of the experimental farms, the Central farm supplying only the province of Ontario.

All samples will be sent free by mail. Only one sample of grain (and one of potatoes) can be sent to each applicant. As the supply of seed is limited, farmers are advised to apply very early. Director, Dominion Experimental farms.

Results with Root Seed Growing In Canada

(Experimental Farms Note)

Among the problems that the great war has created for Canada, the problem of growing root seed, i.e. seed of swede and fall turnips, mangels, and field carrots, may seem rather insignificant to the average Canadian citizen. Yet, that problem is today one of the most vital to the Canadian farmer, notably the dairy farmer, inasmuch as it is directly connected with the providing of that indispensable stock food that is generally referred to as "roots".

In 1915, Canada imported a total of 1,927,313 pounds of turnip seed, and 1,056,060 pounds of mangel and beet seed. In 1916, the import of turnip seed dwindled to 150,855 pounds and the import of mangel and beet seed to 636,797 pounds; and for 1917, the figures stand at 291,379 pounds for turnip seed and 891,677 pounds for mangel and beet seed. This means that Canada imported a total of these important farm seeds, in the years of 1916 and 1917, which falls short of the import of 1915 alone of, roughly, one million pounds. It should be added that practically every pound of field root seed used in this country is of European origin.

That Canada was running a great risk of having her supply of root seed from Europe shut off, partly or wholly, as a result of the war, was regretfully predicted in an Experimental Farms bulletin entitled "Growing Field Root, Vegetable and Flower Seeds in Canada", issued early in 1915. In the said bulletin, an appeal was made, as has also repeatedly been done later in many issues of "Seasonable Hints" distributed by the Dominion Experimental farms system —to Canadian farmers and others interested in the seed supply being kept up, urging that Canada could not afford to take the risk of relying on import from Europe either under prevailing war conditions, or immediately after the conclusion of peace. It was emphatically stated that "Canada should make herself independent of foreign markets and produce at home what now has to be bought from abroad. Canadian farmers should not only try to meet the emergency demand for field root seed in the immediate future, but also try to establish a permanent seed-growing industry which would make them independent of any other country." The bulletin went further and predicted "that many districts of Canada where root seed growing is unknown at present, will prove themselves not only able to produce seed of good quality, but also to be especially well adapted to seed raising."

To what extent this prediction was justified, will be shown by the data following, showing what results in root seed raising were obtained in the year of 1915. In that year the Central Experimental farm at Ottawa raised, from a field of 1½ acres, a first class mangel seed crop at the rate of about 1,150 pounds of seed to the acre. Mangel seed was produced at the Experimental farm at Agassiz, B. C., at the rate of 2,100 pounds per acre, at the Experimental station at Lennoxville, Que., at the rate of 1,150 pounds per acre and at the Experimental station at Kentville, N. S., at the rate of 2,100 pounds per acre. The same year the Experimental station at Lennoxville, Que., raised swede turnip seed at the rate of close to 1,250 pounds to the acre.

But what about the profit? Does it pay the grower to raise that kind of crop? As an answer, it may be stated that there was, according to records kept, a net profit of about $80 per acre from the mangel seed crop at the Central Experimental farm, Ottawa, in 1915. And this in spite of the fact that the men handling the crop were quite unfamiliar with the same.

The above figures indicate, most decidedly, that there are, in Canada, great opportunities for developing a new field in agricultural activity promising substantial rewards, from a profit standpoint, to those who take up root seed growing conscientiously and in a businesslike manner.

May it also be added that the raising, in Canada, of the seed needed in the country will directly help to increase the average yield of the root crops of the Dominion. This will, however, be discussed in a special article.

LIVESTOCK UNION WILL HOLD CONVENTION NEXT MONTH

The fifth annual convention of the Western Canada Livestock union will be held in Regina, November 14 and 15. Each organization affiliated with the union is entitled to one duly appointed representative, in addition to its secretary. The western provincial ministers of agriculture, deputy ministers of agriculture and livestock commissioners are also directors of the Western Canada Livestock union, as are also the representatives having charge of agricultural and livestock development in western Canada for the following railways: The Canadian Pacific, Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific. In addition to the organizations printed hereon, the United Wool Growers' association and the Alberta Agricultural Fairs' association have affiliated with the union.

While the persons mentioned above are the official representatives of the various organizations forming the Western Canada Livestock union, it is the desire of the union that as many as possible of the individual members of these affiliated organizations should attend the annual meetings to hear the addresses and discussions.

It is hoped that every affiliated organization will be represented at the next meeting of the union, which promises to be the most successful yet held.

His Honor Lieut.-Governor Lake and Premier Martin, of the province of Saskatchewan, have accepted invitations to be present at the meeting. Invitations to be present and address the meeting have also been extended to the Dominion minister of agriculture, the Hon. John Oliver, Hon. Duncan Marshall, Hon. W. R. Motherwell, Hon. Valentine Winkler, ministers of agriculture respectively of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba; H. S. Arkell, acting Dominion livestock commissioner; Dr. F. Torrance, veterinary director-general for Canada; Dan Johnson, Dominion livestock representative, Winnipeg; Dr. S. F. Tolmie, Victoria; W. A. Wilson, secretary Saskatchewan livestock commission, and others.

Rape for Sheep

Rape is an excellent food for sheep. Take advantage of every economic means of raising food in these times of need. The crop is easily grown and is pastured off. It is fitting to both lambs and sheep.

Home-Grown Versus Commercial Seed of Field Roots

(Experimental Farms Note)

One of the reasons why root seed growing has not been practised to any extent in Canada before, is the rather widely spread idea that Canadian climatic conditons are not as favorable to the production of high class seed as are the conditions in those European countries upon which Canada has relied in the past for her seed supply. In other words, the European countries have been supposed by virtue of more suitable soil and climatic conditions to be capable of raising seed producing larger root crops of higher quality than Canada ever could be expected to do. A similar conception is also very common in the United States. Such a conception has no foundation and is entirely wrong.

Experiments, conducted the last few years by the Experimental Farms system all over the Dominion, most conclusively prove that Canadian grown seed in no respect is inferior to imported seed. On the contrary, it produces better crops than does imported seed. In support of this statement the results obtained in 1916 with home-grown seed of varieties of mangels and swede turnips in comparison with imported seed of the same varieties may briefly be summarized.

Mammoth long red mangel seed, raised at the Central Experimental farm, Ottawa, in 1915 produced a root crop in 1916 which averaged, when tested at nine of the Dominion Experimental stations, over two and four-fifths tons more to the acre than imported seed of the same variety. Mammoth long red mangel seed grown at Charlottetown, P. E. I., was tested at Charlottetown and Ottawa and produced about half a ton of roots more to the acre than imported seed of the same variety, and this in spite of the fact that the Charlottetown seed was harvested under most unfavorable conditions. Seed of the same variety, raised at Kentville, N. S., gave a root crop at that station which exceeded the crop realized from the imported seed by close to three and a half tons to the acre.

Yellow intermediate mangel seed, originated at Ottawa, was tested at seven experimental stations and produced, on the average, 3 tons 750 pounds more roots to the acre than imported seed; seed of the same variety raised at Charlottetown, P. E. I., tested at six stations, yielded an average of one ton and three-quarters to the acre in excess of imported seed.

Danish Sludstrup mangel seed, raised at Agassiz, B. C., Kentville, N. S., and Charlottetown, P. E. I., respectively, was leading with on the average, about half a ton to the acre in comparative tests with imported seed of the same variety, conducted on a number of stations.

Kangaroo ewede turnip seed, raised at Fredericton, N. B., and tested at five experimental stations in eastern Canada, gave an average yield of two tons and three-quarters in excess of the imported seed, grown in comparison with it.

It is rather obvious, from these figures, that there is no foundation whatsoever for the conception that European-grown seed of field roots is superior to Canadian grown. On the contrary, the figures furnish a strong argument in favor of Canadian-grown seed being used in preference to imported seed. It is true that in some instances the imported seed produced yields only slightly behind those of Canadian seed, but what is of real importance is this: In no single case did the Canadian-grown seed fall behind, in yielding capacity, the same variety of European seed. This is the more encouraging as in most cases the Canadian seed was raised from roots, a great percentage of which would, under no circumstances, have been accepted by European growers as fit for seed production.

Under the circumstances there seems no reason why Canada should, in the future, rely on foreign countries for her root seed supply. There is an opening, now, for a new agricultural industry and, indeed,

Training Fowl For Exhibition

The show season is on. The fancier is in his element. For the time at least fine feathers and fine form count for as much as eggs. Every poultry raiser should take some interest in the show-room. Poultry exhibitions should be educational and a source of inspiration. Without them interest in poultry affairs would be dwarfed.

The person who discredits the value of the show-room simply because he raises chickens for eggs and meat is shortsighted. The progressive utility breeder recognizes the superiority of pure-bred fowls. He is opposed to mongrels. Therefore, though the utility man may not pay so much attention to the angle of the tail or the contour and texture of the comb as the exhibition breeders do, he does appreciate the need for standard qualifications supported by the show-room. He knows that the exhibitions are utterly against mongrelism, that they aim for improvement, and that except for these standards the term pure-bred fowls would convey no meaning whatsoever.

Furthermore, not alone fine feathers, correct markings and smart carriage are displayed in the show-room, but the characteristics that go to make the egg or meat type of bird are also shown.

Whether you are an exhibitor or not it will be to your advantage to patronize the shows. Bear in mind that it is not always the poultry association with the largest membership and the greatest number of entries that is the most beneficial. The New York, Chicago, Boston, Baltimore and other metropolitan exhibitions are the "big-league" competitions, but they do not detract from the local shows and state fairs.

One of the best exhibitions in Pennsylvania has only a dozen members, but these men are up-to-date hard workers and they work with a co-operative spirit. Every year they set aside the week of the show for that particular purpose, and they roll up their sleeves and go to the work with vim and enthusiasm.

Fine Plumage Means Care

There was a time when a breeder could look over his yards, select the most promising birds, and without further ado pack them off to the show and win. Happily or unhappily, that time is past. Today, though a specimen ranks high in size, shape, color and most of the other points that contribute to the ideal, if it is not shown in what is termed "good condition" the chances for a ribbon are limited. The reason for this is largely due to the development and popularity of so many white varieties in the past decade or so.

White fowls cannot be raised under natural conditions and their plumage kept free from soil. Washing the plumage was a perfectly natural sequence, and this led to grooming and training the birds generally. In fact, nowadays it is the art of conditioning specimens as well as breeding them that brings success to the exhibitor.

Some breeders rail against conditioning and condemn it as faking. Such sweeping statements are obviously wrong. There is a wide difference between conditioning and faking, though in some cases this difference may be difficult to establish.

If you have grown a fowl that will conform to certain standard requirements, such as weight, shape, color, the angle at which the tail is carried, length of shank, and so on, you have not by any means gone as far as possible to show your skill. The other fellow has improved the fowl's ability to keep itself sleek and clean; he has influenced the bird's conduct by training it to pose and strut about, to exhibit its virtues to the best advantage and not to object to handling. Is he not entitled to greater recognition by reason of these additional pains?

A wild, unruly bird is an abomination in the show-room. It will try the patience of the most skilful judge. Nine times out of ten it is humanly impossible to judge such a specimen because of its wildness, since to estimate a fowl thoroughly and intelligently it is necessary to handle it and take measurements. Many a superior bird has failed to be placed because it was out of the question for the judge to keep it quiet long enough to form any idea of its type. Exhibitors of such birds have no one to blame but themselves.

Show-room conduct is seldom born in fowls. It is the result of careful training, and as such it is worthy of consideration. Sometimes it requires weeks of careful handling. Proper training is little more than sufficient petting and handling.

Birds intended for the show-room should be selected a month or so before the show dates, the males separated from the females to avoid broken feathers, and given more or less isolated quarters where they cannot fight or in trying to do so injure their combs in any way. Placing the birds in separate cages will make them accustomed to show conditions, and usually will subdue the wildest specimens in about a week's time.

Large farms that make a specialty of exhibiting maintain special quarters for conditioning the birds. Some of these conditioning rooms are like exhibitions themselves, being fitted with rows of cages in much the same manner as the show-room. The small breeder need not go to this expense. An outside kitchen or sheltered porch, some place where members of the household frequently pass, is a good location to erect temporary cages. As often as you can spare the time handle the birds and make them accustomed to persons coming close to the cage. Feed them tid-bits, stroke their wattles and backs and in every way gain their confidence.

WHEAT MARKET QUIET

Government Administrators Running the Supply and Brokers Watching and Waiting.

THOMPSON, SONS & CO.

Wheat—A quiet time continues in the wheat markets. The business is under direction of food administrators and grain supervisors, and they are having the time of their lives in administering and supervising, so as to direct the supply of wheat and the output of flour, in the way to best serve the interests of all concerned, and having broken up the law of supply and demand, there is found a good deal of difficulty in really satisfying anybody. In the United States, the Minneapolis mills in July and August and part of September were all more or less closed down because they could not get wheat to run on. Later the new spring wheat began to come forward, and they were able to take on some orders for flour. As soon as that happened more orders came, and also more wheat, until most of the mills were running almost to full capacity, and flour orders had to be declined, in order to comply with the rules set up by the food administrator. Then the eastern millers, who use hard spring wheat for blending with their soft winter wheat, made complaint that the hard wheat was all being bought up at Minneapolis and none permitted to reach them. On this the food administrator sent out an order to the flour mills of Minneapolis, and other mills in Minnesota and North Dakota, to cut down their production of flour to 60 per cent. of their capacity until further notice, in order that a portion of the hard spring wheat might be shipped down the lakes before the close of navigation. The Minneapolis mills were just getting into a good swing of trade, after going along for months on slow trade, many of them being closed down altogether, then comes along the food administrator and orders them to cut out working 40 per cent. of their machinery. We fancy a year or two of this sort of directing would demoralize things pretty badly, however necessary it may seem in the eyes of those in authority in the meantime. In last week's letter we made some remarks concerning the non-guarantee by any authority of the prices fixed for our Canadian wheat. On the day after our letter was written the newspapers reported that Sir George Foster had given assurances that the entire surplus of this year's Canadian wheat crop will be purchased by the allies at the price fixed by the board of supervisors. So far as we know this is another general assurance, which may or may not hold according to circumstances. In the meantime the Wheat Export company, the buyers for the allies, are taking all wheat offered to them at the fixed prices. These prices, however, are far out of line with the prices at which the royal commission on wheat supplies are selling to millers c.i.f. London and Liverpool. The revised schedule of prices fixed on September 17 by the royal commission, at which they would sell only American and Canadian wheat to millers only, states the price of No. 1 northern at 75s 6d per 480 pounds, 2 northern 74s and 3 northern 72s. These prices are equal to $2.26½ per bushel for 1 northern, $2.22 per bushel for 2 northern and $2.16 for 3 northern, delivered cost, insurance and freight at London or Liverpool. Now the fixed prices here, basis in store Fort William, are $2.21 for 1 northern, $2.18 for 2 northern and $2.15 for 3 northern. There is thus shown no practical difference between the prices the British government have to pay for the wheat in store Fort William and the price they have been selling it to millers in Great Britain, and yet there is the freight to the Atlantic seaboard, and the ocean freight across, with insurance inland and ocean, commissions for buying and forwarding and other incidentals. These freight and charges probably amount to 75c per bushel in the aggregate, so that about that amount per bushel must come out of British revenues to even up the expense, and it means that the British government is selling the 4-pound loaf to the British consumer for 18c while it is really costing say 22c to 23c. If the foregoing is correct, as we believe it is, it can easily be understood why there should be hesitation on the part of the allied governments to guarantee to continue indefinitely to buy all our wheat at the prices fixed.

There is now no variety in our Winnipeg wheat trade. The milling trade takes what it wants of the high grades at the fixed prices, and the government buyers take the remainder, which, of course, is the largest part. The weather over our western provinces has become wintry, with a few inches of snow on the ground, which a lower than average temperature keeps from going away again, and there is every appearance that winter has come to stay unusually early. In normal seasons the plow is kept going up to the end of the first week in November, but plowing is stopped now, although it is estimated that quite a large acreage has been already prepared for spring. Movement of wheat by road and rail has been on a liberal scale, and supplies are accumulating on a large scale. Today the grain standards' board is met in Winnipeg to set commercial standards for this year's No. 4, No. 5 and No. 6 wheat. Today's prices are: 1 northern $2.21, 2 northern $2.18, 3 northern $2.15, No. 4 $2.07, No. 5 $1.94, No. 6 $1.87, feed wheat $1.80.

Oats—The oat market has been steady and firm with a good cash demand for all grades. Prices have been fully 2c higher on the week, closing a little easier today. Today's prices are: 2 C.W. 67¼c, 3 C.W. and extra 1 feed 64¼c, 1 feed 62⅝c, 2 feed 61⅞c. Futures closed, October 67¼c, November 66⅞c, December 63⅞c and May 66⅞c.

Barley—Barley has been in better demand and prices are ½c to 1c up on the week. No. 3 $1.20½, No. 4 $1.15½, rejected and feed $1.10½. Futures closed, October $1.20½, November $1.18.

Rye—No. 2 Canadian rye $1.73.

Flax—There has been a stronger and more active market in flax, caused by broader demand, and the early setting in of winter because late flax in the northwest will be snow covered. Today's prices are, 1 N.W. $2.04. 2 C.W. $3.01, 3 C.W. $2.90, rejected $2.86. Futures closed. October $3.04. November $2.94, December $2.84¾, May $2.90.

All prices quoted above are based on delivery in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

WINNIPEG MARKET STRONGER

Winnipeg, Oct. 25.—Oats shorts covering in the south stiffened the Winnipeg market and the undertone was much stronger.

The wheat situation is still dull with the Wheat Export Company practically the only buyer. Millers were out of the market. Barley was ½c higher for lower grades. Flax was weaker. Offerings of all grains was light. Stocks in the interior have increased nearly 2,000,000 for the week and are now over 7,000,000 bushels greater year. All coarse grain stocks are greater than last year.

Winnipeg oats closed with October 1c higher and all other months ½c higher. Barley was ½c up for October and 2c for November. Flax was ½c to 2c lower. The larger decline being in December and May.

Sheep, receipts 12,000; market steady; lambs, native, $12.25 to $17.75.

WINNIPEG LIVESTOCK

Winnipeg, Oct. 25.—Receipts of cattle at the Union stockyards today totaled 3,700; hogs, 953. Today's cattle market was steady at unchanged prices, the demand was good for butcher cows and heifers, but very few toppers were in the offerings. The bulk of the run consisting of medium stuff. Bulls and oxen were in good demand at steady to firm prices. The demand was keen for good quality breedy stockers and feeders. Prices were stronger for this class of stuff. Common and low grade stockers and feeders are hard to dispose of. Veal calves, sheep and lambs steady, a few choice lambs selling at $15.25. Milch cows and spring trade is good.

Hogs took another slump and prices declined 50 cents per hundred for selects. Market was extremely weak at $15.00. Prospects are for lower prices.

PROTECTING THE PRAIRIE CHICKEN

An effort is being made in states west of the Mississippi to protect the prairie chicken from the near-extermination that has befallen the species in the eastern and central states. The Iowa legislature has just passed a law placing a closed season on prairie chickens for a period of five years.

There are still great numbers of prairie chickens, or pinnated grouse as they really are, in the western Dakotas and others of the newly homesteaded areas of the northwest. In driving along the prairie trails the settlers very frequently are startled to the sudden whirr of a flock rising from the prairie grasses or grain fields close by the trail.

While homesteading in North Dakota recently, I was privileged to see a great flock of them at close quarters. One frosty morning in November I looked out of my window at a cottonwood tree on my claim, the only real tree for miles in any direction. Its branches had been naked of leaves for some time. But I now beheld them black and bending with a load of something, what, I could not tell. Stepping out of my shack and walking toward the tree I jumped with alarm when suddenly literally hundreds of prairie chickens rose from the branches and whirred away with a furious noise. Undoubtedly the cold night had brought them together for some distance around to roost in the one lone tree where they could be warmer than on the ground.

A homesteader friend tells me that all one winter prairie chickens fed on his corn pile within a few feet of his house and became quite tame though they were quite quarrelsome among themselves. He found watching them so interesting and such a pretty sight that he made no attempt to drive them

A PRETTY and picturesque cottage of frame construction. It is built of good materials, the outside sheathed, papered and shingled with wide Washington fir shingles and stained, the lower section up to the window sills is covered with cement stucco. The roof is low and spreading with wide overhang to the eaves. There is a large square screened porch in front with side entrance also a front glazed sun parlor, opening out of the living room with wide glazed French windows.

The plan of first story is convenient with one central chimney and wide fireplace, a large front living room, with dining room, opening back on the left side. The main stairs are on the right side, with a well located coat closet off from the first platform of stairs. The basement stairs are underneath with grade entrance. A section of stairs from kitchen connects with the main platform, making the combination arrangement.

The second floor has two good chambers and a sleeping porch in the rear, a bath room and good clothes closets also a linen closet. There is small space in attic for storage. There is a full basement with all modern accommodations.

The plan is suited to an east or south frontage and the size 25 ft. x 40 ft. makes it suitable for an ordinary city lot. It is estimated to build, exclusive of heating and plumbing for $3,000 to $3,700. The finish of the first story is in Washington fir mission stain and oak floors, with linoleum for the kitchen portion. The finish of second floor is pine painted white and enameled. The doors may be stained mahogany red with very pretty effect.

STANDARD FINANCE AND INSURANCE PAGE

United Farmers of Alberta Issues Appeal for Victory Loan

To the Farmers of Alberta: Arrangements are being rapidly perfected to organize Alberta for the purpose of soliciting subscriptions to a war loan to be known as "Canada's Victory Loan, 1917." There is no necessity to dwell on the needs of money to carry on this war. We all know the needs are so insistent that every nation is straining its resources to the uttermost to meet the requirements. If we give our men to the cause and then fail on account of financial backing, their blood will be on our heads.

To meet Canada's immediate requirements, the need of $150,000,000 is imperative. More will be accepted if subscribed. In order that you may understand more fully the allies' financial condition, which rests largely on Britain's tremendously taxed strength, the following quotation is given from a speech made by Sir George Foster in the house of commons on September 8, 1917, in reply to certain members who were urging that pressure be brought to bear on the imperial authorities to continue to furnish orders to our munition factories after the British factories were equipped to furnish these munitions themselves:

"My honorable friend would have this government insist upon the British government spending hundreds of millions of dollars in this country for munitions which can be made in Britain, to the detriment of the purchase in this country of the agricultural products which we can raise, and which Great Britain cannot raise. There is no ground for such an argument as that, or for insisting upon it. So far as this government is concerned, we do not intend to insist upon that thing being done.

We do not intend to take the vicious ground of demanding that Great Britain shall spend her millions in Canada getting made here what she can better and more cheaply make in Great Britain for the prosecution of the war, and thereby leave herself without funds to buy what is absolutely necessary, food for the British people, from Canada, which can and does raise the food and wishes to supply it.

If this government is going to urge the British government to purchase anything in this country, it will not be munitions, but the fruits of the earth, the products of the soil, the farmers' increment, which Great Britain cannot supply and which we can supply in abundance.

I leave my honorable friend to his argument that this government shall make a plea to the government of Great Britain that Great Britain shall continue to make her expenditures in this country in such a way that we may carry on the manufacture of munitions to the same extent as before. Great Britain has bought munitions in Canada to a tremendous extent. During the last two years and a half she has expended nearly $400,000,000 on munitions in this country, perhaps more than that, I have not the exact figures. She has done that because she has needed those things, because she was not then fully equipped for making them, and also because we financed the purchases for her. But as soon as she became thoroughly equipped to make all those munitions that she needed and has a surplus from which to supply her allies, was it not wise and right that she should give that work to her own people, keep that money in her own country, and thereby more economically and cheaply throw her resources into the field for the successful prosecution of the war?

My colleague, the minister of finance, has very frankly laid before this house some phases of the financial question, about which we probably do not think as much as we might and which it is very difficult for us adequately to sense. It may very well be thought that Great Britain is the richest country in the world; that she has interminable resources. To a certain extent it is true that she is rich and has great resources; but the financial burdens imposed upon Great Britain from the beginning of the war are also beyond the power of the human mind to grasp. She has upon her shoulders the financial burden of maintaining the greatest fleet in the world, a fleet now almost double what it was at the beginning of the war. Instead of an army of 150,000 men which she had trained when the war began, she is maintaining an army of well up to four or five millions of men which she is maintaining. She carries on operations in every continent and in almost every quarter of the globe. She has her military expeditions in South Africa, Asia, Italy, the Balkans, Mesopotamia and at the front in France. She has contingents of her forces everywhere. She shoulders that whole work. Her allies, France Italy, Russia, Belgium and the Balkan States have depended upon Great Britain, and generously she has given them the support without which they could not have done what they have done. All that comes upon Great Britain and any one who will carefully think that over and try to realize what it means will come to the conclusion that there are not immeasurable depths of resources in Great Britain.

To make a long story short, Great Britain today finds the very greatest difficulty in financing her needs and the needs of the war.

Canada has stood behind her as no other outside dominion has done or has been able to do, not that others have not had as good a will, but they have not had the resources and therefore they have not been able to do as much as Canada has done. But Canada has tried to do her share in that respect.

So the matter of financing for the future is a very dimcult problem. Here was your cheese industry in Canada running up to $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 or $60,000,000. Great Britain needed that cheese, but Great Britain was not able to finance for that cheese. So Canada came in and financed for it, and is doing it to this day. There is also your bacon and hog industry, and the livestock industry. Great Britain is not able today to finance for what she absolutely needs from this country in the way of these products, and if it is to be done Canada must do it. Canada is prepared to do it to the utmost of her power—is doing it today and is organizing to do it in the future. Yonder in the west is a possible wheat crop with a surplus of anywhere between 100,000,000 and 200,000,000 bushels. If Great Britain does not buy that wheat, who will? If Great Britain does buy that wheat Great Britain must finance, and perhaps very largely through Canada herself. And yet here are gentlemen who plead with tears in their voices that we should keep up the munitions factories, and let our wheat lie in the elevators or on the prairies of the west."—Sir George Foster, in the House of Commons, Sept 8, 1917.

All previous Canadian loans have been subscribed largely by a few wealthy subscribers. The time has come when the people must subscribe. This money is to be used largely to buy the products of our own farms at remunerative prices. By loaning, not giving, but loaning this money, we both furnish the sinews of war and keep open a market for our products, and thereby maintain our prosperity. Besides, it is building for the future. If we invest now while we have the money to spare we will receive it back, interest and principal, at a time when we may be sorely in need of it.

The famous "Liberty Loan" of two billions of dollars floated in the United States was enthusiastically financed by an enormous number of subscribers scattered all over the country by all classes of people. By this method the burden of financing was splendidly equalized; but the good results of this will not be realized till the repayment of that loan is shared in by all those classes and sections, and not all drawn to one class of people, or one section of the country.

Let us be equally wise and equally zealous in supporting a popular loan in Canada. We want to come as near as possible to having at least one bond allotted to each man, woman, boy and girl in Alberta.

The details of the plan of campaign will be fully explained to you later by those who have the work in hand.

Each man, woman, boy and girl must do his or her share in this crisis. You cannot do it by idleness.

Each dollar must do its duty.

Dollars cannot do their duty in idleness. Do not hoard them. Do not spend them foolishly in riotous living. Send them out on a safe necessary enterprise in the service of both country and self by investing in this "Victory Loan". Thus invested, they will be bread cast upon the waters that will return to you, perhaps in a time of great need. The United States' first "Liberty Loan" was floated at 3½ per cent. interest. Our Canada's Victory Loan will bear about 5½ per cent. interest.

Yours fraternally,
H. W. WOOD, President.
P. P. WOODBRIDGE, Secy.-Treas.

TWENTY MILLION POUNDS OF HAMS IMPORTED

Ottawa.—The immense imports of meats from the United States into Canada is referred to in the annual report of Dr. F. Torrance, veterinary director-general for the Dominion. The report notes that owing to the demand of the war Canadian packers during the fiscal year were forced to import from the United States into inspected establishments 380,726 carcasses as well as 20,000,000 pounds of hams. This immense importation of meats from the United States, after being given a Canadian cure, were sold at a price second only to the best Danish or Irish cured.

The report notes a gratifying reduction in the number of horses destroyed throughout Canada for glanders. Of the total number killed, 241 Saskatchewan contributed 191, the remainder being scattered between the other provinces, with the exception of the maritime provinces, in which no cases were found.

The frequent outbreaks of glanders in Saskatchewan is believed to be due to the importation of horses to supply the wants of new settlers, and the delay which often occurs in reporting suspicious cases to the inspectors.

WHAT AN ANNUITY WILL DO

I am an elderly lady, and not until quite late in life did I learn the value of an investment in a life insurance annuity. I was left a widow at 60 years of age, with a small, uncertain income and a limited knowledge of business.

My husband left me a paid-up life insurance policy of $8,000, which the company promptly paid me, and which I invested in first mortgage security on real estate in Chicago at 5 per cent., which brought me an annual income of $400. Had I then known of life insurance annuities, instead of taking out the principal I could have left it with the company and taken 10 per cent. per year for life, $800 per year instead of $400.

My investments did not prove very good and caused me a great deal of anxiety, with many anxious appeals to lawyers. I lost interest money from time to time, and at the end of ten years my principal was reduced to $5,000 which I put in a house, which pays 6 per cent. on the investment. Soon after this I quite unexpectedly sold for $3,000 a piece of property which had been a dead weight on my hands for years. I promptly invested it in a life insurance annuity with a well-known company at 13 per cent annual interest, and have received $390 per year ever since, so I have drawn out more than the principal by this time, and if I live to be 90 years, as I expect, I will have beaten the company badly.

There is no one thing that brings such peace of mind and health of body as the certainty of a fixed income in old age, and I would advise women who are left alone in the world with limited means to invest in a life insurance annuity, and be spared many of the worries incident to old age.—American Magazine.

ERROR OF ANTICIPATION PRONOUNCED IN BUSINESS

The extraordinary condition of scarcity of materials and labor is being aggravated more and more by the practice of "anticipation" in merchandising. Salesmen are influencing buyers to stock up. Country buyers are ordering away in excess of their normal requirements. Warehouses and shelves of merchants are loaded with many dollars worth of goods they do not need.

Consumer demand is not high. On the other hand, the saving habit is taking hold of the people. The unusual demand for goods is due to the prosperity of the farmer.

Conservation of merchandise is essential. But in one spot there is an accumulation of shoes and a shortage of socks. In another will be found an overstock of socks and a scarcity of shoes. All through the list of staple merchandise there is unbalanced distribution. Salesmen and buyers are as patriotic as other men, and it seems that now they should see it their duty toward the nation, as well as good business, to keep stocks even and stop trying to corner the market in every line of merchandise.

BANKING STATISTICS OF CANADIAN PROGRESS

Savings deposits in Canadian chartered banks increased by over $23,000,000 during August to a total of over $95,000,000—this being $800,000,000 higher than the pre-war figure of three years ago. The month's trend may indicate some husbanding of institutional and private resources in anticipation of war loan purchases. Also it was probably accelerated somewhat by the fact that banks have been reducing interest rates slightly on large current deposits accounts, which would tend to a transference to saving accounts. At any rate current deposits decreased by about $11,000,000 to $440,000,000 during the month. Domestic commercial loans were increased by nearly $7,000,000 to over $836,000,000—this being a natural concomitant of the beginning of crop ments. Current loans are nearly one hundred million dollars higher than a year ago, indicating the expansion which has accompanied wartime business transacted at a high-price level. Call loans abroad increased by over $25,000,000 and holdings of public securities $8,300,000 during August.

Further credits of $155,000,000 were recently arranged by the Canadian Government with the chartered banks for British purchases here of wheat, bacon and other meats. The total credits for munitions, wheat and meat purchases to date are now $598,000,000 This temporary arrangement for partial financing of purchases in Canada were discussed with Lord Reading, representing the British Government, during his recent conference with Sir Thomas White in Washington.

PROSPERITY IS PROMISED

Ottawa Thinks Military Service Act Will Help the National Condition in Future

Ottawa, Oct. 26.—The prospect opened up for Canada by the Military Service Act is one of prosperity insured and safeguarded. The object of the act is to reinforce our men at th front while keeping in Canada those whose presence here is required in order that necessary business may be carried on as well as those whose going overseas would lay a heavy burden on the country through the needs of dependents.

No heavy tax on the manpower of the country will be made. The act calls for but 100,000 men, and authorities estimate that there are in the country 400,000 of the first class alone, unmarried men and widowers without children between the ages of 20 and 34. This class may well supply most of those needed.

Men in the first class called will be withdrawn for military service only as they are required by the military situation. The process will be gradual, thus leaving a portion of the men to follow their regular vocations until such time as they are required.

The cost of the war must be reduced to the minimum by the system which sends out of the country only those who can best be spared, from the standpoint of the nation as a whole. General prosperity must also be encouraged by the safeguarding of essential industries and the retention at their work of men whom the highest interests of the country require at home. A-14

DESPITE THE WAR PRODUCTION IS UP TO LAST YEAR

Ottawa.—The International Institute of Agriculture gives the following official estimates of cereal production:

The total production of wheat in Spain, France, Scotland, Ireland, Italy, Netherlands, Sweden, Switzerland, Canada, United States, India and Algeria is 1,774,582,000 bushels, or 99 per cent. of the production of the same countries in 1916, and 85.2 per cent. of their five years' average.

Total production of oats in the same countries as for wheat less India, 2,407,661,000 bushels, 116.3 per cent. of 1916 and 114 per cent. of average.

Total production of barley in the same countries as for wheat less India, 517,153,000 bushels, 99.7 per cent. of 1916, and 95.4 per cent. of average.

Total production of rye in Spain, France, Ireland, Italy, Netherlands, Sweden, Switzerland, Canada and the United States, 146,326,000 bushels, 84.8 per cent. of 1916 and 92.5 per cent. of average.

Total production of corn in Spain, Italy, Switzerland, Canada and United States, 3,331,414,000 bushels, 123.7 per cent. of 1916 and 77.4 per cent. of average.

Total production of rice in Spain, Italy and United States, 3,008,000 tons, 98.3 per cent. of 1916 and 115.6 per cent. of average.

CANADA PAPER MFRS. WILL PROFIT BY BIG PAPER DEMAND

Canada is making a bid for the world's trade in paper. A definite movement has been inaugurated by which Canadian paper and pulp mills will take advantage of the new opportunities that are opening up for the export of their products.

The Canadian Paper Export Company, is now planning to gain a foothold in many world markets with the idea that this will grow in extent rather than diminish after the war and its immediate consequences have passed away. The Canadian Export Paper company, which has been in charge of the export of Laurentide, Abitibi and other mills and has dealt only in newsprint and pulp, has taken the agency of a number of other mills in Canada, such as the Provincial Paper Mills and the Howard Smith Paper Mills, makers of book and writing papers, of medium and fine grades, and will push these in connection with the sale of the other two lines. A big field, it is confidently expected, is ahead of this country in these directions as well as in pulp and newsprint.

G. F. Steele, the general manager states that they are planning to extend the Canadian paper trade in "every civilized country in the world." This plan looks to business after the war rather than any temporary orders which may arise out of immediate conditions.

"We are confident that our export trade in paper, outside altogether of the United States, will be very large In the past the strongest competitor in the highest class of papers was Germany, but we believe she cannot regain this position as she will be hampered in getting wood; in other words she will be pocketed. Sweden has had the lead in coarse papers and she will continue to be the strongest rival of Canadian mills."

A large business is looked for with Great Britain, and France, as well as with Australia and New Zealand. At the present time, Mr. Steele said, Canada holds the largest business with South Africa, and this will develop. Even now, with all the difficulties of transportation, Canadian exports were being increased very materially.

Why are you DEAF?

"COMPLETELY CURED," Age 76

Mr. Thomas Winslade, of Borden, Hants, writes: "I am delighted I tried the new 'Orlene', for the headnoises, I am pleased to tell you, ARE GONE, and I can hear as well as ever I could in my life. I think it wonderful, as I am seventy-six years old, and the people here are surprised to think I can hear so well again at my age."

Many other wonderful cures reported. Send $1.00 today for a supply of "TRENCH ORLENE." There is really nothing better at any price. Write The "ORLENE CO.," 12 Railway Crescent, W. CROYDON, England. (Kindly mention this paper.)

SALE OF TAX CERTIFICATES

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the Treasurer of the City of Calgary, at his office at the City Hall, Calgary, on and after the 21st day of November, 1917, will sell to the first applicant Certificates of Delinquency for unpaid taxes levied or assessed prior to the 1st day of January, 1916, on the land included in the list—printed copies of which may be had on personal or written application to the Treasurer or City Clerk, City Hall, Calgary,—if such taxes, with interest and costs, are not sooner paid.

WHY TAX CERTIFICATES ARE AN ATTRACTIVE INVESTMENT

They take priority as security on real estate over mortgages and other encumbrances.

They may bear interest at 10 per centum per annum, preference being given to the tender offering to purchase a certificate at the lowest rate of interest.

They cannot be redeemed within one year unless the holder is paid the total amount thereof, plus one-tenth of such amount.

If unredeemed within three years, the holder, by simple procedure, can sell the property to recoup himself the amount thereof, with interest borne by the certificate, plus subsequent taxes paid by the purchaser or holder, with interest thereon at 10 per centum per annum, plus all costs, and if no sale, title to the property may be obtained.

They bear the guarantee of the City that if set aside by the Court for any reason, the City will pay the holder the amount thereof, plus 6 per centum per annum.

For fuller particulars, including the method of tendering, prospective purchasers are invited to obtain and read the introduction contained in the printed list.

DATED at Calgary, Alberta, the 23rd day of October, 1917.

The Geese of Kale Zir

(By Lieut. H. R. Wakefield)

The C. O. was a man of few words, but his mind was definite and precise.

"I'm not at all sure the Bulgars will ever attempt a crossing between here and Kale Zir", he said to us, "but it is quite on the cards they will. As you know we are very isolated here; it would take several hours before we could hope for reinforcements, so we have got to be careful. I'm doubling the number of posts and they might be able to warn us. Also I shall keep patrol on the paths through the reeds from dusk till dawn. But the area we have to guard is so great that with our limited number of men we cannot rely on 'distant signals' altogether. So we must have an organized system of defence for the camp itself.

"The Line of Resistance will be the officers' lines, because it's a commanding position and has cover. From there we can sweep a big angle for a long way. In the event of an attack the men will fall back to that line which must be held to the last. The attack is certain to be at night and at the darkest time. The confusion is likely to be considerable. But at the moment I think appropriate I shall discharge a Very pistol to the probable discomfiture of the foe. Well, then, tonight we'll have a false alarm. Tell your platoons what I've told you, except about the false alarm (remember that Thompson—you usually reverse my instructions) and practice it a bit by daylight."

When the Bulgars left their native fastnesses and came down to the plains with much flourishing of trumpets and discharge of shells, they found themselves up against the very formidable natural barrier of a certain famous river and an historic and venerable lake. There they stopped. At the time our company was holding the line of the lake, or, to be strictly accurate, the upper lake, for it was divided into two parts connected by the river. We held, as I have said, the upper lake and five miles of the connecting stream. We had, thanks to the motor boats, absolute command of the lake and a crossing there was inconceivable, but the river was a different matter. It flowed through a perfect maze of reeds and swamps and forests, some parts of which were, so far as we knew, absolutely impenetrable from our side. We had reconnoitred it in punts without gaining much enlightenment, partly because its navigation had been extremely intricate.

It may sound incredible, but certain parts of that stretch of river were as inaccessible as the sources of the Amazon. The marsh was gaseous and treacherous and swarming with all forms of creeping and flying beastliness, especially mosquitoes. On the Bulgar side the marshes were much less difficult, and we had no doubt that they could easily get a considerable number of men across them, but whether it was possible for them to break through and get at us was a different matter. They had plenty of expert local knowledge. We also had expert knowledge, with a tendency to be contradictory. Crossings were known to exist, but the swamps were said to be largely quicksand and apparently had engulfed many men in the past.

The situation, therefore, was roughly this. We were unable to prevent a crossing if such was possible, but we could control to some extent the paths up from the river to where we were situated, three miles back, on the first of the foothills of the coastal range. The Bulgars could see our camp perfectly well and would no doubt be tempted to raid us, but it was doubtful if they would think it worth while.

As ordered by the C. O. we practised the manoeuver he had described. The false alarm was amusing, if nothing else. After a day or two we got quite expert. We had one genuine alarm, when Thompson's bivouac fired in the middle of the night and all his revolver ammunition exploded. Bullets fairly hummed through the camp, and brave men were seen debouching sleepily from all directions thoroughly under the impression that they were about to meet their doom. However, the Line of Resistance was occupied briskly and without confusion. Then a fortnight passed and we began to disparage Bulgar enterprise.

One evening, being orderly officer, I set forth at 10:30 to visit two posts, distant respectively one and a half and two miles from the camp. It was very dark; all the stars were flaming fiercely; the lonely cries of the jackals echoed down from the hills. On the mountains across the lake the Bulgar lights were unusually active. They were flashing their signals for miles along the ridges. Swarms of night insects flew into my face, and little beasts scuttled rustling away as I disturbed them. I took a path which led through the high maize, which fenced it in like a wall. A few hundred yards from the first post, which was placed on a little mound, the maize ended and the reeds began. There the air changed and was stifling and scented, and the mosquito's rose in chanting swarms about me, of which a sentry stood, so statesque and vague that he seemed to be carved on the sky. The sergeant heard me and came to meet me.

"I want you to listen, sir," he said. "I've noticed something during the last few minutes which I can't make out."

I stood still and listened. A few frogs were barking lazily in the reeds below us; somewhere to the eastward a dog was baying to the stars. The world seemed very vast, aloof, eternal. I was just going to say that I could hear nothing unusual, when a great flock of birds swished past above me. And then I knew what the sergeant had heard. All the birds from the reeds ahead of us were on the move. I could pick out, though faintly, the "honk" of myriads of geese, and then I felt the air was full of birds swinging by, unseen, around us.

"I'll take one man, sergeant, and we'll cycle down and have a look; there's certainly something on the move down there."

In a minute we were off. I told my orderly to keep 30 yards behind me. I swung my flash lamp, with the flap down, over my back, so that he could just pick out the glow. If anything happened to me he was to ride back and give the alarm. Luckily I knew that path like Regent street otherwise to ride it at night would have been sudden death. We went 50 yards and were then cut off from the world by the stifling fence of reeds. After a quarter of a mile the path ran into the forest and died there. We dismounted and listened. I felt fairly certain that there was a good chance that a raiding party would come this way. It was the shortest and the quickest to our camp, and their guide through natural indolence, would probably take it. We waited for some time and then I heard the sharp crack of a breaking branch. Then silence again. I began to be very uneasy and started to think of all the things I ought to have done. If they were taking another route, I had left too much to the sergeant's discretion. He was on the alert, that was something.

Now that we were used to the darkness we could see fairly well for 80 yards or so. Thanks to that, I just got warning in time, for that line of men in single file were almost on top of us. "Do exactly what I do," I whispered to the orderly. I did not dare to mount for fear of the noise, so we walked the bikes back quickly and stealthily till the path turned a corner, and then I mounted and we were off like the wind. Back at the post I explained things hurriedly to the sergeant.

"I'll stay here and keep them under observation," I added. "I'm sending an orderly back to the camp at once, and we'll keep them informed of their movements."

It was rather a neat little operation. We got in touch with them again easily, and I kept informing the C. O. of their progress. They seemed roughly about 200 strong. I told the C. O. that when they reached the line of the little wood at the bottom of our hill, I'd fire four shots from my revolver. Up would go the Very light and things would begin. "All happened according to plan." They kept to the path till just before it left the maize. Then they halted and prepared to attack. They got into a loose sort of open order and came on quickly. At that moment I fired four shots. Immediately a light fizzed up. The glare was dazzling. There was a moment's silence and then a roar of fire. My little party chipped in from the flank. It was the finest surprise in history. They were bunched a bit close when they got it, and they must have had 50 casualties straight off. They didn't face it, but flung everything away and made for the maize. We immediately occupied the battlefield.

It was a nasty sight. The first person we picked up was the Boche officer in charge of the enterprise. He was hit in the thigh and was cursing Macedonia and his gallant allies with equal fluency and vigor. Altogether we counted 25 dead and 58 wounded. We wired for ambulances and had them all away by 10 next morning. We spent the day searching for the rest of them. Thirty-five surrendered at different places and others kept giving themselves up for several days. Very few can ever have got back. We learnt from prisoners that they had crossed a place known only to a few smugglers, by special boats brought down from Sofia. We got a very nice mention in the communique, and Thompson carved a tablet bearing a short account of these events and stuck it up on the battlefield.

Various Forms Of Headache

"It is necessary in order to treat headaches properly to understand the causes which produce the affection," says Dr. J. W. Ray, of Blockton, Ala. Continuing, he says, "Physicians cannot even begin the treatment of a disease without knowing what causes give rise to it, and we must remember that headache is to be treated according to the same rule. We must not only be particular to give a remedy intended to counteract the cause which produces the headache, but we must also give a remedy to relieve the pain until the cause of the trouble has been removed. To answer this purpose anti-kamnia tablets will be found a most convenient and satisfactory remedy. One tablet every one to three hours gives comfort and rest in the most severe cases of headache, neuralgia, and particularly the headaches of women.

"When we have a patient subject to regular attacks of sick headache and when he feels the least sign of an oncoming attack, he should take two A-K Tablets. Obtainable at druggists in any quantity desired."

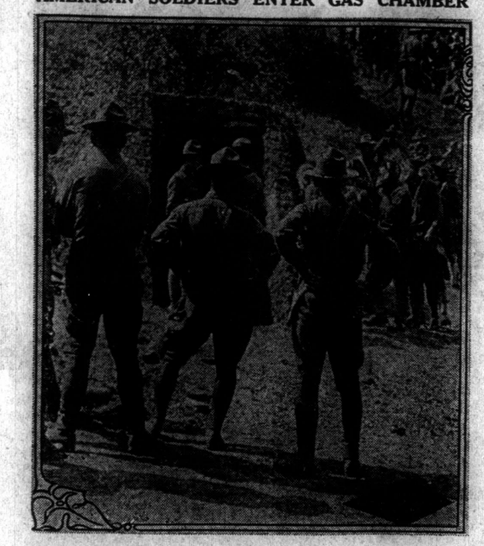
SPORT COMMENT

HORSE RACING BOOMING IN U. S. DESPITE THE WAR

Notwithstanding the fact that the late Canadian government saw fit to pass a measure, which brought about the cessation of horse racing for the duration of the war, the sport of kings is still booming in the United States, though the American republic is rushing men to training camps and to France.

Great success marked the meetings held this fall in Maryland, while in Kentucky the attendances have been large and great interest has helped make the meetings boom. California is going to revive racing and down in Cuba, George D. Brown is making plans for the most elaborate meeting the Cuban-American club has ever held. The Laurel meet now in progress continues until October 31.

The Latonia, Kentucky meeting opened on Saturday and will continue for 27 days. Havana opens on the American Thanksgiving Day, the last Thursday in November, and continues until March 24. The Montery Jockey Club, at Del Monte, California, will holh sdotam egnriet shr shrdl hr rd hold a short meeting October 27 to November 3, and in Reno, Nevada, they will have racing practically throughout the winter. New Orleans will have two big meetings and in several other points thoroughbreds will also perform.



It was thought that the cessation of the sport in Canada would result in many of the Canadian owners shipping to the American side, but comparatively few have so far done so, though Mr. George M. Hendries, Wilfrid Viau, Capt. Press, John Lumsden and others have had their silks displayed with success. England has resumed racing and in Ireland and France it is also booming. Rumors are current that a Racing Commission will be organized and hopes are entertained that the Canadian jockey clubs will be allowed to hold at least one meeting a each summer. Conscription will then be in effect and those opposed to the racing will be unable to complain that it is keeping young eligibles from carrying out their duties.

FRANK NIGHBOR WILL BE BIRDMAN

Frank Nighbor the brightest star of the Ottawa Hockey club's team last season and perhaps one of the greatest all 'round puckchasers in hockey today, is evidently out of the game. Nighbor was in Ottawa on business and he had interviews with Eddie Gerard and others of his confreres on the Ottawa club. Frank stated that he joined the aviation corps and that he was going to Toronto to arrange for his training course. He expects to be sent down to Texas for the winter as the flying school at Toronto will be closed until the warm weather returns again. Possibly he will take a preliminary course with some of the other corps before becoming a birdman, but in any event he is determined to get into the aerial game. Neighbor tried to enlist last year, but was turned down on account of an injured knee. This year the military regulations are not so strict and he hopes to get in by Class A 2. Nighbor is convinced that there will not be any professional hockey until after the war and is making plans accordingly. He has spent the summer months at his home town. Pembroke, where he has been operating an automobile service. He looks in great fettle and says he will regret to give up hockey.

Nighbor played dazzling hockey for the Ottawas in 1916 and 1917. Indeed it was largely through his Herculean individual efforts that the Senators were able to win out on the second half of last winter's championship race. He tied Joe Malone for the goal-scoring honors and had opposing defence men bewildered with his wonderful speed and brilliant stickhandling. Ottawans will wish Nighbor every success in his military career. He has nerve galore and should make a first class birdman.

Players Who Stand in the Limelight

JOSEPH JACKSON
(White Sox Outfielder)

For the first time in seven years as a major leaguer, "Shoeless" Joe Jackson has failed this season to rank with the .300 hitters in the American League.

Up to the time the White Sox swung into the home stretch in their race for the pennant Jackson's average ranged around .280.

Jackson's batting endeavors since he first became a major leaguer fixture with the Cleveland club in 1911 have been brilliant, but disappointing to him. The lowest average he has ever turned in prior to this year was .308 in 1915, and for three successive seasons, from 1911 to 1913, he made hot races for the batting championship of his league, only to be beaten out by Ty Cobb, the great Georgian.

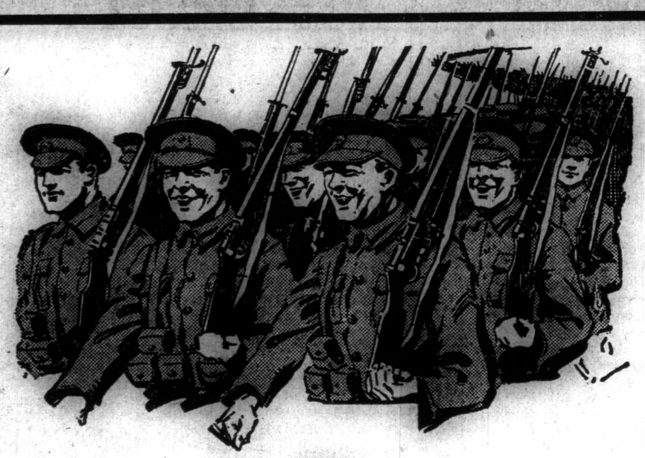
Jackson is one of the few players in the majors today who has batted better than .400. In 1911 he turned in a final average of .408 against .420 for Cobb. The following year he batted up with .410. In 1913 he hit .373 against .390 for the Georgia Peach. It has always been the same story—no matter how hard Jackson hit the ball his rival from Georgia walloped it just a little harder.

Jackson is now 30 years old, some eight months younger than Cobb, and as great ball players go he has at least five years more before him as a major leaguer. His batting average this year cannot be taken as an indication that he has gone back.

Like Cobb"Shoeless" Joe is a Southerner. He was born at Brandon Mills, S. C., July 16, 1887, and he first came into notice as a player with the Greenville town team, a semi-professional club, in 1907. The following year he was signed by the Greenville team of the Carolina association, and in 87 games he turned in a slugging record of .346.

Up to the season of 1911, when he came to the majors to stay, he played with several minor league teams, and was tried out twice by the Athletics and once by Cleveland. In his last year in the minors, at New Orleans in 1910 he batted .354 and he is one of the very few players who has come up to the majors and succeeded in a better batting average his first year up than he had made in the minors.

Always rated as one of the greatest players in the big leagues, Jackson was sought by many managers who tried to purchase him from the Cleveland club. But Charley Somers former owner of the Indians, would not part with his star.



Finally when Somers suffered a severe financial setback he was forced to sell Jackson, and the player went to the White Sox in August 1915, in a deal that involved more than $31,000. Players Roth and Klepfer were turned over to Cleveland for Jackson, and it is said that Comiskey laid out at least $25 000 in cold cash to complete the deal.

HORSE SENSE

There is a humane law in Moscow, Russia, which prohibits drivers of all kinds of vehicles from using whips. The general condition of the horses attests the wisdom and benefits of such a law.

The value of horses in the Unitd States, January 1, 1917, is placed by the Government at $12,174,629,000. Iowa leads in number of horses within the state: 1,552,000. Illinois comes next with 1,452,000.

It is the horse that has fought the wars of the world and won our human liberty. Besides this, he has broken our prairies, sown and harvested our grain, and delivered it to the markets of the world. He has carried messages of victory and sorrow, and down to the time of Washington he constituted the fastest mode of communication known, if we except only the carrie pigeon.

CANADA

Will Class One Provide The One Hundred Thousand Men?

It will be greatly to the advantage of Canada if the entire quota of 100,000 men to be raised under the Military Service Act can be secured from the first class; that is, from the men between the ages of 20 and 34 who were unmarried or widowers without children on July 6th, 1917.

This is almost self-evident for the following reasons:

it is admitted that, between the ages of 20 and 34, the average man is at the height of his physical strength and is most adaptable to the change of conditions from civilian life;

the military service of unmarried men and widowers without children would occasion less distress than that of most others, since they are largely without dependents. Also, it would entail less financial burden for Canada, through separation allowances, etc.

Authorities estimate that, after all proper exemptions have been allowed, Canada should be able to produce from the first class 100,000 men fit for service, so the drain upon the man power of the country will not be severe.

Members of Class One will be well advised to present themselves for examination immediately to the Medical Board in their district. Upon examination as to their physical fitness, they will be placed in one of the following categories:

Category A—if fit for service in overseas fighting units.
Category B—if fit for service overseas in Army Medical Corps, Forestry Battalion, etc.
Catagory C—if fit for service in Canada only.
Category E—if unfit for military service of any nature.

If not placed in Category A, the applicant will know that he is not liable for immediate service, but will go to the Post Office and send in a claim for exemption with his Medical Certificate attached, when he will receive in due course a certificate of exemption until those in his medical category are summoned for service.

Where a man, who is placed in category A, feels that exemption should be allowed, an application form can be secured from the postmaster. This form, when filled in, will be forwarded by the postmaster to the registrar of the district, and the applicant will be informed by mail as to the time and place for the consideration of his application by the Exemption Board.

Issued by The Military Service Council.

Things An Autoist Should Know

LATEST STYLES IN THE MOTOR WORLD

Suits for sporting wear are fur-rimmed and embellished with embroidery quite as elaborately as those used for other purposes. The difference is that the furs chosen are the short-haired variety and the embroidery is done in wools, the fancy stitching or the braided patterns. The extra cost in tunic type has almost replaced the short coat, though some women still cling to the improved models of the Norfolk. An example of the early autumn suits is one of black satin, with long double-breasted tunic coat edged at neck and wrists and at the bottom with bands of Alaska sable. The buttons are of black, with gold flecks through them, and there is pointed black satin, gold embroidered piece set in below the collar that shows when the fur is loosened. The coat is lined with pussy willow and interlined at the waist.

The new caps for men with the big puffy crowns and big plaids are becoming a permanent fall fashion. They are smart-appearing with the trench coats that are being worn in rough tweeds if not in khaki.

Fur capes are doing their best to push long coats into the background and for the early part of the season are likely to succeed. They are warm easily thrown off and left in the car, and have many good points. Made of short fur with long fur trimming, they are very pretty. High, tight collars are headed this way, and the comfortable, open-necked dresses and blouses are in danger.

Bolivia cloth and woods velour are popular materials for extra coats in the long loose models that have been popular throughout the season. Oddly belted, variously plaited and lined, and now fur trimmed, they are especially good for touring use. Seal and moleskin are used a great deal One of the prettiest coats is in mulberry duvetyn, with a large square collar and deep cuffs of moleskin. Pockets, so necessary in a garment of this sort, seem likely to stay with us, for all the new coats are most generously supplied with them.

Though prices of wool soar in company with those of other commodities, it is well to consider the home-made scarf and its superiority over those one may buy at reasonable price. Color, length and width may suit the taste of the knitter; they are not difficult to do and are bound to cost less than those offered in the shops. The aviator's knitted hood is also in danger of being borrowed for touring wear as the season advances. It is cozy and excellently adapted in shape for this use.

BAN JOHNSON HAS SIGN FOR OVERSEAS

New York.—The name of Edward G. Barrow, president of the International league, was pushed to the front in baseball gosip as the man who will succeed Ban Johnson as president of the American league when Mr. Johnson retires to enter the nation's military service, which he announced he would do only a few days ago.

Following the world's series baseball circles have also taken up the question of who is to succeed Wild Bill Donovan, if rumors are true that Donovan was to retire before the 1918 season. Miller Huggins, manager of the St. Louis Cardinals, was named as the most likely successor to Donovan as manager of the New York Yankees. Ira Thomas, fo several years first lieutenant of Connie Mack will take Huggins' place as manager of the Cardinals, according to these reports and the rumors also place John J. Evars in command of the late world champions, Red Sox of Boston.

"I will be in the trenches of France within six weeks," said Ban Johnson yesterday. "I am through with baseball until the end of the war. I'm going over to join Captain Huston. I'll bet you a new hat I beat him into the trenches. The American league is well fortified against the future. Its business men can carry it safely through whatever business depression war may involve. I am for the bigger game, for America, for democracy, for France for Belgium."

Harry H. Frazee, president of the Boston Red Sox and Mr. Johnson held a long conference here tonight, after which Mr. Frazee expressed the opinion that Mr. Barrow would be the next head of the American league. Mr. Johnson left his hotel here tonight and is believed to be on his way to Chicago.

FORD HAS A WORTHY AIM IN LIFE

In the course of a speech in the House on taxation of industial concerns Congressman Benjamin K.Focht of Pennsylvania recalled recently the astonishing financial successes of the Ford Motor company.

Mr. Focht asserted that after a three hour talk with Mr. Ford he had gone away with the conclusion that manufacturer has two great objects in life, which he believed to be:

"To give employment to the greatest possible army of men to works of peace at the highest wages paid in the world, so that they may live in comfort and peace: and to do all in his power to induce the military armies of the world to stop killing each other and bringing suffering on themselves and those dependent on them.

"The bigger our business gets, the easier it is to run," said Mr. Ford."

The marvelous growth of the Ford company's cash balance during the last four years Mr. Focht showed to be as follows:

1912 cash on hand and in banks	$ 6,400,100
1913 cash on hand and in banks	13,225,710
1914 cash on hand and in banks	27,441,468
1915 cash on hand and in banks	43,788,151
1916 cash on hand and in banks	52,550,771

"Besides that," continued Mr. Focht "their materials on hand were increaed in the same time from $6,629,533 to $31,895,434, and their investment in buildings grew from $2,596,115 to $17,293,293." He added.

the company was recently signed for $34,000,000 worth of rubber tires.

"If a man can show the company how to save ten cents on a car, it means a saving of over $50,000 a year to the company and places the man where he will not have to worry the rest of his life. Suggestions for improvements on the car are valued as highly as suggestions for saving money.'

"The trouble with mose manual training schools, or technical schools said Mr. Ford, in discussing his plan for a boy's training school at his plant, "is that the boy never gets into the heart of his work, because he knows that in the end it is not used."

"I want to take these boys, teach them to make small parts, instruct them in the operation of machines, and when doing it give them a sense of responsibility by utilizing their product. I want them to be able to see a definite purpos e in their labor."

"We do not intend to overlook their school work. Some of them will probably need to be taught to read and write and spell. Whereever we find that this is necessary we will give them such a course. Those who are ready will be given courses in mathamatics and drawing, specially chosen with the idea of assisting them in their work.

"I hope," said Mr. Ford, " that the future heads of our departments may come from this school. We like to develope our own stars, you know. We have found it is the only successful way. We promote men from the ranks."

HARVEST SALE

The Daddy of all Sales Scheduled to Start on the Morning of Tuesday October 30th

Don't you remember last year's Harvest Sale? Recollect how great the throngs of holiday shoppers? And the values offered were almost unbelievable.

And this year, with practically every merchandise market as "flighty" as a young college girl, we are actually selling good staple quality goods at prices the wholesalers are today quoting the small merchant.

How can we do this? Frankly, we cannot afford to, for when we go to market again, the rising cost of many of these lines will be staggering.

But—a standard store policy of this company—"clear in season"—must be adhered to.

Seems almost a shame to sell staple lines of merchandise at dollars less than we can repeat the order for.

But the Hudson's Bay Co. law says "GO".

So read Monday evening's Calgary papers. Read Tuesday morning's Albertan. Read this paper next Saturday.

These sheets will bristle with offers that positively cannot be repeated for years and years.

We Pay Round Trip Rail Road Fares to Calgary During Sale—on this Basis—

See Monday Evening Calgary Papers

ONE DOLLAR SPENT IN THIS STORE DURING THE 1917 HARVEST SALE FOR EACH MILE YOU TRAVEL TO REACH CALGARY ENTITLES YOU TO THE REFUND OF YOUR ROUND TRIP RAILROAD FARE. HALF OF THE AMOUNT YOU WOULD SPEND TO SECURE THE ABOVE, SECURES FOR YOU YOUR ONE WAY FARE REFUND.

TO ILLUSTRATE THIS, PERHAPS A BIT MORE CLEARLY: WE'LL SAY, FOR SAKE OF EXAMPLE, THAT YOU LIVE AT COCHRANE, ALBERTA. THIS SPOT IS 22 MILES FROM CALGARY. TO SECURE A REFUND OF YOUR ROUND TRIP FARE COME TO CALGARY DURING THE HARVEST SALE (ANY DAY BETWEEN OCTOBER 30TH AND NOVEMBER 10TH) AND SPEND $22.00 AT THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY. IF YOU SPEND $11.00 YOUR ONE WAY FARE WILL BE RETURNED TO YOU.

The Biggest Buyer In All the World

How Edward R. Stettinius Bought Ten Million Dollars' Worth of Goods Daily for the Allies

All the purchasing for the allied governments in the United States was done through J. P. Morgan & Co., and devolved actually on the shoulders of one man—Edward R. Stettinius. He thus became entitled to be called the biggest buyer in the world, unless an exception were made of David Lloyd George who directed the munitions industry of Britain and indirectly bought everything that the British army needed. Stettinius, however, personally directed the buying done by Morgans which at one time ran to a total of ten million dollars daily. Stettinius made a real success of this stupendous task as B. C. Forbes reveals in an article in the American Magazine. Part of the story is told in Mr. Stettinius' own words:

"When Morgan partners learned from Mr. Davison, who was then in London, that the firm would probably be asked to buy material for the British government, they called me in, explained that they would like me to look after whatever became necessary, but said they did not expect the work would occupy my whole time or cause me to give up my position in the Diamond Match company," said Mr. Stettinius. "I consented on that understanding. But when the official announcement came on January 15, 1915, that Morgan & company had been appointed commercial agents for the British government, nobody realized what the duties would mean, nor had anyone any information as to what materials were required.

"The Morgan office was swamped, not with hundreds, but thousands of people anxious to sell all kinds of things. There were manufacturers, both responsible and irresponsible, of clothing, machinery, hardware, chemicals, surgical instruments, automobiles and what not, there were merchants, commission agents, horse dealers, inventors, and war brokers by the score. After listening to the stories of the typical war broker, you would have thought that four or five million rifles, one or two billion pounds of rifle cartridges, and millions of pounds of picric acid and powder could be picked up almost anywhere for immediate delivery. Everything was in a state of chaos.

At the British End

"Obviously, the things to be undertaken at the start were to ascertain the requirements of the British government, to determine just what munitions or materials could be furnished by America, and, finally, to separate the responsible from the irresponsible offerers of goods here.

"How to determine the needs of the British government and arrive at a decision as to what work should be done at home and what work attempted here, how in short, to straighten out the thousand and one matters at the other end, and convey detailed information to us with the brevity demanded by cable dispatches was a task calling for a rare order of ability. Fortunately, one of the Morgan firm in London, Charles F. Whigham, rose to the occasion splendidly, and whatever success has attended the work here has been due in large measure to the services he rendered and has rendered persistently throughout. His grasp of the whole situation, his ability to understand the needs of the different departments in London, his skill in suggesting what could be done here, resulted time after time in enabling us to forge a link in a chain which otherwise would not have been made effective.

"We thus had right off the first essential factor for securing intelligent co-operatin between the British war department and us.

Character a Big Factor

"A large proportion of the stuff the British wanted here during the first twelve months of the war had never been produced in the United States before, outside of our own arsenals, except to a very limited extent. Our initial problem was how to start up the wholesale manufacture of munitions. Existing plants were totally inadequate; but how and where should we begin to develop others? To what extent could concerns making other things transform their machinery and equipment into plants for the output of munitions? Would steel plants be the most suitable, or automobile works, or car building works—or what?

"We were embarking on an uncharted sea. We had no compass, no precedents to guide us. It was an absolutely new industrial problem. It not only involved many millions of dollars, but possibly the lives of thousands of men; serious mistakes would occasion delays and dangers of far more moment than the heavy money loss. Some plan, some principle, some policy had to be adopted, and adopted quickly.

"After careful study, we decided that in placing war contracts we would have to be guided less by the nature of any concern's product than by the character of the men at the head. We figured that the layout or any plant, the design of the buildings or the kind of machinery in it was of minor importance to the degree of success that had been exhibited in running it. In other words, bricks and mortar, machines and tools, were not what we went by, but the brains that administered these things.

"Through the knowledge and experience and ramifications of those in the Morgan firm, we had a good idea who and what was what throughout the manufacturing world. We knew the men who had demonstrated unusual ability in different lines, and we got into touch with them, no matter what they were producing. Meanwhile we were selecting men to negotiate for the purchase of the varied materials we were required to purchase; and in three months had perfected an organization."

"What qualities and qualifications did you particularly seek in the men you gathered around you to look after the buying of materials?" I asked Mr. Stettinius, who, you may have noticed, always spoke of "we" while he might more accurately have said "I."

"First of all," Mr. Stettinius replied, "we made sure of a man's absolute integrity, loyalty, and ability to keep his mouth shut.

"We believed that men who had had practical experience along engineering and manufacturing lines could more effectively negotiate for the purchase of munitions than a man with a purely commercial experience. A man of technical training who has successfully supervised or conducted manufacturing operations in any line, and who has learned how to handle men, is usually able to deal successfully with new problems.

"As we negotiated, say, for shells we interviewed the concerns who had applied for contracts—we had been flooded by requests for orders. Also, we communicated with companies and firms whom we knew had the right kind of management.

"Usually we invited each concern to bring in its technical man, the man who would have direct charge of the work. An important part of our duty was to size up each of these technical men, to determine whether or not they had the earmarks of success.

Middle Men Eliminated

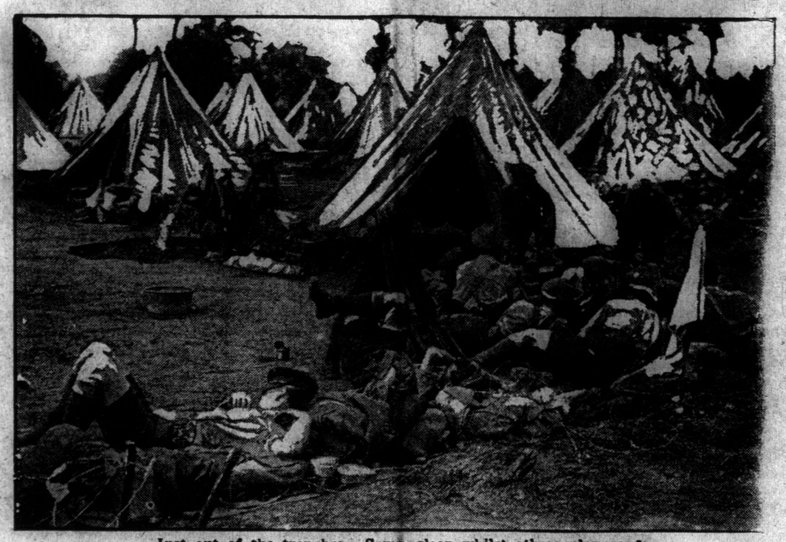
"In many cases where contracts had been solicited, we found that the would-be manufacturers knew little about what the work called for. Brokers and middlemen of all sorts and conditions plagued us; but we abolished all this bother by refusing to deal with any but principals, for we concluded that the broker was a handicap to the government, and that any company that was not strong enough to rely on its own position and its own record to come and get business was not likely to merit confidence.

"To assist us in the selection of contractors, in the investigation of the facilities and organizations of bidders, and subsequently to speed up production after contracts had been closed, we organized what, for want of a better name, was called the munitions board. It was made up chiefly of engineers, working under the direction of an artillery officer of the British government. As the volume of business expanded and as deliveries increased, this board was enlarged and its scope extended under the direction of a direct representative of the British ministry of munitions. Similar organizations were formed by the French government, and all co-ordinated with the inspection and shipping departments of their respective governments with a view of expediting to the utmost the manufacture, inspection, and shipment of materials to the seaboard."

An official statement made in the British house of commons revealed that the Allies' purchases in America reached ten million dollars daily. Think of it! Of these purchases, a figure without parallel in history, the banking firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. had to handle a large share. In no previous year had all the foreign countries of the world combined taken any such quantity of American products. And on one man, Edward R. Stettinius, a quiet, unobtrusive, untrumpeted American citizen, fell the burden of marshaling and managing the practical, non-financial end of the task.

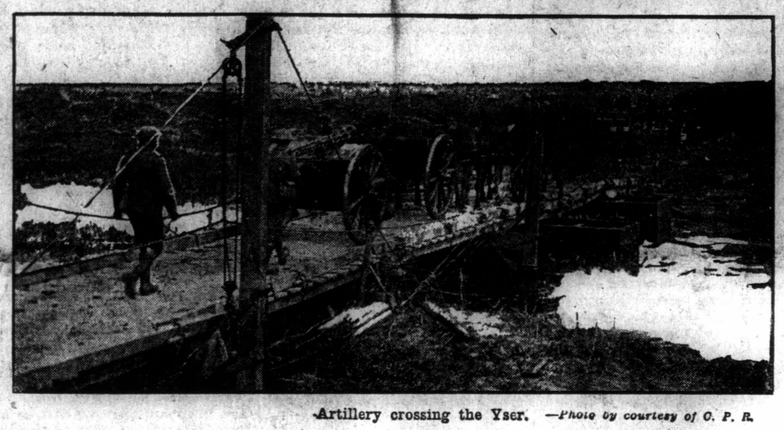
Around him Stettinius had drawn a score or more of large-calibre engineering, manufacturing and commercial experts, and a total organization of a hundred and seventy-five men, not one of whom, not even a single clerk, had been selected haphazardly, but because of his enthusiasm, his aptitude, and his indifference to the clock.

"Slaves of Stettinius"



Some of the men in the organization formed what they termed the "S.O.S.," which, translated, means, "Slaves of Stettinius."

"Yes," admitted Mr. Stettinius, "that is what they called themselves, but there never was a more willing and more cheerful body of slaves. Every one of us worked all day and late into the evening. If any fellow quit at nine o'clock at night he was usually congratulated by the others on being able to take a half-holiday. I have seen something of different organizations of workers, but I have never in my life known such sustained, white-heat enthusiasm, such determination to get things done, such disregard of personal convenience and comfort, such self-sacrifice.



Only once did I receive a mild shock, and that was when one of our most promising young men came and asked me if he could have the next Saturday off. This was an unprecedented request. I asked him if it was absolutely necessary. He became confused, but repeated that he would like very much to go if it could be arranged. 'Can't you postpone what you have in mind?' I asked. 'Not very well,' he said, blushing furiously. 'What do you want to do?' I asked. 'I am going to get married!' he blurted out. I hastened to assure him that he must take not a day, but a week or two off. 'No, sir,' he replied, in a tone of finality, 'my fiancee and I are both too strongly pro-ally in our sympathies to be willing to take our honeymoon until the war is over.'

"That reveals the esprit de corps which permeated the whole force from bottom to top."

CLASSING MEN FOR SERVICES

Those in First Class Under Military Service Act Are Placed in Grades

Ottawa, Oct. 26.—Only those men found physically fit for combatant service overseas by the medical boards will be included in the first quotas called to the colors under the Military Service Act. All such men are now being placed by the examiners in Category A.

Men not in flawless physical condition are being classed as to their fitness for war service in non-combatant units, either in Canada or overseas according to the shape they are in. Such men may be called up later and re-examined or they may be called for non-combatant services. The immediate need, of course, is for men fit for active service.

Experience shows that the physical condition of men varies greatly; that is, a man may improve greatly in a few weeks or months. Some of those passed as fit by the medical boards recently had been rejected by the doctors when they had applied for enlistment in the volunteer forces. A-13

KING LEOPOLD WAS ARRESTED FOR DEBT

Prince Frederich Leopold, of Prussia, who has been placed under arrest by order of the Kaiser for refusing to pay the debts he contracted whilst acting as general in command at Munich, is a cousin of the Kaiser and married a sister of the German Empress.

His latest experience is not a novel one for him. He was placed under arrest by the Kaiser some years ago for failing to attend manouvres, and deprived of his command in the army. In a speech made subsequently to the tenants on his estate, he said that the Kaiser had "relieved him of the troublesome business of playing soldier." He was re-instated in the army two years before the war broke out.

The Kaiser Fixed Date of War in July, 1914

Hostilities Were Decided On at This Meeting Which Included All His Advisers—Financiers Then Raided the Market

New York.—This war was no accident. Neither did it come about through the temporary breakdown of European diplomacy. It was carefully planned and deliberately executed in cold blood. The spirit and motives that brought about the war between Prussia and Denmark, the war between Prussia and Austria and the war between Prussia and France. It was undertaken in the furtherance of a definite program of Prussian imperialism.

Since my return from France, where I visited the front and had many frank conferences with French statesmen and generals, and with British commanders as well, it has been more and more impressed on me that every American who has had opportunities to peep behind the scenes and see for himself how this terrible tragedy was staged owes it to his fellow-countrymen to give them all the information in his possession which will enable them to visualize the menace that has been hanging over the great republic and still hangs over it because of the Prussian mania for world power. The premeditation is now proved, and any American who withholds evidence becomes an accessory after the fact to Germany's crimes.

Whenever the question of peace is raised, the kaiser solemnly asserts that he did not will this war, but that with the help of the good German God, he will see it through to the end. He did will this war, and he brought it about when it suited his purposes and his preparations. The Serbian incident was more than an excuse. It was an opportunity.

Visit to Ambassador

On August 18, 1914, as American ambassador at Constantinople, I called on the Marquis of Pallovicini, the Austro-Hungarian ambassador, to congratulate him on the emperor's 84th birthday. After exchanging the usual diplomatic compliments suitable to such an occasion, he spoke of the condition of the emperor's health and his great physical and mental activity in spite of the strain to which he was subjected. The conversation then turned to the war, which was in its third week, and his excellency told me that when he visited the emperor in May his imperial majesty had said that war was inevitable because of conditions in the Balkans.

The Austrian crown prince was murdered at Sarajevo on June 28; yet weeks before that the Austrian emperor had confided to his ambassador to Turkey that war was inevitable.

A still more remarkable confirmation came to me from Baron Wangenheim, the German ambassador at Constantinople. In an outburst of enthusiasm after the arrival of the Goeben and the Breslau in the Dardanelles, he having directed their movements by wireless while they were endeavoring to escape from the British fleet, the German ambassador informed me that a conference had been held in Berlin in the early part of July at which the date of the war was fixed.

Two Weeks for Loans

This conference was presided over by the kaiser; the Baron Wangenheim was present to report on conditons in Turkey, Moltke, the chief of staff, was there and so was Grand Admiral von Tirpitz. With them were the leaders of German finance, the directors of the railroads and the captains of industry whose aid was essential to the kaiser in putting his vast military machine into operation. Each was asked if he was ready for war. All replied in the affirmative except the financiers, who insisted that they must have two weeks in which to sell foreign securities and arrange their loans.

At the time this conference was held, nobody outside the inner circles of the Berlin and Vienna governments dreamed of war as a result of the Sarajevo assassinations. They took good care that no suspicion should be aroused. The kaiser went straightway to Norway on his yacht. The chancellor left Berlin for a rest.

Markets All Raided

From the date of this conference the German financiers were busy with their part while the army marked time. All the great stock exchanges experienced an acute financial depression as German-owned stocks were quietly pushed into the market. In New York, as I found afterward, there were astonishing slumps in quotations. Between July 10 and July 25, which was two days before the ultimatum was sent to Serbia, Union Pacific dropped from 164¾ to 125¼, Baltimore and Ohio went from 90¼ to 78¼, and United States Steel slumped with the railroad stocks.

No adequate explanation was offered, and in the absence of anything better there were bitter complaints against the Simmons-Underwood tariff as the source of all economic evil. The tariff had as little to do with it as the federal reserve act, which was not yet enacted into law. There was financial depression and a general decline in market quotations because the German financiers were carrying out their part of the kaiser's war plans.

Told It to Others

It was not to me alone that Baron Wangenheim told the story of this Berlin conference. Only recently the Marquis Garroni, the Italian ambassador at Constantinople, announced that Baron Wangenheim said the same thing to him, Italy at that time being a member of the Triple Alliance.

Just as Bismarck had plotted and contrived to unite the German states by war and to create an empire dominated by Prussia, so the kaiser had brooded over his own dream of making Germany the master state of the world.

Throughout all his policies for a quarter of a century runs this Weltmacht motif, like the motif of a Wagnerian opera. Everything that was done or left undone had its inspiration in this single purpose. Year in and year out, the kaiser brooded over this ambition, in which he was the central figure of a stupendous moving picture, directing and controlling the destinies of the world.

Prince Henry's Visit

In pursuance of the war plans of the kaiser and the pan-Germans who inspired him and probably used him as the agent for their ambitions, the world was besieged by armies of Prussian spies, advancing Prussian interests and doing Prussia's work everywhere. Not a nation escaped this infamous invasion.

The kaiser's brother, Prince Henry, was sent to the United States ostensibly to assist in the launching of the imperial yacht, in reality to rekindle among Americans of German descent their Vaterland's lebe and organize them into German societies that could be directed from Berlin to suit the exigencies of the imperial policy.

At least 80,000 Germans were turned loose upon Spain and probably a quarter of a million upon England. France was overrun with them. There was no occupation, calling or industry in which they did not make their way. They swarmed over South America, over the Near East and the Far East and all of them were card indexed for the uses of Berlin. Nothing was overlooked.

It was Bernhardi who formulated the battle cry of kaiserism as it seized the sword—Weltmacht oder Niedergang—world-mastery or downfall. William II decreed the war.

In the providence of God, the American people under Woodrow Wilson, together with their allies, can decree the peace, and there must be no compromise. Absolutism must be destroyed, root and branch. Only then can the world have a new birth of freedom.

COMMENTS AND CRITICISM

DISLOYALTY IN CONGRESS

In connection with the published report that Count Bernstorff asked his government for $50,000 to influence congress against war, Congressman J. Thomas Heflin, of Alabama, was quoted as saying that he knew of 14 members of the house who were under suspicion of being influenced and that he had heard stories of German resort in Washington where pro-German members were allowed to win money at cards.

ALL HAIL TO THE FARMER

While the country is giving credit to the manufacturers and others for the good they are doing for the country they must not forget the farmer who has demonstrated by the wonderful production of this year that he has the welfare of the country at heart as much as the city folk.

The fact that he is going to profit by this great production in dollars and cents is not the only reason that he has strained every effort to increase the supply. He has felt in many instances that it was his country he was working for and because the times have been propitious for his efforts does not necessarily mean that he would not have given the same loving labor to the work if the price had been down instead of up.

The people of the countr have the same general patriotic feeling as the people in the urban settlements. The spirit of determination for victory is just as pronounced and while it may not be as prominently exhibited still the determination and feeling is there to the last man.

The farmer is doing his part.

HOW TO FIND THE POOR

You live in a comfortable neighborhood. All those you call your neighbors have comfortable habitations, plenty to eat, and good clothes. Quite likely you think of poverty as something at a distance, which you must go considerably out of your way to find. But every day you are stepping over knee-deep poverty, as a man crosses a puddle on stepping-stones.

The maid in your kitchen; the man who is digg'ng a ditch in the street in front of your house; those who come to your door delivering things; the woman who is scrubbing the corridor when you leave your office a bit late; the boy from whom you buy your evening newspaper—all those who work for a small wage and live among people of small, uncertain incomes—are rubbing elbows with poverty daily. They personally know of cases where the bread-winner is ill; where the mother leaves young children at home and goes out for day's work. Only an age-long system of exclusive groupings keeps us from being miserably aware of poverty within reach of our hand at every moment.

A sour thought, you say? You can make it more palatable by a good gift to the poor. The best of all gifts—maybe the only really good gift—is that which carries something of yourself along with the money. Organized giving to the poor is a shameful necessity. There is nothing now to take its place, and you can't escape an obligation by pleading that organized giving is only a substitute for real charity.

Give to the organization; or, better still, add your own time and direct sympathy to the money, and give intelligently at first hand.

PROSPERITY IS RATIONAL SPENDING

A people are prosperous when they spend within their means but rationally and not penuriously—spend for things that really add to the comfort of life and make it better worth living. Such expenditure is not "waste", for in the long run we all go up or down together, and the family which does not deny itself as comfortable a home, as good food, as good clothing as are within its means helps itself by helping others. It provides work and wages for others through whose prosperity demand is increased for its own skill, ability and products.

We have had too much talk about "nare times". We have thought too much for our own good about the "awful waste" of war elsewhere.

It is awful, but it isn't wasting us.

Canada is a good investment. Now is the time to back it. The returns will be ample. All we have to do is to have confidence in our own ability, our common sense and our destiny.

FARMING ELEMENT SHOULD COME

The advantage of the fairs which are held annually and sometimes semi-annually in Calgary and other thriving communities of the west have been demonstrated over and over again. They act as an educational institution to the farmers and ranchers besides being a momentous trip of fun and pleasure that helps to break the seeming dull monotony of the farmers' life.

Calgary has held a number of these exhibitions yearly and the fact that they are well patronized each year proves conclusively how the people of the country look upon these shows.

Next week another one will be held in Calgary. This time the livestock raisers and farmers generally will be interested in this exhibition.

It is hoped that the farming element will come in a body and take advantage of this great opportunity not only to see the choice breeds of cattle and livestock which will be on exhibition and in some cases will be auctioned off but also bring their families and make a fall excursion of this momentous event in Alberta's farming history.

AUTOMOBILE THIEVES

If a man takes another man's automobile he is no longer a citizen in good standing. He becomes a low-down thief and the police hunt him industriously with telephone, telegraph, motorcycle and any other means available. The offender is put behind the bars, where it is hoped he will reflect and decide to respect other people's property.

But suppose a man already has an automobile that he has paid or promised to pay for, and he goes out along the country roads and robs the farmers of anything that happens to be near the fence—apples, green corn, melons, berries, nuts, even chickens. Does he expect to languish in jail for ignoring an owner's rights? Oh, no! It's just a good joke on the old farmer, who thought he was going to have the stuff himself, but got fooled at the last minute. Anyway, farmers have acres and acres of growing things that didn't cost them much except a little sweat and elbow grease and patience.

A man told us one day with a great deal of enjoyment how he had stopped his car beside a cornfield and let his boy climb over the fence and pick a dozen well-filled ears for dinner. The appearance of the indignant owner added zest to the adventure and they got away with the booty. This man thinks he is a law-abiding citizen and never would think of encouraging his son to steal from a grocer or to take a bottle of milk from a neighbor's doorstep. Really there's no difference.

In the past, when there were few automobilists, it didn't make much difference to the farmer what kind of moral sense they had; but now his pocketbook is touched and he is getting sore. He grows crops to sell and to feed his family, not to furnish entertainment and free lunch for foraging parties from town, who not only steal but break the trees and bushes and litter up the roadside with picnic refuse.

We should like to see those light-hearted offenders fined and jailed. In the old days farmers had horse-thief societies that did effective work in rounding up men who took their horses. We suggest similar organizations for landing the new offenders where they belong.

A PREMIUM ON MANAGEMENT

More farms fail because of poor management than because of poor farming. This is a cold fact that has been brought out in testing the farm enterprise by the business man's test, as is done in the farm surveys.

Good management can often make a success even with mediocre work with crops and livestock, but a good stockman or a careful cultivator will usually fail if he is a poor manager.

The vital thing is management. It becomes more important as cost of production rises and other complications—labor shortage and market variations—enter in as they have this year. With a steady market and a fixed cost of production a margin is assured, and the operation of a farm is a simple matter of cultivation. Bad practices in the fields may not begin to cut down an income for several seasons.

Price fixing will help the poor manager and tend to stabilize his business. He has only production problems to struggle with, though this year these are serious enough at the best.

Good farm management, in its broad sense, involves keeping the business constantly in hand, ready to make changes to meet any emergency that may arise. Records and accounts are essential, but they are only a part of the equipment.

A fixed rotation and cropping system is a link in the chain, but it is not sufficient to make any farm successful. The vital thing is to know the increases in value and cost of every line of production as they come along, so as to foresee losses and be able to forestall them.

A detailed plan to start with, cost accounting as the season goes along, and several optional methods of utilizing every crop and by-product give the only safe basis upon which to anticipate a profit. Some farmers learn good management by slow and expensive experience, but there is a short cut—observation.

This is the method the county agent uses, and our best farmers are usually keen observers and frequent travelers in their neighborhood. Every neighborhood has farmers who are producing for the same markets, under the same conditions, yet are operating on a variety of plans. In this variety lies the chance for everyone to safeguard himself.

In this year of new and difficult complications every bit of aid that can be had is needed. The loosely managed place is moving on quicksand. The trouble can be forestalled only by anticipating it.

Good management is the only success insurance.

AN AMERICAN EXPERT OF CANADA

Among distinguished American men of affairs who have recently visited Canada for the purpose of personally investigating the country's prospects and opportunities is Mr. Clinton B. Evans, Editor of "The Economist," and Western editorial representative of the Philadelphia Public Ledger. In a recent article in the "Philadelphia Public Ledger" Mr. Evans has some things to say of Canada which makes interesting reading.

"Purpose and other combination of effort have achieved wonders with seemingly smaller material other than that which nature has provided. The bank deposits of Canada are about the same as those of the one city of Chicago, that is, $1,500,000,000, and yet within a generation a huge wild aggregation of mountain, plain and river has been set up among the nations with its 3700 miles from Atlantic to Pacific. A government which conceives its duty to be the promotion of the people's interests, a railroad company which "spans the world" with rail and steamship, a population with the vigor and ambition of pioneers, a tradition that runs its trail back to the days of Charles the Second, over the history of the Hudson's Bay Company—these are some of the potencies that have given a colony the pride of an empire.

"Then Canada has two rich uncles. More of a favorite with British investors than India or Australia has been this stretch of the Western Hemisphere, and the United States has turned in its funds freely. It is not merely that the Canadian Pacific was largely constructed with money from these sources and that huge and beautiful hotels were built. A country that raises prize wheat on the fifty-ninth parallel, that is more than 1100 miles north of Chicago, that claims one-seventh of the known coal deposits of the world in the province of Alberta alone, that has untold mineral wealth in its mountains, does not appeal in vain to the owners of investible capital. For temporary accomodation, as well as large loans, the United States is handy. Banking relations are close and liberal balances are carried in American cities. There will be a stronger invitation than ever to the capital of the States now that so great an overstrain has been placed on the resources of London. In small sums, too. Ninety per cent of the tourist travel in normal years is American.

"It seems all very American in spite of some British architecture in the cities, the Scotch brogue everywhere and the French in the eastern provinces. Relations with our northmost towns, S. Paul, Minneapolis and Seattle, are close. "The States" are not foreign.

"The United States, notably Chicago can learn something from the new Canada. Winnipeg claims to handle more wheat than any other point in this continent. Meats will come next. The tendency to locate all hese industries at points far outlying from Chicago. But stringent invitation is in cheap lands and the vigor of a northern population. It will be a healthy competition with our people, who perhaps are too content with their prosperous lot.

CANADA

How best to Serve

Every Canadian can help in the successful application of the Military Service Act

THE Military Service Act is the law of the land. It will be enforced sincerely and with firmness, but fairly. Reinforcements to be raised are limited to 100,000 men, who are being selected by the country, not by the military authority. Military control does not start until these men are chosen.

The Men Called Can Help

The first call is for men between the ages of 20 and 34 inclusive, who were unmarried or widowers without children on July 6, 1917. All these men should go immediately before a Medical Board in this district for examination as to physical fitness. If they are not placed in the Medical Category A., their present obligation ceases. If found physically fit and placed in Category A., they should, immediately after the issue of the proclamation calling out the first class, visit the nearest post office and report for service on a printed form supplied. If reasonable ground for claiming exemption exists, an exemption form may be obtained from the Postmaster, and filled out. The Postmaster will forward this form to the Registrar appointed for the district, and the man seeking exemption will then be advised by mail when and where he should appear before an Exemption Board to have his case taken up.

The Employer's Part

Employers will find it to their advantage to see that all the men in their employ who are in the first class under the Military Service Act appear as soon as possible before a Medical Board for examination. Should an employer desire exemption for any one of his men who is found physically fit, he may seek it on the following grounds:

(1) that the national interest demands that a man be left at his work rather than placed in military service.

(2) that, instead of doing military service, a man should be used in work for which he has special qualifications.

(3) that it is expedient in the national interest that instead of being employed in military service, he should continue to be educated or trained for any work for which he is then being educated or trained.

Duty of Parent or Near Relative

Parents or near relatives of men in the class called may apply for their exemption on the above grounds or because of some special domestic reasons. In this, as in other cases, delay is a grave mistake.

CROWN AND BRIDGE WORK
OUR GREAT SPECIALTY

ARE you contemplating Crown and Bridge Work? If so, do not make the mistake so many others have made, namely, having the work done by other than a specialist in this branch of dentistry. In order to be successful in Crown and Bridge Work, an intimate knowledge of this work, combined with mechanical skill and years of experience is required.

¶ The lack of these qualifications explains the failure to attain strength, durability, its natural appearance, and sanitation, all of which are so very important.

¶ By visiting our offices you will readily appreciate the fact that we are thoroughly equipped with the most modern appliances for the proper execution of this work, and a test of skill will convince you, as it has hundreds of others, who have been wearing our crowns and bridges for years with perfect satisfaction, that all the assertions we have made are entirely justifiable.

THE DRESSY BLOUSE IS FASHION'S DECREE

The dressy blouse is indisputably a necessary adjunct to the well-equipped wardrobe. And now that the "costume" idea has taken such hold upon our fancies, this pretty complement to the costume cannot be dispensed with. Again the sports idea must be reckoned with. And most women who would be in the very front rank of the mode are sorely divided in opinion concerning blouse types. "Shall I be frilly feminine or smartly tailored?" they ask. Yes, you may be either, and still be in unimpeachable style; but how about a compromise? There's a whole quintet of suggestions in the blouses illustrated.

There is chic a-plenty in that chartreuse Georgette with its trig little turnovers of white satin at neck and wrists. And that exquisite bead work in jet and chalk beads gives it quite all the dressiness that could be desired. Note, too, that necks are rising.

Chiffon, soft and filmy, always was a favorite of milady. But the plain-colored stuffs are so disgracefully diaphanous that they just had to be self-decorated. Here is one of the results of the decoration in a chiffon printed in rose, old blue and white. A bit of old-blue faille ribbon about the high neck and sleeves sets the whole thing off to perfection.

The two-toned blouse, two-toned everything, in fact, is having its day and a glorious day at that. As an illustration of the charm of this type of blouse take, for example, the one with the point in back. There is one in front, too. And this delightful soutaching does its bit in emphasizing the attractive cut.

It seems incongruous, doesn't it—Georgette a la militaire? But it isn't a bit; in fact, it's pre-eminently attractive. Look at the rust and sand with the distinctly military buttons "at the front" and see for yourself. And just to preserve the feminine idea, there is a splash of metal thread embroidery introduced on the collar, the epaulets and the cuffs.

Much has been said about the little touch of white. With the well-dressed it is an inviolable rule. And one worth adhering to, when you consider the universal becomingness of the tucked and vested model. A tucked amethyst blouse of marquisette with dainty white collar and vestee, a bit of white satin piping and then satin turnovers at the sleeve ends—now, doesn't that sound delectable?

Apple Turnovers

Put 1 pint of flour into a bowl, add ½ teaspoon of salt, 2 level teaspoons of baking powder; mix thoroughly, then rub into the mixture 1 tablespoon of butter and add sufficient milk to make a soft dough. Roll out in a sheet ½ inch thick; cut with a biscuit cutter into circles. Put 2 tablespoons of stewed apples on half the dough; fold over the other half, pinch the edges together, place these in a baking pan, brush with little milk and bake for 20 minutes.

HOUSEHOLD EXPENDITURES HOW TO REGULATE THEM

The burning question of home finance, nine cases out of ten, is "How much money for clothes?" A house once rented or bought, the problem of shelter and consequent heating, lighting and carfare is irrevocably settled Food seldom causes dissension. Did you ever know a man embittered because his wife set too good a table Never! He is always a silent partner may groan over the bills but he will not reproach his wife! The tilt is always between the clothing account and what students of home economics term "higher life," which includes recreation, means culture and savings.

The husband may overestimate the wisdom of saving, his wife the social asset of fine clothes, or the man wshes "to put up a front," while his retiring wife is denying herself comforts to help him "get ahead."

After a period of spoken or unspoken heart burnings, embittered feeling and discouragement, one of two things happens, according to the nature of the man. The "gentle" man turns his pay envelope over to his wife, with all the resignation he can summon. The "masterful" man keeps all that is in his and places his wife in a less desirable economic position than a millhand.

If a man has any doubts as to his wife's work in the home being worth real money let him hire a substitute for a time. When his lady assumes her old duties once more he will be better able to adjust the economic question fairly and accurately. The wife won't generally be the loser by such a proceeding.

To make a fair distribution of means and decide just how much money ought to go for clothes, submit the matter to a board of arbitration. The best available board is composed of trained economists who have given the matter of division of income thorough research. These people tell us that the proper percentages for clothing with small incomes are as follows:

80	12	15
1.00	15	15

After having figured out what part of your money should be for clothes, the sum should be fairly proportioned among various members of the family. There are "dudes" whose wives go shabby and whose children are dressed in other people's "cast-off." There are many more women in chiffon blouses, silk stockings and white pumps trailing through our parks beside tired, rough-handed mechanics wearing $10 suits and 50 cent hats There are millions of smart looking daughters of dowdy middleaged parents. There are mothers whom we would mistake for the nurse-maids of the embroidered, lace garnished beribboned youngsters they attend were it not for the assiduous, loving care these women bestow upon their charges. In such cases the family dress allowance is not evenly distributed.

The smaller the dress allowance the more necessary is it to plan it carefully. It will be necessary to buy carefully and to take good care of things. Shopping is an art, and like other arts has its fundamental principals. Here are some of them.

For everyday clothes which will get hard wear select the best materials and dark colors.

Indulge your fancy for light colors in washable fabrics or party clothes to be little worn.

Never buy clothes unless you have felt the need of them, or are sure you are going to feel such need.

Never shop when tired, blue or in a hurry.

Beware of fading colors, especially wash goods.

By avoiding the heigth of fashion you can wear any article of dress much longer.

Have a foundation for color for your wardrobe and be sure that each new purchase "goes well" with things on hand.

Until experienced in shopping, take a friend with you who is so, if possible.

Beware of the flattering, insistent saleswoman who calls you "my dear." Don't let her induce you to spend $30 for a coat when you can afford only $10; don't let her urge you to buy anything that is unbecoming or unsuitable.

Be careful when remnants tempt you. A woman often tries to save in this way and finds after getting home that she has more goods than she needs, or else too little so that the material proves useless or is made into something which wasn't really necessary.

Set the price limit before leaving home. In all the big city stores genuine sales are matters of daily occurrence. Whether you want gloves or shoe laces, you can nearly always find a place where the desired article is "reduced" if you hunt.

In regard to sales, they are an economy or otherwise according to the use you make of them. If they lead you to buy that which you would not otherwise get (which is what the merchant hopes to induce you to do) they are an extravagance. If when your need is real you wait until you can get the articles at a reduced price the sale means thrift for you.

Very cheap things are seldom worth buying. Whatever else you buy, buy satisfaction.

Learning trade names and reliable makes will assist you in this even though the initial cost of an article be more.

Keep all clothes proportionate. Don't wear a $10 hat with a $10 suit, nor a $2 hat with a $30 suit. Don't spend so much on your gown that there is nothing left for new shoes and gloves.

White is the most economical choice for summer if you can do your own laundry work.

Buy for cash and at cash stores if you can.

Both ready made and home made clothes have their ardent supporters. Every season factories are sending out more and better garments for less money. If a woman is a skillful shopper and can get the benefit of sales in the large cities she can usually buy clothes even more cheaply than she can make them. Moreover, she knows beforehand just how they look, fit and become her.

If a woman can make money in other ways or can aford to use her energies in helping the world along through organized charities and clubs it is poor economy to spend the time in needlework. One often sews a whole afternoon to save 10 cents. Many a woman toils two days to make a dress that lacks style, finish and fit after all when she could have bought one better looking and better made for only 50 cents more than her material cost.

On the other hand, where a mother has young children and must be at home anyway she can effect a considerable saving by making at least part of the clothes herself. If the baby needs six skirts and she can save 10 cents by making each one it is worth while, especially if that sum is multiplied by four or six for a family of little folks. If there is a proportionate saving on the nightgowns, aprons and dresses it amounts to a considerable sum. There are compensations too—allowance for alterations, prettier materials, better cloth, pieces for mending and, best of all, individuality. The child who is prettily dressed in clothes made by the mother has a loved look which her smart little playmate clothed in ready mades sometimes lacks.

Tasteful dressing pays good interest on the necessary expenditure of thought time and money. Having once decided on what is the right proportionate sum to spend for clothing it is not fair to try to save out of it for Christmas presents, church contributions or anything else.

Good clothes are both a business and a social asset. They may be more if they are of the right sort They can give poise, self-respect, refinement, content and a vast amount of pleasure to both the wearer and her friends.—New York Evening Sun.

GETTING FLOORS IN WINTER CONDITION

By and by it will be time to get out the Oriental rugs from their moth-proof wrappings, and before that time comes it will be well to look to the condition of the floors. Probably there has been a great deal of tracking over the floors all summer, and very likely more or less dancing too. Water has been dropped from flower vases and the dog has been all about the house with paws gritty from running out of doors or black from contact with oiled highways. Nothing detracts more from the appearance of a home than floors in bad condition. They come up, so to speak, and strike the eye, spoiling the effect of furniture ever so handsome, hangings ever so luxurious.

An apartment, being made ready for new occupants always has its floors finished in spic and span style though alas, the finish is too often a glittering varnish over hideous paint and a week or two of moving chairs about and tripping over the floors in high-heeled shoes leaves ghastly scratches and marks on the glossy surface. Poor floors are the rule rather than the exception and the average housekeeper knows little or nothing about floor finishing. Even when floors are of parquet pattern in hardwood a daily wiping up with a dust mop and perhaps a monthly wiping over with oil are considered all-sufficient. If it is impossible to wrest anything but a painted and varnished floor from a landlord, at least insist that the paint be light rather than dark; an oak tone will give a much better air to the room when the rugs are down than the somber walnut or reddish cherry so beloved of apartment house landlords. And if you can prevent the addition of the glossy varnish, do so by all means and wax the painted floors yourself. Any good prepared floor wax will answer. At first the floors will require polishing once a week; but after a little, once a month will answer. Simply dip a cloth in the liquid wax, or pour a little out on the cloth, and go over the floor, rubbing afterward with a weighted cloth to bring out the luster. An ordinary brick sewed up in a piece of carpet makes an excellent polisher. Floors treated to the wax polish should never be wiped up with a damp cloth. If water is spilled, apply more of the liquid wax and polish until the dull spot disappears.

DIAMOND RING AS TEE

Seattle Society Woman Plays Unique Golf at Banff Springs

MRS. MAE Stehle, of Seattle, Wash., was recently the heroine of a unique bet at Banff Springs which caused much comment. Wagering with a fellow member of the fashionable colony at Banff Springs that she could make nine perfect drives on the mountain golf course, Mrs. Mae Stehle, of Seattle, Wash., teed her ball from the top of a fifteen hundred dollar diamond ring on each hole. A slip, a low swing or anything that would not come under the title of a perfect drive would have sent the ring spinning after the ball and ruined or lost it.

If there is a proportionate saving on the nightgowns, aprons and dresses it amounts to a considerable sum. There are compensations too—allowance for alterations, prettier materials, better cloth, pieces for mending and, best of all, individuality. The child who is prettily dressed in clothes made by the mother has a loved look which her smart little playmate clothed in ready mades sometimes lacks.

Tasteful dressing pays good interest on the necessary expenditure of thought time and money. Having once decided on what is the right proportionate sum to spend for clothing it is not fair to try to save out of it for Christmas presents, church contributions or anything else.

Good clothes are both a business and a social asset. They may be more if they are of the right sort They can give poise, self-respect, refinement, content and a vast amount of pleasure to both the wearer and her friends.—New York Evening Sun.

GETTING FLOORS IN WINTER CONDITION

By and by it will be time to get out the Oriental rugs from their moth-proof wrappings, and before that time comes it will be well to look to the condition of the floors. Probably there has been a great deal of tracking over the floors all summer, and very likely more or less dancing too. Water has been dropped from flower vases and the dog has been all about the house with paws gritty from running out of doors or black from contact with oiled highways. Nothing detracts more from the appearance of a home than floors in bad condition. They come up, so to speak, and strike the eye, spoiling the effect of furniture ever so handsome, hangings ever so luxurious.

An apartment, being made ready for new occupants always has its floors finished in spic and span style though alas, the finish is too often a glittering varnish over hideous paint and a week or two of moving chairs about and tripping over the floors in high-heeled shoes leaves ghastly scratches and marks on the glossy surface. Poor floors are the rule rather than the exception and the average housekeeper knows little or nothing about floor finishing. Even when floors are of parquet pattern in hardwood a daily wiping up with a dust mop and perhaps a monthly wiping over with oil are considered all-sufficient. If it is impossible to wrest anything but a painted and varnished floor from a landlord, at least insist that the paint be light rather than dark; an oak tone will give a much better air to the room when the rugs are down than the somber walnut or reddish cherry so beloved of apartment house landlords. And if you can prevent the addition of the glossy varnish, do so by all means and wax the painted floors yourself. Any good prepared floor wax will answer. At first the floors will require polishing once a week; but after a little, once a month will answer. Simply dip a cloth in the liquid wax, or pour a little out on the cloth, and go over the floor, rubbing afterward with a weighted cloth to bring out the luster. An ordinary brick sewed up in a piece of carpet makes an excellent polisher. Floors treated to the wax polish should never be wiped up with a damp cloth. If water is spilled, apply more of the liquid wax and polish until the dull spot disappears.

DIAMOND RING AS TEE

Seattle Society Woman Plays Unique Golf at Banff Springs

MRS. MAE Stehle, of Seattle, Wash., was recently the heroine of a unique bet at Banff Springs which caused much comment. Wagering with a fellow member of the fashionable colony at Banff Springs that she could make nine perfect drives on the mountain golf course, Mrs. Mae Stehle, of Seattle, Wash., teed her ball from the top of a fifteen-hundred dollar diamond ring on each hole. A slip, a low swing or anything that would not come under the title of a perfect drive would have sent the ring spinning after the ball and ruined or lost it.

A Chat About Women and Their Clothes

"My dear" said the social leader, pausing in the act of pouring the tea, "you should think more about your clothes—your gowns are not becoming.

"Bother clothes," returned the Business Woman, with a note of esperity in her usually soft voice, "I have other things to think about."

"Clothes," remarked the Jurist judicially, as he carefully selected a small cake, "are the outgrowth of woman's vanity and have been demonstrated by time to be necessary for her progress. When a woman becomes as indifferent to her dress as she is to her breakfast it is time to call in the family doctor."

"Clothes are very necessary," murmured the Social Leader, as she passed the cakes again.

"You mean were very necessary, don't you?" interpolated the Business Woman, a trifle snappishly—"they are so high in the skirt and so low in the waist now that they are rapidly becoming a has-been."

The jurist nodded. "It is really shocking, sometimes," he said, "What has become of the modest women."

The Business Woman laughed "In spite of the men tailors—the men dressmakers—the men designers, the women of today are just as modest at heart as our great-grandmothers. Men force upon the women of the present day the things we are wearing, and their fellows call us immodest,"—

"Surely," murmured the Social Leader," you are mistaken about the designing of our clothes for us."

"Mistaken nothing," retorted the Business Woman with some heat. "A year ago last summer I was sitting at a table in a lunch room in the wholesale district. At the next table were two men discussing the coming styles. "But," said one of them "suppose the women won't wear it—then where will we be?"

They'll have to, the other answered, "our convention has decided upon the styles and they can't buy anything else." So, there you are. I have spent the entire day trying to find a feminine dress, and finally I went to a dressmaker and told her what I wanted. "Oh, my dear lady," she almost screamed, "that is archaic. It would be as much as my reputation is worth to turn out a dress like that from my shop."

"You have my sympathy," soothed the Jurist as the Business Woman paused.

"I don't want sympathy—I want a dress." she returned irritably. "A dress that wil permit me to be what I am at heart. I've worn tailored suits and dresses so long that mentally and physically I am becoming as set and uncompromising as they—Ah, I realize it." as the Jurist smiled, "and I am bound and determined that they shall not convert me into an old maid I will have a frivilous gown, style or no style."

"I think you are right in your suppositions," the Jurist said thoughtfully as he watched a smoke ring disintergrate. I remember about five or six years ago you had a sort of clinging vine-like gown of blue, and you were the prettiest"—

"It is time to go," broke in the Business Woman severely.

Summary of the Fall Fashions from Paris

Paris has accentuated the endeavor to make the human figure look like a lead pencil. The French corsets of this season are built as straight as a mediaeval cuirass.

The corset effect, in truth, is the dominating feature of the majority of frocks. The First Empire waistline is brought in by many of the designers in order to accentuate the lack of a waist. Even the jackets for street suits drop in straight lines from the shoulders to the hips, unless they, like some bodices on frocks, carry out the surplice effect.

The extraordinary wide girdles of this season accentuate the Egyptian figure. Mme. Paquin, Lanvin, Cheruit, and Doeuillet are apt to use two or three narrow girdles to mark the middle of the figure, but Jenny Martial et Armand, Worth, and Bernard are not so economical in their girdles.

The Extra High Collar

It is a bit difficult to know exactly what France has decided upon in the way of a proper neckline. She puts it forth as her decree that the collar shall be exceedingly high, but she has fashioned any number of gowns that do not follow this decree. On street suits the collars rise so high that they are called the "cache-nez," or nose-coverings. There is the new trench muffler, an apache cravat, and a postillion collar of the eighteenth century for the street, and for the house there are gowns that are buttoned to the chin, with the material "going over the top." Others have loose handkerchief drapery, the fifteenth century Italian collar and the conventional high, rolling collar that shows a bit of neck below the chin.

The same inconsistency appears in evening gowns. France laid down the law that women were well-dressed in wartime when they wore high-necked gowns of transparent fabrics. America liked this idea; it was a change from all that had been in exstence for two decades, yet after the question was thoroughly settled to the pleasure of everybody, decollete gowns are projected that do credit to the most daring dance clothes of peace times.

Even the conservative Jenny, who satisfies the American people season after season, turns out a barbaric thing of jet on black tulle, with a girdle of green velvet embroidered in gold that is made to serve as a bodice by the addition of a band of jet at the top. It slopes downward under the arms and over the back, and is supposed to be held on by a carless shoulderstrap of jet beads.

The Abbreviated Skirt

A very few of the new skirts sweep the instep. The rest are frankly short. A woman is allowed all the license she wishes in this respect. Street suits have skirts that appear to be simply two breadths of material cut off ot the hem to allow the fullest display of the highest boot made.

There is a strong feeling abroad for the elongated evening skirt. It does not appear in the Callot frocks, except in the Cathedral model, but smart women are insisting upon skirts that almost touch the toes in front. They are so narrow that they are easily wrinkled up over the ankles as the wearer moves.

The distinguishing feature in brilliant evening gowns is the gorgeous black panel. Sometimes it is fastened to the shoulders and sweeps the floor for a yard; again it is tucked up at the end of the spine, to suggest the Watteau drapery. It serves as the foundation for all the exaggeration of ornament that the French allow themselves this season. The lining is in a brilliant shade of velvet or satin, to contrast with the gown in front of it.

Panels by the way, are dominating features of the new fashions. Jenny makes a gown of several panels hanging over Tukish trousers. They are held together at the waistline by a loose sash in another color.

There are few novelties in fabrics Rodier's extraordinary duvetyn or velours de laine is the pronounced success of the season. Velvet, duvetyn, satin, and crepe de chine rule among the ceremonial clothes, serge is used by every house; lace metallic tissue, and fur hold their old place in the affection of the designers.

VELVET IS IN VOGUE IN MILLINERY

White hats of panne velvet, also of beaver, are now being shown.

'Velvet hats of the better class continue in favor in soft effects in small shapes. Hats trimmed or combined with fur are good. The better grades of hatters' plush hats also are in demand, principally in straight sailor effects with soft crowns. Black and brown are the favorite colors.

"A visit to the exclusive Fifth avenue shops reveals some new and interesting things. Among the things displayed are satin antique dress hats combined with velvet, in large shapes some with high-turned backs. Some high side effects, or old-fashioned pokes, are also seen. Crowns are both high and low, soft or draped. The trimmings consist of paradise, goura, chous of antique satin and burnt effects. Hats of chiffon velvet of a cubist pattern are among the novelties shown. They are combined with velvet and are trimmed with fur and velvet figures."

How are you getting along with your knitting? Have you tested the beans that you canned? These three questions, with their answers, and elaborations, and the substitution of "beans," perhaps, for any other vegetable, fruit or eggs, etc., constitute much of the conservation of nearly every matron and maid in town nowadays. About one's interests, one's tongue will wag, and so as engagements, marriages, knitting for the soldiers, and the good, old-fashioned, housewifely way of putting up jars upon jars of all kinds of garden productions for winter consumption are engrossing every one's attention, it is natural that they are talked about.

Mexican Eggs

Put a heaping tablespoonful of onion (chopped fine) into your chafing dish and fry till a dark brown; then add ¾ can of tomatoes. Let this get thoroughly heated and add slowly 3 well beaten eggs. Season with salt and pepper. Serve on salted crackers.

SOME TESTED RECEIPS

Apple Pie

Pastry; four to six apples; one-fourth teaspoonful salt; three-fourths to one cupful sugar; one to two teaspoonfuls shortening; grating of nutmeg; two to three tablespoonfuls cold water.

Use either plain or fluky pastry, or use plain pastry for the lower and flaky pastry for the upper crusts. Take half the paste to be used onto the cloth-covered board, dredge lightly with flour and knead slightly; roll into a round to fit the plate, trim as needed to have nearly one-fourth an inch of paste beyond the edge entirely around the plate. Slice the apples into the plate; mix the salt and sugar and spread over the apples and put on the shortening in bits here and there, add the nutmeg and water; brush over the edge of the paste with cold water and set the second round of paste above the apple, letting it lie a little loose; press the edges of paste together and trim if needed. Cut slits in the upper crust. Bake about half an hour.

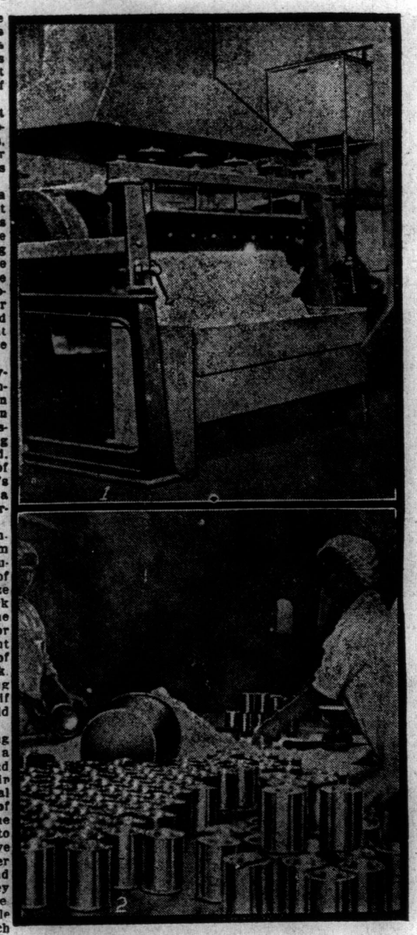
FIGHTING THE FOOD SHORTAGE

New Industries From Vegetable Fats

C. P. R. Working Out A Solution

THE seriousness of the food situation throughout the world has been frequently emphasized by the press and no one disputes the fact that the world seems steadily marching toward a period of starvation. Efforts are being made in all civilized countries along different lines to avert such a disaster and to devise means of overcoming a situation created by the war.

There have been food crisis in nearly every great war, and these have frequently given rise to new processes of sufficient merit to be continued in peace times, as for example, the manufacture of sugar from sugar beets, and the substitution of vegetable for animal fats as in oleomargarine.



Oleomargarine has been under discussion in Canada for some time and needs no further comment, except perhaps to point out that under the present regulations prohibiting the manufacture of this material there are undoubtedly many in the Dominion who are not getting the fats requisite for the proper maintenance of the body, because they are unable to purchase this fat at the present price of butter. In many countries where oleomargarine has been used for years a larger and ever larger percentage of vegetable fat is being substituted for the animal fat, and the day seems not far distant when hydrogenated vegetable oils may entirely replace animal fats for certain food purposes.

Arthur D. Little, Limited, the organization of analytical chemists which on the instigation of Lord Shaughnessy has been making an exhaustive study of Canadian natural resources have been investigating the utilization of vegetable fat in materials which have proven satisfactory substitutes for cream for all purposes excepting butter making and where whipped cream is required. The material is especially adapted to the manufacture of ice cream and can be produced much cheaper than cow's cream, a quantity of which through the use of such a substitute may be made available for other food purposes.

Dry milk, while a very important article of commerce, is known chiefly to bakers, hotels and ice cream manufacturers. A good product is now being manufactured in Ontario, but recognizing the advisability of establishing drying plants in smaller units and of a size that could be supported by the local community, work is being carried on with this requirement in mind. The installation of such plants would make it possible for dairymen to find a constant market, although they might be located at a distance so great from large centres of population as to make it impossible to sell liquid milk. For example, in Alberta the dairy industry is growing and would undoubtedly develop to a wonderful extent if drying plants requiring small amounts of capital could be established.

The same is true of vegetables, and mixed farming would be encouraged in the west if the farmer had a home market for his produce. Milk is 85% water, and many vegetables run as high or even higher in their moisture content. They are perishable, require special handling, and a large portion of the crop is composed of sizes too small to market. There are objections to the drying processes now employed and it is important, to perfect a method of drying vegetables and yet leave them fresh. Such material when placed in warm water soon absorbs the moisture which has been removed, and the vegetables when cooked in the water in which they have been placed give the same results as do fresh vegetables. The drying process must leave the vegetable with its natural color and with all the flavor with which it comes from the garden. The dried product must not be cooked or discolored, and should provide the housewife with a cleaned, peeled, ready-prepared material, which will keep without refrigeration or special storage, and enable her to avoid all the losses which accompany the use of most fresh material.

The utilization of that portion of fruits which is considered below standard, and, therefore, unprofitable to ship, in another problem which is receiving the consideration of Arthur D. Little, Limited. For example, a considerable part of every apple crop falls into such classifications as windfalls, seconds and thirds, poorly formed or poorly colored fruit, and as this proportion of the crop increases the selling price of the standard apple also increases. Methods for preparing a high grade sweet cider are under consideration, as well as the production of other apple products to utilize the portion of the crop considered unsaleable or inferior by fruit dealers.

(1) Drying machine and constant level feed tank showing milk in sheet.
(2) Packing Department—Filling cans in foreground and heap of powdered dried milk.

The desirability of increasing the food content of farm produce is obvious. It may be pointed out that the starch content of potatoes grown in Germany is much higher than that of potatoes on this continent, twice as high in fact. The cultivation of certain hybrids producing larger and better varieties of berries, etc., should also be encouraged, and while this phase of the problem scarcely comes within the province of the chemist, it is under consideration as a part of the general study.

Encouraging progress has been made in the various fields outlined above, and definite announcements are expected in the near future.

:: Girls Don't Get Peeved ::

Those who first saw the light from January 18 to February 17 are good-natured, rather quick-tempered, very successful in business dealings, and of a gentle, affectionate nature. They will be faithful to their marriage vows, whilst their manners will be very quiet and dignified.

Early in the Year.

Those whose natal day happens to be between February 18 and March 20 are of an honorable, kind, and straightforward disposition. They are essentially people who may be trusted, and are often met with in positions involving much responsibility. They are often great travelers.

The ones whose birth falls between March 21 and April 23 are usually endowed with love for beauty, order and elegance. They make good lawyers, teachers, and have keen intellects, but they possess strong wills and do not care for contradiction or opposition, and are of very sensitive and loyal natures.

People whose birthdays come between April 24 and May 23 have very strong likes and dislikes, and possess in a great degree powers of intuition. They are of a jealous temperament, capable of great mental endurance, are energetic and fond of the opposite sex.

If the natal day falls between May 24 and June 23 a restless nature is the dower. Such people are rather unsteady in their aims and pursuits, though of a very lovable disposition. They are often guided by impulse, and have a tendency to be dissatisfied with their position. Socially they are a great success, and shine in public life.

The greatest lovers of home life and of family union are those who are born between June 24 and July 21. If of the fair sex, they are great and good talkers; if men, good business managers.

The men and women whose natal day comes between July 22 and August 21 can readily adapt themselves to any condition in life. They are light-hearted, loving, emotional, love nature, very impulsive, and require great care in selecting a life partner.

The people who were born between August 22 and September 23 are lovers of music, good singers, of a happy agreeable disposition and admirers of beauty. Whatever work they undertake is done thoroughly and well. They make good critics, have strong passions, and plenty of self-control, and are physically strong.

People born between September 24 and October 26 should be good inventors, be experts in mechanical matters, and have great foresight in all business transactions. They are hasty, impatient of control, particularly eloquent in speech, and very good-natured.

Those whose natal day falls between October 27 and November 23 are of a very passionate nature. They love books, like to be praised and considered superior; have strong wills, dignity, and good manners. They are not easily overcome by adversity, and are almost always certain to succeed in whatever they undertake.

In the Dark Days.

Those whose natal day falls between November 24 and December 22 do not easily make friends; they are reserved, brave, fearless. People of action, rather than words, very faithful in all love affairs, and of a very determined nature. They make excellent husbands and wives.

If the birthday falls between December 23 and January 18, those born then will be fearless in adventure, self-willed, practical and good business people, talkative, of a loving though impetuous nature, proud and independent. They will lead rather than follow, and strain every effort to make what they undertake a great success.

HOME COOKING

Cottage-Cheese Salad

Mix thoroughly 1 pound of cheese, 1½ tablespoonfuls of cream, 1 tablespoonful of chopped parsley, and salt to taste. First fill a rectangular tin mold with cold water to chill and wet the surface; line the bottom with waxed paper; then pack in three layers, putting two or three parallel strips of pimento between layers. Cover with waxed paper and set in a cool place until ready to serve; then run a knife around the sides and invert the mold. Cut in slices and serve on lettuce leaves with French dressing and wafers. Minced olives may be used instead of the parsley, and chopped nuts also may be added.

Cottage-Cheese Rolls

A large variety of rolls to be used like meat rolls, suitable for serving as the main dish at dinner, may be made by combining legumes (beans of various kinds, cowpeas, lentils, or peas), with cottage cheese and adding bread crumbs to make the mixture thick enough to form into a roll. Beans are usually mashed, but peas or small Lima beans may be combined whole with bread crumbs and cottage cheese, and enough of the liquor in which the vegetables have been cooked may be added to get the right consistency; or, instead of beans or peas, chopped spinach, beet tops, or head lettuce may be added.

GO STRAIGHT -- GO OFTEN GO RIGHT

IF YOU'LL LISTEN FOR JUST A MOMENT, MR. MERCHANT, YOU'LL GET SOME MONEY-MAKING TIPS!

GO STRAIGHT—There is no need of wasting time on the question: "Does Advertising Pay?" The bank accounts of a thousand millionaires who yesterday were broke scream like the siren on a fire engine: "You Bet Your Life, It Pays!" How to advertise is the big question. The first step in answering this big question is to find out who you want for customers, then go to them—Go Straight!

GO OFTEN—If your office boy, after working for you two weeks, came to you and asked for a raise, you'd call the porter and say: "Here, Steve, throw this red-headed son-of-a-gun out of the window—he's too previous!" Don't be "too previous" yourself when you advertise. Give your advertising a chance to produce—show the people that you are in earnest and on the job. Don't watch the clock—go often and you'll come back with bells on and bills in!

GO RIGHT—Selling things over a counter and selling the same things on paper are two different tasks. (One is a business and the other is a profession. You may be an excellent business man but a poor advertising man. Perhaps, the reason your advertising doesn't pull is because you write your own copy. Why don't you cut your own hair? Building an advertisement ought to be the work of a specialist. The big fellows in business recognize this fact—why don't you? You wouldn't hire a tongue-tied salesman, would you? Lots of advertising copy is tongue-tied or worse. Then, have your ad well-dressed—Go Right!

We are anxious to help you build your business through the right sort of Advertising. Put our special Merchandising and Service Department to work for you, without obligation. It will be the best investment you ever made in your life.

STANDARD NEWSPAPER SYNDICATE

Result of Standard's Competition For the "Best Reasons Why"

Several weeks ago The Standard held a competition, giving prizes for the "Best Reasons Why." This campaign, which was carried on to educate the public in the worth of advertising, proved very successful. Below are a list of the prize winners along with the successful answers:

WHY ROBIN HOOD FLOUR IS DIFFERENT

Answer—Because the purity and excellent quality of the wheat used in manufacture of this flour gives more food value than is found in other brands.

C. A. LYNDON, Claresholm, Alta.

WHY D. E. BLACK & CO. HAVE THE LARGEST JEWELRY BUSINESS BETWEEN WINNIPEG AND THE COAST

Answer—Because you get the value of your money when you buy from D. E. Black & Co., and because a "D. E. B." repaired watch has never been known to fail.

C. A. LYNDON, Claresholm, Alta.

WHY CARLYLE BUTTER BEATS ALL OTHERS

Answer—Because it is made of the best cream under the most saaitary conditions and environment, assuring the customer a protection against germs of all kinds.

F. E. CHAPIN, Retlaw, Alta.

WHY DIRIGIBLE HEADLIGHTS SHOULD BE INSTALLED ON EVERY CAR

Answer—Because they are the latest "safety-first" appliance and it insures the user against accident and gives a better light.

G. G. DUNCAN, Champion, Alta.

P. BURNS & CO., LTD.—WHY MANY A CARE MAKES THE SHAMROCK CURE

Answer—Because the patrons are guaranteed through government supervision of the absolute high quality of the Shamrock brand, and because P. Burns & Co. back their reputation by the quality of their products.

MR. LOUIS DAVID, Raymond, Alta.

WHY WEBBER'S GARAGE GIVES THE BEST SERVICE

Answer—Because of the courtesy of his skilled force combined with his own personality has acted as a magnet and a drawing power for the business.

J. L. DAVIDSON, City Welding & Repair Co.

DR. D. D. ROSS—WHY YOU SHOULD NOT DELAY IN HAVING YOUR TEETH ATTENDED TO

Answer—Because scientists claim that delay is fatal and for good work combined with reasonable prices, Dr. Ross has no superiors.

MISS HENINGER, Third Avenue, City.

BOSTON SHOE HOSPITAL—WHY YOU SHOULD TRY NEOLIN SOLES

Answer—Because Neolin soles wear longer, cost no more, do not draw the feet, and are put on by the most expeinenced workmen at the Boston Shoe Hospital, under guarantee by the Goodyear Rubber Co

MISS MARJORIE ROBINSON, 1175 Second Ave., Hillhurst.

WHY JACKSON'S HOME-MADE BREAD

Answer—Because in Jackson's bread one is assured of quality, this bread being made under the most improved sanitary conditions and government inspection. A taste of Jackson's bread will convince the most skeptical.

JAMES GIBB, Cockshutt Plow Co., City.

WHAT THE BLUE LABEL IMPLIES

Answer—It insures cleanliness, combined with pure products, under perfect conditions. The Blue Label Bottling Works have justified the reputation they have attained, which is second to none in the bottling business.

W. R. ORR, corner Center and Sixth Avenue.

WHY THE CALGARY PUBLIC MARKET IS THE ONLY MARKET WHERE THE CONSUMER MEETS THE PRODUCER

Answer—Because here the consumer is brought face to face with the producer, the entire establishment being under city supervision, guarantees the patrons the lowest prices combined with the best products.

A PAGE FOR THE BOYS AND GIRLS

Amy Finds a New Schoolhouse

The Roberts children lived way out in the country. There were three of them, Amy and the twins, Ethel and Jimmy, so they were never lonely. Of all the seasons of the year they loved summer best, because then they could play out of doors from dawn to dark if they wished.

They fished with willow oles and bent pins in the small stream behind the house; and there was a place not a stone's throw from their favorite fishing hole, where they could wade.

Here the stream was shallow and its bed was covered with smooth, fine sand that didn't hurt their bare feet like the rocks and sharp little pebbles did in the other places they had tried.

They hunted for birds' nests, and Jimmy was an expert at finding them. They never touched the eggs nor the baby birds, though, because they knew then the mother bird would not come back. How these children loved to tumble in the hay, and find the strange places where a half dozen independent chickens laid their eggs.

One of the things they liked best to do was to play school. They played in the old vine-covered arbor down by the well. No one used this arbor but themselves because it was so old and rickety. One day something happened! A man came and began to tear down their make-believe school house.

The twins felt so badly about this that they cried, but Amy, who was the oldest, said she was going straight to see about it, and marched off to find her mother.

"Why, my darling," smiled their mother, trying to gather them all into her arms at once, "the old arbor is full of bugs, and the seats are all broken and splintery. Besides, mother hasn't wanted you to play there for a long time. It's too far from the house. We are going to have a lovely garden there instead."

"But mother," wailed little Ethel, "where are we going to play school?"

"I am quite sure you can find a much nicer place to play school," smiled their mother. "And now run out and play. Mother is very busy this morning helping Ann make jelly."

Amy led the twins off with a hop, skip and jump, andout in thebright sunshine once more the twins felt less "teary." With a right good will they began their search for a new place in which they could play school. They oampered off to the barn where they believed they knew of a place in the hay loft that would make a dandy play-school room. But the hired man was there and told them to scoot.

"But we want to play school in the loft," Amy told him bravely. She was a bit afraid of the hired man, he was so very big and looked cross.

"Shoo!" said the hired man, flapping a saddle-blanket at them. "And where then are we going to put the hay."

No one could answer this question so the three disappointed children slowly left the barn.

"I tell you Amy," began Jimmy, eagerly, "let's go down to the wading place, and then when we get tired playing school we can go wading.

"Oh, it's too hot there!" said Amy.

"Let's go over to the big elm where mother sometimes lets us have tea." It wasn't very far, but when they were there little Ethel was tired and said she didn't like it.

"Why?" demanded Amy stopping short to look at her.

"There are too many bugs and worms and things—just look at the ants, Amy!" cried Ethel, quite out of sorts.

"Ah—girls are fraidy cats!" scoffed Jimmy, watching with interest three ants dragging off a dead worm.

"S'pose we go down to where that big, mosy log is near the ice house," Amy suggested, thoughtfully.

"That's too far," objected Ethel "Besides, mother would never let us She scolded Jimmy awfully because he went down there last Sunday to find father."

"You can bet she did!" agreed Jimmy. "We can't do that."

"I'll tell you what let's do! Let's go home and get Ann to make us some lemonade," smiled Amy.

"She won't do it though," Jimmy told them, "cause she's makin' jelly, and mother told her to make lemonade to supper. I heard her."

"Well, let's go and see anyway," said Ethel.

So they started toward the big house where they lived, and on their way they passed Ann's cottage. Ann helped with the housework. When she first came to them she said she'd stay if they would let her live in the funny little old cottage directly back of the big house. So Ann fixed up the cottage just as she pleased.

Suddenly Amy stopped in a lovely cool shady spot near the cottage, and looked up at the window. The wooden shutters were flung back from the window to let in the sweet fresh air. A white curtain swung lazily in a tiny breeze, and a potted plant stood on the sill.

Right under the window was a long bench, and a brown flower pot with a big pink geranium in it occupied one end. There were queer little cracks in the stuff that looked like plaster and covered the outer wall. The bench was scarred and chipped and weather beaten, but broad and comfortable nevertheless. Suddenly Amy knew this was just the place they had been looking for. It was so near the big house that they were within call, and yet there would be no grownup to thrust a head out of the window and interrupt their play.

"Let's play school here!" Amy said happily to the twins, and nodded toward the bench. One of the cracks in the stuff that looked like plaster, reminded Amy of the stream as she had seen it one day from the top of the house when her father had taken her up there. It had given her an idea of something new to teach.

Jimmy and Ethel were already climbing gleefully onto the bench so Amy did not have to announce that she would be teacher. She held up a pudgy finger and spoke to them in her best grownup teaching voice.

"Now I want you children to behave—no whispering, Ethel—and I want to tell you all about our new school house."

MARSHAL WAS VERY KIND TO A LITTLE GIRL

Paris.—Here is a story of a gallant marshal who took America by storm in the year 1917.

The incident occurred early one morning in the Bois de Boulogne. Needless to say, the gallant marshal was none other than Marshal Joffre, the hero of the Marne.

He was taking his constitutional and walking in his placid way when of a sudden a little girl of from five to seven years of age noticed this distinguished stroller.

"It's Joffre," she was heard to say and in less than a minute afterward she was by the marshal's side.

"Good morning, Marshal," she said.

"Good morning, my child," answered Joffre.

"Will you touch my hand," the girl asked.

"Why, certainly," was the general's reply.

Encouraged by the marshal's good nature and by his wife's good will the little girl at once aspired to higher favors.

"I should like to walk a little way with you," she modestly asked.

How could anyone refuse such a request? And the child with charming ease and pride accompanied the marshal down the deserted and delightfully fresh avenue.

Meanwhile the child's nurse, who had watched her care's evolutions with more embarrasement, worried to see her walk away. She at once started running after the trio, shouting:

"Miss Suzanne—well, Miss."

As an answer the girl waved her hand as a sign of good-by.

But the marshal had stopped and quietly said:

"Now, you must go back."

"Let us leave her a souvenir," said the Marechale Joffre. And at the same time reminded her husband that he had a small wrist watch in his pocket which she meant sending to one of her "filleuls."

The watch was thereupon put on the girl's wrist, and so overcome with joy was she that this time she forgot to thank her distinguished donators.

The following day the marshal received a beautiful sheaf of flowers and a note, in which the sender said that Suzanne's watch wou'd take its place among the most precious heirlooms of the family.

FORGIVENESS

There is an ugly kind of forgiveness in the world—a kind of hedgehog forgiveness—shot out like quills. Men take one who has offended and set him down before the blowpipe of their indignation and scorch him and burn his fault into him, and when they have kneaded him sufficiently with their fiery fists, then—they forgive him.—Beecher

: Mamma Robin's Umbrella :

"Chirp, Chirp!" came from the window sill, and Emma turned around in her little bed to see who the visitor was.

"Oh!" she exclaimed, "Where did you come from so early this bright morning?"

"Chirp," answered the Robin, hopping a little closer to the inside. I want some crumbs for my baby up there in the tree? At least that is what Emma thought she said, and in a minute the girl was out of bed gathering up the crumbs that her piece of bed-time cake had made on the tray. All the time she was approaching the window sill, and while she was spreading the bits of cake Emma was talking to the bird in the most reassuring way and the Robin seemed to appreciate the fact that she meant her no harm for she firmly kept her perch on the sill, and when the feast was spread out before her she filled her little bill and flew up in the tree where her baby was eagerly waiting for its breakfast.

"Peek, peek," came from the tree and then "Chirp, chirp," from the mother.

After that Emma and the mother-bird became great friends and never did Mrs. Robin come in vain for her family's breakfast so long as the girl's visit to her aunt in the country lasted. About a week after the bird's first visit to the sill, Emma woke up early in the morning and heard the big rain drops on the window pane.

"Oh dear!,, she sighed, My poor little baby robin will get dripping wet in her nest up there." Then Emma tried to think out a plan by which she could protect her pets, for by this time she began to regard them as hers. "I wonder whether Mamma Robin will call for her food this morning?" she went on musing and then she watched the window for the feathery visitor.

"Time to get up," said Aunt Carrie coming into Emma's room with a sunny smile that made the girl almost forget that it was raining. "You overslept yourself, and no wonder for it is dark enough to be very early in the morning."

"No, aunt I have been awake a long time, and I have been waiting for my little visitor. Poor little creatures they cannot escape the rain but must get wet and cold, while we have all the comforts of home.

"I'm afraid you are wasting your sympathy Emma," said her Aunt "The mother bird does not mind the rain' and I'm sure she'll find some means of protecting her baby until its feathers grow large enough to protect it, too.

While Emma was dressing her Aunt went up to the third story to tidy up the rooms and glancing out of the window she saw something that made her stop her work and call to Emma—"Child come up here quick, and your question of how the mother bird protects her baby from the rain will be answered."

Emma was at her Aunt's side in a jiffy and there in the tree she saw the mother bird completely covering the nest with her outstretched wings. Not a drop of rain could reach the young ones.

Then she ceased worrying for she knew that every mamma bird carried her umbrella with her all the time, and that her babies were as safe as if they lived in a big brick house instead of in a little straw nest up in a tree.

BY

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

SYNOPSIS

Kazan, the wolf dog, is picked up by Thorpe and his wife. Kazan immediately becomes Mrs. Thorpe's devoted slave. He is struck by mistake by Thorpe. McCready, the desperado, leads Thorpe into the woods, strikes him unconscious, and then comes back into Mrs. Thorpe's tent, but Kazan kills him.

Running away from Thorpe, who later comes back, he joins a wolf band where a little she-wolf is attracted by him and follows him everywhere.

Kazan and Gray Wolf strike a man's trail, and there discover Pierre Radisson. Kazan is wounded and is nursed back to health by Pierre's daughter Joan. Gray Wolf is left behind while Kazan goes on with them. Pierre dies and Kazan brings Joan and the baby to safety. Gray Wolf follows Kazan. She becomes a mother, but her little ones are killed by a lynx who also blinds her.

Henri Loti loses many of his trapped lynx and finally decides to trap the slayers. Kazan and Gray Wolf are later trapped and as Loti levels his gun to shoot them, his friend, Weyman, stops him and offers him $100 for each if he will give them to him. Loti agrees to this. Weyman then takes a picture of Gray Wolf, Kazan and the torn lynx, which he declares will add greatly to the value of the book he is writing based on animal life in the northwest.

Henri shoots the lynx and the other two are kept prisoners in a cage constructed of saplings. Weyman during one night, after seeing that Gray Wolf was starving herself, was troubled over his cruel act, and let the captives out. Kazan and Gray Wolf wandered around for many days when finally they reached a trail where everything was deserted. The red plague had invaded the country and everybody and everything felt that death was near.

Interesting is their rambles through the north country, searching for food. Kazan at times is near the point of death for the lack of food—yet everywhere nothing but the desolate plains appear where the plague had wrought its havoc.

The hunger trail they followed and the only signs of life was a rambling fox which they dared not tackle.

At last they came upon a path where a herd of moose are stationed—two bulls fighting. One of the fighters is weakened so much that Kazan and Gray Wolf are able to handle him easily. Thus the days of famine have passed for them.

After having eaten enough the two wanderers watch their food. In the course of a few minutes animals and birds of different kind try to get some of the flesh but Kazan and his mate guard it well. When the cry of a hungry wolf is heard Gray Wolf sounds the welcome cry.

Kazan protects Gray Wolf from the leader of the pack with whom they came in contact one day. Kazan kills the leader and Gray Wolf knows that twice Kazan has saved her life while endangering his own.

Kazan one day while out hunting with Gray Wolf, has a fight with a porcupine. For several days he had a swollen face, but he knew that he had been protecting Gray Wolf. They then returned to their home and once more he contented himself with the companionship of his mate after their hard struggle for existence.

A son is born to them by the name of Baree. Baree is taught how to kill in order to provide himself with food and very soon learns the game. Shortly afterwards he deserts his home and Kazan and Gray Wolf travel on until they come to a beaver dam. Here they meet with obstacles and adventures.

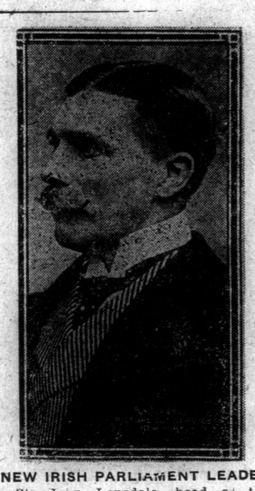
The next year the second generation of children, now four years old, mated but did not leave, so that in this early summer of the sixth year the colony was very much like a great city that had been long besieged by an enemy. It numbered fifteen lodges and over a hundred beavers, not counting the fourth babies which had been born during March and April. The dam had been lengthened until it was fully two hundred yards in length. Water had been made to flood large areas of birch and poplar and tangled swamps of tender willow and elder. Even with this food was growing scarce and the lodges were overcrowded. This was because beavers are almost human in their love for home. Broken Tooth's lodge was fully nine feet long by seven wide inside, and there were now living in it children and grandchildren to the number of twenty-seven. For this reason Broken Tooth was preparing to break the precedent of his tribe. When Kazan and Gray Wolf sniffed carelessly at the strong scents of the beaver city, Broken Tooth was marshaling his family, and two of his sons and their families for the exodus.

As yet Broken Tooth was the recognized leader in the colony. No other beaver had grown to his size and strength. His thick body was fully three feet long. He weighed at least sixty pounds. His tail was fourteen inches in length and five in width, and on a still night he could strike the water a blow that could be heard a quarter of a mile away. His webbed hindfeet were twice as large as his mate's and he was easily the swiftest swimmer in the colony.

Following the afternoon when Gray Wolf and Kazan struck into the north came the clear still night when Broken Tooth climbed to the top of the dam, shook himself, and looked down to see that his army was behind him. In the starlit water of the big pond rippled and flashed with the movement of many bodies. A few of the older beavers clambered up after Broken Tooth and the old patriarch plunged down into the narrow stream on the other side of the dam. Now the shinning silken bodies of the emigrants followed him in the starlight. In ones and twos and threes they climbed over the dam and with them went a dozen children born three months before. Easily and swiftly they began the journey down-stream, the youngsters swimming furiously to keep up with their parents. In all they numbered forty. Broken Tooth swam well in the lead, with his older workers and battlers behind him. In the rear followed mothers and children.

All of the night the journey continued. The otter, their deadliest enemy—deadlier even than man—hid himself in a thick clump of willows as they passed. Nature, which sometimes sees beyond the vision of man, had made him the enemy of these creatures that were passing his hiding-place in the night. A fish feeder, he was born to be a conserver as well as destroyer of the creatures on which he fed. Perhaps nature told him that too many beavers dams stopped the run of spawning fish and that where there were many beavers there was always few fish. Maybe he reasoned as to why fish hunting was poor and he went hungry. So, unable to cope singly with whole tribes of his enemies, he worked to destroy their dams. How this, in turn, destroyed the beavers will be seen in the fued in which nature had already schemed that he should play a part with Kazan and Gray Wolf.

A dozen times during the night Broken Tooth halted to investigate the food supplies along the banks. But in two or three places where he found plenty of bark on which they lived it would have been difficult to have constructed a dam. His wonderful engineering instincts rose even above food instincts. And when each time he moved onward, no beaver questioned his judgment by remaining behind. In the early dawn they crossed the burn and came to the edge of the swamp domain of Kazan and Gray Wolf. By right of discovery and possession that swamp belonged to the dog and the wolf. In every part of it they had left their marks of ownership. But Broken Tooth was a creature of the water and the scent of his tribe was not keen. He led on, traveling more slowly when they entered the timber. Just behind the windfall home of Kazan and Gray Wolf he halted and clambering ashore balanced himself upright on his webbed hindfeet and four-pound tail. Here he had found ideal conditions. A dam could be constructed easily across the narrow stream and the water could be made to flood a big supply of poplar, birch, willow and alder. Also the place was sheltered by heavy timber, so that the winters would be warm. Broken Tooth quickly gave his followers to understand that this was to be their new home. On both sides of the stream they swarmed into the nearby timber. The babies began at once to nibble hungrily at the tender bark of willow and alder. The older ones, every one of them now a working engineer, investigated excitedly, breakfasting by nibbling off a mouthful of bark now and then.



That day the work of home-building began. Broken Tooth himself selected a big birch that leaned over the stream and began the work of cutting through the teninch butt with his three long teeth. Though the old patriarch had lost one tooth, the three remaining had not deteriorated with age. The outer edge of them was formed of the hardest enamel; the inner side was of soft ivory. They were like fine steel chisels, the enamel never wearing away and the softer ivory replacing itself year by year as it was consumed. Sitting on his hind legs, with his forepaws resting against the tree and with his heavy tail giving him a firm balance, Broken Tooth began gnawing a narrow ing entiely around the tree. He worked tirelessly for several hours and when at last he stopped to rest another workman took up the task. Meanwhile a dozen beavers were hard at work cutting timber. Long before Broken Tooth's tree was ready to fall across the stream, a small poplar crashed into the water. The cutting on the big birch was in the shape of an hour-glass. While the beaver prefers to do most of his work at night he is a day laborer as well, and Broken Tooth gave his tribe little rest during the days that followed. With almost human intelligence the .little engineers kept at their task. Smaller trees were felled, and these were cut into four or five foot lengths. One by one these lengths were rolled to the stream, the beavers pushing them with their head and forepaws, and by means of brush and small limbs they were fastened securely against the birch. When the framework was completed the wonderful cement construction was begun. In this the beavers were the masters of men. Dynamite was the only force that could hereafter brak up what they were building now. Under their cup-like chins the beavers brought from the banks a mixture of mud and fine twigs carrying fom half a pound to a pound at a load and began filling up the framework with it. This task seemed tremendous, and yet Broken Tooth's engineers could carry a ton of this mud and twig mixture during a day and night. In three days the water was beginning to back, until it rose about the butts of a dozen or more trees and was flooding a small area of brush. This made work easier From now on materials could be cut in the water much morehrdmfwhrdrf in the water and easily floated. While a part of the beaver colony was taking advantage of the water, othes were felling trees end to end with the birch laying the working frame of a dam a hundred feet in width.

They had nearly accomplished this work when one morning Kazan and Gray Wolf returned to the swamp.

CHAPTER XX

A Fued in the Wilderness

A soft wind blowing from the south and east brought the scent of the invaders to Gray Wolf's nose when they were still half a mile away. She gave the warning to Kazan and he, too, found the strange scent in the air. It grew stronger as they advanced. When two hundred yards from the windfall they heard the sudden crash of a falling tree, and stopped. For a full minute they stood tense and listening. Then the silence was broken by a squeaking cry, followed by a splash. Gray Wolf's alert ears fell back and she turned her blind face understandingly toward Kazan. They trotted ahead slowly, approaching the windfall from behind. Not until they had reached the top of the knoll on which it was situated did Kazan begin to see the wonderful change that had taken place during their absence. Astounded, they stood while he stared. There was no longer a little creek below them. Where it had been was a pond that reached almost to the foot of the knoll. It was fully a hundred feet in width and the backwater had flooded the trees and bush for five or six times that distance toward the burn. They had come up quietly and Broken Tooth's dull-scented workers were unaware of their presence. Not fifty feet away Broken Tooth himself was gnawing at the butt of a tree. An equal distance to the right of him four or five of the baby beavers were at play building a miniature dam of mud and tiny twigs. On the opposite side of the pond was a steep bank six or seven feet high, and here a few of the older children—two years old, but still not workmen—were having great fun climbing the bank and using it as a toboggan slide. It was their splashing that Kazan and Gray Wolf heard. In a dozen different places the older beavers were at work.

A few weeks before Kazan had looked upon a similar scene when he returned into the north from Broken Tooth's old home. It had not interested him then. But a quick and thrilling change swept through him now. The beavers had ceased being mere water animals, uneatable and with an odor that displeased him. His fangs bared silently. His crest stiffened like the hair of a brush and the muscles of his forelegs and shoulders stood out like whip cords. Not a sound came from him as he rushed down upon Broken Tooth. The old beaver was oblivious of danger until Kazan was within twenty-feet of him. Naturally slow of movement on land he stood for an instant stupified. Then he swung down from the tree as Kazan leaed upon him. Over and over they rolled to the edge of the bank, carried on by the dog's momentum. In another moment the thick heavy body of the beaver had slipped like oil from under Kazan and Broken Tooth was safe in his element, two holes bitten clean through his fleshy tail. Baffled in his effort to get a death hold on Broken Tooth, Kazan swung like a flash to the right. The young beavers had not moved. Astonished and frightened at what they had seen, they stood as if stupified. Not until they saw Kazan tearing toward them did they awaken to action. Three of them reached the water. The fourth and fifth—baby beavers not more than three months old—were too late. With a single snap of his jaw Kazan broke the back of one of . The other he pinned down by the throat and shook as a terrier shakes a rat. When Gray Wolf trotted down to him both of the little beavers were dead. She sniffed at their soft little bodies and whined. Perhaps the baby creatures reminded her of runaway Baree her own baby, for there was a note of longing in her whine as she nosed them. It was the mother whine.

But if Gray Wolf had visions of her own Kazan understood nothing of them. He had killed two of the creatures that had dared to invade their home. To the little beavers he had been as merciless as the gray lynx that had murdered Gray Wolf's children on the top of Sun Rock. Now that he had sunk his teeth into the flesh of his enemies his blood was filled with a frenzied desire to kill. He raved along the edge of the pond snarling at the uneasy water under which Broken Tooth had disappeared All of the beavers had taken refuge in the pond, and its surface was heaving with the passing of many bodies beneath. Kazan came to the end of the dam. This was new. Instinctively he knew that it was the wark of Broken Tooth and his tribe, and for a few moments he tore fiercely at the matted sticks and limbs. Suddenly there was an unheavel of water close to the dam, fifty feet out from the bank, and Broken Tooth's big gray head appeared. For a tense half minute Broken Tooth and Kazan measured each other at that distance. Then Broken Tooth drew his wet shining body out of the water to the top of the dam, and squatted flat, facing Kazan. The old patriarch was alone. Not another beaver had shown himself.

The surface of the pond had now become quiet. Vainly Kazan tried to discover a footing that would allow him to reach the watchful invader. But between the solid wall of the dam and the bank there was a tangled framework through which the water rushed with some violence. Three times Kazan fought to work his way through that tangle, and three times his efforts ended in sudden plunges into the water. All this time Broken Tooth did not move. When at last Kazan gave up the attack the old engineer slipped over the edge of the dam and disappeared under the water He had learned that Kazan, like the lynx, could not fight water and he spread the news among the members of his own colony.

Gray Wolf and Kazan returned to the windfall and lay down in the warm sun. Half an hour later Broken Tooth drew himself out on the opposite side of the pond. He was followed by the other beavers. Across the water they resumed their work as if nothing had happened. The tree-cutters returned to their trees. Half a dozn worked in the water carrying loads of cement and twigs. The middle of the pond was their deadline. Across this not one of them passed. A dozen times during the hour that followed one of the beavers swam up to the dead-line, and rested there, looking at the shining little bodies of the babies that Kazan had killed. Perhaps it was the mother, and perhaps some finer instinct unknown to Kazan told this to Gray Wolf. For Gray Wolf went down twice to sniff at the dead bodies, and each time—without seeing—she went when the mother beave had come to the dead-line.

The first fierce animus had worn itself from Kazan's blood, and he now watched the beavers closely. He had learned that they were not fighters They were many to one and yet they ran from him like a lot of rabbits. Broken Tooth had not even struck at him, and slowly it grew upon him that these invading creatures that used both the water and the land would have to be hunted as he stalked the rabbit and the partridge. Early in the afternoon he slipped off into the bush, followed by Gray Wolf. He had often begun the stalking of a rabbit by moving away from it and he employed this wolf trick now with the beavers. Beyond the windfall he turned and began trotting up the creek, with the wind. For a quarter of a mile the creek was deeper than it had ever been. One of their old fording places was completely submerged, and at last Kazan plunged in and swam across, leaving Gray Wolf to wait for him on the windfall side of the stream.

Alone he made his way quickly in the direction of the dam, traveling two hundred yards back from the creek. Twenty yards below the dam a dense thicket ofaeird shrdmfwyshrdcmfwhr thicket of alder and willow grew close to the creek and Kazan took advantage of this. He aproached within a leap or two of the dam without being seen and crouched close to the ground, ready to spring forth when the opportunity came. Most of the beavers were now working in the water. The four or five still on the shore were close to the water and some distance upstream. After a wait of several minutes Kazan was almost on the point of staking everything on a wild rush upon his enemies when a movement on the dam attracted his attention. Halfway out two or three beavers were at work strengthening the central structue with cement. Swift as a flash Kazan darted from his cover to the shelter behind the dam. Here the water was very shallow, the main portion of the stream finding a passage close to the opposite shore. Nowhere did it reach to his belly as he waded out. He was completely hidden from the beavers, and the wind was in his favor. The noise of running water drowned what little sound he made. Soon he heard the beaver workmen over him. The branches of the fallen birch gave him a footing, and he clambered up.

A moment later his head and shoulders appeared above the top of the dam. Scarce an arm's length away Broken Tooth was forcing into place a three-foot length of poplar as big around as a man's arm. He was so busy that he did not hear or see Kazan. Another beaver gave the warning as he plunged into the pond. Broken Tooth looked up, and his eyes met Kazan's bared fangs. There was no time to turn. He threw himself back, but it was a moment too late. Kazan was upon him. His long fangs sank deep into Broken Tooth's neck. But the old beaver had thrown himself enough back to make Kazan lose his footing. At the same moment his chisel-like teeth got a firm hold of the loose skin at Kazan's throat. Thus clinched, with Kazan's long teeth buried almost to the beaver's jugular, they plunged down into the deep water of the pond.

General Progress of the War Reviewed

ITALY'S LOSS NOT SO BAD AFTER ALL

The regret of the week was the losses sustained by Italy. While the number of men and guns seemed appallingly large still this loss is not to be considered in the same light as the effect such a loss will have on the remaining army. The morale of the Italian army does not seem to be up to the standard and naturally such a loss will have a lasting effect that will take a long time to eradicate. While there is little doubt that as soon as the retreating Italian army gets on more favorable ground they will recover from their fright and will doubtless make a better stand to check the oncoming Austrians and Huns, but still this loss will weaken the backbone of the Italian army and it will need a great many of the allies' men to restore them to their former feeling of assurance.

ITALY'S DEFEAT MAY HAVE GOOD EFFECT

The crushing blow that the Teutons dealt Italy the early part of the week when upwards of 100,000 men were made prisoners will have a good effect after all. It had the effect of waking the allies up to the necessity of protecting all the ends no matter where they are located. To leave any part of the different armies to their own resources without having ample protection for an emergency is a foolhardy and costly experience as the past fiasco has shown. Ahe last reports show that Italy has stopped the flood of retreat and is now holding her own. If she can do this long enough to permit the British to get reinforcements to her all will be well otherwise more serious consequences may ensue. The best we can do under the present circumstances is to place our confidence in the great Almighty and hope for the best.

U. S. TROOPS ARRIVE IN TRENCHES

One particularly gratifying report that came from the front this week was the information that the United States troops had arrived and were relieving many of the British troops in the French trenches. This is bound to be reassuring news for the boys at the fighting line and it means new life, new hope and renewed ability to win this fight. The fact that Pershing's men have joined the allies is bound to have a depressing effect upon the Huns that are fighting. It could not be otherwise, even with men with a greater mentality than the Germans would feel this keenly and it would certainly have a material effect upon their fighting ability. As it is such a report coupled with the amount of publicity that has gone ahead regarding the Americans, the effect would tend to take much of the bulldog courage of the Hun away.

RENEWED EFFORT NOW NECESSARY

The most depressing news that we have received for some time was the press dispatch that came over the wire on Friday stating that Russia was tired of the war and would probably accept terms for peace. While there is nothing authentic about this report still Russia's attitude the past few weeks would indicate that something of this nature was in the wind to prompt her to the seeming idleness that has been characteristic of her movements for some time. This is a crushing blow to the allies if the report is true but it can have but one effect—to spur us on to renewed effort to win this war, because to win we must, and shall. Failure is impossible for various reasons. To lose would mean serfhood for us and in this enlightened age we could never go back to this state of affairs. Death would be preferable to many, in this, and other of the allied countries, rather than submit to a bond of slavery that Germany would impose. So it means fight and a bitter fight to the end. Success or complete annihilation should be our watchword.

United Grain Expert Says Market Dull and Inactive

The feature of the week has been the setting of the prices for the lower grades of wheat. On October 31st the Canadian Board of Grain Supervisors issued an order that fixes the price for four, five and six wheat for the balance of the present crop season This leaves us with a fixed price for all wheat and the complete list of grades with spreads will be as follows:

1 Northern	$2.21
2 Northern	2.18
3 Nothern	2.15
No. 4,	2.08
No. 5,	1.96
No. 6,	1.87

These prices are of course, basis in store Fort William, and will remain unchanged until August 31, 1918.

With no liklihood of any movement in the value of any of these grades, the sample markets, which were established recently will practically not be in use this year. Where there is no range in value for any one grade selling on sample can be of no advantage to the shipper. So far this season a few cars could have been sold strictly according to government inspection, but from now on nothing is to be gained. There will be but one price for all grades except feed wheat. More nor less than the fixed prices will not be paid.

The Wheat Export still are the big buyers of wheat at Fort William. Everything is being taken as fast as it arrives.

OATS—The market for oats has been a little stronger both at Fort William and the interior. Further along west the demand is particularly noticable and it is evident that a good share of the Alberta oats will be used in our own province. Districts in Saskatchewan and Manitoba are also inquiring for oats in Alberta and are offering something better as a rule than Fort William values. Later on there will doubtless be quite a cry for oats that are guaranteed suitable for seed.

Barley.—Barley is nominally a cent lower than last week's figures. The barley has been selling at $1.20 at Fort William most of the week. The demand is steady.

Flax.—Flax is higher. On Friday 1 N.W. was quoted at $3.10, which is fully 15 cents ocer the low point of the week.

IMAGINE A GENERAL AT 27 YEARS OF AGE

The youngest general in the British army if not in the entire world, is General Freyberg. He is only 27 years old. The Petit Parisien compares him with some of the youthful heroes of the French revolution, and continues:

"Freyberg had enlisted in General Villa's army in Mexico when the world war broke out. He had no money for his passage to Britain, but earned it as a professional sportsman in the United States. Upon his arrival he was commissioned as a subaltern. Together with a comrade he landed in the Bay of Bulair one night. By lighting fires and firing rockets and imitating the sounds of an army preparing to attack he kept part of the Turks at bay, while at another point the British army approached the coast. When the success of his ruse was assured, he jumped into the sea and swam about for six hours before being picked up.

"Some time afterward he was fighting on the Somme, always in the thick of the fray. In the dreadful hours of Beaumont-Hebel (he was a lieutenant-colonel then) he inspired his men to such incredible deeds of daring that the astonished officers asserted he had taken Beaucourt-sur-l'Ancre practically single-handed."

MORE FOR EXEMPTIONS THAN FOR SERVICE

Last Friday morning at the local military registration office, there were 129 who reported for service and 724 claims for exemption. The totals now stand at 2,085 reports for service and 15,682 claims for exemption.

Big Zeppelin Is Now French Prize Near Bourbonne-Les-Baines

Description of the War Prize Which Was Captured by the Men of the French Army—Zeppelin Was 600 Feet Long and the Envelope 60 Feet in Diameter.

American Headquarters in France—The stray Zeppelin L-49 that was downed by the French near Bourbonne-Les-Baines while trying to get back to its base, was 600 feet long and the envelope was 60 feet in diameter.

French and American officers made a thorough examination of the great craft, but the civilians were held back by ropes that were stretched around the dirigible.

The gondolas are connected by cleated cockwalks and the whole construction of the craft was said by her examiners to be quite wonderful. The outer cover is of delicate texture, double riveted and soldered. She was equipped with a wireless outfit.

The machinery is highly complicated and the driving motors were equipped with 12 cylinders. There was a machine gun in each of the gondolas and the rear one was equipped with hammocks for the crew to sleep in. Apparently, however, the forward gondola was fitted up as a cabin for the commander. The lower portion was painted black and the upper part a dull gray. On one side was painted a small iron cross.

There were no bullet holes visible in the craft, but the forward gondola had been wrecked in descent.

It has already been suggested that the craft be sent to the Invalides palace in Paris.

After inspecting the balloon the American officers were returning to town just as the Zeppelin's prisoned crew was being transported through the crowded streets.

The commanding lieutenant looked downhearted and disgusted. Another officer was a typical old Prussian non-commission, with a scar on his nose as though made by a sword-welt. The men were well built and wore leather jackets.

It was reported here that another Zeppelin was captured several kilometers away when the forward gondola crashed into a tree, dumping part of the crew to the ground. The Zeppelin relieved of this load, then rose, tilted unsteadily and caught fire.

The Zeppelin brought down intact near here carried only incendiary bombs, apparently for the purpose of self destruction in the event of capture. All the explosives evidently had been dropped in England.

The French evidenced the greatest interest in the prize and many wounded were wheeled to the scene in chairs.

Several hundred Americans commanded by an aviation officer, are now learning aeroplane construction in the most practical way possible at a French camp, a few hours ride from General Bullard's student aviation school.

French planes of all types wrecked or damaged at the front are shipped to this camp and are taken apart by the Americans under French instructors. They are learning how to make repairs and to build new motors as well. Each student spends half a day learning the theory of aeroplane construction and the other half in actual shop practice taking down motors of all types and rebuilding them. The French instructors frequently remove a piece of the mechanism and then ask the American what is missing. Similar instruction is given in assembling machines. When this educational training is completed the men enter the factory where machines are built until they are experts in all lines of airplane construction and repair.

On the evening after I visited this camp the French staged a remarkable concert in honor of General Bullard and the Americans. The hall was decorated with French and American flags and was crowded. There was an excellent soldier orchestra and the French regiment commander welcomed the Americans by reading a speech in English. The first number was a solo by a French sergeant who was formerly one of the best known singers in France. The second was a comedy act by a comedian who was formerly well known on the Paris stage. The program also included "Carmen" by singers from grand opera and a Spanish ballet.

The Americans are well quartered in French barracks and health conditions are excellent, except for a few cases of mumps that have been traced to to cases that developed in an American fort.

MAREEA BOTCHKAREVA

EMPEROR WILLIAM HAS A GOOD MANY ENEMIES

Washington, D. C.—At least 38,000,000 men are bearing arms in the war—27,500,000 on the side of the world allies and 10,600,000 on the side of the central powers, according to latest war department compilations from published reports in various countries. These figures do not include naval personnel strength, which would raise the total several millions.

Against Germany's 7,000,000, Austria's 3,000,000, Turkey's 300,000 and Bulgaria's 300,000 are arrayed the following armed forces: Russia, 9,000,000; France, 6,000,000; Great Britain, 6,000,000; Italy, 3,000,000; Japan, 1,400,000; United States, more than 1,000,000; China, 41,000; Roumania, 320,000; Serbia, 300,000; Belgium, 300,000; Greece, 300,000; Portugal, 200,000; Montenegro, 40,000; Siam, 36,000; Cuba, 11,000 and Liberia, 400 San Marino and Panama also have some forces under arms.

Military experts do not regard these figures as entirely accurate, but believe they represent in round numbers the comparative strengths of the contending armies as published recently.

Germany and Austria have made every effort to conceal the precise numbers of their armies but careful estimates of allied military intelligence departments have placed the total at about 10,000,000, with Germany's force more than double Austria's.

Political Situation in Canada Outlined

Politics seems to be a back number judging by the interest the public is taking in it at present. Perhaps the war or the private troubles of the average man has driven the great question out of the minds of the people temporarily but certainly politics is not the leading question of the day as it would be ordinarily. Here it is on the eve of a national election when either party has a good chance to win and aside from the "cut and dried" politician the ordinary citizen is hardly turning a hair in either direction. If this same inertia continues until election day it is hard to surmise what will be the result. The fact that the Conservatives are in may have a telling effect on the future vote although if more interest was being taken by the public at large the Liberals might have an even chance for glory. One thing is sure and that is, the ordinary business man is taking no interest whatsoever, either in the outcome nationally or locally.

During the past month there has been a wave or two floating around regarding the candidates who would run this year. So far the interest has been practically nil. Once in a while some enterprising politician would circulate a report regarding the prospects of some candidate more to sound the situation than anything else. These reports would usually be denied by the candidates and the publicity exploiters would wend their way onward hatching out new plans on the strength of the denials. But the real business men and the sound leaders of the city are not taking material interest in the coming election.

The strongest candidate in Calgary today is His Worship Mayor Costello. Quiet, unassuming in demeanor, but with a personality that appeals he has so ingratiated himself into the hearts of the people of Calgary that it is a foregone conclusion that if he runs he will do so by acclamation if the people have anything to say about it. His election is sure, that is, as sure as any political election can be predicted before the event. He has the approval and good will of every man, woman and child in Calgary and that does seem enough, although there has been many a slip of like character in the political game.

IF SIR WILFRID WERE RETURNED?

At a meeting of the Mackenzie Liberal club last Wednesday, Dr. J. J. Guerin, ex-mayor of Montreal, expressed his views on the subject of "Conscription and Union Government". He stated that the Mackenzie-Mann people could well be complimented on their choice of members to the Union government, "for," he said, "there is no doubt that if Laurier were returned to office he would repeal the Military Service act."

At the same meeting several of the members present declared that it was a shame that people were not allowed to express their view on conscription, while others were troubled over the fact that they had been promised by the Minister of Justice that there would be no conscription in Canada.

As it stands today the drafting system is the only one which will secure the necessary men, so why should any one person or party because of their political views hinder the Allies from gaining the end over which millions of men have already sacrificed their lives?

BETTER REPRESENTATION AT NOMINATING CONVENTIONS

The Great War Veterans' association met in Winnipeg last Wednesday night and after a short discussion passed the following resolution:

"Whereas, we are of the opinion that candidates for the forthcoming federal election should be nominated by a conference representative of all influential bodies in the city, and in view of the manenr of selecting prospective candidates, we believe that they do not represent the electors outside of the bodies nominating them. They can in no sense whatever be considered as true union candidates, and as that is the aim we see above all others, a conference fully representative of Labor, Next-of-Kin, Liberal, Conservative, Great War Vets. and Army and Navy Vets. should be called to name candidates, to give all the opportunity to voice their views; and thus, as far as possible, prevent the game of politics being played under the guise of union government propaganda."

This resolution shows that the "Vets" see that a better representation at nominating conventions, especially during this seeming political turmoil, would tend to satisfy all the members of all parties and eliminate what is called "The game of politics."

ALBERTA WILL HAVE THREE MILLION ACRES IN WHEAT NEXT YEAR

Alberta will next year have approximately 3,000,000 acres of land under cultivation for wheat alone. This will nearly double the acreage under wheat for the year of 1915, and will be approximately 50 per cent. greater than the acreage in wheat for the season of 1917.

These figures are made up only after long and careful investigation of the acreage under crop for last season, this year, and the areas broken for planting since the last crop was put in.

It is merely an estimate, of course, but it will be found to be a fairly accurate one, for correct figures are at any time unavailable on this subject.

The estimate will surprise those who have taken governmental figures as accurate on this subject to date. They will be greater than any government figures by 1,000,000 acres, perhaps, though it is possible that their issuance by this paper after close investigation and reports from every section of the province anent the new ground broken and the area under wheat cultivation will bring about a revision of governmental figures on the same subject.

This estimate is made up from numerous reports received from outlying points, and is checked up with the population on the farms and the number of farmers as compared with a total on the basis of a fair ratio of the acres each one is putting in.

It shows that there has been a more remarkable growth of the land being put under production than anyone realizes.

The conditons in this province in this respect are this year augmented by the fact that many farmers are planting a larger proportion of their acreage into wheat.

A few additional figures will give a computation of the tremendous wealth per capita which will flow to Alberta as a result.

MANITOBA GREAT FIELD FOR HORSE RAISING

Both the soil of Manitoba and climatic conditions are admirably suited for horse raising. An abundance of pasture and feed of every description suitable for horses can be grown, and the cost of production is much lower than in the older settled districts. The winters, although somewhat cold are dry, and are not so keenly felt as in more limited areas. Thousands of horses are wintered annually out of doors, and they come through the winter in suprisingly good condition. Rarely is the fall of snow so heavy as to prevent horses from finding sufficient feed for themselves out of doors.

The demand for draft horses has been seldom so keen as it is at the present time. Geldings of fair size and quality were changing hands this spring at prices from $225 to $300 each and mares of a similar type and quality were bringing a slightly higher price.

It is estimated that Manitoba has 250,000 head of horses, of which approximately 1,200 are stallions enrolled in the Department of Agriculture. A conservative estimate would place the total value of the horses at $40,000,000.

Noted Author Says That Germany Is Bound To Fail

Gives His Reasons in a Comprehensive Manner Which Seem to Carry Much Weight—Says War Will Last Till 1919—German Leaders, He Declares, Are Brutal.

Dr. Usher, without doubt, is one of the best informed men in the country regarding the aims and ambitions of the Germans, as his famous book on "Pan-Germanism" so well sets forth. The interview, therefore, is doubly valuable and interesting.

Germany will fail, he says.

Germany will continue to make peace offers and these will continue to be refused by the allies, for Germany will never make an offer that will be accepted until she is thoroughly defeated.

When the German leaders realize this they will lay their cards on the table face up. Not till then.

Germany to Fail Twice

Dr. Usher said in answer to the questions of the Post:

"The outstanding factor in Germany's defeat will be her inability to continue producing. It will be an economic downfall more than a military one. The demand upon her production capacity is enormous; she cannot continue indefinitely in competition with her more resourceful opponents for she is compelled to produce not alone for herself but for her allies as well. She will fail.

"This war will not end soon. The allies certainly are not ready to talk terms of peace and they would be foolish to do so until they see how badly they can defeat Germany. Especially is this true now that the United States is in the war.

"Germany will continue to make peace offers and the allies will continue to refuse to listen to them for the very simple but good reason that Germany will make no offer before she is beaten that will approach the terms she will have to make if she is beaten.

"When the German leaders become convinced that the game is up they will lay down the cards and call it over. I do not believe that will be this year—or next. I believe it may come in 1919. Germans have woefully misread the other nations but they understand themselves well.

"I do not look for a revolution in Germany during the war. I do look for immediate changes in the government of Germany, however, as soon as the war ends, or just as soon as the end—and defeat—becomes clear to the German people.

"If Austria breaks, if economic conditions in Austria, much less well organized than in Germany, become intolerable, Austria will have to stop fighting. Or she might become so enfeebled as to be useless. Austria is handicapped by a less obedient people than Germany.

"Germany would then have to accept terms dictated by the allies, even though she might, of herself, be able to hold out somewhat longer. But the great scheme would then have failed definitely; it would be folly for Germany to continue.

Leaders Brutal, But Keen

"The German leaders may be brutal, but they do not lack perception. They may sacrifice the lives of Germans without scruple so long as it appears there is something to be gained; they will certainly not throw away lives on a forlorn hope because they know well that they will need them in the future.

"Alsace-Lorraine will certainly go back to France. There will be territorial changes in Europe proper and they will be about as the allies want.

"I believe that the allies honestly wish to satisfy Germany, so far as it can be done, consistent with their own safety. If the situation in Europe is put about as the allies want on a basis of safety there is no reason why a settlement cannot be made that will be fair and satisfactory to both sides; a settlement that will not be dangerous to Germany's legitimate future, nor yet more than she can reasonably grant.

"There is no reason why the allies cannot give Germany more commercial opportunity in certain districts. I am confident that they will be generous to Germany and anxious enough to incure the peace of the world to give her somewhat more opportunity out of Europe probably in Asia Minor and in Africa.

"Germany will agree to an elaborate restitution of Belgium, of that I am confident. She well knows the feelings of the world on that feature of the situation; and, indeed, there are a great many in Germany who favor this action, not from the standpoint of good policy, but from its strictly moral side.

"This key to the situation in the matter of democratizing Germany is the fact that the people of Germany do not use the word democracy in the same sense that we do. The German includes things we do not; he leaves out the particular thing that we re talking about at present, that is, the responsibility of the executive to the people.

The German View

"The difficulty in establishing in Germany what we in America and England mean by democracy is not so much a failure to understand what we mean, but because of a very definite belief that the sort of constitutional device we mean is not practical for Germany. Its adoption would immediately destroy what a great many Germans regard as institutions indispensable to Germany's future. I mean the smaller German states.

"The empire was created not so much to exalt Prussia as to create a compromise between Prussia and the other sovereign states of Germany, so that this co-operation would be assured in the future. To introduce the American presidential system, or the English or French responsible ministry elected by a majority of the popular house, would destroy, in practice, the very real authority now enjoyed by the small German states, because it would make Prussia's control of Germany absolute where it is now only partial.

"Prussia would then be able to act without consulting the other German states at all in whatever she chose, because her members would always be in an overwhelming majority in the reichstag.

"At present, in one way or another, Prussia usually gets her way on things of real importance, but she has to amend and compromise with other states in the bundesrat in order to accomplish it.

"The German kaiser is certainly the most powerful executive in the world today. But comparatively little of this power comes from his position as kaiser. It is as King of Prussia that he really counts. The other German states are very hostile to the idea of increasing his power as kaiser, or the power of Prussia, in the empire.

"Here is the real opposition to the notion that reform in Germany is likely at present. Reform in Prussia would work great changes, but they would be more than compensated if it were accompanied by democratic reforms in the empire.

"There is, for example, no imperial administration, no imperial system of courts for the execution of ordinary laws. There are imperial ministers, officials and courts, but they do not do the work that most people outside of Germany supose. The real work of administering German laws is performed by the German states, not by the empire. The empire may make a law but it cannot force it; the states do that.

"Now a responsible ministry or a president on the American plan would necessarily carry with it the introduction of a real imperial administration which would execute federal law as does the United States. That would at once put many if not all the functions now performed by the small German states into the hands of the imperial machinery and rob those states of the real power to govern at all.

"Prussia certainly would not object because Prussia is already two-thirds of Germany. She would certainly control the new government and would of course create the imperial system by extending her own institutions to the rest of Germany.

"The smaller German states would oppose this tooth and nail; they would support Prussia perhaps against the rest of the world, but they have no desire to see the Prussian literally governing the whole of Germany.

"Anyone who will read President Wilson's statements carefully will see clearly that he has all these things in mind. He does not propose to destroy the German constitution or to increase the power of Prussia by putting all the small German states much more under her control than they are at present. The president proposes merely to change the control of the foreign policy and the army and navy policy by the sovereign states of Germany in secret session in the bundesrath and dominated very clearly by the kaiser's representatives.

"A change in the control of Germany's foreign affairs is the essential thing; everything else may well remain as it is.

"This is a much less sweeping change than most Europeans have thought necessary; less sweeping than most Americans supposed to be involved. If German statesmen and the people of the smaller states of Germany could be made to understand that President Wilson's proposals do not comprehend a reduction of the power of the smaller states but an increase in their power over Prussia instead, they would raise fewer obstacles to the change and see the light more quickly.

"The difficulty, however, in getting the German people in their present state of mind to believe that proposals about democracy are not meant to destroy German independence in Europe is much greater than most people think. Adaptability is not a German characteristic; stubbornness is.

"That the allies will win the war is clearly a matter of very powerful logic, but just what the conditions of victory will be no one can see with certainty at this time. The longer the war goes on the more radical will be the changes in all the countries.

"And this is particularly true of the United States. The war has upon us the effect of a forcing process. We shall reach conditions on development which George Washington saw to be desirable and probable, and of which Abraham Lincoln dreamed.

"We will become economically independent of Europe. We will experience a more thorough welding together of our people. A stronger patriotism will develop. Co-operation in politics and industry will be established. Our position as a world power will be assured.

"It will be as if we had grown 20 years in a night; a century in a week. These are results which will only be intensified the longer the war goes on. They are great results, worth even more to us than this war is going to cost us, and in that sense we cannot fail to win.

"But we are going to beat Germany just the same and the result will be a spread of democracy in Germany, and though it probably will leave the small German states in existence it may not be as thorough a conversion of the people of Germany as we should like.

"The newspapers of the United States have done wonderfully, magnificently. They have shown great public spirit and tact and at a sacrifice. They have been given many confidences which they have not betrayed."

Commenting briefly on the labor situation in the United States, he said:

"The present labor situation is not a new thing; there is not a single phase of it that has not happened before in our history. I do not believe the country at large is now in a mood to allow unwise labor unions to interfere with the prosecution of the war"

HEREFORD BULL SOLD TO INDIANA FARMER

Keystone Ranch at Bawlf, Alta., have sold a fine Hereford bull valued at $6,000 to Warren T. McGray, of Kentland, Indiana.

Who Should Buy Canada's Victory Bonds, and Why

WHO wants to help win the war?

Who wants to give our soldiers all the support which their bravery and self-sacrifice and imperative needs demand of our gratitude and our patriotism?

Who wants Canada to do her full part in producing food, metals, ships, munitions and clothing for our fighting men; her full part in winning the war?

Who wants to help Britain to buy in Canada all she wants to buy of the products of Canada's fields and industries and labor?

From the mighty heart of Canada hear the full-throated answer roll from the Atlantic to the Pacific, echo back and up from the southern frontier, far and away into the frosty wastes of the Arctic circle:

"Every Canadian Loves His Country and will do His Full Duty"

AND every woman whose son or husband, or brother or father is fighting in France, because it means support and comfort and victory to him, sends up a prayer that Canada will provide the money to help him win the war for home and freedom.

Every boy and girl, because they want to have a part in winning the war, and in writing Canada's name into a glorious chapter of the world's history, will help Canada to raise the money by buying Victory Bonds.

THEN from the business point of view: The farmer will buy Victory Bonds because it will enable him to continue to supply the armies and the people of Great Britain with live stock, grain and the other products of his fields. The farmer must have a market for his produce and it is essential to Canada that Britain shall be enabled to pay cash for that produce with money provided by Canada's Victory Bonds.

Canada's Victory Bonds make it possible for Canada and her farmers to continue doing business with Great Britain and our allies and it is supremely necessary that the farmer shall continue to produce, and that Britain shall continue to buy his products.

Every man in Canada who works for his living or operates a business of any kind can help himself and help Canada to win the war by buying Victory Bonds. When he buys Victory Bonds he helps to maintain that general prosperity which is essential to his own.

And the prosperity of each individual is indispensable to the nation, because it is from individuals that the nation must get the money to win the war.

It is both Good Business and True Patriotism for every Canadian to buy Canada's Victory Bonds to the utmost of his or her ability

I Wish I Were a Very Rich Man

I would buy a tremendous edition of Mr. Bacheller's THE LIGHT IN THE CLEARING and present it to every young man and woman I know—thus spoke one of Philadelphia's honored citizens to his bookseller concerning

The LIGHT in the CLEARING

By IRVING BACHELLER
Author of Eben Holden

The book that by its continued and uninterrupted demand shows every sign of permanence is The Light in the Clearing, by Irving Bacheller. This is because it pictures greatly a great time in the life and history of our country, does it simply, humanly, and humorously.

The people who live in it are the sturdy sons and daughters of freedom; the life portrayed is the life of toil and thrift and brave good-cheer; the theme is loyalty, integrity and the preservation of high ideals in the face of all temptations—the simple, yet lofty language of the literature that is universal and imperishable.

Entertainment and Inspiration are in its pages; kindliness and humor abound, and it is as it should be, the novel of the hour.

Canada's Victory Loan and the Western Farmer

What the Farmer's Duty is, is Ably Expressed by a Writer in the Lethbridge Herald.

It is every citizen's duty to purchase a Victory bond, if he is in a position to do so. Every patriot will regard it as a privilege to participate in the Victory Loan. He will thereby contribute directly and effectively to the successful prosecution of the war which Germany has forced upon us. Canada's task is a serious one. It intimately touches each of us. It faces you and me. If we do not win this war, we must prepare ourselves for grave changes in our institutions and to lead a different sort of life from that which we had planned to live—from that which our forefathers died to give us the right to live. We shall indefinitely face the interference of the Prussian autocracy or bear permanently the intolerable burdens of militarism. To win this war we must have both men and money. Every farmer wants to do all in his power for Canada in this day of trial. He will not only labor to produce the necessary foodstuffs, but will also generously contribute of his means to make it possible for the men at the front to achieve victory. The farmers of the land will not permit any other class to take the leadership in supporting the government in this crisis, financially or otherwise.

We are defending our rights as a free nation. We are resolved that there shall be an end of brute force in international affairs. What Germany's victory would mean to the world is plain. There would be no right except might, no peace save at the price of humiliations too bitter to be borne. Small nations could not exist. There would be no sancity to a pledge, no solemnity to a covenant. With the dominance of Prussian militarism, the Anglo-Saxon struggle for free institutions and liberty, persist with its Magna Charta, its Bill of Rights, and its Declaration of Independence, will have been in vain, it is to prevent this, to defend our rights, and to make possible an orderly and just peace in the world that we are at war. Canada calls on its citizens for high and noble service. On some it calls for service in the field; on home; on all it calls for financial support. The farmers of Canada will surely respond eagerly to the call for subscripaions to the Victory Loan.

The first division of 2,000 carrier pigeons has been mobilized "somewhere in the southern department U. S. A.," preparatory to service overseas. After a brief training these erstwhile "doves of peace" will be sent to European battlefields to carry dispatches through the war zones.

The skunk has been classified as an animal of great economic importance by the Department of Agriculture. As an enemy to destructive insects and vermin, against which the farmer could not successfully cope, this animal despised and destroyed, should be protected at all times.

How War Reduces The Wool Supply

The present world war is causing an alarming shortage in the wool market in the United States. This might seem strange in view of the fact that more sheep are now on our ranges than ever before in the history of the country, if it were not also true that wool plays a decidedly important part in conducting the war on a large scale.

In the first place the United States is raising and equipping a huge army. It must be clothed and blanketed and all clothing and blankets must be made of the best grade long wool obtainable, which has never been used before. This is the grade used in civil life to make overcoats, which retail at $50; tailored suits which cost from $45 to $75, and blankets which sell in the stores for from $25 to $40 a pair.

Owing to the fact that Europe's output is practically paralyzed by the war the United States has been called upon to furnish material for use abroad, almost surpassing the amount which is being clipped at home. During the twelve months ending June, 1917, $18,423,556 worth of wool manufactures were shipped out of the country as against $4,790,097 during the same period of 1914.

Thousands of pounds of felt, which is made from old woolen clothing, blankets etc., is being used in the manufacture of munitions and the supply is to a great extent coming from the United States and South America.

In civilian life, blankets last from five to twenty-five years and clothing from one to five seasons. When garments which have been made of new wool are cast off, they are gathered, shredded, mixed with new material, respun and used for cheaper clothing; perhaps for suits which cost from $20 to $25. The same is true of discarded blankets. The process continues until a third grade material is produced, and following that it is made into waste and felt.

Therefore, it may be said that in peace times wool stuffs have three or four lives. But in time of war all is changed. Clothing and blankets are often destroyed by a shell, torn into ribbons on the barbed wire, lost in the mud or sunk in the sea. The maximum life af a garment in army service is about four to six months, and at its minimum period of existence is less than five minutes.

There are thousands of men fighting for the Allies today who are wearing uniforms of the poorest cotton cloth. These Uncle Sam would like to help, but at the present time his future army of ten million represents a large order on the wool market and one that America will have to hustle to fill during the next twelve months.

It is probable that a wool shortage will continue until the end of the war, and that woolen clothing for civilian use will be much higher, though this is only speculative theory. It is difficult to see into the future and determine just what effect the world conflict will have upon different branches of industry, but one thing is certain There will be no over production in the wool market of the world while the war lasts.

It is not beyond the range of possibility that at the present rate of consumption there may be a decided shortage before many months, which will mean that suits and overcoats made of pure wool will be not only at a very high price but very scarce as well.

THE FEEDING AND HOUSING OF SWINE

On acount of the high value of concentrated foods suitable for swine feeding, it is important that the foods that are used be so combined as to produce the maximum of results. The question of housing also enters largely into the profitable production of pork. To encourage farmers to raise as many hogs as possible, and to make the most money therefrom, the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, has issued phamphlet No. 22 on the feeding and housing of swine. This phamphlet which may be obtained free of charge at the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, also deals with the questions of breeding and care of the animals at different ages and at different seasons of the year. This phamphlet is prepared by Profesor G. E. Day, in charge of the Bacon Production Campaign, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Mr. E. S. Archibald, Dominion Animal Husbandman and his assistant, Mr. G. B. Rothwell.

Mr. Archibald, after much experimental work, lays down the principal that an expensive piggery is unnecessary. Blood sows may be kept under most circumstances, even in the winter season in a single board hog cabin. This phamphlet gives specifications and plans, not only of a large piggery, but of a cheap and portable cabin.

One-tenth of the agricultural and horticultural interests of the United States are destroyed annually by insects and our greatest safeguard is the destruction of these by the wild birds. The birds are our country's greatest aids to food conservation.

DENTISTRY As I Practice It Is a Gentle Art

NO longer need you shrink in dread and fear from the mere thought of a dental operation. The most delicate, nervous assurance that excruciating pain and shock are things of the person can safely entrust me with their dental work with the past.

PAINLESSNESS in dentistry has been my life's study. Compared to the old-time racking torture of a dental operation, dentistry, as I practise it, is as different as night is from day.

THOUSANDS of grateful, satisfied patients bear testimony to the gentleness of my methods.

COME! Put all your fears aside. Decide today to have your teeth attended to. The cost will be less, and when I replace those decayed, unsightly and useless teeth with strong, sound, beautiful substitutes which defy detection, you will feel a different person; you will improve in health and appearance.

THE MARKET SITUATIONS — The Market Review — LOCAL AND GENERAL

WINNIPEG LETTER

Government Control Has Made Wheat Market Dull

THOMPSON, SONS & CO.

The wheat markets on the North American continent are now pretty well steadied down by the price fixing which has been established, which eliminates competition so far as price is concerned. In other ways there is always something unexpected happening. In last week's letter we told of the Minneapolis flour mills being ordered by the American food controller to cut down the product to 60 per cent. of their capacity. This was hardly well established when the order was rescinded again, because the American Wheat corporation had agreed to buy from the Wheat Export company a quantity of Canadian hard spring wheat, to be shipped down the lakes for use of American millers in the eastern states, the same to be returned later on in the shape of flour for export to the allies. It is evident that this price fixing and controlling is accompanied by a great deal of chopping and changing around, causing disturbance and uncertainty to business, a great deal of which would have been avoided by leaving the trade to follow to a greater extent its ordinary routine, within fixed maximum and minimum prices During the past week the movement of wheat in America and Canada has been fairly liberal, and the movement eastward down the lakes has been heavy, 9,417,811 bushels having cleared from Fort William and Port Arthur. For the week the United States visible supply has increased 4,812,000 bushels against an increase of 242,000 bushels last year and the total now stands at 14,524,000 bushels against 60,470,000 bushels a year ago. The Canadian visible supply has increased 2,140,587 bushels against an increase of 3,582,636 bushels a year ago, and the total is now 17,867,125 bushels against 20,396,869 bushels last year. The world's shipments of wheat and flour —the flour being figured as wheat— from exporting countries to those countries which at present are able to import, were for last week 6,775,000 bushels compared with 8,760,000 bushels a year ago For several weeks back the world's shipments have kept at an average of a little over 6,000,000 bushels per week, and this quantity at the present time seems to about fill requirements. About four-fifths of the amount is shipped from the United States and Canada, and the remainder goes from Australia, the Argentine and India. Larger shipments will be needed later on in the crop year, to supply the requirements of the allies, because they have at present their own new crops to help them out, and it will depend on ocean tonnage as to how easily or otherwise the supplies may be kept up. At present there are good prospects of there being plenty of wheat in the more distant wheat countries Reports regarding the growing crops in Australia and the Argentine continue of a most promising kind, and they only need a few more weeks of favorable weather to bring them to a full reality. Out of the new crop harvesting in December and January, Australia is expected to have 80,000,000 bushels available for export, and there is still about 100,000,000 bushels of the surplus of the last two large crops still to export, and only held back by lack of tonnage. The Argentine crop may easily produce 120,000,000 bushels for export. In India, which follows closely on Australia and Argentine with a new crop, the start was a good one and the intention was to increase the acreage all that was possible. Later reports are of a favorable growing season in India and promise of a large crop. Stocks of wheat in India are liberal, but lack of ocean tonnage permits of average shipments of only about 300,000 bushels weekly.

A good increase in the acreage under winter wheat has been made in the United States and growth is mostly favorable except in the western parts of Texas, Aklahoma and Kansas, where the weather has been too dry In the spring wheat country of the United States and western Canada, winter weather has set in earlier than usual, and the ground is hard frozen and plowing stopped, so that not nearly so much ground has been prepared for the new crop as would otherwise have been. An early spring will be a great advantage in this respect should we get it.

Our Winnipeg market has been quiet and steady. The wheat Export Company has been taking all the wheat offered at fixed prices, and millers and buyers for eastern mills have taken their share. The Board of Supervisors will tomorrow fix prices for the grades Nos. 4, 5, 6 and feed, and with that done all grades will then be sold at fixed prices. Movement from the country is liberal averaging nearly 1000 cars per day and average quality continues high, although millers tell us the flour has less strength than from last year's wheat. Today's prices are: 1 Nor., $2.21; 2 Nor., $2.18; 3 Nor., $2.15; 4 Nor., $2.07; No. 5, $1.92; No. 6, $1.87; feed wheat $1.80.

OATS

The oat market has been steady and firm with rather a good demand. Towards the end of the week the October future was strong, selling as high as 69⅛c, but short contracts all being filled the price eased down again. In future delliveries there has been a good demand for December and May. Today's prices are 2 C.W. 67¼; 3 C.W. and extra 1 feed 64¼c; 1 feed 62½c; 2 feed 61c. Futures closed October 67¼c; November 66⅛c; December 63⅞c; May 66⅜c.

BARLEY

Barley has been in fair demand at about unchanged prices, but is a shade easier on the week. No.3, $1.20; No. 4, $1.15; rejected and feed $1.09. Futures closed October $1.20; November $1.19.

RYE

No 2, C. W. Rye $1.71

FLAX

The flax market has been fairly steady. Receipts though not large have been rather liberal for the time of the year and quality is good. Today's prices are: 1N.W. $3.05; 2 C.W., $3.02; 3 C.W. $2.81; rejected $2.27 Futures closed October $3.05, November $2.95, December and May $2.82.

All prices quoted above are based on delivery in store, Fort William and Port Arthur.

NEW YORK DEPRESSION AFFECTS CHICAGO

Chicago, Nov. 1.—Corn prices averaged lower today largely on account of sympathy with weakness in the New York market. The close was unsettled at $1.17¼ for December and $1.13¼ for May, ⅝c down. Oats gained ½c to ¼c. Provisions scored a net advance of 30c to $1.47½.

Although Wall street depression formed the chief bearish element in the corn market, weather conditions likely to promote the movement of new grain tended also to pull down values. British crop estimates from a leading authority indicated that the 1917 yield er acre was ¾c a bushel more than had been predicted on October 1. Trade, however, was the smallest that has been seen for a long time, and when shorts tried to cover on a moderate scale in the last half of the session, a gradual recovery set in. Smallness of current receipts acted as a noticeable handicap for the bears.

Firmness in the oat market was due to the fact that arrivals here continued meager.

Big advances in the cost of hogs carried provisions sharply upgrade. Washington advices emphasizing the scarcity of the hog supply stimulated demand, especially for pork.

SIXTY PER CENT. OF ALBERTA WHEAT CROP MARKETED

Fully 60 per cent. of the wheat of Alberta has been marketed according to the estimate of Mr. McLean, superintendent of elevators for the United Grain Growers. His estimate of the wheat crop for Alberta is 13 bushels to the acre as an average.

Other estimates of the grain movement are that from Hanna east to the provincial border and all that country lying east of a line drawn from Hanna to Macleod, fully 75 per cent. of the wheat is out of the farmers' hands. Southwest of Macleod only about 40 per cent. has been marketed. On the line from Edmonton to Macleod about 50 per cent. of the wheat has been marketed.

In the northern part of the province there is a scarcity of cars, and as a result all the grain elevators are full.

On the Goose Lake line, and on the C. N. R. generally, the grain buyers claim that the shortage of cars is fierce. The C. P. R. is reported to be doing fair in this respect. For the past week grain has been coming in slowly on account of the state of the roads throughout the country.

Mr. Munson, of the Northern Elevator company, reports that crops on the Goose Lake line are turning out better than was expected. In the Youngstown district this is particularly true.

CATTLE MOVING FREELY AT LOCAL STOCKYARDS

There was a fair run of cattle at the yard Thursday, and the much threatened congestion failed to materialize. The majority of buyers cleaned up all the stuff on hand and the packers appearing on the scene helped the stuff to move out. P. Burns purchased some stuff for his outfit, as did the Union buyer.

Top cattle sold at $8.75. This figure as paid for some feeder steers. A bunch of hogs were disposed of at 15c some of the sellers holding over for a higher price today.

MARKET CONGESTED IN WINNIPEG

Winnipeg.—The run of cattle caused a congestion and the three railways were forced to put on an embargo until such time as the congestion was relieved. While the receipts were heavy, trading was good in all quality stuff and prices held steady. Butcher steers sold at $6.50 to $10.50. Butcher cows and heifers also sold steady, the qaulity of the butcher stuff was a shade better this week to what it has been for some time. Buls and oxen are still in good demand at steady prices. Stockers and feeders are meeting with a stronger demand at steady prices on No. 1 quality, but slow on the poor stuff. Veal calves steady, sheep and lambs selling at steady to firm prices, a few top lambs bringing $15.50. Milch cows are scarce but quite a number of good springers are on hand.

Hog prices advanced 25c per hundred today, selects selling at $14.50. Eastern buyers were on the market for a few hogs.

CHICAGO LIVESTOCK

Chicago, Oct. 31.—Cattle receipts were 21,000; market firm. Beeves, $6.85 to $17.50; western steers, $6.25 to $13.75; stockers and feeders, $6.10 to $11.50; cows and heifers, $5.00 to $12.25; calves, $8.00 to $14.75.

Hogs — Receipts 22,000; market strong. Light, $15.25 to $16.95; mixed, $15.75 to $17.00; heavy, $15.70 to $17.00; rough, $15.70 to $16.00; pigs, $11.75 to $14.75. Bulk of sales, $16.00 to $17.00.

Sheep—Receipts 2,000; market firm. Lambs, native, $12.50 to $17.25.

TORONTO LIVESTOCK

Toronto, Oct. 31.—The cattle trade at the Union stockyards was steady this morning. Hogs firmer, sheep steady, calves slow. Receipts were 1,236 cattle, 154 calves, 2,839 hogs and 1,296 sheep. Quotations:

An American Expert On Their Northern Neighbor

What Canada Has to Say to the World —Material Wealth, Cheap Farm Lands, Free Government, Invitation to Settlers and Investors.

The Giant of the North stretches his thirty-seven hundred miles from Atlantic to Pacific and groans under his own weight of wealth, actual and potential. He is getting self conscious and is lifting his head for recognition as among the great of the earth. Canada deserves unstinted praise for its part in the present war and despite the large number of cripples on the streets of the cities courage and purpose are at a high pitch. The Canadians are game. And their loyalty to the home government is among the marvels of the time. Any suggestion of faltering in that loyalty appears to be unknown in the Dominion of Canada. The primary reason for this is not in the undoubted excellence of the government of Great Britain but in the fact that the Canadian people are left to manage their own affairs. "We are the freest people on earth," is an expression one frequently hears from the lips of men who know what other governments are. As to the provinces, they remind one of the states of this country, but they appear to have their local affairs exclusively in their own hands. The theory of self-government is perhaps as well carried out in Canada as in any part of the world. But in respect to the whole Dominion there is an amount of intelligent study of resources and opportunities that perhaps does not exist anywhere else. Corporations, individuals, government officials, are constantly exploring, mapping, and inviting mankind to come and see. Many are coming to stay, as one knows from the migration out of the United States.

The great potencies are the quality of the English race, particularly as expressed in British rule, an enterprising government of the Dominion itself and the railroad companies, notably the Canadian Pacific, which to use its own expression, "spans the earth" with its eighteen thousand miles of road and many steamships. These forces act in concert and find lines of effort in all sorts of subordinate departments and bureaus which have in hand irrigation, the opening of new areas, colonization and enlistment of capital. Study of the whole is dominant, for the people seem to have grasped the idea that their own individual prosperity is involved in the common weal. The banking system is one of the most powerful means o fpromotion and safeguards against misfortune. Americans have admired this system these many years and some of its principles are embodied in our federal reserve plan. These banks appear to get closer to the people than those of other countries. A liberal policy is followed in the establishment of branch banks. One finds hardly a hamlet without a representative of one of the well-known institutions, usually housed in a building commanding respect by its architecture, though all about it may be the crudeness of a new country. The greatest advantage of this branch system over that of individual institutions such as we have in the Unite States is in the name and the known solvency of the parent institution.

Land a d its Products

With Chicago men of affairs, particularly those of the Board of Trade, the time has long gone by for considering Canada so boreal as to be forbidding or an uninviting field for enterprise. The wheat of Canada is among the best raised in the world, and lands eleven hundred miles north of this city yield the cereal liberally. The mention of the fifty-ninth parallel to one familiar with the wheat trade does not chill him. Then there are climatic conditions which soften temperature in areas far north. In Vancouver temperatures as low as 15 in midwinter rarely occur, and in that city and its neighbor Victoria, as places of residence are extremely inviting. Far inland the chinook comes in winter to ease the cold weather. We, therefore should not apply the Medicine Hat test to everything in the Dominion. One cannot say how great is the area of arable land in the Dominion, for there are large sections which have not yet been opened and the quality of which is a matter for further investigation. The statement has been made that of the 3,700,000 square miles of Canada only 440,000 square miles is fit for farming. This, however, excludes grazing lands and other areas which will unquestionably come in later on. Broadly speaking, the farther north the locality the shorter the season, but the rapidity of growth is something astonishing, unless one remembers that 18 hours of daylight has more effect on a plant than 10 or 12 hours.

It is not however, considerations of this sort that have caused the great tide of migration to Canada. Only a small percentage of the land capable of yielding wheat and other grains is now sown to them. The capacity for production is demonstrated this year by a yield of 250,000,000 bushels of the major cereal. This places the country well up in the competition for supplying Europe with wheat. Persons not yet old can remember when Canada was negligible. This branch of agriculture is susceptible of expansion to a yield equal to the present magnificent output of the United States. But the price of land is the telling thing with a farmer seeking new fields—$20 to $50 per acre. This explains why, leaving the old folks at home perhaps, the young men of the famer's family in the central west will take up land in the Dominion. It matters comparatively little whether the migrant has capital or not. The Candian Pacific, to which the government originally gave 25,000,000 acres of land, not to mention a considerable amount of cash and some odd railroad lines, sells this newcomer land, taking a small payment down and subsequent payments on something like the credit Foncier plan. Some opposition has been shown in our western states to this migration. But it appears to be usless. The appeal of cheap land is irresistible to men under certain conditions.

The war has drawn Canada and the United States closer together. As one puts it, "Before the War we were cousins, now we are brothers." Canadians express the profoundest appreciation of what we are doing in the direction of subduing German autocracy. It all looks big to them, and big it is and earnest, but thus far Canada has done what we have not done yet poured out precious blood without stint. A sign of the co-operation between these two countries is the presence in the States of J. S. Dennis, one of the highest officers of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who has charge of recruiting for the British army in this country. Col. Dennis is a thorough Canadian and has been identified with its interests in a lifetime. MUCH LIQUIDATION ON NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

New York, Nov 1.—The stock market was in the throes of another convulsion today, liquidation encompassing the entire list at extreme recessions of 3 to 10 points. Lowest prices were made in the final hour, no support being offered even at marked concessions.

Selling was of wider and more urgent character, and was frequently accelerated by bear drives. Recent efforts of officials of the exchange to minimize or restrict such speculative operations culminated in official action by the xechange requiring members to report their borrowings of stock to the committee on business conditions. The new factors presented themselves, but the discouragement created by recent developments was increased by predictions that war taxes are likely to become more onerous. Financial statements issued during the day by various industrial corporations, bore pertinently upon the government's policy of taxation.

In keeping with all active markets the greater part of today's upheaval centered around United States steel.

That stock was offered to the extent of 500,000 shares, or more than 33 per cent. of the whole, at an extreme decline of 7½ points.

Rails were liquidated in greater quantity, many investment issues of that group, notable Pacifics and coalers, declining two to five points, where they registered new low records.

Sales amounted to 1,400,000 shares the largest single session since the inception of the decline.

Increased weakness was shown by bonds of all grades, especially internationals. Liberty fours were inactive at par and the 3½'s fluctuated between 99.74 and 99.84. Total sales $5.-640,000.

GRAIN SUPERVISORS ALTER REGULATIONS

Winnipeg, Nov. 1.—The board of grain supervisors issued the following order yesterday:

Order No. 17:

1—Order No. 10 of the board is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"It is hereby ordered by the board og grain supervisors for Canada that for the purpose of supplementing order No. 8 of the board, there shall be paid to the board upon all shipments of wheat by rail or boat from Fort William or Port Arthur a charge of 2½ cents a bushel if destined to Canadian points outside of Canada. These charges shall be paid to the Lake Shippers' Clearance association, the duly authorized agents of the board, and must be paid before shipment is made."

2—For the purpose of arranging for the proper collection of the monies payable to the board in connection with wheat purchased by or for flour mills and for export, regulations will be made from time to time by the board.

BELIEVE NEW YORK TRADERS PREPARED

Montreal, Nov. 1.—There was a moderate amount of shifting about of stock at the minimum prices here today, the business continuing largely one of adjustment in speculative accounts. Of price fiutuations thre wa was virtually none, except in the case of small lots, in which buyers in some cases had to pay fractionally higher prices than the minimum. For the rest the changes were confined largely to movements out of the minimum class to the extent that there would be buyers at the minimum and no sellers, and relapses back into a position of offerings at the minimums and no buyers. In view of the acute weakness of New York in the afternoon there were only rare exceptions where stocks were not to be had at the minimum.

The main feature of the stock ex change was the general belief that props had been placed under the market values before this latest and most violent slump in New York occurred. Even in quarters where the minimum plan had been meeting opposition there was acknowledgement of that even very substantial bankings support would hardly have saved the Canadian list from a violent break, with detrimental influence on the coming war loan campaign. If there was some blundering in the establishing of the order of affairs on Tuesday, at least the blunders had landed the market into a satisfactory-slumpingeca,so ket into a situation satisfactory to the general financial position.

Dominion iron was the stock most in demand at the minimum quotations, about 400 shares changing hands at 52. There were offerings at that price against 52 bid on Wednesday, when the market closed.

Union bank shares closed 137 bid against the 136 minimum.

The second war loan, firm at 95⅝ was the most active bond.

Total business for the day was 1,-174 shares, $54,100 bonds and 450 unlisted shares.

MONTREAL SAYS MARKET WAS STEADY

Montreal.—Prices were steady for all grades. The demand was good for stock for canning purposes at $6.50 to $6.75. Cows were sold at $5.25 to $5.50 per cwt. The market for butchers' cattle was quiet. Good to choice steers were quoted at $9.50 to $10.25, the lower grades sold at $7.50 to $9.00 and cows brought from $6.25 to $8.00, and bulls from $6.50 to $8.25 per cwt. The market for small meats was firm. Sales were made of Ontario lambs at $15.50 to $16.00 and Quebec at $14.50 to $15.00. Sheep brought from $9.50 to $11.00 per cwt. Choice milk-fed calves were scarce and sold at $14.00 to $15.00. Grass-fed stock went at from $8.00 to $11.00 per cwt.

An easy feeling prevailed in the hog market. The demand was fair and sales of selected lots were made at $16.75 to $17.00 per cwt., weighed off cars.

SPECULATION CUT OUT AT TORONTO

Toronto, Nov. 1.—Evidence accumulates that the adoption of minimum prices on the Canadian exchange will, instead of proving detrimental to the coming war loan, actually contribute to its success. The speculation element is now entirely lacking in Toronto exchange transactions and the proportion of dealing in war bonds to the total of the daily turnover shows a big increase. Local brokers hold the opinion that when the fourth war loan is subscribed and makes its appearance on the exchange it will share an active market with the three earlier issues.

In the wide open break in the New York market yesterday those Toronto brokers who had entertained doubts as to the wisdom of the course taken by the exchange committee were more impressed with the virtues of the minimum price system. Fewer than 1,000 shares were traded in and the quotations in usually active stocks showed no inclination to rise above the minimum.

There were no sales of Canadian Pacific railway but the closing bid was 132½. In war loans the activity was confined to the second issue, which accounted for 28,500 of the total turnover of $36,500 in war bonds. The first and third issues were not dealt in at all in the afternoon session.

GOOD ROADS MEAN PROSPERITY FOR THE COUNTRY

The United States department of agriculture recently issued the conclusions on the matter of roads gathered by the office of public roads.

According to the data gathered, where good roads replace bad ones, the values of farm lands bordering on the roads increase to such an extent that the cost of road improvement is equalized, if not exceeded. The general land values, as well as form values, show marked advances, following the improvement of roads.

In Lee county, Virginia, a farmer owned 100 acres of between Ben Hur and Jonesville, which he offered to sell for $1,800. In 1908 this road was improved, and although the farmer fought the improvement, he has since refused $3,000 for his farm. Along this same road a tract of 188 acres was supposed to have been sold for $6,000. The purchaser refused the contract, however, and the owner threatened to sue him. After the road improvement upon the land, the same farm was sold to the original purchaser for $9,000.

In Jackson county, Alabama, the people voted a bond issue of $250,000 for road impovement and improved 24 per cent of the roads. The census of 1900 gives the value of all farm lands in Jackson county at $4,90 per acre. The selling value at that time was from $6 to $15 per acre. The census of 1910 places the value of all farm lands in Jackson county at $9.79 per acre and the selling price now from $15 to $25 per acre. Actual figures of increased value following road improvement are shown.

As the roads in no way effect soil fertility or quality of the farm, advances are due essentially to the decrease in the cost of hauling produce to market or shipping point. Farms are now regarded as plants for the business of farming, and any reduction in their profits through unnecessarily heavy costs for hauling on bad roads naturally reduces their capitalization into values. With reduced costs for hauling, profits are increased; with the result that the farm plant shows satisfactory earnings on a higher capital value.

The automobile also has begun to be an important factor in increasing rural values where good roads are introduced.

Immigration is particularly marked where road conditions are favorable; in fact, the figures of the department seem to indicate that good roads indirectly increase the demand for rural property; and the price of farm land, like that of any commodity, is ruled by the relations between demand and supply.

Farmers and Breeders Assured of Prosperity

The farmers and ranchers of western Canada are practically guaranteed prosperity for the next few years. This assurance comes in the shape of government guarantees from France and Great Britain that the present prices will prevail. This means much to the agricultural interests of the country. It means that with any kind of a fair crop the farmers are going to be well fixed because the prices ae right and leave sufficient margin to pay the farmers a handsome profit on his labor.

What the farmer has received in the way of guarantee on his labor the breeder also has pactically the same assurance because the demand for livestock of all kinds is bound to increase as the war progresses with no chance for an abatement of this demand for some time to come after the war is over.

The present government prices for the crop is as follows:

Wheat	$2.62
Barley	1.76
Corn or Rye	2.06
Oats	1.25

These prices are not likely to be changed no matter what conditions prevail unless there is a great slump in production which would make the increase cost greater than the present guarantee.

The government is looking forward to the farmers to do their share in taking war loans and rightly too because the farmers will receive the greatest good from the present condition.

Recently Miss Cora Hind the noted agricultural authority making comment on the present situation in the west stated that the market forecast was very dull.

The market so far as wheat is concerned has resolved itself into a steady daily delivery of practically all offerings to the Wheat Export Company, and the offerings are below the demands of that company. The trade is feeling somewhat reassured since that statement was issued by the Finance Minister to the effect that finances had been arranged for the purpose of the crop, but they would be better satisfied if there was a definite agreement as to the time when the Wheat Export Company will assume the ownership. As matters are at present it looks as though the elevator companies might have to carry the wheat in terminals until spring, paying the carrying charges, and then only to receive the fixed price of $2.21 at the lake front. The situation here differs from that in the United States, as there the Government is buying the wheat outright. Here, while the Canadian Government is financing the crop, it is not buying the wheat: that is being done by the Wheat Export Company for Britain and her allies. No one really doubts that the allies need and will take every bushel of the surplus. The question is when and who will pay the carrying chage from December to May on wheat at the lake front?

"Live stock situation in the west is badly congested, and there is an embargo against receipts in the Winnipeg yards. The yard management is doing all it can, but the truth is the live stock industry has developed so rapidly that sufficient accomodation has not been provided, and there is a shortage of trackage also. The concession as to freight from both railways tended materially to increase the movement. In the nine months ending September 30th, 13,948 more stockers passed through the Winnipeg yards than for the same period in 1916. Of the 38,879 head of stocker cattle received at the Winnipeg yards, 20,267 went back on to the Western farms to be finished, while the United States have received a much smaller For the last week the movement of stockers east under the new regulation of the Government paying half the freight has begun to be a factor also.

"Dairy men are much stirred up over the oleomargarine question, but the consumers are much more stirred up over the fact with butter and milk up over the fact that with butter and milk at their present prices it is impossible for people of moderate means to procure for their children the amount of fat that is so essental in this climate."

SWINE INDUSTRY OFFFERS UNLIMITED POSSIBILITIES

As might be expected in a district where the dairying industry is growing so rapidly, hog raising, affording as it does the most economical method of realizing the large profits from skimmed milk and other dairy byeproducts, is a very important branch of mixed farming in Alberta. The soil conditions and the climate, which are also eminently suited for dairying are also productive of those crops which produce the cheapest pork. The dry winter lessens the risk of disease in the case of hogs, as in that of cattle. The question of housing, which is really the only one the rearer of swine has to trouble about, is rendered very easy by climatic conditions. In the summer the hog must have protection against rain, in the winter it must have warmth. The live stock branch of the Department of Agriculture in the provincial government pays some attention to this by the publication of bulletins from time to time, dealing with efficient—albeit cheap—methods of housng swine.

The question of breeding hogs is one that is easily answered in Alberta. Alfalfa is produced with great success in the irigated area of Southern Alberta. The stable diet in the northern portion of the province consists of chopped oats and barley, which fatten and make splendid pork or bacon of excellent flavor. Oats especially are good; and when it is considered that Alberta oats weigh 42 pounds to the bushel, the large amount of meat and comparatively small amount of hull which must be present in the grain, it will be seen that as food for growing pigs it has no superior. In the north, barley, and in the south wheat, are relied on for fattening proposes, and there is no doubt that apart from the weight of the hull the barley grown in Alberta is equal in food value to Indian corn.

THE C. P. R. GIVES YOU TWENTY YEARS TO PAY

An immense area of the most fertile land in Western Canada for sale at low prices and easy terms ranging from $11 to $30 for farm lands with ample rainfall—irrigated lands up to $50. One-tenth down, balance if you wish within twenty y ars. In certain areas, land for sale without settlement conditions. In irrigation districts, loan for farm buildings, etc., up to $2,000, also repayable in twenty years—interest only 6 per cent. SALE OF TAX CERTIFICATES

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the Treasurer of the City of Calgary, at his office at the City Hall, Calgary, on and after the 21st day of November, 1917, will sell to the first applicant Certificates of Delinquency for unpaid taxes levied or assessed prior to the 1st day of January, 1916, on the land included in the list—printed copies of which may be had on personal or written application to the Treasurer or City Clerk, City Hall, Calgary,—if such taxes, with interest and costs, are not sooner paid.

WHY TAX CERTIFICATES ARE AN ATTRACTIVE INVESTMENT

They take priority as security on real estate over mortgages and other encumbrances.

They may bear interest at 10 per centum per annum, preference being given to the tender offering to purchase a certificate at the lowest rate of interest.

They cannot be redeemed within one year unless the holder is paid the total amount thereof, plus one-tenth of such amount

If unredeemed within three years, the holder, by simple procedure, can sell the property to recoup himself the amount thereof, with interest borne by the certificate, plus subsequent taxes paid by the purchaser or holder, with interest thereon at 10 per centum per annum, plus all costs, and if no sale, title to the property may be obtained.

They bear the guarantee of the City that if set aside by the Court for any reason, the City will pay the holder the amount thereof, plus 6 per centum per annum.

For fuller particulars, including the method of tendering, prospective purchasers are invited to obtain and read the introduction contained in the printed list.

DATED at Calgary, Alberta, the 23rd day of October, 1917.

Abdul Baha, the Prophet of Peace

It was on Labor Day, in September, nineteen hundred and twelve, in the city of Montreal, that I interviewed Abdul Baha, the Persian prophet of peace. The previous day—Sunday—I had listened to an address by him in the Unitarian church, and had been much impressed, especially by the closing part of the service. The scene still stands out vividly before me. I see on the platform, to the right of the little Unitarian minister, the venerable, grey-haired Persian Prophet of Peace, praying to the God of all nations, in his native tongue, for greater benevolence, greater charity, greater tolerance, greater love among all men; while, to the left, almost motionless and likewise devout, stood the cultured interpreter, Mr. Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, translating the holy words of his countryman to the congregation.

Picture to yourself a grey-haired man, older than his years, with patriarchal beard and face stamped by much suffering and serious thought, a yet handsome man with a high, intellectual forehead and the idealistic eyes of a dreamer, a man of power, determination, too, who will tread but one path when he knows that is the right one, yea, though he should lose his life by so doing. Clothe your man in eastern garb. Put a white turban on his head and hang a gown of gray canvas over his stately shoulders. Then you have Abdul Baha, the Persian Prophet of Peace.

What is it that strikes one most in this remarkable man Is it his message, his simple doctrine of peace and love among all people? Is it his power of thought, his manner of expression ,the privations he has endured No; it is none of these. It is his great sincerity. He is a man with a mission, and he believes in it will all his soul. He looks upon himself as a servant of God whose duty it is to go out to many peoples, proclaiming the great truths he has long perceived.

Many Years in Prison

Abdul Baha Abbas, otherwise known as Abbas Effendi, and whose name signifies the "Sermant of God," has spent the greater part of his life in prison at Acra in Syria. He has also been exiled, ostracisew, and has met with hardships and cruelties such as would have uelled the spirit of many a brave man. But he never faltered; he never turned from the straight path, the path that to him spelled duty. Had not his father trod it before him? Had not Baha'o'llah, after Bab had been put to death, who had rounded Babism, which created much stir in the Orient during the middle of last century. Arisen to preach the doctrine of universal peace, and had he not handed on the leadership of the Bahais to his son, Abdul Baha? So, come weal or woe, he would go forward fearlessly proclaiming the belief that was in him. And even when in captivity at Acra, he went on teaching all with whom he came in contact, and these in turn taught others. Thus it was that when he was liberated, on the advent of the Young Turks to power, he found that he had a goodly following both in Asia Minor and in Persia, and now, in Persia alone, his adherents are said to number three millions.

In 1911, he toured Europe and was favorably received. In London, he spoke in the City Temple, the Rev. R. J. Campbell's church, and, by permission of Canon Wilberforce, in St. John's church. Then he turned his attention to America and toured the greater part of the United States. He also visited Canada, and spoke in the Church of the Messiah in Sherbrook street west, Montreal, in September three years ago.

Old Doctrine in a New Setting

It was not a new doctrine that he proclaimed, just an old one with a new setting. He emphasised the oneness of the kingdom of humanity and man's duty to Supreme Being. What was that duty? The stirring up of contention and warfare? No. What, then? The promotion of harmony, love, among men and races. "God has created his servants to love and associate with each other," said he. "The God of the creation of the world is love. But man has arisen to oppose the will of God. He has attacked the very foundations of God's teachings. He has stirred up prejudices ,feelings of racial enmity. And these prejudices are greater among men in the Orient than elsewhere, because there is less freedom there."

There was wonderful breadth and depth of feeling in that sermon. It was not the message of a fanatic or a hermit or of a man unconversant with modern thought and modern life. It was eastern and yet it was western. It was delivered as only an Oriental of pure blood can convey a message, yet it contained truths applicable to everybody. It was an embodiment of the oneness of humanity, of the oneness of religion, of the power of reason, reality, love. "All prophets," said Abdul Baha, "are inspired with the power of love, unity. They are the servants of realty. Reality is one; it does not accept multiplicity. And the religions of God are one."

Dealing with the question of warfare and bloodshed, he said that "where there is hatred there is no religion. For true religion means love, fellowship. It is the drawing together, not the pushing apart, of peoples. It is life according to reason, science. Therefore, religious prejudice, racial prejudice, alien prejudice, must be destroyed if the foundations of humanity are to remain strong. All religions must become one and be based on reality. Races must give up their superstitions and join hands ein fellowship, all being equal before God, who made no divisions. Prejudices are falsehoods disliked by God."

Sexes Must Be Equal

But how effect this reformation? By means of instruction. That was the simple all-embracing answer given by Abdul Baha. Let fathers teach their children, let people teach people, let race teach race. Then misunderstandings will pass away.

And in noble words he referred to the place of woman in the universe. He showed how she had been degraded in the Orient, and pleaded for equality of sexes, purity of heart, and equal educational facilities for both man and woman. "Differences will be overcome by education," said he. "Our women have not had the same privilege of education as our men. Both must become equal. There must be no differences." And he urged the furtherance of a universal language, so that there might be no barrier between nations and that peoples might readily communicate with each other. "When all know the same language association will be become natural."

But what are we to do in the meantime? Organize an international tribunal for the settlement of all disputes. That was Abdul Baha's solution. And to what nation did he look for the introduction of this happy state of affairs? To the nation of which Canada is a part. He said our government was a just government and that he expected we would play our part nobly in promoting unity omong nations, in serving humanity. Remember this was three years ago.

Great War Foretold Three Years Ago

The following day—Labor Day—he granted me an interview, and I asked what was his opinion as to the increase in armaments that was going on in the world. Would such continue "Yes," he said, "nations will go on arming. They are afraid of each other. But a time will come when there will be a great war. This war will take place on the continent of Europe. After that there will be peace."

Then he offered a further explanation. "In reality," he said, "warfare is continuous today. It is bloodless, but continuous, for the common people are ground down to provide its sinews. All over the world, the blood of the working man is being sucked to keep up a show of naval and military power. But Europe today is like a great powder house, and a single spark will cause an explosion."

"Will Britain be instrumental in causing the great war," I asked.

"No," he replied, "but she will take part in it. She will not be the cause but she will be an important factor in deciding it. There will be fighting in the East and the West (of Europe) and there will be much bloodshed. But after that peace.

I then referred to the fact that the organized workers of the world were beginning to declare themselves in favor of universal peace, and that a time might come when the general strike would be employed to prevent warfare between nations, but he did not agree wholly with this view, contending that while racial prejudice existed there could be no such thing as universal harmony, that a great war was inevitable, and that only after nations and races had come through much suffering and bloodshed could there be universal peace.

I spoke of Socialism and, while he admitted thot such doctrine was spreading rapidly over the world, he maintained that it implied force, resistance, and accordingly did not well promote the cause of peace and fellowship among men.

"Have you any Socialists in your country?" asked.

"Yes," he replied, "but the movement is only beginning there.'

"Do you think it will spread?"

"It is bound to spread,' he answered. "It is spreading everywhere. It is a humanitarian movement, and it is the grinding down of the people that gives it life."

Asked for an opinion on conditions of life in Canada, he said: "I am very pleased with your country. It is a prosperous and delightful land. You have peace and security in your midst. Happiness and composure are your friends. Surely, then, you should thank the good God for all his mercies to you."

He then took my hand in both of his and blessed me as a father would bless a son, with the same sincerity, the same depth of feeling, the same dofty purpose. For if this Persian dreamer, preacher, prophete, is anything, he is sincere, and his sincerity springs from a great sense of love and fellowship for man. He is a humanist of a high type; his church is the world.

"I cannot succeed," were his parting words, "without your help and the help of everyone who believes in the cause of universal peace and good fellowship among men; and that you may not forget me and my cause in the days to come, I will ask you to accept of a little gift from me."

So saying, he handed me a small parcel, which later I discovered contained a valuable gold ring. It fitted perfectly; and as I placed it on my finger I felt that, coming from such a man, it would be the harbinger of success, advancement. I have not been disappointed.

Various Forms Of Headache

"It is necessary in order to treat headaches properly to understand the causes which produce the affection," says Dr. J. W. Ray, of Blockton, Ala. Continuing, he says, "Physicians cannot even begin the treatment of a disease without knowing what causes give rise to it, and we must remember that headache is to be treated according to the same rule. We must not only be particular to give a remedy intended to counteract the cause which produces the headache, but we must also give a remedy to relieve the pain until the cause of the trouble has been removed. To answer this purpose anti-kamnia tablets will be found a most convenient and satisfactory remedy. One tablet every one to three hours gives comfort and rest in the most severe cases of headache, neuralgia, and particularly the headaches of women.

"When we have a patient subject to regular attacks of sick headache and when he feels the least sign of an oncoming attack, he should take two A-K Tablets. Obtainable at druggists in any quantity desired."

SPORT COMMENT

CHANGES NOW BEING MADE IN BIG LEAGUES

New York.—With the world's series out of the way and the 1917 baseball season officially closed, rumors of deals and doings in baildom during the stove league season are beginning to fly thick and fast and New York is full of them.

Several managerial changes which are being predicted for the coming season are occuping a big share of attention.

Miller Huggins present manager of the Cardinals, is said to be the man selected to succeed Bill Donovan as manager of the New York Yankees. Donovan's failure with the Yanks has caused Colonel Rupert to decide on a change and it appears that Ban Johnson has snared Huggins for the Yank owner.

Ira Thomas, forty-first lieutenant for Connie Mack, is being appointed manager of both St. Louis teams though it is said by those on the inside track that he will manage the Browns, succeeding Fielder Jones. Branch Rickey, so the rumor goes will secure some experienced player to assist him in managing the Cards.

During the playing of the world's series Johnny Evers traveled back and forth on the White Sox special with the players and scribes. John was feeling elated over the fact that his contract has expired and that he is now a free agent for the first time in many years. He is looking for a managerial berth, and would just as soon manage the Red Sox as any team he knows. John admits it.

With Jack Barry enlisted in the naval reserves there is a chance that Evers may land the Boston job for 1918. At any rate there should be something come of this flock of rumors.

Ban Johnson—at least until the European war is concluded—is through as an active director of the American league destinies. Johnson hurried away to Chicago after the game at Moncalo between the White Sox and Giants to close up his business affairs, so that he might accept a commission in the commissary of the United States army.

Edward G. Barrow, president of the International league, probably will succeed Johnson as American league executive.

Barrow has had a wondeful experience in every department of the national game. In Detroit he built up the club which later won three championships under Hughie Jennings. Barrow won a great number of minor league penants. His pronounced successes as manager were scored in Toronto and Montreal of the old Eastern league now known as the International. Indeed, that circuit changed its name from the Eastern to the International league when Barrow has done much for the minor league. Most of the reforms favorable to the little fellows have resulted from his personal vigor and determination. It was he who secured the present high classification known asA. A. for the International and Pacific coast leagues and the American association. His voice affected most of the reforms in draft of major clubs upon the minor leagues.

HOW TO PROTECT YOUR SHOES

Shoes are expensive things, and every month they become more expensive. It behooves us to mind the little trotters which we already have and do our best to save them. There are several ways to preserve your shoes.

Shoe trees will help to keep the shoes in shape. Frequent cleaning and shining will help keep the new finish. New laces every now and then or fresh buttons will help to keep the nice new look.

Don't sit on your feet and don't scrape your toes. Wear rubber heels and change them when they get run down.

Never dry your shoes in an oven or on the radiator—this makes them stiff and unshapely and uncomfortable, and you run the risk of burning the leather.

MARK DRUMM IMPROVES ON THE FORD CAR

Have you seen the new Ford Sedan de luxe as modernized by Mark Drumm? Talk about class; it is the classiest little car that has struck Calgary for some time. With its handsome top to withstand the weather conditons, and the pretty wire wheels and covered hod, it is a car that anyone would be proud of. Had Mr. Ford been fortunate enough to have enjoyed the counsel of Mr. Mark Drumm in placing the finishing touches to his cars he would no doubt have corralled the automobile field of the world if the present improvements that Mark Drumm has put on the Ford is a criterion to go by. The new Ford de luxe of Mark Drumm deserves the highest praise and it will no doubt enjoy the public's patronage.

Players Who Stand in the Limelight

GEORGE D. WEAVER

"Pants" Rowland says Buck Weaver is the best third baseman in the big leagues today, which is taking in a lot of territory.

But at a glance at Weaver's work with the White Sox until he was forced out of the lineup by an injury to his hand in Washington indicates that Rowland has some facts to back up his statements, for Buck Weaver, as he played this season, was a whirlwind compared to the Buck Weaver of other years.

Up to the present season which is his sixth straight with the Sox, Weaver was not an outstanding luminary, though he was always good enough to keep on the pay roll. He used to have a penchant for whiffing the ozone in the pinches, and he used to make a good many wild heaves into the grandstand. But 1917 saw Weaver settle down to the steadiest brand of baseball he has ever played.

Rowland's statement concerning Weaver's rank as a third baseman may have been slightly influenced through prejudice, for there are other guardians of the third cushion holding down big league jobs who outbat and outfield him, but Rowland contends that as an all-round player he is the star of them all, and adds that his storehouse of pepper alone offsets any advantages the others may have over him.

"Buck is so full of pepper that it just naturally oozes out of him," said Rowland in a recent interview. "He doesn't bat .300 and he doesn't demolish the fences, but he hits 'em when they count."

"You can't figure a guy like Weaver out on paper," continued the White Sox boss, "for pep doesn't get into the averages and that's why Weaver is a whole lot better than any set of figures will ever show."

Weaver was born at Stowe, Penn., and first broke into the spotlight as a player with St. Marry's College. Later he played semi-professional ball with Pottstown and from there went to Cleveland for a trial, but was farmed out to Saginaw, in the Southern Michigan League.

That was back in 1909, and between that year and 1912 he played with several minor league clubs, including San Francisco, where he proved a sensation. He came to the White Sox for keeps in 1912 and has been with them ever since. His work this season is one of the reasons why Chicago is the American League pennant winner, and though his injury at Washington was a severe blow to the club, it is expected that he will be there fighting-'em in the world's series, for he has a square-cut jaw that shows him to be a scrapper and he will have plenty of time to rest up for the big clash.

Weaver is 26 years old, above the average in height and plays the game for all it is worth.

TWO FAMOUS COLTS MAY RACE ONCE MORE

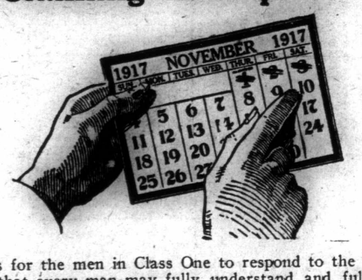
Laurel, Md.—Sam Hildreth, trainer of August Belmont's Hourless, is ready and willing to have the great three year old meet Omar Khayyam once more in a special race under the same conditions as on Thursday, over the Pimlico track next month. He so expressed himself yesterday afternoon, in discussing the immediate future of the horse.

"It all depends," he added, "on Mr. Belmont. He may be unwilling to put the strain of another race of this kind on Hourless, and if Mr. Viau is anxious to get revenge as suggested, it will be necessary to cable Mr. Belmont. I'm ready, and I know Hourless is. He cooled out well and showed no ill effects of the gruelling struggle. In fact, the race took no more out of him, apparently, than a good fast workout."

Both Hourless and Omar Khayyam are eligible for the Pimlico Autumn Handicap for three year olds, with $5,000 added, at one mile and a quarter, on November 8, and both also have been named for the Bowie cup, a handicap for all ages, with $10,000 added, at a mile and a half.

OUT FISHIN'

A feller isn't thinkin' mean,
Out fishin';
His thoughts are mostly good and clean
Out fishin';
He doesn't knock his fellow men,
O harbor any grudges then,
A feller's at his finest, when
Out fishin'.



The rich are comrades to the poor
Out fishin'
All brothers of a common lure,
Out fishin'
The urchin with the pin and string
Can chin with millionaire and king,
Vain pride is a forgotten thing
Out fishin'

A feller gets a chance to dream,
Out fishin'
He learns the beauties of a stream
Out fishin';
And he can wash his soul in air,
That isn't foul with selfish care,
An' relish plain and simple fare
Out fishin'.

CANADA

NOVEMBER 10th.

Last Day for Reporting for Service or Claiming Exemption.

Only one week remains for the men in Class One to respond to the call under the Military Service Act. In order that every man may fully understand and fulfil his obligations, the following questions and answers are given:

Who is in Class One?
All male British subjects, ordinarily or at any time since the 4th day of August, 1914, resident in Canada, who had on the 13th October, 1917, attained the age of 20 years, who were born not earlier than the year 1883, and were on the 6th day of July, 1917, unmarried, or are widowers, but have no child, etc.

Exceptions.
"1. Members of Our regular, or reserve, or auxiliary forces, as defined by Our Army Act.
"2. Members of Our Military forces raised by the Governments of any of Our other dominions or by Our Government of India.
"3. Men serving in Our Royal Navy, or in Our Royal Marines, or in Naval Service of Canada, and members of Our Canadian Expeditionary Force.
"4. Men who have since August 4th, 1914, served in Our Military or Naval Forces, or in those of Our allies, in any theatre of actual war, and have been honorably discharged therefrom.
"5. Clergy, including members of any recognized order of an exclusively religious character, and ministers of all religious denominations existing in Canada at the date of passing of Our said Military Service Act.
"6. Those persons exempted from military service by Order in Council of August 13th, 1873, and by Order in Council of December 6th, 1898."

How should Report for Service be made?
Men who do not desire to claim exemption will report for service either by mail or in person.
Forms of report will be found in all post offices, and will be transmitted free of postage.

What is the next step?
The man who has reported for service will be advised by Registered Letter as to anything thereafter required of him. He will not be required to report for duty or be placed on active service earlier than the 10th day of December, 1917.

How should claim for exemption be made?
Claim for exemption may be made by any man in Class One, by his employer, business associate or near relative, but it is desirable that not more than one claim be made for any one man.
Forms of claim for exemption will be found in all Post Offices and will be transmitted free by the postmaster to the Registrar.

What are the grounds for Exemption?
(a) That it is expedient in the national interest that the man should, instead of being employed in military service be engaged in other work in which he is habitually engaged;
(b) That it is expedient in the national interest that, instead of being employed in military service, he be engaged in other work in which he wishes to be engaged and for which he has special qualification;
(c) That it is expedient in the national interest that, instead of being employed in military service, he should continue to be educated or trained for any work for which he is then being educated or trained;
(d) That serious hardship would ensue, if the man were placed on active service, owing to his exceptional financial or business obligations or domestic position;
(e) Ill health or infirmity;
(f) That he conscientiously objects to the undertaking of combatant service and is prohibited from so doing by the tenets and articles of faith, in effect on the sixth day of July, 1917, of any organized religious denomination existing and well recognized in Canada at such date, and to which he in good faith belongs;
(g) That he is exempt from combatant service because disfranchised under the War Times Election Act.

Things An Autoist Should Know

POINTERS FOR A MOTORIST

What To Do in Case of An Accident Or An Emergency.

If you were driving your automobile down a steep hill and your brakes should fail.

The answer is to use the next best thing—the motor and its compression. Some authorities claim it should be used all the time in hill descending. Shift to first speed, close the throttle, and leave the clutch engaged. A perfectly good brake is instantly made, because as the car coasts, the rear wheels are forced to turn the motor over against compression in the cylinders.

If your starter failed to work, and you had lost your starting crank.

The answer is about as follows: Jack up the rear wheels; let the clutch in and put in high speed. Then turn the back wheel quickly, either by hand, or by stepping on the wheel spokes. When the engine starts, put the gears in neutral.

If you should find on your tour that you are overcharging your battery—that its temperature is over one hundred degrees?

If the battery has not been seriously injured in the high temperature, it will help to get the battery back to normal by burning all the lights in the daytime.

If it has been necessary to stop and start using the self starter, an excessive number of times?

Remember and apply the principle that it takes twenty times as long to put the charging current back into the battery that was taken out of it on one starting of the motor. An observance of this rule will cut battery costs.

If the acid from your battery spilled onto your clothes, or seats of your car?

Apply ammonia to the acid spots as soon as posible, as this neutralizes the acid, and prevents a hole being burned in the material. In case acid should splash into the eye, wash it well with warm water, and a drop of olive oil.

If your car is skidding?

The first thing to remember in this case is not to apply the brakes, as they are unsymmetrical in their effects, and only increase the skid. The clutch should immediately be released, and then, if absolutely necessary the brakes applied. But if it is not necessary to stop, the next vital matter after declutching is the rapid and intelligent use of the wheel to try to get to the centre, or the crown of the road.

If when ascending a hill your brakes refused to hold, and your gears refused to mesh?

Until you find the cause of the trouble, the best proceedure is to back the car crosswise on the road.

If, when ascending a hill at a high rate of speed, a car crossed your path from a crossroad?

If it is not praticable to slow up or stop, after blowing your horn, turn the car in the same direction that the other car is going.

If your motor was not powerful enough to ascend a hill on first speed?

Turn the car around and go up on reverse speed.

If your engine stalled in the middle of a railroad track

Flag the train that may be approaching, or push the car of the track; or if possible, put the car into neutal and start up the motor as quickly as you can.

If another car should be running very closely in front of you, and should turn suddenly?

Swing with the other car or in the same direction.

If you know you have the right of way, and yet it looks as though the other driver thinks he has it also?

Do not presume too much on your right of way. Be careful as the other driver may actually not know that you have it.

If a pedestrian does not, or will not pay any attention to your horn?

Slow up, and remember that the deaf, hundreds of them, use the streets as well as you.

If, in the city you are driving on a boulevard, and crossing another boulevard, when another car comes along at the intersection, also on a boulevard?

Slow up, or stop, the man at the right hand has the right of way.

If a dog runs along the side of the car or insists on barking in front of it?

It is safer to slow down than to try to push the animal out of the way. For the sake of the car, it is dangerous to run over a dog because the steering mechanism may be broken, or the car upset.

If your car is stalled in deep mud?

Instead of putting on the chains in the ordinary way, wrap them around the tire and rim of the wheel so as to make a big bunch, fastening this on with a strap or wire.

If your car caught fire?

Turn off the gasoline at the supply pipe, and try to smother the flames with a coat, or some sand. If you have a blanket use it. Then try to get a fire extinguisher. Water should never be used.

If your gasoline leaked from the carburetor pipes?

Rub oap in the leak, or around the bolt or nut where the leak is located This method, in fact, oftentimes seems to be the only solution for permanent repair.

If you needed to remove carbon, and you were near no convenient carbon removing shop?

Many authorities claim that denatured alcohol squirted into the cylinders when they are hot and running the engine fairly fast for a few moments afterwards does the work satisfactorily. Others claim that kerosene applied in the same way is better.

If you injured a person on a highway?

Stop and render any assistance possible, or call a policeman. If there is a smashup, take a photograph, if possible, showing the position of the cars, as this is the most valuable witness in a lawsuit.

If you lost your way on a country road and had no means of asking directions?

Get the general direction by using the watch as a compass. Point the hour hand of your watch to the sun at any time of the day, and then lay the watch flat in your hand. A point midway between the hour hand and twelve on the dial will be due south.

The foregoing questions and answers may, to many automobile owners seem foolish, but when it is considered that thousands of persons are killed and maimed every year because some of these simple rules and suggestions are not followed out on the highroad, their message is not to be disregarded. Also the average man buys a car without knowing very much about its mechanism and depends upon books of instruction and advice from friends to guide him in operating it. There are many little tricks of the game that Mr. Motorist has to learn for himself by bitter experience, costing him time, money and often health. When an emergency arises there is not time to ask questions or refer to a reference book.

MAKE A FRIEND OF YOUR CAR

How do you use your motor car? Is it merely a means of transportation to you, or is it also a source of health and pleasure?

In the hustle of our business and family affairs we are apt to get in the habit of rushing from one place to another and using the motor car merely as a rapid conveyance, forgetting that we have at our disposal the means of refreshing relaxation.

Now that the beautiful summer weather is with us once more, the motorist, above all others, should be the one to take advantage of it. The car will carry you far from the city's dust—out into God's glorious open country, where you can relax, forget your minor troubles and breathe your fill of pure air.

The car will take you on that fishing trip you have thought of so often. It will take your family or friends off for the pleasures of an all-day picnic. It will speed you along on an ideal vacation tour. And the car which will carry you away on these health-building excursions is the kind of an associate well worth having.

Don't confine your car to business use and running errands alone, but plan some trips that will make your car a health and happiness builder. Make your car an everyday pal instead of a once-in-a-while acquaintance.

COMMENTS AND CRITICISM

THE VALUE OF WAR

War is going to teach us, more than anything else could, the kinds of knowledge which are of practical value. We are going to throw overboard a lot of stuff we thought we needed, but which we are rapidly discovering is useless. We need most to learn how to use our hands—how to dig and plant our gardens, how to use machinery, how to endure stretches of physical labor without tiring. But much more than these things we need to know how to be thrifty, how to recreate ourselves in our leisure in such manner that the time spent will not be profitless, how to gather information at first hand and not altogether through books and other people's opinions. All this is immensely valuable.

What a great thing war would be if it would produce all these results without killing anybody!

WIPE PRUSSIA, SASK., OFF THE MAP

If the reports we hear regarding the town of Prussia, Saskatchewan, are true then it is time that the town was wiped off the face of the map. This may not be as easy as it is to suggest it but if the citizens of that town are desirous of showing the contempt they evidently have for the Great Cause by flaunting in our faces such dastardly insults as to name their city and streets after Germany or the Teutons then it is time that the government took strenuous methods to suppress such insults. If the government is too weak-kneed to resent them then the citizens of Canada should organize a committee and go about it in the way they used to do in the old days.

We can not conceive that such deplorable conditions could exist in this country but evidently there must be some truth in the press dispatches otherwise they would have been denied peremptorily. In any event there is sufficient ground for the provincial government to take immediate steps to investigate the report and it is up to the government at Ottawa to demand that immediate steps be taken.

YOU MUST EARN SUCCESS

You want success, you crave for success, you pray for success, but the test of fitness for success is aggressiveness. You may be very comfortable with what you now earn, but if you stay at that figure your sphere of usefulness is limited. Be satisfied where you now are and you are a potential hobo. If you have not the courage to progress beyond the point to which your present employment has led you, relinquish all hopes of substantial success. The world pays little for canned ability, however excellent the brand. Machine-made memories and standardized brains can easily be duplicated. There are millions of machine-made memories and millions of standardized brains. Hands and minds that have merely memorized examples are common. The uncommon thing, the thing with the germ of success within it, is initiative, aggressiveness, individuality. The instant a man starts to manifest individuality, to think for himself, to originate, to show initiative and aggressiveness, that moment he steps up out of the general mass of men and demands and begins to receive attention for himself—he throws off his confining fetters, gets out of the rut, and begins to grow.

DON'T NEGLECT YOUR TEETH

That there is nothing more important than the care of the teeth is recognized by the fact that every recruit for the army is instructed to visit a dentist in the 24 hours allowed him to get ready. And most dentists have pledged themselves to give their services free to the army for this purpose, these calls superseding all others.

The sad part of this is that in so many cases it should require a call into the army before one's teeth are attended to. The authorities are unanimous that bad teeth are responsible for more ill health than any other physical factor. The inlay method of filling teeth—a comparatively recent invention—has increased the value of dentistry at least 50 per cent.

In proportion to population there are fewer dentists than men of any other profession.

SLAVERY OR VICTORY—WHICH?

In a few days the people of Calgary and Canada are going to be called upon to show their confidence in the country and the soldiers who are laying down their lives to fight our battles by investing in another bond issue of the government. This bond issue is necessary to meet the growing demands of the armies at the front and at home—to supply them with proper food, clothing, ammunition, and etcetera.

Should we fail at this time to provide proper encouragement in the shape of sufficient financial support we are bound to lose this fight. And to lose means that that the wealth of the entire Dominion will be commandeered by the Huns.

So for two reasons we should be exceedingly generous in making our calls for the Victory bonds. To help those who are helping us and to save ourselves from annihilation or complete slavery in years to come.

DOING THEIR PART

Whatever the politicians may say of R. B. Bennett they have to take off their hats to the manner in which he has conducted himself during the present call of the country for help. When he was last in Calgary his friends were greatly alarmed over his appearance. While the same debonair air and neatness of appearance prevailed that has ever been characteristic of R. B., still his quickness of movement was lacking while his whole demeanor indicated a much over-worked man. Few Calgarians realize the tremendous amount of detail work that has fallen to the share of Hon. R. B. Bennett and his very able assistant, C. W. Peterson, but they have been a part of the mainstay of the government in its great work and although the facts have never redounded to the credit of these two intrepid workers this has not deterred them from doing the work they have been called upon to perform.

TREES A REAL VALUE TO THE FARMER

Trees on a farm perform a similar office to paint on the buildings, as they improve appearances and are a good protection against the changeable weather.

The treeless farmstead is open to every caprice of the weather and in addition to this must in time prove depressing to the spirits of those who live within its bare environments. Particularly in this western country do we need farms that are homes in the true sense, and in this direction tree planting can accomplish much, both from a sentimental and economical standpoint. The farmer who has to face the ordeal of an annual long haul to obtain his winter's fuel supply would feel a greater peace of mind could he contemplate on a certain part of his farm, hundreds of sturdy saplings growing his future fuel supply.

For ornamentation and shelter, trees form an essential on the modern farm and the best means of comparison is for one to stay on a treeless farm for a short period and then stay on a well treed farm. In the case of the former, one feels that home is just a figure of speech and in time becomes surfeited with the feeling of being too much outdoors and among the elements.

Trees may be acquired by various means, viz., from the wods, purchased from nurseries, and grown from seed. It is better to thoroughly thresh out the question of planting before actually putting it into practice. A pencil drawing of the proposed layout is a good initial step and is easily altered to accommodate the desires of second thoughts that may crop in, whereas, should the planting be accomplished before thorough consideration has had full scope, any alteration involving the labor of transplanting may prove fatal both to the trees and the ambition of the planter.

RUSSIA WILL MAKE PEACE. PERHAPS!

Russia has safely passed the turning point in her transition from the most autocratic to the most democratic of nations.

German military efforts and the threatened attack against Petrograd are serving to complete the consolidation of the Russian people behind practical ideas of duly elected representatives to the exclusion of impractical extremist elements.

All thought of peace excepting on terms in agreement with those of the Entente and the United States has been definitely eradicated in Russia.

Financially Russia's position as a belligerent is even better assured than in the case of most of her allies.

These are statements which developed from an inquiry into the situation in Russia. They are based on information from state department sources and from Soris Bakhmeteff, the Russian ambassador.

Reports had been received outlining a Russian peace program as drawn up by the central executive committee of the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' delegates in the form of instructions to N. Skobeloff, its delegate to the Paris conference. Some persons have jumped to the conclusion that this revived the possibility of a separate peace between Russia and Germany. The correspondent asked the ambassador about it.

"The idea of a separate peace is absolutely out of all consideration," he explained frankly. "It is not even thought of by any representative statesman or by any group or party. The only peace possible in Russia is a genuine peace on democratic principles established in full agreement with our allies and the United States."

The ambassador added that the central executive committee's program was just a proposal from a certain group which believed it could serve as materials for future discussion.

The "separate peace idea," it was explained, was only an offshoot of the German propaganda in Russia and was exposed and definitely snuffed out last June.

The situation in Russia with respect to peace was described as follows All the representative factions want peace just as Russia or the United States or Great Britain or France want peace. But they all want a genuine peace, and not a counterfeit peace, and all are determined to fight on until the common enemy is forced to accept democracy's genuine peace.

TOPICS OF THE DAY

THE MOST EFFICACIOUS MEDICINE IS JOY

Moralists who enjoin an indifferent world to hold up its head are fortunately working upon a correct scientific basis, for it is true that a happy person raises his chin, stiffens his neck and elevates his perspective. Joy stimulates the thyroid gland, which is situated in the neck. When this ductless body is excited it reacts upon the neck and causes it to straighten.

It doesn't strike us as a great blob of news that worry, hurry, anxiety, grief and all tends to "lower our spirits" help us to turn us into spirits while joy, laughter, good cheer and mental ease serve to keep us pleasantly occupied, in remaining healthy, happy humans until age finally rocks us to sleep in the cradle of time.

This has been a working formula with all philosophers whose writings survive, and probably with their ancestors back to those far days when the Neanderthal man clucked his precepts to his gibbering progeny.

In a general way we know why this is so. But in a particular way the actual explanation is scientific news.

Through physiological experiments with animals and men we now know why mental serenity influences the nutrition and the circulation; why and how pleasure affects the nervous system; how the love of life conduces to logevity, and why happiness has an economic value.

These things are so because the emotions have a physical basis, because their influence affects the automatic or vegetative nervous system which controls breathing, digestion, metabolism and the automatic functions generally. The action of the emotions upon this system tends, also to contract or relax the muscular fibres which control the diameter of the blood vessels, and consequently the amount of blood that flows through them, thereby influencing the nutrition of the tissues.

But perhaps the profoundest and most vital effect emotions have upon the physical organism lies in what they do to the secreting power of the ductless glands, those marvelous govengines, whose functions almost transcend physiology and touch the skirts of metaphysics.

Dr. Crile in his "Mechanistic View of War and Peace," has pointed out something of the action of certain of these glands under the influence of the powerful emotion of excitement and battle hate. He has shown how a vision of the enemy flashed to the (situated in the neck), the adrenal capeules (the little buttonlike glands at the top of the kidneys) and the liver.

These glands, under the powerful stimulus of blood lust, pour their products (thyroiodin) adrenalin and glycogen) into the circulation and thereby stimulate the heart, overcome fatigue, dull the sense of pain and fear provide sugar fuel for the fighting body.

Yet the much milder emotions of joy and content furnish a similar stimulus, without, however, the exhausting reaction, the prostrating fatigue, which so frequently follows the orgy of battle.

Uuder the influence of agreeable companonship, mental relaxation, good food, fresh air and favorable environment the glands functionate normally. They pour sufficient of their secretion into the circulation to provide adequate stimulus for either work or play. They provide the incentive for which is motion, and they serve to make action a source of satisfaction and joy.

They tend to hold the head up physically as well as mentally. For whatever conduces to physical well-being equally stimulates mental well-being.

Pleasurable emotions cause the digestive fluids to be more freely secreted, as was proven by Professor Pavlov and Dr. Cannon in their experiments upon dogs. For when these animals were frightened, or even anxious, their stomach muscles became temporarily paralized, their digestive juices refused to flow and food fermented in their stomachs.

When on the other hand, they were soothed and gentled by petting and stroking their food digested rapidly, their stomach juices were poured forth freely and their entire system responded to the physiological stimulus of joy.

So hate, fear, grief, anxiety, worry, hurry and despondency inhabit the activity of the autonomic or vegetative nervous system. They check the secreting power of the glands of the stomach and intestines thereby causing the development of poisons from the fermenting food. They dam up the flow of glycogen, the sugar fuel of the liver, upon which the muscles feed in times of stress.

They harden the arteries and make life shorter and shallower.

They decrease the capacity for power which proves that joy and a live liver have a distinct economic value.

They decrease, also, the capacity for affection and make the possessor less likeable and lovable.

So happiness lengthens, broadens and deepens life. And like the quality of mercy,to be permanent and natural it should not be strained, but should flow freely, first as the result of good digestion that attends on appetite, and next becausenext because it makes the persistent will to begland automatic.

Of all the big medicine that has of science there is nothing so big, so certain, so incomplete and so satisfying as joy.

EXPLORER FEELS THE COLD IN THIS COUNTRY

Ronald Amundsen is reported to be organizing another Polar expedition Exploration as shown in the case of Shackleton, is one of the few interests which can survive during the great war.

The famous explorer when he is resting at home suffers from depressed spirits, and has attacks of indigestion. When risking his life and undergoing the most appalling hardships in the Arctic regions he enjoys the best of health. Another peculiar thing about Amundsen is that he feels the cold far more when he is at home than when he is in the Polar regions. In this he is a living example of the "rules of contrary."

Stories of Men In the Limelight

GERARD HAS COURT SUIT BUT NEVER WORE IT

Mr. Gerard about whom everyone is talking possesses a suit which he has never worn in his life.

When he first went to Germany he had the suit made for wear at receptions at the German court. But the never used, for just at that time President Wilson expressed a wish that American ambassadors and ministers at foreign courts should only wear ordinary evening dress when they attended court functions.

SCHWAB WORKS BECAUSE HE LIKES TO DO IT

Charles M. Schwab recently said: "Why do I work? What do I work for? I have more money than I can spend. I have no children nobody to leave it to. My wife is rich enough in her own right. She does not need it. I work just for the pleasure I find in work, the satisfaction there is in developing things, in creating. Also the associations business begets. The man who does not work for the love of work, but only for money is not likely to make money nor find much fun in life."

GERARD HAS A FUNNY CELEBRATION

It was recently announced that the King had conferred upon James Watson Gerard the grand cross of the Order of the Bath, in recognition of his unceasing and courageous efforts to ameliorate the unfortunate lot of the British prisoners in Germany. Mr. Gerard, however, will not be Sir James until he has actually been knighted by the British King, or unless a special license is issued.

Knwn to his intimates as "Jimmy," the new K.C.B. was appointed to the Berlin embassy in the summer of 1913 and received the news while crossing the ocean on the Imperator. The captain, who got the information by wireless, brought it to his distinguished passenger, saying "Your excellency the ship is yours. Any wish you care to express it will be my privilege to grant." "All right, captain," was the reply, "let's have an hour of mixed bathing in the swimming pool tomorrow." And it was so!

Rheumatism
A Home Cure Given by One Who had it
In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.
I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar, but, understand I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write today.

Get the Happy Habit and You Will Be Healthy, Wealthy

I don't care who or what you are; whether you are young or old, rich or poor, all I know is that the Happy Habit is one that you cannot afford to give the go-bye to—so catch it, and keep it.

To attract the Happy Habit you must learn how to think correctly; sounds a bit funny, but it's just what I mean; correct thinking is a piling up of our little blessings at the end of each day, and learning to say: "God I thank you!"

Wrong thinking my friend, is the piling up each night of each little failure, each disappointment, each fancied wrong and closing the day with the thought of sadness, because the old world seems such a sory place—such a vale of tears.

This old world is really a mighty fine place—a great school of experience I grant you, tears and smiles a climb up and a tumble; sunshine and shadow—aye, but what a chance to grow!

Stand up, friend, and draw it all to you, be glad that you live; that you are a pupil in the great school of life, and thankful that it has been given to you to prove your worth.

To do this you must see the sunny side, and have your comrades walk it too.

After all, there is so much good in you and I; so much hope and faith in you and I; so much love and sympathy in you and I; so much courage—how can the world be a sorry place, a vale of tears, a shadow valley?

Nay friend! the world is glorious—you and I are glorious—only some of us never awake to the fact.

God in man, and man in God, is my creed; and God in everything—in flowers, leaf, field and wood.

God in everything—even in our Chastisement * * * *and after the dark—the dawn and then the radiance of day.

God is love and we are full of love.

We allow worry, fear and doubt to enthrall us.

We bar hope, calmness and content out.

We suffer, and we cry aloud. We in our ignorance, turn from the sun, and bury ourselves—in the gloom of noxious thought; we poison our day.

We hurt ourselves, and whom we meet we dishearten.

"Love one another," is then a mockery upon our lips, for Self rules and misery is ours.

Ah, to big enough to sense the things that count.

To be big enough to face the night, because the knowledge that a dawn must follow lies close to the heart.

To be big enough to see the beautiful day; big enough to know that tears are good fr us, and to remember that the Christ stood bowed beneath a cross.

To be big enough to be in touch with one's fellow men, to lose one's self in others—to laugh and cry; to clasp hands with them, mayhap along the way to lift up, and cry—forward! That a weaker one be filled with courage.

Aye! to be big enough!

You can be big of heart and purpose you can think yourself into being; and before long you will have what I please to call in the parlance of the day—the Happy Habit.

Because it is only the really big people who are happy. They may not have always been so—why! bless you no!

Just apt pupils, Friend, that is all coupled with a large desire to get a big share of that which we all call life—a full share of shadow and shine—so that at the end one may cry: "a good fight, a big fight, and I win!"

God in you and I, and everything; and happiness in every day.

Try it friend; it's a mighty good creed. Try it.

PIGS and PAJAMAS TWIN FADS of DAREDEVIL HELEN

HELEN HOLMES, world renowned for her fearless feats before the motion picture camera, rides greasy locomotives and jumps into dirty rivers as a matter of daily routine, raises pigs as a recreation, but won't sleep in anything but silk pajamas.

The dauntless Miss Holmes wears overalls and corduroy skirts—anything that happens to be laying around handy—when she's at work in pictures. Trousers and flannel shirt are her costume on the farm. But the dainty Miss Holmes won't sleep in anything but silk pajamas. Her everyday nighties cost $25.00 and her collection of pajamas contains suits which represent an investment of $90 each.

The most prized pair of her assortment is one which was sent her by an Indian rajah who, traveling in Japan, where she is a favorite, fell in love with her. They are made of Asiatic silk of finest fibre and most delicate weave and are so fine that they can be made into a roll and drawn into a swagger stick shell. When Miss Holmes travels she carries this portion of her wardrobe in her hand.

Miss Holmes establishes a new record for fearless performance in her latest photonovel, "The Lost Express," a fifteen chapter serial which has been produced by the Signal Film Corporation for release through Mutual.

With ten chapters completed and the eleventh in the course of production, Miss Holmes has faced death for the 500th time in her exploits of photo-melodrama. James P. McGowan, who besides being the director of her pictures is also her husband, has kept track and when, in the eleventh episode, she drove an automobile head-on into a racing locomotive, he announced that she had done just half a thousand feats.

McGowan's list of the performances in which Miss Holmes has risked her life includes:

She has leaped from viaducts and bridges onto moving trains sixty-seven times.

She has jumped from wagons and automobiles onto moving trains and vice versa a total of 143 times.

She has participated in 180 automobile and train smash-ups.

She has been tied to the driving rod of a moving locomotive twice.

She has been in the center of 31 explosions of various descriptions.

She has made dangerous descents from bridges and high buildings thirty-five times.

She has been a participant in fifty-one mishaps on the water.

She drove an automobile five times from a dock in an effort to leap to the deck of a barge anchored thirty feet in the bay.

She has ridden the brake beams, clung to the side of runaway trains, and climbed over the top and sides of speeding trains so many times that McGowan failed to count them. Such exploits are to Miss Holmes, at this stage of her career, merely incidents in a day's work.

She performs a feat in "The Lost Express" which is novel to her. While it does not contain the elements of danger that most of her ordinary stunts do, she has positively declined to repeat. She went down into San Pedro bay in a diver's suit and the crawly animal life and slimy vegetation which she found there repulsed her beyond expression.

Miss Holmes' feats have sent a thrill up and down the spines of many millions of people in all the lands of the earth, for it is known that not less than $10,000,000 has been spent in nickels and dimes at the box offices of theaters to see her exploits.

HOME COOKING

Gingersnaps

One cupful shortening, one cupful molasses, one cupful brown sugar, one egg beaten light, one tablespoonful ginger, one half-teaspoonful salt, one teaspoonful soda, flour as needed.

Put the shortening, molasses and sugar over the fire to melt the shortening and sugar, then let boil about six minutes after boiling begins. When cooled somewhat (lukewarm) add the egg, with the ginger, salt, soda and three cupfuls of flour sifted together; stir to a dough, adding flour as required. Knead on a board, roll into thin sheet, cut into rounds and bake in a moderate oven. Let the first three ingredients boil until a little of the mixture dropped into cold water may be gathered into a soft ball.

TWO LOAVES WHITE BREAD

One-third cake compressed yeast (at night). One-half cup water, two cups scalded milk or half milk and half water, two tablespoons shortening, two tablespoons sugar, one teaspoon salt, about seven cups flour.

To the milk, or milk and water, add the shortening, sugar and salt; when lukewarm add the yeast mixed with the half-cupful or liquid and the flour. Use the earthen bowl and mix with a knife to a dough. Knead until elastic. Let rise in a temperature of about 75 degrees Fahrenheit. The shelf over the stove is not a suitable place When doubled in bulk shape into two loaves. When again light bake about one hour. To mix in the morning use one whole yeast cake.

VEGETABLE SOUP

Wash and trim one leek, one onion and a quarter of a cabbage, cut all into thin slices, and put them into a stewpan with two ounces of butter or margarine. Stir well over the fire. Moisten with three or four pints of water, and leave to simmer about an hour; season to taste with white pepper and celery salt, and rub through a collander. Boil up, and add one pint of milk to the soup. Let all come to the boil, skim and stir in one heaped-up tablespoonful of crushed tapioca and simmer for ten minutes. Stir occasionally.

WOMEN MAY SUCCEED MEN IN BANKING INSTITUTIONS

Don't they fuss a lot with their hair?"

"Aren't they inclined to distract their male fellow clerks?"

"Do you really think, now you've given them a fair chance, that they are mentally equipped for a man's work?"

"Isn't their being here merely a war measure "

"How about the moral tone?"

"Does it work?"

Those are a few of the questions that a prying American in the heart of the city of London, put the other day to the chairman of one of London's greatest banks.

He sat at his silent desk in a room secluded from the noise and bustle of business. He was not a young man; he did not, although he has spun the financial yarn of more than his own country for years, give the impression of excessive modernity. It had even been suggested that, before the war his views on woman suffrage were actively adverse. Now he sat somewhat bulkily in his chair and listened with attention to American questions.

"It is not merely a war measure," he replied; "I am told by members of my staff that the tone has noticeably improved since the advent of women; it must work, or we should not keep them on; I have no complaint about the hair, and the male clerks if anything are doing their work better. Altogether we find women and men are equally capable."

Leaning back in his chair he spoke of the difficulties in the early days of the war of convincing conservative English banks—which had never had the nightmare vision of admitting women to their precincts—that women might be substituted for the enlisted. The necessity solved all discussion. First a few daughters and relatives of the former clerks came; then more then outsiders. Meanwhile, as in so many other business concerns, the bank was continuing to make up to the clerks at the front their old salary, and all the old posts were waiting to be handed back. But the war lasted. Many would never return. Of those who would come, it was certain that three years of out-door life would make them discontented with the indoor life. Most of them in the end would go to the colonies, though they had felt war, they had also felt freedom. The women would remain.

One-third of the clerks in this conservative bank, with its branches all over England and its representatives all over the world, are now women. They are rising quite as apidly as the men of their experience rise. And this bank is not unique. Even "The old lady of Threadneedle street" herself employs a similar proportion of women.

Once not so many years ago this bank manager visited banks in New York and, concerning women clerks, much the same questions—in more British language perhaps—that this American interlocutor now puts to him. He has not found many women admitted into American banks. He was told that women were not satisfactory in American banks. Yet they are satisfactory in England.

And satisfied. It is doubtful if, even if they do not require the extra pin money, they will return to a leisured life. They like working in a bank. They like feeling their responsibility; they like the rest rooms, the time off for lunch, the regular hours, the regular work.

The only real difficulty has been to make them understand what they have at last come to understand—that a bank's business is a confidential business.

One young woman held in her hands on a certain morning, a check the size of which she had never dreamed. She was very much impressed. She noted the name of the depositor and gasped. That day she went to luncheon with a friend. She told him of the check. She confided details. She whispered the name of the depositor. The depositor was lunching at the next table * * *

The bank manager led his guest out of the silent office, where he spun the yarn of many nations, and, together, he and she stood at the top of the stairs, looking down at the feminine heads and masculine heads that bent over their work. What Buzz there was rose from the steady progress of business. Customers came and customers went, money passed from hand to hand, checks were deposited, books were balanced and columns were totaled up of pounds, shillings and pence.

"I see no reason," said the great man, considering the young women thoughtfully, "Why, in the course of time, women should not become managers of banks. I see no reason why they should not make as good bank managers as men."

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.
I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar, but, understand I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write today.

Why Women Should Receive Men's Pay

When labor votes to demand full pay for the women who takes the place of a man going to the war it is not only with the purpose of securing full protection for woman's labor but to safeguard the industrial future for men.

Heretofore the labor market has operated according to the law of supply and demand. If a woman were willing to work for less wages than her brother capital was only too willing to take her on those terms. She received just what her labor was worth in the open market, if indeed she received that much. In those rare instances where she drew a man's salary it was because she gave quite as good or better service, and where she had the strength of mind and body to do exceptional work.

Now the exigencies of war have injected a new element into the labor problem. If a woman takes her husband's, son's or brother's job during his term of military service and accepts less pay, even though she may not be worth any more than she receives, she right then lays a burden on man's future in industry. All socially and industrially awakened communities see in this a serious menace to man's prospects by permitting his temporary substitute, woman, to take less money than he has been able to command.

The world is pretty well divided in its prophecies of future developments arising out of the general necessity for woman to step into the places of men. One half believes that women, when they are trained and accustomed to working outside their homes and earning their own money will be violently opposed to relinquishing their jobs. The other holds that women will be only too glad to return to their homes after the war.

So far as the wage question is concerned it makes little difference which position is tenable. The real points at issue are these: The woman who assumes the financial responsibility of a man must have the wherewithal to discharge those responsibilities; the man who gives himself for the defense of his country's honor and who leaves work to face not only the dangers of military service but the hazards of future industrial readjustments is entitled to assurance of what will likely confront him when he returns.

Our one hope of the future it would seem, lies in a highly socialized system of industrialism. For thousands of years we have been meeting hate with hate instead of love, with love Oppression has met with counter oppression, struggle with struggle, force with force. What is the result of all this striving? We have the appalling spectacle of a world divided against itself, nation against nation, class against class, sex against sex. We have the striker and the stike breaker capital and labor are always ready to fly at each other's throats

There is a good old saying that if a man and his wife are to live harmoniously together they must make it a rule to bear and forebear. The same princip can apply to industrialism, where the forces on each side should be serving in a spirit of kinship. Women entering new fields of co-operative activity must do so with the conviction that their work is communal, that their services should not open up a campaign of self-aggression but a new era of service to humanity. Employers should meet them more than half way in this.

Extraordinary times demand extraordinary measures. Labor must strike a new note in service and capital a new not in justice. Business might very well set governments an example of mutality. To this end the working woman must be well taken care of and the soldier assured of his place and good wages in that glorious time when Sammie comes marching home.

School for the Blind Needs $300,000

Far too little publicity is being given the perfectly splendid work being accomplished by the Halifax School for the blind, which has been growing and flourishing for over forty years under the able directorship of Sir Frederick Fraser This school has stood for the highest of ideals and standards and has been the means of making many a blind man or woman of use to the community and country, by teaching them a means of livelihood. There is no need for a person without sight to have to depend on the world for support; there are many ways in which they may be educated to take their place in the working world. The Halifax school for the blind has been able with the Government grant, to care for those blinded in youth, of the Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland, to fit them to solve the "bread problem," but, as yet, the man or woman, blinded in late life, has not been provided for. It is the purpose of the Halifax school for the blind to enlarge the school to care for these, in fact make it a University for the Blind, equal to any University in the Dominion, and for this the necessary funds must be procured, and at once.

Another interesting fact for the public is that the Military Hospitals Commission will shortly erect a commodious building on the school grounds to care for the blinded soldiers; in other words, they propose to make the Halifax school for the blind the St. Dustan's of America. In the past this institution has succeeded in accomplishing all it undertook to do, and with the help of the interested public the directors sincerely hope their new plans and ideas may be carried out successfully. An endowment of $300,000 is necessay to enlarge and extend the work of this institution. The campaign to raise that amount is now on, and a small portion has been subscribed, but the bulk is yet to come in.

Already many men and women have been sent out by this institution well fitted to enter various walks of life, some as piano tuners, others in the various professions, and several have succeeded in passing through Dalhousie.

A splendid musical training is given at the school, and for those who are especially musical a special pipe organ course is given, fitting the pupils for choir work and church organs. Many of the organists in the old country are blind; there is no reason in the world why in Canada we should not fit our blind for the same most useful purpose.

Piano tuning is, also found by the school to be a most lucrative occupation for the blind, and it is gratifying to note that the Halifax school has graduated escores of very reliabl tuners, who have the patronage of the entire province.

Canada must realize the necessity of helping the blind, especially at this present time, when men and women are needed in the worst way to help cary on the work of the country. People without sight may be most useful if they have received the proper training, and the Halifax school for the blind wants to enlarge their work to the extent that this may be accomplished without delay.

At present there are six soldiers who have lost their sight studying at the Halifax school for the blind. A course in massage is being affiliated with the McGill course. At the later university not only are the soldiers being trained, but young women, the Government realizing the great need of masseurs as the men come back from the front. If the public could only grasp the importance of training the blind the necessity if Canada is to continue growing to its fullest, not one cent would be begrudged the school, in fact the last cent should be given gladly to help boom what is most vital to the county.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

It's Your Move

All winter long you waited for the warm days of spring. You wanted to get out of the house. You wanted to take walks—and there were many other things you knew you would do if it were only spring.

Get out of doors. It makes no difference how you go—by automobile, bicycle, street car, legs—use any conveyance that will get you to the place where the city ends and the fields begin.

Find how many flowers are out and what insects have come to life. Identify as many of the odors as you can—which ones come from the various flowers—which come from the trees—which from the plowed fields.

Play games with the children—and if you have no children of your own, get somebody else's children to play with.

Economy a Patriotic Duty

Domestic economising is a patriotic duty, but if not practised, the time might be approaching when it will become a grim necessity. Patriotic people will agree with every word of the food controller's advice to Canadian consumers, urging the necessity of strict economy and a reduction in the use of certain food commodities.

No man is so well known as he thinks he is," says Enrico Caruso, the world-famed tenor. "While motoring in New York state," continued the great singer, "the automobile broke down, and I sought refuge in a farmhouse while the car was being repaired. I became friendly with the farmer, who asked me my name, and I told him it was Caruso.

"The farmer leaped to his feet and seized me by the hand. "Little did I think I would see a man like you in this here humble kitchen, sir!" he exclaimed. "Caruso! The great traveler Robinson Caruso!"

SOME TESTED RECEIPS

Swiss Steak

Have a steak cut from the top of the round one and a half inches thick. Pound it with the edge of a heavy earthen plate (or a meat tenderer) until the fiber is thoroughly broken up, dredging over it meanwhile from time to time a little flour. By the time the steak is well pounded a generous half cupful of flour will have been pounded into it. In a large iron frying pan heat two or three tablespoonfuls of butter. In this cook the meat until well browned, first on one side and then on the other; pour in boiling water barely to cover the meat and let simmer about three hours. For variety, cook two peeled onions, sliced thin, in the butter before the meat, remove them, and after the meat is browned spread them over the meat to cook with it. After the meat is cooked they may be retained in the sauce or strained from it as desired.

Are You Getting the Best Results From Your Hens

A Writer in the Country Gentleman Gives Valuable Information for Poultry Breeders

Even with selected birds, as in the egg-laying contests, there is a decided drop in production during the latter part of the season. I believe I am quite safe in saying that the drop on the farms will be much greater. The average egg production in the United States is only ninety eggs; the average for the different contests is about 150 to 160 eggs. If your hens are not laying an average of 90 eggs, the cost of keep is so great that your profit will be very small.

This is the worst year the poultrymen have ever had to contend with. Never has grain been so high and labor so scarce. As a result the poor producers must be culled out. The egg yield must be kept at a maximum and the grain bill kept down.

The greatest item of expense in poultry raising is the feeding of the rens. It takes about forty per cent. of the money required for the business to furnish the feed. So it is necessary that maximum production throughout the year be obtained and loafers disposed of at once.

Here are nine things to look for in picking out the loafers:

Conditions of feathers, color of beak, color of legs, color of ear lobes, color of vent, condition of comb, size of comb, condition of pelvic bones, condition of the feathers and color of vent combined.

Do not keep hens that are molting in August and September. Hens that molt in May and early June will be found to be good producers for the year because they finish their molt early and begin laying long before the fall months are over. Hens that do not start molting until October or November have been found to be extra good layers and should be kept as breeders for the following year. Birds do not as a rule, lay and molt at the same time, although exceptions to this rule may sometimes be found.

Yellow Legs a Bad Sign

American breeds, such as the Rhode Island Reds, Wyandottes and Rocks and also some of the Mediterraneans, are characterized by the yellow color of their legs. The beaks of most of these breeds are yellow before the pullets start laying; but as they continue to lay this yellow color fades out and the beaks gradually become pale or whitish.

It has been found that birds that have been laying for the year have pale beaks during September and October. If a bird's beak is yellow during July and August and other conditions are favorable, one is quite safe in assuming that the birds having yellow beaks are the poor producers. Paleness of beak indicates that the birds have been laying heavily. The presence of yellow indicates that the birds are loafers.

The legs also change their color, but not quite so rapidly as the beaks. However, birds which have golden-yellow legs can be sold during the months of July, August, September and October without curtailing the egg production of the flock. iBrds having white or pale legs have been laying heavily for some time and are worth keeping.

One must be careful, however, to make a distinction between yellow color and pale color. Be sure that the legs are white or almost white. The golden-yellow ones are drones. The medium-colored ones are the medium producers. The birds having pale or white legs should be kept. Exceptions to this rule will be found in birds that have reared chicks and have started ltaying. They may be found to have yellow legs.

The leghorns have white or yellowish-white ear lobes, and heavy egg production causes the yellow color to disappear. Heavy laying is accompanied by a whitening of the ear lobes.

One will be quite safe in selling all the birds that have yellow ear lobes at this season of the year. The average egg production for a group of birds having white ear lobes will be found to be very high, and of all the methods of selection this method is one of the best for leghorns.

White ear lobes tell us that the birds are god producers. Golden-yellow ear lobes are an indication that the birds are poor producers.

The color of the vent is another reliable indication of whether a hen is laying or not laying. Soon after a pullet starts laying her vent color begins to fade, until soon it will be found to be bluish white in color. This fading of the vent will tell you if a bird is laying or not laying at any time. A bluish-white vent indicates that the bird is laying. A yellow vent indicates that the bird is not laying and has not been laying for some time.

Color of comb is an important factor, associated not only with egg production but also with sickness. A bird must have a bright red comb before she will start in laying.

Brigthness of comb also shows that the bird is in good physical condition, which must always accompany high egg prodquction. Birds having combs that have a dried appearance and are covered with a whitish powder will be found to be poor layers.

The combs of individual birds within the same breed of hens will be found to be of dereffnt sizes. It has been found that the birds having large-size cambs are the best producers throughout the year. A high average egg production is nearly always accompanied by large-size combs, whether in Rocks, Leghorns, Reds or Wyandottes. Birds that have very small combs are, as a rule, inferior layers.

The pelvic bones are located one on each side of the vent. All eggs that the bird lays must pass between these bones. The distance between these bones gives some indication of the birds ability to lay. The poultryman often speaks of the width between the pelvic bones as being one, two, three or four fingers. The wider these bones are apart the better producer the hen is, provided the measurements are taken at the right season of the year. Thin, pliable pelvic bones are a good indication.

STAIN REMOVERS

Here is a useful list of stain removers:

Remove tea and coffee stains with boiling water.

Remove chocolate stains with borax and cold water.

Remove milk and cream stains with cold water.

Remove scorch with sunlight.

Remove grass stains with amonia and water.

Remove ink stains with some milk, lemon juice or salts of lemon.

Remove ink from white goods by soaking half an hour in vinegar, wash and soak with chloride of lime and wash.

Remove paint with turpentine or turpentine and ammonia.

Remove iron rust by moistening with ammonia, then use salts of lemon or oxalic acid. Rinse in boiling water.

Remove medicine stains with alcohol.

USES FOR MILK

To clean linoleum of oil cloth. First wash with water and then polish by applyinb milk.

To remove grease stains—Soak the spots with sour milk or butetrmilk. This will loosen up the stains so they can be easily removed by washing.

To clean patent leather or glossy upholstering.—First remove the ditt with a sponge of flannel then rub lightly with a paste consisting of a half a cup of cream and one of linseed oil, both of which require to be warmed before mixing. Polish with a soft cloth.

To remove iron rust.—Iron rust may be removed from white goods by saturating with butermilk.

To clean silver.—Soldi silver or plated ware may be cleaned beautifully by covering with buttermilk for an hour and then rubbing dry. This removes all discoloration.

For washing palms—Milk added to the water in which palms are washed makes them glossy and healthy.

To cure a burn—Apply a thick paste of baking soda and cream to the burned skin. This gives instant relief, and is very healing.

For the complexion—The juice of a lemon squeezed into a half glass of buttermilk and applied several times daily with a soft cloth is excellent for removing tan, freckles or sunburn.

The above facts are recommended by the Carlyle Creamery.

A PAGE FOR THE BOYS AND GIRLS

The Princess and the Fox Baby

Once upon a time there lived in Japan a lovely little princess. One bright spring day she sat in the royal gaden beneath the chery blossoms. The whole garden was a mass of radiant pink bloom as soft as the sunset glow on the snow topped Fuji San, and as the soft petals from the cherry blossoms driftd down upon her black hair, the little princess laughed in delight. She loved the bright blossoms and she said softly to herself: "I wish that everyone in the world was as happy as I am, this world is such a beautiful place, filled with flowers and joy and love."

Just then she was startled by a patter of tiny feet, and a little fox baby sprang over the garden wall and ran under the robe of the princess. Stooping down, she lifted the fox and held it in her arms.

"You poor, frightened little foxling," she said, "what is the matter." But the little fox buried his sharp nose under her arm and shook all over with fear. Then the princess heard a shout and some boys climbed up on the wall. They did not know that she was a princess and they called out roughly: "Give us back our fox."

"What are you going to do with it?" she asked.

"We will kill it and eat the flesh for our supper, then we will sell the skin and the liver to the wise magician doctor, who cures fever with it. We can get many coins for our fox and then we can buy rice-cakes and other good things to eat."

The poor little fox seemed to understand, for he cowered closer to the princess and poking his nose into her hand he kissed it gently.

"Here I will give you gold and pay for the life of this foxling, but you shall not kill the poor baby," said the princess, and taking her purse from the sleeve of her kimona, she counted out the money. "This gold piece is for the flesh and one for the liver and one for the fur and another for the life of the poor little animal, and I hope you will pray the gods to give you kinder hearts, for neither gods nor men like cruel souls."

The boys took the gold and went away, they were pleased by their bargain, and the little princess was very happy because she had saved the foxling. She untied the string which was about his neck and stroking his soft fur, she said softly: "Fox Baby, where are your father and mother?"

The fox baby gave a sad little whine and from a bamboo thicket near by came some sharp, short barks, the baby fox barked in return, and the princess saw peering from between the branches two old foxes, who were looking anxiously about for their baby.

"I believe those are your parents, foxling, and I will let you go to them. You are so pretty and soft I would like to keep you for a playmate, but no matter how much I loved you and petted you, you would be lonely, for I never could care for you and do for you as your own father and mother can. So run along and be happy wth them."

She stroked him gently and put him down on the ground, and with great leaps he ran to the bamboo thicket. The princess watched the old foxes as they greeted him with joy, and licked him over and over, and then one on eithe side of the baby, they trotted happily away. And the little princess and was glad that she could help the little fox.

Summer bloomed and the golden lotus floated upon the water and after the warm summer days passed autumn came and the maple trees upon the hillside were scarlet and gold. The sun was glowing like burnished gold in the sky, but within the palace all was dark and sad, for the little princess was very ill. She lay upon her slumber mat parched with fever and she tossed about restlessly and could not sleep. All the wisest doctors in the land were unable to help her, and at last the emperor's magician came and he said: "The little princess is under a spell and unless the spell is broken she must die. Some one must sit beside her from the going down of the sun until it rises again in golden splendor from behind the mountains. That one will break the charm."

Each one of the princess' maids tried in turn, but the strange spell came over them and they went to sleep: then the old nurse tried to watch by her darling child, but she, too, went to sleep, and when she awoke she wept bitterly because she could not break the spell. Then the father and mother tried to watch, but to no avail, and each day their beloved little daughter grew weaker and weaker.

At last there came to the palace a young warrior, Ito San, who begged to be allowed to watch one night, "I love the little princess," he said, "and rather than sleep I shall die." Then he took his sharp sword and placing the point beneath his chin and standing it upon the floor, he rested, but every time he became drowsy and his head dropped he would be pricked in the chin by the sword and would sit up again and so he kept awake. And each time the princess looked at him she saw how much he loved her and she smiled lovingly at him, and at last she slept.

At sunrise he heard a strange voice chanting a song:

"Serve to the little princess
Broth of the finest rice;
Grate into it fox's liver
For magical healing spice.
Pot a wildwood fox, search for and near.
And the princess' ills will disappear.

The young warrior sprang to his feet and exclaimed joyously, "My beloved now you shall be saved!" Then he went to the mother and told her of the strange song and she repeated the words to the emperor. Then the emperor sent his hunters far and wide to search for a fox. "Bring us the liver of a fox at once or my daughter may die."

The hunters searched on every hill and in every valley and forest, but they found no fox. "The foxes are all gone," they said. "We have looked everywhere and not one is to be found."

When the young warrior heard this he said "I will go and find one. There must be a fox somewhere in the wildwood for this gentle little girl who loved all animals."

Then Ito San went out and hunted far and wide but he could not find any foxes, for they all had heard the proclamation of the emperor and they were such cunning animals that they had hidden themselves. So Ito San returned to the palace. He was so filled with grief and dispair that he was ready to slay himself.

Suddenly he felt a hand touch his sleeve and there stood a little old woman with a queer pointed face, a sharp nose and a mantle of red fur wrapped about her. In her had she held a jar which she gave to the soldier and she said, "Take this jar quickly to the little princess, it will make her well."

"What price shall I pay you," asked the soldier.

"Alas!" she cried, as she burst into tears, "The price is more than you can ever pay, but the little princess paid it long ago. Hasten quickly to her and it will make her well."

Then Ito San saw that the jar contained a fox's liver. He looked for the old woman to thank her, but she disappeared as suddenly as she had come. Ito San was so happy that he sang over and over the words of the song:

"Serve to the little princess
Broth of the finest rice;
Grate into it fox's liver
For magical healing spice.
For a wildwood fox search far and near.
And the princess' ills will disappear.

When he reached the palace they took the jar and made the princess a broth, with the liver of the fox grated in it, and soon after that she become well. She loved Ito San more than ever, and her father and mother loved him also, because he had been the means of saving her life.

One time as she lay on her mat dreaming of Ito San and his great love for her there came to her in her dreams a little fox cub, who said: "Dear princes, I am that little foxling that you saved long ago from those cruel boys. My father and mother were not ungrateful, so when they heard that you were ill my father gave you his liver to make you well, and my mother would not live without him so she gave up her life and sends her red fur to keep you warm. And this is because they were grateful to you for saving the life of their baby."

Then the little princess awoke and upon the sleeping mat there lay, soft and warm the skin of a red fox.

DEAR OLD "MUGGINS"

"Muggins" is a dog, four years old and owned by Mrs. G. Woodward, Victoria, British Columbia.

His present mission in life is collecting for the "flower guild" in that city, and the proceeds of the flower sales are divided between three funds namely, returned soldiers, Red Cross and Blue Cross.

On "Tag" days arranged fo the assistance of other patriotic funds Muggins follows the usual custom and devotes his energies to "tagging." He is a constant visitor to incoming boats particularly the Empress of Asia and the Empress of Russia.

Muggins contributed $300 to the different Patriotic Funds in five months.

The master: "You look worried. What's the matter?"

The Housekeeper: "The nurse has just left, and there is nobody to wash the baby.'

The Master: "Have the chauffeur do it. There isn't as much mechanism about a baby as there is about a car, anyway."

Roxie Can Ride Free on Railway

There is a dog named Roxie, and on his collar in a brass tablet setting forth that he is an employe of the Long Island Railroad, and instructing all the railway men to let him travel on the trains.

This pass was given to the bull terrier by order of the president of the company. One day he saw a guard trying to kick Roxie out of his private car. When the president asked what was the cause of the trouble between the dog and the guard he was told of the animal's fondness for traveling on the trains, and that he could not be kept out of them.

The president's interest being aroused in the dog, says the Ameican Boy, the dog was made welcome by him to his private car, and the pass was issued to prevent any more interference with Roxie's traveling.

For fifteen years Roxie has spent all his time in railway traveling, day and night. Curiously enough he never makes a return journey from a terminus with the same train.

Afte he had spent a little time with one of his favored acquaintances, he will take it into his head to meet a certain train. As soon as it stops at the station Roxie jumps on the train and curls himself up in a vacant seat, or, if there is none to be had, he quietly dozes on the floor until he arrives at his destination.

The moment the name of the station is called out he jumps up and makes for the door. After a visit of what he thinks is the proper time he gets into another train and goes into another station. Sometimes he goes farther along the line, and sometimes he returns in the direction in which he came.

Roxie has been at every station along the entire railway many times but he has never been known to go the entire length of the line in one journey.

He enters the president's rivate car with the utmost assurance that he is welcome there, or, indeed wherever an official of the railway is to be found.

He does not care very much for mixing with the passengers. Very few of them have ever been able to make friends with him. He seldom barks and he avoids trouble of every kind.

Nothing induces him to leave a train until he arrives at the station he desires. Many persons have tried to win his friendship with eatables, but failed. He can get all he wants to eat and drink at any town on the railway system.

THE BABY'S EYES

Listen close, that you may surprise
Part of the secret of the secret sweet
Part of the secret sweet that lies
Buried deep in baby's eyes.

Wise is the baby with eyes of brown
Clenching each little hand;
Wrinkling its forehead into a frown
Trying to understand.
Sweetest and wisest in a llhetownt h
Sweetest and wisest in all the town,
Thoughtful baby with eyes of brown.

Mischievous babe with the eyes of blue,
Laughing at other folk.
Planning and plotting the whole day through,
Laughing and happy and clever too,
Mischievous baby with eyes of blue.

Calm is the baby with eyes of grey,
Dear little stay-at-home;
Near to the mother at work and play,
Never will care to roam.
More of a comfort from day to day,
Calm little baby with eyes of grey.

Wilful the baby with eyes of black,
Ruling us more and more;
Sunbeams follow the storm cloud's track,
Heart is fonder when smiles come back,
Wilful baby with eyes of black.

"KAZAN"

BY

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

SYNOPSIS

Kazan, the wolf dog, is picked up by Thorpe and his wife. Kazan immediately becomes Mrs. Thorpe's devoted slave. He is struck by mistake by Thorpe. McCready, the desperado, leads Thorpe into the woods, strikes him unconscious, and then comes back into Mrs. Thorpe's tent, but Kazan kills him.

Running away from Thorpe, who later comes back, he joins a wolf band where a little she-wolf is attracted by him and follows him everywhere.

Kazan and Gray Wolf strike a man's trail, and there discover Pierre Radisson. Kazan is wounded and is nursed back to health by Pierre's daughter Joan. Gray Wolf is left behind while Kazan goes on with them. Pierre dies and Kazan brings Joan and the baby to safety. Gray Wolf follows Kazan. She becomes a mother, but her little ones are killed by a lynx who also blinds her.

Henri Loti loses many of his trapped lynx and finally decides to trap the slayers. Kazan and Gray Wolf are later trapped and as Loti levels his gun to shoot them, his friend, Weyman, stops him and offers him $100 for each if he will give them to him. Loti agrees to this. Weyman then takes a picture of Gray Wolf, Kazan and the torn lynx, which he declares will add greatly to the value of the book he is writing based on animal life in the northwest.

Henri shoots the lynx and the other two are kept prisoners in a cage constructed of saplings. Weyman during one night, after seeing that Gray Wolf was starving herself, was troubled over his cruel act, and let the captives out. Kazan and Gray Wolf wandered around for many days when finally they reached a trail where everything was deserted. The red plague had invaded the country and everybody and everything felt that death was near.

Interesting is their rambles through the north country, searching for food. Kazan at times is near the point of death for the lack of food—yet everywhere nothing but the desolate plains appear where the plague had wrought its havoc.

The hunger trail they followed and the only signs of life was a rambling fox which they dared not tackle.

At last they came upon a path where a herd of moose are stationed—two bulls fighting. One of the fighters is weakened so much that Kazan and Gray Wolf are able to handle him easily. Thus the days of famine have passed for them.

After having eaten enough the two wanderers watch their food. In the course of a few minutes animals and birds of different kind try to get some of the flesh but Kazan and his mate guard it well. When the cry of a hungry wolf is heard Gray Wolf sounds the welcome cry.

Kazan protects Gray Wolf from the leader of the pack with whom they came in contact one day. Kazan kills the leader and Gray Wolf knows that twice Kazan has saved her life while endangering his own.

Kazan one day while out hunting with Gray Wolf, has a fight with a porcupine. For several days he had a swollen face, but he knew that he had been protecting Gray Wolf. They then returned to their home and once more he contented himself with the companionship of his mate after their hard struggle for existence.

A son is born to them by the name of Baree. Baree is taught how to kill in order to provide himself with food and very soon learns the game. Shortly afterwards he deserts his home and Kazan and Gray Wolf travel on until they come to a beaver dam. Here they meet with obstacles and adventures.

Broken Tooth weighed sixty pounds. The instant he struck the water he was again in his element, and holding tenaciously to the grip he had obtained on Kazan's neck he sank like a chunk of iron. Kazan was pulled completely under. The water rushed into his mouth, his ears, eyes and nose. He was blinded, and his senses were a roaring tumult. But instead of struggling to free himself he held his breath and buried his teeth deeper. They touched the soft bottom and for a moment floundered in the mud. Then Kazan loosened his hold. He was fighting for his own life now—and not for Broken Tooth's. With all of the strength of his powerful limbs he struggled to break loose—to rise to the surface, to fresh air to life. He clamped his jaws shut, knowing that to breath was to die. On land he could have freed himself from Broken Tooth's hold without an effort. But under water the old beaver's grip was more deadly than would have been the fangs of a lynx ashore. There was a sudden swirl of water as a second beaver circled close about the struggling pair. Had he closed in with Broken Tooth, Kazan's struggles would have quickly ceased.

But nature had not foreseen the day when Broken Tooth would be fighting with fang. The old patriarch had no particular reason now for holding Kazan down. He was not vengeful. He did not thirst for blood or death. Finding that he was free, and that this strange enemy that had twice leaped upon him could do him no harm, he loosed his hold. It was not a moment too soon for Kazan. He was struggling weakly when he rose to the surface of the water. Three-quarters drowned, he succeeded in raising his forepaws over a slender branch that projected from the dam. That gave him time to fill his lungs with air, and to cough forth the water that had almost ended his existence. For ten minutes he clung to the branch before he dared attempt the short swim ashore. When he reached the bank he dragged himself up weakly. All the strength was gone from his body. His limbs shook. His jaws hung loose. He was beaten—completely beaten. And a creature without a fang had wrested him. He felt the abasement of it. Drenched and slinking he went to the windfall, lay down in the sun, and waited for Gray Wolf.

Days followed in which Kazan's desire to destroy his beaver enemies became the consuming passion of his life. Each day the dam became more formidable. Cement work in the water was carried on by the beavers swiftly and safely. The water in the pond rose higher each twenty-four hours, and the pond grew steadily wider. The water had now been turned into the depression that encircled the windfall, and in another week or two, if the beavers continued their work, Kazan and Gray Wolf's home would be nothing more than a small island in the centre of a wide area of submerged swamp.

Kazan hunted only for food now, and not for pleasure. Ceaselessly he watched his opportunity to leap upon the incautious members of Broken Tooth's tribe. The third day after the struggle under the water he killed a big beaver that approached to close to the willow thicket. The fifth day two of the young beavers wandered into the flooded depression back of the windfall and Kazan caught them in shallow water and tore them into pieces. After these successful assaults the beavers began to work mostly at night. This was to Kazan's advantage for he was a night hunter. On each of two consecutive nights he killed a beaver. Counting the young, he had killed seven when the otter came.

Never had Broken Tooth been placed btween two deadlier or more ferocious enemies than the two that now assailed him. On shore Kazan was his master because of his swiftness, keener scent, and fighting trickery. In the water the otter was still a greater menace. He was swifter than the fish that he caught for food. His teeth were like steel needles. He was so sleek and slippery that it would have been impossible for them to hold him with their chisel-like teeth could they have caught him. The otter, like the beaver, possessed no hunger for blood. Yet in all the Northland he was the greatest destroyer of their kind—an even greater destroyer than man. He came and passed like a plague, and it was in the coldest days of winter that greatest destruction came with him. In those days he did not assault the beavers in their snug houses. He did what man could do only with dynamite—made an embrasure through their dam. Swiftly the water would fall, the surface ice would crash down, and the beaver houses would be left out of water. Then followed death for the beavers—starvation and cold. With the protecting water gone from about their houses, the drained pond a chaotic mass of broken ice, and the temperature forty or fifty degrees below zero, they would die within a few hours. For the beaver, with his thick coat of fur, can stand less cold than man. Through all the long winter the water about his home is as necessary to him as fire to a child.

But it was summer now and Broken Tooth and his colony had no very great fear of the otter. It would cost them some labor to repair the damage he did, but there was plenty of food and it was warm. For two days the otter frisked about the dam and the deep water of the pond. Kazan took him for a beaver, and tried vainly to stalk him. The otter regarded Kazan suspiciously and kept well out of his way. Neither knew that the other was an ally. Meanwhile the beavers continued their work with greater caution. The water in the pond had now risen to a point where the engineers had begun the construction of three lodges. On the third day the destructive instinct of the otter began its work. He began to examine the dam, close down to the foundation It was not long before he found a weak spot to begin work on, and with his sharp teeth and small bullet-like head he commenced his drilling operations. Inch by inch he worked his way through the dam, burrowing and gnawing over and under the timbers, and always through the cement. The round hole he made was fully seven inches in diameter. In six hours he had cut through the five-foot base of the dam.

A torrent of water began to rush from the pond as if forced out by a hydraulic pump. Kazan and Gray Wolf were hiding in the willows on the south side of the pond when this happened. They heard the roar of the stream tearing through the embrasure and Kazan saw the otter crawl up to the top of the dam and shake himself like a huge water rat. Within thirty minutes the water in the pond had fallen perceptibly, and the force of the water pouring through the hole was constantly increasing the outlet. In another half hour the foundations of the three lodges, which had been laid in about ten inches of water, stood on mud. Not until Broken Tooth discovered that the water was receding from the houses did he take alarm. He was thrown into a panic, and very soon every beaver in the beaver colony was tearing excitedly about the pond. They swan swiftly from shore to shore, paying no attention to the dead-line now. Broken Tooth and the older workmen made for the dam, and with a snarling cry the otter plunged down among them and out like a flash for the creek above the pond. Swiftly the water continued to fall and as it fell the excitement of the beavers increased. They forgot Kazan and Gray Wolf.

Several of the younger members of the colony drew themselves ashore on the windfall side of the pond, and whining softly Kazan was about to slip back through the willows when one of the older beavers waddled up through the deepening mud close on his ambush. In two leaps Kazan was upon him, with Gray Wolf a leap behind him. The short fierce struggle in the mud was seen by the other beavers and they crossed swiftly to the other side of the pond. The water had receded to half of its greatest width before Broken Tooth and his workmen discovered the breach in the wall of the dam. The work of repair was begun at once. For this sticks and brush of considerable size were necessary, and to reach this material the beavers were compelled to drag their heavy bodies through the ten or fifteen yards of soft mud left by the falling water. Peril of fang no longer kept them back. Instinct told them that they were fighting for their existence—that if the embrasure were not filled up and the water kept in the pond they would very soon be completely exposed to their enemies. It was a day of slaughter for Gray Wolf and Kazan. They killed two more beavers in the mud close to the willows. Then they crossed the creek below the dam and cut off three beavers in the depression behind the windfall. There was no escape for these three. They were torn to pieces. Farther up the creek Kazan caught a young beaver and killed it.

Late in the afternoon the slaughter ended. Broken Tooth and his courageous engineers had at last repaired the breach, and the water in the pond began to rise.

Half a mile up the creek the big otter was squatted on a log basking in the last glow of the setting sun. Tomorrow he would go and do over again his work of destruction. That was his method. For him it was play.

But the strange and unseen arbiter of the forests called O-ee-ki, "the spirit," by those who speak the wild tongue, looked down at last with mercy upon Broken Tooth and his death-stricken tribe. For in that last glow of the sunset Kazan and Gray Wolf slipped steadily up the creek—to find the otter basking half asleep on the log.

The day's work, a full stomach, and the pool of warm sunlight in which he lay had all combined to make the otter sleepy. He was as motionless as the log on which he had stretched himself. He was big and gray and old. For ten years he had lived to prove his cunning superior to that of man. Vainly traps had been set for him. Wily trappers had built narrow sluiceways of rock and tree in small streams for him, but the old otter had foiled their cunning and escaped the steel jaws waiting for him at the lower end of each sluice. The trail he left in the soft mud told of his size. A few trappers had seen him. His soft pelt would long ago have found its way to London, Paris or Berlin had it not been for his cunning. He was fit for a princess, a duke or an emperor. For ten years he had lived and escaped the demands of the rich.

But this was summer. No trapper would have killed him now, for his pelt was worthless. Nature and instinct both told him this. At this season he did not dread man, for there was no man to dread. So he lay asleep on the log, oblivious to everything but the comfort of sleep and the warmth of the sun.

Soft footed, searching for the signs of the furry enemies who had invaded their domain, Kazan slipped along the creek. Gray Wolf ran close to his shoulder. They made no sound, and the wind was in their favor—bringing scents toward them. It brought the otter smell. To Kazan and Gray Wolf it was the scent of the water animal rank and fishy, and they took it for the beaver. They advanced still more cautiously. Then Kazan saw the big otter asleep on the log and he gave the warning to Gray Wolf. She stopped, standing with her head thrown up, while Kazan made his stealthy advance. The otter stired uneasily. It was growing dusk. The golden pool of sunlight had faded away. Back in the darkening timber an owl greeted night with its first low call. The otter breathed deeply. His whiskered muzzle twitched. He was awakening—stirring—when Kazan leaped upon him. Face to face, in fai fight the old otter could have given a good account of himself. But there was no chance now. The wild itself had for the first time in his life become his deadliest enemy. It was not man now—but O-ee-ki, "the Spirit," that had laid his hand unpon him. And from the spirit there was no escape. Kazan's fangs sank into his soft jugular. Perhaps he died without knowing what it was that had leaped upon him. For he died—quickly, and Kazan and Gray Wolf went on their way, hunting still for enemies to slaughter, and not knowing that in the otter they had killed the one ally who would have driven the beavers from their swamp home.

The days that followed grew more and more hopless for Kazan and Gray Wolf. With the Otter gone Broken Tooth and his tribe held the winning hand. Each day the water backed a little farther into the depression surrounding the windfall. By the middle of July only a narrow strip of land connected the windfall hummock with the dry land of the swamp. In deep water the beavers now worked unmolested. Inch by inch the water rose until there came a day when it began to overflow the connecting strip. For the last time Kazan and Gray Wolf traveled up stream between the two passed from their windfall home and ridges. The creek held a new meaning for them now and as they traveled they sniffed its odors and listened to its sounds with an interest they had never knew before. It was an interest mingled a little with fear, for something in the manner in which the beavers had beaten them reminded Kazan and Gray Wolf of man. And that night, when in the radiance of the big white moon they came within scent of the beaver colony that Broken Tooth had left, they turned quickly northward into the plains. Thus had brave old Broken Tooth taught them to respect the flesh and blood and handiwork of his tribe.

CHAPTER XXI

A Shot on the Sandbar

July and August of 1911 were months of great fires in the Northland. The swamp home of Kazan and Gray Wolf, and the green valley between the two ridges, had escaped the seas of devastating flame; but now, as they set forth on their wandering adventures again, it was not long before their padded feet came in contact with the seared and blackened desolation that had followed so closely after the plague and starvation of the preceding winter. In his humiliation and defeat, after being driven from his swamp home by the beavers, Kazan led his blind mate first into the south. Twenty miles beyond the ridge they struck the fire killed forests. Winds from Hudson's Bay had driven the flames in an unbroken sea into the west, and they had not left a vestige of life or a patch of green. Blind Gray Wolf could not see the blackened world, but she sensed it. It recalled to her memory of that other fire, after the battle on Sun Rock; and all of her wonderful instincts, sharpened and developed by her blindness, told her that to the north—and not to the south—lay the hunting grounds they were seeking. The strain of dog that was in Kazan still pulled him south. It was not because he sought man, for to man he had now become as deadly an enemy as Gray Wolf herself. It was simply dog instinct to travel southward; in the face or fire it was wolf instinct to travel northward. At the end of the third day Gray Wolf won. They had recrossed the little valley between the two ridges, and swung north and west into the Athabasca country, striking a course that would ultimately bring them to the headwaters of the McFarlane river.

Comment on Politics Here and Elsewhere

The political armies have been decidedly active this week. The scouts have been bringing in recruits galore with the result that it looks now as though we shall have a real skirmish both in Calgary and throughout the country generally.

The Albertan sprung the sensation of the week in local politics with its stand against Mayor Costello's re-election which was to be expected under the circumstances. All fair-minded citizens will realize that the Albertan could not consistently support the candidates they are supporting along with His Worship Mayor Costello.

The Standard does not agree with the Albertan in its contention that a precedent will be established that should be avoided in permitting Mayor Costello to run a fourth time. What real harm could come of electing a good man to office for four or fourteen times we cannot see.

Mayor Costello has made a good mayor. He has made few if any enemies either here or anywhere. He has devoted his energies to the successful running of the affairs of the city and that he has succeeded admirably will be shown by the fact that Calgary is progressing along all lines of endeavor with no public or private scandals to mar the serenity of the office.

Then again "swapping horses while crossing a stream" is a dangerous precedent. We are now going through most momentous times. Next year particularly we are going to have besetting troubles that will require a very level-headed executive to meet the situations that are sure to arise. To put an untried, inexperienced executive in the chair at this time no matter how favorably it may seem, is a dangerous proceeding and may bring disastrous results.

In his tenure of office Mayor Costello has met every difficulty that has arisen and brought the affairs out of seeming chaos with credit to himself and the city and we believe that his fourth election is a just recompense for his faithful service to the city.

"Tom" Tweedie, that intrepid and popular barrister of Calgary, will run in the West Calgary riding. He should be elected and no doubt he will be this time. He will go in with flying colors unless—ah—but "Tom" will have the foresight not to make the mistakes he made in the last election. He was over-confident and he did little to help his cause along. He left it to others who took as little interest in the affair as he did and in consequence he met the surprise of his life.

This time Mr. Tweedie will probably bring into play that remarkable ability of his that has made him one of the leading men in the legal world. His popularity is undoubted. No man in the city or province enjoys greater popularity among the masses than he does. This popularity if properly marshalled and brought to the polls will bring Mr. Tweedie the much coveted prize.

LOCAL CANDIDATES

Besides Mayor Costello, who has stated his intentions to run again, Alderman Adshead and R. C. Marshall are two candidates who will probably be in the running. Some of the business men are trying to get some active member of the Merchants' association to stand for election but so far they have met with little success. The majority of the business men seem to feel that their business requirements are such that they cannot devote the proper attention o be office and would not care to enter the contest under the circumstances.

The big volley from the Unionists' camp will occur next week when many of the leading men of the government including Sir James Lougheed, A. L. Sifton and others will attend a mass meeting in Calgary to be held in the Grand theater. It is expected that this meeting will be of inestimable benefit to the cause of the Unionists and the members are straining every nerve to make it the event of the month.

OFFICIAL PROSPECTUS

The Proceeds of this Loan will be used for War purposes only, and will be spent wholly in Canada

The Minister of Finance offers for Public Subscription

Canada's Victory Loan

Issue of

$150,000,000. 5½% Gold Bonds

Bearing interest from December 1st, 1917, and offered in three maturities, the choice of which is optional with the subscriber, as follows:

5 year Bonds due December 1st, 1922
10 year Bonds due December 1st, 1927
20 year Bonds due December 1st, 1937

This Loan is authorized under Act of the Parliament of Canada, and both principal and interest are a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

The amount of this issue is $150,000,000, exclusive of the amount (if any) paid for by the surrender of bonds of previous issues. The Minister of Finance, however, reserves the right to allot the whole or any part of the amount subscribed in excess of $150,000,000.

Principal and Interest payable in Gold
Denominations: $50, $100, $500 and $1,000

Subscriptions must be in sums of $50 or multiples thereof.

Principal payable without charge at the Office of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General at Ottawa, or at the Office of the Assistant Receiver General at Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary and Victoria.

Interest payable, without charge, half-yearly, June 1st and December 1st, at any branch in Canada of any Chartered Bank.

Bearer or Registered Bonds

Bonds may be registered as to principal or as to principal and interest.

Scrip certificates, non-negotiable, or payable to bearer, in accordance with the choice of the applicant for registered or bearer bonds, will be issued after allotment in exchange for provisional receipts. When these scrip certificates have been paid in full, and payment endorsed thereon by the bank receiving the money, they may be exchanged for bonds, when prepared, with coupons attached, payable to bearer, or registered as to principal, or for fully registered bonds when prepared, without coupons, in accordance with the application.

Delivery of interim certificates and of definitive bonds will be made through the Chartered Banks.

Bearer bonds with coupons will be issued in denominations of $50., $100., $500., and $1,000. and may be registered as to principal only. Fully registered bonds, the interest on which is paid direct to the owner by Government cheque, will be issued in denominations of $1,000, $5,000 or any authorized multiple of $5,000.

Subject to the payment of 25 cents for each new bond issued, holders of fully registered bonds without coupons, will have the right to convert into bonds of the denomination of $1,000 with coupons, and holders of bonds with coupons will have the right to convert into fully registered bonds of authorized denominations without coupons, at any time, on application to the Minister of Finance.

Surrender of Bonds

Holders of Dominion of Canada Debenture Stock, due October 1st, 1919, and of bonds of the three preceding Dominion of Canada War Loan Issues, have the privilege of surrendering their bonds in part payment for subscriptions to bonds of this issue, under the following conditions:—

Debenture Stock, due October 1st, 1919, at Par and Accrued Interest.
War Loan Bonds, due December 1st, 1925, at 97½ and Accrued Interest.
(The above will be accepted in part payment for bonds of any of the three maturities of this Issue.)
War Loan Bonds, due October 1st, 1931, at 97½ and Accrued Interest.
War Loan Bonds, due March 1st, 1937, at 96 and Accrued Interest.
(These will be accepted in part payment for bonds of the 1937 maturity ONLY of this Issue.)

Bonds of the various maturities of this issue will, in the event of future issues of like maturity, or longer, made by the Government, other than issues made abroad, be accepted at par and accrued interest, as the equivalent of cash for the purpose of subscription to such issues.

Issue Price Par

Free from taxes—including any income tax—imposed in pursuance of legislation enacted by the Parliament of Canada.

Payment to be made as follows:

10% on December 1st, 1917 — 20% on March 1st, 1918
10% on January 2nd, 1918 — 20% on April 1st, 1918
20% on February 1st, 1918 — 20% on May 1st, 1918
A full half year's interest will be paid on 1st June, 1918

The Bonds therefore give a net interest yield to the investor of about:

5.61% on the 20 year Bonds
5.68% on the 10 year Bonds
5.81% on the 5 year Bonds

All payments are to be made to a Chartered Bank for the credit of the Minister of Finance. Failure to pay any instalment when due will render previous payments liable to forfeiture, and the allotment to cancellation. Subscriptions accompanied by a deposit of 10% of the amount subscribed, must be forwarded through the medium of a Chartered Bank. Any branch in Canada of any Chartered Bank will forward subscriptions and issue provisional receipts.

In case of partial allotments the surplus deposit will be applied toward payment of the amount due on the January instalment.

Subscriptions may be paid in full on January 2nd, 1918, or on any instalment due date thereafter under discount at the rate of 5½% per annum. Under this provision payments of the balance of subscriptions may be made as follows:

If paid on January 2nd, 1918, at the rate of 89.10795 per $100.
If paid on February 1st, 1918, at the rate of 79.46950 per $100.
If paid on March 1st, 1918, at the rate of 59.72274 per $100.
If paid on April 1st, 1918, at the rate of 39.90959 per $100.

Forms of application may be obtained from any branch in Canada of any Chartered Bank, or from any Victory Loan Committee, or member thereof.

The books of the Loan will be kept at the Department of Finance, Ottawa.

Application will be made in due course for the listing of this issue on the Montreal and Toronto Stock Exchanges.

Subscription Lists will close on or before December 1st, 1917.

Untold Wealth in Store for Western Canadians

The reputation that Western Canada has attained as a wealth producer is being sustained in many ways aside from agriculture. The discovery of oil in the Peace River district as well as anthricite coal in the Rockies, Potash in Alberta and much rich ore in various parts of the three provinces bears out the prediction that many ecientists have made that Alberta and the other western provinces would be great wealth producers years hence.

The people of Calgary and Alberta are so wrapped up in agriculture owing possibly to the big returns that this industry has made in the past few years has deterred others from engaging or even making adequate investments in other resources. Now that some intrepid workers have had the nerve to investigate the resources these discoveries are beginning to promise untold returns for the work.

The fact that oil has been discovered in the Peace River district is no surprise to those that are conversant with the situation. Visitors to that section of Alberta for years have reported finding seepings on the small lakes and ponds of oil floating on the top of the water showing conclusively that oil was somewhere within the territory. It simply needs a comprehensive systematic digger to go about it in the right way.

The same condition confronted those who started the investigation in oil in lower Alberta. All the reports pointed to the fact that oil was prevalent in the southern country but up to a few years ago when the Dingman people took over the work no systematic effort had been made to discover if oil was really in the district. Now that Dingman and one or two others have proved conclusively that oil does exist in the southern country in paying quantities the impression regarding the wealth producers has materially changed.

Other Natural Wealth Producers

It has long been known that the Canadian Rockies contained anthracite coal, but in points where it was quite inaccessible. The recently announced holdings of R. J. Mackenzie, son of Sir William Mackenzie of the C. N. R., are in the Alberta portion of the mountains and only 40 miles from the main line of railways. Owing to the difficulty of securing capital, however, it has been found impossible to open them up while the war is in progress. Mr. Mackenzie who was in Winnipeg recently stated that he hoped to be able to lay anthracite down in this city at considerable less than the prevailing prices. In Alberta, he declared, the price could be cut in two. Mr. Mackenzie affirms that the coal is equal in quality to the Pennsylvania product.

The discovery of potash in the vicinity of Weyburn, Sask., may result in an extensive deposit being located. The Saskatchewan Development company is now erecting a drilling plant and work will proceed all winter with night and day shifts. Those behind the enterprise are confident that the discovery will ultimately result in a large industry being developed. The element of doubt, however, in this case has not been entirely removed.

As to the recent mineral finds in the west nothing need be said here, further than that ores of exceptional values have been located in the hinterlands during the past month. Big shipments of copper ores are already being made and once the war is over great mining developements are assured.

None of these enterprises affect the western farmer directly but all of the greatest importance to him indirectly Gasoline as a motor fuel, potash as a manure and coal are, or will be, needed by progressive farmers. Perhaps more than any other part of Canada the western farmers are men of wide vision and interests and their sympathy extends much further than their own quarter or half section or whatever it may be. The wider the range of the country's productivity the greater will be its natural wealth.

The Pro-Cathedral Mission Fund will hold its annual sale of work and home cooked food on December 13, in Paget hall, at 2 p.m.

COMMENTS AND CRITICISM

FUR PRODUCTION IN CANADA

Canada's rich resouces in fur-bearing animals formed her earliest commercial attraction, and, through generations of energetic exploitation the fur industry has occupied an important position in primary production. Of recent years it has become increasingly evident that the permanent preservation of this source of wealth demands the much more rigorous protection of fur-bearers. One of the essential requirements is the collection of accurate statistical data of fur production from year to year, as a reliable index to the increase or depletion of our resources. Such a system is already enforced in several provinces, where trappers and fur dealers are licensed and compelled to make annual returns as to their operations. Similar measures should apply to every important fur production region of the Dominion.

WOMEN CAN HELP

Ninety per cent. of the food consumed in Canada passes through the hands of our women. There is, then a great responsibility resting upon them to conserve supplies needed overseas and to utilize perishable foods. Waste in all its many forms should be regarded not only as a sin, but as actual disloyalty in war time. It is important that sufficient and nourishing food should be provided, suited to the needs of the different members of the family.

Arbitrary rules in this case are of little vaule but the principle is of general application—that the women in the homes can do no more important patriotic service than by guarding against waste. The question of substitution is very largely in their hands. A little saving in every home, when multiplied by all the homes in the Dominion, would mean a very large amount of food products saved for the soldiers.

You may feel that you do not need to sign the food pledge—that you will save all you can without it. But how about your neighbor? The actual pledge may help her to remember the duty of food service. The housewives of Canada, pledged to food service, and living up to their pledges, will be a powerful factor in the struggle against Germany and against starvation.

THE COUNTRY NEEDS YOUR SUPPORT

The heroic deeds of our brave men in the field have placed Canada in the foremost ranks of the nations of the world, and we at home must do our part to help maintain the position so nobly achieved. In Great Britain, 1 in every 23 of the population participated in their last loan. In Canada, only 1 in every 187 of the population subscribed to our last war loan. Can we not this time equal their effort?

It is imperative that all should, at this critical juncure of the war, save their money and invest it in the war loans of he Dominion. The government has full confidence that the Canadian people will, as always, rise to the full height of their duty and responsibility in this most vital national matter. It is just as important that he man, woman or child who is in a position to buy only $50 of Canada's Victory Loan, should do so, as it is that large buyers should purchase many thousands of dollars of the bonds.

The Liberty Loan, Canada's latest effort to help the great cause, requires that the people subscribe and take at least $150,000,000.

The money is urgently required, not only for Canada's war expenditures in support of our gallant soldiers in the field, but also for the purpose of providing the funds necessary to create credits in Canada which will enable the imperial government to continue the purchase of munitions, grain and other foodstuffs and supplies. Such credits are necessary in order that Great Britain may be enabled to buy our products so greatly needed by them for their and our forces at the front, and for the sustenance of their civilian population at home. Upon the continuation of such purchases, Canada's agricultural, industrial and commercial prosperity must in a large measure depend. The proceeds of the loan will be expended entirely in Canada.

WAR RECORDS DEPARTMENT WANT PHOTOS OF BOYS IN KHAKI

The officer in charge Canadian war records has asked us to make known that it is desired to compile a complete history in photograph of the Canadians' share in the war, in the same way that all other belligerent countries are compiling similiar records.

It is particularly desired to obtain photographs of all officers, non-commissioned officers and men who have served or are now serving in the overseas military forces of Canada, and it is requested that an appeal should be made to this end through these columns.

All officers and other ranks serving overseas may find it difficult to send in their photographs and their relatives are therefore especially appealed to, to send in their photographs for them.

By preference the photogaphs should be unmounted and printed on bromide paper in order to ensure permanence. Each photograph should be accompanied by a concise record, not exceeding two or three hundred words, of the subject's military career, including date of enlistment, promotions, distinctions and so on, as this will greatly assist in obtaining a full and accurate record of all concerned.

In addition it is desired to collect all photographs dealing with the mobilization, training and departure of troops together with pictures illustrating reviews, spors, presentations, etc. Any photograph of this nature is regarded as a document of historical importance, and it is hoped that the possessors of all such photographs will deem it their duty to send either the originals or copies, which will be ultimately placed in the permanent public archives of the Dominion.

All photographs, which will be acknowledged, should be addressed to the officer in charge, Canadian War Records, 14 Clifford street, Bond street, London, W. I., England.

THE STUDY OF FARMING WINS MANY RECRUITS

The business and scientific side of farming is winning more and more recruits each year.

The young men on the farm who have made up their minds to stick to farming as their life work are evincing a keen interest in farm study, and their ambition to be GOOD FARMERS is leading them to enroll as students at the state agricultural classes.

There are increased numbers of students at the agricultural colleges this fall, both in long and middle courses. In Wisconsin, for instance, there is an increase of 11 per cent. in the number of students registered at the state university "long course" in farming over a year ago, and the "short course" registry shows an increase of 21 per cent.

Other state agricultural colleges report quite as satisfactory increases in the number of farm students.

It has been a good year on the farms, better than last year, and far above the average. Farm prosperity helps farm education. The greater the yields and the greater the farming profit, the more interest farming as a profession holds for the youths on the farms.

They look about them for a line of work to make their life endeavor, and in coming to a decision a survey of prosperous farming operations right at home makes farming appeal to them as a good business proposition.

The well-trained young farmer, he who graduates from an agricultural college, has qualified for a position the remuneration of which is fully as high and often higher than that to be gained in many other lines of work. The farm boy who likes farming and has made it a study at a state agricultural college has an advantage upon taking up farming which he must ever consider a valuable asset in his work. He knows the business and economic side of farming, as well as the scientific side of it.

He is a soil analyst, a crop-growing expert and a livestock judge. He is fitted for the business of farming, either as successor to his father or as a well-paid farm manager, ready for employment by men who own big farms and require careful, trained managers, or, going still further, he is fitted to teach farming to those who follow him in the class room.

Agricultural teaching is on the increase in the universities for the obvious reason that interest in agriculture by the industrious young men of the farm is constantly growing.

HOW TO WIN SUCCESS

Have Confidence in Yourself and Do Not Lean on Others

Power is the goal of every worthy ambition, and only weakness comes from imitation or dependence on others. Power is self-developed, self-generated. We cannot increase the strength of our muscles by sitting in a gymnasium and letting another exercise for us.

Nothing else so destroys the power to stand alone as the habit of leaning upon others. If you lean you will never be strong or original. Stand alone or bury your ambition to be somebody in the world.

The man who tries to give his children a start in the world so that they will not have so hard a time as he had is unknowingly bringing disaster upon them. What he calls giving them a start will probably give them a setback in the world. Young people need all the motive power they can get. They are naturally leaners, imitators, copiers, and it is easy for them to develop into echoes or imitations. They will not walk alone while you furnish crutches; they will lean upon you just as long as you will let them.

One of the greatest delusions that a human being could ever have is that he is permanently benefited by continued assistance from others.

To the Citizens of Southern Alberta

An Important Announcement Issued by Mr. Wm. Toole, Chairman of Committee, Which Every Reader Should See

On Monday morning at nine o'clock we citizens of Southern Alberta, whose part it has been to stay at home while our sons, brothers and fathers have been fighting for us, and our sisters caring for the wounded, will have an opportunity to show that "They also serve who only stand and wait." Some are prevented from going to the front by health, physique, age and family duties, others, like our farmers and livestock men, although they find it exceedingly irksome to do so, know that they perform their best service by staying in Canada producing food: others again have to do the best they can in carrying on the financial, commercial and transportation work of the country.

The preliminary organization work for Southern Alberta's share of Canada's Victory Loan 1917, commenced on the twelfth day of October. On that day, Sir Augustus Nanton came to us with the message from the Minister of Finance of the Dominion of Canada and had assigned to them as a Dominion Executive under the Chairmanship of Mr. A. E. Ames, the duty of bringing to every man and woman and boy and girl in Canada the opportunity to serve our country, to strenthen our fighting forces, and to maintain our farm production, our work, and our business, by suscribing to Canada's Victory Loan. In that short time it has been our privilege to discover that many men and women actually seemed to have been waiting for just such an oportunity for service as that resented by the requirement for business people to detach themselves for a time from their affairs, and devote themselves to working to perfect such plans as will carry the message of our country's need to every nook and corner of the Province. This opportunity has been eagerly embraced by our busiest men and farmers; and we are confident that the message will be carried to the homesteader in his shack, the older established and well fixed farmer, and livestock breeders, to all our women-folks, to the business man in his office, or his store, to the workman at his bench, the railroad man, the coal miner, the teacher and the student, and to each one of their countless helpers.

The secretary and the treasurer of the Southern Alberta Executive, and the Publicity chairman and their staffs have been busy in their special duties.

The twelve executive deputies sent out from the Southern Alberta headquarters in these few weeks, and the citizens of the south, have eagerly taken up their message and carried it on through the various honorary chairmen and secretaries and committees at some fifty places. From nearly one hundred other points captains and teams of canvassers will carry on the tale; while other captains and canvassers will see that the message is carried to the business houses and to the humblest home in the cities.

What is this message? It is this—that you are given the opportunity to subscribe to Canada's Victory Loan; to lend—not to give, but lend—your money to the Government of Canada, to genable the country to buy our crops and livestock and ship them over to Great Britain and our Allies in Europe; and to provision our own forces at the front. For the use of this money the Government will pay you interest at the rate of five and a half per cent. per year; a bit better than that, indeed, because you can pay by installments up till May 1918, whereas you will receive a full half year's interest on June 1, 1918. Such a security, at such a rate of interest and of such ready negotiability, has never been offered to us before.

Southern Albert aims at making the total subscription of its citizens $7,000,000, and form the reports that are coming in it appears more than likely that this total will be exceeded before the lists close on the first day of December.

Western Canada was never so prosperous before 1914 as it is now. The economic conditions during the war, due to our being largely an agricultural country so placed geographically that we are able most quickly to supply the food requirements of Great Britain and her European Allies, have been extraordinarily favorable to us; and if we as individuals and as a community subscribe to this Loan as we should, those circumstances that are so favorable to our agriculture and commerce will be maintained. This will be good business for us. No sacrifice is involved, except in so far as help is tendered for organization work, and that is most readily iven by all who have volgunteered for this service. And they feel that the use of the work sacrifice for so little a service is a travesty. The Canadian soldier makes no barter for his service, and it is real and arduous service; and when he pays the tollkeeper, he does it with a smile, and without ask-in interest.

What can you do in the matter? Inform yourself by reading the Prospectus which has been sent to you. Be ready and willing to receive the messenger when he comes to get your application; give him a prompt answer, and then you will feel that your share in this so great matter has been well done.

DECENDANT OF "ANNIE LAURIE" ENGAGED TO ITALIAN MARQUIS

A notable young lady, Miss Cutlar-Fergusson of Craigdarroch, Dumfriesshire, is just engaged to the Marquis Guido Sevia Di Cassano, brother of the Duke of Cassano of Naples. She is a descendant of "Bonnie Annie Laurie." Elder twin daughter of the late Captain Cutlar-Fergusson, Scots Guards, she inherited the family estates at her father's death.

Anna Laurie (not Annie), daughter of Sir Robert Laurie, Bart, of Maxwellton, Dumfriesshire, threw over, while he fought in Marlborough's wars, Douglas of Fingland, and married Alexander Fergusson, of Craigdarroch. The verses of the popular song are credited to Lady John Scott-Spottiswood, but she merely altered somewhat the wording of lines written by the jilted lover, Douglas of Fingland.

REWARD FOR BEGAN

The Standard will pay a reward for information that will lead to the apprehension of J. Began, a circulation solicitor, supposed to be taking subscriptions for this publication. Mr. Began's usual line of work is interviewing farmers and he has been very persistent around Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Redcliff, etc. Address, Manager, Calgary Western Standard, or notify local police if you know hereabouts.

Germans Did'nt Trust Gerard When He Forgot

New York is chuckling over an anecdote Mr. Gerard recently told against himself.

It appears that last summer, when he was ambassador at Berlin he set out, unofficially, to visit an open air fete organized in aid of the German Red Cross fund.

The price of admission to the ground was five marks, and on presenting himself at the entrance gate discovered, to his dismay, that he had left his pocketbook containing his money at the embassy.

Not wishing to disclose his identity Mr. Gerard explained matters to the gatekeeper, adding that he would be sure to meet somebody he knew once he got inside, and that he would return and pay him the admission money.

But the man "wasn't having any." Possibly he had been "had" before. Anyway he declined to fall in with the proposal.

Whereupon Mr. Gerard was indignant.

"Look at my face, man!" he exclaimed. "Look at my face, and say if you think I am likely to cheat you!"

The man looked at him steadily for some seconds and then answered with a shake of his head:

"I'll thank you for the five marks sir."

GO STRAIGHT -- GO OFTEN GO RIGHT

IF YOU'LL LISTEN FOR JUST A MOMENT, MR. MERCHANT, YOU'LL GET SOME MONEY-MAKING TIPS!

GO STRAIGHT—There is no need of wasting time on the question: "Does Advertising Pay?" The bank accounts of a thousand millionaires who yesterday were broke scream like the siren on a fire engine: "You Bet Your Life, It Pays!" How to advertise is the big question. The first step in answering this big question is to find out who you want for customers, then go to them—Go Straight!

GO OFTEN—If your office boy, after working for you two weeks, came to you and asked for a raise, you'd call the porter and say: "Here, Steve, throw this red-headed son-of-a-gun out of the window—he's too previous!" Don't be "too previous" yourself when you advertise. Give your advertising a chance to produce—show the people that you are in earnest and on the job. Don't watch the clock—go often and you'll come back with bells on and bills in!

GO RIGHT—Selling things over a counter and selling the same things on paper are two different tasks. (One is a business and the other is a profession. You may be an excellent business man but a poor advertising man. Perhaps, the reason your advertising doesn't pull is because you write your own copy. Why don't you cut your own hair? Building an advertisement ought to be the work of a specialist. The big fellows in business recognize this fact—why don't you? You wouldn't hire a tongue-tied salesman, would you? Wealth of the Farmers Never Been Equalled

A conclusive proof of the growth of the wealth of the farmers of the west is shown in the reports of the insurance companies. From these companies we hear that the farming and livestock element have paid their annual assessments quicker this year than ever before in the history of the country. Farm loans likewise and interest charges are being settled without a murmur. Every indication shows that the farmers are in better circumstances than they ever have been.

Capitalists are all looking askance at Western Canada. The promptitude that has been the character of the farmer the past year particularly in discharging his obligations has established a high water credit mark for Western Canada which means that plenty of money is available for any improvements that the people may want.

Farmers Make Big Profit

There are many thousands of farmers in Western Canada who have sold their crops for more than the total cost of their land. Indeed, according to the figures of the C. P. R., land which was bought at from $15 to $30 an acre, has produced crops worth $40 to $75 an acre. Stock raising and dairying enterprises are equally profitable. Prosperity is everywhere to be seen, but it is not that exultant kind of the boom days. It is a prosperity which is a real asset to the empire in these times of trial, but in reviewing material successes it should not be forgotten that the manhood of the prairie provinces is represented in the trenches in a proportion not equalled by any other part of Canada.

The announcement of the minister of finance that the exportable surplus of the Canadian wheat crop of this year has been satisfactorily arranged for, has been received with general satisfaction. The exportation of the wheat crop will involve, advices from Ottawa state, about $350,000,000, and the satisfactory arrangements which were made for its financing assures the western farmer the fixed price for his grain.

It is clear now that the great question of financing the Canadian wheat crop under present conditions of exchange will be one of the problems which the new Union government will have to work out in detail. The fixing of the price of wheat at $2.21 per bushel, and the elimination of the speculation in the trade has created a situation whereby some government assistance, or the entering into contract whereby buyers may be insured against loss, is necessary. The interesting suggestion is now made that farmers should be requested to take in payment for their wheat part cash and part government bonds.

Livestock Situation Good

The stability of the livestock industry in the prairie provinces is indicated very clearly in a report which P. H. Bredt, secretary of the Saskatchewan Livestock board, in the report he has submitted to the minister of agriculture of the latter province. After reviewing the prices and showing that they have been unprecedentedly high he remarks that they are chiefly due to the world war, although they are not likely to be affected to the same extent as the prices of grain by a decline following the declaration of peace. In order to preserve their grain for human consumption the central powers, and to a certain extent, the Allies, have slaughtered a large number of their cattle which will have to be replaced. He predicts that Canada will be called upon to supply large quantities of cattle, either in the form of chilled meats or livestock. It will take years, he declares, to increase the diminished herds of Europe after the war, and during that time there will, as a result, be great demands upon this country. Mr. Bredt advocates the establishment of breeding herds or flocks with the view to making them a part of a permanent system of agriculture.

RURAL PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT

The latest report of the Commission of Conservation deals with the important subject of the planning and developing of rural districts and small towns in Canada. It has been prepared by Mr. Thomas Adams, town planning adviser of the commission, who has made a close study of the problem of rural development in this country during the past three years, following twenty-five years of experience in farming, land surveying and town planning in other countries.

The report deals comprehensively with the social conditions and tendencies in rural areas and the prevailing systems of land settlement and development. It indicates the rural problems requiring solution in order to secure the proper development and economic use of land for purpose of efficiency, health, convenience, and amenity. The great injury which land development in Canada suffers, from speculation, neglect of public health, and want of expert business administration of land settlement, is considered. Incidentally, the problem of returned soldiers is dealt with, and the connection between land development and such questions as taxation, unemployment and high cost of living is clearly shown here.

Having regard to the need for more attention being given to production in Canada; to the extent to which production is impaired by speculation in land, by neglect of public health, and by haphazard systems of development to the importance of increasing the supply of human skill and energy and of capital derived from production instead of by borrowing; the problems dealt with in this report are of vital and current interest to the people of this country.

There are five appendices by competent authorities, and the concluding chapter gives an outline of proposals and makes general recommendations to cover the conditions as presented.

THERE IS DANGER IN DUST TO POULTRY

Chickens confined in small houses and yards demand greater attention and cleaner quarters than fowls allowed free range.

One of the more important factors to be considered in the housing of poultry is dust Not only must poultry houses be kept dry and clean, free from vermin and filth, but they must also be kept free from dust.

Fowls that are forced to scratch in dusty litter soon suffer from disease of the respiratory tract. The constant breathing of small particles of dust causes a severe irration of the delicate membrane lining, the nostrils and the lungs. These dust particles by their irritating action opens up avenues of infection through which disease germs gain a foothold, and generally it is not long before the fowl is out of condition, stops laying, and is on sick list. Treatment administered too late proves ineffective and the fowl dies.

A dirt floor in a poultry house tends to increase the amount of dust, but if dusty litter is used or allowed to accumulate in a house with a wooden or concrete floor the final loss is the same. Dusty quarters and profit do not go hand in hand.

Be a Good Roads Booster

FINE NEW ROADS FOLLOW TRAIL OF RUIN IN FRANCE

Hundreds of miles of the smooth white macadam roads of northern France will remain for many years after the war as a real memorial to the devastated towns the Germans left after their retreat in the spring.

All over northern France the roads are being widened and resurfaced with stone and rubble taken from the wrecked houses of Peronne, Albert, Arras, and the countless other ruined towns and villages.

As fast as the British soldiers clear away the debris of the towns it is piled into lorries and distributed in heaps along the main roads. There German prisoners toil the day long pounding it into level patches, which great steam rollers, many of them bearing familiar American names, grind quickly into smooth macadam for the business of transport.

The brick and stone of these old buildings make as good road material as could be obtained anywhere, and the work of the German dynamiters has been so thorough that much of it is crushed fine enough to need no further preparation.

The roads of northern France always were exellent, but they never were better than today. The only complaint travelers had against them in the old days was that the paved strip in the centre was too narrow. That complaint cannot be made after the British highway plans have been completed, for all the main highways will be macadamized to a width permitting three broad guage lorries to run abreast, and even the byways will have a paved surface wide enough to allow traffic to pass easily at any point.

Excessive dustiness is the only fault today, for war economics will not permit the use of precious oil on roadways.

There is little need anywhere in this district for straightening roads or altering routes, because the roads of northern France mostly run straight as an arrow's flight. Most of the great highways were laid out in Napoleon's time by military surveyors, and their strategic value and importance always has been kept primarily in mind by the French government.

MEAT ANIMALS GAIN IN PRICE AT THE FARM

Washington, D. C.—The prices received by producers for cattle, sheep, and hogs, September 15 and Chickens October1, have gained 52.7 per cent. in the general average from 1916 to 1917, according to the latest report of the United States Department of Agriculture. The advance for beef cattle per 100 pounds, live weight, was from $6.55 to $8.40, or 28 per cent; for veal calves per 100 pounds, from $8.77 to $11.80, or 26 per cent; sheep per 100 pounds, from $6.25 to $10.05, or 61 per cent; lambs per 100 pounds, from$8.22 to $13.06, or 59 per cent, hogs per 100 pounds, from $9.22 to $15.69, or 70 per cent and chickens, from 14.3 to 18.1 cents per pound, or 27 per cent. Sheep lambs and hogs have far exceeded beef cattle, veal calves, and chickens in the upward price movement at the point of production.

The highest price at the farm per 100 pounds, live weight, reached during the year under review, was $8.70 for beef cattle in May, $11.68 for veal calves in last September, $10.15 for sheep in May, $13.06 for lambs in last September, $15.69 for hogs in last September, and 18.1 cents per pound for chickens October 1, of this year. The latest farm price reported is the highest one of the year for veal calves lambs, hogs, and chickens; the May price was the highest for beef cattle and sheep.

Temporary Shortage In Sugar Market

The temporary shortage of sugar, which will continue until the new crop becomes available, about the first of the year, requires careful conservation, avoidance of hoarding, and the curtailment of consumption in the form of candies, etc. In a statement dealing with the situation, Hon. W. J. Hanna, Food Controller for Canada, says:

"There are two alternatives at the present moment for handling the temporary sugar situation. One is to make a request of the dealers and the public, and the other is to put in force most drastic regulations.

"The latter course should not be necessary, because when the Canadian people understand the situation I feel sure they will do everything they can to reduce their consumption of sugar until the new crop is available. It rests with the public of Canada as to which method will be adopted.

"The price of sugar from the refiners to the jobbers should not exceed what it is at present, as the prices for raw sugar have been stabilized in New York for some time past, in spite of the shortage of stocks of raw sugar in Cuba.

"The refiners and jobbers will, no doubt, exercise the greatest care in shipping to their customers only in proportion to their normal requirements, and should any dealers be found advancing the prices or using the sale of sugar as a means of inducing customers to buy other goods, further supplies to them should be stopped.

"Retailers should be most careful only to sell to customers on the basis of their normal requirements, and thus to prevent private hoarding.

"The general public can aid greatly by careful conservation of sugar and by curtailing the use of candies, etc. France has an average of one pound of sugar per person per month, as against the consumption in Canada of seven pounds per person per month, so that the reduction in consumption here which is necessary for a short period should involve no great hardship."

The shortage will only be temporary. The new Cuban crop is the largest in the history of the island, and is estimated at not less than three million tons of raw sugar, which will begin to move from December 1 to December 15. The crops of Porto Rico and San Domingo, which promise an increase over last year, are placed at 500,000 tons, and will move about the same time as the Cuban product. Three hundred thousand tons of Louisiana sugar will move about December 15. In addition to the cane sugar, there will be 700,000 tons of beet sugar from the western and central states of the United States. The effect of the new crop will be fel in the New York market in about six weeks' time.

For the coming year, therefore, it is believed that there will be ample supplies of sugar to meet the requirements of all the allied countries, including Canada and the United States. Indeed, it is expected that prices for next year will be below those that have ruled during the present season.

With the arrival of Sir Joseph White-Todd and Mr. John V. Drake, the British members of the International Sugar commission, which will do all the buying for the Allies, the control of all sugar supplies now centers in one organization. The price of raw Cuban sugar has been reduced by one-half cent per pound, but no further reduction can be expected until the new crop comes on the market. Canada will, in common with the eastern United States, therefore, be short of sugar between now and the end of the year, but it is believed that 50 to 60 per cent. of the usual demand will be met if all classes in Canada and the United States will co-operate with the food administrations and be willing that the necessary reduction in consumption should be equitably distributed.

In order to help in tiding over the temporary sugar shortage the Allies have loaned 26,750 tons of sugar to United States consumers in New York pending the arrival of ships to carry it overseas. Arrangements are being made to borrow 16,500 tons of sugar from foreign export owners in New York. The United States Food Administration has bought for the French government 100,000 tons of the new Louisiana crop of sugar. This transaction represents a value of $13,000,000.

SUCCESS QUICKLY WON WITH SHEEP

An excellent example of the success that can be attained in sheep raising in Western Canada is furnished by the case of Mr. Harry Goodwin, of Kimball Alberta. Less than four years ago he invested the whole of his liquid capital, which amounted to $60, in sheep, securing eleven ewes for this amount. Today he has a large range flock and a thousand head of pure-bred Lincolns. In addition to his eturns this year from his flock and purebreds have amounted to $8,400.

Mr. Goodwin has shown great faith in the future of the sheep industry in the West, he has invested his money in sheep as fast as he earned it. His small flock of eleven quickly grew to one of a thousand head. Realizing that he could be of most benefit to himself and to the sheep industry by improving his flocks, he took up the breeding of purebred stock, choosing the Lincoln breed. Starting with a few he later purchased the flock of Pat Buckley, of Sweet Grass and Cautts. His purebred flock was further increased by the purchase of 600 rams from a well known breeder in Ontario, so that he has now a flock of 1,000 pure bred Lincolns—the largest flock of these sheep in the West. He claims that from them he can show wool fourteen inches long, and feels satisfied that with them he is materially assisting to build up the sheep industry successfully in Southern Alberta.

More recently he purchased 265 head of ewes in the central part of the province, paying $18 each for them. Their average weight was 165 pounds. He has also purchased 160 head of lambs. By crossing these with his pure-bred Lincolns, Mr. Goodwin hopes to form the basis of one of the best grade flocks in the country. At one of the recent ram sales at Lethbridge Alberta, he sold a number of his grade Lincoln rams at $25 each, purchasing more pure-breds with the proceeds.

LOCAL AND GENERAL

WINNIPEG LETTER

Wheat Market Inactive; Farmers Selling Leisurely

Situation No Different Than Past Week or Two; Farmers Devoting Attention to Improving Land With Idea of Greater Production.

(Thompson, Sons & Co.)

Wheat—There is practically no change in the wheat situation since a week ago. In the United States the movement continues restricted compared with a year ago, especially in the winter wheat belt, and the large milling centers in the south and southwest complain of insufficient wheat to keep their mills running. In the spring wheat country the supply is more satisfactory, being sufficient to keep mills going to very nearly their capacity, but stocks in store are exceedingly small. he wheat in store at Duluth on November 3 was only 1,517,000 bushels against 9,811,000 bushels same date last year and Minneapolis 641,000 bushels against 8,158,000 bushels last year. The visible supply in the United States increased last week 2,722,000 bushels against an increase last year of 1,562,000 bushels, but the total visible is only 17,630,000 bushels against 62,265,000 bushels a year ago and 34,596,000 bushels two years ago. The increase last week in the United States visible supply is really the result of receipts of Manitoba wheat shipped from Fort William and Port Arthur to Buffalo and other points, most of which has been sold to the United States Wheat Corporation for the purpose of furnishing hard spring wheat to millers in the eastern states, it being found impossible to furnish them with this class of wheat from the American spring wheat country, except by taking it past the Minneapolis and other spring wheat mills and causing them to run part time only and decrease their production. It is understood an arrangement has been made between the Wheat Corporation and the Wheat Export company, by which the formed is to supply some time later on, flour to be exported in place of the Canadian wheat sold to them. Besides this, for about two years past, Canadian wheat stored in United States terminals couned in their visible supply has been included with American wheat. In regard to the comparative slow movement of wheat from first hands in the United States, it is believed that farmers are marketing their wheat leisurely, knowing that prices are fixed, and that they will probably remain unchanged throughout the crop.

In western Canada the movement of wheat has been speeded up considerably in the past week, and about one and a half million bushels are going past Winnipeg daily. Last week the Canadian visible supply increased 6,091,949 bushels against an increase last year of only 497,066 bushels, and the total is now 23,343,047 bushels against 21,550,561 bushels last year. Stocks in interior elevators west of Winnipeg on November 7 amounted to 27,750,000 bushels of wheat against 14,135,770 bushels a year ago. It would appear by these figures that the Canadian wheat situation as to supplies is fairly satisfactory. Last week world's shipments of wheat and flour equalled 6,344,000 bushels, wheat being about a million bushels larger than the previous week, but last year the quantity was 10,332,000 bushels. There is not much change on the week in the reports on growing crops. Western Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas are still suffering from too dry conditions, the Argentine has been complaining of being a little too dry, but last reports state weather is better. Australian reports are favorable and drier weather in India allows seeding to be resumed.

Our Winnipeg market keeps busy. The Wheat Export company takes about everything offered to them of wheat on which prices are fixed, and that includes everything except feed wheat and tough, seedy or smutty, Nos. 4, 5 and 6. The commission firms who buy for eastern millers have been more largely in the market for the higher grades of wheat, preparing to get good supplies across the lakes before the close of navigation, only about four or five weeks away now. Weather over the prairie provinces has been quite mild and foggy without rain or snow, very favorable for farm work at this date of the season. Today's cash prices are, 1 northern, $2.21; 2 northern, $2.18; 3 northern, $2.15; No. 4, $2.08; No. 5, $1.96; No. 6, $1.87; feed, $1.76.

Oats—The oats market has taken a very strong turn during the week, closing prices today showing 5c advance from this day week. The advance in this market is largely the result of speculative buying, brought about by the advance in the American markets. It is being recognized that while there is a record crop of oats in the United States, they have for some time been by a long way the cheapest feed grain obtainable. Old corn has been unobtainable for feed, owing to the abnormally high price it has been fetching owing to scarcity, prices in some instances being higher than for the best wheat. This last week it has developed that the damage to the corn crop by frost, and unfavorable weather, is much more extensive than previously counted on, so that the quantity available for use will be considerably reduced thereby. Along with all this the demand for oats for export for the use of the European armies has become more pronounced, and it is expected to continue large. Thus has sprung up a demand for oats from all quarters and naturally the price has advanced. Our western crop is a moderate one. In some districts the crop was so poor that farmers will have to be supplied from other districts for both feed and seed. The level prices have reached will probably be high enough for the present, but in the latter half of the crop year we judge they will go still higher unless the food controllers fix maximum prices for them. Today's prices are: 2 C.W., 74½c; 3 C.W. and extra 1 feed, 71c; 1 feed, 69½c; 2 feed, 67¼c. Futures closed, November, 74c; December, 72¼c; May, 73⅛c to ¼c.

Barley—Helped by the advance in oats there has been a better demand for barley with 1c to 3c advance in prices. Today's prices: No. 3, $1.21½; No. 4, $1.15; rejected and feed, $1.08. Futures closed, November, $1.20; May, $1.23.

Rye—No. 2 C.W., $1.70.

Flax—A strong market has developed in flax, partly owing to the small estimate of this year's United States crop, it being less than 10,000,000 bushels against over 15,000,000 bushels last year, and partly to the very small receipts at Minneapolis and Duluth so far this season. Only the prospect of a liberal Argentine crop now nearly ready to harvest, keeps prices from going very high. Cash flax and November delivery have advanced 16c to 18c per bushel, but the advance on December is only 7c and May 1c, the distant future being under the influence of the Argentine crop prospect. Today's prices are: 1 N. W., $3.34½; 2 C.W., $3.29½; 3 C.W., $3.18½; rejected, $3.10½. Futures, November, $3.32½; December, $3.00½; May, $2.97.

All prices quoted above are based on delivery in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

WINNIPEG GRAIN PRICES

Winnipeg, Nov. 15.—There was little change in the wheat situation. The Wheat Export company were taking all oeffred them of the grades on which prices have been fixed.

There was a better demand for cash oats, with spreads narrow and oeringffs light.

Cash barley was strong with prices a little higher.

Cash flax was about the same as Wednesday, with little cash trading.

Prices reacted from the low point of Wednesday and in sympathy with the strong future market. Offerings were light.

SINGLE STALK CELERY WEIGHS FIVE POUNDS

That celery of the best flavor and quality can be grown in Alberta is shown by some fine samples that have been grown at Edmonton. One stalk is fine in texture, of good flavor and very tender. It is of a kind known as Henderson's Easy Blenchin, and is not of a mammoth variety, its extremely large stalk is particularly interesting.

There are wide possibilities for celery culture in Alberta, and a ready sale for much of what is grown, as considerable quantities are being imported from British Columbia and California.

EMIGRANTS COMING TO CANADA IN BIG NUMBERS

According to advice from the Department of Immigration at Winnipeg, three and a half times as many immigrants came into Western Canada from the United States during the first nine months of this year as in the corresponding period of 1915, and more than twice as many as in the first nine months of last year. The majority of those arriving are experienced farmers, or those who intend to take up farming, and their destinations were fairly evenly distributed over the three prairie provinces.

BREEDER FINDS WINTER HATCHING PROFITABLE

Lysander Sherman raises chickens for the state of Massachusetts. He is one of the state game wardens. He has been so successful that birds he raises are shipped to other state game preserves.

Mr. Sherman raises his chickens right through the winter months, the first eggs being set late in the fall. His machines are located in the basement of his house and are heated by lamps.

The chickens are raised in a long brooder house, which was built largely by Mr. Sherman himself.

Mr. Sherman uses no litter in his brooder house, but has several inches of sand on the floor. He tries to keep his young chickens active all the time by feeding them little and often, perhaps as often as once an hour. This of course, is in cold weather when the chickens must be kept inside and when the days are short. By the time the chicks are three weeks old they have a dry mash always before them but even then frequent feeding is kept up. All the feed is given in troughs or on boards, but much of it is thrown out by the chicks, which then scratch in the sand for it.

Mr. Sherman starts the birds on patent feed mixed with hard-boiled eggs tested out of the incubator and ground very fine in a meat grinder After four or five days he adds a little finely chopped cabbage and gradually works over to a regular chick feed. After being kept under the stove-heated hovers until partly feathered, the chickens are moved to another house in which some heat is provided by steam pipes.

When spring comes Mr. Sherman stops hatching chickens and turns his attention to ducks, mostly wild Mallards, which are hatched for the state. Last season he raised 600 of these ducks under brooder stoves. The principal danger in this system comes from crowding when many ducklings are kept in one flock, for they easily become panic-stricken. Mr. Sherman thinks that 200 ducklings are enough to hover in one lot, and he always keeps an electric light in each pen all night.

LETTERS FROM A SELF-MADE FARMER TO HIS SON

Dear Son:

When you were a young boy, you will remember that while out on the "baldheaded" one time sniping gophers, you accidentally shot the black and white pup that you so fondly imagined was such a valuable animal. However, be that as it may (it was discussed thoroughly at the time) our conversation when you came in was something like this:

"Where's the pup?"

"Shotum."

"What! Was he mad?"

"Well, he wasn't so darn pleased."

I remind you of this only because it illustrates so well a little something I have had on my mind, and that is how easy it is to misinterpret the exact meaning of a man when he says certain things.

Since I wrote you last, a little misunderstanding has set me back about five hundred dollars and, incidentally, I hope, learned me a lesson.

When I was in Calgary last week, I called at the office of the Grain company that has the honor and privilege, etc., of transacting business for me, to see if I couldn't get somebody to encourage my feeling and back up my hunch that the market was away out of line for flax. The manager was of course, very careful not to commit himself, they always are, so we discussed prices, etc., and gossiped in a general way. Just as I was leaving, I turned at the door and said:

"Well, I'll just let it go."

When I think it over I can see that I made my meaning just about as clear as mud. My intention was to let it go for the time being—to do nothing. The man in the grain office took my statement to mean—let it go—sell it. And look at the price of flax now. My judgment was good but by tongue cost me enough to buy gasoline all next summer.

You will smile and think that by this time I have been selling grain long enough to do it right, but do you know there has never been a season that didn't show me up in some way.

Take that car of mixed wheat and oats that was going to clean up so beautifully last fall. I made a special trip to Calgary to give the government elevator people a piece of my mind, and came back literally with my tail between my legs. That was a car that graded rejected mixed grain (wheat and oats) and was ordered over to the government elevator to have the mixture separated. After waiting what I considered a most unreasonable length of time, I got a settlement for about 800 bushels of oats and some 40,000 pounds of mixed grain which had been sold for so much per pound.

Was I mad, By no means.

On top of that ridiculous settlement I was charged four cents per bush l for "cleaning". Well, I just said nothing about the matter, consoling myself anticipating the riot I was going to raise when the time came. The next week I had to go into the city and I hit straight for the office of the grain company that handled the shipment.

The first rude shock I got was when I was coolly told that it was impossible to clean the mixture. I must admit that this possibility had never occurred to me, and being from Missouri so to speak, I had to be shown.

I was shown.

The manager of the grain company and myself went out to the government elevator together and I soon saw what they were up against. The oats in question were those short plump oats so near to the size of the wheat kernels that no sieve in use in any cleaner would let the one grain through without taking the other also. I wouldn't have believed except that I saw it with my own eyes.

The balance of my car which was left after the 800 odd bushels of oats were taken out, was still in a special bin, there being no other mixed grain in the house at the time, and for my information and education it was drawn off and run again through two of the cleaners. The superintendent took time to demonstrate with different screens. The result in each case was a few bushels of oats cleaned out and the balance came out as before.

I have often heard that it was not always profitable to separate wheat and oats and I certainly can see that that may be the case. The terminals can only charge a cent per bushel for each cleaning, and judging by the time and machinery the operation ties up, in some cases it doesn't get them much.

No doubt the average type of oats in a mixture can be cleaned out easier than was the case with my car, but it goes to show that it is often easier to give orders than to carry them out. However, I was glad I had the opportunity of going through the government elevator. It was well worth while, and I feel that I know more about the handling of grain than I did before.

Truly a man must have a lot of knowledge before he eventually becomes a man of wisdom. This world is full of men who know an awful lot but as I see it they specialize too much. The man who makes a specialty of any one thing and succeeds is deserving of a good deal more credit than he gets, but he will never be entitled to be looked up to as a man of wisdom. What has become of the man who was a business man by day, and a student by night? They are now few and far between Nowadays they are business men by day and business men by night.

Our big men aren't big enough. They haven't got enough more than the average man, to make Mr. Average Man look up to them. I can hear you say here that hero worship and democracy don't work together, all of which may be perfectly correct in theory, but why do we put a man in a position of immense responsibility? Why do we send a man to parliament? Is it because we haven't time to go ourselves? Is it because we are sorry for him and want to get him a job? No. It is recognition of his ability, and our stand that he is the best man in the community to represent us and look after our interests.

He is a big man, so to speak. Well, then, to come back, we want bigger big men. If you were here I know you could name over a dozen for me that would be outstanding figures in our daily life, and nine chances out of ten, you would name a dozen politicians. Being a lawyer, you can't see that every lawyer shouldn't be in politics and that every politician isn't a big man. One of these days, son, you are going to be disillusioned. There are big men among the farmers, and there are big men in commercial life, and before you are many years older you are going to see bigger men in the eye of the Canadian public than we have seen in years. Just as true as necessity is the mother of invention, new conditions will find new leaders, and a man can't devote his energies to one particular thing and expect to be equal to a task that calls for a grasp of the situation that can be acquired only by years of devotion to study of not one thing only, but of the many vital questions dominating our existence.

I don't know just what type of man I am attempting to idealize but your letter provoked this outburst and I hope that a letter containing such a mixture of your troubles and my own will be accepted as a sure enough fatherly epistle.

I'm not knocking, because a man that knocks without being able to suggest a remedy, is not better than the common or garden variety grouch.

Which I am not.

DAD.

Utilization of Straw

That there is a very great waste of valuable material in the burning of straw no one will deney, but that the straw may be profitably utilized only a comparatively few on the prairies apparently realized as is evidenced by the red sky on an autumn evening due to the large number of burning straw piles.

There are straw burners adapted for the use of straw as a fuel but those thus far put on the market have not been an unqualified success. There is also much being said from time to time of the value of straw in the manufacture of briquettes for fuel purposes but this has not yet come to a very practical conclusion. There is left the old and time honored use of returning it to the land for the enriching of the soil which has been proved satisfactory and profitable again and again in experiments carried on at the various Dominion experimental stations on the prairies.

In countries of much moisture the straw might be spread on the land and ploughed under but to plough under any appreciable quantity of straw in such a dry climate as is found in the West would mean the loss of the crop the following season and perhaps two seasons because there is not sufficient moisture in the soil to rot the straw in one year and the unrotted straw leaves the soil so open that the soil itself dries out more than it otherwise would. The straw must be rotted before it is applied to the land.

The most satisfactory means of rotting the straw quickly is live stock. If cattle and horses are allowed free access to straw piles during the day throughout the winter a few head will trample down a large pile. In doing so they tramp with it large quantities of snow and heir own manure and urine thus serving the double purpose of saving their own waste products for the land and putting the sraw in shape to be more easily rotted.

In the spring the edges should be gathered toward the center till the rampled pile is not less than four feet deep and if left in this condition all summer is in splendid shape in the fall to spread on the land that is to be summerfallowed the following season. The shaping of the pile can be done in the spring before work can be begun on the land and the spreading on the land can be done in the fall after the land is too much frozen to allow of any cultivation thus allowing low wages for the doing of the work.

In so treating the straw it gives out a considerable feeding value. Wheat straw alone possesses little feed value but the average wheat straw pile contains much that is not pure straw that has a fair feed value and stock given plenty of water and shelter and one good meal at night thrive well by having access to a straw pile during the day.

The foregoing applies to wheat straw but it applies to a much greater degree to oat and barley straw.

The value of well rotted manure such as may be formed in the above method above outlined has been determined by a series of experiments extending over a period of four years at the Rostbern experimental station. Wheat on summerfallow without manure in a four-year average yielded 38 bushels per acre and wheat on summer fallow with 12 tons per acre of rotted manure for the same period yielded 46 bushels per acre. Nor was this all. In every case the crop of wheat was followed by crops of oats in which the oats following the wheat on summerfallow yielded 70 bushels per acre whereas oats following wheat on summerfallow that had been manured yielded 85 bushels per acre.

HE KNOWS—AND WHAT YOU SHOULD KNOW IF YOU ARE A FARMER

"From my herd of 18 cows I sold $412 worth of cream in June. I think I am doing very well," writes a farmer when applying to the dairy division, Ottawa, for a further supply of daily milk record forms and a herd record book.

He knows just what each cow is doing, if she gives less than say 36 pounds of milk a day, he hunts round to find out why she dropped off in her yield and he tries immediately to prevent any repetition of unusual shrinkage.

He also tests once a month, a composite sample of six milkings so that again he knows which cows make the best returns in cream. After a few tests he sees that Daisy gives 4.5 milk and Butercup gives only 3.6. He does not believe in a rough and ready, haphazard, easy-going "guess" as to how much fat the whole herd produces in a year; he knows from his milk record sheets and herd record book which cows are making money for him. Recently he sold some of his poorest because they did not make enough. Rather a good plan, isn't it? When you decide to follow such a sensible example, write for forms, they are free, and your letter need not even be stamped.

Pearl Standish .....Pearl White
The Priestess .....Ruby Hoffman
Richard Carslake .....Warner Oland
Tom Carlton .....Henry Gsell

Breathless suspense charaterizes the 12th episode of Pathe's "The Fatal Ring," in which Pearl White stars at the Pantages theatre next week.

Carslake only smiles as Pearl points her revolver at him, demanding the Violet Diamond. His hand slowly goes into his pocket as he nods to his adherent over Pearl's shoulder. The adherent raises the stiletto to strike as Carslake pretends to fuss around for the Diamond. As the train is nearing the trestle the engineer jams the throttle; Carslake, Pearl and the adherent are thrown violently forward.

Picking herself up, Pearl sees adherent with stiletto and she quickly covers him and Carslake. Carslake makes a motion toward her and as he does the adherent kicks the revolver from Pearl's hand. Carslake rushes towards the rear end of the train as adherent attacks Pearl. Pearl gets her right arm free and strikes adherent in the face. Immediately Pearl follows Carslake, who has climbed on to the top of the train. As she regains the top of the car, Carslake rushes madly towards her. They struggle on top of the fast moving train.

Meanwhile Tom Carlton follows Pearl in a racing car, driving at top speed. Pearl and Carslake are locked in one another's embrace by the edge of the car. Pearl disengages herself and rises quickly. He grabs her with both hands and forces her back to the edge of the car, where she vainly struggles to keep on. Finally Carslake pushes her off. However, she gains hold again and they topple off together. They fall! Carslake rises and starts after the train, leaving Pearl lying prone on the groundshrdlshrdlur lying prone across the northbound tracks. The northbound train is only a short distance from Pearl and it is only a question of a few minutes.

Tom is speeding along. Suddenly he sees Pearl's body lying across the tracks. Tom approaches the tracks The train is within fifty yards of Pearl. Tom jumps out of his car, starts over to the switch and pulls it down. As Tom pulls the switch, the train takes a siding about two feet from Pearl's body and thunders past. Tom carries Pearl to the machine. He takes her face in his hands and kisses it. Her eyes open and she smiles at him.

Carslake seeks refuge at the house of Cicely Lloyd, a lady of uncertain reputation, who is very much it love with him.

Learning where Carslake is, the Spider phones Pearl, instructs her to meet him right away and bring a couple of detcttives. A few minutes later the Spider arrives, and a moment later Pearl and Tom and two detectives jump from her car. Entering the house, Pearl quickly starts up the stairs, followed by Tom. The maid rushes in and informs Carslake of the arrival of the strange visitors. Carslake attempts to escape, but Pearl and others see him and start after him. Carslake eludes Pearl, but is followed by the detectives. Running up the stairs, he grabs a huge vase from a niche in the wall. As the detectives, Pearl, Spider and Tom come he throws the vase which crashes into the foremost detective, hitting him and knocking him unconscious into the man behind him. Tom is the first to extricate up after Carslake, quickly followed by cate himself from the mass and starts Pearl and the Spider. Lifting the trap door on the roof, he climbs out. Lying on the side, he awaits his first victim. As Tom starts to climb through, Carslake hits him a terrific smash in the jaw. Tom falls. Pearl comes out of the trap as Carslake gets to the edge of the roof by the iron girder. As he starts over the girder, Pearl comes over. This is a good chance to get rid of her. In the struggle on the girder, Carslake starts to bend Pearl back, back, back.

CHAPTER III.
In The Crucible
THE CHARACTERS

The Man .....Horace Kennedy
The Wife .....Mary Kennedy
The Woman Alone ..Margaret Warner

Six rusty hooks and a faded curtain formed the wardrobe in Margaret's hall room. On the crowded end hook hung a light evening gown which the scant curtain inadequately covered.

Dropping wearily on the couch, Margaret's gaze was rivited on a protruding chiffon flounce whose daintiness seemed to shrink from the discolored wall-paper.

One brief, wonderful night—and her dread of companionship was over. She would have no further need of the gown. She would not see Kennedy again. Deliberately she was putting him out of her life going back to her lonely sordid struggle.

Whoever had sent the anonymous notes, they were effective in compelling Margaret to relinquish a friendship that had just begun to illumine she could not indulge. The need to work was iminent. Her unpaid board bill loomed ominously. Before her manuscript strewn table, grimly she forced her recoiling mind to cutting and polishing the rough draft of a story.

But brooding was a luxury in which her weary discouragement.

That evening she went down to dinner with more than her usual aversion for the noisy odoriferous dining room

"I didn't realize it was so late," conscious that her unpaid board bill was the cause of the landlady's scowling glance. "No, I don't care for soup," hoping by this omission to compensate for her tardiness.

Margaret's aloofness had antagonized the other boarders and now she hurried through her dinner to escape the unfriendly atmosphere.

Going back upstairs, she heard a labored panting and knew the landlady was following her. Belligerently her stout bust heaving from the exertion, Mrs. Devlin demanded her money. Vainly Margaret pleaded for more time, saying she would get a check for a story.

"How 'bout your lawyer friend?" insinuatingly. "Instead of dinners and taxis why doesn't he pay your board?"

With flaming cheeks Margaret ordered her from the room.

"Ordering me out, eh?" with a sneer. "Well I guess you'll be the one to go out."

"Very well," swept on by her indignation Margaret thrust a few things into her handbag.

"No you don't!" Mrs. Devlin's bulky form barred the doorway. "You'll take nothing out of here 'til you pay your bill. I'll call up the police station! I'll see if I can't get my money!" as viciously she slammed the door, locking it from the outside.

Terrified with hysterical visions of imprisonment Margaret rushed to the one window as the only means of escape. With reckless disregard of the danger she swung her self out on the sloping tin roof, from which a fire escape led to the ground.

Out through the alley, up a dark side street, and still on for four long blocks before she paused breathless—safe from pursuit.

Under a bright light, hung a sign, "Salvation Army, Clean Beds 25c."

Tremulously opening the door Margaret found herself in a barren office. A blear-eyed woman was taking from her dirty handkerchief three grimy nickles, for which she received a ticket and passed on.

Margaret felt the suprised scrutiny tions, with kindly "Come with me," she of the matron. But asking no questled the way to a curtained cot. The mattress was hard and discolored, but the sheets were clean, and exhausted Marbaret soon fell asleep.

She awoke at dawn. It was a chill misty morning. A cup of coffee and a roll from a cheap lunch room at the corner—and she started out in search of work.

The very urgency of her need contributed to her courage and at nine o'clock, as soon as the offices were open, she stood before the managing editor of the "Evening Star."

"Well, what can you write? Don't generalize, something definite," he flung at her impatiently, glancing through his mail.

"I've just spent the night at the Salvation Army lodging house," faltered Margaret. "I'd like to write a story about that."

With a gleam of interest he glanced up.

"Go over there," nodding to a desk, "and tear it off."

By noon Margaret had written the story—tense, vivid, aglow with atmosphere. Timidly she laid the pages on the editor's desk.

"Not bad," as he glanced through them. "We'll give you a tryout at eighteen a week."

With a leaping, dizzy joyousness, Margaret murmured her thanks. At last, when her need was most desperate, she had secured a foothold.

The sultry day deepened to dusk with no relief in temperature. Wanderaround the deck of a house boat, wistfully Mary listened for the whir of Kennedy's car.

All the long week she had looked forward to this—his coming down Saturday. At last a welcome "Honk, honk!" and a yellow headlight gleamed through the darkness.

"Oh, Horace, I've been so lonely!" as she clung to him in greeting. "I'll never come down here along again!"

"Where's Norwood?" trying to force a response to her tenderness. "Hasn't he kept you company?"

"Oh, yes," impatiently, "But I wanted you."

It was with a throb of resentment that Mary welcomed Norwood as they sat down to dinner. Just now she wanted her husband all to herself. an old friend seemed an intruder.

"By the way Kennedy, a corking story came in the other day—by a Margaret Warner. Mary says you know her."

"Why yes," with studied control. Miss Warner helped me on those articles for the Herald.

"Well, she can write. That story's a wonder."

"Then you've accepted it?" asked Mary, crushing back the throb of jealousy that always came with any mention of Margaret's name.

"Yes, just sent her a check. We're going to feature it in a special fiction number."

However, the much needed check was not destined to reach Margaret as it was returned from the boarding house with—"Not at this address."

Margaret's security in her new position was short lived. The third day she was told that though her work was good, orders had been given not to increase the pay roll. But having caught a glimpse of Edgar Doyle, the disbarred attorney, from his vindictive smile Margaret knew that he had been the cause of her dismissal.

Once more she was forced to the heart-sickening task of seeking work—the "Help Wanted" columns and the weary round of offices.

At last in desparation, she took a clerkship in a department store. The hours were long, from six to eight; and to Margaret unused to being on her feet, the strain was almost unendurable.

But soon she had more than her weariness with which to contend. An obnoxious floor-walker pursued her with his odious advances.

Repelled, his enmity became as pronounced as had been his admiring attentions. Angered by Margaret's cold aloofness, he contrived in every way to make her work more difficult.

At her first slight dispute with an unreasoning customer he reported her for insolence and she was summarily discharged.

As she was leaving the store, dazed crushed, Margaret paused a for a few moments recovery in the lady's rest room.

A telephone stood on a table beside her. Gazing at it she saw Kennedy, desk and the telephone on the drawn out leaf by her elbow. Her hand trembling on the receiver, she drew the instrument nearer, "Broad 1849" was throbbing through her.

Just to speak to him—to lean on his strength if only for a moment. And yet if she called to him She was guaging her weakness. If he came to her now—would she have the courage again to send him away?

If she yielded to this surging impulse, if she took down the receiver, and called that number? What would it mean—to them both?

Oriental Monarch Who Declares War On Huns

The recent announcement that Siam had entered the war on the side of the Allies awakens interest in that faraway Oriental autocracy. Siam is an absolute monarchy and the sympathies of its reigning autocrat might naturally be supposed to be with the Kaiser But German "Kultur" does not seem to commend itself to the King of Siam.

Evidence of this was first brought to Occidental attention in September, 1915, in a letter written at Bangkok, the principal commercial city of Siam.

"Just north of Tongkah (on the west frontier of Siam), in the Provinces of Renon and Tongqua, there arrived some few months ago various and sundry German officers," the writer said. "These officers were evidently in close touch with Indian and Burmese revolutionists. Following their arrival, thousands of Sikhs, Punjabis and Pathans began to float in, and before their emigration from English ports was stopped slightly over 16,000 had arrived. They were at once taken over by the Germans and began a virtual military training."

The letter added that the emigrants were waiting for the arrival of arms; that British and French cruisers were actively patrolling the coast to prevent the entry of arms; that the Siamese Post-Office was run by Germans and the customs by the English.

Educated in England

The reignin King of Siam, Mana Majiravudah, son of a singularly progressive father for an Oriental potentate, is a comparatively young man. He was educated in England and graduated from Oxford, and is reputed to be as polished, refined and Western as any European monarch. A little more than a year ago it was announced that the King had decided not to marry, because under the law of Siam he was not allowed to marry any othe Woman than a sister, the idea of which was repugnant to him.

Siam about four times the area of New York state, is on the Indo-Chinese Peninsula, between 4.20 and 15.20 N. latitude. It is geographically considered in four divisions, Northern, Eeatern Central, and Southern. The Central division is the most populous, as well as commercially the most important. The population of the whole country is variously estimated at from 6,000,000 to 10,000,000. The first census of the rural population was taken in 1905, and the first census of Bangkok and its environs in 19109. At that time there were about 1,500 Americans and Europeans living in the city. Of these there were 500 Englishmen, 190 Germans, 160 Danes and 150 Americans. Evidently the trouble making potentiality of these particular Germans was out of all proportion to their numbers.

Formerly the succession to the throne was through appointment by the King, the appointee being chosen from among the members of his family, collateral as well as decendents. Some decades ago, however, a decree was entered that the throne should thenceforth descend from the King to one of his sons by a Queen, and it was immediately followed by the appointment of a Crown Prince. There is a council of ten ministers for foreign and other affairs, a legislative council of forty-five, of which the foregoing are members ex-officio, the others being appointed by the King. The King is an autocrat in practice as well as in theory. Nearly all departments have the benefit of European advisers, and the Government offices are conducted mainly on European lines.

Various Forms Of Headache

"It is necessary in order to treat headaches properly to understand the causes which produce the affection," says Dr. J. W. Ray, of Blockton, Ala. Continuing, he says, "Physicians cannot even begin the treatment of a disease without knowing what causes give rise to it, and we must remember that headache is to be treated according to the same rule. We must not only be particular to give a remedy intended to counteract the cause which produces the headache, but we must also give a remedy to relieve the pain until the cause of the trouble has been removed. To answer this purpose anti-kamnin tablets will be found a most convenient and satisfactory remedy. One tablet every one to three hours gives comfort and rest in the most severe cases of headache, neuralgia, and particularly the headaches of women.

"When we have a patient subject to regular attacks of sick headache and when he feels the least sign of an oncoming attack, he should take two A-K Tablets. Obtainable at druggists in any quantity desired."

Amateur Athletic Union Shows Soldiers Consideration

Important amendments to the rules of track and field sports and swimming have been reported by the Legislation Committee of the Amateur Athletic Union, to be acted upon at the annual convention of the Union in St. Louis on November 19.

Without doubt the most important proposal embraced in the amendments is that of the Metropolitan association, that enlisted men in the miliary service or naval service of the United States be permitted to compete among themselves irrespective of amateur status and without registration by the Amateur Athletic Union.

Furthermore, this amendment provides for the competition of teams of soldiers or sailors in open meets against teams of registered amateurs without loss of amateur status by the athletes in civil life or by the amateurs who may be playing on the soldier teams side by side with professionals.

No objection to this amendment is anticipated, as all officials of the A. A. U. are agreed that no line should be drawn between amateurs and professionals while they are wearing the uniform of the United States. The clause permitting the team competitions between soldiers, some of whom may be professionals, and amateur club or college teams, is the same as the one that governs such games as those between the Giants and Yale each spring.

With the idea of eliminating friction between the official handicapper of local associations and clubs promoting cross country or road runs from which the only revenue is derived from entry fees, the Metropolitan association has proposed an amendment permitting an association to make such handicap charge as it deems fit. If this amendment is adopted, and it is probable that it will be, a flat rate of $5 will be fixed for the handicapping of all road races in the metropolitan district. In the past handicapping fees for races where the entry has numbered 250 and 300 have amounted to between $25 and $30.

Steps to prevent a row such as that which caused much dissension in the ranks of the Metropolitan association last spring have been taken by the proposal of an amendment regarding transfer of legislation by an individual athlete.

The example in point is taken by the Evening Mail Marathon run. It was reported that a member of the winning team was officially registered at A. A. U. headquarters as unattached and at the same time he ran as a representative of the Millrose A. A. The amendment provides that when an application is made by an athlete to change his registration, the transfer is to be considered as dating from the filing of the application, provided that it is approved later by the Registration Commitee.

Another amendment of more or less import is that limiting competition in junior cross-country races to men who have never won a title in championship competition. Heretofore only a man winning a title in any event of two miles or more was barred, and it was possible for a national or an Olympic one-mile cross-country team in a junior title race.

The amendment to the rules governing swimming have been long agitated by leading men and women swimmers. They are proposed by Otto Wahle, Chairman of the Swimming Committee of the A. A. U., and Frederick W. Rubin, secretary-treasurer of the Union. From the point of view of competition the most important change proposed is the limiting the height of the board in the fancy dive to not less than twenty feet and not more than twenty-two feet from the surface of the water. The rules under which competitions for women have been conducted were framed for men and provide for two platforms, the highest to be not less than twenty-four feet and not more than twenty-seven feet above the surface of the water and the lowest to be not less than fourteen and not more than sixteen feet from the water.

Another change affecting women swimmers is that authorizing the payment of the exenses of a chaperone for girl swimmers under twenty-tone years. Miss Olga Dorfner, the champion woman sprinter, was barred from taking part in the National championships on the Pacific Coast and in Hawaii last summer because her parents forbade her traveling across the continent without a chaperone.

Inasmuch as the rules of the Amateur Athletic Union prohibited the payment of the expenses of a trainer, coach, relative or friend, she was unable to go West to defend her titles. The rule was adopted by the Union before women competed in sports. It is felt now, however, that it works a hardship and should be amended in so far as it concerns women swimmers.

SPORT TALK FROM OUR EASTERN "FAN"

The chances for Sunday baseball in New York next season seem rather bright as a result of a campaign which has been carried out by the Brooklyn baseball club. President Ebbets of the Dodgers recently sent out a circular letter to all the candidates in the coming election, and the answers which he received showed that the majority of the officials favor Sunday ball. One of the most important opinions came from Mayor John Mitchell who said. "I am in favor of legalizing Sunday baseball, provided the games are held at points and under conditions which will not outrage the feelings of citizens who desire to practice the religious observance of Sunday.

Colonel Ebbets says that Otto Kruger will be the Brooklyn's star catcher next year. He adds that Krueger never had a chance to prove his worth until he joined the Robins last summer Krueger was tried and released by the Yankees two years ago. The Giants picked him up and he caught well in a few games last spring, but as McGraw had McCarthy, Rariden and Gibson in harness Krueger had to go. Krueger caught Marquard, Cheney Pfeffer and the other Brooklyn pitchers in splendid style. He also hit the ball hard and threw to bases finely. His engagement by Col. Ebbets forced Chief Meyers off the team and made Otto Miller look to his laurels.

At West Point the Army will fight Notre Dame. The Irish, as they are called, out in Indiana—and they no longer are all Irish, either—will come East with most of the veterans who faced the cadets last season. On the occasion the Army won by 30 to 10, but Notre Dame was not, as the score might indicate, outclassed or even badly outplayed. Report has it that Notre Dame this year is going back to the forward pass to beat the Army. Last fall the Hoosiers who three years previous had shown the Army how to work the pass, made that play secondary to a rushing game, and even though Notre Dame outrushed the Cadets by a big margin they could not discount the Army forward passing. Oliphant and Vidal made some remarkable tosses and scored four touchdowns therefrom. Notre Dame was the more impressive team, but the pass proved its undoing. Few games went as far as that contest to emphasize the revolutionary change brought about in football by the forward pass. It set at naught a rhythmic attack, clean, knifelike, thrust off tackle and hard line smashing.

That the salaries of major league baseball players will be reduced next season on account of the war conditions has been intimated in a statement made by President Charles H. Ebbets of the Brooklyn club. Mr. Ebbets is in favor of reducing the season's schedule from 154 to 104 games, and also reducing the number of players. He advocates that the players be paid salaries consistent with the gate receipts of the clubs. This would sound the death knell of the long term high salaries and the ball players may consider themselves lucky next season if the clubs carry as many as eighteen o twenty players. If Mr. Ebbets voices the sentiments of the other club owners, it means that there will be a curtailment of expenses by all the clubs next season. During the past week, Mr. Ebbets together with President Baker of the Phillies, has been in conference with President Tener of the National league, and when the organization meets here, it is likely that some radical action will be taken in reducing the players' salaries.

BRADY FAMOUS BALL-PLAYER IS DEAD

Stephen A. Brady, at one time one of the best known baseball players in the country, for six years captain of the old Metropolitan baseball team, and at one regarded as one of the best hitters in the country died at his home at 72 Ward street yesterday evening after an illness of eight weeks at the age of 56. He was a member of the firm of Brady Brothers in this city and leaves three brothers, Edward Thomas and John Brady, and one sister, Miss Margaret Brady. Funeral services will be held from his late home Monday morning with requiem high mass at the church of the Immaculate Conception. Burial will be at Mt. St. Benedict cemetery.

"Steve" Brady was a well-known all-around athlete a little less than two score years ago, but it was at baseball then just coming into popularity in its present form that he won the greatest reputation. Even when a small boy he was one of the best players in his neighborhood, and he lived then in the same house he occupied at the time of his death. The old Baker street ground, which only the old-timers of the fans remember were close to his home and it was there he gained his early experience. When the old Hartford club was organized in 1877 he was a member of it. The next year he went to Providence and the following year to Worcester, gaining more popularity at each place. He was in Springfield next, and then with Rochester, from where he went to the old Metropolitans, the old New York team then in the American Association. He was made a captain soon after he joined the club and held that office for six years. In 1884 the Metropolitans won the championship of the Eastern Association, and Providence was the National League champion team. It was in this year that the first World's Series was arranged, the teams to play for the best three games out of five. Providence took three games in a row, but though his team was beaten Brady distinguished himself by his individual playing in the contests.

During his years in baseball Brady played nearly every position except pitcher and catcher. Since he retired from the game he has been an ardent follower of the sport and took a keen interest in the World Series games. When he first started in the game fielding gloves were not used, or were thin gloves without fingers and Brady's hands showed the results of handling hard drives with his bare hands. He has had several fingers broken and twisted out of shape.

He was a member of the Elks and of the A.O. H.

Combination Team of Western Standard and Mewburns Defeat Team From D. E. Black's in Bowling

The combination team of Western Standard and Mewburns proved too strong for the team from D. E. Black's in the Commercial Bowling league fixture scheduled for last Wednesday night at the Woodbine alleys.

The team from the diamond house came very strong in the first game, but had to give way to the combined assault of the printers and produce men in the second and third spasms. Some good bowling was witnessed in each of the games, W. Nettleton, for the jewelry crowd, making 66 in the first; R. J. Brown, of The Western Standard, making 73 in the second, and Berry, of Mewburns, making 76 in the third.

The Western Standard was well upheld by the work of T. Manning and R. J. Brown, both making good averages, the high average for the two teams being taken by Brown. Following is the scores:

Western Standard and Mewburns

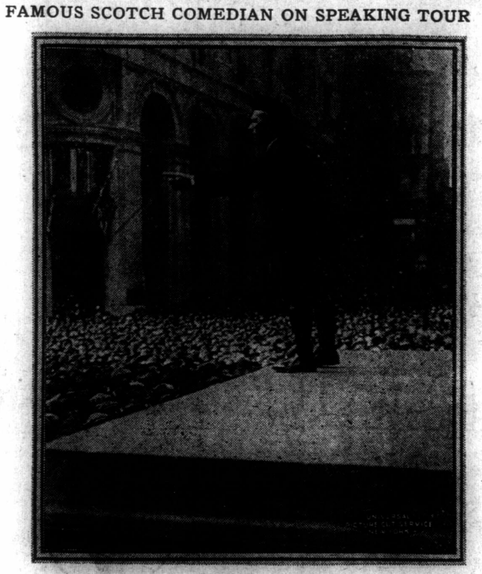
WAR WILL HELP TO BUILD UP SPORTS

The war may hurt sport for a time but eventually the war will make sport. Back of the front line trenches and in every army camp thousands of men who never had the time for games nor any knowledge of them are learning baseball and football and boxing and track atheletics.



Some of the drafted men never saw a baseball or football field. Many of them could not speak English, so what chance had they to know much of English or American games? They are learning English now—and they are learning the games. High and low and rich and poor are playing games together.

To play on a college football team a man was obliged to pass certain educational requirements. Now a man who never saw a night school can try for a team alongside of the man who took honors at the university. There are scholarship requirements at the camps, but they do not consist of Greek, Latin or mathematics. To be eligible for the teams a man must be up with his studies. He must keep himself and his quarters and his equipment clean. He must learn order and system and obedience and a hundred other things. Otherwise he will be conditioned and at the camps that means the guard house or extra duty or confinement to quarters—and no games.

Some of the camps have 500 men trying for some of the first varsity eleven. Where will you find a squad such as that at a college? It is the same with baseball and track and boxing and tennis. Where ordinarily would those candidates get a chance to be coached by such men as Percy Haughton and Hank Gowdy and Kid McCoy and Packy McFarland and Benny Leonard and Norris Williams and a host of others pre-eminent in their line of sport.

The army camps are the widest educational force that this country ever has known, and among other things they will develop sport on a wider plane than it has ever been developed. When the war is over it is likely that new champions will appear, who never have been heard of before, and the whole country will take a greater and more universal interest in all outdoor games.

BILLIARD TOURNAMENTS TO BE HELD AS USUAL

Taking its cue from the remark of President Wilson that it was his desire that all sports continue, the National Association of Amateur Billiard Players has decided to hold all of its championship tournaments. At a meeting of the Executive Committee at the New York Atheletis club the schedule of dates for the national championships in all classes were decided upon.

The novice championship, which was instituted last season by the late J. Ferdinand Poggenburg, will be played in New York beginning on Monday Nov. 26. It is already evident that there will be at least fifty competitors for the title won last year by William Viertel.

The dates named for the other championship were as follows: Class C 18.2 balkline championship, Monday, Jan. 7; Class B 18.2 balk-line, Monday, Feb. 4; Class A 18.2 balk-line Monday, Feb. 25; pocket billiards Monday, March 4. No date was named for the three cushion carom championship which will probably be played late in February or early in March.

Despite the fact that Nathan Hall who won the Class A title at the Boston Atheletic Association tournament, is in France as a commissioned officer in the United States army, and that Francis Appleby and Edgar Appleby are also serving in France, ther appears to be reason to believe that a number of new players, equal to the class A quality, may be attracted to the tournament. Several inquiries as to details of the Class A tournament have been received from the West. No decision however, will be reached on this matter until the annual meeting of the National association, which will be early next month.

By way of an innovation the executive committee scheduled a new tournament to be known as the New York State championship at 18.2 balk-line Conforming with the favorable reception which the shortening of the games received from so many of the billiard followers the matches in the New York state tournament are to be limited to 200 points. Another attractive feature provides that any amateur balkline player capable of making a tournament grand averae of 5 or better is eligible. The tentative date of Monday, Jan. 14, was set for this new championship.

Other tournaments to be launched and held during the season include a Metropolitan championship at balkline and also at pocket billiards. The three cushion inter-room team tournament which has been promoted by several of the more progressive room keepers will be directed by the National association. A series of matches for the inter-state challenge cup is to be staged and special team matches are being arranged between amateurs of New York, Boston and Philadelphia. The Poggenburg Cup tournament, a balk-line handicap, will be played in March.

HAIG DROVE OWN CAR AND CHAUFFEUR WAS PEEVED

Sir Douglas Haig was, some weeks ago, in a great hurry to get to a certain place. He found his car, but the chauffeur was missing. So Sir Douglas got in the car and drove off himself. Then the driver appeared, and saw the car disappearing in the distance.

"Great Scot!" cried the driver, "there's 'Aig a driving my car!"

"Well get even with him." said a Tommy, standing by, "and go ahead and fight one of 'is battles for him."

Things An Autoist Should Know

How Auto Tires Should be Cared for

Believing that nearly one-third of the amount now expended annually by motorists for tires is an absolute waste, necessitated by carelessness and ignorance in the use and care of tires, the Firestone Tire and Rubber company has had prepared by experts a series of articles on the care and repair of tires. The third of these articles, "The Application of Tires," follows:

Use Care in Applying Tires

"Careful application of tires is quite as necessary to good service as the selection of correct size for load, or for rims to be of right design and regular in measurement.

"Before applying tires, remove rust and all other foreign matter from rims. The danger of pinching inner tubes can be reduced to a minimum by dusting soapstone or powdered mica on the rims so that the tire beads will slip easily into the correct position.

"Inflate inner tubes just enough to round them out before placing them inside of cases. Do not use tubes of the wrong size and be sure that the valves are equipped with spreaders adapted to the particular type of cases used; for instance, clincher, quick detachable clincher, or straight side. Valves in Firestone tubes are equipped with universal spreader and therefore suitable for use in all three types Dust the inside of the case and the inner tube with powdered mica or talc. This will reduce friction and prevent adhesion of tube to case after being heated in service.

Tires Should Be Reversed

"When the tires have been removed for any reason, it is a good plan, when reapplying, to reverse them; that is, to place the worn sides of the tires toward the car. It is not generally known, although it is a fact, that almost all the side wear to a tire occurs on the side from the car. This is due to road construction, rut wear and curb scraping among other things. The life of a tire may be prolonged to such an extent that a great deal more mileage may be secured by turning the tires about occasionally to secure even wear upon both sides.

"The use of straight side cases on clincher rims is discouraged. If best results are to be expected from straight side tires they should be used only on straight side rims, which are slightly wider at the base and permit of the necessary spread between cables. If, for some special reason, it is desired to use straight side tires on clincher rims, the rims should always be equipped with filler beads.

Use of Flaps Important

"Some tire users do not realize the importance of using flaps and others, due to indifference or carelessness, place the tubes above the flaps.

"Users of quick detachable rims having reversible rings on both sides are suitable to accommodate the type of tire applied; that is, when using clincher tires both rings should be in position to properly engage beads, and if straight side tires are to be used both rings should be in position to fit the straight beads or straight sides of this type.

"It is not customary to use flaps with clincher tires of small size, not because it is unnecessary, but because of the difficulty in using a flap and stretching the tire on the rim so that it will fit properly. The beads of this type of tire are stretchable and are made approximately one inch less in diameter of rim, the object being to cause the tire to fit snugly to rim after applied.

Use Flaps in Large Clinchers

"Several years ago it was a practice to use rim strips, a strip of fabric stretched tightly on the rim. These strips caused the beads to fit very snugly to the clinches of the rim and protected the tube from rust and other damage. Flaps should be used, however, in clincher tires in sizes above four inches, unless clips or spreaders are used to hold the beads tightly in the clinches of the rim so that inner tubes will not be pinched or damaged. The beads of quick detachable clincher cases and cables of straight side cases are non-stretchable and are, therefore, made to the approximate diameter of rim. Flaps should be used in all sizes of quick detachable clincher and straight side cases. Otherwise much difficulty will be experienced with the inner tubes.

Punctures No Longer Worry

"Punctures used to mean a lot of trouble for tire users, but the refinements in rims now make quick changes possible, and this bugaboo no longer worries the average driver.

"So called 'fillers' intended to eliminate the inconvenience of punctures, will not fit the same in tires of various makes, owing to the difference in the design, contour and size of tires. Some filler manufacturers recommend that, after being in service for a short time, more filler be added to take care of the stretching and other changes in tires.

Fillers Should Be Resilient

"Resiliency being a prime requirement of pneumatic tires, it is hard to conceive of an improvement on air for cushion and elasticity. If fillers be too soft the hinging action of tires will be localized and not permit of strain distribution to suit construction. No advantage over solid tires can be claimed for fillers unless the fillers are resilient. To secure the desired flexibility fillers are invariably made of pliable materials, and being of this nature they will flatten under weight.

"Objectionable developments are circumferential friction from lack of uniform filling out of case and from displacement at road contact, weight and effect of centrifugal force, heat and separation. Rims are caused to sag and become out of round, also the clinches may be spread and twisted as a result of weight, and pounding action, rim cutting above beads of case, pinched tubes and other annoyances can frequently be traced to these irregularities.

"Tire manufacturers waive the guarantee and responsibility for tires when a substitute for air is used. Car manufacturers discourage excess weight to wheels, especially on the driving wheels—this is particularly true with small cars, the power and rear axle system not being designed for moving an unusual drag."

FROM CALICO MILL TO OWNER OF GREAT BUSINESS

When a mere child of seven, the late Sir James Duckworth was working in a Lancashire calico mill, where he began at 6 in the morning and went on until 6 at night. When he was 17 he ran away to sea, later he bought himself out of the service. After a spell of selling second-hand books he managed to get a job at $3.50 a week in a warehouse. On this wage he married and supported a wife and child, the child being the present member of the English ministry of food.

One day a man who had taken a liking to Duckworth (then 24) offered to set him up as a tea peddlar. It wasn't such a mighty start thathe was thus given, for he began with exactly one pound of tea, made up in two-ounce packets, and a pedler's license.

The results of the start were mighty however, for Duckworth ultimately became a great dealer in the stuff that makes the cup that cheers, the proprietor of over 50 shops, with a monster warehouse in Manchester, later adding to his business a big trade in other food products.

United Grain Growers Say Little Change In Market

The only change in wheat prices at Winnipeg during the week, has been a decline of five cents per bushel in the value of feed wheat. Outside of the buying by the agents of the Allies, the Wheat Export company, there has been little trading in cah wheat.

The movement from the country has been alittle birsker, and the big stocks in country elevators have not further increased. This can be credited largely to the fact that the weather has been exceptionally fine and in many districts farmers are as busy n the land as before the recent snow storms. The prospect of an early freeze-up has disappeared and for the most part Alberta is living up to her reputation in the way of sunshine.

It is to be hoped that a generous supply of ecars will be availabl throughout the season.

Oats—The market for oats almost bordered on the sensational at times during the week. At the high point on Thursday 2 C.W. oats at Fort William sold for better than 74½ cents. The week has shown the first strong upward movement in the value of this cereal since the first of the season, and there is considerable speculation as to just what is the proper level for oats.

The sharp advance was followed by a reactionary decline of a couple of cents on Wednesday, but buying again forced prices over 74 cents for 2 C. W. oats at Fort William the next day. For the week ending Thursday a total gain of over 5 cents per bushel is shown.

At points in the interior and for oats in store at Saskatoon, Moose Jaw and Calgary premiums over Fort William values are still available. Farmers at stations tributary to these points, who have oats likely to get Government seed certificates will do well to ship their cars cae of the Government elevator at one of these points and request that the grain be tested for seed. If the carload is suitable, and it is up to the requirements of the Government the seed certificate will be issued and the oats will bring five cents per bushel better than the Fort William value of whatever grade the grain may have been.

The demand for feed oats continues from Saskatchewan and Manitoba points. This demand for the most part will be met by distribution of oats out of the terminals at Saskatoon and Moose Jaw. Whatever the trend of the market may be, it is reasonably safe to expect the prevailing preiums of 2 and 2½ cents over the Fort William will continue for some time yet.

BARLEY—Barley has also moved upward. Three and four barley being quoted at two cents better than a week ago. The lower grades show a gain of 3 and 3½ cents. If users of corn for feed purposes in Eastern Canada take kindly to feed barley as a substitute as they are expected to do, we will see higher prices for barley.

FLAX—Flax has advanced sharply spot flax at Fort William touching as high as $3.35 during the week. Reports from the Argentine indicate that considerable flax is going to be available for shipment from there and the future of our flax markets appears to depend on what will be supplied from theat country. This supply is, of course, dependent altogether on the tonnage that can be brought into use, and much may happen o keep American stocks down.

SPEEDING UP FARM WORK IN THE U. S.

In quick and scientific response to President Wilson's call for greater efficiency on American farms, Walter Faber, who lives nine miles south of Wayne, Nebraska, leads in that vicinity.

Mr. Fabers success in speeding up his farm work by motor power is a veritable industrial romance. His story would make the farmers of a generation ago dumb with wonder.

In approaching the problem of making farm work efficelent in the highest modern sense, Mr. Faber reached the conclusion that a great deal of golden time was wasted by the old fashioned methods of getting products to market.

"One man and a motor truck," Mr. Faber reasoned, "ought to do the work of two or three drivers and teams."

He investigated the truck situation thoroughly and invested in a one-ton Maxwell truck.

"Since then," said Mr. Faber, "I have taken all my farm products to market in that truck."

"I have hauled 10,000 bushels of shelled corn, for instance, and all the rest of my corn, besides every bushel of oats, hay, potatoes—infact, everything grown on my land.

"I have repeatedly hauled 55 bushels to a load in my Maxwell truck, driven nine miles into town and made seven trips a day, and that, I figure is just five more trips than I could hve made with a team of first-class horses. My Maxwell truck has more than paid its way."

Mr. Faber's use of the truck has been watched with keen interest by the enterprising ones among his neighbors, and the prospects are that the Maxwell truck will soon be in high favor around Wayne, as a low-priced economical, labor saving and efficiency promoting tool.

PERSISTENCY

Persistency is a characteristic of all men who have accomplished anything great. No matter what opposition they meet, or what discouragements overtake them, grit carries them through. Of such men people say, "You can't down them," and no higher tribute to possession of successful qualities could be paid.

Most of us are wonderful economists when it comes to making a little goodness go a long way. We hate to waste it, or to show it when we know it will not be appreciated. STORIES OF MEN OF IMPORTANCE IN THE WORLD TODAY

A Great Man Who Is Running Britian's War Machinery Now

General Smuts, Who Has Served His Time in South Africa—Making History for Great Britain.

HAVE you ever been in South Africa Have you ever lain at anchor in Table Bay and looked at the Red roofs of Cape Town standing by the fortress walls of Table Mount? Have you ever felt the soft warm earth of the veldt under your feet? Ha › you ever watched the ox wagons winding down a pass, or heard the moan of the ostrich in the darkness,, or listened ‹o the sudden rush of the torrent over the dry river bed, or smiled at the simple jokes of the country folk? If you have you know "Jannie" Smuts, as he is affectionately called in South Africa; "Jannie" who was born within fifty miles of Cape Town. You know all about him without being told, for he is part of the whole scheme of nature and things there; a child of the land, an intellectual product of the country.

There is a theory that a man finds his best impetus in the country in which he is born. South Africa can certainly boast of one such great man in General Smuts, Minister of Defense of the Union of South Africa Minister of Aerial Defence, and at the present moment one of the prominent men of the war. The cables from London tell almost daily of his activities. With the exception of Premier Lloyd George few members of the British war machine have been more in the public eye during recent weeks.

In his personal appearance and career he may be said to epitomize his country and his race. His early youth was spent very close to nature indeed, as a shepherd of his father's farm, and his memory recalls a certain dark night when he was carried across the fields to take his place at the head of a team of standing oxen, and hold the rope in his tiny hand. He was put in charge of the geese, too, in those days and he watched the pigs, and learned the ways and needs of live stock in a manner that has been invaluable to him since.

When he was 12 years of age his father, who was Dutch and a member of the Legislative Assembly of the Cape of Good Hpe, sent him to a local school. After that he went to college and when he was 20, he distinguished himself by winning a scholarship which entitled him to study in Europe. Brilliant achievements at Cambridge followed. When he was 25 a pale-faced studious looking young man known as Mr. Advocate Smuts, he was practicing in Cape Town, and beginning to talk and write about the questions of the hour.

In those days he delivered his speeches in Dutch, and his opinions were perhaps differently colored. But his goal was the same—he wanted to make a nation An exceptional sense of duty seems to animate "Jannie" Smuts at all times. Anyone who had heard him speak in the House of Assembly in Cape Town must have been struck by it.

How well remembered in the day he introduced his long-looked for Defense bill, when in the heat of a sultry February afternoon that slim, almost dandified figure, in blue serge, rose, and without haste, with out any sign of the occasion being important gave his masterly review of the principles governing the defense of South Africa. He never faltered—never paused to consult a note—never lost his equanimity. For two hours and a half he were expounded thro›n the House Since he could not claim to be well versed in military affairs by sheer ability. At the end he sat down as quietly as he had risen; a contrast in his attitude then, and always, to many of his colleagues, who find rest for mind and body in ungainly attitudes of repose.

He is a terrific worker. From morning till night he burrows his way through mountains of official documents. Whenever there is anything to be done, it is always Smuts who has to fetch the oilcan and lubricate the machine. No wonder he is spoken of as "the man who never takes a holiday!" But that is not quite true; Smuts can and does rest. When he has a chance he goes to the isolated home which he has built on the veldt, and there the "best hated man in South Africa"—as he once called himself during the worries of election—passes his days with his family, away from the haste of civilization.

Neither he nor Mrs. Smuts care in the least for social life, a fact learned by the many wives of high officials through vain attempts to find Mrs. Smuts "at home" in Johannesburg. Those ,however, who succeeded met an extremely simple, unaffected Dutch woman, whose great interest in life was her husband and children. In spite of her retiring nature and strong domestic inclinations, Mrs. Smuts is an intellectual woman, and the story of her appearing once with a baby on one arm and a Greek dictionary under the other can easily be believed.

At Doornkloof (Mimosa Gorge) both General and Mrs. Smuts are free from all social obligations, and it is there that one sees another side of Smuts, for he is a complex character. There is the Smuts who sits on the Government bench in Parliament, a clean-cut fair, clear-eyed man, very quiet and controlled, who enters without haste, steps softly on his visits to various members, whispers messages, and listens intently when there is anything to listen to. Then there is the energetic quick-moving Smuts, who is caught in some social function, the spotless, rather silent, unamiable man, who reserves his cordiality for his intimate friends, but who will sometimes be drawn into an interesting conversation. One must not pass over the bored Smuts answering in monosyllabic utterances the tiresome questioner upon agriculture.

"So we are to till the soil? Does the Minister know what is required in addition to land and water?"

"Seed," answers Smuts.

"A plow."

"And after the plow?"

"A harrow."

"Yes, but there is something over and above all this required."

It was midday, and excessively hot. The General wiped his brow and ended the catechism in one final word, "Sweat."

There is also Smuts the soldier, almost lost in a big military overcoat. But at Doornkloof, it may be imagined that the Smuts who walks about his lands in unconventional garb, who takes his heavy stick and yields to his love of climbing mountains, who delights in his children and the simplest home life, is the very man himself. At Doornkloof "Groot Jannie" and "Klein Jannie" (big Jannie' and little Jannie) have time to study each other in the great friendship of father and son. "Klein Jannie" is one of six, but among them he stands out as a small edition of his father, both mentally and wherever hrdl hrdl hrdl rd tally and physically. Wherever "Groot Jannie" is, there "Klein Jannie" is sure to be found, as ernest as his parent.

In the days when he headed a flying column in the Boer war and was first known as general, he did some wonderful marches and has to his credit the remarkable performance of covering 700 miles of ground in five weeks. Once his horse was shot under him; once he awoke from a sound sleep to find his camp surrounded; once he was too ill to move and entreated his men to leave him, which they refused to do; and on another memorable occasion, he received a safe conduct pass signed "D. Haig, Colonel"—the signer being he who is now General Sir Douglas Haig, in command of the British forces in France. Animated by the same desire to do his duty by his country then as now, "Jannie" Smuts spoke from numerous platforms after the war was over, with enthusiasm and tremendous seriousness, always having the building of a nation at heart. At first he didn't think so much about the "union of brothers"; he was mainly concerned with preventing a state of topdog and underdog, which he erroneously thought was imminent.

When he found that he was wrong he began to cultivate the art of compromise. The part he played then was a great surprise to those he had heretofore known him as a lawyer and a soldier. The breadth of his outlook made a large portion of his own race misunderstand him, though he tried to show them that the equilibrium of the country could be maintained by the cooperation and friendship which the English wanted to establish. At various times he was State Attorney for the Transvaal, Acting Assistant Commandant General, Minister of the Interior, Minister of Finance, and he has repeatedly taken General Botha's place as Premier in the latter's absence.

Today the public is honoring "Jannie" Smuts, the all-round great man, who has been called to London to give South Africa representation upon the Imperial War Council. "The empire's greatest asset," he was called recently by Major Guest, who served with him for twelve months in the East Africa campaign, and who desired that South Africa should make it possible for Smuts to respond to the call from England. "He has the power of instilling unquestionable confidence by his sheer ability of seeing further and thinking clearer than others," said the Major.

Of course everyone knows that, in spite of some divided feeling in South Africa as to whether his duty claimed his presence in that country, General Smuts went to London, where with W. P. Schriener, High Commissioner for South Africa, he was sworn in as a member of the privy council on March 13. On March 20, last he attended the first meeting of the Imperial War Council as the representative of South Africa.

Smuts is now in the mid-forties of his life. He has a fine constitution in spite of the strain he has put upon it both mentally and physically

GENERAL ALVARO OBREGON
Former leader of the Mexican army, now in New York.

The New German Chancellor Is a Prominent Scholar

Who is Von Hertling?

What are we to expect from Germany's new chancellor?

Early in this year I asked a prominent German student of politics here in Boston what one thing more than anything else signified to him that his country would win the war.

"The fact that the government of every other belligerent country has broken down and swapped its lead horses, with the single exception of ours," he replied, unhesitatingly.

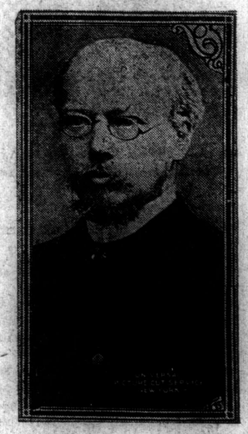
Today we see Count Georg F. Von Hertling the lead horse. Yesterday we saw Michaelis. The day before favorable deduction the German-American will draw now.

It is not surprising that we in the United States are unfamiliar with Count Von Hertling. On the other hand it was not surprising that President Wilson was unknown to the people of Baravia while Governor of New Jersey

The Professor-Politician

The new German chancellor is a professor turned into politician. For 42 years he had been a force in both the political and intellectual life of Germany. He has always been one of the chief spokesmen of the Catholic party, with far more influence than Matthias Erzberger. And with all due respect to the allied statesmen, Hertling enjoys the reputation of being the most learned man holding an important political position in all Europe.

If we are to ignore Hertling's speech of last Tuesday, when as prime minister of Bavaria, the count told the Bavarian parliament that Germany is defending Europe and England against aggression of America, we may consider him to be the most reasonable man in all Germany on the peace question. Hertling's thinking in the past has been too shrewd and sound to credit him with believing his own words. "Camouflage" to get into favor his few American intimates say.



For Hertling has been a consistent "goat getter" of the Prussian junkers.

We have heard more of the social Democrat leaders in this respect than we have of the Count, but Hertling has been second to none in this pastime. On the other hand he has shown strong "reactionary" tendencies.

It was he who only a short time ago openly made the bold move for peace, in which he declared that Germany should not prolong the war for the sake of indemnities and that Germany should be content with the restoration of her captured ships and colonies. He knew that his declaration would create a storm—and it did. Junkerdom howled at him.

Hertling was a bitter opponent of Bethmann-Hollweg but so were the junker—for entirely different reasons. Hertling was seeking greater recognition of his native Bavaria in Berlin. He did not get it. Hertling tolerated Bethmann-Hollweg, but would not stand for Michaelis.

All the world knows what Michaelis

THE NEW CHANCELLOR
Count von Hertling, premier of Bavaria, has assumed the onerous task.

symbolized—the very essence of Prussian Kultur.

But one cannot deduct from this that Count Von Hertling will throw the weight of his influence against the policy of the militarists. What we can hope for in the light of our knowledge of the past of the man is this:

That his intimate acquaintance with the mode of thought of the allied peoples, his conservatism, his saneness and his cold, hard common sense reasoning will awaken Germany to the fact that the allies are determined to win the war and that they will win the war in the long run.

No man may venture to state the nature of the political cards that the new chancellor has in his hand to play in the feverish game now going on at Berlin. Shrewd observers say that his three trump cards are Bavaria's growing resentment against Prussia; the peace desires of the Austrian Emperor, whose confidence he has and the backing of the Vatican, where contrary to the general impression, he is in closer touch than Erzberger.

First Heard From in 1875

Politically, von Hertling first came to light away back in 1875 as a member from Bavaria of the Catholic party. The present generation, of course, does not remember the efforts of Prussia to crush out the very life of Catholicism, or Centre, party was the response and von Hertling's activities were marked by real statesmanship.

All the while von Hertling had been contributing to philosophy and Kulture in great measure. The manner in which he found time for both politics and the writing of his ponderous books is truly remarkable. Most familiar of these to Americans is his discussion of "John Locke a nd the Cambridge School," his great work on Aristotle, his remarkable treatise on the "Principles of Catholicism and their Relation to Knowledge," and his volumes on "The Augustinian Era and Ancient Civilization."

Despite the wide range of Hertling intellectual and political industry, he was little heard of in this country until five years ago, when Bavarian internal politics were occupying the attention of students of German Government. Rumors were rife at the time that the late Prince Leopold was preparing to abdicate in favor of his son, Louis, who later became king.

Election came up at this time and the Clerical party secured control in the Bavarian Parliament. Leopold immediately asked Hertling, as leader of the Catholics, to form a new cabinet. The count finally accepted and for the first time since the formation of the Empire the second largest State had representation in the federal council by a party of the people.

Asked Socialists' Aid

Singularly enough, the man who had so resolutely opposed the nobles and the militarists had a "count" and a "von" conferred upon him two years later.

For example, he had declared: "It is now high time to let armament rest, for the German people can assume no more burdens for many years to come."

And at the same time he was calling upon the Socialists to come forward with proposals for the electoral reform in his own Reichsrath, "which at present consists mostly of nobles."

Von Hertling is now 74 years of age.

First Lord of the British Navy and His Record

Story of the Man Who Will Wield the Destiny of England's Naval Progress.

THE new fist lord of the British admiralty, Sir Eric Geddes, who is by the way, a former railway official of America, has made a distinctly good impression in his maiden speech in the house of commons. Sir Eric has—thanks, perhaps to his training on this continent—a clear and convincing way of presenting facts and figures that is refreshing. One can well believe that with his coming there has been brushed aside much of the official red tape of the admiralty. Sir Eric goes after facts and he appears to get them.

His statement on the work of the British navy and the progress that has been made in curbing Germany's inhuman campaign of submarine warfare, is interesting and reassuring. Particularly gratifying is the declaration that during the last quarter Germany has lost more submarines than in the whole of the year 1916. Surely this should give a jolt to those armchair critics who are forever asking the banal question "What is our navy doing?" Sir Eric, for obvious reasons could not lift too highly the veil of secrecy that enshrouds the operations of our wonderful fleet, but he did so sufficiently to show that Jellicoe and his men are far from being asleep. Here for instance, are a few excerpts from his address:

"During a recent month," he said "the mileage steamed by our battleships, cruisers and destroyers alone amounted to one million ship's miles in home waters. In addition to this the naval auxilliary forces patrolled more than six million miles in the same period and territory. The displacement in the navy is 71 per cent greater than in 1914, when it was 2,400,000 tons. At the outbreak of the war we had eighteen mine sweepers and auxiliary patrols, today there are 3,336. The personnel of the fleet before the war ws 146,000, today it is 390,000."

His declaration that between forty and fifty per cent. of the German submarines operating in the North Sea, the Atlantic and the Arctic oceans had been sunk was not the least interesting of his announcements, and there was an indication of the unceasing war the British and American patrols are making on the submarines in his statement that during the last quarter the enemy had lost as many submarines as during the whole of 1914.

He added that the house would realize that "however great the loss of mercantile tonnage is—and the figures are very formidable—we cannot at this stage of the war pick any one item to deduce therefrom that the war, even any phrase of the war, is going well or badly."

Referring to the success of the convoy system in general, he said:

"In September 90 per cent. of the total vessels sailing the Atlantic trades were convoyed, and since that convoy system started the total percentage of loss per convoyed vessel through the danger zone was one in 200.

"As regards the sinking of British merchant tonnage by submarines, the German official figures for August are 808,000 tons of all nationalities. They sank a little more than one-third of that amount of British tonnage and a little more than half of all nationalities.

"For September their official figures are 679,000 tons. They sank far less than one-third of that amount of British tonnage and less than one-half of that amount of all nationalities.

"The Germans claim that our tonnage is falling so low that there are not enough ships on the sea to enable their submarine commanders to maintain their bag. Let me give you the facts. In April last, the heaviest month of British losses by the enemy submarines since the war began, our trade flowed presumably in satisfactory volume for the enemy submarines. In September last, his lowest month of sinkings, our overseas sailing of all ships of over 1,600 tons were twenty per cent. in number, and thirty per cent. in tonnage higher than in April The enemy must therefore find another and better explanation of his lack of success. I can supply it. "The explanation is that the long arm of the British navy reached down into the depths and thus the harvest reaped is poorer and the number of German submarines which do not return is increasing."

Even here in Canada, thousands of miles from the scene of operations, one occasionally hears some carping critic demanding more action by the British fleet. The recent sinking of several Scandinavian ships and a couple of patrol boats in the North Sea was seized upon here and abroad for a round of criticism of the admiralty. Sir Eric Gedes has given a satisfactory explanation of this incident. Had the British navy been informed of the attack, which it was not, he explained, its position was such that it could not have wished a better opportunity of intercepting the raiders. Furthermore, the first lord pointed out, the Scandinavian convoy system has been going on since April and this was the first occasion on which any ship had been lost. THE BRITISH NAVY MADE THIS SPLENDID RECORD POSSIBL.

Such critics as the London Daily Mail declare that the Germans are forcing the fighting at sea. Do they stop to consider that submarines do not wait to be attacked and that the U-boats are practically the only German vessels on the high seas today GERMAN VESSELS ARE NOT BEING SUNK BECAUSE GERMAN VESSELS ARE NOT SAILING. That is the best answer. The Kaiser's beautifully polished navy is safe and snug in the Keil canal and the German admiralty dare not send it out to meet the British fleet. Keen German leaders know too well what the result would be. Summed up the situation amounts to this: The British navy is on duty with greater force, numbers, skill and bravery that the world has ever known. Many British vessels are being sunk but many more reach port. The German navy is skulking at Keil, afraid to fight. German merchant vessels are not being sunk because German merchantmen, lacking a navy to defend them, are not on the seas. The British navy may be depended upon to take the offensive whenever the opportunity offers but IT CANNOT SHOW ITS SKILL AGAINST A NAVY THAT REFUSES TO FIGHT.

THIS IS A PEOPLE'S LOAN

By LORD SHAUGHNESSY

The ordinary government loan is usually of interest chiefly to the banker, the trustee, the large corporation, and the regular investing public, but the success of the new Victory Loan of $150,000,000 vitally concerns every Canadian wage-earner, every mechanic, every farmer, every salaried employe. Without this loan Canadian industry and agricultur and business must come to a standstill, representing as it does the capital necessary to finance the purchase of food and army supplies for the Allies and for our Canadian armies at the front, supplies which represent a very large proportion of our total agricultural and industrial production. These supplies are produced by Canadian labor, which must go unpaid unless the necessary capital is forthcoming. That capital moreover must come from the savings of the Canadian people, as under present circumstances it cannot be borrowed from abroad.

This loan is and should be a People's Loan. The present war is not a banker's war, nor a war for large financial interests, but is a war which champions the rights of free peoples. It is the bounden duty, therefore, of every Canadian freedom-loving citizezn to become a bondholder in this loan, as it were to become a bondholder in the Company of Free Peoples, and to help with cash if he or she cannot take a place in the fighting ranks.

The banks, the large companies, and the employers will no doubt give and give generously, but it is from the great army of the people that most of the money must come. In many concerns the employe will be helped by his or her employer to purchase bonds on easy instalments. There could not be a safer or better investment. These bonds bear good interest, and have behind them the guarantee of the whole Canadian people. The government in asking the Canadian people to make this loan is therefore asking for no sacrifice. It is asking only for co-operation, which at the same time will ensure prosperity for the people who lend.

Fashion's Offerings For Miss Sixteen

It is surprising to see how quickly the young girl formulates her ideas of good dressing. Often, nay, usually, she is extreme, but never passe, if she has anything to say about it. Discount her craving for novelty, and you will find that she has a pretty good idea of what is what in fashion circles.

A typical wardrobe, including the best that the season has to offer, has been selected to help the young girl and her mother in the choice of her winter clothes. Nothing is included which could not be called stylish, yet nothing is in the least extreme.

First of all, there is a street suit of the tailored type in a heavy, well-wearing cheviot. This rough material is coming more into vogue than it has been for some time, and is eminently practical. The young girl will like the pockets; they remind her of her brother's or somebody else's brother's trench suit. Her sports hat is one of the new camel's hair hats, in a novel and becoming shape. There is a vest to the suit of white broadcloth, and walking shoes, with the new long last to help out the chic of the costume.

When she isn't wearing her suit, she will be found in the schoolroom in a stylish combination of dark green serge and plaid silk. Plaids are so smart this season. Over this frock she will wear a top coat of rough storm mixture, with a belt and button-up collar.

For best, there should be a velvet frock—or velveteen will do. If made on the long-waisted, youthful lines, and relieved by a light gimp, it can't help but be becoming to a miss in her middle teens.

And for parties there must be a sweet little frock that won't look too mature. Nothing prettier than Georgete, trimmed with adorable little ruffles, could be imagined. A knot of colored velvet ribbon to contrast with the frock gives it character.

The dress hat for wear with best clothes should be of black velvet, with one of the new floppy brims. A wreath of fine silk flowers, in contrasting colors, is quite enough of trimming.

Hampering Married Life

Just as soon as young folks marry each should start to paddle their own canoe. The bride who falls back on her mother's judgement to rule her home is fooling time, as is also the young husband, who asks his daddy's advice as to how to cure his young wife's extravagance, or how to tie her to her new home when he cannot be there with her. If the girl's mother decided not to advise, and the young man's daddy was equally unwilling, the couple would have to learn by experience which is the best teacher.

The more relatives try to help them out, the more it hampers their married life. If the bride's elderly aunt comes visit her, the young wife tels her, with tears, that "George remains out very often of an evening, refusing to tell where he's been." Aunt shouldn't put her finger in the married pie by insinuating that he may be untrue to her. A suggestion of this kind is like a flame against kindling. It soon creates a fire that, smoldering for a time bursts out at length in a pretty hot conflagration. Aunt would display more than commen sense by saying: "No doubt the poor fellow wants to stretch his legs on a ten-mile walk. He doesn't suppose that you'll have any fool notion that he's not where he ought to be, or in company of any one with whom he should not be."

A bride's young woman friends can do their bit and more by offering their well-meant suggestions cautiously to her about nagging a husband. It's always single girls who have the most advanced ideas. They haven't seen these theories worked out. The young woman who works along the lines of the notions of her friends finds pretty big clouds looming up to dim the sunshine of married happiness. Well meaning sisters can aggravate the case too. They can say things to her that she would probably resent from other people. If they find she is wearing the same pair of shoes six months after the honeymoon they exclaim commiseratingly: "Dear me, Kate hasn't George bought you a new pair of shoes yet? It isn't a good idea to start in showing him you can do without pretty shoes, a new hat and things." They tip her off to the presumption that if he isn't spending his cash on her he's putting clothes on his own back, smoking more cigars or making himself a good fellow at places serving men's lunches only.

If hubby does come in with a box of new collars or perhaps a new hat, the wife feels in duty bound to resent it and point to her shoes or her hat. Brides wouldn't think of finding fault with things if other people did not make suggestions to them. If a bride complains to her mother that she can't get along with those who live a flight above her flat or below, instead of taking up the cudgel with her daughter, she should tell her firmly that she will have to fight her own battles. That will be the better for her. The young wife who has no one to encourage her in bickering with the neighbors or families under the same roof, will learn by her wit how to get along with people, that people are not enough interested in her to give her her own way. She will have to do a lot of bearing and forbearing as she jogs along the uneven road of matrimony.

The young wife who has no one to tutor her makes a virtue of necessity and gets along much better with every one she is brought in contact with. All the little things that hamper married life are wedges which cause couples to get further apart. There's a knack in getting along with men; the good, the bad and the indifferent kind. The husband tied down to his wife's apron strings is never the man who dares grasp at opportunities, think quickly for himself and act on opportunities. If he is hampered by the thought that he must consult his wife on every move or else there'll be a row he's not apt to get far out of the rut he was in at the time he took unto himself a helpmate that has proved to be a hindrance. The question as to how to get along happily when married should be studied carefully by women who attach themselves to husbands.

Xmas Suggestions in Jewelry For Ladies

The most popular article of Jewelry for a Lady this year is undoubtedly a Wrist Watch. It combines the useful with the beautiful, and is not altogether a luxury. We expect nearly everyone who has not already bought a Wrist Watch will do so this Christmas, and have prepared our stock accordingly.

Our $15.00 Gold Filled Wrist Watch has proven a very reliable timepiece. It has a 15 Jewel Movement and is fully guaranteed. Others in Solid Gold range from $25.00 to $90.00.

La Vallieres and Necklets are also very popular, coming a close second to Wrist Watches. Our beautifully simple Platinum designs are going to be much in demand this Christmas, especially since we have mounted them with smaller and less expensive Diamonds, to bring them within reach of the man who is not a millionaire. We have all Platinum and Diamond Set Pendants, as low as $40.00. Our prettiest designs run between $50.00 and $100.00. Our 14K Solid Gold ones range from $7.50 to $30.00.

OTHER SUGGESTIONS ARE

Cameo Brooches.....$8.00 to $50.00

IDEAL WIFE

Some of the Qualities Which Make Her Desirable Helpmate

Wanted, by men in every state, county, city and village, a wife.

Wanted, by millions of batchelors in the United States, a wife who can live on her husband's income and not complain: who can save a penny and not be ashamed.

Wanted, a wife whose aim in life is not dress motor cars, card parties, dinners, society; who will not neglect her husband; who loves a home.

Wanted, a wife who wants children.

Wanted, a wife who knows a baseball score and a batting average, who is not bored when her husband talks business; who will not laugh at a husband's ambitions.

Wanted, a wife who will not be a dressed-up doll or a household drudge; who will not limit her life to the four walls of the house; who knows the need of self-improvement, self enlargement; who can continue to grow; who loves progress, refinement, culture.

Wanted, a wife who loves the stimulus of victory; who will not lose ambition with one defeat; who cannot be fatigued by climbing; who is willing to pay the price of success.

Wanted a wife who can share adversity and not lose her love, who can share prosperity and not be jealous.

Wanted, a wife who does not nag, who can be a companion, an inspiration; whose love can lighten the shadows of failure; who can keep her faith even though all men fall to doubting.

Wanted, a wife who can love, love on through the years—in prosperity, in hardships, in adversity, in sorrow.

A woman who can meet these wants will find millions of men in America ready to go down on there knees and pray God for the privilee of giving her a home and making her happy.

How To Pack, the Right and Wrong Way

Are you going to move this year, and if you are, do you know how to make the least work of it, and how to have the least breakage In other words, do you know how to "move?"

There are always two ways to move The first, easiest, and incidentally the most expensive is to have the professional mover come in and do all the packing. The other is to do it yourself, with the help of a strong man or woman for the lifting.

If your goods are to be shipped by freight or even stored for any length of time it is the wisest precaution not to consider expense, and employ the professional packers, which is economical in the end. But if you are only changing houses or flats in the city money will be saved by doing the work yourself. Before beginning to pack see that you have on hand a number of clean wooden boxes of varying sizes and some good strong barels. The smaller articles of the house, such as bric-a-brac and china, should be packed first—these breakable articles are safer if packed in sugar barrels, which you may be able to procure from your grocerman. Plenty of tissue paper, newspapers and old clothes are needed to wrap the articles and fill the spaces that they may not hit against each other. Excelsior is also useful in packing breakable articles.

Put Plates On the Bottom

The plates should be packed at the bottom of the barrel, layers of newspapers being put between them. Stand the plates edgewise, never lay them flat. If you begin to arrange them in a circle, edgewise, beginning at the outer edge of the barrel and working toward the centre, as packers do, they will stand all mannr of rough handling and come out not only whole but unscathed. To begin with take a single sheet of newspaper and fold it lengthwise and insert a plate between the folds until all are packed securely on end and around the inside edge of the barrel. In this way the sheets of paper will hold two and three plates, according to size. Pack the crevices between the plates lightly with excelsior or tissue paper, or, if you are economizing in room, clothes or household linens.

In the centre pack the vegetable dishes first filling them with paper, the heavier to the botom. The cups and saucers should be stuffed with tissue paper or excelsior and put in the centre ,also the vases and pieces packed, and sure that it is tightly so, for it is the moving around of the dishes that cause breakage—nail on the cover and label the barrel so that in the confusion of unpacking you know exactly the contents of that particular ballel.

The Fragile Things

Cut glass and the most of the fragile things should be securely wrapped in tissue paper and packed in excelsior. In some cases, the small bits of bric-a-brac may be packed between clothes in the beureau drawers, but one must be certain that the drawers of the dresser are secure and will not fall out, and then, too, it is neither kind or wise to add to the weight of large pieces of furniture, which must often be carried up and down several flights of stairs by the moving man.

The lighter kitchen tins, wrapped in paper, may be packed in flour barrels or in wash tubs, the heavier in the should be wrapped in newspapers or in the cheesecloth dusters and old towels of the family and packed in small boxes. The large pictures may be packed among the beddin ogne in each piece, or they may be wrapped in old quilts and tied sinly in twos and threes, according to the size and weight. All bedding should be carefully tied up in the soiled sheets, that the quilts mattresses and blankets may not be soiled. Burlap is good for this, but if one doesn't care for the expense of buying burlap for packing purposes the sheets will do, as they can be easily laundered.

Boxes For Your Books

Few people seem to know how to pack books for the purpose of moving them. For these, get wooden soap boxes from your grocer. It is not wise to pack too many books in a single receptacle or box, as the books are at the very best heavy, and awkward things to carry on moving day. Wrap each book separately in newspaper and lay carefully in the box, being sure that while the books are firmly packed they are not so tihtly wedged in as to cause any breakage of the edges. Cover the books with a layer of the newspaper, then a folded cloth, and tie a rope around them to prevent spilling. The very fine editions de luxe should be carefully wrapped in tisue paper and packed in a box by themselves, that the commoner and perhaps heavier ones do not mar them.

Music may be tied up in a parcel and wrapped with paper. It should never be left in the cabinet, as some women allow it to be, as the cabinet door may come open and scatter the sheets.

The rugs of the household should be roled, when posible, on poles. If you are short of poles, two rugs may be put on a pole and tied securely. Never fold rugs or allow them to be carried loosely, because they are likely to drag along the pavement and gather dirt and dust. The curtains and portieres, carefully folded should be packed in one of the soap boxes, while the wearing apparel of the family and the household linen is best packed in trunks, in large boxes that may be securely covered, or in shirtwaist boxes.

Wrap the Furniture

All fancy gilt furniture needs to be wrapped with burlap or newspapers to prevent the gilt from being chipped and upholstered furniture must not only have the seats and backs covered with soft newspapers, bound tightly with strings, but the legs and arms to. This will prevent marring and splitting.

An old mover of experience, who does a large business in transporting the household lare and penates of Chicago families, declares that nothing makes him so mad as to have too careful housewives cover or attempt to conceal in any way the mirrors of sideboards, dressers, etc., or the plate glass doors of bookcases, china closets and other articles of furniture. He declares that they are best exposed, as then the men who are handling the goods know just what they are working with and may therefore take proper precaution as to their care. All movers carry with them screw-drivers with which to remove the mirrors or gass doors that they think may be in danger of breaking.

Valuable paintings are best either taken by hand to the new home or crated. The same should be done with valuable clocks and typewriters which need to be boxed. Never pack your jewelery if it is at all valuable, or any particular bit of silver, as these thins are easily carried by hand in a basket.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS

BRINGING UP THE CHILDREN

Threats only show weakness on the part of the parent or disciplinarian. Most school teachers early learn the folly of making threats. How well I remember when I was teaching school that a number of slate pencils had been dropped on the floor one particular afternoon. Thoughtlessly I threatened, "Now the next child that drops a pencil will remain after school and receive punishment!"

My fate! The weakest, most delicate girl in the room was the next to drop her pencil, and she was a pupil with a perfect record in deportment. You can imagine my embarrassment. I had threatened punishment, and so had to get out of the predicament as best I could. But this experience effectually cured me of making further threats.

Most of us live to regret the threats we make. "Your father will thrash you when he comes home tonight," or "you'd better not let your father see you doing that," or "you wouldn't behave that way if your father was here," etc., are common threats which we hear directed at headstrong and wilful boys. Such threats do not cause the love of the child for his father to increase. They make him afraid of his father and they tend to widen the gulf between a child and one who should be his best friend.

"I'll bust your brains out," said a four-year-old to his pet lion, because it wouldn't stand up. This is a very uncouth and ungenteel remark, but it must be remembered that it did not originate in the mind of the boy who said it. He only repeated what he had heard others say.

It betrays both cowardice and ignorance to undertake to secure obedience by such threats as "I will box your ears if you don't mind," etc. Obedience that is worth anything is only secured by suggestion and love, never by promises of reward or threats of punishment.

Promises Of Reward

Promises of reward must be regarded as of the strata as threats of punishment. They are used only by parents, teachers or disciplinarians who lack poise, resourcefulness and self-command. A little child should obey because it is manly and right to obey and not because he is to get a new hobby horse or to avoid a thrashing.

It is a most pitiful experience that often takes place in the doctor's office when a little child who greatly needs medical care begins to scream and struggle the moment he sees the doctor.

On inquiring it usually follows that repeatedly he has been frightened into obedience by such a threat as "Now, if you don't do what I want you to do I'll take you to the doctor's office and he'll give you some nasty medicine." It's only a thoughtless remark, but its effect is far-reaching, and the struggle and the hard feelings might have been avoided if self-control had been practiced by the caretaker.

The Correct Method

It seems to me that the greatest service we as parents can render our children is to teach them control. We cannot teach what we do not know and possess, and so I recommend to anyone and every one who occupies the responsible place as caretaker or parent of a little child under six that they stop and think before loud, fast talking and punishment is administered.

Jerking and slapping a child is bunglesome discipline, slamming a child down on a chair and threatening to keep him there for an hour by the clock may prove to be a calamity even to the disciplinarian, for she herself may desire to go somewhere before the hour is up. No, it's far better to exercise control, to stop and think, and then, after the first shock is over, calmly and firmly give the command or administer the punishment. Talk less and act promptly. Children and every one else respect self-control.

HOME COOKING

Slanghf

Clean a head of a pig and a set of feet and put on to boil in cold water; strain the liquor, pick all meat from bones and chop fine. Return to kettle and season with sweet marjorum, thyme, parsley, salt and peper. Thicken with equal parts of cornmeal and buckwheat. Set on back part of stove, to prevent burning, for five hours; pour in large bakepan that has been previously wet with cold water; use knife or back of spoon to smooth in place; when cold turn out, cut in thick slices, dip in flour and brown in hot pan.

BLACK EVENING GOWNS SIMPLE IN DESIGN.

A perfectly charming evening gown is shown here in black satin and lace. The bodice is extremely simp's even to the point of being severe. This is of satin, is cut with low square neck and is sleeveless. The skirt is so designed that it flares on both sides so that the silhouette is that of the barrel effect. A huge satin and velvet hat completes the costume making it an appropriate Long hooped and looped pockets are important details of the silhouette. Sometimes the only bright color in an entire costume is in chain or waist belt.

NEW RIDING TOGS.

From all indications it is safe to predict that horseback riding will be a popular fad this winter Classes are already being formed where as many as four or five dozen people go off on a two-hour ride together. Needless to say the togs for such an occasion are all important. She who rides astride will be smartly clad if she dons this suit in pepper and salt mixture with its flaring coat and snug breeches. TULLE FOR EVENING GOWNS.

A very lovely evening frock is shown here in black tulle. The skirt has a series of tulle flounces, cut in pointed effect and these fall over a foundation of black satin. The bodice is extremely simple featuring a square neck and is sleeveless. A band of metal ribbon encircles the waistline and a floral corsage bouquet affords an attractive color note

Mrs Sydney Houlton has returned from the East where she spent the past two months.

The Palliser ball-room was thronged with guests Thursday evening when the first of a series of "Victory Loan dinners" was held. The room was very artistically decorated with flags of the allied nations. Back of the orchestra dias, banked with palms, hung two large portraits of King George and Queen Mary, also draped with Union Jacks. During the dinner hour, Mr. McQueen, Mr. Bruce Robinson and others made brief speeches on the loan and its objects, and Miss Locke and Mr. Hamilton Earle, who repeatedly scored successes in their numbers in "Robinson Crusoe," sang with splendid effect to the gathering.

LONG LIVE THE KING

BY

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

This is a story of love, intrigue, and adventure in a European court. The time is ripe for such a novel, which shows the weakness of monarchy surrounded by treachery and held together by terror.

The story centers about the figure of Otto IX, a small prince, heir to the throne and a very lovable boy, whose personality and character will win him many friends. His escapades, the pitiful limitations of his daily life, and the way in which his admiration for our Abraham Lincoln is developed, will be read with deep interest, while the intrigues of the court and the uncovering of treason will engross the reader.

Mary Roberts Rinehart is probably the most successful woman writer in the world today. She has written with equal success mystery stories, such as "The Circular Staircase," tales of love and life, as, for instance, "K," and humorous skits such as "Tish" and the "Sub-Deb" stories. "Long Live the King" combines the mystery, heart interest, and excitement of her past successes into a story that will be hailed as the most engrossing she has ever written.

Gossip and Comment

Nothing surprising this week. At the two vaudeville shows the attractions were fair and the attendance likewise. Perhaps the good things we had the past few weeks would have been too much for the people and they would have remained away for a week or two in any event but they certainly did not pack the houses as they have done the weeks before.

The "Robinson Crusoe" was about the same as it was on its last visit although the attendance fell off quite considerably. The character of the players and performance was the same and nothing new occurred to mar the serenity of the show. One thing in favor of the English performance over an American performance of the same type is the high character of the girl performers. There is no careless or looseness of indiviuality which seems to be pravelent in American shows. The English girl seems to be able to wear tights and still keep her modest demeanor, while the American girl is apt to grow careless with continual display of tights.

Calgary is doing a land-office business in theatricals as well as in farming products. The attendance at the various theatres since the fall opening has been remarkable. It takes the Allen however, to grab the opportunity and make sunshine out of the smoke. Last Tuesday evening the Allen gave an after theatre performance from 11.15 which lasted until 12.45 in the morning. This was necessary to meet the demand of the public for a view of Douglas Fairbanks in "The Man From Painted Post." As the management says all records were broken at these performances.

WEDDINGS

McKELVEY— BUCHANAN

A very pretty wedding took place at St. Stephen's church last Wednesday afternoon, when Mary Irene, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Buchanan, Calgary, became the bride of Mr. Alvon McKelvey. The bride, who was unattended, was charmingly attired in white crepe de chene and lace, and carried pink and white carnations. Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride, 1712 Nine and a half street west, Mount Royal.

The bride was the recipient of many gifts among them being two checks, one for one hundred dollars and the other for one thousand dollars. Mr. and Mrs. McKelvey left on the evening train for the coast, where they will make their home, the bride traveling in a green cloth suit, with green velvet hat to match.

STEWART—MILLER

A pretty wedding took place last Wednesday evening, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Miller, at Olds, Amy Louise, was united in marriage to W. Carrol Stewart, formerly a student of the Old's Agricultural college and the Edmonton university. Rev. G. D. Armstrong, pastor of Olds Methodist church, performed the ceremony.

The bride looked charming in a silk satin de chene gown, trimmed with pearls, and carrying a bouquet of roses. Miss Gweneth Miller, sister of the bride attended her and was attired in a pretty pink gown. Mr. Archie McGillivray, student of the Edmonton university, acted as groomsman. The house was prettily decorated with white Chrysanthemums, carnations, and ferns for the occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. Stewart left on the afternoon train for Edmonton, where they will spend their honeymoon at the Macdonald hotel, the bride traveling in a suit of navy blue and wearing white furs. Later they will live at the home of the groom near Killam.

INTERESTING TO FORD USERS

The Niagara Sales, Ltd., of Calgary, are showing a starting system for a Ford car. It is mechanical and therefore no upkeep such as the electric starters now on the market.

Instead of cranking your car from the front you start it from the seat and avoid all chance of a broken arm.

This is a starter "that starts" if your engine will go, the M. M. & E. starter will start her.

This starter is manufactured by the Page Woven-wire Fence company. They tested this starter in all kinds of weather and conditions before it was ever shown to the public. If you drive a Ford car, it will be wise to investigate. It insures protection and comfort.

LAST SATURDAY'S TAG DAY BRINGS IN $1,400

The receipts of the Tag Day which was held last Saturday under the auspices of the Eighth Field Ambulance club was $1,400.

This money will be used to supply comforts to veterans reaching Calgary and going through and also to send comforts to the Calgary unit, the Eighth Field Ambulance which is in France, for the use of the wounded looked after by that unit. To the Ambulance Corps the club has already supplied many small luxuries, such as musical instruments, etc., which are much appreciated by the members.

Another Ragtime Rand at the Orpheum Next Week

Billy Montgomery and George Perry who call themselves "The Two Batchelors of Art," will be one of the headliners at the Orpheum next week. These two performers will sing a number of popular songs, dance some of the latest dances, talk a little, and cut up in general.

Fanchon and Marco, supported by their "Jazz Band," of which Rudy Wiedoeft is one of the features, will present a very fine dancing act. Jazz music (?) was unknown to New York until Fanchon and Marco came from San Francisco, and since then the rest of the country has jazzed with its meals, its modes and its morals, but Fanchon and Marco manage to keep about five heats ahead of the possession and their bands and their dancing are a little better than most jazz. Fanchon and Marco are particularly capable dancers.

Rita Boland will offer some of her song sketches. Despite her youth, she is a seasoned veteran of the two-a-day Elsie Janis laid the foundation for Miss Boland's career, and upon that foundation has been erected the very enviable reputation she possesses. Miss Robbie Gordon will present some fo her artistic reproductions of well-known masterpieces of statuary.

James H. Cullen will make his seventeenth appearance in Orpheum vaudeville. Cullens calls himself "The Man from the West," and if his breeziness is a characteristic of the West, his title is not a misnomer.

Claude and Fanny Ursher will present "Fagan's Decision." They are well known for "Fagan's Decision" as Je on was for "Rip Van Winkle" or Edwin Booth for his "Hamlet."

The Ioleen Sisters are sharpshooters and have won medals, many mentions and rewards through their aptness with the rifle.

Vivian Martin in "The Trouble Buster"

Dainty Vivian Martin, one of the biggest favorites of the silent drama, will be seen at the Allen, Monday and Tuesday, in her latest Paramount success, "The Trouble Buster."

Strong supporting cast

Michelna Libelt .....Vivian Martin
Franz Libelt .....James Neill
"Blackie" Moyle .....Paul Willis
Tip Morgan .....Charles West
Mrs. Morgan .....Louise Harris
Ruth Camden .....Mary Morsch
Mrs. Westfall .....Vera Lewis

Michelna Libelt and her father, Franz, arrive in America from distant Roumania. Franz, however, unable to secure employment as a pottery designer, is taken ill and soon dies, leaving Michelna alone in the world.

"Blackie" Koyle, a young waif af a newsboy, befriends the lonely girl and offers her protection of his own piano box home after Michelna has rushed in panic from the house to escape the women from an orphan's home.

"Blackie" has made this home with his dog spink, in an empty piano box in the rear of a deserted factory. Michelna decides that her curls are a nuisance and with "Blackie's" assistance cuts them off, secures an old suit of boy's clothing and changes her name to "Mike."

In their spare moments, when not selling papers the two youngsters sit in the piano box and make statuettes out of some modeling clay given "Blackie" by an artist. Tip Morgan, a young crook, discovers that "Mike" is a girl, and lures her into his room where "Blackie" finds them. In the fight that follows, "Blackie" is struck on the head with a bottle and loses the sight of both eyes.

While he is in the hospital, "Mike" sees an advertisement of an art exhibit and believing that the twenty-five cents admission entitles her to exhibit her wares, takes two little statuettes that she and "Blackie" had made and places hem on display.

One peculiar little character she has named the "Trouble Buster." An art dealer with a commercial eye sees in it the same possibilities of popular success as the "Biliken" or "Kewpie," and when asked as to the ownership, she gives the credit for the successful one to "Blackie."

From this point the story takes a most absorbing twist, and holds the audience every minute until the very climax, which is brought about after many thrilling incidents.

In addition to this feature attraction, the third episode of "The Neglected Wife" Pathe's greatest serial will also be shown. If you have not seen any of the opening installments, start now, and be convinced that it is the greatest serial you have ever seen.

Next Week's Bill at the Pantages to Be Best Ever

Referring to the bill of vaudeville attractions that will be seen at the local Pantages Theatre during the coming week, one of the most widely known critics has the following to say. "Do not miss this week's bill at the Pantages; in my opinion, it is all that a vaudeville bill should be, it contains much cleverness, and much clean genuine fun."

The program is headed by George Primrose, the veteran minstrel and best soft shoe dancer that has ever appeared on any stage, and his company of all star minstrels to the number of seven. They will give a minstrel first part which contains much fun, good singing and clever dancing.

Jan Rubini, Sweden's young violin-virtuoso, will be another splendid attraction at the popular playhouse for the coming week. Rubini is one of the most gifted virtuosos Europe has produced of recent years.

Marlettes Marionettes will amuse with their number entitled "Stars from Toyland" in which some very amusing and clever bits are given.

Charles H. Smith will present a vaudeville travesty entitled, "Well, Well, Well," featuring Frederic Wallace and Dolly Lewis. "Well, Well, Well," is a clever burlesque on old time melodrama and some fine points are ludicrous to say the least.

A breath of old lace and lavender will be given by Alice Hamilton, the quaint comedienne who will entertain with songs and stories.

Finlay, Barton and Hill will offer vaudeville a la mode which is replete with amusing features.

The thirteenth episode of "The Fatal Ring" with the famous Pearl White will conclude a very interesting program of unequalled vaudeville.

SEVEN YEARS TORTURE

Nothing Helped Him Until He Took "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

ALBERT VARNER

Buckingham, Que., May 3rd, 1915.

For seven years, I suffered terribly from Severe Headaches and Indigestion. I had belching gas from the stomach, bitter stuff would come up into my mouth after eating, while at times I had nausea and vomiting, and had chronic Constipation. I went to several doctors and wrote to a specialist in Boston but without benefit. I tried many remedies but nothing did me good. Finally, a friend advised "Fruit-a-tives". I took this grand fruit medicine and it made me well. I am grateful to "Fruit-a-tives", and to everyone who has miserable health with Constipation and Indigestion and Bad Stomach, I say take "Fruit-a-tives", and you will get well".

Y.M.C.A. "Huts" Near European Battle Front Prove the Greatest Boon

"It Isn't Any Religion; It's Just Christianity" Idle Remark of Soldier Hit Nail on the Head

What revolutions the old war makes! Not only has it changed our daily menus, our mode of dress, our thoughts, and the family circle, but it is even attempting to remodel our first childhood prayer—the hitherto incomparable, "Now I lay me down to sleep."

A little mother down in Texas has revamped the familiar old lines to read: "I pray the Lord my rookies to keep. Keep them safe on sea and land. Keep them safe from the immoral band, and if they die for their country's sake, I pray the Lord their souls to take. And at Thy throne present to Thee, the Stars and Stripes, for Peace and Liberty."

Take out that one line, "Keep them safe from the immoral band—" and it sounds the keynote of the aims and purposes of the Young Men's Christian Association in the present war. Much has been written and read about the work of the association already over on the firing line. Americans have marveled, admired and commended the service of the men and women who have worked for the Red Triangle, the ensignium which has become one of the most outstanding facts brought to world-consciousness by this great war. To those that know, the red cross and the red triangle have been mentally combined into a design denoting peace, comfort, care and love.

What the Soldiers Think of Y.M.C.A.

Now that America has found it necessary to enter the conflict, so the American associations must enter. Surely our citizens do not have to be told the importance and the need of "huts," whether at home or abroad. Read letters from the trenches which are full of praise for these institutions. Tommy's answers to the question of their service leave no doubt: "We'd have died." "It's the whole thing." This is the one place where we can for a time forget." "You Y.M. C.A. blokes have struck it all right." "It was worth while becoming a soldier to discover what the Y. M. C. A. is doing," and so on. And Tommy has thought the thing out, too.

One khaki-clad fellow was heard to ask: "What religion is this Y. M. C. A., Bill?" The answer, "It isn't any religion, it's just Christianity," was truer than Bill really knew.

Therefore we do not have to be convinced of the worth of this gigantic undertaking but, like everything else in the way of preparedness, interest and support must be solicited, and once secured, maintained As the state of Washington has been selected as a site for one of the largest military cantonments in the United States the people of that state should know something not only of the national work of this organization, but of the work at American Lake, and in the different cities.

Excellent Wrok on Mexican Border

The work which the Y. M. C. A. was able to do among the men down at the Mexican border was productive of such splendid results that President Wilson asked the organization to become a regular part of the active service during the present war. Letters and telegrams from Secretary Baker and Secretary Daniels are on file in every association office asking that particular unit to speed up its plans. According to a report given by Geo. W. Perkins, chairman of the finance committee of the national war work council of the Young Men's Christian associations of the United States at a meeting of the council's executive committee in New York last month sufficient gifts and pledges will soon be in hand to open up work overseas with American troops, as well as activities in the more than 200 centers which the association will operate in this country.

The council asked $3,000,000 for its work in May this year. By June 1 the required sum had been pledged. The early part of July the fund totaled $4,500,000 and it is expected that by September another $500,000 will have been added. It is, however, estimated that the expenses this year will approach the $6,000,000 mark.

Already 150 Buildings Started

Mr. Perkins also stated:

"At over 150 points army and navy association work has been begun already in large tents for temporary use or in substantial wooden structures erected for the purpose. The 32 great military communities to be established soon for the national guard and national army will each contain not only an association headquarters building and a large auditorium for great assemblies and entertainments, but also from five to eight commodious and well-equipped structures, each of which will be a social center for about 5,000 men. Forty-one buildings are already completed and in use, and 63 additional buildings are under construction, besides 37 army and navy Y. M. C. A. buildings provided by the government or rented.

"Equipment is also being forwarded to central distributing points in the various military departments. Some idea of the quantity of equipment and supplies required may be had from the fact that in addition to average shipments of a third of a million of notebeads daily there are going forward eight carloads in anticipation of the increased need after the opening of the national guard and national army camps. This provision of free correspondence facilities, by the way, is one of the most appreciated conveniences afforded by the association in camp The red triangle, which is the Y. M. C. A. official emblem, is becoming known in thousands of homes to which are going daily the letters written at association buildings in response to the kindly suggestion of the big sign, 'Don't forget to write home.'

"About 300 secretaries have been sent into camps already and many more are under appointment, over 300 of whom are taking special short-term training courses particularly designed to acquaint men with the methods of army association work.

AMERICAN AMBULANCE BOYS AT FRONT

Subs "Get" Many Shiploads of Supplies

"Thirty secretaries have been sent to France with the expeditionary forces, accompanied by large shipments of necessary equipment and supplies; a large consignment of supplies was lost when the Kansan was sunk by a submarine. The association activities in France with our own troops will parallel the work of British and colonial secretaries with their troops."

The object of the canteen is not to feed the men, but rather to provide for their social needs. This means that there should be soda fountains, hot and cold drinks, buns and cakes, and chocolates. In a hut serving a camp of 3,000 to 4,000 men there is ordinarily served in one day 250 to 300 gallons of hot drinks. The huts are, of course, open to all the men in uniform without charge. All that they have to pay for is billiards and for food and drink over the counter.

It will interest many to know that in Caillan's 25 huts in Rouen his cash takings in the canteen are now $54,000 per month. Nearly all these sales are of articles costing a penny or half penny, Thus it will be seen what a tremendous social center the canteen is.

Speaking of athletics, along comes A. M. Grilley, associate secretary of the national war work council of the Y. M. C. A. in charge of recreation and physical activities, with a new plan. Before we come to his scheme, here is a story which will persuade some of the doubtful ones as to the place of athletics in the life of our soldiers.

The battle of Vimy Ridge tore a great hole in the ranks of the Canadian forces. All day the boys from the land of the maple leaf had crawled up that old hill behind a curtain of fire. Consequently it was a sorry, tired and exhausted handful that tramped back that night. Men rushed out from the canteens and huts with hot chocolate and coffee, but no, the poor fellows only wanted bats and baseballs. A half hour spent in this game was seemingly the only thing in the world that revived and remanned them. After all, these soldiers are but mere boys and footballs, volley balls and bats and gloves do more to win a battle than most of us realize.

Now we are ready for Mr. Grilley.

"Heretofore," asserts Mr. Grilley, "it always has been that athletics were undertaken by a few stars, men who had especial ability in their line and who were capable of making new records or equalling old ones. The average men, unable to compete with these stars, were compelled to become spectators. To my way of thinking, this is all wrong. I have evolved a plan by which I hope to interest whole companies of enlisted men in enjoying athletic sports, to make it a pleasure for them to get into the game.

Athletics' Tremendous Part

"I intend that the 'dub' shall have as good a time out of it and receive as much benefit as the star. The trouble is they don't understand the game, and consequently do not play it. It is my intention to appeal to them all, to get them interested in athletics. All that is necessary is to teach them. You have seen men step up to the line to make a broad jump. The seasoned athlete goes to the line, swings his arms and leaps. He does it without hesitation because he knows how to do it. Then along comes the man who hasn't jumped before. He steps to the line in a hesitating manner. He swings his arms, hesitates and in most cases refuses to jump. It isn't that he doesn't want to jump, but he doesn't know how, and he doesn't want to make a failure. So he quits and loses all the pleasure of the game.

"It is just this that we aim to correct by teaching all the enlisted men a knowledge of athletics. We don't intend that they shall all be stars and go out and create new records. Far from it. We want them to learn the sport for the sport's sake and for their own good.

"It is not my intention to get athletis coaches to train or teach the men. As long as I can get ernest fellows with the power of organization I am sure that our work will be done in a satisfactorwy manner. We are going to make athletics interesting and profitable. We are to work in conjunction with the regular army officers.

"We realize that our opportunities are great, that with the thousands of men that will be assembled in the trainng camps we will have a mammoth job on our hands, but already we have had many volunteer to help in the work. We have men who know athletics who have approved our plans and who will teach the men just as we want them taught. We are going after re-creation first and recreation afterwards."

Problems of Spokane Association

The Spokane association not only has before it the problems as outlined by the national war council and Secretary Baker, but it also must face the problems of conducting a program fitted to the needs of local enlisted men. The fact that the government is using Fort Wright as an assembly point and training centre for new recruits, places the Spokane association in a position where it is able to do a considerable amount of work with the soldiers. A soldier's uniform or evidence that a young man has enlisted, is good for a pass to all the privileges afforded regular members. During the month of July between 600 and 700 men took advantage of the privilege which the Y.M.C.A. offers.

However, along with the advent of 600 and 700 non-paying members comes the loss of 600 regular members which in other words, means that the income has decreased while the expenditures have grown enormously. Spokane's quota of the $3,000,000 was rated at $6000, $5100 of which has already been raised. It has been the feeling of the men in charge of the local organization that they should not ask the public for money when there were so many other important calls for help. What has been done and given has been given privately. However, the home fires must be kept burning, and we must remember that there are the same splendid arguments for the institution over on First avenue as there are for those at American Lake or in France. To be truly appropriate we should have saved the little Texan mother's prayer for the end of our story, but having once used it all that can be done now is to heartily indorse its sweet sentiment.

HOW TO SEND THAT PARCEL TO FRANCE

Postal Authorities Issue Special Instructions on Parcel Post to the Front.

It sometimes happens that parcels sent to the boys at the front reach there after they have left for home or "gone west" or been transferred elsewhere. For this reason the postal authorities wish that a second address be placed upon all parcels so that they may be returned to the sender or given to someone else whom they will benefit. The following instructions have been sent to the postmasters:

Parcels for Canadian Expeditionary Forces Overseas

Parcels addressed to members of the Canadian expiditionary forces overseas should bear the name and address of a second addressee to whom the parcel may be delivered or forwarded if it should prove impossible to deliver it to the first. The original address should be written on the front of the parcel where the postage stamps and customs declaration are affixed, and the second or alternative address should be written on the back of the parcel.

If a second address is not furnished at the time of posting, and delivery cannot be affected, the contents of the parcel, unless of exceptional value or of a personal nature will be turned over to the military authorities for distribution.

Parcels containing articles of a personal nature or of special value will be returned, if a request for their return in case of non-delivery is made by the sender, such request to be written on the cover of the parcel at the time of posting.

This plan is being adopted at the suggestion of the British post office which states that the present procedure of holding undeliverable parcels at the dead letter office until instructions are received as to their disposal is resulting in the waste of a large quantity of perishable foodstuffs which form the contents of 90 per cent of parcels addressed to soldiers.

I Wish I Were a Very Rich Man

I would buy a tremendous edition of Mr. Bachelor's THE LIGHT IN THE CLEARING and present it to every young man and woman I know—thus spoke one of Philadelphia's honored citizens to his bookseller concerning

The LIGHT in the CLEARING

By IRVING BACHELLER
Author of Eben Holden

The book that by its continued and uninterrupted demand shows every sign of permanence is The Light in the Clearing, by Irving Bacheller. This is because it pictures greatly a great time in the life and history of our country, does it simply, humanly, and humorously.

The people who live in it are the sturdy sons and daughters of freedom; the life portrayed is the life of toil and thrift and brave good-cheer; the theme is loyalty, integrity and the preservation of high ideals in the face of all temptations—the simple, yet lofty language of the literature that is universal and imperishable.

Entertainment and inspiration are in its pages; kindliness and humor abound, and it is as it should be, the novel of the hour.

CALGARY PUBLIC MARKET

The Calgary Public Market, perhaps better known as the City Public Market, has inaugurated a Department under the supervision of a bonded official of the City where the farmer or producer can ship in consignments of live or dressed poultry, butter, eggs and vegetables, having same sold in open market to the best possible advantage. All produce is handled on 5 and 10% commission basis with prompt returns.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION WRITE OR PHONE THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE CALGARY PUBLIC MARKET

SALE OF TAX CERTIFICATES

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the Treasurer of the City of Calgary, at his office at the City Hall, Calgary, on and after the 21st day of November, 1917, will sell to the first applicant Certificates of Delinquency for unpaid taxes levied or assessed prior to the 1st day of January, 1916, on the land included in the list—printed copies of which may be had on personal or written application to the Treasurer or City Clerk, City Hall, Calgary,—if such taxes, with interest and costs, are not sooner paid.

WHY TAX CERTIFICATES ARE AN ATTRACTIVE INVESTMENT

They take priority as security on real estate over mortgages and other encumbrances.

They may bear interest at 10 per centum per annum, preference being given to the tender offering to purchase a certificate at the lowest rate of interest.

They cannot be redeemed within one year unless the holder is paid the total amount thereof, plus one-tenth of such amount

If unredeemed within three years, the holder, by simple procedure, can sell the property to recoup himself the amount thereof, with interest borne by the certificate, plus subsequent taxes paid by the purchaser or holder, with interest thereon at 10 per centum per annum, plus all costs, and if no sale, title to the property may be obtained.

They bear the guarantee of the City that if set aside by the Court for any reason, the City will pay the holder the amount thereof, plus 6 per centum per annum.

For fuller particulars, including the method of tendering, prospective purchasers are invited to obtain and read the introduction contained in the printed list.

DEAFNESS AND NOISES IN THE HEAD can now be most certainly cured by the newly discovered "French Orlene." This new remedy goes right to the actual seat of the trouble, and effects a complete and lasting cure in a few days.

One box is ample to cure any ordinary case, and has given almost immediate relief in hundreds of cases which had been considered "hopeless."

Mr. D. Borthwick, of Dalbeattie, N.B., writes: "Your new remedy, which I received from you some time ago, HAS COMPLETELY CURED MY HEARING AFTER MORE THAN TWENTY YEARS DEAFNESS. I will be pleased to recommend it to all my friends."

Scores of other equally good reports.

A CLEVER BOY

Donald Mitchell is a genius. He is only fourteen, nevertheless he constructed a boys auto out of the scrap on his father's place. He took the front wheels from an old bicycle, the rear wheels from a motor-cycle, and fished the makings of dashboard, floor and seat from the family wood-pile. When he was through he had a sure-enough automobile which would do thirty miles an hour, and had cost him scarcely $35.

The wooden frame, reinforced by strap iron and steel, and the wheel supports which are young Mitchell's own ideas, have proved both practical and succesful. The machine is propelled by a rubber belt attached to the motor shaft and the motor cycle wheels. No brake 's on the machine. The steering wheel, of the type used on the regular cycle car, is the only article shipped from the factory for use in the manufacture of the car.

BOYISH INTEREST

For some reason the Sunday school class had become interested in Methuselah. At their urgent request the teacher related all the authentic information recorded in the Bible about that amazing man; also various anecdotes gleaned from less reliable sources. In conclusion she said:

"Now, is that all? Are there any further questions you would like to ask about Methuselah?"

"I'd like to know," said the most interested youngster of the lot, "where all his birthday presents are buried!"

AND SHE SO YOUNG!

"Now," said the lady to the new servant, as they passed before an extensive row of masculine portraits, "you must be very careful when dusting these. They are old masters."

Mary's jaw fell and an awestruck look came over her face.

"Lor! mum," she gasped, "who'd ever 'ave thought that you'd been married all these times?"

A BILLET-DOUX

When I've tucked away the nippers
an' I've finished wiping up,
An' I've set the mugs and saucers
on the tray,
I draine the little teapot in my old man's favorite cup,
An' I 'as a sit—the first I've 'ad all day.
I takes the ink an' paper an' the cross-nibbed pen as well,
A letter to my soldier man to send.
I never was no scholar an' I don't know how to spell,
But—'e'll understand the crosses at the end.

I tells 'im baby's growin' she's gettin'

I've breeched young Perce, 'is swank
'ud make you laugh;
Old Mrs. Rigg pipped off last week,
the funeral was grand;
Young Brown's been on the booze
again, not 'alf!
My scrawl is something chronic, an'
there's lots o' blots an' smears,
I say, I 'ope 'is cough is on the

I can't find words to tell 'im all the

But—'e'll understand the crosses at

WIT AND WITTY SAYINGS

The old miser in the story, who dropped a five-dollar gold piece in the plate at church, mistaking it for a nickle, could get no great satisfaction out of the deacon, as will be recalled, but he was not the man to give up easily.

Accordingly he sought legal advice with a view of instituting a suit at law.

But the lawyer whom he consulted was one of those rare and gifted souls who would rather be witty than rich, or almost anything else, for that matter.

"Sir," said he at once, "you have no case. You are guilty of contributory negligence."

Gay little silk handkerchiefs are tucked into the pockets of gay little smock blouses.

TEN MILLION YEARS AGO IN CANADA

(1) Prof. Walcott, discoverer of the Fossil Beds at Field, B.C.
(2) Climbing into the undiscovered past.

PROF. CHARLES D. WALCOTT, of the Smithsonian Institute, has discovered a deposit of extremely valuable fossils of early marine life on Mount Field, overlooking Emerald Lake Chalet and the beautiful Yoho Valley in the Canadian Pacific Rockies. Far up over Burgess Pass, at an altitude of nine thousand feet, where the tourists in the fashionable summer hotels and camps can barely hear the boom of the blasts as he quarries down to the fossil bearing shale, the professor has been securing some wonderful specimens of sea life of over ten million years ago. These are of the period when life was just emerging from the jelly-fish stage into an era where a bony structure was becoming apparent. Dying, they were deposited in the mud of the ocean bottom that has since hardened into rock, and been raised to the snow-covered mountain top.

The strata of fossil-bearing rock discovered by Professor Walcott is of much earlier age than any in the surrounding mountains, and has, he says, been pushed up over the newer formations for a distance over twenty-five miles.

The fossils were discovered by Prof. Walcott while travelling over Burgess Pass, a peculiar formation in a piece of shale attracting his attention. He followed up the shale slide almost to the top of Mount Field, and finally located its source, far above the timber line. The workings are very peculiar, because of their height, and are probably the only ones of their kind in the world. Some of the specimens taken out are so perfect that Prof. Walcott has been able to determine what they ate just before they were buried in the mud over ten million years ago.

FATHER OF THE BRITISH TANKS
Col. E. D. Swinton—as promoter of the tanks he has won renown.

PUTTING IT MILDLY

A preacher was describing the "bad place" to a congregation of naval cadets.

"Friends," he said, "you've seen molten iron running out of a funace, haven't you? It comes out white hot, zizzling and hissing. Well——"

The preacher pointed a long lean finger at the lads.

"Well," he continued, "they use that stuff for ice cream in the place I have been speaking of."

"KAZAN"

Sandy had taken the precaution of bringing a thick club along with the babiche. He picked it up from where he had dropped it in the sand. Kazan's strength had fairly returned to him now. He was no longer dizzy. The mist had cleared away from his eyes. Before him he saw once more his old enemy, man—man and his club. All of the wild ferocity of his nature was aroused in an instant Wihtout reasoning he knew that Gray Wolf was gone, and this man was accountable for her going. He knew that this man had also brought him his own hurt, and what he ascribed to the man he also attributed to the club. In his newer undertaking of things born of freedom and Gray Wolf, Man and Club were one and inseparatable. With a snarl he leaped at Sandy. The man was not expecting a direct assualt and before he could raise his club or spring aside Kazan had landed full on his chest. The muzle about Kazan's jaws saved him. Fangs that would have torn his throat open snapped harmlessly. Under the weight of the dog's body he fell back, as if struck down by a catapault.

As quick as a cat he was on his feet again with the end of the babiche twisted several times around his hand. Kazan leaped again and this time he was met with a furious swing of the club. It smashed against his shoulder and sent him down in the sand. Before he could recover Sandy was upon him, with all the fury of a man gone mad. He shortened the babiche by twistng it again and again abut his hand and the club rose and fell with the skill of one long accustomed to its use. The first blows only served to add to Kazan's hatred of men' and the ferocity and fearlessness of his attacks. Agai n and again he leaped in, and each time the club fell upon him with a force that threatened to break his bones. There was a tense hard look about Sandy's mouth. He had never known a dog like this before, and he was a bit nervous, even with Kazan muzzled. Three times Kazan's fangs would have sunk deep in his flesh had it not been for the abtche. And if the thongs about his jaws should slip, or break—

Sandy followed up the thought with a smashing blow that landed on Kazan's head, and once more the old battler fell limp upon the sand. McTrigger'es breath was coming in quick gasps He was almost winded. Not until the club slipped from his hand did he realize how desperate the fight had been. Before Kazan recovered from the blow that had stunned him Sandy examined the muzle and strengthened it by ading another babiche thong. Then he draged Kazan to a log that high water had thrown up on the shore a few yards away and made dneehtheof hrdhrdhrdrd and made the end of the babiche rope fast to a dead snag. After that he pulled his canoe up higher on the sand, and began to prepare camp for the night.

For some minutes after Kazan's stuned senses had become normal he lay motionless, watching Sandy McTriger. Every bone in his body gave him pain. His jaws were sore and bleeding. His uper lip was smashed where the club had fallen. One eye was almost closed. Several times Sandy came near, much pleased at that he regarded as the god results of the beating. Each time he brought the club. Several times herdhrdhrddd the club. The third time he proded Kazan with it, and the dog snarled and snapped savagely at it. That was what Sandy wanted—it was an old old trick of the dog-slaver. Instantly he was using the club again, until with a whining cry Kazan slunk under the protection of the snag to which he was fastened. He could scarcely drag himself. His right forepaw was smashed. His hindquarters sank under him. For a time after this second beating he could not have escaped had he been free.

Sandy was in unusually good humor. "I'll take the devil out of you all right," he told Kazan for the twentieth time "There's nothing like beating the mark. A month from now, you'll in's to make dogs an' wimin live up to be worth two hundred dollars or I'll skin you alive."

Three or four times before dusk Sandy worked to rouse Kazan's animosity. But there was no longer any desire left in Kazan to fight. His two terific beatings and the crushing blow of the bullet against his skull had made him sick. He lay with his head between his forepaws, his eyes closed, and did not see McTrigger. He paid no attention to the meat that was thrown under his nose. He did not know when the last of the sun sank behind the western forests, or when the darkness came. But at last something roused him from his stupor. To his dazed and sickened brain it came like the call from out of the far past, and he raised his head and listened. Out on the sand McTrigger had built a fire, and the man stood in the red glow of it now, facing the dark shadows beyond the shoreline. He, too, was listening. What had roused Kazan came again now—the lost mourning cry of Gray Wolf far out on the plain.

With a whine Kazan was on his feet tuging at the babiche. Sandy snatched up his club and leaped toward him.

"Down you brute!" he commanded. In the firefight the club rose and fell with ferocious quickness. When McTrigger returned to the fire he was breathing hard again. He tosed his club beside the blankets he had spread out for a bed. It was different looking club now. It was covered with blod and hair.

"Guess that'll take the spirit out of him," he chuckled. "It'll do that—or kill'im"

Several times that night Kazan heard Gray Wolf's call. He whined softly in response, fearing the club. He watched the fire until the last embers of it died out, and then cautiously dragged himself from under the snag. Two or three times he tried to stand on his feet, but felt back each time. His legs were not broken, but the pain of standing on them was excruciating. He was hot and feverish. All that nigth he had craved a drink of water. When Sandy crawled from between his blankets in the early dawn he gave him both meat and water. Kazan drank the water but would not touch the meat. Sandy regarded the change in him with satisfaction. By the time the sun was up he had finished his breakfast and was ready to leave. He aproached Kazan fearlessly now, now with out the club. Untying the babiche he draged the dog to the canoe. Kazan slunk in the sand while his captor fastened the end of the hide rope to the stern of the canoe. Sandy grined. What was about to hapen would be fun for him. In the Yukon he had learned how to take the spirit out of dogs.

He pushed off bow foremost. Bracing himself with his paddle he then began to pull Kazan toward the water. In a few moments Kazan stood with his forefeet planted in the damp sand at the edge of the stream. For a brief interval Sandy allowed the babiche to fall slack. Then with a sudden powerful pull he jerked Kazan out into the water. Instantly he sent the canoe into midstream, swung it quickly down with the current, and began to paddle enough to keep the babiche taut about his victim's neck. In spite of his sickness and injuries Kazan was now compelled to swim to keep his head above water. In the wash of the canoe, and with Sandy's strokes growing steadily stronger, his position became each moment one of increasing torture. At times his shaggy head was pulled completely under water. At others Sandy would wait until he drifted alongside and then thrust him under with the end of his paddle. He grew weaker. At the end of a half-mile he was drowning. Not until then did Sandy pull him into the canoe. The dog fell limp and gasping in the bottom. Brutal though Sandy's methods had been they had worked his purpose. InKazan there was no longer a desire to fight. He no longer struggled for freedom. He knew that this man was his master, and for the time his spirit was gone. All he desired now was to be allowed to lie in the bottom of the canoe, out of reach of the club, and safe from the water. The club lay between him and the man. The end of it was within a foot or two of his nose, and what he smelled was his own blood.

For five days and nights the journey down-stream continued, and McTrigger's process of civilizing Kazan was continued in three more beatings with the club, and another resort to the water torture. On the morning of the sixth day they reached Red Gold City, and McTrigger put up his tent close to the river. Somewhere he obtained a chain for Kazan, and after fastening the dog securely back of the tent he cut off the babiche muzzle.

"You can't put on meat in a muzzle," he tild his prisoner. "An' I want you to get strong—an' fierce as hell. I've got an idea. It's an idee you can lick your weight in wildcats. We'll pull off a stunt pretty soon that'll fill our pockets with dust. I've done it before and we can do it here. Wolf an' dog—S'elp me Gawd but it'll be a drawin' card!"

Twice a day after this he brought fresh raw meat to Kazan. Quickly Kazan's spirit and courage returned to him. The soreness left his limbs. His battered jaws healed. And after the fourth day each time that Sandy came with meat he greeted him with the challange of his snarling fangs. McTrigger did not beat him now. He gave him no fish, no tallow and meal—nothing but raw meat. He traveled five miles up the river to bring in the fresh entrail of a caribou that had been killed. One day Sandy brought another man with him and when the stranger came a step too near Kazan made a sudden swift lunge at him. The man jumped back with a startled oath.

"He'll do," he growled. "He's lighter by ten or fifteen pounds than the Dane, but he's got teeth, an' the quickness, an' he'll give a good show before he goes under."

"I'll make you a bet of twenty-five per cent. of my share that he don't go under," offered Sandy.

"Done!" said the other. "How long before he's ready?"

Sandy thought a moment.

"Another week," he said. "He won't have his weight before then." A week from today, we'll say. Next Thursday night. Does that suit you Harker?"

Harker nodded.

"Next Tuesday night," he agreed. Then he added, "I'll make it a half of my share that the Dane kills your wolf-dog."

Sandy took a long look at Kazan.

"I'll just take you on that," he said. Then as he shook Harker's hand, "I don't believe thee's a dog between here and the Yukon that can kill the wolf!"

CHAPTER XXIII
Professor McGill

Red Gold City was ripe for a right of relaxation. There had been some gambling a few fights and enough liquor to create excitement now and then but the presence of the mounted police had served to keep things unusually tame compared with events a few hundred miles farther north, in the Dawson country. The entertainment proposed by Sandy McTrigger and Jan Harker met with excited favor. The news spread for twenty miles about Red Gold City and there had never been greater excitement in the town than on the afternoon and night of the big fight. This was largely because Kazan and the huge Dane had been placed on exhibition, each dog in a specially made cage of his own. and a fever of betting began. Three hundred men, each of whom was paying five dollars to see the battle, viewed the gladiators through the bars of their cages. Harker's dog was a combination of Great Dane and mastiff, born in the North and bred to the traces. Betting favored him by the odds two to one. At these odds there was plenty of Kazan money. Those who were risking their money on him were the older wilderness men—men whe had spent their lives among dogs and who knew what the red glint in Kazan's eyes meant. An old Kootenay miner spoke low in another's ear.

"I'd bet on 'im even, I'd give odds if I had to. He'll fight all around the Dane. The Dane won't have no method."

"But he's got the weight," said the his shoulders—"

"An' his big feet, an' his soft throat, an' the clumsy thickness of his belly," interrupted the Kootenay man. "For Gawd's sake man take my word for it, an' don't put your money on the Dane!"

Others thrust themselves between them. At first Kazan had snarled at all these faces about him. But now he lay back against the boarded side of the cage and eyed them sullenly from between his forepaws.

The fight was to be pulled off in Harker's place, a combination saloon and cafe. The benches and tables had been cleared out of the centre of the one big room a cage ten feet square rested on a platform three and a half feet from the floor. Seats for the three hundred spectators were drawn closely around this. Suspended just above the open top of the cage were two big oil lamps with glass reflectors.

Rheumatism

A Home Cure Given by One Who had It

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar, but understand I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write today.

For MAYOR of CALGARY

M. C. COSTELLO

My platform and my policies are still the same—The people's platform and the people's policy.

I do not believe in radical measures when conciliatory methods may be employed.

What has been good enough to make progress in the past is good enough for the present.

I ask your endorsement on the platform that has meant good business management for the City of Calgary for three terms.

M. C. COSTELLO

Candidate for Alderman

Bowing to the insistent demand of a large and influential delegation of rate-payers, W. Brooks Waters, prominent Calgary barrister, consented to run as Aldermanic candidate in the forthcoming municipal elections. Until the moment of the delegation Mr. Waters had no intention of entering the race for aldermanic honors, but after hearing several spokesmen on behalf of the delegation, consented to become a candidate, notwithstanding the fact that the duties of alderman will call for considerable sacrifice of time from his personal effairs.

Mr. Waters is one of the younger business men of the city, who by honesty and square dealing in connection with his own profession, has established confidence in a large following who are anxious to see him take a seat at the council during the coming year when many weighty matters are slated to be dealt with in the realm of civic business and finance.

Mr. Waters was particularly fortunate in having had a splendid business and financial experience previous to entering upon his academic carper. In 1905 he travelled Canada and the United States in the interests of the Canadian Manufacturer, a leading Canadian business journal, and his work on this paper attracted such attention that he was sent to Montreal the following year by the McLean publishing company, limited, as eastern manager of the Financial Post Later he was associated with S. R. Tarr, Winnipeg, in the organization of Western Canada's first financial journal, Canadian Finance, and it was during a tour of Western Canada in the interests of this journal that he picked upon Calgary as the city offering the best opportunities in which to commence the practice of his profession.

Mr. Waters is a member of Alberta Lodge number 1, I.O.O.F., and his supporters believe that they have picked in him a young man who is a sure winner and one who will bring to the council a valuable business, legal and [illegible] these qualifications are urgently needed, in the conduct of the city's affairs.

Mr. Waters is a strong advocate of a pure water supply for the city, is opposed to the payment of aldermanic salaries during the war, and intends to endeavor to lower the burden on the taxpayer by obtaining for the city of Calgary, a fair share of all police court fines and license fees, including a half share of the unearned increment on land instead of allowing these to go in their entirety to the provincial government.

Among those who are courting the pleasure of the public at the election is Mrs. Fred Langford, one of the real old-time residents of the city. She has practically grown up with the city, having been a Calgarian for over 20 years. Mrs. Langford is an educationalist of high degree. She attained the degree of arts in Mount Allison university of which institution her father was a professor. She has taken a strong stand in all matters of public interest which would help the cause of womanhood in Alberta. Her endeavors in the childrens realm have been such that she holds a commission in the juvenile courts of Alberta which position she has held for some time. She has also been vice-president of the Alberta W. C. T. U. for a number of years.

Mrs. Langford is a vigorous, aggressive worker, always putting her whole forceful being into any enterprise in which she has taken part. There is no doubt she deserves a place on our school board for 1918 and if she receives her just reward from Calgarians on Monday, we would not be surprised if she heads the poll.

WHEAT MARKET REMAINS PRACTICALLY UNCHANGED

Thompson of Winnipeg Issues Comprehensive Data on the Present Market.

(Thompson, Sons & Co.)

The situation in wheat is unchanged on the week. The interior movement in the United States and Canada amounts to only two thirds of the quantity moving last year at this time. Including seven interior centers of accumulation in the United States and Winnipeg the receipts for the week ending December 1, have been 8,220 cars compared with 12,347 cars received in same week of 1916. Total stocks of wheat at Minneapolis, the largest flour milling center in the world, show a decrease of 28 070 bushels for the week ending December 1, against an increase of 510,836 bushels in the same week last year, and the total stocks in that great milling center are only 589,807 bushels, against 10,655 583 bushels a year ago. Millers in America are not getting enough wheat to enable them to keep their mills going to the extent of filling all the orders they can get for flour. The making of barley flour is increasing and the mills at Minneapolis are now turning out about 550 barrels of barley flour daily. The United States visible supply of wheat decreased last week 182.000 bushels, compared with a decrease last year of 1,236.000 bushels, and the total now stands at 21,031 000 bushels, against 62,022.000 bushels a year ago. The Canadian visible supply on the other hand increased 824.936 bushels, on the week, compared with a decrease of 165,620 bushels last year, and now stands at 25,364.849 bushels against 25,683.000 bushels a year ago. The world's shipments of wheat (and flour figured as wheat) from exporting countries to those countriess which can import at the present time, were last week 7,003,000 bushels, against 7,102.600 bushels the previous week, and 9,654,000 bushels the same week last year. Seven million bushels per week of imported wheat and flour are probably about sufficient to supply the allies requirements, when helped out with the admixtures of barley, corn oats and rice flour, and their own grain crops, and when the new Argentine wheat is shipped in February, supplies will be enlarged, unless sufficient ocean tonnage cannot be obtained. Crop prospects in the different wheat growing countries are very little changed on the week, perhaps if anything they are slightly improved, for the weather in Argentina where harvest is progressing is reported favorable, and in the United States winter wheat zone, rain in Texas and favorable weather in other parts give a better tone to reports. The weather reports from western Europe are unfavorable, the weather being mostly mild and wet, making conditions unsatisfactory for seasonable farm work, and it is feared that the acreage under wheat will not be as large as intended.

In our Winnipeg market there continues to be a good active demand for all the wheat offering, the government agents being the largest buyers. Receipts from the country while liberal, are falling behind what they were a year ago. Shipments east from Fort William and Port Arthur are large at 8,745,000 bushels last week, and stocks in store at these points suffered a reduction of 1.961.000 bushels on the and stand at 6.357,873 bushels, against 12,519,729 bushels a year ago. During he week the weather over the prairie provinces has settled down to bright and cold: the ground is now frozen over everywhere, and all plowing stopped until April comes around. It is expected that when the figures of acreage of fall plowing are published they will show a gratifying increase over what was previously anticipated.

Today's cash prices are No. 1, Nor. $2.21; No. 2, Nor., $2.18; No. 3, Nor., $2.15; No. 4, wheat $2.08; No. 5, $1.96; No 6, $1.87; Feed wheat $1,71.

OATS—During the week our oats market has been very firm. For some time back it has been seen that a large percentage of the oats coming forward were inspecting below contract grade. The contract grade for some years past has been No. 2 C.W., with the privilege to the seller of delivering No. 3 C.W. and extra 1 feed at 3c under 2 C.W. price. Roughly speaking two thirds of the receipts have been inspecting under these grades, mostly no grade tough and No's. 1 and 2 feed. This appeared to give speculative buyers some scope for bidding up prices on the future deliveries, and as mentioned in our last week's letter, there were rumors that the Board of Supervisors migh step in and regulate oats trading if prices continued to advance. This had the effect of staying further advance at the time, and the free selling by longs, caused a moderate decline in prices. The question has caused some agitation however, and the suggestion was made that Nos. 1 and 2 feed oats be admitted to apply on contracts for future delivery. This suggestion was taken up by the council of the exchange, and No. 1 feed was made contract at 6c under 2 C. W., and No. 2 feed at 9c under, so that now we have five grades of oats which can be applied in filling contract sales and it gives that much more scope to the line elevator companies and other buyers at country points to hedge their daily purchases by sales of future delivery. About the first of the month it was generally expected that oats were due for some decline in prices after the steep advance they made in the previous three weeks, (amounting to about 15c per bushel) and the increasing of the contract grades. The opposite, however has occurred, and yesterday instead of further decline there was a sharp advance, and this has been followed by another advance today making today's closing prices 3 1-2 to 1c over Saturday's close, and 4c to 4 1-2c over the closing prices of this day week. Oat prices are probably high enough for the present, but the situation is a strong one and we think here is good reason to expect even higher prices before next summer. Today's prices are: No. 2 C.W., 82c; No. 3 C.W., and extra 1 feed, 79 1-2c; No. 1 feed, 75c; No. 2 feed, 72c. Futures closed—December 80 1-2c; May, 80 3-4c.

BARLEY—There is a good steady demand for barley but prices are slightly easier than a week ago, except the May future, which is 2 1-2 cents higher. No. 3, $1.23; No. 4, $1.18; Rejected and feed $1.09. Futures closed—December $1.24; May, $1.29.

RYE—Rye is stronger and 3c higher on the week at $1.74 for No.2, C.W. rye.

FLAX—There has been a fair demand for flax but prices for cash and December delivery are lower, 4c and 6c down, respectively, while the May delivery has advanced 5c. Today's prices: No. 1, N.W., $3.03 1-2; No. 2, C.W., $2.96 1-2; Futures closed—December and May $2.98 1-2.

All prices quoted above are based on delivery in store at Fort William and Port Arthur.

Profit In Ewes Is Over One Hundred P.C.

In October, 1916, a flock of 100 grade ewes were purchased at public auction from the C. P. R. Department of Natural Resources at Coaldale, Alberta; 50 Shropshire shearling ewes at $11.75 apiece and 50 Merino three-year-olds at $9.50 apiece and a pure bred Shropshire ram at $42.50, also six old ewes at $6 apiece. To this really should be added the price of a second ram as the service of one was obtained from a neighbor who was planning to lamb around six weeks or so later than were we.

Cost of Wintering

A record of the cost of wintering was not attempted as they were pastured on the stubble fields and hay meadows most of the winter. The feed that was given them during the severer part of the winter was damaged hay and odds and ends of roughage that had little or no market value. The only class of feed given that would not be apt to be found on the ordinary farm was turnips. As we happened to have a surplus of these they were given a feed of sliced turnips daily for most of the winter. At lambing time a little grain was fed, also some hay of good quality. They were fed grain (barley and oats mixed) from time of lambing until turned out on grass. Each one probably received about one pound of grain and two pounds of hay daily at this time.

Dogs

The danger from dogs is very real when sheep are kept under farm conditions and usually the closer one is located to a town the greater becomes the menace. Stringent laws arranging for the destruction of dogs which are not kept under the owners' close supervision are most commendable. The Lethbridge station is only about three miles from the city of Lethbridge and consequently there are more stray dogs wandering about than might be the case in a farming community more remote from a large town.

One night in February the corral in which the ewes were confined at night was visited by two stray dogs. Their presence was not discovered until nearly daylight, and they succeeded in killing 12 ewes.

Lambing and Summering

The ewes started to lamb on March 25 and the 94 ewes left after the trouble from the dogs all had lambs, there being 118 born and 112 of these were saved.

The ewes and lambs were turned out on grass on May 13, having been shorn May 26, the average weight of fleece being 8.5 pounds. They had the run of about 18 acres of cultivated pasture grasses on the irrigated land and in addition about six or seven acres around a small artificial reservoir and on the canal bank. This supplied sufficient pasture until about the end of August when the feed became rather scarce. During the summer two ewes died, and nine lambs were killed by coyotes and dogs leaving at weaning time, October 1, 92 ewes and 103 lambs.

Financial Returns

The following statement gives the financial returns from the investment:

Total cost, 106 ewes	$1,098.50
Cost of one ram	42.50
Cost 4,300 lbs. grain	75.25
Cost of 4½ tons hay	40.50
Cost of shearing	11.40
	$1,268.15
Wool, 809 lbs. at 64c	$ 517.76
92 ewes (present value)	1,380.00
One ram (present value)	40.00
102 lambs (present value)	918.00
	$2 855.76
	$1,268.15
Profit	$1,587.61

In the above statement nothing is allowed for labor. This is an important item but will vary with circumstances. On a farm fenced with woven wire it will be reduced to a small amount. The destruction of weeds that will be accomplished by the presence of the sheep on a farm will go a long way to compensate for the labor involved in their care.

Be a Good Roads Booster

GOOD ROADS VITAL IN U. S. SAYS EXPERT

"Good roads should no longer be considered as a local matter," according to J. Walter Hainsworth, president of the Hainsworth Motor Company. "Every stretch of new road has a direct bearing on the outcome of the war. Every stretch of new road will have a great deal to do with the progress and prosperity of our United States after the war's duration.'

"The automobile is recognized as an economic need of the time. Automobile drivers are without question most enthusiastic about good roads, but every thinking person will quickly recognize that good roads are beneficial and necessary to the whole country.

"Mr. Hoover claims that food will win the war. We believe his statement true, but there is a powerfully big question involved in the transportation of the food. The government it is known, is manufacturing ammunition, guns of all kinds, air ships, submarines. This means a transportation problem.

After the War

"And after the war supplies of all kinds, food, building materials, almost everything one can think of will need to cross the country to ships that will carry it across the sea. The railroads are inadequate to meet this demand—and carry out the work of our own country at the same time. We already have thousands and thousands of automobiles, but lack the good roads that would make that method of transportation efficient.

"As a means of transportation and permanently cementing all parts of our land—3,000 miles across—nothing can take the place of good roads.

"People are loyal as true Americans ever have been. The Liberty Bonds the Red Cross the Hoover call all have been met squarely. This question of good roads should be recognized as an absolute requisite and every one to do their bit on the 2,000,000 miles or more of good roads needed, not as a local convenience, but as a contribution to our United States.

"Good roads—carefully built—last years and then would remain a memorial showing how great was the response of our people to the government's call for assistance and how nothing was left undone that would tend oward victory."

Farmers and Poultry Shippers

SPECIAL NOTICE

Hundreds of poultry shippers annually look to us to secure for them the highest possible prices for their poultry. It is impossible for us to get in touch personally with all poultry shippers and we take this opportunity to very strongly urge all shippers to market as much of their poultry as possible before December 15th, as indications point to a drop of 3c to 5c per pound, immediately following that date. Prices, we believe, are right at peak now and the sooner you ship the better. Do not however, ship skinny immature birds, and also save all the pullets and good layers you possibly can as everything points to high egg prices next year. We are paying the following prices, F.O.B. Calgary.

	Live	Dressed
Turkeys	22c-23c	26c-28c
Geese	15c-16c	18c-19c
Ducks	15c-16c	18c-19c
Fowl	15c-16c	18c-20c
Chickens	16c-18c	19c-21c

Dressed Poultry must be clean dry picked, bled through mouth, vents squeezed, head wrapped, feet washed, undrawn (not drawn), and all animal heat out of bird before packing. Ship by express so that birds will reach us if possible unfrozen. Mail advice promptly stating number of birds and weight. We make returns by cheque or bank order immediately on arrival.

Crates supplied on a liberal proposition. Write for your supply. Shippers' own crates returned day of arrival.

Address, Editor, Calgary Western Standard.

The King of Montenegro a Dramatist of Ability

In our day there have been two real royal playwrights. One and the most prolific of them, Carmen Sylva, was when the war began, Queen of Rumania. She wrote comedies and dramas of some merit which were performed on the Rumanian and German boards. The other who still lives is that King Nicolas—"Nikita"—whose throne the Austrains stole but yesterday.

Six years ago, on returning from Albania, I stopped at Cettinje. The first Maliseori rising had just ended. Crushed by the Ottomans, unheeded by the great Christain nations, the brave mountaineers had to die or flee. Podgoritza, on the border of Albania and Montenegro was crowded with refugees—wild, half-starved victims of oppression—to whom King Nicholas had extended hospitality. The Turks had sent the King an ulimatum giving him the option of abandoning the Albanians or fighting for them. While in theory Montenegro was a limited monarchy, in practice it was a benevolent despotism. Inview, however, of the urgent issue and what was involved a Council of Ministers had been convened in the King's Palace at which decision would be reached.

I had already booked my seat in the Cattaro motor bus, then (as now, no doubt,) the only means of transit between the Black mountains and Dalmatia. It seemed an unpropitious time for seeking an interview of the King. But, none the less, on arriving at Cettinje, I called at the palace—a big unpretending sructure of yellowish brick and stone, more like a provincial caravanserai than a royal residence—and presented an introduction with an application for an audience, to the Chamberlain. On learning that I was to leave next day he at first protested that I could not see his master. "His majesty is driving with the queen," said the chamberlain. "When he gets back he will sit down to dinner. At 9 or 10 o'clock he'll go to bed. And tomorrow, as you tell me, you must go?"

And then a bright idea occurred to me.

"King Nicholas," said I, "once wrote a play?"

"He did. What then?"

"That saves us," I replied. "Will you oblige me very much by telling his majesty that a critic from New York desires the privilege of making the acquaintance of the author of that play?"

"I understand," remarked the chamberlain.

We were strolling to and fro before the palace.

"Suppose we stay here till the king returns?" suggested the chamberlain. "We are all alone. His majesty will see us. At dinner he is sure to ask me to whom I was talking. And that may help things."

As it chanced, the king drove home by a back alley, walked through the kitchen to his dining room, and so did not see us waiting.

But something happened. For, a little later, at my hotel, I had an official letter from the chamberlain informing me that King Nicholas would receive me in the morning.

At 11 a.m. next day I drove to the palace, handed my credentials to an usher, and was admitted to an anteroom. Close by Nikita was in conference with his ministers. The whole future of the nation was at stake. On the decisions being made depended peace or war! Then, after a few minutes, I was shown into a larger room. The king soon joined me.

A fine, old, sturdy gentleman, turned seventy; with rugged features, a coarse mouth, and a good forehead. A heavy white moustache lent picturesqueness to a massive face, lit up by shrewd and rather kindly eyes. The dominating note was soldierly. Unlike his sons, of whom I had had glimpses as they passed me in their autos, he wore the national costume.

Nikita seemed oblivious of his ministers. He had forgotten the Malissori. Turks and Albanians had been shelved to oblige his visitor. Not 15 miles away his troops kept guard. Five miles beyond I had seen a Turkish camp. Avoiding politics at first, Nicholas plunged into literature. He spoke in faultless French—the French of a professor. His phrases were well turned. He had no accent. For, in his youth, he had lived long in Paris. He touched on Lamantaigne and eulogized Chateoubriand. From poetry we passed at last to drama. I wondered what those ministers were thinking.

"Yes," said the king. "I have written plays myself. One, the best known, has been produced at the Royal theater here. It is a drama called 'The Empress of the Balkans.' The heroine was suggested by my wife."

I knew nothing of "The Empress of the Balkans." But it seemed courteous to inquire if the king would not like to have the work performed in France or England or America. The question seemed to change Nikita instantly from the ruler of a brave and restless land into an author. As I watched him I could see that he was saying himself, "Ha! this stranger wants the rights to my great play." For the moment he appeared to have forgotten peace and war, the Albanian refugees, the Turkish menace. His mind was fixed on one clear point, his drama.

He gave me a long, searching look, as if to ask, "How do I know if he could do me justice in a foreign tongue?" And then he said, with wonderful precision:

"Cela depend! Poets, like women, are coy."

I dropped the subject. But the king went back to it. He gave me a copy of his play in Montenegrin (which resembles Serb or Russian). He also favored me with his autographed photograph. Being now in high good spirits, he obliged me quite spontaneously with his opinion on the still impending crisis. To my distress, I found he had resolved to avoid war, for the time, and drop the Albanian cause.

Before departing from Cettinje I borrowed a German translation of "The Empress of the Balkans" from the chamberlain. It did not make me very anxious to adapt the play for Broadway. So far as I could judge, the royal drama lacked imaginative charm. It had been written, in fair verse, under the influence of Schiller. It had no "punch." But with the help of Henry Blossom or Guy Bolton it might have proved the germ of a good musical comedy.

As I rode down the high hills and passed Mount Lovchen, on my way to Cattaro, I drew the moral of my talk with the old warrior. I recalled the stories I had heard of the great fights in which Nikita had won glory. I thought of him as the strange, simple shepherd-king who, even during my sojourn at Cettinje, had sat on the doorstep of his palace, day by day, administering justice to his people. The readiness with which he had received me, in a historic hour, neglecting affairs of state—to him of vital moment—to discuss plays, confirmed what we all know to be the truth.

There is no vanity so deep as that of authorship—no passion in the world so all-compelling as the ambition of a dramatist.

Various Forms Of Headache

"It is necessary in order to treat headaches properly to understand the causes which produce the affection," says Dr. J. W. Ray, of Blockton, Ala. Continuing, he says, "Physicians cannot even begin the treatment of a disease without knowing what causes give rise to it, and we must remember that headache is to be treated according to the same rule. We must not only be particular to give a remedy intended to counteract the cause which produces the headache, but we must also give a remedy to relieve the pain until the cause of the trouble has been removed. To answer this purpose anti-kamnia tablets will be found a most convenient and satisfactory remedy. One tablet every one to three hours gives comfort and rest in the most severe cases of headache, neuralgia, and particularly the headaches of women.

"When we have a patient subject to regular attacks of sick headache and when he feels the least sign of an oncoming attack, he should take two A-K Tablets. Obtainable at druggists in any quantity desired."

How to Send That Parcel to France

Postal Authorities Issue Special Instructions on Parcel Post to the Front.

It sometimes happens that parcels sent to the boys at the front reach there after they have left for home or "gone west" or been transferred elsewhere. For this reason the postal authorities wish that a second address be placed upon all parcels so that they may be returned to the sender or given to someone else whom they will benefit. The following instructions have been sent to the postmasters:

Parcels for Canadian Expeditionary Forces Overseas

Parcels addressed to members of the Canadian expiditionary forces overseas should bear the name and address of a second addressee to whom the parcel may be delivered or forwarded if it should prove impossible to deliver it to the first. The original address should be written on the front of the parcel where the postage stamps and customs declaration are affixed, and the second or alternative address should be written on the back of the parcel.

If a second address is not furnished at the time of posting, and delivery cannot be affected, the contents of the parcel, unless of exceptional value or of a personal nature will be turned over to the military authorities for distribution.

Parcels containing articles of a personal nature or of special value will be returned, if a request for their return in case of non-delivery is made by the sender, such request to be written on the cover of the parcel at the time of posting.

This plan is being adopted at the suggestion of the British post office which states that the present procedure of holding undeliverable parcels at the dead letter office until instructions are received as to their disposal is resulting in the waste of a large quantity of perishable foodstuffs which form the contents of 90 per cent of parcels addressed to soldiers.

SEND NO SUGAR

"It has been made a punishable offense to put as much as a lump of sugar into any of the soldier's boxes which are sent overseas," according to the Winnipeg Free Press bulletin of November 15.

"It will not do for persons to put in sugar and declare it as candy as the parcels are censored by the government and the sender is liable to punishment. Information to this effect was received by the St. John Ambulance association in cable from England this morning. The association is therefore unable to accept a single parcel for overseas which contains any sugar at all."

PUBLIC NOTICES

CITY OF CALGARY
PUBLIC NOTICE

The PUBLIC MEETING held in the Council Chamber of the City Hall, Calgary, on Monday, December 3rd, 1917, for nomination of candidates for the offices of Mayor, Commissioner, Aldermen, Public and Separate School Trustees and City's six representatives on the "Calgary Hospitals' Board," has been adjourned until Monday, the 10th day of December, 1917, when a poll will be taken of the electors of the City of Calgary, between the hours of 9 o'clock in the forenoon and 8 o'clock in the afternoon of the said day for the election of one (1) Mayor for a term of one year (1918), for the election of one (1) Commissioner for a term of two years (1918 and 1919), for the election of nine (9) Aldermen, six (6) for a term of two (2) years and three (3) for a term of one (1) year, the six candidates receiving the highest number of votes to be elected for a term of two (2) years (1918 and 1919), the three candidates receiving the next highest number of votes below the aforementioned six candidates, to be elected for a term of one year (1918); and for the election of four (4) Public School Trustees for the years 1918 and 1919. At the same time and places governed by the same election procedure and officers, the following questions will be placed before the electors in the form of three plebiscites:

"Plebiscite re Early Closing and Half Holiday By-law."

"Are you in favor of By-law 1875, a By-law to provide for the early closing of certain classes of shops?"

"Plebiscite re Payment of Aldermen."

"Are you in favor of paying each Alderman $5.00 for every Council meeting attended and $3.00 for every meeting of a standing committee attended, not in all to exceed $350.00 per annum?"

"Plebiscite re Appointment or Election of Commissioners."

"Are you in favor of changing the present method of electing Commissioners to that of appointing by the City Council at a salary to be fixed by the Council?" These changes, if approved to come into effect January 1st, 1919.

Only three nominations from Messrs. John Burns, P. L. McCrohan and George D. Venini, for the office of Separate School Trustees having been received, the three mentioned gentlemen were duly declared elected by acclamation, on Monday, December 3rd, 1917, at one minute past one o'clock, p.m., to the office of Separate School Trustees for the years 1918 and 1919.

Only six nominations from David D. Davidson, Joseph Richard Harris, John Harrison, Mrs. Margaret Lewis, Archibald S. Nimmo, and David Ormond, for the office of City's representatives on the "Calgary Hospitals' Board" having been received, the said persons were duly declared elected by acclamation on Monday, December 3rd, 1917, at one minute past one o'clock p.m., to the office of the City's representatives on the "Calgary Hospitals' Board" for the year 1918.

SPORT COMMENT

NOTHING STRIKING IN A REVIEW OF FOOTBALL IN THE UNITED STATES

There were no striking new styles shown among the goods exhibited on the 1917 football shelf. No coach turned in anything so ingenious as the multiple kick. Backfield formations were varied and protean but adhered entirely to proved methods that had been built in other seasons. Nothing original developed in the way of line shifts, says Louis Lee Arms, in the New York Tribune.

There was in fact but one thing about the 1917 football season that distinguished it. That was the football izing of the Army and Navy and the college-service eleven rivalry that developed. Otherwise this season will be an easy one to forget.

In the study of football tactics nothing is more interesting than the various backfield formations which different coaches advocate. There is, for instance, no point of similarity between Dartmouth's rhymic, tossing attack instituted by Cavanaugh, and Penn's end stabs from semi-kick formation aside from the fact that each tries to advance the pigskin.

Nor can the line plunges of Rutgers wherein the man carrying the ball is the only one to slap the line, be compared with the penetrating lunges of McLaren, who is followed through by the remainder of the Pitt backfield.

"T" Formation as Base

Michigan runs the majority of her plays from the conventional "T" formation, while Notre Dame employs the "hollow square." Each of these different styles is built with the hope that it will encourage a faster start and afford the runner protection, and all of them seem to be about equal, their efficiency depending upon the backfield men themselves. This on the principle that any formation is a good one if it works.

The most stylish backfield we happened to observe this season was that of Notre Dame, which operated from a square formation that shifted back and forth as the quarterback ran the signals. But upon reflection it wasn't the formation so much as the fast starting and clever clogging that made the backfield stand out.

Tom Thorpe the Columbia coach, is authority for the statement that the Indianans practice formation in the gymnasium to the accompaniment of a piano.

When Berry runs from kick formation it appears that he is unaided by any interference. That is because no men are running near him. As a matter of fact, the backfield has been drawn up behind the side of the line at which Berry aims, and while he is running alone the Penn backs have hypotheically put the end and secondary out of commission. In the case of Berry and Penn this is more fiction than fact.

Foster Sanford has the most intensively trained eleven in the East. The New Brunswick mentor does most things differently. Observe utgers kick formation. Instead of dropping back 10 yards to punt, Whitchill is less than five yards behind his centre when he receives the ball. The general assumption on a punt is that the punter shall stand so far back of his own line that even should a rival forward break through, the kick may be gotten away before it can be blocked.

LINE MUST HOLD

Sanford on the other hand assumes that his line must hold, and with this vital responsibility on its shoulders it usually does. Consequently Rugters gets an added five yards on every kick. That in an industrial world would be called efficiency in production.

Rutgers moreover discards the ancient idea that all three backs must hit the line on a direct drive. In the days when the other backs could haul their ball-carrying brother along the ground until he came to a forced stop this was practical and entertaining, but Sanford figures now that two men in the rear pushing mean little if anything.

The main idea is to open a hole somewhere in the rival line through which the back advances on his own momentum. It is expected that the back is slippery enough on his feet to pick the best spots en route, and that he will hold his feet at least until he bangs into the secondary.

This one man proposition has the additional merit of resting the other two backs for their turn at carrying the ball, and is another step in the refining and concentrating of backfield attack.

The Dartmouth quarterback feeds the ball to his men while they are at top speed by throwing it to them a distance of approximately twelve feet It is more spectacular than the hand to hand passing of the customary style. But as backfields are now manipulated, all of the men are required at times to take direct passes from the center, and this has had apparently no tendency to swell the total fumbles. The assumption would be that it would.

HOW MISFORTUNE AIDED FITZSIMMONS

Eddie Graney, who was the first man in America to don the gloves with Bob Fitzsimmons, and who also employed him as horseshoer, tells an interesting account of the big fellow's first match.

"Not long after Fitzsimmons arrived in this country," said Eddie, "we decided to give him a tryout. Joe Choynski and myself were the only men in the gymnasium. I couldn't lay a glove on Bob and neither could Choyniski. In fact he made Joe look so bad that the latter was worried for fear he was going back as a pugilist. And I want to say that Fitzsimmons was a great fighter at that time. He was 32 years of age and a wonderful athlete.

"About the same time the California Athletic club of which Fulda was the president, had Reddy Gallegher and Billy McCarthy matched for a contest. Gallegher was taken ill and no one knew what would be done. Fulda solved the puzzle by using Fitzsimmons. Bob made a great hit As luck would have it, there was a fatality in the ring not so many days after the boxing was prohibited in San Francisco.

"But for that lucky substitution it is quite likely that Fitzsimmons would have been a long time securing an opening in this state."

Incidentally Graney, who is one of the greatest judges of pugilists, has some send-off for Robert Fitzsimmons. However, Eddie doesn't go as far as many of the critics in declaring Fitz the greatest fighter who ever donned a pair of gloves.

"Fitzsimmons was unquestionably the greatest middleweight of all times," says Graney. "There was just one heavyweight in my way of thinking, who could have beaten Fitzsimmons. That man was Peter Jackson. Others might possibly have turned the trick, but I am quite sure that Jackson was the better of the pair."

BASEBALL WILL BE REVIVED AFTER WAR

Every baseball man believes that the game will have a wonderful revival at the end of the war. The thing the owners are worrying about is whether they will be here to see it.

There is not a doubt that when peace comes again the national sport will have a wider field of action than it ever has had before. It is being played now in France and England, and our own southern training camps are busy laying out diamonds and fields. Some of these, by the way, are to be constructed under the personal supervision of Clark Griffith and Tyrus Raymond Cobb.

Just now, however, it looks as if baseball might be in for a couple of lean years, and it is a certainty that the owners will do everything they can to cut expenses. A hint of this retrenchment policy was found in the major league draft last September. The clubs drafted fewer players than for the past dozen years.

The American league drafted 12 men and the National league 21. A total of 127 players were obtained by the two big leagues by purchase under approval agreements other than optional contracts.

Of this grand total of 160 youngsters secured by the major leagues it is not probable that more than half will be taken to the training camps next spring. Not over half a dozen of the 16 major league clubs will take as many men south as they did last year.

The only source of revenue on a training trip is exhibition games and even in good times these bring in comparatively little. The training season ordinarily costs the club in the neighborhood of $10,000. This year owners will try to save as much of that money as possible.

There is not a doubt that in all cases where it is possible salaries will be reduced. The clubs will carry fewer men and will take fewer players on road trips. In traveling with a baseball squad the war tax on railroad tickets will mount up to an expensive item. The tax on admission tickets will be paid by the fans, but there is some question as to just how many fans there will be to pay it.

Some minor leagues must be kept going as training schools for major league players. These undoubtedly will require more or less financial assistance, which the major leagues must give them if they wish to keep the game going. Many minor leagues will not start at all. In every way, shape and manner that they can the owners of baseball clubs will cut expenses, and many of them will be more than happy if they succeed in breaking even.

THE WHOLE TEAM IS GOING TO WAR

The University of Oregon had a champion football team in 1916. It cleaned up everything in sight on the coast, and even administered a 14—0 defeat to the University of Pennsylvania in a game played at Pasadena on the first of this year.

Here's the team—and here's the interesting thing about it:

Every single man in the team, and every substitute with one exception has enlisted for service in France. The one exception is a married man who has been exempted, and is doing his bit by managing a big ranch.

GOLF ANTIDOTE FOR SOME ILLS

It is necessary for a golfer to feel absolutely "fit" in order to play his best game?

A few days ago a player said that although he had been much troubled recently by rheumatism, he had at the same time been playing much above his game. This seems somewhat of a paradox, but when it is considered that the average player puts a deal of unnecessary force into most of his shots, it is a different story.

It is not illogical to suggest that if every time a man pressed and a sharp twinge of pain followed the result would be beneficial to the game. Further the mind would concentrate itself readily on the avoidance of pain and so give particular attention to the nice adjustment of the swing.

It seems fairly clear then that local pain, if not too severe, is no great handicap to one's game, and there is no reason why, if the golfer prefers, he should not play around. Not long ago a member of a wellknown club hereabouts was so ill with rheumatism that he had decided not to ploy in the championship tourney of the club. Eventually one competitor was left without a partner, and yielding to the importunities of this enthusiast, the sick one very much under protest consented to turn out. He started well at the first hole and playing the game of his life won the club title.

But it is a different kettle of fish if one is feeling seedy and out of sorts generally. Then the nerves are all wrong and concentration becomes a consumation to be wished for, but seldom to be attained. In a case of this kind it is well to face facts and recognize one's limitations for the time being. If this is done the round will find one feeling much better ,but if the player should start out expecting to be able to run ,so to speak ,on three cylinders, it is more than probable that he will return with a heart full of uncharitableness ,loathing the course and nursing resentment against his partner.

GREAT ANNUAL MILL END AND SAMPLE SALE

TUESDAY DECEMBER ELEVENTH

TUESDAY DECEMBER ELEVENTH

This, Undoubtedly Is the Greatest Sale of Its Kind

A Disposal of High Grade Silks, Cottons, Woolens, Fine Staple and Fancy Linens

WHEN ONE considers that this event is planned for one of the busiest shopping days just prior to the Holiday Season, the Sale itself takes on unusual proportions of value to every woman within easy access of the store.

Nine months ago we began planning for this sale Nine months ago contracts were entered into and concessions made us that we could not secure today for any money, nor by any amount of persuasion.

To say that we anticipate a record attendance would be putting it mildly. Because of the very fact that the schedule of prices and values operates for one day--just that point alone will be a magnet.

The features in brief are:--A Sale of Dress Goods at 94c; a Sale of Bedspreads at $2.98; a Sale of Tablecloths at 78c; a sale of Towel Ends at 5c; a Sale of Sample Centres at 10c; a Sale of Fancy Linens (values to $15) at 98c; a Sale of Fine Silks at 98c; a Sale of Wool Blanket Coatings at 98c and many lines of Piece Goods at HALF PRICE.

THE VALUE OF A SMILE

Nobody ever added up
The value of a smile;
We know how much a dollar's worth,
And how much is a mile;
We know the distance to the sun,
The size and weight of earth;
But no one here can tell us just
How much a smile is worth.

What Falkenhayn Is Doing Now In Turkey

London (by mail).—Marshal von Falkenhayn is believed to be marching on Bagdad. Although he failed at Verdun, he has a brain as good as any in the German army. He must be taken very seriously. He is an extremely fine soldier and clever strategist who is burning to restore his reputation, and he has not vanished into the middle east for nothing.

The immediate purpose of Falkenhayn is clear. He hopes to retake Bagdad, which is the keystone of German schemes of aggrandisement in western Asia. He may also cherish other and more spacious ambitions.

Our own purpose is not so clear to the lay onlooker. We routed the Turks on the Tigris this year in order to avenge Ctesiphon and Kut, and we captured Bagdad on March 11 in order to restore our prestige and to administer a crushing blow to German ambitions. The Russian revolution began the day after our entry into Bagdad, and all thought of a combined movement against the Turks was quickly at an end. With the exception of a slight advance up the Euphrates from Feluja, we have since remained stationary in Mesopotamia.

We have also a considerable army in Palestine, on a line south and southwest of Gaza and Beersheba. I cannot profess to divine its aim, except that in certain circumstances it should serve to lessen the possibility of Turkish pressure against Bagdad. However, my object here is to examine the situation and not to offer criticism. The one vital point in all this great region is now the city of Bagdad. We shall probably find him fail. And if Falkenhayn fails this time we shall be perceptibly nearer the end of the war, for though the Turks are still fighting well they do not mean to fight for ever.—Lovitt Fraser in London Daily Mail.

north of our Palestine front and a much greater distance from Bagdad. At Aleppo is the junction of the Bagdad railway with the lines which run south to Damascus and Jerusalem and down into Arabia. Its port is Alexandretta. It has been truly said that "all roads in the central regions of the Ottoman empire lead to Aleppo." It is the base where the Turks have been concentrating and from which they must operate either against Bagdad or against our enemy in Palestine.

When Falkenhayn was ordered to the middle east this summer he went to Aleppo. He found there Djemal Pasha, the governor-general of Syria, a trained soldier who is the nominal commander of the Turkish forces of that province. Djemal is reputed to be a gypsy by origin and he will be heard of again. He has never been quite up to the neck in the intrigues of Enver Pasha, and he showed much consideration to British refugees from Bagdad after the outbreak of the war.

Djemal's idea appears to have been to mass all the troops he could muster at Aleppo this autumn and then to await events. If there was to be an active campaign he wished to fight in Palestine; but it is not very clear that he was aiming at any offensive at all. Falkenhayn had other notions. He insisted on a move against Bagdad, which interests Germany far more than Jerusalem, and eventually he had his way. Djemal was meanwhile bidden to Germany, where he has just been shown the Kiel canal fleet and some of the armies; but he is no stranger to western Europe, and the florid praise he expressed was probably conventional.

Marshal von Falkenhayn is therefore committed to a great scheme for flinging the British army out of Bagdad, and it is interesting to consider his prospects. He proposes to "contain" the British forces in Palestine, though General Allenby will doubtless have a word to say on that point. In marching against Bagdad Falkenhayn will have two lines of advance. He can move down both the Euphrates and the Tigris, though I should expect his principal force to follow the Tigris route. While the Russians were still able to threaten the Turkish communications on the Tigris, it was expected that the Turks would endeavor to retake Bagdad by way of the Euphrates alone. Now that Russia is in chaos, the Turks can do pretty much as they like.

The Euphrates is at its lowest in November, but it is believed to be navigable for shallow craft throughout the year. The Turks have undoubtedly made considerable use of the Euphrates route during the last three years. The present British advanced base upon the Tigris is the town of Samarra, 75 miles above Bagdad. We shall probably find him fail. And if Falkenhayn fails this time we shall be perceptibly nearer the end of the war, for though the Turks are still fighting well they do not mean to fight for ever.—Lovitt Fraser in London Daily Mail.

now at Nesibin, as is probable, the Turks would have about 150 miles to cover by road and 165 miles by river below Mosul before reaching Samarra.

What numbers can Falkenhayn scrape together? Portions of two Turkish corps, the 18th and the 13th, have been in contact with our forces in Mesopotamia all the summer, and they have doubtless been reinforced. It is said that the Turks have for some time been recalling troops from Galicia and the Rumanian front, and that they are utilizing some of their reserves in Thrace. They dare not leave Constantinople without a large garrison to preserve order, but they show no sign of doing anything in Armenia. I shall not attempt any estimate, but I think it will be found that both in Mesopotamia and in Palestine Falkenhayn will put into the field very respectable armies. On the other hand, he will probably have great transport difficulties in his march against Bagdad. He must keep pretty closely to the line of the rivers. There are no great opportunities for flanking movements through the surrounding deserts.

It may be taken as reasonably certain that Falkenhayn's operations will not be confined to an attack upon Bagdad. He will probably have other objectives. He will probably have to defend himself against a counter-attack from Persia. He will probably have to hold the Euphrates line. He will probably have to keep open his communications with Aleppo. WE OF THIS DAY and generation can hardly believe it possible that Mme. Bernhardt—the great Sarah, the divine Sarah, the queen of tragedy and classic drama—held high vogue throughout Europe as a comedienne. And yet it is in just that metier and milieu that this scribe recalls one of her most fetching impersonations, that of Cyprienne in Sardou's comedy of "Divorcons."

Now this scribe lays no claim to be considered or consulted as the oldest inhabitant; far from it. But the deep impression made by Bernhardt in this role comes back whenever furs are under discussion. The gay Cyprienne has a meeting with her adorer. It is winter, and the pretty little lady is bundled up in furs. "How beautiful you are in your furs!" breathes the adorer. "You are more beautiful in your furs than in any other costume you wear!" To which the gay and frivolous Cyprienne replies: "I'll tell you a secret. Every woman is! and does! They are the most becoming things we have; and we all know it!"

And the fickle mind of fickle woman has not changed one iota from that day to this!

Fashions in the Tropics

Not for a minute do we believe that it is this fondness for furs as a fascinating accessory, universally becoming, that led to their adoption for summer time wear, as was the frivolous fad recently. Like so many other fashions, that one came to us from France. But there it really started in those winter colonies along the Cote d'Azur—the Coast of Azure Skies—the French Riviera, where the sun shines hotly for a few hours a day in full sight of the snowclad mountains; but once the meridian is past, a cold wind blows off the snowcaps, and makes furs not only a charming accessory to the outdoor toilette, but a stern necessity as well.

Thence the fashionable at our own American Rivieras along the Florida and California coasts borrowed the fashion with tropical clothes and a tropical climate; and with the spring drift northward for the tropical clothes the furs came too. However, at the best summer resorts on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts—to say nothing of the inland places—sensible women never followed the fad. In truth, it was one more acknowledged in the breach than in the observance in the country of lower altitudes; while the higher altitudes of mountain resorts the far more informal "sweater"—the French term them Guernseys, and the British say Jerseys; both appellations being borrowed from the Channel Islands, the French choosing the name of the island where their language is spoken exclusively, and the British where one hears a trifle more of English than one does of French—taking the place of furs.

Revivals and Newcomers

But with the coming of autumn days furs take their place once more as a legitimate part of the outdoor toilette. To usher in the new season the furriers have made radical departure from the fashions that were in the forefront of things last winter. What the fur trade speaks of as "small furs"—which will include a multitude of novel designs in neck and shoulder pieces—naturally present themselves first. And not only are the shapes new and novel; but there are some newcomers in the fur field, or rather one might say revivals or resurrections of the vogue of some furs that have been absent from the roll call of fashion for so long that they are almost newcomers now.

Industry in American Pelts

Usually one thinks of furs as coming from wild and savage places, where the foot of man but seldom treads and where the advantages of civilization re but little known. With the closing in of the far spaces, with the bringing together the ends of the earth which civilization has accomplished, the fur trapper is one of the few figures of romance still left to us. But, none the less, romance notwithstanding, it must be confessed that the march of civilization has multiplied rather than decreased the supp'y of fur pelts. Mink, mole, beaver, marten, squirrel, muskrat, and countless other peltries are all caught at their best close in and near around the haunts of civilization. Imperial Russian sables have multiplied enormously since the opening of the Trans-Siberian railroad. The extensions of railroads in South America have brought bigger shipments of chinchilla and nutria. While as for the development of our great northwest, it is a fact of record that at the last great raw fur sale in St. Louis American ermine fetched a higher price than did the Russian pelt; and it was a European buyer for European trade who paid this top price at that!

The woman of fashion, who pays much attention to her costume and can afford to pay for exclusive pelts and designs wherein to wear them will have to forego any further purchases in chinchilla for some time to come. The South American republics of Chile and Peru have placed an embargo on the catching of those tiny little animals—they are really of the rat family—for the next five years, beginning with September of this year. Not that chinchilla was ever in danger of becoming too popular. The supply was never overlarge; and since it is only the first quality that gives any sort of satisfactory wear—a poor chinchilla soon declares itself by looking tired and discouraged—chinchilla has always meant an outlay that could scarcely be justified by an inference of investment.

Since the Alaska sealskins did not present themselves in any commercial quantity on the market for quite a long time, the market met the demand for this beautiful and becoming pelt with all sorts of substitutes and subterfuges. The so-called Hudson seal—really reliable stores invariably add the true name of this fur: dyed muskrat—never truly filled the place of the Alaska pelt. Not only did it very soon lose both lustre and finish, but the countless horde of lesser imitations made from rabbit skins which had undergone shearing and other manipulations, crowded the market and at a price that not only was far too high for their service and quality but which for those same reasons served to bring disrepute on the better classes of pelts dyed to the old-time sealskin colorings.

Sealskin for the Ultras

With the coming of the new season just a few of the fashionable furriers are showing the genuine Alaska sealskin once more. Not in any quantity yet, however. In fact, so small is the stock that has found its way to market, and at the same time, so choice that it is being reserved for the favored few. Those of us who may have sealskin garments held over from former days may possibly have them redyed to the new sealskin shade; and so keep in step with the front ranks of fashion. But, for the most part this season will see the genuine sealskin used mostly in combination with other furs.

A charming example is pictured on this page, in which American ermine—oh, no, that is not one of those imitation pelts. It is the veritable ermine, and it is caught in Alaska and in several of the northwest provinces of Canada—is cleverly blended with Alaska sealskin. The muff is largely of the seal, while that part of the fetching little cape on which most wear will come is fashioned of this excellent wearing Alaska peltry.

In fact, the hall mark of fashion for the fur season of this year of grace would seem to be the use of this national fur—for the Alaska sealskin is the one that fetches the highest price, wears the longest and gives best service throughout.

Fox Holds Fashionable

Speaking with an oldtime furrier the other day in New York he called attention to some facts that proved highly interesting. "Not so very many years ago," he said, "I used to spend money to advertise that, except for silver foxes, I did not make up, nor did I recommend my customers to purchase fox furs; believing that they did not give good service for the amount of money invested in them. Those were the days when Alaska sealskin was the most fashionable fur we had; and many furriers took beaver and even otter and had it dyed in the sealskin shades, made them up into coats of the fashionable

BEST USE FOR SKIM MILK

Utilize It for Human Food as Far as Possible.

All skim milk should be used—none wasted. It should furnish the maximum of food to human beings and does this better when used direct, as cottage cheese, prpared buttermilk, or other by-products, than when fed to animals and converted into meat. Surplus skim milk may be used economically to feed hogs, yt 100 pounds of it will produce 15 pounds of cheese, produce only 4.8 pounds of dressed pork if fed with corn. Skim milk is made into cottage cheese furnishes nearly seven times as much protein and nearly as much energy as the dressed pork it would produce. Of course the most nourishment is obtained when skim milk is used direct, either for drinking or cooking. As far as possible therefore skim milk should be used for human food and only the excss fed to livestock.

Buttermilk and Whey

Buttermilk is equal to skim milk for feeding hogs, while whey is half as valuable. Whey being low in protein is not well suited for young pigs and should be fed to older animals.

Ordinary grass pasture, or green rye oats, sorghum, rape, clover, alfalfa, peas, or beans can take the place of skim milk after the little pigs get a start. Much green feed can be raised without greatly reducing the acreage of other crops.

Calves and pigs do well when some skim milk is fed, but they need it only for a short time and in limited quantities. Except when fed to very young animals, skim milk is fed most economically when supplemented with grain. For dairy calves skim milk may be substituted in part for whole milk on the tenth day. If the calves are vigorous they should receive a little grain and hay at two weeks of age, and it is safe to discontinue the skim milk five or six weeks later.

By substituting grain, feed, buttermilk, and whey for skim milk in animal feeding, much skim milk may be released for use in cooking, for condensing, or for making cottage cheese.

ARABS LOVE TURKISH DELIGHT

The confection known as "Turkish Delight" is one of the most important used by the Arabs of Arabia, reports United States Consul Addison E. Southard, of Adtn. This is made from sugar and American starch, with flavoring and sometimes almonds or the kernels of ground nuts. Turkish delight often makes up the bulk of the Arab's breakfast, and it is eaten often at other times.

CHEER UP THE BOYS IN TRENCHES WITH A GOOD CHRISTMAS LETTER

Write a letter to some boy overseas. The longing for news from the folks at home is expressed in many letters that come from the soldiers at the front. Cut off from the intercourse with relatives and friends that makes up so much of the everyday pleasure of those who are enjoying the tranquilities of life at home, the soldier boys appreciate letters from home to an even greater degree than thy are free to admit. Cheer up the brave fellows who are fighting and dying in the trenches that you may live in peace and comfort at home, with a bright newsy note, so that they get it at Christmas time. It is your duty and should be your pleasure to do so.

At What Age Should a Girl Marry

Everybody knows there is a growing tendency among women of the most intelligent type to postpone the age of marriage and motherhood, says the Journal of Heredity.

"Whereas most women marry between 20 and 25, graduates of women's colleges most frequently marry between 25 and 30. Miss R. N. Smith calculated the average age at which college alumnce wed as 26.3 years. This means that to offset the considerable number who marry as soon as they graduate, there are many who do not marry until the age of 30 or after.

"Feminists without adaquate scientific training have attempted to justify this course, and have tried to create an impression that the children of young mothers are in some way inferior; while the best children are those born to women who have reached a certain maturity."

To find out whether this theory will hold water, Alexander Graham Bell recently made an investigation of the Hyde family in the United States, tagulating all the deaths of infants in the family for several generations. He found 2,386 babies who had died under four years of age. He then investigated the age of the babies' mothers in each case, and prepared a chart of the outcome. A glance shows the istimony of the chart. As the age of the mother advances the percentage of infant deaths rises also, until the death rate for children of the oldest group of mothers is about 50 per cent greater than that of the children of young mothers.

The mothers of twenty years of age and younger seem at first to form an exception; that is the line of death percentage declines. The chart shows that the baby of a mother twenty years old has a better chance of living than the baby of a mother of eighteen. But common sense would immediately assume that deaths of babies or infants born of mothers so very young would be greater because of the lack of training and experience of the mothers themselves.

Of course the investigation is not absolutely conclusive. Other factors besides the mother's age, enter in. One can not tell. Poverty, for example, may be a contributing cause. Mothers who are very poor may have a better chance of succeeding in their early years with their children because they would have only a few to take care of; while the mothers at the age of 35 or 40 would have a larger number and too little income with which to provide for the new arrivals. This argument doubtless holds good to some extent in the slums, Dr. Bell believes; but it can hardly carry as much weight with the Hyde family which seems to have been fairly well to do.

The conclusion, therefore, based on Dr. Bell's investigations, seems to be that "the age of the mother at the birth of her children has a marked influence on their vitality; that, as measured by infant mortaliay, the best age for a girl to marry is probably between 20 and 25; and that every year a woman delays child-bearing after the age of 25 is penalizing her children.

GIRL FARMERS

out for the season, and sold them to some of their best clients.

"Those were the days, too, when in order to get Alaska seal pelts American buyers had to go to London, pay the expenses of the Atlantic journey, purchase the pelts there, ship them to New York, pay a duty on them coming in at the custom house, and then sell them to their customers at a price necessarily far in excess of what the European wearer had to pay. And that for a pelt grown and caught in our own country!

"Now, fox furs are one of the staples in the market. They are dyed to some beautifully becoming tints; and the woman of today does not want nor does she expect to wear the same furs—without alteration—for four or more seasons as she used to in the days when we bought Alaska seals in London market.

"Of course, the natural fox pelts are the most favored. The natural blue, white, broown and black foxes lead the style; and they lead in price, too. Then the cross foxes, and next the natural reds of long fur, good top hair, and the deep cherry red tint. The dyed foxes are merely the reds that are of poor natural coloring. The dyed blue and gray will be much worn; but the new rose taupe tint will, in my opinion, lead all the rest; for it is one that every woman can wear to excellent advantage. Blonde and brunette alike will look well in this; added to which it is one of the high novelties of the coming season."

Muffs, it would seem, are to be very much as before. Those small round, melon, barrel, and flat sack shapes being all shown. The touch of novelty which a new season inevitably demands is being made this year by means of combinations of furs, and the arrangement of the trimming scheme.

HIGH GRADE COTTAGE CHEESE

Pasteurization Makes It Possible to Control Flavor and Texture.

The pasteurization of skim milk as the first step in the manufacture of high-quality cottage cheese by creameries and milk plants is recommended by United States department of agriculture. It is stated that by pasteurizing skim milk as it comes from the separator and beginning the manufacturing process as soon as possible, the cheesemaker can better control flavor and texture. "No trouble need be experinced," says the bulletin, "in making a high quality of cottage cheese posseessing both the characteristic flavor and body, from properly pasteurized skim milk of good quality.'

The benefits to be derived from proper pasteurization are so great as to make it highly advisable to adopt that system. Little additional work is required, provided suitable quipment is available, and but little is added to the cost of making.

Advantages of Pasteurization

The most important advantages derived from pasteurization, as pointed out in the bulletin, is that a sanitary safe, product free from disease-producing germs is insured. Pasteurization also allows a more perfect control of souring through the use of pure culture starters, thus insuring the formation of an acid curd, giving the characteristic sour-milk flavor so much desired.

New gas mantles if immersed in vinegar and hung up to dry will give a more brilliant light and last longer.

If eggs and grated cheese are added to some of the simple cream soups one has an excellent substitute for meat,

Don't forget that it is as important to learn about pits, dug-outs and cellars for storing garden products as it is to grow it.

Sandwiches made of chopped sweet peppers are delicious for the school basket lunch.

If you give away old clothes see that they are if possible ,cleaned pressed and mended.

QUADRUPLETS GROW FAST
3 BRUNETTES, 1 BLONDE

Hollis, Okla.—The famous Oklahoma Quadruplets, which have attracted large crowds of spectators at the various state fairs in the southwest, at which they have been exhibited, are fast growing to womanhood.

The girls—four of'em—are daughters of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Keys, of Hollis, and compose one-half the family of eight children. They were born on June 4, 1915 and at no time since birth has their health been in danger. Three of the girls are brunettes and the fourth is a blonde, while the parents are both brunettes.

Mr. and Mrs. Keys have solved in a way the problem of birthday parties for a large family, for one celebration does for the quartet of girls.

The law of nature is that a certain quantity of work is necessary to produce a certain quantity of good of any kind whatever. If you want knowledge you must toil for it; and if pleasure, you must toil for it—Ruskin.

CLEANLINESS is akin to godliness, particularly around the mouth. A lack of attention to the teeth and tissue of the mouth means cavaties and a tartar, which generally produce a foul breath and pyorrhea (the bugbear of the dentist), a loosening of the teeth, diseased gums and eventually their loss, while a little attention NOW may mean the saving of them with no pain and very little expense. The saving of your teeth means you will not need to have your teeth crowned; you will not need artificial teeth or plates, with the expense and bother of having them throughout the rest of your natural life. A stitch in time surely saves nine.

Jimmie Bulstrode Buys a Christmas Tree

(Copyright, the Bobs-Merrill Co.)

There was never in the world a better fellow than Jimmy Bulstrode. If he had been poorer his generosities would have ruined him over and over again. He was always being taken in and was the recipient of hundreds of begging letters, which he hired another soft hearted person to read. He offended charitable organizations by never passing a beggar's outstretched hand without dropping a coin init. He was altogether a distressingly impracticable rich person, surrounded by people who admired him for what he was and by those who tried to squeeze him for what he was worth.

It was a general wonder to people who knew him slightly why Bulstrode had never married. The gentleman himself knew the answer perfectly, but it amused him to discuss the question in spite of the pain, as well as for the pleasure that it caused him to consider—the reason why.

Mary Falconer, the woman he loved was the wife of a man whom Bulstrode could only think of in pitiful contempt. But, thanks to an element of chivalry in the character of the hero of this story the years, as time went on, spread back of both the woman and the man in an honorable series, of whose history neither one had any reason to be ashamed.

Nevertheless, it struck them both as rather humorous, after all, that of the three concerned her husband should be the only renegade and, notwithstanding, profit by the combined good faith of his wife and the man who loved her.

Oh, there was nothing so easy in the task that Jimmy set for himself! And it did not facilitate matters that Mary Falconer scarcely ever helped him in the least. She was a beautiful woman, a tender woman, and there were times when her friend felt that she cleverly and cruelly taunted him with Puritanism and with his simple old fashioned ideas and crystal clearness of vision, the culte he had regarding marriage and the sacred way in which he held bonds and vows. It was no help at all to think she rebelled and jested at his reserve; that she did her best to break it—and there were times when it was a brilliant siege. But down in her heart she respected him, and as she saw around her the domestic wrecks with which the matrimonial seas are encumbered and knew that her own craft promised to go safely through the storm, Mary Falconer more than once had been grateful to the man.

As far as Bulstrode himself was concerned, each year—there had been ten of them—he found the situation becoming more difficult and dangerous. Not only did the future appear to him impossible as things were, but he began to hate his arid past. He was sometimes led to ask, what, after all, was he getting out of his coloccal sacrifice? The only reward he wanted was the woman herself, and, unless her husband died, she would never be his. Bulstrode had not found that he could solve the problem, and now and then he let it go from sheer weariness of heart.

In the face of the window of the drawing-room where Bulstrode sat on this afternoon of an especial winter's day the storm cast wreaths of snow that clug and froze, or dropped like feathers down against the sill The gentleman had his predilections even in New York, and in the open fireplace the logs crumbled and disintergrated to ashen caves wherein the palpitating jewels of the heat were held. Except for this old-fashioned warmth, there was none other in the room, whose white wainscoating and pillars low ceilinged and quaint chimney-piece, characterized one of those agreeably proportioned houses still to be found in lower New York around Washington square.

Bulstrode had received about half an hour ago a letter whose qualities and suggestions were something disturbing to him:

"There is such a thing, believe me" (Mary Falconer wrote in the pages which Bulstrode opened to read for the twentieth time), "as the gloom of Christmas Jimmy. People won't frankly own to it. They're afraid of seeming sour and crabbed. But don't you, who are so exquisitely apt to feelings—to other people's feelings,—at once confess it? It attacks the spinster in the bustling winter streets as she is elbowed by some person, exuberantly a mother, and so arrogantly laden with delicious-looking parcels that she is almost a personal Christmas tree herself. I'm confident this gloom of Christmas, grips the wretched little beings at toyshop windows as they stand "choosin' " their never-to-be-realized toys. I'm homeless in a city fairly redolent of holly and dinners, and where the array of other people's homes is terrifying. And, my dear friend, it is so horribly sure it haunts the vagrant and the rubble that no doubt it attacks others whose only grudge is that their hearths are not built for Christmas trees or the hanging of stockings. But these unfortunates are not saying anything aloud, therefore we must not pry.

"There's a jolly house-party on at the Van Schooling's. We're to go down tomorrow to tuxedo and pass Christmas night, and you are, of course, asked and wanted. Knowing your dread of these family feasts possibly from just such a ghost of the gloom—I was sure you would refuse. But it's a wonderful place for a talk or two, and I shall hope you will go. Welcome, not even follow, but go down with me."

There was more of the letter—there always is more of women's letters. There minds and penss are so charmingly facile; there is nothing a woman can do better than talk, except to write.

Bulstrode smoked slowly, the pages between his fingers, his thoughts traveling like wanderers towards a home from which a ban had kept them aliens. His eyes drifted to the beginning of the letter. He wasn't familiar with the homeless vagrant class. His charities to that part of the population consisted in donations to established societies, and haphazard giving called forth by a beggar's extended hand.

If anybody may be immune to the melancholy of which hi friend Mrs. Falconer spoke, it should surely be this gentleman, smoking his cigar before the fire. The unopened letters—there was a pile of them—would have offered ample reason why. No one of the lot but bore some testimony to the generous heart which, beneath dinner-jacket and behind the screw-faced watch with the picture in the back of it, beat so healthy and so well.

STANDARD MUSICAL PAGE

NEWS AND VIEWS ON MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Calgary as a Musical Home

In a new country usually the people are so interested in the race for wealth that the subject of music is somewhat foreign to their makeup. This condition, however, has not prevailed here. Almost from the beginning of the history of the province the people have evinced a desire for music in some form. Perhaps he beautiful climate has had some effect of drawing the people from the sordid things of life and raising their ideas and desires above wealth making.

In Calgary we can boast of everything in the musical line and while Grand Opera as given by the greatest celebratees of the day are somewhat foreign to our sight still these artists that have appeared in Calgary have been so hospitably received that there is little doubt that they will reurn and many others after them.

The musical artists of Calgary are in their infancy, so to speak. Very few have what may be called a foreign musical education, but the lack of a foreign education is hardly noticeable. What they lack in the hightr forms of music are made up in other attractions that go far to entertain and please the public. So while the entertainments that are seldom given from time to time by the younger musicians of Calgary are seldom well known, still the attendance is usually very good owing to the fact that each musician has a large chosen se of friends who appreciate the efforts of their leading light and attend in a body.

Besides the artists we have many stores and places where all kinds of musical instruments may be purchased. Nothing in the musical line has been forgotten by these dealers who vie with each other to raise the standard of music by furnishing the latest model, whether piano, pianola, player or other forms of musical instruments. The latest models are all here and the demonstrators are ready and willing to show the strong features of their models at all times. So whether you are looking for upright piano or player, a music box or a band instrument, Calgary firms can supply your wishes readily and reasonably.

Calgary's leading musical school house, the Adlam College, has made a wonderful name for itself in the past four years. Mr. Adlam is in charge of the college and gives instructions in piano, violin, voice and all the smaller instruments. Mr. Adlam also gives special attention and terms to young children.

Henry Casadesus and the Society of Ancient Instruments gave a recent concert at the French Soldiers' and Sailors' Club maintained at 6 east Sixty-eighth street by Mrs. Otto H. Kahn, of whose hospitality to their compatriots they had heard before they sailed from France.

A revised version of "The Star Spangled Banner," to be sung by the Oratorio Society of New York, was made for the United States government's department of the Interior, Bureau of Education, by a committee including Messrs. Earhart, Sousa, Sonneck, Ganvort, and Damrosch.

The first national community song day is to take place in Washington on December 9 at a meeting of the National Council of Women in the auditorium of the Capital City's new Central High school.

The Russian Symphony Orchestra started a five weeks' tour from the Carolinas to Canada by playing a full symphonic program to the boys in khaki down at Camp Lee in Virginia.

PLANS OF THE MUSICIANS

Maud Powell, now in the West, received word from her husband and business manager, H. Godfrey Turner, that he has offered her services as violinist to fill the gaps made by the cancellation of Fritz Kreisler's tour, "wherever her itinerary permits, and at the same fees," every dollar to be turned over to the American Red Cross.

Jascha Heifetz played his first violin recital in Chicago recently to a house sold out in two days after he had appeared with the Chicago Orchestra in Tschaikowsky's concerto under the leadership of Fred Stock.

A CHANCE TO SEE BEAUUTIFUL CALIFORNNIA

A winter tour to the warm southern climate is a necessity for many of the Canadians who never get acclimated to the Canadian winters. A trip to California in the winter and early spring is a pleasure. Those who can afford it are repaid by nature a thousand fold. The enjoyment of the trip the sight seeing of hundreds of things unknown to those who live here all the time, combined with the health giving properties that nature showers upon those through the radiant rays of beautiful sunshine and bracing air, are a thousand-fold. The Union Pacific Railroad, one of the roads that carries you to these health giving pleasure resorts are running a special from Alberta in January which will have all the appointments and comforts that you have at home and some that you never have. The train will leave January 3, making a rate that includes everything for the trip—meals reservations and sight seeing trips are included. The train will go via Spokane, Portlan dand Los Angeles and choice of return routes will be given. Information may be secured from Mr. Canfield, Union Pacific, Calgary office, 809 Centre street.

The Man and Woman of It.

When a man wants to find something he begins by tossing up the bureau drawers, pulling the furniture out of place, and throwing the bric-a-brac about, and ends by wrecking the nerves of the whole family.

When a woman wants to find something she sits down closes her eyes and thinks a minute.

Then she gets up, walks across the room and puts her finger right on it.

A woman always alights from a trolley car backward—but she usually manages to reach the sidewalk in safe y.

A man gets off a trolley car the RIGHT way—and then collides with an "L" pillar, or steps in front of a taxicab.

"KAZAN"

THE WOLF DOG, By OLIVER CURWOOD

Today he placed the tallow and bran before Kazan, and the smile in his face gave way to a look of perplexity. Kazan's lips had drawn suddenly back. A fierce snarl rolled deep in his throat. The hair along his spine stood up. His muscles twitched. Instinctively the professor turned. Sandy McTrigger had come up quietly behind him. His brutal face wore a grin as he looked at Kazan.

"It's a fool job—tryin' to make friends with him," he said. Then he added, with a sudden interested gleam in his eyes, "When you startin'?"

"With first frost," replied McGill. "It ought to come soon. I'm going to join Sergeant Conroy and his party at Fond du Lac by the first of October."

"And you're going up to Fond du Lac—alone?" queried Sandy. "Why don't you take a man?"

The little professor laughed softly.

"Why?" he asked. "I've been through the Athabasca waterways a dozen times, and know the trail as well as I know Broadway. Besides, I like to be alone. And the work isn't too hard, with the currents all flowing to the north and east."

Sandy was looking at the Dane, with his back to McGill. An exultant gleam shot for an instant into his eyes.

"You're taking the dogs?"

"Yes."

Sandy lighted his pipe, and spoke like one strangely curious.

"Must cost a heap to take these trips o' yourn, don't it?"

"My last cost about seven thousand dollars. This will cost me five," said McGill.

"Gawd!" breathed Sandy. "An' you carry all that along with you! Ain't you afraid—something might happen?"

The little professor was looking the other way now. The carlessness in his face and manner changed. His blue eyes grew a shade darker. A hard smile which Sandy did not see hovered about his lips for an instant. Then he turned, laughing.

"I'm a very light sleeper," he said, "A footstep at night rouses me. Even a man's breathing awakes me, when I make up my mind that I must be on my guard. And, besides"—he drew from his pocket a blue steeled Savage automatic—"I know how to use this." He pointed to a knot in the wall of the cabin. "Observe," he said. Five times he fired at twenty paces, and when Sandy went up to look at the knot he gave a gasp. There was one jagged hole where the knot had been.

"Pretty good," he grinned. "Most men couldn't do better'n that with a rifle."

When Sandy left, McGill followed him with a suspicious gleam in his eyes, and a curious smile on his lips. Then he turned to Kazan.

"Guess you've got him figgered out about right, old man," he laughed softly. "I don't blame you very much for wanting to get him by the throat. Perhaps—"

He shoved his hands deep in his pockets, and went into the cabin. Kazan dropped his head between his forepaws, and lay still, with wide-open eyes. It was late afternoon, early in September, and each night brought now the first chill breaths of autumn. Kazan watched the last glow of the sun as it faded out of the southern skies. Darkness always followed swiftly after that, and with darkness came more fiercely his wild longing for freedom. Night after night he had gnawed his steel chain. Night after night he had watched the stars, and the moon, and had listened for Gray Wolf's call, while the big Dane lay sleeping. Tonight it was colder than usual, and the keen tang of the wind that came fresh from the west stirred him strangely. It set his blood afire with what the Indians call the Frost Hunger. Lethargic summer was gone and the days and nights of hunting at hand. He wanted to leap out into freedom and run until he was exhausted, with Gray Wolf by his side. He knew that Gray Wolf was off there—where the stars hung low in the clear sky, and that she was waiting. He strained at the end of his chain, and whined. All that night he was restless—more restless than he had been at any time before. Once in the far distance, he heard a cry that he thought was Gray Wolf, and his answer roused McGill from deep sleep. It was dawn, and the little professor dressed himself and came out of the cabin. With satisfaction he noted the exhilirating snap in the air. He wet his fingers and held them above his head, chuckling when he found the wind had swung into the north. He went to Kazan, and talked to him. Among other things he said, "This'll put the black flies to sleep, Kazan. A day or two more of it and we'll start."

Five days later McGill led first the Dane and then Kazan to a packed canoe. Sandy McTrigger saw them off and Kazan watched for a chance to leap at him. Sandy kept his distance, and McGill watched the two with a thought that set his blood running swiftly behind the mask of his careless smile. They had slipped a mile down-stream when he leaned over and laid a fearless hand on Kazan's head. Something in the touch of that hand and in the professor's voice, kept Kazan from a desire to snap at him. He tolerated the friendship with expressionless eyes and a motionless body.

"I was beginning to fear I wouldn't have much sleep old boy," he chuckled McGill ambiguously, "but I guess I can take a nap now and then with you along."

He made camp that night fifteen miles up the lake shore. The big Dane he fastened to a sapling twenty yards from his small silk tent, but Kazan's chain he made fast to the butt of a stunted birch that held down the tent flap. Before he went into the tent for the night McGill pulled out his automatic and examined it with care.

For three days the journey continued without mishap along the shore of Lake Athabasca. On the fourth night McGill pitched his tent in a bunch of banskian pine a hundred yards back from the water. All that day the wind had come steadily from behind them, and for at least half the day the professor had been watching Kazan closely. From the west there had come a scent that stirred him uneasily. Since noon he had sniffed the wind. Twice McGill had heard him growling deep in his throat, and once when the scent had come stronger than usual he had bared his fangs, and the bristles stood up along his spine. For an hour after striking camp the little professor did not build a fire, but sat looking up the shore of the lake through his hunting glass. It was dusk when he returned to where he had put up his tent and chained the dogs. For a few moments he stood unobserved, looking at the wolf-dog. Kazan was still uneasy. He lay facing the west. McGill made note of this, for the big Dane lay behind Kazan—to the east. Under ordinary conditions Kazan would have faced him. He was sure now that something in the west wind. A little shiver ran up his back as he thought what it might be.

Behind a rock he built a very small fire, and prepared supper. After this he went into the tent, and when he came out he carried a blanket under his arm. He chuckled as he stood for a moment over Kazan.

"We're not goin to sleep in there to-night, old boy," he said. "I don't like what you've found in the west wind. It may be a—thunder-storm!" He laughed at his joke, and buried himself in a clump of stunted banskians thirty paces from his tent. Here he rolled himself in his blanket, and went to sleep.

It was a quiet starlight night, and hours afterward Kazan dropped his nose between his forepaws and drowsed. It was the snap of a twig that roused him. The sound did not awaken the sluggish Dane but instantly Kazan's head was aleart, his keen nostrils sniffing the air. What he had smelled all day was heavy about him now. He lay still and quivering. Slowly, from out of the banskians behind the tent, there came a figure. It was not the little professor. It approached cautiously, with lowered head and hunched shoulders, and the starlight revealed the murderous face of Sandy McTrigger. Kazan crouched low. He laid his head flat between his forepaws. His long fangs gleamed. But he made no sound that betrayed his concealment under a thick banskian shrub. Step by step Sandy approached, and at last reached the flap of the tent. He did not carry a club or a whip in his hand now. In the place of either of those there was the glitter of steel. At the door to the tent he paused and peered in, his back to Kazan.

Silently and swiftly—the wolf now in every movement, Kazan came to his feet. He forgot the chain that held him. Ten feet away stood the enemy he hated above all others he had ever known. Every ounce of strength in his splendid body gathered itself for the spring. And then he leaped. This time the chain did not pull him back, almost neck-broken. Age and elements had weakened the leather collar he had worn since the days of his slavery in the traces, and it gave way with a snap. Sandy turned, and in a second leap Kazan's fangs sank into the flesh of his arm. With a startled cry the man fell, and as they rolled over on the ground the big Dane's deep voice rolled out in thunderous alarm as he tugged at his leash. In the fall Kazan's hold was broken. In an instant he was on his feet ready for another attack. And then the change came. He was free. The collar was gone from his neck. The forest, the stars, the whispering wind were all about him. Here were men and ok there was—Gray Wolf! His ears dropped and he turned swiftly, and slipped like a shadow back into the glorious freedom of his world.

A hundred yards away something stopped him for an instant. It was not the big Dane's voice, but the sharp crack— crack—crack, of the little professor's automatic. And above the sound there rose the voice of Sandy McTrigger in a werld and terrible cry.

CHAPTER XXVI

An Empty World

Mile after mile Kazan went on. For a time he was oppressed by the shivering note of death that had come to him in Sandy McTrigger's cry, and he slipped through the banskians like a shadow, his ears flattened, his tail trailing, his hindquarters betraying that curious slinking quality of the wolf and dog stealig away from danger. Then he came out upon a plain and the stillness, the billion stars in the clear vault of the sky, and the keen air that carried with it the breath of the Arctic currents made him alert and questioning. He faced the direction of the wind. Somewhere off there far to the south and west, was Gray Wolf. For the first time in many weeks he sat back on his haunches and gave the deep and vibrant cray that echoed for miles around him. Back in the banskians the big Dane heard it; and whined. From over the still body of Sandy McTrigger the little professor looked up with a white tense face and listened for a second cry. But instinct told Kazan that to the first call there would be no answer, and he now struck out swiftly, galloping mile after mile, as a dog follows the trail of its master home. He did not turn back to the lake, nor was his direction toward Red Gold City. As straight as he might have followed a road blazed by the hand of man he cut across the forty miles of plain and swamp and forest and rocky ridge that lay between him and the McFarlane. All that night he did not call again for Gray Wolf. With reasoning was a process brought about by habit—by precedent—and as Gray Wolf had waited for him many times before he knew that she would be waiting for him now near the sand-bar.

Rheumatism

A Home Cure Given by One Who had it

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar, but, understand I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write today.

SUPPORT UNION GOVERNMENT

Women of Canada:

"Be True to the Boys At the Front"

Sir Robert Borden in his manifesto says: "The franchise will be extended to women, not chiefly in recognition of devoted and capable service in the war, but as a measure of justice too long delayed. If men die, women suffer; if they are wounded, women heal; if they are maimed, women labor."

The franchise is extended to the women relatives of fighting Canadians, in order that they may help hasten Victory and bring the boys back from the trenches covered with the glory they have won.

A Vote for a Unionist Candidate Is a Vote for Reinforcements

The Union Government is pledged to carry on its work of raising the 100,000 reinforcements so urgently needed to support the Canadians at the front. Laurier and his adherents would stop this work, take a referendum, and experiment with voluntary enlistment, the possibilities of which have been exhausted. The most clear-headed, right-minded Liberals have gladly and without coercion helped to form the Union Government; they have weighed the pros and cons, they have not allowed politics to interfere with their patriotism, or their promise to our brave boys in France to "see them through."

WOMEN WHO CAN VOTE

Every woman may vote who is a British subject, 21 years of age, resident in Canada one year, and in the constituency 30 days, who is the mother, wife, widow, daughter, sister or half-sister of any person, male or female, living or dead, who is serving or has served without Canada in any of the Military forces, or within or without Canada in any of the Naval forces of Canada or of Great Britain in the Present War, or who has been honorably discharged from such services, and the date of whose enlistment was prior to Sept. 20th, 1917.

Such women should vote for the Unionist Candidate to ensure prompt reinforcements at the front.

Every ounce of strength in Canada should be exerted to help right a monstrous wrong the Prussian hierarchy would inflict upon the world. That is why the vote is placed in the hands of those most dear to our soldiers, trusting that the wifely love, and motherly devotion, and sisterly care, will vote as the boys would vote to carry on the work begun, and so far continued in the heroic spirit of self-sacrifice.

FRANKLYN FARNUM IN "ANYTHING ONCE"

One of the most ridiculous situations ever introduced in moving picture comedy will be presented at the Princess theater on Wednesday and Thursday, when "Anything Once" will be offered with Franklyn Farnum star of the occasion. When the picture was made the idea of a wagon load of exploding fireworks was incorporated in the producer's plans—but it was never dreamed that the team of horses drawing the load of Fourth of July explosives should run away. That was because the team had never been consulted and had not been trained to stand still while rockets and firecrackers rang the celebrated welkin in their immediate rear. When the scene was photographed there were, fortunately, enough cameras trained upon the team to "get" all that subsequently transpired—and good luck further attended the producer in that the horses were running in the open country where there could be no possible accident either to man or beast. The team just naturally ran itself tired with rockets "swishing" and giant fire-crackers popping to speed the advance. The incident makes one of the most spectacular, as well as one of the most hilariously funny scenes imaginable.

Thrilling Automobile Chase Over the Cliff With a Girl

Cast

Pearl Standish .....Pearl White
The Priestess .....Ruby Hoffman
Richard Carslake .....Warner Oland
Tom Carlton .....Henry Gsell

The thrilling automobile chase with Pearl unconscious in one machine, opens the 15th episode of the Pathe serial, "The Fatal Ring," at the Pantages theatre all next week.

While Pearl is struggling with Carslake, his lieutenant hits Pearl with a blackjack and she sinks back unconscious. Carslake opens the door and looks back. Surprised he sees Tom, who immediately recognizes him. Filled with rage Carslake mutters to himself, draws his revolver and fires at Tom, who is fast gaining on him. Speeding along at top speed they are now in the country. They near a railroad crossing. A freight train and Carslake's car are heading for the crossing at the same time. It seems inevitable that the two moving vehicles will clash. Will they? Carslake's car just skins across the tracks as the locomotive thunders by. Through this Tom is delayed by the fast moving cars. Not a second to waste, Tom takes the road alongside the track.

Carslake instructs his men to cut through the woods, which will lead to a cliff. When fifty feet from the edge of the cliff, they will jump, leaving Pearl in the car. Descending a hill, the three men jump from the machine.

The car with no driver moves fast towards the cliff. Carslake and his confederate crawl behind a boulder at the top of the hill and gaze down with intense excitement. Just as the car is a few feet from the edge Tom drives his car in front of it and is butted by Carslake's car over the cliff.

In the fall Tom grabs a rock and clings for life. Carslake and his men loosen a boulder at the top of the hill, and shove it downwards towards Pearl. Tom manages to climb to the top of the cliff. Ten feet from Pearl he stands transfixed as he gazes at the boulder, then rushes and rescues her.

Tom again tries to persuade Pearl to give up her fight for the Doamond but she refuses. She does agree to become his wife after her recovery The next moring Pearl and her aunt prepare to give a masquerade ball, announcing the engagement of Tom and Pearl.

Through one of his spies, Carslake learns of the reception and plans to go. Also the Priestess and her adherents read of the ball and decide to mask and go. The Priestess is under the impression that Pearl has the Diamond and this is her chance.

The night of the reception, Pearl masks as Juliet and Tom as Romeo. To be realistic and romantic, Pearl suggests that Tom and she go out on the balcony and he act as a real Romeo. Tom hesitates, but Pearl scolds him; he climbs down from the balcony and when on the ground starts to plead with her like Romeo of old.

In the armory room Carslake removes the setting from a hilt of a scimitar. About to escape, he is attacked by one of the Priestess' adherents. Two other men rush at Carslake and a hand to hand struggle follows. Hearing a noise, Pearl looks in the window. Frightened, she calls Tom, who climbs up and they rush in. Tom draws a knife, while Pearl takes some sort of a weapon from the wall. Pearl is attacked by two adherents, while Tom engages in a duel with Carslake. Tom is overpowered and falls to the floor. Pearl catches hold of one adherent, bangs his head against a corner of the wall and he falls. Carslake escapes.

Outside the Standish home, Carslake meets three of his men. His attention is called to the figure of Pearl coming towards him. A shot is fired and Pearl falls to the ground. As Carslake is about to pay his men Pearl appears and holds them up. The Priestess sneaks from the house and sees the pione figure, supposed to be Pearl. Turing the face upward she sees Cicely, a woman assistant of Carslake. Pearl demands the Diamond of Carslake. Instead of the Diamond Carslake is about to hand her the setting when one of his men snatch Pearl's gun. The Priestess takes the Diamond from the pocket of Cicely.

Would You Save the Wife You No Longer Love or the Other Woman?

Cast

Margaret Warner .....Ruth Roland
Horace Kennedy ..Roland Bottomley
Mary Kennedy .....Corene Grant
Edgar Doyle .....Neil Hardin
Frank Norwood ....Phiio McCullough

Confronted with the necessity of choosing between the life ofnLw-esa.t choosing between saving the life of your faithful wife in whom you have lost interest and the woman with whom you are in love! That is the question that surges in the mind of Horace Kennedy in the sixth episode of "The Neglected Wife," Pathe's big serial to be shown at the Allen theatre Monday and Tuesday.

Fate has brought Margaret Warner the girl whom Kennedy loves, his wife, and Norwood who is becoming deeply interested interested hrdl hrdl deeply interested in Margaret together on th Kennedy house-boat. Edgar Doyle, Kennedy's bitter enemy, has set fire to the boat while the men are ashore. Norwood and Kennedy return to find the boat in flames.

Margaret, first tempted to save herself leaving Mary to her fate, on second thought tries to save the wife who stands between her and the man she loves. In a thrilling succession of scenes she rescues Mary and Kennedy and in turn is rescued by Norwood.

Norwood engages in a fight with Doyle, while Kennedy bravely swims to the house-boat. Taking the rowboat which Doyle had, Norwood starts after Kennedy. Margaret calls to him that she is going to throw Mary's body over the railing. Mary's body falling into the water from deck above is siezed by Norwood. Kennedy struck by a beam lies unconscious near the stairs. Margaret pulls him over the railing, and with Norwood's assistance he too is saved, but Margaret faints and as Norwood jumps up to save her the little boat begins drifting down the river, with Mary and Kennedy. Norwood swims to shore with Margaret on his back and informs fishermen that Kennedy and his wife are on the rowboat. Drifting downstream, they are finally rescued. At the hotel Mary regaining consciousness discovers that Kennedy is still out of his senses and in his delirium repeats, And Mrs. Kennedy must never know, dear," The other woman," says Mary breathlessly, "f he would only speak her name."

Automobile and the Driver Hurled Thirty Feet Into River

As the great Salt Lake drawbridge between Long Beach and San Pedro lifted high its huge length slowly into the air, a roadster was noted traveling at the rate of seventy-five miles an hour, pursued by a second machine, driven over the railroad tracks, dashing toward certain death, an open drop of thirty feet into fifteen feet of water. No power on earth could stop the them. At the steering wheel of the roadster sat a white-faced man, his jaws firmly set. He leaped clear of the machine into the airN..cavehrdl,f the machine in mid-air, as he shot over the cement block under the drawbridge. Both man and machine hit the water simultaneously with a terrific splash. Somewhere, workmen were shouting. The occupants of the second machine stood hovering over the chasm. The man in the water came up a foot distant from the wreckage and swam clear of it.

"There's another stunt finished," said William Betram, director of Pathe's new serial, "The Neglected Wife," the sixth episode of which is to be shown here at the Allen theatre Monday and Tuesday. This serial based on Mabel Herbert Urner's famous stories, "The Journal of a Neglected Wife" and "The Woman Alone' was produced by Balboa. It features Ruth Roland, popular heroine of "Wha Pays?" and "The Red Circle." Mr. Betram had figured out to a mechanical perfection, the death-defying stunt and on his signals depended the life of Norman Manning, who had driven the car over the railroad on the drawbridge into the open drop. One signal there was for the bridge tender, one for a high masted launch in mid-channel, and the other for the man in the roadster at the far end of the railroad track. On a flat-boat near the launch, the camera man tok an upward shot at the "thriller."

George Dameral, last seen over the Orpheum circuit in "Temptation", has a new act written by Will M. Hough and entitled "The Little Liar." It is described as a musical farce and is said to be even more pretentious than "Temptation". Myrtle Vail and Edward Hume are again his principal assistants.

Doraldina, who has been credited with introducing the Hawaiian craze to New York and making it popular, is now slated for vaudeville. It is expected she will appear in New York very soon.

ENTHUSIASM

Enthusiasm is the touch-button which connects the current of energy with the wheels of industry.

Enthusiasm awakens the latent capacity, determines the bounds, moves the goal, and finally breaks the limit.

Enthusiasm is the combination to the safe where the securities are. It has raised th cowboy to president and changed the firebrand to an electric light bulb.

It is as essential to business as the hub is to a wheel. Around it everything revolves.

Enthusiasm manages the manager, rules the ruler and governs the governor. It turns the tireless wheels of toil.

Whenever you find an organization that lacks enthusiasm, you find a funeral in business.

Enthusiasm is what counts in every line of endeavor.

A Wicked, Kind Villain He Is

Warner Oland, arch villain of the Pathe serial, "The Fatal Ring," the fifteenth chapter of which will be shown at the Allen theatre next week, and probably the best heavy on the screen, grinned sardonically as Pearl White, star of the serial, was suspended head downward over a great pot of molten lead in the taking of one episode.

With cunning equal to that of His Satanic Majesty, Oland, impersonating the character of Richard Carslake, had devised a horrible end for the heroine. Only a thin rope held between life and the most awful of deaths in the fiery caldron. Over this rope the fiend had smeared cheese, and then turned loose a horde of half-starved rats. In their frantic efforts to get the last morsel of cheese, the rats were gnawing the rope. It was a matter of minutes only until the rope would separate and the beautiful young girl would be immersed in the bath of death.

"Mercy" she pleaded. But the heartless wretch sneered disdainfully, flecked the ash from his cigarette and hissing through his clenched teeth, "I know no mercy," left her to her fate.

"As I was saying," Oland continued, as he backed out of the camera's range and resumed his seat on a pile of "property" rocks, "I've had this dog for nine years. We've taken him every place with us—to California and all over. You know how attached you get to 'em, just like you do to a child.

"The other night he took sick. It was two o'clock in the morning and the nearest veterinarian was twelve miles away. But I got out the car and fetched him.. It was breaking dawn when he arrived and worked with the dog until I came to work. He said he would be all right by this evening but that we'd have to quit feeding him so much ice-cream and cake. Funny how you'll get attached to a dog, isn't it?"

"Carslake," called the director, "ready for scene 321." Oland hurried into the set, the sneering and sardonic grin on his face as he watched the ferocious rats gnaw the rope thinner and thinner.

ELSIE JANE WILSON DIRECTS ZOE RAE

One of the few women directors in pictures has been given charge of the company of which little Zoe Rae is the star, and their first release will be seen at the Princess theatre, when the Butterfly picture, "The Little Pirate," is shown there on Monday and Tuesday.

Elsie Jane Wilson the new recruit to the rather thin ranks of woman producers, is in private life the wife of Rupert Julian, the well known Bluebird producer and actor. She has assisted him in many of his productions and plays one of the leading parts in "The Circus of Life," the feature starring Zoe Rae which he made for Butterfly pictures lately. Miss Wilson is an Australian by birth, and an actress of reputation, who has had as much experience both on the stage and on the screen. She created the original vampire role in "A Fool There Was," and she played the heavy in the Geraldine Farrar picture "Temptation." Miss Wilson's last role for the screen was the mother in "The Circus of Life," but for the present she has quite given up acting for the director's authority, and will produce a series of features with the baby actress as her star, and a fine company in her support.

Vaudeville performers are doing their bit. So many enlisted under their birth names rather than their stage names that it has not been an easy task to keep track of their number, but every day reveals new patriots. The National Vaudeville Artists, the organization of the vaudevillians, is now preparing to hang a service flag on Broadway before it gets too bulky. The flag will contain 355 stars, and it is worthy of note that over half of these men volunteered.
