STARRED QUESTIONS

RADIO OPERATORS—ADVERTISING IN U.K.

Question No. 135—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Is the civil service commission advertising in the British isles for radio operators for the Department of Transport?
2. If so, have any steps been taken to provide persons presently residing in Canada with the training required for such jobs?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Acting Secretary of State): The answer to the first part of the question is yes. The answer to the second part is yes. Nevertheless, such training courses and repeated advertising across Canada have failed to provide the necessary supply of radio operators.

DROWNING ACCIDENT, SECHELT INLET, B.C.

Question No. 136—Mr. Regier:

1. Did the Royal Canadian Mounted Police investigate the accident in which six men were drowned in Sechelt inlet, near Gibson, British Columbia, during a storm on April 13 last?
2. If so, what were the results of the investigation?
3. When was the boat in question last inspected by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police previous to the tragedy?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): The answer to part 1 is yes, an investigation was made into the accident and search is continuing for the missing men.

The answer to part 2 is that six men in a boat owned and operated by John Alexander Morrison, 36 years of age, left Morrison's logging camp at 5 p.m. on April 13 to go to Sechelt, British Columbia, some eight miles away. The water was extremely rough with winds of 45 miles per hour gusting to 75 miles per hour. The partly submerged boat was recovered early the following morning. Investigation indicates that the one year old, 15 foot open boat was overloaded and the accident in all probability was a direct result of this factor and the adverse weather conditions.

The answer to part 3 is that the boat was inspected by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on April 4, 1960, and found at that time to be properly equipped.

POSTMASTER APPOINTMENTS—VETERANS PREFERENCE

Question No. 137—Mr. McWilliam:

Does the government recognize veterans preference in the appointment of postmasters for other than semi-staff and staff post offices?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

R.C.A.F. AIR CREW RETIREMENTS AND DISCHARGES

Question No. 138—Mr. Winch:

1. How many trained air crew officers, including those in command or staff appointments, requested retirement from the Royal Canadian Air Force (a) in the fiscal year 1958-59; (b) in 1959-60?
2. What was the approximate cost of training these officers?
3. How many technically-trained enlisted personnel declined to re-enlist (a) in 1958-59; (b) in 1959-60?
4. How many made other arrangements for discharge from the service?

Mr. Egan Chambers (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): The answer to part 1 is (a) 11; (b) 10.

The answer to part 2 is (a) $816,000; (b) $736,000.

The answer to part 3 is (a) 584; (b) 662.

The answer to part 4 is in 1958-59, 41; in 1959-60, 59.

STREET LETTER MAIL BOX SERVICE CONTRACT, CHATHAM, N.B.

Question No. 139—Mr. McWilliam:

1. On what date was the first contract awarded to the present contractor for the Chatham and street letter mail boxes service, Chatham, New Brunswick, and for what amount?
2. Was this contract renewed? If so, on what dates and for what periods?
3. Were public tenders called for this service any time after termination date of the first contract? If so, on what dates?
4. Was this tender renewed by negotiations with the contractor? If so, what were the agreed amounts, in each case?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): The answers are as follows:

1. October 1, 1950; $1,080 per annum.

2. No. A new contract was drawn, effective September 8, 1952, deleting service between the Chatham railway station and the Chatham post office. This contract was renewed without tenders in 1956 for a further period of four years expiring June 30, 1960.

Starred Questions

3. Yes. Tenders were called on May 2, 1960, to close June 3, 1960.

4. No.

TEACHERS' ISOLATION ALLOWANCES, INDIAN SCHOOLS, NORTHERN ONT.

Question No. 140—Mr. Benidickson:

1. Are isolation allowances paid to teachers at Indian day schools at Sandy Lake and Deer Lake in northern Ontario?
2. If not, for what reason?
3. How far are these locations from the most northern (a) railway; (b) highway?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The answers are as follows:

1. No.

2. Sandy Lake and Deer Lake were not listed as isolated posts in the isolated posts regulations issued in June, 1958. However, as a result of recent amendments to these regulations these two locations are now classed as isolated posts. When the teachers were appointed to positions at Sandy Lake and Deer Lake in September, 1959, it was stated in their terms of employment that no isolation allowance was payable. Teachers employed by the department are considered under contract; therefore no revision of pay and allowances is made during any contract period. However, in the case of these teachers the present contract period expires in August, 1960, and commencing with the new contract period in September, 1960 they will be eligible for both isolation allowance and living allowance.

3. Sandy Lake is about 200 air miles from the nearest railway at Sioux Lookout and about 120 air miles from Red Lake. Deer Lake is approximately 200 air miles from the nearest railway at Sioux Lookout and approximately 100 air miles from Red Lake.

Mr. Benidickson: Shameful neglect.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE INVESTMENTS AND BORROWINGS

Question No. 141—Mr. Benidickson:

1. (a) What was the aggregate book value and principal amount of investments held by the unemployment insurance commission as of March 31, 1960? (b) what was the book value, principal amount, rate of interest and date of maturity of each of the investments held by the unemployment insurance commission as of March 31, 1960? (c) what change occurred in the position of each of these investments for each month since March 31, 1959?
2. Has the unemployment insurance fund made any borrowings since March 31, 1959? If so, what amounts, on what dates, and at what rate of interest?

[Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace).]

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this starred question requires a detailed reply, and I would ask that the hon. member agree to have it made an order for return.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If there is no delay.

Mr. Benidickson: I hope it will not be neglected.

Mr. Starr: They never are when I have to answer.

Mr. Chevrier: I have waited several months in one instance.

Mr. Speaker: Order for return.

TEACHERS' ISOLATION ALLOWANCES, INDIAN SCHOOLS, NORTHERN ONT.

Question No. 142—Mr. Benidickson:

1. Does the government pay isolation allowances to teachers at Indian day schools at locations situated on a railroad, such as at Moosonee, Ontario, and, if so, how much?
2. When was a day school established at Pikangikum, Ontario?
3. How far is this school from (a) the nearest northern railway; (b) the nearest highway?
4. Has an isolation allowance been paid to the teacher at the Indian school at Pikangikum, Ontario?
5. If not, is it the intention of the Indian affairs branch to pay an isolation allowance to the teacher retroactively to time of engagement, and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The answers are as follows:

1. Yes, if designated as an isolated post under the isolated posts regulations. Moosonee has been designated an isolated post; an isolation allowance of $1,140 per annum for a married employee and $720 per annum for a single employee is payable.

2. The day school at Pikangikum has been operating since 1953. In addition, since 1949 a seasonal school has been operated during the summer months.

3. Pikangikum Indian day school is approximately 140 air miles from the railway station at Sioux Lookout, Ontario, which is believed to be the nearest, and approximately 56 air miles from the nearest road connection at Red Lake, Ontario.

4. No.

5. Pikangikum was not listed as an isolated post in the isolated post regulations issued in June, 1958. However, as a result of recent amendments to these regulations this location is now classed as an isolated post. When the teacher was appointed at Pikangikum on January 1, 1959 it was stated in the terms of employment that no isolation allowance was payable. Teachers employed by the department are considered under contract; therefore no revision of pay and allowance is made during any contract period. However, in this case the present contract period expires in August 1960, and commencing with the new contract period in September, 1960 the teacher at Pikangikum will be eligible for both the isolation allowance and living allowance.

SKILLED LABOUR—ADVERTISING IN U.K.

Question No. 143—Mr. Winch:

1. Has the Department of Citizenship and Immigration done any advertising in the British isles in the past six months inviting immigrants to Canada and outlining employment opportunities in the construction industry, in such trades as carpenters, plumbers, electricians and painters?

2. If so, has the department had any consultation with the national employment service or the unemployment insurance commission as to the availability of persons trained in these trades now resident in Canada?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The answer to the first part of this question is yes and the answer to the second part is yes.

COAL SUBVENTION PAYMENTS, NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 145—Mr. Batten:

What was the total expenditure for transportation subventions on coal in (i) Nova Scotia; (ii) New Brunswick, for the periods (a) April 1, 1935, to March 31, 1957; (b) from April 1, 1957, to March 31, 1960?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, there could be a problem in the wording of this question. Coal subventions are not, generally speaking, paid in a specific province, although they are paid on behalf of coal from that province. This has been drawn to the attention of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's, and I am assured that the figures he wants are the total amounts paid on behalf of Nova Scotia coal and New Brunswick coal during the periods indicated. He has kindly offered to withdraw the question and reword it, but I do not think this is necessary.

With this clarification, the answer to (i) (a) is that subvention expenditures on Nova Scotia coal from April 1, 1935 to March 31, 1957 totalled $66,437,765.54.

The answer to (i) (b) is that subvention expenditures on Nova Scotia coal from April 1, 1957 to March 31, 1960 totalled $28,302,797.86.

The answer to (ii) (a) is that subvention expenditures on New Brunswick coal from April 1, 1935 to March 31, 1957 totalled $491,434.92.

Starred Questions

The answer to (ii) (b) is that subvention expenditures on New Brunswick coal from April 1, 1957 to March 31, 1960 totalled $572,188.96.

3. With what type of aircraft?
4. From what bases?
5. Was the application granted?
6. If so, on what date?

With respect to parts 5, 6 and 7, the application in respect of Belleterre was granted by board decision, serial No. 1241, dated March 10, 1959, and the application in respect of South Porcupine was granted by board decision, serial No. 1272, dated May 21, 1959, both pursuant to government policy with respect to the licensing of services to be operated with small light aircraft in the group C category.

Question No. 149—Mr. Chevrier:

1. Did Georgian Bay Aircraft Limited apply for a class 4 chapter commercial air service (with group B aircraft) to the air transport board?
2. If so, was a public hearing held?
3. Where and on what date?
4. What was the decision of the air transport board?

[Mr. Cardin.]

5. Did Georgian Bay Aircraft Limited make a new application for the same service following the decision of the board?

7. Was the application granted?
8. If so, on what ground?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): In reply to part 1, Georgian Bay Airways Limited initially applied to the air transport board on April 27, 1959 for licences to operate class 4 charter commercial air services with group B aircraft from bases at Fort George, P.Q., and South Porcupine, Ontario.

With respect to parts 2, 3 and 4 of the question, a public hearing was held by the air transport board at Timmins, Ontario, on October 15, 1959, and the board, by decision serial No. 1359 dated December 1, 1959, denied the applications.

In reply to parts 5, 6 and 7, Georgian Bay Airways Limited reapplied to the board on December 21, 1959, for authority to operate charter services with groups B and C aircraft from bases at Moose Factory, Ontario, and Fort George, P.Q., and with group B aircraft in addition to group C from a base at South Porcupine, Ontario. The applications were granted by board decision serial No. 1370 dated January 21, 1960.

With respect to part 8, they were granted in accordance with government policy in respect of the licensing of services to be operated by aircraft in the groups B and C categories.

Question No. 150—Mr. Chevrier:

1. Who supported the application of Georgian Bay Aircraft Limited for class 4 charter commercial air services (with group B aircraft)?
2. Who opposed the application?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): With regard to part 1 of this question, may I say that as the list is quite lengthy, perhaps the house would agree that it could be printed without being read.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hees: The answer to part 2 is Austin Airways Limited.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to have printed that part of his answer which he did not read?

MOTION FOR PAPERS

ANNA BADMAN, VANCOUVER—BAIL REFUND

Motion No. 94—Mr. Howard:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or other documents received by the government or any department or agency thereof since January 1, 1957, dealing with the refunding of estreated bail to Mrs. Anna Badman of Vancouver, British Columbia.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): This motion deals with correspondence, telegrams or other documents received by the government in respect of a matter involving consideration of the exercise of the powers of remission, which are exercisable under the prerogative of mercy.

As I explained to the house on May 2, documents of this type are by consistent policy not produced. In the course of consideration of such matters as are involved here, considerable correspondence is normally exchanged, and communications are received by way of letters and reports which often are confidential reports on the person who is the subject of inquiry, including police reports. The entire files are therefore regarded as confidential, since to produce such correspondence and documents would destroy the confidential nature of the exchange and deprive us of the benefit of having an unrestricted expression of views on the matter in question.

For this and other reasons it has always been considered contrary to public policy to produce material such as that asked for in this motion. However, I have indicated to the hon. gentleman, and should like to repeat here, that if it will be of assistance to him I will be prepared to show him the files personally in order that he may satisfy himself that there is nothing improper or unusual in any of the correspondence that is here. In such circumstances I would hope that he might agree to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member willing in the circumstances to withdraw the motion?

Mr. Howard: I think I cannot do so, Mr. Speaker, because the minister has already answered a question asked by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) in which he gave certain information. The motion in effect asks for additional information related to some individuals whose names are given in the answer.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

IMMIGRATION

ANNOUNCEMENT OF AMENDMENT TO REGULATIONS RESPECTING FIANCEES

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, may I ask permission to revert to motions to make an announcement?

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister permission to revert to motions to make an announcement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Fairclough: I wish to make an announcement with reference to an amendment to the immigration regulations as they affect the admission of fiancees. Heretofore the fiancee of a Canadian citizen or of a person admitted to Canada for permanent residence was admitted as an immigrant on the condition that he or she would marry the sponsoring fiancee within 30 days following arrival in Canada.

In future fiancees will be allowed entry as non-immigrants under the authority of a minister's permit issued under section 8 of the Immigration Act. Admission for permanent residence will be granted only after they have married.

The effect of this amendment is to provide more flexibility for the handling of fiancee applications and to expedite the granting of permanent residence to fiancees once they have become legally married.

Mr. Jung: May I ask a supplementary question of the minister. In view of the announcement just made by the minister, can she inform the house whether this applies—

Mr. Pickersgill: Are we on orders of the day?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member reserve his questions for the orders of the day?

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to say in reply to the announcement that we are awfully pleased to recognize the ameliorating influence of the opposition on the minister.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Douglas Jung (Vancouver Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I apologize for having tried to ask this question when I did. I am sure the house will forgive me when I say that I momentarily forgot the rules of procedure because of an event which happened yesterday afternoon, namely the birth of twins to my wife.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is forgiven for seeing double today.

Mr. Jung: My question is, in view of the announcement just made by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration regarding the relaxation of the immigration rules regarding fiancees, can the minister inform the house whether this amendment will also apply to Chinese and Japanese fiancees, and whether it now will be still necessary for sponsors of Chinese and Japanese fiancees to post a $1,000 bond when submitting their applications?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The answer is yes, it does apply; and the posting of the bond will now not be necessary.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FLIGHTS OF U.S. PLANES OVER CANADIAN TERRITORY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is it a fact that United States U-2 planes have made a series of weather flights over Canada? If so, were such flights made as the result of special arrangements with the Canadian government, which preclude using Canadian bases as take-off points for flights to the Soviet union?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in answering that question perhaps I can deal with the points raised in one or two related questions, particularly in view of the fact that there was in this morning's Globe and Mail a rather startling headline, "Spy Type of Planes Fly From Canada".

No such planes have ever operated from a Canadian air base. That was made clear by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) in a statement which he issued yesterday afternoon, and it has also been confirmed in Washington today by Mr. Lincoln White as spokesman for the state department. Furthermore, no such plane as the plane described here as a spy type has ever landed in Canada. Apparently the main type of U-2 plane is one which is designed for high flying, and is used for meteorological and radiological sampling. Such planes carry United States air force markings and are flown by United States air force pilots, neither of which fact pertains in the case of the plane which came down in the Soviet union.

One of the planes which is used for meteorological and radiological sampling made a forced landing north of Prince Albert on March 15, 1960. It was on a routine flight, the purpose of which was upper atmosphere meteorological and radiological sampling. It was returning from a point over Liverpool bay near the mouth of the Mackenzie river, and had not proceeded beyond North American air space. The flight in question was one of a series of scientific flights to obtain precise information about clear air turbulence, upper air cloud formations, jet streams and radiation in the upper atmosphere. The aircraft have been unarmed and all flights have been cleared in the normal manner. This is not only a matter of the planes being cleared and flight plans being filed, but also the making of reports during flight and when the plane returns to the United States.

As I have said, one such plane crashed north of Prince Albert on March 15, 1960. There is no question about its bona fides in the case, that it was such a plane and not one engaged in flying over the territory of any other country. I am further informed that these particular U-2 planes do not have the flight range to be able to fly from the United States over Canada and thence over Soviet territory.

I am very glad to have the opportunity to deal with this question this afternoon, because now if ever is the time for cool heads both in the east and in the west. As I pointed out on Monday the aim of the government, and the aim, I am sure, of every member of the house, is to bring about a reduction of tension and eventually complete disarmament. Stories of this kind do not help very much in attaining these objectives.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask a supplementary question. If the Secretary of State for External Affairs takes the position that the foreign minister of the United Kingdom has taken and refuses to answer any questions having to do with intelligence, I will understand. Will he say whether he can comment on the existence of any other form of intended intelligence on the part of the Soviet union other than by airplanes; for instance, submarines?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be very helpful for me to reply to a question of that kind.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I noted that the Secretary of State for External Affairs had in his hand, as I have, a copy of the front page of today's Globe and Mail and he was very vehement about certain interpretations there contained.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Benidickson: Based on the same page of the Globe and Mail, I should like to address a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Revenue. All of us noted—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Benidickson: Well, will the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Revenue take up with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation the playing down of this prominent article on the front page of the Globe and Mail, when on the eight o'clock news broadcast from Toronto use is invariably made of this page as the chief source of information for the broadcast? Was there some intimation from the ministry to the C.B.C. that this matter should be played down this morning?

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of either of the suppositions made by the hon. member in his question.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF SEASONAL BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Inasmuch as seasonal benefits for the unemployed come to an end this coming Sunday, May 15, can the minister advise the house whether any plans have now been prepared to take care of those who will come off benefits this coming Sunday and who are still unemployed?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I explained this whole situation to the hon. member in answer to one of his questions last week, I believe. I pointed out that seasonal benefits formally ended on April 15, and that those employed in seasonal work are now on seasonal benefits for an additional month.

Mr. Winch: May I ask a supplementary question. As there are thousands who are not going back to employment, what care is going to be taken of them?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will recall that, as the minister indicated, there was a similar question and exchange about a week ago. I am sure the hon. member does not expect a question of that kind to be dealt with in an oral answer.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question, based on the fact that a delegation—

Mr. Speaker: It is a matter of declaring policy, and the government has a right to decide when it will declare its policy and not to have to do so in answer to a question.

Mr. Benidickson: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour referring to the extension of seasonal unemployment benefits. I have a press release here which may be too terse, but which indicates that the minister has done something.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Benidickson: I am referring to a press report which, quoting the Minister of Labour, says that he has extended the period of seasonal unemployment insurance benefits. I want to ask the minister whether he has extended seasonal unemployment benefits without informing the house.

Mr. Starr: I think the hon. member has reference to what I said to a delegation yesterday morning. I did say that this government has extended seasonal benefits by two months, something that the former government resisted and would not do to help those in receipt of seasonal benefits. This government extended seasonal benefits by two months, and they are now in effect from December 1 to May 15.

Mr. Benidickson: Is there any new extension this year that has not been announced to the house?

Mr. Starr: This extension is new? It is two years old.

[Later:]

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he would clarify a statement he made earlier today, when he said the government had extended unemployment benefits for two months. Did the minister mean that benefits had been extended or that the period during which benefits may be received had been extended? If so, what extension has been made to benefits, apart from the benefit period?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that any extension of benefits is a matter for legislation in this house. What has been done, if it is not known to hon. members, can certainly be easily ascertained.

(Translation):

MONTREAL—REPORTED INSTRUCTIONS TO OFFICIALS RESPECTING UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr). Is it true that, as of tomorrow, by virtue of a decision reached by officers of his department, hundreds of unemployed will no longer be allowed to wait at the unemployment insurance offices in Montreal, and that those calling there to collect their benefits or apply for jobs will no longer be allowed to queue up outside the building?

(Text):

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the translation was not complete, and I am afraid I shall have to look at Hansard in order to answer the hon. member's question.

Mr. Johnson: You do not need to answer. He was making a statement.

Mr. Chevrier: The question was quite clear.

Mr. Starr: The translation was not complete.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Timmins.

Mr. Chevrier: May I put the question in the English language, since the minister felt that the translation system was not working properly?

Mr. Starr: I did not say that. I said the translation was not complete.

Mr. Chevrier: I accept the minister's correction; he says the translation was not complete. I wonder whether I might be allowed to ask the question in English, because I think it is in order. The question is whether it is a fact that a decision has been taken by the officers of the minister's department that beginning tomorrow the thousands of unemployed who have hitherto lined up before the offices of the unemployment insurance commission in Montreal will no longer be able to do so, and neither will they be allowed to stand in line in order to get their benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, if any instructions of that nature have gone out, then of course they have gone out on the direction of the unemployment insurance commissioners. I most certainly will look into the matter and see whether that is true.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE FAIR

NEW YORK—REPORTED NON-PARTICIPATION BY CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. D. Crestohl (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister aware that among the 66 countries showing exhibits at the United States world fair in New York there is no Canadian pavilion, no tourist promotion booth and no Canadian products are individually displayed; and that all this was reported in a Canadian Press dispatch from New York several days ago? Has the minister any comment?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that we are not in a position to exhibit at every trade fair that takes place in other countries. We exhibit at a very large number of them. The expenditure—I am calling on my memory now—is close to half a million dollars for government participation in assisting businessmen who are exhibiting at trade fairs.

This matter can be discussed when the estimates of trade and commerce are before the house. We can discuss the number of trade fairs in which we are interested and in which we participate. Trade fairs are going on in almost every country of the world, and we simply cannot take part in all of them. We are doing a great piece of active work in exhibiting at trade fairs, and the results have been highly satisfactory. The ideal home exhibition in London was one of the best examples of Canadian exhibits at a fair.

If the hon. member wishes to propose, when the estimates of trade and commerce are before the house, that we should expend more money on trade fairs I will perhaps support him.

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNITED NATIONS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND FOR AFRICAN DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): In view of the renewed interest in economic assistance to the nations of Africa, I wonder whether the minister could add anything to an answer he gave me on March 9, when I asked him whether the Canadian government had discussed with the secretary general of the United Nations his proposal for an African development fund. At that time the minister said he had not had an opportunity of discussing this question with the United Nations secretary general, and I wondered if there had been any discussions between Canada and the secretary general of the United Nations on the establishment of such a fund.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not believe there has been, but I shall make inquiries and give the hon. member a further answer at a later date.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): There is a supplementary question from the supernumerary, but before asking it I must say that this group appreciated very much the reply given by the minister to the question asked by the hon. member for Laurier with respect to United States air force planes leaving and landing in Canada. I agree with him that we all have to do the best we can to work together to create the best possible atmosphere for the summit conference.

Knowing the minister's high regard—

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Herridge: I am coming to the question—and appreciation for exactitude, may I say that my question is—

An hon. Member: Oh, ask it.

Mr. Herridge: —some time ago the Globe and Mail mentioned that the Prime Minister was responsible for the aid to Africa program through the establishment of a commonwealth fund. Has his attention been drawn to this morning's Globe and Mail which now states the plan—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has taken enough time now to ask a number of questions. I wonder if he could come to the point and ask his question.

Mr. Herridge: I am just about to do so. In view of the previous report that the Prime Minister of Canada had originated the aid to Africa program, and the fact that today's Globe and Mail says that Mr. Nkrumah originated it, would the minister mind informing the house which is the correct version?

Mr. Green: I am sure the hon. member is not trying to take any credit away from Canada.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. Is it not a fact that the proposal for a fund to assist Africa was not made by the Prime Minister of Canada but by the prime minister of Ghana?

Mr. Green: I am surprised that the hon. member is trying to take the credit away from Canada.

Mr. Argue: Is the minister aware of the fact that I proposed this on March 9?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

UNEMPLOYMENT—SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION BY JOINT COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether, in the light of the action forecast in another place, the government would consider asking this house to join with the other place in an inquiry having to do with exploring the possibilities of maintaining and extending a high level of employment and thereby—I am putting my own interpretation on it—reducing unemployment.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): From time to time in the past committees on other matters have been set up in the other place, and in most cases have served very useful purposes. This committee in the other place has been set up on the initiative of the other place. My feeling is that they will approach the matter without bias and perform a good service in respect of the subject being considered. Consequently I feel that the matter should be left in that position.

Mr. Pickersgill: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is inquiring into a matter of policy, not a matter of information or fact. He is asking the government to declare a policy with respect to the discussion of this matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, sir; I was not asking the minister to declare any policy, I was asking if the government would ask this house to join in an inquiry. I should like to ask a supplementary question of the minister, and it is this. Does he suggest that the members in this house who represent the people will approach that question with bias?

An hon. Member: You would.

Mr. Speaker: This is one of those questions which make an assertion rather than asking a question. I will permit an answer if the minister can give a factual answer to such a question.

Mr. Starr: I did not imply that at all, but evidently the conscience of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate bothers him in that respect.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he will review the proposed amendments in Bill No. C-58, that is the bill relating to the Combines Investigation Act, in order to determine whether the proposed amendments are incomplete; and if so would he withdraw the bill and resubmit it?

Mr. Speaker: Surely the proper time to discuss a matter that is on the order paper is when it is called.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR AID TO MUNICIPALITIES RESPECTING UNEMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he can advise the house whether any consideration is being given to the provision of financial aid to municipalities which, after May 15, will have to assume heavily increased commitments for welfare because unemployment seasonal benefits end on that date.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I think the hon. member must be aware that provision has been made by parliament, at the request of the present government, for the sharing with the provinces of unemployment assistance on an equal basis, without any of the threshold provisions that limited that kind of aid under the former government. He must be aware also that very extensive provision has been made through the large grants under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act for the assistance of the provinces and, through them, the municipalities.

Mr. Winch: I have a supplementary question. I think the minister misunderstood me. I am completely aware of the commitments of the federal government and of the 50-50 arrangement between the federal government and provincial governments with regard to the care of the employable unemployed. But in view of the situation which arises on May 15 may I ask—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have already intervened when the hon. member was asking a supplementary question of a similar character. I fail to see how any good purpose can be served by trying to debate a matter of policy of this kind on orders of the day.

Mr. Winch: I am not debating. I want to ask a question.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I must ask the hon. member to resume his seat.

INDUSTRY

SMALL CARS—INQUIRY AS TO TREASURY BOARD DIRECTIVE RESPECTING GOVERNMENT PURCHASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister say whether a directive has been issued by the treasury board or any other government body instructing departments of the Canadian government to buy small cars instead of big ones? I am asking this question because of the serious unemployment problem that confronts the automobile industry.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the minister not going to answer the question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I said no, sir.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the minister not—

Mr. Speaker: I just recognized the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the minister has said that he is not aware of such a direction, will he not take notice of a statement in today's Globe and Mail attributed to the deputy minister and saying that such a direction exists? Will the minister see that the direction is negated at once, because obviously it is at serious variance with the interests of Canadian workers.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Some day, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will ask a question not accompanied by a speech or a harangue, but he has not learned to do so yet. He asked a question a moment ago, and I answered his question.

Mr. Chevrier: You have a lot to learn.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have not anything to learn from the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, you have.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have not seen the newspaper report to which the hon. gentleman has referred. I will, of course, look at it. I attempt to keep in contact with what is done in the treasury board, but I do not profess to be in contact with every decision of every government board and every government department.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Treasury board comes under you, and you should know.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If it is something falling under the responsibility of the Minister of Finance, the hon. member can be assured that the Minister of Finance will be prepared to take his proper responsibility in that regard.

TRANSPORT

RADIO OPERATORS—SUGGESTED FAILURE OF TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister tell the house why his technical assistance program has not resulted in the training of sufficient radio operators to meet the demands of the Department of Transport?

Mr. Grafftey: That is a statement not a question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question assumes a fact and asks for argument under it. I do not think the hon. member's question is within the proper scope of oral questions. If he has a matter of fact to inquire into I will permit him to do so.

Mr. Hellyer: On the point of order which you have raised, Mr. Speaker, may I say that it is not an assumption of fact. It is based on a fact which was given here by the government in answer to a starred question, the fact being that advertisements for radio operators had to be placed in the United Kingdom because there were not sufficient available here after advertisements had been issued for them.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me the hon. member's question still asks for an expression of opinion on a set of facts which he asserts, and in that sense is likely to introduce an argument rather than to elicit information.

Mr. Hellyer: I want to know the reason.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for Timmins.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

FLOODS

TIMMINS, ONT.—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the severe flooding in Mount Joy township near Timmins, which has caused the Red Cross to declare it an emergency area, and in view of the fact that over 300 families have had to be evacuated from flooded homes, can the Acting Prime Minister say whether the government is giving consideration to some financial assistance, in conjunction with provincial and local authorities, for the maintenance and rehabilitation of the victims of this unfortunate disaster?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): I am sure all members of the house have learned with a great deal of regret of this disaster in the Timmins area, and would wish to have sympathy extended to the people who are suffering. The regular course to follow in such cases where there is a national disaster is for the province to make an application. Of course, if such an application were made very careful consideration would be given to a request made by the province.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the imminent further danger of a major disaster if dams should give way on the Mattagami river above Timmins, could the minister say whether his department is prepared to supply assistance promptly to the area?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the department would be prepared to provide assistance if a request came through the normal channel, which would be from the provincial government to the general officer commanding the area who is located at Oakville and who has the necessary resources available to render such assistance.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

WINDSOR, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO DELAY IN COMPLETION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. N. L. Spencer (Essex West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. There has been a delay in the completion of the public building at Windsor, and I am inquiring of the minister whether he is aware of this delay and whether he can give the house the reason for it?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I want to congratulate the hon. member for Essex West on the assiduous manner in which he takes care of the interests of Windsor. In reply to his question I would say it was only last night that the construction company temporarily stopped operations on the new federal building there, owing to some problem in connection with partitioning. We hope that operations will recommence on Monday next.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the minister whether he received my communication along the lines of the question put by the hon. member for Essex West?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I was quite surprised that I did not receive any communication from the hon. member.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO AVAILABLE EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister advise the house whether the national employment service has employment opportunities for carpenters, plumbers, electricians and painters and, if so, in what parts of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The inquiry is properly one for the order paper, unless the minister has the information at hand.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I have not.

SHIPPING

SMALL BOAT REGULATIONS—INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister say what progress his department is making in developing licensing regulations for small craft, and whether his department have reached the stage where any amendments or new regulations will be introduced for this boating season.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe the progress we are making is very good and very satisfactory. I will speak to those in my department responsible for this matter and give the hon. member an answer tomorrow.

GRAIN

REPORTED INTENTION TO MAKE ADDITIONAL ACREAGE PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I would like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Would he comment on a Canadian Press dispatch in the Regina Leader-Post of May 5, which states:

> The federal government intends to make another acreage payment to western grain farmers before the end of the year, an authoritative source said Wednesday.

I am wondering whether such decision has now been made.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, any decision on this point will be announced in due course.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS ACT

ALTERNATIVE ARRANGEMENTS FOR UNIVERSITY GRANTS—EXTENSION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX RATE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, May 10, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-56, to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act—Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) —Mr. Flynn in the chair.

On clause 1—Amendment of agreements.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before you give your ruling, I had not intended to say anything on the point that was raised until the second intervention by the Minister of Finance, but it seemed to me—and I am not taking issue with that at all at the moment—that in his second intervention the minister assumed that the general discussion which Your Honour ruled would be in order had been completed. I simply wanted to point out Your Honour that there were a number of hon. members on this side of the house who wished to participate in that general discussion before we discuss the details of clause 1.

The Chairman: The point of order which was raised last night came about when the hon. member for Gatineau was speaking, and I took the view that his remarks at that time should be addressed to clause 2 of the bill when we came to examine that clause. The remarks which were made on that point of order revived the previous question of whether general debate could take place on clause 1 of the bill in committee. I have examined the question and I find that there are not many precedents or many very explicit decisions on the matter.

May I say first that if the practice has been to allow a general debate on clause 1 of a bill, it is not strictly in accordance with the rules because the procedure is to study in committee the bill clause by clause only. Of course, as all hon. members know, discussion in committee has to be strictly relevant. Therefore this is a practice which has grown over the years, but it has been indicated in some instances that this discussion should be of a particular nature.

Hon. members will realize that it is easier to say what it cannot be than what it can be. First, it cannot be the same as that which took place on second reading because we have to apply the rule of strict relevancy as provided by standing order 59, paragraph 2. It may not be the same, either, as that which takes place in the normal way when we discuss the bill clause by clause, because then we would be repetitive. I may say that I would have to object to any comments which would normally be addressed to the discussion of a clause, and that is the view I took when the hon. member for Gatineau was speaking.

As to what exactly can be discussed on clause 1, when we have a discussion in general terms, I should think that the nature of the bill might change the possibilities. When it is a new act comprising several clauses, I should think discussion on the general bill in general terms could refer, for instance, to the format or plan of the act or its drafting. By these remarks I do not want to limit the discussion to these points; I am just giving an example. On the other hand, an amending act may sometimes not offer the possibility of a very wide discussion on clause 1. In the present case, to me the general discussion provided on clause 1 would be rather limited.

I have accorded some latitude up to now, but if the remarks are directed to the way the bill is drafted in a particular clause—reference to some terms in a particular clause—I would think those remarks should be made when we come to the clause in question; otherwise we would have repetition. It is not my intention to prevent free discussion of the bill but simply to have as orderly a discussion as possible.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, yesterday when I was discussing clause 1 I made a number of points. There was one, however, which I had not had the opportunity of making and I did not want to insist upon additional time for making it. Then I abided by the wish of the committee to retire after I was given the opportunity to say a few words in conclusion.

[The Chairman.]

I do want now at this stage to reiterate another point and at the same time make a new point dealing with clause 1. I think your ruling will allow me to do it, but before I proceed I should like to draw your attention to clause 6, subsection 3, of the tax rental agreement which is now under discussion under clause 1 of this bill and which in effect allows the minister, with the approval of the governor in council, to enter into an agreement amending or extending the terms and conditions. If one looks at clause 1 he will see that about the middle of the clause now under discussion and toward the end reference is made to a province:

—described in subparagraph (ii) of paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of section 9A,—

This therefore brings into operation the words that were discussed last evening such as "in the opinion of the minister" and "in accordance with the terms and conditions," and so forth

I assure you, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to abuse that interpretation which I put on clause 1 because I do not intend to deal with the point I have in mind at any length, but I simply lay that as a basis to substantiate what I think is the position Your Honour took last evening and that which you are taking now.

The other matter which we on this side of the house feel is of great concern to us and which I am sure should be of concern to all hon. members of the committee but more particularly to hon. members from the province of Quebec is the attitude that is being taken or has been taken on this bill by the government of that province. Here I want to deal with the correspondence that was exchanged between the Prime Minister of Canada and the various premiers of the province of Quebec, correspondence which I say took some considerable time to be tabled because the notice of motion which I put on the order paper on a certain date was not returned until many months thereafter although I had on more than one occasion asked for the submission of the correspondence.

I believe this correspondence should be of great importance to the committee because neither in the correspondence nor any of the statements made did the Prime Minister of Canada at any time mention that the federal government would require that the arrangements between the province and the universities would have to be—and these words I place in quotation marks—"satisfactory in the opinion of the Minister of Finance," and that they would have to comply with the terms of the agreement made between the Minister of Finance and the Canadian universities foundation.

It is true, on the other hand, that the Prime Minister in the correspondence made it quite clear that the excess of the provincial tax over the $1.50 per capita would be deducted from equalization payments or any other payments due to the province. The premier of Quebec did not accept that condition at any stage in the exchange of correspondence which I should like to put on Hansard.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, it is quite obvious that the hon. gentleman is doing the same thing as he did last night. He is proceeding now to discuss the provisions of clause 2 of the bill. The point the hon. gentleman is raising now is related to the provisions of clause 2 of the bill. It has nothing to do with clause 1.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the only point I wish to make is that in view of your ruling it has been decided, I think, that there can be a general discussion. What I am dealing with is a general discussion of the clause but I have gone a step further and have said that clause 1 incorporates clause 2 when there is reference in the latter part of it to a province described in subparagraph (ii) of paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of section 9A. Therefore it is not possible to discuss this clause intelligently without reference to section 9A. I therefore submit with deference that on both counts—on the count that you yourself found there should not be prevented a general discussion of the clauses and on the count of the reference I have made to the special clause which I am not going to discuss in detail—I should be allowed to proceed.

The Chairman: I will allow the hon. member to continue for the time being. I must warn him, however, that later on when we come to clause 2 if I find out that his remarks now were directed to clause 2 I will not be able to let him repeat what he is now saying. Because the hon. member said he cannot discuss clause 1 without reference to clause 2 I will allow him to proceed for the time being.

Mr. Chevrier: If Your Honour rules me out in that respect, I will have no fault to find. I now wish to place on record the correspondence that took place between the Prime Minister and the premier. However, since this correspondence has taken place the premier of Quebec has stated on two different occasions—on one occasion in Montreal and on another in Joliette—that there was no understanding or agreement between his government and the federal government about the new arrangements provided in this bill.

In a letter sent by the Prime Minister of Canada to the premier of Quebec dated February 2, 1960 here is what was said, and I quote:

> My dear Prime Minister,
> I appreciate the constructive suggestions contained in your letter of January 21, and believe that they provide the basis for discussions which will assure agreement on the several aspects of grants to universities.
> I am glad to learn that your government agrees to the general principle for settlement of the problems and if further clarification is needed to secure agreement in detail—

I underline those words, "if further clarification is needed to secure agreement in detail". I continue:

> —I feel that the best course to adopt would be to have early discussions between representatives of the two governments. If you are agreeable to such discussions I shall name the Hon. Donald M. Fleming to represent the federal government, and I await your reply as to when such a meeting can be arranged.

A reply came from the premier of Quebec under date of February 5, 1960, the second paragraph of which reads as follows:

> The suggestion which you make that I should meet the Hon. Donald M. Fleming, acting as representative of the federal government, and the speed with which you have replied to my letter allow me, I presume, to anticipate that very soon you and I will be in a position to announce that the already expressed hope of a settlement regarding the grants to the universities has been realized.

I repeat:

> —to announce that the already expressed hope of a settlement regarding the grants to the universities has been realized.

Having said that, I hasten to add that we all know that the meeting between Mr. Barrette and the Minister of Finance took place but nothing transpired from the discussion. I asked the minister on the orders of the day in the house to make a statement in respect to this. If the minister wishes I have the questions and answers which I could place on the record. However, the minister refused to say anything. He said on that occasion, in effect, "wait until the bill and the resolution which is already on the order paper come before parliament and you will then see for yourself what is in that piece of legislation." There evidently comes to mind the question which is raised by this correspondence: Was there an agreement in detail secured at the meeting as the Prime Minister hoped in his letter? Thus far we do not know.

One thing is certain, however, and it is this. No announcement was made in that respect either by the Prime Minister of Canada or by the premier of Quebec save and except the announcement which was made by the Prime Minister outlining the terms under which this legislation would be brought forward many months ago, a part of which I have already put on the record during the discussion of the resolution. Neither was there any announcement made or agreement reached, as stated by the premier of the province of Quebec in his letter.

The premier of Quebec on two occasions, I said, made it quite clear that no agreement and no understanding had been reached between his government and the federal government. Here I should like to put on record a statement appearing in Le Devoir of May 9, 1960, which can be found at page 6 and which reads as follows:

(Translation):

Mr. Barrette said that there was never any question of an agreement with Ottawa, but a decision taken by an autonomous government to settle a thorny problem. Thus, by proudly expressing our will, we finally succeeded in recovering for Quebec $10 million in taxes every year, and the $25 million lying dormant in Ottawa coffers.

We even got the federal government to admit that it will entirely vacate the field of education, thus finally winning out after years of struggle.

Mr. Tremblay: That is sheer nonsense.

(Text):

Mr. Chevrier: The statement made by the premier of Quebec, which appears in Le Devoir of April 20, 1960, at page 6:

(Translation):

Mr. Johnson: You have a good prompter.

Mr. Chevrier:

During last session, we passed seven measures for education. One of those acts raises from 9 to 10 per cent the tax on corporation profits and enables us to increase grants by $10 million. We hoped that the federal government would grant an equivalent exemption to corporations, but it was never a condition and there never was any agreement. The federal government has clearly recognized the right of the provinces and we were able to collect $10 million at no cost at all to Quebec taxpayers.

Now, listen to this:

... without entering into any agreement, and by an autonomous government.

So no agreement was entered into between the two governments.

(Text):

Therefore, the committee is entitled to know what took place at the meeting between Mr. Barrette and the Minister of Finance. In his letter which I quoted earlier Mr. Barrette said he hoped an agreement would be reached. That was before his meeting with the Minister of Finance. Now long after the meeting has taken place he says there has been no such agreement or no understanding reached with Ottawa. Hence we are entitled to know from the Minister of Finance what transpired at that meeting. Were the terms of this bill made known to the premier of the province of Quebec? What was the reaction to the terms? We have, of course, thus far the version given to us in this house by the Solicitor General who spoke on an earlier occasion. He told us what took place between the Quebec premier and the Minister of Finance. What he said is to be found at page 3286 of Hansard of April 26, 1960, and I quote:

(Translation):

A few days before his death, Mr. Duplessis stated that he would be in a position to submit, in October, a positive proposition to the ministers from Ottawa. It was the Hon. Paul Sauve who submitted that positive proposition. Federal ministers discussed it with Mr. Sauve and, at the time of his tragic death, only a few details remained to be worked out, which was done during a private interview between Mr. Antonio Barrette, Mr. Sauve's successor, and the Minister of Finance, sponsor of the bill which is now before us.

We have kept our word admirably, because Premier Barrette himself believes that this bill is consistent with the terms of Mr. Duplessis' proposal, which was submitted again by Mr. Sauve, and later by Mr. Barrette himself.

(Text):

According to the Solicitor General there was complete agreement between the Quebec premier and the Minister of Finance when they met in Quebec city and the Quebec premier accepted all the provisions of this bill. There is, therefore, a complete and direct contradiction between the Solicitor General on the one hand and Mr. Barrette on the other, and we on this side of the house, although we are entitled to know what the position is, do not know which of the two interpretations to accept. If we accept the interpretation given by the Solicitor General, who by the way was not at the meeting in Quebec, then it means that the Quebec premier has accepted the provision that the arrangements the province would make with the universities would have to be satisfactory in the opinion of the minister, as set out in this clause. I cannot believe for one moment that the premier of the province of Quebec, who poses as a great champion of provincial autonomy, has accepted this condition. It also means, if we accept the version of the Solicitor General, that the Quebec premier has accepted to become bound by the definitions to which I referred earlier of a university student, university level and university degree as determined by the Minister of Finance in his agreement with the Canadian universities foundation. Here again I cannot believe that the Quebec premier has accepted this condition, which is a serious limitation upon the sovereign right of the province guaranteed under our constitution.

Again, if we accept the Solicitor General's interpretation, it means that Mr. Barrette has accepted that a share of the provincial revenues would be deducted by the federal government as a debt due Canada, as set out in the terms of this bill. Neither can I believe that—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, again we are having a repetition of the same thing as we had before and which is turning this discussion into, if I may say so, a very disorderly proceeding. The hon. member is referring to clause 2 all the time and he is discussing the specific provisions of clause 2. Now, what does this mean? It means that it will not be open to any hon. member in this house to correct the errors in which the hon. gentleman is now engaging without equally breaking the rules of the house.

It is one thing to permit a general discussion; it is a very different matter for the hon. gentleman, taking advantage of that cover, to proceed to discuss in detail the language in the specific provisions of clause 2. With great respect, Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman all the way through has just been taking licence and advantage of the rules of this house. I believe this licence has never been accorded to any hon. member before and it cannot be accorded to him without serious damage being done to the rules of this house and the rights of every hon. member.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may, I thought your ruling had been quite clear a while ago, but in case the Minister of Finance is not aware of the terms of his own bill I bring to his attention again, as I did earlier, that we are dealing with an amendment to clause 6 which has reference to tax rental agreements and that the last part of this brings into operation clause 9A, which is the second clause of this bill, parts of which I have been discussing not in detail but in general. I submit, sir, with deference, that I should be allowed to carry on.

I was at the point of saying, when I was interrupted, that neither could I believe that the Quebec premier—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, before the hon. member goes on to slur over the point and pursue his cheery way, may I suggest again that the hon. member is not engaging in a general discussion; what he is doing is engaging in a specific discussion of the specific terms of clause 2 of the bill and, with great respect, I think he should not be permitted to break the rules of the house in that regard.

Mr. Chevrier: Could I be allowed one other comment? The minister, if he has no objection to what I am discussing, should, it seems to me, on the first clause allow it to be discussed. He rose repeatedly last night, as he is rising now, not on a serious point of order, it seems to me, but in order to stop the discussion. When we get to clause 2 the Minister of Finance will put forward another reason why, under clause 2, I cannot deal with the matters I am dealing with now. I know him too well. He is very proficient at raising points of order, but I submit again that I should be allowed to proceed because I am strictly within clause 1 in accordance with the ruling made by the Chair.

The Chairman: I have already expressed my views generally with respect to this matter. I am not convinced that the question the hon. member is now discussing, namely the existence or non-existence of an agreement between the premier of Quebec and the Minister of Finance, would be in order in the general discussion under clause 1.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would you hear argument on that point?

The Chairman: If the hon. member will permit me, I gave permission to the hon. member for Laurier to proceed after he explained that he could not discuss clause 1 without referring to clause 2. He may have strayed away a little from the ruling I gave but at the point he now is I assume he will soon complete his argument and I think we will save time by letting the hon. member finish.

Mr. Chevrier: The chairman is quite right. I had arrived at the point where I was about to conclude when the minister interrupted me. I was about to say that also on the third point could I believe that the premier of Quebec had accepted the condition contained therein. I want to add that if the account given by the Solicitor General does not correspond to the facts then we must accept the statements made by the Quebec premier as to what really did take place.

The only reference to federal action made by the Quebec premier has to do with the tax abatement of 1 per cent referred to in the letter I mentioned a moment ago, and this provision is not even in the bill. The Quebec premier has never referred to the condition contained in this bill. As far as the premier of Quebec is concerned, this bill does not exist. He says that no agreement, no understanding, has been reached with the federal government. Therefore if we accept his interpretation of the facts the federal government in introducing this bill is imposing a unilateral arrangement in a province that may well be unacceptable to that province. Because of the two contradictory interpretations of negotiations directly related to this bill given by the premier of Quebec and the Solicitor General, surely the house is entitled to get from the Minister of Finance a complete and detailed statement of what transpired between the two men at the Quebec meeting.

(Translation):

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, I am convinced there is not a single person in this house, or in the province of Quebec or in the country, who is not genuinely happy to know that Quebec universities, just as universities in other provinces of Canada, will at long last be getting funds they really need to meet their financial obligations. That was the single and only purpose of the Liberal legislation on this subject since 1951. Yet it is precisely against the principle of federal grants to universities that the Quebec Conservatives in this house, and the Union Nationale, have been fighting the Liberals tooth and nail.

Mr. Chairman, may I point out to the house that the members who yesterday accused the Liberals of indulging in politics over this matter have never lived in the province of Quebec. So let me remind those hon. members and all their colleagues that for nine years the Conservative members and the Union Nationale have been calling the Liberals centralizers and charging them with violating the constitution; with—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member. Perhaps his remarks were a preliminary to the problem he wants to discuss, but so far, he has not dealt with the bill itself; in fact, I would say the speech he has just made, specially for the last remarks, was completely unrelated to the bill. His speech was in the nature of those that may be made prior to the second reading of a bill. I would therefore ask him to deal generally with the terms of the bill before us.

Mr. Cardin: As you were saying, Mr. Chairman, my remarks were preliminary in nature. However, the purpose of my whole speech is to find out why it is now possible to reach an agreement with the province of Quebec for the benefit of universities, when such an agreement has always been rejected in the past.

It also seems to me there is a little bit of confusion in the recommendations, with all due respect to you, Mr. Chairman, about what is in order and what is not. My hon. friend for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) is told he is giving too many details, and when I want to discuss the reasons which allow the introduction of this bill, you tell me that I am out of order because I am straying a bit from the subject.

May I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that all I am trying to do is to show that this bill is possible only because of the change of attitude of the provincial government and of the members we see here in this house.

May I also say this: Your Honour knows quite well that, for many years federal grants to universities have been the subject of a great deal of discussion in the province of Quebec, and therefore I do not believe it would be out of order to allow, at this stage of the debate, the greatest possible latitude in this matter.

Besides, how can we reply to all the arguments which were raised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), last night, if we cannot do it on the first clause?

The Chairman: That is just what I was trying to point out to the hon. member. As a matter of fact, I mentioned it when I expressed my views on the point of order raised at the start of the sitting. Discussion on clause 1 of the bill cannot be the same as on second reading. Discussion on second reading deals with the principle of the bill, and though general debate is allowed in committee on clause 1, it does not mean that the whole debate on second reading may be repeated, because it would give an opportunity of answering all the speeches which were not followed up on second reading. Frankly, I think that the hon. member could have spoken on second reading as he is doing now; yet, recalling the whole history of federal grants to universities at this stage of proceedings does not seem to me consistent with standing orders according to which discussion must be strictly relevant to the section under study.

Of course, I do not intend to apply standing orders too harshly. I trust that the hon. member, with all his experience, knows as well as I do what I have in mind when I want to apply the rule mentioned in paragraph 2 of standing order 59. He may not have had the opportunity of expressing his views on second reading, but that would not be a reason for me to change the standing orders at this time. As to the tolerance that the chairman has shown with regard to the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier)—I do not want to make any comparisons; I gave an explanation at the time but I do not think that the decision could apply in the case of the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin).

(Text):

Mr. Crestohl: On the point of order which you have raised, Mr. Chairman, may I draw to your attention something which, perhaps, you are overlooking in subsection 2 of standing order 59, on which you have relied a great deal. Let us read it slowly:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant—> —to the item or clause under consideration.

Relevant to what?

There are two matters upon which the subsection says we must keep an eye with respect to relevancy. It does not say relevant only to a clause. If the subsection simply read that speeches must be relevant to the clause, then your rulings would be perfectly sound when we were dealing with a particular clause. However, the words in this subsection 2 say that speeches must be relevant to two things, to the item—and it does not say "and clause", but it says "or clause". You may draw a distinction. I submit very respectfully that the relevancy must be to an item or a clause.

I repeat, only for emphasis, that if we were dealing now with clause 2 or clause 3 of the bill, then under the rule of relevancy speeches should be relevant to that. However, the rule gives latitude and says speeches must be relevant to an item. What is the item we are now discussing? We are now discussing an item, clause 1, under which a general discussion is permitted. I respectfully submit for your consideration that you should put some interpretation on the wording of this rule of relevancy to the effect that relevancy can be with respect to an item, which is wider and gives greater latitude than a clause.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Surely, Mr. Chairman, this is the most preposterous argument that has ever been addressed to the chairman of a committee of this house.

Mr. Crestohl: It may seem preposterous to the minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is no item before the committee at this time. The standing order from which the hon. gentleman has read is one which binds committees of the house. Committees of the house address themselves to the clauses of a bill and items in the estimates. The rule is uniform. If the committee is dealing with estimates, discussion must be strictly relevant to the item under consideration. If the committee is dealing with a bill, then the discussion must be strictly relevant to the particular clause of the bill that is under discussion.

Mr. Chevrier: Not under clause 1 or item 1 of the estimates.

(Translation):

Mr. English: Mr. Chairman, I am not as experienced as the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Crestohl), but I really think that we discussed the principle of the bill before its second reading. We now have to consider each clause of this bill and if the hon. members who had the opportunity of speaking during the debate on second reading start a new discussion on the principle of the bill, when clauses 1 and 2 are under consideration, we shall have to answer them and thus engage in an endless discussion.

(Text):

The Chairman: I have indicated before, and this is in reference to the remarks by the hon. member for Cartier, that if we were to apply the standing order strictly we could not even allow a debate in general terms on clause 1 because the rule is that when we study a bill in committee there is no other way of studying it except clause by clause. It is only the practice, therefore, that has allowed some latitude on clause 1, and because it is only the practice I think hon. members should restrain themselves as to the nature of the general discussion that they can proceed with under clause 1.

Now as to what is proper within the rule of strict relevancy and the practice which allows a general discussion, in my opinion, should be left to a great extent to the discretion of the Chair because otherwise it is not possible to conduct an orderly debate. I have up to now accorded great latitude to the hon. member for Laurier because he was making a point that he could not discuss under clause 1 without referring to clause 2. However, the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres is not even discussing the terms of the bill. He is discussing the history of university grants, and that is a proper subject for discussion on second reading. I certainly would not be applying the rules as they should be applied, or even the practice, if I were to allow the hon. member to continue this line of discussion.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, you just mentioned that I was not discussing the terms of the bill. I understood that was exactly what I was not supposed to do, discuss the terms of the bill. What I was trying to do was to discuss the whole question of university grants. I must admit also that what inspired me to speak in this particular debate was the speech made by the Minister of Finance last night. I had no intention of participating in the debate until then.

The Chairman: Order; may I draw the attention of the hon. member to the fact that the speech to which he is referring was made on second reading of the bill, not in committee. It is not proper, therefore, to reply to the minister because that was a debate on the principle of the bill and now we are in committee.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Don't you think, Mr. Chairman, on this matter—

An hon. Member: Here is the light.

Mr. Caron: May I point out, Mr. Chairman, that when members opposite are speaking, I never interrupt them and I should like them to show me the same courtesy.

Don't you think, Mr. Chairman, that more latitude should be allowed, especially after what the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin) has just said?

Mr. Chairman, if the ruling you have just made were irrevocable, this would constitute, in my opinion, a serious injustice towards opposition members, because no one could reply to the atrocities committed by the Minister of Finance. In fact, yesterday, at the end of the debate on second reading of the bill, the Minister of Finance said the worse inaccuracies and atrocities, to which it would be impossible for us to reply if—

Mr. Asselin: What section of the standing orders are you referring to?

Mr. Caron: I am referring to the practice which has been prevailing up to this day.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Hull knows very well that someone must always have the last word.

The hon. member knows very well that at the end of the debate on second reading, before the minister who introduces the bill takes the floor a second time, the Speaker or chairman must warn hon. members that the minister will close the debate, and I imagine that those words have a certain meaning. Moreover, it is obvious that a debate must always come to an end; that is the reason why the discussion held at the second reading stage cannot be resumed in committee.

Again, it is not a matter of preventing hon. members from expressing their views. However, the fact remains that if hon. members refuse to co-operate with the chairman of the committee in the enforcement of standing orders, it will be at their own expense.

It has just been suggested that I have been too lenient with the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), and that I should therefore show the same leniency to other hon. members.

That, I think, indicates to every hon. member how important it is to abide closely by the standing orders.

I feel that hon. members should co-operate more closely with the chairman while exercising their privileges in accordance with standing orders.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, you are a relatively new member of the house. You were not here when the Minister of Finance—

An hon. Member: What has that to do with it?

Mr. Pickersgill: —and the Secretary of State for External Affairs and Mr. Drew sat on this side of the house and when this kind of latitude was allowed invariably on every bill on which the opposition wished to exercise it. Those speaking in the opposition were not harassed by constant points of order from the then minister of finance because he did not like the contribution that was being made. What we are being subjected to in this chamber by the present Minister of Finance is a shocking form of running closure, the like of which has never before been attempted.

The Chairman: In my opinion some of the remarks of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate were out of order.

An hon. Member: As usual.

The Chairman: With reference to the previous practice, I may say that I have consulted Hansard of 1956 and 1953 and I note that there was some discussion as to this problem we have here. Mr. Speaker Beaudoin then intimated that discussion in committee on clause 1 could not revive the debate on second reading. I may refer the hon. member to page 3992 of Hansard of May 16, 1956 when the chairman, Mr. Robinson—it was not Mr. Speaker Beaudoin—stated as follows:

> This is a matter which raises a difficult problem in view of the fact that we are governed in committee by the strict rule of relevancy under standing order 59 (2). The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra in his remarks, I believe, used the word "rule" and he also used the word "right". I cannot concede that there is any "rule" allowing a broad debate such as he apparently has in mind, in view of the very clear language of standing order 59 (2).
> I might say that in my personal opinion we are governed by the relevancy rule.

And so on. Mr. Beaudoin, when he was the chairman, on February 2, 1953, as found in Hansard at page 1551, stated as follows:

> Hon. members will realize that the general discussion cannot extend beyond the two clauses which are in this amending bill. It cannot be a repetition of the general discussion which took place on the principle of the bill on second reading.

As I said, if we were to apply the rule strictly, there would be no general debate on clause 1. It is only possible by practice and, I would say by some tolerance which the Chair has shown up to now. I would ask hon. members to realize that if the procedure allowed repetition of the debate on second reading, the committee stage would have no meaning at all and I do not see why the rule would provide for study in committee.

Mr. Cardin: When I rose I had something very definite and very concise to say and something which I think is completely related to the discussion we are having and something which I think is important. However, Mr. Chairman, if your ruling is that I cannot speak about it, the only thing I can do is to resume my seat. I have no intention of of speaking about a provincial election.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Laurier, in the documents he has brought before the committee today, has indicated clearly something which it seems to me must be cleared up before the committee can in any decency be asked to continue with the consideration of this bill. Everybody knows that the purpose of clause 1 and clause 2 of this bill is to introduce into the legislation of this country a new scheme or an alternative scheme for paying to or for making available certain money for universities. Everybody knows that. It was stated by the Minister of Finance as one of the two purposes of the bill. Everybody also knows as a matter of practical effect that this second scheme, this alternative, is of no interest to any province or the government of any province except one.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): How do you know?

Mr. Pickersgill: Everybody knows that; it is a matter of common knowledge. If the minister has some secret information he has not disclosed to the house, he ought to disclose it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In the meantime you are making a statement out of your imagination and not based on fact.

Mr. Pickersgill: In the meantime I have the floor, Mr. Chairman, and I am speaking on the bill. As I said, everybody knows, so far as there is any public knowledge, that there is no interest in the alternative scheme in any province except one and that province is, of course, the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speakman: The provincial election.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not our fault that that there is a provincial election, although it may be that the government introduced this bill because there was a provincial election.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: More closure.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is not a point of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will you permit the chairman to make the ruling?

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has just now taken upon himself to make an assertion and to attribute motives. That is something that is forbidden in the plainest terms by the rules of the house. It is time that the hon. member learned something of the rules of the house and learned to obey them.

Mr. Chevrier: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I say this? Last night I was taken to task rather severely by the Minister of Finance. What for? I was taken to task because when I made a particular statement here in this chamber, another hon. gentleman made a statement in the province of Quebec concerning elections and from that he concluded that there was an understanding between the two of us. What could be more political than that charge? It was a clear insinuation of something which is not true and an insinuation which I throw back at him at this moment. He now rises on a point of order which is not a point of order at all in order to say that my hon. friend is guilty of the same thing. Does the minister want me to read out to him what he said to me on the occasion to which I have referred?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I want the hon. member to obey the rules of the house for one thing.

Mr. Chevrier: If you want me to obey the rules of the house, you must obey them yourself.

An hon. Member: Address the chairman.

The Chairman: Order. I would ask hon. members to restrain themselves a little bit so that we may have an orderly debate. The point of order raised by the minister had reference to an imputation of motive by the the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate but I think it was a reference to the government generally and I do not think it had reference to any hon. member but—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was attributing motives.

The Chairman: —to the government generally. I do not think the rule with regard to imputing motives would apply in a case when it is addressed to the government or a party in general. I would therefore allow the hon. member to continue.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I would go further than you have gone and say that I made that interjection only because an hon. member behind me here who is a supporter of the Minister of Finance himself introduced the subject of a provincial election. I had no intention of speaking about a provincial election and I have no intention of speaking about a provincial election.

I will do the Minister of Finance the honour of saying that I believe he was quite sincere last year when he said he wanted to solve this problem. I have always thought he was quite sincere in wanting to solve this problem, just as I think my hon. friend from Laurier was quite sincere last year when he also said in the same debate he wanted to solve this problem and when he put forward a solution to the problem which is consistent with provincial rights. If I said anything in this particular which offended the tender susceptibilities of the Minister of Finance I withdraw it, because I have never doubted his sincerity or patriotism in this matter any more than I think he should question that of any other hon. member. I think every Canadian who is worth his salt wants to solve this problem, and I have always thought so.

I do not think it is very becoming in the Minister of Finance or in some other hon. gentlemen opposite to suggest when we are trying to uphold the constitution of our country that we are doing it for any other motive than the proper motive that any hon. member ought to have in this house. I have been very careful in every word I have said at every stage of this debate to avoid any kind of insinuations of that sort and I ask any hon. gentleman to scrutinize what I have said. I have never said anything about what motives may have actuated any provincial government because I do not think it is our business in this house and I do not intend to do so.

The hon. member for Laurier has brought up a problem here, and there is no sense in asking us to pass a bill that is not going to achieve the objective which the government and the rest of us have in mind. If this bill is not going to solve the problem; if instead it is going to constitute a further problem for the future and if, as we believe, it is of very doubtful constitutionality and is undoubtedly an invasion into normal provincial affairs, as we believe it is, we think it ought to be debated seriously, without insinuation or innuendo, on its merits.

We were told by the Solicitor General the other day in the passage read by my hon. friend, which I will not repeat, that the premier of Quebec and the government of Quebec agreed in advance to this bill and this scheme.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I never said that. If the hon. member wants to quote my speeches let him read them from Hansard, not create them from his imagination.

Mr. Pickersgill: Very well: I do not want to be unfair. Perhaps when some of the hon. gentlemen opposite calm down I will read it because, as I say, I do not want to be unfair in any particular to the Solicitor General.

Mr. Starr: What is the page in Hansard?

Mr. Pickersgill: In Hansard page 3286 April 26, 1960. This is the Solicitor General speaking and it is the passage which was read a few minutes ago by my hon. friend. I will read it again:

(Translation):

A few days before his death, Mr. Duplessis stated that he would be in a position to submit, in October, a positive proposition to the ministers from Ottawa. It was the Hon. Paul Sauve who submitted that positive proposition. Federal ministers discussed it with Mr. Sauve and, at the time of his tragic death, only a few details remained to be worked out, which was done during a private interview between Mr. Antonio Barrette, Mr. Sauve's successor, and the Minister of Finance, sponsor of the bill which is now before us.

We had claimed, under the Liberal administration, that it was possible to settle this problem in a constitutional way and to the satisfaction of the premiers of all the provinces.

Mr. English: It is indeed unfair not to take a cabinet minister's word and to give preference to an item published in the press.

I have here a copy of Montreal-Matin which says quite the opposite.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to be able to read the article published by Montreal-Matin—

The Chairman: Order. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member, but the question raised by the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Johnson) did not refer to the minister's statement, but to the accuracy of a newspaper item which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) was quoting. The hon. member for Chambly-Rouville was speaking on a question of privilege.

Mr. English: I rise on a question of privilege also. The subject matter was an article published in Le Devoir which had been previously quoted.

This is an accurate report of the meeting at Joliette according to Montreal-Matin; and it says quite the opposite.

Can we not, therefore, accept the minister's word?

Mr. Loiselle: The Union Nationale gospel.

Mr. Johnson: The hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Loiselle) should keep to politics on the municipal level.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Surely I had the floor and I was seeking to reply politely to a question asked me very politely by the Solicitor General and I think I should be allowed to reply to that question without all these interruptions which have nothing to do with that question.

Here is the account which appeared in the newspaper Le Devoir of the speech made by the premier of Quebec in opening his campaign:

(Translation):

Mr. Barrette said that there was never any question of an agreement with Ottawa, but a decision taken by an autonomous government to settle a thorny problem. Thus, he said, by proudly expressing our will, we succeeded in recovering for Quebec $10 million in taxes per year and the $25 million lying in Ottawa coffers.

We even got the federal government to admit that it will vacate the field of education, thus finally winning out after years of struggle.

(Text):

That is what Mr. Barrette said and here is what the Solicitor General said on April 26, as reported on page 3286 of Hansard, where he was speaking in French:

(Translation):

We have kept our word admirably, because Premier Barrette himself believed that this bill is consistent with the terms of Mr. Duplessis' proposal, which was submitted again by Mr. Sauvé, and later by Mr. Barrette himself.

Mr. Tremblay: Where is the contradiction, then?

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: If the Solicitor General does not think that that was a clear statement, clearly intended to convey the impression that the premier of the province of Quebec was satisfied with what was going to be brought before this house, it certainly conveyed that impression to my mind and it conveyed that impression to the mind of my hon. friend, and it seems to have conveyed that impression to the minds of all those hon. gentlemen here who applauded the Solicitor General.

Mr. Balcer: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Balcer: Can you tell me at what time Premier Barrette said he was not satisfied?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: That is right; get your helpers to work.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand a copy of Le Devoir of Monday, May 9, reporting Mr. Barrette, presumably textually, a newspaper of which I doubt hon. gentlemen opposite would question the reliability. If they do want to question it let them go ahead. If they suggest that this newspaper deforms the news, then that is their suggestion, not mine.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, I take exception to the statement of the hon. member in relation to his remarks about the authenticity of this newspaper's articles. He is referring to the authenticity of certain remarks of their editors or their reporters, not the authenticity of the paper itself and of all their reporters. I would ask the hon. member to stick to his contention and not go beyond it.

Mr. Chevrier: You are better sitting down than standing up.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, that was so obviously not a question of privilege.

The premier of Quebec says there is no understanding, nothing whatever, and the Solicitor General says this is a magnificent example of understanding. It is very like that new, third constitutional theory we heard from the Minister of Finance last night. It is a kind of mysticism that plain, simple people cannot understand.

Coming back to the point, I say that before we are asked to approve clauses 1 and 2 of this bill that incorporate this new scheme we should be told by the government whether or not this scheme is satisfactory to the present government of the province of Quebec and in what fashion the federal government learned it was satisfactory to the provincial government.

This is something which must be unparalleled in our parliamentary history. We are asked to enact legislation to meet a problem in one of the ten provinces. We are told by a minister here in the house that this meets the problem, that he knows it meets it, and that the provincial government has said so. We are told by the premier of the province of Quebec that there is no understanding whatsoever. It should be impossible for any government to come into the house and ask hon. members to take a position of that sort. Can anyone imagine Mr. St. Laurent doing a thing like that? Can anyone imagine what the Minister of Finance would have said if Mr. St. Laurent had tried to do it?

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Another flag.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister would have been draped in two or three flags. This is beyond my comprehension. The lack of frankness throughout this whole business is appalling. We could not find out at the resolution stage what was in the bill and when the bill came down it was a great shock to many of us. Now we cannot find out what took place between the premier of Quebec and the Minister of Finance and we have no means of knowing whether or not this bill will meet the problem. It seems to me the minister should settle that question at once and I suggest to the hon. gentleman that just for once he deal with the question and not indulge in one of the irrelevant harangues to which he is so attached.

An hon. Member: Like the one you are making now.

(Translation):

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, as usual, our friends opposite are trying to play on words and to raise a cloud of dust and smoke around that question.

I should like simply, for the moment, to deal with that so-called contradiction which exists only in the minds of the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) and of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill)—between my words and those of the Quebec premier. If you read what I said, you will note that I mentioned the fact that Mr. Duplessis had stated he was in a position to submit a concrete proposal to the ministers in Ottawa. Then, I spoke about that concrete proposal and said that it was Mr. Sauve who had submitted it, and that finally, Mr. Barrette felt that the bill was in keeping with Mr. Duplessis' proposal. I always referred to it as a proposal.

The hon. members opposite are basing their argument on the report of a columnist of Le Devoir who wrote that Mr. Barrette stated that there had been no question of an agreement with Ottawa.

We do know that what Mr. Barrette meant was that the question of grants to Quebec universities, which have been deprived of them for too long, is now in process of being settled, and in such a way that the federal government will not encroach upon provincial autonomy in matters of education. We do not require the province of Quebec to sign any agreement whatsoever. We allow the province of Quebec to adopt the legislation it wishes; we do not oblige Mr. Barrette to sign or to ask anything; through our legislation, we allow any province to act according to principles of autonomy in matters of education.

[Mr. Brassard (Lapointe).]

That is what Mr. Barrette meant. And that is what he said. I repeat, there is absolutely no contradiction between what I said here and what Mr. Barrette said a few days ago.

Mr. Leduc: Mr. Chairman, last night I asked the same question of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in order to find out definitely whether or not there has been an agreement. I was very happy to hear the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) tell us that the Quebec government has settled the problem. That is true, it is quite true, and I commend the Quebec government for passing the appropriate legislation during its last session.

Mr. Balcer: Try to get together on this.

Mr. Leduc: And in Quebec, the Quebec Liberals all supported those pieces of legislation.

Mr. Pigeon: Why does Mr. Lesage denounce the legislation?

Mr. Leduc: They supported the legislation suggested by Mr. Barrette. Why? Because all those bills had previously been put forward and recommended by Mr. Lapalme.

Mr. Johnson: Why did Mr. Lesage denounce that bill?

Mr. Leduc: And now that the legislation has been passed in Quebec, the province of Quebec has no need for the alternative plan placed before this house. The proof—

Mr. Balcer: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Leduc: Yes.

Mr. Balcer: Does he mean to say that the Liberal members in the Quebec legislature feel that the federal government should not offer deductibility in this case, and that Quebec corporations should be subject to double taxation? Is that what he means?

Mr. Leduc: There is no need for the principle of "deductibility" to give fair treatment to the province of Quebec in the matter of grants to universities. The proof is that the Quebec government, after passing this last bill, discussed the matter with the universities and told them to go to Ottawa and collect the $25 million that Mr. St. Laurent and the Liberal party had set aside for them.

The Chairman: Order. It may be in order for the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Leduc) to reply to the speech made by the Solicitor General, but he did more than that. He has strayed from the subject. Until then, it had been a matter of determining whether the bill, as drafted, was acceptable to the province of Quebec, which might have been relevant to a certain point in the discussion of clause 1. But he is clearly moving away now from the required relevancy at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. Leduc: Mr. Chairman, I want to respect your ruling. However, I would like the Minister of Finance to give us an answer, to tell us whether or not there actually was an agreement.

Mr. Tremblay: What difference could it make to you?

Mr. English: Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I heard the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) refer to Le Devoir and even read an article from that paper; today, I again listened to a reading of this same article by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill).

If those hon. members were allowed to quote a newspaper report in the house, I honestly believe that I also have the right to read what has been reported about the meeting held in Joliette last Sunday by the Hon. Antonio Barrette. Here is what the newspaper said:

An hon. Member: It is the paper Montreal-Matin.

Mr. English: You quote from Le Devoir because it suits your purpose; so you cannot blame me for quoting the article from Montreal-Matin.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): What you are saying is odius for Le Devoir.

Mr. English: You said it yourself, my friend. So, here is the article:

The premier made this statement while taking to task Mr. Jean Lesage and his two attendants, the three of them former federal members.

A second choice.

"Do you think, he said, that Mr. Lesage, would be the leader of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec—

The Chairman: Order. I will remind the hon. member for Gaspe—but first I ask him to resume his seat—that the article quoted by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) dealt with a statement concerning the possibility of an agreement between the Quebec government and the federal government. If the hon. member for Gaspe wants to quote an item which would prove a statement to the contrary, or a different one, I have no objection, but he may not quote any part of a statement which is not relevant to what we are considering now, and within the limits just indicated.

Mr. English: Mr. Chairman, that is exactly what I am doing. The name of Mr. Barrette has been mentioned. As the names of Mr. Barrette and Mr. Lesage were mentioned, I think it is my duty and my privilege to quote Mr. Barrette. Are hon. members ashamed of my referring to Mr. Lesage?

And this is precisely what was said, Mr. Chairman:

Instead of taking advice from his representatives, Mr. Lesage went to see Mr. Lionel Chevrier in Ottawa. He wanted to continue the traditional "federal clique" which, at the time, had wanted to impose—

The Chairman: Order. I fail to see the relevancy of the item quoted by the hon. member for Gaspe. He might perhaps now discuss the bill according to the directions I gave.

Mr. English: Mr. Chairman, that is precisely what I was coming to. I did not want to be accused of quoting only what suits us, I wanted to quote the whole item. They always quote what suits them; so I wanted to quote the whole article. I am coming to what I wanted to point out, Mr. Chairman, and I may have taken too much of a roundabout way, but I hope that you will allow me to conclude my quotation so that what I wanted to say may be easier to understand.

To my mind, Mr. Chairman, I am in order in doing so.

Mr. Barrette stated that the provincial government, in all letters exchanged with Ottawa on the matter, never mentioned any understanding or agreement.

In this whole matter of understanding and agreement, this is what happened. The Hon. Mr. Barrette, jointly with the present government, merely came to the conclusion that was the most practical in the interests of our universities. It had to come to that, because the province of Quebec could not always be satisfied with receiving gifts from the federal government; it had to get its share of the taxation field. What was being done by the Liberal administration of our hon. friends opposite was an injustice. The moneys are now levied as corporation taxes at the rate of 1 per cent. This means that the Quebec government is now collecting what it had been unjustly deprived of by the Liberals. That is just what the Hon. Mr. Barrette meant. That is exactly what he meant by an agreement between the federal and the provincial governments.

And our hon. friends opposite, wishing to carry on the policy of the former Liberal regime, want the province of Quebec to kneel down again, and continue to refuse the share which is due, in all justice, to Quebec universities. But today it is not necessary to bow, because we have received and obtained exactly what had been taken away from us, that is to say we have recovered our taxation power in the province of Quebec. That is why, Mr. Chairman, our hon. friends opposite are against this bill.

(Text):

Mr. Chevrier: Is the Minister of Finance going to raise a point of order?

(Translation):

Mr. English: Instead of talking and delaying the adoption of the bill, they should rise and thank the Minister of Finance and the Conservative government for having given the province of Quebec what their party had taken away from it in the past.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I am rather surprised that the Minister of Finance, who is an expert in procedural matters, did not raise a point of order during the speech made by the hon. member for Gaspe (Mr. English). He is more prone to raise points of order when we have the floor.

However, I did not rise for that purpose, but to say a word about what the Solicitor General said a moment ago. In trying to reply to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, he referred to a so-called contradiction we have established or tried to establish between what he said and what the Quebec premier said. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not a so-called contradiction, it is a real contradiction. According to what the Solicitor General said, which is recorded in Hansard—and I will not repeat it, because it is already there—it is not a so-called contradiction but a real contradiction that exists between the Solicitor General who says there is an agreement and Mr. Barrette who says there has been no understanding or agreement or whatever you may call it.

An hon. Member: You are all mixed up.

Mr. Chevrier: And you went further when you said a moment ago that we are not forcing Quebec to sign anything. Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, that neither did the former government force Quebec to sign anything, and if it is true—

Mr. Balcer: May I—

[Mr. English.]

Mr. Chevrier: Wait. I am answering your question.

Mr. Tremblay: He is a bit mixed up; he will recover.

Mr. Chevrier: If it is true that you did not force the province of Quebec to sign anything under the agreement between the Minister of Finance and the Canadian universities foundation, the fact remains that the agreement is incorporated in the bill, which makes the province of Quebec subject to the agreement. As a result, the province of Quebec is bound by the agreement, in addition to being bound by the definitions of the expressions "university", "university level", and others about which we heard so many complaints from the hon. members for Bellechasse and for Charlevoix (Messrs. Dorion and Asselin) the other day.

Does the Solicitor General wish to ask me a question?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to ask the hon. member for Laurier to show me, in the parts of my speech that he quoted, where I said there had been an agreement—and I stress the word "agreement"—between the government of the province of Quebec and the federal government?

Mr. Chevrier: Very well, Mr. Chairman. In two places—

Mr. Balcer: I ask the hon. member for Laurier whether he can indicate where I made such an assertion.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I shall answer the question of the Solicitor General.

First, let me refer to page 3286 of Hansard for April 26, 1960, in the middle of the second column, which reads as follows:

Federal ministers discussed it with Mr. Sauvé—

Mr. Balcer: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier:

—and at the time of his tragic death, only a few details remained to be worked out, which was done during a private interview between Mr. Antonio Barrette, Mr. Sauvé's successor, and the Minister of Finance, sponsor of the bill which is now before us.

Then, Mr. Chairman, what happened is that the federal ministers—the Solicitor General being absent—after discussing it with the late premier and the present premier of the province of Quebec, reached a conclusion except for a few details which were clarified later on.

As for the other place where the Solicitor General—

Mr. Tremblay: Was there any agreement?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. members want me to answer the Solicitor General's question, I should be given an opportunity to do so.

Mr. Tremblay: You started on the wrong foot.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not in a predicament, you are.

An hon. Member: They are the ones who are in a predicament.

Mr. Chevrier: The other place where the Solicitor General stated what I asserted earlier is a little further, on the same page, that is page 3286 of Hansard of April 26, 1960. I quote:

> We have kept our word admirably, because Premier Barrette himself believes that this bill is consistent with the terms of Mr. Duplessis' proposal, which was submitted again by Mr. Sauvé, and later by Mr. Barrette himself.

What can those statements indicate if not that there was an agreement, an arrangement between the two government leaders?

And now, Mr. Chairman, since the Solicitor General asked me a question, I would like to ask one to him in turn.

If the Solicitor General still claims, against all comers, despite his statements I just quoted and that he had put on Hansard, to the effect that he did not make that assertion, I will ask him this: Did the premier of Quebec accept the bill that we are now discussing? If he did, on the basis of what information did he do so?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, as I said a few moments ago, and this is the advantage of our legislation, we are not forcing the province of Quebec to sign any agreement whatsoever, we are leaving her entirely free and we are not at all encroaching upon her autonomy.

The legislation proposed by the Quebec government has been unanimously adopted in the Quebec legislature, which indicates that it has been approved by all the Liberal members of the province of Quebec. As far as we are concerned, we have submitted our bill to this house; it has been unanimously approved by all the hon. members.

Those two pieces of legislation have solved the problem of the universities in the province of Quebec. It is the adoption of those two measures that will enable young university students in the province of Quebec to share in benefits that were unavailable to them under the legislation of the previous government.

Mr. Deschatelets: Could you answer the question now?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, could I pursue my remarks a bit further—

Mr. Tremblay: Answer the question.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, could I go on with my remarks regarding the matter that was being discussed a moment ago—

Mr. Johnson: Before doing so, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Chevrier: No, because I do not think that the hon. member is in earnest.

Mr. Johnson: Considering the source of this remark, it is not so important.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member is a joker in this house. That is why I cannot take him seriously.

An hon. Member: You have been making jokes for 20 years.

The Chairman: I shall ask the hon. member for Laurier to withdraw the expression he just used and which, to my mind, certainly goes beyond the limits set by standing orders.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Chairman, if the expression I used in any way annoyed the hon. member to whom it was attributed, I withdraw it, and just repeat what I said earlier, that is, that I cannot take his interruptions seriously.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, I forgive the hon. member for Laurier for having projected himself.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to go on with the discussion which took place a few moments ago between the Solicitor General and hon. members from the opposition.

Mr. Chairman, the Solicitor General has stated that the province of Quebec did not have to accept this bill.

Therefore, if my understanding of his reply to my question is correct, the premier of Quebec has not accepted the bill. And the Solicitor General even went further when he said: "We are not forcing anything on the province of Quebec".

Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Solicitor General to the fact that under clause 2, Quebec is in fact bound by the agreement reached between the Minister of Finance and the Canadian universities foundation. In fact, under the very provisions of the bill, the agreement is incorporated in the bill. Moreover, the definitions of the expressions "university level", "university", etc., about which there have been so many complaints from hon. members—

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Laurier once again, but if my memory serves me right, he dealt with this matter yesterday. Furthermore, it seems that it had been agreed that we would not resume this discussion before we came to clause 2. Consequently, in order to allow for an ordered discussion of the bill, I must unfortunately call him to order.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, if I was out of order, it is because I wanted to reply to the Solicitor General who said that the province of Quebec does not have to accept this bill, whereas I claim that it is bound by this agreement. However, if you do not want me to deal with this matter, I shall not insist, because I shall be able to talk about it when we come to clause 2.

Mr. Balcer: And I shall be able to reply.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, since the Solicitor General says he will be able to answer me, why does he not reply now to the arguments I raised on three different occasions, that is, on the resolution—

Mr. Johnson: Because he is asking you a question, and you do not want to reply. When you are in a spot, you say all kinds of nonsense.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the Solicitor General has replied to none of the arguments which I raised on behalf of the opposition.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Charlevoix, like several others from the province of Quebec, has bitterly complained of the fact that I had not dared open my mouth when I was a member of the cabinet.

Mr. Tremblay: That is true.

Mr. Chevrier: —and that I had never said anything—

An hon. Member: What a confession.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Chevrier: —but I was not even in the province of Quebec at the time. However, there are in the present cabinet, four ministers from the province of Quebec, and three of them have not yet taken part is this debate. If the argument of the hon. member for Charlevoix applies to me, who was not in the province of Quebec at the time, it must apply even more to those who have not yet taken the floor during this debate.

Mr. Asselin: I must say that the hon. member for Laurier is making up for it now, but that the population does not believe him because he is late.

The Chairman: Order. I think we are again straying from the question. I therefore ask the hon. members to give us a little more co-operation, so we can achieve a little more progress.

Mr. Chevrier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. When the member for Laurier rises in this house to speak on behalf of fellow citizens of the province of Quebec, of whom he is a representative, there are shouts from all around, he is interrupted, he is said to be a liar and told that he has no right to meddle with the business of the province of Quebec, even if he represents a Montreal constituency. Is Montreal not in the province of Quebec? And, when he dares rise against those who do not see the danger there is in this bill, to point out the danger to which they themselves referred to on two occasions during this debate, while one of them even found fault with the wording of a certain clause, they complain of his behaviour.

So, Mr. Chairman, if I do one thing, I am wrong; if I do another, I am still wrong. Therefore, when is a member entitled to rise and speak for his colleagues of the province of Quebec, as the hon. member for Laurier has done?

In conclusion, I ask the Solicitor General once again where he got his information. I asked him if the Prime Minister had accepted the bill, and he answered that he had not. I shall go further and ask him, on the basis of what information did he make that statement earlier?

(Text):

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, had hon. members opposite indicated a desire for a more detailed review of the discussions and correspondence between the government of Quebec and the federal government which preceded the introduction of the resolution antecedent to the present bill, the proper place of course to have made that request was in the discussion on the resolution. It is at that stage that such matters are properly discussed. It is, I believe, quite improper to raise the question here in the discussion in committee on the details of the bill. After all, the procedure in this house in providing opportunity for discussion on the resolution in committee is designed to afford hon. members the opportunity to obtain all the information that they may require in order to deal intelligently with the bill that is to follow.

I have been asked this afternoon to discuss the negotiations or, more aptly, discussions with the late Premier Sauve and latterly with Premier Barrette of Quebec. I gave an outline of the course of those discussions, Mr. Chairman, when I introduced the resolution. The hon. member for Laurier this afternoon extracted two brief excerpts from the correspondence and gave the impression that something in the nature of a formal agreement was to ensue. Of course that is quite a misleading impression. There was extensive correspondence, and that correspondence has been tabled. There are half a dozen letters in which the plan that is now embodied in the bill under discussion was outlined and was clarified. When I met Mr. Barrette after the letters which were read by the hon. member for Laurier were exchanged it was for the purpose of clarification.

In view of the fact that this question has been raised now and although I have had to take issue with the way in which it has been raised and the course that has been pursued by hon. members opposite, I am going to read the correspondence in full. I regret that it has become necessary to do that because it is lengthy. In view of the flights of imagination here this afternoon on the part of hon. members opposite, the time has come to bring them back down to earth. On December 9, 1959, the Prime Minister of Canada wrote a letter to each of the provincial premiers. It was in identical form, and this is the form that went to all premiers:

My dear Premier:

The government has decided to recommend to parliament legislation providing for an alternative basis for payment of federal grants to universities.

No change is proposed for those provinces which choose to continue the present system of grants.

Parliament at the coming session will be asked to provide that at the request of any provincial government which undertakes to provide additional grants to its universities on a scale equivalent to the present federal grants of $1.50 per capita, the provincial share of the yield from the federal income tax on corporation profits earned in that province under the provisions of the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act will be increased from 9 per cent to 10 per cent. This would be in lieu of federal grants to universities in such a province. Where the loss of revenue to the federal treasury will exceed the university grants of $1.50 per capita in the province concerned, a deduction equivalent to the difference will be made by the federal government from other payments being made to the province under the provisions of the act. If 1 per cent of the yield from the corporation income tax in the province is less than the grants of $1.50 per capita, the federal government will pay the difference to the provincial government for the benefit of the universities.

Subject to the amendment of the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act by parliament, any provincial government which has rented the corporation income tax field to the federal government under agreement pursuant to the provisions of the act will, if it desires to adopt the new arrangement respecting university grants, be enabled to amend its agreement in so far as the corporation tax is concerned and resume its collection of that tax on the foregoing terms.

In summary, the grants will be available to the universities in the same amounts and on the same formula of distribution as at present and be subject to the normal increase in the aggregate on the basis of increases in population.

This new arrangement will, if parliament approves, come into effect on April 1, 1960, and remain in effect for a period of two years until the conclusion of the current five-year tax agreements ending March 31, 1962.

I do not need to read the replies to that letter except the one from the late Premier Sauve of Quebec, in the light of the discussion this afternoon, as requested by hon. members opposite. Premier Sauve's letter was dated December 14, and it reads:

Dear Mr. Prime Minister:

I did not fail to communicate today to my colleagues of the executive council of the province the letter which I received last Thursday and which you had addressed simultaneously to the prime ministers of the ten Canadian provinces, eight of which, in pursuance of agreements, ceded to the federal government, for a five-year period and in exchange for annual subventions, their right of taxing the income of corporations. I also acquainted them with the text of the statement which you had made over the television network and which you had been good enough to forward to me.

Your desire to formulate an alternative to the present system of federal grants to the Canadian universities which would be more closely in accordance with the letter of the British North America Act greatly pleased my colleagues as well as myself. We are also very happy to note that your letter shows that you are planning again to think over the federal government's policy in this matter, in the light of the discussions which will have to take place on the bearing and the nature of the fiscal relations between the federal authorities and the provinces after March 31, 1962.

The only question which now arises is accordingly the consideration of a temporary modus vivendi which would remain in effect only for the two ensuing fiscal periods pending the decisions which we will be called upon to take and which will apply from March 31, 1962 onwards.

Clearly the greater part of your letter is intended for the provinces which have rented their rights and I accordingly believe that it would be necessary to define its meaning and bearing for our province. This is my conclusion after reading your letter, the text of your statement and after the conversations which I had with yourself and with your finance minister, the Hon. Mr. Fleming.

Dominion-Provincial Relations

As you are aware, since 1955 the provincial government allocates to the university institutions situated within its territorial and constitutional jurisdiction, annual grants on a basis and for amounts approximately equal to the subventions paid by the federal parliament to the Canadian universities' conference and earmarked by the latter for the Quebec universities.

As I mentioned to you last October, the Quebec government has decided to request the provincial parliament, during the present session, to set these grants on a permanent basis by adopting legislation which would make available to the provincial university institutions, proportionally to the number of their students, an annual sum equal to $1.50 per capita of Quebec's population. If the provincial parliament, in the free exercise of its constitutional jurisdiction, should decide to adopt such legislation and to secure the funds necessary for carrying it out by an additional tax on the income of corporations (a field of taxation which is open to the provinces in pursuance of the constitution), I understand that your government would no longer request the federal parliament to vote credits for grants to the Quebec universities but would recommend that for a period of two years it should increase from 9 per cent to 10 per cent the deduction from the federal tax which would be allowed in this field to the Quebec taxpayer. In order that the loss to the federal treasury should not exceed the amount which it would be called upon to disburse for the payment of the grants to the Canadian universities' conference, you suggest that the adjustment should be made out of the equalization payment. Such at least is my presumption, inasmuch as it seems to me the only item from which such adjustment could be made.

Would you please confirm whether such is in fact your intention?

I note that no mention is made of the amounts accumulated in trust and which represent the total of the grants which our universities did not claim. Inasmuch as your letter was addressed to the ten provinces, I understand that it would not have been appropriate to refer to these amounts. This, however, is another aspect of the problem which you have inherited and which will also have to be considered.

I shall feel in duty bound to communicate to my colleagues your reply as soon as it reaches me and to consider it with them.

Yours very truly,
Paul Sauve

To that letter in which the late Premier Sauve was asking for further clarification of the original proposal of the Prime Minister of Canada in the light of its particular application to the province of Quebec, the Prime Minister of Canada on December 22 wrote this reply:

My dear Prime Minister:

I acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 14th concerning the new alternative plan outlined in my letter of December 9th in relation to federal grants to universities.

My letter, as you point out, was addressed in identical form to the premiers of the ten provinces, since the new basis is available equally to all of them. I am glad now to avail myself of the opportunity presented by your letter to indicate in greater detail how the plan would apply in the case of the province of Quebec, which has exercised its right to collect its own corporation tax and not to rent this field to the federal government in pursuance of the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act. In this connection I have taken due note of the statutory grants and the increased grants which you have asked the Quebec legislature to provide for the universities of your province.

If the legislature of Quebec chooses to adopt the new plan and the federal legislation is amended by parliament in the manner proposed by the government then for the next two fiscal years, commencing April 1st, 1960, and ending March 31st, 1962, the following terms will be in effect:

(a) If the legislature of Quebec should choose to raise the provincial corporation tax to 10 per cent or more of corporation profits, corporations liable thereto will be allowed an abatement of 10 per cent, instead of the present 9 per cent, against the federal tax on corporation profits;

(b) The grant of $1.50 per capita of population which the federal government has with the sanction of parliament been providing for universities would cease so far as the universities of the province of Quebec are concerned;

(c) The difference between the yield from the 1 per cent additional tax abatement and the $1.50 per capita of population of your province will be adjusted so that the fiscal position of the federal government remains unchanged. In other words, if the 1 per cent tax abatement exceeds the equivalent of $1.50 per capita of population, as it will, the federal government will deduct this excess from the equalization payment now being paid to Quebec out of the federal treasury in pursuance of the provisions of the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act. By way of illustration, if the new formula were applied to 1959 data the federal treasury would lose and the provincial treasury would gain about $9,250,000 from the change in corporation tax rates. On the other hand, the university grants on the basis of $1.50 per capita if applied to Quebec would amount to about $7,500,000; and the difference of $1,750,000 would be deducted from the equalization payment to Quebec, which in 1959 will be approximately $67,000,000.

The foregoing plan, as above indicated, would apply to the next two fiscal years. As you point out, no express provision has yet been proposed respecting the amounts accumulated in trust for the universities of Quebec and which they have not claimed. This sum has now reached approximately $25 million. Assuming that agreement is reached with respect to the payments for the next two years, we should be glad to discuss with you the proper disposal of these accumulated moneys.

I trust that the foregoing observations will sufficiently clarify the federal government's alternative plan with respect to university grants.

As I pointed out, Mr. Chairman, that letter was written on the twenty second day of December, 1959. It was received by the late Premier Sauve but his death intervened before any reply was sent. However, on January 21, 1960, Premier Barrette wrote the following letter to the Prime Minister of Canada:

Dear Mr. Prime Minister:

It was only a few days ago that I had the opportunity of examining the letter which you addressed on December 22nd last to the Honourable Paul Sauvé respecting the grants to the universities and I did not fail to submit your communication to my colleagues of the executive council.

I note your statement to the effect that, as the Honourable Mr. Sauvé indicated in his letter of December 14th, the alternative solution suggested by your government was submitted simultaneously to the ten Canadian provinces.

I accordingly presume that, in regard to the province of Quebec, your letter could only serve as a basis for the negotiations initiated between your government and ours with a view to finding a solution to the thorny problems which you inherited and to avoid increased taxation for the corporations operating in the province of Quebec.

The universities and the government of the province of Quebec having refused the sums offered by the federal government because they could not recognize to the latter, under the British North America Act, the authority to participate in the formulation of a policy concerning education, the government of Quebec must accordingly reaffirm its position on this subject.

In order to make available to the universities the funds which they require fully to play their part and to meet their obligations, the province of Quebec has decided to exercise its right of raising from 9 per cent to 10 per cent the tax on the profits of corporations. We are relying, as you stated in your letter of December 22nd last, on your assurance that the federal government will allow to such corporations an equivalent abatement as from April 1st, 1960 and this for the two years' period ending on March 31st, 1962.

The grant of $1.50 per capita which the federal government offers to the universities through the Canadian universities' conference will accordingly cease in so far as the province of Quebec's universities are concerned.

After a further consideration of our universities' requirements, the province of Quebec has also decided, subject to the approval of the legislature, to provide for them, in addition to the considerable appropriations already included in its budget for the 1960-61 fiscal year, additional grants substantially in excess of $1.50 per capita, regardless of the outcome of the negotiations between the federal government and Quebec's provincial government.

We understand, as the Honourable Paul Sauvé indicated in the letter which he addressed to you on December 14th last, that if adjustments must be made, your government and ours will come to an agreement on this subject.

Inasmuch as the entire problem of the fiscal relations between the federal government and the provinces must be re-examined as a whole before April 1st, 1962, it is fully understood that this agreement is temporary and that it will remain in force only during the next two fiscal periods beginning on April 1st, 1960.

My colleagues of the provincial cabinet and myself hope that we shall soon be in a position to announce that, in so far as the contributions offered by the Canadian universities' conference are concerned, your government and ours have come to an agreement recognizing the provincial government's exclusive jurisdiction in this sphere.

As regards the amounts which have been accumulated in trust or otherwise and which represent the total of the grants which our universities did not claim, we are prepared to initiate with you such negotiations as may be necessary in pursuance of the legislation which will be submitted to the Quebec parliament during the present session.

Yours sincerely,
Antonio Barrette.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister permit a question on the context of that letter?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I complete the reading of the correspondence?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is just a short question. I was just asking the minister whether I correctly heard him read from the premier's letter a reference to an agreement. If he did so, will he read that sentence again? I did not catch it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is on the record. The hon. member's colleague has a copy of the letter there. The next letter was written by the Prime Minister of Canada on February 2, addressed to Premier Barrette and reads as follows:

My dear Prime Minister:

I appreciate the constructive suggestions contained in your letter of January 21, and believe that they provide the basis for discussions which will assure agreement on the several aspects of grants to universities.

I am glad to learn that your government agrees to the general principle for settlement of the problem and if further clarification is needed to secure agreement in detail I feel that the best course to adopt would be to have early discussions between representatives of the two governments. If you are agreeable to such discussions I shall name the Honourable Donald M. Fleming to represent the federal government, and I await your reply as to when such a meeting can be arranged.

To that letter, the premier of Quebec replied on February 5, as follows:

My dear Prime Minister,

I have just received your letter of February 3rd in reply to the communication which I had recently addressed to you regarding the negotiations undertaken a few weeks ago between your government and ours on the subject of the grants to the Quebec universities.

The suggestion which you make that I should meet the Honourable Donald M. Fleming, acting as representative of the Federal Government, and the speed with which you have replied to my letter, allow me—I presume—to anticipate that very soon you and I will be in a position to announce that the already expressed hope of a settlement regarding the grants to the universities has been realized.

Subject to a few hours' notice, I shall accordingly be very happy to meet the Honourable Mr. Fleming at his convenience at Quebec if it can be arranged.

I might be able to meet your representative in Montreal, but I could hardly state for certain when such a meeting could take place inasmuch as I am continually retained in Quebec during the session, which is now reaching its most active period.

If the Honourable Mr. Fleming is prepared to come to Quebec I should be extremely thankful if he would accept my invitation, and I would reiterate that for the reasons which I have just explained I am very sorry to be unable to meet him half-way.

Sincerely yours,
Antonio Barrette

That is the complete correspondence between the two governments. There is nothing else at all in writing between the two governments.

Following receipt of that final letter from Premier Barrette—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit a question about the correspondence he has read? Could the minister tell us, just as a matter of fact, whether the announcement by the Prime Minister that Mr. Barrette forecast in his last letter was ever made?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman is a little impatient and is anticipating. I am giving an account of the discussions.

Following receipt of that final letter from Premier Barrette I went to meet him in Quebec. I was very happy to go to Quebec for that purpose. By that time, as hon. members are aware, the government of Quebec, in exercise of its constitutional rights, had already introduced into the legislature of Quebec that government's program of legislation. That program was introduced without any attempt to secure leave on the part of anyone else, and there never was any reason that it should. The province of Quebec is a sovereign province. The legislature of Quebec is, within the provisions of the British North America Act, a sovereign legislature and the government of Quebec exercises at all times its right to submit legislation to the legislature of that province without seeking leave or licence on the part of anyone else in the world. That is precisely what the government of the province did. As indicated in some of the letters which I have read, that was a decision taken by the Quebec government.

They decided they would proceed with their program of legislation regardless of what might be the outcome of the discussions with the federal government. The meeting which I had the honour of holding with Premier Barrette in Quebec, therefore, offered an opportunity on my part for acquainting myself in greater detail with the effect of the bills then standing before the legislature of Quebec, having been already introduced there. It also afforded an opportunity on the part of Premier Barrette to be given full information as to the intention of the government of Canada in relation to the legislative proposals which are now embodied in the bill under debate in this committee.

There is no secret about anything; there is nothing mysterious about it. I have given to the committee everything that has been exchanged in writing between the governments and I point out that both governments understood the legislative intentions of the other, and each proceeded in the exercise of its constitutional rights and in obedience to its constitutional responsibility. That is the position in which the matter stands.

So far as the legislature of Quebec is concerned, I am sure hon. members are aware that the bills which were then standing on the order paper of the legislature were subsequently adopted in that legislature and received royal assent on the tenth day of March. Those bills provided for several matters, several facts of interest. Bill No. 60 provided for an increase in the provincial corporation tax from 9 to 10 per cent of the corporation profit. Bill No. 3 made provision for a sinking fund out of which capital grants might be made to the universities of Quebec to assist them with their building program. Bill No. 58 provided for payment of continuing grants equivalent to $1.75 per capita of the population of the province, and those amounts are distributable each year among the universities and institutions of higher learning of the province on the basis of student enrolment.

It is quite clear, therefore, that this program which was undertaken by the government of Quebec entirely on its own, of its own volition, and approved unanimously by the legislature of Quebec in the excercise of its sovereign rights, became law regardless of what this parliament chose to do with the federal legislation. This legislation to which I have referred is the law of the province of Quebec passed by the legislature of that province in exercise of its constitutional rights.

That program of assistance to the universities of the province has won the widest possible acceptance in the province of Quebec. It has won acclaim and the highest approbation from the presidents of the universities of that province, and it is quite clear that it goes far beyond the terms upon which the federal government, in light of the legislation in the bill now under debate in this committee, is permitted to increase from 9 to 10 per cent the abatement as against the federal tax.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the position. Not only is it perfectly clear that in light of the bill now under debate the province of Quebec has fully established its position as a prescribed province, but it has gone beyond that and done so in exercise of its own constitutional position, its own constitutional rights, and upon its own decision.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question, but before doing so I would like to preface it with this statement. During the course of the last few minutes the minister has been talking to us about a number of bills in another place, and we are not concerned with them at the moment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but it is six o'clock. Apparently we have not unanimous consent to proceed.

(Translation):

Mr. Parizeau: Great comedian.

(Text):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I hear the same objection on the other side of the house that I made a moment ago, and I now rise on a question of privilege.

An hon. Member: There is no question.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, there is. I have been accused of being a "farceur", and told to sit down, and because of the interruption which was made and the statement I made, I would ask that the same treatment be meted out to me as I meted out to the hon. member.

The Chairman: Order. I did not hear that word but I am sure that if it has been pronounced the hon. member concerned will immediately withdraw it.

(Translation):

Mr. Johnson: Sit down, joker.

I said first, sit down joker. The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) was already seated. If he thought those remarks were addressed to him, I apologize and I withdraw them.

(Translation):

An hon. Member: Touché.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house leader what the business is for tomorrow and perhaps at this stage he could give some indication as to what the business will be on Monday.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I find it easier to announce on Thursday night the business for the next week.

Mr. Chevrier: That is satisfactory.

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow we will continue the discussion of Bill No. C-56 to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act followed by the three remaining budget resolutions. If the house were to make progress on those we would then take Bill No. C-57, an act to amend the Trans-Canada Highway Act which is now in the committee stage. If the three items I mentioned were to be cleared up this week it would represent a very fair week's work.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MEETING OF CANADA-U.S. INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP—U.S. RESOLUTION OF APPRECIATION

Mr. Speaker: I expect to have the honour in a day or two to present the report of the third meeting of the Canada-United States interparliamentary group. In the meantime I have the honour to report the receipt from the ambassador of the United States of America of resolution No. S.308 of the Senate of the United States, passed on the 25th day of April, 1960, recording their appreciation of and satisfaction with the exchange visit which took place a few days earlier. By leave of the house I should like not only to table this resolution of the Senate of the United States but also to ask permission to have it printed as an appendix to Hansard today.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[For text of resolution, see appendix]

AUSTRALIAN TRADE AGREEMENT ACT

LEGISLATION IMPLEMENTING CANADA-AUSTRALIA AGREEMENT

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-28 (from the Senate), respecting a certain trade agreement between Canada and Australia.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

USE OF CANADIAN FIELDS BY U.S. RECONNAISSANCE PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of his statement yesterday to the effect that Canadian airfields had not been used by United States planes for aerial reconnaissance flights over Russia, will he comment on contrary statements emanating from Washington and reported in today's Globe and Mail in a news story by Philip Deane?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I dealt with a dispatch by this same correspondent in Washington, and I pointed out the inaccuracies in his statement. I have nothing further to add today. If the hon. member for Laurier will compare the dispatch in the Globe and Mail of yesterday with the dispatch in today's Globe and Mail I think he will see that the same correspondent has merely taken the facts he put in yesterday's report, reduced them a little bit, and put them back again in today's report. This is, in effect, irresponsible and mischievous reporting. I gave the facts yesterday afternoon, and I have nothing to add to them today.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): May I ask a supplementary question of the Acting Prime Minister, and I apologize for not so addressing him yesterday. In brief, then, this dispatch is incorrect?

Mr. Green: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is what I intended to convey by my remarks.

ATOMIC ENERGY

REPORTED PLAN BY U.S. TO SET OFF NUCLEAR DEVICES NEAR ALASKA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I asked the former acting prime minister a question on May 5, and he said he would bring it to the attention of the present Acting Prime Minister and that I might get an answer on Monday of this week. Since I have not had an answer to date I should like to repeat my question.

Does the Acting Prime Minister care to comment on the report that the United States atomic energy commission has plans to set off four nuclear devices in the coastal area of Alaska? Has the Canadian government been informed of any such plan? Will Canada oppose such explosions prior to the conclusion of the proposed international agreement on nuclear testing?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the project to which the hon. member refers is known, I believe, as project "Chariot". It is part of the United States atomic energy commission's "Plowshare" program for nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes. By its nature such a program would not be secret. A great deal of information about it has, in fact, already been made public. From this information it appears that the particular project to which the hon. member refers is still under study, and that there is no immediate intention on the part of the United States to explode nuclear devices in Alaska.

The opposition of the Canadian government to nuclear tests is well known, and I have reaffirmed it on a number of occasions both inside this house and outside. I agree with what I take to be the implication in the hon. member's question, that nuclear explosions, particularly at this stage, might have a damaging effect on progress of the Geneva negotiations for a nuclear test treaty. The government has always stressed that it was especially important that no country should conduct any further nuclear tests whatsoever pending the conclusion of a treaty on nuclear tests.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. It is appreciated, of course, that the policy of the government of Canada is against tests, but has the Canadian government indicated to the United States government that with regard to the announcement of Sunday last, as to its intention to carry out certain underground tests, the Canadian government is opposed to that particular decision?

Mr. Green: Our opposition is thoroughly well known to the United States authorities. There has been no protest made with regard to this last statement. I am sure the hon. member for Essex East would not want us to be filing notes every day or two as these questions come up, particularly when our stand is very clearly understood in Washington and in the other capitals of the world.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the minister not think that in matters of this sort we should not hesitate to file as many notes as the circumstances warrant?

Mr. Green: I honestly suspect, Mr. Speaker, that if the hon. member were in my position he would do exactly the same as I would do.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): In view of the minister's welcome statement, can he say whether the study of a possible nuclear explosion with regard to the Athabasca tar sands has now been terminated?

Mr. Green: These are private firms involved in these studies and I do not know whether or not the study is still going on. As the hon. member will recall, the government has taken a firm stand against these explosions.

[Mr. Green.]

FINANCE

DISCOUNT ON U.S. COINS—ACTION TO OFFSET ADVERSE TOURIST PUBLICITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. With the tourist season rapidly approaching, does the government propose taking any action to offset the unfavourable publicity that has resulted throughout the United States from the action of our chartered banks in charging an extra discount on United States coins?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The government has already participated in plans with the Canadian tourist association and the banks in order to try to reduce the effects of this publicity, to point out to the people of the United States some of the facts with regard to the law of supply of money, and also to adopt policies this summer that will alleviate this situation.

Mr. Garland: I wish to ask a supplementary question. Have any representations been made by the government to have the chartered banks discontinue for the summer season at least their current policy of charging extra discount on United States coins?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I was not too clear on the first part of the question.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the supplementary question goes beyond the administrative responsibility of the government. As I understand it the chartered banks are acting on their own initiative, and there is no legislation which gives administrative responsibility to the government.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

APARTHEID—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER CONFERENCE OF PRIME MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I wish to direct to the Acting Prime Minister a question based on a news story in today's Montreal Gazette. Is it now the policy of the Canadian government to seek a further conference of commonwealth prime ministers at an early date as a possible method of avoiding a crisis within the commonwealth on South Africa's policy of apartheid?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): The conference is still under way in London. I believe it will terminate tomorrow, and I expect that the Prime Minister will be reporting to the house on Monday.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR EXPEDITION OF RETURNS TO ORDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I wish to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister; I am sure he will recall our interest in a matter of returns of parliamentary papers. Earlier this session I indicated that 50 per cent of the failures last session to comply with orders for returns related to one particular department. Yesterday there was tabled a return to a motion of mine which was passed early in the session of 1959, being motion No. 5 dated April 15, 1959. The return, as hon. members can see, is not unduly voluminous. The last item in the return is a letter dated April 10, 1959.

I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister, in accordance with the assurance of the Prime Minister will inquire into this matter and see whether there cannot be more expedition shown in recognition of the opposition's rights in these matters.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to look into this. May I say we have tried very hard to improve on some of these bad habits into which the former government had fallen.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

ZINC OXIDE—INQUIRY AS TO RESTRAINING ORDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice and ask what action has been taken or is contemplated with respect to the recommendation of the restrictive trade practices commission for certain restraining orders against Zinc Oxide Company of Canada Limited, and Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company Limited arising from the report of that commission regarding the production and sale of zinc oxide.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was kind enough to give me notice yesterday of his intention to ask this question. I must apologize for not having obtained the full information. My recollection is that the report was referred to counsel and that on the advice of counsel no action was taken. I will be glad now to get a further report and give a fuller answer. I am sorry I did not get it for today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—REQUEST FOR NOTIFICATION OF EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the information given to this house yesterday by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration with regard to advertising in the British isles employment opportunities in certain trades, would the minister take into consideration the advisability of notifying the national employment offices of the Atlantic provinces in what parts of Canada opportunities exist for carpenters, plumbers, electricians and painters in order to enable those offices to find jobs for a large number of our 125,000 unplaced applicants who are qualified in such trades?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my understanding in this matter is that the placement section of the unemployment insurance commission continually disseminates information about the areas in which certain people are required, depending on their classification, trades and knowledge. This exchange of information is carried on throughout the offices from one coast to the other at all times.

WIDENING OF SCOPE OF COMMITTEE DEALING WITH ELLIOT LAKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his role as the saviour of Elliot Lake. Would the minister tell us whether the speculation about the committee's scope being widened to include Bancroft and Uranium City is true, and how this is going to fit into the operations of the committee?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is quite true. It will fit in admirably because these areas deserve the same consideration as Elliot Lake.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say when the report from this committee may be received by the government?

Mr. Churchill: An announcement will be made in due course, and action will be taken as it appears possible. Quite a bit of discussion has been going on with various business firms that are interested in the area. Decisions cannot be made solely by the government; action must be taken in consultation with those firms. These things are going ahead, and we have hopes that quite a bit may be done for the areas that are affected.

As I mentioned earlier, the effort has to be made by the four groups concerned; the area itself, the mining companies and the two governments, this one and the government of the province of Ontario. We are finding excellent co-operation among all groups.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister could relate his remarks to Uranium City, Saskatchewan. The survey is to be for the three of them, but I took it that the minister's remarks related to Elliot Lake.

Mr. Churchill: Uranium City, Saskatchewan, has been under consideration in the same way as the other two areas. Two representatives from Uranium City were in my office two days ago presenting a well-reasoned brief in moderate language, and I hope representatives of the government will visit Uranium City in the very near future to make contact with the people of that area.

LIVESTOCK

CATTLE AND LAMB—INQUIRY AS TO SUPPORT PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Agriculture, with regard to an announcement made today by the chairman of the agricultural stabilization board concerning the support prices for cattle and lamb, whether he is in a position to offer an explanation for the lower support given to lamb this year?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I had expected the hon. member would have asked me to give an explanation of the higher support given to cattle this year, but he has chosen to go in the other direction. The explanation in each case is the same. As the hon. member knows, there is a mandatory support at 80 per cent of the level of average prices for the past ten years. That produced the two figures which, in pursuance of its obligations under the act, the stabilization board has released.

FLOODS

LAKE NIPISSING—INQUIRY AS TO CONTROL MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): With the inflow of water into lake Nipissing substantially in excess of double the outflow, can the Minister of Public Works give an assurance that everything possible is being done to minimize the danger of flooding and damage to the properties of the people who reside in that area?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I wish to thank the hon. member for Nipissing for his question, and to say in reply that we have control of the dams forming the exit from lake Nipissing and that we are keeping an hourly watch, night and day, to try to control the situation as best we can. At the present time we are controlling it to the extent that we have almost flooded lake Nipissing; the east end of the lake is flooded. This is just a matter of too much water. Never in 30 years has precipitation been so great. It is really what the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) might call a vice majeur or an act of God, and in the circumstances we are doing all we can to control it.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION OF INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance, because recently he was, as we all realize, the best acting prime minister—for a day or so—that we have ever had. Could the hon. gentleman indicate whether there has been any progress, and if so with what results, in the matter of setting up the equivalent of a Hoover commission for Canada along the lines announced in the speech from the throne, No. 2, by the Prime Minister?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I am sure that when an announcement in this regard is appropriate, the Prime Minister will be pleased to make it to the house.

AIR TRANSPORT

CRASH LANDING AT MALTON—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to give the house a report on the investigation into the crash landing of a Super Constellation aircraft at Malton last February 10?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I wish to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. I am advised by my officials that certain technical aspects are still under investigation. It has therefore not been possible to complete a report on this accident.

SHIPPING

SMALL BOAT REGULATIONS—STATEMENT ON INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): May I take this opportunity to answer a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Port Arthur regarding small boat regulations. No amendments or new regulations respecting licensing of small craft or their operators are contemplated for this boating season. It is proposed to raise the matter at the annual small boat conference to be held in Ottawa next fall under the auspices of my department. These conferences are attended by representatives of organizations and by private individuals interested in small boat safety.

Recommendations resulting from these conferences are submitted to departmental officials for consideration, and if accepted every effort is made to place them before the governor in council or before parliament, as the case may be, prior to the commencement of the next boating season. At last year's conference a system of voluntary licensing for small boat operators was suggested by my department, but the question was held over for further study. We are hopeful that at the next conference a system of voluntary licensing for small boat operators may be acceptable. It is important that the department should have the support of the boating public before proceeding with such a scheme. Departmental officials will be holding discussions on the matter with various boating organizations during the coming season.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister inform the house how the invitations to this conference are sent out, and whether the question of life saving equipment will be discussed at the conference?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, speaking offhand I would say invitations are sent out to everybody we would know of who would be interested. If the hon. member knows of some individual or organization which has not been invited in the past and would like to be invited, if he will let us know we shall be glad to send an invitation. I feel sure that lifesaving equipment will be discussed.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): What efforts have been made during the last boating season to get better police co-operation from other authorities in so far as the regulations that now exist are concerned, enforcing them across the country in the boating field?

Mr. Hees: We are always making every possible effort to get all the co-operation we can from all policing authorities.

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO ACCIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Fortin (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I regret that I did not send him notice, and he can answer tomorrow if he wishes. I am going to ask my question in French so that he may have some practice in speaking French.

(Translation):

Is the minister aware that last Tuesday night, a ship was involved in an accident and ran aground a few miles off Quebec?

It was reported in La Presse yesterday that the captain of the ship involved in the accident had refused or neglected to seek the services of a licensed pilot.

I therefore ask the minister whether he is aware of this fact and whether his department intends to investigate the matter?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to take this question as notice. I shall answer it tomorrow.

HOUSING

NUMBER OF INSURED LOANS IN FIRST FOUR MONTHS OF 1960

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Public Works. Is the minister now in a position to advise the house as to the number of loans made by all approved lenders in the first four months of this year?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question by the hon. member for Nipissing, the requests that have come to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for insurance from approved lenders, that is life insurance companies, trust companies and loan companies other than banks, up to May 6, 1960, amounted to 4,023 loans; up to May 6, 1959 they amounted to 5,737.

It will be interesting to the house to learn that in the week ended May 6 there were 668 approved loans as against 576 in the same week last year, so that the number of lenders are stepping up their participation materially. I should add, however, that the banks made only a nominal effort to participate in this enterprise.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I should like to ask a supplementary question. The Minister of Public Works has indicated that the banking contribution was a nominal one. Can he indicate specifically what their contribution was? And having in mind my question to the minister, when we were discussing legislation in this field, as to their contribution, will he indicate at what point he might perhaps review, as he promised, the role of the banks in this field?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, the debate on housing was terminated some time ago. I know my hon. friend on his infrequent returns to the house likes to raise it again. I should be glad to reply to these questions during the discussion of my estimates. In the meantime, the policy of the government in regard to housing and also in regard to loans for houses is under constant review. To date the participation of the banks, as my friend must know from the reports which are made from time to time, has amounted to 34.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Public Works. Has any reason been given by the banks to the departmental officials, or has any effort been made by the departmental officials, to find out the reason the banks have dropped participation in this housing field by about 90 per cent over last year?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, we have had no official information from the banks as to why they are not participating. Of course the hon. member for Timmins is aware that the interest rate under the Bank Act is limited to 6 per cent, and any Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation loan would be governed by that existing rate of 6 per cent; whereas other approved lenders are allowed to charge 6¾ per cent. That, no doubt, would be some indication of one of the reasons the banks are not participating. As a matter of fact I think all parties in the house were agreed—at least I have not found anybody to say otherwise—that the banks should not have their rate under the Bank Act increased to 6¾ per cent.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Can the minister inform the house whether his department has approached the banks in this matter in an effort to see whether the limit of 6 per cent is—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has already asked that question, and it seems to me he is now trying to put his question in terms of what might be called an argument, that might lead to a debate, which would be improper at this time.

[Mr. Walker.]

INTERNATIONAL TRADE FAIR

REQUEST FOR COMMENTS OF ASSOCIATE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, before directing a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence, I wish to welcome him on his return to Canada. I should like to ask whether he has any comments to make about his trip to Paris with regard to the world fair which was supposed to be held in Montreal.

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Levis for his words of welcome on my return to the house. I feel that all necessary comments have already been made on what took place in Paris with regard to the 1967 world fair.

All I wish to say is that all those who dealt with this matter—delegation members as well as public relations officers—spared no effort in the performance of their duties and surely Canada can feel proud of the fact that everything was done with the greatest possible amount of fair play, at least on their part.

SMALL CARS—STATEMENT ON REPORTED TREASURY BOARD DIRECTIVE RESPECTING GOVERNMENT PURCHASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) asked me a question which I declined to answer at the time. The question was as follows—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You did answer it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, you did.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The question was:

> Will the minister say whether a directive has been issued by the treasury board or any other government body instructing departments of the Canadian government to buy small cars instead of big ones?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister answered no.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): To the inquiry as to whether I would make a statement I replied "no". The hon. member then asked whether I would make an inquiry to see if any such directive had been issued by the treasury board. I have done so and, Mr. Speaker, no such directive has been issued by the treasury board. The matter has not been before the treasury board. However, on further inquiry I found that a directive was issued by the government motor vehicle committee, which is an interdepartmental committee.

I concluded, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member's question was prompted by a question and answer in the standing committee on estimates on May 10, and here I think the former deputy minister of national health and welfare, now the deputy minister of citizenship and immigration, spoke under a misunderstanding. In that respect he was asked as to whether—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order. Surely it is contrary to the rules of this house to refer to the proceedings—more particularly to quote the proceedings—of a committee before that committee has made a report.

Mr. Chevrier: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let me make clear at once that I have no intention of reading the proceedings of the committee; I was simply wishing to point out at the present time what appeared to be the origin of the misapprehension of the hon. member for Essex East in this respect. In fairness to him I think the misapprehension was based upon—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Don't worry about the member for Essex East.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —the statement made by the deputy minister, which was not quite accurate; and, as we all know, the deputy minister would not intentionally make an inaccurate statement. I would want to say that—

Mr. Speaker: In order to dispose of the point of order, it is not usual to refer to or use or quote in the house the proceedings of a committee until it has reported. I daresay the minister will be able to deal with the matter without doing so.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. I have indicated the reason for this passing reference, Mr. Speaker. As far as the contents of the directive are concerned, perhaps I should say it indicated that departments should give serious consideration to the use of compact cars, that is to say the new small cars, in place of larger cars where the smaller cars may serve the purposes of departments.

The hon. member for Essex East then proceeded to ask this question:

> Will the minister see that the direction is negated at once, because obviously it is at serious variance with the interests of Canadian workers?

I think the hon. gentleman is under a misapprehension. This directive is not applicable to imported compact cars. It applies to compact cars of Canadian manufacture, so it cannot be said that the directive does any harm to Canadian workers employed in the automobile industry. It is intended that departments should examine the possibility of achieving economies in the purchase price and cost of operation of motor cars where it is found that the smaller or compact cars will meet their requirements.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement made by the Minister of Finance in his compact reply, may I ask the Postmaster General to explain why, in the light of this answer, a foreign-made truck carries the mail from the Ottawa post office to Uplands airport?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Such transport is done by contract with an independent trucking company, which is quite free to use the vehicles it has in its service.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, my only purpose in rising a moment ago was to ask whether the 40-minute rule applies to ministers answering questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for Vancouver South begin again, please? I think the first part of his question was lost.

Mr. Broome: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. With regard to the best interests of Canadian workers and the purchase of automobiles, will the minister take into consideration the fact that the province of British Columbia is dependent to a great extent upon export trade, and that the interests of our workers are just as important as the interests of the workers in Windsor or Oshawa?

Mr. Benidickson: Some Japanese trade, too.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has produced an argument, but not at the right time or place.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Later:]

Mr. L. D. Crestohl (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance with reference to the reply he gave as to the directive concerning compact cars. Can he tell the house whether that directive also applies to cars in use by ministers?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Ministers of the crown are not provided with transportation at the expense of the treasury. Many years ago ministers were deprived of any such transportation, and they are now responsible for providing their own.

Mr. Winch: Two thousand dollars a year.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): All members of the house enjoy an expense allowance.

Mr. Caron: Does the minister believe that the $2,000 a year is not to meet the expense of a car?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was provided some years ago, I think actually about 28 years ago, when the use of a motor car and chauffeur therefore provided for ministers of the crown was withdrawn. The so-called transportation allowance has remained at $2,000 in the meantime. I do not know whether the hon. member would care to say how far $2,000 would go today in providing for a full year's use of a motor car, its running expenses and a chauffeur.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

MONTREAL—REPORTED INSTRUCTIONS TO OFFICIALS RESPECTING UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has he been able to obtain information respecting the question I asked yesterday on the orders of the day?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have looked into the matter that the hon. member for Laurier brought to the attention of the house yesterday on the orders of the day, and I have information from the regional office in Montreal to the following effect.

No change has been made or is being made or is contemplated in the practices or procedures in dealing with claimants in any of the Montreal offices of the unemployment insurance commission. I understand that the question asked by the hon. member was based on an advertisement published in a Montreal newspaper and paid for by the Liberal party as part of their propaganda in the forthcoming provincial election.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I should like to inform the hon. member for Laurier that I do not appreciate his efforts to involve the unemployment insurance commission in this political situation, nor do I consider them helpful so far as unemployment is concerned. I might add that the photograph which appeared in the advertisement was taken early in the morning before the office opened.

I make these facts available to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, in case he is not aware of them.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell the hon. gentleman at once that I based my question—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a statement to make it should be as a point of order or privilege.

Mr. Chevrier: I make it as a question of privilege. The minister has stated that my question was based on a political advertisement of the Liberal party—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is entitled to comment on the statement made by the minister.

Mr. Chevrier: —which statement, Mr. Speaker, is entirely erroneous. When I asked the question yesterday I held in my hand, to be seen by everybody here, a statement which appeared in Le Devoir and I put my question to the minister in French. There was no picture and no advertisement. It had absolutely nothing to do with the Liberal party, and the minister should know that I asked the question for information. Furthermore, the unemployment situation in Montreal is very serious at the moment—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: —and the minister is not doing nearly as much as he should be doing.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member went a bit beyond his question of privilege. I did not hear the last of what he said, and I daresay the reporter did not either.

UNITED NATIONS

REPRESENTATIONS BY CANADIAN WELFARE COUNCIL RESPECTING REFUGEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government has made any progress in the negotiations with the provincial governments with respect to the representations by the welfare council regarding health and welfare care for refugees sponsored privately during world refugee year and, if so, whether he can give any report to the house?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to make inquiries about that question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the Acting Prime Minister would permit me to ask a supplementary question. Would the government give consideration to the possibility of having this residual care undertaken by the federal government if it is not possible to reach agreement with the provinces?

Mr. Green: Well, Mr. Speaker, the whole broad question is under consideration.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS ACT

ALTERNATIVE ARRANGEMENTS FOR UNIVERSITY GRANTS—EXTENSION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX RATE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, May 11, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-56, to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act—Mr. Fleming (Eglinton)—Mr. Flynn in the chair.

On clause 1—Amendment of agreements.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, at just about the time of adjournment last evening I was prepared to put a question to the minister. I should like to ask the question at this time but before doing so, in order that there might be no misunderstanding, perhaps I could just refer the minister to two lines of his statement which are to be found on page 3802 of Hansard of May 11, 1960:

> They decided they would proceed with their program of legislation regardless of what might be the outcome of the discussions with the federal government.

I take that to mean that, notwithstanding what was going to be put in the bill now under consideration, the provincial government of Quebec would proceed on their own with their own legislation. A little later in the same paragraph the minister said, referring to the meeting which he had with Mr. Barrette:

> It also afforded an opportunity on the part of Premier Barrette to be given full information as to the intention of the government of Canada in relation to the legislative proposals which are now embodied in the bill under debate in this committee.

I wonder whether the minister would give us a little more clarification on that. Did Mr. Barrette tell the Minister of Finance that he was satisfied with this bill? I take it that the bill now under discussion was shown to him, that he saw it, and I ask the minister what Mr. Barrette's reaction was, whether he declared himself satisfied with its content.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I made a very ample statement on this subject yesterday, going far beyond anything that is required, doing so only under protest because of the fact that so much latitude had been allowed. I considered the entire proceedings were out of order. I think I have made quite an ample report on the discussions to which reference has been made.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, although the minister vigorously criticized the fact that I referred to a portion of two letters, he then proceeded to put on Hansard—which was a very extraordinary thing and took over 30 minutes—all the correspondence that took place between the two levels of government. What I am asking him now is a matter which has reference to some of the correspondence which he put on record. The minister has not answered the question. Surely we on this side of the house are entitled to know whether, in his discussions with the premier of Quebec, the premier was shown the contents of this bill, and whether he gave his approval of its contents.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I read the correspondence yesterday and placed the full information on record, whereas the hon. member had jumped around between two or three letters making some selections from the correspondence. I refer him to the letter which I read yesterday, dated December 14, 1959, from the late Premier Sauve, in which he said:

> As I mentioned to you last October, the Quebec government has decided to request the provincial parliament, during the present session—

—to do certain things. "Has decided" I draw those words to his attention. There are similar expressions elsewhere. The present bill was not in existence at the time, although we were well aware of what the bill would contain when introduced, and the legislative intentions of the two governments were discussed in a very understanding manner.

Mr. Chevrier: Then do I understand from the minister's last answer that while the bill was not ready and was not shown to the premier of Quebec at the time, he was told of its contents?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He was told of the legislative intention of the federal government in its approach to this question.

Mr. Bourget: May I pursue that question and ask the Minister of Finance whether Mr. Barrette at any time told the minister that this new compromise, new formula, call it whatever you like, was acceptable to the province of Quebec?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the hon. gentleman is still labouring under a misapprehension, or else he did not follow what I endeavoured to convey yesterday. I stressed yesterday that the premier of Quebec had made it quite clear that the provincial government already had a legislative program with respect to matters affecting education and grants for that purpose in Quebec, and taxes for that purpose. I referred in my remarks yesterday to the three measures which, with others, were then pending before the legislature of Quebec. I indicated what the premier had said, and his remark was in accord with the position that had been taken by the late Premier Sauve in his correspondence, that it was the intention of the Quebec government to proceed with that legislative program regardless of what course of action might be taken in this parliament in relation to the whole subject matter of federal grants to universities.

Mr. Bourget: That is quite correct; I think the minister is talking about the legislation that was passed in the local legislature. We are asking about the new formula that is embodied in the bill. I understood that this new formula was put in the bill to satisfy the province of Quebec. I believe we are entitled to know from the minister whether the province of Quebec approved of that formula as it is embodied in this bill. This question has nothing to do with the four or five bills that were passed in the local legislature.

I shall repeat my question. Has the premier of Quebec, Mr. Barrette, at any time, orally or in writing, accepted the formula as it now appears in Bill No. C-56?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have had no correspondence or communication with Premier Barrette on this matter over the past couple of months. I have had no communication from him with respect to the terms of this bill now under discussion. I pointed out yesterday that in the light of the action the legislature took at its recent session, there is no question whatever that under this bill the province of Quebec would fully qualify as a prescribed province, and therefore the federal tax abatement with respect to the federal corporation tax on federal taxpayers in the province of Quebec would apply to the 10 per cent rate of tax as it has hitherto applied to the 9 per cent rate. I believe that is quite clear.

The steps taken in the Quebec legislature have gone far beyond the terms of the measure now under discussion.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Levis, following up the question that was raised yesterday by the hon. member for Laurier, keeps asking if there has been some agreement on this matter. I think, if I may say so, they are labouring under some misapprehension in this regard. This bill does not depend upon some agreement between governments. All this bill does is provide an alternative method of meeting the problem that has arisen because legislation of this parliament up to the present time provided federal grants to universities on a direct basis.

In the case of a prescribed province the situation is this. Here again, Mr. Chairman, I say that I am speaking on this subject at this point under protest, because I think this whole discussion is not referrable to clause 1 of the bill but to clause 2. However, I have been pressed on this matter repeatedly and hon. members go on taking hours discussing it on clause 1. I am therefore going to say this about it under that protest.

This method does not involve or hinge upon agreements between governments, any more than the equalization payments under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act depend upon agreement between governments. These equalization payments are paid to the province of Quebec, which has entered into no agreement with the federal government in pursuance of the provisions of this act. Those are payments that are made under the provisions of this act even in the case of provinces that have entered into no agreement whatever with the federal government.

Similarly, in the case of a prescribed province under the amendment now proposed, there is no contemplation of an agreement between the federal and provincial governments in that situation. All that the bill is dealing with in that situation is in relation to a federal abatement of a federal tax payable by federal taxpayers in the province of Quebec. That is clearly a matter for federal legislation and clearly a matter of federal jurisdiction beyond any question.

Then there is provision for the accounting at the end of the year so that the charge on the treasury remains the same. Accordingly, in the case of a prescribed province—again taking the case of the province of Quebec—if at the end of the year it is found, as undoubtedly would be the case, that the federal tax abatement exceeds the equivalent of $1.50 per capita of population, the difference will be deducted by the federal government from the federal equalization payment provided under the terms of this federal legislation, namely the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

Hence, Mr. Chairman, you see there is no contemplation of any agreement. Nothing of that kind is involved, any more than there was with respect to the provision made for equalization payments.

Mr. Chevrier: I think the minister has made it quite clear that this bill is to provide an alternative. Am I right in assuming that is what the minister has said?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: And the minister has also said there is no contemplation of an agreement. In other words, I think what the minister has in mind is that the province would proceed with its own legislation and Ottawa would do likewise, the one in its field and the other in its field. But although the minister keeps repeating that there is no agreement, the correspondence shows otherwise. The letter written to the premier of Quebec by the Prime Minister of Canada states as follows:

> I am glad to learn that your government agrees to the general principle for settlement of the problem and if further clarification is needed to secure agreement in detail—

And so on. Hence the Prime Minister of Canada certainly had in mind that there was to be an agreement in detail. The reply which came from the premier of Quebec certainly indicates the same thing, because in his letter to the Prime Minister of Canada of February 5, 1960 he states as follows:

> —I presume—to anticipate that very soon you and I will be in a position to announce that the already expressed hope of a settlement regarding the grants to the universities has been realized.

So the Prime Minister of Canada had in mind an agreement and the premier of Quebec had in mind a settlement. If we go a step further, from the words of the Solicitor General here in the House of Commons on at least two occasions we realize that Mr. Barrette, the premier of Quebec, had approved these arrangements because—and I quote from page 3286 of Hansard of April 26, 1960 where the Solicitor General states as follows:

(Translation):

> We have kept our word admirably, because Premier Barrette himself believed that this bill is consistent with the terms of Mr. Duplessis' proposal, which was submitted again by Mr. Sauvé, and later by Mr. Barrette himself.

(Text):

Hence it cannot be both. Here the Solicitor General, by implication, clearly states that this is taking up the terms of the proposal of former Premier Duplessis. I do not think there can be any doubt about that matter. Therefore, in view of what the Minister of Finance has said, I think the committee should know whether or not the premier of the province of Quebec agreed to the conditions as set out in this bill, and more particularly in clause 2.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have a question I should like to ask the Minister of Finance. I have been following this debate with great interest and it seems to me there are one or two questions which, if completely replied to by the minister, would give us the satisfaction of knowing something that obviously we do not know from what the minister has said. Can the minister say this? In view of the fact that he had a discussion with the premier of Quebec, although it is clear that he did not show him the bill because he said it was not ready, is it clear that the provincial premier knew that the province would have to impose a tax of at least 1 per cent on corporate income? Can the minister say whether there is any doubt as to whether the premier had an appreciation in that particular?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the premier of the province of Quebec did not know that, because it is not a fact.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is nothing here that says the province of Quebec must impose an additional tax.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It certainly does.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The province of Quebec, in the exercise of its constitutional rights, chose to increase from 9 per cent to 10 per cent the provincial tax on corporation profits. It is an incident of the present bill, if it is enacted by parliament, that in the case of a prescribed province the principle of tax abatement provided in the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act throughout its life will apply in that circumstance to a 10 per cent rate rather than the 9 per cent rate.

What could be simpler than that? Nobody has told the province of Quebec that it must do anything. The province of Quebec does not accept dictation from anybody. I hope the hon. gentleman, who was a member of the last government, has learned that lesson sufficiently. I can assure him that this government will never be putting before parliament any legislative proposal, any suggestion or any course of action that involves, directly or indirectly, or by any stretch of the imagination, any attempt at dictation to any province.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Chevrier: I wish the Minister of Finance would clear up one point for me. He has said that the premier of Quebec did not see the bill. Is that a fact? The Solicitor General says he has.

Mr. Balcer: No, no. On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I never said at any time that the premier of Quebec had seen the bill or approved it. I would like the hon. member for Laurier to withdraw his remark.

Mr. Chevrier: I will not withdraw.

Mr. Johnson: Withdraw or prove it.

Mr. Chevrier: Just a moment. I am going to put on the record the words of the Solicitor General.

Mr. Balcer: Please do.

Mr. Chevrier: What I have said is that the Minister of Finance stated that the premier of Quebec did not see the bill, but that the Solicitor General—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. gentleman would be good enough to give my statement in full. I was speaking as of the time of our meeting, and the question that was put to me was whether at that meeting the premier of Quebec saw the bill. I pointed out that the bill was not fully drafted at that time. I do not know what the premier has seen since. He does not consult me about his reading habits.

Mr. Chevrier: No, but my hon. friend raised his point of order when I was attempting to explain the statement I had made earlier. I was interrupted by the Solicitor General, who objected to what I had said. I now propose to again put on Hansard the exact words of the Solicitor General. I think I understood the Minister of Finance aright when he said that at his earlier meeting, before the bill was drafted, the premier of Quebec had not seen it. Is that not correct?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, I said before the bill was fully drafted. I was asked if I had shown the premier the bill at that time, at our meeting in February. I said no, that the bill was not fully drafted. We discussed the legislative intentions of the government in reference to this project.

Mr. Chevrier: The Solicitor General has not taken that position but the very opposite one. I do not want to be unfair to him in any way whatsoever. I want to put on Hansard what he said, because there can be no other inference from these words but that the premier of Quebec had approved the bill; and at two places on page 3286 of Hansard of April 26, 1960 does that appear, wherein the Solicitor General said:

(Translation):

It was the Hon. Paul Sauvé who submitted that positive proposition—

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

(Text):

That can mean nothing other than the one mentioned in the correspondence between the premiers and afterwards included in this bill. I continue:

(Translation):

It was the Hon. Paul Sauvé who submitted that positive proposition.

(Text):

We all know that. I continue:

(Translation):

Federal ministers discussed it with Mr. Sauvé and, at the time of his tragic death, only a few details remained to be worked out, which was done during a private interview between Mr. Antonio Barrette, Mr. Sauvé's successor, and the Minister of Finance, sponsor of the bill which is now before us.

(Text):

Is there anything clearer than that? Is that not indicative of the fact that the premier of Quebec approved of the bill? Not satisfied with that, the Solicitor General goes a step further and states:

(Translation):

We have kept our word admirably, because Premier Barrette himself believes that this bill is consistent with the terms of Mr. Duplessis' proposal, which was submitted again by Mr. Sauvé and later by Mr. Barrette himself.

(Text):

I do not understand the French language or the English language—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: —because the translation indicates the same meaning—unless that is the meaning to be derived therefrom. In my opinion there is no doubt but that the Solicitor General has indicated by that statement that Mr. Barrette approved of the bill.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, for the last two or three days the hon. member for Laurier has come across with about fifteen different interpretations of the same sentence I uttered on April 26. Every time I have had to ask the hon. gentleman to come back to the text; but after coming back to the text, the moment he has finished reading the sentence he has always concluded with some extraordinary statement which does not conform with what I have said.

I never said in this statement that when Mr. Barrette met the Minister of Finance he had seen the bill, or that the minister had shown him the bill and Mr. Barrette had said it was a good one and gave it his approval. I do not know at all whether Mr. Barrette has seen the bill. Perhaps I should say I did not know at that time, but I know now that the Minister of Finance states that the premier had not seen the bill. I am taking the word of the Minister of Finance. I would like the hon. member for Laurier to stop placing on my words interpretations that do not conform with the truth.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the Solicitor General answer one or two questions in connection with the statement he has made; because as I read it he said:

(Translation):

We have kept our word admirably, because Premier Barrette himself believes that this bill is consistent with the terms of Mr. Duplessis' proposal, which was submitted again by Mr. Sauvé, and later by Mr. Barrette himself.

Was Mr. Duplessis' proposal to the effect that the province of Quebec would be bound by the agreement?

Mr. Balcer: Not at all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chevrier: Bound by the agreement contained in the bill? Was that Mr. Duplessis' proposal?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I repeat, there has been no agreement between the province of Quebec and the federal government. No agreement was necessary. The province of Quebec adopted its own bill, and then we proposed ours. We said this yesterday, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) repeated it.

I appreciate that the hon. member would perhaps prefer that there would be one, but those are the facts. We are demanding nothing from the province of Quebec. The province has already adopted its own bill, whereas ours has not been adopted yet.

Mr. Chevrier: Do you want to answer?

The Chairman: Order.

An hon. Member: He cannot explain the situation; he does not understand anything.

Another hon. Member: He does not want to understand.

The Chairman: After listening to the remarks of hon. members, I must say that all along the discussion has dealt with section 2, which is not relevant to section 1 of the bill, any more than it is to the general debate that can be allowed on section 1.

Furthermore, I would remind some members that standing orders do not allow continuous repetition of the same arguments. I would ask the hon. members to stick to a discussion that is relevant to section 1.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that members are not allowed to keep coming back to the same question but, on the other hand, are some Conservative members of the province of Quebec—not all of them, fortunately—allowed to act in the unseemly way they are now doing, in this house?

The Chairman: I do not know just what the hon. member for Lapointe has in mind. If he has some definite situation to point to, I will give my ruling in the matter. For the moment, I would ask committee members to confine their discussion to consideration of section 1 of the bill.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, may I point out that the hon. member for Lapointe has, perhaps unwittingly, described the Liberal members.

An hon. Member: Clever, as always.

(Text):

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, we are discussing clause 1 of the bill, which allows some latitude, and we are trying to stay within that latitude. I understood the Minister of Finance to say that this bill cannot and does not impose on the province of Quebec the necessity of increasing its taxation. That may be very clear, but is it not a fact that unless there is an increase—

The Chairman: Order. The comment of the hon. member has no reference to clause 1 but has direct relevance to clause 2. I will not permit any discussion along those lines until we have disposed of clause 1.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, on clause 1, on which Your Honour permitted the Minister of Finance to read all the correspondence and on which therefore, I presume, hon. members of the opposition are equally free to discuss what is in the correspondence, I should like to put one or two questions to the minister and I will put them all together before he answers.

The Minister of Finance and the Solicitor General have both told us in the last few minutes that there was no agreement of any kind with the province of Quebec—

The Chairman: Order. I have already indicated that I thought the discussion up to now had not been relevant to clause 1. My view is that we should conclude this discussion and complete consideration of this clause before we take up that matter. I say to the hon. member that he will be able to take this up on clause 2.

Mr. Pickersgill: With respect last evening the Minister of Finance read the whole of this correspondence into the record. Surely the opposition is not to be denied the right to refer to this correspondence. My point is not related directly to clause 2 but to clauses 1 and 2 taken together, the whole scheme of an alternative, and I submit that this is a very serious abridgement—

The Chairman: I am not denying the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate the opportunity to discuss the correspondence when we come to clause 2, but my decision is that it is not relevant to clause 1. When we come to clause 2 I will recognize the hon. member and give him the right to discuss the point he has just raised.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Definitions.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the unanimous vote recorded after the debate on the principle of the bill has indicated that every member of this house supports the principle of federal grants to universities.

Mr. Johnson: That is not true.

Mr. Chevrier: The house is also unanimous in the matter of the distribution of federal grants by the Canadian universities foundation to universities outside the province of Quebec. While the Quebec Conservative members consider this St. Laurent formula unconstitutional, they support its application in every province except Quebec.

There is no longer any unanimity on the subject, however, when we come to the second method of distributing federal grants—which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has just described as offering an alternative—found in clause 2 of this bill. We, in the Liberal party have repeatedly stated in the course of this debate that we are firmly opposed to this new arrangement, for a number of reasons.

We said we opposed it because we think there are serious constitutional objections.

Indeed, if Mr. St. Laurent's formula has not been accepted by the province of Quebec, it is our contention that the new arrangement put forward by the federal government is even less acceptable.

We regard this new arrangement as a dangerous precedent, and a step in the wrong direction. That was our position on the second reading of the bill, and we have somewhat anticipated it at the resolution stage. We are now convinced that section 2, now under study, is a threat with respect to Canada's constitution.

However, we are not just going to oppose this new arrangement; we also want to be realistic and to suggest a solution to an alternative which we think is unacceptable, and to a difficulty we consider very serious and which, I dare say, raises a very touchy problem.

In a speech I made in this house on July 18 last, I suggested that federal grants be distributed to the universities in a province through a provincial board or council of universities, set up for such a purpose by the provincial legislature. In fact, others had made the same suggestion previously, and I am sure it would be well received by Quebec universities.

In a brief submitted to the Tremblay commission on March 4, 1954, Laval University, after suggesting the setting up of a provincial board of universities and of a provincial universities fund, made this statement, which I find on page 83:

> We might even add that, when an agreement is finally entered into between the provincial and the federal governments with regard to the sharing of taxation fields, it may be possible for the provincial government to accept federal grants to universities. Because of the provincial character of this commission, it seems that those grants would not constitute an unwarranted interference of the federal government in the field of education.

Besides, I wish particularly to point out to the Conservative members of the province of Quebec who took part in this debate, the part of the brief indicating the wisdom of Mr. St. Laurent's formula and, according to me, the wisdom of the amendment that I intend to introduce.

But I shall go further and say that the association of Laval University professors, in submitting its brief to the Tremblay commission, took exactly the same stand and asked that federal grants be paid into a provincial university fund.

As far as the University of Montreal is concerned, if its recommendation was not precisely along those lines, the considerations it submitted to the Tremblay commission with regard to federal grants clearly indicate that the university would have strongly objected to the new arrangement now suggested by the government.

There is no doubt that the distribution of federal grants by a provincial university council exactly meets the wishes expressed by the universities and the people of Quebec connected with them.

Such a formula has various advantages especially when compared to the new arrangement established under that clause. Later on we will have the opportunity to point out those advantages when we discuss the amendment we propose to submit.

Those advantages eliminate the difficulties pointed out in the letter of the Prime Minister of Canada to the premier of Quebec, and the objections raised in several quarters in the province of Quebec as a result of the statement of the Prime Minister, when parts of those letters were published.

First of all, the amendment offers a very great advantage in that unlike the new bill, the new arrangement, the new alternative suggested by the government, it does not raise any objection of constitutional nature.

As a matter of fact, with that formula, the federal government would in no way interfere in relations between the provincial government and the universities. In other words, the provincial government would remain completely free, as it should be, to deal as it chooses with the universities of its own province, something which it would not be able to do under the circumstances, particularly under clause 2 of this bill.

Moreover, if the formula we are suggesting were accepted, the federal government would not have to claim part of the provincial tax raised for provincial purposes.

And what is more important—and I wish to emphasize this particularly—if the amendment I am about to introduce were accepted, the federal government would no longer have to define the words against which so many objections were raised by Conservative members from Quebec, i.e.: "university", "university level", "university degree" and "student", federal definitions which our hon. friends opposite not only objected to but described as interference in the educational structure of a province.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, with federal grants being distributed by a provincial council, the administration of Quebec universities would be completely protected against all interference from the federal government. Indeed such a formula would have the advantage of guaranteeing greater independence to the universities of the province of Quebec, and diversifying their sources of revenue.

In short, the amendment I am about to introduce would do away with paragraph (b) of section 1 and with section 3, which would be replaced by the solution I have just outlined, that is, the payment of federal grants to a provincial council of universities.

The amendment is quite simple. I believe it would have the approval of the universities, would wipe out the objection that we, on this side, have raised against the bill and, in addition, would make it more acceptable to all.

(Text):

I therefore move the following amendment to clause 2:

That all the words presently appearing in section 9A(1)(b) of clause 2 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(b) Provincial universities council means a corporate body established by act of the legislature of a province to receive and distribute the grants hereinafter referred to, and composed of representatives of the institutions of higher learning in that province."

That all the words presently appearing in section 9A(3) be deleted and the following words substituted therefor:

"The minister, with the approval of the governor in council, may on behalf of the government of Canada, pay to a university council established in any province for any fiscal year commencing on or after the first day of April, 1960, for the purpose of making grants to institutions of higher learning in that province an amount calculated by multiplying the population of the province for the calendar year ending in that fiscal year by one dollar and fifty cents."

The Chairman: Before I put the motion, are there any hon. members who wish to speak to the validity or disability of the amendment?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Chairman. I should like to submit to you that this amendment is not in order and it is not in order for various reasons.

Having regard to what was the approved principle of the bill, I do not think this amendment is acceptable because it will introduce into the bill an entirely new principle. The house by unanimous vote on second reading approved the principle of the bill, the principle being that there should be such an amendment of the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act as would provide by way of tax abatement to federal taxpayers in a prescribed province an additional abatement in certain cases where the province in which they reside makes certain provisions within its own constitutional authority in respect of universities in the province.

This amendment introduces an entirely new principle. This is the kind of amendment that can only be introduced by way of amendment on second reading of a bill. What should have been introduced at that time—if hon. members opposite wished to introduce an amendment that would be in order—would have been an amendment to set up a contrary principle, a well recognized procedure on motions for second reading; but they did not choose to do that. There was no amendment introduced on second reading. This would introduce an entirely new principle. The principle of this amendment, as I apprehend it, is that the Minister of Finance would be called upon to make payments to some organization in the province which has never been mentioned in this statute thus far.

That, Mr. Chairman, is an entirely new principle. It would be read as not according with the principle that the house approved on second reading and, therefore, I contend that on that ground this amendment is out of order.

Mr. Chevrier: It is contained in clause 2 of the bill.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is not the only ground, Mr. Chairman. Let us look a little further. This amendment would propose a number of changes in clause 2 of the bill. It would strike out all the words appearing in section 9A (1)(b). That is to say, it would leave in clause 2, section 9A (1)(a) which defines "foundation". It would strike out clause (b) which contains all the provisions of the bill respecting a prescribed province, both the means of determining what is a prescribed province and the provision made for tax abatement in the case of a prescribed province.

There is substitution of the definition of a council that has never been mentioned in this legislation before. This is to take us completely outside the sphere of the present legislation into another realm entirely.

Then the amendment would leave in clause 2, subsection (2), being payments to the Canadian universities foundation in the case of a non-prescribed province. Then it would make a change in clause 9A (3). That clause at the present time is the one which provides that in the case of a prescribed province the minister may recover on or after the first day of April, 1960 any excess over the sum of $1.50 per capita, and similarly may pay where there is a deficiency. These are provisions that relate to a prescribed province.

That provision would be left in the bill, but the previous section, subsection 9A (1)(b), which contains now a provision with respect to a prescribed province, would be left in the bill. There would then be a contradiction in the bill.

But let us look even further. A new provision is proposed in the substituted clause 9A (3). This provides that the minister may, with the approval of the governor in council, pay to a university council established in any province for any fiscal year commencing after April 1, 1960, for the purpose of making grants to institutions of higher learning in that province, an amount calculated by multiplying the population of the province for the calendar year ending in that fiscal year by $1.50.

In this respect this then is an amendment that proposes to qualify the Minister of Finance to make payments to a body that, in respect of the provinces, would have to be determined. It may not even exist in many of the provinces. We do not know whether there is such a body in any province. I take it that the hon. member thought that there was such a council in one province but there is no such body specifically named. Reference is simply made to a council that might conform to certain requirements but this is not a named council in any province.

Here is a provision that would purport to authorize the Minister of Finance to make payments out of the public treasury equivalent to $1.50 per capita of population to an unnamed organization or body in any province. This is nebulous. It is out of order on that count.

It is also out of order as a motion coming from a private member of the house purporting to authorize a minister of the crown to make payments out of the public treasury. It does not lie within the competence of a private member of the house to introduce such an amendment. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, on at least five, if not six, grounds I submit to you that this amendment is clearly out of order.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I have listened closely to the remarks of the Minister of Finance and I am inclined to believe he did not examine citation 408 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads as follows:

(Text):

> The committee can so change the provisions of the bill that when it is reported to the house it is in substance a bill other than that which was referred. A committee can negative every clause and substitute new clauses, if relevant to the bill as read a second time.

(Translation):

As you see at the committee stage, authorities on parliamentary procedure have allowed great latitude as regards the introduction of amendments.

The minister referred to changes that could be made. There could be some doubt if the amendment involved changes in government revenue or expenditures. But the matter of the $1.50 per capita has remained exactly the same. Nothing is changed there. Therefore, all the objections raised by the Minister of Finance seem automatically inapplicable with reference to an amendment submitted in committee.

I realize that citations 390 to 402 deal especially with amendments introduced before second reading of a bill; but we are now at the committee stage and I am convinced that this simple sentence—

(Text):

> A committee can negative every clause and substitute new clauses, if relevant to the bill as read a second time.

(Translation):

—applies to the present case. The rest of this citation seems to show that, if the government accepts extensive alterations it may withdraw its bill and introduce a new one. However, such is not the case here. This time, the proposal emanates from the opposition, in accordance with citation 408, and I believe this citation is sufficient to clarify the situation and allow the chairman of the committee to accept the amendment.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, there is very little I can add to what the hon. member for Hull has just said, but there are a couple of points that perhaps could reinforce it a little. On the last point made by the minister, namely that this amendment was seeking to direct the government or the minister to make an expenditure, that of course is quite incorrect. The amount of money involved in this measure is not changed in any respect whatsoever. All that would be changed, and only if it were wished by the province, would be the destination of the money in certain provinces. We do not know whether there is going to be any prescribed province at this time because that is outside the knowledge of this committee, but under the present bill the minister can, if there should be no prescribed provinces, make payments of $1.50 a head to the Canadian universities foundation for the whole of Canada.

So far as ways and means are concerned, all my hon. friend is doing in his amendment is suggesting that in any province where a provincial council is set up the minister instead may—not must but may—pay that sum of money to the provincial council rather than to the national council. That is absolutely all there is so far as the financial side of the amendment is concerned.

As for the minister's suggestion not that the amendment was nebulous—he did not say that—but that the provincial council was nebulous—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, I said the amendment was nebulous too.

Mr. Pickersgill: On that ground, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the amendment speaks for itself. There are those who can only see clouds of their own making, and that is what "nebulous" means, I remind the minister, but to any plain person reading plain words there is nothing nebulous about it. It is not for the Chair to decide, I submit, whether or not there are provincial university councils in existence or whether they may be set up in the future. That is for the committee to decide. That is not a point of order.

If an amendment is offered to the house suggesting that the money may be paid to some organism that may be set up in the future, that is perfectly within the rights of parliament and it is for the members elected by the people, not for the Chair or the Minister of Finance, to decide whether such legislation should be enacted. I am sure you will agree with that view, Mr. Chairman.

With reference to the only substantial point made by the Minister of Finance, that the amendment introduces some new principle, may I say that there are two principles in the bill before us now. There is the principle with respect to equalization payments which is not in question in this amendment. There is also another principle that university grants may be paid to the Canadian universities foundation. The principle is that university grants may be paid to a foundation. All my hon. friend is suggesting is that they may be paid to one foundation or another foundation. He is not suggesting any new principle whatsoever. He is suggesting that the principle which has been followed before the introduction of this bill should be followed still but that instead of there being only one possible foundation as the recipient there should be two. That is a matter of detail, not of principle, and therefore it seems to me that the minister's objection completely falls to the ground.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, when we talk about principle, as the hon. member who has just taken his seat did, I think every member of the house agrees with the principle of the bill and supports and has supported in the past the granting of aid to universities. We are all agreed on that.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Crestohl: Is there someone who says that grants should not be given to the universities?

Mr. Pickersgill: Why did he vote for the bill then?

Mr. Johnson: That is not the principle of the bill.

Mr. Crestohl: If there is an hon. member who does not agree that grants should be made to the universities, then my statement is not correct.

The Chairman: Order; I should like to hear the hon. member as to the validity of the amendment.

Mr. Crestohl: I am speaking to the amendment. I said that we are all agreed with that; we voted for that principle. What we are now debating is the method of implementing the principle.

When we come to the method, one is suggested in the bill and the amendment suggests what we think is an improvement to that method. The minister raises a question and says that in order to implement the principle he suggests a payment should be made through a foundation, and he creates the foundation. He creates the instrument and defines it in his bill. The amendment says that the principle could be implemented through another instrument which, in our opinion, would make the method more constitutional. If the minister would take the position that the instrument of a provincial council is unconstitutional, I would go along with the minister. If the minister will accept the principle that the implementation of these grants can be made through a provincial council, that is basic. It is not flippant, and it is not a technical objection.

When we discuss these measures from a lofty level I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that simply substituting a provincial council for a Canadian universities foundation is not a serious change in the bill and is a change which could properly be made by amendment. I respectfully submit that we should address ourselves to the fact of whether or not this method of implementing the intentions of the whole project is an acceptable one. If it is not an acceptable one, then it should be rejected. If it is an acceptable one it should be accepted, even by the minister. I feel that if he had time to consult with the province of Quebec and the university authorities in Quebec he would find they would prefer the amended way of implementing this bill.

An hon. Member: You are arguing the merits.

Mr. Crestohl: I am just supposing that it were possible to do this. However, I think the amendment as made has merit, and does not change the principle at all but simply offers another vehicle for implementing the principle that the house adopted.

The Chairman: Before I give a definite decision on this amendment, may I draw the attention of the committee to the possibility that there might be an additional charge on the public treasury by the amendment proposed if we envisaged it in the following light. In section 9A, as it is in the bill, if I am not mistaken paragraph (1) (a) and b) (i) and (ii) would be deleted and replaced by b) of the proposed amendment.

The proposed amendment would leave as is paragraph 2 which provides that the minister, with the approval of the governor in council, may, on behalf of the government of Canada, enter into an agreement with the foundation already defined in paragraph (a). According to this paragraph, what can be done now is to give the foundation a grant equal to the calculation of the population of the province multiplied by $1.50. There is a reference, of course, to a prescribed province in subsection (2) of section 9A.

The amendment to section 3 which has been proposed, says in part:

> The minister, with the approval of the governor in council, may on behalf of the government of Canada, pay to a university council established in any province for any fiscal year commencing on or after the first day of April, 1960, for the purpose of making grants to institutions of higher learning in that province an amount calculated by multiplying the population of the province for the calendar year ending in that fiscal year by one dollar and fifty cents.

This amendment, therefore, under this new paragraph (3) would enable the Minister of Finance to pay in any of the provinces of Canada in which there existed a university council an amount based on $1.50 per head and that would be above the amount which is already provided in section 2 of the act which remains as is. It seems to me, therefore, that at first sight, without considering the other problems that may be involved, this would clearly dispose of the amendment. However, before I say anything further, if any hon. member wishes to comment on that point I would be glad to hear him.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, it is conceivable that such an interpretation might be put upon the amendment. However, it does seem to me it is quite clear that the amendment, the new paragraph 3, suggested by the hon. member for Laurier is clearly intended as an alternative method and that as such it would exclude a payment in respect of the institutions of the province to the Canadian universities foundation. Certainly that was the clear intent of the amendment. It may be that the wording is not quite as precise as it should be to exclude any other possibility, but it does seem to me that in committee, in my experience with a case of this kind, if there was simply a point of drafting involved which had nothing whatever to do with the substance of the amendment it has always been recognized, particularly since members of the opposition do not have the same opportunities as members of the government have in drafting, that corrections of that kind can be made if they are required without in any way invalidating the point.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, if I may say a word, I would say that the point you have raised is well taken and the plea of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate for mercy on this amendment is not well taken. Those who introduce amendments in committee are responsible for justifying that they are in accordance with the rules of the house, and should not say that if they were corrected in some other way they might then become conformable to the rules of the house.

I pointed out when I was making my earlier statement that the amendment does not purport to strike out paragraph (2) of clause 2, and that clause 2 of the present bill authorizes a payment by the minister in the case of all provinces, except a prescribed province, of sums equivalent to $1.50 per capita of population per annum. Now we were informed by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that there was going to be only one prescribed province and, therefore, if he is right for once, there will be nine provinces that are not prescribed provinces. Then, clause 2, as it stands, will authorize the minister to make a payment of $1.50 per capita of population to the Canadian universities foundation for nine provinces and this amendment will come along and put a new clause 3 in which will authorize the minister to make a payment of $1.50 per capita of population to any provincial university council, as they have defined it, in any province.

Therefore, wherever there can be found a provincial universities council, even up to ten of them, the minister will be authorized by this amendment to make payment to that province equivalent to $1.50 per capita of population in that province per annum. We could finish up, it is quite clear now, with a charge on the treasury which will be almost double that provided for by the present bill. The hon. member attempts seriously to argue before you, Mr. Chairman, that such an amendment could be in order. It will be making new jurisprudence in this House of Commons surely if any such proposition is seriously entertained. The hon. member is a private member. He is introducing what can now be a charge on the treasury of this country amounting to something like $26 million a year. That is what he is proposing. I do not need to refer to the British North America Act in order to point out how clearly that procedure lies beyond the power of any private member in the House of Commons speaking without the assistance of a royal recommendation.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, a moment ago, I quoted citation 408, which in my view is quite clear. Now, perhaps I might be allowed to make a suggestion. We are now discussing a point of order; the discussion cannot be allowed to go much beyond this. If the Minister of Finance accepts that the amendment be moved, then we can discuss it thoroughly, and find out the views of hon. members to the right and to the left. If the government does not want to accept it, it can call for a vote, and thus reject it in due course. Just now, however, we are simply discussing a point of order, and whatever ruling is made by the chairman of the committee, no one will be satisfied.

An hon. Member: What standing order says so?

Mr. Caron: Citation 408 is clear, as I see it. But the minister has other views. So that we may clear up the essential point, namely whether or not the amendment is in order, let us discuss it thoroughly. It could still be rejected at any time by a vote, this procedure being always permissible when a bill is being considered in committee, for instance prior to second and third reading.

An hon. Member: What if the whole discussion is out of order?

(Text):

Mr. Chevrier: May I be permitted to say a word in connection with the amendment that was proposed? When the Minister of Finance rises on a point of order and speaks coolly and calmly I am always impressed, but when he makes noises, as he has done in this case, I begin to wonder about the validity of his point. In any event, Mr. Chairman, it was you who raised the point and not the Minister of Finance. The point you have raised is whether or not there may be additional expenditure because of this amendment. My submission to you is that the bill is divided into two parts, namely the extension of equalization payments and the university grants. Then again the university grants are divided into two parts, namely the grants that are paid via the Canadian universities foundation and those within the terms of section 2.

My answer to the point raised is this. The minister has already entered into an agreement dated January 18, 1960 for a period of two years with the Canadian universities foundation and the national conference of Canadian universities. Therefore in so far as those parties are concerned, there can be no additional payment. That is why I submit that the alternative we have put forward, it seems to me, could apply only to those not taking part in the agreement dated January 18, 1960. If that is the case there can be, I submit with deference to you, Mr. Chairman, no additional expenditure. All that this amendment does is to provide for the establishment of a provincial council by a legislature of a province, maintaining all the other features of the bill save those contained in paragraph (b)(i) and (ii). It would strike me that the points made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and the hon. member for Hull were well founded in that this amendment deals with an alternative and does not deal with the Canadian universities foundation agreement which has already been signed betweeen the minister and the two groups therein mentioned. I would therefore suggest with deference that the amendment is in order.

The Chairman: I wish to state that although I understand the appeal of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and the hon. member for Hull I consider it the duty of the chairman to rule on the validity of any amendment which is submitted to the committee. However interesting may be the discussion as to the merit of the proposition in itself, I think it is the duty of the Chair to rule out of order any amendment which it considers to be out of order.

I have not heard any satisfactory explanation of or rebuttal to the objection I have raised. I think it is clear that if the amendment would result in an additional expenditure the initiative cannot come from other than a minister of the crown. As the situation stands, I am convinced that the amendment would permit payment to the universities foundation of an amount equal to the population of Canada multiplied by $1.50 and if there were in any province a university council the same amount could in addition be given and divided between all the university councils on the same basis. For this reason alone I think the amendment is out of order. However, I think I should add immediately, for the guidance of hon. members, that to me the amendment goes beyond the scope of the bill. The principle of the bill that has been adopted as indicated by the resolution is as follows:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act to provide certain alternative arrangements for payment, either by Canada through the Canadian universities foundation—

We know what it is.

—or directly by a province,—

That is the principle of the bill which has been approved. What the alternative of the amendment suggests is payment by Canada to a provincial university council, something which is not provided for in the principle of the bill as embodied in the resolution and as adopted. I think the bill is in conformity with the resolution as agreed to and as approved by the house on second reading. For those two reasons I am therefore obliged to rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. Chevrier: I must respectfully appeal your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

In committee of the whole when Bill No. C-56, an act to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act, was being considered, Mr. Chevrier moved an amendment as follows:

That all the words presently appearing in section 9A(1)(b) of clause 2 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(b) Provincial universities council means a corporate body established by act of the legislature of a province to receive and distribute the grants hereinafter referred to, and composed of representatives of the institutions of higher learning in that province."

That all the words presently appearing in section 9A(3) be deleted and the following words substituted therefor:

"The minister, with the approval of the governor in council, may on behalf of the government of Canada, pay to a university council established in any province for any fiscal year commencing on or after the first day of April, 1960, for the purpose of making grants to institutions of higher learning in that province an amount calculated by multiplying the population of the province for the calendar year ending in that fiscal year by one dollar and fifty cents."

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

The question is an appeal to the house from a ruling of the Chair as follows: In committee of the whole on Bill No C-56, an act to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act, Mr. Chevrier moved an amendment as follows:

"That all the words presently appearing in section 9A(1)(b) of clause 2 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

(b) Provincial universities council means a corporate body established by act of the legislature of a province to receive and distribute the grants hereinafter referred to, and composed of representatives of the institutions of higher learning in that province.

That all the words presently appearing in section 9A(3) be deleted and the following words substituted therefor:

The minister, with the approval of the governor in council, may on behalf of the government of Canada, pay to a university council established in any province for any fiscal year commencing on or after the first day of April, 1960, for the purpose of making grants to institutions of higher learning in that province an amount calculated by multiplying the population of the province for the calendar year ending in that fiscal year by one dollar and fifty cents."

The chairman ruled the amendment out of order on the ground that it proposed an additional charge over that authorized by the terms of the resolution preceding the bill and, moreover, it was irrelevant as going beyond the scope of the bill as approved on second reading thereof. Whereupon, Mr. Chevrier appealed to the house from the ruling of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

And the house having resumed in committee:

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance has stated most emphatically at least twice in the house, namely on September 6, 1958 and again on March 18, 1960, that the federal government is not intervening in the provincial field when it makes university grants. Having this in mind, I was very surprised, to say the least, at certain terms and aspects of clause 2 of Bill No. C-56 as introduced by the Minister of Finance. I refer specifically to the word "satisfactory" in line 16 on page 2 and to the words "in the opinion of the minister" in line 17 on page 2.

If we read these words carefully in the context of clause 2 we find here a prima facie case of clear infringement and encroachment on the economy of the province. During the debate on second reading we on this side of the house repeatedly brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of Finance and outlined the constitutional dangers of these terms as far as the autonomy of the province is concerned. Moreover, if we refer to the speeches delivered by our friends opposite it is evident that most of them share our views with respect to this particular matter. As found on page 3309 of Hansard of April 26, the hon. member for Bellechasse had this to say:

(Translation):

While the Minister of Finance has the right to satisfy himself that the arrangements reached between the provinces and their universities are truly consistent with the requirements of the act—

I say that in recognizing this right, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion) accepts unwarranted interferences, on the part of the Minister of Finance, in a field which is outside his jurisdiction.

According to page 3549 of Hansard, the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) suggested that the minister amend section 2, and then went on to say:

> Nevertheless it is distasteful that the federal minister should act as arbitrator and be the only one to have a say on the value of the said agreements.

(Text):

Therefore it appears crystal clear, Mr. Chairman, that in leaving these words in clause 2 the minister will be the only judge in determining whether or not the arrangements made by the provincial government with the universities within the province are satisfactory, and it is also clear that clause 2 contradicts the statements made by the Minister of Finance referred to by me at the beginning of my remarks. In other words, according to these terms in clause 2 this whole scheme cannot operate unless the minister is of the opinion that the arrangements between the province and the universities in this province are satisfactory, and if the Minister of Finance finds in his opinion that these arrangements are not satisfactory then as a consequence the deduction for the equalization payments cannot take place. Therefore the operation of this scheme is centralized on the will and discretion of one person, the Minister of Finance. I feel that this is not only most extraordinary but also contrary to the autonomy of the provinces and one of the most dangerous pieces of legislation ever brought before this house.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I move:

> That clause 2 be amended as follows:
> That the word "satisfactory" in line 16, page 2, and the words "in the opinion of the minister" in line 17 of page 2 be struck out.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member has supported a quite unacceptable amendment with some very strange and far fetched arguments. One would think to listen to him that he had been violently opposed to the essence of this bill. The remarks that have just now been made in this committee were made by an hon. member who did support this bill on second reading; yet he is now mouthing the same kind of contradictory statements as were made by the hon. member for Laurier when he opened the debate on this matter.

Mr. Chevrier: Do not be so rambunctious.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will speak my mind on this matter and I will not be asking the permission of the hon. member for Laurier to do so.

Mr. Chevrier: You are going out of your mind.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We have heard from him the same kind of contradictory remarks in this debate. I do not wonder he is feeling most uncomfortable this afternoon; he certainly looks it.

Mr. Chevrier: You have been raising points of order all the time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You see, Mr. Chairman, he is feeling very aggrieved, apparently, that he introduced an amendment this afternoon which was ruled out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He says that I have been raising points of order all the time. I am glad I raised one successfully on that occasion.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order. A vote was taken in committee and the matter was disposed of, so it should not be raised again.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Therefore, the hon. member for Laurier has no business saying that I do raise points of order. I certainly did raise a point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: On the point of order; I do want to tell the Minister of Finance that he has been very objectionable during the course of this whole debate, not only by his interruptions in debate but also by the points he has raised and his attempts to prohibit us from putting on Hansard our views in connection with this piece of legislation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No member of this house who has any claim to knowing anything about the rules of the house or to follow those rules faithfully could make the statement that has just now been made by the hon. member for Laurier. I have no apology to make to him for raising the point of order that has had the effect of this last point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: You should apologize for your language, though.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I see the hon. member for Laurier is losing his temper again and setting himself up as the censor of the proceedings of this house. I do not intend to submit to censorship on his part. I realize it is very difficult for him at the same time, feeling aggrieved as he does at the moment over what has just happened, to sit still and keep quiet. I do not propose to be turned aside from what I intend to say.

Mr. Chevrier: Why don't you deal with the subject?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You see, he cannot keep quiet.

Mr. Chevrier: Why don't you deal with the subject?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There it is again; he cannot keep quiet.

Mr. Robichaud: Get a flag.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is another hon. member who cannot keep quiet. The rules of the house mean nothing to them. They speak from their seats.

Mr. Caron: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the minister has no right to say that the rules of the house have no meaning for members on this side. This leaves the impression we are not acting in accordance with the rules, and he should be the last one to say that when we remember 1956 at which time he had to be thrown out of this house.

The Chairman: Order; I would say that some remarks made on the point of order or otherwise have not been relevant. I would ask the minister to go back to the subject matter of the amendment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Sometime, Mr. Chairman, the last member who interrupted on that bogus point of order will be in a position where he will understand the rules of the house but he does not now.

Mr. Caron: I could teach them to you.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will not go to that source for instruction, believe me.

As I was about to say before hon. members opposite began their raucous interruptions, I was pointing out that the remarks just now made by the hon. member who introduced this amendment, like those made earlier by the hon. member for Laurier, were completely out of accord with the votes they cast on the main motion for second reading. What they are saying now is that this bill proposes something unconstitutional. If it does, if there is anything unconstitutional, that unconstitutionality is in the essence of this bill, and the hon. member has chosen to support, in its essence, the unconstitutionality according to his strange definition of it.

Why is it that this measure finds it necessary to say that certain conditions must exist before there shall be an increase in the federal abatement in respect of federal taxes in prescribed provinces? If it were not for that, there would be no way at all of giving effective definition of a prescribed province or assuring that this measure is an alternative to the present system. Otherwise it could be just a handout by the federal treasury to the taxpayers of a province and would, in that way, create discrimination and upset the whole principle of equality of treatment of federal taxpayers in all parts of Canada.

One would think there was something extraordinary about the language employed here. I wish hon. members would read their own legislation, the legislation introduced by the government of which some of them were members at one time and see where this Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act imposes upon the minister, who under this act is the Minister of Finance, the responsibility for making certain decisions. Hon. members opposite have completely overlooked this. I am going to take a moment, not simply to jog their memories, Mr. Chairman, but I am afraid it will be to jar their complacency in this respect.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Look at the act and you will see—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the hon. gentleman proceeds, is it understood that if the whole act is opened up by the minister it will also be open to every other hon. member to discuss the whole act? I am not seeking to stop the minister, but I want equality.

The Chairman: It is obvious that the rule of strict relevancy applies here. The only point that can be discussed is the terms of the amendment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Chairman; the point, however, is this, that when we are accused, in relation to a particular phrase in the amending bill, of employing language that is unconstitutional in its effect I am entitled to refer to the main act or any other legislation of this parliament as a precedent for using precisely the same language which has a similar effect. That is all I was going to do. I was not going to read the whole act. I was going to point out where the responsibilities are imposed by this act which was introduced by the former government, this act of which hon. members opposite profess to be so proud when they boast about the St. Laurent formula—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —an act which imposes upon the Minister of Finance the duty of making many decisions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): One would expect, Mr. Chairman, that a minister of the crown would at least give some example in the way in which he approaches proceedings in this House of Commons. The hon. member now has been faced with a point of order which was addressed to Your Honour. Your Honour has indicated his view in the ruling. The Minister of Finance has persisted in ignoring that ruling. I can only suggest to Your Honour that the minister ought to be asked to observe the rules. If insistence is not going to be made that he observe the rules, this ought to be fair warning that that privilege ought to be extended to members of this committee other than the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Lambert: That is your interpretation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The chairman has just given the ruling.

The Chairman: May I draw the attention of the hon. member for Essex East to the fact that I simply referred to the rule and quoted the rule that in committee strict relevancy must apply. In the present case the subject matter of the amendment is the only one that can be discussed. However, by my ruling I did not intimate that the minister, in discussing the purport of the amendment, could not refer to other examples in legislation. Up to now I do not think the minister has done more than that. It is obvious that if other hon. members speak along the same lines they will be permitted to do so.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will put this matter very briefly, Mr. Chairman, because hon. members opposite apparently have not read the act. Just let me run over these examples very briefly. In section 2 (1) (h) we find:

—the amount determined by the minister—

In section 2 (1) (f):

—the amount, as determined by the minister,—

In section 3, subsection 1:

—the minister may pay—

In section 4, subsection 1:

—the amount, if any, as determined by the minister,—

In section 5, subsection 2:

—the amount, as determined by the minister—

In section 5, subsection 4:

—the amount determind by the minister—

I come now to section 9:

—the amount, as determined by the minister,—

The hon. member is therefore quite wrong in suggesting that where a duty is imposed upon the minister to make certain calculations this is something new or something unconstitutional. If that is unconstitutional, then that whole main act introduced in 1956 is completely unconstitutional. There is hardly a provision in this act that is not unconstitutional if the hon. member has any validity at all in his argument.

I go further, Mr. Chairman. We are told this bill is unconstitutional because provision is made that certain arrangements are to be satisfactory in the opinion of the minister. The words "in the opinion of the minister" are said to introduce an unconstitutional feature.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Section 8 of the main act contains the very same phrase and this phrase was one introduced by the former government in the act that is praised by hon. members opposite. There you have a comparable situation, Mr. Chairman, because there it involves a determination by the minister as to whether taxes imposed in a certain province conform to certain standards created by the section. Let me read enough of the words to indicate that this language—the same language that he attacks—is used.

8. Where a province imposes taxes on the income of individuals or corporations or both at the rate provided by the Income Tax Act for computing the amount that may be deducted from individual income tax or corporation income tax on account of such provincial taxes, under a statute that in the opinion of the minister is substantially similar to the corresponding provisions in the Income Tax Act, the Minister, with the approval of the governor in council, may—

He may do certain things. You have precisely the same language in the main act. What we have done is to carry forward into this bill a provision in precisely the same terms as those used in the main act. The effect of the language here is the same as it is in section 8 of the main act. It imposes upon the minister a certain duty just as section 8 of the main act imposes on the minister a certain duty. There is no difference in the quality of those two provisions. Therefore, the hon. member is far afield. If this is all the ground he has for mounting an attack upon the constitutionality of this measure, he has nothing whatever of substance to advance and that situation is quite clear.

As I have pointed out already, no problem is raised here about the provisions of this clause. It is crystal clear that the legislation passed by the province of Quebec at the recent session and the provision thereby made completely conform with the terms contained here so as to make the province in that event clearly a prescribed province. But we do not undertake to tell the province of Quebec what to do. The effect is this, and this is the important point which has been completely ignored by the hon. member in his remarks.

What is effected here by the question whether any province is or is not a prescribed province within the terms of this bill is to determine whether there shall be an additional abatement as against the federal tax on corporations in favour of federal taxpayers in that province. This provision does not create a result that affects in that sense the province as a province. This is something that is of consequence for federal taxpayers in that province when they come to calculate their federal tax. We are therefore clearly acting within the scope of federal jurisdiction here. We make no trespass upon provincial jurisdiction. We have confined ourselves clearly to the exercise of federal jurisdiction and we have gone not one step further.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a few words about the points made by the Minister of Finance. All the sections he read from the main act which require the Minister of Finance to make certain decisions have relation either to disbursements out of the federal treasury or to financial arrangements made between the federal government and provincial governments on a voluntary basis. They have to do with the federal treasury which is our concern in this House of Commons. But what is being done here is for the minister to determine whether the action of a provincial government and a provincial legislature suits him and suits this government.

There is all the difference in the world between the minister's being clothed by this parliament with the power to pass judgment upon certain things that have to do with the federal treasury and giving the minister the power which he is seeking to get here to tell the province that their arrangements for providing assistance to their universities are or are not satisfactory. What this does is this. The minister says, "If I think you have the right kind of scheme to help your universities, then certain taxpayers in your province will not have to pay so much tax, but if I do not think so, they will have to pay more tax".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Rot.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister himself said that it determined their abatement on federal tax and that is quite right. It will determine whether the corporate taxpayers of Quebec pay 1 per cent more than do corporate taxpayers in other provinces and thereby put a disability upon the economy of that province. That will be determined. It is not even going to be determined by parliament. Parliament will turn over that determination not even to the governor in council but to a single minister who is going to decide whether or not these arrangements are satisfactory to him. If the words are left out, what do we have? We have this:

> In which, for that fiscal year arrangements exist for the payment by the province directly to institutions of higher learning—

Of a certain amount of money.

I quite grant that if the arrangements are not there for the payment of this certain sum of money it would not be fair to the taxpayers of other parts of Canada to give this abatement in order to enable a province to raise an extra 1 per cent from its corporate taxpayers for its general revenue, but the minister said this was an alternative to his scheme. However, as long as arrangements do exist for the payment to the universities of a sum equivalent to this abatement, what difference does it make to us in this parliament, and what right have we in this parliament to say what the character of these arrangements should be or to exercise a censorship over the character of the arrangements? That is precisely what we in our legislation and in our provision for university grants were seeking not to do. We were seeking to make sure that we did not exercise this kind of control, direction or censorship which the minister is now seeking to get parliament to arrogate to him so he can say whether or not the arrangement is satisfactory.

The minister then went on to say that we all know what the legislation is in the province of Quebec, we know they have already satisfied themselves on this point so it does not matter what we put into the law. But the minister himself says this law applies to all the provinces. How do we know that tomorrow one of the other provinces may not decide they want to become a prescribed province?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You said they would not.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister would surely be the first to admit that the fact that I said they would not is not a sufficient ground for generalizing the law nor is the fact that the minister said they would not. That is what shocked me in what the minister said. He said that because this is all right for Quebec the other nine provinces do not matter.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not say that at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is my interpretation of the plain sense of what the minister said, but what he said makes no sense at all.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is the hon. member's misinterpretation of what I said.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister thinks that the other provinces are not going to do anything about it—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said that, I did not.

Mr. Pickersgill: —but we believe that having the law in proper form is important. We have here the principle of this parliament trying to give to the Minister of Finance—I say "trying" because I question, even if we pass this, that he will really have that power; I question that very much—the power to exercise a censorship, a veto, a dictatorship over the form and manner in which the government of a province assists its own universities out of money collected from its own taxpayers by a tax levied by the provincial legislature. If there could be a more obvious intervention in the provincial field it would be very hard to find any way of going about it.

Moreover, it seems to me it is clothing the minister with a power that the minister should not be clothed with and that is very different from giving to the minister a determination of certain things with respect to agreements with the provinces or with respect to payments to be made out of the treasury by virtue of the fiscal arrangements between the federal and provincial governments which have to do with the proper control by this parliament of the funds that are raised from the taxpayers of Canada.

I repeat again that we are seeking here to clothe the minister with the power to determine how the government of any prescribed province will assist its universities, the power to control the method or the order. It has got to be a scheme that suits him before the taxpayers can get this abatement. As long as there is an arrangement that pays the universities that amount of money it should not have to be satisfactory to the Minister of Finance. It is for that reason and because of our regard for the rights of the provinces that we have put forward this amendment.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 28; nays, 44.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, I should like to address myself to another portion of this bill, clause 2. I hope that the minister who is an eminent lawyer will readily understand that in drafting legislation which appears rather complicated it is sometimes possible to unintentionally insert matters which he either does not intend or which other hon. members think they spot as being other than what was really intended by the legislation. I should like to draw to the attention of the minister the following words in subclause (ii), on page 2 of the bill, beginning at line 19:

> —in accordance with and subject to terms and conditions not inconsistent with those contained in any agreement entered into under subsection (2)—

Subsection (2) follows further on. I address myself to those words immediately because I want to deal with them. In the first place, Quebec is a prescribed province, according to what we have been told. Second, Quebec does not form a part of the Canadian universities foundation. Clause 2 to which I have already referred begins with these words:

> The minister, with the approval of the governor in council, may on behalf of the government of Canada enter into an agreement with the foundation, providing, for any fiscal year commencing on or after the first day of April, 1960—

—and so forth. The clause on to say that an agreement may be entered into with the province of Quebec. The clause does not contain those words but that is what it means. Subclause (ii), however, contains the following proviso, that it is:

> —in accordance with and subject to terms and conditions not inconsistent with those contained in any agreement—

In other words, Quebec is being asked by this clause to be bound by a contract to which it is not a party. If that is the intention, I feel the province of Quebec is being dragged into a contract to which it is not directly a party. In my view, no damage would be done to the bill if the words were deleted as suggested; the same situation would exist, but all the authority would not be left with the minister. To accept the amendment would be to liberate the province from being pinned down by the conditions of a contract to which it was not a party. If the province of Quebec could be freed from these conditions the situation would, I believe, be acceptable to everyone, and I therefore move:

> That the word "in" following the comma in line 19, page 2, and lines 20, 21 and 22, page 2, be struck out.

Under the amendment which I have just moved the province of Quebec would be free to make its own decisions with regard to university grants; it would not be bound by an agreement between two other parties. That, I believe, would leave the province of Quebec the freedom which it seeks; the province will be itself the judge of its own way of dealing with this question. I do not like to contemplate the province of Quebec being governed as it is governed in this clause. I think that constitutes an invasion of provincial autonomy—saying to that province: you will be bound by an agreement which I, the minister, will enter into with the Canadian universities foundation. I do not think it is good in law that a third party should be bound by an agreement to which it is not a party. Striking out the words as proposed would not injure the principle of the bill, but it would preserve for Quebec the autonomy for which the province has been fighting.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The clause of this bill which the hon. member has sought to amend is a clause which defines a prescribed province. We are dealing here with definitions. The hon. member has advanced the proposition that the province of Quebec is somehow having its rights abridged, and being bound by federal legislation. Such a statement is completely without foundation. There is nothing here which binds the province of Quebec in any way. Federal legislation cannot bind the province of Quebec or abridge the rights of that province. However, federal legislation can define, extend or abridge the rights of federal taxpayers, and that is all that the bill does in relation to federal taxpayers in a prescribed province as here defined.

The suggestion has been made that somehow or other we are imposing on the province of Quebec an agreement which was entered into, or is proposed to be entered into between a Canadian minister and the Canadian universities foundation. That agreement is not imposed on the province of Quebec or on any other province which may some day qualify as a prescribed province. It is not imposed on any province. That, today, is an agreement under which the payment authorized by parliament thus far in the estimates and in the Appropriation Act is paid over to the foundation as it was paid to its predecessor, the national council of Canadian universities, for distribution on certain terms outlined in that agreement.

This is not a vehicle that we have invented. This idea of having distribution made in accordance with an agreement goes back to the former government. When we came into office there was one of these agreements in existence between my predecessor, Mr. Harris, and the Canadian council of universities, and that agreement defined the basis of distribution which was to be carried out by the N.C.C.U. Similarly, since the Canadian universities federation became incorporated, it was necessary to have a new agreement with the new organization. That was done, and it is referred to in the estimates which were introduced in this house some time ago.

That does not impose anything on any province. In the case of the non-prescribed provinces, that agreement defines the terms on which distribution of that federal money may be made among universities. In relation to a prescribed province, all that is said here is that where an alternative provision is to be made, it is to be made on terms not inconsistent with this new agreement. In that way and no other can it be assured that equality across Canada is applied to all provinces. That is the reason this provision is here; it is in order to ensure equality. Otherwise, whereas distribution in the non-prescribed provinces must be on the basis of equality among the universities of the province as determined by student enrolment, if this were not applied to a prescribed province it would be open to such a province to apply the funds in any way it saw fit, and parliament surely intends that there should be equality of treatment in all parts of Canada.

Mr. Chevrier: I must tell the minister that I much prefer him in the mood in which he is now than in the mood he was earlier in the debate, because when he rises and discusses a point coolly it is far more interesting to follow him than it was earlier. That being the case—

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Chevrier: When the committee rose at six o'clock the Minister of Finance had completed his remarks on the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Cartier. The amendment proposed to remove from clause 2 of the bill the words in the eighteenth to the twenty fifth lines on page 2:

> In accordance with and subject to terms and conditions not inconsistent with those contained in any agreement entered into under subsection (2).

The point made by the hon. member for Cartier was that these words would in effect be binding upon the prescribed province and he asked that they be stricken out. In his reply the minister made several points. In the first place he said that the agreement did not impose anything on the province of Quebec or on any other province which may some day qualify as a prescribed province. It is with that first statement of the minister that I should like to take issue. If I read this bill correctly, the definition of prescribed province which I find on page 2 is as follows:

> "Prescribed province" means a province
> (i) that has not entered into a tax rental agreement under which . . .
> (ii) . . . satisfactory arrangements exist in the opinion of the minister for the payment by the province directly to institutions of higher learning in the province, in accordance with and subject to terms and conditions not inconsistent with those contained in any agreement entered into—

Between the minister and the Canadian universities foundation. This is what is contained in the bill. The minister entered into an agreement on the eighteenth day of January, 1960 with the Canadian universities foundation outlining the manner in which these grants shall be paid, and also defining certain terms such as student, university, university degree and university level.

During the course of his remarks the minister also very properly said that when his government came into office there was one of those agreements in existence between his predecessor, Mr. Harris, and the Canadian council of universities, and that that agreement defined the basis of distribution by the national council of Canadian universities. It is this agreement and the definitions contained therein that have been so strenuously opposed by members from the province of Quebec. It is the definitions contained in this agreement that have been declared in this house by Conservative members of parliament from the province of Quebec as being an invasion of the field of education; in fact, I believe the words which were used were "an invasion of the structural field of education". It is unquestionable that the words which are contained in this bill incorporate this agreement and make it binding upon the prescribed province.

The Minister of Finance can argue as much as he likes, but the words are there, namely that the prescribed province which has not entered into a tax rental agreement—that is Quebec—under which satisfactory arrangements exist in accordance with and subject to terms and conditions not inconsistent with those contained in any agreement entered into by the minister and the Canadian universities foundation. This is the agreement which I hold in my hand. Therefore, I submit with all the force at my command that the province of Quebec, if it becomes a prescribed province—and it has, to use the words of the minister, established itself as a prescribed province—will be bound by the terms of this agreement. Of that there can be no doubt. I have not heard anything to the contrary. Although I have challenged those members who stated during the course of this discussion that order in council P.C. 123 which was passed in 1952 and which is the same as this agreement of 1960 in so far as the definitions are concerned—I have not heard a word from them to the effect—

An hon. Member: You will.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend says that I will. If he intends to say something about that I hope he will make a statement and explain away the fact that if it was an invasion of the field of education in 1952 to pass order in council P.C. 123, why is it not an invasion in 1960 to pass this order in council with the same definitions.

My hon. friend from Charlevoix and those associated with him, try as they may, will not, in my opinion, ever be able to wiggle out of the strait-jacket in which their colleague, the Minister of Finance, has placed them.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): How imaginative!

Mr. Chevrier: The minister has gone a step farther in his remarks and he has given the reason why this provision is in the bill. He explained it prior to the committee's rising at six o'clock. He said:

> It is in order to ensure equality. Otherwise, whereas distribution in the non-prescribed province must be on the basis of equality among the universities of the province as determined by student enrolment, if this were not applied to the prescribed province it would be open to such a province to apply the funds in any way it saw fit.

These words are a limitation upon the province.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister himself has stated that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Chevrier: In his own words the minister has indicated that if this were not applied to a prescribed province it would be open to such a province to apply the funds in any way it saw fit. He said, "Parliament surely intends that there should be equality of treatment in all parts of Canada". That is another difficulty in so far as this clause is concerned.

In my estimation this forces the province to distribute its grants in a certain way. It puts a penalty on the taxpayers in that province if it does not follow the agreement with the foundation, and all we are trying to do by moving this amendment, by the removal of those offensive words, is to give the province back its autonomy.

(Translation):

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to most of the remarks made by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), which were, so to speak, a second edition of what he said the other day precisely with regard to that part of the act where a change is sought in accordance with the terms of the amendment submitted by the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Crestohl).

First of all, may I be allowed—and I think now is the time to do so—to correct certain statements that were made, first by the hon. member for Laurier and then in a slightly more shaded and mitigated form by my good friend the hon. member for Cartier. Both presented as a definite fact that the principle of federal university grants had been finally consecrated because we had voted for adoption of the bill on second reading.

Mr. Chairman, either my hon. friends have taken no interest in my own statements in this house, which as a matter of fact were echoed by some of my colleagues, or they have voluntarily and deliberately ignored those statements to make a completely baseless assertion. On that particular point with which I am directly concerned, let me simply recall the reply I made to my good friend the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Brassard) when, at the very end of the speech on the second reading of the bill, I indicated that the reason why we were in favour of the bill as a whole was that, despite its weaknesses arising from the fact that it stems from a precedent inherited from the former Liberal government—and that is the cause of its weaknesses—it brought about substantial improvement in relations between the federal government and the provinces in general and Quebec in particular, and that it was a step out of the squeeze in which the provinces had found themselves ever since the day in 1951, when they had got themselves involved in that perilous adventure.

Mr. Chairman, it is an honourable compromise, a loyal and courageous effort. And right now, by the way, I want to express our gratitude to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming)—and I am sincere in saying this; I want to tell him how grateful we are that he understood in the very first days we entered this house—we who came here to uphold rights and constitutional liberties which belong to the provinces in general and to the province of Quebec in particular—I want to tell him how grateful we are that he has understood our viewpoint when for 10 or 15 years his mind could have become beclouded by the brand of Canadianism that was being preached under the former government.

Now here is another one whom some hon. members tried to ridicule and whom I want to include in my tribute, and I confess that what hurt me most was the fact that those attempts came from some of our fellow citizens from the province of Quebec who are sitting in this house—I make an exception for several of them—a small number of those present who have made a show of disunity and who do not hesitate to throw mud on their own province as well as on the people who sent them here to represent them.

Do not be alarmed, Mr. Chairman, this closes the chapter of my praises.

The Chairman: I presume the chairman can trust that the hon. member will now come to the amendment—

Mr. Dorion: Certainly. Those were preliminary remarks which, I think, were necessary, in order to say how much I appreciated the work of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) and more particularly when he succeeded in reaching the compromise we know.

Mr. Robichaud: There are two sets of standing orders in this house.

Mr. Tremblay: Ignoramus. Dunce

The Chairman: Order. The remarks just made by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) are a reflection on the chairman, and I would ask him to withdraw his words immediately.

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order. Just a moment. I was calling the hon. member for Gloucester to order. I asked him to withdraw his words.

Mr. Robichaud: I said that there were two sets of standing orders.

The Chairman: If the hon. member for Gloucester does not withdraw his words, I will have to report the fact to Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robichaud: Since you demand it, Mr. Chairman, I shall withdraw my words.

Mr. Tremblay: Anyhow, it is quite unimportant.

Mr. Dorion: It's a good thing I did not understand.

Mr. Chairman, we have here an amendment whose purpose is to delete from the bill the following words:

> Subject to terms and conditions not inconsistent with those contained in any agreement entered into under subsection (2).

In other words—and this is what I gathered from the statements made by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier)—the hon. member for Laurier who, as everyone knows, is a staunch autonomist, the hon. member for Laurier sees there—

Mr. Johnson: Has been seeing for the last three days—

Mr. Dorion: ...a sort of subservience or bondage for the provinces that will resort to this new formula or method, a sort of subservience of those provinces to the federal government.

The other day I heard him, very eloquently as always, reproach me for pointing out in the speech I made on second reading, what I considered and still consider as a fantastic encroachment upon the field or existence of powers of provinces and universities, because, according to an order in council passed in 1952, which has remained in force until 1956 —something which I pointed out too, because I want to be fair to everyone—the minister had himself defined "university," a "university level," "student," and "university degree".

So, dexterous as he is, he chose and sought to show I was in contradiction with a text to which he referred in any case, saying: those definitions are to be found, word for word, in the agreement signed by the present Minister of Finance with the Canadian universities foundations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just what is the situation? According to this text, it is required that everything be done in accordance with and subject to terms and conditions not inconsistent with the agreement referred to in paragraph (2). Now what does that mean?

I have that agreement here. It is true that the terms and definitions of those four expressions I mentioned a moment ago are practically the same. Yet there is one important difference, as I will show.

The first distinction to be made—and this was recognized by the hon. member for Laurier in his first speech on this point—is that the definition appearing in the 1952 order in council was the very definition imposed upon the universities by the Minister of Finance, while in the present case we have a contract or at least an agreement involving two organized bodies: first, the Canadian universities foundation, which as I understand was established precisely to provide for the redistribution of the money voted to it by the federal government for university purposes, and second, the national conference of Canadian universities.

It is therefore signed by those two bodies in addition to the Minister of Finance.

In other words—and let me mention here a fact on which I directed a question to my good friend the hon. member for Laurier, and failed to get a reply; I asked him whether the five Quebec universities were members of the national conference of Canadian universities, and he failed to reply.

Therefore, I will give him that answer, if I may. The answer is that Bishop, McGill, Laval, Sherbrooke and Montreal universities are members of that organization and that, consequently, in agreement with the Minister of Finance and with the Canadian universities foundation, they have accepted the definitions included in the new arrangement.

Are those definitions different from those given in 1952 by an order in council, by order of the cabinet, and in accordance with the suggestions of the Minister of Finance and without the approval not only of the provinces about whom quite a fight is being staged now whereas at that time, far from there being any fighting on their behalf they were being by-passed without the approval of the provinces, without the assent of the universities, or even without any kind of arrangement.

What has happened in 1960? Thanks to the Minister of Finance who gave consideration to the particular situation in the province of Quebec, and for which, I repeat, we are happy to thank him, the methods have changed.

He left it to the Canadian universities foundation to define, or rather determine, whether the conditions required by the definition are met for such or such university. For instance, I read, under the word "student"—

(Text):

"student" means a full-time intramural student in personal attendance at a university who is registered in a course of university level leading to and counting year for year towards a university degree, as determined by the foundation;

(Translation):

This is not the Minister of Finance's definition, it is that of the university itself. Is this not, Mr. Chairman, an essential distinction? In other words—and that is what is to be understood from the text—this dictatorial power which could be exercised and which, in fact, has been exercised, is being taken away from the Minister of Finance and handed back to the institutions concerned. Those institutions are being freed in being given the power to define of themselves what they mean by those words and the power to determine of themselves the institutions that may benefit from federal grants to universities.

(Text):

"university" means—

(Translation):

And again I am quoting the agreement:

(Text):

—an institution of higher learning in a province of Canada as determined by the foundation;

Not as determined by the minister.

(Translation):

As was the case under the Liberal administration, but—

(Text):

as determined by the foundation—

(Translation):

As is the case with the present Minister of Finance.

So, it is simple, this rule being established—

(Text):

"university degree" means—

(Translation):

And you have there the meaning of the words "licentiate's degree", "bachelor", "master", "a doctor's degree":

(Text):

awarded by a university,

(Translation):

Therefore, the definition of diplomas is subordinate to the meaning of the word "university", whereas, at the time our friends opposite were in office, those powers were being exercised by the minister. He might conceivably have been someone—I am not talking about the ministers who preceded the present minister—who knew nothing of university matters who would have had to define those terms. In any case:

(Text):

a diploma awarded by a university at the end of a course for which one of the degrees mentioned in subparagraph (i) is an entrance requirement;

(Translation):

In other words, those expressions are subordinate to the demands of our institutions of higher learning, and henceforth they—and not some federal minister of finance—will define what a university is.

It has been said, Mr. Chairman—and here I want to quote my excellent friend from Lapointe (Mr. Brassard), in the best possible spirit, for he has been extremely generous to me—because of an old frienship which he still proclaims today, and I appreciate that. He said, in particular, in his speech on the very point I am dealing with, what I shall quote from page 3555, page 9 of the appendix of the official report of the house, dated May 4, 1960:

I am at a loss to understand on the basis of what sincerity the Quebec government failed to mention in its legislation the conditions imposed by the federal government in order to dispose of a grant established by a provincial legislation for a provincial purpose.

Of course, at least to some extent he was referring to the text that is being objected to today, as a text attempting to subject the provinces, and especially the province of Quebec, to the dictates of Ottawa.

There is one thing that my excellent colleagues from Lapointe and Cartier have overlooked, and it is that the present provincial legislation has been adopted.

How can it be assumed that a text established later than some already adopted legislation can be such as to impose its provisions on previous legislation?

And that is not all. Last night the Minister of Finance told us—and we could tell that he knows the provincial legislation on that matter—that this legislation has all the required conditions for the province of Quebec to take advantage of the tax abatement provided for under the present text of the act. In other words, it is clear that this is a quarrel on words, on technicalities which, in the final analysis, are not technicalities. It is claimed that, under the terms the deletion, of which is sought, a province—and Quebec in particular—has to obey the dictates of Ottawa, whereas the province of Quebec has already adopted its own legislation, and the minister has said it meets the requirements of the definition provided in this act.

Under the circumstances, who can believe that the province of Quebec is being subordinated to the dictates of Ottawa?

There is more than that, Mr. Chairman. Obviously, it can be concluded that the province stands to benefit from the alternative policy represented by this comprise—I use the word "compromise" on purpose—which was accepted on our behalf for a two-year period. How, I ask again, could the province of Quebec be affected by this text? Such a claim shows a total misapprehension of the Quebec school system, something I do not hold against my good friend the hon. member for Laurier, because he still has something to learn about the province of Quebec. Since 1860, in fact—we happen to be celebrating the centenary this year—we have had, in the province of Quebec, a particular educational system. We have no department of education; why not? Because at that time the people of Quebec tried to remove politics and electioneering from the school system in the province—and they are still trying to abide by that rule—and, at the same time—I am pointing this out to my friends from the other provinces—the people wanted to insure the greatest degree of justice to the minority in the province.

Now, under that system, under the policy which has always been followed by all parties which succeeded each other in the administration of the province, the definition of what constituted a degree, what the conditions for getting such degree were and what a university was, has been left completely, absolutely and entirely to our universities, to our institutions of higher learning. In other words, the provincial government may not interfere in any way in the structure of our institutions of higher learning. Therefore, what is the point of the argument advanced in justification of the amendment to the effect that the province of Quebec was not a party to the agreement. If the province of Quebec itself has believed, for nearly a century, and under all its successive governments, Liberal, Conservative, or Union Nationale, if it has considered it a sacred principle to abstain from interfering in the structure of our institutions of higher learning, why advance such an argument, why imagine such a bogey? Why create objections out of thin air which have no weight whatsoever because of the system which is peculiar to the province of Quebec, if it is not an attempt to throw confusion into the minds of the people and to blot out the eminently patriotic character of the legislation we are now about to vote and which, I trust, Mr. Chairman, will be accepted by most of the people in Quebec, except for that small group which tries to make a political football of the issue. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: Talk about the Colombo plan.

Mr. Dorion: That interjection is not worth taking up.

Mr. Chairman, there are some know-alls, people who can speak about anything, on any subject. They have some general knowledge about everything but, when you try to weigh that general knowledge, it is not even worth the breath used for expressing it. It is unfortunate that the minister of finance of the day, in view of the dictatorial powers that had been given him, did not at least define the fundamental qualifications for enabling some people to sit here in this house.

Mr. Chairman, the text affected by the amendment must be judged within the context of the bill itself. To take it out of its context would be, in my humble opinion, an extremely faulty way of considering it and of passing judgment on it.

What is the object of that bill after all? A deduction of the corporation tax of 1 per cent for the provinces which will avail themselves of the alternative arrangement which is now offered them. On that score there is no possible hesitation. The fact that there will be deducted from the equalization payments the overpayment, in relation to what the federal government would have paid, will in no way affect the corporations.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Bellechasse, but he is now discussing another aspect of clause 2 which is not the subject of the amendment under consideration at present.

Mr. Dorion: I shall try then, as far as possible, to remain within the limited scope of the amendment. In my opinion, this amendment—not the amendment but its wording rather—does not mention that the provinces will be bound or subordinate to such and such a thing. It merely says: in the appreciation of the facts in order to establish whether a province may take advantage of this alternative policy or not, those are the principles that you, as Minister of Finance must follow—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member once again, but I must tell him that his time is up.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion) for the kind words he said about me a moment ago. I do not think he is in the habit of speaking as he did a moment ago, not so much about me as about other hon. members of this house, because, normally, he talks with great courtesy. But tonight, he slightly departed from his usual way. I hope, Mr. Chairman, you will allow me also to slightly depart from the strict wording of the law, because the hon. member, instead of sticking to the strict wording of the law, wanted to make a political speech—

An hon. Member: That is what you are doing yourself.

Mr. Chevrier: —an essentially political speech, because he had to be called to order more than once.

The hon. member said, Mr. Chairman, that we did not understand the eminently patriotic character of this bill. Well, I should like to tell the hon. member for Bellechasse that we, from the opposition, and myself, a native of another province than the province of Quebec, have no lesson in patriotism to receive from him, because in the province where I come from we have had—

An hon. Member: Where you still live.

Mr. Chevrier: —struggles to fight, and the patriotism of those who come from that province, like the patriotism of those who now surround me, is just as good as that of the hon. member for Bellechasse. The hon. member for Bellechasse is not consistent with himself.

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) is so much in the habit of distorting my words that he ends up by having me say things which are completely opposed to what I think. I have never suggested that patriotism is exclusive to the province of Quebec or to members from the province of Quebec; I have never reproached the hon. member for Laurier for not having always lived in the province of Quebec, and I resent his interpretation of what I said. There are patriots everywhere in Canada, I will grant that.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the hon. member for the explanation he just gave. But, in the statement you made earlier, if I misinterpreted your words—

An hon. Member: As usual.

Mr. Chevrier: —which I have put down here, that is to say: "We are pursuing the eminently patriotic character". Then, I accept the correction made by the hon. member.

But, Mr. Chairman, I was getting to another point showing the inconsistency of the hon. member's statement of a moment ago. He said at the beginning of his remarks: I am against federal grants to universities, but I have voted in favour of them.

What logic on the part of that member. What logic on the part of the other members from the province of Quebec who support him. They are opposed to federal grants to universities but they vote for them.

An hon. Member: You are against the bill and you vote for it.

Mr. Chevrier: How can you, in the—

An hon. Member: Explain your logic.

Mr. Chevrier: —circumstances, understand the logic of those people.

The hon. member for Bellechasse has questioned not only my motives, but those of every member of the opposition. He has no right to question the motives of an hon. member. He can discuss a bill or an amendment, but he has no right to make such remarks as he made a moment ago. Not only was he out of order, but it was a departure from his usual courtesy.

The hon. member for Bellechasse also said he still considered fantastic—just as he did at the time of the debate on the resolution—the definitions contained not only in the order in council passed by the former government, but also in the agreement between the Minister of Finance and the Canadian universities foundation.

Mr. Johnson: That is not true.

Mr. Chevrier: However, Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member for Bellechasse read the definitions contained in order in council P.C. 123, he forgot to say that the 1952 order in council had been passed only after a joint commission, of which the ministers of finance of the federal government and of the province of Quebec were members, had designated the qualified universities. Moreover, the conference of universities acted as advisors to the minister.

Do the hon. member for Bellechasse and his colleagues forget that it was two former ministers of finance, namely Mr. Abbott and the present lieutenant governor of the province of Quebec, the Hon. Mr. Gagnon, who set up that commission and who are responsible for the definitions found in order in council P.C. 123, and also in the agreement between the Minister of Finance and the Canadian universities foundation.

The hon. member may be an expert on criminal law, but I doubt his proficiency in civil law, and I am even more doubtful as to his experience and knowledge of constitutional matters. I think we on this side of the house have just as much right as he and his colleagues to ascribe to the words of the bill the interpretation and meaning—

Mr. Fortin: The meaning that suits you best.

Mr. Chevrier:—which we consider proper.

But one thing the hon. member for Bellechasse completely overlooks is the correspondence exchanged between the two Prime Ministers, and the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), from which I shall quote a portion presently, and which imposes a condition on the province of Quebec—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance says no. Let me remind him that on December 10, 1959, the Prime Minister of Canada made a statement of which every term and condition is incorporated in the bill before us. Here is the statement, or rather the press release, issued at the time by the Prime Minister, and I quote:

(Text):

If the government of a province requests the change to be made in respect of that province, and undertakes to provide additional grants to the universities in that province on a scale equivalent to the present federal grants of $1.50 per capita, then parliament will be asked to authorize an increase of one per cent in the abatement made in the federal corporation tax in respect of that province, from 9 per cent to 10 per cent. This increased allowance for a provincial corporation tax would be in lieu of federal grants for universities in that province. It would be necessary for the provincial legislature then to impose an additional corporation tax equivalent to the reduction in the federal tax and to authorize the payment of the additional grants to the universities.

(Translation):

Does not the hon. member for Bellechasse see in that statement an interference, a condition which has been incorporated in the bill, as a result of this press release from the Prime Minister?

Mr. Fortin: It is a press release; it is not the bill.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Chairman, how can the hon. member for Bellechasse make in this house statements such as those he made a few minutes ago?

Besides, I take time here to say that he did not reply to the assertions we made yesterday and today, because he repeated exactly what he had already said, that those definitions, and especially that about the "university level", were fantastic. He has not changed his views in the matter. Consequently, if the definition is fantastic, why is he supporting the bill? Is it because of the interim period of two years; because he hopes that in two years from now a satisfactory agreement will be reached between the federal and provincial governments? If that is his reason for supporting this legislation, he should tell us so.

However, Mr. Chairman, there is more. There is one thing the hon. member for Bellechasse has completely overlooked. I refer to a part of the bill that we cannot tell about often enough, that the bill incorporates the agreement between the Minister of Finance and the Canadian Universities Federation and, in so doing, because of those words that we want to eliminate from section 2 and, notwithstanding the claims of the hon. member for Bellechasse and his colleagues, it binds the province of Quebec to the project and to the agreement signed by the Minister of Finance and the Canadian Universities Federation, not only with regard to the terms of the agreement, but also with regard to the definitions.

So, Mr. Chairman, I say that the hon. member for Cartier was quite justified in moving his amendment, and the proof of it is in the statement the Minister of Finance made before six o'clock.

I do not know if the hon. member for Bellechasse was in his seat at that time; if not, I will remind him of the words of the hon. Minister of Finance, who, on the amendment, had this to say:

(Text):

> This is the reason this provision is here. It is in order to ensure equality. Otherwise, whereas distribution in the non-prescribed provinces must be on the basis of equality among the universities of the province on the basis of the student enrolment, if this were not applied to the prescribed province it would be open to such a province to apply the funds in any way it saw fit.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

(Translation):

So, Mr. Chairman, to use the very words of the Minister of Finance, the prescribed province, according to this section, is not free. It will not be free to distribute the money as it would like to.

It seems that this is an adequate answer not only to the hon. member for Bellechasse, but also to the Minister of Finance, as I pointed out, incidentally, at the beginning of my remarks. This is why we support this amendment.

(Text):

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Amendment (Mr. Crestohl) negatived: yeas, 27; nays, 85.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising to take issue with one statement which was made by the hon. member for Bellechasse, a statement which was not in accordance with the facts. The hon. member for Bellechasse said that when universities grants were first established by the St. Laurent government the minister of finance of that day arrogated to himself the power to decide—or the governor in council gave him power to decide—what were universities, what was the definition of "students" and other matters of that kind. That is not in accordance with the facts at all, as can be shown by the correspondence of that time.

On October 25, 1951 Mr. St. Laurent addressed a letter to every one of the premiers of the provinces in which he notified them of this vote of money by parliament I do not intend to refer to any part of this letter except that which concerns the point raised by the hon. member for Bellechasse. I have a copy of one of the letters in front of me now in which Mr. St. Laurent said:

> The actual method of computing the grants which the government recommended to parliament and which parliament authorized, makes available for distribution within each province a sum equal to the officially estimated population of that province multiplied by fifty cents per capita, and provides further that this sum shall be divided within the province, among the institutions of higher learning recognized by the provincial authorities in proportion to the registration at those institutions of full-time students of university level.

The letter went on to give a list of institutions as they were understood and to ask the premier of each province to make any comment or corrections on that list. I am sure the hon. member is well aware of that. An entente—which we did not mind in the least calling an entente, and about which we told parliament—was made between the premier of Quebec of that day and Mr. St. Laurent whereby the institutions and the recipients were determined by a joint commission of the minister of finance of the federal government and the minister of finance of the provincial government, and the grants were paid in complete conformity with that joint arrangement. Accompanying the payments was a formula which the St. Laurent government accepted from Mr. Duplessis as a suitable formula. Then, when the minister of finance wrote to Mr. Duplessis the next year to ask if this arrangement could be continued on that basis—he wrote in October and he wrote again in December—the minister never received the courtesy of any reply whatsoever. That is the truth of this matter. The St. Laurent government did everything possible; it leaned over backwards to recognize the autonomy of the province in this field. It is a shocking perversion of history to suggest the contrary. If the provincial government had been willing to carry on that joint commission, there is no reason on earth why the universities of Quebec should have lost the millions of dollars they did.

I would have said nothing about this if the hon. member for Bellechasse had not chosen to misinterpret—well, to misrepresent—what was done by the greatest French Canadian, by the greatest Canadian of our time. When any hon. member talks about "la petite politique" in this country he had better not associate it with the name of St. Laurent.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Quite the centralizer.

Mr. Johnson: We shall see after June 22 who is the centralizer.

(Text):

An hon. Member: Why did you get rid of him?

Mr. Pallett: You would not even eat with him?

An hon. Member: Why did you ditch him?

(Translation):

Mr. Fortin: Why did you give him the sack?

Mr. Pigeon: Why did you not stand up for Mr. St. Laurent?

Mr. Dorion: Whatever the hon. member might have just said, my feelings for him remain unchanged.

Mr. Fortin: He likes that.

Mr. Dorion: However, it does seem to me that the former prime minister, the Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent, would have liked to receive such a chorus of praise when, at the last Liberal convention, he was simply put in the discard.

Mr. Rouleau: Out of order.

Mr. Fortin: Cry over your sins.

Mr. Bourget: What did you do to Mr. Diefenbaker in December 1956? You shut the doors on him, you, the Quebec members. What did you do on that occasion?

Mr. Fortin: You repudiated your leaders.

Mr. Bourget: No, I never repudiated my leaders.

Mr. Johnson: Simmer down.

An hon. Member: The member for Levis—

Mr. Rouleau: The member for Chambly had better join his brother back in Quebec, in the natural gas business.

(Text):

The Chairman: I believe the discussion has strayed a little bit in the last while. One or two words are uttered which suggest replies of all kinds. I therefore urge all hon. members to come back to the subject matter of the discussion. I know it is not easy at times. I now call on the hon. member for Bellechasse.

(Translation):

Mr. Dorion: Besides, although I was improvising earlier, I think that on one occasion, —and I will check on this—I did refer to an order in council passed in 1952. I referred to the Minister of Finance, because the Minister of Finance, by the very terms of the act, is responsible for its application.

Mr. Grafftey: Very centralizing, indeed.

Mr. Dorion: I will check, but I am quite convinced that I mentioned the order in council especially since some of my remarks were about that order in council when I took part in the debate on second reading.

I know very well that such a settlement is reached through an order in council and I even gave the number when I spoke on second reading. I would not want my earlier remarks to be misunderstood.

Reference has been made to the correspondence exchanged with Mr. St. Laurent and I must add that, on second reading, my sincerity was such that no one can make any unfavourable remark on that score.

Mr. Rouleau: Out of order, out of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Dorion: During that debate, I did say—

Mr. Chevrier: It is a repetition.

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, the member for Bellechasse is completely out of order, and I would ask you to call him to order.

Mr. Asselin: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) was entirely out of order a moment ago, and he was allowed to continue and even conclude his speech. The member for Bellechasse should be treated the same way.

Mr. Rouleau: If the member for Bonavista-Twillingate was out of order as the member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) is saying, it has nothing to do with the fact that the member for Bellechasse is out of order now. If the member for Bonavista-Twillingate was out of order, someone should have called the chairman's attention to that fact.

The Chairman: Once more I ask the hon. members to calm down and to be a little more pertinent in their remarks.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand the order in council in question, and point 3 of this order reads as follows:

Subject to these regulations, the minister may, on application by a university in a form prescribed by the minister and received by the minister or—

I draw the hon. members' attention to these words:

—in a province in which a joint commission has been set up as above mentioned—

The joint commission was mentioned previously; I continue:

—received by such joint commission, on or before the fifteenth day of February, 1952, or, in the special circumstances of any application, on or before such later date as may be fixed by the minister or the joint commission, make a grant to the university out of moneys provided by parliament.

This completely demolishes the argument of the hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Chevrier: Before you put the clause, Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Minister of Finance a question or two? They have to do with the interpretation of this clause. Is it not a fact that the provincial government will not be a party to the agreement between the minister and the Canadian foundation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is quite correct, Mr. Chairman. The provinces have not been parties to this agreement.

Mr. Chevrier: Is it not also a fact that the terms of the agreement can be changed without the approval of and without consultation with the provinces?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Well, of course, without the consultation of the provinces as they were not parties to it. You realize, Mr. Chairman, that any change in the agreement must conform with the provision made by parliament. This authorization has existed up to the present time in all cases in an item in the estimates which appears in due course in the Appropriation Act.

Mr. Chevrier: May I also put this question to the minister? Is it not also a fact that under clause 2, which is under discussion, a provincial government when making an arrangement to provide for annual grants to universities in the province will have to accept the definitions contained in any agreement made by the minister with the Canadian universities foundation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, in various speeches on this subject the hon. member has slurred over some words in this clause which have real meaning. He is in effect seeking to interpret this clause as though the agreement between the minister and the Canadian universities foundation applies to all provinces.

The point here is established beyond all question. Under subclause (b) (ii) of section 2 of the bill the agreement between the minister and the Canadian universities foundation applies to the non-prescribed provinces. With respect to the prescribed provinces, you turn to subclause (1) (b)(ii). There in the terms defining prescribed province you find words reading as follows:

—in accordance with and subject to terms and conditions not inconsistent with those contained in any agreement entered into under subsection (2).

There is a very great difference between saying that the terms and conditions must be the same and saying that they must not be inconsistent with those contained in the agreement. As I have pointed out, this is the necessary means to assure equality of treatment in all parts of Canada. Without some provision of this kind in the definition of a prescribed province there would be no way of preserving that equality. I think this is the kind of condition that will commend itself to Canadians in every part of Canada. The condition is not one that is imposed on the province in the sense of the provincial government or provincial legislature; it is one imposed by the federal authority in the sense that if this condition is not conformed with then the federal tax upon federal taxpayers in the particular province follows a different course accordingly. This brings us back to the point that has been discussed again and again, Mr. Chairman. This is federal legislation concerning federal abatement of a federal tax imposed upon federal taxpayers.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I realize that the answer the minister has given is the same as that which was given heretofore in answer to statements I have made but I submit to him that it is not an answer to the question. I should like to know whether the answer is in the affirmative or negative. Will the province have to accept the definitions contained in the agreement made between the minister and the Canadian universities foundation in the light of the terms of the bill which the minister read, namely lines 18 to 25?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member again is slurring over the words "not inconsistent with". This legislation does not at all, as he suggests, impose the terms of the agreement with the Canadian universities foundation upon a prescribed province. It simply says that for the province to qualify as a prescribed province there must be terms and conditions not inconsistent with those contained in the agreement.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a further question? Has the premier of Quebec been consulted with reference to this particular clause, the words that have been under discussion and the question I asked earlier?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I spent some considerable time earlier reviewing all the exchanges that have occurred between the federal and provincial governments in this respect. There is nothing more I can add to that.

Mr. Chevrier: I know what the minister did and I know the minister said at one time that he did not show the bill to the premier of Quebec. I am now asking him if the premier of Quebec was consulted with reference to the words which are contained in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Cartier.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think I was quite clear on this matter. We are just going over this again and again and again. We are just going around the tree in circles again and again. I made the extent of the discussions quite clear. I went into some detail, I thought, in connection with the meeting I had with Premier Barrette in February and I pointed out that the bill had not been drawn at that time. I knew what the bill was going to contain and I had a preliminary draft but there was no bill shown to the premier of Quebec at that meeting.

The hon. member for Laurier asked me later about the premier of the province reading the bill. I had to tell him that I have no control over the reading habits of the premier of Quebec. All I know, as I told him, is that the bill had not been printed when I discussed it with him.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the minister would permit me to ask a question and also to draw his attention to the fact that the hon. member for Laurier is not asking him about the bill at all but rather about the conditions that are in the bill. He is asking the minister whether the premier of Quebec was made acquainted by the minister with the conditions that were going to be put into this bill, not with the bill. We do not care whether he saw the bill. We want to know whether he was told what these conditions were going to be and whether he, as the Solicitor General told us he did, agreed with them or whether, as Premier Barrette says, he had no understanding of them at all.

Mr. Balcer: Here we go again.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is what we are asking and we are entitled to know. Did the minister tell the premier of Quebec when he met him what the general conditions were going to be that were going to be put in the bill?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have already said, if not four certainly three times, that at that meeting in Quebec the premier acquainted me with the legislative intentions of the Quebec government and I acquainted him with the legislative intentions of the federal government.

Mr. Pickersgill: And no agreement was reached.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have to point out again, I guess it is now the fourth or fifth time, that this legislation does not contemplate any agreement between the federal and provincial governments. It is federal legislation dealing with federal taxation and, so far as the legislation of the province of Quebec is concerned, the legislature passed its legislation respecting support of universities in that province in the exercise of its own constitutional rights. The two jurisdictions have proceeded each in its own proper constitutional sphere, with due respect for the constitutional rights and prerogatives of the other.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, it is very interesting to hear the Minister of Finance tell us now that the Prime Minister was talking through his hat when he wrote the premier of Quebec on the second of February and had this to say in his letter. You gave me permission, Mr. Chairman, to refer to these letters on clause 2. This is what the Prime Minister, who is absent in London now, said and what the Minister of Finance says is nonsense tonight:

> I am glad to learn that your government agrees to the general principle for settlement of the problem and if further clarification is needed to secure agreement in detail—

The Prime Minister evidently did not know what was going on. He did not know that no agreement was necessary. He did not know that each was going to proceed in his own sphere. The Prime Minister did not know what it was all about. This superior Minister of Finance changed the whole thing. But the funny thing is that Mr. Barrette also talked about an agreement in his reply. In his letter of February 5, after agreeing to have the Minister of Finance come to Quebec and talk to him, he said:

I presume—

Perhaps I had better start at the beginning of the sentence.

The suggestion which you make that I should meet the Hon. Donald M. Fleming, acting as representative of the federal government, and the speed with which you have replied to my letter, allow me—I presume—to anticipate that very soon you and I will be in a position to announce that the already expressed hope of a settlement regarding the grants to the universities has been realized.

Unless it has been made in a manner that has not been communicated to any member of the house, there never was any such announcement. There never was any announcement of any kind after the minister came back from Quebec. When the hon. member for Laurier asked the minister about this he said, "You will find out when you get the bill".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, no, that is not what I said. I said I would be glad to go into the matter fully on the resolution.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister now says he would be glad to go into the matter fully.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not what I said now; that is what I said then.

Mr. Pickersgill: All right, that is what the minister said then about what he would do on the resolution stage, but when we asked for details on the resolution stage he said, "You can wait for the bill".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, I did not.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, you did, and when we get to the bill he says, "This was a secret meeting and you cannot know what went on".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not say that.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Solicitor General says they had an agreement and the minister says they had not.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has attributed to me words I never used. He said that I said it was a secret meeting, and a number of other things. I have not said any such thing. Stick to the facts.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, maybe it was a public meeting to which no one was admitted, about which no communiqué was issued and about which we can find out nothing when we ask questions.

Mr. Fulton: The kind you and Joey have.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, not the kind of meeting the Minister of Justice had with the premier of Newfoundland, and if I were the Minister of Justice I would not talk very much about my visit to Newfoundland.

Mr. MacInnis: You cannot talk so much about your visits to Newfoundland.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, this goes farther back than that. In the letters that the minister put on Hansard in order that we would have the whole record clear, the letter that the Prime Minister wrote to the premier of Quebec, at that time Mr. Sauve, on December 22 also refers to this matter. Mr. Barrette's reply of January 21 also refers to it. He says:

—your government and ours will come to an agreement on this subject.

Now, three times, in the letter of January 21, the letter from Mr. Barrette, and the letters of February 2 and February 5, all of them talk about an agreement. The Solicitor General comes in and makes a speech in this house, and he certainly gives the impression or uses words that certainly give the impression there was an agreement. Then, all of a sudden—

Mr. Balcer: I have denied that about five times.

Mr. Pickersgill: You say there is disagreement, then, do you?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: Be responsible.

Mr. Pickersgill: You know, sir, before we had this government, either a thing was something or it was not. Now we have a kind of grey world in between. I say that either there is an agreement or there is not an agreement. It is very clear that this correspondence, right up until the last letter that was written, envisaged an agreement. I am not going to attempt once more to interpret those words of the Solicitor General. They have been advertised enough for everyone to judge for himself what they mean, if indeed they mean anything. One is beginning to wonder whether they did mean anything because the Minister of Finance will not say he did not have an agreement with the premier of Quebec and he will not say that he did. He will not tell us whether he did or whether he did not.

Surely before we are called upon to pass this legislation, which was supposed to solve the problems between the two governments, we are entitled to know whether or not both governments are satisfied.

An hon. Member: They are.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are they satisfied? What is the evidence? The latest evidence we have on this subject is Mr. Barrette's speech of last Sunday in which he said there was no understanding, no agreement and no accord. Surely we are entitled to know what the situation is.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, during the course of the statement by the Leader of the Opposition he put a question to the Minister of Finance which was not answered. I should like to put it to him now. It was this: Does the government still advocate substituting for tax-sharing and equalization the kind of allocation of tax fields which it talked about when it was in opposition? This will be found on page 3590 of Hansard.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the rule is that discussion has to be strictly relevant to the clause under consideration. This subject has nothing whatever to do with this particular clause.

An hon. Member: You are afraid to answer.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is a raucous voice over there of an hon. member who is engaged in a breach of the rules of the house. Perhaps the hon. member does not know that, but it is high time he did learn.

Mr. Chevrier: I find that the chairman has been rather careful in having the rules observed this evening, so I think he should be left with that jurisdiction, not the Minister of Finance. Could I ask the minister another question? Could the minister give the house an assurance that this provision that is under discussion now is not a violation of section 93 of the constitution?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is not a violation of the British North America Act at all. This bill is constitutional in all respects.

Mr. Chevrier: The question I put to the minister was whether it was a violation of a particular section, section 93.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is not a violation of any provision of the constitution. The only thing it seems to violate is the sense of the hon. members opposite in trying to maintain and continue a situation of very great injustice to one province in this country.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister say, if it is not then a violation of the letter of the constitution, it is also not a violation of the spirit of the constitution?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I consider that this measure is a fulfilment, not only of the letter of the law, of the constitution, but is a fulfilment of the spirit of the constitution. It is necessary that this should be done because the legislation that existed before certainly did violence to the spirit of the Canadian constitution.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sorry the minister finds it necessary to make a speech in answer to every question I ask. However, that is his privilege, and I suppose I can do the same thing. I should like to ask a number of other questions before we dispose of this clause. One of them is this: Is the minister in favour of federal grants to universities in principle or only as a temporary solution for a period of two years?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order; I have up to now permitted an exchange of questions and answers between the hon. member for Laurier and the Minister of Finance, but I must draw the attention of the committee to the fact that these questions are not relevant to clause 2. A discussion of the constitutionality of the bill in general was a matter for debate on second reading. Here there is no relation to any part of the clause under consideration, and I would rule that these questions and answers are out of order.

Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Chairman, we would like to have a division on clause 2.

Clause 2 agreed to; yeas, 87; nays, 26.

On clause 3—Alteration of act in its application to fiscal years ending March 31, 1962.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to ask the minister on clause 3 the question I put to him earlier and which he said was out of order. I think it is in order here. Does the government still advocate substituting for tax-sharing and equalization the kind of allocation of tax fields which it talked about when it was in opposition?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The views of the government relevant to the subject matter of this bill are adequately expressed in the terms of the bill.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask whether the government will continue the policy announced by the Prime Minister in Manitoba during the election of 1957, namely that the Conservative government would maintain the principle of equalization?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Conservative government has not only maintained the principle but has extended it.

Mr. Regier: May I ask the minister whether there is any particular reason for having decided on the year 1962 as it appears in this clause?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Because that is the date of conclusion of all agreements authorized by the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act. In other words, the amendment deals with a period co-terminous with the period appointed by the main act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): At the end of 1962 will the government extend the principle of equalization to the provinces?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If by any chance my hon. friend is a member of the House of Commons when this question is decided he will certainly be made aware of it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister may or may not wish to reply to the question. The question was a clear one. At the end of this period or the expiry of it will the present government, if in office—something of which I am extremely doubtful—extend the principle of equalization or is the principle of equalization to be extended to the provinces only for a limited period as previously stated by the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That, of course, will depend upon the will of parliament.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, oh. From what the minister said I take it that this government, so far as the Minister of Finance is concerned, does not wish at this time to state whether or not the principle of equalization will be extended beyond the two-year period. That is the only legitimate interpretation that can be made of the remarks, ambiguous as they are, of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is difficult to restrain one's mirth after such a harangue from the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is the situation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, no. The hon. member for Essex East is seeking to impose his interpretation on the committee. I must dissent from his attempt to impose his interpretation on me. I want to make that point very clear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But that is the situation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will say to the hon. member for Essex East, as I have said in the chamber on a previous occasion, which he no doubt has forgotten, that the present government has nothing whatever to learn from its predecessor about rendering effective assistance to provinces whose fiscal positions require it.

Mr. Regier: I should like to thank the minister for his answer previously. He said the reason for the date of March 31, 1962 is that it coincides with the date when other existing agreements under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act expire. I should like to ask the minister this question. Is it the intention of the government, in making these two dates coincide, that after March 31, 1962 extraordinary arrangements will no longer be made with regard to federal aid for our universities as such?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No inference should be drawn in that regard. Announcement has already been made of the calling of a plenary dominion-provincial conference for July 25, 26 and 27 next, at which there will be discussion of what shall be the fiscal relations between the federal and provincial levels of government after March 31, 1962.

Mr. Regier: I should like to ask the minister this question. In making new arrangements with the provinces for tax-sharing agreements is it the intention of the federal government to move out of the specific field of federal aid toward universities?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have already said that no inference should be drawn of the kind the hon. gentleman is proposing to draw. I have given the reason. We are now past the section dealing with university grants entirely. We are on clause 3 of the bill which deals with the increase from 10 per cent to 13 per cent in the provincial share of the yield from the personal income tax.

Mr. Regier: I will ask only one more question. Is it the policy of the government, of which the minister is the Minister of Finance, that there shall continue to be federal aid to the universities of Canada?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This bill makes provision for the continuance of the aid to universities to March 31, 1962. It puts that aid on a statutory basis. Never before has it been on that basis. It makes provision this time two years in advance, something which has never been done before. Previously this aid had always simply been on the basis of an annual vote, an item in the estimates. Under the provisions of this bill aid to the universities is assured for a longer period and on a surer basis than has ever been known previously.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Speaker: Now. Agreed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): In the committee stage through which the bill has just passed, Mr. Speaker, we have made every effort we could think of—

Mr. Fulton: And some you did not even bother to think about.

An hon. Member: That is a cynical remark.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) is in one of his usually helpful moods. As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, we have used every device it is possible to use in the committee to record the position we take with regard to this bill—

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): How did you vote?

Mr. Pickersgill: —namely that a substantial part of the bill is simply a continuation of Liberal legislation, but that there has been introduced into it an element which we find to be of dubious constitutionality and an undoubted invasion of the real liberty, autonomy and rights of any province which takes this alternative which the bill seeks to provide.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): How did you vote on second reading?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member asks me how we voted on second reading. May I say that on second reading we voted for the principle of university grants and the principle of equalization, both Liberal principles. However, at the time we said we would do our best to take the objectionable features out of the bill in committee and we did so.

An hon. Member: Or tried to do it.

Mr. Pickersgill: We were not successful, thanks to the centralizing attitude of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). I do not think there are likely to be pronounced in this House of Commons for a long time to come words that will ring around this country so much as did the words used by the Minister of Finance when he said that if he had accepted our amendment it would be open to the province to apply the funds—that is the funds that the province collected from its own taxes—in any way it saw fit. In other words, we tried to put the province in a position to spend its funds in any way it saw fit, because we believe in provincial rights; and hon. gentlemen opposite were determined to force a system of uniformity upon all the provinces and insist that they must conform to an agreement to which they were not a party. That is the position. I tell you, sir, it will be a long time before anyone who genuinely cares about the rights of the provinces will forget the words of the Minister of Finance, that it would be open to the province to apply the funds collected by the province from a provincial tax "in any way it saw fit". If a province cannot spend its money in any way it sees fit, where is there any autonomy?

I do not intend to engage in any tedious repetition.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member is tedious without repetition.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope we can complete this matter tonight. However, I intend to move, seconded by the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Leduc):

> That the said bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of reconsidering the removal from clause 2 of the provision that the arrangements for the payment by the province directly to institutions of higher learning should be satisfactory in the opinion of the Minister of Finance and in accordance with and subject to terms and conditions not inconsistent with the terms and conditions of the agreement between the Minister of Finance and the Canadian universities foundation.

Mr. Speaker: Before I put the motion, does any hon. member wish to comment on it?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, just briefly, I am encouraged by one thing. The hon. member said he wanted to see this matter disposed of tonight.

Mr. Speaker: I was seeking comments as to the merits of the amendment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is my intention, Mr. Speaker. This amendment in my submission is not in order. It purports to direct the committee of the whole to reconsider the removal of clause 2 but it does not set forth the precise terms of the words that should be struck out or the precise terms of the words that should be added. This is vague and general. For those reasons it does not conform at all with the rules applicable to order as applied to amendments introduced on third reading.

Mr. Pickersgill: If there is any doubt about the matter I would refer Your Honour to citation 415 of Beauchesne's fourth edition which reads:

> When a bill comes up for third reading a member may move that it be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of amending it in any particular.

Mr. MacInnis: What is the particular?

Division

Mr. Pickersgill: It seems to me that that is very adequately covered by the amendment. There is no suggestion here that one has to cite the exact words in order to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. Speaker: The citation referred to by the hon. member, citation 415 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, seems to cover the principle of the situation at this time. The other point made was as to its vagueness. The other consideration is as to whether the amendment tends to change a principle approved on second reading. I think it does not do the latter. It has not been held that amendments are not in order because they are vague or completely unintellible even. On the whole I think this amendment is one that should be put and I will proceed to do so.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. Is the house prepared to deal with the main motion?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, before we vote on third reading I want to state the position of our party and I will do it briefly.

Mr. Balcer: Have you changed your mind again?

Mr. Chevrier: We are taking precisely the same position as taken by our leader on second reading, namely that we do not intend to vote against the scheme of equalization established by Mr. St. Laurent, or even appear to be made to do so. We do not intend to vote against the St. Laurent formula for university grants which this government is continuing for nine out of the 10 provinces and which the Solicitor General considers unconstitutional—

Mr. Grafftey: Why was it not accepted?

Mr. Chevrier: —but which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) says is completely constitutional.

We have used every device at our command open to an opposition to prevent this government from putting into this bill the alternative method of paying university grants which seems to be of doubtful constitutional validity and which is certainly an invasion of the normal jurisdiction of a province. So far as we can learn from the contradictory statements of the ministers and the correspondence of the Prime Minister, this invasion of the rights of the province of Quebec seems to have been approved and accepted as satisfactory, indeed, as a magnificent solution by the present premier of Quebec.

We have done our best to remove the objectionable features in this bill and the people of Quebec will now be able to decide the question for themselves. We believe that within a year the present government will have to come back to this parliament and ask us to enact the constructive amendment we offered today. Meanwhile, we are not going to repudiate the constructive achievements of the St. Laurent government in the field of equalization of aid to universities.

On this bill the division is not in our party but on the other side of the house in the Conservative party, and that division has been reflected in the votes and the absences we have seen today. As a matter of fact, on one vote there were only 12 Quebec Conservative members from the other side of the house who voted against our amendment.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member cannot count.

Mr. Chevrier: Conservative members from the province of Quebec who voted against our amendment.

Mr. Pallett: That statement is completely inaccurate.

Mr. Chevrier: That division has been reflected on more than one occasion during the course of the voting.

The Minister of Finance has told us that this arrangement was perfectly satisfactory to the government of Quebec. Why, then, were most of the Conservative members from Quebec absent from the house and why did they fail to support the government on our amendments this afternoon and this evening?

I want to repeat that the division of opinion is not within our ranks, but within the ranks of the Conservative party.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister rising to speak?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): To reply.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, sir, the minister has spoken.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Third reading is not a substantive motion and there is no right to reply. I am afraid I cannot hear the Minister of Finance. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Balcer: On a point of order, as a member of this house I want to protest against the words of the hon. member for Laurier with respect to the presence of the Quebec Conservative members in the house at the time of the voting.

Mr. Chevrier: There were only 12.

Mr. Balcer: There were more than that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I have not spoken on the motion for third reading; I moved it. If you rule I have no right to reply to what has been said I will not press the point.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is the rule.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do wish to say this on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Laurier violated—

Mr. Chevrier: No; I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am raising a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I have not recognized any point of order. The Solicitor General knows that he is entitled to rise and speak if he wishes. If the minister has a point of order—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I want to raise a similar point, Mr. Speaker. There is a rule in this house that no hon. member may reflect on the vote of any member of the house, and what—

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —the hon. member for Laurier has done has been to reflect on the vote of a number of members of this house, and he has done it in a way that he must realize is a very great injustice to hon. members of the house, which I am quite sure they will be pleased to demonstrate to him on the vote which will now take place.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I think I am entitled to reply to the point of order.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order. What the Minister of Finance raises is a matter of privilege of members of the house, and I will hear the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to pursue the matter unduly but I submit with deference, Mr. Speaker, that it is the right of any hon. member, as it has been on more than one occasion, to state what the position was with reference to a vote, and I dealt with only one vote. If I had dealt with the other vote it would have been infinitely worse than the figures I gave.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is a well recognized rule of the house that a member is not to reflect on the conduct of another member in voting. The remarks of the hon. member for Laurier were in pretty general terms and not related to any specific member. He did relate them to a class, namely those from the province of Quebec, and I think he is getting very close to the line of what would be considered a breach of the privileges. But I consider that perhaps the matter might not be pursued in view of the generality of the statement. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Egan Chambers (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will be a good deal briefer than the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) but I do not believe we should have the vote until someone has replied to his statement. I have listened with great care to the amendments to this bill offered by the opposition and the effect of each and every one of them is the same. This government has, after a great deal of discussion—

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I hear that it is ten o'clock.

Mr. Chambers: May I ask unanimous consent to reply very briefly to the hon. member for Laurier?

Mr. Chevrier: As far as I am concerned, you may have it.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house prepared to dispose of this matter tonight?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lambert: Don't you talk about long sessions.

Mr. Argue: Who is threatening whom now?

Mr. Speaker: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Chambers: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Chambers: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will please resume his seat. It having been called ten o'clock, there is no right to raise a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire of the house leader what the business is for tomorrow?

Mr. Churchill: The business for tomorrow will be the third reading of the bill we were debating today, followed by the estimates of the Department of Agriculture and, if they are completed, the estimates of the Department of Fisheries. On Monday the intention is to commence with item No. 12 on today's order paper which is a motion in my name to set up a select committee to deal with research and other matters. The second item would be item No. 1 on today's order paper, Bill No. C-57, to amend the Trans-Canada Highway Act. Item No. 3 for consideration on Monday or Tuesday would be No. 14 on the order paper, the resolution in the name of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources dealing with the Yukon Act. Item No. 4 would be the resolution in the name of the same minister dealing with the Northwest Territories Act. If these are completed, item No. 5 would be No. 16 on today's order paper, the resolution in the name of the Minister of Transport dealing with amendments to the Railway Act.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sorry, but I could not understand the last part of the business announced by the house leader. Did the last part refer to the business for Monday?

Mr. Churchill: I was talking about Monday when I named five items. They might carry over to Tuesday, but I have not announced anything for the balance of the week. We will see what happens on Monday.

It being fifteen minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

COMMONWEALTH SCHOLARSHIP AWARDS

Question No. 360—Mr. Boulanger:

1. How many scholarships have been granted by Canada following the agreement between the commonwealth countries, for the years 1958 and 1959?
2. What amount was spent for each of the years 1958 and 1959?
3. What was the number of such scholarships granted for each one of the Canadian universities?
4. How many students from commonwealth countries have attended each of our Canadian universities in 1958 and 1959?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1. The commonwealth scholarship scheme was established after a meeting of commonwealth representatives in Oxford in July, 1959. The first group of scholars under this scheme will come to Canada in September, 1960.

Under the Colombo plan which has been in operation since 1951 Canada provides technical aid to commonwealth and non-commonwealth countries of south and southeast Asia. The number of scholarships under this plan provided by Canada to commonwealth countries of the area in 1958-59 was 87 and in 1959-60 was 151.

2. The amount of money spent by Canada under the Colombo plan on training programs in 1958-59 was $863,502.86 and in 1959-60 was $996,027.40.

3. Scholarships granted in these two years were awarded according to the requests received and the academic programs of the students concerned. The numbers of students assigned on this basis to universities in Canada from commonwealth countries were as follows:

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TERMINATION OF SEASONAL BENEFITS—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the imminent termination of unemployment insurance seasonal benefits to approximately 200,000 unemployed persons, which will cause further hardship to those affected and impose an increased financial burden on hundreds of municipalities.

In proposing this motion, Mr. Speaker, I am sure there is no necessity to emphasize to the members of the house the importance of the subject with which it deals. I think on that we all agree.

In view of the termination of unemployment insurance seasonal benefits on May 15 and consequently the urgency of the question I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the answers given by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) in this house to questions of members of the opposition with respect to this very important question to thousands of Canadians have created an anxiety among those persons, thousands of unemployed Canadians, that demands immediate consideration and action by this house.

Mr. Speaker: Before I make the decision which falls to the Chair, does any hon. member from either the government or the opposition wish to comment on the compliance with standing order 26 of the proposed motion?

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I rise, Mr. Speaker, to support this motion put forward by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. It is clear, under the citation to which the hon. member directed Your Honour's attention, that this is a matter of great urgency and also a question which, in consequence, creates a situation that can only be characterized by urgency of debate.

It will not be a satisfactory answer for hon. gentlemen opposite to say that during this session there has been ample opportunity to discuss this question of unemployment. The question now before us is a new situation, one that arises because of the termination date on Monday as a result of which thousands of individuals in this country will not be able to obtain the beneficial results and consequences of the seasonal benefits.

The latest unemployment figures which were made available to us indicated that on the lowest basis 556,000 people, at a minimum, were out of work. It surely is not an overstatement to argue that the most important single domestic problem is that of unemployment, now brought into focus by the fact that these benefits are no longer to be available to a very large number of those who come within the category of men and women out of work.

We in the Liberal party therefore strongly support this proposal, and we ask for an opportunity of debating a question which arises now for the first time in this context, a question that is clearly within the citation and one that calls for solution at the hands of the government of the day. The minister has given a straightforward answer as to the government's intention in this particular, pursuant to a question that was put to him the other day. He having taken that position, we ought now to be afforded on opportunity under this procedure of giving the reasons why the stand taken by the government should be changed and why we on this side of the house should be given an opportunity of successfully resisting that stand.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is very touching to hear the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) appealing for an opportunity to discuss this question. His government had the opportunity for a good many years to extend the period during which benefits would be available but they did nothing about it, and it remained for the present government to put into effect the present legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must ask the minister to speak to the question of the relevancy of this motion.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) and the hon. member for Essex East were able to make political speeches during the course of their observations. I hate to contravene the rules, but I do submit that I should be entitled to the same opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: I agree the minister is entitled to the same latitude, but I thought perhaps a cautionary word in view of his opening sentence would be appropriate.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, this is not the type of case in which leave for a motion to adjourn the house should be entertained, because it has been known since the start of this session that these benefits would expire at a certain time. It is not something which has just come up at the last minute. All hon. members have known this. They have been discussing it off and on since the house opened on January 14; and if under these conditions it were possible for a motion to be entertained to adjourn the house, then I do suggest it would make a farce of this whole rule.

Mr. Speaker, the rule is designed to deal with something which comes up suddenly and in an unusual way. In such situations, then quite properly there is provision for moving to adjourn the house. But here we have what is in effect an attempt to thresh old straw which has already been threshed in previous debates during the present session. Not only has there been opportunity for debate in the weeks which have passed, but there will be opportunity for debate on various occasions during the remainder of the session.

I do suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that you should not be influenced by these synthetic crocodile tears which are being shed on the other side of the house, and that the business of the house should be allowed to proceed in the normal way. These questions are matters of government policy and government policy, determined quite a long time ago, has been carried out. If there should be any change in government policy, then of course it would have to be announced in due course.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But Monday is the last day; that is the point.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I think I have heard sufficient discussion of the question to enable me to determine it.

The request for leave to move the adjournment of the house is really, I suppose, for the purpose of urging the continuance of the seasonal benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act benefits which expire on May 15. There is nothing sudden or unexpected about the expiry of these benefits. The period of benefits was settled by a decision of this house and parliament, and must have been in the minds of members of the house since that decision was taken, which was some time back. So in that sense there is not a sudden or unexpected change of circumstances which confronts the house and requires the suspension of other business to give it consideration.

What in effect we would be discussing—and I think this appears from what has been said by the hon. member who raised this question and the hon. member for Essex East—would be, really, the problem of those who are unemployed in this country and who would be affected by the expiration of these benefits. I do not think I could properly accept a motion which would suspend other business in order to discuss that question, because I have on other previous occasions this session suggested that the problem of unemployment is a continuous problem and not one which should be debated by the house under this particular procedure.

Therefore, consistently with what I have said before, I conclude that this request for leave under standing order 26 should not be permitted.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACTIVE SERVICE STATUS OF MEMBERS OF REGULAR FORCES EXERCISE THEIR FRANCHISE —MR. BOURGET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Associate Minister of National Defence a question of which I gave him notice.

Could the minister tell us whether members of the regular armed forces are, in the legal sense, on active duty?

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Levis for giving me notice of this question.

In reply, I wish to inform him that members of the regular armed forces of Canada are, in the legal sense, on active duty. They were put on active duty at the time of the Korean war, and this situation has remained unchanged since then.

Mr. Bourget: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's reply that those servicemen are on active duty, does it mean that, since they are qualified voters, they will be unable to vote in the Quebec provincial election at locations where they are now stationed?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the minister replies may I ask the hon. member who proposed the supplementary question whether he is not asking for an expression of opinion on a question of law with respect to voting in the provincial elections. It is not the general practice to ask for opinions on matters of law at this point in our proceedings, and I think this would be particularly so if the question sought an interpretation of the electoral law of a province.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister, in the light of the reply which has been given by the Associate Minister of National Defence. In view of the wording of the order in council to which reference has been made, which states among other things that officers and men of the Canadian forces not exceeding 15,000 in number at any one time may most effectively participate in action undertaken by the United Nations to restore peace in the Republic of Korea, would the Acting Prime Minister get an opinion from the law officers of the crown as to whether the order in council is still in force, or whether it has been spent, since there is no longer any fighting in Korea?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): I will be very glad to have this matter looked into.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: I wish to direct another question to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Could the minister indicate whether members of the armed forces now stationed in the province of Quebec will be allowed to stay there until the day after the elections, so that they may exercise their franchise before being moved to another camp?

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Lesage asked that question yesterday.

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Levis will not doubt understand that armed forces personnel are subject to the contingencies of their military obligations, particularly to those connected with service arising out of any developments that may occur in the matter of defence.

It would be difficult for me to assure him with absolute certainty that all members of the armed forces will remain stationed where they are now until the day of the provincial elections.

(Text):

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED OPERATION OF AIR STRIP BY U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister any statement or explanation in respect to a Canadian Press report from Vancouver to the effect that the United States air force is operating an air strip in the Puntzi lake district of British Columbia?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, at Puntzi lake one of the Pine Tree radar stations is established. At that station an air strip was completed in 1954 in order to enable light aircraft of the Otter type to supply the personnel of that station with the necessary provisions, etc. That station, as are a number of others, is operated by United States personnel under the original Pine Tree agreement.

Mr. Hellyer: A supplementary question. Can the minister confirm or otherwise reports from civilian pilots flying regularly in the area that they have observed considerable jet activity around this field?

Mr. Pearkes: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there has been any considerable jet activity in that area.

FRANCE—DISCUSSION OF DEFENCE MATTERS BY ASSOCIATE DEFENCE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Deschatelets.

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for trying to rename his riding. The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Could the minister tell us if during his stay in Paris, he discussed the present situation with defence authorities in the French government? If so, has he any comment for us?

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, I must say that, during my stay in Paris, I had in fact the honour and privilege of meeting the minister of war of the French government, His Excellency Mr. Mesmer. We discussed matters of joint interest to France and Canada, as associate members of NATO. But the discussion was of a general nature, and I have nothing specific to tell hon. members with regard to that interview.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Deschatelets: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was the subject of the Bomarc brought up during those discussions?

Mr. Sevigny: No, Mr. Speaker.

(Text):

BOMARC MISSILE—INQUIRY AS TO SUCCESSFUL TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence, since the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) did not seem to be anxious to ask it. Can the minister confirm reports of successful tests of the Bomarc A yesterday?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Yes, two highly successful tests were carried out with Bomarc A missiles in the United States.

POWER

NEWFOUNDLAND—USE OF RUSSIAN TECHNICIANS TO EXAMINE HAMILTON FALLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Would he care to comment on the announcement by Premier Smallwood that Soviet technicians may be called in to examine the power potential of Hamilton falls? Can the hon. gentleman say whether any consultation has taken place between the federal government and Premier Smallwood?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should like to know under what category the hon. member asks that question and under what administrative responsibility he places the matter in asking the Acting Prime Minister to comment on the utterance of the premier of a province.

Mr. Argue: Perhaps I could ask my question in another way. Has there been any consultation between the government of Newfoundland and the federal government as to the possibility and desirability of bringing in Soviet technicians to inquire into the possibility of the development of Hamilton falls?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I learned of this question myself for the first time this morning through the radio and press reports. The hon. member will realize that Premier Smallwood is reported as having made this speech at a luncheon yesterday and then having hurried to his office, banged the door and apparently taken the telephone receiver off the hook.

[Mr. Sevigny.]

Mr. Argue: Did the minister try to phone him?

Mr. Green: I do not know how I could get any information from him, but I do suggest to the hon. member that the most effective way to get this information would be to ask the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill). I believe he has a walkie-talkie connection with the premier.

Mr. Speakman: He is a spiritualist.

Mr. Green: I think the communication system is used by him for listening, so probably the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate would have that information. That is the only practical suggestion I could make to the hon. member for Assiniboia as a way of getting an answer to this question.

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member will not take seriously the suggestion of the Acting Prime Minister, because he would be out of order.

HOUSING

C.M.H.C.—REPORTED REVERSAL OF LENDING POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister based on a news item in today's Globe and Mail under the headline:

Prime Lending Role Accepted by C.M.H.C. In Reversal of Policy.

The article reads in part:

R. G. Lillie, chairman of the Toronto branch of the government housing agency, yesterday confirmed the change in policy, under which C.M.H.C. is no longer prevented from acting as a prime lender.

In view of this apparent reversal of policy in the Toronto area I wonder whether the government is contemplating extending this privilege to other areas of Canada.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to bring this question to the attention of the Minister of Public Works.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF SAFETY PATROL REPRESENTATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister the answer to which I have provided him. Does he know that the Ontario motor league safety patrol jamboree is being held in Ottawa on May 13 and 14 and that 150 representatives of this patrol from Waterloo county and the Windsor and Hamilton districts are visitors in the gallery this morning?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to the hon. member for Waterloo North for giving me the answer to this question. I am sure I speak for all members of the house when I welcome these young people to the galleries of the house and commend them for the very useful work they are doing.

PUBLIC SERVICE

POSTAL EMPLOYEES—INQUIRY AS TO SALARY INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. According to a report which appeared in yesterday's issue of the Ottawa Citizen the pay research bureau has completed a survey of salaries paid to postal employees and has made its recommendations to the treasury board. Can the minister inform the house whether a pay boost for postal employees is an immediate prospect?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on March 31 I indicated that the salaries of all categories in the civil service were under study, and I mentioned specifically that those of personnel engaged in the postal service were under study. Whenever it is possible to make an announcement in this respect it will, of course, be made by the appropriate authority.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

ZINC OXIDE—STATEMENT AS TO RESTRAINING ORDERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Skeena asked what action had been taken or was contemplated with respect to the recommendation of the restrictive trade practices commission for certain restraining orders against Zinc Oxide Company of Canada Limited and Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company Limited, arising from the report of the commission regarding the production and sale of zinc oxide.

I have since obtained a further report in this matter which confirms the answer I gave the hon. member yesterday, as indicated in the annual report of the director of investigation and research for the year ended March 31, 1959, at page 16 in particular:

> The evidence was referred to counsel for advice as to whether it warranted prosecution under the anti-combines legislation. Counsel advised that in his opinion the evidence, having regard to certain conflicts therein, would not support such prosecution. The parties were accordingly advised on July 31, 1959, that, following counsel's report and careful consideration of the question within the Department of Justice, it had been decided not to direct any court proceedings in the matter.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Revenue arising out of the same report. May I inquire of the Minister of National Revenue what action has been taken or is contemplated with respect to the recommendation for the removal or reduction of tariffs on zinc? Perhaps the minister would like to take the question as notice.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I will certainly take it as notice. As a matter of fact it is a matter dealing with tariffs, and I think it falls within the competence of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance rather than that of the Minister of National Revenue.

SHIPPING

QUEBEC—STATEMENT ON INQUIRY INTO ACCIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): The hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) inquired yesterday about a ship that ran aground near Quebec. I am informed that Tuesday night the British tugboat Melanie Fair, a ship with a net tonnage of 64 tons, ran aground at Portneuf. The captain decided to sail up the St. Lawrence from Quebec without a pilot. He had a right to do so under the Canada Shipping Act, under which the acceptance of pilot services is optional.

In this particular case, the ship being of British registry, the captain will have to file a report with the customs office upon his arrival. Upon receipt of his report, it will be decided whether the matter should be further investigated.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

APPEARANCE OF LIBERAL MEMBERS ON NEWS BROADCAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Tremblay (Roberval): Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue a few questions. First, is he aware that in the 11 o'clock T.V. news bulletin last night, on the French network, the C.B.C. featured reports of speeches made in the House of Commons yesterday, by three members of the Liberal party, and made no reference whatever to the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming)?

Second, is the minister prepared to accept the quite plausible explanations of technical nature that the C.B.C. is bound to give him in justification on its glaring partisanship?

Third, could the minister ask the corporation—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the hon. member let the first question stand to be answered. The second one is hypothetical now and can be raised again if it becomes relevant.

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister ask the corporation—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the hon. member give the minister a chance to answer the first question.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I will take the question as notice and give an answer in due course. I admit, of course, that the arguments of the Minister of Finance were, as usual, so weighty and authoritative that they do not need any further elaboration on my part.

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: I should like to ask a supplementary question of the minister. Could he add to the reply he has just given me an answer to the following question?

Could the minister ask the C.B.C. to inquire into the qualifications and impartiality of the people responsible for information broadcasts in the C.B.C., so that the corporation's senior officers may repeat on radio and television the statements they made before the parliamentary committee about the objectivity of the corporation?

(Text):

POLICY RESPECTING EMPLOYEES NOMINATED IN PROVINCIAL ELECTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of National Revenue whether it is the policy of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to dismiss from its employment employees who accept nomination in a provincial election.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of this matter whatsoever. The C.B.C. has its own policy with respect to employment, but I will make inquiry and advise on the matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask a supplementary question of the minister. Can the minister at the same time inquire into a specific case in the province of British Columbia which has been the cause of a good deal of comment there?

Mr. Nowlan: I will do that.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

USE OF CANADIAN AIR SPACE BY U.S. PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the desirability of lessening world tension and in view of the reported intention of the United States government to continue having planes of the U-2 type fly over Soviet territory, using the territory of United States allies as bases, would the minister say whether the use of Canadian air space is denied to United States planes of the U-2 type at this time?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I explained to the house the other day that the only type of U-2 planes which fly over Canada are those engaged in meteorological and radiation activities, and that they are duly cleared each time, with a flight plan being filed; reporting as they carry out their mission; reporting as they come back, and reporting when they leave Canada. This, as I said, is the only type of U-2 plane that is using Canadian air space.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if I might ask a further question.

Mr. Green: I think, if the hon. member will recall, I also said they did not go beyond North American air space.

Mr. Argue: I wonder whether the minister would care to elucidate a reply to a question the other day, in which he said that no such planes have ever operated from Canadian bases. Can he assure the house that no such planes have ever operated from United States bases on Canadian soil or within Canada?

Mr. Green: In my statement the other day I not only dealt with the question of planes operating from Canadian bases, but also planes flying over Canada.

Mr. Argue: I do not believe the minister understood my question. Can he assure the house that no such planes operate from United States bases or bases within Canada leased to the United States?

Mr. Green: I explained that fully the other day, and that is actually the fact. The hon.

member is asking if they do not operate from United States bases on Canadian soil, and I say not the spy type of plane. Of course the planes doing meteorological and radiation work would fly from the United States. As I pointed out, this is not the type of plane that was over Russia. I explained that these planes have United States air force markings and they are operated by United States air force personnel. This was not the case with the plane that was over Russia.

Mr. Argue: Did they operate from United States bases within Canada?

Mr. Green: Any such business conducted by these planes is legitimate business, meteorological and radiation work.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LONDON, ONTARIO—TRANSFER OF CAR SHOPS TO MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport concerning a question which I put to him last Friday, at which time he undertook to persuade the president of the Canadian National Railways to discuss with the mayor of London and members of the council of railroad workers the desirability of a conference to see whether a change could not be made in the decision taken by the railway to move the Canadian National car shops from London. I have had a telegram from London again, and I should like to have an answer from the minister.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): When I was replying to the hon. member a few days ago in connection with this matter I simply told him that I would pass along his remarks to the president of the Canadian National Railways, which I have done. I should like to let him know, and the house know, that long before the hon. member for Essex East took any interest whatever in this matter, the hon. member for London brought this question to my attention. He has spoken to me a great deal about it, and takes a great deal of interest in the welfare of his constituents. He has made me thoroughly familiar with the situation in London, just as all Conservative members take an interest in their constituencies and do not need the assistance of those from other constituencies.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Hees: If I may go on to finish the answer to the first question, Mr. Speaker, I should like also to say that I was very interested to read in the Daily Report of the Canadian National Railways, dated May 11, that in a speech the hon. member made to the southwestern Ontario Liberal association in London a few days ago he had urged the Conservative government to exert its influence, without interfering in Canadian National operations—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister seems to have misconceived the question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question of the minister. Will he seek to indicate to the president of the Canadian National Railways that there can be no excuse for not meeting and conferring with the chief magistrate of London and the workers concerned, to see whether this very important source of employment can be kept in London. Surely it is not asking too much of the minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made his point, and I hope he will not proceed to argue it.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I rise on a point of order in connection with the answer the minister has given, because I am sure he did not want to convey the impression which he did give. I understood from his answer, as I have understood from the answer of several ministers in the house, that it seems not to be the business of members of parliament to interfere in the constituencies of other members. I think, sir, on a question of privilege as well as on a question of order, that it should be clearly understood that a member of parliament does have a right to ask questions concerning matters in another constituency, even though he happens not to be the member for that constituency.

I say this with deference, because it has happened repeatedly that ministers of the crown have risen to take objection, and I protest because I say we have a clear right to do what we are doing now.

Mr. Hees: May I speak to the point of order? I have never claimed that it is not the right of a member of parliament to bring up matters in other ridings. I was saying that in ridings represented by Conservatives that is not necessary.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to speak to the point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, I want to ask the minister to answer my question.

Mr. Speaker: May I deal with the point of order first.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): May I speak to the point of order. The minister has, in my view, given what should not be given on orders of the day. He has made a point, in connection with the performance of duties by Conservative members of parliament, that seems to be impinging on the functions of other members who are not supporters of the government. If we could seize such opportunities to get up and make this kind of point that the minister has made, all of us could give examples of defeated Conservative candidates impinging upon the rights of ordinary members of parliament. It seems to me the minister was completely out of order in making these remarks.

Mr. Speaker: I confess that I had similar thoughts as the minister made his reply. I did not, perhaps, intervene early enough. The precise point of order was the question of a reflection on a member for taking an interest in a constituency other than his own. As I understood the minister there was no reflection on the hon. member for Essex East for concerning himself with this matter, but rather he was giving a word of approbation to certain other members for what they had done. It is quite clear that it would be improper to reflect on the hon. member for Essex East or any member in the house for taking an interest in any matter of public administration in Canada. I do not believe the reflection was intended or was made.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the minister, now that he agrees that someone must be concerned about unemployment in London and elsewhere, whether he will answer my question, which I will repeat. Will the minister—

Mr. Speaker: I think it is unnecessary to repeat the question.

Mr. Green: There may have been one question asked by the hon. member for Assiniboia—

Mr. Speaker: Would the Acting Prime Minister defer for just one minute, until we conclude this matter?

Mr. Hees: May I complete my answer to the hon. member for Essex East. I forgot to add that the hon. members for Middlesex East and Middlesex West have drawn this matter to my attention and are very concerned about it. As a result of the concern these hon. members have shown in this matter the Canadian National Railways, on my suggestion, have made surveys of this very serious problem, have gone into it from every angle and done everything they possibly could to retain the operation in London. It is with great reluctance that they have found it impossible to do so. They have gone into this matter very thoroughly indeed, being very interested in employment for the people in London and in every other part of the country, as is this government. I am sure that Mr. Gordon was as amused and interested as I have been to see members of the former government shedding crocodile tears when during their term of office they never did anything about the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister is quite out of order in volunteering a statement of that kind in response to a question on the orders of the day. The Acting Prime Minister has been—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This matter is not concluded, Mr. Speaker. I have asked the minister a simple question and if he does not wish to answer he does not need to do so. That question is this. Is the Minister of Transport prepared to tell the president of the Canadian National Railways that he should at least discuss this matter with the mayor of London and the workers concerned?

Mr. Hees: If I may answer the question—

Mr. Speaker: Yes, but may I say that the question put by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) appears to be not so much a question as an urging or an argument—

Mr. Hees: An order.

Mr. Speaker: —for a course of action.

Mr. Hees: If I might answer that question, may I say that I was referring to something which the hon. member is reported to have said in London; that he believes the Conservative government should use its influence without interference in the normal C.N.R. operations. Demanding that the president of the C.N.R. do something is interfering with the normal C.N.R. operations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You do not intend to do anything.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I am rising on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. A question has been asked and the answer given has transgressed the rule on many points. It contains political references. It contains argument on the relevant merits of various members of parliament, about various parties and a great many other things that are purely argumentive. Surely if this period is to be useful we are entitled to have from the minister something more precise by way of observance of the rules in giving answers to questions. Since the points of order should be raised as the difficulties arise, I was going to ask whether this whole matter of answers could not be looked at.

Mr. Henderson: Never mind the speech. Go ahead and ask the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry I missed the interruption.

An hon. Member: It was a good one.

Mr. Speaker: However, I cannot condone its having been made during the explanation of the hon. member's point of order.

Mr. McIlraith: I was going to ask that the whole matter of answers be looked at from the point of view of transgression of the rules and that a ruling be made at a later date, probably at the beginning of the week.

Mr. Speaker: I think there is no need to reserve anything. The hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) has raised a question that from time to time gives concern. Hon. members will have to keep within the limits of the rules in their questions, particularly in their oral questions, if we are to make any use of this period without improperly holding up the business on the order paper. Rule 39, may I remind the house, contains quite definite language. It is not a question of practice; it is a question of a specific rule. Rule 39 states in part as follows:

> —but in putting any such question or in replying to the same no argument or opinion is to be offered, nor any facts stated, except so far as may be necessary to explain the same; and in answering such question the matter to which the same refers shall not be debated.

I must rely on the co-operation of both sides of the house to keep within these limits.

The Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Green) has been trying to get the floor.

UNITED NATIONS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND FOR AFRICAN DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): On Wednesday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) asked whether there had been any discussion between Canada and the secretary general of the United Nations on the establishment of a fund for African development.

No discussions of the kind referred to have taken place recently. The Canadian permanent representative at the United Nations had some discussion with the secretary general earlier this year about assistance to Africa, and since that time we have been following closely the secretary general's statements and the development of his ideas on this subject, in particular a report which the secretary general presented to the economic and social council of the United Nations at the end of March. In his report to the economic and social council the secretary general did not propose a special United Nations fund for Africa. He stated that the question required further study, and that he proposed to report more fully to the economic and social council at its next session in June of this year.

The government will, of course, continue to follow with great interest the elaboration of Mr. Hammarskjold's proposals as to the United Nations' role in assistance to Africa through the Canadian representative at the United Nations.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Possibly the Acting Prime Minister could say whether Canada has made any particular offer to the United Nations' secretary general as far as assistance in this fund is concerned.

Mr. Green: Any assistance would have to be approved by the United Nations, either by the general assembly or one of the subsidiary organizations. No proposal has yet reached the stage where an indication could be given as to whether or not Canada would approve.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF TOURIST BUREAU IN WESTERN EUROPE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister say what consideration is being given to establishing a tourist information bureau in western Europe in an effort to take advantage of the rapidly increasing flow of tourists from Europe resulting from their resurging economy?

Mr. Speaker: Did the hon. member give notice of this question?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I am prepared to answer it, Mr. Speaker. Since the change in the regulations in the United Kingdom with regard to restrictions on the movement of currency to Canada, the federal government through its travel bureau and our Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources has been in consultation with the high commissioner of the United Kingdom about plans for that particular area. A representative of the travel bureau is going to Europe this summer to meet with the high commissioner in the United Kingdom. He will also visit certain other capitals and countries of Europe in order to lay our plans for moving into this particularly interesting market for tourists.

TRANSPORT

KETTLE VALLEY RAILWAY—REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT IN SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. My question is of concern to three constituencies in southeastern British Columbia. Has the minister received representations in person from representatives of railroad employees urging him to do what he can to secure the restoration of normal passenger service on the Kettle Valley railroad?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): No, I do not remember having received any personal representations, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: If I may, I should like to give a supplementary answer to the hon. member for Kootenay West. I thought he was referring to a delegation that had come to see me. I do not remember any delegation but I think there may have been letters written to me. I will check my files and report on Monday.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): The Kettle Valley railway is an important railway.

GREAT SLAVE LAKE—COMMISSION REPORT ON PROPOSED RAILWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister advise the house as to when he expects to receive the report of the Manning commission on the Pine Point railway? Also can he advise as to the reason for the long delay in completing this report?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I believe this question really goes to the Prime Minister. All I can say at this time is that I do not believe the report has been submitted. I have no particular information as to the reason for the long delay.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle).]

INDUSTRY

URANIUM—NEGOTIATIONS FOR CONTRACTS BY ELDORADO COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, one which is of great interest to the people of Saskatchewan.

In view of the difficult uranium situation, would the minister care to explain why Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited did not submit a bid on the unexpired portion of the Stanleigh Uranium Mining Corporation contract? Would the minister assure the house that Eldorado will not be confined to a definite area but will be allowed to negotiate for unexpired contracts in any part of Canada?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is that the decision was made by the board of directors of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited. In answer to the second question, no restriction has been placed on the board with regard to negotiating for unexpired contracts.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS ACT

ALTERNATIVE ARRANGEMENTS FOR UNIVERSITY GRANTS—EXTENSION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX RATE

The house resumed, from Thursday, May 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for third reading of Bill No. C-56, to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Fleming, Eglinton) which was agreed to on the following division:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BIRTHDAY CONGRATULATIONS TO HON. MEMBER FOR DUFFERIN-SIMCOE

Mr. Speaker: Before I leave the chair and the house goes into committee, with your indulgence I should like to declare what I am sure is another unanimous view of the house, when I offer on behalf of all those here our hearty congratulations to the hon. member who has been here for the second longest period, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) whose birthday it is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, this is a very unexpected privilege you have extended to me in giving me an opportunity to express my keen appreciation of the friendships I have had in this house for many years. As Your Honour has said, I am the member who has been here for the second longest time. I have attended all the sessions of the House of Commons since 1925. During that time I believe I have met all those who have been elected to the House of Commons since. Many of our dear friends on both sides of the house have since deceased. I must say that what I have enjoyed the most has been the opportunity of making many friendships in all quarters of the house, having sat here for more sessions than anyone else; which is a rather sad story to relate on one's birthday.

This morning when I got on the plane in Toronto one gentleman seemed to be a little timid about the flight. He said, "I do not like the idea of flying this morning. The weather is unsettled, we go through gate No. 13, and it is Friday, May 13." I said, "Yes, but if it is of any interest to you, it is my birthday." The gentleman looked at me closely, and I think he was more frightened than ever.

I am very happy to have had this long association with the House of Commons, which is the greatest institution in Canada. I have made some very close friends on all sides of the house. I wish to express my sincere appreciation of the congratulations extended to me today by you, Mr. Speaker, and my associates who have taken the time of the house to congratulate me in this unique and almost unprecedented fashion. I thank you very much and wish for all of you, whether or not I agree with you politically, Godspeed, good health and continued strong convictions in the political affairs in the country.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Research branch—

5. Branch administration including an amount of $166,610 for grants in aid of agricultural research in universities and other scientific organizations in Canada, $1,856,156.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on this item and especially about research.

In the past, research activities have centered mostly on technical aspects of agriculture: land productivity, research on insecticides, fertilizers, etc. In my opinion, we have not attached sufficient importance to economic research. I do not mean that there should be less research on land productivity but I think greater attention could be given to economic research. I refer particularly to research on marketing both in Canada and abroad.

Just after the war, European countries organized their production and increased it substantially, and to such an extent that today we already have a hard time exporting our wheat. In a few years, with production methods improving from day to day in various countries we shall have even more difficulty in selling our wheat.

About a year ago, in a paper put out by Macdonald College in Montreal I read recommendations on what Canada should do to improve our marketing system. Unfortunately I do not have this paper here but I have a few notes that I would like to summarize for the information of the committee and especially for that of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness).

According to that paper, the present situation calls for a long term program which Macdonald College has divided into two points:

First, we should survey the situation to find out what can be done on the domestic market.

Second, we should seek new and constructive ideas with regard to the world wheat market.

Canada it was said, should institute a research fund of about half a million dollars, to finance an intensive research plan over the next six or twelve months. Work under the plan would be divided between four or five teams. One team would be made up of professors and experts from universities in the prairie provinces; a second team would include teachers from the universities of eastern Canada, a third would include individual researchers, while a fourth would consist of scientists selected by the government to be assigned to the various agencies or departments, such as the Department of Agriculture, the Canadian wheat board, the Departments of Trade and Commerce, External Affairs, Finance, etc. Finally, if deemed appropriate, our research effort might be pushed further with a fifth Canada-United States committee, made up of scientists and experts of both countries.

Canada has practically no scientists doing research in this field at the present time. The problem is quite difficult, and there is no assurance that such an investigation made by research teams would yield substantial results in the immediate future. However, it would be a start, and the government as well as the public would at least be made aware of the importance of the problem, a development that might bring forth new ideas.

This task should be undertaken as a means of finding an answer to the problems we will be facing within a few years, and particularly in the years just ahead. If the results were satisfactory, we could extend our research plan as far ahead as 1970 or 1975, and then, with such a long range program, we would know where we are going.

Those are a few thoughts I submit to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, and I would ask him whether there is, within his department, a section which does research work in the sense I have just referred to.

(Text):

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the item we are dealing with under the research branch has to do primarily with research into the natural sciences, research into soils, insect diseases and everything along that line. Economic research, about which the hon. member has been talking, is carried on by the economics branch and was dealt with in the previous item.

As was indicated last Friday when we dealt with item 4, the number of personnel in the economics branch of the department has been increased by 10, from 136 to 146. This is an indication that we are strongly cognizant of the fact that more economic research needs to be carried on. We have been increasing the manpower and other resources of the economics branch so that an expanded program of economic research can be carried forward, and we have been doing an increasing amount of research as far as marketing is concerned and so on. This is work on which we intend to continue to put a great deal of emphasis.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Following the very constructive suggestion and observations made by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska, and noting what the minister has just said, can he say anything about what progress has been made in the determination of the cost of production so far as farmers are concerned? The minister will recall that the interprovincial farm union in particular, in a brief submitted by that organization to the government about a year and a half ago, I think, urged that steps be taken by the administration to determine precisely what is the cost of production of agriculture.

We talk a lot about the difference between what the farmer has to pay for the things he has to buy, including the necessities of life, and the return from the sale of his produce. Has any progress been made in trying to assess the cost of farm production in Canada, generally and specifically?

Mr. Harkness: A considerable number of studies, particularly by various provincial bodies in different parts of Canada, have been carried on with respect to specific commodities. These studies have demonstrated the extreme difficulty of getting what might be called really accurate figures as far as the cost of production is concerned. I mentioned last year, and I believe I mentioned again this year on one occasion, that a cost of production study had been carried out with respect to hogs. The survey showed that in one area of Quebec, for example, the cost of production was considerably less than in Alberta, although everybody is aware of the fact that the biggest item in the cost of production of hogs is feed and the cost of feed is less in Alberta than it is in Quebec. This happens to be one outstanding example of the fact that these cost of production studies frequently produce results which very few people are willing to accept.

I think this arises from the fact that the various people carrying on these activities use somewhat different criteria in determining what costs should or should not be included, and there is also the fact that from one farm to another operations vary greatly.

I have received, for example, all kinds of letters from farmers in western Canada saying that the cost of production for their pigs would come to $25 or $30 per hundred pounds. On the other hand I noticed when I was in Winnipeg some two months ago that a man who had won one of the chief prizes for swine at the Brandon winter fair had produced a fairly detailed breakdown of his cost of production, which showed that his cost per hog, not per hundred pounds, was around $21. This would mean around $15 per hundred pounds. This is just one example of the extreme variation between farmers and between areas as to what they calculate their cost of production to be, and perhaps what they actually are, because of the differences in efficiency and so on.

Mr. Boulanger: I wonder if I heard what the minister said correctly. Did he say that the price index for a number of services used by farmers is higher in western Canada than in Quebec?

Mr. Harkness: No. What I said, Mr. Chairman, was that one of these cost of production studies concerning hogs showed that the cost of production was less in Quebec than in Alberta. I think everybody realizes that just could not be so, because the cost of feed is much lower in Alberta than it is in Quebec, and that is the big item in raising hogs.

Mr. Bourget: Could the minister give us a list of the universities or other scientific organizations in Canada that are receiving grants from this branch?

Mr. Harkness: We make grants to a large number of universities. Does the hon. member want the whole list, which comprises some three of these long pages, or is he interested in a particular university which gets one of these grants?

Mr. Bourget: In order to avoid delaying the work of the committee, I wonder if the minister could put the list on Hansard. In this way we would have the list without the minister having to take the time to read all the names. I would appreciate it very much if the minister, with unanimous consent, could put the list on Hansard.

Mr. Harkness: I would be glad to do that with the consent of the committee, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Is the committee agreeable to the minister putting this list on Hansard at this point in our procedings?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Herridge: I am very interested in this question of agricultural research. I made my remarks on the first item and I do not intend to repeat them, but I should like the minister to inform the house to what extent all the research conducted under this item is correlated with the results of the research undertaken by the experimental farms, illustration stations, universities and those making studies under the economics division. That is my first question, and I ask it in order to get a total picture of the results of the research.

My second question is, what co-operation has been established with the Farm Credit Corporation? I think there should be very close co-operation, so the corporation would have a sound knowledge of the productive capacity of any area or for any particular crop. So far as the experimental stations are concerned, we all recognize the good work that has been undertaken by the stations generally. I know that in the British Columbia interior we appreciate the work that has been undertaken by the station at Summerland and the diffusion of the results of their research. However, that station is situated in the Okanagan, and we have a variety of climates in southeastern British Columbia. Quite frequently you will find a change of climate within a few miles which will have a bearing on the growing of certain fruits, whether they are tree fruits or small fruits.

I want to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the department could use the personnel of experimental stations to good advantage in getting a very complete knowledge of the suitability of each area within the area sowed by an experimental station for the growing of certain crops, the production of cattle or any of the various agricultural activities. I mention this because of my experience throughout the years, first of all with the Canadian farm loan board. We now have the Canadian Farm Credit Corporation, but we cannot expect too much of it at present because it is just getting organized. I have met representatives of the Canadian farm loan board who were completely lacking in information concerning the suitability of certain areas, certain lands, for the growing of crops.

I mention that particularly because in our district, as I have said before, we have so many diverse circumstances. I know of one small valley, about seven miles long, which is suitable for stock raising. There is a very nutritious mountain grass growing in that valley. I know of a successful farmer who had a considerable acreage in that valley and who applied for a loan, but was rejected without any official coming to the area to examine local conditions. I do not think that is good enough. I suggest there could be much more co-operation between those undertaking studies of this nature under this research branch and those who are responsible for lending money to farmers.

Finally, as I said, there is such a diversity of conditions that, for instance, in the Arrow lakes area you can grow Delicious apples, yet 20 miles to the north the heat is such that you cannot grow Delicious apples. I wish to suggest, therefore, that there should be an extension of the experimental stations. I am not suggesting anything extensive. I think the department could use more of the farms in the area to demonstrate their suitability for growing certain tree fruits, small fruits, and so on. For instance, in the Renata area peaches are grown to excellent advantage; but 30 miles to the north, under what would appear to the casual observer to be identical conditions, one would be ill-advised to go into the production of peaches.

I should like the minister's comments in this connection, because I think our staff could be used to good advantage in making studies of these regional and local conditions.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, in so far as what you might call a general survey of the activities of the research branch is concerned, or the magnitude of this work, I think the amount of the vote, which for this year is a little more than $30 million out of a total for the whole department of $106 million, indicates the importance we attach to research. The fact that we are allocating to research something in the neighbourhood of 30 per cent of the total funds available to this department is a good indication of the importance we attach to it. The research branch, of course, carries on an extremely wide variety of research into such things as forest biology problems, all sorts of insect pests, all kinds of plant breeding, plant diseases and so on.

I do not believe I should take more of the time of the committee at this moment to go into the hundreds of different types of research projects which are carried on by the research branch. I am sure the hon. member has a very good idea of the vast amount of detailed scientific work which is done by this branch in an endeavour to produce better varieties of plants and animals, to guard against diseases which attack them, to evolve means of eradicating these pests or keep them under control.

As far as a tie-in with economic research is concerned, there is of course a great tie-in in that regard. The economists in the research branch collaborate closely with the people on the experimental farms and so forth, particularly with regard to studies as to the suitability of a particular area for a certain type of production. An area might be quite suitable from the purely physical point of view, but in reference to the distance from markets and so forth it might not be a practical operation to produce a certain type of product in that area. As I say, there is very close co-operation between the economics people on the experimental farms on the one hand and the research branch people on the other hand with regard to matters of that kind.

As to greater study of soils and climates in particular areas, may I say that up to the present time there have been soil surveys for most of the settled areas of Canada. There has been a classification of those soils with regard to what you might call geologic type, and also from the point of view of what they are capable of producing. This consideration, of course, is tied in with the climatic conditions in the particular areas. As the hon. member knows—and he made some mention of the fact—we have a large number of illustration stations and illustration farms where particular experiments are carried on in order to see whether a particular type of plant is suited to growth in that area. That sort of thing is taking place constantly on a very widespread scale.

As to loans and a tie-in between the Farm Credit Corporation and the research branch, may I say that there has been throughout, under the Veterans' Land Act, quite a close tie-in between the regional supervisors and credit advisers under the Veterans Land Act, who now are also acting as regional supervisors and credit advisers for the Farm Credit Corporation, and the local agronomists in Quebec and district agriculturists in other parts of Canada, and also with the dominion Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Herridge: I think that is a big improvement in administration.

Mr. Baldwin: I should like to make a few comments on what I think is one of the most important of the many-pronged attacks which will have to be launched in connection with the problems of agriculture. I refer to the question of research into rural development or rural redevelopment. Some time ago I observed that the United States department of agriculture were concerned, and had been since 1956, with this important phase of agricultural research, and I wrote for and obtained some of their pamphlets. By the way, if any hon. member should be particularly interested, may I say that I have a number of these pamphlets here. I am thinking particularly of the hon. member for Essex East, who made his contribution in the debate a little while ago. I should be glad to arrange a seminar with him if he is interested in these pamphlets.

We in the Peace river country have a particular interest in this matter. We have been largely and primarily an agricultural district which is now in the process of transition to one with secondary industries. Just recently we held in the city of Grande Prairie a northwest resources conference which dealt in large measure with agriculture and the bringing into an agricultural area of secondary industries. We had present some well-known figures, including Mr. J. E. Brownlee, whom I regard as one of our leading statesmen of agriculture, and Dean Bentley of the faculty of agriculture of the University of Alberta.

This particular aspect of research, as indicated in correspondence and in the pamphlets from the United States department of agriculture, has a great future as far as we in Canada are concerned. I was most gratified to observe that our Department of Agriculture, under the guidance of the present minister, had commenced research into this problem, and the United States people mentioned the communications and the contacts they had with the minister and his department.

I am going to refer just briefly to one pamphlet which I received from the United States department with regard to what they consider to be the beneficial effects of this program of rural redevelopment. I am now referring to a pamphlet entitled "Committee for Rural Development Program" under date of January 21, 1960, issued in Washington. It is an answer to the question "What happens when industry moves to the country?" and it gives the effect of the analysis and studies which have been made of this program as it affects a number of states in the United States. The pamphlet reads in part as follows:

> States included are Louisiana, Mississippi, Iowa, Utah, and Ohio. In these five states, studies in selected rural areas with new industrial plants have turned up some significant findings... For example:
> Rural people who obtain jobs in the new factories moving into their area are much younger than average residents of employable age. The average factory worker in the areas under study is about 30 years old. This compares with an average of 50 years for heads of farm families in the same area.
> Industry also increases the income of many rural people,... The living standard of those who find jobs in the new plants has gone up at a faster rate than that of other rural residents. Incomes of plant workers equal, and in many cases exceed, incomes of average families in the same community.
> Plant workers were found to be among the leaders in rural community organizations and groups... Rural residents who find jobs in local industry continue to take an active part in community and religious affairs, the studies indicate.
> About one in four plant workers in areas studied operate farms.
> Their farms are usually smaller than the average in the community.
> Farmers usually reduce their operations after taking an industry job. Farmers working in plants studied had reduced the number of days they farmed as much as 50 per cent,...

Just to sum up, may I say that I think here is an excellent example of a blending together of all that is best in the agricultural way of life with those benefits which come from mingling with some other form of industrial activity. I am glad to see the interest which our department is taking in the matter. I feel that if this research is pressed it will result in at least some alleviation of the situation which affects agriculture today; a situation in which, in some cases unfortunately, efficient farmers, through no fault of their own, may well be compelled to give up their holdings and move into larger urban centres in order to take industrial employment for which they have no particular training, with a consequent increase in the seasonal type of unemployment. I think the incentive of this program is one very much to be desired, and it is one which I commend to the minister.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, immediately before the luncheon recess the hon. member for Peace River had been speaking of the rural redevelopment program in the United States. I am extremely glad to hear of his interest in this subject. It is one which I hope will be shared to a constantly increasing extent by all hon. members of the house.

I do not think we can over-emphasize the importance of the introduction of a rural redevelopment scheme in Canada. We have been working on this now for the last year and a half to two years and we hope to be in a position sometime before the end of this year to be able to make some definite proposals as far as instituting a rural development scheme in Canada which would be adapted to Canadian conditions. Hon. members are probably aware that a group of economists and agriculturists from the department made quite an extensive trip down to the United States to observe their rural redevelopment program and to study it during last year and, as I say, we are now actively working on a program of our own.

Mr. Forgie: Mr. Chairman, the minister has heard me on this before, but I do take an interest in farm products because I did take a great interest in the soybean business. We had a plant in Toronto which developed into a $2.5 million plant, and I am wondering whether any research work is being done along these lines, particularly in the two western provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

It has always been my belief, rightly or wrongly, that if this soybean, which is a legume, could be developed successfully in the province of Manitoba it would forestall a great amount of wheat growing and probably allow the farmers a better livelihood than they have at present. The development in Ontario has been spectacular. They started in 1934 with two or three thousand acres and at the present time I think the figures show 176,000 acres in southwestern Ontario, in seven, eight, or nine counties in the district.

As a matter of interest, I would like to say that in 1955 we exported from Canada 945,000 bushels to the United Kingdom; in 1956, 1,119,000 bushels; and in 1957, 1,508,000 bushels. We exported to Germany in 1954 27,600 odd bushels; in 1955, 7,000 bushels; in 1956, 56,000 bushels; and in 1957, 44,800 bushels. Of course, that is not a large export, but at the same time if this crop can be successfully developed in the western provinces then we will have a further opportunity of exporting soybeans to the continent of Europe where they are in great demand in such countries as Denmark and other countries where they are used for feed purposes. If that could be done we would considerably enhance our foreign trade.

Mr. Chairman, if I can give one illustration to show how important research work is on this question. In 1935 a friend and I who had the first soybean plant gave the farmers of Pelee island 400 bushels of soybeans as a present. For at least the last 20 years Pelee island has been shipping through the Toronto elevators a crop worth $350,000 each year. So one can see it is a matter to be taken seriously and I am wondering whether the dominion government uses any of its research money on soybeans or whether it is left solely to the provinces.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member for Renfrew North has said, I have been aware of his interest in soybeans and the development of a soybean industry and of the steps he has taken himself to promote that industry in Canada. We have through our research activities done a great deal with soybeans. As a matter of fact, the variety Harosoy, which is perhaps now the one most widely used of any variety grown in Canada, was developed at Harrow at our experimental station there. Experimentation is continuing with the purpose in mind of producing soybean varieties which are better adapted to other areas; varieties with a shorter growing season which would be hardier, and so on. By this means we hope to be able very considerably to extend the area in which soybeans can be grown successfully in Canada.

Mr. Forgie: Just one other observation before I sit down. I thank the minister for that explanation. As he knows, about 1935 or 1936 we started to grow a few acres in conjunction with Dr. McCloskey in Winnipeg. I have forgotten whether it was at the University of Manitoba or the agricultural section, but anyway there are now about 15,000 acres of soybeans growing at Morden, Manitoba, as I understand it, and the great difficulty is that of the development of a bean—is this right? —which would ripen before the early frost and, second, a bean which would have sufficient oil content. They are the two problems, are they not, in connection with the work going on?

Mr. Harkness: I would just say in that regard that work on soybeans has increased quite considerably recently at our station at Morden, Manitoba, particularly having in mind producing a type of soybean which would give a better oil yield and have a shorter growing season. We hope to develop strains which will prove more hardy and need a shorter growing season. This would enable the planting area to be extended through the Red river valley.

Mr. Forbes: I was interested in this item because it is one which relates to farm production costs. I should like to refer to the statement made by Mr. J. P. Hudson who conducted a farm management study for the University of Manitoba. Mr. Hudson told the annual meeting of the agricultural bureau of the Winnipeg chamber of commerce that operating costs for an average size farm had gone up to $15,238 annually from $4,800 about 15 years ago. Of every $1.13 an average Manitoba farmer receives, he needs $1 to cover expenses, and only earns 13 cents.

I was wondering whether the federal Department of Agriculture makes any contribution toward research of this type. If we examine Mr. Hudson's report a little further we find that the price of farm machinery is one of the largest items of expense. I would suggest that representatives of farm implement manufacturers should appear before the committee on agriculture with a view to determinating why machinery prices have increased by approximately 100 per cent during the last ten years. Does the department carry out research into the cost of production of farm machinery and its relationship to farm costs?

Mr. Harkness: We have been carrying out some studies along those lines, but this question really comes under the economics branch rather than the research branch which, as I have said, carries out scientific research more from the point of view of the natural scientists. We have also been co-operating with people in the universities and elsewhere, in various provinces, who are engaged in studies along the lines which the hon. member suggested. As far as the particular matter of farm machinery costs goes, it really amounts to this: the increase in the cost of farm machinery is due to the same factors which have brought about an increase in the prices of practically all manufactured goods, namely the generally increased cost of labour, materials and so on.

Mr. Hicks: I do not want to delay the passing of these estimates, but I believe I would be remiss if I did not say a word about the great research branch of our Department of Agriculture. Having been on the experimental farm at Agassiz for 37 years and, two years prior to that, at Lacombe, Alberta, and also at Brandon, Manitoba, I feel I know something about the past and present of this fine institution which I have no hesitation in saying is one of the greatest of its kind in the whole world. These great dominion experimental farms and research services are amalgamated now, but at first all the research work was done on the experimental farms. Not too long ago the research service and the experimental farm service were separated. Now they have been amalgamated again, and it seems to me that that is all to the good, because all those who are qualified and interested in certain aspects of the work are able to work together as a team in their efforts to solve the problems which arise.

This particular item concerns assistance for research work. I do not think it covers universities. Perhaps all hon. members present do not know that the federal Department of Agriculture makes small grants to the universities in respect of certain agricultural work. Then there is a great deal of co-operation between the federal Department of Agriculture, the universities and the provincial departments of agriculture. Some hon. members may have the idea, I imagine, that there is a great deal of duplication in this work, but I can assure them that such is not the case—it is not a matter of duplication, but of co-operation. Some of the trials which are carried on are carried on in several different places around Canada simultaneously, with the result that more is achieved in one year than could have been achieved in many years under the old system.

I feel that this fine research work which is being carried out is closely related to the salaries paid to our best men. If it is necessary to pay increased salaries to our best men in order to retain their services, I believe this should be done. If the funds available are restricted, I suggest it is far better that we should eliminate some of the work which is of lesser importance in order that we may retain the services of our top men, men who have for years and years been learning this job. We do not wish to see them walk off to some other country to take up other posts with implement companies or industrial concerns. Let us keep our top research men in the country.

In closing may I say that the people who work in the Department of Agriculture belong to one of the greatest groups in the whole civil service; they are dedicated men and they are not too worried about whether it is five o'clock, six o'clock or nine o'clock when they finish their tasks.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I should like to take this opportunity to say a few words about the serious condition facing the tomato industry in British Columbia. This industry has been in serious difficulties over the past several years, so much so that during the last three years it has been necessary to sustain it by the protection of the stabilization act.

There are many contributing factors to the decline of the British Columbia tomato industry, an industry which has been established in the province for over 50 years. I am informed by highly qualified people, commenting on the situation that exists in the Okanagan valley, that one of the most pressing necessities is to find a new strain of tomatoes, plants particularly adapted to the soil and climatic conditions of southern British Columbia, particularly the Okanagan and Kamloops areas. A few years ago—as recently as 1958—the experimental farm at Summerland did valuable work on the development of a strain of tomatoes resistant to disease. This was an effective program, and valuable results were achieved, but it is clearly obvious that if the industry is going to continue in British Columbia this other problem of developing tomato varieties specially suitable for growth in the south central section must be tackled.

The people engaged in the industry have told me many times that the reason why there has been such a tremendous growth in the tomato industry in California, a growth which has had such detrimental effects on the industry in British Columbia and elsewhere in Canada, is because for years California undertook a program of research to develop tomato strains particularly suitable to their climatic and soil conditions and as a consequence of that research their production today is probably the greatest on the North American continent.

I realize that not all the solution of this problem of agriculture in British Columbia is to be found in a research program but I would ask the minister to seriously consider the suggestions which have originated in the industry and to accept the fact that there is room for a research program to be undertaken probably at Summerland to develop strains of tomatoes that will increase both the production and volume of the industry in British Columbia so that the industry can survive without artificial assistance.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the words spoken by the hon. member for Fraser Valley and the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke. I should like to take this opportunity of saying a few words about the Summerland experimental farm without going into too great detail. I have often wondered the extent to which Canadians realize the tremendous amount of important work that is done by this experimental farm in the Okanagan valley. Your appreciation of it increases when you think of the many things they are working on including varieties of trees, the development of various strains with the assistance of the British Columbia fruit growers in deciding on what they should do, research into what fertilizers to use, experiments with spraying and spraying materials and finally the by-products which are many and for which a great deal of credit is due to the experimental farm. I cannot resist mentioning the last great success they had which was something that is not advertised in the province of British Columbia; I refer to their excellent apple cider.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question or two. Could he give us some information about the grants that are given to the University of Saskatchewan and the national research council in Saskatoon? Lately they have made wonderful research discoveries with respect to edible oils and their use. In his remarks a week ago the minister mentioned that his department had set up some pilot plants to ascertain how some of these edible oils could be improved or made more readily available through commercial markets. Perhaps the minister would amplify those statements.

[Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke).]

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the hon. member for Fraser Valley for his remarks. He is uniquely qualified to speak with knowledge in this committee on the work of the experimental farms and the research branch of this department.

The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke raised a matter about which there was some discussion last Friday, the tomato situation in British Columbia. I should like to assure him that research is continuing in attempts to produce better varieties of tomatoes in that part of the country. That work is being carried on at Summerland.

I should like to say, however, as I said last Friday, that I think the main difficulty with respect to tomato production in that part of British Columbia is the lack of humus in the soil. It is a matter of improving the richness of the soil in that regard more than anything else, I believe, if the production per acre of tomatoes is to be increased to the point where it will be an economic operation.

The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary mentioned briefly the experimental station we have at Summerland. This station has done an extraordinary amount of good work as far as horticulture is concerned and particularly in terms of fruit growing. That work is continuing at an even more greatly increased tempo than in the past.

The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort mentioned something I referred to last week, the setting up of a pilot plant to determine to what extent rapeseed might be made use of in the production of margarine. This was done by a commercial concern which is in the business of manufacturing margarine and was not done by the department itself.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I did not hear all the remarks about vegetable production in British Columbia and particularly with respect to tomato production and canning in the Okanagan area but I heard a little of what was said and would ask the minister to reconsider and review the latter question. I was pleased about the information given by the minister when I raised this matter the other day and I appreciate the fact that he came to me afterwards and showed me certain graphs, charts, records and the results of investigations made by his department under his instructions relative to the situation. I immediately dispatched to interested persons in my riding a copy of Hansard for that day telling them I was interested more in their comments on what the minister had to say that day than in what I had said. Perhaps he could answer some of the questions raised by the replies I received.

I have in my hand one letter a copy of which I understand was sent to the previous speaker and I am surprised he did not mention it in his remarks. May I read part of the letter I just received on this matter addressed to myself under date of May 5 and referring to the remarks the minister made last week:

I am more than surprised at the remarks of Mr. Harkness. Except for one, these statements are untrue, or only half-truths. The wages paid on B.C. farms are probably higher than those paid in Ontario, but our wages are certainly not too high. They are from $350 per month for skilled farm workmen, and range down to $1 and 75 cents per hour for common labour, and boys and girls from school for harvesting. Piecework rates for harvesting average about double these rates per hour. California farm wages are higher, but Mr. Harkness failed to mention that in California the tomato yield per acre averages more than double B.C. and Ontario because the harvesting season there is more than double in length. He also failed to mention the new strains of tomatoes particularly adapted to California climate were developed largely by federal money.

I believe the previous speaker said that it was not federal money but state money. My information is that it was all federal money.

He did not mention that these same California tomatoes had displaced thousands of acres of tomatoes in central U.S.A. Our farms and canneries of B.C. are more efficient on the average than are those of Ontario and Quebec; otherwise we could not be in business this long with subsidized freight rates favouring canned goods from the east.

Then he refers me to a producer who is also a canner and has this to say:

His company operated a tomato farm of 150 acres in the Kamloops area. They had a brand new tomato factory valued at nearly $200,000. The whole opertion ceased three years ago because of California competition on the coast markets.

I want to emphasize that that is information about an Okanagan canner and producer. He goes on to say:

Our land is not worn out and our yields and quality are better than that of Ontario on the average. We have figures from Ontario agriculturists that show Ontario tomato farms as being smaller than those in B.C. From personal observation I say without fear of successful contradiction that B.C. farms are more mechanized.

They are more mechanized than others in Canada producing the same crop. As I say, this information comes to me as a result of having sent this gentleman a copy of Hansard containing what the minister had to say and asking for this gentleman's comment. That is the reply I received. A few days later I received another letter and in all fairness to the minister I think I should place on the record a part of the letter I received on May 9. It reads in part as follows:

Generally I would say most people think the government missed a pat on the back from grower and labour alike because, as in 1958 and 1959, help for the tomato grower came too late to be more than partially effective. It was not possible in the middle of April to get sufficient acreage planted to enable any of the closed canneries to reopen. We will not be operating our cannery to full capacity unless there is better than a normal crop yield.

If nothing of a permanent nature is done for the tomato industry before next March, the Minister of Agriculture could be right when he inferred the money spent to help this industry in 1958, 1959 and 1960 is wasted. His warning that no help will be forthcoming in 1961 does sound strange.

As a city man but one who is very interested in British Columbia and its problems, and having sent what the minister had to say about this matter to this gentleman, I thought it was only right that I should now convey to the minister the answers I have received in reply to his statement a few days ago and ask him to comment thereon. I would also suggest that possibly there should be a change of mind and that interest in this problem of the Okanagan should be continued in the form of continued assistance but with that assistance being given at a far earlier date than in the past.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I would suspect that the information the hon. member has just put on the record has come from Mr. Bulman of Bulmans canneries in the Okanagan.

Mr. Winch: And the trade unions.

Mr. Harkness: I do not want to carry on a controversy with Mr. Bulman and the trade unions in the Okanagan valley over the tomato situation. However, the figures quoted do indicate the fact that the labour cost there for the handling of tomatoes or for farm labour is considerably higher than in Ontario and higher than for highly qualified farm workers on the prairies who have to handle large combines worth $8,000 to $10,000. What I said last Friday was that there was a very high content of hand labour with respect to some of the tomato production in the Okanagan valley.

However, the general situation, whatever reasons may be given for it, is that the yield of tomatoes in the Okanagan during the period from 1935 to 1945 was actually higher than the yield in California. It was somewhat higher than in California but at the present time it is about half what it is in California. Therefore that indicates that it is not a question so much of the longer growing season. As I say, I am informed by the scientific people, who should know, that one of the basic difficulties in the Okanagan is a lack of humus in the soil. All I can do is pass on that information. In any event, the situation is that whereas during that previous period the yield of tomatoes was actually a bit higher in the Okanagan than in California it is now only about 50 per cent as high as California. California has gone away up and the Okanagan has gone up too to some extent, but you have that disparity. I would also point out that while the tomato people of British Columbia have been insistent on having subsidies each year for the last three years to keep them in business, tomato growers in other parts of Canada, which means chiefly Ontario—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Essex county.

Mr. Harkness: —have not asked for subsidies. As a matter of fact, they were not in favour of the subsidy either last year or this year for themselves or the British Columbia producers. They were finally prevailed upon to agree not to oppose a subsidy being given to British Columbia; they were finally persuaded to withdraw their opposition. The fact is that the industry in British Columbia is not producing efficiently enough, or perhaps I should say cheaply enough, to be able to compete. That is the stituation, no matter what reasons may be advanced for it.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I imagine that much of the most worth-while research work of this branch finds its centre and leadership at the Ottawa experimental farm. I know that during recent months the minister has been questioned by the many friends of the farm about his policy with respect to land use there, particularly encroachment by buildings. I am sure the minister will be glad to have perhaps the first opportunity this session to indicate what his views are in this respect. Frequently when we visit the farm we see a new building and there are those who are wondering whether or not we will long have this admirable oasis in our capital city if this continues unduly.

Mr. Harkness: I think my views with regard to the central experimental farm are well known and have been very well publicized in the local Ottawa papers. I have stated on numerous occasions that I am opposed to any of this land being alienated for building purposes and that the only buildings that should be erected are the laboratories necessary to carry on the work for which the farm exists. In the two or three years since I have been minister the only construction has been along that line, laboratories for the use of the scientists who are carrying on experimental work at the farm.

Mr. Peters: I should like to say a few words. We have always been very pleased with the work the federal experimental farms do and we are concerned over the fact that the farm in northern Ontario, that is at Kapuskasing, has not gone ahead in recent years. The farm originally did a very competent job in the development of new strains of grain and strains of potatoes that were suitable for the northern divide area. This farm has a big contribution to make to the Canadian economy. It is an experimental farm situated on the Arctic slope, and situated also in the great clay belt which eventually will supply, without any doubt, a large percentage of the agricultural produce that will be used in the industrial sections of Ontario.

Over the years, as I say, this farm has served a purpose. However, in recent years it has done less and less in the line of development work according to the information the people who are dependent upon that farm receive. It would seem that the experimental farm at Kapuskasing has several other jobs to do besides the one it has done in the past. One of them, I would suggest, is to help the community in designing a new method of marketing the products of that area. As the great clay belt is deforested our growing season lengthens. As the trees are cut, the water and muskeg situation recedes at a rapid rate and the farmers are able to produce exceptional crops on that northern divide. They have gained world championships in the production of peas, potatoes and one of the types of wheat.

It would seem to me that now we have indicated these things can be done in that part of northern Ontario the department has an obligation to conduct research to aid the people in selling these products. These farmers are a long distance from the markets, and it would seem to me that the experimental farm at Kapuskasing could be used to develop new methods of canning the produce that is available there. In this way the people who are engaged in agricultural production in that area could be helped. Assistance of this type has been given in other parts of the country and in other parts of the world, and the people have been able to can blueberries, small fruits such as cranberries, raspberries, strawberries, and so on. It would seem to me that since these fruits grow profusely in that area in their natural state work could be done by the federal government at the experimental station to domesticate some of these varieties, such as blueberries and cranberries. Other countries have been able to do this and are now sending blueberries into Canada. In the past, we have never been able to ship blueberries in refrigerator cars to markets like New York. It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that the experimental station at Kapuskasing could be reorganized so that more work could be done in the development of methods of processing and handling all the products that are readily produced in that area.

I think there is another field of agricultural research that could be followed in northern Ontario. I am sure the minister has received requests from the federation of agriculture, and particularly from the farm unions in Timiskaming, with relation to the agricultural lime problem. We have agricultural lime available in that area. There are quite large deposits, and it would seem to me that the government could offer—

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, there is a special item here in connection with lime assistance and I think we should deal with this matter under that item rather than under experimental farms.

Mr. Peters: I am well aware of the subvention on agricultural lime. What I am saying is that the government could give some assistance in the form of research to aid in the development of this lime deposit. It would seem to me this problem would fall into the research category. We have not the facilities in northern Ontario to ascertain whether or not this lime, when it is crushed into the proper size, is water soluble, has the proper calcium content or contains too much dolomite or some of the other impurities. I feel some assistance could be given to the farmers in that area in the research line which would help them improve their self-sufficiency in that area.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member thinks that the work at Kapuskasing is being reduced, he has a complete misconception of it. This is a very large research station. We have 54 employees there who are carrying on a very wide variety of research activities. It is true that in recent years the emphasis has been put more on pasture crops, forage crops, livestock and so forth, for the very reason the hon. member mentioned that there should be a tie-in with what can be marketed. The fact is that livestock can be marketed to much greater advantage in that area than can grain crops and other crops of that kind. It is for that reason we have emphasized pasture crops, pasture management and livestock to a greater extent in recent years at that particular station.

However, the station does carry on, as I say, a wide variety of activities, namely animal husbandry; apiculture, that is the testing of hybrid bees, the flight behaviour of foraging bees; cereal testing on all kinds of special hybrid material to improve varieties of oats and barley to make them more adaptable for northern areas; the production and foundation of registered grains, to promote the use of varieties recommended, and so on. There are field husbandry studies in drainage, soil tillage and fertility; management of heavy clay soils; pasture improvement and so forth. I have already mentioned forage crops. Then, in horticulture there is the testing of small fruits and vegetables; methods of producing vegetables within a spruce windbreak versus open growing. Then in the field of poultry, there is the controlled housing experiment on poultry, and things along that line. As I say, this is a very large and active experimental station. It is carrying on a great deal of work which I think is of considerable advantage not only to the area in which the station is situated but to all areas in much the same latitude and with the same soil.

In so far as blueberries are concerned, we concentrate our blueberry research in the maritime provinces. We have done a great deal of it there. The results of that research are just as applicable to the area around Kapuskasing as to the area in which the research is conducted. It is the same as the situation with respect to experiments in the improvement of the Hereford breed which is carried on in Alberta. The results of these experiments are applicable right across Canada, just as they are in the particular area in which the experiments are being conducted.

Then in so far as lime is concerned, there have been all kinds of experiments with regard to lime. All the information derived from these experiments has been published. I do not believe there is any shortage of either research or information. There is plenty of information available on the results of research in connection with the use of lime, and if farmers want to ask for it they can get it.

Mr. Peters: In reply may I say that I did not want to imply that the Kapuskasing station was not serving a satisfactory function. It is doing so. It may be said that I owe my understanding of experimental farms to the fact that I lived on one all my early life. My father was the manager of an experimental farm at New Liskeard. I was just suggesting that in the Kapuskasing area—and in fact this farm has been in existence for a period beginning prior to the first world war—we have reached the point of having done the experimenting that is necessary in grains and have been able to produce remarkable crops in that area. Now the problem is as to what we are going to do with the crop when we produce it. There is nobody to buy it. It is too far from the market to ship it any place.

I am suggesting that probably the experimental farm might give some assistance in marketing procedures, particularly in connection with peas. For instance the best peas in the world are grown there, as has been proven in open competition in world fairs.

We have no canning factory at all in that area. The closest canning factory was in New Liskeard and that factory has been closed down for a number years. It would appear to me that the experimental farm could do a service to the area now by assisting in that field of what in industry is called prefabrication. I am not sure what you would call it in agriculture. I refer to the field in which they assist in packaging or in canning or in making ready for market the product which they can produce.

With respect to the work on limestone, I am aware of the fact that information on the conditions of soil is readily available to the farmers throughout the area and also as to the type of limestone. My complaint is that a number of farmers themselves have small quarries on their farms or in the immediate area and they do not know—and they have asked me to find out—whether there is available any assistance to help develop enough of a sample of this limestone so that they will know whether it is worth while to put in a plant or a crusher so they can use it on their own farms. Some of the limestone is not suitable for use as agricultural lime and this is the field in which I was interested.

The limestone in the Earlton area in particular is of a grade which would be suitable if made available for agriculture. It may be possible that through the Department of Agriculture they could send samples of this limestone to the department of mines and have the crushing done there and also a analysis which would indicate whether this was a feasible operation for developing agricultural lime in our own area. As the minister is well aware, they have already taken advantage of the agricultural lime subventions in Timiskaming in recent years and there is a growing need for lime. I think there would be some advantage to the government as well as to the people there if it could be produced on a local basis.

Mr. Harkness: As to the local lime or limestone which exists there, may I say that if the farmers there wish to send in samples we would be glad to test them out and advise as to what their best use would be and so on. The actual distribution of the limestone under the assistance program is carried on by the province. We pay part of the cost and the province pays part of the cost, but the actual distribution is carried on by the province. The province would be the place to get in touch with if the farmers wish to work up a sale for this lime for the joint dominion-provincial subsidized distribution.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This item has to do with research under the national research council. At Saskatoon Mr. Craig, who I think is head of the department out there, made a statement which was published in the Alberta Wheat Pool Budget to the effect that if one third of the vegetable oils used in margarine consumed in Canada was rapeseed oil that would create a need for 300,000 acres of rapeseed to be grown in Canada. I wonder whether the minister can report on this pilot plant that has been set up to ascertain whether rapeseed oil could not be used in margarine. I wonder whether this pilot plant is a direct part of the national research council or whether some university is undertaking this work. Just where does it come in?

Mr. Harkness: Of course there is no question at all that rapeseed oil can be used in the production of margarine. It has been used in Europe for that purpose for the last 60 years or 70 years. As I said a bit earlier, this pilot plant was set up by a private company. I had a considerable number of conversations with the management of this company, and asked them particularly to set up this plant to ascertain what could be done. Their complaint about using rapeseed oil in the manufacture of margarine in this country was along the line that they use certain formulae and that if they change the formula they may lose the advantage of the advertising they have done in order to publicize that particular type of margarine. The purpose of the pilot plant was in order to see to what extent quantities of rapeseed oil could be used in the manufacture of margarine without changing what you might call the texture, or the taste or anything else of that particular brand and also to ascertain the extent to which margarine could be produced which would be acceptable if made more or less completely or to a large extent from rapeseed oil.

Mr. Herridge: I want to raise only one matter on this item but I raise it because it is of particular importance to a number of people in my constituency. An interest is being taken in the question not only by farmers organizations but by chambers of commerce and other organizations. They are showing a renewed interest in the development of agriculture in the Kootenays. The first orchards in the Kootenays were planted in a period from 50 years to 40 years ago, generally speaking. There were a few in existence prior to that time, but the bulk of them were planted in that period. Consequently they have now come to the end of their major production period and on account of aging and so on many of them have gone into decay and there is no production on a good number of those orchards. I am speaking with some experience.

I have had 50 years' experience as a very small tree fruit farmer and I know what I am talking about when it comes to the matter of tree fruits. The experience throughout the years has indicated that in the Kootenay area—and I am talking about west Kootenay particularly—owing to the cool nights and the particular soil conditions and the climatic conditions in general, any replanting should be largely of certain varieties of pears and of cherries. Possibly the top quality cherries produced in Canada are produced there owing to the local climatic conditions and soil conditions. However, the old cherry orchards in many cases have been affected by little cherry disease and the planting of new cherry orchards is being delayed awaiting the results of the investigation into little cherry disease or the production of a variety that will be proof against the virus of little cherry disease. I know of one instance in which a man is waiting to plant 10 acres in cherries but is afraid to do so until there is some assurance that the varieties he plants will be proof against little cherry disease or that some remedy has been found for little cherry disease.

My question is this. In view of the great importance of this problem in certain areas in the Kootenays and the fact that if some solution can be found it will mean the planting of hundreds of acres of cherries in the area, which planting is now being delayed, can the minister tell the committee the results to date with respect to research into little cherry disease so far as the orchards that are planted are concerned and so far as the production of new varieties that will be free of the virus of little cherry disease is concerned.

Mr. Harkness: I am informed that we are doing as much work on this little cherry disease as the department thinks can usefully be done. Apparently a great deal of classification of material is required in order to try to get a variety of trees or plants which are not subject to little cherry disease. We actually have a man in Japan at the present time classifying material there in an attempt to get species for breeding purposes for use in this country which will be or are immune to this little cherry disease. The problem has not yet been solved but I am informed that we think we are making a considerable amount of progress.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister could comment on the situation as regards research into the use and processing of strawberries. I am naturally most interested in strawberries living as I do only a few miles from the Fraser valley which, as I pointed out on a previous occasion, I think it can be said without any honest contradiction produces the finest strawberries in the world. It has been a declining agricultural industry and I would like to ask if any work has been done at all by way of research or any other type of study or planning in order to maintain that industry.

I ask that question because I completely fail to understand why, with the productive capacities of many parts of Canada, in particular the Fraser valley area of British Columbia, at a time like this in Vancouver, Burlington and right here in Ottawa, fresh frozen strawberries come from California and Holland. I completely fail to grasp the reason for that situation in view of the fine strawberries that can be grown and have been grown in British Columbia. Can the minister make any comment on the situation?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, as far as the latter statement is concerned, about the only comment I can make is that in my experience in these matters when you look into any particular situation you find in most cases it is due to economic conditions that imports come into one part of the country, although perhaps not into another part, of some particular product such as strawberries.

As far as research into the processing end of things is concerned, we have been carrying on some research in order to develop better shipping and better freezing varieties. The demand at the present time is getting to be more and more for frozen strawberries rather than canned strawberries, and as a result of that we have been attempting to develop varieties which will stand up better to shipping so that the chances of shipping strawberries fresh over great distances would be extended.

Mr. Winch: Perhaps I was a little misunderstood. If you go into an Ottawa store today to buy strawberries you will see the York brand of fresh frozen strawberries. You cannot tell me that they can produce fresh frozen strawberries at this time of the year in Holland or the United States any more than we can in the Fraser valley. Therefore they must be strawberries which were grown months ago. They cannot be grown in greenhouses. I have never heard of strawberries being grown in greenhouses in my life, and therefore it must be due to some system of processing. If they can do it in Holland and the United States, how come we cannot do it or are not doing it in British Columbia? Is any thought being given to this situation?

Mr. Harkness: Of course we are doing a lot in the way of frozen fruits and vegetables. We are freezing strawberries in Canada, and I believe we are doing that in the Fraser valley. But as regards frozen strawberires at the present time from the United States, they might well be strawberries growing now in some of the more southerly states. The ones imported from Holland I would think must be ones carried over from last year. But in any event we do freeze strawberries in this country, and quite a lot of our consumption of frozen strawberries, I think, are of our own production.

Mr. Winch: Try and buy some in Ottawa.

Mr. Harkness: It may be that the ones frozen last year have run out by this time, I do not know. But in any event, as I said last week in answer to the hon. member, I think in connection with pork luncheon meat, you have to expect some imports of quite a few of these commodities. You cannot expect to keep out all the products of other countries if we are to carry on any sort of reasonable freedom of trade at all.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, there is one specific point I wish to deal with and to ask the minister about at this time. I should say, first, that the minister was very kind to write to me earlier in the year indicating that there were to be some personnel changes and transfers in the experimental farm at Smithers, that some of the people were going to be transferred to Prince George. Since that time I have received a number of communications, and more recently a telegram, from people in Smithers who have some misapprehensions about the future of the experimental farm there, and I wonder if the minister would be kind enough to give the committee at this time an indication of what is in store for the experimental farm at Smithers, whether it will be retained as it is at the moment, and with respect to the staff transfers, how many are to be transferred, where they are to be transferred to, what classification or category they would fall into, and things of that nature. Would he give a general indication of the future prospects for the experimental farm at Smithers, because of the thoughts and fears expressed there to the effect that there is an impending closure of that particular farm?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the situation at Smithers is that we have transferred from there two research officers and they are now going to be stationed at the farm at Prince George, not very far away. The impression seems to have become current in some quarters out there that this farm will be closed down and done away with. This is incorrect. I have written to that effect to the Smithers board of trade and some other organizations there who seemed to have that idea and who were writing or wiring me in connection with the matter.

The farm will be continued. The two research officers who were there have been moved to Prince George where their high degree of training can be used much more effectively and efficiently to the benefit of agriculture in the area and in Canada generally than it could with the two of them sitting there more or less isolated from any larger and more specialized research institution.

Mr. Howard: Those will be pleasant words to people in Smithers, that the plant there is to be continued. I wonder if the minister could indicate whether there are any other contemplated staff transfers or reductions in staff at that experimental farm, and at the same time indicate what is the present staff strength at that particular farm.

Mr. Harkness: I am just attempting to find what the present strength of the farm is; it has to be looked up in one of these big books here and will take a minute or two. But in any case there is no intention at the present time to reduce the strength of the personnel at the farm any further. The exact work which will be carried on by the farm is under study at the present time and no final determination has been made as to what type of work will be chiefly emphasized at the farm. I now have the number of employees; there are 22 employees there.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the minister say a brief word about the experimental station in Woodslee established two years ago in the corn centre of Canada. As the hon. gentleman knows, Essex county is responsible, along with Kent, for 65 per cent of the corn produced in Canada and it would be interesting to know what assessment the minister places on an institution which I think is doing very outstanding work.

Mr. Harkness: As the hon. gentleman knows, the Woodslee station is a substation of the Harrow experimental and research set-up. In a minute I will have the general line-up in connection with what is carried on at Woodslee. The following studies are being made, in particular, at the Woodslee substation.

Evaluation of cropping systems for the improvement of physical condition and productivity of clay soil.

Evaluation of fertilizing materials and methods of applying them in the improvement of crop yields.

Evaluation of tillage methods in the production of cash crops.

Studies on the use of crop residues in the cropping system to maintain soil physical condition.

Studies on rates of planting cash crops in conjunction with fertility levels.

Soil compaction studies as related to cropping systems, soil physical condition and soil moisture.

Studies on soil physical condition as affected by synthetic soil conditioners at different depths and deep rooted legumes.

Study of tile flow characteristics and plant nutrient losses into tile drains under different cropping systems.

Breeding and selection in sweet clover for rootrot resistance in this soil improving crop.

Introduction and observation of new grasses and legumes to determine whether adapted to the area.

Item agreed to.

7. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $6,470,910.

Mr. Peters: May I ask the minister where this acquisition of buildings is taking place? Does this refer to the headquarters here in Ottawa?

Mr. Harkness: No. The buildings listed here are for stations right across Canada. There are a few laboratory buildings for the central experimental farm included, but the great bulk of the building is on experimental stations scattered across the country.

Mr. Benidickson: Is any expenditure for the hon. minister's proposed new administration building listed under the Department of Public Works estimates?

Mr. Harkness: Yes. If a new administration building is built the vote would be found under the Department of Public Works and the work would be carried on by that department.

Mr. Peters: May I ask the minister if the provision of animal laboratories in conjunction with the experimental stations is included in this estimate?

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member means the one at Kapuskasing?

Mr. Peters: Actually I have in mind the station at New Liskeard, which is a provincial station. They have put in laboratories at the Ontario experimental farm there and I was wondering whether the federal government is doing something similar. It would be a laboratory sufficient to carry out tests for tuberculosis and similar work.

Mr. Harkness: I do not know what kind of laboratories have been put in on a provincial farm, naturally, but this vote does include funds for a considerable number of laboratories of different types at different places.

Item agreed to.

Production and marketing branch—

9. Agricultural products board administration, $10,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the minister tell us something about the services which this vote provides?

Mr. Harkness: This is a board which was set up some years ago to buy or sell agricultural products, particularly to sell them on behalf of the government. The board has been used on several occasions in the past to dispose of certain surpluses, and it might well be used again during the next year or two to help us dispose of some of our pork surplus.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does it deal with wheat surpluses?

Mr. Harkness: No. As the hon. gentleman knows, the selling of wheat comes entirely under the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Peters: Has this board any functions with relation to the disposal program under the Colombo plan? Does it deal with transactions of a welfare type? There must be some agency which deals with such matters as this.

Mr. Harkness: This has nothing whatever to do with the Colombo plan. The board was set up, some eight or ten years ago, in the first place in order to import butter when there was a butter shortage in the country. Afterwards it was used to dispose of stocks of meat. Since then it has been comparatively inactive. However, as I say, we might well make a considerable amount of use of it in disposing of the present surplus of canned pork.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not know whether this particular problem which is in my mind would come under this item or not, but I suspect, from the outline which the minister has given, that it would. I was tempted to deal with my particular concern when the hon. member for Vancouver South was speaking about the reduction of the tomato crops in the Okanagan valley in British Columbia.

The opposite situation has developed in the county of Essex, which is, of course, one of the great tomato producing counties of this country. I will not enter into superlatives as to which is the best, but I had always understood, in my inexpert interpretation of these matters, that the tomato crop in Essex county was in a class by itself. That, however, is not the point. The point is that in the past two or three years the farmers in Essex county, and in a special way in that portion which I have the honour of representing, have been confronted by the Heinz Company and the canneries generally with a forced reduction in the acreage of tomato growing. This represents a very great loss to the farmers of our county.

The minister may say that all this item deals with is not a reduction of acreage but a situation where there is a surplus of production. That would be a fair comment. Now there would be in my area a surplus of production if it were not for this enforced cut by the canneries and others in the acreage devoted to tomato production. Is there anything which this board could do, in the opinion of the minister, to find ways and means of allowing at least normal acreage production to develop; to find ways and means of taking care of the difference in production between what the canneries need and what the farmers are able to produce?

At Easter time I met with a large group of farmers in my own constituency on this problem and I met with farmers in one or two other counties last fall. There is genuine concern about this matter. I am wondering if this particular products board could not be invited by the suggestion I am making, if it has any merit, to look into this problem which concerns a large group of farmers and which I am sure applies not only to Essex county but also to Kent and perhaps even to Lambton but in a special way to the county of Essex.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, this board has no function whatever in that regard. It is purely what you might call a merchandising board set up by the government of which the hon. gentleman was a member for the specific purpose of buying or selling agricultural commodities on behalf of the government. As I indicated, it has been used only to a limited extent for that purpose.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would there be any other agency that could undertake this?

Mr. Harkness: As far as the general question raised by the hon. member is concerned, there seems to be a general impression on his part and on the part of some other hon. members that the amount of canning of tomatoes has been reduced materially in Canada. That is not in accord with the facts. Tomato canning has been materially reduced in British Columbia but not in Ontario. The actual figures for the amount of tomatoes canned in the years 1954 to the present time are as follows:

Year	Amount
1954	43.5 million pounds
1955	85.9 million pounds
1956	86.9 million pounds
1957	76.6 million pounds
1958	76.7 million pounds
1959	78.6 million pounds

In spite of the fact that there has been a material reduction in British Columbia, canning last year was nearly twice what it was in 1954. It was a little less than in 1955 and 1956 but more than in 1957 or 1958.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I appreciate the correctness of the statistics the minister has given but I do not think they alter the point I made. Large canning companies in my county did advise the farmers last year that because they had a surplus of tomato pulp they would simply not require the same acreage production, let us say of a year previous. I went to one of these large canneries myself and having seen the storage of the large quantity of tomato pulp I could quite understand the position that was taken. As a result, however, there was a substantial cut in the acreage. In the case of one company it involved as many as 3,000 farmers. That is a serious situation in any county. What the minister says about the increase in population and additional uses for the product is probably true but it does not alter the fact that the situation as I have indicated exists. I direct this matter to the attention of the minister and his officials in the hope that they will find it possible to give close examination to this problem.

Mr. Harkness: We would be glad to look into the matter but I think the hon. member realizes that in an economy such as ours we cannot force companies to take larger acreages of tomatoes than they are prepared to purchase. The production in fruits and vegetables varies up and down quite a bit. The figures I read indicate that in 1954 there were only 43.5 million pounds of tomatoes canned and the next year there were twice that many, 85.9 million pounds. That is just in the nature of the business. It varies up and down from year to year, sometimes to a marked degree.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But if, for instance, there were a surplus of production, let us say in Essex county, it might be possible to take care of the shortage that exists as reflected in the imports from California into British Columbia. I know that my hon. friend would not want to see Essex county tomatoes competing against tomatoes grown in British Columbia, but I am sure he would prefer that to competition from California.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, has the government given consideration to enlarging the functions and powers of this board? The minister indicated it has not done very much in the last year or two. He referred to some of the things it did including work on imports of butter. I presume he referred to Mr. Howe trading a boat load of butter for a boat load of machinery in which he was interested. In any event the board has not proved entirely satisfactory. I think consideration should be given to enlarging the scope of the board so it could take care of surpluses that are developing and put them into disposable form.

Last year I received representations from various fruit and vegetable growers in the Welland area. I assume other hon. members received them. Why otherwise would they send them to me in northern Ontario? The representations stated that many canning companies in the area were purchased by United States agencies with no intention of operating them. The canning facilities were tied up and the fruit could not be harvested, much of it rotting on the trees. It was necessary to take cherries to the cannery early in the morning in order to dispose of them because some canneries operated only on a partial basis.

Without much expenditure we could establish under this board facilities for canning surplus products thus eliminating waste. I urge the minister to consider this suggestion. This could be worked on a deficiency basis. The produce could be bought at a nominal price and when sold at a later date the complete payment could be made to the producer. I think it would be advantageous both to the consumer and to the people who find it impossible to can these products that are going to waste.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, there is no need in the world for any expansion of the activities of this particular board. Actually the hon. member was talking chiefly about operations of the stabilization board. The stabilization board is the board which is responsible for supporting the prices of farm commodities and doing that by the method of purchase, the method of a deficiency payment or whatever method may be decided upon as the best one for the particular product. That has absolutely nothing to do with this particular board we are talking about which was really set up as a stand-by organization so that it could act as the merchandising agent for government stocks or as the purchaser if the government wanted to buy stocks, which under the act could not be done by the old agricultural prices support board or by the present agricultural stabilization board.

Item agreed to.

10. Agricultural Stabilization Act administration, $315,130.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, on item No. 10, dealing with agricultural prices stabilization, I would like to say a few words about the support price on hogs.

Since the department changed its policy with regard to the support price for hogs, we had a few surprises. The first was that during the first quarter of 1960, we expected to receive about 170,000 hogs a week, while we received an average of only 156,000.

Because of those reduced arrivals, prices have been steady, especially on the eastern market.

In western Canada, where they have the largest hog surplus, prices dropped substantially.

I have here a publication issued by the Canadian packers board for March and April 1960, showing the average premiums obtained on the Toronto, Winnipeg and Calgary markets.

We note, for instance, that in mid-March, the price for pork went down to $16.66 per hundredweight in Calgary, to $17.25 in Winnipeg and to $19 in Toronto. They went up later on, increasing by about 19 cents in western Canada, but scarcely by 2 or 3 cents in Toronto and Montreal.

What is strange is that prices kept falling in spite of decreased arrivals. There are reasons for that. First, we are told that hog shipments to the United States have decreased by 30 per cent.

A second reason is the equalization payments that the federal government requires from exporters in order to ensure that cuts from carcasses subject to deficiency payments will not be exported at less than floor prices.

At mid-March prices stood at 7 cents a pound for plain cuts. This is the result of an unenlightened policy that was established by the government on the basis of ill-timed considerations.

In view of the situation facing hog breeders at present, I should like to direct a few questions to the minister.

First, I would like to ask him if he can tell us about the production outlook for the next half-yearly periods and about the expected prices?

(Text):

Mr. Harkness: We estimate that pork production during the next six months will be down approximately 16 per cent from what it was last year. The fact that the production of hogs is down indicates that the deficiency payment method of supporting the price, which was put into effect at the first of the year although it was announced nearly a year ago that this was going to be done, has been effective in helping to bring the production of hogs into line with what can be marketed during the next six months at a reasonably satisfactory figure.

If we had not taken the action we did of changing the method of support for hogs there is no question at all in my mind that at the present time the production of hogs would be several per cent higher than at this time last year rather than being more than 12 per cent lower than what it was at this time last year. Over the year it is anticipated that production will run perhaps 16 per cent lower than last year. It was essential to bring production into line with what can be consumed in this country and marketed abroad because we were rapidly getting into the position where there was not enough storage space in Canada to hold the pork chilled. As a result we had to can a considerable amount and the demand for canned pork is not very extensive anywhere.

Therefore, as I say, we had already reached a position where a change absolutely had to be made. We could not continue piling up surplus pork. The change which was made has been successful in bringing production down so that it is much more nearly in line with the demand. At the same time the prices which have been received have not been very greatly below the national average support price of $22.65 a hundred. As a matter of fact, from January 1 to April 2 the average price received for hogs across Canada was $20.55. That is $2.10 a hundred less than the support price which means, of course, that a deficiency payment of that amount was due farmers as of that date. This varies, of course, from week to week depending on what the price of hogs is during each week.

Mr. Argue: But there would not necessarily be any deficiency payment paid.

Mr. Harkness: No, that is correct, not necessarily.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I see that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) is satisfied with his price support policy for farm products because he has been able to dispose of, or to diminish, the stocks of pork we had in storage.

[Mr. Boulanger.]

If I remember well, that was not the object of the legislation when the agricultural stabilization act was passed. The object was to establish prices related to the cost price, as according to the legislation the government wanted to hand back to the farmers the share in the national revenue to which they were entitled. The minister is not at all acting in accordance with the spirit of his own legislation. He does not want to protect the farmers. He wants to get rid of surpluses, and in order to prove what I am saying, I shall quote some figures from the production cost index for farm products.

(Text):

In so far as the index numbers of farm prices of agricultural products are concerned, if we take the month of March, 1959 we find the index stood at 441.4, while in the same month this year it was 426.3, a decrease of 15.1 per cent. If we take the price index of a number of commodities and services used by farmers—I have the figures for January, 1960 for all of Canada—we find the index stood at 266.7, while in January of last year it was 269.5. The index of commodities and services used by farmers has increased, while the prices the farmer has received have decreased. This is the situation of the farmer and of the hog producers throughout the country, especially in western Canada where the price of hogs went as low as $16 per hundred pounds.

I say to the minister that was not the policy we adopted under the stabilization board. I have a few other questions to ask the minister. Can he tell us how many pounds of pork and pork products have been imported from the United States since the lifting of the embargo on February 8, 1960?

Mr. Harkness: I have not got the figures here but I believe practically no pork has been imported from the United States since the lifting of the embargo. If there has been any, it has been an extraordinarily limited quantity. When you take into consideration the duty and shipping charges, and particularly when you take into consideration the quality of United States pork, the conditions have not been such as would lend themselves to the movement of United States pork into this country during this period.

I am sorry to hear the hon. member is accusing me of not wishing to support the farmers. He says that all I am interested in is reducing the surplus. This is completely incorrect, of course, and I think all the farmers in the country recognize that we are concerned to secure for them the best prices possible. Our whole work under the stabilization board has been concerned with returning to the farmer as good a price as we could possibly get for him over a period of time. To maintain an incentive price which causes a very large production, much more than can be marketed, does not help the farmer from the long term point of view. As a matter of fact, this creates a situation in which the farmer is going to take a very severe loss. The best way of stabilizing the farmers' income and maintaining a reasonable income for them in connection with any particular product over a period of time is to ensure that the production of that product is not greater than the amount we can market. Once we get into a position where production is considerably greater than the amount we can market then eventually the farmer is going to have to take a severe cut in price at some time and he will suffer accordingly.

In order to avoid a situation of that sort we changed the method of support for hogs. As I have indicated, and contrary to what the hon. member has been saying, the prices of hogs have not dropped very much below the support levels. He said that in western Canada they did drop to low levels. Actually in western Canada the average prices received for hogs in the first three months of this year were less than the differential which had existed under the old method of support by purchase, as compared with prices in eastern Canada. Had deficiency payments been made at the end of April the amount which would have been received by Manitoba and Saskatchewan hog producers would have been more on the national average basis than on the regional average basis. If the regional average basis had been in effect Manitoba would have received a payment of $1.97 a hundred and Saskatchewan $1.82 a hundred, whereas on a national basis they would have received a payment of $2.10 a hundred. In other words, the idea which the hon. member apparently had that prices in western Canada fell away lower than they did in eastern Canada is just not correct.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: The Minister of Agriculture knows very well how to dodge our questions. He quoted some figures which had nothing to do with my question. The point I wanted to make, and I did mention it, was that the Agricultural Stabilization Act which was passed in 1958 did not tend to protect farmers' revenue, but to put a stop to surpluses.

I have here a list of prices which I received from the Minister of Agriculture. I mentioned before that the price of bacon from 1947 to 1956 inclusive, was $27.16 per 100 pounds, while from 1957 to 1959, that price had fallen to $26.19. However, as I said earlier, production costs had increased, whereas prices have gone down. And people try to make our farmers believe that they are protected by our passing a law on farm prices support.

That is the point I wanted to make; but, as usual, when I submit some arguments which he cannot refute, the minister circumvents the question.

(Text):

Mr. Harkness: I must say, with all respect, that the hon. member never brings forward an argument that I cannot contradict. He says he is asking a question when, actually, he is making a statement which is, in most cases, not supported by the facts. He stated the stabilization act was not passed with the idea of helping farmers. Nothing could be farther from the truth. I think there is nobody, probably even in this chamber, who believes that statement. The stabilization act was passed with the idea of improving the general income position of farmers. It has proved extremely beneficial in that regard.

At one time the hon. member was complaining about the amount of money we had paid to farmers under the stabilization act. Last year we paid in the neighbourhood of $57 million to farmers under this act in order to support the prices of agricultural products. The hon. member was complaining about the amount of money we were spending—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, no.

Mr. Harkness: Oh, yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; I remember what the hon. gentleman said. What he said was that he was sorry more of that money did not go to the farmers; that is what he was complaining about.

Mr. Harkness: As a matter of fact all the benefit of the $57 million went to the farmers. Actually the farmers got the benefit of at least two or three times that amount. So far as dairy products alone are concerned, for example, in the calendar year 1958 we made expenditures to support dairy products in the neighbourhood of $10 million or $12 million. The prices which the farmers received for their dairy products were at least $90 million to $100 million more than they would have received had this support not been in operation. In other words, the actual amount of money which is spent under the stabilization act is no measure of the value of the act to the farmers so far as an increase in income is concerned and the case of the dairy farmers is an outstanding example of that. The world price of dairy products is about half what it is in Canada.

Were it not for the stabilization act and the prices we guaranteed under it for dairy products, the prices dairy farmers would have received during the past two years to three years for their dairy products would have beeen very much less than those they received. As I say, in that one calendar year 1958 the amount would have been about $90 million to $100 million less than they actually obtained.

(Translation):

Mr. Belzile: Mr. Chairman, before item No. 10 is adopted, I should like to say a few words about it.

Before dealing with the suggestions I propose to make to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness), I should like to point out to the house that I deeply regret the harsh words which the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger) said, a moment ago, about the Minister of Agriculture, i.e. that the policy of the Department of Agriculture tended to prevent the accumulation of surpluses rather than help farmers.

For my part, I feel that the Minister of Agriculture is doing all he can to help the agricultural class in all respects and particularly in regard to farm prices stabilization.

I am not afraid to say that, if I had been Minister of Agriculture, having to dispose of a surplus of 78 million pounds of butter, I would have hesitated a few days before deciding to maintain the support price on butter at 64 cents a pound for the current year until May 30, 1961.

I believe that because of this decision, the federal Minister of Agriculture certainly did not deserve to be accused of working for the reduction of agricultural production, rather than for the agriculture class generally.

Personally, I am happy to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture for the wise decision he took about the price of butter. I participated actively in this request because I was among those who asked the Minister of Agriculture for special consideration on this matter. I was glad to see that he responded favourably to our pressure. On behalf of all the agricultural class of my province and of the country, I wholeheartedly thank him for that.

And now, Mr. Chairman, there is another product which comes under the ambit of the agricultural stabilization act. I refer to wool.

It is estimated that last year's production is slightly over that of 1958, which was 5,755,556 pounds.

If this happens, the Canadian wool production will have increased for the second consecutive year. In 1957, a total of 4,112,000 pounds were sold.

[Mr. Harkness.]

The improvement in the wool market in 1959 resulted in a general price increase, and in an immediate drop of 7 cents a pound in the deficiency payment.

According to the daily DBS bulletin dated March 6, 1960, wool production in Canada went up from 7,624,000 pounds in 1958 to 8,287,000 in 1959, or an increase of 8.7 per cent. Between those two years, the shorn wool production went up from 6,345,000 to 6,800,000 pounds and the pulled wool production from 1,279,000 to 1,487,000 pounds.

From 1958 to 1959, Canadian wool exports increased from 4,002,000 to 5,002,000 pounds (greasy wool basis) and imports rose from 42,209,000 to 51,492,000 pounds.

If stocks had remained the same, Canadian consumption in 1959 would amount to 54,777,000 pounds, that is, an increase of one fifth over the 45,831,000 pounds of the previous year.

In the light of all the figures I have just quoted, it would seem that the value of the product has helped improve our domestic market and our markets abroad, in such a way that the margin of deficiency prices has gone down 7 cents a pound, as compared to last year.

I think this figure is an indication that it would be a good thing to broaden the scale wool production and, consequently, of sheep breeding.

In the province of Quebec—and I am convinced it is the same in several areas of Ontario and of the maritimes—certain farmers find sheep breeding a paying proposition.

Rocky farms which produce very little and are very costly, are ideal for sheep breeding.

Sheep breeding is not very costly. In fact, the cost of buildings is low; the required manpower is not large; the operation involves very little expense. Therefore, in my opinion, it would be a good thing to encourage sheep breeding.

Now would be the time—and it would be good for agricultural economy in general—for the federal government, in co-operation with provincial governments, to launch an intensive propaganda program for the information of our farmers, at least for those who would be interested in sheep breeding and for those whose farms would be suitable to that type of breeding. It would be a good thing, as I say, to organize such an educational program to promote sheep breeding.

I am convinced that the federal and provincial departments of agriculture could devise an educational program which would advantageously meet the needs of our farmers and of the people of Canada in general.

(Text):

Mr. McMillan: I just want to ask two or three questions. I was wondering whether the annual report for 1958-59 of the agricultural stabilization board is the last one or whether there is one for 1960 as well?

Mr. Harkness: No. The 1959-60 one is not out yet.

Mr. McMillan: This is the last one I have and I did not know whether there was a later one.

Mr. Harkness: The last one was the one for 1958-59.

Mr. McMillan: At the end of March 31, 1959 inventory for commodities on hand was $66 million. I just want to ask the minister what the amount was as at March 31, 1960.

Mr. Harkness: What page were you reading from, if I may ask?

Mr. McMillan: From the 1958-59 report, about the second page; they are not numbered.

Mr. Chairman, there are one or two other questions I will ask at the same time. I was wondering how in the non-mandatory commodities the price supports or deficiency payments were arrived at. I notice in some cases that the support prices are as high as 112 per cent of the ten-year average and they drop down to 80 per cent of the ten-year average. I am not finding fault with any particular one of these, but, for instance, wools are 110 per cent and I think there are some other commodities which go up as high as 112 per per cent.

I would also like to know why most of these commodities have a support price while in the case of asparagus grown in my particular part of the country there is a deficiency payment of three cents under 18 cents. I know that if the farmer gets 15 cents at the factory and he gets his three cents deficiency payment he will then be getting the support price, or 86 per cent of the ten-year average. But in my part of the country I think, last year at least, the price fell to 14 cents and below 14 cents, so that they were not getting as much as if they had had a support price of 18 cents, which I think the minister did hope the farmers would get at that time.

Mr. Harkness: As far as asparagus is concerned there was no support price last year.

Mr. McMillan: No, a deficiency payment.

Mr. Harkness: The asparagus growers did not ask for a support price last year so apparently they did not want one.

As far as the stocks held by the board as at March 31, which I think was the date the hon. member asked for, we had at that time 63.7 million pounds of butter. There seems to have been a general idea that we were holding at that time, or subsequent to that time, something in the nature of 75 million or 78 million pounds of butter. I believe one hon. member mentioned 78 million pounds a little while ago. But that is not the actual fact. We were holding as at March 31, 63.7 million pounds. The total stock in the country was about 75 million to 78 million pounds. Naturally there are always several million pounds being held by wholesalers, retail stores, and so on. As far as eggs are concerned we did not have any. We held five million pounds of dried skim milk; 1.5 million pounds of cheese; 2.6 million pounds of raspberries; 33.5 million pounds of frozen pork cuts; 97 million pounds of canned pork—these are all round figures to the nearest one hundred thousand—and 8.3 million pounds of canned hams. These were the stocks held by the stabilization board as at March 31.

Mr. McMillan: Only one other question, Mr. Chairman. I asked the minister how they arrived at the support price of the non-mandatory commodities. In some cases they reached 112 per cent, 110 per cent, 90 per cent, 95 per cent, down to 80 per cent. I was wondering how these prices were arrived at.

Mr. Harkness: The level of support for any of these commodities is arrived at, first of all, on the basis of attempting to give to the farmer his cost of production; then in addition to that, as much above the cost of production as conditions will warrant. The best example is the one which the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane mentioned, sheep. The support price of wool is over 110 per cent and the reason is, as the hon. member mentioned, that we produce a relatively small number of sheep in Canada. It is one of the few agricultural products for which we can afford to increase production. In fact, to have a good, well-rounded agricultural economy we should be producing more sheep in Canada. Therefore we have set a relatively high support price on wool. This is one of the factors you have to take into consideration in setting a support price.

Another very important factor is whether the product can readily be stored or not. As all hon. members realize, there is only a certain amount of cold storage in the country and you cannot afford to pay a support price which will cause a terrific pile-up of a perishable commodity just because you have no place to store it. Therefore the perishability of a commodity and the amount of storage available are factors to be taken into consideration in setting the support price. There are probably a dozen different factors which you have to consider in arriving at the level of support which you provide. But as I say, our effort throughout is to provide in every case as high a support price as we can possibly provide, at the same time preventing a unmanageable surplus of the commodity building up.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I have a few brief general remarks to make on this item having to do with the Agricultural Stabilization Act. The legislation under which the board operates was passed in this House of Commons on January 25, 1958. It was heralded at that time by the Conservative party and by some farm organizations as being the type of legislation they had been wishing to obtain for many years. They said that at long last they had written into this act a formula which would put a basic minimum floor price under agricultural commodities.

This is not the position taken by the farm organizations today. They realize that this act does not provide a basic minimum floor price below which products cannot fall. This 80 per cent formula which was written into the act in clear English, which I believe any student of the English language would say that if the act were carried out would give producers 80 per cent of a base price on the commodity as a basic floor, is not being followed at this time.

I am not going to argue, and I am not arguing, in favour of large surpluses of eggs, pork, or any other commodity being maintained on an indefinite basis. If there are large surpluses of these products on hand from time to time, then action must be taken to move them into consumption channels either at home or abroad. The minister has said that the old support prices of the former administration, or that kind of method of support, was the thing that led to increasing storage of many agricultural commodities and that the way to take care of this surplus production was to bring in a method of deficiency payments.

I do not believe for one moment that it is the method which has anything to do with the question of the amount that farmers are producing. I think farmers are intelligent enough to know that it is just a question of names; whether the method be called a deficiency payment or a support price makes no difference. What in fact matters is the return to the producer on the grades and the quantities which the farmer has to sell. So it is not a question of technique; it is not a question of a deficiency payment being the best kind of technique; it is that under the deficiency payment technique the government has established a policy which pays the producers of this country less for their products than they were led to believe would be the results of this legislation. In other words, in my opinion this act as enforced today is proving to be a great hoax as compared with the act which was passed in this house in January, 1958, and what was said about it at that time.

The minister has said that bringing down the deficiency payment on pork has resulted in a decrease in pork production of 16 per cent. The only reason producers of pork will restrict production by 16 per cent is because they feel they are going to get less.

Mr. Benidickson: They sold out at panic prices.

Mr. Argue: Yes, I am wondering about that. I am wondering who made the killing on this type of technique which the government used. However, the producers have reduced production by 16 per cent and the government's deficiency payment technique brings this about precisely because the payments which are being made and which will be made are less than would be paid under a basic support offer to purchase. The minister's own words make this very clear, because he has said that under this particular type of so-called support, Saskatchewan, for example, if I have the figures right, would receive $1.90 a hundred. I do not wish to quote the minister incorrectly, and if I do so it is by inadvertence. Under the other type, they would receive $1.82. That amount of money has been lost to them and I say it has literally been stolen from them and that they have been deprived of something they were told would be theirs under the act.

The government has used its so-called deficiency payments technique, not to provide farmers with a support price under the act but to force the market price downwards—allow it to go downwards—to the point at which the producers have been deprived of something which they felt was rightly theirs under the act.

I have discussed in this house with the former minister of agriculture the type of support prices he used. His offer to purchase was, in general, an offer to purchase from the trade and the price was not always paid to the producers. But I can say—and I say this very frankly—that the percentage of farmers who lost money under the former method is far less than the percentage of farmers who are losing money under this method. This is not using a deficiency payments technique as it was known to us. This is a cold, callous, deliberate attempt to tear up, if not the letter, then certainly the spirit of the act which was passed by this parliament.

There would not be 47 Conservative members of parliament here from the prairies if the farmers had known that the bottom would fall out of the hog market under this administration; if they had known that 15 cents would be the price of grade A large eggs at certain times and that the deficiency payment on them would be some six cents a dozen. If this had been known there would not have been a corporal's guard from the prairies on that side of the house. But the people of the prairies were told by this government: we have placed a formula in this act which you can read for yourselves; it shows that we are not going to allow support prices to go below 80 per cent of the average price for a ten-year period.

There were other things, besides, placed in that act which have since proved to be misleading. I refer particularly to the provision that the support price would be based on cost of production. We have been trying to find out what studies have been undertaken with regard to cost of production. We have not been able to find that out, and we suggest that this is another part of the act which has not been fulfilled. It is certain that the minister has accomplished his objective to destroy production, or a substantial part of production. It is perfectly true that his actions have resulted in the demoralization of the poultry and egg industry in this country to the point where production is declining, and the forecast is for still less production. That, the minister has accomplished. But in doing so he has broken faith in my opinion with the producers of western Canada.

There are other complaints about the administration of this legislation. These have to do with the announcement which was made the other day on the support price for butter. The hon. member for Matapedia-Matane who spoke a few minutes ago said he had advocated the retention of the support price on butter. Well, if he had advocated it, it was not maintained.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): At last year's level.

Mr. Argue: It was not maintained. The minister was not frank enough to tell the house when he was making the initial announcement just what the effect of this new policy would be. The country was led to believe that there was a 64 cents a pound floor under butter as there had been before but, of course, that is not what is taking place. The government has changed the basis of support by changing the basis upon which the 64 cents is provided. As I understand the former policy it was to pay a 64-cent floor price on butter which scored 39-92. The policy now is to pay a 64-cent floor price on butter if it scores 40-93. The 64-cent figure is there but the grading arrangements under which a support price of 64 cents a pound has been paid have been changed and this in fact means a very substantial reduction in the farmer's support price.

In a statement on this question in the Western Producer of April 28 the writer had this to say:

> The joker in the minister's speech is where he says "scoring 40-93." Only 30 per cent of Canadian butter eligible for the 64-cent floor last year scored 40-93. This means the government will reduce by 70 per cent the amount of butter eligible in the year commencing May 1.

Why was that not in the statement? This article is appropriately entitled, "Let's Have It Straight, Doug".

Mr Martin (Essex East): Was the article by Mr. Hedlin?

Mr. Argue: It appears on the editorial page of the Western Producer for Thursday, April 28, 1960 and the author's name is not given.

The minister is very agile with figures. He will not admit any more than his predecessor would that when farmers are receiving lower prices and getting less money, this is in fact the case. The minister will not admit that deficiency payments mean less money. When I sit down I am sure the minister will stand up and say, "Even though the farmer's price is less, even though the market price is less than the support price, and even though at the end of a given period of time the farmer will receive nothing by way of deficiency payments, this does not mean less money to the farmer." The minister may fool some hon. members of this committee but he does not fool the agricultural producers.

An hon. Member: And the hon. member for Assiniboia does not fool us.

Mr. Argue: Not only does the deficiency payment technique mean less to the farmers than they are entitled to by law in my opinion and less than they are entitled to by statements made by hon. members of the government including the minister when this legislation was debated in the house, it means that for grades for which there is no support price the farmer is getting less money because deficiency payments are not provided on all grades. When a farmer is paid for lower grades he gets usually a certain proportion of the higher grades. When the price of the higher grades falls it brings down the price of the lower grades.

I have examined the submission of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture presented to the government on the question of price supports and the technique followed. In the proposals they suggest that the offer to purchase method means more in the interests of the producer than the method used by the government. The federation speaks for a large part of the farm organizations of Canada. They are not satisfied with this policy.

When the Conservatives were elected in 1957 and re-elected in 1958 some of us thought that with so many new and young members the Conservative party would be different from the old party of the days of R. B. Bennett. It was thought it might become a truly "progressive" Conservative party. We have seen the government in operation for about three years. There is substantial evidence to show that the voices of the members who first wished reform and improvement are being silenced and diminished. The voice of the old reactionary Tory element in the Conservative party is again coming to the fore.

The old Tory policy is the order of the day. That policy is to get rid of price supports as such. That policy does not seek to provide a floor on the market. That policy aims to throw everything possible on the open market. That is the technique being used today: dump eggs and hogs on the open market without any offer to purchase or floor price; turn the farmers back to the tender mercies of the packing companies and let them fend for themselves. In order to give the policy an appearance of being open and to conceal from the producers what is being done, let us talk about the deficiency payment technique and say it is wonderfully successful in curtailing production and reducing surpluses but let us not mention what is happening to the economic returns to the producers of these products.

I do not want my remarks to be taken as opposition to a deficiency payment made as I believe it should be under the terms of this legislation on the basis of a specific grade and the price the farmer receives for that grade of commodity when he takes it to market and not on the basis of averaging out the price which means that approximately 50 per cent of the product will be sold below the price and the farmers themselves have no guarantee of receiving a just price.

If the minister would say to the producer, "We will provide you with a deficiency payment that will bring a return to you for each grade you sell that is being supported, by the difference between the price you receive and the support price," there would be no objection. But the government says, "Throw it on the market, we will not keep a precise record of the amount you receive for each grade and pay you on that amount but will take the averages and pay you on them." This means the producer does not receive the money provided for under this legislation.

I have said in this chamber as well as to farm organizations on previous occasions that I think it is a shame in a democratic society that a government should bring before parliament legislation which reads in a certain way and tell the producers affected they are entitled to certain basic minimum guarantees on their produce and then by a back door undercover method deny the producers the things to which they believe they are entitled under this measure. In spite of the references made to any other department I do not think the government is carrying out the spirit or the letter of this act. Mr. Chairman, I see that it is five o'clock.

The Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, to rise, report certain resolutions and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house as the case may be, in order that we may proceed to the consideration of private and public bills.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): It being five o'clock the house will proceed to the consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask for the unanimous consent of the house to deal with three private bills, namely Bill No. S-22, to incorporate Laurentide Finance Company; Bill No. S-23, respecting International Loan Company; and Bill No. S-18, to incorporate Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Is the house willing to give unanimous consent that these three items be referred to the committee of the whole in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. S-22, to incorporate Laurentide Finance Company.

INTERNATIONAL LOAN COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. S-23, respecting International Loan Company—Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North)—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Change of name.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the sponsor indicate whether or not this company is an affiliate of some other well known company in the finance business and is it a company that will operate under the Small Loans Act? I have not a copy of the bill.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): International Loan Company is a company operating primarily in the greater Winnipeg area and in western Canada. It is solely concerned with the first mortgage field. The reason it is changing its name is that in the past it has been confused with companies operating under the Small Loans Act whereas it is engaged exclusively in first mortgage loans.

ADANAC GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house in committee on Bill No. S-18, to incorporate the Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada—Mr. Halpenny—Mr. Rea in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On the preamble—

Mr. Regier: Before we finally finish with this bill, may I say that it was considered by the banking and commerce committee. In effect this company will have to do with people who are buying used cars and who have some difficulty in obtaining insurance if they purchase over the week end. I hope this company, which is being granted the right to operate, is not going to insist that people buy their insurance from this company or be denied the right to purchase a car in the normal manner. I hope the officers of the company will exercise discretion in this regard and not take advantage of purchasers.

JEAN BRASGOLD MARTZ

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette) for Mr. McCleave) moved the third reading of Bill No. SD-43, for the relief of Jean Brasgold Martz.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman—it is so seldom that I see you occupying that particular position, sir, that I referred to you as Mr. Chairman. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see you presiding over the affairs of the house. There is one thing I should like to mention with respect to the bill now before us for third reading. I wish to indicate that later, on the basis of the remarks I will make, I intend to move a certain motion and the remarks I am about to make will lead up to that motion. I should like to refer to the petition for this divorce, which petition is dated December 10, 1958. In clause 6 thereof certain information relating to adultery and the time that adultery is supposed to have taken place is given. That clause reads as follows:

That for the past eight (8) years and—

This is the important part.

—in particular on the 1st day of December, 1958, at the city of Montreal, in the province of Quebec said ... has committed adultery with one ... who resides at ... Montreal, Quebec.

An address is given where adultery is alleged to have taken place. I repeat the words, "in particular on the 1st day of December, 1958". From a perusal and reading of the evidence submitted to the Senate committee, with which we dealt extensively in the committee of the whole in considering this particular bill, I submit that that portion of the petition which says, "in particular on the 1st day of December, 1958", has not been proved because of the time element involved in the evidence given by the investigators themselves. They said that only a few minutes elapsed between the time, as they put it, the lights went out and when the respondent answered the door.

I could quote from the evidence on page 12 with reference to that. Mr. Peter Rosen, an investigator, appeared as a witness for the petitioner, and said this:

Shortly after that—

This is after some preceding occurrences.

—about a quarter to twelve, all the lights were out upstairs. Mr. Golden and myself, we went up to the door and we rang the bell. It took a few minutes and a man—the light came on in the vestibule and a man came to the door and he opened the door

Following this they entered the premises and viewed certain things upstairs, the cushions on the bed and things of that nature. I submit, Mr. Speaker, in view of the evidence given about the time element, the point about adultery in particular on the first day of December, 1958 has not been proved. From the other evidence given here, however, namely the admissions of the respondent and corespondent, as given in evidence by the investigator, to the effect that they had cohabited as man and wife for some nine years, there is indication that adultery could have taken place and probably did over that period of time.

However, the allegation in the petition, "in particular on the 1st day of December, 1958" is not proved, and in this regard we should keep the two coupled together. I suggest the reference in the petition should be removed and the petition amended, just as amendments are made in other petitions from time to time when there are inconsistencies in the petition with the evidence given. In this regard, I feel it would be only proper that the bill be referred back to the miscellaneous private bills committee in order that they may reconsider this particular point and bring the petition more into line with the evidence given before the committee of the other place. Then, the bill could be proceeded with, not on the basis of adultery having taken place in particular on December 1st, 1958, but on the allegation that over the last eight years, because of the common law arrangement, adultery took place during that period of time.

To this end, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

> That this bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the miscellaneous private bills committee.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Howard) which was negatived on the following division:

LILY SCHUCHER COHEN

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-44, for the relief of Lily Schucher Cohen—Mr. McCleave—Mr. Rea in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall these 51 divorce bills be taken as one item?

Mr. Peters: I wish to speak on Bill No. SD-44.

The Deputy Chairman: Bill No. SD-44.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Peters: Bill No. SD-44 is a petition for the relief of a couple living in the province of Quebec in the city of Montreal. On reading the petition, paragraph 7, we find that it charges adultery in an hotel. In this particular case we have the evidence of two witnesses in the form of private detectives by the names of Peter Rosen, age 38, of Montreal and Abe Golden, age 52, of Montreal.

In this particular case we have the type of case with which we are particularly concerned because it obviously involved collusion and many of the things this house should not agree to in the granting of these divorces. It is pointed out, as you will note from the evidence, that this couple broke up their marriage in February, 1959. In March, 1959 they petitioned parliament and the hearing was held in January, 1960. This gives them approximately 11 months in which to obtain the money for this divorce. As we look through the evidence it is obvious—or certainly it is obvious to me—that as to the $700 which she might have collected and might have been able to save, if she were able to save one quarter of her whole income, the total would have amounted to only $770. As I said, the couple were married in the city of Montreal. The plaintiff was represented by Mr. Blank and he began his questions in relation to the picture as follows:

Q. Is it a good picture of him?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you remember approximately when that was taken?
A. Approximately three years ago. (Photograph filed marked exhibit No. 2).

The questioning continues and we come to the part of the evidence which interests us:

Q. Were there any children born of this marriage?
A. No.
Q. When did you separate from your husband the last time?
A. Last year, February 1959.
Q. Did you ever separate before that?
A. Several times.
Q. What were the reasons for the separation?
A. He used to tell me that he went out with other women and he bragged about it.
Q. You separated three or four times before the final separation last February?
A. Yes.

They have already, in my opinion, built up the fact that the application for a divorce was inevitable and that anything which may have happened was only the conclusion of a decision they had taken on at least two or three separate occasions. The evidence continues:

Q. Do you know anything about the adultery alleged in paragraph 7, other than what I have told you.
A. No.
Q. Did you condone this adultery in any manner?
A. No.
Q. Did you have anything to do with arranging any adultery or any collusion?
A. No.

By Senator Bradley:

Q. Your husband's name is Joseph Cohen, isn't it?
A. Yes.
Q. That is his true name?
A. Yes.
Q. In the marriage certificate there is a reference to one Joe Cohen?
A. Yes.
Q. That is the certificate that you received from the clergyman when you were married to your husband?
A. That is right.
Q. That is one of the names by which he is known?
A. Yes.

By Senator Barbour:

Q. Were you going to school when you were married?
A. No.
Q. How old were you when you got married?
A. Eighteen.
Q. Did you start and keep house by yourselves?
A. Not right away. I lived with his parents at the beginning for about a year.

Q. Have you been working since you were married all the time?
A. Yes.
Q. You continued to work right along?
A. Yes.

By the Chairman (Senator Cameron):

Q. From the very beginning?
A. Yes.

By Senator Bradley:

Q. How long is it since you and your husband separated?
A. The last time was last February, 1959.
Q. Have you had any associations with him since of any kind?
A. No.
Q. None at all?
A. No.
Q. You didn't plan this divorce between you, did you?
A. No.
Q. You will not forgive him for what he has done?
A. No.

Then we get to what I consider to be an important part in a number of these divorces. We have often mentioned the fact that we have been told in the miscellaneous and private bills committee that the average for divorces costs $2,500 in the manner in which they are handled in the Senate and the House of Commons. This becomes quite important in my opinion, because it would obviously indicate some agreement between the two parties if the money did not come from a wife who was applying for divorce. Therefore we have this type of questioning which tends to establish that the woman paid for the divorce yet there is no opportunity to decide how she could possibly have paid for it with the wages she is reported to be earning. But the question is asked because it is important, and if the answer were in the negative then I am quite sure there would be some difficulty in the Senate committee allowing this divorce to stand.

The question is asked:

Q. Who is paying for the divorce?
A. Well, I am. I want the divorce.

By Mr. Blank:

Q. Are you finished paying for it yet?
A. No.

Mr. Chairman, if we are going to be of the opinion that this woman is paying for the divorce, then I also assume we would have to agree that Mr. Blank is himself financing part of the divorce. I am curious to know what recourse to law Mr. Blank would have if after the divorce is granted he cannot collect his money. I would like to know whether he would have some redress to the court who gave the decree. It also raises the question, I would imagine, how many of these divorces are paid for in this way, and whether there is a payola racket going on where the detective gets some money, the lawyer gets some money, and there is a pay-off between them. It would seem odd to me that a legal firm handling this type of divorce would do it on the instalment basis and would be interested in coming to parliament to ask for divorce until they had a sizeable amount paid in advance.

Senator Bradley asked a question that I am interested in in relation to the problem. He asked:

Q. The liability is yours? You have to do the paying?
A. Yes.
By the Chairman (Senator Cameron):
Q. You said there were several separations before?
A. Yes.
Q. How soon after you were married did the first one take place?
A. About a year and a half.
Q. And the reason?
A. He used to go out with other women and he used to tell me about it.

This is the whole situation, in my opinion, as far as this divorce action is concerned. We have already the information that warrants a separation, and it is my opinion that what follows is only of necessity in obtaining the evidence that the other place has requested and has really nothing to do with the circumstances. Questions are asked—this is the method they used—of Mr. Peter Rosen, who lives in Montreal and who represents himself as an investigator. He is asked:

Q. Will you tell the committee what you know of Mr. Joe Cohen's habits and activities during the month of March, 1959?

A. Well, I investigated his conduct during that month until March 30, 1959, inclusive. During that time I saw Mr. Cohen on several occasions and I also saw him in company of one certain young lady that he saw on four different occasions during that time of investigation. On March 30th he left his home at approximately 8 p.m. and he drove down to St. Urbain street in the neighbourhood of where his girl friend was living. This young lady was standing in front of her door, in front of 5230 St. Urbain street. She got into the car with Mr. Cohen and they drove down town. They went into a restaurant and they were there until about 9.30. They then came out and drove up on McGill College avenue just above Burnside, and Mr. Cohen parked the car and I saw them both getting out of the car and they went into the Campus hotel on McGill College avenue. I waited a minute or so until they were just about inside the hotel and I followed them in. I saw Mr. Cohen speaking to the man at the desk and then they both went upstairs and they went into room 427 in the hotel. I waited on the same floor for about five or ten minutes and I couldn't hear anything and I didn't see either one of them coming out of the room, so I went downstairs to the lobby and I called my man. He met me shortly after 11 o'clock. It was about 11.30 when he arrived and we both went up to room 427 and I knocked at the door and it took a few minutes and a man's voice asked, "Who is it?" and I told him I was the desk clerk and I wanted to speak to him for a minute.

Again we have this same problem. This young man is out with a girl. He is supposed to have met the young lady on four previous occasions. They go to a hotel and get a room. I presume he had no baggage. It does not say he had. Therefore, he had to pay for his hotel room before he got it. That is in keeping with the policy of most hotels I know; people coming in without luggage have to pay in advance. So he pays his bill and goes up to his room. A rap comes on the door, and the desk clerk appears. What happens? I think everyone knows what would normally happen—nothing. Absolutely nothing would happen at that door until the parties inside were dressed and ready to leave the room. I am positive of that.

An hon. Member: How can you be positive?

Mr. Peters: I am positive. The hon. member implies that if someone were to rap on his hotel door in the wee hours of the morning he would come out in his shorts or whatever he happened to be wearing. I would not. I have had experience in hotels. I was a salesman, and a traveller on the road and I visited many hotels, and I would not be wandering around in my b.v.d.'s if someone rapped on the door, and this was when I was alone. If there were two people I can give a complete assurance that the door would not be opened. The evidence continues:

As that happened my man and I pushed the door and we were into the room. It was a very small room and the man started to yell and wanted to know what it was all about.

He should have found out by yelling what it was all about before the door was opened and the man came into the room.

An hon. Member: He could have jumped out of the window.

Mr. Peters: Yes, I know people who have done just that in the same type of situation. When a rap came on the door they jump out the window. But I know of no one who opened the door. The report goes on:

I showed him the picture I had with me and I asked him if that was his picture and if he was Mr.—. He admitted it was and that he was Mr.—and I told him then we were acting on behalf of his wife.

The woman I saw earlier with Mr.—was lying in the bed and she was covered with a blanket. I then asked the woman for her name and Mr.—at first told her not to say anything. He said, "Do you have to have her name?" and I said yes. He said, "Will she be in any trouble of any kind?" and I said, "There is no trouble, just that we have to have her name and address." And she told me her name was—and that she lived at 5230 St. Urbain Street.

I do not think that was honest, because I do not think he could have given that kind of assurance that there was not going to be any trouble. If he could have done so then he was not going to prove that adultery was taking place. In any case, I suggest that the circumstances—the presence of a young lady who is not too much against giving her name when she is asked, after a little pressure—seem to indicate an alliance was reached only for the purpose of maintaining the adultery charge necessary to the granting of a divorce.

The fact that the two people were found in a state of undress is an indication to me that this evidence is a plan with a view to the granting of a divorce. Then the detectives go on, as they must, to say something about it. I think all hon. members will agree that there is no indication that adultery did in fact take place. This could have been established in a number of ways. With the permission of the corespondent they could have asked whether adultery had taken place; they could have given the warning which is necessary and then asked the questions which would have established it. But they tried to do it in another way. The evidence goes on:

> We noticed the bed she was lying in had two pillows and it was pretty well disarranged. Also we noticed some women's clothing on the chair near the bed and some man's clothing on another chair on the opposite side of the room.

I fail to see how that shows that adultery had taken place in this case. I also think it is surprising that in the limited length of time available so much was observed. No attempt was made by the investigators to indicate that the lady was a prostitute or a common street walker. It is stated that the man had gone out with her a number of times that month and this, to me, would suggest that he was in the room only for the purposes of this petition and that what took place must have been condoned by the respondent. I am sure Senator Bradley felt there was not enough evidence to warrant bringing this case before the Senate committee. Senator Bradley asked:

> Q. How was the man himself dressed?
> A. He had his pants on but the top part of his body was bare.

Then the lawyer asked some questions, and when he concludes, Senator Barbour indicates the petitioner and asks: "Is this the lady who was in the room there?" To which the answer is: "No".

This evidence is substantiated by the second witness who is, I presume, no more reliable than the other. These are witnesses who appear before us with great regularity. The evidence is always the same. They always, without exception, see either two pillows or two cushions on the bed. They always have the man's clothing on the one chair and the woman's on the other. They always have the woman covered up with a blanket or a sheet. These particular detectives have no imagination at all. They are not like some of the others who dress their young ladies in baby blue pyjamas, or pink nightgowns, or who have people wandering around wearing distinctive housecoats. These particular detectives always have the young lady covered up with a sheet or a blanket, and they are very fussy about having two pillows. The questioning continues and the second witness endorses what was said by the previous one, in large part:

> Q. Did you have occasion to meet Mr. Rosen at approximately 11 p.m. on March 30, 1959 in connection with an investigation of Mr.—?
> A. Yes.
> Q. Where did you meet him?
> A. At the Campus hotel on McGill College avenue.
> Q. Will you tell the committee what you observed when you met Mr. Rosen?
> A. After knocking at the door it was opened by Mr.—and we forced our way in and he was in the room and had trousers on and the woman was in bed.
> Q. Who is he?
> A. Mr.—. And he identified the picture and admitted he was the man in the picture. There was a woman in bed and Mr. Rosen went over to this woman and asked her her name and she said it was—. Mr.—then got nasty and asked us to leave the room, and we left. We didn't want to argue with him.

Perhaps the detective wanted to remove the blanket to see if the woman was wearing baby blue pyjamas or something of that nature. We have only the bare essentials of a setting in a hotel to establish adultery for a divorce case.

Mr. Aiken: Were they covered up?

Mr. Peters: The only suggestion they were not was where the guy got nasty and—

Mr. Aiken: I meant the bare essentials.

Mr. Peters: They appear to have been.

The Senate was concerned about the petitioner's ability to raise money for the divorce. I have no legal training and do not know what argument applies but I assume it is necessary for the petitioner to put up the money for the divorce. If a woman wants to divorce a man she has probably located a prospective husband who is willing to buy her from her husband for the cost of the divorce proceedings. If that is true the going price for women is cheaper in provinces with divorce courts than in those where cases are brought to the House of Commons. The questioning on this point is as follows:

> By Senator Barbour:
> Q. Witness, what salary do you earn a week or a month?
> A. Now, $70 a week.
> Mr. Blank: She is a legal stenographer for one of my competitors.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Where is the once great Liberal party?

Mr. Peters: I hope that remark refers to the fact that these cases are being handled in the House of Commons rather than in the courts of Quebec, but it may not be. I continue:

By Senator Barbour:
Q. Are you able yourself to finance this suit?
A. Oh yes.
By Mr. Blank:
Q. You are still paying it on the instalment plan?
A. Yes. I still owe some.

She must owe quite a bit unless the lawyer and detectives came more cheaply than in most cases. If she saved one quarter of her money a month it would be a good saving allowing her less than $50 a month on which to live. I doubt if she could save more than $70 a month and in a ten-month period she would have saved only approximately $700.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, is this committee legally sitting? Is there a quorum in the chamber?

The Deputy Chairman: The Clerk advises that there are 21 hon. members present; 22 including myself.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, would the house leader indicate the business of the house for the early days of next week?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the announcement I made on Thursday, May 12 at page 3850 of Hansard will hold true for Monday and Tuesday of next week. I am not in a position to announce the business for the balance of the week. Does the hon. member wish me to repeat the order of business which appears on page 3850?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker, there is no need to repeat it if the information is correct.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

R.C.A.F. PILOT TRAINING COSTS

Question No. 355—Mr. Argue:

What was the approximate cost of training a pilot for the Royal Canadian Air Force in (a) 1940; (b) 1950; (c) 1960?

Answer by: Mr. Egan Chambers (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence):

The approximate costs of training a pilot to "wings" standard in the Royal Canadian Air Force in 1940, 1950 and 1960 are estimated as follows:

(a) $32,000. In 1940 pilots were trained and paid as airmen and graduated as sergeant pilots or pilot officers. The initial and operating costs of the types of aircraft then in use were considerably lower than in subsequent years.

(b) $51,000. In 1950 pilots were trained and paid as flight cadets. The initial and operating costs of aircraft had risen sharply over wartime costs.

(c) $80,000. In 1960 pilots are still trained to "wings" standard as flight cadets but jet training has been added. The initial and operating costs of high performance jet aircraft are much greater than the costs of aircraft used in 1950 and the training is more complex.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HERRIDGE—ALLEGED IMPROPER USE OF HOUSE OF COMMONS STATIONERY

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege on information supplied to me by a highly indignant editor of a daily newspaper that supports the present government. It is a question that should concern all members of this house, namely the improper use of House of Commons stationery.

There is in Ottawa a cartoonist named Mr. Gordon Johnston, who makes his headquarters at 162 Belmont Avenue. Mr. Johnston is the creator of a dubious new comic strip entitled "Jeff Buchanon, parliamentary press gallery reporter". Last week Mr. Johnston and his associates distributed to the newspapers across Canada the details of their comic strip service. The fabulous Buchanon, they say——is going to work on comic pages across Canada on May 16. If you want him on staff, exclusive in your area, send me a wire, collect.

Mr. Johnston and his group are apparently a well financed free enterprise organization. It can afford to print and send out to prospective newspaper customers masses of letters and advertising material, and apparently to pay its postage bills and accept collect telegrams. But evidently it cannot afford to pay for its own envelopes.

This advertising propaganda arrived on the desks of newspaper editors across Canada in official House of Commons envelopes bearing the crown and the Canadian royal coat of arms. My point of privilege is that this is a highly improper use of House of Commons stationery.

I wish to bring to the attention of the house the fact that this advertisement, which reads:

The parliament of Canada in the spotlight with Jeff Buchanon of the parliamentary press gallery—

I have never heard of him—

—a man around "the House'.

—contains an etching of the House of Commons and the figure of the mythical Jeff Buchanon, who somewhat resembles a picture of Mr. Arthur Blakely, taken some ten years ago.

Mr. Speaker, while I cannot raise a question of privilege concerning individual members of the press gallery, I must remind the house that on one occasion Sir Winston Churchill said that the press gallery as an institution is an emanation of a free parliament whose members have somewhat more intimate relations with the members of the House of Commons than other groups. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I bring to the attention of the house the fact that this advertizing does convey the false impression that the material in question, the reporting and the cartoons to follow, emanate from the parliamentary press gallery.

While I cannot raise this as a direct question of privilege, with our knowledge of the rectitude and propriety of the gentlemen concerned and the extent to which they cherish their privileges and relationships in this house, I know this aspect of the question will concern all members of the house and should therefore receive their consideration.

This being an improper use of House of Commons stationery and, as a consequence, a violation of our statutes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch):

That the subject matter of my question of privilege be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections for its investigation and later report to the house.

Mr. Speaker: It falls to my lot to determine, in the first instance, whether a prime facie question of privilege has been raised. Before accepting this motion, if any hon. member wishes to indicate his view, or the views of the House of Commons, with respect to the proposed motion I should be glad to hear him now or reserve the question and hear him tomorrow.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) has made the matter clear, but if I may I would like to emphasize this point. I believe the hon. member for Kootenay West has filed with you what has been sent out apparently from the press gallery of this House of Commons. But, sir, in particular this matter concerns cartooning and reporting allegedly emanating from the press gallery of the House of Commons, which has been sent out in official envelopes of the House of Commons to newspapers across Canada.

I say that, sir, is very definitely a complete abrogation of the rights of this house, and therefore I hope you are going to accept this motion to refer the matter to the committee on privileges and elections.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the matters on which it is difficult to reach a decision without having the documents in front of you. It has perhaps come as a surprise to most hon. members of the house. Your suggestion of reserving judgment until tomorrow I think is a wise one.

Mr. Speaker: Then with the leave of the house I will let this matter stand for consideration and disposition tomorrow. It raises rather a novel point. Is it really more than an improper use of the stationery of the house and does it involve the privileges of the house? There is a question which I wish to consider and which hon. members might consider.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

WELCOME TO PRIME MINISTER ON RETURN —REPORT ON MEETINGS IN LONDON

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will not rule me out of order if under motions I express the warm welcome of the official opposition to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) on his return to the house after what was, I know, a very arduous as well as a very important mission. We are delighted to see him looking so well; arduous missions seem to have that effect on him. Perhaps while I am on my feet I might venture to suggest to the Prime Minister that he should make a report to the house at this time on his mission abroad.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should just like a moment in which to associate the C.C.F. group with the words of the Leader of the Opposition in welcoming the Prime Minister on his return to Canada after having taken part in this very important commonwealth prime ministers' conference.

Those of us who have known the Prime Minister for many, many years realize that he is an excellent traveller, and that experiences which might fatigue the average man seem to be taken by the Prime Minister in his stride. I think the right hon. gentleman thrives on this kind of arduous work. We are sincerely pleased to see him back in such good health.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must say such a heartwarming reception is something that touches me very deeply. I want to thank the Leader of the Opposition for his words of greeting, and to tell him that I had rather expected an opportunity might be provided to make a statement which may be somewhat more lengthy than is ordinarily made, with the leave of the house, on motions.

I wish to thank the hon. member for Assiniboia for his very generous references with regard to my ability to travel. One of the great difficulties I experience is this, Mr. Speaker. These occasions, for some reason or another, do not entirely coincide with my efforts to maintain my weight at a reasonable level. I think that is one of the difficulties I have; attending meetings such as this has, for me, a rather challenging effect, and one of these times I am going to call in the hon. member for Essex East to give me some ideas in connection with this very difficult problem that I face.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Would the Prime Minister do the member for Essex East the great honour of calling him on other matters as well?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would think that calling the hon. member in on so weighty a problem it might be sufficient, but it may be that there will be other occasions in future.

At this time, having expressed my thanks and very deep appreciation for the attitude taken by both hon. gentlemen who have spoken and by the house in general, may I begin by referring to the communiques which were issued. They have been analysed at length, and I propose to ask the leave of the house, in accordance with past experience in this regard, to have the first communique of May 3 and the final communique at the termination of the conference printed as an appendix to Hansard.

However, even in following this course it is necessary for me to elaborate to some extent upon the main trends and, as I see them, the achievements of the meeting. I came back from the London conference feeling that, bearing in mind the difficult circumstances arising from the situation in South Africa, the conference was generally useful and successful.

Many observers have, of course, pointed out that the proceedings of the meetings did not result in any perceptible change in the attitude of the South African government. It was not to be expected, however, that magic improvements could take place in a situation of such tension and complexity. I believe that those who in future will examine and judge this period in commonwealth history will decide that this meeting did not fail to respond to the stern test to which it was put.

I would be the last to say that everything was achieved that I would have desired. I do not contend that in so far as the communique is concerned it can convey the full nature and substance of the deliberations that took place. On occasions in the past I have heard my predecessors, Right Hon. Mackenzie King and Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, report on conferences they had attended. In every case it was made perfectly clear that while no decisions were made or can be made in these informal circumstances, there is a oneness of mind that comes about through the exchange of ideas.

There was no disposition on the part of any of the representatives to evade this issue, and there was no lack of frankness in private and informal discussions. I underline the fact that, as the Leader of the Opposition knows very well from his own experience, only in unanimity can there be a final communique issued. Everything that is included therein represents the agreement of all. To bring together the representatives of one quarter of the world's population, belonging to many races and being of many colours, I think it is quite an unusual result that several conclusions were arrived at unanimously which cannot but result in the possibility of change along the lines generally desired.

Despite the profound differences which prevailed and persisted throughout, it was possible for a communique to be issued. This was difficult with two inherently conflicting elements to be reconciled. First, it had become essential that a way be found for commonwealth governments to make clear their intentions on this central question of racial relations. Second, it was desirable that this should be done without violation of the traditional practice of these meetings that the internal affairs of member countries are not the subject of formal discussion. I believe now more certainly than I did when I spoke here on April 27 that any departure from this last principle would mean the end of the commonwealth as we know it; because if we ever arrive at the point where we will discuss the internal affairs of other countries and determine the course by a majority, then there will be problems that will arise and it could only mean that several countries in the commonwealth could not accept the decisions of the majority. I need not go into particulars in that regard; I think a number would come to mind immediately, including the question of migration.

Personally, as the house knows, I was of those who thought it worth while to try to achieve the first objective of enabling the views of prime ministers to be expressed without sacrificing the principle of non-interference, which is one of the elements of the commonwealth association. I took the view that notwithstanding the depth of feeling on this racial issue—my views throughout the years and now are a matter of record —I believed it would be wrong and damaging to the spirit and fabric of the commonwealth partnership if a majority of the commonwealth governments, finding themselves allied in condemnation of one or more of their number, were to constitute themselves as a court of judgment. I saw, as I said a moment ago, in that trend an end of the association as we know it. The seed of mutual recrimination would threaten the partnership whose essence has always been tolerance, restraint and free co-operation.

I wish that hon. members could have been there. Strong feelings were held in the informal meetings. Men like the president of Pakistan, the prime ministers of India, of Malaya and of Ghana accepted this view as essential to the preservation and maintenance of our relationship. There was unanimous acceptance of the principle that internal affairs of free states are not to be the subject of formal discussion, and that any action in that regard would damage the strength and ultimately the preservation of the institution itself.

I cannot reveal, as hon. members know, in the tradition of those meetings, the substance of the talks. They were at times bilateral, at times in small groups, and at other times all the representatives took part in an informal and private exchange of views. For my part, I had two lengthy and private personal conversations with Mr. Louw; I participated in other informal discussions. I left Mr. Louw in no doubt that in Canada there is no sympathy for policies of racial discrimination, on whatever grounds they may be explained, and that such policies are basically incompatible with the multiracial nature of the commonwealth association. I made it clear to him that the policy of South Africa was a denial of the principle that human dignity and the worth of the individual, whatever his race and colour, must be respected, and that there could be no doubt as to our views in that connection. Indeed, those views are being generally expressed now.

A few weeks ago there were those who felt that what we required was condemnation by various parliaments. I think the events during the days of the conference were an answer to that contention. Our views, the views of all of us in other parts of the commonwealth, or most of the people in other parts of the commonwealth, were set out only a few days ago by the Archbishop of Canterbury when he said:

> But the tragedy is that so far they (South Africa) have seemed to pay little or no regard to the burdens they are imposing on the hearts and consciences and political principles of those who are their brethren in the commonwealth, in culture, in Christian faith and in common humanity.

Only in the last 24 hours I have received from the Primate of the Anglican church of Canada the declaration of that church, which represents the views expressed at the 1958 Lambeth conference:

> The conference affirms its belief in the natural dignity and value of every man of whatever colour or race as created in the image of God. In the light of this belief the conference affirms that neither race nor colour is in itself a barrier to any aspect of that life in family and community for which God created all men. It therefore condemns discrimination of any kind on the grounds of race or colour alone.

I would be less than frank if I did not say that I cannot report that there was any indication in Mr. Louw's attitude, representing his government, that he was moved by the arguments or concerned about the force of international opinion. However, he learned the viewpoint, he recognized that of all those present there no one, in the informal meetings or elsewhere, could give support to racial discrimination in a multiracial commonwealth.

It is clear that the issue of racial conflict will continue to pose a fundamental problem for commonwealth countries and, indeed, for the world community. My hope is that by this meeting we have assisted in the process of change. The matter was not on the agenda but it was discussed with clarity and frankness; and above all, by those from whom you would have expected the expression of violent opinions, with a dignity, a restraint and a recognition of the tremendous issues at stake that must give heart to all of us as to the meaning of the commonwealth as such.

International concern has been demonstrated in the United Nations. In the last few days the secretary general, Mr. Hammarskjold, has been holding talks in London with Mr. Louw. Whatever the results may be, I am sure they will be aided in their talks by what took place at the conference. I hope the people of South Africa can work their way out of the dreadful impasse to which they have been brought. I hope their isolation on the continent of Africa will give them thought and a realization of the situation. It was a great South African, Field Marshal Smuts as he subsequently was, who as long ago as December, 1918, reminded us of this fact:

> There is no doubt that mankind is once more on the move. The very foundations have been shaken and loosened and things are again fluid. The tents have been struck and the great caravan of humanity is once more on the march.

He was pointing to the need of new institutions, new ways of thought, new kinds of international behaviour if the world was to avoid the catastrophe of another war. His words were of prophetic application to his own continent.

It was made very clear in the communique that racial equality was of the essence. The communique had this to say:

> Whilst reaffirming the traditional practice that commonwealth conferences do not discuss the internal affairs of member countries, ministers availed themselves of Mr. Louw's presence in London to have informal discussions with him about the racial situation in South Africa. During the informal discussions Mr. Louw gave information and answered questions on the union's policies, and the other ministers conveyed to him their views on the South African problem. The ministers emphasized that the commonwealth itself is a multiracial association and expressed the need to ensure good relations between all member states and peoples of the commonwealth.

We know the results of the assertion of racial superiority only a few years ago and the effects that followed from it. It is my hope that the South African government will heed and heed quickly the appeal that was made to it, not only in the communique but in personal conversations.

The government there has been planning to hold a referendum on the question of changing the present status of South Africa from a monarchy to that of a republic. In that regard it was pointed out that the choice between a monarchy and a republic is entirely the responsibility of the nation concerned. Then there are these significant words. I am not going to interpret them, because they require no interpretation; their significance lies in the fact that they were accepted unanimously by all who were there.

> In the event of South Africa deciding to become a republic and if the desire was subsequently expressed to remain a number of the commonwealth, the meeting suggested that the South African government should then ask for the consent of the other commonwealth governments either at a meeting of commonwealth prime ministers or, if this were not practicable, by correspondence.

This established clearly that membership in the commonwealth is not a formality. These words speak for themselves. They make clear that the prime ministers were not prepared to give an advance assurance that South Africa might remain a member of the commonwealth in the event that a decision was made to adopt the status of a republic. Therefore the important point is that if a change of status does take place as a result of the referendum, the consent of the other commonwealth governments will be required as a pre-condition of continued membership. Again I emphasize the fact that this was accepted by all.

The attention given to the South African problem, however, should not be allowed to obscure the deliberation which took place on many other subjects. The nature of those deliberations is fairly reflected in the communique, but I am going to make a few general references thereto. The multi-racial nature of the commonwealth was underlined by the admission of Ghana three years ago at the last meeting, by the participation of the prime minister of Malaya this year and by the fact that the federation of Nigeria, with a population of 35 million, will join the family on the 1st of October and that Sierra Leone and other countries of various colours and races will, it is expected, soon be applying for membership.

What has taken place here is a recognition that there is no automatic membership in the commonwealth, and I believe it is also suggestive of the possibility that the time is not far distant when acceptance by custom rather than by declaration of certain basic principles, including equality of all races, colours and creeds, will be assured. This view is underlined in various editorials to which I could refer. I draw the attention of the house to the fact that Canada's views were known, but the fact that we had not had a resolution placed Canada's representative in a position to speak to Mr. Louw in a way that did not arouse his antagonism. What happened here is well set out in the London Financial Times:

> If the South African government carries through its plan for making the country into a republic . . .

important constitutional matters will arise. It goes on to say:

> More important even than these constitutional considerations is the simple truth expressed by Mr. Diefenbaker last week that a commonwealth in which the majority of the population is coloured must unequivocally accept racial equality.
> The seriousness of racial problems varies widely from member country to member country. Not all of them have an untarnished record. Yet the position today is that the truth of Mr. Diefenbaker's proposition is accepted in theory at least everywhere in the western world except in South Africa. Refusal to accept it would mean losing the struggle against communism by default.

And so I might go on in that regard. This was an important step forward, and in that connection it is important internationally. We reviewed the international political situation. As to our views on the summit conference, I shall not now refer to them in view of what has taken place today.

There was universal agreement on the importance of developing a general detente in international relations, the urgent need of concluding a broad agreement to end the testing of nuclear weapons, and the desirability of finding avenues of progress in the field of general disarmament. There was an awareness of the growing importance of China in world affairs; and in particular, in order to ensure the implementation of any international agreement on disarmament, the participation of China was recognized as being of first importance.

The meeting was notable also for the growing recognition it gave to the development of the economic needs of the newly independent countries of Africa. I have mentioned already the fact that Nigeria will become a member. I have also referred to the second constitutional decision which arose from the intention of Ghana to introduce a republican form of constitution by July 1. In connection with the decision regarding Ghana's relation to the commonwealth, the government of Ghana applied to continue as a member, thus again illustrating the flexible nature of the commonwealth relationship which permits member countries to remain in free association despite the differences in their forms of government.

As to the economic needs of the emerging nations of Africa, there was a unanimous recognition that a substantial expansion of economic assistance was necessary in order to assist these countries to achieve self-sustaining growth. The greatest remaining underdeveloped region of the world is Africa, where no special international economic assistance program has been established and were the flow of investment and aid funds, in comparison with that to other underdeveloped countries, is disproportionately small. The Prime Minister of Ghana is seriously concerned about this situation. It was agreed that unless measures are quickly taken in this crucial formative period in the history of these new African nations there may very well develop in those nations doubts as to the good will of the developed countries of the west, and they may be tempted to look for sympathy and assistance in other directions.

Mention was made of what the Colombo plan had done. There is no such type of international assistance as yet available in Africa. Consideration is therefore being given to the possibility of co-operative action among members of the commonwealth in assisting the economic development of countries in Africa which have recently attained or are approaching independence. This matter will be studied by the various commonwealth governments, and will be examined at the next meeting of the commonwealth economic consultative council in London.

On behalf of the government Canada indicated willingness, subject to parliament, to participate in such a program. I cannot at present, however, indicate the scope of the aid program which may flow from the decisions of the conference, or offer any forecast of what will be required from Canada.

Then in connection with the need for technical assistance for the newly independent countries of both Asia and Africa, the Prime Minister of Malaya drew attention to the fact that his government required the services of persons with specialized skills and experience in the administrative and technical fields. There was general agreement that everything should be done to foster and encourage exchanges of specialized personnel, and that the question should be taken into consideration by the commonwealth economic consultative council.

A further subject—and this was one that will become of increasing importance; it was mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) in his remarks in April—was the constitutional development of the commonwealth. Up to the present time it has been possible to preserve the intimate character of the prime ministers' meetings. The essence of these meetings is that they are conducted, as I said, in an informal way. No resolutions are moved; no votes are taken. Progress is made by agreement after discussion. However, as the membership of the commonwealth grows, new problems as to how these meetings will be conducted will arise.

One has only to note that at the present rate of accession to the commonwealth, within a very few years the present membership of 11 will be expanded to 16 or 18. How shall such a wide membership be reconciled with the maintenance of frank, intimate and profitable discussion? What about the size of the gathering? What about the size of the nations? There will be tremendous and fantastic disparities in population, importance and size, India with a population of 450 million and Sierra Leone with 2 million.

The various commonwealth governments will have to give consideration to such questions as membership, weight by population, the rotation of membership as in the security council, regional groupings of nations within the commonwealth, and representation of such groups. These are some of the problems which will have to receive consideration. I am not indicating any view with regard to them. These are some of the problems that will now have to be examined in the light of the tremendous expansion that is taking place and the number of nations which are joining us.

To those who say there is nothing in the commonwealth relationship, may I say that it is of interest to note that in all the years the commonwealth has been in its present form only one nation which attained independence, namely Burma, did not apply for membership. In other words, these nations representing various colours have of their own volition decided to remain with the institution and become active and effective members.

Mr. Speaker, one other matter I want to refer to is the question of trade. Western Europe represents a very important market for all commonwealth countries. With the exception of the United Kingdom most of them, like Canada, are important suppliers to western Europe of agricultural products. It was therefore recognized that it would be a matter of much concern if our competitive access to these markets was impaired in any way by the agricultural policies which may be followed by the European economic community. This community can have a tremendous influence in the direction of world trade, and this is significant for the primary producing countries of the commonwealth. It was urged that both the Six and the Seven should pursue trade policies that are consistent with their obligations under GATT. In this way western Europe would be contributing to the general economic well-being of the world, and particularly of the underdeveloped countries.

Some concern was expressed about the possibility that the plans to create a successor organization for the O.E.E.C. might lead to exclusive or restrictive arrangements which would not take into account the interests of countries outside Europe. I explained that while Canada expected to be a full member of the revised organization, we attached great importance to ensuring that its efforts should be directed toward improving multilateral trading conditions and that we did not regard this as in any way an exclusive organization which would be harmful to the interests of other commonwealth members. I believe the members of the commonwealth share our concern that the economic division in western Europe should not lead or be permitted to lead to political division. It was also recognized, as I saw it, that the United Kingdom should continue to maintain the closest co-operation with the rest of the commonwealth in developing its own policies with regard to trade with western Europe.

Now, sir, to those who have predicted that the commonwealth was on a slippery slope,

I am convinced that it came out of the conference stronger than ever. It is impossible to convey to the members of this house the spirit that was apparent in the desire to assure the maintenance of unity without the sacrifice of principle on the part of any of the members. Each of the representatives, in a spirit of understanding, was conscious of and concerned with the welfare of all other members. While re-emphasizing the cardinal principle of the commonwealth, non-interference in domestic affairs, the multiracial nature and the need for recognition of equality of all races and peoples were recognized. In the informal meetings this was made clear and definite so that no one could misunderstand it.

I mentioned this earlier in another way, and I repeat it. While the commonwealth has no constitution, the membership and variety in population of the peoples that compose its membership demand the recognition of equality, and I believe the final communique made it clear that the recognition of these principles has been achieved in spirit.

As I return I am convinced of one thing. While there were those who were critical of the stand which was being taken, I think in the light of what has occurred the course followed was one that has assured the maintenance of the basic principles, and also made possible in the future the achievement of equality and the denial of discrimination. The ominous danger of commonwealth fission was prevented without the sacrifice of any vital principles by the prime ministers and representatives of the various countries. The course of reason, restraint and diplomacy was followed rather than that of judicial action. The various prime ministers who felt most strongly against fanatical racialism maintained a self control and a dignity in the presentation of their arguments which had its effect. I think it may be fairly said that an advance was made in the interracial and multiracial relationships of the many peoples of the commonwealth; and while collective action was asked by some before we met, it was asked by none by the time we separated.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent to the printing in the appendix of Hansard of the two communiques mentioned by the right hon. Prime Minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[For text of communiques referred to above, see appendix]

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think every member of the house will have listened with the greatest possible interest to the statement we have just heard from the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), who represented our country at this very important meeting of commonwealth prime ministers which, I think, had an importance which extended beyond the borders of the commonwealth itself.

The Prime Minister in his statement has indicated not only the far-reaching nature of the subjects under discussion but their complicated character as well. The formal results of the meeting are, as is customary in these cases, to be found in the communique issued by the prime ministers at the conclusion of the conference. But as the Prime Minister himself has indicated, a communique of this kind does not of course communicate everything that was done and said at the conference. A communique, especially a communique resulting from a conference of this kind within the commonwealth, has to be of a nature—always in the past it has been of a nature—which requires unanimous approval, and perhaps on this occasion there was some difficulty, as indeed there have been difficulties in the past, in securing that unanimous approval. In the very nature of things the communique represents, as it was bound to, the lowest common denominator of agreement.

I have no doubt, and the Prime Minister's remarks seemed to make it quite clear, that some of the more important discussions took place outside the formal meetings of the commonwealth prime ministers.

That has been the situation in the past. It has its advantages, but of course it could also have its dangers. I recall in the past that over the issue of Kashmir—a very different issue from that which divided the commonwealth conference on this occasion—it was not possible to have a discussion of that controversial matter inside the meeting; any discussion which took place had to be outside the formal agenda.

However, it is clear from the communique, from the report we have had from the Prime Minister, and from the reports we have read in the press, that this conference made clear as perhaps has not been made clear before, at least so dramatically, the nature of the new commonwealth; its great potential value as a bridge between races and peoples and countries and continents; also its new problems and, indeed, certain new dangers which threaten its existence in a more acute form, perhaps, than we have had to face in the commonwealth in the past, dangers and difficulties which every member of this house hopes will be removed. These dangers and these difficulties arise from that very multiracial character which, if it is not accepted by all members of the commonwealth, with all its complications, will constitute a great threat to the future of the commonwealth, just as the complete acceptance of this new character of the commonwealth could constitute its greatest value in the future.

So these matters have to be faced, even though they cannot always appear in the record of the meeting itself. There is a real danger of what may arise if we neglect to do so. The Prime Minister of India who, I am sure, played his customary constructive role in this conference, is reported in the press to have said:

> The commonwealth is facing basic problems—and some people begin to doubt whether this commonwealth is not becoming too vague to be identified as anything at all.

I would hope that Mr. Nehru, at the end of the conference, would perhaps be more optimistic than he was in that statement as to the possible results.

There was also a very interesting editorial in the London Times of May 10. I have no doubt the Prime Minister has had it drawn to his attention. Dealing with this matter with all the impressive authority that goes with that historic newspaper, the Times had this to say:

> The commonwealth is a voluntary association and sooner or later every voluntary association has to recognize that though every member's private life is his own concern, yet each is judged by the company he keeps, and the honour of all may be involved in the private behaviour of one.

The editorial concluded with these words, which are full of sober significance:

> It is a multiracial commonwealth.

That phrase is, of course, used in the communique.

> If the deliberations of the prime ministers end in complete disagreement on one of the greatest questions of the day it is far better to announce the fact. There are other great questions; if there is unity on these it can also be declared, and with the greater prospect of being believed. The consequences that flow from both agreements and disagreements can then be worked out.

Mr. Speaker, the disagreement which obviously existed within the membership of the conference—the Prime Minister has frankly indicated it and, of course, we knew there would be such disagreement—was not announced in the communique. I can understand the reason for this, and I am not suggesting it should have been announced in the communique. But it is just as well for us to go behind the words of the communique and face the fact that disagreement exists, because I do not think I am exaggerating when I say the commonwealth on this occasion did face a very real threat to its existence—a veritable storm, as it has been described. Indeed, the Montreal Gazette referring only this morning to this "veritable storm"—that was the expression the editor used—stated in an editorial on this subject, that it—that is, the commonwealth—has neither surmounted that storm nor succumbed to it. Perhaps that is the fairest analysis that could be made in a few words with regard to the conference and, indeed, to the communique.

The conference certainly postponed a showdown—if I may use that expression—on the issue on which some of its members felt so strongly, the issue of race discrimination and the policy of apartheid in South Africa. I am not complaining about that, as long as the cost which had to be paid for that postponement was not too high, and I do not think in this instance it was. Perhaps the postponement of this issue at this time was the best course to take in London, providing the period which has been given for the reconsideration of this matter by the government of South Africa can be used for improving the situation in regard to this situation in that country.

The Prime Minister indicated today that he made it clear to the South African representatives where Canada and Canadians stand on this matter. I am glad he has done that. Indeed, the Prime Minister's intervention in this matter in this informal way does illustrate, in a sense, the dilemma he mentioned about intervention or non-intervention in commonwealth affairs. The situation we have reached now is that while there cannot be formal intervention in domestic matters at the conference table—that has been the tradition up to the present—there may, nevertheless, be informal intervention of the kind the Prime Minister has mentioned. I am glad the right hon. gentleman took advantage of the opportunity to make the attitude of Canada perfectly clear with regard to this policy.

The right hon. gentleman also said—and I think the record indicates that he was correct, at least the record that was made public—that unfortunately nothing has yet emerged which would indicate that there is any likelihood of the South African government modifying its position on this matter of principle which is so vital to us. Therefore we can only hope that the words which were uttered, the attitudes which were taken and the moderation which was shown at the prime ministers' conference on this occasion will have their effect in those places where change can be brought about.

However, we must be clear that the situation has been postponed only. Indeed, the Prime Minister made clear in reading from the communique that if and when South Africa decides, after an expression of the opinion of its people, to become a republic, it will be required to apply for continuing membership in the commonwealth as a republic. No assurance has been given in advance in regard to any such request if and when it is made. I express the hope that if and when that time comes the situation in South Africa will be such that all members of the commonwealth will be happy to have South Africa continue its membership in this association.

The Montreal Star writing on this aspect of the matter on May 11 had this to say. I hope this is not too pessimistic, but in view of what the Prime Minister said it would not seem to be. The words of the editorial are:

They—

The members of the commonwealth.

—have sought to elicit some hint that South Africa might, some time and in some way, modify its apartheid policy.

They have got nowhere.

Let us hope that during this period between the meeting in London and the next meeting we will have got somewhere in connection with this matter.

The Prime Minister mentioned some other questions that came up at the commonwealth meeting. He dealt with the question of assistance to the new and emerging nations of Africa. I think all hon. members of the house are anxious as all Canadians are to do what we can to provide the kind of assistance needed, within the measure of our resources; not only material and economic assistance, but assistance through the sympathy and understanding we may show for the problems of these people, and assistance by the supply of technical and administrative personnel which in the early days of their existence is going to be, I am quite sure, their greatest problem.

The Prime Minister also mentioned that trade was discussed, and I am sure that was not the least important subject that came up for discussion at that conference. It is well that it should have come up at this particular time, because the European countries are trying to work out their own arrangements for economic co-operation leading, one might hope, one day to economic unity and who knows but to political unity. It is of the greatest possible importance that that be done not only without dividing Europe but also without dividing Europe from her friends across the Atlantic and inside the commonwealth.

There has been an important step made in that regard in recent weeks, at least in so far as a report is a step. If hon. members have read that report of the four O.E.E.C. representatives, as I have, they will I think be struck by the fact that the recommendations in that report can be of very far-reaching significance indeed; because they lead inevitably to an association of the 19 European countries and the United States and Canada. They point the way toward that association, which in any event will take a long time to work out. But even 21 countries united on that basis will not be enough if other countries in the commonwealth who wish to come into that kind of lower tariff association are excluded. Therefore, perhaps, these matters as they were discussed in London may have had their own value in bringing about the widening of this kind of freer trade association.

The communique contains one sentence which I should like to read. The Prime Minister for very understandable reasons felt that at this time and in the present circumstances he would not deal with it in any detail. The sentence concerns a summit conference, and reads as follows:

They—

The members of the commonwealth.

—hoped that, on the basis of the preliminary work already done, the summit conference would be able to make some significant progress toward an eventual settlement, under international control, of the problem of disarmament.

Then they also expressed their general hope for success at this summit conference to which all men and women of good will throughout the world have been looking forward with hope not unmixed with anxiety. As reports have come over the wires this morning the anxiety is becoming a more powerful emotion than the hope, because so far as one can gather from the first meeting of the summit conference—and it is unwise to come to any premature conclusion on this matter—those hopes which were expressed by the commonwealth prime ministers may in the course of events be falsified.

I hope the leaders of the three western countries, the United States, the United Kingdom and France—and I am sure all hon. members of the house join me in this hope—will not accept the apparently brutal ultimatum submitted to the conference at its opening session by the leader of the Soviet union. This conference must not be allowed to break up in this way. Therefore if anything could be done, it should be done. If the commonwealth prime ministers were only meeting at this time collectively they might have been able to intervene collectively to prevent a break. Although I know this is perhaps going a little beyond the report of the commonwealth conference, but not very far—

Mr. Fulton: Just far enough to be out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition, if he pursues that vein, will make it difficult not to have replies, because he is opening up a matter which was deliberately left out of the original statement. The practice is normally to confine one's remarks to the statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the sense of the house would be that the hon. gentleman should continue. I am sure this is one time when in a matter so important and so momentous to the world, none of us would raise an objection.

Mr. Pearson: I will say only a very few words because I do not wish to stray beyond the rules of order or to take advantage of the indulgence which the Prime Minister has indicated the house might show me. There is in this communique of the commonwealth conference a great deal—several paragraphs—devoted to the then forthcoming summit conference. All I would like to say on this occasion is that this conference must surely be kept going. The replies of the three western leaders to the statement of the Soviet leader this morning indicate that they are taking that view, too. I know the Canadian government will support them in that stand in any way it can.

I have one final suggestion to make, a very short one, before I sit down. My suggestion is that if the conference threatens to break up at once, even before it approaches the problems that are before it, then perhaps the secretary general of the United Nations, who is on that side of the world at this time, might ask that these four leaders meet with him to discuss ways and means of keeping the conference going.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, we all listened with a great deal of attention to the statement made by the Prime Minister on returning to Canada from the commonwealth conference. Reference has been made by the Leader of the Opposition to the summit conference. I am not going to endeavour to make any detailed statement on the proceedings that are going on at the summit. We very fervently hope for all mankind that ideological differences may be bridged, that good will may assert itself, and that an agreement on disarmament in the interests of peace can be achieved as a result of the conference.

I would say that the leaders of the world should quit spying, quit threatening and quit stalling. Mankind is not interested at this time in threats or in any course that might be considered normal in normal circumstances. These are abnormal circumstances, and the world is looking for abnormal action that will restore the confidence of mankind in its own survival.

I was encouraged by the general statement of the Prime Minister, and by the emphatic way he made the statement he gave to this house. As was mentioned by the Prime Minister, the second world war was fought to preserve the world from fascism, racial discrimination in its most ugly form. We trust that fascism and the appearance of fascism, no matter where it emerges, can be obliterated and that mankind will grant to one another complete racial equality.

I think the attitude of the Prime Minister confirmed the position taken by the C.C.F., namely that in an issue such as this it is essential for Canada to speak out strongly and with a united voice. I feel that as a result of the conference, and by the strength of the Prime Minister's statement today, he would have been in a better position when he went to the conference had he been armed with a unanimous vote of this House of Commons setting forth the Canadian point of view.

We trust that events as they unfold will see the relaxing of discrimination in South Africa. We are very much in favour of an expanding, of a growing and of a strengthened commonwealth, but we feel that to try to keep together at all costs this loose association of nations is not the best attitude or the objective that we should have. The commonwealth, to survive, must he based on solid principles, and one of those principles is the regard of man for his brother.

I think it should be made perfectly clear —the Prime Minister did not say it but I believe it is inherent in the statement he made—that if the people of South Africa by their vote should decide to become a republic and unless racial equality is restored Canada's attitude will be one of opposition to the admission of South Africa to the commonwealth as a republic. Any other attitude would be a denial of those important human principles.

The Prime Minister went on to refer to a number of other subjects, such as the desire for an end to nuclear testing, a review of the growing importance of China and the necessity of China coming into any general disarmament agreement. We suggest to the Prime Minister once again that now is the time for Canada to consider diplomatic recognition of China as a positive step toward bringing this nation into the councils of the world so that any disarmament agreement may be meaningful.

The Prime Minister dealt with a number of positive suggestions, including the one that there should be a Colombo plan of assistance for the nations of Africa. This, we think, would be a very important step forward. We have been firm advocates of economic and technical assistance to emerging nations for many years. I now go on record once again as suggesting to the Canadian government that Canada should be prepared to use 1 per cent of its gross national product as the amount that would be suitable for our contribution to economic assistance to underdeveloped nations of the world.

The Prime Minister went on to deal with the importance of trade and the possible threat of the inner six and even the outer seven to commonwealth trade. I make the suggestion that now is the time for Canada to consider associating our nation with those other trading areas, and that we should be giving very close attention to plans directed toward the removal of trade barriers in this larger trading area and finally in other nations of the world.

The Prime Minister's statement, Mr. Speaker, I believe, shows that he has come back from this conference prepared to make a much stronger statement on the need for racial equality. We suggest to him various points that I have covered as ways and means of strengthening the commonwealth, of improving the lot of underdeveloped nations, and of playing our full part in the maintenance of world peace.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentlemen for the expression of their points of view. I say to the Leader of the Opposition that I think this house as a whole would want to express the hope that the summit conference will be continued and that it may achieve that measure of detente which the world expects; and at the same time those who are our allies and friends must make it most clear that intimidation will not be effective in any way.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE FAIR

REJECTION OF MONTREAL INVITATION—ALLEGED INCOMPETENCE OF CANADIAN DIPLOMATS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Is he aware of the statement made by the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr.

Brassard) that the bungling and incompetence of Canadian diplomats is responsible for Montreal not getting the world fair?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I read the statement in the press. I can only say that over the weeks and months preceding the meeting in Paris we had a very high degree of co-operation from our external affairs department representatives in the various cities and countries with which we were concerned. I think it is apparent to everyone that it was not any bungling on the part of the external affairs department which was responsible for Canada not being chosen. The other nation which was seeking the world's fair, Russia, at the very last moment, without adequate notice to anyone and following a practice which I do not think we as a country would wish to follow, introduced seven of its satellite countries. If you examine the voting you will find that, without these seven countries introduced at the last moment, at every stage Canada led in the number of votes received. I think this speaks highly for the work of our people both here in Canada and abroad in gaining that degree of support for us.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to ask the Postmaster General a supplementary question. At a later stage the same hon. member made the statement that the "political adversaries of the Diefenbaker government did all they could to ruin the project for fear that Mr. Diefenbaker would get the credit." I wonder whether the Postmaster General would like to comment on that part of the statement.

Mr. McPhillips: That was the Grit mayor of Montreal.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I have no particular comment to make on that remark. At one or two points during the discussions and during the work over several months that led up to the meeting on May 5, varying opinions were expressed. However, I can say that at the meeting in Paris on May 5 we had the very highest degree of co-operation from all those who formed our delegation to the meeting.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED DENIAL OF CANADIAN FACILITIES TO ALL U-2 PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or to the Prime Minister, though the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been answering questions along this line. In view of the desirability of doing nothing that might interfere with the summit conference, I wonder whether Canada would be prepared to state that at least for the present no planes of the U-2 type, whether weather planes or otherwise, will take off from bases within Canada or fly over Canadian territory?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has been made perfectly clear that none of the U-2 flights has been connected in any way with espionage, and none has originated in Canada. Having regard to the very bellicose and threatening attitude of Mr. Khrushchev today, particularly in the light of President Eisenhower's agreement to discontinue U-2 flights over Soviet territory, I can see no reason why at this time we should give consideration to the suggestion that planes engaged in weather flights over Canada, that do not go beyond Canada, should be denied access to the air.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED UKRAINIAN PROTEST OVER PROGRAM "YOUR SOUL AND CONSCIENCE"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Has the minister taken note of a report in today's issue of the Montreal Gazette to the effect that Ukrainians in Montreal staged a march in protest against a French language television series called "Your Soul and Conscience", dealing with the assassination of Ukrainian leader Simon Petlura, which was distasteful and offensive to Canadians of Ukrainian origin? In view of the reply of the C.B.C. director of information to the president of the Ukrainian committee that he had no power to stop this program, will the minister ask for an inquiry into the matter and suggest to the president of the C.B.C. that this series of television presentations which is causing dissension among our Canadian people be discontinued forthwith?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to send me notice of his question this morning. I did see the report in the Montreal Gazette. The matter had also been drawn to my attention prior to the report by the hon. member for Marquette, the Minister of Labour and one or two other members, I believe, who had knowledge of the feelings of the Ukrainian association and people of Ukrainian origin about this matter.

Personally I regret very much that any such situation has arisen or that the feelings of a large group of important Canadian citizens, or a group of any size as far as that is concerned, should have been affronted by what they read into this program. I cannot necessarily accept the suggestion that I should direct the C.B.C. to drop the program, but I can tell the house that I have asked for an inquiry to be made. I have asked the C.B.C. for a report on the matter. I understand that the C.B.C. senior executive board met this morning and is meeting again this afternoon, and that a statement will be issued on the matter before the end of the day.

POLICY RESPECTING EMPLOYEES NOMINATED IN PROVINCIAL ELECTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the Minister of National Revenue whether he is yet in a position to reply to the question I asked him on Friday.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, no; not yet. I hope to be able to do so tomorrow.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—REPORTED REJECTION OF VOCATIONAL TRAINING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware of a statement made by Premier Smallwood in the Newfoundland house of assembly on Tuesday, May 10, to the effect that the government of Newfoundland had turned down the offer made by the minister in a letter to Premier Smallwood in October, 1959 to start a vocational training program for the unemployed miners of Bell island? If so, does the minister have any comment to make on this callous act of political vindictiveness on the part of the premier of Newfoundland toward my constituents?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I have not received any communication from the Newfoundland government along the lines mentioned. Consequently I have no comment to make.

FIRES

FOREST FIRE FIGHTING—INQUIRY AS TO TRAINING OF TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence which is of particular interest to a good number of people in Canada, particularly because of the advent of the forest fire hazard season. In view of the announcement by Hon. J. Wilfred Spooner, minister of lands and forests for Ontario, in the legislature that as the result of meetings between his department and the Department of National Defence, preliminary plans have been made for special courses in the techniques of forest fire fighting and that a battalion or more of the Canadian army may be trained in forest fire fighting, will the minister inform the house whether such training of Canadian army personnel is now being undertaken? If so, will the services of these troops be available to any provincial government seeking assistance in forest fire fighting?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Army personnel in the past have assisted in more than one province in the fighting of forest fires. When applied for by the provincial government, the personnel have carried out these operations as part of an emergency when not declared to be a national disaster. In order to study the most up to date techniques in forest fire fighting a limited number of personnel have been attending the Ontario provincial forestry school, but no special unit of the army has been detailed for this particular duty.

HOUSING

C.M.H.C.—REPORTED CHANGE OF POLICY RESPECTING SEPTIC TANKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Is the minister aware of changes introduced within the past few weeks by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in relation to its policy on septic tanks where new house construction is being assisted under the National Housing Act? When will these changes become effective? Will they affect subdivisions classified as rural?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of the question. There will be no change until January 1, 1961. So far as rural areas are concerned, the answer is that the changes will have no application to applicants in the rural areas.

[Later:]

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Public Works re national housing. Would the minister explain further the policy in rural areas with regard to non-sewage lots?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member might I amplify my previous reply by stating that since October, 1958 the corporation has only issued undertakings to insure loans for builders in areas where piped services were installed, unless the municipality provided satisfactory evidence that piped services would be available within a reasonable time. However, where building lots remained in subdivisions previously accepted for septic tanks, loans were also insured. No change is contemplated in this policy. As in the past, septic tanks will be accepted for home owner applicants in strictly rural areas.

In urban areas where loans have generally been available to home owner applicants proposing the use of septic tanks, effective Jan. 1, 1961 such loans will only be approved (1) where the municipality provides evidence that piped services will be available within a reasonable period of time, (2) where lots remain in subdivisions which have been accepted for septic tank use, and (3) in exceptional circumstances where septic tanks are the only means of servicing the land.

C.M.H.C.—STATEMENT ON REPORTED REVERSAL OF LENDING POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Nipissing asked a question on May 13 about an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail of that date, as to whether the government has changed its position in regard to the lending policy of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Might I state that the article in the Globe and Mail of Friday last to which the hon. member referred is misleading, in that it suggests a change in lending policy, or a reversal of policy, on the part of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Government policy on mortgage lending is, of course, announced only by the minister responsible. I am therefore pleased to have this opportunity to correct a misunderstanding.

In its role as residual mortgage lender, or lender of last resort, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has not considered it proper or desirable to pioneer in large new subdivisions or satellite towns outside the boundaries of major metropolitan areas by becoming the only lender to make loans. This, it is felt, is the function and responsibility of the approved lenders.

However, because a number of prospective home owner applicants who qualified in all other respects were unable to obtain mortgage financing in Bramalea, which is located between metropolitan Toronto and Brampton, the corporation is prepared to treat them on exactly the same basis as any other qualified home owner applicants in Canada. There is no change in policy entailed; it is rather the relaxation of a local rule to assist a group of prospective home owners who are urgently in need of new homes.

FINANCE

POULTRY MEAT—REQUEST FOR EQUALIZATION OF TARIFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the tariff on poultry meat moving between Canada and the United States is equal in both directions at 12½ per cent, but the United States imposes a minimum of 5 cents per pound whereas there is no such minimum imposed against poultry meat coming into Canada, and Canadian producers are therefore at some disadvantage in relation to United States producers, will the minister give consideration to taking whatever steps are necessary to bring the protection for Canadian producers into line with the protection enjoyed by United States producers?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): This is a matter which has been brought to the attention of the government on several occasions in the past, including a delegation of poultry association people who were here, I believe, a week ago today. We have assured these people that at the next GATT negotiating conference, which comes on this fall, we will make an effort to have these duties equalized as between United States and Canada.

POWER

TRANSMISSION OF ELECTRICITY—INQUIRY AS TO PARTY VISITING RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources whether he or his department have any knowledge of a party of Canadians who are supposed to be in the Soviet union at the present time investigating the transmission of electricity over long distances, and whether his department had any consultation with them before they went away.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): There has been consultation with private industry in Canada on this question of the long range transmission of power. I do not know the exact date but I understand that there is a private group going to Russia. I do not know whether or not they have gone. If they have not gone, they will be leaving some time shortly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is any government representative going with them?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Not to my knowledge.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

INQUIRY AS TO PURCHASE OF PREFABRICATED HOMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the government made any decision on the purchase of 1,000 prefabricated homes for R.C.A.F. personnel and their families living on remote stations where building conditions are difficult and costly? If not, will the minister give consideration to the attractive prefabricated movable five room dwelling manufactured at the Canada Car plant at Fort William, which is of sturdy construction capable of withstanding the rigours of the far north?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's enthusiasm for his constituency seems to be taking him beyond the bounds of propriety. I suggest that he put the first part of his question on the order paper and take up the other part on the estimates.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STATUS OF ORDER IN COUNCIL P.C. 4365 RESPECTING ACTIVE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I inquire of the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has had an opportunity to get a legal interpretation of P.C. 4365 dealing with the Canadian forces with reference to the restoration of peace in the Republic of Korea, as to whether the order in council is still in effect or whether it has been spent.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, that information has not come to hand.

FLOODS

FOLEYET, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister whether any request for assistance has come from the village of Foleyet with regard to the flood disaster which has overtaken them. If so, can he say whether the government can do anything to help these people?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I have no knowledge of that matter. I cannot say that no request has been made but it certainly has not come to me personally. However, I will make inquiry and ascertain the situation.

[Later:]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of National Defence inform the house whether the civil defence organization has been requested to assist in the rescue operations in the town of Foleyet and in minimizing the loss of property in the area?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, requests were received for assistance at Timmins; a helicopter was sent, and the armoury building was made available. I do not think any request has been received through the proper authorities for assistance at Foleyet.

TRANSPORT

KETTLE VALLEY RAILWAY—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT IN SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): In connection with the answer I gave the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) on Friday regarding the Kettle Valley railway, I should like to confirm to him that I have received no recent representations from representatives of railroad employees concerning an improvement in the service on this line, but I recall that when I was in that part of the province in 1958 the present hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. McFarlane) spoke to me about this matter and Mr. Peter Dewdney, the Conservative candidate in Kootenay West, arranged an interview with me for representatives of the railway unions in the area. I listened to their representations and passed them on to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

As the hon. member knows, the board of transport commissioners issued a judgment under date of January 4, 1960, following a hearing of the matter, and which was given to the hon. member in the house on March 9 last.

CIVIL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED USE OF DISBANDED OBSERVER CORPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of National Defence whether, in view of the decision to disband the observation corps consisting of some 55,000 individuals, any consideration will be given to the utilization of this body of Canadian citizens to assist in civil defence operations in Canada?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Yes; careful consideration was given to that matter, and in some cases personnel will be employed in connection with the fall-out warnings.

IMMIGRATION

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE—PROTESTS AGAINST RACIAL DISCRIMINATION UNDER CANADIAN LAWS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister mentioned migration in his report to the house today, can he inform the house whether any of the prime ministers at the London conference protested the racial discrimination of Canadian immigration laws and, if so, could the Prime Minister indicate the nature of his reply?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is that no one discussed that matter at any time.

ATOMIC ENERGY

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER POLICY, OPERATIONS AND EXPENDITURES

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved:

(1) That a select committee be appointed to consider the policy, operations and expenditures of the national research council, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited, and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon;

(2) That nothwithstanding standing order 67, the committee shall consist of twenty members, of which eleven shall be a quorum;

(3) That the committee be empowered to sit during the sittings of the house, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee and to send for persons, papers and records.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to dwell at great length on the subject of setting up this committee. The committee itself will have a great deal of work to do if it follows the course of the earlier committee of 1956, which assembled well over 400 pages of evidence. That makes it obvious that we cannot deal here, at the setting up of the committee, with all the matters which will come under its survey.

It has become customary for a select committee to look into the operations of non-departmental government research organizations once during each parliament. The 1950 committee examined the operations of the national research council. At that time the council had responsibility for atomic energy in addition to its other functions. The 1956 committee examined the role of government in non-military research, including Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the national research council. The proposal now is that the present committee consider the policy, operations and expenditures of the national research council, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited. I should add that in 1956 Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited were under one head.

It is generally agreed that it is useful at intervals of four years or so to have a committee of the house examine the operations of the research organizations. The operations of a research organization are complex and require considerably more freedom and flexibility than is customary with other government operations. The technical complexity of the operations also makes it advisable for members in the house who are especially interested to obtain a more detailed knowledge of the operations of such organizations.

The Canadian research complex involves three parts; the universities, industry and government. The universities are the basis of the whole research structure, and there has been a very great development of university research in Canada over the past 40 years. In fact when the national research council was formed in 1917 its major activity was the development of scientific research in universities, and there is no question but that the present status of science in Canada is largely due to the support thus given by the national research council.

At the end of the first war there was little research in Canadian universities except in a few isolated instances. Largely because of national research council support a steady development occurred in the years from 1920-39, and this ran parallel to financial support provided by the national research council, which increased from roughly $14,000 in 1917-18 to $247,000 in 1938-39. In spite of this very considerable development, at the beginning of the last war we were still far behind university science in European countries and the United States. This was largely due to shortage of staff and lack of facilities.

The war brought about major developments, and by 1946 scientific research was becoming a major operation of all Canadian universities. This development was delayed in the early 1950's by the universities' financial position, but the considerable improvement in this position has resulted in a quite spectacular development in the last five years.

National research council support has kept pace with this development and has risen in recent years.

Industrial research in Canada, especially related to secondary industry, has suffered from some of the problems inherent in the flow of foreign capital into Canadian industry. Research frequently has been done entirely by the controlling company outside Canada. However, there has developed greater realization in recent years that Canadian companies, whether controlled from outside Canada or not, must perform research for themselves, and there has been a very satisfactory development of research in Canadian companies since the last war. Much remains to be done, but certainly the trend at the moment is an encouraging one.

The national research council has taken a considerable share in carrying on research for Canadian companies prior to the development of their own facilities, in encouraging the growth of research facilities in Canadian companies themselves and in co-operating with industrial research organizations once they come into existence. In general the development of industrial research organizations means greater awareness of problems and consequently results in more effort rather than less being necessary by the national research council in playing its part. Parallel to this development of research in Canadian industries there has, therefore, been a steady expansion of the national research council laboratories.

Government research in Canada in so far as it relates to the development of natural resources or primary products is the function of the appropriate departments concerned—agriculture, mines and technical surveys, northern affairs, and so on. This phase of research lies outside the scope of the proposed committee. In general the activity of the national research council is aimed at secondary industry rather than primary. It has, however, much broader duties than this. Its main functions consist of (1) General advice to the government on the position of science as a whole and on its relations with other activities of government. (2) It is the council's function to promote and encourage research, particularly in universities and it therefore administers a scholarship and grant-in-aid program of considerable magnitude. (3) The council in its laboratories performs research which is either direct toward secondary industry, toward fundamental science or toward fields which fall outside the specific responsibilities of the various government departments and agencies. (4) A further function of the national research council which becomes particularly important as industrial research in industry expands is that of co-ordinating research done by various organizations and of making sure that all interested parties are aware of what others are doing.

In order to keep pace with this, the council has developed a continually expanding group of committees for the purpose of co-ordinating research and various aspects of technology. At the present time the membership of such committees is over 3,300, with people drawn from the national research council, from other federal government organizations, from provincial organizations, from Canadian industry and from the universities. This committee structure has had a most important effect on Canadian scientific co-ordination.

I do not wish to go into these matters in detail since this is the function of the committee. It may, however, be worth while to mention briefly the developments which have taken place since the last committee met in 1956. As far as the national research council is concerned there have been no pronounced changes administratively. There has been, however, a noteworthy expansion in many ways. The university program has expanded greatly in order to keep up with the growth of Canadian university science, and the council's estimates for university support in science have risen from $3.0 million in 1956-57 to $9.2 million in the 1960-61 estimates. The laboratories have had a slow but steady increase. The total estimates of the council have risen from $18.6 million to $33.0 million in this period. This increase consists in part of a $6.2 million increase in university support in science. Correspondingly there has been an increase in laboratory operating estimates of $6.5 million, rising from $15 million to $21.5 million. The remaining change in estimates in the period has been brought about by an increase in capital estimates, by some increases in council revenue, and so on. In other words, during this period there has been an expansion of slightly over 200 per cent in the council's estimates for university support and of 43 per cent in the estimates for the operation of the council's laboratories.

The fundamental feature of the national research council has been its somewhat unusual governmental set-up which has developed over the past 40 years for the purpose of giving the council the flexibility and freedom which it needs to perform its functions. This flexibility is essential to the operations of the national research council, and its operations should be carried out in the future as in the past with sufficient independence to enable it to fulfil the purpose for which it was set up.

I do not intend to make a lengthy statement on Atomic Energy of Canada Limited at this time. When the president of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited comes before the special committee he will not doubt wish to do so. There are, however, some general observations which I should like to make on introducing this resolution.

The government continues to support strongly the development of atomic power in this country. The special committee in 1956 in its final report hoped that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited would press forward in its work in the development of atomic power. This is being done. The estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1961 for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited are $41,653,255 as against $32,092,300 for the 1959-60 fiscal year. This is an increase of $9,560,955 or 29.8 per cent.

The construction of the nuclear power demonstration station at Rolphton, Ontario, some 20 miles west of Chalk River on the Ottawa river, is well under way. Construction work should be finished by about the end of this year and the station should be operating a year from now. This nuclear power demonstration station has a rating of 20,000 kilowatts of electricity and will feed power into the Ontario Hydro grid system. It is being built to demonstrate the reliability of operation, the safety and the economics of the heavy water natural uranium type of reactor system. However, because the size of a reactor plant plays such an important role in the economy achieved, the cost per kilowatt-hour of power generated in this small station will be higher than for a conventional plant.

During the past four years and concurrently with the nuclear power demonstration program, the design and development of a full scale nuclear power plant has also been under way. The decision to proceed was based on the confidence of the design staff, the success of the nuclear power demonstration design, the success of the fuel development program at Chalk River, and on the realization that a full scale plant must be built and operated before the real costs of large stations can be known.

While Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is not a government department, parliament does exercise financial control over its operations. Treasury board reviews Atomic Energy of Canada Limited estimates in the same manner as it reviews those of government departments. The approved estimates are printed in the official estimates and in due course are considered and approved here in parliament.

Not many years ago, owing to security restrictions, there was very little information about atomic energy available to parliament or to the general public. Now the situation has changed completely. There is a very large and growing body of information available on atomic energy. Even the technical experts have, to some extent, to rely on abstracting services to keep themselves posted on what is being written. Last year Atomic Energy of Canada Limited alone issued 100 technical reports from Chalk River and had another 100 articles published in technical journals. A further 490 reports were prepared for internal use. I am informed that the Chalk River library now has 68,000 technical reports, and about 17,000 reports and micro cards are being added each year. A large number of these are being received from atomic energy organizations in other countries in exchange for the reports issued by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. For the layman, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited prepares non-technical reports and brochures and puts on exhibitions.

With all the information now available about atomic energy the government considers it useful at this time to set up a special committee as proposed in the resolution. It will give the members of the special commitee an opportunity to learn more about the activities of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and about the Canadian nuclear power program. Any questions about the program can be fully discussed and aired. The minutes of proceedings and evidence will be a valuable record. They will be very carefully studied by the atomic energy experts and those responsible for atomic energy programs in other countries; just as the accounts of similar hearings held in other atomic energy countries are read with interest here. Canada is recognized as being one of the five leading atomic energy countries in the world. In the development of nuclear power reactors using natural uranium as fuel and heavy water as the moderator we are recognized as the most advanced country. Other countries are watching our program with keen interest.

The third field of investigation for the committee is Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited. In 1956 when the former committee of the house met the operations of Eldorado were under review. The committee may wish to bring up to date the information pertaining to Eldorado in relation to its mines at Port Radium and Beaverlodge, its research and development activities and its program of uranium procurement and sales. In the intervening four years since the special committee of the house met in 1956 very considerable changes have taken place which the present proposed committee may wish to examine in detail.

The committee of 1956 held a series of 12 meetings throughout May and June.

of that year. A similar series may be held by this committee as it considers the three important areas under investigation, the national research council, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited. In the three fields Canada has been very progressive and has established a position of prominence that has been recognized by leading countries engaged in similar activities.

Mr. Armand Dumas (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this motion as explained by the minister is that a select committee be appointed to consider the policies, operations and expenditures of the national research council, of the atomic energy corporation and of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited. This is, as the minister said, a large undertaking more especially if we take into consideration the fact that we may be on the last leg of this session. It is certainly unfortunate that this motion could not have been brought forward before now.

Of course the order of procedure in committee and more particularly the order in which any one of the three crown companies will be called to appear before the committee, the number of witnesses who will be heard and the number of sittings which the committee will be able to hold are matters being left to the committee itself through the steering committee which will be appointed. However, in view of the great interest across Canada in the future and development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes, in view of the recent controversy as regards the different methods of producing nuclear power and in view also of the amount of publicity which appeared in all Canadian newspapers during the last five or six months regarding the policy and operation of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited, I express the hope that the activity of these two crown companies will be studied first.

In expressing this hope I do not wish to minimize the importance of the work of the national research council. On the contrary I feel that the work of the council is growing in importance and it is very appropriate that a thorough survey of its accomplishments since 1956 be made so that hon. members of parliament and the public in general know that in this field of general research we are not lagging behind.

On the other hand, time is running short and it would be most unfortunate if before the end of the present session we were not able to have a complete survey made of atomic research and all the activities of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited. In previous parliaments committees of a similar nature were set up. The first was in 1949 and that committee was known as the committee on atomic energy. In 1950 a special committee known as the committee on the national research council was established and sat for some time and thoroughly examined the operations of that crown company. In 1953 there was a second committee on atomic energy and finally in 1956, as the minister said, another special committee was established to examine into the role of government in the field of non-military research in Canada including operations in the field of atomic energy and in the work of the national research council. I understand that at that time, four years ago, a complete review was made of the activities of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited.

We are aware that the national research council is well and efficiently operated and administered. The work of the council is of great importance to the country. Its achievements have contributed much in advancing material welfare in Canada. It contributes to the economic development of the country and the welfare of our people. We must also admit that it is an important adjunct in the defence of this country.

In 1956 we were told of the fine co-operation which existed between the council and industry. It was explained then that a free and constant flow of personnel and information is maintained between the council laboratories and industrial laboratories thus providing a most important source of information and assistance to the work of the council. In the early days of its history associated committees were established by the national research council and they have continued since. Hundreds of specialists have graciously and freely brought their knowledge and experience to bear upon the solution of many research problems. They have given their time and energy free of charge, as I have just said, and in doing this they have been a source of great strength to the council. For this they certainly deserve our most sincere thanks.

At this point I wish to extend to the officers and personnel of the national research council our congratulations and thanks for the fine work they are doing. The actual governing body of the national research council is an honorary advisory council consisting of 17 appointed members who are not government employees. They are men eminent in their fields such as university executives, deans, professors, industrialists, engineers and labour leaders. These men also bring freely to the council's deliberations their talents, experience and achievements, things that cannot be purchased by money. These men speak with authority. They are experienced in their own field and receive no monetary remuneration. Certainly these gentlemen together with those I have mentioned earlier deserve our sincere gratitude and that of the country.

On this side of the house we feel it is appropriate for parliament to review again the activities of the national research council and to get acquainted with proposed future research developments. In fact we are of the opinion that it is highly important that members of parliament and Canadians in general be more familiar with all that is being done by the national research council to improve our technological know-how and the welfare of the nation.

During the past months there has been an increased interest across the country in some of the possibilities as well as in some of the problems for the peaceful application of atomic energy. Certainly, there is no subject which has excited more interest in recent years, and no subject about which there is still more confusion. This is readily understood. First of all, it has momentous implications for the future of mankind. Used for belligerent purposes by ambitious powers it can bring devastation to the whole world. Used for peaceful purposes it can bring untold benefits to mankind.

The most important civilian application of atomic energy is, without any doubt, the generation of nuclear power. There are also many other fields where atomic energy will play an important role in the future. How important those other uses may eventually become no one can tell.

The possibilities of using atomic energy for generating nuclear power have been the subject of a great number of articles and editorials in the newspapers of this country during the last five or six months. We have read long dissertations regarding peaceful applications of this tremendous source of energy. We have read many controversial statements on the kind of reactors that should be built for generating power, of the kind of material that should be used in such reactors, that is, natural uranium or enriched uranium, heavy water or graphite, and so forth.

We have heard of the plight of the uranium extracting industry and of the communities depending on this industry. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, most of what we have read in the newspapers has contributed to the confusion, and a great number of Canadians are also of the opinion that the present government, by its inaction, by its lack of policy, has also contributed to confuse the issue.

There is no doubt that the Canadian people expect that this committee, with the help of the personnel of both or, I should say, maybe the three crown companies and the co-operation of outside witnesses, will be able to throw some light on the whole subject.

From the beginning Canada has played an important role in the development of atomic energy. Over the years our country has contributed much to the growing store of knowledge in this new and very complicated field. Canada, in many ways, has led the world in the development of atomic energy for peaceful uses. The first bombs for therapy for cancer treatment were produced at the atomic energy plant at Chalk River. I believe I am right when I say that, apart from the United States, Canada had the first reactor which was put into operation at Chalk River in 1945.

Our scientists and engineers are world leaders in natural uranium and heavy water reactors. There is no question that the NRX and NRU reactors at Chalk River are two of the finest research reactors known in the world. It is very appropriate that Canada should be taking a leading part at this time in the peaceful application of atomic energy, because many of the fundamental properties of radioactive elements and isotopes were discovered here by our own people.

It is commonly agreed that Canada must be included with those countries which are in the forefront in the development of nuclear science.

There is considerable difference of opinion as to the most suitable reactor which should be used for producing nuclear power. In the early days of Chalk River the NRX reactor was built and later the NRU. Both reactors were designed to use natural uranium and heavy water, and both were and are still considered fine reactors. First, design and feasibility studies were started early in 1954. From those studies came the outlined specifications for the demonstration power reactor, known as the NPD, nuclear power demonstrator, which is now being built, as the minister said, and I was very glad to hear it would be in operation in 1961, as previously foreseen. The nuclear fuel will be natural uranium and the moderator and primary coolant will be heavy water. This reactor was designed and is being built to produce or generate 20,000 kilowatts.

In 1955 and 1956, concurrently with the NPD program, a design study of a larger nuclear power station, with a capacity 10 times larger than the NPD, was carried out. The project has since been named the CANDU, Canadian deuterium uranium. Final approval to proceed with the engineering development phase of the CANDU was given in 1958, and we were told then that it would take three or four years to complete these preliminary studies and that by that time a reliable cost estimate of producing power with this reactor would be available. I hope that during the hearings of the committee we shall be able to get some definite figures, or close figures, on the probable cost of producing power in the NPD, and maybe the experts can deduce the cost of producing power in the CANDU. We were also informed that once a final decision is taken to go ahead with the construction of the CANDU it would take four of five years to have it in operation. As much as we are able to appreciate the quality of the experimental work which has been completed to date, we can say that we are well on our way and we will soon be producing nuclear power with a reactor using natural uranium and heavy water.

During the past year a certain amount of criticism has been directed toward this program and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has been blamed for having concentrated its work on one kind of reactor only, namely that of using heavy water and natural uranium. As it is—and I do not pose as an expert—I am not convinced that these criticisms are well founded. First of all, scientists and engineers who in the past have made a high reputation for themselves have started on a program which they believed was the right one. They have stuck with it, and it is undeniable that they have attained a certain amount of success. Second, we must not forget that our resources place some limit on our ability to undertake a highly diversified program. This is clearly understood, and I for one think that it is much better to do one job well than to do several jobs poorly. However, I believe I am on solid ground when I say that the majority of us here are not experts in this field of atomic energy and that only when we have heard the pros and cons will we be able to judge what is being done at the present time.

There are a great number of questions to be answered by those who will appear before this proposed committee. I am sure the committee will have full co-operation from the witnesses and in this way its work will be much easier and more satisfactory.

The present state of the uranium industry, Mr. Speaker, is not too encouraging. During the last world war, with the Belgian Congo we were the only producers of this metal. In the post-war years military demand continued to be the driving force in the world-wide search for uranium and the opening of new mines. During the past five years our country became a major producer and in 1959 some 15,000 tons of uranium oxide, having a total value of more than $300 million, were processed in the 25 Canadian operating mines. During that same period large deposits of uranium were discovered in the United States, and during the course of the last two years it became apparent that the United States atomic energy commission, which was our most important client, might reduce its purchases of uranium from Canada.

Under contracts with Canada which were to expire March 31, 1962, and March 31, 1963, the United States atomic energy commission had the option of extending its purchases through December 31, 1966. In August, 1959 the Canadian government was informed by letter that the government of the United States would not exercise any portion of the options to purchase Canadian uranium in the post-1962 period. This was disclosed only on November 6, 1959 when the arrangements made by Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited and the Uinted States atomic energy commission and the United Kingdom atomic energy authority to allow a stretch-out of deliveries of uranium to December 31, 1966 were announced. This drastic action of our friends and clients took the floor from under the industry and from now until the end of 1966 the production of uranium in this country will gradually decline from 15,000 tons, as it was last year, to a mere few hundred tons in 1966 or 1967.

Canada unfortunately is the first country to feel the impact of the growing surplus of uranium. I must repeat that it is hard to understand the do-nothing policy of the present government during the latter part of 1958 and all of 1959 regarding our sales of uranium to the United States. The Canadian industry was developed at the urging of the United States government to satisfy the needs of that country for vital sources of uranium oxide. Even after the discovery of large reserves, fears of shortage persisted in the minds of our friends to the south, so much so that they continued to take options on the Canadian production after 1962.

It is very difficult to understand why the present government did not press further the case of the Canadian uranium industry when there was still time to negotiate some satisfactory arrangement. The United States atomic energy commission should have at least consented to exercise part of its options in the post-1962 period. No, Mr. Speaker, the government paid absolutely no attention to our requests for action. The government paid no attention to a reasonable request presented to it by Canadian Metal Mining Association in January, 1959. One of the recommendations of the Canadian Metal Mining Association was to this effect, and I should like to quote it again:

The government of Canada do everything in its power—

That was in January, 1959.

—to have the government of the United States exercise its options on Canadian uranium production up to December 31, 1966, and give, at the earliest possible date, notification of its intention to do so.

Nothing was done officially by the Canadian government previous to August 7, 1959 when the Canadian chargé d'affaires ad interim wrote to the secretary of state of the United States. At this point I wish to put the contents of these letters on the record. The letter from our chargé d'affaires is dated August 7, 1959 and is addressed to the Hon. Christian A. Herter, secretary of state of the United States, Washington, D.C. It reads as follows:

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to the options for the purchase of Canadian uranium between 1962 and 1966 held by the United States atomic energy commission.

As the United States government is fully aware, the Canadian uranium industry was expanded to its present level of output primarily to supply the nuclear source material required for defence needs. The Canadian government considers it essential that the industry now be enabled to maintain itself on a sound and economic basis so that it may continue to serve those and other requirements and assumes that the United States government shares the view that this is a desirable objective. In these circumstances and in order that the Canadian uranium industry may be in a position to consider what steps can be taken to bring production and probable demand more nearly into balance my government wishes to ask whether the United States atomic energy commission will be authorized to exercise some or all of its options on Canadian production between 1962 and 1966.

In asking for an advance clarification of this point, I feel that I may rely upon the close and mutually beneficial co-operation in this field which has long existed between our two countries.

Accept, sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

That is signed by Mr. R. A. Farquharson, chargé d'affaires ad interim. The answer to the letter of the chargé d'affaires is dated August 28, 1959 and is addressed to His Excellency A. D. P. Heeney, ambassador of Canada, and reads as follows:

Excellency:

I have the honour to refer to your note No. 476 of August 7, 1959 regarding the exercise of options by the United States atomic energy commission for the purchase of Canadian uranium between 1962 and 1966.

Discussions have taken place between the department of state and the atomic energy commission, and the department has been informed that the commission will not be in a position to exercise any of these options by March 31, 1961.

The government of the United States is not unmindful of the contribution made by the government of Canada in supplying uranium for the defence of the free world both during and after world war II and also for the development of peaceful uses of atomic energy.

However, the atomic energy commission is presently committed to purchase more uranium during the next three years than it requires. Considering the surplus that will be acquired during these years, the commission probably is fully committed for its uranium requirements for the next four or five years. Beyond that there are still heavy commitments, principally with domestic producers, which extend to the end of 1966.

The present position of over-commitment is due to larger increases in domestic production than anticipated. The United States atomic energy commission has already taken steps to stretch out domestic deliveries and to limit its obligations under a domestic procurement program publicly announced in 1956.

Therefore, it is with the greatest regret that the government of the United States must inform the government of Canada that it will not be in a position to exercise its options.

In view of the importance of this matter the substance of this note has been discussed with the President.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

These two letters, reveal, first of all, that it was the chargé d'affaires who communicated with the secretary of state of the United States.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member permit a question? Was that not because our ambassador, Mr. Heeney, was ill at that time?

Mr. Dumas: He may have been ill at that time. I appreciate that, but there must have been a higher ranking officer at the embassy when Mr. Heeney was away. I will go further than that. I have already mentioned that this statement should have been presented through the highest channels. I feel that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) himself should have got in touch with the President of the United States. I have said that previously. A much more effective procedure should have been followed. This problem deserved at that time the personal attention of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister should have discussed this matter personally with the President of the United States.

Now it is too late and from 1960 on we are left with an industry which will produce less and less uranium. This is an extraordinary thing. This will be the first industry which will be called on to cut down. We have a tremendous amount of uranium. Of course I understand that there are also large amounts of uranium in some other countries. In the United States there is a tremendous amount of uranium. As was mentioned in the answer to His Excellency Mr. Heeney, the United States said they are committed to buy uranium from their own producers until 1966; I refer to the production of uranium after 1962. Of course, charity begins at home; there is no question about that. However, I feel that the United States government should have taken up or exercised part of the options in the post-1962 period.

Whatever the long term prospects for the uranium industry may be, it is clear that the communities depending on this industry, namely Elliot Lake, Bancroft and Uranium City, are experiencing serious trouble.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I did not have the opportunity to hear the minister speak and I am not sure how much he opened up in his address in moving this motion. However, I think it is appropriate to remind the hon. member who has the floor and others who may speak that the motion is to appoint a committee to consider matters such as those which the hon. member is now discussing. He really should direct his remarks to the desirability of appointing the committee illustrating them as he may properly do by the matters which should be brought before the committee or which the committee could usefully consider. But it is going beyond the scope of the motion to present to the house now matters which should be presented to the committee or in other words to debate matters with which the committee ought to deal. I feel obliged to say that cautionary word and to express the hope that this debate, which could range all over the place, will be directed fairly closely to the precise subject before the house, namely the desirability of setting up this committee to review these three particular operations.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask, Mr. Speaker, for your guidance? On a resolution of this kind that proposes to set up a committee dealing with two crown corporations which are directly concerned with the uranium industry is it in order to discuss the present situation and the operations of that industry in respect of this motion?

Mr. Speaker: I think that is probably what the hon. member is doing so I am not really answering a hypothetical question. In my view it would be relevant to discuss or to mention the state of the uranium industry in communities as illustrative of the desirability of having the committee review these problems. However, I suggest that is not relevant to debate at length the matters which the proposed committee is to consider.

Mr. Dumas: I will abide by what you have said, Mr. Speaker, but I hope you will permit me to finish the remarks I started when I was interrupted. I was saying that whatever the long term prospects for the uranium industry may be, it is clear that the communities depending on this industry, namely Elliot Lake, Bancroft and Uranium City, are experiencing serious trouble and their problem is not one to which it is easy to find a solution. I admit that it is a difficult problem. However, Elliot Lake, for instance, with a population of close to 25,000 at the end of 1959 has seen its population come down to maybe about 20,000 or 21,000, and the prospects are that it will stabilize at about 15,000.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order. I did not want to interrupt the hon. member because he has made a very constructive speech indeed; but if we now enter into the field of discussing the communities that will be suffering from unemployment, that is a much broader field than is indicated in the setting up of a committee. I did not touch on those subjects in the course of my opening remarks.

Mr. Speaker: I have no doubt that what the minister says is so. After cautioning the hon. member, I perhaps gave him the nod to finish what he was saying. However, I hope he will bring those remarks to a close and will relate his discussion of these problems to the necessity of having this committee.

Mr. Dumas: I have only a few more remarks to make. Of course the minister is right in saying that he did not touch on the problem. He could not very well touch on it because it is a thorn in the government's side. However, I will abide by what you have said, Mr. Speaker.

Energy is one of the keys to our national growth. On a per head basis we are one of the largest users of electricity. It is clear that in the near future the need for more extensive power resources will continue to be increasingly felt in the more populous and highly industrialized areas and provinces of this country. Ten to fifteen years from now we may have to produce twice as much energy as we are producing now.

For this reason careful consideration should be given to the possibility of developing electrical power by nuclear reactors. If we succeed, some portion—however small it is—of our domestic uranium production will be put to work in this country, thereby avoiding the large importations of coal, with the necessary adverse effect on Canada's balance of trade with the United States.

Canada has had an early start in the science of atomic energy and has been one of the pioneer countries in research for peaceful uses of this tremendous source of energy. Are we now lagging behind? I do not think so. However, this is one of the questions which will have to be answered before this proposed committee.

Another question which will have to be answered is the following one: are we experimenting with the right kind of reactors? Again, I believe we are, but there are many people who are not of this opinion. This controversy will also have to be resolved.

Are we following up on prospective markets for uranium? This is one question which will have to be answered by the minister himself. I hope the minister will be present at this committee and I hope that we shall have for once a clear outline of the policy of the present government on uranium and on atomic energy. I can tell the minister that we will try to give him all the co-operation possible.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): We welcome the setting up of this committee, Mr. Speaker, but I think we view it with some anticipation and some regrets. If we took 20 members, which is the size of this committee, out of the house this afternoon it would appear that there would be no sitting at all. We would either not be sitting in the committee or not sitting in the house, because there are only approximately 20 of us here at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is out of order in pursuing that line.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I am referring to part three of the resolution which gives the committee power to sit while the house is sitting.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has the right to refer to the numbers of the committee but not to the numbers in the house.

Mr. Peters: I was trying to indicate how difficult it will be to sit on all these committees and at the same time maintain attendance in the house, particularly for a small group.

We are very pleased that this committee is to be formed. It would appear that the three organizations which will be brought before us are the national research council, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited, all connected in a very immediate sense with the production of uranium and atomic energy and power. If there is any place where we have been ridiculous in our natural resources it has been in this field of uranium and atomic energy. The previous speaker pointed out how it was his opinion that we should have signed options to take effect in 1962 and that other things which should have been done could have been done. But the fact is that we neglected to set up this type of committee when we went into the production of uranium in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we are putting the cart ahead of the horse even yet because of the situation in the towns which are affected by the production of uranium and the results which have taken place in those towns. When we originally went into the production of uranium Canada should obviously have had a more firm guarantee from the United States that they would participate in that program beyond the five-year limit. It would seem to me that the previous government showed very little regard for the people who would be working in those areas of Elliot Lake, Bancroft and Uranium City when they signed contracts of only five years' duration.

It would seem to me also that they were remiss in their duty in allowing the companies to set up such gigantic operations as they did. I do not believe it was ever the intention of the government to extend to mining companies the rights which they now have on such a large scale. In the Elliot Lake area the total cost of going into production will be paid for in a period of five years, and the complete operation as far as the money invested is concerned it is based on the proposition that you will get your money back at the end of five years' time. These are factors which the government should have concerned itself with in years gone by. These are some of the things the previous government did nothing about and which the present government is doing very little about.

Mr. Speaker, while it is not mentioned in the resolution, I would hope that we are now going to hear a report from the committee which has been set up by the government to investigate the methods of assisting the communities which have been concerned with the production of uranium. Recently, in fact today, I received a phone call from Elliot Lake and they are very concerned in that area not only with unemployment but—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member will refer to the resolution he will see it relates to the establishment of a committee to consider the policy, operations and expenditures of the national research council, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited. I see nothing in the resolution authorizing the committee to deal with the specific problems which have been discussed by the house concerning Elliot Lake, and even if it is within the purview of the committee, it is something for the committee to decide when it sits. Discussion of the policy or the effect or result of the policy followed by these three bodies should be deferred until the committee meets and the problems are brought before the committee; they should not be discussed in the house.

Mr. Peters: One of the reasons I assume the committee is being set up is that the resolution mentions it is setting up a select committee to consider the policy, operations and expenditures of the national research council, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited. This call I received referred to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and its policy in buying uranium and as related to the stretching out of contracts now taking place. It also referred to the sale which is taking place through Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited in relationship to the contracts of some of the companies which have not been able to continue operations. As I understand it, not only have they been unable to make arrangements when the company itself says it can continue to operate, but arguments have been put forward to Mr. Gilchrist of Eldorado in which they pointed out that the company is capable of making a contribution in the area. I should like to refer to one case, the case of Stanrock. Their case will be before Eldorado before very long and Mr. Gilchrist has already heard representations from them.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I hesitate to interrupt again but I think we are wandering rather far afield in discussing individual contracts or proposed changes, and things of that nature. I think we should really restrict our remarks to the advantages or disadvantages of setting up this committee.

Mr. Speaker: What the hon. member is saying now, without of course prejudging the issue, would appear to me to be a relevant matter to bring before the committee. But at this time the house is not concerned with the rights and wrongs of the policies of these crown corporations; it is only concerned with whether it should set up the committee in order to delegate to that committee the responsibility of hearing about those policies. If we permit a debate on those policies here, we only duplicate rather than save the time of hon. members of the house.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, as I understand the matter, what is before the house for decision is the wisdom of whether or not a committee should be set up to examine into these matters. How can the house pass judgment on that question if it does not know what is the type of problem that requires examination by the committee, and the type of problem which requires examination surely is the question of contracts made by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited as the government's buying agency for all uranium in Canada. Surely the house must know something about whether there are questions outstanding pertaining to those contracts and other related matters before it can decide whether a committee should be set up. While it is true that these matters can all be discussed by the select committee, surely they can also be discussed here in order that the house can reach a decision as to the wisdom, or lack of it, in setting up the committee.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: I agree to this extent, as I have already said, that to illustrate the problems which call for the attention of this committee it is in order to outline what the problems are, but not to debate them. Surely the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) does not contend that on a motion to set up a committee to hear these matters the house would be justified in spending its time in hearing matters which could be presented to the committee. I do not want to draw too fine a line but, really, the discussion of the results and effects of the policies of these three corporations should only be brought into this debate as illustrations of the need to set up a committee.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if I might add a word on this point of order? I wish merely to say that the minister, introducing this resolution, dealt at some length with the question of research. We have heard a long speech containg detailed discussion of research questions, and in line with your ruling that there can be some reference to the policies being followed, though not a detailed discussion, I merely wish to point out that there has been a fairly wide discussion of research as it is carried on by these various organizations.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member was perhaps not here when I said I did not have the privilege of hearing the minister, and that I did not know how widely he had opened the discussion of this subject. I certainly would not wish to prevent a discussion of anything which was contained in the minister's discussion of the matter, within reasonable limits.

Mr. Churchill: On this point, may I offer a correction to the hon. member for Assiniboia. I did say more about research than about some of the other matters to come before the committee, but it was a factual report on the things which the national research council has been doing. I did not deal with questions of policy concerning any of the three organizations under consideration.

Mr. Peters: All I wanted to say was that we are not satisfied with the operation of the committee that is being set up by the government, the committee that could probably be called the Elliot Lake committee, because we are not getting any reports on it.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member is now discussing an entirely different matter. He is discussing some other committee. I thought our purpose now was to discuss the setting up of this committee to investigate Eldorado Mining and Refining, and so on.

Mr. Peters: If the minister would just wait a moment, I intend to relate my remarks to that subject. What we are interested in is a much better method of handling this problem as it affects atomic energy, the Eldorado organization and the production of uranium. We are not satisfied with the situation as it has developed up to now. There is, I believe, a very dangerous tendency to combine all the problems of the uranium industry in one field. In my opinion, they are diversified.

The problem of uranium contracts has, I think, been discussed this afternoon—the contracts with the United States, and the circumstances in which this problem developed. I suggest that this proposed committee would have an obligation to call representatives of the industry before it, representatives of the companies which are now producing uranium for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and for exports to the United States, in addition to representatives of the unions concerned in order that they may put their views forward.

As I began to say, Mr. Gilchrist from the Eldorado organization hears the presentations by the various companies following which he or, if you like, the cabinet make decisions as to which companies shall continue to operate and which shall not. It seems to me that this is the same problem which faces us, though on a bigger scale, in relation even to the type of uranium to be developed in Canada at the present time. I shall not discuss the question of enriched uranium as against natural uranium or whether we should use a graphite coolant or a heavy water coolant, although these are problems which are in fact being discussed widely throughout the country. There is no agreement on this question. Neither is there agreement among the top people in the industry that the contracts are being allocated on a proper basis. We believe that Eldorado itself should be able to bid for contracts when made available by mines which themselves indicate that they are not going to make a success of their operations during the limited time they have to run.

Mr. Churchill: I was waiting for the hon. member to finish his paragraph, but I feel obliged on a question of privilege to correct his statement that Mr. Gilchrist, president of Eldorado Mining and Refining Company Limited, determines whether contracts are awarded or not. That is an incorrect statement.

Mr. Peters: As I understand it, he does the hearing. If you, Mr. Speaker, would allow me to state the case, I understand that at the present time he is hearing representations from Stanrock, an independent mine in the Elliot Lake area. The unions and the company have made their presentations. The company has stated it would be able to make $40 million gross on its contract. They have six million pounds of uranium on their contract yet to produce. They have stated they should be able to pay their shareholders $2,500,000 in dividends before that contract expires.

Mr. Churchill: I really must rise again on a point of order because I think we are getting far afield from the purpose of this motion by discussing special contracts, offers, and things of that nature that are happening in the uranium industry. The questions that the hon. member has in mind may be raised during the sittings of the committee, but surely not at this stage.

Mr. Speaker: I fully agree that the details of these matters which could be brought before the committee itself should not take up the time of the house now. Otherwise there would be no point in setting up the committee. The hon. member has indicated the questions which concern him and certain people and which he feels could properly be brought before the committee. To that extent he is in order, but it is not in order to discuss the details.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see this resolution before us, and trust the committee will be set up as soon as possible. I am gratified to see the wide terms of reference, particularly with regard to policy, which have been provided and which will enable the committee to engage upon the broadest possible survey of the substantive matters mentioned in the resolution.

I hope that the committee will, in fact, direct its attention to a considerable and serious discussion of the direction which our present research and development in atomic energy power is now taking. Frankly, this is a technical and complex subject, somewhat beyond me, but when I hear the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Dumas), who is a competent professional engineer, vouchsafing his misgivings I certainly have no reason to be ashamed to say what I have said. While I realize that this is a subject of great technical breadth and depth yet, I think it is safe to say that I share the concern in the minds of many people as to whether we in Canada—and this is one problem which, I trust, the committee will investigate—by restricting our development and research to the heavy water type of atomic reactor are not putting all our atomic eggs into one basket, particularly in view of the fact that in the United States they have established several diffusion plants which are engaged in the production of enriched uranium.

That is an area which I trust this committee will carefully study. I say that because not only as a member of this house but as a Canadian I have a personal interest in this subject also in the sense that I come from the near north which is the source of much of our uranium production and the potential source of more and which contains the most logical place for the large quantities of hydro power required for the production of enriched uranium, namely at the proposed Peace river dam. I hope therefore the committee will give some serious thought to our policy in connection with the grave, vexatious and complex problem of atomic power production in Canada.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this motion. I wish to point out first that it is now May 16 and on February 16, two months ago today, as reported at page 1108 of Hansard I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) a question in these words:

> I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will consider discussing with the house leader the possibility of making arrangements to move at the earliest possible moment the motion setting up a select committee to consider the policy, operations and expenditures of the national research council, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited, so the question of the future of the uranium industry, which is of such national importance, as well as one involving grave local emergencies, can be fully discussed at an early date.

In reply the Prime Minister said:

> I think the committee in question, if the house agrees, should be convened at the earliest possible date.

That was two months ago and we are only now considering this motion. I thought at that time it would be a motion to permit us to discuss the whole future of the Canadian uranium industry, and at an early date.

There have been similar motions moved in the past setting up a committee for this purpose, as the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Dumas) has said. In the light of what is and what is not permissible in a discussion of this kind it is interesting to recall that when the motion was made on February 24, 1956 by a predecessor of my hon. friend who has moved this motion, the discussion on that motion ranged far and wide over the whole question of government atomic energy policy and indeed the discussion covered 63 pages of Hansard.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, it lasted two and a half days.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, and to this discussion my hon. friend made his own contribution.

Mr. Churchill: No, I did not take part in it. I did not agree at the time that the discussion should take so long.

Mr. Pearson: The present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) certainly had a long contribution to make beginning on page 1700 of Hansard of that date. In any event the discussion took two and a half days and covered 63 pages of the record.

We have substantially the same motion before us today to set up a committee to consider the policy and operations of these governmental agencies and whether in our view it is wise to set up this committee for that purpose. Two of these agencies, I need hardly point out to the house, deal with the uranium industry and atomic energy generally up to the point where one of them, I believe I am right in saying, is the sole marketing agency for this commodity.

My friend the hon. member for Villeneuve speaking on this motion has already indicated the importance which has been attached in the past and which perhaps will be attached to an even greater extent in the future to research. I should like to join the hon. gentleman in the tribute he paid to the agencies in question which are referred to in this motion and to the work they have done and are doing to the skill and devotion of the officials, the officers and the workers of these three government corporations, although I think the national research council hardly qualifies as a government corporation.

Nothing could be more important than research in the development of our country and nothing could be more important than the work done in that field by these agencies of the government. Perhaps in the future a great deal more will have to be done in this field because it is becoming increasingly obvious that no country can keep up in development unless it keeps up in research. It is sad to think that at this time hundreds of millions of dollars are being spent on defence with results which to say the least are inadequate to meet the emergencies of the time when, yet compared to that amount so little is being appropriated for the kind of research which would be of inestimable benefit to the development of our country.

I want to say a few words about the uranium industry because it is one of the matters which will undoubtedly be discussed by the committee. I think it is appropriate to consider the state of that industry at the present time before the committee is set up. No doubt the committee will go into the matter in detail and will call witnesses and experts, but this is an opportunity to give our views in the house on the subject which is covered by the words "policy and operations" of these agencies as those words appear in the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member goes on, in view of his indication of what he intends to say, may I say there have been some unfortunate precedents in the past of allowing extended debates on motions to set up committees. I am not sure whether those were accounted for by the common consent of the house that a debate take place in general terms on all the matters which would come before the committee, but I would hope that the house would follow what in my mind is a more correct precedent of debating the desirability of setting up the committee, illustrating that point as the hon. gentleman is entitled to do by reference to the present state of the industry in so far as it is involved in the matters referred to the committee. What I want to guard against —and I ask for the co-operation of the house in this—is covering here what will have to come before the committee and will be the subject of debate when the committee reports so that we do not triplicate our efforts.

Mr. Pearson: Without regard to what may have been done on earlier occasions and which is perhaps irrelevant to your ruling I will do my best to keep within the limits Your Honour has set down.

One of the matters which undoubtedly will have to be discussed by the committee and indeed it is one of the most important subjects will be civil uses of atomic energy. Already there has been some indication in this debate as to the importance of that matter and the progress which is being made in that regard. As has already been pointed out, we in this country have taken our stand on one type of heavy water reactor. I am in no position to support or criticize that decision because it is a highly technical decision and naturally one can only be guided by the technical advice one receives on a matter of such complicated scientific importance.

In any event the decision has been made and when the committee meets no doubt there will be experts brought before the committee to explain and justify that decision. One effect of the decision which has already created its own controversies in Canada among those who are on both sides qualified to have views on this matter has been to put us in a different situation in regard to the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes in the future from that which faces the United States in its development program today because they have apparently decided to proceed with the development of a different kind of reactor.

In due course we shall find out who is right, or who is wrong, or, indeed, perhaps both will be right, or conceivably even both may be wrong; but the fact remains that at the present time the divergence in policy and decision in this matter between the two countries does constitute a problem for the development of Canada in this field in so far as the use of uranium and the export of uranium are concerned because the United States will be competing with us in this field and it is a competition which is going to be, as it has already been, very difficult for us to meet. I say that because the United States has great resources at its disposal; it can offer reactors to other countries, make agreements covering the use of uranium by other countries, build reactors for them free, or on credit arrangements we cannot meet. That condition, because of the nature of the reactor in which only enriched uranium can be used—and we do not produce enriched uranium—poses a problem which we shall have to face.

It may be that one day in this country we shall have to go into the field of enriched uranium. I hope it will be one of the matters which will come before this committee, where we can get expert opinion because, as the minister knows, there are even contrary views on that subject. Perhaps we shall be able to come to some conclusion in the committee as to the cost and the desirability, or the undesirability, of proceeding at this time or in the near future with a plant for the production of enriched uranium in Canada, how much it will cost if we were to proceed with it, and all that kind of thing. Because we are going to have very great difficulties indeed in developing markets in the world for our uranium if we have to compete with the United States under contracts, the kind of which I have indicated and which would require the users of the reactors constructed by the United States to purchase a certain type of uranium which cannot be secured from Canada.

There are other limitations in our expansion in this field that we shall have to face. There is the limitation brought about in the existing individual agreements, the bilateral agreements we make with other countries by international agreement. I know that these limitations are pretty strong but I think they are such, because of the nature of this commodity and the use to which it is being put in other fields than for peaceful purposes, as are valid at this time. It may, however, cause us difficulty if other exporters of uranium do not accept the same limitations in the same way as we do.

There is, of course, another difficulty facing the uranium industries immediately, a far more serious difficulty than the potential one which I have mentioned, and that is the state of the industry arising out of the refusal of the United States to take up the options in the contracts that were made between agencies of the two governments some years ago. I would think, Mr. Speaker, that this would be one of the most important matters that could be brought before this committee. It is one that should be discussed before the committee in all of its aspects, its scientific, commercial aspect, it employment aspect and, if you like, also its diplomatic aspects.

The circumstances of the original contract, the circumstances under which it was signed, I think are pretty well known to the house and, in view of the importance of this matter as a subject for discussion in the committee, I hope I may be permitted to trace the circumstances but not at any great length. It is well to remember that it is only a few years ago when we negotiated this contract with the United States in circumstances which, of course, were very different from those which existed last autumn when the question of taking up the options came up. I recall, as other hon. members will recall, that the Canadian government of that day was begged to explore with every possible rapidity to discover and to develop every ounce of uranium that could be found in this country as a product which was of vital importance for not only American but for collective defence generally. We were begged at that time to proceed with all possible speed and it was in those circumstances that a contract was signed for a five-year period, with an option to renew, at a time when there was such a shortage of uranium in the world that it was stated by our friends to the south that if they could not count on the supplies that were available in Canada collective defence would be jeopardized. So the development took place of which we are aware, and which no doubt will be considered in all of its ramifications by the committee which is being set up.

At that time, Mr. Speaker, there was no question in anybody's mind about an oversupply of uranium; there was a great fear in a lot of people's mind about an undersupply of uranium. At that time, when this question came before a committee of this house of the type we are proposing to set up now, the preoccupation in the minds of the members of that committee was whether—and I mentioned this in the house before—we should tie up our available production of uranium for such a long period as five years. The government of that day was criticized by the opposition of the time because we had committed ourselves for five years to the shipment of all the uranium we could produce under those contracts to one source of consumption, the United States of America. If it was impossible at that time to foresee the future, did the same situation prevail a couple of years ago when the circumstances had very greatly changed?

Will you call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I was discussing, not in detail but in general, the circumstances surrounding the signing of the contract between the United States and Canada with regard to the purchase of uranium. This is obviously one of the matters which the committee will wish to go into in detail because it has had an important bearing on the development and the recent slowing down of this important industry in Canada.

As I pointed out, at the time the contract was signed there was a condition of shortage in this vital defence material but it became quite clear subsequent to the signing of the contract that it was the policy of the United States government to encourage and subsidize exploration and development within its own boundaries. It was successful in doing this in terms of domestic production to the point where by 1959 United States production had risen to a total of 16,300 tons of uranium oxide per year contrasted with 15,497 tons of Canadian production. There is an interesting review of this development in the monthly review of the Bank of Nova Scotia for March, 1960, entitled "Uranium and Atomic Energy", which gives some information it would be interesting for the committee to have and which confirms what I have just said, that beginning in 1955 the United States made a big effort to increase its own production of this commodity, with the results I have just mentioned.

It was quite obvious after 1956, when this development was in full swing, that if the United States were to continue to give contracts to its domestic producers this constituted a threat to the developing Canadian industry which development was taking place at the urgent request of the United States authorities. It seemed quite obvious to me, and I have expressed this view in the House of Commons more than once in the last two years, that if the Canadian industry was to be protected, if the options were to be taken up in whole or, more likely, in part, then this would require diplomatic intervention at the highest level in both governments.

This afternoon the hon. member for Villeneuve put on the record the report which was tabled in the house which showed that that kind of intervention did not take place, that there was merely one note sent to the United States government from the Canadian embassy calling the attention of the United States authorities to this development and its effect on the Canadian industry; a note which was sent by the chargé d'affaires ad interim who was the information counsellor in the embassy and, incidentally, one of the best information officers any embassy of any government could have.

As a result the United States informed us last August that they were not going to take up any of these options. That information was not made public until late October of 1959 and as a result of that decision on the part of the United States government, a decision which I claim does not reflect the kind of industrial defence co-operation between the two countries which is so often claimed to be in effect, the industry in Canada today is in its present deteriorating position. This is one of the matters which the committee will wish to go into in great detail.

Since the United States has taken this decision—we have an even greater grievance against the United States on this point—with the disastrous effect it has had on the Canadian industry, the government of the United States, if my information is correct, has given new contracts to its own producers at a time when our production is being cut off. I, as has perhaps the minister, have read a magazine called Mining World for February, 1960 in which there is a great deal of detailed information about new contracts that has been given by the United States authorities to United States producers in this year and extending through 1966.

I claim that if we had some cause to complain about the decision last summer to ignore the options we have even greater cause to complain at subsequent activities of the United States atomic energy authorities in increasing production in their own country since that time when ours is suffering from the decision taken by the United States, which has ignored a situation in which they were so interested four or five years ago when we were asked to sign this contract. That is one of the things that this committee will want to go into in great detail. We will certainly wish to get all the information we can as to what the government did or did not do to protect the Canadian industry.

I was going to go on, Mr. Speaker, to discuss the effect of this decision on some Canadian localities in terms of employment and in other respects but I bow to your ruling on this matter. No doubt that is something the committee will be able to discuss. Perhaps also we will have another opportunity to discuss it in the house later in the session. Meanwhile I should like to say in conclusion that, as the hon. member for Villeneuve has pointed out, we welcome the establishment of this committee. We asked for it three months ago and we were told then that it would be set up shortly. It is now May 16 and the committee will be set up shortly after May 16. We will co-operate in the work of that committee as best we can and we hope there will be some constructive results from it.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a very few words at this stage of the discussion of the resolution which is to set up a committee to study the policy, operations and expenditures of the national research council, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited. I think it is very much in order that crown corporations or other emanations of the crown should appear before parliamentary committees from time to time to discuss with members of the House of Commons their operations. We support every effort that is being made by these organizations in the field of research and research for peaceful uses for atomic energy as we feel this is a particular matter to which Canada should give emphasis.

My main purpose in rising is to bring to the minister's attention once again requests that he has received, I believe, from various organizations in Saskatchewan having to do with Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited and the situation at Uranium City, Saskatchewan. I believe that the Stanleigh uranium contract came up the other day for a bid and that Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited did not place a bid for that contract. The Uranium City chamber of commerce for some months now has been pressing the government with regard to the policy of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited with regard to bids for the purchase of unfilled uranium contracts. I have in mind a report which appeared in the Regina Leader-Post of November 16, 1959 and headed "Let Saskatchewan Mine buy Uranium Contracts". The first paragraph of it reads as follows:

> The Uranium City chamber of commerce and the municipal council Sunday expressed concern at reports that uranium producers in eastern Canada are exerting pressure on the federal government to withhold from Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited the right given other producers to purchase unfilled uranium contracts.

I would hope that the committee would give consideration to this request in discussing this matter with Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited. I would appreciate from the minister any information he can give the house as to the policy of this company. As far as my information is concerned, I feel that this is a reasonable request that has been made. The people of Uranium City in Saskatchewan are just as much concerned over the position of the uranium industry as are the people at Elliot Lake, Bancroft and other areas that are affected.

I believe that a further communication went to the minister early this month, that it reiterates the position taken in November and asks once again that Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited should exercise the right to place bids on these unfilled uranium contracts.

The minister will appreciate the situation at Uranium City. In answering a question of mine the other day and a question of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) he informed the house that two people from his department were making a survey of the situation at Uranium City. We hope that a report is received at an early date on which action can be taken to assist this community. But I would ask the minister, on behalf of the people of Uranium City and those who are affected, to give consideration, as the minister reporting for Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited, to the suggestion that this company along with others should have the opportunity to exercise the right to bid on unfilled uranium contracts so that the effect of the depression now prevalent in the uranium industry will not fall unduly on the community of Uranium City.

Motion agreed to.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY ACT

AMENDMENTS TO EXTEND PERIOD OF PAYMENTS AND INCREASE MAXIMUM EXPENDITURES

The house resumed from Thursday, April 28, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-57, to amend the Trans-Canada Highway Act—Mr. Walker—Mr. Rea in the chair.

[Mr. Argue.]

On clause 1—Termination of contributions.

Mr. Bourget: I should like again to ask the minister if he would like to tell the house whether, according to this bill, the province of Quebec will be able to take advantage of this program and also will be entitled to recover 50 per cent of the cost of previous construction, that is to say construction done between 1928 and 1949. I asked a question of the minister, Mr. Chairman. I wonder whether the minister heard the question.

Mr. Walker: I thought my friend must be indulging in the humour for which he is famous, Mr. Chairman. This question has been ruled out of order seven times in the debate thus far and it has nothing to do with the matter before the committee. We are considering clause 1 of the bill. The question of Quebec has nothing to do with it. This is a Trans-Canada Highway Act amendment. Nine provinces are participating in it. The province of Quebec is not a participant. In clause 1 we are considering extending the time for the completion of the highway until 1963. That is the only matter before the committee at this time. The matter was discussed ad nauseam on the principle at the resolution stage and on second reading and my hon. friend has asked the same question. Hansard is studded with it. I thought he was joking tonight when he asked that question. Under all the circumstances, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to appear to be out of order in trying to answer a question which has been declared by the Chair so many times to be out of order. I therefore refuse even to attempt to answer any such questions directed to me further by my hon. friend. I say this in all good faith and in upholding the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Bourget: As a member of the House of Commons and a representative of the province of Quebec and when we are voting under this bill $50 million for the next three years, am I not entitled to receive an answer from the minister? Am I out of order, Mr. Chairman? I would like to know from you whether I am out of order when I ask if the province of Quebec is entitled to take part in this program and also to recoup 50 per cent of the cost of construction of prior work done on the roads in the province today. I think I am in order and that the minister was wrong to tell me that I was out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order raised by the minister I would draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that the minister is a very recent arrival in this house, not too familiar yet with the rules of the house and even less so with the practice of the house. The minister does not seem to realize that this bill is an amendment to a measure which provides for agreements not with nine provinces of Canada but with all ten, and the mere fact that one of the provincial governments up to now has not seen fit to enter that agreement does not alter the fact that the legislation which was put on the statute books in 1949 and has been amended several times since applies to all ten provinces and all parts of Canada. Before we are asked, as we are being asked in this bill, to vote a considerably larger sum of money, surely the representatives in this parliament from a province representing one third of the population are entitled to know what this measure really means in relation to that province. That is all the hon. member for Levis is asking and that is what the minister in his arrogant fashion is refusing to tell this house.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, as I read the provisions of this bill they apply to the trans-Canada highway program under the Trans-Canada Highway Act, which is available to all ten provinces. That was my understanding of the act when it was first passed. I do not believe that this government has done anything, at least to my knowledge, to bar the province of Quebec from coming into the agreement. My hon. friend from Levis is certainly entitled to ask whether or not this legislation provides for payments for the province of Quebec and whether that province could receive part of the cost of highway construction already completed along this particular route. For the life of me I do not understand the attitude of the minister in saying "I refuse to answer". I do not know of any other minister at any previous time, certainly in my experience in the house, who has refused to answer a question which is obviously in order.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, does the hon. member for Assiniboia, the legal spokesman for the C.C.F. group, not admit that the question I have been asked tonight has been ruled out of order six or seven times by the chairman in the last debate?

Mr. Argue: I am not aware of that fact at all.

Mr. Walker: You were away campaigning.

Mr. Argue: If it had been ruled out of order then I would hope the chairman tonight would rectify the wrong that has been done. I cannot understand the Minister of Public Works holding parliament in contempt to the extent of refusing to answer a question that is in order, since this act applies to all provinces. Campaigning seems to be in the mind and on the tongue of the Minister of Public Works. I do not think he should take it upon himself to judge whether or not his answers will have a favourable or an adverse effect on any election campaign now going on in Canada.

The point is that this act provides for payments from the federal treasury to any province in this country undertaking to build a trans-Canada highway under the terms of this act, and I believe the hon. member for Levis is perfectly in order in asking the question. I presume the Minister of Public Works takes it as his own responsibility to refuse to give information to the house.

I have a question that I would like to ask the minister—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. member for Assiniboia would wish the Chair to rule on this matter before any other matter is brought up.

Mr. Argue: I was just making my speech.

The Deputy Chairman: I am inclined to think that this is perhaps an argument on this matter between two hon. members. I feel that the first part of the question is relevant to the bill. The second part of the question as to whether or not they could recoup moneys paid out in the past I am not convinced is relevant to the bill. That is my feeling.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, would you hear me on this point. Clause 1 of the bill says:

> No contributions or payments shall be made under this act
> (a) after the 31st day of May, 1964—

There is no question under the act as to whether it is contributions for work now done or for work which was done before. I think there is a great difference and that the question of the hon. member for Levis should be in order.

The Deputy Chairman: I think that is strictly a legal interpretation of the wording in clause 1.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, in discussing a similar amendment on a former occasion the minister of public works of that day informed parliament that certain studies, I believe they were, were being undertaken with regard to the whole question of highways in this country and highway policy. I am wondering if the minister would care to inform the committee whether consideration is now being given to the development and future implementation of a highway policy in this country, something that I believe is very badly needed and about which I feel the government has received representations from time to time.

I think that this bill before the committee is an integral part of any such policy but I would appreciate it if the minister would answer this question. He did not appear to be in the best frame of mind when he first spoke this evening, but I had the pleasure of hearing him a few nights ago when he spoke at a banquet sponsored by the Rotary Club at which a number of guests, young students from across Canada, were being entertained following their stay in Ottawa and were participating in a very worth while endeavour called "Adventures in Citizenship". I would hope the Minister of Public Works might get into the same jovial frame of mind he was in that evening; he was exceedingly entertaining. I am not looking to be entertained tonight particularly, but I think the Canadian public would be very much interested in any remarks the minister might make as to studies that are being undertaken toward the development of a highway policy in this country.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, may I say that I discussed the question put to me by the hon. member many, many times at the resolution stage and on second reading, and at the moment we are in committee on the first clause of this bill. However, if it will please the hon. member and if I have your permission, Mr. Chairman, may I repeat what I said on that occasion: until this trans-Canada highway is complete or close to completion, this government does not intend even to consider any further trans-Canada highway or any national plan. However, we in the department are contemplating at all times many matters including possibilities for the future, and the hon. member will probably see the wisdom of this. Nevertheless, we have no intention of considering any secondary scheme until the first is within range of completion. In saying this I am only reiterating the words of the Prime Minister which I read into the record on the resolution stage of this bill.

Mr. Argue: If I may make a very brief reply, I should like to say that I feel the government is in error in restricting its highway activity to the limited area covered by this legislation. I believe that on the basis of resources and on the basis of employment needs it is time the government should develop a broader policy and embark on a national highway program which would include a second trans-Canada highway.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think it was decided some time ago in committee that no reference could be made to a second trans-Canada highway. I was not in the chair at the time.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Robichaud: I wonder if the minister could tell the committee if he has received any representations from the premier of Nova Scotia or the premier of New Brunswick to the effect that the federal contribution to this trans-Canada highway plan was too low and, if so, what consideration was given to any such requests.

Mr. Walker: That is a very broad question but according to all my knowledge I have no recollection of having received any such intimations from either one of the premiers of the two provinces mentioned, either of whom can probably appreciate that at this time it is hardly possible to change the contributory percentage under the act, this having gone on now for nearly ten years. However, we have had a request from both provinces, that the time should be extended, and that is one of the reasons we are considering clause 1 tonight, to extend it until 1963.

Mr. Bourget: I should like to come back to my question and read it again. Would the minister tell the house if according to this bill the province of Quebec would be able to take part in this program. That is the first part of my question.

Mr. Walker: That is a matter for the province of Quebec.

Mr. Roberge: I appreciate the minister's answer when he says it is a matter for the province of Quebec to decide, but I should like to know if and when the province of Quebec chooses to put itself into the plan, is the province going to be able to recuperate what is has lost so far?

The Deputy Chairman: That was the second part of the question of the hon. member for Levis, and the Chair rules it out of order.

Mr. Bourget: Looking at the bill, one sees that clause 1 reads as follows:

> (4) No contributions or payments shall be made under this act
> (a) after the 31st day of May, 1964 or
> (b) in respect of any construction costs that were incurred after the 31st day of December, 1963.

Now I am asking the minister a simple question: can Quebec recuperate in respect of the work done by the province between 1928 and 1949. I do remember that in 1949, when the bill was first introduced in this house, there was no time limit in respect of which the federal government could pay a province for construction work done on the trans-Canada highway, so I think my question is in order.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry, but I have been looking over this bill carefully and I cannot see where recuperation of expenses retroactively is relevant to the measure. I think that is a question which could be asked, perhaps, on the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Roberge: On that point, the bill says:

No contributions or payments shall be made under this act . . .

(b) in respect of any construction costs that were incurred after the 31st day of December, 1963.

If no contribution can be made after that date, it surely means that contributions can be made before that date in respect of construction work that was carried out before. I would therefore think that the question asked by the hon. member for Levis is relevant.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair cannot give legal interpretations. I can only give procedural interpretations and the one I give is the one I think is right in the circumstances.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the minister if under the section which is now being amended in order to extend the time any payments have been made during the currency of the parent act to the government of any province in respect of any work done before 1949.

Mr. Walker: The answer is, yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then I should like to ask the minister a second question. I should like to ask him if the legislation we are now being asked to pass involves any discrimination against any one of the ten provinces of Canada.

Mr. Walker: The hon. gentleman should go back to law school. The answer to that question is, obviously, no.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does that mean that the province of Quebec, if it chose to make an agreement, would be treated in exactly the same manner as the other provinces which already have agreements?

Mr. Walker: The hon. and learned member for Bonavista-Twillingate with his tremendous self-confessed ability at asking questions and making propositions and interpreting the law must realize that this is the eleventh time now that a question has been asked tonight which has been declared on previous occasions—and by yourself, Mr. Chairman—to be out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I submit that my question did not relate to any other question whatsoever that was asked. My question was very simple. It was: would the government of the province of Quebec be treated, if it chose to make an agreement under this legislation now being extended, and which it is open to the government of Quebec to enter, in the same way as the other provinces, or in a different way? That has no relation to any other question which has been asked and I feel that before we are asked to vote this money the minister should assure us that all the provinces will be treated equally and that the province of Quebec will be given exactly the same treatment as the other provinces.

Mr. Walker: The Trans-Canada Highway Act was brought in under the administration of the hon. gentleman when he was the acting prime minister or the prime minister behind the scenes. I mean, the hon. member is going to write about it in a book on the life of Mackenzie King which will be coming out in published form shortly.

Mr. Pickersgill: This was when Mr. St. Laurent was prime minister.

Mr. Walker: In short, Mr. Chairman, this is entirely out of order. We are discussing the Trans-Canada Highway Act. We speak about contributions being made under this act not after December 31, 1963. There are only nine signatories to this act at the present time. Nine of the ten provinces are signatories. We cannot conjecture in this regard. We cannot answer hypothetical questions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Rubbish.

Mr. Walker: My hon. friend might just as easily have asked some questions about the summit. They would have been just about as relevant. With the greatest respect, if my hon. friend would stop wiggling and confine himself to sitting still for a few minutes undisturbed and unperturbed with complete equanimity and imperturbability, I will finish my answer. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is, as usual, completely and absolutely out of order and I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, not to be intimidated by the loud talk of the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to waste my time or yours by replying in kind to that sort of cheap performance. It is unworthy of the committee and does not need any reply. I am going to say, however, that if the minister refuses to answer the question there will be only one conclusion we can draw. The question is not hypothetical at all. I would remind the minister that when this legislation was first enacted by the house in 1949 there were agreements with no provinces and when the minister of that day introduced that legislation he did not refuse to tell the members of the committee of that day what would be in the agreements with the provinces because he had a respect for parliament and for the rights of parliament.

This legislation provides for agreements with ten provinces. It is not a hypothetical question at all to ask whether the agreement with the tenth province, if it were made, would be on the same basis as the agreements with the other nine. If the minister wants to leave the impression by refusing to answer the question that it is the intention of this government to discriminate against the province of Quebec he can go ahead and leave that impression. That is certainly the impression he is going to leave unless the hon. gentleman gives a plain and unequivocal answer to that perfectly reasonable question.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Lesage can fight his own battles.

Mr. Argue: I have one question to ask the minister. Could the hon. gentleman tell the committee whether or not the nine provinces that have agreements with the federal government under this act are treated equally?

Mr. Walker: Yes. As I explained to hon. members at the resolution stage and again on second reading, all provinces are treated in exactly the same manner so far as the Trans-Canada Highway Act is concerned. The participation of the dominion government in the act was to complete a trans-Canada highway just the same as we have a trans-Canada railway. Each province entered into exactly the same agreement except for the schedule which gave to each province the task of completing that part of the highway within its own borders. That is the purpose of it all. The province of Saskatchewan has very ably completed its task. The task is done and the province has been paid. When the other provinces will have completed their tasks in accordance with the terms of the agreements they too will be paid. For that reason all parties have been treated fairly according to the contract each and everyone of the nine signed.

Mr. Argue: I appreciate the minister's answer. I did not think it could be otherwise. I therefore fail to understand why the hon. gentleman refuses to answer the simple question as to whether, if the tenth province came into the agreement, it would be treated equitably with the other nine.

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. gentleman knows the answer already.

Mr. Argue: No, I do not. Since the minister will not answer that fair, simple and pertinent question we can draw only one conclusion, that this government would at least consider discriminating against the province of Quebec under this act. I think that is an absolute shame.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, in reply to my frienzied hon. friend who is the great authority on wheat from Assiniboia—

Mr. Brunsden: The hon. gentleman is not even that.

Mr. Walker: The hon. member for Medicine Hat denies him that, too. However, the hon. member for Assiniboia must surely be an authority on something. He is certainly not an authority on this act.

In reply may I simply say that the province of Quebec is able at all times to make whatever requests it wishes of us and will do so as and when it wishes. The fairness of this government in its treatment of the provinces is best illustrated by the manner in which the university grants were disposed of recently by this house. There is no province with which the Diefenbaker government has better or more amicable relations than with the distinguished government of the province of Quebec.

I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that if it were within my purview to answer these hypothetical questions which you have declared to be out of order as did the chairman, I would be most delighted to do so but it would be quite improper for me even to attempt to do so. I therefore am going to maintain the determination I made at the beginning of this debate and my hon. friends may go on to make all the imputations and insults they like but nevertheless I reiterate that I am being fair with the committee in refusing to try to give accurate answers to completely hypothetical questions regarding a situation that does not exist except in the imagination of some of the hon. members.

I have been told that one should stick to the bill and I am doing my best in this respect. I will strive to stick to section 1 of this bill which asks for an extension of the time till 1963. That is all that is before the committee at the present time.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, I understood the minister to say that the matter before the committee is the extension of the act to 1963. We are now in 1960.

Mr. Bigg: No.

Mr. Roberge: Do we understand that if Quebec comes into the plan between now and 1963 they will have a full share of the federal contribution that all the provinces heretofore had?

The Deputy Chairman: In my humble opinion there is no retroactive provision in this bill. Accordingly, I think questions in this regard are not relevant to clause 1. I hope I will not have to remind hon. members about this again.

Mr. Grafftey: We are witnessing Mr. Lesage's puppet show.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put another question to the minister. Up till now was there any request by the provincial government of Quebec to participate in the plan?

Mr. Walker: No, Mr. Chairman, there has been no request. I of course resent very much the suggestion which only the hon. member for Assiniboia would have the effrontery to make, that there has been any discrimination. This government is guilty of no discrimination at any time to any province including the province of Quebec and not even the hon. member for Levis would suggest that.

Mr. Argue: To keep the record straight, I did not suggest there was discrimination. I assume the minister would agree that if Quebec wanted to come in under the act that province would receive equitable treatment. The minister would not say. Why he would not, I cannot imagine unless perhaps he wishes to discriminate against Quebec—

Mr. Grafftey: A false innuendo.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Argue: —if and when that province should be desirous of coming in under the act.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): We want Fisher; we want Fisher.

Mr. Argue: I feel strongly that the people of Quebec should be getting the same benefits under this act that are accruing to the citizens of other provinces.

Mr. Bigg: Stick to wheat.

Mr. Argue: The reason they are not getting these benefits has been a decision of their provincial government.

Mr. Ricard: The government of Quebec does not need the hon. member's help to make a decision either.

Mr. Argue: I trust that if and when Quebec comes under the provisions of this act this government will not even consider discriminating against that province.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I would draw Your Honour's attention to the explanatory note in section 1 of this act, which says:

> This amendment would extend for three years the period during which contributions or payments may be made to the provinces—

It does not say the nine provinces, it says "to the provinces" and clearly implies all of them. I continue:

> —under the act and would prolong for three years the period in respect of which constructior costs may be incurred under this act.

I have been a member of this house somewhat longer than the Minister of Public Works and I have been observing it for 20 years, and I have never before known any minister of the crown, in dealing with legislation on a matter having to do with agreements that are to be made with another government, refusing to tell us what authority he was asking for and what authority he was getting from parliament to do these things.

The minister seems to have forgotten that he is responsible to parliament; that he is the servant of this house, not its master, and that he is asking this parliament to continue for three more years the authority which was given to the government to make agreements, or to continue agreements, with the provinces of Canada, including the province of Quebec. Surely before we are asked to extend the period of time and to vote a very large sum of money the parliament of Canada, the representatives of the taxpayers, are entitled to know precisely the terms and conditions under which this money can be spent. That is all we are asking for, Mr. Chairman.

I would draw your attention to the fact that the explanatory note to this clause says precisely that. There can be no question that the government is asking for three more years in which it may be possible to reach agreement with the government of Quebec in a co-operative effort to build a trans-Canada highway through that province. That is not hypothetical; it is an actual question, what kind of agreement the government would make. Parliament never intended that the government should make one kind of agreement with one province and another kind of agreement with another province. All we are seeking to find out is whether the government does in fact intend to treat the government of Quebec in the same way as it has treated the governments of the other nine provinces, and we cannot get any answer. The only conclusion we can draw is the conclusion drawn by the hon. member for Assiniboia that the government intends, if Quebec does try to come in, to shortchange it.

Mr. Grafftey: A foul innuendo.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, I was not in this house in 1949. Right now I do not have time to check in the library, but I should like to ask the minister a few questions. I think he should know the answers to these questions because he knows everything, or professes to know everything. I think the province of Newfoundland came into the scheme the same time as it came into confederation, namely in 1949. I should like to know from the minister exactly what time the other provinces—of course we know that Quebec did not come into the plan—came into the plan.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Roberge: No. I would think the minister is waiting for his official to tell him.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, the other nine provinces came into the scheme sometime between 1949 and 1952.

With regard to the charge of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, some day he is going to be a lawyer, three, four or five years from now, and I should like to reply to him by saying that his statement is reductio ad absurdum. Perhaps he will look it up and find out what it means.

Mr. Roberge: The minister gave the answer that the eight provinces at the time came into the scheme between 1949 and 1952. Will the minister tell the committee what provinces came in in 1959 and which ones came in in 1950, 1951 and 1952?

Mr. Walker: You are in the wrong decade.

Mr. Roberge: What is that, I am in the wrong decade. I understood the minister to say—

Mr. Walker: You are in the wrong decade; you are talking about 1959.

Mr. Pickersgill: 1949.

Mr. Walker: Hansard will show that he said 1959. I am reading now from the report, which my friend has no doubt seen, of the proceedings for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1954, at which time he was in the house. At a meeting held in Ottawa on April 24, 1950, which was attended by representatives of all provinces, agreements were executed with the provinces of Ontario, Manitoba, British Columbia, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan, Alberta. The province of New Brunswick signed an agreement on May 27, 1950, and the province of Newfoundland signed on June 13, 1950. On May 15, 1952 Nova Scotia became the ninth province to conclude an agreement with the federal government for the construction of the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Roberge: May I know from the minister whether the province of Nova Scotia, which signed an agreement in 1952, was able to secure reimbursement from the government for the actual cost of the construction that was undertaken before and which was made part of the trans-Canada highway?

[Mr. Roberge.]

Mr. Walker: I have no idea, Mr. Chairman. We are considering clause 1 of this bill.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman. Surely when we are being asked to extend this legislation we are entitled to know what has already happened under the legislation we are being asked to extend. It seems to me that it is a contempt of parliament for the minister to say it is none of our business to know whether the government of Nova Scotia was allowed to benefit by the provision in the original legislation which made it possible for the provinces to recover a part of the cost of the work that was recognized as of trans-Canada standard but which had been built before 1949.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. Is the minister not going to answer that?

Mr. Walker: No.

Mr. Bourget: May I ask the minister another simple question? Is this bill constitutional in all respects?

Mr. Walker: Obviously, the Mutt and Jeff team over there, sent down by the—

Mr. Bourget: The new plumber of the House of Commons should withdraw that.

Mr. Walker: I am very proud of being that, the Minister of Public Works, and enjoy it thoroughly. I think that the two speakeasies over there should confine themselves to clause 1 of this bill.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I hope the minister will address himself to clause 1.

Mr. Walker: I thought clause 1 had passed, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, it is not passed.

Mr. Walker: Again, Mr. Chairman, I will amend my remarks and say, let these two worthy members address themselves to clause 1 of the bill.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, am I out of order in asking the minister the simple question whether the bill is constitutional in all respects? Such a question was asked just two days ago, was answered by the Minister of Finance, and I have the answer here. As members of parliament I think we are entitled not to be brushed aside by a plumber.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member can ask his question but the Chair cannot get an answer for him if the minister does not wish to answer.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, according to what rule of the house does the minister not answer my question? It is a very simple and at the same time very important one, and the minister knows it. He can ask his parliamentary assistant who is from the province of Quebec. Can the minister tell us whether the bill is constitutional in all respects? That is my question. It is very simple.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I know why the minister does not want to answer that question. I refer to Hansard of April 28 when he said, "Does the hon. member know that a provincial election has been called in Quebec on the twenty second of June?" That is the second time we have received—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Bourget: —that kind of answer. Does it mean that when we are going to have a provincial election in Canada—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Bourget: —we are not entitled to receive answers to our questions?

Mr. Grafftey: You are getting funnier by the minute.

Mr. Bourget: You know the reputation you have.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the question asked by the hon. member for Levis is precisely the same question as was asked in committee on another bill only two days ago of the Minister of Finance, who perhaps is not overly courteous in his answers but who did not hesitate for one second and did not object in the least to this question. We know that certain hon. members supporting the government have declared in the house that this legislation is of doubtful constitutionality. No less a member than the hon. member for Bellechasse has questioned the whole constitutional basis of this legislation, and we know the respect in which the hon. member for Bellechasse as a lawyer is held by hon. gentlemen opposite. In view of the question the hon. member for Bellechasse has raised with respect to the constitutionality of the bill it seems to me it is perfectly proper that my hon. friend should ask the minister if he has consulted the law officers of the crown and satisfied himself that the legislation he is asking parliament to enact is within the power of parliament to enact.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, it is out of order for my hon. friend to ask that question at this time, but for his information may I say that this bill, like any bill introduced by this administration, is constitutional.

Mr. Bourget: Thank you very much.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Aggregate limited to $400 million.

Mr. Robichaud: This clause provides that the aggregate of all expenditures under certain sections of the act shall not exceed $400 million. I should like to ask the minister whether in reaching this estimate of $400 million provision has been made to cover the share of the province of Quebec should it decide to sign an agreement or is this amount of $400 million limited to the nine provinces that now have agreements?

Mr. Walker: I did not get the end of the hon. member's question. I should have been paying more attention. Did he ask whether the $50 million of the total of $400 million to be expended, $350 million having already been voted, is to be expended on all nine provinces?

Mr. Roberge: Ten.

Mr. Walker: The answer to that is that the $400 million will be expended on those provinces which are signatories to the Trans-Canada Highway Act.

Mr. Robichaud: In order to arrive at the amount of $400 million an estimate must have been made by the minister's department. In reaching the estimate of $400 million was consideration given only to the nine provinces now under this scheme or was provision made for the province of Quebec should it decide to enter into an agreement?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, all we can deal with are the facts. At the present time we have nine signatories to the Trans-Canada Highway Act, and the approximation of $400 million as the total amount to be paid out to these nine provinces is the approximation we have at the present time. We have nothing else to deal with. We have no other signatory except the nine provinces. So far only nine provinces have made any expenditures.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to put the question in a somewhat different way. Is it anticipated that the whole or practically the whole of this $400 million will be required for the nine provinces that now have agreements?

Mr. Starr: That is what he said.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, that is not what he said.

Mr. Walker: I think I have answered that question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like the minister to answer that question yes or no. After all, whatever Your Honour may say about clause 1, clause 2 is asking parliament to vote money and surely there should be no equivocation about what we are voting the money for. We are now dealing with $400 million which is a lot of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Walker: Fifty million dollars.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is true, as the minister interjects, that only $50 million is now being voted but even $50 million in my book is a lot of money. We are entitled to know whether the estimate of $400 million is in respect of the nine agreements in existence and no money is being provided in case Quebec should sign.

An hon. Member: He has answered that.

Mr. Pickersgill: Let the minister himself answer it.

An hon. Member: He has.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think he has.

An hon. Member: You should listen.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. member might listen since he has no other contribution to make to the committee.

The Deputy Chairman: I must ask hon. members not to interrupt the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Pickersgill: I say that if we are to be treated with anything but contempt we are entitled to know whether this $400 million is the estimate for a complete road in the nine provinces or whether it is an estimate for a complete trans-Canada highway across the whole of Canada.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, I hate to be offending my hon. friend when he seems to be getting angry and charges me with contempt. I do not know whether it is contempt of him or contempt of the house. There is a great difference. I want to assure my hon. friend that I do not have contempt but the greatest respect and admiration for him and also, it goes without saying, for the other members of the house. But much as I should like to please my hon. friend, who has great experience in the art of cross-examination and who demands a yes or no answer just like that, with my limited powers of expression I cannot amplify in any more concise manner than I have already done, even at the risk of further hurting the feelings of my hon. and distinguished friend.

Mr. Bourget: May I ask the minister how the amount of $50 million is arrived at by provinces? An estimate must have been made in each of the participating provinces and I should like to know how this amount is arrived at by provinces.

Mr. Walker: In reply to the hon. member for Levis, may I say that the engineers have taken the amounts that each of the nine provinces has spent to date, added to them the estimates of the amounts which the provinces anticipate they will spend in the next three years and have come to an approximate figure of $400 million as the amount which the dominion government is providing to contribute to the trans-Canada highway to ensure its completion.

Mr. Bourget: Has the minister any assurance that the $50 million we are now voting will be sufficient to cover the completion of the trans-Canada highway in these nine provinces?

Mr. Walker: Seeing that we are not building the highway but that each of the nine provinces is building its respective share and having regard to the unfortunate experience of the former minister of public works, Mr. Winters, whose able parliamentary assistant was the hon. member for Levis, and his false calculations as to when the highway would be completed and as to the cost of the highway, I should not like to put myself on record as being definite on the result. Mr. Winters was so far off the mark that I would not want, three years from now, to be in the same position.

As to the figures we have and as to the knowledge we have at the present time, we anticipate that this sum of $400 million will approximately complete the contribution of the federal government to the trans-Canada highway, with the possible exception of the adopted province of my friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, namely Newfoundland.

Mr. Robichaud: I do not think the minister has answered the question put to him by the hon. member for Levis. The hon. member has asked what amount was being estimated to be spent out of this $400 million or out of this $50 million additional we are being asked to pass today, or what amount is being allocated to each of the provinces under the scheme. We definitely know that all of that money is not going to go to one or two provinces. We should like to know approximately what the estimate is for each of the provinces.

Mr. Walker: It has not been allocated yet. It is impossible to allocate these things until the time comes. It is a pool from which money will be spent if it is needed and as proof is given by each of the provinces that the expense has been incurred.

Mr. Bourget: The minister was making a comparison with Mr. Winters. We have here an item of $50 million. We do not know, according to the minister's answer, where it comes from or how it is made up. I hope the minister will recall the day when he was in another committee. I should like to ask this question and I think it is a fair one. Surely the calculation must have been made in order to arrive at the amount of $50 million. That is not $5; it is $50 million. Surely the engineers in the department must have the figures from each province and the minister should be able to tell us how much is going to be spent by provinces in the next three years.

Mr. Walker: I want to thank my hon. friend and tell him that if I came as close as he did I would be $150 million out. His minister, seconded by himself, was of the opinion that the trans-Canada highway would cost $250 million. It is going to cost $400 million.

Mr. Bourget: Your previous minister did not say anything last year.

Mr. Walker: Let my hon. friend keep his temper and I will read him the answer he wants. This is all going to be very nice and very friendly. It is now estimated that Canada will be called upon to contribute the following amounts to the provinces: Newfoundland, $30 million; Prince Edward Island, $7.5 million; Nova Scotia, $25.5 million; New Brunswick, $46 million; Ontario, $120 million; Manitoba, $21 million; Saskatchewan, $15.5 million; Alberta, $23.5 million; British Columbia, $111 million. In the schedules which were filed the other day when this matter last came before the committee, the amounts which have been committed for each of the provinces have been set out. I trust that answers my hon. friend's question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should just like to draw the committee's attention to the fact, since the strictly non-partisan references were made by the minister, that we have had amending legislation brought into the House of Commons by the minister's predecessor only a short time ago and that these mistakes in time and mistakes in date at which the road would be completed and so on were all made by the minister's illustrious predecessor. It seems to me that the reference was quite uncalled for. But since it has been made it seems to me that the whole record should be put straight.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Peters: No. Before this clause carries may I ask the minister whether this $120 million allotted to Ontario is sufficient to complete the northern route of the trans-Canada highway or that which we now use as the trans-Canada highway and at the same time will it be enough to complete the southern route which is not completed as yet?

Mr. Walker: In reply to the hon. member for Timiskaming may I say that this sum of money would involve the participation by Ontario from border to border in the present trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Peters: My question is in relationship to the fact that we have in Ontario a northern trans-Canada route and also what is considered to be just a trans-Canada route. The northern route is now the route that is in use and it is not completed or at least not up to standard. At the same time it is expected that there will be a permanent southern route from Agawa up through Sault Ste. Marie. What I am asking is whether there is in this $120 million enough money for the federal contribution to complete the section we now use and to complete the new section.

Mr. Walker: This sum pertains to the only designated trans-Canada highway which is in the process of being built at the present time and which is set out in particular in schedule A in the contract between the dominion and the Ontario government. I appreciate the fact that my friend the hon. member for Timiskaming would like to have built a second trans-Canada northern route; but as he can appreciate, at the present time we cannot contemplate anything else except the completion of the first trans-Canada highway, and that is what this is for.

Mr. Peters: The minister may be aware of the fact that we are already using the northern route. It is a complete highway across Canada. But we should like the assurance that it is going to be brought up to regular standards along with the proposed route.

Mr. Walker: The province which fairly well had the fixing of this route did not designate the route to which my hon. friend is referring as part of the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Peters: A sign was put up by the department saying it was the northern route of the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Herridge: I have been most restrained, Mr. Chairman, but seeing that hon. members from other provinces are making certain that the interests of their provinces are protected in this legislation—

Mr. Walker: I think we need some of that particular brew which my hon. friend is going to use for the completion of this trans-Canada highway. We might use it to complete this debate.

Mr. Herridge: I apologize for my fit of coughing, for the relief of which I have been handed a glass of water. Can the minister inform the house whether sufficient provision is made in this bill to meet the needs for the completion of the trans-Canada highway in British Columbia?

Mr. Walker: We would certainly hope so. But you have a very volatile minister of highways out there called Mr. Gaglardi. If he spent more time in completing this highway than he spends in talking we would get along with it a great deal faster. We have allocated for British Columbia $111 million as an estimate of the contribution of the dominion which is more than one quarter of all the money being spent on this trans-Canada highway. It is sadly behind in its allocation.

Mr. Roberge: I would like to pursue the question asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West when speaking about British Columbia. Is there enough money to meet the needs of the province of Quebec if and when the government of that province decides to come into the plan?

Mr. Bourget: I have no more questions to ask; I just want to express one regret, and that is that the province of Quebec has been forgotten.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Just before clause 2 carries, I also would like to express regret that the minister and the Prime Minister have completely repudiated the undertakings given to the people of Newfoundland by the provincial leader of their party in the name of the Prime Minister in the provincial election last year, and to say that considering the sacrifices that gentleman made, the unavailing sacrifices for their party, it is pretty shabby treatment.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, just in reply to that, the Prime Minister of Canada and myself as Minister of Public Works are doing everything in our power to fulfil just as rapidly as the premier of Newfoundland makes it possible for us to do so our obligations in regard to the trans-Canada highway. I do not think it is amiss to say that the contribution of the dominion to that trans-Canada highway in Newfoundland constitutes a tremendously larger sum than the contribution of the province of Newfoundland. I have nothing but sympathy for the desire of the Newfoundlanders that this part of the highway should be completed; but if their premier in his wisdom chooses to squander the money given his province by the dominion, properly designated to his province by the dominion, on so many odds and ends—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Walker: —and not complete the highway, then the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate should not come to this house and complain.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that I was not complaining about anything. I was just drawing attention to the fact that the provincial leader of the Conservative party, who offered himself as a sacrifice last year, was repudiated by his own party.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, before the clause carries, did I understand the minister to say that this $120 million for Ontario is enough to complete the highway, that is the designated trans-Canada highway, through Sault Ste. Marie and on up along the north shore of lake Superior?

Mr. Walker: That is the information we received from the Ontario engineers, which seems to be corroborated by our supervising engineers.

(Translation):

Mr. Ratelle: Mr. Chairman, there is a point that interests me and I should like to direct a question to the minister. If I am not mistaken, the amount of $400 million that was mentioned would apply to nine provinces only. If tomorrow the province of Quebec should recognize that our sharing in the road building program is in no way unconstitutional, would there be enough money in the fund for that province? That is the point of particular interest to me.

(Text):

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, that question has been pursued by this house all evening.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Walker moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, before the bill passes I should like to make one or two observations. This bill is half a loaf and we recognize that half a loaf is better than no bread. But I want to express the regret which all of us on this side of the house feel about two aspects of the legislation which is now before us and the legislation which is being amended by this bill.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, for whom is the hon. member speaking?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking on behalf of the Liberal opposition.

Some hon. Members: Where are they?

Mr. Walker: Did you have a caucus?

Mr. Pickersgill: I happen also to be a member of the house, though it seems difficult for the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) to appreciate that fact.

As I was saying, sir, when we had one of the characteristic interruptions of the minister, we regret two features in this bill, one which we only smoked out with the greatest possible difficulty after a lot of quite unnecessary refusals by the minister to answer plain and obvious questions asking for information that any government with any regard for parliament would have given without being asked. We found that this legislation no longer applies to the province of Quebec at all, that if Quebec now wishes to make an agreement there is no money provided to carry out that agreement, no money voted by parliament, and it would therefore not be possible for Quebec to proceed with such a project until another bill had been brought before parliament for that purpose. We regret that very much. We think the government has made a very great mistake in ignoring Quebec in this way and we think that they themselves will regret it before many weeks have passed.

The second thing I wish to say is that I want to draw attention to the citations made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) on second reading of this bill, citations of distinguished members of this house now occupying the treasury benches when they were sitting over here. I do not intend to take the time of the house in repeating them now, but you will recall what the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) said and what the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) said. He said that the whole road should be paid for by Canada. You will also recall what the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) said, that we can afford a lot more. We are sorry that the government, after all these expectations raised in 1957, is simply following on the scheme which they told the people they would change when they came into office. We regret this; we are very sorry for this.

We are sorry also that they did not see fit to accept any of the admirable suggestions made by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's (Mr. Batten) in the fine analytical speech he made on this subject. We are also sorry that the government did not see fit to accept the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition that in the four Atlantic provinces as a compensation for their disabilities in other aspects of transportation the government should pay a much larger share of the cost of this road, and that the figure that we would suggest, and that we will suggest to parliament when we are in a position to do so, in order to finish this road would be 90 per cent.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

YUKON ACT

INCREASE IN COUNCIL MEMBERSHIP—CHANGES RESPECTING COURTS, ETC.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Yukon Act to increase the number of members of the council of the Yukon Territory from five to seven; to provide for the creation of an advisory committee on finance and for the payment of allowances for living expenses and travelling expenses of the members thereof; to establish a court of appeal for the Yukon Territory; to authorize the territorial court of the Yukon Territory to sit in the Northwest Territories in civil matters; to provide for the appointment, remuneration and allowances of deputy judges of the territorial court; and to provide further for the general application of game legislation in the Yukon Territory.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Chairman, the resolution is largely self-explanatory, and I need not take up the time of the house with extended comments at this stage.

This legislation deals with three broad subjects. The first is the constitution of the territorial council. It is proposed to increase the membership of the council to reflect the increasing population of the territory, to remove an existing requirement that the commissioner must sit apart from the council, and to provide for the establishment of an advisory committee on finance. This committee, composed of council members, will advise on the preparation of the territorial budget, and may be consulted on other matters of policy arising between council sessions.

As I told the house a year ago, consideration has been given to ways in which it might be possible to work toward fully separate judicial systems suited to territorial requirements. The object is ultimately to reach the pattern already established in the provinces. This bill constitutes a court of appeal for the Yukon which can ultimately and easily develop toward the provincial pattern as circumstances permit.

Certain changes in the constitution of the territorial court are also proposed. These will make the judge of the Northwest Territories court ex officio also a judge of the court of the Yukon Territory, authorize the appointment and remuneration of deputy judges as required, and provide for other minor or consequential changes in judicial arrangements.

I may say that parallel changes in judicial arrangements for the Northwest Territories will be proposed in separate legislation. Taken together, the new provisions for territorial courts and courts of appeal should enable a better service to be provided to litigants and others in both territories.

The other matter with which the bill deals is the application of territorial ordinances to all residents of the Yukon Territory. Some question has been raised about this, particularly with regard to game, and the bill is designed to clarify the power of the territorial council in this respect.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that when hon. members have had an opportunity to examine the bill they will find the proposed changes fully consistent with the orderly development of the territory as a separate Canadian entity, in accordance with the wishes of the territorial council, and with the best interests of the residents.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the minister's suggestion that we should see the bill before having any prolonged debate is a very sensible one, and that is the view we intend to take over here. I must say I am intrigued by the term "deputy judges" which I do not think I have heard before. Perhaps after other hon. members have spoken, should they wish to do so, the minister would elaborate a little on that.

Mr. Herridge: On behalf of this group, may I say that I agree with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I think we would be well advised to have our debate on this legislation when the bill comes before the house, although judging from the resolution itself and from the brief explanation given by the minister it would appear that we, generally, are in support of the measures that are to be taken.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle).]

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister just say a word about this question of the deputy judges?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): At the present time the legislation provides for the appointment of deputy judges when the circumstances warrant. As the hon. member knows, there is now one judge in the Northwest Territories and one in the Yukon, and in cases of absence it is necessary to appoint a deputy judge. The amendment would make it unnecessary to adopt the method used now of appointing this deputy judge by order in council, and will make it possible to do this without the cumbersome technique so involved.

Mr. Peters: I should like to ask the minister if plans are under way for developing provincial autonomy in the two territories and, if so, how long a period is expected to elapse before these territories will be able to form provinces of their own?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): It is, I think the hope of all Canadians that as soon as economic conditions warrant, new provinces will be formed in the present territory of Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

I think it is also reasonable to assume that before they become provinces they will have to have sufficient economic resources of their own to run their own administration. That is not presently possible. There have been many speculations as to when this eventuality may come about; I think that is all it can be at this time: speculation. We are hopeful that new mining developments, new oil and gas developments will make it possible to have new communities in certain parts of the north. When these communities are sufficiently established and give evidence that they can support a provincial government we would, I think, be happy to consider such a proposal from them.

Another aspect of the question is that the people in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories have already developed a considerable spirit of autonomy. They want the right to run their own affairs; they resent very strongly the suggestion that provinces should take them over. I think it follows from all this that they themselves should make the decision.

I do not know whether that answers in full what the hon. member had in mind, but I think it represents the thinking on this matter at the present time.

Mr. Regier: Have any of the provinces made representations asking for their boundaries to be enlarged to include either the Yukon or part of the Northwest Territories?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I have seen a newspaper story to the effect that British Columbia would like to push northward. I have also seen another story partially repudiating this suggestion. Further, another government has more or less officially indicated a desire to push northward into the territories; that is, the government of Manitoba. However, I understand that there has been no formal request to the federal government to do so although there have been discussions on this subject.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-59, to amend the Yukon Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COURTS, JUDGES AND GAME LEGISLATION

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Northwest Territories Act to establish a court of appeal for the Northwest Territories; to authorize the territorial court of the Northwest Territories to sit in the Yukon Territory in civil matters; to provide for the appointment, remuneration and allowances of deputy judges of the territorial court; and to provide further for the general application of game legislation in the Northwest Territories.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, this resolution corresponds almost exactly to those parts of the Yukon resolution dealing with changes in the judicial set-up. At this time I should like to remind the committee of the speeches made in February, 1959 by the hon. member for Mackenzie River and the hon. member for Nickel Belt on the bill under discussion at that time to amend the Northwest Territories Act. Both hon. gentlemen spoke in favour of some radical amendments in the judicial system of the Northwest Territories. At that time I told the house that the Minister of Justice, his deputy minister and the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were on a tour of the north covering 14 different places to examine into the administration of justice in the area as well as the day to day problems that arise in the administration of justice and were prepared to bring back recommendations which would bring up to date the judicial system in the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

That was done in the spring of 1959. Now, approximately a year later, this resolution and the bill it foreshadows are the result of their work. The recommendations that were in their report are included in the bill that will follow, and also in the bill with respect to the Yukon which just passed the resolution stage.

I do not think I need say more at the present stage because the explanation is exactly the same as I gave for the previous resolution.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, may I say again that we are in general agreement with this resolution and would like to see the bill.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, we assume this resolution is similar in purpose and content to the previous measure. The legislation in both cases clearly indicates the growing development in the Yukon and Northwest Territories and the need for improvements in administration of the same. We will leave our more extended remarks until we have seen the bill.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, is it contemplated by the government that divorce procedure will be under territorial jurisdiction or under federal jurisdiction?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Peters: Does the minister mean the territories will handle their own domestic problems?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I will have to look up the details with respect to what happens in matters of divorce. The changes contemplated under this resolution do not consider that subject.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the area known as the Northwest Territories is closely defined. There are a number of islands over which Canada assumes jurisdiction yet they are outside the area known as the Northwest Territories defined as such. I have in mind especially areas such as Frobisher Bay which is growing in population. These areas have no voice at election time. Is there any intention of extending the boundaries of the Northwest Territories to include all the other areas claimed by Canada that are not included in either the Yukon or Northwest Territories?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): At the present time the difficulties of moving around in the north in order to vote are well known. There is nothing in theory to prevent any person be he white, Indian or Eskimo from voting.

In practice, of course, this is very difficult and in the remote areas it cannot be done. As the communities grow in size transportation facilities will doubtless improve but in all existing areas there is at this time the opportunity to vote.

Mr. Regier: I do not think the minister understood my question. The boundaries of the Northwest Territories as they now exist are carefully defined. They exclude a large number of islands over which Canada claims authority, yet their inhabitants have no voice in Canadian affairs. I think the minister would agree that an area as large as Frobisher Bay should have a polling division at election time. The inhabitants are denied the right to cast a vote. Is the government giving any consideration to an extension of the boundaries of the Northwest Territories in order to include those areas under the government's jurisdiction that are not now included in either the Yukon or Northwest Territories?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member has probably confused two things. There is an act called the Territorial Lands Act which clearly defines and limits the boundaries for administering land. This does stop at the mainland coast of North America and follows around the shores of Hudson bay and into Ungava bay. It takes in all the islands up to the low water mark. As far as government, justice, and game are concerned, the Northwest Territories Act defines the boundaries of that area for political and administrative purposes. I happen to have the act here and will read the relevant section:

> 2. (k) "Territories" means the Northwest Territories, which comprise
> (i) all that part of Canada north of the 60th parallel of north latitude, except the portions thereof within the Yukon Territory and the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland, and
> (ii) the islands in Hudson Bay, James bay and Ungava bay, except those islands within the provinces of Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec.

For political administration purposes the Northwest Territories under this act is all the area north of the sixtieth parallel except the Yukon and except any areas of Quebec or Newfoundland which are above the sixtieth parallel but does include all the islands in Ungava and in James and Hudson bays. Therefore, they are two separate matters.

Mr. Regier: What is the position of the islands to the north of Ungava bay and Hudson bay? I am thinking particularly of Franklin island and others.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle).]

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): These islands are under the Northwest Territories Act that include Franklin island, Baffin island, Ellesmere island and so on.

Mr. Peters: Are Franklin and Keewatin separate designations within the Northwest Territories?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-60, to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT

PROVISION FOR GRANTS FROM GRADE CROSSING FUND

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 8, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Hees—Mr. Rea in the chair:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend an act to amend the Railway Act, chapter 40 of the statutes of 1958, to permit certain grants to be made from the railway grade crossing fund for a further period of three years beyond January 31, 1961.

Mr. Bourget: Just one word; I understand that the views of our party have been expressed by members who have spoken on the resolution, and now we should like to see the bill.

Mr. Peters: Would the government give consideration to the fact that in areas where new railway construction or new highway construction is taking place an opportunity is given for a stipulation to be made that the highway should cross over the railroad by means of an overpass or an underpass rather than a level crossing?

We have many instances, and one recently in northern Ontario, where there have been opportunities, when the highway was being changed, for the government to give consideration, and particularly the board of transport commissioners, when issuing the permits or the permission necessary to start new construction, to restricting the crossing to an underpass or an overpass. We have many cases, and I am sure the minister is aware of a number of them, where new highway construction is taking place, where the highways are crossing the railroads where it would be possible, if this money were being used for this purpose, to put in an overpass or an underpass to prevent the accidents which are now taking place. It seems to me that when permission is granted by the government for construction of this type they could use some discretionary power and prevent many of the highways crossing well travelled railroads at grade, and in that way prevent the needless loss of life which is taking place.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, during the discussion of this resolution some time previously I made a suggestion that the signs at the railroad crossings could be made much more attractive or striking, and since that time a number of the members of the government party have asked me whether I would agree to having the minister's picture enlarged and placed at railroad crossings. In reply to them I just wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that:

> George's picture, by the rails,
> Would cause us all to cross like snails;
> Women would stop to admire,
> Men indulge in smug satire,
> But better that, than one expire!

Mr. Regier: I should like to ask whoever is the sponsor of this resolution at this time whether any consideration is being given to imposing a fixed contribution on the railway company concerned toward the cost of either an overpass or an underpass?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I will draw these questions to the attention of the Minister of Transport and if the resolution carries tonight I think we might proceed with second reading tomorrow. During the course of the committee stage, following second reading, these questions could be answered.

Mr. Regier: In that case, I want to thank the minister. However, I want to add additional information. We have cases where one municipality has six major roads or highways crossing railroads within the municipality. If the government is prepared to pay only 80 per cent, and if the railroad company involved is allowed to pay as much as it pleases by way of a contribution, I feel it is hardly fair when it imposes an exceptionally heavy burden on the municipality. Either the government ought to consider raising its contribution or it ought to consider amending the legislation in a way which will make it obligatory on the railroad company to pay at least 5 per cent, 10 per cent, or 15 per cent, or make a fixed contribution, because if that were done many of our municipalities would be able to undertake a little bit of planning in this respect. They would be able to take advantage of the legislation because they would know when they were planning how much of a burden they themselves would have to bear, and they would not have to appear hat in hand at the doors of the railroad corporations.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Churchill (for the Minister of Transport): thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-61, to amend the Railway Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the house leader could give us a preview of two or three days ahead?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the house for carrying on so expeditiously and taking us by surprise; it is very welcome indeed.

Tomorrow we shall start off with the second reading of the bill to amend the Railway Act, the resolution of which we have just been discussing. The second item would be the bill following the resolution to amend the Northwest Territories Act, which was completed tonight; the third item would be the bill following the resolution with regard to the Yukon Act, which also was dealt with tonight.

Then on page six of today's order paper hon. members will find under government orders 2 to 7, a number of small bills which are non-controversial in nature, and perhaps the house would like to clear these off the order paper. We would take them in this order. Item No. 4 would be second reading of Bill No. C-4, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act; item 5 would be second reading of Bill No. S-4, to amend the Windsor Harbour Commissioners Act; item 6 would be second reading of Bill No. S-5, to incorporate the Oshawa harbour commissioners.

Mr. Regier: No, you are wrong.

Mr. Churchill: Item 7 would be second reading of Bill No. S-10, to incorporate the Nanaimo harbour commissioners.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is giving his own numbers.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, I am giving my own numbers. Item No. 8 would be the second reading of Bill No. S-2, to amend the Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement Act. No. 9 would be the second reading of Bill No. S-3, to repeal certain fisheries laws of Newfoundland. If those are passed quickly I will then call the resolution in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare respecting the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the business for tomorrow. Could the minister—

Mr. Churchill: All right. I certainly will meet the wishes of the house. That would then be followed by the second reading of Bill No. S-27, to control and regulate the sale of feeds, in the name of the Minister of Agriculture. I am then in the hands of the house. If the house would like to take the second reading of Bill No. S-28, respecting a certain trade agreement between Canada and Australia, that would suit me very much. Those items being completed, I would suggest tentatively that we might then deal with interim supply.

It being four minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

COMMUNIQUES ISSUED AT OPENING AND CLOSING

First Communique

The first plenary sessions of the meeting of commonwealth prime ministers were held at 10, Downing street, today.

In opening the meeting, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom expressed, on behalf of his commonwealth colleagues, their deep sorrow at the circumstances which had prevented Dr. Verwoerd, the Prime Minister of South Africa, from carrying out his intention of attending this meeting. He also expressed his regret that the Prime Minister of Ceylon was prevented, owing to the impending election, from coming to London at this time.

Mr. Macmillan welcomed the Prime Minister of Malaya, Tuanku Abdul Rahman, as the first representative of Malaya to attend a commonwealth prime ministers' meeting since Malaya attained full membership of the commonwealth.

The reply to Mr. Macmillan's opening statement was made by Tuanku Abdul Rahman. In the course of his reply he raised the problem of racial discrimination in South Africa, and its effects on relations between South Africa and other commonwealth countries, and he expressed the hope that opportunity would be found for the commonwealth prime ministers to discuss this while they were in London.

The representative of the South African government, Mr. Eric Louw, emphasized that sole responsibility for domestic policies within South Africa rested with the union government.

The meeting reaffirmed the traditional practice that commonwealth conferences do not discuss the internal affairs of member countries. Mr. Louw expressed his readiness to meet other heads of delegations informally for discussion of this problem. Arrangements are being made accordingly.

After these procedural questions had been settled Mr. Macmillan opened a general discussion on the world political situation. The Prime Minister of India and the President of Pakistan continued this discussion at the afternoon session. It will be resumed at a further plenary session tomorrow morning.

3rd May, 1960.

Final Communique

The meeting of commonwealth prime ministers ended today. Pakistan was represented by its President. The United Kingdom, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, India, Ghana, the Federation of Malaya and the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland were represented by their Prime Ministers. South Africa was represented by the Minister of External Affairs, and Ceylon by the Minister of Justice.

2. This was the tenth of these meetings to have been held since the war. It has taken place at a time of great significance to the commonwealth and to the world.

3. The continuing growth of the membership of the commonwealth was marked by the attendance at this meeting of the Prime Minister of the Federation of Malaya, which achieved independence in August, 1957. The representatives of the other commonwealth countries welcomed the presence of the federation at the conference.

4. The commonwealth is an association of independent sovereign states, each responsible for its own policies; but the primary objective of all is world peace and security. It is their declared purpose to do everything in their power to achieve that objective, and to continue to co-operate to that end with all the peace-loving nations of the world.

5. In this spirit the commonwealth ministers have reviewed the major international problems of the day, on the eve of the impending summit conference which is to be attended by the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. They expressed their sincere hopes for a successful outcome of that conference as a further step in the relaxation of international tension. They discussed, in particular, the problem of disarmament; and they welcomed the progress made at the Geneva conference on the discontinuance of nuclear weapons tests. They hoped that, on the basis of the preliminary work already done, the summit conference would be able to make some significant progress toward an eventual settlement, under international control, of the problem of disarmament. An advance toward a solution of that problem, linked with a progressive lessening of political tensions, would afford a firm basis for strengthening confidence between nations and promoting world security.

6. The commonwealth ministers also discussed the problems of Africa, the Middle East, the Far East and southeast Asia. They recognized that economic and social progress are essential for political stability. They welcomed the continuing contribution which mutual assistance under the Colombo plan affords throughout southeast Asia to these aims; and they agreed that there and elsewhere throughout the less developed areas of the world the best hope of peace, stability and political freedom lies in practical international co-operation of this kind.

7. The ministers reviewed the world economic situation. They noted that, while in general the outlook was favourable, the economic expansion which had taken place since their last meeting had been greater in the industrialized countries of the commonwealth than in the primary producing countries. They agreed that an important condition of the prosperity of these countries was their ability to develop their export trade. They also recognized the urgent need to maintain and, where possible, increase the flow of economic assistance to the less developed countries. They welcomed the decision to establish an international development association.

8. The ministers discussed European trade problems. They expressed concern at the prospect of any economic division in Europe and its possible political implications. The countries of Europe form an important market for commonwealth exports. The ministers expressed their hope that these countries would follow trade policies in accordance with the principles of the general agreement on tariffs and trade, and thus avoid damage to the economies of the primary producing countries and those that are also developing exports of manufactured goods. In addition, European countries have an important contribution to make in assisting the economic development of the less advanced countries. The ministers hoped that these problems could be speedily and satisfactorily resolved, with due regard to the interests of countries outside Europe.

9. The commonwealth ministers reviewed the economic development of commonwealth countries in Africa which have recently attained or are approaching independence. They agreed that consideration should be given to the possibility of co-operative action among members of the commonwealth in assisting the economic development of these countries. This possibility will be studied in the first instance by officials of commonwealth governments, and the commonwealth economic consultative council will examine it at its next meeting.

10. The ministers also reaffirmed their belief in the value of exchanges between commonwealth countries of persons with specialized skills and experience. They agreed that further efforts should be made to foster and encourage these exchanges, whether on a regional or other basis, and that the commonwealth economic consultative council should take this question into urgent consideration. They trusted that employers in commonwealth countries—whether governments, statutory bodies or private companies—would be ready, wherever possible, to encourage members of their staffs to undertake a period of public service abroad and would do their best to ensure that their prospects in their home countries would not thereby be prejudiced.

11. The ministers considered various questions of constitutional development within the commonwealth. They noted that the Federation of Nigeria would attain independence on 1st October, 1960. They extended to the federation their good wishes for its future and looked forward to welcoming an independent Nigeria as a member of the commonwealth on the completion of the necessary constitutional processes.

12. The meeting was informed that, in pursuance of the recent plebiscite, the constituent assembly in Ghana had resolved that the necessary constitutional steps should be taken to introduce a republican form of constitution in Ghana by 1st July, 1960. In notifying this forthcoming constitutional change, the Prime Minister of Ghana assured the meeting of his country's desire to continue her membership of the commonwealth and her acceptance of the Queen as the symbol of the free association of its independent member nations and as such the head of the commonwealth. The heads of delegations of the other member countries of the commonwealth assured the Prime Minister of Ghana that the present relations between their countries and Ghana would remain unaffected by this constitutional change and they declared that their governments would accept and recognize Ghana's continued membership of the commonwealth.

13. The meeting noted a statement by the South African Minister of External Affairs that the union government intended to hold a referendum on the subject of South Africa becoming a republic. The meeting affirmed the view that the choice between a monarchy and a republic was entirely the responsibility of the country concerned. In the event of South Africa deciding to become a republic and if the desire was subsequently expressed to remain a member of the commonwealth, the meeting suggested that the South African government should then ask for the consent of the other commonwealth governments either at a meeting of commonwealth prime ministers or, if this were not practicable, by correspondence.

14. The ministers reviewed the constitutional development of the commonwealth, with particular reference to the future of the smaller dependent territories. They agreed that a detailed study of this subject should be made for consideration by commonwealth governments.

15. Whilst reaffirming the traditional practice that commonwealth conferences do not discuss the internal affairs of member countries ministers availed themselves of Mr. Louw's presence in London to have informal discussions with him about the racial situation in South Africa. During these informal discussions Mr. Louw gave information and answered questions on the union's policies, and the other ministers conveyed to him their views on the South African problem. The ministers emphasized that the commonwealth itself is a multiracial association and expressed the need to ensure good relations between all member states and peoples of the commonwealth.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MARTIN (ESSEX EAST)—PRESS RELEASE RESPECTING NARCOTIC DRUG ADDICTION

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Last night or some time yesterday while this house was sitting there was issued from the office of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) a press release entitled "A Statement of Hon. E. Davie Fulton, Q.C., M.P., Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada concerning narcotic drug addiction". This release starts out by saying:

> The government of Canada has approved a comprehensive plan to deal with the problem of narcotic drug addiction in Canada, it was announced today by the Hon. E. Davie Fulton, Minister of Justice and the Hon. J. W. Monteith, Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The question of privilege to which I now address myself is one affecting all members of this house; a privilege which has been violated by the Minister of Justice in particular and, because of association by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

It is the practice and tradition of this house that while the house is sitting all announcements shall be made in the house and not outside it. I would suggest that because of his constant interventions on questions of procedure there is perhaps no one in this chamber who is more aware of this practice than the Minister of Justice.

On March 3 I addressed a question on this matter to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, directing his attention to a statement made in British Columbia by the Minister of Justice that the government proposed to take concrete steps to make an effective attack on the narcotic drug traffic in this country. The Minister of National Health and Welfare replied simply: "No comment".

I addressed a question on this matter to the Minister of Justice himself on March 9, the reply to which certainly did not reveal the government's intentions. Then on March 10 again I directed a question on this matter to the Minister of Justice, who replied to my question in part by saying that he expected shortly to be in a position to lay certain tentative conclusions before his colleagues in the cabinet and that "thereafter it might well be we would have proposals to make to the provinces." I then asked whether that would be this year, and the minister replied:

> That I am not able to say, Mr. Speaker. The matter is a difficult and complicated one and it depends upon the rate of progress that we are able to make.

I submit that this important announcement on government policy should have been made in this house. To do otherwise would be a violation if made by any minister in these circumstances, but it is a particular violation when made by an hon. gentleman who holds himself out as a paragon of parliamentary virtue in this house.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I can well understand the concern of the hon. gentleman in view of the past record of himself and his colleagues when they were on this side. Of course they are now prepared to strain at every gnat they can see flying in the air in an attempt to do something to redress the balance in the minds of the people of this country.

But if I may mix my metaphors I should like to point out to the hon. gentleman that he has laboured and brought forth a mouse, because there is really no question of privilege, nor has there been any departure from what I said I would do in answering the questions to which the hon. gentleman has referred. What was stated in the press release of yesterday, if the hon. gentleman would read it in a calm and dispassionate manner, is that the government has now approved in principle a certain new approach to the narcotic drug problem and has authorized the Minister of National Health and Welfare and myself to approach the provinces to enter into discussions with them with respect to these proposals.

That is exactly what I said would be done, in answer to the questions by the hon. member for Essex East which he himself has read. To that extent, therefore, the press release of yesterday indicated nothing new and took us no further than the point I had already indicated I hoped the government would be able to reach in the course of this year.

the provincial co-operation that may be forthcoming, we will not be in a position to determine our policy finally and state it to this house. At that time, when the discussions with the provinces have concluded so that we can put forward a definitive and comprehensive policy, this house will be informed, whether or not the hon. member for Essex East is in it.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Perhaps I should be allowed to finish. May I say briefly to the Minister of Justice that not only do hon. members—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has something to say about whether a question of privilege of the house is involved, he may proceed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I was just going to say that not only do hon. gentlemen opposite sanction this violation of the privileges of this house but they wish to deny the hon. gentleman who raises this question of privilege the opportunity of answering the Minister of Justice.

Whether or not this is a new policy is not the point. Any announcement of policy must be made in this house while the house is sitting. That is my question of privilege. On that very point all I have to do is read the first sentence of the third paragraph:

> Mr. Fulton pointed out that while the plan embodies a new approach on the part of the federal authorities—

Mr. Fulton: What is the rest of that sentence?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Once again the government—

Mr. Fulton: What is the rest of that sentence?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —in the person of the Minister of Justice has been found wanting.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the press release with me so I cannot complete the sentence exactly but I think the fact that the hon. gentleman stopped where he did indicates that he himself knows that had he read the rest of the sentence it would have established the accuracy of what I have said.

What I said in that press release of yesterday indicates clearly that while the federal government has arrived at a certain point in its thinking on the matter, it has come to the conclusion that it would not be proper to proceed until the matter has been discussed with the provinces exactly as I told the hon. gentleman on March 9 that it would do. The uncompleted portion of the sentence made that clear. To that extent this press release represents nothing new. There is no definite policy to put before the house, and as I have said—because we on this side of the house over here are aware of the proper relations between the federal government and the House of Commons—when we have a new policy to announce we will inform the House of Commons if the house should be in session at that time. If the hon. gentleman feels affronted because I did not take him into my confidence, then—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is the rights of parliament that are involved.

Mr. Fulton: —I am terribly sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot be responsible for the sensitivities of a particular hon. gentleman opposite.

Mr. Chevrier: Why not announce it in the house?

Mr. Fulton: The point is that the hon. gentleman asked a question on March 9. He had his answer, and the press release does not take the matter any further forward than that except that the forecast then made with respect to our own thinking on the matter and our own consideration has been realized to the point where we can now go to the provinces for discussions with them as we forecast in this house that we would.

I must say that I fail to see a question of privilege; but if there be any, while I do not admit for a moment that there has been any departure from the usual and proper relations between the government and the house, if my hon. friend wants the government to do what hon. members of the opposition do and continue to make repetitious statements, I shall be prepared, even though it involves repetition, to make such statements in this house.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member circumvented parliament.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege, the Minister of Justice as usual has been clever but not convincing. If the hon. gentleman would read the very first sentence of his own press release he would find these words:

> The government of Canada has approved a comprehensive plan to deal with the problem of narcotic drug addiction in Canada—

I repeat, "has approved a comprehensive plan."

Mr. Fulton: Put the whole thing on Hansard.

Mr. Pearson: These words are perfectly clear. If this announcement made outside the house adds nothing to the statement that was made in the house by my hon. friend in March last, it is a queer thing indeed that it took the minister over three months to issue the press release.

MR. ARGUE—ALLEGED INACCURATE STATEMENTS IN RETURN TABLED

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A starred question in my name, No. 104, was passed as an order for return on April 6. The return was brought down on April 27. The questions were as follows:

1. Is toxic nerve gas produced in Canada?
2. If so, (a) where; (b) since when; (c) for what purpose; (d) under what authority; (e) under whose jurisdiction; (f) to whom is it supplied; (g) on what scale?

The answers were:

1. No.
2. Not applicable.

On May 3, some six days later, the Toronto Star carried a press report which reads in part as follows, under the heading: "Canada Makes Nerve Gas":

Nerve gases and germ warfare agents are prepared from time to time by Canadian defence technicians in Canada in minute amounts, a defence research board spokesman said today. Neither type of warfare—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I tell the hon. member that in raising a question of privilege based on a press report he is adopting the press as a statement of fact.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, if you will wait for one minute I will provide the answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: I will provide it from the department of the Minister of National Defence, and this is my question of privilege. I feel I have to quote this in order to establish the question of privilege.

Neither type of warfare agent is produced or manufactured anywhere in Canada in quantities beyond laboratory amounts of a few ounces at a time the spokesman emphasized.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my office got in touch with the office of the Department of National Defence; a letter was sent to my office over the signature of the minister's executive assistant which said in part that the public relations officer of the Department of National Defence had made a press release available to the Toronto Star from which this report was taken. I have in my hand the enclosed copy of the press release, and on this pertinent point it reads as follows:

Nerve gases are not produced or manufactured in Canada but are prepared in very small research quantities—that is, in quantities involving a matter of ounces only. They are necessary in order to conduct research aimed at evaluating potential chemical warfare hazards and in improving defensive measures against them.

Question of Privilege

My question of privilege is that the house was not given a full answer to this question that asked whether nerve gases were produced in Canada and on what scale. I feel that if the Department of National Defence, or the ministry, had wished to give parliament an adequate answer they could have given to this house—they should have given to this house—all the information that has been given to the press in this press release. My question of privilege, therefore, is that the House of Commons, that parliament itself, is entitled to full and frank answers and that members of parliament should not have to get replies to their questions supplemented by releases which subsequently appear in the press.

MR. DESCHATELETS—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN MONTREAL "LA PRESSE"

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege affecting all hon. members. Citation 111 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, indicates that speeches and writings which reflect upon the conduct of the chairman of committees or the chairman of ways and means have been held to constitute breaches of privilege. I have in my hand a newspaper which came to my knowledge only yesterday. It is La Presse of Montreal, dated April 9, and it contains a letter to the editor signed by the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Brassard), from which I wish to read the following extract. May I say at this point, Mr. Speaker, that I sent the hon. member for Chicoutimi notice today that I intended to raise this matter.

(Translation):

You will admit that this does not provide much of a chance to rise very often, and even less to improvise a reply at such times as one would like to. I may add that when the house is in committee, it is quite obvious that Quebec members find it difficult to catch the eye of a certain deputy chairman, who is probably in secret agreement with Mr. Fisher's views.

(Text):

Now, Mr. Speaker, in accordance with paragraph 113 of Beauchesne's fourth edition I am laying on the table a copy of the newspaper in question, and I leave it to Your Honour to determine, in the light of this article, whether there has been a breach of privilege. If there has, I am prepared to move that the matter be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Meunier):

That the copy of La Presse, Montreal, April 9, 1960, containing a report of a letter addressed to the editor by Mr. Brassard, the member for Chicoutimi, be referred to the committee on privileges and elections for investigation and report to the house.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member please indicate in what portion of the newspaper the letter can be found?

Mr. Deschatelets: On the editorial page, Mr. Speaker.

And the Clerk proceeded to read the article in question as follows:

(Translation):

The Editor,
La Presse,
Montreal, Que.

Dear Sir.

I wish to congratulate you on your leader entitled "Mr. Fisher's Speech", published on April 4 instant. While I agree in a general way with the views expressed, I note a slight misrepresentation. It is the apparently innocuous sentence: "Above all, it is the fact that no minister from Quebec or elsewhere, nor any Conservative member from our province, told him off right then and there, as did Messrs. Augustin Brassard, John Pickersgill, Joseph Habel, a French-speaking member from Ontario, and L. A. Regnier, a Conservative—from Manitoba".

Your editor knows, or at least should know, that no member may rise in the House of Commons before he has been recognized by the Chair, that the Speaker always has on hand a list of members who are scheduled to address the house in a given order and that no one can change that predetermined order. It must be pointed out, moreover, that the present Speaker has ruled that speeches must follow one another in the sequence: 1 Conservative, 1 Liberal, 1 C.C.F. Since there are only 8 C.C.F. members in the house, and 51 Liberals, every C.C.F. member has the opportunity to speak 20 times, and each Liberal 4 times, to one for the Conservatives, who are 208 in number.

You will admit that this does not provide much of a chance to rise very often, and even less to improvise a reply at such times as one would like to. I may add that when the house is in committee, it is quite obvious that Quebec members find it difficult to catch the eye of a certain deputy chairman, who is probably in secret agreement with Mr. Fisher's views.

As for the rest, you may be assured that present Conservative members compare very favourably with previous Liberal members in the matter of spunk and diligence and that they will get even with Mr. Fisher yet.

I believe those few comments were necessary to clarify the situation for those who, from a distance, would be inclined to pass judgment without knowing the facts.

Vincent Brassard, M.P.,
Chicoutimi.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: It is unfortunate that the hon. member for Chicoutimi, whose conduct is in question along with that of the newspaper which has been read, is not here today. It does not seem to me it would be proper to proceed with this matter in his absence. Before accepting and putting this motion I think the hon. member should be here and should be heard, and I should like also to hear some comment from other members before the motion is accepted or put. In view of the fact that the matter is not one of great urgency, having stood since April 9, I would suggest that it be deferred until the hon. member for Chicoutimi is in the house.

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

MR. HERRIDGE—ALLEGED IMPROPER USE OF HOUSE OF COMMONS STATIONERY

Mr. Speaker: I have a question of privilege to deal with myself; this seems to be the day. Yesterday the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) brought before the house, quite properly I thought, the case of an apparent misuse of the stationery of the house, raised it as a question of privilege and presented a motion.

I have examined all precedents I could find in order to determine whether or not this amounted to a breach of the privileges of the house, without finding any precedent for it. It appears to me that it is not in that category and does not raise a prima facie question of privilege. I should just like to read from May one paragraph which outlines generally the privileges which have been established by precedent as those of the house. It will be found at page 109 of May's sixteenth edition. In it Campion states as follows:

It would be vain to attempt an enumeration of every act which might be construed into a contempt, the power to punish for contempt being in its nature discretionary. Certain principles may, however, be collected from the journals which will serve as general declarations of the law of parliament. It may be stated generally that any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any member or officer of such house in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

This appears to be rather an administrative problem under the jurisdiction of the house through its Speaker and its officers and undoubtedly can be dealt with in that category rather than by straining the law of parliament to cover this particular incident.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUMMIT CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask either the Prime Minister or the Secretary of state for External Affairs whether a statement could or should be made on recent events in Paris which have caused so much discouragement and anxiety.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The situation in Paris in regard to the summit meeting is still delicate and uncertain. Premier Khrushchev failed to attend a meeting with the western three this afternoon which had been designed to get the summit meeting started. The prospects are therefore not bright; but so long as the four heads of government are still in Paris there would be no value in my attempting to speculate on the possible turn of events. I have made known to our NATO colleagues our desire that this situation should be discussed in the council at the earliest opportunity, and we shall be able tomorrow to examine the situation with our NATO allies in the council, possibly together with one or more of the three western foreign ministers.

Whatever the outcome of today's meeting the Canadian government remains determined to do everything possible to make progress in the field of disarmament where we are particularly engaged, as hon. members know, and where the United Nations has a special responsibility.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question in view of the situation in Paris. Of course we know only what is in the press and what has been given us this afternoon by the minister. In view of the concern of all countries, but in particular of Canada, I should like to ask whether, even if only on an advisory basis, the Secretary of State for External Affairs for Canada should not go to Paris to talk to those there and perhaps exercise some influence.

Mr. Green: I am extremely grateful to the hon. member for Vancouver East for his very flattering words. However, at the moment I think there is more to be done here in the house as far as I am concerned. Every effort is being made in Paris to bring about a resumption of the talks. Canada, of course, will do whatever she can to bring about such action.

Mr. Winch: I should like to ask a further supplementary question. In view of the situation may I ask—and I believe on a commonwealth basis it is a matter of consultation—who is representing Canada there and speaking on behalf of our country?

Mr. Green: We have a permanent representative at NATO in the person of Jules Léger. He will be representing Canada at the meeting of the council tomorrow morning. He is in close touch with what is going on. We are getting dispatches all the time reporting on proceedings.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): My question is to the Prime Minister. In view of the prayerful desire of all mankind that the summit conference will proceed and may be successful in easing world tension, and the desire of all Canadians that our influence be used in the interests of moderation and good sense, can the Prime Minister inform the house what channels Canada is using to keep in touch with the summit proceedings and whether the Prime Minister has been in communication with western leaders at the summit?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I emphasize the words used by the hon. gentleman, namely that this is a time for moderation and good sense. If that principle is adopted I think the answer is given to his question. There is no course that we can take at this time which can have any influence over the intransigence displayed by Mr. Khrushchev. That is where the difficulty is. If there were any course that could be taken that could achieve any change in his attitude, it would be taken. It is not because of the stand taken by the other three representatives that the prospective summit meeting is in the position in which it is today.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORAD—REPORTED EXCLUSION FROM RECENT U.S. ALERT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister inform the house whether the Canadian section of NORAD was excluded from the reported alert and, if so, whether that was done at the instigation of the NORAD commander or the Canadian government?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): An exercise was held in the early hours of Monday morning initiated by the joint chiefs of staff of the United States in connection with communication alerts. The NORAD command was not exercised. No Canadian unit was exercised, nor were any United States units stationed on Canada soil exercised.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED REJECTION OF UKRAINIAN PROTEST OVER PROGRAM "YOUR SOUL AND CONSCIENCE"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. According to newspaper reports the director of the French network of the C.B.C.

has rejected the complaint of Canadians of Ukrainian origin against the television program dealing with the assassination of the Ukrainian national hero Simon Petlura.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member dealing with the same question he raised yesterday?

Mr. Badanai: I have a new question.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member put his new question?

Mr. Badanai: The minister informed the house yesterday that a statement would be forthcoming on the matter. Is the minister in possession of any decision made by the executive board of the C.B.C.?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I said yesterday that the C.B.C. was considering the matter and would issue a statement yesterday. I understand that they did so and that consultations were held with the various parties. There is nothing more I have to add than that which was said by myself in the house on this matter yesterday.

STATEMENT ON POLICY RESPECTING EMPLOYEES NOMINATED IN PROVINCIAL ELECTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, May 13 the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked me a question and a supplementary question with respect to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the political activities of its members.

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that section 8, subsection 3 of the bylaws of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation states:

> No officer or employee of the corporation employed on a full time basis shall be a candidate for any public elective office or actively support any candidate for any public elective office, but an officer or employee of the corporation may, subject to the permission of the president, be or actively support a candidate for a municipal or civic office, provided that the acceptance of or the support of the candidature for such office does not interfere with the proper and regular performance of his duties with the corporation.

In reply to the supplementary question relating to the one particular individual mentioned, I am advised by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that this supplementary question, which related to British Columbia, refers to the case of a commentator on the program "Neighbourly News" who was not a member of the staff but a free lance artist and who announced his candidacy in the next British Columbia election. In accordance with the corporation's practice in this regard and the principle enunciated in the regulation which I read a moment ago, he was given two weeks' notice of termination of employment, and arrangements are now being made and discussions are taking place with him and others as to a replacement commentator.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION RESPECTING BANK INTEREST RATE ON INSURED MORTGAGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Adrien Meunier (Papineau): I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the government consider introducing special legislation to permit the banks to lend on insured mortgages under the housing act at the same rate of interest that other financial institutions are permitted to charge?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as an experienced parliamentarian the hon. member should know that government policy is not announced in answer to questions.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

WELLAND CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO SHIPPING HOLD-UPS AND TONNAGE HANDLED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has there been any significant hold-up of shipping passing through the Welland canal this current season? How does this year's tonnage compare with last year?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. The answer to the first question is in the negative; the Welland canal has been functioning satisfactorily and no significant delays have occurred.

As to the second question, cargo tonnage figures are not yet available. Up to and including May 15 of this year there were 1,049 vessels which went through the canal. At the same date last year the number was 806, an increase of 30 per cent.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—FEDERAL DISCUSSIONS WITH B.C. GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Minister of Justice whether in recent days he has participated in any discussions with the British Columbia government on power development in that province. If so, has he any report to make to the house on those discussions?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the federal members of the Canada-British Columbia policy liaison committee went to Victoria on Friday, met with the British Columbia members of that committee on Saturday and came back here on Sunday. I attended as chairman of the Canadian negotiating team.

The discussions concerned the negotiations with the United States on an agreement for the development of the Columbia river, but I am bound by the agreement which has been made and the principle which has been followed to the effect that until negotiations have advanced to the point where something positive can be said and reported to the respective legislatures, they should not be discussed in detail. Therefore I am not at liberty at this stage to disclose any detail of the discussions.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. I appreciate the difficulty in making a report at this time on international discussions, but may I ask the minister whether he shares the hopes of his colleague the Minister of Finance, as expressed in Vancouver on May 16, that before very long the physical development of the Canadian portion of this river can begin in earnest?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, indeed. The Minister of Finance was kind enough to show me what he was going to say, and we were at one about it.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question. Can the minister inform the house whether he has high expectations of a treaty being signed in 1960?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that that will depend on the course of negotiations, and as far as the Canadian government is concerned we are doing everything we can to bring these negotiations to a speedy and satisfactory conclusion.

LIVESTOCK

FRASER VALLEY, B.C.—ESTABLISHMENT AS BRUCELLOSIS CONTROL AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold Hicks (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, and ask whether he has had an official request from the British Columbia minister of agriculture to proceed with the work of making the Fraser valley a brucellosis free area. If the request has come forward, when will testing commence?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, a request has been received from the minister of agriculture of British Columbia to have the Fraser valley constituted a federal brucellosis control area. I signed the authorizing order today. As soon as the order is presented the department will be able to start having the cattle in the area tested. The speed with which this can be done will depend in large measure on the assistance provided by local veterinary practitioners in the area, who are engaged on a part time basis to assist in the testing.

RAILWAY ACT

PROVISION FOR GRANTS FROM GRADE CROSSING FUND

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-61, to amend an act to amend the Railway Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to learn during the resolution stage that all hon. members who spoke considered this to be good legislation. There were suggestions that more assistance should be provided from the railway grade crossing fund, particularly to the municipalities. I think the facts prove that the increase in the measure of assistance to municipalities from the fund in the past two years has been very important indeed.

The crossing problem is the concern of the federal authorities, the provincial and municipal highway authorities, and the railways. The provinces and municipalities require highways and railways and benefit from both, notwithstanding that crossing dangers accompany the benefits. Crossings are not the responsibility solely of the federal authorities. Nevertheless, it is my desire that federal assistance be provided in as generous a measure as is reasonable in the circumstances as they may be from time to time. Consequently I shall keep in mind the suggestions that have been made when considering what further measures may be appropriate in dealing with the crossing problem. It is a problem that will have my continuing and sympathetic interest at all times, and I welcome all suggestions made to deal with it.

There was expressed a very understandable desire to have railway cars painted or made reflective so they will be more easily seen at crossings in the night time, and there were requests for information as to what is being done to place reflective markings on the sides of railway cars, for which parliament has made money available from the railway grade crossing fund.

The board of transport commissioners issued a judgment and order on May 1, 1959 requiring the Canadian railways to place reflective markings on all new box cars received by them between that date and the end of 1960, and on an equivalent number of old box cars. Last year the Canadian Pacific Railway marked approximately 3,000 box cars with reflective "scotchlite" discs four inches in diameter. The larger cars have nine discs on each side, smaller cars have seven. The Canadian National Railways did not mark as many as the Canadian Pacific Railway, because they bought fewer new box cars than did the C.P.R. Canadian National Railways are using two different types of reflective discs. The board has been advised that the C.N.R. marked 696 cars in 1959.

The board expects that by the end of this year there will be approximately 10,000 cars marked. The board feels it is necessary to have experience with the markings under actual operating conditions before determining a longer range program.

As regards United States cars, I am informed that several bills were introduced in the United States congress with the object of requiring United States railway vehicles to be equipped with reflective or luminous material. One of them was suggested by the interstate commerce commission. Several such bills were considered in 1957 by a subcommittee of the House of Representatives, but to date none has become law. The interstate commerce commission has been informed of our legislation and the board of transport commissioners' order.

The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) and the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) raised matters concerning the Canadian National particularly, and I have drawn their representations to the attention of the management.

One or two members suggested that crossing signs be made to stand out more prominently. The board has started a program of putting reflectors on railway crossing signs, and has designated some 2,141 priority crossings to be so marked in 1959 and will designate other crossings as progress is made. Grants of 80 per cent of the cost are made for this work from the grade crossing fund. Advance warning signs some distance from crossings have been erected by provincial authorities in a great many cases. Efforts are being made to have them uniform throughout Canada, and the joint committee on uniform traffic control devices has recommended that these advance warning signs be of uniform design of yellow and black reflector material.

There was also a suggestion that the investigation should be made to see whether the diesel whistle cannot be made more like the steam whistle. The technical officers of the board, the railways, and the national research council engaged in studies of this problem, and tests were conducted with a view to having a diesel horn that will simulate the sound of the old steam whistle. Following this study the board issued an order which directed the railways to equip road service units with horns having certain tonal characteristics. It is, of course, difficult to simulate exactly the sound of the conventional steam whistle, and the present types of horns now in use are the closest to that aim it has been possible to produce up to the present time.

Last night the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) asked certain questions, and I have requested that answers be prepared by the board of transport commissioners. I will give the answers to the two hon. members as soon as they are received.

As I have said before, I am very much interested in the crossing situation and welcome all suggestions that are made for remedial measures. In conclusion I wish to express my thanks for the support which has been indicated for this measure.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): My remarks in connection with this matter will be brief, because the house already knows the position which we on this side take. We support this measure as forward-looking legislation.

I believe when this act was amended some two years ago I had the opportunity of speaking at length on the whole question of grade crossing accidents in this country and the measures taken by previous governments, and this government as well, to put an end, so far as possible, to such accidents. We welcome this legislation because it continues for a further period of three years the amendments which have already been made affecting the grade crossing fund, and because it also deals with the reflective markings on the sides of railway cars.

I think everything possible should be done by the parties involved—by this government, by the board of transport commissioners, by the municipalities and by the provinces—to avoid these terrible and catastrophic accidents which take place at grade crossings. To the extent that we in this house can assist, I am sure all members of parliament will wish to co-operate in the fullest measure.

There is one point only that I desire to bring to the attention of this house, and it is that this whole problem was studied at great length by the board of transport commissioners several years ago. I do not have the report of the board before me, but it went into this matter exhaustively. At that time the board travelled from one end of the country to the other, and finally made many excellent recommendations. Many of those recommendations were put into effect by the former administration. Some of them have been put into effect by the present Minister of Transport. I am not able to say at this time whether or not all the recommendations have been put into effect.

However, for what it is worth I draw this to the attention of the minister; that it might be well, in view of the numerous accidents which are still taking place on our highways where a railway meets a roadway, to ask the board of transport commissioners, in the interests of all of us, to bring that report up to date and see whether, having regard to the great increase in the number of motor cars and other circumstances which may have arisen since the report was brought down, a revision is not now imperative.

That is all I intend to say in support of this resolution, which all of us on this side think is good legislation.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): The members of this group support the principle and purpose of this bill because it continues the very excellent and very necessary work which was begun some years ago in providing protection for persons crossing railway tracks.

I intend to be brief. I spoke at some length at the resolution stage. I must say I was interested to hear that the marking of these cars is apparently proceeding satisfactorily. I was also interested to hear of the experiments in connection with the whistle tone, which I consider to be important.

Before I sit down I want to re-emphasize some of the remarks I made at the resolution stage about the necessity for striking signs at railroad crossings. I think a great deal more protection could be provided, particularly in rural areas, if more striking signs were used. I do not think it is sufficient just to have a white cross with black lettering saying "railroad crossing". If we could have something much more striking we would get a great deal more protection at relatively small expense, particularly for the benefit of strangers using our highways, and I hope practical consideration will be given to this aspect of the problem.

In addition, may I say that I agree with the very good suggestion made by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) that in view of the increase in vehicular traffic and the rapidly changing conditions affecting roads and highways in Canada, it might be wise if the board of transport commissioners were directed to give some further study to this question, and report to this house.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COURTS, JUDGES AND GAME LEGISLATION

On the order:

Second reading of Bill C-60, to amend the Northwest Territories Act—The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Mr. Speaker: I am informed that this bill is not available to hon. members in the French language, but by leave it could be proceeded with.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, do you not think we ought to give consideration to whether that is a wise move to adopt? It is the usual practice to have bills available in both languages; and while some reports may sometimes present extenuating circumstances when they are not available in the French language, it could hardly be justified in the case of a bill.

Mr. Speaker: The rules require that the bill be in both languages but by unanimous consent it could be proceeded with. Shall the bill stand?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I telephoned about the bill this morning to see whether copies were available in the French language. I have had no reply as to the stage at which the French copy is.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the minister have it available later today?

Mr. Churchill: If it would be, perhaps we could allow it to stand for the time being.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That would be agreeable.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree that this bill should stand and be considered later if the French text arrives?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

YUKON ACT

INCREASE IN COUNCIL MEMBERSHIP—CHANGES RESPECTING COURTS, ETC.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-59, to amend the Yukon Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 3 agreed to.

Yukon Act

On clause 4—Game ordinances in respect of Indians and Eskimos.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we could let clause 4 stand for a minute or two until we come to the end of our consideration of the other clauses. I should like to make a statement on this clause. Can that be done?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 4 stand with the unanimous consent of the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

Clauses 5 to 11 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we revert to the consideration of clause 4?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 4—Game ordinances in respect of Indians and Eskimos.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, clause 4 deals with the game ordinances in the Yukon. This brings up a particular problem which I think I should bring to the attention of the committee so there will be no misunderstanding in the passing of this clause.

In the Northwest Territories a resolution was passed last year asking the federal government to make clear the legality behind their right to pass ordinances on game matters. This we have done in the bill which we allowed to stand just a few minutes ago. The comments I was going to make on the Northwest Territories legislation I will now have to make on the Yukon legislation.

In the Northwest territorial council resolution the difficulty of the Indians and Eskimos in the territory was considered. I should like to explain the background of this difficulty, which is a matter of great importance to hon. members of this committee, because under treaty and under statute we are required to protect the livelihood of the native people who lived in Canada before the white man came. In most parts of Canada including the Northwest Territories there are treaties that protect the rights of the Indians, but there are no treaties to protect the rights of Indians in the Yukon. Therefore in considering this problem we had to keep in mind what protection could be given to the Indians in the Yukon.

This matter only arose because last year a judicial decision was handed down in the Northwest Territories which pointed out that in the opinion of the presiding judge the territorial council had no power to make game ordinances in so far as they affected Eskimos. This put the game legislation in question. We had turned over the management of the game to the Northwest Territories in 1948. The territorial government had passed ordinances dealing with game, and now a judicial decision had put this jurisdiction in doubt.

As a result they met and passed a resolution calling on the federal government to amend the Northwest Territories legislation in such a way as to make clear without any doubt that they had power to deal with game matters. Then to make certain that they recognized that the interests of the Indian and Eskimo were protected, the last section of their resolution was framed in these words, which I wish to put on the record and to which I ask all hon. members to give their undivided attention because they have the traditional duty of protecting the Indian in Canada:

> And further that the council undertakes that in all cases and at all times the basic rights of Eskimos and Indians to hunt and trap on unoccupied crown land shall be preserved and shall be abridged only to ensure the conservation of game animals as a continuing resource to such extent as is necessary for their livelihood.

This means that even though the federal government is amending the Northwest Territories legislation to give to the territorial government the right beyond all question to deal with matters concerning game, the territorial council gave this undertaking that the traditional rights of the Indians and Eskimos in the Northwest Territories would be preserved. If the amendment to the Yukon Act which is now before us is read carefully, the matter of the protection of Indians and Eskimos could be brought into question. Clause 2 reads:

> Notwithstanding subsection (1), the commissioner in council may make ordinances for the government of the territory, in relation to the preservation of game in the territory, that are applicable to and in respect of Indians and Eskimos, and ordinances made by the commissioner in council in relation to the preservation of game in the territory, unless the contrary intention appears therein, are applicable to and in respect of Indians and Eskimos.

I am not a lawyer, but this simply means that you give to the Yukon council the right without question to make ordinances in relation to hunting by Indians and Eskimos, and the only exception to it is that clause where it says "unless the contrary intention appears therein".

Therefore in the Yukon, under this amendment to the act, the rights of the Indians and the Eskimos are exactly the same as those of the white man unless especially arranged for in their ordinances or in the regulations. The question that arises is this. Since there is no treaty that usually guarantees to Indians the traditional right of hunting, are we doing anything, by giving to the territorial government this right to pass ordinances, that lessens the traditional right of the Indian to hunt for his livelihood? I raise this with the committee, because I would be prepared to entertain an amendment in the form of an additional clause which would make this right absolutely equal.

Here I might point out that there are other protections for the Indian and Eskimo. First, the legislative body, the territorial council, has the right to pass legislation, and the commissioner who is appointed by the federal government has the right to not sign that legislation. That is one control to make certain that the rights of the Indian and Eskimo are protected.

The second protection is the fact that all ordinances of the territorial governments must have the approval of the governor general in council, and this means the approval of the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. If these two protections are not sufficient, then the committee should seriously consider adding an amendment to clause 4 to make clear that the traditional right is not in any way abrogated.

Mr. Roberge: Does the minister have on hand the amendment he is talking about?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): No, I have not; but one of the suggestions made to me is that the words in this last paragraph could be included as a separate clause, although my department is busy now drafting a shorter one, which would be more concise.

Mr. Roberge: Can the committee be advised as to whether the Eskimos and Indians were told that there might be a change in the law with regard to their game rights?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): When the amendment to the Northwest Territories Act was produced the head of the Indian affairs branch sat in on the committee, and of course he is a member of the Northwest Territories council.

Mr. Peters: Are arrangements made for someone in the council to decide what limitations are placed on Indians or Eskimos in that area because of those restrictions? For instance, if the game ordinances are followed closely they will probably eliminate food surpluses being built up at any particular time, which has been the habit of the Eskimos in the past. They have accumulated and carried over food surpluses, and this ordinance would probably prohibit that. Are the officers in a position to decide how much of a limitation should be placed on the food stores? How would that be made up if there were a limitation?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Under my department there is the wildlife service of Canada which operates in co-operation with all the provinces, and of course it is responsible for the territories as well, even though the administration of game in the territories is now under the jurisdiction of the two territorial councils. The wildlife service of Canada periodically makes surveys of the amounts of various game in each part of the territories, and on the basis of that information the territorial government changes the regulations that look after the management of game in that area.

I might point out to the hon. member that in the north, owing to the climate and the lack of vegetation, in many parts game is not plentiful; it is a very scarce commodity. In the interests of the Indian and the Eskimo it certainly has to be regulated to give him any protection whatsoever. As the hon. member has probably heard, in the Northwest Territories, for example, the regulations for hunting and trapping severely limit the rights of the white man. The rights of the non-resident are for a very limited amount of game bird shooting; the rights of the resident white man are equally limited, and only under certain conditions is he allowed to take off big game.

In the Yukon game is more plentiful; therefore the regulations work equally for all, white man, Eskimo and Indian. But the power to regulate has to be in their hands, and it has been in the hands of the Yukon territorial council since about 1900. Therefore they have this right traditionally, like any other province, and they have had it for about 60 years.

Mr. Peters: The problem I am thinking of is that there are a great number of white men going into the north on development work. This may apply more to the Northwest Territories than to the Yukon, but it seems to me that if all the people in that area had equal rights it would probably give the white man an advantage, because he would be hunting for a purpose different from that of the Indian and Eskimo. If the white man were given equal right to kill game there we would be taking away from the Indian and Eskimo his means of livelihood. Certainly we want to conserve the game. It may be necessary to limit the numbers taken, but if this is done we have a responsibility to ascertain what the loss will be to the native population; we should be willing to make up to the native population something in kind, and obviously it would have to be something very definite in its application.

I am not sure whether the minister has said that the ordinance will apply to all people within the area in the same way. That would mean, would it not, that the white man would probably get an advantage under the regulations and the native population would suffer a disadvantage? I should like to see the native population protected by ascertaining what they would receive in kind, if this ordinance was passed, to make up for their losses, and how we would administer it and see that they receive this extra amount.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): The territorial council have administered game in the Yukon since the turn of the century. They have been very conscious always of the necessity of protecting their game, and they have done a good job. All this amendment does fundamentally is to make sure that there is no question about their right to pass these ordinances. They have had these ordinances in effect in the Yukon since 1900. However, as the result of decisions last year a doubt was created about this right, so this provision was inserted to give them this right beyond the shadow of a doubt. This provision makes the ordinances passed in previous years legal.

Mr. Peters: The point to which I am referring—I have not seen the ordinances—is that the ordinances may say every male over the age of 21 has the right to hunt and kill, say, one caribou, one moose or whatever it happens to be. Some of the native population are dependent on shooting not only one of these animals but perhaps half a dozen. It seems to me that the Eskimo would be put in a position of hardship by being given equality with the white man. In the past I presume that the Eskimos have been able to kill as much as they needed for food, and then the department made up the balance. By putting the Eskimo under this regulation it would seem to me he would be subject to the same kind of game limitation as the white man, and this would interfere with his ability to live off the land. In many cases the natives have to kill far more than any conservationist would allow in that area.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I think I have the point which the hon. member is making. Considerable work has been done by wildlife surveys in outlining what they call the sustaining yield which is possible for this type of animal and that type of animal. The ordinances simply set out the trapping areas to protect the individual person in the area who has a trapping licence. Nearly all the trapping and hunting is done by Indians. There is only a handful of Eskimos in the Yukon. These provisions have worked well for 60 years, and game is reasonably plentiful. The difficulty of the trapper and the hunter in the Yukon is not that he cannot get game, but the fact that fur prices have declined so drastically he cannot sell his furs.

I think the answer to the hon. member's question is that the territorial government have managed this game very successfully for 60 years, and they have looked after the interests of the Indians under these ordinances. The government has carefully watched the white hunter, who is usually a professional hunter bringing in sportsmen to hunt the big game animals of the Yukon. Whenever a person in the Yukon, whether he is white, Eskimo or Indian, wants to hunt for food, these ordinances do not limit what he can do unless he wilfully slaughters animals beyond the capacity of the area to carry. Generally speaking, if a man wants food there is no limit on what he can do. However, when he is hunting or trapping to sell the furs, whether he is a white sportsman or a trapper, then he does come under these regulations and the trapping areas are registered with the game department in the Yukon territory.

Mr. Roberge: I should like to go back to the possible amendment which the minister mentioned a moment ago. Is it the intention of the government to introduce such an amendment? If so, is it the intention of the government and the minister to ask the committee to allow this clause to stand until the amendment is drafted?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): This amendment will be ready in two or three minutes. It will be a better one than I was going to propose, and I would be hopeful that we could get through this without delaying the committee, yet making sure that we have done our duty to protect the rights of Indians who hunt.

Mr. Hellyer: In order that we do not delay the proceedings of the house, why does the committee not ask for leave to report progress and sit later this day?

An hon. Member: We have some other questions to ask.

Mr. McMillan: We went through these clauses in rather a hurry, and may I be permitted to ask a question on clause 7?

The Deputy Chairman: Will the committee give unanimous consent to the hon. member to ask a question on clause 7?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McMillan: This clause has to do with deputy judges and sets out who might be a deputy judge. My question is, for how long is the appointment made? Is his appointment just for a session of the court, or is it for a year, or is it a permanent appointment?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I want to thank the hon. member for requesting an explanation of this clause, because some of these clauses are vital. They have been suggested by individuals over a period of two or three decades, and radical changes in the Yukon Act are suggested.

In answer to this question, I may say that deputy judges are appointed for an indefinite period. You have a judge in the Yukon and a judge in the Northwest Territories. In the past what has happened has been that one judge was invariably made the deputy of the other judge. This was done through a cumbersome order in council procedure. This provision simply puts in statutory form the fact that you can appoint a judge by governor in council. The passage of this provision will mean that, more and more, we will be moving into a period when all decisions will be handed down by judges who know the north country. It does not prevent the appointment of deputy judges from the provinces to the south, that is British Columbia in the case of the Yukon and Alberta in the case of the Northwest Territories. This can still be done by the governor in council; but this provision gives the legal right, in statutory form, to appoint by governor in council rather than through the cumbersome procedure we have used in the past for appointing a deputy judge from either one of the territories or from the provinces. The intention is to appoint them from the alternative territory.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if I might take just a moment to say a word about the clauses following 8 and 9 which are concerned with the judicial system. May I have permission to revert to those for a moment?

The Deputy Chairman: Will the committee give unanimous agreement to this suggestion by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I will be very brief because the amendment is ready now. The big thing we have done here has been to give the Northwest Territories and the Yukon their own court of appeal. The court of appeal is made up of the two territorial judges, plus Alberta judges to make up the number for the Northwest Territories and British Columbia judges for the court of appeal in the Yukon. As you read these clauses you find that this court of appeal can sit right in the territories. This means that at long last the people of the territories have the right to justice in their own area without the expense of going south to Edmonton or Vancouver. The offices in Whitehorse and Yellowknife will be branch offices of the court of record which the appeal court needs.

I could go on speaking at great length about the advantage of this to the administration of justice in the territory. I simply want to conclude this portion of my remarks by emphasizing that, for the first time, this provision gives the territories their own courts of appeal. I imagine that some of you might ask why it is that the court of appeal is to be composed of the two territorial judges, since one of them must have heard the case in the first instance. The answer is clear; the judge who heard the case in the first instance will not be sitting on the court of appeal. I should like to go on and describe at some length the advantages of this type of amendment to the territories, but I think every lawyer in the house will appreciate what we have done.

Mr. McMillan: Referring to clause 7 again, I may say that I believe parliament fixes the salaries of judges. Does parliament fix the salaries of these deputy judges? It says here that their remuneration and allowances are fixed by the governor in council.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I believe the answer to that question is yes. The governor in council does fix the remuneration, as the new section states.

Mr. Godin: Can the parliamentary secretary explain to the committee why there is this great departure from the practice in Canada under which in the administration of justice appointments are made by parliament itself? I realize that we are now treating of the problem of the administration of justice in a territory. It would seem to me that the same reasons apply that brought about the section in the British North America Act and that the appointments should be made by someone away above the local and interested parties and that they should especially do the fixing of the salaries of those who are judging the people of those localities. It seems to me that that matter should be given some consideration. It is with some consternation that I find that such serious appointments are made locally and that the determination of their salaries is also made locally.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): This is a step toward the independence of the courts. It was cumbersome to have the order in council procedure which existed previously. This new change merely puts the matter on a basis similar to that on which exchequer court appointments are made. They are exactly similar in that regard.

Mr. Godin: I admit the great advantage. As I listened to the minister a moment ago I recalled the discussion we had last year on this matter. I appreciated the fact that last night the minister made reference to the investigation that followed the remarks made in this House of Commons over a year ago by the hon. member for Mackenzie River and the remarks, as the minister was kind enough to say, which I had occasion to make at that time on that score. We are therefore much interested in the matter and are pleased that this government, after some study, has done something which in some way is following the opinions announced in this house by the hon. member for Mackenzie River and myself, as stated by the minister last night.

We agree that it gives to these territories some local control in the administration of justice. But the matter of salary and appointment is in a different category than the administration of justice. I may state that I fully appreciate the previous method whereby an appeal of a case heard in the Northwest Territories which would have been heard at Chesterfield inlet, for instance the appeal would be heard possibly in Newfoundland by the application of a person who could ask the appeal to be heard where he applied to have it heard.

We are fully in accord that this local appeal court brings about a measure of satisfaction in the local aspect of the administration of justice. There is no doubt that an appeal court which is located in the area where the trial or the appeal is heard by persons who are conversant with the traditions of the way of living of these people is an important matter. But I see some danger in the method indicated there where it is not for the purpose of the better administration of justice but for the purpose only of deciding the remuneration which these people will receive and from whom they will receive their appointments. This is a full departure. This decision is made practically locally by the governor in council of that territory which in a sense is not as important possibly as the government of a province, which government is not entitled to appoint and set the salaries of its judges.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I understand that the representation made by the hon. member and also by the hon. member for Mackenzie River and the hon. member for Yukon were a help in the formation of the new amendments here. I can only repeat what I said a moment ago, namely that the deputy judges will be set up under this new section in a way similar to that in which they are appointed under the Exchequer Court Act. They will be appointed only from time to time. It is because of the cumbersome old order in council method that this is being done. As I say, it is a step in the direction toward the independence of the courts in the Yukon.

Mr. Godin: In agreeing to all this in many ways, I do not agree that the new law states that these appointments are made from time to time. That was the query from the hon. member who spoke a moment ago. You have taken those particular words out of the act or out of former section 29. This is simply an appointment which could be an appointment for life at a salary to be fixed from time to time by the local administrative body. If the parliamentary secretary to the minister will read the former section he will find that the words "from time to time" are expressly taken out. He just said so and said that this is for the purpose of appointments from time to time. That cannot be so because those are the very words which are taken out. We had those words in the previous section but they are now taken out.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I understand that the present legislation provides for the appointment of deputy judges under certain circumstances by the governor in council. It is frequently done as a convenience to appoint a judge from the Northwest Territories to serve in the Yukon in that capacity. This amendment will make it unnecessary to use this relatively cumbersome order in council procedure every time this need arises. As I said before, this is a step toward the independence of the courts and its deals with a situation where in the past trial judges from British Columbia and Alberta have been appointed to take trials in the territories. With this amendment such an appointment would normally occur only when neither territorial judge was able to sit. The point the hon. member is making may have some validity but I fail to see how it could exist and still give them the independence that is desired by all.

Mr. Peters: In speaking of the salaries of these judges the parliamentary secretary has mentioned following the practice of the exchequer court with regard to appointments. Will they follow the practice of the exchequer court with regard to salary?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I assume that the sections of the Exchequer Court Act which deal with these appointments of temporary judges will apply here. That perhaps would not deal with the salary aspect because that is mentioned specifically in the bill here as being fixed by the governor in council. There will be special circumstances undoubtedly in the Yukon.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Seconded by my colleague, I wish to move—

Mr. Churchill: No; ask one of your colleagues to move.

Mr. McIlraith: The minister cannot move it. Let him ask one of his colleagues to do so.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That subclause (1) of clause 4 of Bill C-59 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

(1) Section 17 of the said act is amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1) but subject to subsection (3), the commissioner in council may make ordinances for the government of the territory, in relation to the preservation of game in the territory, that are applicable to and in respect of Indians and Eskimos, and ordinances made by the commissioner in council in relation to the preservation of game in the territory, unless the contrary intention appears therein, are applicable to and in respect of Indians and Eskimos."

(3) Nothing in subsection (2) shall be construed as authorizing the commissioner in council to make ordinances restricting or prohibiting Indians from hunting for food, on unoccupied crown lands, game other than game declared by the governor in council to be game in danger of becoming extinct.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could make it very clear to hon. members in the committee that all that has been done here is this. If they will look at their copy of the bill in front of them they will see that subsection (4) of clause 1 now reads "Notwithstanding subsection (1)" and there is an insert of these five words: "but subject to subsection (3)". Then under subsection (3) you have this declaration which protects the traditional rights of the Indians and Eskimos to hunt.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I was not able to follow the reading of the amendment too carefully, but in subsection (3) I understood the reference to be to Indians only, so far as hunting for game is concerned?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes, that is right.

Mr. Howard: What would be the application of this in principle to Eskimos, who are in the same class as Indians, who desire to hunt for food?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I think the hon. member has a point here. It is true that the Indians do compose the great majority of the population in the Yukon and there are only half a dozen or so Eskimos. They rarely go into that area because it is a bush area. However, I think we could meet that by adding, if the committee gives unanimous consent, the words "or Eskimos". As at present the Indians are protected in the Northwest Territories by treaty but there are no treaties in the Yukon and we put this clause in to make certain that the territorial government does not abrogate their right. I think if the house accepts that amendment unanimously I could insert the words "or Eskimos".

The Deputy Chairman: Subsection (3) as amended would read as follows:

Nothing in subsection (2) shall be construed as authorizing the commissioner in council to make ordinances restricting or prohibiting Indians or Eskimos from hunting for food, on unoccupied crown lands, game other than game declared by the governor in council to be game in danger of becoming extinct.

Is the house ready for the question on the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 4 as amended agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Next sitting of the house.

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

EXTENSION OF LEGISLATION TO JULY 31, 1963

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (for Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-4, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

Mr. John Pallett (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this bill merely extends the life of the Export and Import Permits Act for a further three years to July 31, 1963 and recognizes the replacement of the Agricultural Prices Support Act by the Agricultural Stabilization Act, 1957-58.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary certainly has been brief in moving the amending bill. I am very anxious to commend him for that, but I am not sure that he may not have overdone it a little on this occasion. However, I do believe that this is the first occasion on which he has had the honour of presenting a bill in his new capacity of parliamentary secretary and I certainly want to extend my good wishes to him on this occasion.

Export and Import Permits Act

This legislation became necessary by reason of the last war. It was first brought forward under the authority of the War Measures Act and the emergency powers legislation, and some 13 years ago, in 1947, was brought forward under an act of this house directly related to the subject matter of the Export and Import Permits Act. That legislation, in the light of changed world circumstances and experience in operating the act, was amended and the amending legislation took the form in 1954 of a wholly new act. The 1954 act is the act with which we are presently concerned and it was first enacted for a limited period of time. In 1957 a three-year extension was provided, and this bill now before us provides a further three-year extension.

I think all hon. members will agree that this type of legislation is not the type of legislation which is desirable in our parliamentary system and that, were it not necessary, it should not be brought forward. I think hon. members will also have to agree that world circumstances being what they are today there is not much alternative left but to grant an extension of this arbitrary power given to the government to control exports for certain purposes and to control imports for certain limited purposes set out in the act. However distasteful that grant of arbitrary power to the government may be—and I think it is distasteful to all hon. members in the house—it regrettably is necessary, and I think if any evidence of that were needed it is provided by the events of these last few days.

The legislation itself provides for export control of certain commodities to all areas in the world and of all the commodities to certain areas in the world. There are two types of control, commodity control and area control. The real problem, of course, is the preservation of the security of our country and the control of exports for that purpose. I hope the parliamentary secretary will say what he considers the prospects are for any change in the export controls as they are presently applied by the orders in council authorized under the act and what, if any, recent changes have been made.

I understand from the annual report covering the period up to December 31, 1959 that there were no substantial changes in that year. However, I would ask the hon. gentleman to say when he is replying in this debate whether or not there have been any changes in the export controls during the period since December 31, 1959 and, if so, the nature of those changes and the reasons for them.

In the act, the extension of which is being sought, provision is made under the terms of section 5 as follows:

[Mr. McIlraith.]

> The governor in council may establish a list of goods, to be called an import control list, including therein any article the import of which he deems it necessary to control for any of the following purposes, namely,
> (a) to ensure, in accordance with the needs of Canada, the best possible supply and distribution of an article that is scarce in world markets or is subject to governmental controls in the countries of origin or to allocation by intergovernmental arrangement;
> (b) to implement any action taken under the Agricultural Prices Support Act, the Fisheries Prices Support Act, the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act or the Agricultural Products Board Act, to support the price of the article or that has the effect of supporting the price of the article; or
> (c) to implement an intergovernmental arrangement or commitment;

The section further provides:

> Where any goods are included in the list for the purpose of ensuring supply or distribution of goods subject to allocation by intergovernmental arrangement or for the purpose of implementing an intergovernmental arrangement or commitment, a statement of the effect of a summary of the arrangement or commitment, if it has not previously been laid before parliament, shall be laid before parliament at the time the order of the governor in council including those goods in the list is laid before parliament pursuant to the Regulations Act.

It will be seen that the circumstances requiring the control of imports have changed materially since this legislation was first brought forward in 1947. At that time the major problem was the problem of the sorting of goods. There was the necessity of distributing those goods which were in short supply so as to provide an equitable sharing of the limited quantities entering the country. That problem has largely, if not entirely disappeared. I point out that this represents the granting of a power, and that the authority to establish import controls has not been restricted in the amending bill. Indeed, I am wondering if there is still any need for the power granted in section 5 (a) of the act and whether or not there are any goods on the import control list under the provisions of that subsection.

Subsection (b), of course, has to do with the control of the import of articles in order to make the government's price support legislation, in one form or another, workable. The need for that power has probably increased during the years. For my part I should like to have the opportunity to examine this question to find out just how extensive a use has been made of the powers granted under subsection (b) of section 5 and I hope the parliamentary secretary will give us all the information he has on that point when he replies.

Section (c) has to do with intergovernmental arrangements or commitments. Again, I wish the parliamentary secretary would explain what intergovernmental arrangements or commitments are still in existence at this date.

That brings me to a suggestion. The bill which is now before us is a very short and simple bill. It simply changes the expiry date of the act from July 31, 1960 to July 31, 1963, and it will be seen that according to a reasonably strict interpretation of the rules it would be impossible, or very difficult, for us to get the statistical and factual information which would be desirable during consideration of this measure by the committee of the whole. I am wondering if the parliamentary secretary would consider referring this measure to the banking and commerce committee in order that we might obtain statistical information on the points I have mentioned as well as other related points. I believe the whole matter would only require one sitting of the committee—I venture that opinion—during which time the information I have in mind could be made available. I think it is important that this should be done, because this is one of those pieces of legislation which are altogether unsound theoretically but which are, unfortunately, necessary. It is, therefore, the type of legislation which should be subject to detailed examination with a view to determining precisely what use is being made of it, and what present need exists for the powers granted. It is clear there is a need for the export control authority, but it is not so clear that the legislation is needed in respect of the import control authority.

I therefore conclude my remarks with a request that the parliamentary secretary give all the information he can, and that he consider referring the bill to the banking and commerce committee for consideration.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I listened with a good deal of interest to the comments of the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith). I had expected the parliamentary secretary in introducing the bill at this stage to give us a report on the operations of the Export and Import Permits Act, especially as it has been applied in more recent days, in order that we might more adequately be able to decide whether we ought to support the amendment to extend the operation of the act. However, our group intends to support the extension.

I endorse the recommendation made by the hon. member for Ottawa West that this bill be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce in order that we may undertake, possibly for the first time in the history of the act, a review of the operations of this legislation. I cannot agree with the hon. member when he expresses regret for the necessity of the existence of the legislation. I am not too afraid of the government in announcing the intentions of the act. I am more afraid of the influence on the Canadian economy and security of the activities of individuals who operate primarily with a profit motive in mind than I am of arbitrary decisions by the minister who is admittedly granted much authority in the operation of this act.

We in this group regard this type of legislation as most desirable. It could be very useful as a method of regulating international trade, a method far in advance of the present method by means of tariffs. We believe that under this act, especially if it were expanded, the government could do a lot to protect not only the security interests of the nation but the economic interests of Canadian enterprise and the interests of producers and workers.

Under the act export licenses may be issued on arms and ammunitions provided they will not be potentially used against Canadians in any possible area of conflict. I wish the parliamentary secretary would report on what permits were granted within the last year for the export of arms and munitions and whether any have been issued to Central America, other Latin American countries and the Union of South Africa. I believe that report would interest all Canadians. This provision is useful in ensuring that there will be an adequate supply in Canada of items that may be desired elsewhere but that might otherwise be exported out of Canada leaving Canadians without the necessary supply.

According to the minister's annual report the export permit section is used extensively. In 1958 there were 8,199 export permits issued and 5,767 in 1959. In 1958 there were 700 applications refused, cancelled or withdrawn. Would the minister give an explanation as to what commodities the government decided against permitting to be exported under license.

The hon. member for Ottawa West placed on the record reasons for which the minister may refuse to grant import licenses, mentioning commodities in scarce world supply, refusal in order to protect agriculture in Canada and the intent of the Agricultural Stabilization Act and refusal because of arrangements existing with other governments.

I notice that the act is used for a wide range of commodities such as butter, cheddar cheese, butter fat, dry skim milk powder, turkeys and, until recently, tin. An import permit was needed if tin came from certain specified areas of the world. I believe this to be an indication of relaxing tariff barriers which should be welcome only where an absence of export or import permits is a handicap to the development of international trade. We would like to see the act used more extensively than at present for the protection of Canadian enterprise. We hope the government will decide it is a more useful up to date system of regulating exports and imports than is our present outmoded tariff arrangement.

If the Canadian economy must import certain commodities I see no reason why the consumer should pay a tariff of any kind on the imported commodities. By wise use of this act in expanded form we could eventually abolish the tariff structure which presently controls exports and imports. The hon. member for Ottawa West is afraid of arrogance on the part of the bureaucracy or unwise decisions on the part of the government. I would recommend that the act be amended to allow an appeal by any individual or concern that feels that some civil servant or the minister has misused his authority and is not living up to the intent of the act. If there were an appeal procedure I believe the objection raised by the hon. member for Ottawa West concerning the need for the existence of the act would lose its entire validity.

Mr. Speaker: I think I should inform the house that if the parliamentary secretary speaks now he will close the debate. I do so with a comment, however, because standing order 37 refers in express terms only to the hon. member who has moved a substantive motion. The parliamentary secretary did not move the motion. It was moved by the minister and the minister spoke as the first speaker but I believe that one of my predecessors has assumed that a parliamentary secretary taking part in debate in the place of his minister does so to all intents as though he were the mover and would be considered as such for the purpose of closing the debate.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is to be regarded as the embodiment of soul and body.

Mr. Speaker: Some kind of transubstantiation.

Mr. John Pallett (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): That is rather ethereal language for a somewhat material matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The theological reference was Mr. Speaker's, not mine.

Mr. Pallett: I appreciate very much the suggestions made by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier). Some of the questions they asked were rather detailed, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure we can provide answers in committee. The officials of the department are here and the answers to the technical questions that have been asked may be available in committee.

As to the suggestion of the hon. member for Ottawa West that the matter be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce, this is a fairly minor amendment to the act rather than a substantial one. It extends the term of the operation of the act; it is not a general amendment reviewing the whole Export and Import Permits Act. It asks for an extension for three years of the work that has been going on under the act so far. I would suggest to the hon. member and to the house that the answers to the questions that he has may be obtained in committee of the whole house, and for that reason it really does not require a reference of this bill to the standing committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Flynn in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. McIlraith: What changes, if any, have been made in the export control regulations since the end of December, 1959; that is, have any countries been added to the area of control, and have any commodities been added to the list of prohibited goods, or goods for which a permit is required?

Mr. Pallett: Since December 31?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, since the annual report required under the act was presented?

Mr. Pallett: In answer to the hon. member's question, I would refer him to P.C.-1960/35, January 12, 1960, which has the essence of adding to the export control list pork and pork products, all destinations including the United States. That is the only regulation that has been passed since December 31, 1959.

Mr. McIlraith: What was the reason for adding that export control?

Mr. Pallett: I am advised it is an intergovernmental arrangement between Canada and the United States with respect to those products.

Mr. Regier: Is an export permit necessary for the export of arms or munitions to, say, the Dominican Republic, Cuba, Paraguay, the United Arab Republic or the Union of South Africa?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is it for all countries outside of the commonwealth?

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, an export permit is required for exports of arms to all countries except the United States.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): For the commonwealth, too?

Mr. Pallett: Yes.

Mr. Regier: Does this also include the Union of South Africa?

Mr. Pallett: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Regier: How does the government undertake to ensure that arms exported to the United States will not be immediately taken out of the United States and sent to the Dominican Republic, or to Cuba, or to other areas of the world?

Mr. Pallett: There are working arrangements between governments of friendly countries that before arms may be transshipped they obtain the permission of the country of origin of the arms, and this has apparently worked satisfactorily in the past.

Mr. Regier: To what countries have we issued permits within the past year or, in this year 1960, for the export of arms or munitions?

Mr. Pallett: We did not anticipate a question of that nature. This amendment implements action taken under the Agricultural Stabilization Act, and so forth.

Mr. Robichaud: Did you anticipate any questions at all?

Mr. Pallett: If the hon. member will bear with me I will endeavour to see that the answer is given when the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce are up for discussion, but it will take some time to obtain it.

Mr. Regier: Can the sponsor of the bill supply us with the reason why most of the refusals of export permits were given last year? There were 167 of them. What did most of those goods consist of?

Mr. Pallett: I can tell the hon. member that most of them were strategic goods, without particularizing as to the product or the country to which they were going. They were of that general nature.

Mr. Regier: I notice that under imports there is no listing of the number of import permit applications that were turned down, not granted by the government. Was there not a single case in 1959 or 1958 where an import permit was turned down by the government?

Mr. Pallett: My recollection, Mr. Chairman, is that there were no import applications made in 1959 which fell into the categories requiring them to be turned down. However, if I find that my recollection is incorrect I will certainly have it clarified when the estimates of the department are under consideration.

Mr. Winch: I have a question here. The hon. member spoke about the export of strategic goods. May I ask whether there is any limitation on the export from Canada of almost any kind of goods, military or otherwise, to the state of Israel?

Mr. Pallett: The answer I gave to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam concerning exports to other countries applies to the export of arms to Israel. The only country to which exports may be made without a permit is the United States.

Mr. Winch: May I ask whether there is a differentiation in the export of strategic goods to the state of Israel? Are there any limitations on requests from Israel concerning things of a military nature?

Mr. Pallett: An application for an export permit for military goods is always considered in the light of the whole world picture existing at the time the application is made. There can be no offhand answer with respect to any one country at any one particular time because the decision is made after consideration of the world situation prevailing at the time the application is made.

Mr. Winch: Did I understand the minister to state that the only place there is no restriction applied to exports from Canada is to the United States, otherwise there is?

Mr. Pallett: That is right, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Winch: May I ask why the United States? Did I understand you to say that it is only between Canada and the United States that there is nothing with regard to the export of strategic goods? Does that mean that the United Kingdom and the commonwealth—you said the United States?

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member was talking about arms. You mentioned strategic materials, and I am talking about arms.

Mr. Winch: All right, arms; are you saying now that the only place to which we can export strategic goods, without a permit is the United States? I thought we were a member of the commonwealth? I am talking now about arms and ammunition. Your statement was, only to the United States, and do you mean that you cannot export to any part of the commonwealth?

Mr. Pallett: No, we can export, Mr. Chairman, but we cannot export without a permit.

Mr. Winch: Except to the United States.

Mr. Pallett: In the matter of arms, that is correct; there are certain countries that are excepted on other materials but as to arms, your supposition is correct.

Mr. Winch: I am sorry, but I want to get this quite correct. You say without a permit we can export to the United States but without a permit we cannot export to any part of the commonwealth, is that correct?

Mr. Pallett: Your information is correct.

Mr. Winch: What is the basis of this policy whereby Canada can export arms and ammunition without a permit to the United States but cannot do so to parts of the commonwealth, the United Kingdom and Australia? We can export without a permit to the United States, but we have to have a permit to export arms and ammunition to the members of the commonwealth. This is my understanding and, if so, why? It is a most extraordinary situation.

Mr. Pallett: It is a question of effective control, Mr. Chairman. The control of the ultimate destination of the arms is much easier on shipments to the United States because there is no offshore loading. The material is not going on a boat and then being re-routed somewhere else. To prevent the arms setting out for one destination and then turning up in another. This is a question of effective control, and this is the reason the only exception made is on goods destined to the United States.

Mr. Winch: I am sorry, but do I still understand that as a means of effective control in Canada, arms and ammunition can only be exported to the United States without a permit and not to the United Kingdom and other commonwealth countries?

Mr. Pallett: Private exporters cannot export arms and ammunition to countries other than the United States without a permit.

Mr. McIlraith: Is the situation not a little different? The export control is worked in two different ways. It is control of the export of certain commodities from Canada to any destination and the export of any commodity to certain destinations; that is the way it was explained on a previous occasion, and I think it is accurate. The export of arms to the United States without a permit is related to the fact that they are not loaded on ships and, therefore, are not so easily diverted en route. Then there is export control in the United States of strategic material and, under authority granted in the act for intergovernmental arrangement, there is a kind of arrangement which prevents the strategic goods which went from Canada to the United States from going from the United States to an ultimate destination that is unsatisfactory to us. I think that is more the nature of the situation. Would the parliamentary secretary clarify that?

Mr. Pallett: I believe the hon. member for Ottawa West has said exactly what I said, only much better.

Mr. McIlraith: It is not quite as simple as that. This is a simple amending bill, but it is very important. It extends the term of a piece of legislation which, by itself, expires on July 31, 1960 and that legislation, I think all hon. members agree, is not legislation that is desirable, as a matter of theory, because it does give the government arbitrary powers.

Now, the information that we would like to get—

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it being five o'clock it is my duty, according to section 3 of standing order 15, to leave the chair in order to permit the house to proceed with the consideration of private and public bills.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentlemen who compose the team would prefer that we continue with the measure we were discussing?

Mr. Howard: Perhaps the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) should direct his question to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave). Certainly he will find us in complete agreement with his suggestion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do so. I shall ask a second time if we could not continue with the bill we were discussing. It was suggested I ask the hon. member for Halifax.

Mr. McCleave: I have been under tremendous pressures here, Mr. Chairman. If there is only one person here who is going to stand up for these people, it will have to be me. I cannot agree.

ANNA MARGARET LAURIE CANNON STEVENSON

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-45, for the relief of Anna Margaret Laurie Cannon Stevenson—Mr. McCleave—Mr. Rea in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we take these 50 divorce bills in one item?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: I should like to make some comment on Bill No. SD-45.

The Deputy Chairman: Bill No. SD-45.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Howard: In preparing for the discussion of this particular bill I have been comparing it with other particular bills and I find a marked difference in the material and evidence presented before the committee of the other place. I think the difference is sufficient to allow for a rather exhaustive examination of some of the points mentioned in that evidence and perhaps some inquiry on the part of the committee here as to the facts or some of the things which I intend to relate. But first, perhaps, before we get into that phase of it, I should properly establish some of the things which are mentioned in the petition itself. One is that the marriage took place on September 6, 1949 between the petitioner and the respondent and that it took place in the city of Montreal. The petition also indicates that there is a judgment of the superior court of the province of Quebec given on December 10, 1952 with respect to separation as to bed and board but that there was no provision for alimentary allowance to the wife and also that there are no children born of this particular marriage. The petition indicates that adultery is alleged to have taken place on December 31, 1953 and on January 1 and January 2, 1954, some six years or seven years ago.

In attempting to relate the evidence in the order in which it appears to these particular parts in the petition perhaps we could deal first with the question of the marriage. The petitioner was called and sworn and was asked a number of questions by the clerk of the committee as to her name, age, occupation, place of residence, and so on. Then following these preliminary matters these questions were asked:

Q. Are you married? And if so, to whom?
A. I am married to—

Here she gives the name of her husband or the respondent.

Q. When were you married?
A. On September 6, 1949.
Q. Where?
A. In Montreal.

Then she is asked by whom and to what church her husband belongs and then we find the following questions:

Q. I show you a document. Do you recognize it?
A. Yes, I do.
Q. What is it?
A. My marriage certificate.
Q. Are the names and dates correct?
A. Yes.

Then the marriage certificate is filed and marked as exhibit No. 1. She is then shown a photograph which was taken on their wedding day or which she indicates was taken on their wedding day. This photograph is identified and filed as exhibit No. 2.

The references to separation may be of some interest to the committee because in the evidence at the point where separation is referred to—that is separation as to bed and board—there is also testimony as to the attitude of the husband toward his wife during the period of time they lived together or cohabited as man and wife. Incidentally, I may say, this was only a period of about two months. Questions then are asked.

Unfortunately, while Mr. Lieff, Q.C. of the city of Ottawa appeared as counsel for the petitioner, I do not find in the direct examination of the petitioner any reference or any passage where Mr. Lieff undertakes any questioning. It is recorded in the evidence that the clerk of the committee asked all these questions about where the husband was born and his occupation, about separation and so on, which normally, I understand, fall to the lot of the counsel who appears for the petitioner. I would therefore assume that this item has inadvertently been left out of the evidence and that Mr. Lieff does enter the picture in the questioning here at some stage, probably right after the identification of the photograph, although this fact is not indicated in the minutes.

The questioning then proceeded, as found on page 10. As I say, I think it would have been by Mr. Lieff, counsel for the petitioner, although the record does not show it.

Q. Did you live with him as man and wife?
A. Yes.
Q. Are there any children born of the marriage?
A. No.
Q. Until when did you live with him?
A. The end of October, 1949.

This is the reference as to the fact that they lived together or cohabited as man and wife for a very short period of time, namely from September 6, 1949 to the end of October, 1959 or a period somewhat less than two months. Then the questioning continues:

Q. Did you go to the superior court of the province of Quebec to get a separation?
A. Yes.
Q. Did you get a separation?
A. Yes.
Q. What sort of life did you have with him prior to that?
A. It was an impossible life because he changed after we were married. He had been a gentle, kind person, but he suddenly became very argumentative and it turned into physical abuse and he hit me several times. I was a widow with children and they were frightened of him. He abused them.
Q. In your action in the superior court did you complain about this physical violence?
A. Yes.

Then there is some questioning about the judgment of the court, alimony and so on. Questions are also asked about collusion, condonation and whether the petitioner entered into any of these arrangements to allow for this divorce to be granted or to allow for the evidence to be presented, or whether she condoned the adultery complained of. These again are questions which, according to the evidence, were asked by the clerk of the committee but which I rather expect Mr. Lieff would be asking. The following questions were asked:

Q. Is there any agreement or understanding between you and him to get this divorce?
A. No.
Q. Have you schemed about the adultery or connived at it or arranged to bring it about?
A. No.
Q. Do you know—

Here he gives the name of the corespondent and the answers is no. The questioning continues:

Q. Were you with your husband on December 31, 1953 and on January 1, and January 2, 1954?
A. No.
Q. Have you lived with your husband as man and wife since the separation?
A. No.
Q. Has he supported you since the separation?
A. No.
Q. Are you working?

She says that she is. Then there are questions about having sufficient for her needs and general questions of that nature. Then we find the following:

Q. Is there any possibility or hope of reconciliation between you?
A. No, that is impossible.
Q. Have you forgiven him for the adultery you complain about in paragraph 7 of the petition?
A. No.
Q. Would you take him back under any circumstances?
A. No.
Q. Did you do what you could to make a success of the marriage?
A. Yes.
Q. How long had you known him prior to the marriage?
A. A year.

Then the chairman of the subcommittee, Senator Cameron, asks:

Q. Does this mean you lived with him less than three months?
A. Yes.

There is one thought I might express here. As I understand the law as it applies, if a wife is deserted and the desertion continues for a period of more than two years then she may sue for divorce stating as her domicile the place where she lives rather than the place where her husband lives. In this particular instance the petition is signed at Islington, Ontario, dated October 6, 1959. She indicates that she is living in the province of Ontario and that they have been separated since the end of October 1949, and that there has been a so-called legal separation, a separation from bed and board, from the superior court of the province of Quebec which was granted on December 10, 1952.

It would appear that perhaps those responsible for developing any alterations to our divorce law, if any course is taken with respect to these particular divorce cases arising from Quebec, might well consider—

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member is now clearly in the realm of hypothetical and most unlikely developments. He is not arguing the case in issue.

Mr. Howard: If I might speak to the point of order, I would agree at first hand that it is not relevant to the case; but I do not agree that I am talking of hypothetical and most unlikely developments. I am merely suggesting that this would be a course of action for those who draft our laws to take in order that a woman in these circumstances might sue for divorce under her own domicile, in this case Ontario, instead of coming here with a petition. That concludes my comments on the point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: I think the hon. member mentioned that his remarks were not relevant to the bill. Therefore I would ask him to come back to Bill No. SD-45.

Mr. Howard: Yes, Mr. Chairman. In fact, when the hon. member for Halifax rose I was within a few words of completing my comments in that regard.

Testimony is given with respect to the allegation of adultery. It is not given by those who are classified as investigators and who make a practice of earning their living in this way because of unfortunate arrangements or strained difficulties between two people. It is testimony given by a man and woman who are man and wife, and who give in evidence that they witnessed certain things which occurred some six or seven years ago, on New Year's Eve, December 31, 1953 and on January 1 and 2, 1954.

Before we launch into considering this particular evidence I would like to express this thought, and perhaps the members of the committee can think about this and we might be able to come back to it and have some expression of opinion about it. Before I get into the evidence I may say in a general way that nowhere in the evidence, at least that I can find, is there any indication as to how the petitioner, how the lawyer, Mr. Lieff, if he did, or how anybody else in 1959—the petition is signed on October 6, 1959—had the knowledge that adultery existed some six or seven years before. Nowhere in the evidence, and I think this is a failure in it, can we find any indication as to why it took six or seven years for this particular circumstance, which it is alleged took place on New Year's Eve of 1953 and on January 1 and 2 of 1954, to come to light.

I think this should have been inquired into before the bill reached this particular stage. I think it should have been properly gone into in the committee of the other place in order that this unknown quantity be cleared up. There certainly is the question of delay in presenting this petition. If the petitioner knew some six or seven years ago that this incident took place, there appears to be a six or seven-year delay before filing her petition for divorce. If she did not know, then I think one is entitled to clear that question up and inquire as to when and under what circumstances it came to light.

As I say, I mention that because it is a point which we can go into later in order to clear up the question in my mind as well as perhaps in the minds of other members of this committee.

In any event, a gentleman who is not classed as an investigator, who describes himself as a salesman, is called to give evidence. His wife also appears to have the sedentary occupation of housewife. This gentleman, Mr. McDonough, is called and sworn and questioned by Mr. Lieff. Starting at page 11 the following questions by Mr. Lieff are recorded:

Q. Did you receive a subpoena to attend this hearing?
A. I did.
Q. Did you receive expense money—conduct money?
A. I did.
Q. I show you a photograph, which is exhibit 2. Can you identify the person of whom that is a likeness?
A. Yes, that is—

Then he gives the name of the respondent.

Q. Do you remember New Year's Eve, December 31, 1953, and January 1 and January 2, 1954?
A. I do.

I would think he has an exceptionally good memory, Mr. Chairman, unless there were a sufficient amount of memory searching to come up with these particular facts and be so positive about them. I continue:

Q. Do you remember where you were on those days?
A. Yes, we were at Rustic motel, in the province of Quebec.
Q. When you say "We", whom do you mean?
A. My wife and I and a few other couples were there over the January week end.
Q. You and your wife and a few other couples spent the holiday week end there?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you know where—

—giving the surname of the respondent—

—was during the same week end?
A. Yes, he was with us.
Q. Was he alone?
A. No.
Q. Do you know who accompanied him?
A. Yes.
Q. Who?
A. A girl by the name of—

Then he gives the name of the corespondent. I would point out that up to this time at no place in the evidence is there any identification of this particular girl, the corespondent. Nobody says they know her, and in subsequent questioning no one asks the question: how do you know this was the name of the girl? Nowhere is it stated in the evidence that Mr. McDonough knew the girl, or asked her her name in order to find out what it was. It is just given as a statement of fact. This is a strange situation. I am not suggesting that Mr. McDonough did not know what her name was. I am only suggesting it is strange that it does not appear in the evidence how he came to know what her name was. In every case I can recall of this nature the investigators ask the name of the woman involved. Invariably they ask: what is your name? They have to know the name in order to serve the person concerned with papers, and so they can give the assurance that everything is aboveboard and that no skulduggery has taken place. In this particular instance, however, the name is given as a bald statement of fact and no elucidation follows. This, to my mind, represents a failing in the method which was used to obtain evidence before the committee of the other place.

The questions by the clerk of the committee continued:

Q. How many nights did you sleep there?
A. Three.
Q. Do you know where—slept on those nights?
A. I sure do.
Q. Where?
A. Right next door to us.
Q. What was the situation in that room?
A. Well, he was with this—

Then he gives the name—the name of the corespondent—as a bald statement of fact without any indication how he knew what her name was. That, I think, represents a failure in presenting the evidence in the proper fashion so that it can be properly assessed by the committee of the whole house here. This, coupled with a memory of six or seven years ago as proof of adultery, makes the situation even more strange. The questioning continues as follows:

Q. Were you in the room—that room?
A. Yes, we were.
Q. At what hour?
A. We were there in the morning.
Q. Each morning? Which morning.
A. New Year's morning.
Q. What did you see there?
A. Freddie.
Q. Freddie who?
A. Freddie——and this girl Ginette.
Q. How were they disposed?
A. They were dressed in pyjamas.
Q. Both of them?
A. Yes.

Q. How many beds were in the room?
A. Just one.
Q. Is there any doubt in your mind that they slept together those three nights?
A. None whatsoever.
Q. Please look at the petitioner. Is she the woman you described as Ginette——?
A. No, she is not.

I do not think the use of the name Freddie and the name Ginette here in these circumstances would amount to identification. I should say that Mr. McDonough does point out later that he knows the corespondent, that she is an acquaintance of his, but in no case does he indicate how close an acquaintance. Then in an incidental way he explains how he remembers those particular dates six or seven years ago:

Q. By the way, how do you remember those dates so well?
A. Well, because of what went on. Actually it was a bit of a surprise and actually that was the last week end we spent there.

I am not going to read any assumption into that answer, although a number of assumptions might be made concerning how he remembered that date so well. The questioning continues:

By Senator Bradley:
Q. And it was New Year's Eve?
A. Yes.
By the Chairman (Senator Cameron):
Q. Was he a friend of yours?
A. No, not using the word "friend", no.
By Senator Bradley:
Q. An acquaintance?
A. Yes.

Having run through Mr. McDonough's evidence, I will point out that, of course, he is not a professional investigator who knows exactly what sort of questions to ask. He does not give a complete blow by blow account of the things he noticed; the colour of the pyjamas they were dressed in, whether they were wearing black or brown shoes and so on. He simply gives an account of what happened in answer to questions asked by Mr. Lieff. Mr. Lieff is certainly no stranger to proceedings of this kind. He has had a considerable amount of experience in appearing before the committee of the other place.

I think it was Mr. Lieff's duty and responsibility to have made more specific inquiries about how Mr. McDonough remembers so well those dates some six or seven years ago, and how he knew the name of the corespondent. I think Mr. Lieff was somewhat lax in failing to elicit all the information which it is desirable to have before this committee and the committee of the other place. He should have examined carefully the reasons why this person knew what this girl's name was. If it had come out in evidence that the respondent and the corespondent had stayed at this Rustic motel for three days and made it known publicly that they were not man and wife then, perhaps, there would have been sufficient evidence for Mr. McDonough to have known that the name of the girl was not the same as the name of the petitioner.

Because he was acquainted with the respondent he must have known he had a wife. He must have known the woman with him at the party was not his wife. He may have been introduced to her as Ginette—. Perhaps this occurred, I have no idea. Mr. Lieff should have cleared that up unless he has become used to presenting evidence in a certain way.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am obliged to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I intend to intervene briefly in this debate because, as I pointed out before and must point out again, when cases are under discussion in this committee the parties involved will have one defender at least, and possibly other defenders, against remarks made against them. I will refer only to the hon. member's remarks about Mr. Lieff. If there has been any question about the way Mr. Lieff carried out his duties in this case I know that the hon. members of the committee of the other place would have been very quick to find such fault with him and to bring him rapidly to judicial heel.

In reading this case any fair-minded man would, I think, agree with me that it was properly handled by Mr. Lieff and that no aspersion can be cast upon this always eminent counsel.

Mr. Crestohl: I wish to join with the hon. member for Halifax in his expression of protest. The business of character assassination in some quarters by some men is taken altogether too lightly.

Mr. Howard: Why not name names?

Mr. Crestohl: Yes, I intend to. I simply do not remember the constituency which the hon. gentleman who interrupts represents. That is the only reason I have not referred to him.

Mr. McCleave: Skeena.

Mr. Crestohl: Thank you. The member for Skeena too lightly attempts to assassinate characters which is a despicable course of action especially when the person about whom he is talking is not present in the house to defend himself. The hon. member has now cast an aspersion on one of the most reputable members of the bar who has practised his profession for some 35 years and has considerable experience in appearing before the committee of the other place. There has never been the slightest question about the character of Mr. Lieff nor has there been any suggestion about his having been lax. No fair-minded person could possibly think that. One is led to wonder what the hon. member could possibly have meant when he said that Mr. Lieff was lax in his duties. This distinguished counsel has always performed his duties in an outstanding manner. He is an eminent counsel. If there was any question about laxity or about not bringing out all the facts the committee of the other place the membership of which includes many eminent lawyers who are familiar with what should and should not be brought out in these cases, would have hastened to make sure that all the facts were adduced. Counsel sometimes will unintentionally overlook bringing out the full facts in a hearing but the bench, the court or the members of the committee of the other place always take the trouble to bring out anything which counsel may have inadvertently overlooked.

I rise in protest against the light way in which attempts are being made to reflect upon the characters of honourable men who over the years have earned the reputation of being honourable. I do not object to the hon. member for Skeena dealing with the matter in hand but in order to support the position he has taken he should not find it necessary to indulge in specious character assassinations.

Mr. Howard: I do not raise a point of order but I suppose one could refer to other character assassinations that have taken place. Both hon. members who have spoken have been guilty of an assassination of my character, the latter hon. gentleman in more drastic terms. I have never taken advantage of being in parliament to say anything about anyone. Anything I have said about Mr. Lieff I am prepared to say not only inside the house where he cannot defend himself but outside the house as well where we meet on equal terms. I say again I think Mr. Lieff was lax and I will go further and say if he was not then the hon. members of the committee of the other place were lax and I know I will be called to order for casting aspersions on them.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member cannot reflect on the conduct of hon. members of the other place.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps I may be permitted to do so outside this chamber.

Mr. Crestohl: Yes, try it.

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend says, "Try it."

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Howard: In all these cases where witnesses are called to prove allegations of adultery invariably evidence is given by the witness concerning as to how he came to know the name of the corespondent. There was evidence of a detective rifling through a woman's purse to find out what her name was.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I think the hon. member should address the case in particular and not make general references.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member raised other problems.

Mr. Crestohl: No, I referred to this particular case.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Skeena must surely know that he is required to stick to Bill No. SD-45 and not discuss general procedures.

Mr. Howard: Thank you for your kind reference to my knowledge although I think you exaggerate. I am referring to the procedure in other cases to compare it to this case. If it is not necessary to have an indication as to how an individual came to know what the name of the corespondent was I am entitled to assume that Mr. Lieff was lax in not drawing that point to its full conclusion. It is not a question of character assassination of Mr. Lieff or any other counsel who appear before the committee of the other place in these cases. Because of the frustration of other hon. members they are venting their spleen in angry words directed at me and the hon. member for Timiskaming. The allegations made by the hon. member for Halifax and the hon. member for Cartier in this instance are not true.

Mr. McCleave: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, since I have been brought into this again—

Mr. Howard: You brought yourself into it.

Mr. McCleave: My remarks in the past have always been that I will protect people from unfair remarks made against them when they are not here to defend themselves. It will be my purpose in this debate to see that no hon. member shields himself behind privilege to defame people outside this chamber and I will continue to follow that course.

Mr. Howard: That is a commendable attitude. I believe no person outside this house has been wronged. I do not think I have wronged Mr. Lieff in any way. I have not and never will use the curtain of privilege of this parliament in speaking about him or anyone. I will say to him outside the house anything that I have said in this chamber. If the hon. member for Halifax feels that anyone has been wronged he is adopting a commendable attitude in standing on his feet and making comments in their defence. I do not think he should use words like "character assassin" or cast aspersions on other hon. members, as the hon. member for Halifax has done on a number of occasions.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. This matter has been carried far enough. I am going to ask the hon. member to come back to Bill No. SD-45.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps at this stage the hon. member for Halifax with his vast knowledge, understanding and experience before the bar as a lawyer and his experience as chairman of this committee for a number of years in dealing with these cases, could clear up for me what might be a difficulty or a problem. Does he not think that it would be necessary to give in evidence the manner in which the person came to know the name of another person? For instance, in this case, does he not think it is desirous to have in evidence something which would indicate how the witness came to know the name of the co-respondent?

Mr. McCleave: I would be glad to answer that question, Mr. Chairman. Up to that point in the argument where my hon. friend was reading from the evidence I thought he made a fair case one way, that such a question should be asked. In looking it up I can see where a person might take a different interpretation from the evidence. For instance, on page 11, the husband, the witness, is asked this question:

> Q. I show you a photograph, which is exhibit 2. Can you identify the person of whom that is a likeness?
> A. Yes, that is Freddie—

And so forth. It seemed to me, in reading that, instead of giving the more proper name of Frederick, the witness, Mr. McDonough, indicated that he knew this Freddie quite well, and that was the explanation. A few lines further down Mr. McDonough says:

> My wife and I and a few other couples were there over the January week end.

I think an inference can be drawn from that. My hon. friend has drawn an inference, but there is another inference possible, namely that they attended a sort of joint venture. These were the thoughts that came to my mind and they undoubtedly came to the minds of the people who heard the case in the other place, and therefore they did not go into the matters that my hon. friend has brought out.

Mr. Howard: I am glad the hon. member has elucidated it in that way. These are the thoughts that went through my mind, and the inference could also be drawn that the witness indicated that this chap was an acquaintance of his, and that is how he came to know this person's name. This is an inference that can be drawn from the evidence; but we can infer other things, if this were a joint venture and the couples went up there for the week end. One could very well draw an unkind inference, perhaps, which I would not want to do, as to the relationship between any two of the other couples, and so on. But I still pose this question to the hon. member for Halifax, which I hope he will be able to clear up. Does he not think it would be better to have direct evidence, instead of having to draw an inference, as to how this individual, the husband, who appears as a witness, came to know this particular person's name?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, one is always faced with a difficulty when one examines a printed record rather than seeing the temper of the witness. As far as the printed record is concerned, I think my hon. friend is right. If the witness gave a good appearance before the Senate and even were he to pick up the photograph and identify it, whether it was done in an offhand manner or in a studied manner, the atmosphere at a trial does have its effect in determining whether you have an honest witness before you or one whom you have to check pretty closely. I think that on reading the evidence here of both Mr. and Mrs. McDonough one has to come to the conclusion that obviously the people who heard the case were satisfied they had two honest and reliable witnesses before them.

Mr. Howard: If I may deal with the apparent honesty of the witnesses, I have no way of questioning it whatsoever; I merely inquired of the hon. member, and he has answered in the affirmative, whether, in reading the evidence, it would be better to have this cleared up, and the hon. member for Halifax has agreed. I appreciate very much that he has agreed with me that Mr. Lieff was a bit lax in his duties in questioning—

Mr. McCleave: I did not say that.

Mr. Howard: No; I did, and this is precisely where these questions and answers lead us. This is exactly what I was getting at in the first place. I say it now, and I will say it outside the house, Mr. Lieff was a bit lax. I used that word before; I use it now, and this is precisely what I was getting at. If this stirs up the blood pressure of the hon. member for Cartier and Sir Galahad from Halifax, I still say that Mr. Lieff was lax in his responsibility in not drawing this out in the discussion so that this information will be brought out in a direct way in future cases.

May I carry on with the evidence? Following the evidence of Mr. McDonough, a witness on behalf of the petitioner is recalled and asked some questions by Senator Cameron as follows:

Q. Is Mr. McDonough, the witness who has just testified, related to you?
A. No.
Q. Is he related to Mr.—?
A. No.

This is a new venture in evidence in these matters as far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, but I assume this may have been done to clear up any doubt in the minds of the members of the committee of the other place as to the weight they should give to the evidence of Mr. McDonough. Perhaps the hon. member for Halifax will clear this up for me if I relate the assumption and ask him whether it is correct or not. I would assume that if the witness, Mr. McDonough, was related to the petitioner or to the respondent it would affect matters. Would this, not because of the inference that might be drawn by a favourable witness, if such a relationship did exist between Mr. McDonough and either the petitioner or the respondent, affect in any way the evidence? Is it possible for a relative to appear as a witness?

Mr. McCleave: I think the answer to that is not as great weight is attached. If there was any doubt as to Mr. McDonough's evidence there might have been more cross-examination of him or more cross-examination of his wife. This is quite normal judicial practice to help determine how much weight should be given to a particular witness. The witness in this case answered that he was not a relative and the court did not proceed with any further cross-examination of Mr. McDonough.

Mr. Howard: Following that, with respect to the evidence in support of the petitioner, Mrs. McDonough, the wife of the person who was the last witness, appeared. On page 12 she gives evidence with respect to the circumstances. Mr. Lieff asks these questions:

Q. Do you know Mr. John McDonough, the last witness?
A. He is my husband.
Q. Please look at this picture, exhibit 2. Can you identify the person there?
A. Yes.
Q. Who is it?
A. Freddie.

Then she gives the name of the respondent. The next question is:

Q. Would that be—

Then, Mr. Lieff gives the full and correct name of the respondent, and her answer is in the affirmative, giving the same name. Then, these questions are asked:

Q. Do you remember New Year's eve, December 31, 1953?
A. Yes, I do.
Q. And January 1st and 2nd, 1954?
A. Yes.
Q. How do you happen to remember these dates?
A. It was the New Year's week end. There were five couples up north on that week end.
Q. Where did you stay?
A. At the Rustic inn.
Q. Do you know where the others stayed?
A. They all stayed at the Rustic inn.
Q. Where was—

Then, he gives the name of the respondent.

A. He had the room next to ours.
Q. Were you in that room?
A. Yes.
Q. How many beds were in that room?
A. One.
Q. Do you know where he slept?
A. In the bed.

She is assuming he did, I am quite sure of that, in view of the circumstances and the evidence she gives later. It is rather a direct statement to say that he did sleep in the bed.

Q. In that room?
A. Yes.
Q. Did he sleep alone?
A. No, someone was with him.

Again we come to the same point we dealt with earlier, Mr. Chairman.

Q. Who was that?

Then she gives the name of the corespondent. I have the same remarks to make with respect to Mr. Lieff's laxity in questioning this witness as I did in connection with the preceding witness, a laxity incidentally, with which I believe the hon. member for Halifax, agrees.

Mr. McCleave: No, I would not like that to go unchallenged on the record. I definitely disagree.

Mr. Howard: I have not been in attendance at one of these divorce proceedings in the other place, but I assume that all the witnesses are excluded from the hearing, and each new witness is brought in as he is needed. This is the normal procedure in a court of law. I think Mr. Lieff, in his initial questioning of Mr. McDonough, brought out how Mr. McDonough happened to know the corespondent's name. Mrs. McDonough, who had not heard the evidence given previously by her husband, should have clarified that point and explained how she knew this particular girl's name. Then, there is further questioning:

Q. Were you in that room more than once?
A. Yes, every morning.

It is a very slight point, but there is some difference between her evidence and that of her husband. When Mr. Lieff asked Mr.

McDonough if he had been in that room he said, yes, we were there New Year's morning. His wife says that they were there every morning. It is a very slight point. Undoubtedly, they could both be correct because one could be there every morning and the other could be there just one morning.

Q. During the mornings when you were there, what did you see?
A. I saw—

She gives the name of the respondent and corespondent, and says they were in pyjamas.

Q. What was the condition of the bed?
A. It had been slept in.
Q. Please look at the petitioner. Is she the woman who gave her name, as so-and-so?
A. No.

There is the question of remembering events of some six or seven years ago. One might infer that these five couples were all good friends and knew each other very well, and this was some sort of a surprise. Mr. McDonough said it was. Perhaps this is the reason they remember that particular day so well.

There is one thing which I mentioned earlier, and that is the question of the time lag between the date of the allegation when adultery took place, that is December 31, 1953 and January 1st and 2nd, 1954, and the time when the petition was filed, which was in the latter part of last year. I feel that this question of the time lag should have been cleared up before the committee of the other place, but perhaps it could be cleared up in some way before we finally pass this particular bill. We know, for instance, if there is any undue delay in a court procedure between the time when the adultery took place and the time when the suit for divorce is entered, the court looks somewhat askance at the request and wants to know why there has been this undue delay. In so far as the evidence is concerned, this fact is not only unclear but there is no evidence as to when the petitioner gained knowledge of the adultery which took place some six or seven years ago. There is no evidence as to whether she had knowledge of this shortly thereafter—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

EXTENSION OF LEGISLATION TO JULY 31, 1963

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-4, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act—Mr. Churchill—Mr. Rea in the chair.

[Mr. Howard.]

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

On clause 1.

Mr. McIlraith: I wanted to ask the parliamentary secretary whether or not the order in council to which he referred earlier concerning the export of pork under date of January 12, 1960 has been tabled in the house and, if so, when? Perhaps if the information is not available at the moment the parliamentary secretary could make it available.

Mr. Pallett: I shall be very happy to do that.

Mr. McIlraith: I want to ask a further question. I presume that the order in council would be passed under the authority of section 3(b) of the act. I wonder whether he would mind explaining to the committee what the intergovernmental arrangement is concerning this item.

Mr. Pallett: If the hon. member will wait just a minute or two I will get that information.

Mr. McIlraith: In the meantime while the hon. member is getting that information perhaps I could ask one or two other questions. The export controls under section 3(a) of the act and the requirements are quite apparent. But under section 3(b) are there many items under export control and what is the nature of the items?

Mr. Pallett: I believe the hon. member wants to know what is the number of goods.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. What is the nature of the articles under export control because of the necessity of implementing intergovernmental arrangements?

Mr. Pallett: These are the ones that are listed as the export control list. There is a very extensive list, Mr. Chairman. I do not know whether or not the hon. member wishes me to read it out.

Mr. McIlraith: We know the nature of the intergovernmental arrangements with regard to this list under section 3(a). But with regard to section 3(b), I was rather surprised to find that pork was under export control under legislation that was enacted by parliament at a time when there was an acute shortage of goods and it was necessary to establish export control for military reasons in order to protect the security of the country. I want to find out to what extent, if any, section 3(b) has been used for commodities other than commodities of a strategic or military nature.

Mr. Pallett: To refer to the specific item the hon. member has mentioned, it was an arrangement worked out with the United States arising out of the pork support—if that is the correct word—prices that had been worked out and this is an arrangement resulting from that.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. But the original legislation provided for import controls for that reason. As far as I am aware there was no suggestion that export control would have to be used for that purpose. I am somewhat uncertain as to why we required export control on pork at a time when farmers were complaining of the lack of markets for pork and the government itself had huge surpluses of pork on the market. It is just that narrow point to which I make reference and I should be glad if we could have it clarified.

Mr. Pallett: There is no suggestion, except in what the hon. member has said, that this limits the market in any sense of the word. Quite often intergovernmental arrangements can expand the market by moving into the market on conditions that are well known and by co-operating with them can sometimes enlarge the market to a large extent. We therefore cannot accept the inference contained in the hon. member's remarks to the effect that the market is contracted. I suggest that this arrangement enlarges it. It is certainly within the purview of this act, section 3(b) to which the hon. member has referred, to have such an arrangement as has been worked out.

Mr. McIlraith: Are there many of these intergovernmental arrangements outstanding and what agricultural products do they cover?

Mr. Pallett: The list, a combination of section 3(a) and section 3(b), is very extensive. Rather than give this answer in extensive detail, I would refer the hon. member to the Canada Gazette.

Mr. McIlraith: Is the list separate as between sections 3(a) and 3(b)?

Mr. Pallett: No, it is not.

Mr. McIlraith: That is precisely my point, Mr. Chairman. This was obviously created under this legislation to control the export of strategic materials and to ensure that arms, ammunition, etc. having a strategic nature might not be available to any destination where its use might be detrimental to the security of Canada. That was the original purpose of the legislation. I seem to have stumbled on the fact that this arbitrary authority given to governments may be used for the purpose of controlling a somewhat doubtful agricultural policy of the government relating to farm commodities. What I am seeking to find out is to what, if any, extent beyond the one item this is the case. I have no means of telling from the limited information I have been able to get.

Mr. Pallett: Perhaps this will allay any fear the hon. member has. These are the steps the government has taken to implement a very excellent agricultural program. I would refer to the Canada Gazette to which I have referred, to an item marked "Group 2. Animals and animal products". In that group are such things as butter, pancreas glands of cattle, calves and swine, to all destinations including the United States. So the hon. member will see that this is not particularly new this year.

Mr. Herridge: Would the parliamentary secretary tell us if any exporter of these agricultural products has applied for a permit to export them to a foreign market and has been refused that permit?

Mr. Pallett: As far as my recollection goes, none which has applied has been refused. If my recollection is not correct I would be glad to have the information brought forward on the estimates of the department.

Mr. Regier: I wonder if over the dinner hour the officials who are assisting the hon. member have been able to find the answer as to what countries we have exported arms and munitions during this last year?

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member's question, as I heard it before supper, did not include all countries. I was able to obtain information with respect to certain countries but not all of them. If the hon. member wants all countries, I will be able to get that information if he would wait a little longer.

Mr. Regier: May we have the information that is available now?

Mr. Pallett: With respect to South Africa, which was one of the countries, there were ten permits issued with respect to aircraft parts and spares and six permits with respect to tank spares. With respect to Central America, about which another question was asked, there were no permits issued; and with respect to South America there were ten permits for aircraft parts and spares, three permits for tank spares and one for trucks.

Mr. McIlraith: With regard to the parliamentary secretary's suggestion about further information on the exports at the time of the estimates, as far as I am concerned that is quite satisfactory; but I wonder if I might ask him one or two questions concerning section 5 of the act. First of all, I would like to know what, if any, commodities have been brought under import controls since the end of 1959; that is, items which are not disclosed in the annual report under the act. Second, what, if any, items are under import control by reason of section 5 (a) because of their scarcity in world markets?

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Chairman, so far as I am advised there are none which have been added to the items under import control because of world scarcity at the moment.

Mr. McIlraith: That brings me to the question as to why the government is retaining the power originally designated in the legislation of import control over goods that are required to be controlled because of their scarcity in world markets. It seems to me that this is one clause of the bill which could have been deleted. I think there should have been an examination made of the existing legislation prior to bringing the amending bill into the house.

Mr. Pallett: I think the hon. member's point is well taken. I am sure that when the act comes before the house for revision, as it must do within three years, this will certainly be one of the points to be looked at very carefully.

Mr. McIlraith: But the point now is that the act is before the house for re-enactment. The effect of the amending bill is to re-enact the act as it is, and as I say this is the sort of thing which should have been looked into before the new bill was brought in. It is the sort of thing which could very well have been looked at in committee had it gone to a standing committee.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, may I ask if there are particular groups of civil servants charged with the administration of this act? If so, what is their number?

Mr. Pallett: I am advised that with respect to the administration of the export-import sections there are approximately 12. Of course, the prime responsibility lies with the minister.

Mr. McIlraith: Just one more question. If I may deal further with section 5(a) of the act, am I right in the assumption that import control was required to control tin by reason of its scarcity in the world market as recently as 1959? Tin was deleted from the import control list in 1959. What was the reason for the deletion?

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Mr. Pallett: As regards the trading disposition of world markets with respect to the commodity known as tin, there would appear to have been deliberate action taken by non-member countries. That could have a very serious effect on the international tin agreement and therefore on tin in this country. Arising from the situation, tin was put on the list. When that situation no longer existed, it was taken off.

Mr. McIlraith: That would be under section 5(a); it is the last entry on the list under 5(a)?

Mr. Pallett: It was the last commodity on the import control list to be removed.

Mr. Herridge: Has the parliamentary secretary any information about permits being issued to persons entitling them to export commodities, then the branch finding out later that those commodities did not go to the designated destination, but that there was some irregularity about the export?

Mr. Pallett: There is no indication that there have been any recent violations of the terms of our export permits in the manner which the hon. gentleman has indicated.

Mr. Regier: The annual reports for 1958 and 1959 do not indicate that there were any import licence applications refused. If this is the case, I wonder if the minister would explain how the act was used to implement any action taken under either the Agricultural Stabilization Act or, as it used to be called, the agricultural prices support act? I would imagine that if this machinery is supposed to aid the efforts of the government to implement the intent of either of those acts there would have been a refusal of applications to import agricultural commodities in a large number of instances. Yet, as I have said, the annual reports do not indicate any refusal to issue import licences, though there is record of refusal to allow export licences.

Mr. Pallett: On that particular matter, I know of none. I think probably the people who are importing the products know the situation here and know what they would be facing. I personally recollect no refusal, and that would seem to follow from the fact that there were no applications, the situation being known to the people who are importing.

Mr. Robichaud: I should like to have an answer by the parliamentary secretary on the following point. I understand that this act affects the Fisheries Prices Support Act. Can the hon. gentleman inform the committee as to what particular fisheries commodities have been affected by the application of this act, say in the last two years?

Mr. Pallett: That is a question beyond the purview of this amendment or this act. The hon. member asks the effect on the whole fishing industry of its mention in this act. That is very difficult, as the member knows, to ascertain. If the hon. member wishes to know if there have been any fisheries commodities put on the import control list, that is a different matter.

Mr. Robichaud: That was not the purpose of my question. I wanted to find out what particular fisheries commodities have been affected by this act, or included in the list which has been drawn up in connection with the application of this act. This act has been in operation for years, and we are being asked only to extend it.

Mr. Pallett: I would refer the hon. member as I did the hon. member for Ottawa West, to the issue of the Canada Gazette in which the complete list will be found.

Mr. Robichaud: It might have been easier if the parliamentary secretary had admitted he did not know.

Mr. Pallett: That would have been inaccurate.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall this bill be read a third time, now?

Some hon. Members: By leave.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COURTS, JUDGES AND GAME LEGISLATION

Mr. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-60 to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

He said: These amendments to the Northwest Territories Act are similar in almost every detail to the amendments approved this afternoon in connection with the Yukon Act.

The first concerns what might be called the major judicial changes arising from the visit of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton), his deputy and the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. to the north last year. Requests for changes in the judicial system have been made in this house from time to time in the past. Last night I mentioned the hon. member for Mackenzie River (Mr. Hardie) and the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Godin). I should also have mentioned the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) in this connection.

When the Minister of Justice made his trip through the north he consulted members both of the bench and of the bar in addition to others who have the task of administering justice in the north, and these recommendations for changes are the result.

These amendments do not affect changes in the form of the government as did those in the previous bill with respect to the Yukon which set up interesting and new techniques for a transition from a territorial government to a provincial government. However, I may inform the house that there are some changes going on in the administration of the Northwest Territories which this act does not cover, and I will mention these on another occasion. These concern the decentralization of government administration in connection with the treasury and purchasing offices.

The amendment dealing with game management in the territories is the same as the one we dealt with this afternoon in connection with the Yukon Act and merely seeks to end the uncertainty about the constitutional position and the right of the territorial government to deal with questions concerning game.

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, we appreciate the many improvements which this legislation will undoubtedly bring to the citizens of the Northwest Territories. As hon. members on this side of the house had occasion to mention this afternoon, the benefits that will flow from some of the new regulations applying in the Yukon Territory will apply also in the Northwest Territories. There were some aspects in the legislation affecting the Yukon which were not readily understood by hon. members and it is hoped that when the present bill is studied in committee the minister will answer our questions in clarification of these problems.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, when the minister speaks will he tell us if it is his intention to insert in this bill a provision similar to that inserted in Bill No. C-59 with respect to the protection and conservation of animal life and the rights of Indians and Eskimos?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question asked by the hon. member of Skeena (Mr. Howard) I would say this is a matter for the preference of the house. Actually the amendment referred to is not necessary in the case of the Northwest Territories Act because the Indians in the Northwest Territories are protected by treaties. All this would be is a repetition of a statement already made by the Northwest Territories council in their ordinance passed last year.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Flynn in the chair.

On clause 1—Game ordinances in respect of Indians and Eskimos.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, I note that clause 1 is similar to clause 4 of Bill No. C-59. Does the government intend to present an amendment similar to that moved with respect to the other bill concerning the rights of Indians and Eskimos?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, in my closing remarks on second reading I told the hon. member for Skeena that this was up to the committee, that I was open to suggestions. I pointed out that putting in the words of the amendment used this afternoon in relation to the other bill would be quite proper in respect of this legislation. The only question in my mind is this. It duplicates the ordinance already passed by the Northwest Territories council. If the committee wishes to have this amendment inserted it would be quite in order to do so.

Mr. Howard: I am in favour of having it inserted so there would be a degree of uniformity. Did I understand the minister to say on second reading its insertion would not be necessary because a treaty exists with the Indians?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes, Mr. Chairman, in the provinces they have power over the management of game. The treaty which the federal government has with the Indians in those provinces has an overriding power in so far as those provincial government regulations deal with Indians.

That same situation holds in connection with the Northwest Territories. The Indians there are covered by treaties. The Indians in the Yukon are not covered by treaties. That is why I pointed out to the house this afternoon the possibility of considering an amendment to guarantee that protection to the Indians in the Yukon even though the territorial government has not throughout the last 60 years in any way abused the right of the Indians to hunt. The house accepted that amendment. If the committee wants it included in this bill it could be done. It will add nothing to the protection of the Indians but it will serve to ensure the protection of their rights.

Mr. Howard: I would be pleased to move such an amendment, but perhaps the wording should be the same. There are Eskimos involved and I do not know if they have a treaty with the federal government. It would be well to include an amendment to this bill similar to the one to Bill No. C-59 which would no doubt be acceptable to everyone.

Mr. Roberge: If the minister moves such an amendment we will support it.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): When we come to clause 4 I will ask my colleague the Minister of Transport to move the same amendment we had this afternoon which will satisfy the hon. members for Megantic and Skeena.

Mr. Herridge: Would the minister explain for the information of the committee the exact difference between a statute and ordinance.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I do not know of any nor do my advisers. I imagine it is something like this. The word "by law" is used to describe a legislative enactment of a municipal council, the word "ordinance" is used with reference to a territorial government and the word "statute" is used with reference to the federal government. There is no difference in what they accomplish. They are all legislative enactments.

I must correct myself, Mr. Chairman. Instead of referring to clause 4 I should have referred to clause 1. It would now be in order for the Minister of Transport to move the amendment to clause 1.

Mr. Hees: I move:

That subclause (1) of clause 1 of Bill No. C-60 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

(1) Section 14 of the said act is amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1) but subject to subsection (3), the commissioner in council may make ordinances for the government of the territories, in relation to the preservation of game in the territories, that are applicable to and in respect of Indians and Eskimos, and ordinances made by the commissioner in council in relation to the preservation of game in the territories, unless the contrary intention appears therein, are applicable to and in respect of Indians and Eskimos.

(3) Nothing in subsection (2) shall be construed as authorizing the commissioner in council to make ordinances restricting or prohibiting Indians or Eskimos from hunting for food, on unoccupied crown lands, game other than game declared by the governor in council to be game in danger of becoming extinct."

Mr. Roberge: The Minister of Transport, in moving the amendment, referred to section 17 of the said act. Clause 1 in the bill refers to section 14.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): That is correct.

The Chairman: The correction has been made. Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Peters: Are there reservations in the Northwest Territories that treaties apply to, and does this affect the inhabitants, including Eskimos, in the same way as treaty Indians on reservations are affected in other parts of Canada?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Neither in the Northwest Territories nor in the Yukon are there any reservations whatsoever. To all intents and purposes the Indians are treated the same way as others in matters of voting, business, drinking liquor, education, and everything else.

Clause 1 as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 5, inclusive, agreed to.

On clause 6—Court of appeal established.

Mr. Peters: Last night, on the resolution stage, I inquired of the minister whether divorce proceedings in the Northwest Territories were going to be handled by the courts of the Northwest Territories or whether they would go elsewhere. Under the old section, former clause (g) of section 28, we find the following:

> The action is for divorce or judicial separation.

It was limited. It was one of the things that you had to appeal to other courts in the provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island or Newfoundland. As I read it, it is not separated in the new section and I am wondering which proceeding applies? I am very concerned about whether they have the machinery for handling their own divorce proceedings in the Northwest Territories because I do not wish them to further aggravate a situation already bad.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): My memory last night turned out to be correct, but I have confirmed it by checking with the officials, and the courts in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories are superior courts. Both do handle divorce cases and will finish them there unless there is an appeal.

Mr. Peters: Will the appeal still be on the same basis as previously under the old section?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): The appeals will be on the same basis but the difference is now both territories have their own courts of appeal which sit right in the territories rather than going to the province to the south.

Mr. Peters: Is the minister familiar with the type of procedure that is used there for divorces? Is it a dominion statute that is used?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I am informed that the courts in the Yukon use the same rules and practices as are used by the province of British Columbia. The courts of the Northwest Territories, Mackenzie River part, follow the same rules and procedure as do the Alberta courts.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 7 agreed to.

On clause 8—Remuneration and allowances.

Mr. Herridge: Clause 8 reads as follows:

> The governor in council may, in special circumstances, authorize payment to a justice of the peace of remuneration and travelling and other expenses incurred by him in the performance of his duties and, notwithstanding the Civil Service Act, such remuneration and expenses may be paid to a justice of the peace who is employed in the civil service in addition to his salary.

My question is this: Under this section would it be possible for a senior civil servant, receiving a good remuneration, because he happens to be absent from his regular duties for a few days, to receive additional remuneration as a justice of the peace and additional expenses? Can the minister give us some idea of the circumstances this clause is intended to cover?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): At this time I should like to thank the Minister of Justice for lending me his very learned parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, who will answer these questions.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The extra money that the civil servant might get in this instance would not be a large sum; it would be out-of-pocket expenses, or something of that nature, for this justice of the peace work.

Mr. Herridge: There would be no question of double remuneration; that is, while on the payroll as a civil servant receiving salary for the same period in question or for a fraction thereof and an additional salary or remuneration as a justice of the peace?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The governor in council would not provide for this extra money. Theoretically there could be double remuneration, but it would not happen in practice to any great degree.

Mr. Herridge: My question is, why, under any circumstances, is it necessary to pay a man twice? If I have someone working for me doing a certain job and I have to take him off that job to do another one, I do not pay him twice for the job. If he is paid as a civil servant and he is required to act as a justice of the peace under this act, why should he be paid twice? This is a question I should like answered.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): This is additional work that the civil servant would be doing in most cases. It would be perhaps extra work in the evening or on week ends, and in every case there would not be double remuneration. He is getting nothing now for doing this type of work. Sometimes it takes extra hours.

Mr. Herridge: This is the point I was making. The remuneration mentioned in this bill is for work after his regular hours as a civil servant or on week ends; is that correct?

Clause agreed to.

Clause 9 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Mr. Regier: Before the bill carries, I wonder if the minister might amend an answer which he gave yesterday. I have looked at the election returns for the year 1958, and I noticed that the people of Frobisher Bay were not able to exercise their franchise. I wonder if the minister has additional information?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): In answer to the question asked by the hon. member last night, Mr. Chairman, I indicated that there was nothing against the people voting in the Northwest Territories. I spoke, too, of the difficulties of getting around, and this is actually true. The fact is that for federal elections the boundaries of the Mackenzie River riding do not extend over as far as Baffin island, and in the territorial arrangements they, too, find that the constituency boundaries do not go that far. I would be glad, therefore, to pass on the suggestion of the hon. member. We have been considering it ourselves and wondering what could be done to give some representation to the scattered people in the eastern part of the Arctic. I would be glad to take the representations under consideration.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time, now?

An hon. Member: By leave.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

[Mr. Herridge.]

WINDSOR HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING BOUNDARIES OF HARBOUR

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-4, to amend the Windsor Harbour Commissioners Act.

He said: My department has been requested by the Windsor harbour commissioners to extend the limits of the harbour as established by the commissioners act, chapter 38 of 1957. There is extensive waterfront property and contiguous land available fronting on the town of Ojibway adjacent to Windsor, and it would be advantageous to the orderly development of the harbour area to include these properties. The municipal corporation of Ojibway has supported the proposal.

The bill is minor in character, requiring a small amendment to section 4 of the Windsor Harbour Commissioners Act to extend the south boundary of the harbour from the southern limit of the city of Windsor to the southerly limit of the municipality of Ojibway, extended to the international boundary. No other change in the commissioners act is contemplated at this time.

I might add that if the bill receives second reading I propose to move that it be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, along with the other two bills incorporating harbour commissioners at Oshawa and Nanaimo.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not often rise to support measures introduced in this house by the minister who has just taken his seat, but I do rise tonight to support this amendment. However, I can hardly agree that the amendment is minor in character. I think a more precise way of stating the situation would be to say that the bill is minor in form but involving major consequences for the city of Windsor.

The purpose of this bill, as the minister said, is to extend the boundaries of the harbour of Windsor, as they were established in 1957, on the angle of that part of the Detroit river extending to the international boundary and fronting on the municipality of Ojibway. As the minister has mentioned, the corporation of Ojibway has concurred in the amendment that is now being considered by us. The house will recall that this bill, of which this is an amendment, received royal assent on April 17, 1957, having been introduced in this house by the former minister of transport, Mr. Marler.

I am sure the house will recall that on that occasion the then member for Essex West, the late Don Brown, spoke on the measure.

I should like to recall to the house the distinguished and constructive public service of that honourable and deceased man. Mr. Brown, on one occasion addressed himself to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) with regard to certain questions that were then under consideration in connection with a bill concerning the development of the Hamilton harbour. At that time, referring to the Windsor situation, Mr. Brown stated that he had understood there would be an investigation, for which he wished to thank the government, into the economic possibilities of the situation at Windsor. He understood that the survey would probably reveal that bulk storage facilities would be required in the area. He pointed out that as 85 per cent of the corn grown in Canada was grown in the counties of Kent and Essex box storage facilities would be required. He expressed the hope that if the local harbour commission, made up of three well-known and estimable gentlemen of the city of Windsor, made a recommendation to the government for the erection of box storage facilities at Windsor harbour the minister would give favourable consideration to such a suggestion. The minister, however, does not appear to have made any reply to these observations at the time. It may be that, when he speaks to the constructive observations to be made by the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Spencer) and myself, he will see fit to make some reply.

I note in looking through the main estimates for 1958-59, 1959-60 and 1960-61 that the government does not propose to advance any moneys to the harbour commission for this purpose. I would hope that after I have finished my modest contribution tonight the minister would possibly recognize that this is a responsibility that does not rest only on the local harbour commissioners or on the citizens of my community, but it is one that should engage the active interest and attention of his department. Shortly before the harbour commission took over its responsibilities, the Canada Steamship Lines vacated the public wharf property which they held. This was in March of 1958. I refer to this because it meant the loss of considerable revenue to the harbour commission. One wonders whether or not if persuasion had been employed at the time the former lessee, Canada Steamship Lines, might have continued their occupancy of this property.

In any event there was, as I say, as a result of that vacation of this wharf property, a considerable loss of revenue. I find that the wharfage revenue in 1956-57—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) not think he is going beyond the purpose of this bill and that he might more properly advance his proposition when the estimates are being considered?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is a problem to which I gave consideration, Mr. Speaker. However, I would doubt that I would make as great progress in persuading the minister on his estimates later on in the session as I would tonight while enjoying the quietude that prevails in this house and the obvious attention which the minister is giving to my remarks at this moment. In any event, if I may speak to the point of order,—

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member will not take undue advantage of the opportunities which present themselves. Strictly speaking, he is going beyond the scope of this bill.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would not want to do anything that transgresses the rules. However, I was going to argue the point of order. In a bill which seeks to extend the jurisdiction of the harbour commission, I think one is in order in giving some justification for the request that is made in the application for an extension of the powers by the harbour commissioners and the way in which to do that is to point out the advantages that lie potentially in the development of the harbour at the city of Windsor. It was in the process of achieving that simple but important objective that I was engaged when Your Honour intervened.

However, I will not trespass except to say that there is, as a result, a considerable loss of revenue, something in the neighbourhood of $18,000. This revenue would be of great assistance to the harbour commission in the development of its functions and in the development of the harbour. We have seen currently some evidence in the community of private groups interested in waterfront property seeking to develop pier and bonded warehouses. One project has been reported as involving some 42 acres of property costing up to $12 million.

This project would be of great value to the community and would supplement the work of the harbour commission. This matter has a bearing on the responsibility of the department. While this project involves private enterprise, it is one which will require the co-operation not only of the harbour commission but of federal departments. Private enterprise, of course, should be encouraged in the long range development of Windsor and elsewhere but it seems to me that government assistance will also be required. At this time there is a considerable amount of activity all along the great lakes.

In Detroit, in Cleveland and in Chicago everyone is getting ready to take advantage—

Mr. Fisher: And Port Arthur.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Someone says Port Arthur. Yes, I would mention Port Arthur although that city was given a harbour commission long after the city of Windsor was given one. I would point out that fact to the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) who quite properly intervenes at this moment. All of this activity involving the expenditure of many millions of dollars is taking place in anticipation of the results that will flow from the great concept and achievement of the St. Lawrence waterway scheme.

Now that the St. Lawrence waterway scheme is a reality it seems to me that we must see to it that all of the communities on the waters involved in the St. Lawrence scheme are given the fullest opportunity to share in the benefits of that development. It is with regard to that matter that it seems to me the government has a responsibility much greater than that which at the present time seems to be exercised by the department toward the city of Windsor and, I believe, toward some other particular harbour development schemes.

I was looking at the report of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines of 1958. In their conclusions, which are found at page 150 of their report, we find an observation which I think has relevancy to the matter before us. The committee goes on to point out as follows:

> The continued close co-operation between the Department, the St. Lawrence seaway authority and the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission toward the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project was noted with satisfaction.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) has not dealt with anything remotely concerned with the immediate bill for the last five minutes.

Mr. Speaker: I myself have intimated something along the lines of the point of order raised by the hon. member, namely that the hon. member for Essex East is going beyond the scope of the bill. It is true he can do it only by leave of the house. If a point of order is taken, as it has been, I must ask the hon. member for Essex East to apply himself to the precise principle which is the extension of the boundaries of the harbour of Windsor.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am doing that very thing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hon. gentlemen who do not have the same interest I have in this matter possibly find this to be a laughing matter but I assure them that such is not the case. We are asking for power to extend the jurisdiction of the harbour commissioners. I am seeking to establish reasons why that should be done. One of the arguments that I am making is that this particular harbour as well as others should be given the opportunity of taking the fullest advantage of the achievement of the St. Lawrence seaway. If that is not a valid argument, then one could easily argue: Why should the powers of this commission be extended? They should be extended, Mr. Speaker, in my view, because the harbour in Windsor, its commissioners and the people of that community want to take full advantage of the development of the St. Lawrence seaway, an opportunity that is now afforded to that city as to other communities on the great lakes.

I was pointing out that this was the view of a committee of this house unanimously expressed in 1958. I was referring to the St. Lawrence seaway in that context. The final sentence in that paragraph certainly indicates what I am seeking to do when it states as follows:

> The committee recommends for the consideration of the department the establishment of an economic survey to consider the effects of the St. Lawrence seaway project upon all regions of Canada.

My argument is that it is not sufficient to treat this particular harbour commission as a commission of a particular category, there being three which are concerned, and that the department itself must take more than a casual interest in the development of something that obviously has a local interest. That is the argument I am seeking to make. I would think that no one would question the argument that in seeking to add to the jurisdiction of the harbour commission, one is justified in showing why that should be done.

Mr. Hees: On the point of order, may I say that this bill does not deal with the extension of the powers of the Windsor harbour commission. This bill simply deals with the extension of the limits of the jurisdiction of the Windsor harbour commission.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Hees: It is not extending the powers at all. I think the hon. member should confine his remarks to whether or not the extension of these limits is justified. It has nothing to do with the powers of the Windsor harbour commission.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Obviously if you extend the limits of the area over which the harbour commission will have jurisdiction you extend its powers as well as extend the limits of the harbour facilities. I am sure the minister will find that is so. If the minister is patient, he will hear me out, and this will not take very long. I think it is a valid and useful argument to make. Are we to take the position that a commission like this must depend only upon its own resources?

Mr. Speaker: I must tell the hon. member for Essex East that I fully agree with the point of order that has been taken. This bill has nothing to do with the setting up of a commission to inquire into the operation of the seaway. The bill under discussion only extends the area of the harbour under the control of the Windsor harbour commissioners; therefore I must ask the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) to reserve this discussion on other subjects to another time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, if you insist on that ruling I obviously have no other course, but I would submit to you with confidence that there is a strong and justifiable position procedurally to take against the position Your Honour has taken. But I will not press the point except to say that I have suggested in the few words I have addressed thus far to the minister what is in my mind, and before his estimates are reached perhaps he will find ways and means of dealing with the matter.

Of course this is a valid amendment. We want to develop the harbour facilities at Windsor on the Detroit river, the most heavily travelled river of any country in the world, more than the Suez and Panama canals together. We want to strengthen the hand of the harbour commission which will mean a great deal to the city of Windsor. It is not only a question whether or not there is enough business now. The suggestion is that we ought to be able to create enough business, and to do that the commission must be afforded assistance from the department of the federal government as well as being able to get whatever assistance it can from other sources.

I think that when facilities have to be developed in the seaway system itself they should be developed in accordance with a policy which will apply to the entire system and we in Windsor should not be any different from Hamilton, Toronto or New Westminster. New Westminster has received two or three loans from the federal government, and that kind of assistance should be open to a harbour like this. If the minister does that and takes the active interest in this matter that I know he will and I know he wants to, he will find that he will have accomplished for the city of Windsor perhaps the most useful service he can render to a community which I think has great potential in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if I could have gone on and developed my carefully prepared argument I would have received from the member for Essex West the fullest support which I know every citizen in Windsor will accord to what I have said tonight.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, there is not much we have to say on this bill. We know the hon. members for Essex West (Mr. Spencer) and Essex South (Mr. Thrasher) are vigilant in Windsor's interest and after they have expressed themselves I am sure everything will be in order in this bill.

I think the few remarks I have to make will be in order since they deal with the principle involved here whether another municipality is taken within an authority that is already constituted. I understand that there have been difficulties in British Columbia with one of the harbour commissioners in so far as an extension similar in scope to the property that the Windsor harbour commissioners control. This extension took in several other municipalities, and under the representational set-up already in the act these communities had no representation on the board.

We know very little about this municipality of Ojibway mentioned here. I looked forward to hearing something about it from the previous speaker, some detail which would have aroused our interest and satisfied our curiosity. We would appreciate hearing from the minister how populous this municipality is and whether there is any demand in that particular municipality for an extension such as this. I would also like to know whether they are going to have any representation on the commission as a result of this extension of the Windsor harbour commissioners' authority into other municipalities. No one needs to tell the minister with his experience of the lakehead harbour commissioners how delicate the whole question of municipal pride is and how easy it is to whip up harsh feelings on a matter such as this. I think he is aware of our particular situation. We have had a great deal of bitterness since he became minister on the part of the lakehead harbour commission, much of which turned on the conflict between the municipalities and the question of municipal representation.

I think this is a matter upon which we should have a rather complete explanation from the minister or some of the hon. members from the Essex area so that we can be absolutely clear there will not be at a later date any bad feelings over this extension of territory. I myself would like to have known into whose constituency the extension has been taken—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Both Essex East and Essex West.

Mr. Fisher: It appears to involve two members, including the hon. member who has just spoken. I am surprised he did not have this information because I would have thought it was the sort of thing the representative of a constituency would be proud of.

The final matter which comes into question on second reading of the bill, so far as the principle of it is concerned, is this. Since it is only such a relatively short time since this board was set up, why was not consideration given to this at the time? I know the minister will probably answer it was because the previous government which brought in this legislation did not take a proper look at the thing. The original bill was given royal assent on April 12, 1957. That is only three years ago and already an extension is being asked for. It almost indicates that the previous government was short of good advice from the Windsor area when it drew up this bill.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It indicates the progressive character of the community.

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member says it indicates the progressive character of the community. It is very hard to follow that remark when we have heard so much cry havoc from the hon. member who was speaking before me.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Do you deny there is unemployment in Windsor?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate receiving answers from the minister to these two questions. First of all with regard to the municipal situation and representation for this other municipality on the harbour commission; second, the matter I touched on a moment ago.

Mr. N. L. Spencer (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I think my first words should be to assure you that I will not be as verbose as was my colleague from Essex East (Mr. Martin), and I will try and confine my remarks as closely to this bill as I can in the circumstances.

It is not often that I find the hon. member for Essex East and I are in agreement on legislation which comes before this house. I am happy to find that he is supporting this legislation and I hope that that is a good omen for the future.

I think it might be well if I were to say just a word or two about the location involved in this bill. The hon. member for Essex East has indicated, as is quite true, that the city of Windsor is located on the Detroit river which is the busiest waterway in the world. During the navigational season a cargo ship passes every 20 minutes on the average, and in excess of 130 million tons of cargo is carried along that waterway during the season. Geographically we are, of course, in a unique situation. We lie south of the entire state of Michigan, and the territorial limits of the county of Essex include Pelee island which is the most southern territory in Canada. In this area of Essex county we find a great agricultural development and in the city of Windsor we have great industrial production. Because of both the agricultural production and the industrial production in the area there is great need for harbour facilities.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Spencer: Of course, I join the hon. member for Essex East in complimenting the former government on bringing in the bill which incorporated the Windsor harbour commission and I pay my due respects to the former member for Essex West who was a prime mover in the sponsorship of that legislation. When that measure was enacted the limits of the harbour commission were restricted to the limits of the city of Windsor. I believe the reason for that was that it was desired that there should be a commission formed as quickly as possible, with the idea in mind of taking full advantage of the development of the St. Lawrence waterway. I wish to compliment the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) and the officials of his department as well as the officials of the Department of Public Works with whom they cooperated closely, and express my appreciation to them for having gone to Windsor on many occasions to look into the potentialities as far as harbour development is concerned. As a matter of fact tenders are now being called for the renovation of the present government wharf and warehouse in the harbour.

I think the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) raised a very good point, but may I say to him that we in the city of Windsor and in the metropolitan area of Windsor do not have these local jealousies to which the hon. member referred. I think it is significant that while the Windsor harbour commission is at present restricted, as I say, in its territorial limits to the harbour area opposite the city of Windsor, none of the three present appointees to the harbour commission actually lives in the city of Windsor. They live in the metropolitan area, but we in the city of Windsor do not pay much attention to the particular locality in which public spirited men may reside. While these gentlemen reside outside the city of Windsor they have their business interest in Windsor, and their whole thinking and ambition is to promote what is best for the whole community of metropolitan Windsor.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Spencer: Thus we do not think that any difficulty whatever will arise as far as the composition of the harbour commission is concerned.

As the minister has said, the corporation of the town of Ojibway which, incidentally, is entirely within the constituency of Essex West, has approved this extension of the jurisdiction of the present Windsor harbour commission, and there is no suggestion that there is going to be any conflict of ideas as far as the composition of the commission is concerned. It is still going to be the Windsor harbour commission, and no difficulty in that respect need even be contemplated.

The actual need for the extension lies in the fact that Windsor is an old community and we have there natural harbour facilities in that there is a deep waterway running along the border of our municipality. As a result of this natural harbour we have found that industries which require water transportation have located themselves along that waterway, though primarily within the corporate limits of the city of Windsor. We believe that for the future development of the whole harbour area it will be essential to utilize some of the additional harbour facilities which lie further down stream.

There are at the present time in the town of Objibway, however, facilities for shipping. I may say to the hon. member for Port Arthur that we had a very good vision. It did not materialize, but we had in mind that in Objibway there would arise one of the larger steel plants of this country. As I said, that vision did not materialize, but considerable work was done. Cuts were constructed and docks built with the result that there are facilities at the present time in the town of Objibway for ships. Between that portion of the town of Objibway where these facilities exist and the boundaries of the city of Windsor lies an area which is readily adaptable for harbour development and we believe that this harbour development should be undertaken in an orderly manner and under direction; and that for this reason the territorial limits of the present harbour commission should be extended further down stream to include this additional area.

The minister has indicated that when and if this bill receives second reading it be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. I wonder if I would be presumptuous in suggesting that instead of referring this bill to that committee it be considered in committee of the whole at this time with the consent of the minister and of the house. Although the implications of the amendment may be quite extensive in that it increases the area over which the harbour commission has jurisdiction no other amendment is being made to the provisions of the act. I see no need for referring this bill to the standing committee and think it could well be dealt with in committee of the whole house this evening and perhaps receive third reading.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, while the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) is our shining lighthouse and harbour master, I want to make a few points. I wish to support the comments of the previous speaker and urge the minister to give full answers to the questions raised particularly with respect to representation of persons included in this greater area.

I wish also to compliment the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) for his short talk on this bill which is of great importance to his constituency. I noticed that the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Spencer) said when he got up that he was not as verbose as the hon. member for Essex East but both spoke for approximately 15 minutes and I could not see much difference.

I think the hon. member for Essex East made a good point when he was questioned about being out of order and said that you cannot extend the area of jurisdiction of any board without extending its powers. That is a valid argument and he made an excellent case.

This is another illustration under the stresses of changing conditions and circumstances of extending the area of public planning and control. Anyone who has read the debates of this house of many years ago with respect to harbour commissioners and developments of that kind will remember that the Tory element in the community resisted that kind of development. This is a demonstration in a local sphere of a segment of C.C.F. policy.

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few points to make and I can assure the hon. member for Kootenay West

(Mr. Herridge) that I will not speak for 14 or 15 minutes. I should like to remind the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) that although the jurisdiction of this commission does not come within the electoral district of Essex South, certainly any developments in the harbour there will be of great benefit to people residing in the electoral district of Essex South. I am sure the hon. member would not want to overlook that fact.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear. We are a very united community.

Mr. Thrasher: In reply to the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) may I say that Ojibway is short of residents. It has no schoolhouse that I know of but it has a large industrial assessment and therefore is a plum that is coveted by other municipalities.

Speaking on this bill gives me an opportunity of paying tribute to the groundwork laid by the former hon. member for Essex West, Mr. Don Brown. As was indicated by the hon. members for Essex East and Essex West, Mr. Brown was the sponsor and prime mover of this particular bill. I am sure his untimely death was a shock to his many friends in this house. The amendments to the bill at this time give those of us who were close to him and his good friends—even though some of us were his political adversaries—an opportunity of paying our respects to him.

I also wish to pay tribute to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) and his department and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) and his department for the wonderful co-operation and assistance they have given to the present harbour commissioners. In doing so I should also like to pay tribute to the present harbour commissioners who are doing an able job enthusiastically. If they continue in the direction in which they are going I am sure it will not be too long before we have a very large development in that area.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must inform the house that if the Minister of Transport speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased indeed, quite naturally, that all those hon. members who have spoken on the bill have supported it with such enthusiasm.

The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) asked if the residents of Ojibway would be represented on the harbour commission. The answer, as the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Spencer) has pointed out—he is the member of parliament who represents this community—is that they are very happy to have their area included under the jurisdiction of the Windsor harbour commission.

As the hon. member for Essex West and the hon. member for Essex South (Mr. Thrasher) have pointed out, the members of the Windsor harbour commission are obviously doing a very good, workmanlike and satisfactory job and the people of the municipality of Ojibway are happy to be represented by these commissioners. I think that is an answer to the hon. member's question.

The hon. member for Essex West suggested that perhaps this is not a complicated matter and that it might save time if it were dealt with in committee of the whole house now instead of referring the bill to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines as I originally intended. Perhaps if the house agrees with the suggestion of the hon. member for Essex West the bill might be dealt with in committee stage of the house now and receive more rapid passage in that way. That, of course, is up to the members of the house. If it is their wish to carry on with the committee stage now I am agreeable. Otherwise, I am content to have the bill referred to the committee.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, it was always the practice I believe in our time in office to send all these bills to the committee and I think in this instance we should follow that practice.

Mr. Hees: I am perfectly happy to do that, Mr. Speaker. That was my original suggestion. However, as it is the practice of this government to listen to all suggestions made by hon. members and particularly those who speak with the knowledge and authority of the hon. member for Essex West on a matter of this kind, I was willing to consider the hon. gentleman's suggestion, if it was the wish of the house to follow that suggestion. As the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) has suggested we would like to see the bill go to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines and I will move, seconded by my colleague the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley) that that procedure be followed.

Mr. Spencer: May I intervene at this moment to point out that it has not been the custom always followed. When the bill was passed in 1957 it did not go to a standing committee of the house; it was dealt with in committee of the whole house and received consideration in that committee and third reading was given on the day it was introduced for second reading.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I say one thing. I was inclined to think that there was merit in the suggestion made by the hon. member for Essex West, but after listening to the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) it just occurred to me—I think the hon. member for Essex West will perhaps agree—that a possible great advantage may ensue to our community if we go to the committee in that we might be able to put to the officials of the department, and possibly to the minister, some of the arguments that would perhaps influence the minister to do more for the harbour than is now being done by the government.

Mr. Hees: I move, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

OSHAWA HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS

ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION FOR MANAGEMENT AND DEVELOPMENT OF HARBOUR

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-5, to incorporate the Oshawa harbour commissioners.

He said: An interdepartmental committee comprising engineers and economists from the Department of Transport and the Department of Public Works investigated the development of Oshawa harbour that might result from the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway. It was found that although there might not be an immediate requirement for harbour works outside of dredging, the harbour being located only 17 miles from Toronto would be likely to develop by the establishment of industries requiring marine transport.

The city of Oshawa made formal application recommending the incorporation of harbour commissioners and would provide harbour front property, owned by the city, for management and development by the commissioners.

My department operates the government wharf that is used in the handling of coal, fuel oil and gravel from which a gross annual income of $18,000 is derived. The wharf would be placed under the management of the commission and the revenue would accrue to it.

The purpose of the bill is to set up a harbour commission to operate the harbour. There will be three commissioners, two appointed by the governor in council and one by the city of Oshawa. The bill is similar in every detail to the one passed in April, 1957, to incorporate the harbour commissioners for Windsor, Ontario.

As already indicated, I propose to move after second reading that the bill be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, this is the second such bill that has been brought to the attention of the house tonight and I see that there are others on the order paper. I rise to support the bill of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) and in so doing may I say there are one or two points that I should like to bring to his attention as well as to the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) because, unless I mistake the position of the two ministers, the Minister of Transport is responsible for the harbour commission that will be established under this bill and the Minister of Public Works is responsible for harbour facilities that may be erected by this harbour commission.

I think the House of Commons should know what plans are in the minds of the ministers, but more particularly in the mind of the Minister of Public Works in so far as the development of these harbours is concerned, arising out of the St. Lawrence seaway. It has been said repeatedly by this administration, as well as by the former administration, that the St. Lawrence seaway was going to have the effect of opening up many harbours. This statement is certainly confirmed by port facilities that are being built on the United States side of the great lakes and of the St. Lawrence. Before this bill is passed we would have some intimation, some inkling, from the government as to what its policy is with reference to this.

This brings me to a matter which I raised in the house and in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines two years ago when I submitted to the Minister of Transport and to the members of that committee that an economic survey should be made by the officers of the Department of Transport with reference to the impact which the St. Lawrence seaway would have upon the various regions of Canada. I repeated that in the house on two or three occasions and very little attention was paid by the Minister of Transport.

I say to the minister that of course he listened very carefully to what was said but absolutely nothing was done with respect to the recommendation. I understand that my colleague, the member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), has put on the record the recommendation which was made by the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines in its report in 1958, and I should like to put it on the record at this time. It is to be found at page 150 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of that committee of 1958:

> The continued close co-operation between the department, the St. Lawrence seaway authority and the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission toward the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project was noted with satisfaction. The importance of the seaway and its beneficial effect on Canadian inland ports was recognized by your committee, and a recommendation that municipalities which expect to enjoy maximum benefits from the project should survey existing port facilities and endeavour to determine necessary additional requirements, received the general support of members. The committee recommends for the consideration of the department the establishment of an economic survey to consider the effects of the St. Lawrence seaway project upon all regions of Canada.

If that had been done either by the St. Lawrence seaway authority or by the economics branch of the Department of Transport a great deal of misgiving would have been spared the various regions of this country. I can think of the Atlantic region; I can think of the region which is on the south shore of the gulf of St. Lawrence, in the Gaspe area; I can think of the north shore of the St. Lawrence river, in the province of Quebec, where there is a tremendous amount of industrial development going on; and I can think particularly of the whole upper St. Lawrence from the international section right up to the foot of lake Ontario which, of course, includes the city of Oshawa.

Before a bill of this nature is passed it is essential that the city of Oshawa should have some idea of what the economic effect of the seaway is going to be on that port as well as on the other ports of the great lakes. It is known in the United States; it is known by a number of surveys that have been made there, as I will indicate on another occasion, not this one, what the effect of the seaway is and, because it has been known, large sums of money have been spent, for instance, in Milwaukee, in Duluth, in Chicago, in Buffalo, tremendous sums of money for port facilities, awaiting the movement of foreign-going vessels up the great lakes. But what have we done?

I made a motion in the House of Commons the other day for the production of a report from the Minister of Public Works as to what had transpired between the international section and the foot of lake Ontario. The minister opposed the motion and would not produce the report so that the house could know, so that Canada could know, what the officers of this department were doing about the development, industrial or otherwise, arising out of this new seaway and what effect it would have upon the various areas.

I could point to two such surveys which were made in the United States. I have one in mind now which is directly opposite the shore which extends from the international section at St. Regis right up to the foot of lake Ontario. On the Canadian side we have absolutely nothing, but on the United States side every port extending from Rooseveltown right up to Oswego has been surveyed and publicized with all sorts of information and data to give to the public to encourage industry to go there, as well as to encourage the state in case they should be interested in developing port facilities in that area.

It is a good thing to set up this commission. I am sure it will be a good thing for the city of Oshawa. I am sure that Oshawa wants it. But to what extent do we, in this country, know what the effect of the seaway will be on the Canadian side of the line? I believe that before very long this government will have to come to the conclusion it will have to spend large sums of money in order to assist industry to establish itself in these areas.

Mr. Hees: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Hees: May I ask him what the previous government did in the way of providing the Windsor harbour commissioners with this information before they set up the Windsor harbour commissioners in 1957 at a time when the St. Lawrence seaway was approaching completion and at a time, if what he says is correct, they should have had some information on what the St. Lawrence seaway would do.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister has asked a question, and I think he is entitled to a reply. The reply is this, that the problem did not arse at that time.

Mr. Hees: Well, why?

Mr. Chevrier: At that time there was one problem with which the house was charged and with which the Department of Transport was charged, and it was the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway. Surely the house will not think that it was illogical to complete the seaway first, then having built it, to give some consideration afterwards to the port facilities that are required along the waterway, both on the St. Lawrence and on the great lakes.

Mr. Hees: May I ask the hon. member another question, then?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Hees: Is it not, then, equally logical to first set up the Oshawa harbour commission, and then proceed with the kind of studies that will be beneficial to that harbour commission, as you have suggested?

Mr. Chevrier: No, I do not think so. I think the first thing the minister should have done was to establish the economic survey for which I asked two years ago.

Mr. Hees: Like you did in 1957 when you set up the Windsor harbour commissioners.

Mr. Chevrier: If he had established the economic survey then he, and his colleague the Minister of Public Works, would be in a position to tell the city of Oshawa to what extent port facilities could be built there. As it is now—

Mr. Starr: I rise on a question of privilege; I have listened intently to what the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) has said. I am getting a little worried because we have enjoyed a good economic situation in Oshawa.

Mr. Chevrier: What is the question of privilege?

Mr. Starr: The question of privilege is this, that the hon. member is insisting upon an economic survey. I want to inform him that a team—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Starr: An economic survey has been made by a team composed of—

Mr. Speaker: Order; the hon. member has not indicated any question of privilege. If he—

Mr. Starr: I think he is trying to ruin our economy in Oshawa.

Mr. Speaker: Order; if the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) finds that the hon. member for Laurier, who has the floor, is making any statement which he feels he must contradict, he will have an opportunity of doing so at the end of the hon. member's remarks.

Mr. Chevrier: I want to show how ridiculous the interruption of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) has been because if the suggestion which I made several years ago had been followed, then it would not have been necessary to make economic surveys for each and every port. An over-all economic survey of the whole position would have been made, and what is more that economic survey was done in part and I am sure that if the Minister of Transport had been left alone he would have completed the economic survey. If he had, then we would know whether it is necessary to spend $100 million to develop port facilities along our waterways or $500 million. As it is now, we do not know.

Mr. Hees: I rise on a question of privilege. I have been accused of not doing something. Of course, if such a survey were needed, then it should have been done by the St. Lawrence seaway authority when the hon. member was president of it and before the seaway was completed.

Mr. Speaker: Order; the minister will have his opportunity to speak later.

Mr. Chevrier: Apparently the Minister of Transport does not like this.

Mr. Hees: I do not like nonsense as you are talking about it.

Mr. Chevrier: If it is nonsense, then here is the committee on railways, canals and telegraphs lines, in vast majority composed of members from the other side of the house, who accepted this recommendation but the minister would not put it into effect. If the minister had followed the recommendation made by the committee, the majority of whose members were from his own party, then he would have conducted an economic survey, as he should have.

So far as his colleague is concerned, the Minister of Public Works, the arrogant Minister of Public Works, who is not here at this time but who attacks other members of this house when absent.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): You only say it because he is not here.

Mr. Chevrier: I will say it in his presence. What I am saying now is that he attacks other members of the house when they are not here. I say that the arrogant Minister of Public Works has refused—

Mr. Grafftey: Thin skinned prima donna.

Mr. Chevrier: I say that the arrogant—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Chevrier: No, it is not ten o'clock yet. I still have a minute. I think that if the Minister of Public Works were only to follow the example given on the other side of the international border by other groups who are making very serious surveys of every part, as I will have an occasion of showing at a later date, from the international section at St. Regis right through to the foot of lake Ontario, then he will see how important it is for these areas to obtain the facilities to which they are entitled. In so far as the city of Oshawa is concerned, if only that survey had been made, then the city would be in a far better position than it is today to ascertain what the future needs of the community will be.

An hon. Member: Are you opposed to the bill?

Mr. Chevrier: No, I am not opposed to the bill.

Mr. Ricard: But you talk against it.

Mr. Chevrier: No, I do not speak against it. I said, on the contrary, we would support the bill. I think it is an excellent idea that all the ports on our side of the line should set themselves up with commissions such as this, provided and on condition that they have some idea from the government in office what the industrial possibilities are in the future. In so far as the communities extending all the way down from the city of Toronto to St. Regis are concerned, there are very few of them that know what the future holds for them.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what the business is for tomorrow?

Mr. Churchill: We will continue with the items that I called yesterday, but I will name them again. The first will be Bill No. S-5, an act to incorporate the Oshawa harbour commissioners, followed by Bill No. S-10 with regard to the Nanaimo harbour commissioners; Bill No. S-2, the Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement Act; Bill No. S-7, an act to repeal certain fisheries laws of Newfoundland; the next item would be the resolution in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare pertaining to the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Chevrier: What number is that?

Mr. Churchill: That is No. 15 on today's order paper. The sixth item would be No. 8 on today's order paper, namely Bill No. S-27, an act to control and regulate the sale of feeds. The seventh item would be Bill No. S-28, an act respecting a certain trade agreement between Canada and Australia. That is for Wednesday. On Thursday there will be interim supply followed by the estimates of the departments of agriculture, fisheries and post office. That is for Thursday and Friday.

It being two minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, May 18, 1960

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BRASSARD (CHICOUTIMI)—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN "LA PRESSE"

Mr. Vincent Brassard (Chicoutimi): Mr Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday, the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) raised a point of privilege regarding a letter published in La Presse of Montreal for April 9, 1960. I could attempt to seek refuge in the fact that his intervention came rather late, but I want to say I had never intended to question the impartiality of the deputy chairman of the house, or that of his assistant.

The sole burden of my complaint in the letter in question was that it is sometimes difficult for a new member, who is not in the habit of rising very often and does not know too much about parliamentary usage to catch the eye of the person chairing the committees.

Let me add that, if what I wrote could be construed as even an implicit reflection on the deputy speaker or his assistant, I consider it a pleasure and a duty to withdraw what may have been interpreted as a charge or even an insinuation of partiality.

I appreciate that the task of the person presiding over a committee of the whole house is not at all an easy one, and if, unintentionally, I have caused him any pain or embarrassment, I sincerely regret it, and I hope that both he and the house will accept my most sincere apologies.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Chicoutimi has made a statement which the house has heard. The matter was raised yesterday, as hon. members will recall, as a question of privilege and a motion was tendered which was reserved until the hon. member was in his place. The statement he has made which, if I may express an opinion, seems to be a complete retraction of anything that was offensive and a disclaimer of an intent to be offensive to the Chairman or Deputy Chairman of course will be considered by the house, by the mover of the motion and by those who were affected, and I hope will be considered as satisfactory.

For myself, there was a reference in the extract which was read yesterday relating to the practice of recognizing hon. members in the course of debate which was somewhat erroneous. The practice has been clear, I think, throughout the years that in debate hon. members are recognized alternatively from each side of the house.

The other point raised was about a list of speakers. It is true that lists are submitted to the Chair to advise him of those who have the intention of speaking but of course the list has no binding force as has often been stated by Speakers.

Having said that I leave it up to the hon. members concerned and the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, whose motion stands for disposition.

Mr. C. E. Rea (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, though the hon. member for Chicoutimi referred to both the Deputy Speaker and the deputy chairman I, of course, can only speak for myself. However, after hearing his remarks I will be very happy to accept his apology.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not think any apology is owing to me arising out of the remarks by the hon. member for Chicoutimi, and I am not looking for that. I do think, however, that implicit in his speech was a reflection not only on the deputy chairman but also upon my position as a member of this group and of the house. I think it is worth while pointing out that in that debate from the resolution stage right through, this group had four speakers. I checked the possible time by the length of the speeches, and I think it would come to less than one-twentieth of the debate. The effect of this letter would indicate, of course, that we had taken an inordinate amount of time as some matter of right recognized by you. I believe it should be made clear that on this occasion and on all others our group has no inordinate privilege and does not claim any.

I merely wanted to say I have always had the greatest respect for the deputy chairman, but I can underline the fact that we have had no personal contact of any kind for many months, which would indicate that he was not in any secret agreement with my view.

Termination of Summit Conference

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I have heard the explanations and apologies offered by the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Brassard), which, in the circumstances, are satisfactory. Therefore, by leave of the house, I wish to withdraw the motion I introduced yesterday.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member. Since the motion had not been placed before the house, it is not necessary to obtain the consent of the house for its withdrawal.

MR. PEARSON—PRESS AND RADIO REPORTS OF REMARKS ON SUMMIT CONFERENCE

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I rise on a question of privilege arising out of a report which appeared in this morning's press, and was carried by the C.B.C. news service, dealing with observations which the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) and I are reported to have made yesterday on the situation in Paris. One paragraph of this report reads:

At the same time, they—

That refers to the two members.

—described as "unnecessary" and "unforgivable" the pre-summit mistakes of the United States inherent in the U-2 spy plane incident.

In the interests of accuracy in such a very important matter I should like to put on record that neither inside nor outside the house have I used that word "unforgivable" in this connection.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUMMIT CONFERENCE—STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON TERMINATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I should say a word at this time regarding the abrupt termination of the summit meeting in Paris. There was an opportunity for progress and improvement at this meeting which had awakened the hopes of millions of people throughout the world. For reasons of his own, reasons which I think all members of this house regard as totally unjustifiable, Chairman Khrushchev has refused to meet with the other participants. By so doing he ended, before the sessions had properly begun, all hopes of achievement at this conference.

Any cause for complaint which the Soviet leader may have felt had been removed by President Eisenhower's assurances on May 16 that over-flights had been stopped and would not be resumed. The president did this even though there was no indication that the Soviet union was willing to give equal assurances that objectionable activities for which it was responsible would also end.

There have been periods in the past when east-west relations were characterized by sustained acrimony, but recently it had been the expectation of people everywhere in the world that we were moving into a better era where we would solve our problems by reasonable negotiation. I think I express the views of all hon. members of this house when I say that despite the tragic international drama of yesterday and the developments of the last few days, mankind has not been thrown all the way back into the frightening gloom of the cold war.

The NATO council will meet tomorrow. The NATO powers have been working and will continue to work toward the establishment of good relations between east and west as a basis for negotiation and settlement. It remains essential that despite the admitted setbacks of the last few days, efforts to make progress toward peace and security must not be abandoned, for the return to cold war will be as detrimental to east and west, as a relaxation of tensions will be beneficial to both.

There are only two ways in which our differences can be settled. We in the west believe in negotiation. With the collapse of the summit meeting I believe it more imperative than ever that negotiations be continued in Geneva on disarmament and on the suspension of nuclear weapons tests.

These events of the last 48 hours have confirmed the need for the western nations to remain on guard. We are now entering a period of reassessment and re-examination. The roseate hopes of the last few months have certainly been clouded in the last few hours. This is a time, however, for review and reflection, not for provocation or incitement. We should shortly learn the attitude that the Russians will adopt on disarmament, on the nuclear test talks, on Berlin and on the expansion of trade and cultural contacts. When we learn this we will know whether or not future relations will be determined in the same abrupt manner that was displayed by Chairman Khrushchev in Paris.

The restraint and dignity and high sense of purpose with which the western leaders attempted to overcome the difficulties which Mr. Khrushchev had put in the way deserve recognition and support. I want to associate the Canadian government with the views of the three western leaders as expressed in the communique just issued. The words they used were these:

They regret that these discussions, so important for world peace, could not take place. For their part they remain unshaken in their conviction that all outstanding international questions should be settled not by the use or threat of force but by peaceful means through negotiation. They themselves remain ready to take part in such negotiations at any suitable time in the future.

Speaking again for the Canadian government I wish to say that we are ready to do anything we can appropriately do to further this policy as enunciated by the western leaders.

Finally, however deplorable Mr. Khrushchev's action in Paris, he is mistaken if he thinks he can divide the west by such tactics. On the contrary, his tactics have already served to strengthen the resolve of the western countries to remain united.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Prime Minister's statement gives a very realistic view of the situation that confronts the world at this time. On behalf of the official opposition I should like to assure him of our wholehearted support for anything that can be done by our government in the furtherance of this viewpoint. I am sure there is no difference of opinion in the house on that.

There is no point in trying to disguise the fact that the news from Paris has been bad and perhaps is now worse in the light of the nature and content of the press conference given this morning by the leader of the Soviet union. However, this is no time for panic, any more than it is a time for yielding to the temptation to give up in the search for peace. It is also no time to weaken the unity of all peace-loving nations in that search, as the Prime Minister has so well pointed out.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that it was important to make every effort to save the conference in Paris, and also to make it quite clear where the responsibility for the failure of that conference lies. I believe the western leaders have done that. But it is equally important, as the Prime Minister has pointed out, for the west to make sure, in so far as the western countries can make sure, that the break-up of the conference does not mean the break-down of this effort to solve international problems and secure the peace.

Perhaps we of the western countries can draw some necessary conclusions from the failure of this conference. One must be as to the dangers and the disabilities of diplomacy at the summit in the circumstances in which we find ourselves today, and the desirability of conducting diplomatic negotiations, whenever and wherever possible, under the auspices of the United Nations. So it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, at this time more than ever, that firmness and patience; wise, and carefully considered actions and words are required.

The Prime Minister has mentioned a meeting of the NATO council, I think he said tomorrow, and I think that is a good development. Perhaps the government has already given consideration to the desirability of a minister being in Paris, if that is possible, in view of the fact that the foreign ministers of three western countries presumably will be attending that meeting.

In any event, whatever the government does on this, they can be assured of the wholehearted support of the opposition in any move they may make to ease the situation and strengthen our chances for peace.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, we in the C.C.F. group were impressed by the restraint, constructive tone and content of the Prime Minister's statement. We agree with the general tenor of his remarks, and he can be assured, as Prime Minister of this country, that he will have the full support of the C.C.F. party in any efforts made by Canada in the important work toward peace that lies ahead.

It was exceedingly regrettable to see the summit conference disintegrate. We have expressed, on previous occasions, our criticism of the U-2 spy plane incident. We feel that was a mistake. But even with that mistake having been made, this was no excuse for Premier Khrushchev to torpedo the peaceful hopes of tens of millions of people in the world. We are impressed by and appreciative of the continuing good work which has been done by Prime Minister Macmillan in attempting to bring the heads of governments together, and by his attempt to salvage something before the conference disintegrated.

I noticed the Prime Minister's statement that the NATO powers will be meeting tomorrow to discuss this situation. I would hope the NATO powers would resist any temptation to mimic the bluster and threat of the Soviet leader. This is no time, in our opinion, for the rattling of swords or for the taking of a threatening posture. This is the time for the NATO powers to show unity, yes, and a fervent desire for peace and an amicable settlement. We hope the Geneva conference discussions will continue, and that from this conference may be salvaged some type of agreement.

No matter what the antics of the various leaders of the world, we are convinced that the peoples of the world want peace, whether those peoples live in the Soviet union, in the United States or in any other nation of the world. And mankind will judge the leaders of all nations on the basis of their integrity, their sincerity and their willingness to compromise in the interests of peace. We hope that even with these disastrous climaxes to the summit conference steps will be taken in the near future to improve trade relations, to go forward with cultural exchanges and to continue—yes, if possible on an increasing scale—the interchange of visits between peoples of all the nations of the world.

At this time we are hopeful that the United Nations may be able to take action that will strengthen the cause of peace, whether this action be through a meeting of the United Nations security council or a meeting of the general assembly. No matter with which party one sits in the Canadian House of Commons, I think all of us are determined to do our best as we see it in the interests of peace, coexistence, mutual understanding and the preservation of the ideals that we hold so dear.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I reiterate that the Canadian government in every effort it puts forward, whether it be by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) or any other representative, will have the complete and wholehearted support of the C.C.F. while we are convinced that these efforts are being directed toward the firmer establishment of peace in the world.

COMMUNICATIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ESTABLISHMENT OF EMERGENCY CONTROL ORGANIZATION

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the government has had under consideration for some time the problem of arranging for effectual governmental control of the national telecommunications systems under nuclear war conditions. The conclusion has now been reached that if the government as a whole, its various agencies and private users with essential wartime functions, are to make the best use of the telecommunications services available after a nuclear attack, it is necessary to develop an emergency organization which would exist in nucleus form in peacetime as a planning agency, and in emergency would function as the executive agency of government in controlling and administering the national communications systems including radio and television broadcasting.

The organization is to be known as the emergency national telecommunications organization, or ENTO. It will be developed within the Department of Transport and be under the control of the Minister of Transport in whom, by virtue of the Radio Act, the Telegraph Act, the Railway Act and the Canada Shipping Act, extensive authority over telecommunications in Canada is already vested.

In the discharge of its responsibility ENTO will be advised by a committee of senior representatives of other government departments having a major interest in telecommunications. Advice from commercial telecommunication agencies will also be sought.

STARRED QUESTIONS

POTATO TRANSPORTATION SUBSIDY—P.E.I.-NFLD.

Question No. 144—Mr. Batten:

What was the total subsidy paid by the government of Canada through the maritimes transportation commission for the transportation of potatoes from Prince Edward Island to Newfoundland for each of the years 1957, 1958, 1959?

He said: Mr. Speaker, from discussions dealing with this question it appears that the information requested is not easily obtainable. I would therefore respectfully request Your Honour's permission to withdraw this question and present it later in a form in which it can be more readily answered.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to withdraw question No. 144?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and question withdrawn.

ADMITTANCE OF IMMIGRANTS BY ORDER IN COUNCIL

Question No. 151—Mr. Howard:

1. How many persons, if any, falling within the prohibited classes referred to in regulation 20 made pursuant to section 61 of the Immigration Act have been admitted into Canada by special order-in-council during 1956, 1957, 1958, 1959 respectively?

2. How many persons, if any, shown as of Russian ethnic origin but born in Asia have been admitted to Canada since 1945, and by virtue of what statute or authority was each so admitted?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 is: By the authority of the governor in council exceptions may be made to any of the immigration relations. Separate statistics are not maintained for the number of exceptions to any one regulation.

The answer to part 2 is: Statistics of immigrants by country of birth in relation to ethnic origin are not available.

IRENE REBRIN—POSSESSION OF FEDERAL FILES

Question No. 152—Mr. Howard:

1. Was any person in the (a) Department of Citizenship and Immigration; (b) the Department of Justice, in possession of a file on Irene Rebrin between March 18, 1960 and March 21, 1960 inclusive?

2. If so, what is the name of each such person, and the date upon which he had such a file in his possession?

3. Has any such person since resigned from his employment? If so, who and for what reason?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am answering this question on behalf of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) as well as myself.

The answer to part 1 is: Between the above mentioned dates there were several files on Miss Irene Rebrin in the Department of Citizenship and Immigration; there was no file on this person in the Department of Justice. However, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police had a file on Miss Rebrin.

It is considered that it would be contrary to established principles to give the names of departmental personnel who have handled particular cases on particular dates. I know of no instance in the past where such information has been made available. Even if it were possible to trace precisely the routings of a particular active file, I do not consider it would be in the public interest to contravene this principle.

Part 2 of the question is therefore answered by the answer to part 1.

With respect to part 3, while the answer to this part of the question is made subject to the answer given to part 1, it may be stated categorically for the information of the hon. member and the house, that whatever resignations may have occurred have taken place for reasons unconnected with the Irene Rebrin case.

SECURITY RISK INFORMATION

Question No. 153—Mr. Howard:

1. When a person is classified as a "security risk" by (a) the Department of Citizenship and Immigration; (b) the Department of Justice, is such a classification established on the basis of information specifying the nature and substance of the allegation?

2. Does the information upon which a person is classified as a "security risk" come from sources outside the (a) Department of Citizenship and Immigration (b) Department of Justice? If so, from where?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am answering this question also on behalf of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and myself.

The answer to part 1 is: Where a problem arises in which security considerations are relevant, all available information is obtained from the appropriate security advisers and a decision as to the action to be taken in the particular case is made by the departments concerned on the basis of that information.

The answer to part 2 is: Information on security questions is obtained from sources outside the departments of citizenship and immigration and justice. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police is the body responsible for gathering and providing such information.

2. If so, from whom have representations been received?

3. What were the nature of the representations, and what was the nature of any reply?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would let this question stand, as all the information needed to answer this question has not been received.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Question stands.

3. By whom was he recommended?

4. What position does he hold?

GEORGIAN BAY AIRCRAFT LTD.

Question No. 156—Mr. Chevrier:

1. Since Georgian Bay Aircraft Limited has been licensed to operate a class 4 charter commercial air service (with group C aircraft) on May 21, 1959 and to operate a class 4 charter commercial air service (with group B aircraft) on December 21, 1959, in all its bases, have there been any complaints of illegal operation?

2. If so, by whom?

3. Has an investigation been made of these complaints?

4. With what result?

5. What action has been taken?

Starred Questions

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in reply to parts 1 and 2, there have been a number of complaints of illegal operations filed with the air transport board by Austin Airways Limited.

In reply to parts 3, 4 and 5, the board conducted an investigation in each case, and finding infractions had been committed sent letters of warning to Georgian Bay Airways Limited.

Question No. 157—Mr. Chevrier:

1. Have any complaints been lodged against Georgian Bay Aircraft Limited?
2. If so, what was the nature of the complaints?
3. Was an investigation made into these complaints and by whom?
4. What was the result of the investigation?
5. Has any action been taken on the complaints?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in reply to parts 1 and 2, Austin Airways Limited in June, 1959, protested against certain charges provided for in the filed tariff of Georgian Bay Airways Limited as being unfair and unjust.

With respect to parts 3, 4 and 5, the matter was investigated by the air transport board, the rates per mile and per hour and the minimum charges per flight were considered to be out of line with those of other carriers in the area, and as a result Georgian Bay Airways Limited revised its charter tariff by making adjustments.

AVIATION COMPANY BANKRUPTCIES, SERVICE SUSPENSIONS, ETC.

Question No. 158—Mr. Chevrier:

1. Since the new policy was announced by the Minister of Transport to decontrol group C on July 18, 1958, and later to decontrol group B on December 21, 1958, have any such aviation companies gone into bankruptcy? If so, how many?
2. How many have applied for a suspension of services?
3. Why were such companies not in a position to operate such services?
4. How many companies have applied for cancellation of permit?
5. How many permits have been cancelled by the air transport board?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): With respect to part 1, it is known that six aviation companies have gone into bankruptcy since July 18, 1958. Of these, all but one were licensed prior to the coming into effect of the government's new policy.

In regard to part 2, 38 have applied for suspension of services.

In reply to part 3, 26 of these were unable to carry out their proposals; four were not in a position to operate such services because of reorganization; four because of technical problems; two due to bankruptcy; and two others gave no detailed reasons.

With respect to part 4 the answer is 15.

With respect to part 5 the answer is 15.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION—PURCHASE OF PHARMACEUTICAL NILEVAR

Starred question No. 9—Correction of answer given on February 3.

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I would like to make a correction to an answer I made to the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) on February 3, 1960. At that time I answered that we had not purchased any drug known as nilevar.

Having gone through the very extensive list of drugs and contracts, I now wish to correct the statement I made on that date. The hon. member's question read as follows:

1. Since January 1, 1958, has the Department of Defence Production purchased a pharmaceutical known as nilevar?
2. If so, what was (a) the date of each purchase; (b) the unit or units by which the pharmaceutical was purchased; (c) the purchase price for such unit or units; (d) the name and address of the supplier?

The answer to the first question should be yes.

The answer to the second part of the question reads as follows:

(a)	(b)	(c)	(d)
Date of Purchase	Unit of Purchase	Unit Price	Name and Address of Supplier
April 10, 1958	bottles of 50 tablets, 10 mgm.	$15.70 per bottle	G. D. Searle & Co. of Canada Limited, Brampton, Ont.
December 15, 1959	bottles of 50 tablets, 10 mgm.	$12.20 per bottle	G. D. Searle & Co. of Canada Limited, Brampton, Ont.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

PREVAILING RATES EMPLOYEES

Motion No. 100—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

For a copy of the regulations of treasury board governing prevailing rates employees.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The regulations of the treasury board in this respect were consolidated and are already a matter of public record. They appeared in the Canada Gazette of January 13, 1960. However, there was a recent amendment which may not yet have been published in the Gazette, and I will be pleased to table it.

Motion agreed to.

FEASIBILITY STUDY, P.E.I.-N.B. CAUSEWAY

Motion No. 107—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a copy of the current feasibility study of the proposed causeway between Prince Edward Island and the New Brunswick mainland.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member content that this motion stand?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): No, sir. The minister is no doubt aware that in the Charlottetown Guardian of a day or two ago it was announced—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The motion is not debatable. If the hon. member is not willing that it should stand—

Mr. Pickersgill: In that case I feel I must press my motion, because this information is being given in another place.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT PARIS MEETING ON MAY 19

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the Prime Minister what the government's intentions are in regard to Canadian representation on the NATO council meeting tomorrow in Paris.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Tomorrow the foreign ministers of the United Kingdom, the United States and France give a report of the proceedings to the NATO council. I think there will be two other foreign ministers present as well. Canada will be represented by Mr. Leger. If it is found that it might be beneficial to have a representative of the cabinet there, in the event of discussion continuing beyond tomorrow, then consideration will be given to appointing someone to represent the government because of the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) has other appointments which he cannot break at this time.

The probability is that within three weeks there will be a meeting in Paris of the foreign ministers of the NATO countries. In that event, of course, Canada will be represented.

In any event, as I have already said, if in consequence of developments tomorrow or the day after it becomes of importance that there should be additional representation to that provided by Mr. Leger, consideration will be given thereto.

INQUIRY AS TO VISIT BY U.K. DEFENCE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Minister of National Defence a question arising out of a report in a New York paper this morning under a London dateline to the effect that the minister of defence of the United Kingdom would be visiting Ottawa in a few days? Will the minister confirm this report?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Right Hon. Harold Watkinson has been invited to visit Canada on his way to the United States, and he will be in Ottawa on the 28th of this month, I believe.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ALGOMA—REQUEST FOR PROHIBITION OF SALE OF STANROCK URANIUM CONTRACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister received a telegram from the united steel workers of America, Algoma uranium area, stating that Rio Tinto is endeavouring to eliminate all other producers of uranium, and thus control the Canadian output, by the purchase of unexpired uranium contracts?

Will the minister comment on the request that the jobs of employees of the Stanrock company be protected by prohibiting the sale of Stanrock's uranium contract?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have received the telegram, Mr. Speaker. No decision has been reached yet with regard to the Stanrock mine. I am awaiting a report from the board of directors of Eldorado.

OIL

ARCTIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—REPORTED WITHDRAWAL OF U.S. CAPITAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. According to a New York publication, United States capital is pulling out of Canada's Arctic oil development program because of new tax regulations imposed by the Canadian government. Is the minister in a position to say whether or not United States companies are withdrawing their financial support of Arctic oil exploration?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): No, Mr. Speaker, the minister is not in a position to say. The deadline for the taking up of applications for permits in the north does not expire until next month.

PUBLIC WORKS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. H. Phillips (Prince): I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Public Works. Is the minister in a position to give a progress report on the proposed Prince Edward Island causeway situation?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for directing this question to me, along with preceding questions. While I regret exceedingly that it was not possible to give a reply to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate as to the feasibility or otherwise of the causeway, because it is impossible to do that—we have no such report—nevertheless I am very happy to accept the question of the hon. member for Prince as notice and to give at least, as I have done before in this house, a progress report as to the steps being taken up to the present time and what we anticipate taking in the future in regard to consideration of this whole possible causeway project.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask the minister a supplementary question. Can he say whether his attention has been drawn to a dispatch in the Charlottetown Guardian for May 12, 1960, in which there is a report that the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean) announced that Major General Young, who I presume is the minister's deputy, will give a report—and I quote these words——on the current feasibility study of the proposed causeway between Prince Edward Island and the New Brunswick mainland.

That was the precise subject of my motion.

Mr. Pearson: Not feasible in this house.

An hon. Member: Rights of parliament.

Mr. Walker: I can assure you there will be no statement of government policy made in Prince Edward Island by Major General Young which is not first made in this house. Apparently my friend is under some misapprehension. He asked for a report as to the feasibility of this project. There is no such thing as a report. When the project is found to be feasible or not feasible a report will be made to the house.

Mr. Benidickson: By you or by Major General Young?

Mr. Walker: In the meantime—if my friend will content himself, which I know it is difficult for him to do—

Mr. Pearson: It is difficult for you to get out of this one.

Mr. Walker: —we will be very happy to give a progress report just as soon as possible. I believe we have already given two, because I know that this matter is of great interest to anyone from the maritimes.

Mr. Pickersgill: A further supplementary question. May I ask the minister whether it is true that the deputy minister is giving a report in Charlottetown tomorrow on the current feasibility study of the proposed causeway between Prince Edward Island and the New Brunswick mainland, as announced in the press?

Mr. Walker: It is true that the deputy minister of public works is giving in Charlottetown tomorrow, to the assembled chambers of commerce of the island, a study report as to what has been done in connection with the causeway and as to the further work that will be done in the future in the matter of research.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Public Works. If, as he has said, there was no report, why did he not say so instead of having a vote of the house?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, the distinguished member for Welland cannot have been following the debate between the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and myself. When the house was considering his order for return with respect to the feasibility report—

Mr. Pickersgill: Motion, not starred question.

Mr. Walker: —I could do nothing but ask that it stand, and the matter was not open for debate.

PUBLIC SERVICE

HOUSE OF COMMONS—EXTENSION OF SALARY INCREASES TO STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Finance has recently had the opportunity to enjoy the invigorating and salubrious climate of British Columbia, I wish to ask him a question. As the minister is one of the commissioners of internal economy, has he any further information to give the house with respect to increases in salary for stenographic and other staff of the House of Commons?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with your permission perhaps I might say that question is under examination by the commissioners of internal economy.

REQUEST THAT RECENT INCREASES BE MADE RETROACTIVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of a statement in the Ottawa Citizen of Monday, May 16, in which Fred W. Whitehouse of the civil service federation of Canada is reported as stating that the setting of May 1 as the date for the latest salary increases was a completely arbitrary action, and that government policy on salaries has created—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is proceeding to present a point of view rather than ask a question. If he wishes to ask a question about the matter, which is one of current interest, he may do so.

Mr. Argue: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I may say I did not wish to discriminate between the presidents of the two civil service organizations, and I had a quotation from Mr. Cal Best which I will not use.

My question of the Minister of Finance is, has the government given any consideration to making the latest civil service salary increases retroactive to April 1, and thus removing this anomaly?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The increases to which the hon. gentleman has referred were made effective from April 1. This was the announcement, and it was done with the approval of the government.

[Later:]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Assiniboia's question was not put to me in the same form as the notice which he gave me. I have not seen the newspaper articles to which he has referred, having been absent the past several days. If his reference is not to the group that was announced earlier but to the cleaners, elevator operators and persons in that category, the latter increase was made effective May 1.

Mr. Argue: That was my question. I was floored by the minister's reply, but I took it he knew the facts so I had no comment to make. Then I ask the question again. Will the government give consideration to making those increases which were effective May 1 retroactive to April 1, as I take it has been requested by the civil service organizations?

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was a matter of decision that the increases for that particular group should be made effective May 1. As I indicated in the earlier statement on this subject, as the civil service commission and treasury board have an opportunity to complete their studies of the various categories and classifications, those increases will be brought into effect at what is considered, in each case, the appropriate time.

Mr. Argue: I think you are making a mistake.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STATUS OF ORDER IN COUNCIL P.C. 4365, RESPECTING ACTIVE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Defence whether he has had an opportunity to get a legal interpretation of P.C. 4365, dealing with the Canadian forces, from the point of view of whether, with reference to the restoration of peace in the Republic of Korea, the order in council is still in effect or has been repealed.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Order in council P.C. 4365 of September 9, 1950, placed on active service all components of the Canadian navy, army and air force described in the National Defence Act as being regular forces. That order in council has not been repealed, and the regular forces of this country are still on active service. I have obtained a legal opinion on this matter, and it is confirmed that by virtue of this order in council the regular forces are still on active service.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): A supplementary question. I believe this order in council was passed at the time of the Korean conflict. Would it not be appropriate now to supersede it with a new order in council so that members of the armed forces in Quebec would not be disenfranchised?

Mr. Pearkes: It is not considered necessary to have it replaced by another order in council. It is still in effect; and as there are large numbers of Canadian forces in different parts of the world it is considered advisable for that and other reasons to keep them on active service.

FLOODS

TIMMINS, ONT.—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister inform the house whether a request has been received from the Ontario provincial government for financial assistance in the rehabilitation of the victims of the Mount Joy flood? If so, will the Prime Minister advise the house whether any government decision has been reached in this regard?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I will have to take the question as notice.

FOLEYET, ONT.—SUGGESTED CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGES BY ARMY ENGINEERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that the town of Foleyet has been completely isolated, and in view of the serious danger to health in that community, can the minister say whether it will be possible to get assistance from army engineers to instal Bailey bridges in order to repair the road link between Timmins and Foleyet as quickly as possible?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Before any assistance can be given it is necessary for application to be made through the provincial government. No such application has yet been made.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Is the Prime Minister in a position now to deal with the question I asked the other day with respect to assistance for the people of Foleyet and vicinity?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I do not think there is anything I can add to what I said on that occasion.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INSTRUCTIONS RESPECTING RELEASE OF FIGURES TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister inform the house whether instructions have been issued to the unemployment insurance commission not to divulge to members of parliament unemployment figures available from local or regional offices in their respective areas?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I know of no such directive having been issued by the national employment service, but I will be glad to check into the matter to see whether there is any substance to what the hon. member says.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. Has the Minister of Labour given any instructions to the unemployment insurance commission or to any government servant that members of parliament are not to be supplied with information that it has always been regarded as a right of the representatives of the people to have?

Mr. Starr: On the contrary, I have relaxed the practice that had been in force under the previous government.

(Translation):

TRADE AND COMMERCE

SMALL BUSINESS BRANCH—INQUIRY TO BILINGUAL EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill). Is the minister aware that, in the small business branch, not a single employee can speak or understand French? If such is the case, is the minister considering any action to improve this situation?

(Text):

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will look into the matter immediately, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO NUMBER OF STARTS DURING APRIL, 1960

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Will the minister inform the house as to the number of housing starts made during April in areas of 5,000 population and over?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Did the hon. member give notice of his question?

Mr. Garland: Yes, I did.

Mr. Speaker: It should properly go on the order paper, being a question asking for statistical information, but if the minister has the information I do not wish to prevent him giving it.

Mr. Benidickson: He is here today.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I would be glad to answer the hon. member for Nipissing. In municipalities of 5,000 population and over starts up to the end of April, 1960 numbered 13,942, and starts up to the end of April, 1959 numbered 22,764. Members of the house will be glad to learn that completions for the same period, from January 1 to the end of April, 1960, amounted to 29,101 this year and 27,434 in the same period last year.

Mr. Garland: I thank the minister for the information. If I heard him correctly, this represents a drop in housing starts of about 41 per cent. I wonder whether the minister would care to comment on an item that appeared in the Montreal Gazette of May 16, indicating that the federal government is said to be scouting the possibility of raising new funds for housing without approaching the market directly.

Mr. Walker: I have not read the Montreal Gazette, although I hope to some time.

Mr. Garland: I will be glad to supply it.

AGRICULTURE

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS—REQUEST FOR OPPORTUNITY TO PRESENT ALTERNATIVE PROPOSAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether, now that the Prime Minister is back, he has found it possible to answer the representations made to him by western farmers for a conference with the government with regard to an alternative proposal to meet their particular situation?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I think the hon. member should address his question to the Prime Minister rather than to me.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the Minister of Agriculture not consider looking over toward the Prime Minister to see that I get some kind of reply from someone?

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In view of the importance of this matter I wonder whether, since the Prime Minister's return, he has had an opportunity of conferring with his colleagues to fix a date for the delegation from western Canada that wishes to discuss with the government a proposal in the alternative, in view of the fact that the request for deficiency payments was turned down by the government. I am sure the Prime Minister will recognize that this question has to be settled very soon.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I can understand the interest of the hon. gentleman, since he has become the agriculture expert and is particularly interested in western agriculture problems. However, I would say, speaking seriously, that this matter is under consideration.

[Mr. Walker.]

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Would the Prime Minister be able to give the answer before June 8, 1960?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have no idea what that date has to do with this question. As usual, political considerations are felt only on the other side of the house.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the minister of northern affairs whether he could inquire to see if it would be possible to bring down returns to order No. 11 of February 2, 1959; order No. 15 of February 2, 1959 and order No. 101 of April 15, 1959, because there are several hon. members who would like to have that information.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I shall be glad to see what I can do to hurry them along.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could direct a similar question to the Minister of Public Works. Will he see that returns are made to order No. 122 and order No. 123 of May 11, 1959?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I shall be happy to look into that matter.

PARLIAMENT HILL

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON WORK IN FRONT OF BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Can the Minister of Public Works give any information to the house concerning the unusual disturbance which is taking place along the east side of the west block, extending from Wellington street to the parliament buildings?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Is it a human disturbance or are the statues being desecrated? What are the particulars?

Mr. Robichaud: To be more precise, can the minister tell the house the type of work which is going on from Wellington street to the parliament buildings?

Mr. Walker: I understand they are digging a hole.

Mr. Robichaud: What is the purpose of the digging?

Mr. Walker: To carry gas—natural gas.

Mr. Denis: Is it from Quebec?

Mr. Robichaud: Is this another step in the government's new policy of displacing the use of coal in government-owned buildings?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): May I ask a further supplementary question. Can the minister say whether this is for input or output?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JACQUES CARTIER BRIDGE, MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO PROSECUTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether a decision has been taken to proceed with or withdraw the prosecutions of the former toll collectors on the Jacques Cartier bridge who have been served with warrants.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): So far as I know, Mr. Speaker, it is still the intention to prosecute. In the light of the decision of the judge in the first preliminary inquiry, however, consideration has to be given to the form of the charges that should be laid.

YUKON ACT

INCREASE IN COUNCIL MEMBERSHIP—CHANGES RESPECTING COURTS, ETC.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-59, to amend the Yukon Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

OSHAWA HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS

ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION FOR MANAGEMENT AND DEVELOPMENT OF HARBOUR

The house resumed, from Tuesday, May 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle) for the second reading of Bill No. S-5, to incorporate the Oshawa harbour commissioners.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, we were entertained last night with some criticisms of the minister who is bringing in this bill from the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), the gist of which was that the minister and the government had failed properly to present surveys which would work out some kind of schedule for the expansion of ports such as Oshawa in relation to some master plan. We welcome this urge to socialistic planning which has been pushed by the hon. member for Laurier, and on behalf of this group I must express our disappointment at the introductory statement made by the minister.

I thought that if the minister could not, at least the hon. member from Oshawa, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), could have given us a little more general information about the matter. It is very difficult to know what is involved when you come from another part of the country or from a community similar to Oshawa but not in a metropolitan area. If you look at the map you will see that the harbour at Oshawa is a mile and a half from two railway tracks and several miles from the centre of town. It is not a developed harbour according to any impression one gets. There does not seem to be much at the harbour at the present time, although of course this has nothing to do with the capacity for growth.

To develop harbours costs a tremendous amount of money today, as we all know. One wonders why Oshawa wishes to have this commission if it is merely to administer the rather small properties which presently exist in the harbour. Surely in the community there is some master plan or vision of what they want to achieve. We have had no explanation with regard to that, which I would have thought would have been proper at this stage of the bill. It is apparent that Toronto has had tremendous harbour developments. Is it going to need a series of satellite harbours in the area to handle, for example, terminal traffic which would be distributed by buses? Is it the desire or hope that Oshawa harbour should eventually ship products overseas from its wharves? What is involved in terms of expanding Oshawa harbour to serve ocean-going ships which might take the products of the automobile factories abroad?

It seems to me that information like this should be given and put on the record. As it is, one is led to believe from the very brief statement of the minister that there might be a great deal of substance in the charges made by the hon. member for Laurier. I come from an area where the federal government has pumped millions of dollars over a very long time into a harbour and can appreciate what a drain on resources it is. There are a whole host of harbours along the St. Lawrence seaway and up into the great lakes which have had dreams or hopes of development on the seaway. The hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Campbell) is not in the house, but I know from talking to him that Cornwall had such dreams. I know that Port Credit has thought a great deal about its future, as well as other ports up along Georgian bay and lake Huron which have looked forward very much to such development.

Is this a case where Oshawa has been attracted by the bubble of the seaway, or is it just a very hard little group which has not any great prospect of drawing on large federal funds or even on provincial funds to develop a big harbour which fits into some sort of plan for servicing the metropolitan area of Toronto? I think we deserve this information and should be given it before second reading is over. I know that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), as he has told us, is so busy in other places that he cannot keep a hand on the myriad of detail in his department, but perhaps we could expect some information from the hon. member for Ontario. I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that before consent is given to second reading the hon. minister from Oshawa will be kind enough to enlighten us on the future prospects of this harbour, something which perhaps the Minister of Transport out of courtesy has left for him rather than invade his field as spokesman for the city of Oshawa.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I did mention quite briefly the establishment of a harbour commission when I spoke in the throne speech debate during this session of parliament. I realize I spoke quite briefly and I should probably enlarge now, for the benefit of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) in particular, on what the present situation is in respect to the area I represent, what the potentialities might be and what is actually necessary. The hon. member of course realizes that Oshawa is the home of General Motors and it is the motor city of Canada, with all due respect to Windsor. We have a population—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I am sure the hon. member recognizes the mistake involved in that last statement.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, at the approaches of the city of Oshawa there are large signs stating that Oshawa is the motor city of Canada and this has never been disputed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Self-advertising.

Mr. Starr: I am only going by the reputation which has been established in this respect by the great city of Oshawa. It has a population within its own boundaries of over 58,000 people. I do not know how big Port Arthur is as far as population is concerned, but I do not imagine it is much bigger than Oshawa. Industry has gradually saturated the areas west of Toronto and people are looking forward to locating themselves immediately east of the city of Toronto along the double lane highway, highway 401, the railway tracks and the harbour facilities which are available in this locality.

We have had a harbour for many years. It is not a large harbour compared with the ones at Port Arthur or Windsor, but it has been a very good harbour and a very useful one for the transportation of many materials which are produced nearby and for bringing in materials necessary for the livelihood of our community and the surrounding area. The industrial commissioners of the city of Oshawa have laid aside many acres of land running immediately north of the harbour for industrial development. They are planning on putting this forward. At the moment I am advised that a number of industries from outside Canada are particularly interested in locating here providing they have proper harbour facilities. This necessitates additional wharves because this area is on the opposite side of the present harbour facilities. We have had a team of people representing the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport come and assess the situation. Their reports are very favourable for the future. The location is excellent and as I say industry is inquiring about locating providing we can make these additional facilities available to them.

In order to have good, planned harbour facilities, city of Oshawa officials, the council and others interested, such as the industrial committee and the chamber of commerce, have asked that a commission be established so that they can devote their time to the orderly planning of their harbour for the future. I think it is a very wise and good housekeeping move to do this so that these things can be planned in order to bring about the maximum of good facilities which may be required in the future.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question before he sits down. What type of expenditure will be necessary in terms of dredging the harbour approaches to open the harbour to the kind of traffic that has given an indication of its interest in coming in? What is the draught of the present harbour?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, up until now that has been hard to ascertain. The present harbour has been dredged when required for something over two or three years. This would be something for the harbour commission to ascertain but the information has not been available. An established harbour commission may be able to give these facts and figures to those who are interested in the development of that immediate area.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I read this bill as supplied, and I find it follows almost word for word what is contained in Bill No. S-10 setting up a harbour commission in Nanaimo. I have been wondering what principle would be followed, should the bill now under discussion be approved, in deciding whether or not the government should give assistance to the commissioners to provide modern installations and facilities in this particular harbour.

According to this bill, the harbour commission in Oshawa will be an autonomous body. It will have the right to borrow money and, very likely, it will borrow money in order to provide facilities in that port. I recall a bill which was passed in 1957, at which time the government was empowered to lend the Hamilton harbour commission the sum of $4 million at 4⅛ per cent in order that better dockage and port facilities might be provided in the harbour at Hamilton. In addition to that, I believe the minister of public works of that day was authorized to spend $4 million in harbour improvements at Hamilton; there was an expenditure of $8 million of which a loan of only $4 million had to be repaid by the harbour commission.

I am not complaining that Hamilton got this help from the government, but I am asking why similar help is not extended to other harbour commissions. No doubt, because of the assistance given to Hamilton, the Hamilton harbour commission is able to offer a better rate to shippers using that port. I live along the Welland canal and I know that commodities are trucked to Hamilton to be loaded on boats that went through the canal down-bound the day before because the proper loading facilities are not provided at any ports along that waterway.

Mr. Speaker: If I may interrupt the hon. member to point out that the bill before us does not, of course, contain a principle concerning government financing of these boards. It sets up the commission, as the hon. member has properly said, in the same terms as other bills establishing harbour boards, and it would appear to me that what the hon. member is saying now would more properly be said when the estimates of the department, under which funds are made available for harbour commissions, are before us for consideration, particularly as the hon. member has ranged around other harbours besides Oshawa.

I think the hon. member is going beyond the scope of this bill and I blame myself, partly, for the situation which exists because yesterday a somewhat wide debate did take place on a similar subject.

Mr. McMillan: It occurred to me that inasmuch as this government is giving power to the harbour commissions to borrow money we should be able to discuss expenditures of the kind I have in mind. However, I will end by saying that if the government can do it in one case, why can they not do it for Windsor, Oshawa and other ports including those along the Welland canal?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should possibly have risen on the point of order before the hon. member for Welland completed his argument, but I do submit to you that your decision, if it is one already taken, or if it is one to be taken, ought to be related to the following situation. We have already had a debate on this matter on this particular bill—a debate which was not interrupted—and it would seem to me that whatever decision was taken on the bill which preceded this—a decision with which, as I said, I was not in agreement last evening —certainly in this particular instance there can be no reason, I submit with confidence, why there should be any limitation of the sort suggested. We are now being asked to approve a bill providing that a harbour commission be set up in Oshawa. We are surely not to be precluded from considering whether or not that commission would be able to do its work. If the hon. member suggests that a local harbour commission should be treated equitably with other harbour commissions, if he suggests that the harbour commission could not do its work properly in the absence of assistance from the federal government, that, surely, is a very germane argument. We listened last night to a discussion on this very point in which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) took part, and I say that though we may, of course, discuss this question on the estimates there is every reason, tactically and otherwise, why we should be able to discuss it on this particular bill. I submit with respect that the hon. member for Welland was in order, as other hon. members would be in order, in pursuing this particular line.

Mr. Speaker: I am prepared to accept the argument of the hon. member for Essex East that it would be in order in discussing this bill to indicate, for example, that the proposed commission would not be viable because it did not have sufficient funds. However, I felt that the hon. member for Welland was ranging beyond that.

Mr. B. C. Thompson (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is evident from this bill and the one which immediately preceded it that the government is taking an increased interest in those ports which border on the great lakes and which undoubtedly will be affected by the ever-increasing traffic on the St. Lawrence seaway.

I think it is very fitting and very necessary that this should be the case, and I hope that this increasing interest will also be directed toward the harbours at Cobourg, Colborne and Brighton in my riding which are centrally located on the north shore of lake Ontario and which, I am convinced, will one day be very important as a means of access to that particular area and also to the economy of the country as a whole.

I think that there is merit in what the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) has said about making a survey of all the ports which might be affected by the seaway, but I think it might have been more appropriate and more timely for him not only to have expressed this view but to have implemented it when as minister of transport in the former administration he had the opportunity to do so. I would think that any survey of this kind should have preceded the construction of the seaway rather than succeeded it, and I am sure that the citizens of Brighton, Colborne and Cobourg would take the view that such a survey should have been conducted long ago.

In view of the potential which the harbours located at these three points has to offer, I am sure that both the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) are keeping a close eye on these harbours, as they are keeping a close eye on all matters in their respective departments, and that the interest which the government is taking as evidenced by this bill will also be directed towards these three harbours.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to take this opportunity to make a few brief observations on this measure, not only with regard to Windsor but to all harbours and commissions.

As I understand it, there are three categories of harbours—those under the national harbour commissions themselves—and this includes, I believe, some 2,300 such harbours; those such as is now being proposed in Oshawa, and that in Windsor, and the ports in Hamilton, Toronto and New Westminster. If what the hon. gentleman has just said is true, and I do not believe it is, that what the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) was arguing, and what I was saying on the Windsor bill only points out that the previous administration should have taken this very step. I do not agree with that but assume for argument's sake that that is the case. Let us address ourselves to the particular situation. Hon. members opposite do not always need to say, "Well, the previous government did not do this or that." That may or may not be the situation. The point is, what can we do right now? The St. Lawrence seaway has been built. It is now a fact. It was formally opened while the present minister was in office. We want to take the fullest advantage of this great achievement in which the Canadian people have great pride and in order to do that, as I said last night, we ought to give to all of the ports on the great lakes equal opportunity for sharing in the achievement of the St. Lawrence seaway.

The port in Toronto, I notice, had an increase of 28 per cent in shipping last year and the port in Montreal enjoyed a 20 per cent increase. Halifax had a record year. These are achievements of which I am sure every Canadian will be proud and particularly the cities involved but what we want to see is other ports in other areas given an equal opportunity.

I can see great possibilities if the federal government will come to the assistance of local boards, giving some financial and other kinds of assistance such as some of the know-how which only the federal department has. There are some limitations in the know-how of some local communities in this work and there are certainly limited funds.

My own city of Windsor is a good example. We have lots of unemployment there. I am sure that if an imaginative approach is taken to this problem what now seems to be a limited opportunity can expand into a great opportunity for that community and in consequence for the country. As was pointed out, the Detroit river presents more river traffic than any other area in the world and if we will apply an imaginative approach to this problem we can see to it that the harbour in Windsor and that in Oshawa become great harbours, just as the harbours in Toronto, Hamilton and New Westminster have become great harbours. This will not happen unless a progressive policy is pursued by everyone in getting business.

In the case of Toronto they have the money now because of their great expansion and were able to send a Mr. Louis W. Byrne to New York where he has established an office for the purpose of drumming up business. I admire this aggressiveness on the part of the Toronto harbour commission and I would like to see the same thing done for my own city as I am sure the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) would like to see done for his. It cannot be expected that the mere setting up of a harbour commission in these places can accomplish that without having some help particularly in the beginning.

Financial help has been given to New Westminster and Hamilton as the minister knows. I am sure if the minister will address himself to the great vision of making sure that the achievement of the St. Lawrence seaway is made a reality to all communities where opportunities can be taken in that particular context, the vision I have portrayed will be found to be not an impossible one. I would hope that when the minister replies he would give some indication of his intentions in this regard.

I know that all governments, and properly so, want to be careful about incurring unnecessary expenditure. They want to give as much reliance to local effort as possible. That is commendable but that is not to say there are not situations where assistance from the federal authority to the community is not justified. In this instance I believe there is a strong argument for assistance. This was the view of the committee of 1958 when they made the unanimous recommendation referred to last evening and found at page 150 of the proceedings of that committee:

> The committee recommends for the consideration of the department the establishment of an economic survey to consider the effects of the St. Lawrence seaway project upon all regions of Canada.

I am not talking now about surveys of individual ports. This recommendation goes away beyond that. It calls for a survey to consider the effects of the St. Lawrence seaway project upon all regions. The fact is that has not been done. I do not think it is too strong to say that at the present time there has been no change whatever in the approach taken by the government to the various ports. There has been no thinking, no policy, no action. Nothing at all has been done. I am surprised because the minister who is not by any means without his imperfections is nevertheless a vigorous minister who addresses himself courageously to all matters that come within the compass of his activities. I would hope that the vigour and imagination which we know him to possess would be utilized in meeting this objective and in doing so it would further the purposes of the ports in Oshawa and Windsor—the latter of which interests the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Spencer) and myself in a special way—and other harbours.

I think there is a broad national interest in this problem. It is one that cannot be satisfied merely by leaving it to situations where we have a harbour commission established by act of parliament and leaving to them the complete development of the port over which they are given jurisdiction. Communities today do not have the means with which to do this by themselves. I will certainly be among those who will insist that local effort should be demonstrated but that does not preclude more than a casual interest on the part of the minister and the Department of Transport. I know the minister will give this matter the consideration which I ask.

Mr. N. L. Spencer (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of taking part in this debate but after listening to the words of my friend the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) I find that the division of way which I thought might not occur has arrived much sooner than I expected. I agree with the hon. member and with the report of the committee when it is stated that whether or not these commissions are set up at the instigation or request of the local municipalities it would be well to have a survey made of the potentialities of all the harbours along this greater waterway but I do not agree with the hon. member for Essex East that the present government is to be criticized in that respect. I am rather surprised that if the hon. member holds those views he did not express them during the time that he was a member of the previous government and particularly at the time when this project was under construction and the municipalities did not fully realize what would be the potentialities of harbour development as a result of the construction of that waterway.

The things the hon. member said today in so far as they apply to the present government apply equally to the government that was in office prior to 1957.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Except that there was no parliamentary recommendation at that time.

Mr. Spencer: I think my hon. friend will agree with me that with respect to the city of Windsor and the Windsor harbour commission no study was ever made by the previous government concerning the potentialities of Windsor harbour. Not one cent was spent. Not only that, no money was spent upon the harbour facilities that we then had in the city of Windsor. It has been left to the present government to take on and put in the renovations that are required in order to take advantage of the very facilities to which the hon. member referred.

This is the only point I wish to make. The things that are now being directed against the present government are the very things that the previous government failed to do.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us think boldly about the future.

Mr. Hees: Try and forget the past.

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I have one brief comment to make on the speech of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), and it is this. There is a danger in this situation that the municipalities may be led to feel that the bulk of the burden is going to fall on the federal government. I feel very strongly that in our debates here on all these cases it should be made clear there has to be a great deal of initiative shown on the part of the various places which think they are entitled to be made ports. I think if we look at those cities which have grown into substantial ports we shall find that that has been true as far as they are concerned. I hope nothing that takes place in relation to this or any other similar debate will create the public impression that the municipalities can sit back and have an easy time while the federal government will take on the burden.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I agree fully with that and sought to say that.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): As we reached ten o'clock last night the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) was speaking, and I regret he is not in the house this afternoon. He knew this debate would be continuing immediately the orders of the day were called today, because it was announced and he was in the house at the time. It must have been obvious to him that I would be answering a number of the statements he made yesterday, and therefore the fact that—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He could not be here.

Mr. Hees: —he is not in the house is a regret to me, but as the debate must go on and as the quite erroneous statements that he made yesterday must be answered, I have no choice but to refer to him as I answer what he said yesterday.

[Mr. Spencer.]

When he was speaking yesterday, the hon. member for Laurier left the impression with the house that he felt that harbour commissions should not be set up until a full-scale economic study had been made of the whole St. Lawrence seaway and its effect on all parts of Canada. I shall quote what he said in that regard, as reported at page 3989 of Hansard, righthand column:

> —an economic survey should be made by the officers of the Department of Transport with reference to the impact which the St. Lawrence seaway would have upon the various regions of Canada.

We should not go ahead, he claimed, with these harbour commissions until such a survey had been made. The government has been very much aware of the desirability of proper economic planning with regard to the development and use of ports in the St. Lawrence and great lakes area, particularly in view of the changes resulting from the construction of the seaway. However, a purely theoretical study, as suggested by the hon. member for Laurier, carried out by planners having little contact with the realities of local situations and having a cosmic or over-all approach which would be so general as to offer no guide to the solution of local problems, did not appear to us to be a reasonable solution to this matter even though it is obviously the sort of thing which the hon. member for Laurier had in mind.

Rather, Mr. Speaker, we felt that the best answer lay in close contact with local organizations and officials in the towns and cities bordering the seaway and great lakes in regard to their local port problems, and a continuing series of visits as and when requested by local officials for this purpose. With this in mind we organized in 1957, after forming the government, a special team composed of marine representatives, technical, engineering and construction personnel and economic staff from the Department of Transport and Department of Public Works for the purpose of visiting those ports and making special studies and reports in each case. This team consisted of the director of marine works, or his representative, from the Department of Transport; the senior economist from the bureau of economic studies of the Department of Transport; the director of economic studies, or his representative, of the Department of Public Works; and the chief of harbours and rivers construction division, or his representative, of the Department of Public Works.

Whenever a request is received from a port town or city we make prompt arrangements for a visit by this team and in the course of this visit they make not only a study of port conditions and requirements but they also meet with municipal officials, chamber of commerce representatives and the representatives of large local businesses interested in shipping in order to get the most complete and effective advice and information available.

Following this, the team makes a special report on the situation to myself and to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) and jointly we proceed with our planning in the light of the information contained in the reports. Moreover, because of the great number of places visited by this group, they, together with the officials of my department to whom they report, are in an excellent position to take a sound, over-all view of the whole problem of the great lakes and the St. Lawrence in the light of the comprehensive data which they have gathered on individual points.

I would point out particularly that this visiting team was not organized until October, 1957; that is, it was not organized under the previous government but was organized a few short months after we rescued this country from the late lamented Liberal government in 1957. But in the period since it was organized its work has involved special trips to and reports on the following ports, and I intend to give them because I think they are interesting, Mr. Speaker. I should just like to remind the house at this point that not only did the hon. member for Laurier indicate that the government had done absolutely nothing in this regard but I also jotted down the words of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), "The government had no policy; the government had taken no action and nothing whatsoever had been done." These words were uttered in this house about five or ten minutes ago.

These are the ports—29 in all—which have been visited by this team under the direction of the Department of Transport and the Department of Public Works, under the direction of this government, something which was never even dreamed about by the previous government of which the hon. member for Essex East was a member. I intend to give the names of the ports that have been visited during the past two and a half years.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure we are at cross purposes. Of what my hon. friend is going to say I am aware. The team did come to Windsor. I was referring—and I think the hon. member for Laurier was also—to the recommendations of the committee that an economic survey should be made applying to the whole great lakes area, as a result of the building of the St. Lawrence seaway. That is the point.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have pointed out that we do not believe that a vague, general economic survey serves any useful purpose and that the kind of practical on the spot, harbour by harbour survey is what is most beneficial to the harbours and to the country as a whole, and we will continue to carry on with these. We think it is practical and not just theoretical and good for headlines and speeches only; we think it is good for the harbours of the country.

I want to give the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) and the hon. member for Laurier a lot of information that otherwise I would not bore the house with, but I want to give them the dates when visits were made to the ports and the dates on which reports were made so that they may have the information for future reference.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): All that the minister is doing now is disagreeing with the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. Fisher: Could the minister not simply table it?

Mr. Hees: No I will not table it after the kind of nonsense I have listened to for the past couple of days. I am going to put it on the record myself.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I raise the question whether information on Belleville has anything to do with Oshawa.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, this is something that was brought up and dealt with at great length last night by the hon. member for Laurier and today by the hon. member for Essex East. I was accused of doing nothing and I wish to explain what we have done.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think the minister should be allowed to defend himself.

Mr. Speaker: While the minister is covering a wider area than the bill, he is replying to a speech made last night in the debate by the hon. member for Laurier and one made today by the hon. member for Essex East and I would not undertake to stop him.

Mr. Hees: This is the list, Mr. Speaker.

Twenty nine harbours were visited and reports were made on each visit but, as I say, the hon. member for Laurier and the hon. member for Essex East claim that nothing has been done in this regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Hees: Gladly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister assure the house that all these visits in March of 1958 were exclusively for the purpose of visiting ports and would he tell us who paid for them?

Mr. Hees: They were paid for in exactly the same way as every other visit that has been made and the visits were exclusively for the benefit of the ports concerned, as the hon. member well knows.

Mr. Pickersgill: In March, 1958?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, any visit and any reports that were made—stop looking around and smiling like a Cheshire cat.

Mr. Fisher: The minister has indicated that there was a minimum of 29 reports by a survey team. First, are we to assume that this is the same survey team and, second, if it is the same survey team can the minister explain how comprehensive, so far as the kind of survey referred to by the hon. member for Laurier is concerned, these reports can be if this crew is turning out so many reports?

Mr. Hees: The officials of my department and of the Department of Public Works are very efficient. They work very fast and very well and have given very good service. If you will speak to people in any of the towns and ports visited I feel sure you will obtain excellent comment about them. I have never heard anything but excellent reports from the ports and towns visited and I think the reports that have been made are excellent. The people we have working for us are first class officials. Perhaps the hon. member cannot understand working quite that fast. These people do.

Moreover, in the lower area of the St. Lawrence, where interest overlaps with that of the national harbours board, the present administration has also made special arrangements to provide for continuing studies and planning in this connection including, for example, the group which I announced previously, and representing not only the harbours board but the Department of Public Works and the seaway authority and which is reviewing the general problems of the whole Montreal port area.

The hon. member for Essex East is particularly interested in the Windsor harbour and I have a little information for him on that. As he knows, the Windsor harbour commission was set up under the previous government of which he was a member in April, 1957. A special economic survey was made not by the government but by the Windsor junior chamber of commerce in 1956. Thank heaven for the Windsor junior chamber of commerce. They did not have to rely on the government of that day which was doing absolutely nothing. No special government team report or economic investigation was made although the area was visited by a marine official.

The decision to introduce the bill was based primarily upon municipal representations and the chamber of commerce report, which were reviewed at headquarters. There was no mention made of anything that had been done by the member of parliament for Essex East or of help given by the former government. Thank heaven for the Windsor chamber of commerce which pushed this thing. They had to do it without any help from their members of parliament.

Let us contrast this, Mr. Speaker, with what happened when the home town of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), Oshawa, came into the picture. This is the kind of consideration that was given by the present government in dealing with this harbour situation. This consideration was on the request of the city and the excellent member of parliament for that area, our Minister of Labour, who spoke to me about it on many occasions and brought to my attention and the attention of the department the need for this course to be followed. He was working as any good member of parliament does and as all Conservative members of parliament do, with the municipal authorities and with the government, as a liaison.

He got the following action for his municipality. A special team visited Oshawa and a preliminary report on that harbour was made in February, 1958. A second visit, and a final report, was made in November, 1959. There were two visits and two reports. Discussions were held with the mayor, industrial commissioners, city council representatives, city engineers, city planning director and representatives of local business. There was perfect co-ordination between the government, the member of parliament and civic officials.

I should like to say a little bit about these team visits. In a speech which the hon. member for Laurier made on December 9, 1957 he recommended an over-all survey. The first visits by the specially organized teams which I have mentioned were made during October and November of 1957 to the lakehead, Sarnia and Sault Ste. Marie. In other words, these visits were made several months before the hon. member made his memorable speech. As I say, during 1957 and up to the present time, 26 different ports have been visited in the St. Lawrence and great lakes area in addition to the three ports which I mentioned that were visited during 1957. This special team not only made these visits but also made reports. On June 5, 1959 the then minister of public works, who is today the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green), told the hon. member for Laurier in parliament about the 23 ports which had already been visited up to that time. According to the hon. member for Laurier, nothing had been done.

Let us move on for a moment to what it is that regulates the potential of a harbour. We have heard speeches by the hon. members for Laurier and Essex East to the effect that we have given no help; we must take these harbours by the hand and tell them what they should know and do everything for them. What is it that makes a harbour a potential harbour for the future? In so far as incoming shipments are concerned, this potential depends on two things: first of all, whether the municipality is a market for manufactured goods or is suitable as a distribution centre to other markets; second, whether the municipality has industries which require bulk cargoes, and whether there are suitable transportation facilities to industries in the vicinity. In so far as outgoing shipments are concerned, the potential depends on whether the municipality or surrounding localities have two things, I believe: first of all, industries which produce manufactured goods for shipment to other parts of Canada or to other countries; and, second, industries which produce bulk cargoes for shipment to other parts of Canada or to other countries.

The businessmen of our ports know these factors very well indeed. Those who are appointed by us to be harbour commissioners are particularly well versed in these facts. The Department of Transport and the Department of Public Works give these commissioners, these municipalities and these municipal governments, every possible assistance when it is requested. We believe that the municipalities know their needs better than any government possibly can and it is our job to supply help and information when it is sought. The hon. member for Laurier and the hon. member for Essex East obviously believe that the businessmen of our ports, those who are appointed harbour commissioners, those who are interested in the welfare of the port, know nothing—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege; the hon. gentleman is making a statement now for which I am sure he knows there is no foundation. I praised the personnel of the harbour commission in Windsor as being men of experience and men who were good citizens. The minister is not warranted in making that observation. The minister should not make that kind of statement, as he knows. What I should like to know is, is the minister going to do anything about the important needs for Windsor and other harbours or does he think they do not need to receive this kind of assistance?

Mr. Hees: If the hon. member would only pay attention, and if he would communicate with the various harbour officials across Canada he would ascertain we are doing a great deal in the way of giving help and advice when it is requested. In a number of cases we are actually giving financial assistance as well, where we think that is justified. We are doing everything we possibly can to help these harbours prosper and get all the trade they possibly can.

If the hon. member would go around to some of these harbours we have mentioned and ask the officials what they think about the assistance the Department of Transport and the Department of Public Works team has given to them I think he will find that they believe they have been given a great deal of help.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure that is so, but—

Mr. Hees: You have asked what we are doing and I have been telling you. When I try to answer your questions, you do not like the answers because they embarrass you.

Mr. Speaker: Order; I must ask the minister to direct his remarks through the Chair, if he would.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am simply interested in Windsor. Has there been a request for financial assistance—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has not been given the floor to ask questions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have been given the floor; the minister has been allowing me to ask questions.

Mr. Hees: At the request of the hon. member for Laurier and the hon. member for Essex East these bills, instead of being dealt with in committee of the whole, are going to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. The hon. member is a distinguished member of that committee and a very voluble one. He does not restrain himself in asking questions and I know he will ask a great many. That is the place to ask these questions.

In conclusion, I should like to say that if the hon. member for Laurier—I wish he were here, and he knew this was coming up today—was keen on this over-all economic survey of the effect of the St. Lawrence seaway on all ports in Canada there were two occasions, I believe, when he should have instituted such an economic survey and when he was in a position to do something about it. The first time was when he was minister of transport and before the government decided to go ahead and spend $350 million on building the seaway. I believe at that time the government, and he for the government, should have conducted such an economic survey to ascertain what the justification for the building of the St. Lawrence seaway would be, what kind of picture would be presented. If he is as keen as he seems to be on these over-all economic surveys, that was one time when he could have had one made. I think it would have been a very useful one. At that time, he did not think about it; he was not interested. He just went ahead.

Then in 1957 when he was still president of the St. Lawrence seaway authority, when he was in a position to do something about it, when it was only two years before the seaway would be opened, when it requires at least two years for harbours to plan, prepare and build for such an eventuality, that would have been an excellent time to have made an economic survey about which he is so keen. The hon. member made a speech in December of last year telling the government what it should do. I want to know why he did not do something about it and produce a survey to aid the harbours of Canada so that they could go ahead and prepare for the opening of the seaway. He was in a position where he could do something. He was interested in other considerations; he was just interested in making speeches telling people all the facts a few months later.

I should also like to know why the hon. member for Laurier when he was president of the St. Lawrence seaway authority in the early part of 1957, at the time when the Windsor harbour commission bill came forward, did not produce such an economic survey which he says I should produce now for the benefit of the Windsor harbour commissioners. I want to know where the hon. member for Essex East was at that time when the bill—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hees: You sit down.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You have asked me a question.

Mr. Hees: I will listen to your question afterwards.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I heard the hon. minister asked a question, but as he did not sit down it was obviously rhetorical.

Mr. Hees: I am not asking a question; I am wondering.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Essex East has a point of order I will of course hear it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I heard what Your Honour said but I want to make it clear that the hon. gentleman asked me a question.

Mr. Hees: No, I did not; I was wondering.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am now prepared to answer that question, but I cannot unless the hon. gentleman permits me.

Mr. Speaker: Unless the hon. member who asks the question yields the floor, it is obviously not intended to be answered.

Mr. Hees: I am wondering just where in 1957 the hon. member for Essex East, the member from Windsor, was.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the minister is getting a long way from the bill when he begins to inquire into the whereabouts of the hon. member from Windsor, when this bill actually relates to the establishment of a harbour commission in Oshawa.

Mr. Hees: The hon. member is telling me that in setting up this harbour commission I should not do it unless I have an economic survey.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. gentleman has no right to say that.

Mr. Hees: You are doubling back.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for Laurier, the hon. member for Essex East or any other member who spoke on this side of the house never suggested that the harbour commission, in this particular instance in Oshawa, should not be set up unless there was an economic survey.

Mr. Hees: That is the impression you created.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is not. The hon. member for Laurier made that clear. He said he was for this commission, but what he was calling the government to do was to implement the recommendations of an all-party committee on which the members of the government had a majority.

Mr. Hees: That is not a point of order; the hon. member is making a speech.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Essex East is going far beyond the subject on which he rose.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I speak feelingly about this matter.

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member will allow the minister to finish without interruption. I hope the hon. minister will come back to the bill because it seems to me that this side issue about an economic report which was allowed to be debated is really not too pertinent and only deserves very minor treatment.

Mr. Hees: Judging from what was in the speech it really deserves very little attention at all, but I thought I would like to set the record straight on the matter. It just seemed to me a little strange that in 1957 the hon. member for Essex East, who was not asking for information which would be of assistance to the Windsor harbour commissioners—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We established the commission.

Mr. Hees: Yes, you let it be established because the chamber of commerce came to see the government and it just happened. It was through no fault of yours at all. I would say that if the hon. member for Essex East and the hon. member for Laurier would take a little more time in future to find out concerning matters about which they make voluble statements, and find out what the government is doing and come to see the minister, then they would not make carping, tub-thumping political speeches about which they know nothing. If they did that they could make a much better and much more constructive contribution to the debates of the House of Commons than they are at the present time. The kind of thing we are hearing now is no improvement over the last three years, and I am afraid it looks as though they will be sitting on that side of the house for a long time to come.

Mr. Fisher: I wonder if the minister will permit a question, if his fervour has abated. I would like to ask him what happened to the reports and whether they have been made public and so become of some use right within the community?

Mr. Hees: These are not public reports but reports made by the investigating team to the Minister of Public Works and myself. We discuss these matters with the harbour commissioners and those who are in a position to do something to benefit the harbour concerned.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to ask the minister, since so many of the places he mentioned have no harbour commission, how he gets this information contained in the reports into the domain? Take for example a place like Goderich.

Mr. Hees: We go to these harbours when we are requested to and take a look at them and give them some assistance. After we have been able to do that the team comes back to report to the Minister of Public Works and myself, and then the team works with the people who requested the help in order to give them all the possible aid we can.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit one more question before he sits down?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister has taken his seat so there can be no further debate.

Mr. Hees: I will answer questions.

Mr. Speaker: Will the minister accept another question?

Mr. Hees: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: The question I was going to ask was, when we move a motion for the reports will the minister produce them?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as the chortling hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who sits down smiling like a Cheshire cat after each question, knows perfectly well, they are privileged documents.

Mr. Pickersgill: Secret reports.

Mr. Hees: They are not; they are documentary reports made by the members of the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport to the ministers concerned. The hon. member knows perfectly well that they are privileged documents and are not produceable.

Mr. Pickersgill: No information.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

NANAIMO HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS

ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION FOR MANAGEMENT AND DEVELOPMENT OF HARBOUR

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-10, to incorporate the Nanaimo harbour commissioners.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about this bill, and I know the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Matthews), a very distinguished and able member, has some words to say about his own harbour commission.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question?

Mr. Hees: I have not even started yet. That is just typical of the kind of opposition we are getting in the house these days.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I was just wondering how a question could arise before the minister had spoken.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, a petition sponsored jointly by the corporation of the city of Nanaimo and the Nanaimo chamber of commerce was received in my department regarding a proposal to establish a harbour commission for the harbour of Nanaimo, British Columbia. The city would upon the enactment of the necessary legislation vest in the proposed harbour commission harbour front property owned by the city for management and development by the commissioners.

It is considered advisable in the interests of proper and orderly development and expansion of the Nanaimo harbour that control be vested in a local body. The harbour is a natural, all year round deep sea harbour and is protected from the open waters of the straits of Georgia by the outer island of Gabriola and by the inner islands of Newcastle and Protection.

The strategic location of the harbour provides a loading and unloading point for the two main ferry services connecting Vancouver island and the lower mainland, that is Canadian Pacific railway and Black Ball Ferries Limited. During the peak of the summer season the ferries carry upwards of 1,250,000 passengers, 300,000 passenger cars and 50,000 trucks and trailers.

My department operates the government assembly wharf and the deep sea wharf which are approximately 1150 feet in length. They are used for the handling of lumber, pulpwood, fuel oil, iron ore, chemicals and other products from which a gross annual income is derived of approximately $30,000. These facilities would be placed under the management of the commisioners. In addition, the department collects in the neighbourhood of $16,000 annually in harbour dues and some $23,000 annually in water lot leases. This revenue would also be immediately available to the harbour commissioners.

The purpose of the bill is to establish a harbour commission to administer the harbour. There will be three commissioners, two appointed by the governor in council and one by the city of Nanaimo. It is a bill similar to the one which set up the lakehead and other harbour commissions.

As already indicated, I propose to move after second reading that the bill be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. W. F. Matthews (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to notice that at last Canada has a Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) who certainly knows all about harbours. Actually the minister has robbed me of some very valuable opportunities. I had intended to tell hon. members all about this marvellous harbour. However, at last, as I say, we have a Minister of Transport who is certainly up to date, and I want to thank him very much on behalf of the chamber of commerce of Nanaimo and the city of Nanaimo for bringing this bill up at this time.

It has long been the thought of the chamber of commerce of Nanaimo that there should be a harbour commission, because it was realized what a great assistance this would be to the community. In the light of the growth and expansion which has taken place, particularly in the last two and a half years, it is more than ever necessary that this harbour commission be brought into being as soon as possible.

I want to explain that this harbour commission was not an idea of mine; I am not claiming credit for the idea, but I have not received any protests from anyone in the district. All the people there are very much in favour of it. I think they want this commission, and I am very pleased that they are to get it.

I wish to thank the Minister of Transport and the officials of his department for the wonderful help they gave me last year while I was working on this bill. I had a good deal to do with various men in the hon. gentleman's department and at all times they went all out to help me and give me all the assistance necessary. As a matter of fact, when the president of the Nanaimo chamber of commerce, Mr. John Cunliffe, came here he expected he would be here for five days. I think maybe he had in mind someone who was here five or six years ago. Because of the way things were set up in the department, he was able to complete all his business in one day. He asked me: What shall I do now? I said: Go back to Nanaimo, because you can save a bit of money. So he saved four days, and I am sure they all appreciated it.

The Nanaimo chamber of commerce is to be congratulated on the brief which it prepared about this commission. A number of people in the department here told me to compliment them on the very clear brief, and I certainly want to pass on that word right now.

This matter goes back some time, because included in this harbour we have an assembly wharf which has been there for a number of years. It has served the whole central island in a very large way. As a matter of fact a lot of money is being spent on it right now to get it in shape for the tremendous amount of work that we expect in connection with the new extensions that are coming. Another notable thing is that while the Conservative party was in power this assembly wharf came into being and the Nanaimo member, Mr. Charles Dickie, of Duncan, British Columbia, was instrumental in getting this wharf for Nanaimo. A very interesting thing I noticed was this: at the time Mr. Dickie was advocating this, a Liberal member opposed very strongly having this wharf built there, and I should like to read out of the record of our debates for 1934, volume 4, page 4397, starting toward the bottom of the page, what was said by Mr. A. E. Munn representing Vancouver North:

> Another item that I see in the schedule is an assembly wharf at Nanaimo. I wish to caution the minister about building an assembly wharf there. In my opinion Nanaimo is not a suitable location. Nanaimo is the centre of a coal-mining industry rather than a lumber industry. There are no lumber mills at Nanaimo—

I was surprised to read that, because I know there was.

> —and if an assembly wharf is built there it will surely be a failure because the dust from the coal will get on the lumber and when it gets to the planing mills they will wonder what has happened.

A little coal dust on the lumber, apparently.

> This is something of which I think the minister should take special note and make sure that the lumbermen of British Columbia want that assembly wharf built at Nanaimo. I am not holding any brief for any other town, but as a practical lumberman I know that Nanaimo is not a suitable location.

That wharf was put in by the Conservative government which had some of the same vision we certainly need today. They could see into the future, and they could see that Nanaimo was changing from a coal mining town to a town which had to depend on other things. They have tremendous mills there for lumbering and, as everyone knows, they have large pulp mills which are doing a wonderful job for the community. I never did hear at any time Nanaimo people complaining that coal mining was going out and that we are going to be a ghost town. We are very fortunate in the fact that we have other resources which can be developed. It is too bad that all other towns in Canada which have this problem have not the same thing, some other industry to which they can turn. It certainly must be a worry if they have not got them.

I am very privileged to represent as a member of parliament a riding which was represented before by the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes). I found it was a challenge to follow a man of his calibre, a man who devoted his whole life to Canada before he ever came to parliament and who, since then, has continued to do so and is doing a marvellous job. I felt it was a considerable challenge, because everywhere I went people would say: If General Pearkes endorses you, we will be behind you. I certainly believe much of the reason I am here is because of the calibre of man I succeeded. I was new in this place, but I certainly had the advantage of having a man such as the Minister of National Defence behind me to help me out. I could go on and talk for a long time about the Minister of National Defence and all he did while he represented the riding. I do not think I would be out of order, because the Minister of National Defence was instrumental in getting public buildings, a new post office, and various other public works. He was also instrumental in getting a new wharf in Nanaimo, and a vocational school—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not like interrupting the hon. member, but all this is relevant only in the sense that a discussion of the Bomarc missile would also be relevant.

Mr. Matthews: I note with interest that the gas line has been completed into the House of Commons. I certainly do not want to disturb the hon. member for Essex East by talking any more about our present Minister of National Defence. I think that is what is worrying the hon. gentleman, because he swings right away to the very successful Bomarc. I want to get away from that subject. I want to swing back to Nanaimo.

I was interested that when this bill went through the Senate one of its hon. members remarked that it was just coastwise shipping that passed through Nanaimo. That is a mistaken idea because you often see big freighters tied up and others anchored waiting to come in. I wanted to explain to hon. gentlemen that this is a real harbour. I want to read the following article from the Nanaimo paper dated March 21, 1960:

> Ocean-going freighters loaded cargoes at port of Nanaimo last month for delivery in almost every part of the world.

You see, the port handles not only coastal shipping but shipping to every part of the world. I continue:

> Pulp exports ran to well over 6,000 tons, or better than 300 tons for each working day. Full-bleached and semi-bleached pulp made up these cargoes which went to the United Kingdom, the U.S.A. and South Africa.
> Assembly dock in Nanaimo has been a busy place. From this dock lumber is loaded for overseas shipment. March was a busy month as nearly 7 million board feet of Vancouver island lumber started its trip abroad.

All this, despite the dim outlook taken by Mr. Munn on this matter. The article continues:

> Japanese steel mills will continue to use B.C. iron ore. During March 17,000 tons of Texada iron ore were cleared through the customs at port of Nanaimo.

They do not load at this assembly dock but they do clear from this port. I have another article here but I will not read it. The Minister of Transport has spoiled this one for me so I will return the clipping to my file.

With respect to transportation we have 21 sailings a day each way from Nanaimo so that if hon. members are able to take the trip arranged for this fall certainly will not get marooned on any of the islands unless they happen to go out with some of the local boys.

The port of Nanaimo also serves the communities of Duncan, the Cowichan lake district where there are big mills, Crofton which has a pulp mill and others.

I was interested in what the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) said about surveys being made before anything is done along the lines of establishing a harbour commission.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member did not say that at all. My hon. friend was talking about a survey recommended by an all-party committee in 1958 with regard to the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway in relation to ports on the great lakes. That is an altogether different question.

Mr. Matthews: I was under the impression that the hon. member thought a survey should be made but apparently I am wrong and will have to refer to the record. In any event I do not think the hon. gentleman made it very clear because as a rule I get these things right.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) is never very clear.

Mr. Matthews: Returning to the subject of the Windsor harbour commission I would take issue with the idea expressed by the hon. member for Laurier because on April 6, 1957, in moving second reading of the bill to incorporate the Windsor harbour commissioners, as reported at page 3214 of Hansard, the then minister of transport, Mr. Marler, had this to say:

> Increased activity expected to result from the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway is a further reason behind the proposal.

In other words Mr. Marler made no suggestion that any survey should be made. His idea was that the port should come into being as soon as possible.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Matthews: I am sure all hon. members agree with that policy. I also noticed that the hon. member—I get them mixed up because there are so many of them—for Essex West (Mr. Spencer) suggested that this bill be put through without being referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. That is not a new idea. Our very able Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) extended that courtesy to the Windsor harbour board when its bill of incorporation was presented in 1957. As reported at page 3214 of Hansard of April 6, 1957 the minister who was then the private hon. member for Vancouver Quadra said:

> On behalf of the official opposition, I am very glad to speak in support of this bill.

In other words the hon. member was very much interested in it, felt it was a step forward and did not want to hold it back in any way. He went on to say:

> In the ordinary course, this bill should have been referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines where it could be examined in detail and where we could hear evidence from witnesses. For example, we could have heard from representatives of the city council of Windsor as well as officials of the Department of Transport.
> And the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown) who, I am sure, would have made a real contribution to the proceedings. But in view of the fact that we are in the last days of the session, I am afraid if this bill went to committee the result might be the legislation would not become law at this session. It is for that reason we in the official opposition are not asking that it go to the committee.

Hon. members can readily understand why the hon. gentleman wanted to be of assistance to the east and west. That is why I believe the hon. gentleman will do a capable job in the present position he occupies as Secretary of State for External Affairs. That was an example of the need for us to work together and help one another and not get up and hold back the business of the house.

Because Bill No. 224 to incorporate the Windsor harbour commissioners was passed by this house on April 6, 1957 without being referred to the standing committee I would ask that the bill before us receive the same consideration and I commend Bill No. S-10 to the favourable consideration of hon. members.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, at the outset may I indicate to the minister through you what was in the mind of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) who for obvious reasons was unsuccessful in posing his question. What the hon. member sought to do was inquire of the minister whether or not he would deem it advisable to follow the example set by a number of cabinet ministers in recent days who have taken their parliamentary secretaries into their confidence and allowed them to pilot legislation through the house. This would be a commendable thing for the Minister of Transport to do and his parliamentary secretary, who no doubt reads as well as the minister does, would have benefited from the experience.

I was interested in the historical and political account given by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Matthews) and thought his reference to the connection between one hon. gentleman and the trans-Canada pipe line was one of the most suitable retorts to the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) I have heard.

I am indebted to the former member for Nanaimo, Mr. Cameron, for having given me when I first came to Ottawa an understanding of the need for establishing a harbour commission at Nanaimo. Although I had visited there briefly it is not possible in a short space of time to assess fully local needs. As Mr. Cameron was responsible for the establishment of a post office at Nanaimo I am sure he is partly responsible for doing the preliminary work leading to the introduction of this bill.

I do not intend to repeat what was said by the hon. member for Nanaimo concerning the need for establishing a harbour commission there. It is true that the city of Nanaimo is considered to be the hub of Vancouver island; it is the central port for shipping not only to the mainland, across to Vancouver, but also to many other countries of the world as was indicated by the hon. member for Nanaimo.

I would hope that through the passage of this bill the commissioners, when they are appointed, will be vigorous and imaginative and will tackle this question of the development of the harbour and shipping facilities in such a way that Nanaimo will truly become a port of much greater importance than it is now and will be a credit more than it is now to that jewel of the west coast, Vancouver island.

I have one thought that I should like to leave with the minister. There is this possibility, and we may be able to expand on this when we get into the committee stage.

I notice that by this bill—and this is true of other bills establishing harbour commissions in other places—the commission is given borrowing powers; it is given authority to issue debentures and borrow money for the purposes required. It would be a commendable approach if within the Department of Transport—perhaps the Department of Finance would be the proper place to have this done—there could be established in co-operation with the Department of Public Works a revolving fund account which would allow the harbour commissioners or corporations as they are known to borrow money directly from the federal treasury. If they were allowed to do this it would be possible for them to borrow money at a lower rate of interest than they will be able to borrow it if they have to enter the money market. This would permit the commissioners to have more money at their disposal because they would be paying less in interest rates.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That was done in Hamilton.

Mr. Howard: The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) indicates that that was done in Hamilton. It is an approach that should be established here. For the benefit of the hon. member for Essex East and just to make sure that we are both discussing the same thing, I may say to him, through you, sir, that I am talking in terms of a revolving fund which would be available not only to Nanaimo but to all other harbour commissioners in the country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was referring to a loan from the federal government at a fixed rate of interest.

Mr. Howard: Even so, it has a direct relationship to the Nanaimo harbour commissioners when the commission is established. This course is a commendable one and it would be following the pattern established in Hamilton. I think the principle can be established by setting up a general revolving fund account from which all harbour commissioners in Canada could borrow money and thus realize great savings for the tremendous amount of work they have to do in the particular harbours under their jurisdiction.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND—REPEAL OF PRE-CONFEDERATION FISHERIES LAWS

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-3, to repeal certain fisheries laws in Newfoundland.

[Mr. Matthews.]

Mr. Howard: May I raise a point of order? Perhaps this was arranged but I have no knowledge of it. As I read it, the following indication was given last night by the Minister of Trade and Commerce as to what the order of the bills would be. First, there was Bill No. S-5, to incorporate the Oshawa harbour commissioners, which has been dealt with. This was to be followed by Bill No. S-10, with regard to the Nanaimo harbour commissioners, which has just been dealt with; then, Bill No. S-2, the Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement Act; and then Bill No. S-3, to repeal certain fisheries laws of Newfoundland.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I could say a word on the point of order, sir, a notice was sent to me by the house leader, and on my notice was an indication that a copy was also sent to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) indicating that Bill No. S-2 would not be proceeded with.

Mr. Howard: That is fine.

Mr. McCleave: The C.C.F. are leaderless and clueless.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, my remarks on this bill will be brief, merely by way of explanation and to establish the authority for the action which is now proposed.

At present, under term 22 of the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada, certain fisheries laws, as defined in paragraph (1) of term 22, in so far as they relate to the export marketing of salted fish from Newfoundland to other countries or to any province of Canada, have been continued in force in the province of Newfoundland for a period of five years from the date of union and thereafter until the parliament of Canada otherwise provides.

Under term 18 of the said terms of union all laws in force in Newfoundland at, or immediately prior to the date of union, have been continued therein as if the union had not been made, subject to repeal or alteration by the parliament of Canada or the legislature of the province of Newfoundland according to the authority of the parliament or the legislature under the British North America Acts 1867 to 1946. Likewise, all orders, rules and regulations made under any such laws have been continued subject to revocation or amendment by the appropriate constitutional authority.

In 1959, the exportation of salt fish (permits) act, being No. 10 of the statutes of Newfoundland, 1942, and being one of the statutes listed in paragraph (1) of term 22, was repealed by the parliament of Canada.

The remaining statutes listed in paragraph (1) of term 22 relate to the Newfoundland fisheries board, which board, under and by virtue of paragraphs (2) and (5) of term 22. have been brought within the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. The board has been continued to date.

Since the proclamation in Newfoundland of the fisheries act on May 1, 1958, the proclamation in Newfoundland of the meat and canned foods act and the fish inspection act on July 1, 1959, and the repeal of the exportation of salt fish (permits) act as of August 1, 1959, the board has ceased to have any functions.

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to repeal, pursuant to terms 18 and 22, the remaining statutes which are listed in paragraph (1) of term 22 and which have been consolidated by the province of Newfoundland in the Newfoundland fisheries board act, being chapter 207 of the revised statutes of Newfoundland, 1952, and to repeal all orders, rules and regulations made thereunder, or made pursuant thereto under the terms of union.

In short, the Newfoundland fisheries laws, as defined under term 22 of the terms of union with Canada, are now redundant and serve no useful purpose. These laws have been superseded by the statutes of Canada relating to fisheries which have now been brought into force in Newfoundland.

Mr. C. R. Granger (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak briefly on the act which we are about to repeal. This act had its roots in attempts made to standardize control of the marketing of dried salted codfish in particular. In the days prior to confederation and in the years immediately following, inspection or, to use the time-honoured word, "culling" had to do with grading of fish, and not only grading of fish for export but those regulations were two-pronged. Government inspection began when fishermen were selling their fish. Cullers would sort out the fish as it was being delivered to the merchant by the fishermen. The culler would separate the fish into various grades and the fishermen would be paid accordingly. The final act of inspection would be when the fish was ready for export. It would be inspected to make sure that the quality was as marked in order to maintain the standards of the fish in our markets.

The effect of this repeal bill will be that federal inspection will be limited to inspection for export. Personally I do not see too much wrong with this move. Quality as between merchant and fisherman is not really the business of the federal government. My own opinion is that when fish is in good demand the cull is easy. Competitors will pay high prices for a lower grade article rather than stick to strict grading and pay overly high prices. This redounds to the benefit of the fisherman. When the market is slow the culling regulations can be used as a stick to beat down prices and this redounds against the interests of the fisherman. Unless there were a strict policy of anchoring prices to grades I cannot see that federal or other control of fish as between the fisherman and the merchant can be of real benefit to the fisherman.

I think I should say, however, that easy culling and the lack of premium prices for premium grades do not encourage quality production. I intend to say more about this later on the fisheries estimates. However, the ancient practice of easy or hard culling, depending on market conditions will not pass away overnight. I doubt whether any legislation can eradicate it. Only time, industrialization or the extinction of the codfish will end it.

But there is much to be said for paying a premium on quality and unless there is a better price for a quality article the incentive to produce really good fish is somewhat limited. Fortunately most fishermen take pride in their work and do the very best they can. Such men should get a reward by way of a better price for the better article produced. The ideal situation would be a fair set of culling regulations which would be adhered to and a price set in accordance with quality.

Before union the Newfoundland fisheries laws were administered by the Newfoundland fisheries board. The board's authority covered the grading or culling of fish. Fish were culled when they changed hands from fishermen to merchants. The fish were inspected and graded before being shipped to the markets. I think I should say that quality has much to do with whether or not we retain our markets. I am convinced that every incentive should be offered and every care should be taken to see that Canadian fish is good fish. It is interesting to note that the world consumption of fish is increasing but that our production compared with the world increase in consumption is not keeping pace.

Much of the world's fish is caught off the east coast of Canada by foreign ships. I have gone into this matter before and shall not do so now. I feel, however, that I must emphasize again the need for recognition that in our fisheries we have a source of really great potential wealth. Yet only about 10 per cent of the world consumption of salted fish, which is estimated at half a million tons per year, is produced in Canada, which should be the greatest producer of fish in the world.

Quality must be maintained and markets developed. Culling regulations and inspection generally have a direct bearing on the article for sale. The final effect is what counts. The amount of fish we sell, the condition it is in when it reaches the markets and the way marketing is conducted are prime factors in the industry. I should like to include in my remarks an appeal for an aggressive marketing policy. I should like to emphasize that much has been done in recent years to assist the fisherman but much has yet to be done to round out a complete program. Finally, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) to give his personal attention to the matter of aggressive marketing of Canadian fish.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, it has been very interesting to listen to the lucid explanation of the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Granger) with respect to the Newfoundland fishing industry and the effect that the passage of the bill before us will have. He also referred to other matters about which he is concerned. We in the C.C.F. wish to indicate to the house and to the people of Newfoundland who will be affected by the bill that we support the bill.

If I may be allowed to venture into this field to a slight extent, the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador related some of the difficulties experienced between the fishermen and the buyers with respect to the price paid for fish and the grading of fish. If I may be allowed to say so, I suggest that this difficulty can be overcome to a degree by the development of co-operative ownership of the various sections of the fishing industry so that the fishermen themselves can have far greater control over grading and prices and can establish a degree of uniformity with respect to prices and grades that will greatly enhance their economic position.

In those places where co-operatives are not possible or have not been formed, I suggest that the development of some form of union would be helpful in protecting the interests of the fishermen. I think it can be said that generally fishermen on the west coast and others connected with the industry have had a very good experience with the federal Department of Fisheries not only with respect to the inspection services but in the field of conservation and all the other fields in which the federal department is involved. I hope sincerely that the people of Newfoundland who will be affected by the passage of this bill will have the same beneficial experience with the Department of Fisheries that we on the west coast have had.

[Mr. Granger.]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Flynn in the chair.

On clause 1—Fisheries laws repealed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before clause 1 carries, if the minister will permit me I should like to echo the appeal of the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador with respect to the need for the most aggressive possible marketing policy. As the minister has told us, under the legislation now being repealed there were provisions for marketing through a marketing board and through other agencies that will no longer be open under the laws of Canada which will supersede the legislation now being repealed.

As my hon. friend said in his speech, we have no quarrel with that position. But we are very gravely concerned, as I am sure the government, the minister, the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister without Portfolio are with a proposal that has been made by the common market, which happily has now been adjourned for some little time, to put a tariff around the whole common market area in Europe against Canadian codfish. The effect of that, if it were to be carried out, would of course be to give the French producers, who have a base eight miles off the coast of Newfoundland a differential advantage in a market where they have never had it before and would, to that extent, be a disability which would have to be overcome either by price cutting or by some other device which would be bound, in the end, to bring a lower return to our fishermen. We might, indeed, lose the market altogether.

Unhappily in the last few years, although the market has not been too bad itself, the production of the kind of fish that is required by the Italian market and also by the Spanish market has been going down and the production of the kind of fish that can be sold only in the West Indies has been going up. The consequence of this is that we are losing sales in a good market and tending, to some degree, to congest the supply in another market, to the disadvantage of all Canadian producers. I just echo very strongly the words of my hon. friend from Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, that the government should give very careful consideration to the possibility of doing what was done before the war in order to supply the British market with bacon, that is to say, the establishment of a premium—perhaps for a year or two to see how it would work—on the Spanish and Italian fish in order to try to keep that market during the technological revolution of which I am sure the minister is aware on the east coast. What is going on at Valleyfield and elsewhere offers a real hope that it will not be very long before light salted fish can be produced in plants. Then it may be possible to survive in these markets without any need for a premium and allowing purely economic forces to operate. There is very grave danger, in the interval, of losing the market.

I noticed in an item in the newspapers only last night our ambassador to Spain was talking about the failure of Canadians to take advantage of the market in Spain. I do not know whether that is true, but this is one market, in Spain, which we know is the best market of all pricewise. If we can only make sure of hanging on to it for the next two or three years I think there would be a real hope of keeping it for good. It is very important, not merely in an isolated way but as part of the over-all picture of the markets in that area.

Perhaps, sir, if you construed the bill very narrowly you might find a little difficulty in ascertaining that my remarks were actually relevant. However, in view of the fact that this is really carrying out part of the terms of union, you would not wish to do that and perhaps you would wish to give the minister an opportunity to say a word in reply.

Mr. Churchill: The suggestions made by the two members from Newfoundland who have spoken on this bill are helpful and constructive. I express the hope that they will continue to draw to the attention of the committee problems that may arise with regard to the fishing industry.

From the standpoint of the Department of Trade and Commerce, working very closely in co-operation with the Department of Fisheries, we want to do everything that is within our power to maintain the Canadian export market for fish. We put forth the same effort with regard to this product as we do with other products that are exported from Canada. The export of fish from Canada, as from the earliest days, has been one of the great factors in our economy and should be maintained.

We are watching continuously the developments in Europe with regard to the establishment of a common market and free trade area. From time to time we have put forward, and will continue in the future to put forward, Canada's position with regard to that market. Our position is one of concern lest it should become a restrictive market and one of exhortation that Canada's position in that market for products of the sea and products of the farm should not be lessened in the future. I hope all members from Newfoundland will continue to bring forward constructive suggestions, as they have this afternoon, with regard to the marketing of Canadian fish.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall this bill be read a third time, now?

Some hon. Members: By leave.

Mr. Churchill moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I believe there are some changes to be made in the announcement of the business last night. Perhaps the house leader could make them.

Mr. Churchill: We have made excellent headway this week, Mr. Speaker, thanks to the mood of the house and the good co-operation we have received. The suggestion I have just received is a good one, and I will now introduce it. Tomorrow, we will start off with interim supply. After that is concluded, we will take item No. 11 on today's order paper which is the resolution in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare dealing with the Old Age Security Act. We will follow that with the estimates of the departments of agriculture, post office and public works during Thursday and Friday if the time becomes available.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I might just ascertain if it is still the intention to go ahead with a motion for supply on Monday.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, thanks for reminding me. On Monday and Tuesday, the fifth supply motion will be brought forward.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

2. If so, who was the contractor?
3. What was the amount of expenditures involved?

Answer by: Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.
2. John Monk, for installing plank runners on the deck of the public wharf.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 19, 1960

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PICKERSGILL—FEASIBILITY STUDY, P.E.I.-N.B. CAUSEWAY

Hon J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege. Yesterday a motion was rejected by the house for a copy of the current feasibility study of the proposed causeway between Prince Edward Island and the New Brunswick mainland. I have in my hand a document which has been distributed, I believe, in this house and elsewhere entitled "Northumberland strait crossing, interim report on feasibility study" delivered by Major General H. A. Young, deputy minister of public works, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

I submit that it is an outrageous breach of the privileges of this house to deny to the house something which has subsequently been given to the parliamentary press gallery and to the public generally.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has raised the question as a matter of privilege. If he will recall the events of yesterday, there was a motion made and rejected by the house on its own vote for the production of the document.

Mr. McIlraith: Contempt of parliament.

Mr. Fulton: How can parliament be in contempt of parliament?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege I think there should be some statement made by the government as to the reason for the production of this document in a place other than the House of Commons when the House of Commons was refused it by a vote.

Mr. Speaker: I find myself in some difficulty about this; because as I recall the practice of the house it does not criticize its own decisions, and in effect what the hon. member is doing by raising this point as a question of privilege is reflecting on the vote which the house took yesterday with respect to the production of this document.

Mr. Pickersgill: If Your Honour would permit me to say a word on that point, I am not criticizing the decision the house took yesterday. I am criticizing the conduct of a member of the government today in producing in this fashion a document that the house decided should not be produced to the house.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the minister concerned having just come in he is obviously not in a position to answer at once. Surely, however, it is desirable to recall just what happened yesterday when the motion was made. The minister asked that it stand, and as he explained subsequently, he wanted it to stand because it was his view that there was no such document as that technically described by the hon. member's motion. The hon. member, with that facility for precipitate action for which he is so well known, refused to let the motion stand for investigation and forced a vote. In those circumstances the minister had no alternative but to refuse the motion, because he was not at all certain that there was such a document.

Now, what is happening? The hon. member is urging that there is contempt of parliament. It was parliament which decided that the motion should be rejected.

Mr. McIlraith: No.

Mr. Fulton: It was the House of Commons which decided the motion should be rejected and I fail to see how the House of Commons can be in contempt of itself. It is, therefore, perfectly obvious that if my hon. friends in the opposition would just show a little reasonableness on a request to allow motions to stand, this matter could have been disposed of without the confusion they themselves have generated.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the Minister of Justice has raised this point I would draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that there seems to have been a further breach of the privileges of the house in the statement made by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) yesterday in reply to the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Phillips), because in that statement the minister said categorically that there was no such report, as will be found on page 4001 of Hansard, and today his department issues a report to the parliamentary press gallery. I submit, sir, that no minister of the crown has a right to mislead this house the way the minister did yesterday.

Question of Privilege

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The statement which has just been made has no foundation in fact. Apparently the rule around here recently is for the opposition regularly to raise smokescreens by way of alleged questions of privilege. This is another example of that type of attitude.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Prime Minister has stated in this house that a statement I made had no foundation in fact.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: This—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: If the house wants to hear the hon. member there will have to be a little less noise. The hon. member is raising another question of privilege?

Mr. Pickersgill: A question of personal privilege. The Prime Minister, sir, has just stated in this house that a statement I made was not a matter of fact, notwithstanding that the statement I made is right here in Hansard; and I intend, sir, in order to show how irresponsible the conduct of the Prime Minister is, to read this statement.

In reply to a question which the hon. member for Prince directed to the minister after, I might say, this motion had been rejected by the house and which therefore perhaps raises a question of propriety, the minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for directing this question to me, along with preceding questions. While I regret exceedingly that it was not possible to give a reply to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate as to the feasibility or otherwise of the causeway, because it is impossible to do that—we have no such report—

And then today, sir—

Some hon. Members: Read on.

Mr. Pickersgill: —the parliamentary press gallery is given an interim report on the feasibility study.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has taken a different point of view from that expressed by the Prime Minister on facts which are on the record. It is not possible to continue a debate on a question of privilege unless there is some motion before the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is no mistake about the statement to which I referred, which was that a minister of the crown, the Minister of Public Works, had misled the house.

Mr. McIlraith: Look at the record.

Mr. Pickersgill: Again the Prime Minister is wrong. I did not say he had misled the house. He sought to mislead the house; he did not succeed.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must take exception to the last remark of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, that the minister had sought to mislead the house. He knows that such a statement should not stand, and I ask him to withdraw.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the minister's words speak for themselves—

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Grafftey: Be a man and do it quickly.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and I would ask the minister to explain how he could say there was no report when he has produced a report today.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If hon. members will restrain themselves I think the matter might be disposed of. I have asked the hon. member to withdraw the statement that the minister sought to mislead the house.

Mr. Hellyer: Ask the Prime Minister to withdraw his smokescreen charge.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think it would not be in accordance with the standard of conduct we have set for ourselves to allow such a statement to stand. I am sure the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who has a very high appreciation of the practices of parliament, would not want to have that appear in the record. I know that his initial statement referred to a misleading of the house and I take no exception to that, but then he added the other phrase and I think he should amend it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Your Honour, of course, as almost always, is quite right.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: That is worse.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Shocking condescension.

Mr. Pickersgill: In using the words "sought to" I was obviously seeking to interpret the mind of the Minister of Public Works. I would never wish to do that, sir, and I of course withdraw.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I suggest to you, sir, that the Prime Minister should also be asked to withdraw his statement that this matter was raised as a smokescreen and that the statement of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was not factually correct, inasmuch as the hon. member has read Hansard to show that it was correct. Perhaps the Prime Minister will now withdraw his statement.

Mr. Speaker: From time to time I have observed that hon. members have used the word "smokescreen" with respect to actions on the other side of the house, and while strictly speaking it is not in order to impute improper motives I do not think that is a statement that I should request be modified unless the hon. member who used it wishes to do so himself.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the question of privilege raised by the hon. member, surely this matter cannot properly be resolved unless the Minister of Public Works—

Mr. Fulton: He is trying to.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —addresses himself to the question which has been raised.

Mr. Fulton: He is trying to.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have been on my feet not less than eight times. This matter is simple to everyone except the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. He asked me to table a report.

Mr. Pickersgill: No; the word "report" is not in the motion. Read it.

Mr. Pearson: Why don't you read the motion?

Mr. Walker: He asked that we should table the current feasibility study in the house. Eventually some day we hope to have a study or report as to the feasibility or otherwise of building a causeway between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. That is what we hope to have, but it is a very difficult, long term project requiring a great deal of research. However, in order to keep the house advised from time to time as to the progress being made progress reports have been made.

These studies involve four or five departments. A great deal of study and research have been put into the matter, including the use of facilities of the national research council. Nevertheless we are not now in a position to give a feasibility report such as was required by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, and it was impossible to table something that we did not have and will not have for some time. I told the house what I would do, and if the hon. member had asked for it we could have done it for him. But he is simply being tipped off by someone, because there are no Liberal representatives from the maritime provinces and therefore he has to do a half-baked job. He does not understand what is going on.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope the minister who has the floor to deal with a question of privilege will not raise another one.

Mr. Walker: Therefore, if he does not know, I think it is correct to say that we have had two progress reports on the studies that are now going on in connection with this causeway.

In reply to the hon. member I may say that today the hon. member for Prince, who has been following this matter—after all he is a member from Prince Edward Island—has asked for a progress report. I will be very happy to be able to give that report to the house when the orders of the day are reached. This is something entirely different from what was requested by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I do not blame him for not understanding; he very seldom does understand. When the time comes I will make this interim progress report as to our investigations, and then I think even the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate will be able to see the difference between a progress report and a feasibility study, or feasibility report, such as he requested yesterday. The two are so far removed from one another that there should not be any possibility of misunderstanding even by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would draw Your Honour's attention to the wording of the motion, which the Minister of Public Works was very careful not to read and which he misrepresented in the statement he has just made. It should be in the record correctly, since he has indulged in a kind of innuendo in which I do not intend to indulge. On page 3999 of Hansard of yesterday the motion reads:

> For a copy of the current feasibility study of the proposed causeway between Prince Edward Island and the New Brunswick mainland.

As I told the minister yesterday, the motion was put on the order paper because of a statement in the Charlottetown newspaper. I might point out that the document here is called a feasibility study, and it was quite obvious that this was what was requested.

Mr. Speaker: I think both points of view on the question of privilege which the hon. member has raised have been expressed, and the house should proceed to other business.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

INVITATION TO INTERESTED PARTIES TO OFFER SUGGESTIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government is inviting associations and individual persons to offer suggestions at this time on the marking of Canada's one hundredth birthday in 1967. Numerous suggestions have already been received from various sources, but the government wishes to be certain that all interested parties and groups have had an opportunity to contribute their ideas.

It might be asked why this invitation is made at this time, some seven years before the actual event. The answer is that activities such as public ceremonies of the nature and magnitude of the ones expected in this country at that time will require years to plan and complete.

It would be unfortunate if any worth-while proposal for the centennial were to be disregarded because it had not come to our attention in time to be included in the overall program or to permit of its execution. As the house knows, a national committee on Canada's centennial comprising ministers and other representatives of the federal government and of the ten provinces has been formed to meet in the early autumn to work out the broad lines of the centennial program. It is suggested, therefore, that if possible any suggestions on the subject should be placed in the hands of the centennial secretariat in the privy council office by August 1.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—REPORT ON MEETING OF COUNCIL WITH WESTERN FOREIGN MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs report to the house on the meeting of the NATO council held this morning in Paris?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have received reports from Canada's permanent representative on the NATO council about the meeting which was held in Paris this morning with the foreign ministers of the United Kingdom, France and the United States to review the situation we face as a result of the failure of the summit meeting.

I think all members of the house would be interested, Mr. Speaker, if I were to read the communiqué which was issued at the conclusion of this morning's meeting. This is the communiqué:

> The permanent council of NATO met in Paris on May 19 and heard statements from the foreign ministers of France, United Kingdom, and the United States on the events which prevented the holding of the summit conference.
>
> In the communiqué published at the end of its meeting in Istanbul, the Atlantic council welcomed the prospects of negotiations with the U.S.S.R. and expressed the hope that these negotiations would lead to an improvement in international relations.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

> Reaffirming the complete solidarity of the countries of the alliance it fully approves the statement of the three heads of state or government in which they—

And here they are quoting from the statement which was issued by the three western leaders.

> —"remain unshaken in their conviction that all outstanding international questions should be settled not by the use or threat of force but by peaceful means through negotiation" and "remain ready to take part in such negotiations at any suitable time in the future".

The permanent representatives of the various member nations on the NATO council will, of course, be reporting back to their governments in order that instructions may be received as to the further course to be followed.

DISARMAMENT—INQUIRY AS TO NEXT 10-MEMBER COMMITTEE MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask a supplementary question. In view of the statement made by Chairman Khrushchev that the Soviet union would continue to participate in disarmament discussions, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs say what is the timetable for that 10-power meeting on disarmament?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The meetings of the 10-member disarmament committee were adjourned until June 6. So far as I know they will be reopened on that date. This course will be very much in line with Canada's wishes, and we shall do what we can to try to obtain some favourable results from the meetings of the disarmament committee.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORTED FINGERPRINTING OF CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Public Works. I have been asked to address it to him because I understand that for some reason or other he has some responsibility in this matter. I do not know whether it is because he has responsibility for the epidermis of statues. Has the government decided to fingerprint civil servants as a general practice?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): One of the newspaper reporters who probably asked the hon. member to ask this question also asked me the same question yesterday. I may say that so far as the Department of Public Works is concerned we have nothing to do with this matter. It is something which was decided some time ago by the civil service commission, and I believe they have already fingerprinted employees in several departments. I believe that at the present time they are working on one of the categories in the Department of Public Works. Does that answer the question?

Mr. Herridge: May I address a supplementary question to the Secretary of State, and ask him the reason for this policy now in operation of fingerprinting all civil servants?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Acting Secretary of State): I will inquire into the whole matter and report tomorrow.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BOMARC MISSILE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I wish to address a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. In view of reports that yesterday the minister criticized the accuracy of the press and/or reporters with regard to the Bomarc missile, would the minister consider giving us a full and accurate statement on the Bomarc now, since we may be unfairly prejudiced by the alleged inaccuracies?

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): I did not criticize the attitude of the press in connection with the Bomarc. I simply mentioned that possibly too much play was given to the failure of certain trials of the Bomarc and not enough play to the eventual success which was achieved in the recent trials of the weapon.

As to the latter part of the hon. member's question, I shall be pleased to give him a full report on the Bomarc trials in due course.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

C.M.R.—PROTEST OVER PROPOSED DEMOLITION OF HISTORIC BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sevigny). Has the minister received a letter from "La Société Saint-Jean-Baptiste" of St. John, pointing out that an historical building on the grounds of the St. Johns Military College is about to be torn down?

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire of my officials about this matter. It could be that such a letter reached my office during my absence on my recent trip to Europe. In any case, I shall look into this matter and report later on.

(Text):

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

REPORTED IRREGULARITIES AT AIR MATERIEL COMMAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, of which I have given him notice. Will the minister make a statement to the house with respect to a story in last night's Toronto Daily Star reporting alleged irregularities at the R.C.A.F. air materiel command?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. A board of inquiry has been investigating alleged irregularities at the R.C.A.F. air materiel command, but the findings of the board are not yet available and, in consequence, it would not be appropriate for me to say anything further at this time.

Mr. Hellyer: Can the minister tell us whether there was an earlier board of inquiry, early in 1958, and if so what did that earlier inquiry disclose?

Mr. Pearkes: There was no inquiry in early 1958 into the matter which is now under investigation.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING WITH NATIONAL HOUSE BUILDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister any information to give the house with regard to his reported meeting with the National House Builders Association?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Yes. I am looking forward very much to meeting representatives of the National House Builders Association in my office after orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

IMMIGRATION ACT—INQUIRY AS TO REVISION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In the light of statements made outside this house as to the urgency of amending the Immigration Act, can the minister say whether amendments will be brought forward at this present session?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I have answered that question three times already this session but I am still unable to give a definite answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mrs. Fairclough: I should probably explain that that is my Dutch blood coming out.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—POSTPONEMENT OF U.S.-CANADIAN MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he will comment on the report in this morning's press from Washington that the United States-Canadian meeting on the joint development of the Columbia river basin, scheduled for today, has been postponed because, according to officials there, the Canadian delegation has requested more time to prepare.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): A meeting had been scheduled to start today and to continue on Friday and Saturday. We asked Washington whether in view of the necessity of preparing facts and figures and co-ordinating the studies made on this side of the border with those of an international work group, and for other reasons, the meeting might be postponed. I am hopeful it will be possible to hold the meeting on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week.

PUBLIC WORKS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Phillips) yesterday asked this question: "Has the minister any progress to report on the Prince Edward Island causeway study?"

In reply to this question may I say that you will recall, Mr. Speaker, that some time ago a study was undertaken by the federal government with respect to the possibility, from an engineering viewpoint, of constructing a causeway between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. This study, which has been most complex in nature, has involved several departments of government including the departments of fisheries, transport, and mines and technical surveys, and it has been co-ordinated by the Department of Public Works. I felt that hon. members would be interested in having an interim report on developments up to this time.

An hon. Member: Speak louder.

Mr. Walker: I will. This investigation has involved five major studies—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the minister has in mind making an extended answer, as I conclude he may, having regard to the papers he holds in his hand, then I think it should be by leave of the house. That is what I think should be done since the answer would seem to me to go beyond the normally concise answer which the rules of the house call for. Does the house give the minister leave to read this answer?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think we should be told whether this is a rehash of the document which has already been given to the press, because if it is I see no reason for cluttering up Hansard with it.

Mr. Walker: I have not compared this rehash with the alleged document to which the hon. member refers. This will take about three minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to complete the statement?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: I hear an objection to the minister going beyond the normal limits. Perhaps the minister will therefore make his answer as concisely as the rules require.

Mr. Walker: Thank you. This investigation has involved five major studies, namely a tidal survey, a shore line survey, a survey of remedial works, a survey of ice conditions and a consultant's study of design alternatives for the crossing. I will try to summarize this report to a greater extent than it is already summarized here.

The tidal survey was basic to the other studies and predicted the effect on tidal ranges in the strait which would result from the construction of a full causeway. This study indicates that the division of the strait into two gulfs by the construction of a full causeway would create a great change in water levels on either side of the causeway and throughout the strait.

The shore line and remedial works surveys were undertaken in those areas which the tidal survey indicated as being affected by the change in tidal conditions. The shore line indemnities which covered buildings and other foreshore properties, including land, were estimated at about $3 million. The remedial works, including reconstruction or raising of existing wharves and harbour facilities, reconstruction of highways and bridges, as well as dredging and shore line protection, were estimated at about $13 million. That is just for that small item.

The study of sea ice conditions provided information for design—perhaps the hon. member who wanted this report would at least listen as I read it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a question of privilege. I showed great restraint, I think, a while ago when the hon. gentleman chose to be very insulting in his references to me. But I was listening intently, and I was one of the few members of the house who were listening intently.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: It seems to me that the remark the minister has just made is completely uncalled for and should be withdrawn.

Mr. Walker: All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that obviously the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate listens with his mouth open.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I respectfully request that you use your authority to prevail upon the hon. member who is speaking so that if he cannot conduct himself like a minister of the crown he might at least speak like an adult.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the minister has gone as far as the practice would permit, and I ask him not to continue with his answer.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Shut your mouth.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Grafftey: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the minister did not hear what I said. The house has been indulgent in permitting a rather lengthy answer, and I think in the circumstances the minister should not continue with the answer he is reading.

Now, was there a question of privilege that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi wanted to raise?

Mr. Grafftey: It is all right, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE AND COMMERCE

SMALL BUSINESS BRANCH—STATEMENT ON INQUIRY AS TO BILINGUAL EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville asked this question:

Is the minister aware that, in the small business branch, not a single employee can speak or understand French?

The hon. member's information is not correct. One member of the small business branch speaks and understands French.

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister give the name of that one employee?

Mr. Churchill: I will obtain the name for the hon. member.

Mr. Dupuis: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister tell the house how many employees there are in the small business branch, which employs only one French Canadian?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister has the information he may proceed, but ordinarily a question of that kind would need to go on the order paper, as it calls for statistical information.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—ALLEGED DELAY IN RELEASING STATISTICS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Labour whether they can offer any explanation as to why the monthly release of the statistics on unemployment which is due today has not been made?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there is no set date for the release of the dominion bureau of statistics labour force survey. It is usually released around the 20th but it is sometimes released on the 21st, 22nd or 23rd, as I think will be found from an examination of the dates of the releases month by month. There is no definite date for the release.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister indicate the last time such figures were not released by the 19th of the month?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has asked a question that should be looked into and certainly has to be looked into, in order to prove how utterly wrong the hon. gentleman is.

FLOODS

TIMMINS, ONT.—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister could answer the question he took as notice yesterday.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. gentleman asked whether a request had been received from the Ontario provincial government for financial assistance in the rehabilitation of the victims of the Mount Joy flood. The answer is that there is no record in my office of such a request having been received.

CIVIL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED CO-ORDINATION OF EMERGENCY MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the minister's statement to the house yesterday that a new organization to be known as the national emergency telecommunications organization is to be set up under his direct control, and in view of the fact that there will now be five ministers responsible for emergency plans, can the minister say whether the government plans to establish one unified organization to co-ordinate all aspects of civil defence?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was speaking yesterday about the matter of telecommunications, and the statement I made is, I think, very easy to understand.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INSTRUCTIONS RESPECTING RELEASE OF FIGURES TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he is now in a position to reply to the question I addressed to him yesterday.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Gloucester asked a question in these words:

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

> Can the minister inform the house whether instructions have been issued to the unemployment insurance commission not to divulge to members of parliament unemployment figures available from local or regional offices in their respective areas?

In reply I said that no such instructions had been issued by me and I knew of no instances where hon. members of parliament have been refused unemployment figures. The hon. member for Essex East followed with a supplementary question in the following language:

> Has the Minister of Labour given any instructions to the unemployment insurance commission or to any government servant that members of parliament are not to be supplied with information that it has always been regarded as a right of the representatives of the people to have?

In reply I stated:

> On the contrary, I have relaxed the practice that had been in force under the previous government.

My reply at this time will be somewhat lengthy and rather detailed. It may be that Your Honour will be of the opinion that my reply is too lengthy to give in answer to a question. If that is the case I would request that I be allowed to deal with this as a question of privilege. The hon. member for Essex East has asked a question which, if it is not answered fully, will leave the impression that I have taken steps to restrict or infringe the privileges of the members of this house. The wording of his question relates to information which he says is regarded as a right of the members of this house. I feel, therefore, that a matter of privilege may be implied here; and the matter is of such importance that it cannot be answered by a simple negative.

Yesterday both the hon. member for Gloucester and the hon. member for Essex East asked me questions about the release of information to members of parliament by the unemployment insurance commission. I have already stated what the hon. member for Gloucester asked, and in reply I said at the time that no such instructions has been issued by me. I feel that I should add that my office has made it known to both regional and local managers that members of parliament are to be supplied on the local level with whatever information is available regarding employment or unemployment in their areas, regardless of the political affiliation of that member. For example, I recently wrote to the managers of the unemployment insurance commission offices at Port Arthur and Fort William in these words:

> It would be appreciated if you would supply Mr. D. M. Fisher, M.P., with the figures he requested.

At the same time I should point out that when members of parliament in Ottawa request information from individual employees of the commission, these figures are made available and this information is cleared through my office. I can assure the house that there is nothing new in this practice and I think the reason will be readily understood. I do not think any hon. member would suggest that it would be good administrative practice or in the best interests of the members themselves to have a situation where individual employees of the commission were issuing figures and other information over the telephone on their own authority, particularly in the case of figures or other information which might not yet have been made available to the minister's office.

Let me repeat, Mr. Speaker, that any member of this house will be given whatever information he requests, provided that the information is available and that it is not of a confidential or privileged nature. I would also point out that there are certain recognized procedures and practices of this house which can be followed and which are available to any member in the obtaining of information from the government.

The hon. member for Essex East, in his supplementary question, opened up the general field of information to be supplied by the unemployment insurance commission, when he asked whether I had given instructions that members of parliament were not to be supplied with information which has always been regarded as their right. I am surprised that the hon. member for Essex East, knowing my respect for parliament and for the privileges of members, should have asked that question. I want to provide him with an answer, Mr. Speaker, and in order that there may be no doubt in the minds of hon. members, regardless of where they may sit in the house, I feel that my answer should be as full and complete as possible.

It was brought to my attention in December of 1959 that certain instructions had appeared in the official manuals of the unemployment insurance commission which would have the effect of limiting the availability of information to members of parliament, whether in the provincial or federal legislatures, who were seeking information on behalf of their constituents. I felt that this was an undesirable limitation which was being placed upon members of parliament in carrying out their duties, and I immediately wrote to the commission informing them of my views in this matter.

I do not wish to take up the time of the house unnecessarily, but I feel I should quote briefly from that letter in order that there may be no doubt in the minds of hon. members as to my views. I wrote as follows:

> I question the wisdom of this decision. In my opinion, members of the legislative assembly should be afforded every possible courtesy in the offices of the unemployment insurance commission in the same manner as a federal member of parliament.

I went on to say:

> When a member of the legislative assembly inquires about a particular case, it is not idle curiosity; it is because he feels that he has an obligation to undertake such action on behalf of his constituents. I feel that any information which would assist a member of the provincial parliament in this objective should be made available to him with all promptitude and courtesy.

It is hardly necessary to say that I hold the same views in regard to members of this house, and that the commission was made aware of those views very early in my administration.

On January 19 I received a letter from the commission explaining why they felt that these restrictions were justified, and I replied on January 20. In my reply I dealt with the situation as it relates to both provincial and federal members of parliament. I would ask the indulgence of the house to refer very briefly to one or two paragraphs in this letter. This is what I wrote on January 20:

> I do not see how anything in section 98 could under any circumstances be construed as granting authority for a directive against giving out information to members of parliament.
> If there is such a directive, I think it should be rescinded.

On February 4 I was informed by the commission that the instructions had been amended to give effect to the views I had put forward, and to make information available to members of both federal and provincial parliaments who were inquiring on behalf of their constituents. I was also informed that a minute of the commission authorizing the restrictions referred to had been cancelled and that all officers were being advised accordingly.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, to have taken up so much time of the house, but I feel that this is an important matter, reflecting to some extent on the privileges of hon. members, and as such it was proper to deal with it fully.

FEDERAL-MUNICIPAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF MUNICIPAL REPRESENTATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is in a position to report progress on the serious and continuing consideration which last year he assured the annual meeting of the association of Canadian mayors and municipalities was being given to their representations.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would be more specific about what particular feature of the representations of that association he has in mind I should be glad to endeavour to answer his question.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, what I had in mind was that the association of mayors and municipalities made a number of recommendations to the Prime Minister at a meeting in North Bay, which was attended by the Prime Minister. He assured them that he would give their recommendations serious and continuing consideration. All I am asking for is a progress report at this time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, of course when the Prime Minister says that serious consideration will be given to anything, serious consideration is given to it. I think it would be more appropriate if I made a suggestion to the hon. member. He has already indicated that a number of matters were dealt with by the association in its representations. If he would indicate what particular ones he is interested in we shall do our best to give him information on the specific questions.

Mr. Regier: In other words there is no progress.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

CANADA COUNCIL—INQUIRY AS TO CONTRIBUTION TO TOUR OF ST. JOSEPH'S UNIVERSITY CHOIR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. I understand it may have to be directed to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister inform the house whether the Canada Council has contributed a grant to the trans-Canada concert tour now being undertaken by the internationally famous St. Joseph's University choir, whose visit to the capital and presence in the galleries this afternoon is a tribute to the spirit of music?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Acting Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the Canada Council does not come under my jurisdiction, but I should like to associate myself with the hon. member for Gloucester in welcoming this famous choir to Ottawa.

[Mr. Regier.]

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS—INQUIRY AS TO COST OF BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. L. McFarlane (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I should lke to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister advise the house as to the cost of the new mines and technical surveys building at the corner of Booth street and Carling avenue, Ottawa, which was opened by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois), last evening?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of the question. In reply I would say that the mines and technical surveys building was opened last evening by my colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. It will be known as the geological survey building. It was built by the Department of Public Works and is one of a complex of buildings in that area for the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. The total cost of the building is expected to be approximately $6,346,560.

Mr. McFarlane: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Public Works. In view of this expenditure of well over $6 million, is there any reason why air conditioning was not included in this building?

Mr. Walker: Air conditioning was not provided in this building because at the time it was designed it was not in the regular course of events to do so. Also it would cost an additional sum in excess of $1 million. However, the hon. member will be glad to learn that certain laboratories in the building are air conditioned as the result of special representations made by the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Flynn in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $600,946,640.92 being the aggregate of

(a) one sixth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1961, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $593,558,978.34;

(b) seven twelfths of the total of the amounts of items 64 and 95 of the said estimates, $350,000;

(c) one third of the total of the amounts of items 137 and 267 of the said estimates, $565,070;

(d) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of items 193, 194, 195, 197, 199, 203, 207, 208, 213 and 303 of the said estimates, $1,472,592.58;

(e) one third of the total of the amount of the item set forth in the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1961, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $5,000,000, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1961.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, in this resolution approval is sought of a vote of sums aggregating $600,946,640.92 designed to provide for the expenses of government for the months of June and July. This sum includes one sixth of all items in the main estimates and one third of the one item in the supplementary estimates. It also provides additional amounts for 14 specially designated items, each of which relates to some program or payment that is not capable of being distributed throughout the year purely on a prorata basis month by month. These items relate chiefly to programs which are concentrated in the summer months.

I point out, Mr. Speaker, that no item will be completely voted if the present resolution is approved, and the full right of hon. members to debate these items in committee of supply accordingly remains, save in so far as several items have already been approved in committee of supply. I offer to the committee, Mr. Chairman, the time-honoured undertaking, given with a view to avoiding repetition of debate when the items are under consideration seriatim in the committee of supply, that the passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of members to criticize any item in the estimates when it comes up for consideration in committee of supply, and the usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, my remarks have to do with Canada's failure to win the 1967 world's fair. This is a dream or vision which has caught the imagination of Canadians in recent months, and here is a sample of the great illusion we had, as shown in an editorial in the Globe and Mail of February 12, 1960:

A great event the Montreal world's fair will be; gay and handsome and exciting it will be, if we know that cosmopolitan city. Montreal has no lack of imagination and talent; nor any lack of hospitality. A world's fair will give it the chance of a lifetime, the chance of a century, to put itself and Canada on the map.

There will not be a world's fair.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would the hon. member permit me to ask him if he does not think it would be more appropriate, instead of raising this matter on a motion for the granting of interim supply, to bring it up on the estimates, for instance, of the Postmaster General, as he was the minister principally concerned in the effort to bring this world fair to Montreal? The business announced for the house for today and tomorrow, Mr. Chairman, as you will recall, contemplates that the house will be asked to continue its study of estimates in committee of supply, and following the Department of Agriculture the next department whose estimates are to be called is the Post Office Department.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont would be very ill-advised to accept the suggestion of the Minister of Finance since this matter has, of course, nothing whatever to do with the Post Office Department and it would be Your Honour's unhappy duty to rule the hon. member out of order if he sought to raise the matter in that connection. Moreover, sir, this is a matter which obviously is costing the treasury some money in the year 1960-61, because I do not imagine that the Postmaster General, the Associate Minister of National Defence and the other persons who went to Paris went there at their own expense. Therefore there can be no question that the matter is comprehended within the estimates now before us. It is of the greatest possible current interest and, although I respect the desire of the Minister of Finance not to have matters which could be raised on the ordinary consideration of the estimates brought up at this time, it seems to me it is of such current interest that it is perfectly right for my hon. friend to go ahead.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, may I also remind the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont that if he has something to raise as a grievance there will be an opportunity on Monday next on the motion to resolve the house into committee of supply.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It must be left to each member to determine his course of action.

The Chairman: The last time we had a motion for interim supply I think I gave my views on the proper course of debate on such a motion. Of course I do not want to rule any subject out of order unless there is formal objection. If there is agreement on both sides to discuss certain matters, I can see no objection. But I have already indicated that I could not see how the standing orders could permit a discussion of any subject, because in my opinion this is not a proper time to raise grievances. The standing orders provide for such opportunities. Now, if there is agreement that the hon. member can discuss this matter, I have no objection. However, if I am forced to give a ruling I shall do so—

Mr. Pickersgill: Before you do that—

The Chairman: I will not do that, but I said if I am forced to give a ruling I will give my views on the subject because I have considered the matter since the last occasion on which it was raised.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to point out that my hon. friend said nothing whatever about bringing forward any grievance. What my hon. friend is discussing is an expenditure which has already been made by the government, very evidently made by the government, and the minister is now asking us to vote money to expend in connection with this precise matter. What the hon. member is seeking to do is to dicuss whether or not the committee is to approve this particular expenditure, which is in the fraction of the total expenditures for the year or part of it for which the Minister of Finance is asking.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate just now said compels me to raise a question of order. I had not done that up to the moment he rose. If what the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont wishes to discuss is an expenditure already made, then that makes it clearly out of order, because what is sought here is a vote of money for the next two months, the months of June and July. This does not relate at all to expenditures already made. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has made it quite clear that the subject now raised by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont relates to expenditures hitherto made.

Mr. Pickersgill: I said part of it had already been made. As the Minister of Finance very well knows, all he is asking for is a fraction. The minister knows as well as I do that the formal reservation of our constitutional rights, which he very solemnly read out a few minutes ago, does reserve all those rights so far as current expenditures in the current fiscal year are concerned. I concede that it would be quite wrong to discuss some expenditure made in the fiscal year now closed, but this is an expenditure being made at the present time. It is a continuing process throughout the year. The money is taken out of some vote; I do not know which vote, but it is obviously taken out of some vote. Surely, therefore, it is completely within the competence of the representatives of the taxpayers here, who are being asked to vote the money, to discuss whether or not is should be voted.

[The Chairman.]

The Chairman: What is the view of the committee? In their minds is there any limitation to the discussion in circumstances like these? Is it a fact that any subject that may have any relevance to an item of the estimate is in order?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Discussion in unlimited.

The Chairman: Is it unlimited? I should like to hear the views of the committee on that.

Mr. Pearson: It has certainly become well established over the years that on this motion for interim supply members have a right to discuss every subject concerning any estimate or any appropriation. In other words they have a right to discuss any subject which they could discuss under the estimates of a department. The minister will certainly accept that interpretation of the rules, because he will remember very well that in 1956, on a motion for interim supply, there was a debate on the conduct of the Speaker which extended for hour after hour. The only justification under the rules for that debate was that there was an item in the estimates covering the salary of the Speaker.

The minister will also remember that in 1957 he took some six pages of Hansard on this kind of motion to discuss a matter which had no direct relevance to any particular item, but which was considered to be in order. That is all we are endeavouring to do at this time, to carry out a well established rule of the House of Commons which permits us to bring up matters of expenditure in the way my hon. friend is trying to do now.

Mr. Regier: If I may speak to this point of order, I should like to point out that on a motion for interim supply in the year 1957 Messrs. Knight, Knowles, Fleming, Stewart, Hees, Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace) and Diefenbaker spoke. In addition, Mr. Ellis spoke on bulletin No. 10 which related to the Department of National Revenue, and Mr. Diefenbaker spoke on the question of keeping open the customs port of West Poplar, Saskatchewan.

On a motion for interim supply in 1956 the then leader of the opposition spoke in regard to pipe lines. Mr. Knowles spoke; Mr. Drew also spoke on the subject of reform of the other place; Mr. Knowles spoke on closure; Mr. Blackmore spoke on the Bank of Canada; Mr. Hees spoke on pipe lines; Mr. Diefenbaker spoke on Right Hon. Mr. Howe's radio speech; Mr. Cameron spoke; Mr. Barnett spoke on fishing and combines; Hon. William Hamilton spoke—he was not "honourable" then—on the tax on magazines; Mr. Dinsdale spoke on the Fontana expropriations; Mr. Zaplitny also spoke on that subject matter. On July 25 of that year Mr. Knowles spoke on the Canadian National Railways work contracts.

In the year 1955 there were no debates on any of the interim supply motions. However, on a supply motion in 1953-54 Mr. Macdonnell spoke, and the leader of the opposition also spoke on the chief justice of Newfoundland in connection with the implementation of the Criminal Code. I feel that this is a time when any hon. member has the right to speak on anything connected with any expenditure that is made by any department of the government.

The Chairman: As I said, I have not given any ruling. Does the minister insist that the Chair rule on this point?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not raise any point of order at first. I asked the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont a question, and I indicated to him that there are opportunities for raising, at what I consider the appropriate time, the subject that I understood he was proceeding to discuss. It was only when the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate rose and said that this related to an expenditure that had been made—

Mr. Pickersgill: Part of it had been made.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, when he spoke he said the expenditure had been made. I pointed out that this would take it out of the scope of this resolution, because this had to do with moneys that had not, as yet, been expended. On this motion we do not discuss past expenditures, we discuss the voting of money for future purposes. After the time that was spent discusssing the proper scope of discussion on a motion for interim supply during the last such motion, at the end of March, I am sure no one in this committee wishes to revive a general discussion on that subject.

The point I was compelled to raise was based upon the statement by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. If this is simply a matter of discussing an expenditure that has been made hitherto, then it is not proper on a motion which relates to the voting of money for future needs.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just to clear up the point may I say this. It is a well-known rule of the House of Commons that the word of an hon. member as to what he has said is accepted. I said that part of this expenditure had already been made. I did not say the whole expenditure had already been made, because it so obviously has not been made.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member said that the second time, but not the first time.

Mr. Pickersgill: I said in one sentence something as to the expenditure having been made, and I said part of it has already been made. Surely the minister is not going to say that if X dollars out of an amount that has not yet been voted by this committee has already been spent by the government as a result of interim supply, that vote is closed. He told us the exact opposite in his statement of our constitutional position. I agree with the minister that we should get on with the discussion and not discuss the rules. I will therefore not say anything further.

Mr. Deschatelets: Since I do not know of a better time than today, at which to raise this matter, Mr. Chairman, with your permission I will continue my remarks. Before going on with them, however, I wish to express the hope that the time taken by this discussion will not be included as part of my allotted time.

There will not be a world's exhibition in Montreal in 1967. The question now arises as to what happened to deprive us of a feast so well earned by all Canadians for this centennial year of confederation. In other words, where lies the responsibility for such spectacular and disappointing failure or blunder in Paris on May 5? This is a question I will try to examine in as many aspects as possible in the relatively short time at my disposal.

At the outset, let us recall that the city of Montreal was pledging $5 million of its own in this project, the Quebec government $15 million, and that the federal government had promised to add $20 million in order to provide for a grand total of $40 million.

On February 8, 1960, at the inaugural meeting of the provisional national committee of Canada's centennial, the Montreal bid and proposal was approved by the Canadian government and was approved by all parties in the House of Commons later on. This was therefore a national proposition under the direct and immediate responsibility of the government, as we can see if we refer to page 918 of Hansard of February 10, 1960:

> The cabinet has approved the appointment of the Postmaster General as the minister to represent the government in relation to the plans for this project.

Hon. members will recall that on March 8, in Paris, the U.S.S.R. prevented a vote as between Canada and Austria, and how it was agreed to postpone a deciding vote to May 5, 1960. But before going any further I should like to put on Hansard a few articles from a book entitled "Dominion of Canada Treaty Series," 1934, more especially from the chapter entitled "Convention Relating to International Exhibitions" agreed in Paris, November 22, 1928 by 31 countries including Canada. Let us read articles 35, 36 and 39.

Article 35

(a) At any time after the coming into force of the present convention any non-signatory country may accede thereto.

(b) Such accession may be effected by a notification in writing transmitted through the diplomatic channel to the French government. Such notifications of accession shall be deposited in the archives of that government.

(c) The French government shall transmit immediately to the governments of all signatory and acceding countries certified copies of any such notifications, showing the dates on which they were received.

Article 36

The present convention shall come into force, in respect of the countries which have taken part in the first deposit of ratifications, one month after the date of the procès-verbal thereof. In the case of countries which ratify subsequently or accede thereto, and in respect of colonies, protectorates, overseas territories and territories under suzerainty or mandate not included in ratifications, the convention shall take effect one month after the date of receipt of the notifications provided for in articles 33, paragraph (d); 34, paragraph (b); 35, paragraph (b) ...

Article 39

The government of the French republic shall communicate to the international bureau copies of all ratifications, accessions and denunciations.

If Russia was not a member of the international bureau before February, 1960, having in mind the provisions of articles 35, 36 and 39 it would be most interesting to know exactly at what date the notification of Russia was received by the French government and then filed with the international bureau. We would therefore be able to appreciate what was the delay that elapsed between the notification by Russia of membership and March 8, which was the date fixed for the deciding vote as between Canada and Austria.

The reason for this is obvious. If we refer to the official letter from the U.S.S.R. ambassador in Paris to the international bureau, we note that this letter is dated February 26, 1960. I hold in my hand a copy of this letter which was printed in La Presse in its edition of March 15, 1960. It reads as follows:

Paris, February 26, 1960.

(Translation):

International Exhibitions Bureau.

This letter is over the signature of the Russian ambassador.

I am instructed to inform you that the government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics intends to organize the next universal exposition of the first category in 1967 in Moscow, capital of the Soviet union.

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

The Soviet union is in a position to organize and hold an exhibition of a high and proper standard, strictly in accordance with the provisions of the 1928 Convention relating to international exhibitions.

The government of the Soviet union expresses the hope that the holding of the universal exhibition for the first time on U.S.S.R. territory will constitute an important step toward the subsequent development of international co-operation and mutual understanding between all nations.

Since the government of the Soviet union intends to start preparing at once for this international event, it would be grateful if governments of the 1928 convention contracting countries were immediately informed of the Soviet government's plan and if the 1967 universal exhibition in Moscow was duly registered by the international bureau.

I should be obliged to you for acknowledging receipt of this letter.

(Text):

According to information I could gather from press reports, Russia argued that her application should be entertained on March 8 because this application was made within a period of six months after the first official application of Austria, which was filed in November, 1959. Again, after examining the contention of the U.S.S.R. and the provisions of this constitution on international fairs, I fail to see in the constitution any ground sustaining such contention. At any rate, Russia became a competitor on February 26, 1960 and it would be interesting to know why the Canadian people were not notified of this development until March 8 when this was announced in La Presse and we were told that Moscow was now in the competition to obtain this international exhibition.

You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that according to the provisions of the constitution, article 29, which I read a few minutes ago, it is laid down that notification of accessions is to be filed with the international bureau by the French government. Thus, this application from Russia late in February should not have been overlooked by the Canadian government.

Let us deal at this point with the deciding factor—the vote taken on May 5. We all know that on March 8 there were 23 countries—members of the international bureau—with the right to vote. The Canadian Press received, apparently on or around April 25, 1960, the astounding news that seven iron curtain countries had joined the international bureau and would have the right to vote on May 5. This was astonishing news for the Canadian public as a whole, but it should have been no surprise to the Canadian government if members of the government had been on their toes. Had they studied a very peculiar paragraph on page 15 of the constitution under the heading "protocol of signature", I submit the Canadian government might have found there in black and white the pattern followed by the U.S.S.R. even though this protocol was signed as long ago as 1928. I quote:

> The delegation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics declares that, in the application of the provisions of article 4 of the convention, whereby an interval of at least five years must elapse between two special exhibitions of the same kind organized in the same country, the government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics reserves the right to regard as separate countries the six republics members of the union—

There follows the names of the republics which Russia claims should be recognized as entities, each having the right to vote.

It would therefore be interesting to know:

1. What is the date of the application of each of the seven iron curtain countries for membership in the bureau as shown in the files lodged with the French government?

2. At what date were the seven notifications transmitted through the diplomatic channel of the French government to the international bureau, and when was Canada informed of the same?

3. Did the Canadian government check to see whether in respect to the seven iron curtain countries the provisions of the constitution had been strictly adhered to?

If the right to vote of these seven iron curtain countries was justified—which I doubt—then another question is raised, namely why did we not do the same? We must not forget that between February 26, the date of the entrance of Russia, and May 5, the date of the deciding vote, there was ample time in which we might have persuaded friendly countries to join the bureau, and any suggestion that the Canadian government was taken by surprise is not supported by the facts. In this connection I wish to quote an editorial which appeared in the Gazette of May 6, 1960:

> In fact, Russia herself was not a member of this organization until three months ago; she entered in February. But once she decided to come in, she was determined to have what she was seeking. For this reason she made the necessary arrangements—all quite legally—to bring into the bureau seven of the nations of the Soviet bloc. They are Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, Roumania, Bulgaria and the two Soviet republics of Byelorussia and the Ukraine.
> It is an old technique—as old as the hills. It is the method of joining some organization and bringing your supporters in with you.
>
> If Canada failed in these negotiations in Paris, she failed because she did not counter Russia's move. As this was a tough game, perhaps it ought to have been played more toughly.
>
> As Canada's Department of External Affairs had some part in the matter, it was in a position to supply information on Russia's plan to bring in her seven voters. Perhaps such information was given by the department but was not acted upon. For Canada might well have persuaded other countries of the non-Communist world to enter also.
> There are many such countries. They are even to be found within the commonwealth: Australia is one.

We have been outmatched and outguessed, and what surprises me most is the fact that on March 11 we had been warned by no other than his worship, the mayor of Montreal, that if we wished to succeed more planning was necessary and urgent. While I am on the subject, may I recall that we were also informed in March through reliable sources, namely, the representative of Belgium, that the official application submitted on behalf of Canada was not acceptable because it was not labeled in conformity with the requirements of the regulations. In connection with this point I will read article 8 which prescribes as follows:

> Such applications shall state the title of the exhibition and its duration, and shall be accompanied by the classification of exhibits, copies of the general regulations, the jury regulations, and all documents necessary to show the measures proposed to ensure the safety of persons and property, the protection of industrial property and copyright, and to satisfy the conditions prescribed below in Sections IV and V.

According to the same reliable source, this would have been the real reason for the postponement of the deciding vote from March 8 to May 5, 1960.

These are the facts, and I submit that the responsibility for this spectacular failure or blunder lies directly with this government. We have missed the boat again, due to lack of leadership and due to the confusion and fumbling of the government which has shown a complete lack of interest, imagination and vision with regard to this matter. What took place in Paris in respect to this world exhibition was nothing less than a political election at international level. The poor result we obtained is to be regretted and resented by Canadians as a whole and by Montrealers in particular.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I have just a brief observation or two to make on this subject. I agree, I think, with only one part of one sentence of the remarks just made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont. I myself feel it is regrettable that Canada was not chosen to be the host of the world's fair, but there we part. The hon. member has built up his observations on a basis of newspaper clippings, hearsay and other material.

For example, the hon. member was quoting from a book published in 1934 without realizing that the convention was rewritten and revised in 1948. However, I have no argument with the main points he has brought up. They are contained in the new convention as well.

Basically, the situation is this. First of all the hon. member cast doubt on the acceptability of our application. The answer is that the application was completely acceptable in every way. There was no change made in it between March 8 and May 5 and it was this application which was voted on. Any suggestion to the contrary is completely and absolutely without foundation. This is proved by the fact that it was accepted by the organization and voted upon.

There are two other points basic to the argument the hon. gentleman raised. We can deal with these quite simply. The hon. member said, "What about the seven countries that came in? Why did you not do something about it?" The answer is, according to his own information, that in order to vote on May 5 they required to be members of the bureau by April 5. Their accessions actually were made between March 30—that is six days before the final date—and April 4 which is one day before the final date, one day before the required time. The hon. member may be interested to know that we did not receive official notification of the accessions from the French government until May 2 which is almost a month after they joined the bureau. It takes some time for information to find its way through normal diplomatic channels. The reason the Canadian Press had the story on April 25 was that in our constant efforts to keep abreast of all developments in connection with the fair we had ourselves turned up through diplomatic channels news of these accessions and had taken steps to confirm the fact long before we received any official advice whatever. I may say that under these circumstances it is obvious that we could not rush in at the last moment, within the last six days, to counter a move such as that.

Finally, the hon. member asked, "why did you not do something like this beforehand?" I would suggest to him that there has been in many parts of the world surprise and I might almost say dismay at the particular course of action which was followed by these satellite states in this connection. International bodies of this sort which are not major political bodies but organizations which are set up to regulate, control and direct some small section of international relations are not normally a battleground for one country as against another. They are designed primarily to come to thoughtful decisions and bring the benefit of the wisdom of their membership to bear on these matters. Under these circumstances countries find their way in, after adequate notice, one or two at a time. They are not introduced to swing a vote as was done in this particular case. This certainly would not be the approach of the free nations of the world, I am quite sure.

I might point out to the hon. gentleman that the free nations of the world under our democratic process are not able to line up, whip into line and rush in almost overnight, other countries. The free nations of the world make their own decisions. They consider these matters carefully, slowly and deliberately. To suggest that on such short notice we would be required to introduce a number of nations to offset those that entered is to exhibit a complete non-recognition of the facts in this particular instance.

I close simply by saying that throughout this operation there has been a tremendous effort exerted. I am told by those in the Department of External Affairs it has been one of the strongest efforts that has ever been put forward in anything of this sort over a long time in an attempt to bring this fair to Canada. Every stone has been turned, every effort has been made and every person has been contacted who seemed in any way able to assist us. When you examine the results you will find that they hinged on the sudden entry of a group of nations satellite to the U.S.S.R. Without these last minute entries for the countering of which there was no course of action open to us Canada would have led in every vote which was taken and that, I suggest, is the measure of the worth of the effort we put forth.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Postmaster General a question. In view of the—what shall I call it—sharp practice followed by the Soviet union in introducing six satellites at the last minute, as it were, in the last month, and in view of the delay on the part of the French government, which may be understandable, in making that change known to the Canadian government, would it have been possible or desirable to ask the French government whether under those circumstances the meeting could have been postponed?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, I do not think we could have done that within the rules of the bureau. The bureau sets its own meetings. The French government acts purely as the repository of these accessions and transmits them to other bodies. They have no control whatever over the activities of the bureau itself.

Mr. Pearson: Could we have asked the bureau?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): One could suggest that it would have been possible to ask the bureau but this meeting had been established long in advance. It had been set for the definite purpose of voting on this and I suggest there was no other course of action open to us but to proceed with the meeting as called.

Mr. Crestohl: What was the reason for the first postponement?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I am glad the hon. gentleman asked that question because here again the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont was somewhat in error. According to the regulations of the bureau six months must elapse or can elapse between the first application of a nation and the time that that application is voted on and at any time during the six months period other nations can enter their applications. Canada entered hers and was quite prepared to have the vote taken at the March 8 meeting. Russia came in just a few days before that meeting and took the position that she insisted on having the full six months elapse before the vote was taken.

Mr. Deschatelets: Would the minister permit me a question at this point? Was the Canadian delegation accompanied by a legal adviser in Paris? I question the validity of the reason brought by Russia for postponing the election which was to take place in March. I say that because I fail to see in the constitution anything that sustains Russia's point of view that six months must elapse after the filing of the first applications. Was the delegation accompanied by a legal officer?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, you do not need a legal adviser to appreciate most of these points. The answer to the hon. member's question is no, we did not have a legal adviser, but this point was fully considered both by our own delegation and the bureau generally and the course of action which was followed was arrived at as a result of those discussions.

Mr. Deschatelets: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, in order to make the record clear, may I say this. The minister said I was citing extracts from an old convention dated 1928. This is true but unfortunately I forgot to say that I am citing from the new version amended in 1934 which is the one that is up to date.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct my remarks to an item of interest that has been in most of our newspapers during the last week or two. I refer to the disastrous floods in the northern Ontario area and particularly the floods at Mount Joy township which is across the river from the town of Timmins.

As most hon. members know, a total of something like 2,000 people had to be evacuated because of the flood. I wish some hon. members could see just how extensive is the damage in that township. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I should like to extend an invitation to members on both the government side and the Liberal opposition side, if they are free, to come up when I go home this week end and see at first hand some of the damage that exists up there. In some cases logs have been driven right through windows and have beaten about inside the house for a period of four or five days. Stoves are ruined as are refrigerators and all sorts of household equipment, and in particular furnaces with their electric motors, and everything of that nature. As most hon. members will realize, a furnace is a very necessary implement up in the northland.

The damage is both direct and indirect. Many of the farms are flooded to such an extent that there is very little hope of any crop this year. Many of the farmers lost livestock. In other cases where the houses themselves were not flooded, the sewers backed up in the basements and flooded the basements. Pumps were put to work. When the people had to be evacuated the pumps could not be properly attended and when the people came back they found that the pumps had drawn up sand and so forth underneath so that the foundations of the houses had dropped and in some instances extensive repairs are required to most buildings.

Mr. Cardiff: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Yes.

Mr. Cardiff: Has the hon. member any idea of the numbers of cattle that were lost?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I have no idea of the total; I know that on one farm one farmer lost eight of his purebred Jersey cows but I have no idea of the total loss. I do know that for a period of three days the only way they could get feed in and milk out was by helicopter. An R.C.A.F. helicopter was moved in to assist and it did yeoman service in that particular field.

As some hon. members know, they have started a flood disaster fund and the Ontario provincial government has offered to match dollar for dollar. If and when the federal government has an opportunity to assist in this matter I should like them to give the lead in something that is very necessary.

The low lying section of Mount Joy township, which runs right along the river, has been built up in a place where it should never have been built up at all. It is subject to floods in any spring when the water is slightly higher than usual and much more so at a time of major floods such as we have had this year. I think it is rather a matter of throwing good money after bad to spend extensive amounts to repair those houses. Anyone who has seen the result of flooding knows that floors are buckled and plaster falls from the walls. It would take extensive repairs to put those houses back into proper condition. Just a matter of two or three hundred yards away there is a steady rise and there are millions of acres all across the north country where those houses could have been built, or where families could be moved, and we would have a permanent cure to this thing and not a temporary one. If we make temporary improvements we may have to go through the same thing in two or three years' time.

I have discussed this with the minister's officials in the township and they are fully in accord with this. If and when the federal officials consider some financial assistance I should like this suggestion to be kept in mind and posibly we might be able to find a permanent cure for this problem rather than a temporary one.

I should like to mention the desperate condition of the township itself. In the part that was flooded this year there is, I am told, approximately 80 per cent of the assessable property. Anyone who is familiar with municipal affairs knows that when a municipality is just about to send out its tax bills for the year and finds itself faced with a flooded area of 80 per cent of its assessable property it finds itself really in desperate financial straits.

The picture of assistance locally was something that would warm the heart of anyone who saw it. Immediately the call went out, the danger was realized, and every hall in the town of Timmins, the Red Cross, the Salvation Army, all the parish, all the church halls, everything, were placed at the disposal of those victims, and when they were evacuated they were promptly rounded up, fed and clothed where necessary. The spirit of the community was such that by the end of the week those halls were empty because all the refugees had been taken into private homes throughout the township.

The provincial government moved in and set up a mobile welfare unit which would look after all the needs in regard to food and clothing for the victims until they were rehabilitated. This, of course, is on the normal 40-20-20 basis, 40 per cent by the federal government, 20 per cent by the provincial government and 20 per cent by the municipality. As I mentioned a moment ago, the greatest difficulty will be for the municipality to find the 20 per cent because of the condition in which it finds itself at the present time.

The response to the disaster fund has been most remarkable. All the local papers, the radio stations, the television stations have done a tremendous job. I recall watching the local television station, CFCL, Friday night. They put on a live program for one hour, with all the big local entertainers donating their time. They asked the people to phone in requests and to phone in their donations. In that one hour they raised over $2,500 in donations. They got donations from as far away as Rouyn, Noranda, Cobalt, Kapuskasing and Hearst.

There is one problem that really came to light in this emergency as no doubt it has in other emergencies which have struck as quickly as this one. I refer to the lack of co-ordination among the various people who want to help. There were numerous occasions when people were standing by ready to assist but because of the lack of co-ordination their help went unused. I do not think blame for this can be put on any one individual. The head of the local civil defence co-ordination, who is incidentally the fire chief, worked day and night in an attempt to co-ordinate all the various offers of assistance, and so forth. I think the problem was caused by the lack of understanding and lack of realization of the public generally in regard to civil defence. I know that over the years the fire chief has tried to get the people in that area interested in civil defence. In fact, in the township of Mount Joy he made many efforts to get some people interested in the need and use of civil defence.

This may be something for the minister and for the civil defence in general to consider. They should consider a possible change of name. If it were called civil emergency rather than civil defence it might appeal more to and get more people interested in it and act. When we talk about civil defence to the general public they immediately get a picture of evacuations because of an atom bomb or something of that nature. In a place like Timmins, of course, the people feel that they would be one of the last targets in an atom bomb attack. They think that it will never happen to them. But I believe that every community across the country is in fear of something. One community is in fear of floods, another in fear of bush fires and another has some other danger hanging over it. If civil defence could be related to the particular problem of the community it is possible that we could get people interested, and once they became interested a much better job could be done so far as civil defence co-ordination is concerned.

Finally, once again I should like to extend an invitation to any hon. members of the house who are interested to come to Timmins this week end. I should like particularly to see a cabinet minister or parliamentary assistant come along with the group.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take much of the time of the committee and I hope what I have to say will not be very contentious. I wish to say at once that I am going to be critical of a public agency but in doing so I am not implying any criticism whatever of the government.

I asked a question in the house the other day which was answered by the Minister of National Revenue. It had to do with the regulations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, if they had any, with respect to persons being candidates for public office. The minister's answer appears on page 3954 of Hansard for May 17, at which time he said:

> I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that section 8, subsection 3 of the bylaws of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation states:
> "No officer or employee of the corporation employed on a full-time basis shall be a candidate for any public elective office or actively support any candidate for any public elective office, but an officer or employee of the corporation may, subject to the permission of the president, be or actively support a candidate for a municipal or civic office, provided that the acceptance of or the support of the candidature for such office does not interfere with the proper and regular performance of his duties with the corporation."

I do not think it would be fair to the committee or to the minister to debate the general question involved in this bylaw. I must say that I do not know when the bylaw was passed. It may have been there since the inception of the corporation, but I was never aware of it before. I admit that right off. I do think it does raise a pretty fundamental question.

I am troubled, as I am sure every hon. member of the house is, by the extent to which private employers not directly but indirectly limit the capacity of citizens to offer themselves for public service, and it seems to me that unless there is some very compelling reason for it employees of public corporations should not be put in the position that civil servants properly are but should be in the same position as employees of the C.N.R. with respect to candidature of this kind.

I admit at once that there are some special problems connected with broadcasting that would have to be taken into account but, as I say, it is not to discuss the general principle involved that I am saying what I am saying now. The minister went on to say with reference to a particular case which has arisen recently in British Columbia:

> In reply to the supplementary question relating to the one particular individual mentioned, I am advised by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that this supplementary question, which related to British Columbia, refers to the case of a commentator on the program "Neighbourly News" who was not a member of the staff but a free-lance artist and who announced his candidacy in the next British Columbia election. In accordance with the corporation's practice in this regard and the principle enunciated in the regulation which I read a moment ago, he was given two weeks' notice of termination of employment, and arrangements are now being made and discussions are taking place with him and others as to a replacement commentator.

The person in question has, I understand, been adopted as a candidate in an election which undoubtedly will take place in the province of British Columbia but which has not been called. It seems to me this is of some importance even with relation to the bylaw. Moreover, the bylaw, of course, applies to full-time employees and not to persons who are employed at piecework as this particular person had been.

It does seem to me that there are, in the facts of this case, certain circumstances which seem to suggest that the action taken was neither fair nor reasonable, nor is it the kind of action which any of us who believe in our free and representative institutions should wish to see taken. It so happens that this gentleman is a member of the party to which I belong, but it would not make any difference to me to what party he belonged. In the case of people who are simply employed to do a particular specific thing once a week, it seems to me it is wrong to say that these people cannot be adopted as candidates for some future election and retain their engagement. If they use the opportunity given to them to broadcast in order to further their candidature or to further the particular interests of their party, I quite agree that would be an abuse and if that were done I think the corporation would be perfectly justified in dealing with it as an abuse.

But in this particular case this man has been compiling and broadcasting a program called "Neighbourly News" for 15 years. There is a similar program on the radio here. I listen to it occasionally on Sunday morning, as I am sure some other hon. members do, and a more completely non-political program it would be pretty hard to imagine. I quite grant that it might be possible to introduce into it something that would be objectionable or unfair, but surely under our system we should not anticipate that someone is going to do something wrong.

It is not a question of this man's livelihood. I understand he gets a small payment of approximately $35 a week which does not seem very excessive and which I gather does not mean very much to him, but there is a real principle involved here. The facts that the minister was given by the C.B.C. in order to reply to the house are not inaccurate, but they are perhaps not entirely candid or entirely full, if my information is correct, and I have every reason to believe it is.

Mr. Lambert: The gentleman himself probably wrote to you.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is quite true. The gentleman himself wrote it. I have the document sent by him and I would be very glad to read any part or all of it into the record or show it to the parliamentary secretary. If the rules permitted I would, of course, be quite happy to lay it on the table but only ministers can lay documents on the table as I well know from previous experience.

This gentleman, who is in every way a reputable person, was in fact, according to the information supplied to me, told in the first instance very shortly before he was to give his broadcast that he was not going to be allowed to go on and it was only after he had protested that he was then told he could go on for another two weeks. He was also given permission to make a farewell broadcast. According to the information given to me, which I believe to be correct, every script that he used was always read in advance by someone else.

There would have been, therefore, very little opportunity for him to abuse this broadcast in any case. He was told that he could make a farewell broadcast. I have a copy of the text here of the speech he was going to make. Part of the text was censored and the person in the C.B.C. who censored it signed it and initialled it. I think the committee should hear what it was that was censored, what it was that the official of the C.B.C. felt it was improper for the listeners in British Columbia to hear on this program.

I will not read the whole thing, but will read the part he was told to leave out. Perhaps I will have to read the previous sentence so that the continuity will be clear.

> And now, neighbours, it's not going to be easy for me to say what I am now going to tell you. This is my last Neighbourly News broadcast. You might say this is my swan song as your Sunday morning reporter of the doings of the small towns and their folks, and yes, even their dogs and cats and other pets.

That part was left in, and this is the part that was to be struck out:

> As some of you may know, I happen to be a candidate—

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; I am just wondering whether the hon. gentleman would not agree that this is strictly a matter of internal management of the corporation. This house would not expect to have the handling of the day to day affairs of the corporation nor matters of staff policy. I am just wondering whether this material which the hon. member is trying to put on the record is really relevant and proper at this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the parliamentary secretary did not hear what I said at the outset of my remarks, through no fault of his own, because he did not know I was going to speak on this subject and he did not happen to be in the chamber. What I said was that I felt a fundamental human right was involved here, the right of a citizen to be adopted as a candidate for the legislature or for any other public office without having a penalty put upon him by a public corporation. It is that matter of fundamental human rights, which according to the speech from the throne are certainly within the purview of this parliament, upon which I am speaking. We are being asked to vote a very considerable sum of money for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation which is ultimately responsible, not to the government but to parliament.

I would raise a question, and I only raise it as a question, as to whether the statute does, in fact, give the corporation power to do things of this sort, which do seem to call into question a person's civil rights. This is not a matter of any internal management, this is a matter of public privilege, because the corporation was not seeking to discipline somebody for some infraction but because the corporation, by its action was, in fact, penalizing someone in the exercise of his undoubted civic rights; that is the point I wish to make. If the parliamentary secretary feels that there is still a point of order I would be glad to sit down so Your Honour could rule.

Mr. Lambert: I have just this observation. While the hon. member may question, on broad lines, the principle that he enunciated, I am wondering whether or not he is going too far in going into the detail of what had been taken out of the talk. That has nothing to do with the question. I have not got the act before me, but it will be remembered that it is clearly indicated in the legislation that matters of staff policy shall be for the president of the corporation; that is what it says.

Mr. Pickersgill: This gentleman was not a member of the staff of the C.B.C.

Mr. Lambert: It is really a legal nicety, I think, to indicate whether or not a person is a staff member when he is a full-time employee, a regular part-time commentator engaged on a contract or when he is an occasional commentator hired on a strictly free-lance basis. The dividing line as between a regular part-time commentator under contract and a full-time employee is extremely narrow. It is for that reason I am raising this point of order as to whether it is appropriate to discuss matters of staff policy of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in this committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps before Your Honour makes a decision I could cite a very distinguished precedent. A question arose on a matter of interim supply on March 29, 1957, with respect to a part-time commentator on the C.B.C., and it was debated at some length in this committee. One of the distinguished participants in that debate was the Minister of Finance. It does seem to me, sir, that what is sauce for the goose should be sauce for the gander.

As to the other point raised by the parliamentary secretary as to whether or not it is a proper thing for me to read the part of this document that was censored, I think perhaps, in a way, the parliamentary secretary may have a point there. There is no question in this case but that this man, under the terms of his contract, did submit his scripts for censorship. They were always submitted and, therefore, I assume that if this particular passage were to be cut out, he would have no very valid complaint on that ground if he was being continued in his employment. But this, after all, was not a broadcast in a series. He was being permitted by the C.B.C. to give a farewell broadcast when his employment was terminated. Then, that farewell broadcast was butchered, and it seemed to me that that was a rather serious thing.

It seems to me, also, that perhaps more than any other assembly in this country, this House of Commons should be jealous of the civil rights of others, particularly those who are seeking to be candidates for public office.

The Deputy Chairman: This, of course, is a very difficult situation on which to make a decision. I must say that I cannot find anything that would, in my opinion, make the hon. member out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do think, because it is rather important to illustrate the kind of person this was, that I should read what he wished to say on this farewell broadcast which he was going to give because he had been told he could be employed no longer. He wished to inform the people to whom he had been broadcasting for 15 years that he was not going to be permitted to broadcast any longer:

> As some of you may know, I happen to be a candidate in Vancouver for the next provincial election, and the C.B.C. has seen fit to dismiss me because they say it's against their policy to let me stay on the air while offering myself for public service. Apparently this policy applies to commentators who express personal views on public matters... but for the life of me I can't see how it holds water in my case. After all, I'm not a commentator, I'm just a reporter of the country news and human interest stories taken from the country papers, and I disagree with their decision because the policy implies that I might use the program for my own political gain.
> Yet this would be impossible because every week my script is checked in advance by the producer anyway. To me the policy is a reflection on a person's integrity, and I like to believe that my record over 15 years of broadcasting Neighbourly News speaks for itself. Be that as it may, my dismissal takes effect immediately and this will have to be my farewell to you all.

This gentleman, when he was not permitted to include this passage in his broadcast, did not give the broadcast and his employment has been terminated. I think it is unfortunate that this should have happened in this particular case. But I am much more concerned about the general principle involved than I am about the particular case. My reason and my justification for raising it at this time and taking up the time of the committee in order to do so is that I feel it is extremely important, if we are going to maintain our free representative institutions, that as few obstacles as possible be put in the way of a citizen offering himself for public service in an elective capacity. It seems to me that public corporations should set an example to the rest of the country in this regard in the right way and not what seems to me to be the wrong way. In saying that I do not want anyone to misinterpret for a minute what I have to say and to suggest that I am saying that people who are candidates should be allowed to go on broadcasting during an election campaign or that they should broadcast at all if they are broadcasting the kind of broadcast in which there would be abuse. I would not suggest that for a moment.

Mr. Nesbitt: Where would you draw the line?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is exactly what we pay these people for, namely to draw the line and not just to put a ban on everybody. That is what parliaments are for. That is what public officials are for. It is precisely to draw the line and not just to make things illegal on a broad scale. That is why we talk about a bill of rights; at least I have always conceived that was the reason.

Mr. McCleave: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. McCleave: Was the paragraph he read the sole attempt to say good-bye?

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not read the whole broadcast. There are two or three other paragraphs that might have been referred to but I did not think it was fair to the committee to take up its time to read them. As I said before, I am not making any criticism of the government. I do not suggest that the government had anything to do with this matter. I think it was done entirely by the C.B.C. as it should have been or rather, I mean as it should not have been. I might correct myself there. What I am saying is that in my opinion it should not have been.

I want to tell hon. members that this is not a new view that I take of these matters. In case it may not be widely known in the House of Commons, may I say this. My political opponent in my first election campaign was a distinguished Newfoundlander who was an extraordinarily good broadcaster and who had broadcast on the C.B.C. on the same kind of basis as this, as far as I know. I never inquired into the details of it but he was not a member of staff of the C.B.C. He was employed in this sort of way to make broadcasts to fishermen. He did not do it during the election campaign because he was busy with other things, but he was retained again for that purpose immediately after the election in 1953. How I happened to find that out was that some rather ardent supporter of mine wrote to me or communicated with me in some way and suggested that I do something about it. My attitude was that I had done all I needed to do. I had been successful in the election and this man had not been successful. He was a good broadcaster and I did not see any reason on earth why the C.B.C. should not go on with him on its staff and I do not see that now. It also happened that very shortly afterward the film board wanted somebody with a good Newfoundland voice and they asked the C.B.C. who they would recommend. The C.B.C. recommended this gentleman and he was retained by the film board. It is true that I was not actually the minister in charge of the film board at that time but my friend Mr. Harris was, and Mr. Harris took no exception whatsoever.

Mr. Halpenny: Your halo is showing.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know it. All I am saying is that I think all of us in the House of Commons, to whatever political party we belong, should in this matter take a liberal view and I use the word with a small "l". I think this is really an extremely important case. It is for that reason that I have sought to air the matter here today.

There is also another broadcasting matter I wish to say a brief word about. It does not affect the C.B.C.; it affects the board of broadcast governors. Here again another important principle is involved. I do not intend to go into details in this case. This matter also was the subject of a question on the order paper. It was question No. 359 and appeared in Hansard of May 9, 1960. The questions I asked were as follows:

1. Was a broadcast entitled "What are the national issues in the west coast union fight" broadcast by station CJOR, Vancouver, on February 20, 1960?

The answer given was yes. The second question was as follows:

2. If so, was station CJOR forbidden by the board of broadcast governors to permit the rebroadcast of this program on other stations and, if so, for what reason?

The answer given was as follows:

Station CJOR, Vancouver, was advised that the program could not be rebroadcast until the board received assurances from the station that those holding views opposed to those expressed on the program of February 20, 1960 would be given an equal opportunity to express these views on the first possible program following.

The step taken by the board in this instance was consistent with the provisions of the board's directive to all radio stations entitled "Political and controversial broadcasting policies." This directive requires that, if a station broadcasts a program on a controversial subject, equal opportunity must be given to all parties to the controversy to express their views. After listening to the taped recording of the program broadcast by station CJOR on February 20, entitled "What Are the National Issues in the West Coast Union Fight", the board was satisfied that this requirement had not been met.

I am not going to take any time on that matter. With that general principle I thoroughly approve. I think one of the best features of broadcasting in Canada is that in connection with these controversial broadcasts we have a general regulation to provide for the airing of both sides. The last thing I would ever do would be to attack that principle in which I firmly believe. But in this particular case I think the board of broadcast governors made a mistake. If the facts are as they have been represented to me—and again I may say I have made every effort to find out—a real effort was made in this case to get persons to represent both sides of the case more than a week beforehand but unfortunately, though there was every prospect that this opportunity would be accepted, the person to represent one side did not turn up. It was a broadcast from a meeting and the meeting had to be held. It seems to me that every reasonable opportunity had been given. I think that here again we should always err—if there is going to be any erring at all—on the side of liberality and of freedom rather than the reverse.

Mr. Argue: I want to go along with most of the remarks made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. In a case like this I feel it is far better to err on the side of leniency than to be too rigid in the application of the rule that people engaged politics should not be in the employ of the C.B.C.

In Saskatchewan we have, of course, a bill of rights; and in that province civil servants have the right under the law to take a normal citizen's part in political activities as long as it is not within their working hours. However, we also have another rule which provides that anyone who becomes a political candidate shall immediately leave the position which he or she occupies, but can obtain leave of absence for the period of the election or during the time the person concerned is a candidate. We feel that in a democracy such as ours it is the duty of the government to preserve the fundamental right of citizens to take part in politics and afford them some protection in their normal occupations.

The subject I really wish to deal with at this time concerns the attitude of the Prime Minister in failing to give the farm delegation satisfaction as to the date of another meeting when it would have a chance to present its case. This matter has been raised on a number of occasions. I raised the subject on April 8 when it was announced in the press that the Prime Minister had refused to see the farm delegation. At that time, in reply to my question, the Prime Minister stated:

> I cannot enter into an argument during the course of orders of the day, but may I say that any representations made in the past constituted not an alternative but a series of alternatives.

The Prime Minister had been asking the delegation to present some alternative program. At that time the right hon. gentleman was apparently inferring that if the delegation came forward with some other policy, and not a number of alternatives—a single alternative—he might consider meeting the delegation. Since that time the question has been raised again. In fact, it was raised yesterday by the hon. member for Essex East, and that hon. member received from the Prime Minister what was in my opinion a most unsatisfactory answer.

I think in a country such as ours the Prime Minister should be available to meet delegations representing major organizations and the Prime Minister should not hesitate to give the continuing liaison committee an opportunity to meet with him once again and present for the third or fourth time its case for deficiency payments. I think this is a somewhat arrogant and high-handed attitude which the government—the Prime Minister—has taken. I think it is an unreasonable attitude, and it is one which for the life of me I cannot understand because I feel the Prime Minister should not be guilty of slapping in the face the hundreds of thousands of western producers who through their delegations and spokesmen presented a well-reasoned case in support of deficiency payments and an economic program.

There seems to be an attitude among supporters of the government that the farm delegation members do not know of what they speak, that they are asking for something which is undesirable or impracticable; in short, that they really do not represent rank and file farm opinion. I believe that hon. members who put that argument forward are completely mistaken. I have it from the president of the interprovincial farm union council, Mr. Alf Gleave, that neither by letter nor by resolution has a single local of the farmers' union gone on record in support of the government's policy of a dollar an acre payment as the answer to the farmers' economic problem.

An hon. Member: In what province?

Mr. Argue: The president of the farmers' union in Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Argue: It is a fairly important province. I would be interested to know from the hon. member if there is a single farm union local in Alberta, or in Manitoba, for that matter, which has gone on record as being in support of the dollar an acre program as a suitable answer to the farmers' economic problem.

Mr. Speakman: If the hon. member would call at my office I will show him at least 16 letters—

Mr. Argue: The hon. member could bring them into the house, and then the public would know about them. I doubt very much if they are in existence at all.

Mr. Speakman: On a question of privilege: is the hon. member questioning my word?

Mr. Argue: Oh, not at all. I would like to see them in the house, but the hon. member will not be bringing them into the house.

Mr. Aiken: I do think the hon. member for Assiniboia went much too far in stating he did not believe the letters were in existence at all, after they had been referred to by another hon. member. I think that is a statement which should be withdrawn.

Mr. Argue: Oh. The hon. member asked me if I doubted his word, and I said: not at all. What more does the hon. member now wish? I went on to say that I thought it would be very interesting if we could have those letters produced in this house, and I challenge the hon. member to bring them into the house. Since they are undoubtedly in existence, the hon. member need have no hesitation about doing so in order that the public may know whether a single farm union local has expressed any support of a dollar an acre payment with a $200 limit as the answer to the farmers' economic problem.

Supporters of the government in this chamber have taken it upon themselves to lecture the farmers with regard to what they want. These members have been going around saying that farm organizations are not speaking for the farmers, that they really do not know what the producers themselves would like the government to do. I have in my hand a copy of the Western Producer for April 28, 1960 in which appears a heading in very large red type: "Farmers Back Liaison Committee". The article says:

> Shackleton-Sask.—Members of parliament who had suspected that farm organization leaders did not represent the views of their grass-root members got an answer in no uncertain terms in this southwestern Saskatchewan district April 22.
> Calling the Saskatchewan wheat pool the most democratically run organization in the country, 45 farmers representing 622 permit holders told two members of parliament that they were solidly behind wheat pool officials in statements on wheat policy, that they continued to support the liaison committee representing 10 western farm organizations in negotiations with the federal government for a solution to the country's grain problem, and they urged the members of parliament to consider in future dealings with wheat pool officials that they were dealing with all 141,227 grass-root members of the organization.

There are other instances of government members who have taken issue with the farmers regarding their stand. The two members in question referred to in the report I have just read are the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek and the hon. member for Kindersley.

Mr. Harkness: On a point of order, I submit that the type of speech which the hon. member for Assiniboia is now making is completely out of order when we are discussing interim supply. I submit this on a basis altogether different from that which has been argued on any other points of order which may have been raised as far as this debate is concerned.

The hon. member is now making a speech on general agricultural policy—general agricultural matters—and I submit that this is contrary to the rules as outlined in Beauchesne, section 148 on page 126 of the fourth edition:

> 1. It is a wholesome restraint upon members that they cannot revive a debate already concluded; and it would be little use in preventing the same question from being offered twice in the same session if, without being offered, its merits might be discussed again and again.

The general debate on agricultural policy took place over a period of three days on item 1 of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. This interim supply is to give supply for a certain proportion of the money provided. The place on which a general agricultural debate can take place is on the first estimate of the Department of Agriculture. This debate lasted three days. There was every opportunity at that time for the hon. member to make a general speech on agriculture. I submit that to attempt to make another general speech on agriculture on the interim supply bill is to be out of order. This argument would not apply to those items not passed but, as you are aware, approximately 10 or 12 of the agricultural estimates have been passed and a general debate on agricultural policy lasting for three days took place on the first item. To revive debate at this time is contrary to the rules of the house and therefore general speeches on agricultural policy should not be permitted at this juncture.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word on the point of order raised by the Minister of Agriculture. I have listened to what the hon. member for Assiniboia was saying and would find it very difficult to support the position taken on the procedural point by the Minister of Agriculture.

The hon. member for Assiniboia has raised what I think is a legitimate grievance. That grievance as reflected in the words used by the hon. member is that the government in refusing to meet the representatives of the farm organizations from western Canada has violated what the hon. gentleman believes to be the proper conduct of government and he has stated his views by way of expressing a grievance. Surely in expressing that grievance the hon. member is entitled to indicate that the grounds taken by the government for not having met these representatives of agriculture is not a sound one. The hon. member expressed that by indicating his views on certain aspects of agricultural policy as enunciated by farm organizations. Surely no serious objection can be taken to the point made by the hon. member for Assiniboia in this regard.

The government is deservedly charged with having failed to carry out its promises.

The government is deservedly charged with failure to meet these representatives—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member for Essex East has made a point of order and has gone far enough in doing so.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I still have the floor, Mr. Chairman. Your Honour has taken the position that I have made my point and that possibly I have gone beyond it, and if that is Your Honour's view—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I know that hon. gentlemen opposite do not like hon. members of the opposition to mention—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I submit that hon. gentlemen have made a comment and I am entitled to comment on that. Whenever we raise any point they do not like, whether it be agriculture or some other subject, hon. members opposite seek to put us down.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let me say that here is one member of parliament who is not going to be put down by hon. members opposite.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. We can only have one hon. member speaking at a time. If the hon. member for Essex East wishes to speak again to a point of order the Chair will be very happy to hear him.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am very glad that the Chair at least will protect those of us in the opposition who are seeking—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): The hon. member makes a travesty of the rules.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hon. members opposite again seek to put me down. This is a very good example of what I am talking about and I hope the country will see it.

Mr. Macdonnell: State your point.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Greenwood is not one of those who continually obstructs—

Mr. Macdonnell: State your point.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —but I would not want his mild intervention at the moment to be characterized as it might be—

Mr. Macdonnell: State your point.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —if he persists in repeating it as a part of this process of obstruction.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): You are the obstructer. You are making a travesty of the rules.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for giving me the opportunity of expressing my right of free speech in this chamber.

Mr. Argue: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, it is a well-known rule that debate cannot be revived at a later stage. That relates in the main to items that are passed on motions and therefore are concluded when the debate is over. However, the administrative item for agriculture on which debate can take place has not been fully passed. The funds have not been voted. We have under discussion a fraction of the administrative item. It was on that basis that I was seeking to raise the question of deficiency payments.

I would not have occupied many more minutes of the committee's time if the point of order had not been raised. I do not think the minister challenges my right to refer to the attitude of the Prime Minister on something that happened as recently as yesterday.

Mr. Harkness: Is the hon. member still on a point of order?

Mr. Argue: Yes. The Prime Minister's estimates have not been passed and therefore remarks having to do with the Prime Minister's attitude and the government's policy as stated yesterday should be in order at this time.

Mr. Harkness: Further on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Essex East attempted to make the point that this was the time to raise grievances. As you are aware, Mr. Chairman, this is not the time to raise grievances. We are discussing interim supply and I believe that any speeches made should have reference to some item in the estimates.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course.

Mr. Harkness: However, the hon. member seems to think that a grievance of any kind whether or not it relates to an item in the estimates can be raised.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did not say that at all.

Mr. Harkness: I would contend that that is not so. Quite apart from that altogether, after having dealt with the first matter the hon. member for Essex East talked about the complaint the hon. member for Assiniboia made that the government did not see again the western liaison committee representing the ten big western farm organizations. As the hon. member for Assiniboia admitted, in speaking to the point of order he went on to talk about deficiency payments in general. He sought to make a general speech on agriculture. I see that the hon. member is nodding his head. I think that is the case. Therefore I believe my original argument is valid. We had the general debate on agriculture and the first item was passed by this committee. It is therefore not in order to have a general debate on agriculture again at this time. As I said, this argument would not apply to any items except the 10 or 12 in this department which have already been passed. I maintain it applies to those items and there should not be a revival of general debate on these items at this time.

Mr. Speakman: Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise a question of privilege as I attempted to do a few moments ago.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The committee is now discussing a point of order. The Minister of Agriculture has raised a valid point with respect to the items that have already been passed and I do not think the hon. gentleman should engage in a full and general debate on agriculture at this time. I do feel, however, that the hon. member is free to raise certain points provided he does not engage in a full, general debate on agriculture.

Mr. Speakman: Will the hon. member for Assiniboia contain himself until I am through. He questioned my possession of some letters. I am going to give excerpts from those letters for his edification.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member will have a chance. It is a question perhaps of disagreement between two hon. members. I do not think there is any point of order or question of privilege at this moment. The hon. member will have a chance to speak after the hon. member for Assiniboia is through.

Mr. Speakman: If the hon. member doubts my word—

Mr. Argue: No, I do not.

The Deputy Chairman: I must say the hon. member for Assiniboia did not doubt the hon. member's word. He said he did not doubt it, or words to that effect. However, the hon. member for Assiniboia has the floor.

Mr. Argue: The record will show that I did not doubt—

Mr. Speakman: You said you doubted the existence of those letters.

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. Argue: Then my hon. friend assured me they were in existence and I accepted his word without reservation. I went on to challenge him to produce them. He said he did not want them produced.

Mr. Speakman: I did not say anything of the sort.

Mr. Argue: If he wants to produce them I am very happy that he is about to produce them. I think he might produce them on his own time rather than on mine, Mr. Chairman.

When I rose initially I quoted the statement that the Prime Minister made in this house as late as yesterday having to do with arranging another meeting for the western farm delegation. We have had a debate in this house already on deficiency payments. We may have some further debates in this house on that question during this session because new developments can arise from time to time. But I feel that the government is in serious error, the Prime Minister is in serious error, in refusing readily to grant to the farm delegation an interview so that they can present their proposals to the government at this time.

No matter what may be said about the position taken by the farm delegation and their representatives, they have not asked the government for as much as they were promised by this administration in recent election campaigns. I would hope that the Prime Minister, either by his own statement or by a statement through the Minister of Agriculture, will agree to meet this delegation once again.

This delegation and their representatives are not people who do not know of what they speak. They are responsible spokesmen; they have asked the government for an interview and I insist that this is a democratic right which should be granted to them by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say one word in connection with these remarks which have just been made, the allegation that the Prime Minister and the government have refused to meet this western farm organization. This is completely untrue and incorrect. We have not refused to meet the farm organizations. In fact, the Prime Minister wrote to them saying we would be glad to meet them as soon as they sent down a definite alternative which they wanted to discuss with us. They have not yet sent down that alternative. We have been sitting prepared ready to meet them at any time that they sent it down, and that is the situation. There has been absolutely no refusal to meet those western farm organizations, and these allegations the hon. member is making to the contrary, that we have refused to meet them, have no foundation in truth whatever.

Mr. Speakman: Mr. Chairman, just to put the record straight I should like to read excerpts from a few of those letters for the edification of my hon. friend.

As our member of parliament, we ask you to press the government for some assistance at once.

This is signed by a local official.

Mr. Argue: Who is that?

Mr. Speakman: He is asking for an acreage payment as a means that would help the man who does not sell his grain.

Mr. Regier: On a point of order, I believe the letter has to be identified.

Mr. Speakman: I take the words as my own, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Regier: I believe it is a rule of this house that every letter that is read to the house has to be identified.

Mr. Hodgson: A doubting Thomas.

The Deputy Chairman: It has been the custom. If the hon. member does not want to do that and wishes to adopt the words as his own, of course, that is different.

Mr. Speakman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Regier: In other words, they are not actual letters; they are phonies.

Mr. Speakman: I ask the hon. member to withdraw that remark immediately.

Mr. Nesbitt: Doubting the word of a member.

Mr. Speakman: The hon. member said, "In other words, they are phony."

Mr. Argue: Put them on the record.

The Deputy Chairman: Will the hon. member for Wetaskiwin tell me what he wishes withdrawn? I did not hear any remark.

Mr. Speakman: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member from his seat and not on his feet said, "In other words, they are phonies." I ask that that be withdrawn immediately.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Regier: In that regard, I will be very happy to amend my statement and say that the letter may be phony.

Mr. Speakman: Mr. Chairman, I ask for the withdrawal of the remark of the hon. member. I think it should be withdrawn immediately.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): On the point of order, I am not sure of the actual rule itself but I know that on more than one occasion I have been challenged in this house when I read from a letter, and I was compelled to identify the author of the letter. As I say, Mr. Chairman, I am not sure of the rule but I do know that has happened to me on occasion.

The Deputy Chairman: I wish to get the first point of order straightened away. I feel that the second remark of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is one that has been used in the house before and therefore I feel that I should not ask for a withdrawal. Do you intend to continue?

Mr. Speakman: Yes, and I intend to take the words of the letters as my own because they are written to me as the representative of those people in parliament.

Mr. Argue: Not an official of the local.

Mr. Speakman: Yes, as their member of parliament, my hon. friend.

Mr. Argue: May I ask a question?

Mr. Speakman: No; contain yourself. You have made your point and we did not interrupt you.

Mr. Argue: Maybe the letter is phony.

Mr. Speakman: That is fine. My hon. friend can be unparliamentary. He has been here 15 years, and by now he should know how to conduct himself in the House of Commons; apparently he does not.

Therefore those producers feel that an acreage payment as in 1958 would meet with general approval.

We request you to have the government make an additional payment this year of $1 per acre. I am sure that a limited acreage payment would help those in dire need and put more money in circulation even if some do not need it and in turn help the whole economy.

I will not put any more on the record. I hope I have made the hon. member eat his words.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, rather than eat my words, I am sure I am being verified in the questioning I did of the kind of letters and the kind of documents my hon. friend is producing. I asked him whether the person writing the letter wrote it as an official on behalf of a given local union, or was it some official of the union who was writing a private letter to my hon. friend?

I have heard in the country that members of the government party are endeavouring by radio broadcasts, by letter writing, to get people to write in to them and say, "We want an acreage payment we do not want anything else." I am wondering whether this unnamed person in the partially produced letter that my hon. friend says he has in his possession really is an official of a farm union local speaking for the local or if these are letters that are being brought in by some paid official of the Conservative party somewhere in western Canada who is doing a political favour for my hon. friend.

Mr. Speakman: We do not have to stoop to C.C.F. tactics.

An hon. Member: What has that got to do with the point of order?

Mr. Argue: I was not talking on the point of order. I was discussing the subject before and I have a few remarks I want to make about the minister's statement. The minister said that the Prime Minister has not refused to see a delegation. I think that is a lenient interpretation of the attitude of the government. The government is trying to hold a gun to the head of the farm organizations by saying to them, "You produce the kind of alternative we have been talking about or we will not consider anything at all". The farm organizations have produced alternatives. They have produced alternatives in the plural. They have produced four well-known alternatives which I could relate but in the words of the Prime Minister himself he does not want alternatives. He wants an alternative.

I suggest this is a high-handed attitude on the part of the government, that the government to trying browbeat the farm organizations into submitting to the government something that is the Tory answer to these problems, which is no answer at all. As I survey the situation I feel that the farm organizations are very accurately and genuinely representing their membership. They have already given the government alternatives and yet the government refuses to see them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the observations made within the last few minutes by the hon. member for Assiniboia and earlier stated by him bebore the Minister of Agriculture rose to say a few words. As the hon. member for Assiniboia pointed out, on May 18 I asked the Minister of Agriculture the following question:

> May I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether, now that the Prime Minister is back, he has found it possible to answer the representations made to him by western farmers for a conference with the government with regard to an alternative proposal to meet their particular situation?

The minister replied as follows:

> I think the hon. member should address his question to the Prime Minister rather than to me.

Then I went on:

> Would the Minister of Agriculture not consider looking over toward the Prime Minister to see that I get some kind of reply from someone?
> [Mr. Argue.]

At that point surely either the Minister of Agriculture or the Prime Minister should have unhesitatingly risen in his place and indicated whether or not the government was prepared to meet this farm delegation or the liaison committee as it is sometimes referred to. Then I had to press the matter further and I did. I said:

> In view of the importance of this matter I wonder whether, since the Prime Minister's return, he has had an opportunity of conferring with his colleagues to fix a date for the delegation from western Canada that wishes to discuss with the government a proposal in the alternative, in view of the fact that the request for deficiency payments was turned down by the government. I am sure the Prime Minister will recognize that this question has to be settled very soon.

After that encouragement from the member for Essex East the Prime Minister rose and after paying some tribute to my interest in agriculture, a habit in which the Prime Minister now seemingly likes to indulge, he said:

> However, I would say . . . that this matter is under consideration.

Surely the time has arrived when the government can no longer get away with that kind of reply. That is the reply that the government has given to the farmers of western Canada since March, 1959 when they came to Ottawa 1,000 strong to make representations to the government of Canada, and only a year later were they able to get a reply from the government turning down their demand for deficiency payments.

I am not now commenting on the demand but on the right of the people of this country to make representations to the government which they elected, particularly a government elected on the basis of assurances given by them to these very farmers. It is the inalienable right of the citizens of a free country like ours, if they cannot persuade the government to adopt the point of view of those who make the representations at least to be able to lay their point of view before the members of the government, and that is the point made by the hon. member for Assiniboia. This government disregards this inalienable right.

The Prime Minister says that this matter is under consideration. It is true that the question was raised in the house about two weeks ago. I raised it. I complained about the refusal of the government to see the liaison committee, and what was the reply?

Mr. Harkness: I dealt with the matter fully at that time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am now going to deal with the reply. The minister said that the government was not going to refuse—

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I must submit again that this is completely out of order. The hon. member is going back to the debate we had on the first item of the agricultural estimates when this very matter was considered and dealt with fully by me. Now he says he is going to refer to that debate. If that is not reviving a debate I do not know what it is. Under the ruling you made a short time ago, Mr. Chairman, the member for Essex East has no right to revive that debate.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not going to revive any debate. I was simply giving the reply the minister gave as to why the government will not see the liaison committee, the reply of the minister at that time, not the reply of the Prime Minister. He did not give that reply. The reply of the Minister of Agriculture at that time was, "We will see this liaison committee"—

Mr. Fleming: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —"but we will only see it provided they write a letter and state a proposal". That was the position taken by the minister at that time, but that is not the position taken by the Prime Minister. In view of the reply of the Prime Minister, we are now entitled to know whether or not this delegation is going to be given opportunity to state its views. If the government does not today, not tomorrow, not some weeks hence, not after the Saskatchewan election, reply to the representations that have been made first by the hon. member for Assiniboia and now by me, then the government does not deserve to receive the recognition which a government is entitled to receive. We are entitled to say that in this matter the government is arrogant, that it is insolent, that it refuses to take steps to meet an important body of citizens who feel they have certain positions they want to put before the government. Do I overstate—

Mr. Jones: What nonsense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for Saskatoon says, "What nonsense". He is the representative of the city of Saskatoon and I should have thought he would be the last person to say that. I can understand the hon. member for Greenwood, who looks at me now so critically, taking that position. He lives in Toronto far away from the problems of these people, as I do myself.

Mr. Macdonnell: May I ask a question? The reason I am questioning what the hon. member is saying is that a clear statement has been made by the Minister of Agriculture pointing out that the Prime Minister and he are still waiting for a further communication from these people in Saskatchewan and that there is no question of refusing to see them. That is a plain statement. Let me make one more point. Will the hon. member for Essex East not deal with that plain statement of fact?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend has asked me a question and I will deal with it. I thank my hon. friend. He has now confirmed that I was in order although the Minister of Agriculture said a few moments ago that I was out of order because I was discussing that very matter. I will say this to the hon. member for Greenwood, who loves this parliament and who loves free government, that that kind of reply made by the Minister of Agriculture, which he has just repeated, should never be made by any responsible government.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Don't be pompous, Paul.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What this means—

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Don't be pompous, Paul.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend should not forget that the farmers of Saskatchewan are very annoyed—

The Deputy Chairman: I must remind hon. members that they must address the Chair.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I want to remind my friend, the minister of northern affairs, with regard to pomposity, that he wants to go back to western Canada to hear what the farmers there are saying about the speeches he made on this subject during the Easter recess. He complained about the farm leaders from western Canada. He said that they did not represent the farmers of western Canada. When my hon. friend goes back to Saskatchewan he is going to receive a reception the like of which he has never received before from the farmers of western Canada because of the tour which he made so elegantly, not pompously, during the Easter recess.

Let me tell the hon. member for Greenwood that it is not within the prerogative of a government, having given assurances to the farmers of western Canada as this government did, to say to the farmers, in effect, we do not declare any policy; we cannot accept your original proposal; you put in writing what you think should be done and send us a letter—put O.H.M.S. on it if you like and perhaps no postage will then be charged—addressed to the Prime Minister; we will examine your proposal, and having examined it, will then grant you an audience, an interview. That is the situation.

I say that this government, if it has a policy, should declare that policy. It should be obliged to say whether or not it has a policy on the matter instead of putting the whole responsibility on the farmers of this country. That is my answer to the hon. member for Greenwood. As an upholder of responsible government he should join with me in condemning the Minister of Agriculture and this government for its unwillingness to state a policy and for putting the whole responsibility on the farmer. When the right hon. gentleman during the last election campaign went all over this country urging the farmers of Canada to support him—

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I wonder whether or not hon. members realize that we are discussing interim supply which, I understand, is for the year 1960-61.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for reminding the hon. member for Greenwood what is the point under discussion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In the light of what we have indicated, and I say this seriously to the minister, how can he possibly justify this procrastination of now over a year. Either the government has a policy or it has not. The government ought, without any reservation, to say to the farmers of Canada, as they said with regard to the deficiency payments proposal, we do not agree with that. This was a courageous position to take. It may have been a right position or a wrong position. The farmers say they still have a problem that has to be solved. They say the government has a responsibility.

I am saying as one member of this house, under our constitutional traditions and practices, the government, unless it can give a definite answer, if it wants to follow a proper course and a course sanctioned by usage and by history, to which the hon. member for Greenwood referred so properly and with such great affection, should turn in its seals of office.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1961, the sum of $600,946,640.92 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in the committee of supply.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the resolution carries, can the minister say whether there is enough in the treasury to meet this demand?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is not a demand; this is a matter of the provision of money that may be required over the months of June and July. All I can say is that the government will continue to meet its obligations as they come due.

Mr. Regier: May I ask the minister also whether there is enough money in this vote to adequately compensate those worthy servants of the public who will be charged with the responsibility of administering the public affairs of Canada, namely the civil servants of Canada?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. The resolution which was approved in committee of supply a moment ago makes that provision.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-62 for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1961.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall bill be read the second time? Now, by leave?

Mr. Pickersgill: By leave.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister if he can assure us, since we only just got the bill, that the items in the bill correspond with those in the resolution.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, I give that assurance and also the assurance that the bill follows the usual form.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Regier: I should like to say, Mr. Chairman, that while we are willing to allow the bill to go through committee at this particular time, it is our opinion that the government is in no way meeting its obligations to the people of Canada as they were given before March 31, 1958. I would ask the Minister of Finance when the government intends to commence actions with respect to meeting its election obligations to the people of Canada. In my opinion, the actions of the government hitherto have been such that the government is not worthy of receiving any vote of any amounts of money.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Regier: No, Mr. Chairman. I wonder whether I might ask the minister whether he might not consider my question worthy of a reply and if he would like a recitation of the assurances that were given to the people of Canada of what they would do if they were elected to office. I have a long list here. However, I feel that would be mere repetition. The minister is aware of the assurances they gave to the people of Canada. In our opinion the minister and his government are not worthy of being allotted any sums of money at this particular time unless they can give us an assurance that they have some intentions at an early date to meet a number of their obligations.

An hon. Member: There is a longer list of things done.

Mr. Regier: There is no list of things done.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clauses 2, 3 and 4 agreed to.

Schedules A, B and C agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Mr. Regier: It will be a rough ride next time.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): When shall the bill be read a third time? By leave, now?

Mr. Pickersgill: By leave.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) moved the third reading of the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division, bill read the third time and passed.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PAYMENT OF PENSION DURING ABSENCE FROM CANADA

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act to permit payment of pension in prescribed circumstances to pensioners absenting themselves from Canada beyond the periods now prescribed; and to provide also certain saving and transitional provisions to protect and preserve the rights of pensioners so absent upon the date the said measure comes into force.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I have a few remarks to make before this resolution is discussed, Mr. Chairman and I wondered whether the committee would see fit to call it six o'clock at this stage.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Chairman, I think the purpose of this resolution is generally understood, but I should perhaps say a few words about it, reserving, of course, the details until the amending bill has been introduced and we have the text of it before us for debate on second reading.

When the Old Age Security Act was first introduced in 1951 it was considered by the government of the day that payments of pension to persons 70 years of age and over with the required residence qualifications should be limited to those periods of time when the pensioners themselves were actually living in Canada. This was in accordance with the provisions which had been in effect for over 20 years in the legislation which preceded the Old Age Security Act—namely, the original old age pensions act. Accordingly, the Old Age Security Act, as originally approved by parliament in 1951, provided that whenever an old age security pensioner left Canada his pension was automatically suspended for the period of his absence, subject, of course, to immediate resumption on his return. In all such cases, of course, the pensioner was entitled to his pension for the month of his departure and the month of his return.

In addition, section 5 (1) of the original Old Age Security Act went a little further by providing that the pensioner on his return might also be entitled to pick up his pension payments for a period of three months during which he was absent in any calendar year, provided that he returned to Canada within six months from the date of his departure.

At the time the law was first passed little if any objection was taken to the provision that I have described, and there were possibly good and valid reasons for such a restriction at the time. The new legislation was being placed on a quasi contributory basis, and everyone living in Canada was, modities, as well as an additional 2 per per cent sales tax on purchases of most commodities, as well as an additional two per cent income tax levy on taxable income in order to help finance the new old age security payments. In addition to these levies, the corporation tax was also increased by an additional two percentage points at that time. Since these additional levies for old age security purposes were all initiated in 1952 no one could claim that because of contributions paid during an earlier period he had built up any acquired rights which would justify the expectation that he should carry his pension with him if he moved outside of Canada. Anybody moving to reside outside of Canada automatically ceased to pay any of the old age security levies I have mentioned, and consequently he could hardly expect to continue to receive an old age security benefit outside of Canada to which he had not previously contributed. In this context the initial provision for three months of permissible absence—in addition to the month of departure and the month of return —without forfeiture of pension was probably reasonably fair at that time, since it permitted persons to leave the country for visits of short duration and to spend the more severe winter months in warm climates, with automatic reinstatement of benefits on return to Canada and with little if any loss in respect of the periods of absence.

As the years have passed, however, individuals have begun to build up what might be described as acquired rights through contributions which they have paid through extra income or sales tax levies over a period which is now approximately eight years in duration. More and more, as time passes, these individuals come to feel that they have contributed to their pension through their working years; that it should be regarded as their retirement benefit as a matter of right; and that they should therefore not be required to forfeit their old age security benefit when they leave the country. In the view of many people, the provisions which were put in the Old Age Security Act in the first place, however justifiable they may have been at that time, are now coming to work a certain amount of hardship and unfairness on individual Canadians who have contributed to the old age security fund for a good many years and who now feel that when they reach the age of 70 and qualify for old age security benefits they should be free to take their pensions with them wherever they go.

It will be recalled that the government first reviewed this matter in 1957, shortly after it took office following the June, 1957 election. At that time the Old Age Security Act had been in effect only five and a half years. The rates of contribution were still based on the original 2-2-2 formula, and the maximum old age security contribution for any year under the 2 per cent income tax levy could not exceed $60. Consequently, apart from the amount of sales tax contributed by any individual for old age security purposes, no one at that time had contributed to the old age security fund, through the income tax levy, more than $300, or the equivalent of less than eight months of old age security benefit at the $40 rate then prevailing. Accordingly, while the government at that time decided that there should be some relaxation of the existing restrictions on the movement of pensioners outside of Canada, it did not feel that the time had yet arrived when it could recommend the full recognition of the principle that old age security pensioners should take their pensions with them wherever they went outside of Canada. In consequence, the government recommended, and parliament approved, an amendment to section 5 of the Old Age Security Act extending from three months to six months the period for which a pensioner returning to Canada could obtain reimbursement of pension payments covering the period of his absence.

The time has now arrived when in the view of the government there should be a much more substantial relaxation of these restrictions. Accordingly, the legislation which will be introduced upon the approval of the present resolution will provide for the following:

1. It will do away with the present provision which requires an old age security pension to be suspended when a pensioner leaves Canada.

2. It will substitute for the provision requiring suspension a new procedure which will permit pension payments to be continued in all cases of departure from Canada for a minimum period of six full months of absence in addition to the month in which the pensioner leaves Canada.

3. In the case of pensioners who have resided in Canada 25 years or more after their twenty first birthday there will be no limit whatsoever on the length of the period during which they may continue to receive their pensions outside of Canada.

4. Only in the case of pensioners who have less than 25 years of residence in Canada following their twenty first birthday will the six-month limit have any effect. Such persons, instead of having their pension suspended as soon as they leave Canada, which is the requirement under the present law, will receive their pension cheques in the normal way for the month of their departure and will continue to have their pension cheques sent to them wherever they may be outside of Canada for a further period of absence up to a maximum of six consecutive months. If in the seventh month they return to Canada their pension payment will be paid as usual effective with the month of their return and will be continued thereafter without any interruption whatsoever. In the event, however, that they do not return to Canada before the end of the seventh month following the month of their departure from Canada, pension payments will be suspended and will be resumed only with effect from the month in which they actually return.

It will be apparent from what I have said in outlining the purposes of the new legislation that we are endeavouring by this legislation to provide substantially more generous treatment than at present to all classes of pensioners, but that we have as a particular objective the recognition of the valid claims of those long term residents of Canada who can show that they have lived the greater portion of their adult life in this country and who can therefore validly be said to have given most of the years of their life to the service of the nation. Not only have these people contributed as required under the various old age security levies during most or all of the eight years during which these levies have been in effect; but in addition to this, they may be considered to have contributed during their lengthy residence in Canada and during the bulk of their working lives to the taxes which have been required to build up and develop this country.

This group of pensioners which comprises, I may add, the vast majority of those who are presently receiving old age security benefit has, in the view of the government, and I am sure of the people of Canada, a very special claim for consideration in respect of the right to carry their pension with them for an indefinite period wherever they may move in Canada or outside of Canada following their attainment of the age of 70.

It should not be forgotten in this connection that in 1957 the government recommended, and parliament approved, an amendment to the Old Age Security Act which had the effect of reducing the residence requirement from 20 to 10 years. This means that it is possible for individuals on the basis of a relatively short period of residence in Canada to qualify for Canadian old age security benefits. It is even possible for an individual to come to Canada at the age of 60, when he has retired from active employment and when he may even have gone on to retirement benefit in another country, and through residence for 10 years as a retired person in Canada to claim the full benefit of old age security payments under our Canadian law.

I do not suggest that there are any grounds for questioning the right of such individuals to qualify for old age security benefit in Canada on the basis of such residence, since this is fully in accord with both the letter and the spirit of our Canadian legislation. Parliament decided in its wisdom in 1957 to make this generous provision for our older people, even for those who had newly come to Canada, and I have seen nothing in my experience with the administration of the legislation in the intervening years to suggest that this was not a wise and proper provision.

I do not think, however, that it would be expected by the Canadian people generally, or even by those who have benefited from our old age security provisions on the basis of a fairly recent arrival in Canada and a relatively short period of residence here, that they should be free after ten years' residence in Canada to return to their homelands or move to another country and take a lifetime Canadian pension with them. It seems to me, and it seems to my colleagues in the government, that while the right of a retired person to carry his old age security benefit with him wherever he goes should be recognized in principle and should be clearly enshrined in the law, it should at the same time be coupled with the principle that to qualify for such a lifetime benefit an individual should have contributed over a substantial period of years to the development of this nation and to the provision of those tax revenues which are required for the maintenance of government and services in this country, as well as the stability of the old age security fund itself.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have said enough at this stage to give the committee a fairly clear indication of the basic purposes which the amending legislation will seek to achieve if the resolution presently before the committee is given approval.

I have limited my explanations at this stage to the principal provision of the amending legislation to be introduced, but I should also mention that the bill will also contain certain purely technical provisions relating to the position of pensioners who are outside of Canada and whose pensions are therefore in suspense on the day when the new legislation will come into force. These transitional and saving provisions are of a purely technical nature, and I do not need to go into them at the present time beyond saying that they are intended to regularize the position of absent pensioners under the new legislation and to deal with them so far as possible as though they had been in Canada on the day when the new legislation comes into effect.

With these explanations, Mr. Chairman, I should like to commend the resolution which is now before the committee and urge its speedy approval so that we can introduce the bill itself and proceed to more detailed consideration of the various points involved at the second reading and committee stages of the bill.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I am sure that all hon. members of the committee have listened with considerable interest to the statement just made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I wish to assure the minister that in so far as the principle involved in this resolution is concerned it will meet with the approval of those of us in the official opposition. There will be details, of course, which we will want to examine both during this particular discussion stage and more particularly when we deal with the bill itself.

At this stage it will be desirable to confine oneself mainly to the principle of the resolution, a resolution which modifies some provisions affecting those pensioners who for one reason or another desire to leave the country. The resolution, however, is not consistent with the affirmations that were made by the government when during the course of an appeal to the people members of the government indicated their intentions of removing the restrictions in so far as foreign residence was concerned of those who were entitled under the universal. Old Age Security Act to acquire benefits. The minister has indicated in his statement the reasons for this course and in so doing has confirmed at least twice during the course of his remarks the attitude that was taken originally with regard to this particular matter when the act was introduced in 1951.

It will be remembered and noted, of course, that the Old Age Security Act is the only universal system available to any group of senior citizens in any country of the world. Many countries have different systems of providing assistance to the aged. In our country in order to eliminate what was recognized at the time as objectionable—the means test—no other course, it was thought, was open to provide for that objective than to bring in the universal system that we now have in Canada. It will be recalled, too, that the universal system was established as a result of government policy supported by a careful study that was made of the whole problem by an all-party committee which issued a unanimous recommendation which found realization in the bill that was introduced in this house in 1951.

In order to fully appreciate some of the things that the minister has said and some of the considerations that were in contemplation at the time of introduction, it is important to know that while the present system is not a fully contributory one, it does recognize partially the principle of contribution, originally through the formula 2-2-2 and now, as the minister has mentioned 3-3-3. So, as a result, beneficiaries of this system while actually in receipt of a pension and living in Canada continue to enjoy its benefits and also have the opportunity of sharing in financial provision for the creation of the funds and the resources which make the system possible.

As the minister has said, when the present system was established there was no experience with prior contributions. No one had made any contributions to the fund at that time for the simple reason, of course, that there was no fund provided for up to that time. Therefore, in the first year it was not possible to say that any particular beneficiary had made contributions. Therefore, it would have been difficult to argue that there was, on the basis of contribution, any entitlement for beneficial enjoyment during long periods of absence or complete periods of absence from the country. Now we have had eight years of experience, and I agree with the minister the time has come when a pension having been acquired as a result of contributions and as a matter of right should entitle the pensioner to carry his or her pension outside of the country.

There will be discussion, of course, as to the restrictions which the minister proposes to see continued but with the general principle, as I said, we agree. Certainly the longer the act continues to be in existence that much greater will be the justification for the course which is being taken in principle tonight.

The minister has noted that the government itself since 1957 has moved carefully and slowly in this matter. It did not embark upon the present course in the first months of office. It wanted undoubtedly to see from experience whether or not its former or a priori declarations were sound. That the government has waited until this time is a confirmation of the course which was originally taken. As the minister said, I think quite fairly, there were quite good and valid reasons at the time for the restrictions that were imposed.

As he said, too, at the beginning, in 1952, there was no acquired right but that right now has been acquired because the act has been in existence for almost a decade.

We were interested in listening to the outlines of what the prescribed conditions are. In the resolution these, of course, are not detailed. In the resolution which he has presented to the house the minister simply recommends to us:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act to permit payment of pension in prescribed circumstances to pensioners absenting themselves from Canada beyond the period now prescribed.

The prescriptions which the minister has postulated are, if I have taken them down correctly, five in number. In the case of pensioners who have lived in Canada for 25 years there is to be no restriction whatsoever hereafter.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Between 21 and 70.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank the minister for this correction; who have lived in Canada for a quarter of a century between the ages of 21 and 70.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): During that period.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): During that period. There is to be no restriction, and any such person who leaves Canada will receive the pension for all time even though living outside the country.

In the case of people living here for fewer than 25 years there are restrictions—

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Again, between 21 and 70.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And the minister again points out that the period of residence in that case will be calculated between 21 and 70 years of age.

When we get to the bill we shall want to examine the wisdom of that particular provision. If there is justification for taking the step that is taken in the case of people who have spent 25 years in Canada between the ages of 21 and 70, it may be difficult to convince some of us that the same principle should not be extended to others who have lived here for a period somewhere between 10 and 25 years.

The bill, however, must be recognized as one that is merely an amendment to an existing act. Although the minister referred to some other amendments that were made in an earlier period by this administration, I am sure he did not wish to leave the impression that as a result of this amendment the government is fulfilling all of its assurances with regard to old age security.

While I said that this was a system of assistance to the senior citizens of our country, based in part on the principle of contribution, it is not a fully contributory system and it could never have been otherwise, if it was to be universally applied, having as the objective for so doing the elimination of the very much objected to means test. But it must be remembered that in other jurisdictions, while there is no universal system such as the United States has, there is a system of contribution there that commends itself to many people in this country.

In the United States the old age survivors and old age security provision is one that applies only to a section of the population of that country, and while the beneficial results after a long period of trial are great, it is to be remembered that in the early stages the beneficial results are small, in some cases much smaller than the total amount of pension provided for under our Old Age Security Act. Nevertheless, the government itself did give evidence of its belief in this system. We will all remember the announcement made by the Prime Minister in January of 1958 that he had asked a distinguished professor in this country to make a study of the old age survivors system in the United States and that that study was to be prosecuted within a period of four months, thereby giving the impression that the government would implement at the earliest possible date after the four months something in Canada similar to the old age survivors system in the United States which, as I said, is a fully contributory system.

However, when the particular professor in question indicated that he could not possibly make the study within a period of four months he resigned or was asked to resign his assignment. To Professor Clark was given the important responsibility of making the assessment, and even in his case, there having been no indication that the study would not be terminated in less than four months, the impression was justifiably created that the government at the earliest opportunity was going to bring into Canada alongside and complementary to the old age security system a system somewhat similar to that in the United States. As we all know, Dr. Clark took more than four months. His study lasted over a period of a year. He presented to the administration and the country a volume of assessment without in any way making any recommendations from which one might conclude one way or another whether he was in favour of or against the adoption of the United States system.

But the government has had this report for a long time. No possible explanation can now be given that not enough time has elapsed between the receipt of that report and the present time so as not to justify the government of the day implementing the assurance that it gave. The minister has been repeatedly asked in the house, several times this session and four or five times last session, what the government was going to do about the Clark report. On each occasion the minister would affirm quite studiously that the report was receiving careful study.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): It still is.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister says it still is.

Mr. Argue: The same as the farmers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister will not misunderstand me if I say that the fact that the minister has taken and is taking this length of time to study this report reveals two things. First, it reveals that the minister is indeed a very studious minister. Second, it also reveals that this is a device, one not being employed for the first time by this government, to avoid taking a definite decision.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There again, every time one says anything the hon. gentlemen do not like they seek to make it difficult for one like myself, not too adept in debate, to make the remarks that I wish to make.

An hon. Member: We are just trying to keep you on the straight and narrow.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I can only say that if hon. members who were in the house in 1958 recall the statement made by the Prime Minister when he announced the appointment of Professor Huson, who was to do this job within four months, they will not deny for one moment that at that time the definite impression was given that once the study was over the government would certainly bring in something like the United States has. There have been many speeches by hon. gentlemen who sit in the house now and who have been elected to the house as the result of the assurance given their electors—

Mr. Speakman: No assurance.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —that the present government was going to bring in a system comparable to that in the United States. That undoubtedly is the case, and no delay in study, no delay in formulating a decision will convince any serious-minded member of the house or the great majority of the people of Canada that they were not taken in by the government with regard to this matter.

Mr. Speakman: Of course they were not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is perhaps illustrative of the soundness of my position is that, without in any way detracting from Dr. Clark's report, there was and there continues to exist in the Department of National Health and Welfare all of the material that is required in the minds of individuals in that department well trained in this field who can supply every bit of information found in the Clark report. If the government in 1958 had wanted to implement the Clark report, if they had wanted to make that part of our form of pension arrangements for the senior citizens of this country, they did not need to appoint anyone to study the matter. They had the facts in the department. They could easily have taken action and by this time we could have had established in this country some kind of system alongside or in place of the present old age universal system that we have in Canada.

An hon. Member: Why did you not do it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says, "Why did you not do it"? If he will read the report of the all-party committee in 1952 he will get his answer. My hon. friend says, "Why did you not do it?" I want to tell my hon. friend that the government of which I was a member and the party of which I am a member—

Mr. Nesbitt: Would not do it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —were responsible for the old age universal system and, as a matter of fact, are responsible for every single piece of social welfare legislation on the statute books of our country.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I cannot let that go unchallenged. Let us have none of that nonsense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says, "nonsense". We shall deal with that little bit of nonsense. All social legislation in Canada, including hospital insurance, was introduced by a Liberal government and very often, as the record will establish, in the face of Conservative opposition. Moreover, in 1957, during the last session when the Liberals were in office, all social security benefits were increased and the total amount involved on an annual basis was estimated to be approximately $133 million. During the same session, as a result of two years of negotiations with the provinces—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —legislation was introduced by the Liberal government in the field of hospital insurance, a program that now involves an expenditure of close to $300 million.

The Chairman: Order. I am sure the hon. member will realize that he is straying away from the resolution. The Chair has been very lenient up to now but for the benefit of the committee generally as well as the hon. member for Essex East perhaps I should read the resolution, which is in these words:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act to permit payment of pension in prescribed circumstances to pensioners absenting themselves from Canada beyond the periods now prescribed—

I doubt whether the Clark report or other security measures would be relevant to the resolution.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I am sure no one would quarrel with your decision. All I can say in extenuation is that the observation made by the minister was at least provocative—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): The observation made by you.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and on that count I was perhaps justified in giving a little bit of history, which I think hon. gentlemen require from time to time.

An hon. Member: We have heard the song long enough. You do not have to repeat it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would simply say to the minister that this is a welcome provision in principle but not welcome in all of its details because I do not think it goes far enough and does not meet the whole problem that confronts the senior citizens of our country at this time. I would hope that the minister has given careful attention, as I am sure he has, to the Forand bill in the United States in which medical assistance for the aged is projected as one of the necessary objectives. Having in mind the cost of living in this country, having in mind the problem of geriatrics, the aging of our population, the federal and provincial governments —I have no right, of course, to speak in terms of what the provinces should do—should give consideration now to supplementing our universal system by some form of medical assistance that will relieve many hundreds of thousands of old age pensioners from obligations and concerns which they cannot possibly meet now under the present arrangement. I think that that is an act to which the minister will want to give his attention. The premiums for some medical plans are now beyond the reach of many of our senior citizens.

Mr. Chambers: On a point of order; surely, again, the Forand bill, a United States proposal, is away beyond what is relevant to the present resolution.

Mr. Chevrier: Why is it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If the hon. member really had an opportunity, as I am sure he has not because of his many preoccupations, he would see the relevancy of extending the period—

The Chairman: Order; I think I should draw to the attention of the hon. member the fact that we are only concerned here with the payment of pensions to pensioners who absent themselves from the country, and not the addition of any amounts to cover the sickness of pensioners. I might draw the attention of the hon. member to citation 250 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, paragraph 3, which reads:

> The object of the resolution recommended by the crown is to give the house a first opportunity to discuss the advisability of making a certain expenditure. The details of the projected measure are not then disclosed and debate is confined to the resolution which should not be lengthy, although care must be taken that the terms used are sufficiently wide to cover the whole of the bill which will be subsequently introduced.

I think the wording of the resolution is clear enough, and that we should confine ourselves to the changes that permit the payment of pensions to pensioners who absent themselves from Canada. This is the only point under discussion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not going to argue with you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Harkness: You are not allowed to.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, who is an authority on procedure as well as deficiency payments and a dollar per acre assistance, tells me I am not in order. I am sure if we discussed agriculture we would be out of order. I am not going to argue the point, but I have always understood that on a resolution of this kind one is at liberty to discuss alternative arrangements which might be supplementary to those proposed in the resolution, provided one dealt with the subject matter. This is the subject matter.

Mr. Harkness: What I said to the hon. member was that he was not allowed to argue with Your Honour in connection with your ruling.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): You have done that before.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure, sir, the Chair would be the last person to accept that suggestion. What my hon. friend is saying is that once the Chair takes a position it is not open to an hon. member to seek to persuade the Chair that the course he is suggesting is wrong. This would mean that we would not be allowed the right, in this parliament, to discuss a question of procedure. That may be my hon. friend's concept of free discussion, but it is not mine.

Mr. Harkness: You know quite well you are not allowed to argue with the Chair.

Mr. Chevrier: Do not make so much noise.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As I said to the minister, the principle of this resolution is acceptable. We do not believe that in all particulars it goes as far as hon. gentlemen said it should go and would go. We do not believe it goes as far, in some cases, as it is desirable to go. We do not believe that this resolution provides an answer to the problems confronting our senior citizens, but the principle of this resolution is accepted, and in the presentation of this resolution what the government has done is—

An hon. Member: What you did not do.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —to confirm the course taken by the government in 1951, a government which as I said a moment ago, not only introduced this particular legislation of which this is an amendment but introduced every single act of social welfare on the statute books.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Again, I cannot allow that to go unchallenged, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): This is one of those rare and happy occasions when I am in a position to compliment the government on a piece of legislation that they have brought before this committee. This amendment before us today concerning old age security is something with which we have not only agreed, but something with which we have agreed for a very long time. The members of this party have for years advocated this very thing that the government has introduced today.

Just to illustrate one of those occasions, I should like to refer for a moment to Hansard for October 16, 1957, page 55, which contains the report of a speech by the former member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. M. J. Coldwell), during the throne speech debate. I quote:

> May I add one other thing? I think the residential qualification should be discontinued. If a senior citizen wishes to reside perhaps in the United Kingdom or even across the line in the United States or elsewhere, the pension should be paid as of right. I say it should be paid as of right today because all the people are paying directly for it. This is no longer a gift from the treasury as it was. Right from the time a young Canadian begins to earn he is going to pay 2 per cent of his personal income tax into the social security fund. Two per cent of the corporation tax and 2 per cent of the sales tax which everybody pays also will go into that fund. Our citizens are paying a fairly substantial premium if it is considered over the working period of life of a young man or woman today. The disqualification on account of residence outside the borders of Canada should, we think, be eliminated as well as the time for qualification reduced as is foreshadowed in the speech from the throne. It is our contention that this pension should be paid as of right.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

I am very pleased, Mr. Chairman, that the government has finally introduced this measure. I must say I have to disagree with some of the remarks the minister made when he was introducing this resolution. He made reference to the fact that it is only because this is now a contributory plan that the senior citizens of this country really have any right to this pension. I think that was a very wrong picture that was painted across this country for years, because the impression was given that the pension was something from a benevolent kindhearted, good father sort of a government. Really, you are not giving your senior citizens anything when you reach in their back pocket, take a dollar and hand 50 cents back to them. Even when there was no direct contribution to this old age pension, it still came out of the pockets of those people who paid taxes.

I do not intend to speak very long on this resolution tonight, Mr. Chairman. However, I should like to dwell briefly on the residence clause that the minister mentioned. It is quite true that a very good financial case could be made for the fact that if a senior citizen only has to be in this country for 10 years before he can qualify for the old age security, providing he has the other qualifications, his contributions may not amount to enough to pay his pension if he returns to some other country. I think there is a matter of principle involved here, too. We are toying with a problem that has arisen before. Are we going to have two or three different kinds of Canadian citizens? Once a person has been accepted as a Canadian citizen, how can you differentiate one from another? As I say, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to deal with this matter at length tonight, but I think it is something we should keep in mind because it has risen before and I am sure it will come up again.

The minister pointed out something tonight that I think is quite significant. From the time the old age pension measure was first passed it took 20 years before there were any changes, any major amendments. Then from that time it only took nine years until there was another major amendment. Then, lo and behold, it only took three years before we got another. You can therefore see, Mr. Chairman, that the turtle of our social security program in this country is slowly starting to pick up a little bit of momentum. Maybe we can look forward to the time in the not too distant future when we can hope for improvements every year or two in our social security program.

With this hope in mind it may be that one of the other major faults in our old age security could be corrected—that correction was one that was promised by this government by a further increase of our present pension of $55 a month which in many cases is so hopelessly inadequate. The situation is hopeful for the citizens of this country if in the not too distant future our improvements start to pick up once in every one or two years instead of once in every 20 years as in the past. We can even hope that in the not too distant future we shall have a portable pension plan.

I listened closely to the remarks of the hon. and learned member for Essex East. He discussed for some considerable time this Clark report and this portable pension plan or one similar to that in the United States. However, I must admit frankly that when he got through I was still not sure whether he was for it or against it. I know he was against the government because they had not implemented it. Although I listened very closely, I do not know whether he is for or against it himself. However, I think this is a very good piece of legislation. I think it is one of the best we have had in the last three years since we have had a really progressive government during the 1957-58 session.

An hon. Member: They have made two changes.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I hope we can look forward to many more pieces of progressive legislation in the future.

Mr. Payne: Briefly, Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order. I had recognized the hon. member for York-Humber.

Miss Aitken: I always like to listen to the hon. member for Essex East. I feel that he provides drama in this House of Commons. He is so full of indignation.

An hon. Member: Righteous indignation.

Miss Aitken: Yes, righteous indignation. He is so full of righteous indignation that one really never knows what is going to happen. As a farmer, he is indignant over farm problems. As president of the Martin bureau of statistics, he is indignant over unemployment. Now, as a former minister of national health and welfare, he is indignant over the improvements we are making in our social security measures. He is an extremely versatile man. However, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Timmins, he leaves us up in the air. We do not know whether he is supporting this bill to help our old age pensioners or whether he wants the old age pensioners—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am supporting the principle of it.

Miss Aitken: The hon. member says he is supporting it. That is the best speech he has made today.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am inclined to agree with the hon. member.

Miss Aitken: Ever since I first came into this House of Commons the old age security measures that were presented to the house, as the hon. member for Essex East keeps telling us, back in 1953—that was when I first came here—have always been of special concern to me because in my riding of York-Humber I have hundreds of elderly people who have benefited greatly by the old age pension. Really, to use the word "benefited" is to use an understatement because for scores of them it has meant freedom from want. I will therefore always support the Minister of National Health and Welfare when he brings in measures that improve these benefits for our elderly people.

There are some people who assert that this particular measure will inspire abuses. I suppose it will propably do so because when you enlarge good measures there are always people who will exploit them. But on the other hand we have had up until now one class of people who were penalized, who did not have freedom of movement. What this means is that we are doing a good thing for a very small class of people and we are removing an injustice. For this reason I support this particular resolution wholeheartedly.

But—and there is always a "but" when you are in politics; you always want something more, and I want something more—it is my understanding that the blind person's pension is lost when a blind person reaches the eligible age for an old age pension. That situation also applies to the disabled person's pension. I agree with the principle that no one person should receive two or three government pensions. However, this category of blind persons I feel is a category by itself. This pension is being given because of a special handicap which decreases a person's independence and increases the ordinary costs of living. I feel it has nothing to do with age. In fact, because of the infirmities of age, the blind person needs both pensions more than ever after reaching the age of 70. I would therefore ask the minister to take another look at this situation. I think it is one of the exceptions that invariably surround every rule. I do not believe that blind persons or disabled persons should lose their pensions when they become eligible for the old age pension. If they needed a special pension before they were 70, they need that pension even more after they reach three score years and ten.

I know the Minister of National Health and Welfare has these pensions always under study and I ask him, if he will, in the not distant future to bring in another amendment that will wipe out that regulation that blind persons and disabled persons cannot have both the blind person and disabled person pension and the old age pension.

Mr. Crestohl: I most certainly welcome this resolution. I was very pleased to hear the minister in clear and lucid form present the arguments in support of the resolution, all of which were laudable and all of which I am sure are welcomed by every hon. member in this house. When the act was originally debated in 1952, I think it was, the same spirit was displayed in the house. Every hon. member of the house and all parties in the house favoured the bill and welcomed it and of course it has become law. I point out merely that we recognize—at least I do and I am sure many of my colleagues do—the fact that the minister's resolution and the address he made are most laudable. We recognize it.

Certainly the government will deserve the approbation of the country for improving the Old Age Security Act. But I ask hon. members to recognize at the same time that it was the former government which introduced this legislation. It may have had defects. Perhaps it did not meet all the anticipations. The minister's present proposal is nothing new. I should like to point out that when the matter first came up in 1951 I spoke on this bill at the time. I should like to indicate that I dealt with section 5 on that occasion and suggested that consideration should be given to old age pensioners who wished to live outside the country. I made that suggestion to the minister at the time, and proposed that it be incorporated in the bill. But reasons were given, as the minister made clear tonight, why it could not then be done. I should like to read part of what I said then on November 26, 1951. I am reading from Hansard of 1951 at page 1319:

> The Minister of National Health and Welfare has frankly stated during the debate that time and experience may suggest improvements.

It is logical that that should happen.

> At the risk of being redundant I want to ask the minister again to review section 5 of the act which deals with the suspension of the pension to anyone who leaves Canada for a certain period.

Thus the minister's present proposal is nothing new; it is not a new discovery. The point was raised before, though it was not put into effect for reasons which the minister has explained. I hope hon. members opposite will have the courtesy to recognize that this legislation was enacted by the former government and not by the present government. Of course, as time goes on situations change and improvements are possible. The financial status of people changes. The value of the dollar changes, and it is quite possible that things which could not have been done formerly can be done today. But this is not a new invention. It is not a stroke of genius on the part of the minister, but a natural development of the circumstances of our time.

Mr. Ricard: If it was good then, why was it not adopted?

Mr. Crestohl: If the hon. member had listened to the hon. member for Essex East, when he gave the explanation, he would know. When you introduce a piece of legislation you can go just so far. You cannot cover all the eventualities. Times change. Economics change. The government may some time be asked: why did you not increase the pension to $100 a month? Perhaps $100 a month is not feasible in the opinion of the government. Perhaps the economic situation does not justify it. They may some time be asked, why they did not make it $60 or $75, and the answer would be that circumstances did not permit it at that time. This was a most desirable piece of legislation when it was introduced. The whole country welcomed it. Why did not the opposition at that time make these proposals, if they say they would like them in the bill? As a matter of fact, a government supporter made that suggestion to the minister. I said as reported at page 1319 of Hansard of November 26, 1951:

> At the age of 70 and over people become quite frail, and frequently they are alone. They may have to leave Canada for short or long periods to preserve their health or in order to reside with a child outside of Canada rather than live with strangers or alone. If the denial of the monthly pension is to produce real hardship, the minister, I know, will have another look at this section of the act with a view to eliminating such a possibility.

The time has properly come. This government made certain promises to the people of Canada and the times now permit their present action. As I said, the cost of living has increased and the government goes forward, and eliminates a hardship which we at that time could not eliminate because of circumstances. I say very frankly that I recognize favourably the move which the government is now making. This is something which was promised; something which will stand up and be of real use. I dare say that when the bill is presented we may have further improvements to suggest. The government may reply that it cannot go quite as far as we would like in present circumstances.

That is quite possible. It is the kind of debate which does take place. But I ask hon. members who support the government to give due credit where it belongs for bringing in this legislation in the first place.

I find it necessary now to read a part of the speech made by the former minister of national health and welfare when he introduced this bill in 1951. At that time, the hon. member for Essex East said this:

> Mr. Speaker, the bill now under consideration is part of Canada's new program for old age security, climaxing a quarter century of progress in this field.
> The government's twofold plan for old age assistance and universal pensions represents the greatest single advance made in this country in our provisions for senior Canadians. It is a national vote of confidence in Canada's capacity to provide for the security of its older citizens.

That is the spirit which prevailed at that time. Certainly we welcomed it and the measure was unanimously adopted.

With regard to the resolution itself, may I say that the experience of the past eight years has revealed certain hardships and difficulties. Certainly the civil servants who administer the act have been very loyal and shown themselves very able, but they have often been confronted with difficulties and circumstances in which understanding is required. One of these difficulties stems from the fact that in many cases it is far from easy for our senior citizens to give satisfactory proof of age. That has been one of the complaints which I have encountered and which I am sure the department has encountered. In my own experience I have found very sympathetic understanding shown by the deputy minister and the senior officials in helping to solve the problems of people who have come to this country late in life after the destruction of records in Europe which would normally have provided proof of age.

A similar difficulty may arise with regard to showing proof of the date on which a person arrived in Canada, how long a person has lived in Canada and what interpretation may be given to the requirement of 25 years residence. Will that phrase mean 25 years consistent and continual residence in Canada, or will some allowance be made if an old age pensioner has been absent, say for a year or two, or for six months, during that period? I am wondering whether any hardship is likely to arise from the wording of the bill. I hope the minister will say that the provision does not necessarily mean 25 years continuous residence in the country.

I hope the minister and the government will approach this and similar problems with sympathy and understanding, and I hope this attitude will extend to whatever improvements we may be able to suggest to what I have no hesitation in calling a laudable piece of legislation. I am sure, too, that hon. members opposite who have asked why every possible provision was not inserted in the original act will now have—I will not say the courage—the desire and the intention of endeavouring to encompass everything of a constructive and useful nature which might lead to an improvement on the present resolution which the minister has put forward.

Mr. Payne: Mr. Chairman, I listened to the hon. member for Essex East with the same delight that many other hon. members of the committee experienced in listening to his oh so brief remarks as he brought to our attention the various sequences of thought which flickered across his mind, most of them completely irrelevant to the topic under discussion and the resolution before the committee.

I should like in what I hope will be a brief manner to say that I feel this resolution should be treated with a great deal of concern and speed. Rather than listening to recitations of past honours deserved or undeserved let us forget the baloney, take a look at the resolution itself and bear in mind for just a moment what the government has in mind which is to benefit the senior citizens of this nation.

I suggest that we vote upon this resolution promptly, save the time of the committee and at the same time bring a benefit to the senior citizens of this country.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am going to be brief but I cannot resist getting up to express my support for the spirit, the principle and the purpose of this resolution. It is an amendment that has been urged upon former governments and this government by this group for many years. We are pleased to see the amendment which will mean so much to particular groups of our older citizens, those who require for health reasons to live in other countries perhaps to lengthen their lives and those who wish to return to their old country to live with family or friends.

In discussing a resolution of this type I not only see the resolution on the order paper and listen to the details of the debate but in my mind's eye I see the number of people in Canada who will be assisted by the resolution. I am sure we all rejoice in this opportunity.

I listened to the hon. member for Essex East with pleasure keeping my weather eye open to see what was coming next. I heard his reference to the Clark report and the intimation that the government should have hastened in that direction. We agree with that but like a former speaker we could not help but wonder whether or not the hon. member was in favour of that action. The hon. gentleman is a master of the art of boldly marching forward while stepping sideways.

We in this group know where we stand. We hope the government will take action in the near future to develop in Canada an overall comprehensive national pension scheme to meet the needs of our citizens in their retirement years. We are in favour of that and will continue to advocate it but we believe this resolution is a step in the right direction.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Monteith (Perth) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-63, to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Production and marketing branch—
10. Agricultural Stabilization Act administration, $315,130.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister if he is in a position to announce whether or not there will be a floor price on sugar beets? If he is not in a position to make that announcement can the minister say when he hopes to be in that position? When dealing with that perhaps the minister could tell us about my concern and that of other farmers in Ontario—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —as to when we may have some announcement with regard to a floor price on Ontario grown wheat, and also whether or not it is the intention of the minister to provide for a support price on wheat outside of the stabilization act.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, when dealing with this matter last Friday I announced that there would be a price announced for sugar beets in the near future. That is the situation. I expect it will be announced in a few days' time. The same thing applies to the other commodities. An announcement will be made shortly concerning both wheat and soy beans.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Can the minister say whether or not the government proposes before the end of this session or between the end of this session and the beginning of the next to withdraw the support principle under this act and provide some other system of assistance as it did in the case of hogs and eggs?

Mr. Harkness: I also stated last Friday that we would continue to support the maximum number of agricultural commodities as the necessity for that support arose by whatever means was most appropriate for the support, whether by means of deficiency payments, offer to purchase, flat payments or some other means.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What the minister is saying is that we will be confronted sometime during this session or the next with further repudiations by the government of its price support policy under the Agricultural Stabilization Act?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, this constant reiteration on the part of the hon. member for Essex East of words like "repudiation" and references along that line is something of which I am sure all hon. members of this committee have grown tired particularly when references of that kind have absolutely no foundation in fact. There has been no repudiation at any time as far as agricultural policy or the stabilization act is concerned. We have provided to the farmers of this country support on a larger number of commodities under the stabilization act than exists in most other countries of the world and so many more commodities than the former government of which the hon. gentleman was a member that there is no comparison. The government of which he was a member only in one year supported more than six commodities and the only time it did so was during the epidemic of foot-and-mouth disease. Apart from that, four commodities were the most they ever supported in any one year. Since we passed the stabilization act we have had over 20 commodities under support at all times.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed to say a few words on the stabilization of agricultural prices, particularly with regard to sheep and lambs.

We know, first of all, that on May 8, 1959, the agricultural prices stabilization board had announced a support price of $19.55 per hundredweight, in Toronto, for live lambs graded "good". In September of the same year, the board decided to buy from the packers lamb carcasses, graded "Canada choice" and "Canada good", which had been stored by the packers. In October 1959, the same board issued a release in which it indicated its intention to purchase frozen lamb from the same organizations.

The first requirement of the board, was that to be eligible for purchase the lambs had to be slaughtered and graded in a registered slaughter-house, one in which there was official inspection and grading by the Department of Agriculture. Now we have in Canada small slaughter-houses, operated by individuals, that cannot share in the benefits of this legislation because they are not inspected.

I have received complaints from some of those individuals operating small abattoirs, and not eligible for the benefits of this legislation. Therefore, I ask the minister whether he intends to amend the board's regulations so that those small operators may share in the benefits of this legislation, in view of the fact that the regulations of the prices stabilization board, such as they now exist, discriminate against small operators.

That is so true that I have received a letter from an Ontario gentleman, from which I should like to quote a few words. The letter is signed by a Mr. Robinson, of Hannon, Ontario. I quote:

(Text):

The problem as presented by Mr. Robinson to me is that this subsidy which at the present time amounts to approximately nine cents a pound is not available to him since he runs a small slaughter-house. Although he advises that he does have Ontario government inspection, he is not set up to accommodate federal inspection in his packing plant.

Mr. Robinson cannot benefit from this recommendation.

(Translation):

Since this man's facilities are not inspected by the federal Department of Agriculture, he is unable to enjoy the same privileges as the large slaughter-houses. I therefore ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) whether he intends to change the regulations so that our small businessmen may take advantage of the legislation and continue to operate.

(Text):

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the regulations to which the hon. member refers really are health regulations. They are in effect for the protection of the Canadian public as far as the quality of the meat which they buy is concerned. Only meat that has been killed in inspected establishments, that is establishments which meet certain standards, can enter into interprovincial trade, and it is only from establishments of that kind, of course, that the stabilization board purchases meats of any kind, whether sheep, pork, or whatever it may.

If we did not do that we would be in the position of being unable to ship the meat that we purchase to any place where the market happens to exist, or ship it out of the country, or to any place else. It would be a completely impractical operation. The actual fact is that owing to our purchase of whatever meat is surplus from the inspected slaughtering plants, it means that the smaller slaughtering plants which have not met the standards of inspection have the ability to sell into a market which they would not have otherwise and are able to dispose of their products. Therefore, actually they suffer from no disadvantage at all.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Controls by the price stabilization board are a handicap to those small producers because those producers cannot afford to pay the same prices as the operators of large slaughter-houses. I feel, therefore, that such control is discriminatory against small producers, small businessmen, and operators of medium-sized slaughter-houses. Some of them might slaughter as many as 50 sheep every week; their slaughter-house is inspected by provincial officials, but they cannot take advantage of the legislation. As a result, they have to pay nine or ten cents more a pound for their lambs than the operators of large packing plants. That is why I suggest that this control is prejudical to small business and to small producers.

(Text):

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, once more I am afraid the hon. member does not understand the situation.

Mr. Boulanger: Yes, I understand.

Mr. Harkness: The price at which sheep or hogs are sold and so on, whether they are bought by a smaller packing plant or a large packing plant, is determined by the support price when the price of sheep is down to the support level. That is what determines the price of live lambs and the wholesale price of lamb products that are sold by small plants is determined in this way. The result, as I say, is that any surplus that exists is taken off the market by the stabilization board and the small plant is able to get the same price as the bigger plant, putting its product out into retail outlets or into wholesale outlets, except for the fact that some wholesalers will not buy uninspected meat because they cannot ship it across interprovincial boundaries and in some cities they are not allowed to sell it. The remedy for these small plants that the hon. member has mentioned is to bring the standards of their establishments up to the health standards which we set so that they will be able to pass federal inspection.

Mr. Boulanger: How much would it cost to have federal inspection? I have a letter here which says it would cost half a million dollars to secure the equipment in order to qualify for such inspection.

Mr. Harkness: It costs absolutely nothing for federal inspection. We supply it free of charge.

Mr. Boulanger: It is the equipment.

Mr. Harkness: The concern has to bring its operations up to specified health standards which we must maintain if we are going to be able to send our meats into export markets, across interprovincial boundaries and into some cities which fortunately, I think, have pretty strict inspection facilities. Actually what the hon. member is requesting is that we should relax our health standards as far as the inspection and sale of meat are concerned. This simply means that what he is asking is that we should give our blessing to the possible sale of diseased or other inferior meat to the general public which of course we cannot do.

Mr. Boulanger: In our province we have classification inspection but we do not have health inspection. I do not know about the other provinces but in Quebec we do not have health inspection and nobody has died from any meat produced there.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, item 10 is one where the minister might give the committee some information as to the quantity of pork that has been handled by the board, the quantity of pork purchased from time to time in the recent past, some idea of the prices that have been paid for the various cuts of pork, the quantity involved, and some of the main companies that have handled this pork on government account, if the minister has that information. I am particulary interested in the business transaction that was carried out whereby I believe some of this pork was sold back to the packing companies from whom it had been purchased. I am interested in the price which these packing companies paid to the agricultural stabilization board for what I believe to have been very large quantities of pork resold to the companies.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I gave figures last Friday, which are to be found at page 3885 of Hansard, as to the amount of pork which we held in the form of frozen pork, as canned luncheon meat and as canned hams as of March 31 of this year. As far as total purchases are concerned, I cannot give complete figures except to say that altogether we purchased in the neighbourhood of 126,870,000 pounds of pork cuts of one kind and another. Some of this was sold back to be canned as canned pork and then we took possession after it was canned. Some of it was sold into the market. A certain amount was exported and some was put into canned hams. Therefore there is an overlap in the figures from that point of view. However, I think the inventory at the end of March is as definite a figure as I can give at the moment, and I have indicated that I gave that information last Friday.

With respect to the prices at which the various pork cuts have been sold, these have varied considerably. I have not got a list of the figures here. A return was asked for some time ago and I believe that return was tabled and is now part of the records of the house. The return shows what the costs and so on were. The return is about an inch thick.

Mr. Argue: Do you have the number of the return?

Mr. Harkness: I have not the number of the return. As I recall, the return was asked for by a member of the C.C.F. party. I have forgotten just who it was but I believe it was a member of your group.

Mr. Argue: It included figures of quantities of pork purchased?

Mr. Harkness: As I say, it is a very voluminous return; it is about an inch thick. There have been thousands and thousands of entries with regard to the handling of pork and therefore when the hon. member asks for figures it is a very difficult thing to give specific figures because there have been so many transactions in both purchases and sales. As the hon. member will realize, we were buying all this pork in the form of fresh pork cuts and we were not able to find storage space for all of it. Therefore we had to start canning it and what we did in a large number of cases was to buy fresh pork cuts, turn them back to an abattoir for canning and pay a canning fee on the pork. That really involved many cases of what one might call book entries.

We bought pork and we sold it back to the canning companies and then bought the canned pork from them. Actually what we were really doing was paying them for the canning.

Mr. Argue: What was the price received for pork bellies when they were sold back to the companies for canning purposes?

Mr. Harkness: We did not sell any bellies to the companies for canning purposes. You cannot can bellies. As the hon. member is aware, bellies are chiefly fat and if you attempt to can bellies all you really get is a can of lard with a small amount of meat in it. Therefore no bellies were sold back for canning purposes.

Mr. Argue: Were bellies sold back to the companies?

Mr. Harkness: Bellies were sold untinned to the highest tenderer for rendering into lard.

Mr. Argue: Can the minister give us first of all the prices paid for the bellies; second, the quantities involved; and, third, the prices received for them?

Mr. Harkness: I have not the figures here that the hon. member has mentioned. I think they appear in the return to which I have referred, and all I can say is that if they are not there I will be very glad to supply them. Generally speaking, of course, we took a severe loss on bellies. There is no question about that because, as I say, once you have pork in the freezer for a certain length of time it tends to get what is known as freezer burn. You can hold it in storage only for a certain length of time. After these bellies particularly had been held for a certain length of time in cold storage we were completely unable to sell them either in Canada or abroad and we had to take some kind of action to salvage as much food value as we could. The only thing we could do was to sell them for rendering into lard which we did. I cannot recall offhand what the amount sold for this purpose was. We did dispose of a limited number of bellies overseas but otherwise they were sold for rendering into lard. We still hold quite a number of bellies and we hope we will be able to dispose of them either on the home market or abroad at not too great a loss. But with respect to the older ones which we bought at the beginning of the purchase program we had to, as I say, salvage what we could out of them and we did that in the only way it could be done, by selling them for rendering purposes.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, it puts the committee in a very difficult position when the minister does not have the information with him to answer the questions we ask. My information, obtained from some people in Edmonton—this is why I want some information from the minister—is that very large quantities of pork bellies were purchased by the board from packing companies at relatively good prices. They were sold back to the same packing companies from which they had been purchased in the first place, but they were sold back at such low prices as to be almost a donation to those packing companies. The feeling of the people who were talking to me was that the packing companies in the city of Edmonton had made a killing in this business and that the government and the stabilization board had really been taken in, and that this constituted a very substantial cost to the federal treasury.

I do not want to make assertions; I do not want to hurl accusations. I am trying to get some information from the minister on this item on these particular points. Since there are many millions of dollars involved I feel the committee has a right to ask for this information and to receive it before this item passes. I do not believe it is good enough when we are asked to look up returns in the house or when we are told we can get the information tabled at a later time. I think we should have this information when this item is being discussed.

Mr. Harkness: As I said, there is no question whatever of not providing all the information which it is possible to provide. The point I made before was that the information the hon. member requested could not be given here. If I were to give all of it we would be two days on this one subject because it constitutes thousands of entries. I say there is a very thick return in connection with it and these details can be looked up.

So far as the assertion about which the hon. member spoke and which he said had been made that the packing companies have made a killing in connection with these bellies, that is completely incorrect. We had one or two cases of people who bought these bellies on tender and who attempted to put the bellies back into the trade by selling them as bacon. Those people were promptly prosecuted. As a matter of fact, it cost them a considerable amount of money, rather than making a killing, to attempt to do it. We exercise very close supervision over the disposal of these bellies and we made sure that they were converted into lard. The prices that were paid for them were fairly low. As the hon. member probably knows, the price of lard is extremely low. Certainly, there was no killing made by the people who bought these and converted them into lard.

Mr. Argue: I ask the minister to bring to this committee, before this item passes some information, the information I have requested or enough of the information to give the committee a picture of what has happened. His officials are before him. It is the ordinary practice to ask the administration for details at this time. This is what the estimates are for. There are many millions of dollars involved, and for the minister to come in here empty-handed, without any information, is scarcely good enough.

I am going to insist, if the discussion should appear to determinate before ten o'clock, that this item stand until the minister can bring to the committee the information I have been requesting. This item is the whole basis of the government's support program which is under attack in the country, which I think has been a disservice to the agricultural producers of this country, which has cost the taxpayers a great deal of money and is doing nothing at the moment, in the opinion of organized agriculture on the prairies, except to cause hardship and to bring about a great deal of uncertainty in the agriculture industry. I believe the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska has some questions to ask. If he has not, I shall continue, but certainly we are entitled to this information and I hope we will get it.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, as I said, we are quite willing and anxious to give any information which is requested. I am not clear what information the hon. member wants. As he put his question in the first instance I would have been required to be reading here for a very, very long time. The transactions which have taken place, as I have said before, have been thousands in number. What he asked was the price at which these pork cuts had been bought, and the price at which they had been sold.

Mr. Argue: Some general idea.

Mr. Harkness: If he would make it clear exactly what information he wants, I shall be glad to get it. As I say, I am not clear as to what information he does want.

Mr. Argue: Then I would ask the minister to provide this committee, beginning January 1, 1959, with the monthly totals of pork products that have been purchased under this act; the average price that was paid per month for the various cuts involved. I should like the average price that has been paid for the bellies that have been sold. I should like the average price that has been obtained from the companies, and I should like some indication of the largest purchases that have been made by some of the packing companies in the country. I should like the minister to supply the committee with the lowest tender price received by the government for the pork bellies which, according to the minister, have gone into the production of lard.

I just want a general picture of the operations of this board. Surely that can be done. The minister does not have to produce every single transaction; that is not the information we want. This committee is entitled, and I think the minister would be able to do it, to an outline to date of the general operations of the board, the general prices it has been paying from time to time, the prices it has been receiving from time to time and the cost to the treasury. Let us have enough information to find out how well these packing companies have done on their purchases.

Mr. Harkness: As I said, I will be glad to secure this information. I do not know whether it can all be secured in exactly the form in which the hon. member has requested it. If not, and if anybody really wants to go into this in detail, I think the best way to do it is to study the return of which I spoke. One of my officials tells me it has not been filed as yet. It went through my office three or four days ago.

Mr. Argue: You are now talking about something we have not got.

Mr. Harkness: I am always frank and honest with this committee. The hon. member is now trying to insinuate that I was trying to mislead this committee when I said this return had been made. It passed through my office several days ago, and I approved it. I thought it had been filed. My official says he does not think it has been filed. Why it has not, I do not know. In any event, that was the situation.

The point I am making is that if anyone wants to go into this in detail, it will be a matter of several days study going over these figures. In so far as a general picture is concerned, I will attempt to give as good a general picture as possible along the lines the hon. member has requested to the committee tomorrow morning.

Mr. Argue: I thank the minister for the conclusion of his answer. It is a little difficult for a member of the committee to be told over a period of 10 minutes that a large file has been tabled, a voluminous one that contains all the information that we are requesting and all we have to do is study it. I sent out for the return as soon as the minister mentioned it, and I am waiting to see whether or not the sessional papers office produces it. The minister has now said that he is not certain whether or not the sessional papers office does, in fact, have the return. It is therefore rather difficult for the members of the committee to deal with the problem when we are not even sure whether or not the return has been tabled and is available to hon. members.

Mr. Boulanger: Since the lifting of the embargo on imports from the United States can the minister tell us what quantities of hogs and hog products have been imported?

Mr. Harkness: I do not know the exact quantity but it has been almost negligible. A few trial shipments, small in quantity, were sent over from the United States but they did not go very well. Apparently there was no profit in them and apparently there were no repeat orders. The prices in Canada and in the United States, when you take into consideration the duty, the cost of transportation and particularly the difference in quality, have been such that as to the shipment of United States pork over here since the embargo was removed, the possibility of it just really has not existed.

Mr. Boulanger: Can the minister give us the figures tomorrow?

Mr. Harkness: Yes, we can give the figure tomorrow, but I do not think the figure is material because, as I say, the quantities are extremely small. The total volume of imported pork, particularly in comparison with what we use ourselves and what we ship to the United States is just negligible.

Mr. Argue: For the information of the committee I may say that I have received a note from the page. I take it that it is from the sessional papers office. It is unsigned but it reads as follows:

Mr. Argue: We have nothing on pork purchases for this year.

This shows just how difficult it is to discuss this question when the minister tells us to look at a return that is not yet available. I hope that by eleven o'clock tomorrow this return will be made available. The minister said it will not be much good to us because it is going to take many days to study it. This is not a very satisfactory method by which to deal with the minister's estimates. He promised—and I know he will keep his promise—that tomorrow he will have available for us in summary form some of the information we have been requesting with regard to the details of the operations of the stabilization board. Therefore tomorrow we can continue with these questions on the basis of the information we are given at that time.

Mr. Boulanger: I have another question to ask the minister and if he cannot supply the answer to this question tonight, I will ask him to supply it for tomorrow. How many farmers are registered to receive the support price on hogs or what number of farmers or percentage of farmers or hog producers have received or are eligible for the support price?

Mr. Harkness: We will have that information tomorrow morning also. I think the committee realizes the fact that with the magnitude of the operations of the stabilization board, the statistics required to answer many questions of this sort would constitute an extraordinarily big pile, that this is not a matter on which an hon. member can ask a question and I or the officials can produce an answer instantaneously. In a large number of cases it is something with regard to which we require some notice so that we can have the files looked up and find the answer.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Could the minister tell us whether legal action was taken against farmers who took advantage of the Agricultural Stabilization Act under two registration numbers?

I stated some time ago that certain farmers were using two registration numbers. Therefore, I ask the minister whether legal action was taken by the Department of Agriculture.

(Text):

Mr. Harkness: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I do not understand what the hon. member was talking about. Possibly the translation was not very good. Certainly I did not catch from it anything to which I could make a reply.

The Chairman: Shall item 10 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Argue: No. I would ask that item 10 be allowed to stand. There are still two or three minutes left.

Mr. Harkness: That is agreeable. We can allow item 10 to stand and we can go on to the next item.

The Chairman: Shall the item stand?

Mr. Argue: Let it stand until tomorrow.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska has a question that has not been answered because I think the minister stated that the translation was not too clear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Were there any prosecutions in the two cases to which the hon. member referred?

Mr. Harkness: I just could not get anything which I could understand through the translation system. I would suggest that the best thing for me to do, inasmuch as this item is going to be allowed to stand, is to read in Hansard tomorrow what the question was and then give the answer at that time.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Before this item is allowed to stand, I should like to know whether anybody else besides the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska will be allowed to put his questions tomorrow. I am prepared to speak.

Mr. Boulanger: Go ahead.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am prepared to speak. The hon. member for Assiniboia went to great lengths last Friday to condemn the policy of deficiency payments on hogs and to condemn the stabilization board for the reduction of the support price for hogs. At no time did he offer any solution and at no time did he state that he knew of a better method than a support price for hogs. All he did was to condemn.

Mr. Argue: There should be a floor price.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): There is a floor price now, and the hon. member knows very well how the floor price works. He went to great pains to point out what was wrong with it. But as to how to improve it, he mentioned nothing. He stated that production had increased and he thought that perhaps this increase resulted from the floor price being too high. I do not know whether or not he mentioned that. There was some reason for the increase. One reason for the production of hogs being as high as it was last year was that there was a surplus of grain to quite an extent three years ago on the prairies. The farmers were anxious to move this grain, and hogs provided an ideal outlet. They therefore went into the production of hogs.

The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska stated that because our pork exports were falling off we were going to be in a drastic situation with regard to pork surpluses, even with the present method of support.

Mr. Chevrier: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Last week's support price on pork was as high as that in the previous year. If the hon. member will—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but, it being ten o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what the business is for tomorrow and for next week as well?

Mr. Churchill: For tomorrow we will continue with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture followed by those of the post office. On Monday and Tuesday there will be a supply motion. On Wednesday we have available for the consideration of the house the budget resolutions; No. 11 on today's order paper which is the resolution in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs with regard to War Veterans Act; then No. 6 on today's order paper which is the resolution in the name of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys concerning the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act; and No. 3 on today's order paper which is second reading of Bill No. S-27, an act to control and regulate the sale of feed. Thursday and Friday of next week will be available for estimates and we will have for those two days the two departments that I have called for tomorrow, if they are not completed, followed by the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and the Department of Transport.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put pursuant to standing order.

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

Landings at Frobisher prior to November, 1959 were not classified as to type of service in a manner which would permit the question to be answered for the period prior to that date. Since that date the information is as follows:

December, 1959	17
January, 1960	7
February, 1960	7

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 20, 1960

The house met at 11 a.m.

IMMIGRATION

REFERENCE TO SPEECH BY PRIME MINISTER IN LONDON, ENGLAND, ON MAY 2

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of a speech he made in London, England, on Monday, May 2, a text of which I saw only this morning. He said:

> We shall be able to welcome and absorb into employment many tens of thousands of immigrants.

Will the Prime Minister comment on that statement made in London?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any necessity for any comment. It is very sure and very definite.

Mr. Robichaud: Tell us where.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LONDON, ONT.—TRANSFER OF CAR SHOPS TO MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): On May 6 the Minister of Transport informed the house that he would take the request of the hon. member for Essex East to the president of the C.N.R. I am wondering if the Minister of Transport can say, after taking this request to the president of the C.N.R., whether a meeting has been held between the president and the mayor of London, and whether he has intervened in the decision to close the car repair shops at London and move them to Montreal.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I passed on the request of the hon. member for Essex East to the president of the C.N.R. I do not know whether a meeting has been held between him and the mayor of London.

Mr. Argue: Since this is a very difficult and urgent problem, would the minister care to get in touch with the president of the C.N.R. and make a report to the house?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as I have explained several times in the house, I have talked about this matter on a number of occasions with the president of the Canadian National Railways. As a result of my speaking to him a re-examination of the whole situation took place in great detail. Every possible consideration was given to this matter. Every effort was made to keep the shops at London in operation and it was with great reluctance, as I have explained several times in the house, that the C.N.R. management had to come to the conclusion that it was impossible to keep the shops going. I am afraid I cannot tell the hon. member anything else.

Mr. Argue: A supplementary question—

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister, notwithstanding all he says, as Minister of Transport nevertheless seek to persuade, if that is all he can do, the president of the railroad who is in Ottawa today to meet with the mayor of the city of London in order to see if further consideration can be given to this matter? Surely the least we are entitled to—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has completed his question.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to the president of Canadian National Railways who, as the hon. member said, is in Ottawa today. I have discussed this matter again with him, and he does not see any useful purpose in again seeing the representatives of the city of London.

Mr. Argue: A supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister is prepared to meet the mayor—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I feel that four supplementaries all to the same effect are enough for one question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is about to begin his important assignment in certain countries of Latin America, in connection with which I am sure the house wishes him Godspeed, if he has any comment to make about stories that have emanated from some Latin American questers suggesting that Canada is about to be welcomed into the organization of American states? Has the minister any comment to make in this connection?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I should like to thank the hon. member for Essex East for extending his good wishes with respect to my trip to Latin America. In so far as any comments that may have been published are concerned, I can only say that no government policy has been decided upon, and if and when a policy decision is reached it will be made known to the house in the usual way.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SALARY INCREASE POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. I apologize for not giving him notice, but my staff only handed me this letter about 30 seconds before eleven o'clock. I have a copy of a letter written to the Prime Minister yesterday by Mr. R. A. Tooms, secretary of the joint action committee of the public service organizations of Canada. In this letter there is one short paragraph I wish to quote before I ask the Prime Minister my question.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that the hon. member is within his rights in undertaking to quote even a short paragraph. Can he not phrase his question without doing so?

Mr. Herridge: Yes, I think I can without too much difficulty. In this letter Mr. Tooms mentions that the current practice of the government on this vital matter, that is the giving of civil service salary increases to one group at a time and at different times, will most certainly cause permanent damage to the public service. When I read this statement I thought it was very striking indeed, and I should like the Prime Minister to comment if he would.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance has dealt with this matter on a number of occasions, and when he returns to his place he will be able to give an effective answer as usual.

REPORTED FINGERPRINTING OF CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister when the decision was made by the government to fingerprint civil servants, and for what reason?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): No such decision was made, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the Minister of Public Works whether it is not a fact that his employees are being fingerprinted; and if so, for what reason.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker; the Leader of the Opposition is quite right. I did state yesterday that certain categories in my department are being fingerprinted. They include cleaning classes exposed to documents, and the night elevator men, the night watchmen, the clerks and those to whom documents would be readily available should they seek to see them are being fingerprinted at the present time.

Although the Acting Secretary of State (Mr. Balcer) will give a full statement on Monday, my understanding is that this is something which was inaugurated by the civil service commission some time ago. I am not aware of the exact date when it started.

PUBLIC WORKS

LAKEHEAD—FINANCIAL LIABILITIES OF FILL CONTRACTOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Several firms at the lakehead are holding n.s.f. cheques from Speckert-Morris Limited, contractor for the fill at the lakehead seaway terminal. Has the government paid the contractor for this work? If so, can the minister suggest how these local people can get their money?

An hon. Member: Prosecute.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. In reply I wish to state that the Department of Public Works has made final payment of $180,-999.84 for the filling works carried out under this contract.

This work is covered by a labour and material payment bond. Any parties having claims against this contract for labour or material payments should place their claims with the bonding company, which is the Canadian Surety Company, 320 Bay Street, Toronto, Ontario.

PARLIAMENT HILL

PARKING SPACE FOR VISITORS TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Does the minister know that the few parking spaces reserved for local visitors to members of parliament have been taken away? Shall I repeat the question?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): If the question is being addressed to me, may I say that I have no such knowledge.

Mr. Caron: Then I should like to ask a supplementary question. Will the minister look into this matter and see that those parking spaces are restored?

Mr. Walker: I believe this is a matter for the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons, but if I can do anything to assist in the matter I shall be glad to do so.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege in protest of the fact that someone—I don't know who, because there is apparently no way of getting information about it—took upon himself to cancel the parking privileges which had been available to local visitors calling on their member of parliament. I feel that those spaces allotted to visitors were a privilege to which local members are entitled. When the mayors of certain municipalities in my area called on me this week, they were unable to find any allowed parking space for their cars.

We know that tourists are allowed to park on parliament hill, but local visitors calling on their member are placed in an inferior situation which cannot be tolerated, because I think the privileges of members are being ignored.

This action is an encroachment on the privileges of hon. members, and I ask that a member of the government see that they be restored.

(Text):

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, on the point the hon. member for Hull has just raised, I believe it has been the practice in the past for somebody on the government side, usually the Minister of Public Works, to indicate what the position is; because I think the problem the hon. member for Hull raises is a serious one and one which has come up from time to time. Surely it can be rectified. All he is asking is that someone on the government side give the assurance that the privilege which previously existed should continue as it was in the past.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, may I just say a word on this, because last year I took part in discussions with Your Honour between the parties regarding the parking privileges, or the parking arrangements, on parliament hill.

Finally, it should be understood that while the Department of Public Works makes the over-all regulations with regard to traffic, including parking, on government property, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are then responsible for enforcing those regulations, nevertheless the Department of Public Works and certainly the R.C.M.P. recognize that although the precincts outside are not directly within the control of the house, nevertheless parliament itself has an overriding interest in the parking arrangements which are made on parliament hill. Therefore the matter of allocating spaces on the hill has always been discussed with and between the parties, as I understand it. Certainly this is the principle we like to follow and followed last year—that it is then for the Speaker and the Sergeant-at-Arms as a result of such discussion to determine what particular allocations of space will be made.

As far as I am aware there was no change in the allocation of spaces this year. Therefore I am not aware whether any spaces formerly allotted to visitors to members of parliament have been withdrawn. It seems to me that what is necessary if there is dissatisfaction with the allocation of parking space is that the parties should again meet with Your Honour and the Sergeant-at-Arms to discuss what changes or revisions, if any, should be made.

HOUSING

STATEMENT ON MEETING WITH NATIONAL HOUSE BUILDERS ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has he any information to give to the house with respect to his meeting yesterday with the national house builders association?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I have several delegations a day that I meet, sometimes as many as 15. We had a very pleasant meeting. A great deal of progress was made in our understanding. I found the delegation very reasonable indeed. I derived great benefit from a consideration of their point of view, and I think they obtained a certain amount of benefit from a consideration of ours. Whatever they have submitted to us will be taken up and studied by the government in due course. I believe a very full report was made in the press by that body after their meeting.

C.M.H.C.—DIRECT LOANS TO BUILDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. C. Henderson (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has any favourable change been made in the housing situation? The $5,000 limit is too high for the country I come from.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Henderson: Thank you, gentlemen. I have had numerous telegrams—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest the hon. member reserve the rest of his remarks for the estimates and leave the floor to the minister, if he wishes to reply.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for Cariboo for asking this question. It gives me the opportunity to say that as far as N.H.A. direct loans by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which are limited to people with incomes of $5,000 or less, are concerned, we have already received applications which amount to $50 million. I can say this; even with this limitation the sum of money the government has earmarked for loans, in the amount of $150 million to $175 million, will be lent out before the end of the year.

Now, I should like to accommodate all members of the house, and particularly my friend the hon. member for Cariboo, by increasing the limit to $6,000. If that were done, Mr. Speaker, all the money would probably be allocated by the end of June, and we do not want to be in that position. I can say to hon. members that in any situation where there is a cutback there is always inconvenience and hardship. No one appreciates that more than I do. We have done our best to ameliorate the hardships as much as we possibly can.

Hon. members will be delighted to learn that the approved lenders who were so slow in coming into the market are now really coming into it in volume, and with the interest rate on bonds down to 4.5 per cent there is now a considerable differential between government mortgages at 6¾ per cent and bonds at 4.5 per cent. The result has been that the approved lenders are coming into the market.

[Mr. Walker.]

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): May I ask a supplementary question. The minister has mentioned the rather large number of applications he has received. Can he say how many have been approved?

Mr. Walker: I have not that figure at the moment, no.

[Later:]

Mr. Garland: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct another question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the fact that loans under the National Housing Act are down 76 per cent in the first four months of this year, will the minister now consider recommending to his colleagues that the amount of money to be made available for direct lending be increased this year?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the figures used by the hon. gentleman are not correct. The debate on housing closed some time ago but it seems to be continued every day during orders of the day. I can only repeat to my hon. friend that the question of housing, as he well knows, is under constant and continued study by the government, and things are looking up very nicely at the present time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BOMARC MISSILE—REPORTED STATEMENT BY POSTMASTER GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Postmaster General. According to this morning's newspapers it is reported that at a meeting yesterday he said that the plan to use the Bomarc missile should be carried out, giving as one reason that this plan costs only 1 per cent of the national budget. I would like to know from the Postmaster General whether that was the only reason given by him. If not, what were the others?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been considered at great length by the Minister of National Defence and it has been explained to the house. If the hon. member had been present and had been listening on those occasions, he would not have to ask questions like this.

(Translation):

C.M.R.—STATEMENT ON PROPOSED DEMOLITION OF HISTORIC BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) which was a repetition of a preliminary question he asked last year on the demolition of two buildings located on the grounds of the St. Johns Military College, I wish to say that the matter is still under consideration and that the situation has remained unchanged since last year.

(Text):

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ROUGEMONT, QUE.—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ROBBERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): May I direct a question to the Postmaster General. Is the Postmaster General aware of the fact that during his trip to Paris no robbery was reported in Canada, but since he came back we have read in the newspapers that a robbery took place—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I feel sure that the implication in the hon. member's question will give rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. Denis: I do not want to impute motives.

Mr. Speaker: If he has a serious question, of course, he will be given the opportunity to ask it.

Mr. Denis: I should like the Postmaster General to comment on the last robbery which took place in Rougemont, not very far from his own place.

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, first I think perhaps I might deal with the first observation made by the hon. member for St. Denis. It merely shows that when I am in Canada I see that every possible bit of information is printed in the press regarding post office activities. It does not imply that I commit these robberies myself.

Second, and I think far more important, with respect to the time of this house and the efforts of this house to get through its business, when a department is having its estimates come up in about three hours' time I suggest that this sort of trivial question is completely unnecessary.

FLOODS

METROPOLITAN TORONTO—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN CONTROL MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has the minister received a letter and documents from the chairman of metropolitan Toronto requesting federal participation in a comprehensive plan of flood control and water conservation in the metropolitan Toronto area?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Yes. I have also received representations from almost every member in the Toronto area.

Mr. Hellyer: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister give this request his most sympathetic consideration and receive a delegation of interested officials, if necessary, in order that a repetition of the tragic circumstances of hurricane Hazel may be avoided and life and property protected?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN MAY EDITION OF "INDIAN NEWS"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. My question is based on the current May edition of the Indian News, published by the Indian affairs branch, and relates to page 3 thereof, where there is a reference to the passage of legislation by this house, and other steps, with respect to the right of Indians to vote. Perhaps I could preface this by telling the minister that there is a picture of the Prime Minister with excerpts from the remarks of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

In order to prevent accusations of a partisan approach, would the minister in a subsequent edition ensure that there appear excerpts from comments of other hon. members in respect of their views?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to take the suggestion into consideration.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR LATEST STATISTICS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Would the minister inform the house as to the number of live claimants for unemployment insurance benefits as of the latest date in April for which such figures are available to him?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as of April 30, which is the last available compilation, there were 555,885 male claimants and 159,009 female claimants.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

BOBCAT VEHICLE—INQUIRY AS TO STAGE OF DEVELOPMENT WORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production or the Minister of National Defence. Has the development work on the Bobcat armoured vehicle reached the stage where serious consideration is being given to letting a contract for its production?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question raised by the hon. member for Port Arthur may I say that I shall have to take it as notice and advise him at a later date.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources whether he has had an opportunity to look into the returns I asked about a couple of days ago.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member mentioned motions Nos. 11, 15 and 101. These turn out to be actually motions Nos. 22, 31 and 30.

Mr. Pickersgill: I took them from the list supplied by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes. The hon. member used the list from the appendix of July 7. I am giving the actual motions.

Motion No. 22 requested all correspondence on the forest access roads and trails program in Ontario since January 1, 1958. I accepted this motion on February 2, 1959 on the understanding that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, whose motion it was, would look at the files and point out the documents he wanted, and these would then be returned to the house. The hon. gentleman apparently has not yet done this; therefore the department feel they should wait for him to do so.

I should point out that in motion No. 36 of this session the hon. member for Assiniboia asked for information on the same subject but covering all provinces and that return will provide the Ontario material requested by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. That motion has been accepted and will be presented to the house shortly. The material is all ready for tabling, but we have yet to receive replies from all the provinces.

Motion No. 30 requested correspondence on roads to resources with all provinces. This motion could not be returned, of course, until all the provinces had given consent. The Saskatchewan government signed only on March 11 of this year. This material, consisting of literally hundreds of documents, will be ready for tabling on Monday.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether he has had an opportunity to look into the returns about which I made inquiries.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the minister give an indication as to when they will be brought down?

Mr. Walker: Perhaps I misunderstood my hon. friend. To which returns does my hon. friend refer? I believe there were two.

Mr. Pickersgill: A couple of days ago I asked the minister about two returns to orders passed last year, and the minister said he would look into the matter.

Mr. Walker: I have done so, Mr. Speaker, and I am happy to say that within a week we will be able to have those returns.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Flynn in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Production and marketing branch—

10. Agricultural Stabilization Act administration, $315,130.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, as I started to say last evening, the stabilization board has done a great service for the farmers of Canada generally and particularly for those in western Canada in whom I am greatly interested. Last year saw a record number of hogs sold, second only to the year 1942. In some manner or other we were able to handle a large number of hogs and store the surplus, and now we are getting rid of the surplus. In 1942, the only other year that compares with last year, Great Britain had a great demand for hogs. During the war we exported hogs to Great Britain in considerable quantities.

Last fall the stabilization board was of great assistance to the sheep industry when lambs had to be supported, largely due to the scrapies disease that afflicted some of the western flocks, when some of the states south of the border placed an embargo on lambs going into that country. What would have been the price of lambs last autumn had there not been a support price? I think chaos would have reigned in the sheep industry. I know that neighbours of mine who sold lambs were greatly worried. In my opinion the stabilization board played a vital role in supporting the lamb market last year, and I was pleased to note that this support cost the board only $360,000.

As I mentioned last evening the hon. member for Assiniboia made no recommendation as to how to improve conditions or provide support for deficiency payments. His main argument was on behalf of the large producer. I think it is evident that the deficiency payment is made on hogs particularly to assist the small producer. I have always advocated deficiency payments on hogs and did so a year ago before the government brought them into effect. The small producer receives as much benefit as the large producer, and that is perhaps the way it should be. Surely the small producer has a right to as much support from the federal treasury as does the larger producer.

The hon. member for Assiniboia went on at great length to tell us how disappointed he was in the Conservative party, and how at one time he had great hopes for it because of the young members who were elected in 1957 and 1958. He did not say what hopes he had for his new labour party, of which he has become a member. He did not say that the Saskatchewan government has not adopted the labour party; he shied completely away from that.

He says he is disappointed in some of the Conservative members. I am disappointed in him as representing a rural riding of farmers. I am afraid he has sold them down the river to the labour party, which is controlled by unions in the United States. This is what has happened, and this is what is concerning farmers. He has joined a party which is dominated by international unions in the United States. He has sold the farmers down the river, and the Saskatchewan government has realized that fact and is playing safe until after the election of June 8.

I am told that somewhere around 85 per cent of the producers of hogs sell only 100 or fewer than 100 grade A and B hogs in a year. Eighty five per cent of all hogs sold grade A and B; therefore it is evident that by far the majority of the small producers particularly are being supported by this present stabilization method. The only ones that I could see it would hurt would be some of the larger producers whom my hon. friend from Assiniboia is attempting to support.

The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska said that hog exports had fallen 30 per cent. I am looking at the livestock trade report put out by the Department of Agriculture for the week ended May 12. Exports of live hogs to the United States are more than double those from January 1 to May 7 of last year. I am quoting from page 13 of this report. Live hogs exported to the United States this year ran over 3,300; last year they were around 1,400. On the same page we find the pork exports. They may be down 3 million, but a little further along I notice that canned meat is up over 6 million. Without doubt a great deal of canned meat consists of pork, and I would say that roughly our pork exports are holding at about the same level as last year, and certainly are not down 30 per cent. Where the hon. member got this figure I do not know.

He said that the main object of the stabilization board appears to be to reduce the surplus. It would be easy for the stabilization board to reduce the surplus. All they would need to do would be to do away with support altogether. If that was the main object of the government they could bring in a measure that would do away with support of hogs altogether, if the object was to reduce the surplus. Certainly surpluses have to be managed. The money from the federal treasury has to go to the small producers, or those who are in trouble. Certainly it is the small producer who needs the financial backing, and he is entitled to as much assistance as the large producer.

As I said, I have always advocated a deficiency payment plan on hogs. Perhaps it should have been initiated before the support price was lowered to 80 per cent of the 10-year average. I hope the minister and the government will see fit to make a semi-annual payment on hogs. The farmers of western Canada particularly are accustomed to interim payments and final payments on their grain. We have been paid our deficiency payment on a half-yearly basis, and I hope the government will see fit to make a semi-annual payment, perhaps on July 1 of every year, on hogs.

I say this because as a farmer I know that a few years ago when I started out farming, in the middle of July I allowed an insurance agent to sell me an insurance policy which cost me $50. For the next six or seven years, whenever the insurance premium came due, I was broke, and I received notice after notice from the insurance company asking me to please send in my money or they would have to revoke the policy. It was always after about the very last notice in September that I seemed to be able to scrape up enough money to meet the insurance premium.

It is in the spring and summer that the farmer is hard pressed for cash. I urge the government to consider this and make the deficiency payment on hogs on a semi-annual basis. The minister said it would amount to only $2 or $2.10 at the present time, but $2 each on 50 hogs in the middle of the year, assuming that the farmer sold 50 hogs in the first half of the year and 50 in the second half, would amount to perhaps $100, which would go a long way toward keeping the farmer mobile and in a position to pay his bills throughout the summer. As I said, this would be welcomed by the farmers and particularly the small farmers who are producing a small number of hogs and are perhaps faced with a great many financial difficulties at that time and cannot wait until January for the money for their hogs. It seems difficult for them to wait until next January to get deficiency payment assistance.

I know full well there may not be any payments next year because the price of hogs may come up high enough to raise the level. If this is so the government should raise the support level. I would like to see it come up, because the small producer needs this assistance. I hope we have enough of a surplus by the end of this year so we can increase the support level to where it was, namely 84 per cent, rather than the mandatory level of 80 per cent.

This is about all I have to say on the stabilization board. It has been of great service to the farmers. Since the March 31, 1958 election, referred to by the hon. member for Assiniboia, the farmers have begun to realize just what a good act it is and just how much it will support them in case of a sudden drop in prices such as in the case of lambs, which occurred last fall in western Canada. The stabilization board has been of great benefit to the farmers and I hope it continues to be of service to them for a good while in the future.

Mr. Argue: I rise at this time, Mr. Chairman, to answer some of the statements made by the hon. member for Acadia. I said in my speech a week ago I felt that the government premise on which this act was based was exceedingly shaky; that the government in fact was not carrying out the act as required; that instead of bringing in a type of deficiency payment the government in fact was robbing the farmers of the support price they had.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Only the large farmer.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

Mr. Argue: Robbing all the farmers, robbing every single hog producer it could—and it will do it—every single hog producer who has sold hogs far below the so-called stabilization price; because any deficiency payment that is made will be inadequate and will not be enough to bring up the lowest prices that have been paid to the producer to the so-called support level.

To that extent the government, I suggest, is breaking its own act. It has considered this act to be no more than a piece of paper, which it is tearing up in the eyes of producers, certainly in my view based on the clauses in the act, based on the statements made by the minister and government supporters in the past. In reading the act I see nothing in it to suggest that the 80 per cent price over a period of years is not to be maintained as a firm price by way of return to the producers on all of the commodities that have been covered. But this is not the case; this is not what the government is doing under the act, and I feel that the farmers are not getting what they are entitled to under this legislation.

During the past winter the federation of agriculture presented a brief on this subject to the government and to other members of the House of Commons, and in it they came out very strongly in favour of the offer to purchase method. When Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner was minister of agriculture I suggested that the farmers did not in every single instance receive the prices to which they were entitled under the offer to purchase method, but I have no hesitation in saying that they received a far larger share of the support price than under this legislation, which is robbing them of their just due. The hon. member for Acadia went far afield from this stabilization item—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): No farther afield than you.

Mr. Argue: —and in addition to some rather insulting and abusive remarks—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Oh, terrible.

Mr. Argue: —he made statements that were most unparliamentary.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You are one to talk.

Mr. Argue: He suggested that I had sold the farmers down the river—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Argue: —to some so-called labour party that is merely a figment of the hon. member's imagination.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What do you call it?

Mr. Argue: He knows so little about these developments that he does not know it is not going to be and will not be a labour party, and the people who are most determined—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I can answer the hon. gentleman who made these statements. This party for which we have been working will not be a labour party, and the people who are most determined to see that it will not be a labour party are the trade union members themselves.

Mr. Speakman: Controlled by American labour racketeers.

Mr. Argue: I did not hear that remark; perhaps the hon. member would like to repeat it. I heard something about labour racketeers. It will be very interesting to see these comments on the record made by hon. members who are attempting to malign the leadership of the trade union movement in this country.

Mr. Speakman: No, not in this country.

Mr. Argue: The hon. member for Acadia said I had sold the farmers down the river to a labour party comprising trade unions that, in his words, would be controlled by Americans. This is an old tactic. It is not a new tactic, but the old tactic of smear and divide and rule if you can. I was sorry to hear a very active member of the Conservative party use this occasion to try to drive a wedge between the farming people and the workers in other industries in this country.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You have already driven a wedge.

Mr. Argue: This man is trying to stir up one class against another, and I think that is an abominable thing for anyone to do.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What are your C.C.F. members doing?

Mr. Argue: I will take a back seat to no one as a champion of the rights of the farmers of this country, but in doing that I do not have to malign and smear trade union members or the labour movement of this country. In addition to a very large body of farmers in my constituency, I have the honour and privilege of representing many people who work in stores, garages, hospitals and the sodium sulphate plants in my riding, and who are members of the trade union movement. I think these people are just as honourable, just as honest and just as good Canadian citizens as any member of this house, and they will resent the implication by the hon. member for Acadia that they are being controlled by gangsters from outside this country.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Argue: It is very interesting to hear hon. members say "order". As a member of the house I have a right to reply to the statements which have been made. I agree that they were out of order, but as they have been made I have a right to reply to them. The hon. member said that I have sold the farmers down the river. I challenge him and I challenge the Minister of Agriculture, as I have on other occasions, to appear with me on a public platform anywhere in western Canada to discuss the government's agricultural policy, the way the minister has endeavoured to hoodwink the farmers of this country and how he has failed to carry out the promises of the government to bring about parity prices and adequate support legislation. I know the minister will not accept my challenge, because he is too timid to face the agricultural producers of western Canada and take part in a public debate to discuss the way the government has mismanaged the stabilization legislation, and how it has been instrumental in driving down the prices of eggs and hogs.

After his initial tirade the hon. member for Acadia got around to saying something about improvements that could be made in the act. Everything the government was doing was fine until he got around to talking about the act itself, and then he thought there were many things wrong with it. He suggested that there should be semi-annual payments on hogs because he knows, and he said so, that if the price of hogs should go up toward the end of the year then, on the statement of the minister, the farmers may be deprived of a deficiency payment even though their hogs have sold at far below the so-called stabilization price.

I suggest that what the farmers need and have a right to is a daily and individual accounting with respect to the prices at which they sell their products; and whenever the price of a single hog or a single dozen of eggs falls below the stabilization price the farmer who has sold the eggs or the hog should have the right to the difference between the stabilization price established under this legislation and the market price. This is the difference, Mr. Chairman, from the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board Act under which, when the initial prices and initial grades are established, there is a guarantee without qualification that when a farmer markets a certain grade and quantity of grain he will receive the basic initial payment. There is no such guarantee in this legislation. There is no guarantee in this legislation whatsoever. The farmers are thrown on the mercy of the market, and if the farmers are taken to the cleaners completely the minister may then by his own formula give them some little hand-out after their products have been marketed.

Under the legislation we are now discussing the farmer cannot say, because no one can say, what his rights are having regard to the manner in which the government is administering the support legislation. Although farmers have sold hogs this year, some of them have informed me, for as low as 18 cents, 17 cents or 16 cents a pound, they have no assurance, and the minister will not give them any assurance now, that he will pay to them the difference between the price they received, which was well below the stabilization price, and the stabilization price.

This is a hit-or-miss method as far as the farmer is concerned. The main objective of the minister is to clean up the surplus, clean up the inventories and drive the farmers out of the production of hogs, drive the farmers out of the production of eggs, liquidate the farmers so far as being producers is concerned, because that is exactly what the minister is doing. Then he will say, "My legislation has been a great success. I have moved the surplus products, and this is the main thing I should be considering in connection with my legislation". I do not believe this is a good thing. The producers are asking for equity; they are asking for fair treatment; they are asking that the formula in this legislation be maintained and that they be not chiselled by the administration of this act.

Mr. Grafftey: Chiselled?

Mr. Argue: Do you want something stronger than "chiselled"? I think it has been stolen.

Mr. Grafftey: Stolen?

Mr. Argue: They have taken from them the thing they have a right to expect; and because of the statements made by hon. members opposite when this legislation was being put through this house—

Mr. Speakman: Why did you vote for it?

Mr. Argue: There is a brilliant question from my hon. friend.

Mr. Speakman: Well, you did.

Mr. Argue: Oh, I did, yes; in spite of the fact that my hon. friend and others wanted to twist the position we had taken in connection with the bill. We had a little more faith in the government at that time than we have now. We thought that when the bill was drafted in clear and precise English terms, the government would carry out the provisions of the legislation. We thought this was better than no legislation at all. We still have—

Mr. Ricard: You would vote against it today, then?

Mr. Argue: —in our memory the ringing declaration of the Prime Minister that his policy for agricultural producers was parity, not charity. Well, the parity has been forgotten. It went out the window when the Prime Minister got this tremendous majority in the house. Even by way of charity there is little going to the agricultural producers at this time.

I did not intend, Mr. Chairman, to reenter the debate on this subject at this time. However, the remarks of the hon. member for Acadia, in which he endeavoured to set one occupational group against another, were of a character that should be answered.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I feel that I should say something at this time, in view of the tub-thumping political speech which the hon. member for Assiniboia has just delivered, and which is a repetition of one he delivered last Friday. In each case his statement was full of inaccuracies, and took no cognizance whatever of the practical situation in this country so far as the production and marketing of agricultural products are concerned. These statements, as I say, were intended purely for political consumption and really have nothing to do with these estimates or an examination of these estimates.

The hon. member for Assiniboia repeated today what he said last Friday, that the act is not being followed in so far as the provision of support at the mandatory 80 per cent level is concerned. This is completely incorrect. We are providing support at the mandatory 80 per cent.

Mr. Argue: Not to the farmer.

Mr. Harkness: Yes, we are providing it to the farmer. The hon. member and many other people have been going about this country talking about eggs at 15 cents and hogs at 16 cents, and various other figures along that line. In every case they have been picking out the lowest price at which any product has been sold at any time in Canada during the past several months. Then they say that is the price they are getting for their product. They say nothing about the fact that we have in effect the support price which is going to give to the farmers across this country the average support price. The support price provided for hogs, which is the average for Canada, is of course $22.65.

The hon. member and other hon. members who are talking for political purposes are only trying to stir up trouble. They omit to say that this support price is guaranteed to these farmers. What the hon. member is actually doing is constantly saying that we should have continued the support by means of purchase; and so are hon. members of the Liberal party. They say we should have continued the support by means of purchase, which was the method being carried on previously and which resulted in an accumulation of surplus products. The hon. member has asked a series of questions as to the prices paid for these products, and I shall proceed to answer them shortly. I hope the answer will present a complete picture and show how utterly impossible it was to continue support by the purchase method for a product such as hogs.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if the minister would permit a question.

Mr. Harkness: Just a minute; I should like to finish what I am saying. The hon. member for Assiniboia and hon. members of the Liberal party can talk about supporting these products by the method of purchase—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Offer to purchase.

Mr. Harkness: —or offer to purchase, whatever you like to call it. It is actually by making a purchase that you support the price. Their thinking is 20 years out of date; that is what is wrong with it. They leave out of consideration entirely the growth of contract farming and the integrated operations which have taken place in this country in recent years, and which were going on very rapidly, so far as hog production was concerned, when we stopped it by putting the deficiency payment method of support into operation. As a result of the hog contracts which were being made and as a result of the big integrated operations which were taking place, the production of hogs was zooming up and up. If we had continued the offer to purchase method of support that production would have continued to zoom, and it would have been impossible to handle the product.

Under those circumstances it was absolutely essential that we change the method of support so that we could support all the bona fide farmers, but cut out from support those people who were contract farmers, many of them businessmen who were going into this type of operation because they had a guaranteed profit from the government on it.

The hon. member for Assiniboia and hon. members of the Liberal party, in continuing to insist that we should have in effect the offer to purchase method of support, are actually insisting we should continue to use the taxpayers' money to support the large commercial operations.

Mr. Argue: That is not true. That is a false and ridiculous statement.

Mr. Harkness: That is the actual fact. This self-styled defender of the small man, the small farmer, is actually insisting on a course of action which will support the large commercial farmers, the big feed companies, the abattoirs and people engaged in this kind of contract farming.

Mr. Argue: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Grafftey: Take your medicine on the chin.

Mr. Argue: My question of privilege is that the Minister of Agriculture is putting words in my mouth which have never been there. He is giving a false statement. I have never at any time breathed one word of support in this house for the great corporations engaged in agriculture production, for the integrated farm or anything else. I have been an opponent of vertical integration, and I still am.

Mr. Harkness: I think you realize, Mr. Chairman, that this is a completely false question of privilege. There is no question of privilege involved. The hon. member is trying to say I did something that I did not do. What I said was, and I repeat, that by trying to insist that we keep in effect the offer to purchase method, he is in effect—these were the words I used—asking us to support the large commercial concerns to the detriment of the small farmer. That is exactly the situation.

Mr. Howard: In effect you are not telling the truth.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I would ask that you have that remark withdrawn immediately. The hon. member has said, "You were not telling the truth".

The Chairman: Order. I heard the words used. I think the expression is unparliamentary, and I am sure the hon. member for Skeena will withdraw it.

An hon. Member: Save it for television.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Howard: I am sure the hon. member for Skeena would not care to withdraw what he said. What I said was "In effect the minister is not telling the truth". If the minister can use the expression "in effect" to introduce words which were never uttered by the hon. member for Assiniboia, then anybody else has the right to do precisely the same thing. I know what I say.

The Chairman: I do not think it is necessary to discuss the explanation of the hon. member. What I was mentioning to him was the fact that under our standards the expression he used should be withdrawn. I am sure that on reflection he will withdraw it.

Mr. Howard: If I may speak to the point of order again, Mr. Chairman, may I say that we went through this situation with the same minister and myself a couple of years ago with regard to a somewhat similar expression. Even though I said that in effect the minister was not telling the truth, there is a vast difference between saying a person is not telling the truth and saying that he is telling a lie. I did not say that the minister was telling a lie.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howard: There is a distinct difference there.

Mr. Grafftey: Will you explain it?

Mr. Howard: Certainly I will explain it.

An hon. Member: It does not require any explanation.

Mr. Howard: One of your colleagues over here asked for an explanation. Why do you people not keep in concert with each other? It is unparliamentary to say that a person is telling a lie because this is saying that he knows precisely what he is saying and that he is lying deliberately, is telling a falsehood, is distorting what I have been saying. But to say that a person is not telling the truth is namely saying in effect that he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. May I suggest to the hon. member, as one who occupies a neutral position in this situation, that he really ought to withdraw the words to which objection has been taken. I think he will find that such words have been interpreted by previous Speakers as being offensive and unparliamentary. In fairness to the hon. member—and I know he does not mean to violate the rules—may I suggest that he might use a more effective synonym and say that the Minister of Agriculture is guilty of a terminological inexactitude.

Mr. Howard: Speaking on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I could not accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Essex East either. We know how smooth, capable and mellifluous he is in his ability to get around difficulties, to say one thing and put it in different words so the statement does not sound quite so offensive. What I said is quite true, Mr. Chairman; but on your insistance that this expression be withdrawn because it casts a reflection on the minister, I will withdraw it to that extent.

Mr. Grafftey: You are defying the Chair.

Mr. Howard: I am not defying the Chair. I have just said that I withdraw it. Does the hon. member not pay attention to what is going on?

The Chairman: Order. I think the incident can be considered as closed. I thank the hon. member for Skeena for withdrawing the expression.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I was just speaking of the really untenable position of the hon. member for Assiniboia and members of the Liberal party in continuing to insist that we should continue with the offer to purchase method of support of perishable products such as hogs, eggs and so on which can be produced in extremely large quantities. A system of that sort, of course, for those products encourages contract farming, integrated operations and so on which produce a quantity of these products which you just cannot handle. The offer to purchase method really comes down to this situation. You are using a great deal of the taxpayers' money to support people who are not farmers at all, or are not bona fide farmers, and there is no justification for using the taxpayers' money for this purpose.

Under the system we have in effect for both hogs and eggs there is real protection for farmers. In the case of hogs, something over 90 per cent of the hog producers—that is practically all the bona fide farmers—are fully protected on the prices of the A and B hogs which they deliver. All those farmers across Canada will get on the average the support price we have guaranteed. If the price they actually receive does not come to that amount, we will make a deficiency payment in order to make up the difference.

The hon. member was complaining that these payments are not on an individual daily basis. This would be a completely hopeless operation. The cost would be away out of reason. In addition to that consideration it just is not workable anyway, because then there would be no incentive to the individual farmer to get the best price possible for his hog or his group of hogs, and it would lead to one of the worst black markets that ever existed in this or any other country. It just is not a practical proposition from any point of view.

The hon. member advocates things along that line because he has no business experience and no practical experience in administration. He does not understand what he is advocating when he advocates these things.

Mr. Argue: The wheat board can do it.

Mr. Harkness: It is very easy for wild theorists to advocate all kinds of things, but most of the things they advocate are just not practicable or workable. That is the situation with regard to many of the things advocated by the hon. member for Assiniboia.

The hon. member went on to say that we are trying to liquidate the farmers as producers. The whole purpose of this scheme is to protect the bona fide farmer and to get the non-farmer—the businessman, the contract man, the feed company and so on—out of the production of hogs and eggs and other products.

The hon. member quoted the federation of agriculture and tried to make out that they were unanimously against this system and in favour of the offer to purchase system, something which does not happen to be the case. Some of the member bodies of the federation are certainly in favour of the offer to purchase system, particularly the ones that are dominated by the big producers. But he said nothing about the farm unions, who endorse this method of support. As a matter of fact he is generally quoting the farm unions here, but in this case he did not mention anything about them because he knows they support the deficiency method of payment in order to prevent what I have just been talking about, namely the growth of contract farming, integrated operations and so on. Hence this statement that we are trying to liquidate the farmers is the exact opposite of the case. We have put this type of support into operation for the specific purpose of protecting the bona fide farmer and preventing competition with him on the part of big business concerns.

As far as these general statements along that line are concerned, I think that is all the time I will take in order to deal with them at the present moment. There is just one other thing. The hon. member for Assiniboia stated that under the previous government the method of support in operation was much more advantageous to the farmers than is the case under the stabilization act.

Mr. Argue: No.

Mr. Harkness: If the hon. member says he did not say that, well and good. What did he say along this line?

Mr. Argue: I said the farmers got a higher proportion of the support level for their products than they get under this act.

Mr. Harkness: I do not know what the hon. member means when he says they got a higher proportion of the support level, but here are the actual figures of what they got. For the 12 years the Liberals were operating the Agricultural Prices Support Act the farmers got a total of approximately $24 million in payments under that act, except for hogs and cattle during the period of foot-and-mouth disease, when special measures were taken. A great deal of pork was canned at that time, and so forth. That canning and support program during the foot-and-mouth outbreak amounted to $36.6 million for hogs and $33.3 million for cattle. But apart from those special measures to meet the foot-and-mouth outbreak the total amount which the farmers received in 12 years under the Liberals was $24 million.

Mr. Argue: That was taken out of the treasury.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, in the last year alone we expended $57.6 million. That is in one year alone, as compared with $24 million in 12 years; yet the hon. member says that under the previous government the farmers got more support than under this government. The figures themselves show how ridiculous is a statement like that, and every farmer in the country knows that is the situation. There is just no use arguing about the figures, because they speak for themselves.

As far as the argument the hon. member now makes is concerned, namely that they get a lot of other indirect support because the money was put out by the treasury, that is correct. It is correct now, it was correct then and it has been correct right through. As I pointed out last Friday, the actual amount of money which the treasury puts out is no measure of the amount of benefit for the farmers. I indicated some figures last Friday to illustrate that point so far as the dairy industry was concerned, and I will not repeat them again. But that statement applies now just as it did before. These figures actually indicate the disparity in support as between what was provided under the Liberal government and what has been provided under this government, and as I say there is no comparison.

Some questions were asked which I was requested to answer today. First of all the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska asked about pork imports into Canada from the United States since the lifting of the embargo. Fresh pork, which includes trimmings, amounted to 1,067,000 pounds. In addition there was pickled and cured pork to Newfoundland, 691,000 pounds. That has been going on for years and is a well established trade. I might point out that the weekly kill during recent weeks has been running better than 21 million pounds a week. Information also is that the imports which were made were not successful financially, and repeat orders have not been going forward.

The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska also asked for the number of farmers who had registered for deficiency payments for hogs, and the number is 180,420. I have the figures broken down into provinces but I will not give them all unless he asks for them. I will give him the figure for Quebec, and that is 27,382.

The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska asked another question last night which I was not able to catch on the translation system. However, it appears in Hansard in this form as reported on page 2 of the translation:

> Could the minister tell us whether legal action was taken against farmers who took advantage of the Agricultural Stabilization Act under two registration numbers?
> I stated some time ago that certain farmers were using two registration numbers. Therefore, I ask the minister whether legal action was taken by the Department of Agriculture.

At the time the hon. member brought this up I first of all asked him if he knew of any cases of this kind, to give me the names of the people concerned and I would take immediate action. I have not received the names of anybody concerning this matter. Naturally I cannot send police officers around to investigate all the farmers in Canada. That is not a practical proposition, and in any event I would not do it. If a farmer had a police officer or some other investigator come around to his place and ask him a lot of questions as to whether he had two registration numbers or whether he was conniving with somebody else and having that somebody else use his registration number, then I think that farmer would have justifiable grounds for complaint. But if the hon. member, or if any other hon. member, can give me any specific case where they have reason to believe this practice is going on, we will deal with it, because we are most anxious to see the practice stopped.

The hon. member for Assiniboia asked me a lot of questions about statistical information. I now have that information here and am prepared to give it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is with regard to the purchase of pork?

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In Alberta?

Mr. Harkness: This is not Alberta; this is Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thought the question dealt with Alberta.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member for Assiniboia asked me to provide, beginning with January 1, 1959, the monthly totals of pork products purchased under the act, the average price paid per month, the average price paid for bellies, the average price which has been obtained from the companies, some indication of the larger purchases which have been made, and the lowest tender price received by the government for the pork bellies.

Mr. Chairman, these are the pork cuts purchased, by the month: I will give the total poundage purchased and the average price. Starting in January 1959 the poundage was 8,603,000—in will leave off the hundreds—at an average price of 34.8 cents; in February, 13,597,000 pounds at an average price of 36.82 cents; March, 12,154,000 pounds at an average price of 37.25 cents; April, 26,878,000 pounds at an average price of 37.97 cents; May, 20,806,000 pounds at an average price of 37.71 cents; June; 8,690,000 pounds at an average price of 37.27; July, 5,548,000 pounds at an average price of 35.22 cents; August, 9,616,000 pounds at an average price of 36.15 cents; September, 13,138,000 pounds at an average price of 36.36 cents; October, 12,488,000 pounds at an average price of 38.2 cents; November, 9,043,000 pounds at an average price of 35.33 cents; December, 8,832,000 pounds at an average price of 33.53 cents.

Then for the year 1960, up to where the program ended; January, 19,693,000 pounds at an average price of 35.38 cents; February, 5,093,000 pounds at an average price of 35.37 cents; March, 606,000 pounds and I have not the price for that month. That makes a grand total of 174,780,000 pounds at an average price of 36.53 cents a pound. That covers the first two questions the hon. member asked, the monthly totals and the average prices paid.

The hon. member also inquired about the prices paid for bellies. That information is as follows:

Date	Toronto price
November 14, 1958	$32.00
January 23, 1959	33.25
March 9, 1959	33.75
March 23, 1959	34.20
April 6, 1959	34.45
April 20, 1959	34.75
May 18, 1959	34.45
June 15, 1959	33.80
July 13, 1959	33.55
July 22, 1959	34.05
August 10, 1959	34.65
September 21, 1959	34.95

Date	Toronto price
September 28, 1959	32.60
October 14, 1959	32.35
October 27, 1959	32.05
December 21, 1959	32.60
January 4, 1960	32.90
April 27, 1960	27.25

Winnipeg cuts $2.95 under Toronto
Saskatoon cuts $3.80 under Toronto
Calgary cuts $3.90 under Toronto

The hon. gentleman requested the information on a monthly basis, but I trust he will find this computation acceptable.

The next question related to the amount of bellies sold for rendering and the price received therefor. There were 13,578,410 pounds of bellies sold for rendering at an average price of 2.63 cents per pound. The highest price received was $3.60 a hundred; that is, 3.60 cents a pound. The lowest price was $1.50 a hundred.

Mr. Argue: Were the bellies sold for any purpose other than rendering?

Mr. Harkness: Yes, some were sold for export and so on. I will come to that. The hon. member wanted to know the names of some of the largest purchasers. I have the names of the four largest purchasers. That information is as follows:

Name of Purchaser	Quantity Purchased
Canada Packers Limited	7,701,512 pounds
Swift's	1,604,746 pounds
Legrade	1,366,232 pounds
Essex Packers	2,932,883 pounds

The last two are comparatively small packers; the first two are comparatively big packers. One of the three biggest packers, Burns and Company, does not apear on the list at all, which I think is sufficient indication that the statement made by the hon. member to the effect that someone had been making a killing out of this or something along that line is not borne out by the facts. If there was big money to be made in this I am sure the hon. member realizes that these companies would have been in on it as strongly as they could.

Mr. Argue: My understanding is that the companies that bought them in large quantities had them in storage in their own plants.

Mr. Harkness: That is not a fact. It was all in public storage. These bellies were taken out of public storage for the purpose of rendering.

With respect to export sales of pork cuts, a total of 18,111,761½ pounds were exported with a total value of $2,283,722.05. Of this quantity 2,190,366½ pounds were pork sides or carcasses sold to Czechoslovakia at a price of 18½ cents per pound to the value of $405,217.80. The balance of 15,921,935 pounds was made up of 14,840,717 pounds of bellies, 280,248 pounds of hams, 693,477 pounds of backs, 53,249 pounds of pics and 53,704 pounds of butts. The total return for that quantity was $1,878,504.25, at an average of 11.5 cents per pound.

I believe that concludes the statistical answers to the questions asked by the hon. member for Assiniboia. The outline I have given of the situation with respect to handling pork and the extreme difficulty I have mentioned that exists in trying to handle a large surplus of a perishable commodity of this nature is the best possible demonstration of the fact, as I said earlier, that an offer to purchase system is simply not practical or even possible for commodities of this kind.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, the minister in his last remarks repeated what he said at the beginning of his last statement, and in doing so he attacked not only the opposition to our immediate right but also and more particularly the official opposition. If we said, as we continue to say, that this particular policy on hogs and eggs represents a repudiation of government policy I have no hesitation, notwithstanding what the minister said last night, in repeating it because that is exactly what this policy on hogs and eggs is.

I have before me the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture in this house when he introduced the bill in 1958. The minister said, as reported at page 3740 of Hansard of January 24, 1958:

> The main purpose of the bill is to provide guaranteed yearly prices which can be set for any agricultural commodity except wheat, oats and barley produced in the western area. These guaranteed yearly prices once they are set—

I ask hon. members to note the following words:

> —will be in effect for 12 months in the future. In other words the bill brings forward prices into effect for the first time, and it provides to the farmer, through the ultimate security clause, through the guaranteed yearly price which will be put into effect—and which will be the one chiefly in effect—a very much greater degree of security than he has ever enjoyed.

To that statement of the Minister of Agriculture must be added a statement made by the Prime Minister, who on the introduction of the bill—this, of course, occurred before the last election—had the following to say:

> This legislation if passed will permit the agricultural board to let the farmers across Canada know this year what shall be their minimum price during the present year. That is being done under this legislation to the end that the farmer may know—

And I underline the following:

> —in anticipation each year what he is going to receive. The objective is to give the farmers a fair share of the national income, in the fixation of the prices, regard will be had to the cost of production in so far as the basic price is concerned, which is a price which I might call an emergency price, in order to protect it from a general fall as a consequence of economic dislocation everywhere, not only in Canada, but throughout the world.

These were the statements of the minister responsible for the introduction of the agricultural prices stabilization bill, supported by the words of the Prime Minister. The farmers were going to know in advance, 12 months ahead, what their situation would be in terms of price. I do not say that the government, having regard to the surplus of hogs today, is not faced with a serious situation, a situation which incidentally, they were warned about by the farmers of Canada when they fixed the floor prices of hogs and eggs at the levels they did some months before this change of policy was announced.

Mr. Barrington: Was it too high?

Mr. Argue: The hon. member for Essex East was in support of it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I stated what the farmers said. The regret is that the farmers' organizations were not consulted.

Mr. Barrington: What does the hon. member for Assiniboia say?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend must not let his temper rise too high; he must listen to a reasoned argument.

Mr. Argue: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The fact is that farmers' organizations were not consulted. We ought to examine why the government repudiated, as I say it has, its support price based on the principle of offer to purchase, and decided on deficiency payments. We ought to examine the reasons for this change in government policy. They are not difficult to ascertain. As the minister himself said, the policy was changed because of overproduction and the rapid accumulation of stocks.

Mr. Harkness: May I ask the hon. member what he is reading from?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not reading from anything.

Mr. Harkness: Yes, you are.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, my hon. friend now charges me with something very unusual. I have always been accused of being too free and easy in my speeches. Now the minister says, because I am trying to be a little more precise and referring to my notes, that I am reading from something.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Argue: May I ask the hon. member a question. Is he reading from the Martin research bureau or the Pearson research bureau?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What I am going to do is read from the "Current Review of Agricultural Conditions in Canada," page 41. This is what it says:

A very sharp increase in output of hogs was the most striking development in 1959 in the livestock section.

These are not my words; I am reading from a publication of the hon. gentleman whose intervention a while ago was designed to get me off the track.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I do not see this document which the hon. member says he is reading from. He is reading from a typewritten speech.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the minister saying I am quoting from something different?

Mr. Harkness: No; I say you are reading from a typewritten speech.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If the minister will look at the "Current Review of Agricultural Conditions in Canada" at page 41 for 1959 he will find what I have said. If he will look at page 44 he will see where his own publication estimated the stocks of pork accumulated as at December 31, 1959 at 201 million pounds, compared with an average of about 39 million pounds for the period 1947-1956, with 25 million pounds in 1957 and 47 million pounds in 1958. What is the explanation for this sharp increase in the output of hogs in 1959? There is only one explanation, and that explanation is government policy. That is why we have a right to say now that the government by its own action in 1959 was responsible for a situation which caused it to repudiate the policy and the concept of the Agricultural Stabilization Act. That is the situation now.

Mr. Chambers: How about giving the sow some credit?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It made this change without consultation with the farm organizations. The minister did not consult the Canadian Federation of Agriculture; he did not consult the interprovincial farm union. This was a case where the government did not consult farm organizations but decided on its own policy, with the disastrous results we now see before us.

Surely, in the face of this situation, the minister is not justified in saying that there is no repudiation of policy. This minister in particular spoke of the Agricultural Stabilization Act as something that was designed to give to the farmers of Canada a form of security which no other measure indeed would be able to do. He complained about an editorial which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of April 6, 1959, and I now use his own words as they appear at page 2581 of Hansard of 1959. Here is what the Ottawa Citizen had to say, which the minister criticized:

> Under a support price, farmers know in advance the minimum returns they can except and can plan their program accordingly. If the floors are attractive, they become a powerful incentive to production. Under the deficiency payments scheme they don't know where they stand until after the product has been marketed.

I believe that statement in the editorial of the Ottawa Citizen was correct. What did the minister have to say? He said at the page of Hansard to which I referred:

> Well, this is completely incorrect as regards deficiency payment for hogs. We have announced a definite floor price and we are going to use the method of deficiency payments to maintain that price rather than the method of purchase. As I said, the writer of this editorial just does not understand the situation and what is meant by a deficiency payment, as properly used in this sense.

Then the minister went on to say:

> We will not be doing any marketing of pork at all. We will pay the farmer the difference between what he gets in the market place and the price support announced.

The minister nods.

Mr. Harkness: Correct.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): These are the words he used, and they are to be found on page 2581 of Hansard.

Mr. Harkness: Absolutely correct.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I say that on that occasion the minister misled the house, because that is not the situation. What the farmer will get is not the difference between the support price and what he gets in the market place but the difference between the so-called support price and the national average price, which is another thing altogether.

The minister cannot deny this last response of mine to his nod of a few moments ago. The original statement was correct. No matter what forensic arts the minister may devise, the fact is that he has repudiated his own policy by the deficiency payments on hogs and eggs, and he does not satisfy us in the official opposition that the government does not intend to continue a process of further repudiation of its policy by applying the principle of deficiency payments or some method other than those concepts envisaged and embodied in the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

If the minister has some policy in that regard he ought to tell the house; he should not wait until we leave here some time toward the end of August to state what the policy is going to be. Parliament is now in session. If the government has further intentions with respect to withdrawal from the agricultural prices stabilization legislation, now is the time to say so in order that we may be given the opportunity of knowing what are the facts. If the minister takes that course I think he will find we will be inclined to assist him by constructive criticism, as is always our intention and purpose.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I think it is quite apparent that no matter what the present government does it will not meet with the approval of the hon. member for Essex East. He will condemn it no matter what it is. If we had set the support price at half the level at which it was set it would be no good. If we had set it at twice as much it would be too high. It would not matter where we set it, because as far as the hon. member for Essex East is concerned it would be wrong. I think everybody in the house realizes that is a fact. I only hope, and I think this is increasingly the case, that people throughout the country realize that is a fact.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You will see when the elections come.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member's tiresome repetition of the word "repudiation", in which he has indulged time after time after time, certainly does not carry any conviction to anyone. If he thinks that by adopting the method of Dr. Goebbels of repeating an incorrect statement time after time after time he will eventually be successful, I believe he is wrong as far as the farmers of the country are concerned.

Mr. Argue: I rise on a point of order. If I understood the minister's statement correctly he said that the hon. member for Essex East uses the technique of Dr. Goebbels of repeating an incorrect statement. I think that statement is unbecoming of the minister, if I heard him correctly. If I did not hear him correctly I am prepared to sit down, but I do not think the Minister of Agriculture should make that kind of statement.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, there is certainly no question of order here, but in any event the statement I made was that if the hon. member for Essex East believes that the method employed by Dr. Goebbels, the propaganda method of repeating a misstatement time after time after time or a certain word time after time after time, is going to be successful, I think he is mistaken.

Mr. Argue: That is the most unbecoming statement I have ever heard from a cabinet minister.

Mr. Harkness: I see nothing wrong with it at all. If the hon. member would prefer that I say the method of Dr. Coué, that is quite satisfactory to me. He had the same system, whereby if you repeat the same thing time after time you will finally believe it and you hope other people will.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend's knowledge of psychology is not great. Dr. Coué had the doctrine of association of ideas.

Mr. Harkness: In any event, the main point is that the hon. member believes that by repeating the word "repudiation" time after time he is going to gain something. I think he is completely incorrect. There is no validity whatever in his endless repetition of the statement that we have repudiated what we said in connection with the stabilization act, that we have repudiated the act itself and so forth. The speech I made in dealing with the stabilization bill when it was introduced, from which the hon. member quoted, is absolutely correct and represents exactly what we have done. We have provided stabilized prices so that farmers have known 12 months in advance what they were going to receive. That is exactly the position as far as hogs are concerned.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the case. How can the minister say that?

Mr. Harkness: That is the position of the farmers as far as eggs are concerned. It is their position with respect to all the products under the stabilization act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What will the price of hogs be 12 months from now?

Mr. Harkness: Just sit down until I have finished.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister is inaccurate.

Mr. Harkness: These people are making all these complaints about hogs and eggs, but for two to three years now we have had exactly the same thing in effect for wool, sugar beets and so on. Has there been any great complaint as far as wool is concerned? I have had scores and scores of letters of thanks from wool producers with regard to the deficiency payments for wool. They do not complain about it.

Mr. Argue: You are pulling the wool over the hog producers.

Mr. Harkness: Members of the opposition and certain big operators—

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And certain members of your own party.

Mr. Harkness: —who under this method were going to lose their guaranteed profits have raised a big complaint about it. They and members of the opposition, for their own political purposes, have been making a great to-do about the deficiency payment method of support for hogs and eggs. I say they have not made any complaint at all as far as wool is concerned. The method has been in operation there since the stabilization act was passed and the wool producers have found it very satisfactory. The sugar beet growers have found it very satisfactory.

At the present time, as I say, hon. members opposite are trying to make out that there has been a repudiation of the stabilization act. The system has been in effect for sugar beets and other commodities ever since the act came into force, and there has never been any claim that there was any repudiation. It was one of the methods of support which I indicated we would make use of when I introduced the stabilization bill. In my opinion and in the opinion of many other people it provides a much better type of support to bona fide farmers than the method of purchase does.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not what the government said in 1959.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member for Essex East went on to say that we were warned by the farmers that the support prices we set were too high.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did not say that.

Mr. Harkness: That is what the hon. member said; I wrote it down at the time. He said that we were warned by the farmers that the support prices we set for hogs and eggs were too high.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What I said was that you did not consult the farmers.

Mr. Harkness: Then he went on to say that we did not consult them. Both these statements are completely incorrect. I do not know why the hon. member makes these statements which he must know are incorrect. He says we did not consult the farm organizations. He knows that we consulted the soya bean people—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are talking about hogs and eggs.

Mr. Harkness: —in his own part of the country, that we consulted the sugar beet people. He must know that we consulted the farm unions, the federation of agriculture and so forth. The number of farm delegations that have been in my office during the time we have been in power has been very much greater than was the case under the former minister of agriculture.

Mr. Argue: They need to come.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They are more troubled now.

Mr. Harkness: We have consulted with farm organizations by the dozens, by the scores, by the hundreds; and if the hon. member says we have not consulted them that is a completely incorrect statement.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words following the remarks made by the Minister of Agriculture this morning.

First of all, I wish to ask him, in view of the remarks he made on May 13, 1960, from which I quote the following paragraph:

(Text):

I mentioned last year, and I believe I mentioned again this year on one occasion, that a cost of production study had been carried out with respect to hogs. The survey showed that in one area of Quebec, for example, the cost of production was considerably less than in Alberta, although everybody is aware of the fact that the biggest item in the cost of production of hogs is feed and the cost of feed is less in Alberta than it is in Quebec. This happens to be one outstanding example of the fact that these cost of production studies frequently produce results which very few people are willing to accept.

(Translation):

In view of that statement, could the Minister of Agriculture supply us with figures relating to the production costs he established for the province of Quebec, compared to those he established for the province of Alberta?

(Text):

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I have not determined any figure for either place. These cost of production studies, in both instances, were made by provincial bodies or organizations. I put all the figures on the record on one occasion last year. I have not got the figures here at the moment, but they can be found in last year's Hansard and they indicate what the variation in the cost of production of hogs was as between the different provinces.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: When you gave figures last year, I do not remember that you revealed the source of your information. If I am not mistaken, the information was somewhat vague and that is why I am asking now whether you can provide figures in support of your statements.

(Text):

Mr. Harkness: When I gave those figures, Mr. Chairman, there was nothing vague about them, and although I would not want to be too definite, I believe the source was given in each case. As I said, they were figures which had been produced by various provincial organizations in the different provinces.

Mr. Pascoe: I should like to deal briefly with one aspect of this stabilization act to which little reference has been made so far. I refer to the incentive under this new deficiency payment plan to improve the quality of the product. Before I do that, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a brief contribution to the debate we have had with reference to farm support for these deficiency payments. I should like to read from the Union Farmer a report made by Mr. Alf Gleave, president of the Saskatchewan farmers' union, in which he refers to the farm program. He says:

—in these moves—

He is talking about the recent moves by the federal government.

—toward crop insurance and long term farm credit, as well as the deficiency payments program on livestock products, we are moving forward on the agricultural program which the farm unions have advocated.

I should like to put that on the record. We have heard strong criticism from opposition speakers concerning the deficiency payments policy on grade A eggs and top grade butter. These payments are made under the Agricultural Stabilization Act. I should like to refer briefly to this aspect of the matter. I suggest that the new policy of deficiency payments on top grades of eggs and butter will result in a greater emphasis on quality production. I will go further and say that the present policy of price support in connection with eggs and butter has already brought about this emphasis on quality production.

In order to support this statement, I should like to quote from four recent articles in farm publications. In the first two articles, one in the Free Press weekly and the other in the Western Producer, there is a reference to a program just initiated in Saskatchewan to raise the quality of eggs. In announcing the new policy one article quotes the Saskatchewan minister of agriculture, and here is an excerpt from the article which is headed, "Saskatchewan has ambitious plan to boost quality of eggs". The heading on the other article is, "Saskatchewan will Initiate Program to Promote Eggs of Better Quality". I should like to read briefly from the lead paragraph which says:

A quality egg program for Saskatchewan poultry producers was inaugurated April 1 and will continue through March 31, 1961, Hon. I. C. Nollet, minister of agriculture, has announced.

Objective of the program is to encourage the production of uniform high quality eggs—

At the retail level. The Saskatchewan minister of agriculture, Mr. Nollet, is quoted directly in this article as saying:

Saskatchewan is badly in need of an incentive program to encourage improvement since tests consistently show our egg quality to be much below that of the rest of Canada.

He goes on to say:

Fifty per cent of the eggs marketed through Saskatchewan egg grading stations are below grade A, compared with only 20 per cent for Canada. Egg grades are especially poor in this province during the spring and summer months when only 20 to 25 per cent of the eggs grade A.

The Saskatchewan minister of agriculture is now suggesting in this egg quality program that an incentive to quality was needed. This incentive, I suggest, is provided in the deficiency payment for grade A eggs now in effect.

There has also been strong criticism by opposition speakers, especially by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska, with regard to the support price of 64 cents a pound for top grade butter. As in the case of eggs, this policy of the federal government will put more emphasis on the need for top quality butter.

In this regard I should like to read excerpts from another farm publication, namely the Ontario Rural Co-operator of April 26. The heading of the article reads "Dairy Price Supports Welcome". The lead of the article states:

The recently announced dairy policy for the 1960-61 production year must surely be welcome news for dairy farmers across Canada.

It goes on to state:

Let us express our appreciation in every way we can for the consideration given to our needs by government.

Then the writer adds this last with regard to quality:

Any farmer who supplies his creamery with anything less than a good first grade cream is a detriment to the industry and is contributing to the lowering of butter consumption and making it more difficult to obtain a satisfactory price for butterfat.

In another article in the Rural Co-operator of May 10 the heading is "Needn't Lose a Cent: Let's Push Butter Quality". The article reads in part as follows:

As long as producers provide their creamery with a top grade cream and creameries do a good job, there is no excuse for turning out butter that grades less than 40-93 and thus commands the top price of 64 cents. We are quite sure the government is aware that an important factor in any decreasing of butter consumption is the fact that some of the butter sold to consumers is not the best quality.

With this in mind, the one-cent differential could and should act as an incentive to improve quality. It is the writer's opinion—

I may say that the writer is Mr. R. W. Morrison.

—that the government would be very happy to have all butter grade 40-93 and pay the full 64 cents per pound because there is little doubt that consumption would increase and storage holdings would cease to be the problem they now are.

He goes on to say this:

If everyone does his or her part properly, the price paid farmers for butterfat does not need to be any less than it was last year.

With regard to this matter I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he agrees with the suggestion I made, namely that the deficiency payment on eggs and butter will bring benefit to the whole industry of agriculture through production of higher quality products which will find a better retail market.

Mr. Harkness: What the hon. member says is of course correct. We provide a support price for the top qualities of products of various kinds. It is one of the indirect benefits of the stabilization act that there is an incentive to people to produce the best quality products and as a result we are going to have a constant improvement in the quality of the products produced.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I appreciated the remarks of the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Pascoe), and of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness); but I do not quite agree with them. It is true that we have to turn out products of higher quality, especially in the case of butter, and if hon. members really want to improve the quality of our butter, there is a very easy way to do it, and that is to offer a premium on high grade products.

Consequently, instead of lowering the quality of butter we should have added one cent a pound for the 40-93, or 40-94 grade. In doing so, we would have encouraged production of high grade butter.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words in connection with the remarks the Minister of Agriculture made this morning in respect of the Agricultural Stabilization Act. He came back to the same tack, stating that the change in methods as far as price supports are concerned, had helped reduce farm surpluses. Hon. members on the government benches seem to share the minister's opinion, that the legislation helped the farmers.

Mr. Chairman, I have always claimed, and still do, that such is not the case, as indeed was pointed out by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), whose great qualifications as agricultural expert I readily recognize, and who, thanks to his interventions in this debate, has helped improve the Canadian farmer's position.

If we refer to the preamble of the act, which I have read into the record before, but which I have to repeat here, we find that it says:

Whereas it is expedient to enact a measure for the purpose of stabilizing the prices of agricultural commodities in order to assist the industry of agriculture to realize fair returns for its labour and investment, and to maintain a fair relationship between prices received by farmers and the costs of the goods and services that they buy, thus to provide farmers with a fair share of the national income.

Mr. Chairman, if we now take a look at the net farm income—

(Text):

I will put it in English so that the minister will understand: the total net income of farm operators from farm operations.

(Translation):

—we note that, in 1959, our income amounted to only $1,189 million, in spite of the increase in population, in spite of domestic consumption, which is increasing from year to year. That surely indicates that the income of farmers is on the decline.

Mr. Chairman, I have here a list of the prices which farmers got for their hogs. In 1959, the average price for grade A hogs was $22.99 per hundredweight; on the other hand, if we consider the average price for the ten years prior to 1959, we note that it was $28.40 per hundredweight.

This means that since 1957-1958-1959, farm prices and farmers' income have fallen.

The minister has just told us that his Agricultural Stabilization Act has been a boon to farmers. He said, among other things, that last year the prices stabilization board had spent $57 million in support prices.

Although Canadian taxpayers have paid $57 million in support prices, farm prices have kept going down. This is evidence of the minister's insincerity, when he introduced his Agricultural Stabilization Act, which was supposed to stabilize farm income.

In this connection, I should like to quote an article from the magazine Terre de Chez Nous, dated November 19, 1958, which explains the purpose which the Minister of Agriculture had in mind when he introduced the Agricultural Stabilization Act, or the change in method which he brought in last fall.

The Hon. Mr. Harkness said to the farmer's representatives that he has no hesitation in using the Agricultural Stabilization Act as often as necessary, but always on the condition that this practice will not bring about cumbersome surpluses.

"If surpluses were created that could not be sold, or even given away in some cases, said the minister, we would not be able, under the Agricultural Stabilization Act, to maintain prices to their actual levels and even less increase them—

We see by that statement that the minister never considered maintaining farm income at its normal level but was seeking instead to get rid of farm surpluses.

As for the support prices on eggs, I should say that the farmers, in general, are not satisfied with this method. The hon. member who spoke earlier quoted some letters; I would like in turn to quote one or two letters to prove that the farmers in this country are not satisfied with this system. One is a letter sent to the Minister of Agriculture, as well as to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), on January 28, 1960; it is signed by Miss N. M. Purdy, Balcarres, Saskatchewan.

In this letter of which I am giving a French translation made by Terre de Chez Nous, and published on March 16, 1960, we find the following:

The removal of the support price on eggs, replaced by deficiency payments, is supposed, in the long run, to benefit the poultry industry, it is said. But tell me, since when is it consistent with morals to allow the patient to die in order to cure his ills?

That sudden reversal of policy, without our being given the least chance to prepare for it, has not only removed our benefits completely but has forced us to spend money which is now impossible for us to earn if we want to keep operating from day to day. No income of any kind, for family expenses, while we are forced to resort to credit to pay the cost of operations.

We are worse off than during the great depression years of the thirties. At least, at that time we were all in the same boat. We could hire a man at $15 a month in summer, and $5 a month in winter, and a servant at $8 or $10, who still knew they were lucky to have at least a place to hang up their hats.

And it was the same with the rest, besides the fact that it was still possible to keep out of debt if we really wanted to. But the labour market is no longer at that level. Today, we have to face competition from a high-pressure economy you are so fond of boasting about, and our costs remain at top levels.

Further down, the letter continues:

Whose fault is it, after all, if the poultry industry is going through hard times? Are we to blame? Is the average poultry producer to blame? Who advised poultry producers to keep larger staffs to operate more efficiently? Section 3 of R.O.P. practically compels us to expand.

Who increased the support price on eggs in the central provinces, which are so close to the main markets in this country?

When it is too late, and the mess of your policy has become obvious, you come up with radical changes without sufficient warning for us to prepare accordingly. Our chicks were already hatched when we were given the first indication that a change was in the offing. When the new policy was announced in June, in western Canada, the particulars given were far from complete enough to allow us to properly plan our breeding. Finally, we learned the worst after laying had already begun. As a result of low prices of poultry meat at the time, who could blame us for keeping pullets whose breeding costs we had no chance to recover?

The text closes as follows:

You should be proud of the success of your program. What will be, in your opinion, the effect of your policy on the R.O.P. breeding program?

How many flocks will be able to hold out? Must you ruin 40 years of fine work by your department? As for us, we have been following the R.O.P. policy for 33 years without a break, but we are seriously considering withdrawing, out of necessity, and not by choice. The steadily decreasing number of producers is a cause for great concern. You are dealing us a death blow.

This letter reflects the opinion of many poultry producers throughout Canada.

I have in my hand another letter addressed to Mr. G. R. Wilson, Chief Inspection Service, Ottawa, Ontario, and written by Mr. W. J. Major.

I shall only quote three paragraphs from it.

(Text):

This mess all started with the uncalled for raise of floor price for eggs at 44 cents A large by the present government and it was further aggravated by the government's policy of not admitting its error by going back to prior floor. It got out from under by shifting its responsibility of supporting its increased or even prior floor and thus forced us to feed the Canadian consumer at a price far below cost and drawn from our economies of the last two decades.

Of course the further government policy of deficiency payment to the 1000 dozen farm is placing those of us with sufficient layers to try and make a living from poultry in competition with the federal treasurer. We were first told that this was to do away with integration but from the decreased chick orders received we are finding out that the producer of over 1000 layers is trying to carry on while the sideline small producer is not ordering and saying to hell with it all.

As it is impossible for us to compete with the federal treasurer, who derives his revenue by act of parliament, we are forced to pare off all possible costs including our test pens and until such time as we can have a better era and recoup our present deficits it will be impossible for us to start them up again.

[Mr. Boulanger.]

(Text):

Those are reports from responsible farmers and poultry producers which are self-explanatory. There is another report that proves that small farmers are affected, especially if we consider the orders received by various hatcheries in this country.

An inquiry was made in Ontario in order to ascertain whether the new policy on prices would affect big or small farmers. It is stated in this report—unfortunately, I do not have it at hand just now—but in any case, it states that 45 per cent of small flock owners, of small poultry producers, have not renewed their orders for chicks during 1960, that is from January 1 to March 31.

Besides, according to my own personal experience there are farmers and poultry producers in my district, who own 5,000 hens and over and who did not cut down on their orders for chicks. In other words, instead of protecting the small farmers, we are protecting the big ones.

I therefore ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he could tell us how many farmers requested registration permits in order to come under the Agricultural Stabilization Act. I know that when at the end of January, we asked that question, we were told that out of 347,553 poultry producers, only 78,296 had registered, and this, at January 15, 1960. At that time, this figure represented 20 per cent of the poultry producers who come under the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman—

(Text):

Mr. Harkness: In connection with the question raised by the hon. gentleman, the number of egg producers registered is 89,545.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, that figure therefore represents about 25 per cent of Canada's poultry farmers.

Now, when the minister amended his methods, he said 90 per cent of the poultry farmers would benefit from the new price support system. Moreover, it must be remembered that those poultry producers who have registered will get price support on only 1,000 dozens. What we would have liked to know, therefore, was what proportion of egg production would qualify under the agricultural price support legislation.

This is only my own deduction, of course, but I think less than 5 per cent of Canada's egg production will qualify for deficiency payments.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I have been following closely the remarks made a moment ago by my hon. friend from Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger). As I understand his remarks, he has said that Canadian farmers were not satisfied with the Agricultural Stabilization Act, indeed that they were dissatisfied with it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, that is not what he said.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised at this interjection from the hon. member for Essex East, because he has been prompting his colleague all along, as the latter is unable to speak for himself.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member should withdraw that statement. He knows quite well that the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska is an expert on agricultural matters.

Mr. Ricard: This is particularly obvious by the way he talks.

Mr. Chairman, I have been wondering whether the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska has any authority to speak on behalf of the farmers of Canada.

(Text):

Mr. Habel: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman is stating that the hon. member from Drummond-Arthabaska has no right to speak on behalf of the farmers.

Mr. Ricard: That is not what I said. I said the hon. gentleman had no authority to speak on their behalf.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. We can hear only one hon. member at a time. Does the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot wish to speak?

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I did not say that the hon. member had no right to speak on behalf of the farmers of Canada. What I said is that the hon. gentleman has no authority to do so.

Mr. Denis: What about you?

Mr. Ricard: Stand up if you want to speak.

Mr. Denis: All right, I will stand up.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot.

(Translation):

Mr. Ricard: If I may, Mr. Chairman, I shall go on with my remarks, in spite of interjections from the opposition benches, and say that farmers, more particularly in our part of the country—for I do not hesitate to say this of all farmers in the province of Quebec, and throughout Canada—are satisfied with the Agricultural Stabilization Act which this Conservative government introduced to provide farmers with the fair share of income to which they are entitled.

I have here, Mr. Chairman—and I had to go and fetch it in all haste—some excerpts from the press to prove my arguments. For instance, I have here an article published in Le Courrier of St. Hyacinthe of Thursday March 3, 1960, which reported on a meeting of members of the Canadian farmers' union (U.C.C.) in Granby, under the title:

Local farmers in favour of price support.

Mr. Chairman, if farmers did not favour the price support act, they would certainly not meet in a convention to ask the government and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) for an extension of the legislation on price stabilization which was worked out and introduced in order to give our farmers what they are entitled to get.

I also have here another item from the same paper, dated December 10, 1959, which deals more particularly with the price support for beets. In that article we find that, for the riding of St. Hyacinthe, subsidies were $41,390.70, whereas, for the whole province of Quebec those grants were $73,039.99. If you wish, you may add the $4 million which went into the Quebec farmers' pockets in the form of a subsidy of 25 cents per hundredweight of milk, and you will get a very appreciable amount which our farmers were very pleased to receive and for which they commended and will continue to commend the government, which had the courage and vision to consider their interests.

I shall give you another irrefutable proof, from the very lips of the so-called expert on agriculture, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska. As we may see on page 2464 of the English text of Hansard, he said that for twelve years, under the Liberal administration, that is from 1946 to March 1957, the Agricultural Stabilization Act had brought the farmers he amount of $25,052,809.98. And he deplored the fact that this government had given farmers $78 million in the shape of grants.

Those people, Mr. Chairman, do not know when they should cry or laugh. They want to do both at the same time. And they think that all the farmers are not bright enough to see through their game. They always want to play politics and that is why they are now out in the cold, on the opposition benches, where they will remain for a long time.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I should like to give a brief answer to the remarks of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. I said that the government had given $57 million last year and, $78 million during the two preceding years, that is, in 1957 and 1958. I do not remember—

Mr. Ricard: That is what I said.

Mr. Boulanger: I stated that, during the last 12 years of Liberal rule, the government had given $24 million in deficiency payments to our farmers, at a time when farmers were selling their grain—

Mr. Ricard: You deplore the fact that farmers had too much.

Mr. Boulanger: I can prove, Mr. Chairman, that even with the price support act, and with the amount of $57 million we disbursed last year, the farmers were not satisfied with the prices they had obtained. I have here a list of prices from 1947 to 1956—

Mr. Ricard: You have so many of them that you get all mixed up.

Mr. Boulanger: The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe has a way, which I find it hard to describe, of distorting our arguments. But I know perfectly that he is in no position to tell me much about agriculture. From 1947 to 1956, in the last ten years of the Liberal regime, these were the prices paid to farmers for some of their products.

Mr. Ricard: I have read them.

Mr. Boulanger: Wheat was selling at $1.49; under the Conservative regime, it was selling at $1.23.

Mr. Ricard: You are comparing ten years with three years, the third to the whole.

Mr. Boulanger: From 1957 to 1959, the Liberal regime has given—

Mr. Ricard: You are comparing ten years with three years.

Mr. Boulanger: Barley was selling at $1 a bushel from 1947 to 1956, under the Liberal regime, while Department of Agriculture was headed by the greatest minister of agricultural we have ever known; and it was 75 cents from 1957-1959. Oats was selling at 67.6 cents, while in 1957-1959, it was selling at 53 cents.

Mr. Ricard: That is because of the surpluses you had piled up.

Mr. Boulanger: Flaxseed was selling at $3.62 under the Liberal regime, and at $2.67 under the Tory regime.

Mr. Ricard: We had to get rid of your surpluses.

Mr. Boulanger: From 1947 to 1956, hogs were selling at $27.16 a hundredweight while from 1957 to 1959, they were selling at $26.19.

From 1947 to 1956, eggs were selling at 41.6 cents a dozen, and at 35 cents a dozen from 1957 to 1959.

If the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot wishes to obtain other figures, I am in a position to supply them to him.

Mr. Ricard: You do not understand them, and that is the trouble.

Mr. Boulanger: The average price for the ten-year period preceding 1957, on which was the support price for hogs was based, was $28.40 the hundredweight, while in 1959, after three years of Tory regime, hogs were selling at $22.99.

As for the price of eggs, in 1959—

Mr. Villeneuve: Give us also the prices of cheese and butter.

Mr. Ricard: He just does not want to talk about those.

Mr. Boulanger: If you want me to talk about butter, I shall do so. Right now butter is selling at 64 cents a pound—

Mr. Parizeau: How much was it selling for under your administration?

Mr. Boulanger: Under the Liberal administration, it was about 58 cents a pound—

Mr. Ricard: And you say we reduced the price?

Mr. Villeneuve: What about the price of cheese?

Mr. Boulanger: The price of butter has gone up. That, I admit, as I said the other day. Apparently, the hon. members were not in the house at the time. I said the price of butter had risen, and I explained why the present price of 64 cents a pound is worth no more than the 58 cent price a few years ago, because the index of production costs has risen tremendously. So if you want to compare the present price of butter, namely 64 cents a pound, with the price of a few years ago, butter would have to sell at 66 to 68 cents a pound.

Mr. Villeneuve: Can you name one country where the price of butter is as high as in Canada?

Mr. Boulanger: It is not a matter of comparing Canada's farm prices with those of other countries. To do that, you would have—

An hon. Member: Our production costs are not the same.

Mr. Boulanger: —to quote production costs. When we criticized the agricultural prices stabilization act, we were told it would protect farm income—

Mr. Ricard: Then why did you vote for it?

Mr. Boulanger: —and as far as I know—

Mr. Ricard: You supported it.

Mr. Boulanger: —the farmer's income has not been guaranteed, because his net income has dropped 7 per cent in 1959. That is an estimate, but when the revised figures come out—perhaps they are available by now—the drop will be 10 or 12 per cent.

Those, Mr. Chairman, are a few thoughts I wanted to submit to the house following the inappropriate remarks of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot; should he need further information, I am prepared to supply it.

(Text):

Mr. Villeneuve: Mr. Chairman, this seems to me to be about the right time to get into this debate. I believe the people of Canada are very grateful to this government for what it has done. I can understand it is the duty of the opposition to criticize the government but let them take a realistic view and make a comparison beween world prices and what the farmers are receiving in Canada. Certainly we would all like to see an increase in the returns to our producers but we cannot control world conditions; we cannot control production.

We consider that the standard of living in the United States is high and possibly higher than ours. We have a reciprocal trade arrangement, and have had it for a number of years, under which we trade back and forth at set duty rates. Therefore, whether we like it or not, our market values are somewhat in line with theirs. It is only fair to make a comparison with the last four months period of 1959. If we do that we will find that the average price of good steers in the United States was $23.74 and in Canada $24.55, which shows that we are closely interrelated as far as prices are concerned.

In the last three months of 1959 the price of hogs in the United States was $16.43 dressed weight basis, whereas in Canada the national average was $23.67, which means that our price was $7 a hundred higher than the United States price. But, in 1952—our friends in the opposition will not say this—a disease broke out among hogs in the United States and the producers in that country were not allowed to send them into this country until that disease was cleared up. Permission was given to allow them in in the early part of 1960. On a reciprocal trade basis they were permitted to send pork products into Canada.

The United States is a country which raises 10 times as many hogs as we do and they can produce much more if they have to. Certainly, our prices are closely in line with theirs. The minister took the only sound approach that was possible or feasible and the figures he gave today as to exports and particularly with respect to hog bellies rendered into lard indicate that the returns were less than you would get for dog food. Is it logical or sound to waste the taxpayers' money to encourage overproduction, especially by commercial organizations, without in any way limiting the quantity that may be produced? I want to substantiate the minister's stand and I may say I have figures here for the Toronto market which after all is the largest market in Canada.

In the three months from October 1 to December 31, 1958, 95.75 per cent of the producers of hogs sold less than 50 hogs in that period of time which is the period of the year when there is the heaviest marketing. But when we take the total number of hogs that were put on the market we find that 70.4 per cent of the hogs were marketed by 95.75 per cent of the producers which proves beyond any question of doubt that during that period of time 4¼ per cent of the producers sold 30 per cent of the hogs. Is it sound judgment or good practice for the government to continue a policy that involves a guarantee to the owners of large piggeries who are perhaps making $8 to $10 a head and are raising as many as 8,000 to 10,000 hogs in the vicinity of Montreal or Toronto for marketing in those cities?

That was the situation, and I want to compliment the government and in particular the Minister of Agriculture who had the courage and conviction to try to protect the family farmer. Today in my constituency, as is the case elsewhere, 75 per cent of the farmers are men from 35 to 60 years of age with no more than ordinary academic training. If they and their families are forced off the farms they have no alternative but to go to industrial centres. We have a condition of unemployment today and we will only be sending these people into misery and hardship. Therefore I repeat that the minister's stand was a courageous one and the only one that was feasible or sound in the face of the facts before him.

We do not hear too much criticism about beef because we are in a cycle of high prices but in a year or two from now when the United States starts to ship surplus cattle into this country we will be bound to feel the effects because their cattle population is ten times that of Canada. Therefore over the course of the years we are bound to feel the impact of that sooner or later.

As far as dairy products are concerned, our friends do not say very much about them because we guarantee 64 cents a pound for butter when there is no market in the world outside of Great Britain that will buy it at any price and Danish and New Zealand butter is being sold there today at 35 cents a pound. I ask the hon. member to name one market where we can sell any butter at the price that we guarantee in our home market. The same thing applies to cheese. I should like the hon. member for Essex East to stay here because he was one of the members of a cabinet that did not pay much attention to the cheese producers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member, whom I hear speaking for the first time and who by the way declaims very well, if I may say so—I wish I could say the same thing about his argument—says that when I was in the cabinet nothing was done for the cheese producers of Canada. I want to let my hon. friend know that I was not aware that he was a member of the same cabinet or that he was clerk of council and was in a position to know what went on. I want my hon. friend to know, now that we have had an opportunity to compare the results of the present agricultural policy with the agricultural policy of the previous government—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —that there is no comparison with what the former government did.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I do not see any point of order raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Villeneuve: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to give the hon. member every opportunity because the fact is that in the last six years his government was in power cheese prices held fairly well in Ontario thanks to the Ontario government which had to take over a second mortgage on the product in order to stabilize it for the rest of Canada. Today we are receiving a fair return. I admit that we would certainly all like to see the farmers have a better living but on the basis of world prices, when New Zealand is selling cheese to Great Britain today at 23 or 24 cents a pound and having in mind that in Canada there is a guarantee equivalent to 32 cents a pound plus a subsidy of 25 cents per 100 pounds of milk or almost 35 cents altogether, I think our farmers are reasonably fair and appreciate that sort of protection. Certainly they never enjoyed it under the former government.

The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska put forward arguments on the basis of the period from 1947 to 1956. He failed to state that that was the aftermath of the war and that during that period we had to send our surplus production to countries which were demolished during the war. We also had the Korean war during that period of time. There was an altogether different position with respect to the disposition of surplus food stuffs. But the hon. member failed to tell about the mess they left which the present government inherited and the fact there were no markets available in which to sell our surpluses. It may comfort him to tell his side of the story. I suppose if I were in the opposition I would do the same thing, but nevertheless I believe in being fair.

(Translation):

Last week, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska made a comparison between the price on hogs in 1956 and in 1960. However, he forgot to check on his information beforehand, because in 1956 the average weekly production was about 115,000 hogs, while in the first three months of 1959 and 1960, production reached more than 164,000 hogs each week. Therefore, the present overproduction should be considered.

The hon. member did not say anything about the price of beef, nor about the price of butter and cheese; he preferred to mention only the price on hogs and eggs.

I congratulate the government and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) for their efforts to protect the family farm. Before the year's end, I feel that it will be possible to establish an average production, thus enabling egg producers to get a higher income. Moreover, I am convinced that hog breeders will obtain a higher price, and before August, too.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, may I say just a few words following the remarks made by the member for Glengarry-Prescott (Mr. Villeneuve). However, I do not want to disprove his remarks, which might take too long and, besides, I have already dealt with them. All I want to say is this. Members on the government side say the farmer is satisfied with the agricultural acts which have been in force for some years, but I will simply quote from press reports which reflect the view of farmers and of farm representatives of the province.

I have here an excerpt from an article published in Le Devoir of October 21 last, signed by Mr. Jean-Baptiste Lemoine, president of the Quebec Catholic union of farmers, who is recognized by all as an authority in the field of agriculture. Here is what he said:

> We are walking in a fog, towards the unknown.

After writing about the Agricultural Stabilization Act, he said:

> We are walking in a fog.

Here is the view of the Canadian federation of agriculture on that matter:

> That legislation should not apply to products such as pork, beef, eggs and dairy products.

Furthermore, a supporter of this government, the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) said the following, in this house:

> If I understand the formula correctly, it is the most backward that could be adopted from an already established position.

And a little further on, he said:

> I believe the program which has been announced and introduced destroys all hope in the production and sale of perishable goods. This program can only serve the opposite of the intended purpose. Instead of helping the small producers, it crushes them. It encourages speculators to play with the prices. It favours a lack of balance between supply and demand.

Mr. Chairman, before we carry this item, I would have to ask the Minister of Agriculture a few questions arising from an article published by the Ontario farmers union, of 1960. I would like to ask the minister to tell us if he confirms or denies this part of the article that I want to quote:

(Text):

> According to the poultry products market report dated April 1, over 2,348,000 pounds of dressed poultry were imported into Canada in this first part of 1960. This is a million and a half pounds more than the same period of 1959. In spite of these figures, it is reported that prices have increased to the consumer from 37 or 38 cents a pound for turkeys to 56 cents.

(Translation):

Lately, there have been delegations of farmers calling to submit briefs to the Minister of Agriculture, and the matter of imports came up.

I should like the minister to tell us what has been the amount or value of our imports from January 1 to the latest date, as compared with the same period last year?

(Text):

Mr. Harkness: In connection with that last figure, these figures appear every week in the poultry products market report. This report shows that dressed poultry imported up to May 14, 1960 was 1,942,580 pounds of chickens and in 1959, 449,140 pounds of chickens. In so far as turkeys are concerned, there were 1,151,000 pounds imported in 1960 and none in 1959.

I should like to point out to the hon. member that we do not have a closed border with the United States. During the time that we have been importing a few million pounds of poultry from the United States, we have been exporting to the United States very large quantities of cattle and hogs. No hon. member, of course, can expect that trade is going to be a one-way street.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: This, of course, does not tally with the promises made by the Minister of Agriculture and the Prime Minister in 1957 and 1958, to send out an army of salesmen in every country of the world to find markets for our products.

If our imports go on increasing all the time, I just wonder what will happen to the poultry farmer before very long. There is already some discrimination against poultry farmers in Canada, and unless imports are checked, our poultry farmers will be wiped out for good.

(Text):

Mr. Jones: I did not intend to take part in this debate at this time, but some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska should be corrected. He has been highly critical of the agricultural stabilization measure. He has not been the only one who has taken that view. I recall that in January, 1958, before the 1958 election, the hon. member for Assiniboia said that the agricultural prices stabilization measure would be the death warrant of the Conservative party. That prediction did not turn out to be very sound, and I do not believe the arguments presented by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska are any more sound.

This program is one of three particular projects which the government has adopted to deal with the problem of the fluctuation in farm income. The other two are the amendments to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, which have resulted in 10 per cent to 15 per cent more farmers benefiting from that legislation than formerly, and the crop insurance program under which the federal government has offered to pay 20 per cent of the cost of the premiums and 50 per cent of the cost of administration, in addition to making loans to those provinces that take up the scheme.

The introduction of this agricultural prices stabilization act, as is well known, has resulted in the establishment of mandatory floor prices on nine commodities, with an additional dozen or so other agricultural products receiving support. In view of the remarks of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska, and the earlier remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia, I should like to put on the record the official views of the only farm organization in Canada which represents all farmers on a national scale. I refer to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture which presented its views to the cabinet on February 24 of this year. This is what they had to say about price support:

> We recognize that in present price support programs we have most of the fundamentals that we, as producers, have asked for and agreed are desirable.

That is the view of the only farm organization which represents the generality of farmers on a national scale. I think their views should be taken into consideration when discussing this particular item of legislation. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska made some comments about the level at which support prices should be maintained. I should like again to refer him to the presentation by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture when they said that they recognized that supports which create and perpetuate surpluses cannot be satisfactory over a period of time.

The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska has been dealing with dairy price supports and with the butter support program. Surely it was welcome news to the farmers of this country and to the members of this house who are seriously concerned with the problems of agriculture and who, for example, take into account the views of the Ontario Rural Co-operator, when the minister announced in this house the establishment of the butter support price for this year. In their April 26 issue they carried this headline "Dairy Price Supports Welcome". They went on to say this:

> The recently announced dairy policy for the 1960-61 production year must surely be welcome news for dairy farmers across Canada.

That is the view taken by responsible farm organizations in connection with this particular item which is under discussion at this time. I think those views are in direct refutation of the position which has been taken by the hon. member who has just been speaking. Coming from an area where poultry and eggs are raised not by large producers as the sole source of income but as a necessary part of the farmers cash income, I can say that the egg support policy adopted by this government has proved to be satisfactory.

Some doubts were expressed at the initiation of this particular program. We were faced with a situation in which egg factories capable of mass production on a low cost basis were flooding the markets to the detriment of the small poultry raisers. With the introduction of this deficiency payment system providing for supports under the deficiency payments scheme on up to 4,000 dozen grade A large and extra large eggs, supports were provided to the farmers who needed them most, namely the great majority of the small egg producers. As must be apparent to everyone and as has been apparent to the egg producers themselves, under the previous system the production of eggs was being increased by what proved to be an incentive price and huge surpluses were being piled up for the benefit not of the ordinary egg producer but of the mass producer, the egg factory.

In conclusion may I say that from the approval given to the price support policy in general by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and others it is fairly evident that this act has worked out to the great benefit of Canadian farmers.

Mr. Fisher: I just want to ask the minister two questions. Can he tell us again—he has probably given this information to other members—the difficulties, as he sees them, with regard to bringing pulpwood under this particular administration? The second question is this. Has he any figures at all that would indicate, on a regional basis, how much time and money handled by this administration has gone into the northwestern Ontario region?

Mr. Harkness: As to the latter part of the question, may I say that we have no breakdown along that line for pulpwood. There are almost insuperable difficulties as far as bringing it under the act is concerned. If we attempt to purchase it under the act, we have no place to store it or anything else along that line. If we were paying a deficiency payment on it, it would really be a deficiency payment to a large extent to the large pulp and paper companies, which would enable them to get their wood at a lower price than they would be paying for it otherwise. Actually I think the best means of improvement along that line are the ones which have already been initiated by the pulp producers in forming their co-operative associations and as a result being in a better bargaining position to improve the price for their pulpwood. This has already happened in a considerable number of places.

Mr. Fisher: With regard to the pulp question, I know that in Quebec the provincial government has encouraged the formation of co-operatives by pulp producers. An attempt is being made to form one in our own region at the present time. I do not like to bring to the minister's attention campaign promises or election promises but strong indications were given by a number of ministers during the last campaign, and I would remind the ministers specifically of what the Prime Minister said in Rimouski, Quebec, prior to the last election. It seems to me that the whole movement on the part of the government has died almost of inanition.

I should like to know more about the difficulties than the minister has given us. How thoroughly did his department go into this question? The reason I raise the matter is that every farmer who cuts pulpwood is aware of the economic power of the people to whom he sells it. These are large corporations. I do not know of a group that in the main have had less co-operative experience and who have less pressure to exert in a political and economic way than have the bush farmers. Can the minister give us a little more explanation as to how much study his department and the government made of this matter, when it came to this decision and whether there are any steps it can take, in co-operation with the provincial governments, to improve the position?

The minister did not mention one weakness in trying to set up a scheme that is very apparent today, namely the regional nature of so much of the pulpwood market and the high cost of transportation. We have in northwestern Ontario a situation that I could point out to him in which pulpwood is coming down from northern Saskatchewan and from northern Manitoba all the way to mills at Fort Frances and Kenora, a fairly long transportation haul. One of the difficulties that is occasioned here is that the farmer in Saskatchewan and in Manitoba is in a position to take a much lower price than are the ones in northern Ontario. This is an example of an invasion of one group of farmers' pulp market by another region. I just wondered how much analysis went into this matter. Can I put on the order paper a request for papers and expect to get anything from the department?

Mr. Harkness: We looked into this matter quite thoroughly. I do not think there are any papers particularly that I could produce in response to a request for the production of papers. The one definite step, of course, that was taken by the federal government to correct the situation was the prosecution of the paper companies for having a combine to depress the price paid to the farmers for pulpwood. That action, of course, resulted in a considerable improvement in the price in certain areas, combined with the formation of these co-operative pulp selling organizations by the farmers.

As I indicated previously, the practical difficulties in the way of providing price support for a commodity of this kind are extremely great. Indeed, it did not look as though it would be a practical proposition. Certainly on an offer to purchase program there was just no means that we had to handle the pulpwood; and on a deficiency payment basis, it created a situation in which it was just that much easier in a way for the paper companies to get away from pressure to increase their price for pulpwood. In effect, what we would have been doing by deficiency payments would have been to contribute to a considerable extent to the welfare of the paper companies which certainly do not need that sort of assistance from the general taxpayer.

For these various reasons, we did not consider that this was a practical means of dealing with the situation. We therefore went ahead with the combines investigation prosecution and we have been doing what we could to encourage the provincial governments and groups of farmers to form their own selling organizations.

Mr. Fisher: I have one question. Does the minister's department consider pulpwood to be a farm product?

Mr. Harkness: Strictly speaking, I do not know that you could consider it to be a farm product the same as, we will say, wheat, oats, barley or other products along that line. I do not know that there is in the act anything which would specifically exclude it. But certainly it is not a farm product in the same way as is a commodity such as the grains I have mentioned or livestock and so on.

Mr. Fisher: The reason I raise this point is that under provincial legislation in Ontario it is possible under their marketing act to bring in pulpwood. However, there is one other factor. We have a pulp mill situation at the lakehead where all the big mills have large limits held from the crown; that is, the crown through the province of Ontario. At the same time each of these companies buys a considerable amount of pulpwood from what we call farmers, bush farmers, and this is a very important part of their income. Recently one of the companies in particular—there are others—has not only been importing wood from Manitoba and Saskatchewan, which is after all an interprovincial matter and nothing that we can complain of, but it has also been importing in considerable quantities—at least, the value is up I believe over the $1 million mark—of pulpwood from the United States. It is really carrying coals to Newcastle in the minds of many people there.

What it is very difficult for us to do is to put our finger on someone who could be responsible. I see that the chairman is looking at me and I am probably getting somewhat away from this particular item, but I would like to have the minister's opinion whether it could properly be a matter of concern, if this product is a farm product, that United States competition is coming in into this particular market.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, all I can say is this. As I mentioned in connection with some other products, so far as imports from the United States are concerned we have a big two-way trade and we certainly export a great deal more in the way of pulp and paper products to the United States than the amount we import. The amount we import from them is comparatively negligible. As I have said before, we cannot expect to be able to carry on trade and have it flow all in the one direction as far as any one particular product is concerned. Therefore, I just do not see that there is anything that can be done to prevent a limited amount of United States pulpwood which happened to be in a given geographical situation, particularly in the Lake of the Woods area, where it can be marketed more readily and cheaply in Canada than in the United States because of its proximity to the paper mills, coming in to our markets.

Mr. Fisher: There is no way of setting a price?

Mr. Harkness: I would think it is extremely difficult to set a price for something which is imported from another country unless you put it under import control. If you did that, of course, it would lead immediately to retaliatory measures, and in the case of pulp and paper products it would certainly be to our terrific disadvantage.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Chairman, I have one question I would like to ask the minister. On May 10 various farm organizations presented a brief to him, and I am wondering if the minister will tell the committee if he has taken any steps toward meeting the requests made to him. If not, does he intend to write to those various farm organizations and reply to their requests, stating what he intends to do about them?

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mr. Harkness: Is the hon. member referring to various poultry associations which came to see me?

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Yes.

Mr. Harkness: I told these people when they were here, and I have also stated this in reply to a question in the house, I believe this week although it may have been last week, that we would attempt at the next GATT negotiating conference to secure equalized rates as between ourselves and the United States as far as duties on poultry products are concerned.

11. Subsidies for cold storage warehouses under the Cold Storage Act, $62,667.

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): Mr. Chairman, in reviewing item No. 11, which is for a subsidy for cold storage, I am a little concerned about the sharp reduction in the amount of money available this year. Perhaps after I have spoken briefly on this matter the minister might be able to clarify it to some extent.

The matter of cold storage is very important to fruit and vegtable growing, which is the most important industry in the Niagara peninsula where I represent the county of Lincoln. I notice that the chairman has given a certain amount of leeway today and I am going to take advantage of that in saying to the minister that this year, as far as I know the only year for a long time, the fruit and vegetable growers in the Niagara peninsula have not presented a brief or petition or something like that in connection with dumping from the United States, which for so long has been their great problem. There have been changes in the regulations. The price stabilization act has been passed; there has been an extension of the seasonal tariff; and there has also been this matter of fair value for duty. However, in spite of all this the fruit growers still have problems, and one of their problems is the selling of their products. There is about 60 per cent—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair has been quite lenient so far but I hope the hon. member will come back to the item referring to cold storage.

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): Mr. Chairman, I was just about to come back to it. About 60 per cent of the crop goes for processing and 40 per cent to the basket trade, and the need for cold storage is very important for both of those ways of disposing of the crop.

In recent years there has been a sharp reduction in the number of canning factories which means that cold storage is very essential because sometimes the farmers have their crops ready to take to the plant but they find the plant cannot handle them that day, or the following day, which means they have to put them into storage space. As you know, tender fruit and vegetables are very hard to take care of unless you have suitable cold storage acccommodation for them.

As far as the basket trade is concerned, I think the matter of cold storage is even more important because in years gone by most of that trade went to the corner grocery store or the home canner, but today it is sold to about six large buyers, the chain stores. They do not take it in small quantities; they like to get it in carloads which means that the fruit has to be stored for a certain length of time in order to supply their requirements. As I said, I am concerned about why the subsidy is reduced by so much this year and I am just wondering if the growers in the area are not taking full advantage of the subsidy available to them.

There is also the question of private cold storage. I quite admit that there is no subsidy available for that at the present time but I understand a great many of the larger growers in my area are considering something of that kind. I would like the minister to take that into consideration and make some kind of subsidy or grant available to the private family farmer who wishes to build a cold storage plant for himself.

Another thing which I would like to suggest to the minister concerns the preparing of plans and specifications for small cold storage plants. I think the experimental farm could help there, and we have a wonderful experimental farm in Lincoln county which could render great assistance to the growers in preparing plans and specifications of some kind. The growers in the Niagara peninsula have gone through some rather bad years; but everything looks much better now with new anti-dumping legislation and there is the possibility of the old family farms, the larger farms, coming back again. Therefore. I would certainly urge the minister to give this matter of cold storage very serious consideration.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, this reduction is more apparent than is likely actually to be the case. The figures here are not really comparable. The figure of $433,510 was the final figure for the amount of cold storage subsidies. It has been the custom for some considerable time as far as this vote is concerned, to put in the amount of subsidy that will be required to pay for the applications which are already in and have been approved. In this case they happen to amount to this figure of $62,667. Since the original estimates were prepared before Christmas—some time last fall—there have been several other applications for subsidies which have been approved aggregating something over $190,000, I believe. Those will appear in the first supplementaries when they are introduced. I can assure the hon. member that any of these cold storages which qualify will be dealt with just as they have been in past years by supplementary estimates after the applications come in and have been approved.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I have just received a letter from the Osoyoos co-operative fruit and vegetable growers in British Columbia in regard to cold storage. Apparently there is a new quality control regulation which has just been brought in the result of which will be to pay an additional 15 cents per box for possible costs to come in the future, provided the top cold storage requirements are met. I was wondering whether the department had received any correspondence in this regard because I can see that there will be a rather large request for further cold storage out in that area.

The letter I have received was written, as I say, by the Osoyoos co-operative fruit and vegetable growers who previously had a 10-year building plan in hand. They had been requesting that the department pass on their total plans for the next ten years. This letter informs me that because of the change in the quality control they are faced with asking for this cold storage subsidy to help in the development of an additional 40,000-box storage. Has the minister received any information in regard to this quality control within the Okanagan valley?

Mr. Harkness: I have not received anything personally. My officials inform me they have no knowledge of any such request having come in. However, I should like to assure the hon. member that requests for cold storages on the part of co-operatives are always dealt with by us in as considerate a way as possible under the act. It would not be possible under the act to approve of a cold storage program which was to extend over the next ten years. Farmers' co-operatives that request assistance in building cold storages get first consideration and priority as far as we are concerned. It is only because we want to assist organizations of that kind that the act has not been repealed.

Mr. Pugh: May I clear up one point, Mr. Chairman. This co-operative will be applying within the next few days. Due to the lateness of the season I hope I can have an assurance from the minister that everything possible will be done to speed up the processing of the application.

Mr. Harkness: Yes, Mr. Chairman, we will certainly attempt to deal with it as expeditiously as possible and I can assure the hon. gentleman that we do this in all cases of this kind.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, a little over a year ago a group of farmers in the lakehead became interested in trying to develop a cold storage plant there to take advantage of the operations of this act. They did not meet with success largely due to the fact in my judgment that they lacked experienced guidance and help. This brings up a question I have already brought to the minister's notice and on which I wish to speak later in another part of his estimates. I refer to the role played by the department in small isolated areas where because of the small number of farmers it is difficult to organize in such a way as to have the weight to take advantage of funds such as this and where it is difficult for these groups to acquire the necessary expertise.

Every time this brought to the minister's attention, probably through the advice of his officials, reference is made to it being a provincial matter, in essence, and to the fact that initiative should come from that source. The situation remains that our agricultural economy at the lakehead continues to drop. Appeals to provincial authorities do not appear to be effective. We do not seem to get the required leadership from the federal department in our region and we tend to be just a little saw-off of the Winnipeg offices of the department.

I was wondering if the minister could comment on this estimate of the situation and state whether or not he would agree that it is extremely difficult in an isolated region like ours to get a group together that can take advantage of this kind of legislation without much stronger leadership from the department.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, as I have noted on several occasions previously, extension work in agriculture is the field of the provinces. We have no organization or staff available to carry on extension work nor do we have an organization from which we could draw men to send to all parts of the country to organize farm groups whether it be for the purpose of building a cold storage warehouse, a cheese factory, a potato warehouse or something else. In the division of responsibility between the dominion and the provinces this is a responsibility of the provinces and not the dominion. We do not have the staff or organization to do it.

Mr. Fisher: Could the minister say whether in the last year or two any money has been spent in the area west of the clay belts to the Manitoba border?

Mr. Harkness: I am informed that we do not have the records here beyond last year but last year there was no cold storage subsidized in that area.

Mr. Fisher: When I look at the provincial estimates and the pattern there I see a surprising number of these cold storage warehouses across the province of Ontario that have received support both under this and the provincial legislation but there seems to be a complete gap up in northern and northwestern Ontario. I urge the minister to have this situation examined and perhaps have a request sent to the provincial authorities asking them why there have been so few requests from that part of the country.

Mr. Harkness: I think I would be going beyond what is generally regarded as acceptable conduct if I were to support putting pressure on the provincial government to do more extension work in a particular part of the province. I believe that would be looked upon as unwarranted interference on my part in a provincial responsibility. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the assurance for which he asks.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister if the reason for that would be because it is now apparent that Premier Frost is not satisfied with the fiscal policy of the government?

Mr. Fisher: That is a red herring.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, as usual the hon. member for Essex East is trying to introduce completely irrelevant red herrings.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not a red herring. It is a genuine question.

Mr. Fisher: I want to underline the point I have made, Mr. Chairman, because in situation after situation, we cannot take advantage of this and other legislation due to our isolation. I am sure there have been no funds spent in our region under the stabilization act. There is hardly anything I can think of in the spending of this department that goes to the aid of our farmers because of their isolation.

I can cite an example from the pulpwood industry relating it to a portion of the agricultural marketing act of Ontario which contains a provision for support of co-operatives by the province. I took it up with a provincial minister and he said that he was not going to get himself involved in anything like that if he could help it; let sleeping dogs lie. While the minister's department is waiting for the provincial department to take the initiative our little agricultural economy is collapsing. In so many aspects of the spending by the federal government the smaller places just have not a chance. It seems to me this requires a special effort, not only on the part of the smaller places themselves but on the part of people who have any ministerial responsibility. Even if the minister could do it unofficially will he just ask Mr. Goodfellow why it is that the provincial government is not taking any initiative in this particular item for our part of the country?

Dairy products division—

12. Operation and maintenance, $841,525.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, on this vote I wonder whether the minister would give the committee a short statement on the cheese producers in Canada. What I have in mind is the cost of production vis-à-vis the selling price, the premium on quality cheese, how it is divided as between the provinces?

While I know that the province of Ontario, and more particularly eastern Ontario, benefits in larger part from the premium on high quality cheese than any other province, none the less I think it would be helpful if the committee had a statement from the minister to that effect. I think the committee should also know what the position is of exports, what exports of cheese are being sent to the United Kingdom and the United States and what the position is in so far as that is concerned. I think it would also be of interest to the committee to know how the subsidies for the construction and reconstruction of cheese factories have been divided as between the provinces.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, so far as the subsidies to cheese factories, which I think is the next item, are concerned, I have not a breakdown as between the two provinces but I can read them off and the hon. member can make a breakdown later: Williamsburg, Ontario, $15,100; I will give the round figure: Hammond, Ontario, $10,500; St. Croix, Quebec, $41,400; Albanel, Quebec, $52,000; St. Felicien, Quebec, $60,000; Chambord, Quebec, $60,000; St. Coeur de Marie, Quebec, $60,000; Newburgh, Ontario, $44,100; St. Jules de Beauce, Quebec, $60,000.

The hon. member will see from that that the great bulk of the money put out in the form of those subsidies last year, as it happened, went to the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chevrier: Are these subsidies for the construction of factories?

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: How are subsidies divided as to quality premium?

Mr. Harkness: As far as quality premiums are concerned, I have not a breakdown again between provinces; for Canada 94 score cheese or higher, 22,668,000 pounds; 93 score cheese, 34,780,000 pounds; 92 score or less, 37,652,000 pounds. There is still some room for improvement in the quality of the cheese produced in some areas.

Mr. Chevrier: I take it that the subsidy on most of this high quality cheese is paid in the eastern part of Ontario?

Mr. Harkness: I think that is probably the situation. I am sorry we have not that breakdown.

As the hon. member knows it is a little difficult to have all of these statistics with you. The general situation is that the quality of cheese production in Quebec has been improving in recent years and, generally speaking, is now considerably higher than it was a few years ago. As a result of that the premium price which people are willing to pay —and they were willing to pay a very considerable difference at one time for some of the Ontario cheese—for Ontario cheese as compared with Quebec cheese has narrowed quite considerably and is down now on the average from one half cent to 1 cent a pound.

Mr. Chevrier: What is the position with reference to exports?

Mr. Harkness: Last year, which was a bigger year for exports than we have had for a long time, we exported something in the neighbourhood of 17 to 18 million pounds, as I remember. I am not guaranteeing that to be the exact figure but it is in that neighbourhood. The exports this year have not been running as heavily as last year. However, I think we have every prospect of being able to export a very considerable amount of cheese; I would hope it might be very close to what we exported last year but it will have to be at lower prices.

The hon. member probably knows that last year the cheese producers got more for their cheese than they had ever got at any time in Canadian history. It just so happened that the very high price was to a large extent due to the drought in Europe last year which created a relative shortage of dairy products.

Mr. Chevrier: What was the price of the cheese sold on the United Kingdom market?

Mr. Harkness: Some of the cheese sold on the United Kingdom market was sold at prices somewhere between 40 cents and 44 cents a pound. This was last year during, as I say, a period when the price of dairy products went up very rapidly and materially in Europe. At the present time cheese is being exported at about, I think, 32 cents a pound.

Mr. Chevrier: Is most of it going to the United Kingdom?

Mr. Harkness: Yes; we have no material exports anywhere else. The hon. member is probably aware that we have a quota of, I believe, 468,000 pounds of cheddar cheese in the United States, and that is all we are allowed to export to that country.

Mr. Chevrier: Was that quota filled in 1959?

Mr. Harkness: It was filled in 1959, yes.

Mr. Villeneuve: On the subject of cheese, I understand that the GATT trading arrangement is up for renewal with the United States this year. Is it possible to increase the amount of cheese that we are sending to the United States? After all, half a million pounds is the make in my constituency alone of 10 days in any of the summer months. It is an insignificant amount to go to a very good market when one considers the overall production of the country. The population of the United States is over 180 million and certainly 500,000 pounds do not appear to be an advantageous amount to our cheese producers.

With respect to the questions asked by the hon. member for Laurier, I may perhaps be a little closer to the situation than is the minister because the five eastern countries of Ontario produced roughly 30 per cent of the total production of cheddar cheese manufactured in Canada in 1959. I believe the quantity of cheese that scored 92, 93 or 94 and thus commanded top prices and the bonus was a little better than 97 per cent.

Mr. Harkness: I now have these figures. Exports of cheese last year were more than the figure I had in my mind. They were 20 million pounds rather than the figure of 17 to 18 million pounds that I gave. As to the scoring of cheese, cheese scoring 93 or more points in Quebec amounted to 59.34 per cent of their production and in Ontario cheese scoring 93 or more points amounted to 62.01 per cent in 1959.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott brought up a point which it seems to me is a very excellent one. If there is anyone in the house who knows the cheese situation I am sure it is he. He referred to increasing the export quota to the United States. We now have a number of committees on the ministerial level, the parliamentary level and also the business level in which United States representatives participate, the object of which is to iron out any problems or difficulties we have with the United States. It seems to me that this might be an excellent opportunity to bring up on the ministerial level at least the increasing of the quota. If the position is as the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott states, and I am sure it is, that there could easily be a great increase in the production of cheese, then here is an opportunity to sell more cheddar cheese to that country. Would the minister give some consideration to the suggestion which has been thrown out?

Mr. Harkness: Yes, this would be a very desirable thing if we could accomplish it. As I think the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott knows, I have made representations on several occasions particularly at ministerial meetings on economic affairs with ministers of the United States. Very strong representations have been made that the quota on cheddar cheese should be increased. We have not been given that but I hope that we may secure an improved quota over the one we have at the present time. Of course, I must say that whenever these matters are brought up the Americans point out that we have a complete ban on dairy products coming into this country and that we do not allow the entry of cheddar cheese or butter from any other country. Under these circumstances it is pretty difficult to say that they should increase their quota when we do not give them any quota at all.

Mr. Milligan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word or two about increasing the quota. I was in the United States some time ago and I noted that our Black Diamond cheese was selling for $1.59 a pound there. Some of that cheese came from my own area where it is purchased for 32 to 34 cents a pound. There is a market in the United States and I suppose our cheese commands a premium price because of the limited quota. I should like to ask the minister whether we have anybody in Great Britain who is attempting to promote the sale of our cheddar cheese there?

Mr. Harkness: The answer to the hon. member's question is yes. The president of the Ontario cheese producers association is either over there or on his way over right now. This is also one of the things to which our agricultural counsellor in London gives constant attention.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I want to bring a few matters to the minister's attention from the brief presented by the Thunder bay milk producers association to the agricultural marketing inquiry committee of Ontario. Premier Frost of Ontario has become quite a committee man in recent years and has been sending all kinds of committees foraging around the province to get ideas. Recently this committee visited the lakehead to find out just what the complaints of the farmers were and the milk producers submitted a brief which I can only say is an extremely pessimistic one, and with good reason because the farm decline in our part of the province has been astounding. I think it is proper to speak of it on this item because so much of the farming in our region is dairy farming.

It is apparent now that the quantity of improved land occupied and operated in the Thunder bay region has dropped phenomenally just as the population on the farms has dropped at a rate about ten times as great as in the other rural parts of the province. When the milk producers were through setting out their problems, competition from Manitoba, the very high costs of milk production in our area because of the long winter and short growing season, the scarcity of feed and other such factors, they wound up with a conclusion that I would hope will lead to a bit more initiative on the part of the provincial department of agriculture. They point out in their brief that they wish to emphasize that the farmers of the north require special help, assistance, understanding, leadership and support from the various departments of government, both provincial and federal, if they are to stay in the business of farming and to have the opportunity to provide a good standard of living for themselves and their families.

I know this is a platitudinous generality but it is a platitude with a tremendous amount of truth in it. If the provincial government does approach the federal government in connection with the problem of the dairy producers in our isolated region I would ask the minister to give the matter every attention. I know that he is not going to take any initiative on his part to enter into what he thinks is primarily a provincial matter, but if something should come from the provincial government in response to this complaint of the Thunder bay milk producers, I should like to have the assurance from him that he will seize that invitation much more boldly than is perhaps normal in his department.

Mr. Milligan: I should like to ask another question. Would it be possible to have a salesman from the marketing branch sell cheese in Great Britain?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the primary job of our agricultural counsellor, who is quite a high ranking officer in the high commissioner's office, is to promote the use and sale of our agricultural products in Great Britain. I do not know that the stationing there permanently of somebody from the marketing branch would be anything more than a duplication of work that is already being carried on. At one time or another we have sent people over on special missions to iron out particular difficulties. In fact, I have done a little of that myself on each of the last two occasions when I have been in the United Kingdom, last fall and the fall before.

Mr. Milligan: I certainly appreciate what the minister has done when he has been over there. I know he has promoted the sale of cheese. But I was thinking of 1953 when we were not selling any cheese to Great Britain. I happened to be at a dairy congress over there and at that time I met the dairy commissioner of Ontario who was at the meeting and also on a mission to sell cheese. I had the privilege of staying with him for a couple of weeks. We made some contacts and through the contacts we made at that time we succeeded in selling $10,000 worth of cheese inside of a week. That was the first cheese Canada had sold for some time and we have been selling cheese ever since. It seemed to me that the contacts he made at that time and the sales talk he put forward were responsible for the opening up of this cheese market again at that time, and perhaps if we had something of that sort, a man to assist the cheese producers to sell their cheese, it might create a little larger market in Great Britain for some of our surplus cheese.

16. Health of animals division (including the former administration of Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Canned Foods Act, and the former animal pathology)—

Operation and maintenance including authority, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year from packers requiring special services, $8,778,641.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): If I may, I should like to make a few brief comments on the health of animals division in the minister's department, and the work that they have been doing. I should like to commend them for the work they have been doing and are doing. I should like to say a few words, however, concerning one of the difficulties they have in connection with veterinarians. I refer to the difficulty in recruiting qualified personnel to look after the veterinary work right across Canada.

This brings me to the subject of a veterinary college in western Canada. As the committee may know, in 1958 there was a university committee set up to conduct an investigation of the feasibility of establishing such a college, and they came to the unanimous decision that we needed one in western Canada. Unfortunately a meeting of the three provincial ministers of agriculture vetoed the idea for the time being. We feel that this was a very retrograde step on their part, certainly when one considers that of the veterinarians in western Canada, 36 per cent are working for the federal government. This represents a large proportion of the veterinarians, and this branch of the department is having a great deal of trouble in recruiting qualified personnel. The opposition to the establishment of a western veterinary college rests on the fact that the maximum number of students are not now taking advantage of the courses offered at Guelph or St. Hyacinthe. This view, however, does not take into account the long distance from western Canada at which these colleges are situated, nor does it take into consideration the differences in the problems with which we are confronted in veterinary medicine in western Canada as compared with eastern Canada.

In order to give hon. members some idea of the number of veterinarians which we have in western Canada, I may say that we have one for every 13,000 head of livestock as compared with the United States which has one for 20,000 head of livestock. Certainly, with the very much improved program we have for tuberculosis, brucellosis and Johne's disease in cattle right across the country, we are going to need a large number of qualified veterinarians and technicians, as well as other people associated with veterinary medicine.

I should like to make a suggestion to the minister, that the heads of the four western colleges should get together again and perhaps if the minister can induce the Canada Council to make a substantial grant of several hundred thousand dollars toward the formation of a new veterinary college in western Canada, then the provincial ministers might give further consideration to this question. Certainly if we are going to maintain our livestock industry as it should be maintained in western Canada, we are going to need these veterinarians. Certainly if we are going to maintain the general health, not only of the animals but of people as well, then we have to have more qualified veterinarians, and we have to have the technical knowledge in this country. I hope the minister will try to give this a push, either officially or unofficially. I am sure it will do a great deal for the livestock industry in western Canada.

Mr. Harkness: The shortage of veterinarians is, as the hon. member for Jasper-Edson pointed out, a serious matter in Canada, particularly so far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned. Had it not been that we were able to recruit a considerable number of veterinarians from the United Kingdom and from some European countries we would not have had sufficient staff to carry on the activities which, under the various acts, we are required to carry on in the way of inspection facilities and so forth.

I was very disappointed when the four western universities, or perhaps their governments, decided not to go ahead with the construction of a western veterinary college. I certainly hope they will see fit to do that in the relatively near future. So far as a grant from the Canada Council is concerned, I would be a little doubtful whether the members of the Canada Council, except our representative from Alberta who is a rancher and represents the livestock and agriculture industry generally, would look upon a veterinary college as a cultural activity.

Mr. Herridge: I am not quite sure whether I am in order, but I think I am approximately in order. I want to say a word or two about a matter that does concern an increasing number of my constituents who are interested in the raising of beef cattle. I may say, for the information of the minister, that there has been a considerable increase in the population of beef cattle in the Kootenay West area, particularly in some of the isolated valleys. When I tell him that I know of one valley that has 16,000 acres of first class grazing land which are, as yet unused, he may understand the possibilities for development in the future.

However the West Kootenay and central farmers institute, and I think the deputy minister of agriculture in British Columbia, have had some correspondence with the health of animals branch with respect to getting Nelway designated as a port of import and export for Canada. I took this matter up with the minister in February, and he kindly informed me that Nelway is designated for the inspection of cattle, but that it is entirely up to the United States authorities whether or not they agree to have their port designated for the export of cattle. I fully appreciate that situation, but I would ask the minister and his officials to keep the matter in mind, knowing that there is still great interest in this question. It is a great inconvenience to those who ship cattle from West Kootenay or from the eastern portion of East Kootenay to ship through other ports. I trust the department will keep the matter in mind, and if there is an opportunity to persuade the United States authorities that they would be justified in taking this action it would be very much appreciated by those people who are raising beef cattle in my constituency and in the surrounding area.

Mr. Harkness: I recall this case. I remember the United States authorities took the position, which I could not say was not justified, that there was not sufficient traffic through this point to justify the maintenance of a regular inspection service. However, if there was need for inspection, say every two weeks or once a month, they would consider providing that inspection service. The amount of traffic is very small, and it does not justify them having a man there; there is no question about that.

Mr. Herridge: Would I be correct in suggesting to the beef producers that if they could make some arrangement to ship at a certain time, and notify the authorities, it might be possible to have an arrangement made with the United States authorities?

Mr. Harkness: Under these circumstances I think we could make arrangements with the United States veterinary service to have somebody there to make an inspection.

17. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $343,540.

Mr. Caron: I notice in the details there is an amount of $265,200 for the construction or acquisition of buildings, works and land. Could the minister give some details of this item?

Mr. Harkness: The buildings provided for are at Saint John, New Brunswick, construction of a cattle barn, and a railway siding, $79,000; at North Portal, Saskatchewan, construction of a corral, $4,000; a cattle barn and a railway siding, and an administration building at Lethbridge, Alberta, $100,000; fire protection system at Lethbridge, Alberta, $80,000; and access roads to the new laboratory site there, $2,200. Those are the buildings.

Mr. Caron: That comprises the $265,200?

Mr. Harkness: Yes, for building.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This vote is No. 17. I note that the request for the fiscal year 1960-61 is $343,540. That was also the amount asked for in the fiscal year 1959-60. In the matter of an estimate for the construction of buildings or for that matter in any estimate, it is rather unusual that the precise amount asked for in the previous year should be asked for in the current year. Does this represent careless estimating? Is this not an indication perhaps that the government is not taking the steps with regard to retrenchment which we were assured were taken? In any event, I think the committee is entitled to an explanation of why the precise amounts are covered for the two fiscal years.

Mr. Harkness: Again, most of the construction moneys provided for were revotes which were in last year. Apart from that fact, the reason for this is that treasury board reduced our requests by a considerable amount here and brought them down to the same amount that we had provided for last year. We were obliged to distribute the money on that basis. That is the explanation of their being brought down to this point. We had actually asked and put in an estimate for a larger amount than that which appears.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I can understand how you could have the same amount if you were giving a grant to some organization; but where it is a question involving the construction of buildings, unless you propose to leave out a door or not instal a bathroom, I cannot understand the situation.

Mr. Harkness: I think the hon. member does not realize that this vote takes in equipment as well as construction; and the equipment is the item particularly which has been cut down.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The explanation is not too satisfactory but I suppose we shall be obliged to accept it.

Mr. Caron: When a building is contemplated is any plan or estimate made by the department before they go to the treasury board to ask for the money?

Mr. Harkness: Yes, of course, we have a plan. We have a plan for, say, public buildings A, B, C, D and E. We put them in the estimates and the treasury board may insist that we take out one or two of them, thereby cutting down the amount.

Mr. Caron: Is there not any fixed estimate as to what such a building or such equipment would cost? How is it possible to cut it down without looking at the estimate? That is, how is it possible to cut it down to the very same amount it was the year previous without looking at the estimate?

Mr. Harkness: As to equipment, you can adjust it down almost in any way you wish. You just buy that much less equipment of various kinds. We put in a certain amount for equipment and treasury board says, "You will have to get by with less equipment and get this vote down to not more than it was last year". That is the position in which we found ourselves.

21. Supervision of race track betting, $589,374.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the minister explain why the vote this year is just about $2,000 less than that in 1959-60? Does this mean there is less gambling?

Mr. Harkness: The difference is chiefly owing to travelling expenses. Travelling expenses are responsible for most of the reduction. One thing I should like to make clear to the committee, if everyone does not understand it, is that this does not mean any money out of pocket as far as the dominion of Canada is concerned. We take in a part or percentage of the money wagered. One half of one per cent of the money wagered comes to us. In return for that money we provide race track supervision including eye in the sky, the testing of horses, saliva test and so on.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is eye in the sky?

Mr. Harkness: It is a camera device which follows the race right around. By looking at the film it can be determined whether the jockeys did anything which was illegal and so forth. It is a means of ensuring to the general public that the race has been run completely fairly. Also, of course, it determines at the finish line, by photographic means, exactly which horse won.

22. Grants to agricultural fairs, exhibitions and museums in accordance with regulations of the governor in council; payments pursuant to agreements in force on March 31, 1960, with exhibitions covering the construction of buildings and other major undertakings; and a grant of $50,000 to the royal agricultural winter fair, Toronto, and freight assistance on livestock shipments for exhibition thereat, $929,600.

Mr. McFarlane: I should like to bring one or two points to the attention of the minister. At the present time under the regulations governing the application of exhibitions under class B, section 5, the application is accompanied by a statement certified by a responsible officer of the fair showing the details of the prize money paid by the fair in respect of specified exhibits in each of the three years preceding the year in which the application is made and showing that in each year the prize money so paid amounted to not less than $5,000.

I feel that the intention of the act was to help the small exhibitions. Apparently by setting the help on a prize money basis of $5,000 we are not recognizing the smaller exhibitions until they get into the big time area. The present regulation eliminates all the local fairs which require assistance federally and more or less of a provincial nature.

In my area we annually hold a very excellent exhibition and fair in the lake Windermere valley sponsored by East Kootenay Industrial and Agricultural Exhibition. It is unfortunate if exhibitions of the smaller nature are going to be prohibited from making application for assistance at a time when they really need it in order to get started. I feel that if exhibitions of this kind could be assisted, it would not be long before they would be able to expand and include the facilities and also the buildings they have on the ground.

As I mentioned previously, this agricultural fair that is put on in the lake Windermere valley actually needs assistance in order to get started and get on their feet. I should like to suggest to the minister that these regulations be reviewed so that the smaller exhibitions will have a chance to expand.

Mr. Harkness: The $5,000 in prize money is for class A fairs. There are also class B fairs for which the requirement is $3,000 in prize money. That, of course, takes in a large number of the smaller fairs. Fairs which are smaller than that and have a prize list of less than $3,000 are by and large assisted by provincial grants and they are looked upon as being really a provincial responsibility. When you get down below $3,000 in prize money you get into the local fairs. These quite small local fairs with prize lists of less than that are looked upon as a provincial responsibility. They look after them and we look after the regional and provincial fairs, the large fairs.

Mr. Henderson: In my district we have two large fairs. I have spent the past winter in arguing with the Department of Agriculture about one fair which had made a mistake in their prize list. I was the manager of this fair for five years and it has been in existence for seven or eight years. I will give you an idea of how large it is. In one class alone there were 200 saddle horses. We also have cattle of all kinds. As I understand it, we must wait until next year to get into class B. What we are trying to do is to get into class B. The other fair is at Prince George. It is a large fair. I want it made easier for these fairs to get into the class B classification because then they get help, the minister says. We have these two fairs. I want those in authority to take a little easier view of this thing. With regard to the prize list, what happened was this.

Prior to this what happened was that the prizes, cups and all kinds of silverware worth hundreds of dollars did not count at all, and from being a B class fair last year we recovered an amount of $140 although I cannot be exact now. I phoned up, the department phoned up, the accountants took charge of the figures. I was at the meeting in the Peace river country where we have the Dawson Creek fair, and the accountant for the government said that everything was

O.K., yet when I got back here it was not. So I would like to see things a little easier for the fairs.

Mr. Harkness: I can assure the hon. member that I remember this case quite well; he brought it to my attention some time ago. At the Dawson Creek fair the difficulty apparently was that their auditors put in a sum which did not include all the prize money, and on the basis of their audited statement, under the act we were not allowed to pay. We have attempted to get things straightened out by a new audited statement which will I hope qualify this fair for the grant.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the views expressed by the previous member. I was manager of a fair for over ten years and in one class alone there were over 200 jars of pickles and jams. But as far as this vote is concerned I speak particularly of the west Kootenay agricultural exhibition which is held in Nelson. I was taken with the remarks of the hon. member for Cariboo when he mentioned that sufficient credit was not given for the valuable cups, prizes and other things. I think there should be a review of the basis on which these grants are made in order to assist what from our point of view in the little areas are quite substantial and developing fairs, and I wholeheartedly support the remarks of the previous member.

Item agreed to.

24. Grants to agricultural organizations as detailed in the estimates, $239,250.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, one comment here; I have been very restrained all day. First of all, I am very glad to see that in this vote provision is made for the continuation of the $10,000 for the women's institutes of Canada. They are doing excellent work, particularly in the rural areas. I cannot help but bring to the attention of the house the fact that the present president of this organization, the federated women's institutes of Canada, Mrs. Roylance, is a lady who comes from a very well known pioneer Kootenay family, a person we are all very proud of because of the work she is doing for this organization.

I have one question. I am rather intrigued by the fact that this $10,000 for the federated women's institutes of Canada is included in the vote under the livestock division. Could the minister explain that?

Mr. Harkness: I might explain that that is purely for administrative purposes. These grants have to be administered by one branch of the department, and this is included under the production and marketing branch, livestock division, because most of them deal with livestock grants.

Mr. Weichel: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word here about the 4-H movement, which comes under this item. I understand that the 4-H movement had its roots in the gardens of our rural schools more than 40 years ago. From that humble beginning the organization as we know it gradually evolved, and today numbers 75,854 boys and girls. Many thousands of people on farms or in jobs related to agriculture acknowledge their debt to their early association with 4-H. The governments, both federal and provincial, are solidly behind 4-H because the value of its educational, vocational and social activities has been amply proved. The care of livestock, knowledge of crop cultivation, particularly the value of good seed, and on the distaff side, homemaking with special reference to rural life, are among the subjects taught which are most closely related to the farm. Other less tangible assets derived from 4-H work, but of paramount importance, are leadership, ability to work alone and with a group, making decisions, public speaking and citizenship.

As we well know, the federal government last year broadened its own farm loan program and in setting up the Farm Credit Corporation made special provision for loans to capable farmers as young as 21 years of age. If such a farmer has sufficient equity and qualifications he can get a loan as high as $27,500 for the purchase of a farm. Such a loan would cost only 5 per cent in interest and the period of repayment could be stretched to 30 years if necessary. Of course the lending authority would have to be satisfied that the enterprise and the plan of operation bore reasonable promise of success, but this is to the advantage of the borrower as well as ensuring that the public money will be repaid. Loans are made up to 75 per cent of the assessed value of the farm and every assistance is given by the local district officer of the Farm Credit Corporation in preparing and presenting loan applications. I mention this to demonstrate that our government is confident that there is a great future on the land for those citizens who prepare themselves for such a career.

At the 4-H stage we are concerned that the young folk develop a love of farm life, or at least an appreciation of the part the farmer plays in the structure of the nation. There are more than 20 agricultural and home economics projects in which the children may engage. They learn good practices at an age when they have not had time to learn bad practices. Some of them have appeared at provincial forums and in recent years the representatives of each province have been our unofficial ambassadors in the United States, meeting their opposite numbers and seeing something of the great agricultural organization set up by our neighbour farmers across the line.

Graduates of 4-H find themselves at the threshold of a variety of careers. They may continue as junior farmers and carry into practice with their own stock and crops the knowledge they have gained from others. Many go into technical schools for training and some enter universities and eventually become professional men in one of the various fields open to young people today. It is very pleasing to record that some of the best leaders in 4-H work have been recruited from the ranks of junior farmers in Ontario and, in other provinces where there is no equivalent organization, from the graduates of 4-H clubs.

In Waterloo county I am told that there were 212 4-H projects completed in 1959. Of these, 132 were in calf clubs, 38 in swine clubs, 10 in a poultry club, 19 in a tractor club and 13 in a conservation club.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, in order to allow the house to proceed to the consideration of private and public bills pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise and report certain resolutions and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be.

Mr. Weichel: I have just a few remarks left, Mr. Chairman.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): It being five o'clock the house will proceed to the consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

PRIVATE BILLS

GLAFIRA MILCZYN SOHN

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-46, for the relief of Glafira Milczyn Sohn otherwise known as Vera Milczyn Sohn—Mr. McCleave—Mr. Rea in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we take these 49 divorce bills in one item?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, before a decision is made perhaps I might be permitted to speak briefly to this point. Looking ahead at the cases I find that there are several where the legitimacy of children is going to be affected by the decision we take here and I am wondering whether or not we could proceed with dispatch to a consideration of some of these bills. I therefore appeal to the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Timiskaming who is not now present in the committee that they select the bills which they would like to have debated in the committee and let the other ones go through. It would be a most humanitarian gesture if in those cases where there is apt to be a question of illegitimacy we could prevent it.

Mr. Howard: I desire to co-operate in every way possible.

Mr. Thrasher: What a laugh.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps the hon. gentleman who has raised a similar question on other occasions has had an opportunity of going through those bills and gleaning this information from them. He is doubtless in a better position to select the bills that might be considered in this light. Perhaps another day we could do this. It was my understanding that the hon. member would make the selection, since the question was raised before. I will therefore proceed with Bill No. SD-46.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, the petitioner who comes before us this afternoon asking for relief from parliament, like a goodly number of other applicants, is from the province of Quebec. She is a woman 49 years of age who is employed as a clerk. Her salary is approximately $70 a week. A few months after her marriage in 1958 her husband practically threw her out of the common home and took up residence with another woman.

As I have mentioned before, most of these cases from Quebec are applications by women who are in extremely humble circumstances and this petitioner is exactly in that category. If the House of Commons could see fit, in its humanitarian way, to grant this woman relief I am sure we would all leave this chamber at the end of the day feeling a great deal happier.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, like the hon. member for Halifax I want to speak to this bill.

Mr. Chambers: Will the hon. member speak for the same length of time?

Mr. Howard: I want to make the hon. gentleman as happy as possible and I trust his hopes in that regard will be met. The details mentioned by the hon. gentleman are correct. The petitioner is a person of humble means. It is unfortunate that she must pay the very high cost of this divorce and were she living in another province that had a divorce court—

Mr. McCleave: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I submit that this is entirely out of order. There is no indication anywhere in the evidence as to the amount this woman has paid for the divorce and, second, any reference to an action in another province is clearly irrelevant.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Halifax has a valid point and I am sure the hon. member for Skeena realizes that. We have had these cases before us on previous occasions and I am sure the committee now knows what can and cannot be discussed. I hope the hon. member for Skeena will conform to that.

Mr. Howard: Certainly, Mr. Chairman. The petition was signed March 24, 1959 in Montreal, Quebec. Reference is made in point No. 1 to the date of the marriage, September 27, 1958 in the city of Outremont, district of Montreal. In point No. 5 it is stated that there are no children of the marriage as the hon. member for Halifax said.

Mr. McCleave: I did not say that.

Mr. Howard: In point No. 6 is stated the allegation of adultery giving the name of the corespondent, the address at which the misconduct took place and the date, March 6, 1959. There are two investigators called as witnesses, Mr. Etheridge and Mr. Brault, both of Montreal. They have appeared as witnesses before in other cases and presumably will appear in future cases.

The petitioner was called as a witness and in reply to questions asked by the clerk as reported at page 9 of the evidence testified:

Q. When were you married?
A. In 1958, September 27.
Q. Where?
A. In Montreal.
Q. Montreal or Outremont?
A. Outremont, yes.

She then gives the name of her church and and identifies her marriage certificate and the fact that the names and dates on it are correct. A photograph is entered as exhibit No. 2 and is identified as a picture of her husband taken approximately two weeks after the marriage probably in October, 1958. There is evidence of marital difficulties preceding the alleged adultery. The petitioner is questioned by her counsel, Mr. Lieff, at page 10 as follows:

Q. Until when did you live with him?
A. Until December 24, the same year.

That is two or three months after marriage. I continue:

Q. What was the trouble?

A. After the marriage he went on a trip to Brazil and when he came back it was all changed. He made up his mind and it was all changed. He started to pick on me and he made me pay the bills.
Q. What bills?
A. I had to pay for the apartment and I had to pay all bills like insurance and everything.
Q. Out of your moneys?
A. From my own money, yes. I had to give him my pay. He told me I would always be working because I was settled down, and when he did not get any more money, all the money he wanted, because I stopped paying the bills, he told me, "You better get out from here." So, I spoke to my family. Then he said again, "If you don't move out, I will throw you out," and I went on Christmas eve in the evening; my family came and picked me up.

Then there are subsequent questions relative to the age of the husband and of the petitioner. Questions were also asked as to whether there was any collusion between the petitioner and the respondent. Questions were also asked by Mr. Lieff as follows:

Q. Is there any understanding between you and him to get a divorce?
A. No.
Q. Did you scheme about the adultery complained of or arrange that adultery should be committed?
A. No.
Q. Did you put any woman in his way, either directly or indirectly, to tempt him or to trap him?
A. No.
Q. Were you with him on the 6th of March, 1959, at——, apartment No. 308, in the town of Mount Royal?
A. No.
Q. Have you lived with your husband as man and wife and had marital relations with him since the separation?
A. No.

Then, there is a question relating to how long they had known each other and the answer to the question and then Mr. Lieff goes on:

Q. Do you think that if you had more time you could perhaps rebuild your marriage?
A. No.
Q. Would you take him back?
A. No.
Q. Under any circumstances?
A. No.
Q. Have you forgiven him for the adultery complained of?
A. No.
Q. Did you do what you could to make a success of your marriage?
A. Yes.
Q. You tried to make a success of it?
A. Yes.

So much for the questions in regard to making the marriage a success. Then questions followed by the chairman of the subcommittee, Senator Cameron, and also by Mr. Lieff, which deal with the problems that arose shortly after the marriage, about paying the bills, and income, and matters of that kind.

Then Mr. Etheridge appeared as a witness and was sworn and gave testimony with respect to what he had discovered. Mr. Lieff questioned him as follows:

Q. Will you please take communication of exhibit No. 2, a photograph. Can you identify the person of whom that is a likeness?

A. That is Mr.—. That is the picture given me by Mr. Usher of Montreal, attorney, during the month of February, 1959.

Q. Did you make inquiries about him?

A. We had certain information which we verified, that he was living at—,also that he was a bookkeeper working for—.

Q. Did you verify that?

A. Yes. We found out also that he had no driving accommodation and was using autobuses to go back and forth to work. We found that there was a woman living on the premises with him. On Friday, March 6, 1959, Mr. Brault and myself took up observation in the vicinity of—, and at 3.45 we went up and rang the doorbell. There was no answer. We made a phone call to that telephone number but there was no answer. At 6.15 Mr.—entered alone. At 8.45 he came out and walked to a drug store at—, and at 9.25,—the woman he was living with came into the drug store and the two were in the drug store for about 20 minutes and then both walked back and entered at—, and went up to apartment No. 308. At 11.15 p.m. we rang the doorbell at apartment 308. We had originally got information from a client of ours who has lived in that building. We obtained certain information and we were on the inside and could gain access without having to ring the bell from downstairs. After we rang the doorbell the door was opened. We presented ourselves and he was flabbergasted at seeing us at the door at the very moment he opened it. I asked him if he was—and I identified myself. At the same time Mr. Brault and myself entered with him to a small hallway.

Q. When you asked him if he was Mr.—what did he say?

A. He admitted that he was. We said we wanted to speak to him privately and we stepped in with him.

Q. Did you have the photograph with you?

A. Yes. When we were inside the apartment we identified ourselves once more and he admitted that he was—and also that the picture which was in our possession was a picture of himself.

Q. And that picture was exhibit No. 2?

A. That is right, the same picture we had that night. When you were in the apartment there was a little hallway and there was a large living room to the left completely bare except for a green carpet and a television set; there was no other furniture. The kitchen was off the living room and facing you as you entered there was another room, completely bare.

Q. Do you mean there was no furniture?

A. None whatsoever. The bedroom was to the right and we went to the bedroom and saw a woman lying on the right-hand side of the bed and we could also see where he had alighted from the left-hand side of the bed to come and answer the door.

Q. Someone had got up from that side?

A. Yes. The woman sat upon the far side of the bed. She was wearing the top of red pyjamas and she admitted that her name was—. There were women's underclothes on a chair on the far side and there was a man's long winter underwear on a chair to the left as you entered the room. The overshoes of both parties had been noted outside in the hallway.

Q. Noted by whom?

[Mr. Howard.]

A. By Mr. Brault and myself. We had seen them prior to entering. We informed them that we had seen everything that we needed and that he would be hearing from his wife's attorneys in the near future. He was wearing a blue flannel dressing gown and slippers when he came to the door.

Q. Was the woman whom you saw there the petitioner who is sitting here this morning?

A. I have never seen the petitioner until this morning.

That is the end of the questioning of Mr. Etheridge. Mr. Gerry Brault appeared as a witness. I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that in some cases they spell this fellow's Christian name with a "J" as they do in the minutes of the proceedings, but in the evidence it is spelled with a "G". Mr. Brault is asked to identify the photograph, exhibit 2, and he does so. Then he is asked these questions:

Q. Did you investigate his conduct?

A. Yes. On March 6 at about 11.30 I accompanied Mr. Etheridge to—and we went up to apartment —We rang the bell and Mr.—opened the door, wearing a blue dressing gown and slippers. We walked into the apartment and Mr. Etheridge identified himself to him and he admitted that he was—and he admitted that the picture in our possession was his picture.

Q. That is exhibit No. 2?

A. Yes. We walked into the bedroom and a woman was lying in the bed and she sat up in the bed, wearing the top of red pyjamas. When Mr. Etheridge asked her name she gave it as—So, Mr. Etheridge told both of them that they would be hearing from his real wife's attorney. They both admitted that they were living as man and wife. Mr. Etheridge said that they would be hearing from his real wife's attorney in the near future, and we left. The bed showed that it was occupied by two persons. On one chair there was a woman's underwear and on the front of a chair near the clothes closet we saw shoes and stockings.

Q. Did you go into any other rooms?

A. Yes. We went into the other room. Well, it was one set-up. There was nobody there, only one bedroom, only one bed and it showed that it was being slept in by two persons.

Q. Please look at the petitioner. Was she the woman whom you saw there and who gave her name as—?

A. This is not that woman.

We can see from this brief reference to the evidence that this case is unlike so many other cases. There is no great difficulty involved. There are no arguments and no one gets angry at the investigators. It appears to be quite a normal thing for the respondent to want to participate in such an event. Perhaps he too expected such action was forthcoming and that if, as is given in the evidence, he and the corespondent were living as man and wife he could expect almost daily that something of this nature would occur and that divorce proceedings would be be initiated. I would imagine that anyone in similar circumstances could reasonably be expected to think in somewhat the same terms

As I said before, the evidence given here shows that circumstances existed which could reasonably be interpreted as indicating either that adultery had taken place or might reasonably be expected to take place. That is also corroborated extensively by the reference to the respondent and corespondent living as man and wife in a common law arrangement when in fact they were not married. Probably this is sufficient in itself to be acceptable as proof of adultery. I understand that evidence of this nature would be completely acceptable in a court of law, that the evidence is quite acceptable where it appears that a situation exists where a couple are living together as man and wife and in fact this is considered to be grounds for a divorce even though some slight reference must be made to adultery by indicating that there is a bedroom, that the pillows have both been used and the bed is mussed up and that there is only one bed. It would seem, of course, that we should give different degrees of weight, as I am sure a court would do, to different types of evidence and different circumstances. If, for argument's sake, evidence had been adduced that this couple had visited a hotel or motel where they had registered for only one night, perhaps additional corroborative evidence would be needed by the courts and by the committee of the other place to establish the necessary proof.

I have no further comments to make, Mr. Chairman. I am quite sure that in this instance, as was indicated by the hon. member for Halifax, there is no conflict in the evidence of the investigators apart from a 10 or 15-minute time difference which actually means nothing. One investigator specified the time and the other gave an approximate time, but apart from that this is one of those cases where the evidence was submitted clearly. The investigators corroborate each other as to what they saw and there is no real conflict between them.

There appears to be no reference to invasion of the rights of individuals such as we find in other cases, that is, evidence of investigators forcing themselves into someone's premises. They walked in and we might assume that there was some form of invitation or acquiescence at least on the part of the respondent. In short, this is one of those cases where we probably cannot engage in too much discussion.

MILITZA ANICH RACETTE

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-47, for the relief of Militza Anich Racette—Mr. McCleave—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, only a few useful words can be said about this case. The petitioner comes before us as another woman from the city of Montreal. She is 37 years old and of somewhat better means than the average in these cases. Her income is $540 a month and she has a position as an advertising manager. The facts are that her husband is living with another woman, as frequently happens in these cases. The evidence is presented in a straightforward manner and I would commend this woman's future to the tender hands of the House of Commons.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, there is a great deal of similarity to the case we have just been debating although, as the hon. member for Halifax points out, the petitioner appears to be in better financial and economic circumstances than the young lady in the case with which we have just dealt. There is another point of difference. There was one child born of this marriage and there is some evidence of cruelty on the part of the husband. The petition shows that the marriage took place on April 15, 1954, in the city of New York, in the state of New York, U.S.A. There is one child of the marriage born on May 15, 1956. The allegation is that adultery took place on September 9, 1959, and the address given there for the corespondent is the same, the corespondent is indicated to be living at the same address. There are two investigators involved in this case, namely Gerard Daigneault and Clovis Paquette, both of Montreal. Mr. Lieff also appears as counsel for the petitioner in this case, and the petitioner appears as a witness and gives evidence.

Upon questioning by the clerk of the committee, she gives her age, occupation and so on. Then, he asks:

Q. Are you married and, if so, to whom?
A. Yes, I am—

She gives the name of her husband, the respondent in this particular action. Then there is another question to clarify the name because apparently the husband, on occasion, uses a name quite a bit different from his surname as given in the petition.

Q. When were you married?
A. I was married six years ago.
Q. The date, please?
A. April 15, 1954.
Q. Where?
A. In New York.

She says where she was married, her religion and that of her husband.

Q. I show you a document. Do you recognize this?
A. Yes.
Q. What is it?
A. This is my marriage certificate.

There is a question about the names and dates, and she indicates that those are correct. The certificate is filed as exhibit 1. She is also shown a photograph taken shortly before her marriage in 1954 and this is filed as exhibit 2 when she has identified it. There are some questions then by Mr. Lieff of the petitioner, and he asks:

Q. Did you have a family issue of this marriage?
A. Yes, one daughter.
Q. What is her name?
She gives the daughter's name.
Q. Was she born on the 15th of May, 1956?
A. Yes. she was.

Then there was some court action with respect to the child and questions are asked by Mr. Lieff with respect to the judgment:

Q. This action in court, was that finalized by a judgment? Was there a judgment?
A. There was a judgment.
Q. Did the judgment deal with the question of the custody of the child?
A. Yes.

The Deputy Chairman: I must remind the hon. member again that there is nothing in this bill concerning the child and, therefore, that subject is not relevant to the bill.

Mr. Howard: If I may deal with that question of order, sir, I know that you yourself have made rulings on this question of children. However, if I may I should like to draw to your attention the fact that I believe you were in the chair on May 6, 1960 when the hon. member for Timiskaming was discussing some of the questions in the evidence. According to page 3667 of Hansard for that date, the hon. member for Vancouver South rose to a point of order as follows:

Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I do not think that under our rules any hon. member is allowed to read with the extreme length and detail at which the hon. member is reading from the report to the committee. We are supposed to be debating this bill and not reading irrelevant portions of the record of the committee. I submit he should refer to the evidence and give his own views.

Then the deputy chairman said, and I believe this was you:

The evidence of the committee can certainly be used in the house in any way an hon. member wishes to do so. He may read it, discuss it or refer to it.

Mr. Broome: But, Mr. Chairman, would an hon. member be allowed to read at extreme length without any point to his reading?

The Deputy Chairman: I certainly would not want to rule under any condition that the evidence given in a committee of the other place could not be read or discussed here. I invite the hon. gentleman to remember that such a ruling would affect all private bills and not only divorce bills.

Then the hon. member for Halifax entered the discussion of the point of order. I will not go further into this. The whole case is before us. The hon. member for Halifax said:

On the point of order, should not the reading be relevant to the consideration of the committee which I think is the point that more concerns my hon. friend? We have had a discussion of the children, reconciliation procedures and other matters which do not seem very germane to an act for the relief of this particular woman. That is the point of order I raise.

My friend the hon. member for Timiskaming as a substitution for debate has read most of the evidence on pages 9, 10 and 11 of the report but this does not strictly concern itself with the substance of the bill that is before the committee this afternoon.

The Deputy Chairman: Anything in the evidence which refers to the bill may, of course, be referred to and read. The Chair has already ruled that the hon. member cannot discuss the children and he appears to understand that ruling. I hope that straightens away the matter.

The only point I am raising here, Mr. Chairman, with deference, is that there appears to be some conflict between the ruling that was made in one instance when the deputy chairman says:

The evidence of the committee can certainly be used in the house in any way an hon. member wishes to do so. He may read it, discuss it or refer to it.

If anything can be read or discussed in debating this particular bill, that refers to the children. I am attempting to have this particular point clear because I think there is some doubt in my mind as to whether or not it is permissible under the ruling to make reference to the evidence taken before the committee of the other place, even though the subject matter to which that evidence refers is beyond our jurisdiction here.

Mr. McCleave: May I speak briefly to the point of order? I thought the previous rulings were to the effect that we could read the evidence, even ad nauseam of the Senate divorce committee on a particular case, if the matters that were read or if the matters that were discussed there were relevant to the bill under consideration. I think that is the obvious point of distinction that should be drawn. I think it would be improper for us to deal with matters relating to the children which are matters of court procedure in the province of Quebec and, therefore, not really matters under the jurisdiction of the Canadian parliament in considering a divorce bill.

I think that point of order has been raised before and I think there is a clear answer to my hon. friend about reading from reports. Yes, it may be done if it is relevant to the issue before us.

Mr. Howard: Before you do rule, Mr. Chairman, may I make one more comment about this. It raises another matter and perhaps I can put this, not as a point of order but as a question with which you may deal. When the hon. member for Halifax opened the discussion on this bill he made a reference to the economic position of the petitioner and stated the income which she was receiving. I wonder whether Your Honour would rule, also, whether or not such a reference is germane to the bill before us.

The Deputy Chairman: Of course, in ruling on the question of children, I made it very plain before that the evidence given before the committee of the other place may be used here if it is relevant to the bill before us. I thought I had made that plain, and I believe that answers the other question as well.

Mr. Howard: I take it, Mr. Chairman, that hereinafter we cannot deal with the income of an individual or his economic or other circumstances. I had intended to follow along, because the hon. member for Halifax had done so, in making a slight reference to the income of this petitioner in this particular instance and the sufficiency of it for herself. As I agree with your ruling, Mr. Chairman, which is now clarified fairly well, we will dispense with that particular reference.

Some difficulties arose prior to this time. Perhaps I could make reference to them. This is with respect to their living together and cohabiting:

Q. Until when did you live with your husband?
A. Until January three years ago.
Q. Would that be January 1957?
A. Yes.
Q. What happened at that time?
A. He left our home towards the end of January.
Q. Had you taken any action in the courts?
A. Yes.
Q. Was it as a result of the action he left your home?
A. Yes.
Q. Prior to that what was the situation in your home?

This answer gets to the relevant part of it.

A. About a year and a half after our marriage he began to mistreat me very badly both mentally and physically.
Q. What do you mean mistreated you physically?
A. He beat me.
Q. How often did that happen?
A. Very often, at least two or three times a week.
Q. What finally happened?
A. Finally one evening he beat me so badly that he burst open my ear.
Q. Did you get assistance at that time?
A. No. I was too ashamed to mention it.
Q. Did you ever have to call anybody into the house in connection with these beatings?
A. I did not because I had a full-time housekeeper who heard this last beating.
Q. I was thinking of the police or something of that nature.
A. Oh yes, I did call the police on one occasion.

If this young lady, the petitioner here, and her husband had been living in the province of Nova Scotia, I am sure they would have had no difficulty in obtaining a divorce on the evidence given here. It seems odd that people in one province have different opportunities for divorce from those of people in another province.

Mr. Chambers: Order.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps our federal laws should be altered accordingly so that there is uniformity.

Mr. Chambers: Order.

Mr. Lambert: Continued attempts to disregard the Chair.

Mr. Howard: My friend says "continued attempts to disregard the Chair".

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Howard: May I say this? When the chairman calls to my attention the fact that perhaps I am not strictly following the rules, I invariably bow to his suggestions.

On page 10 there is some reference to whether there was any understanding or agreement. The following questions were asked by Mr. Lieff:

Q. Is there any agreement or understanding between you and your husband to get this divorce?
A. None whatsoever.
Q. Do you know what the word connive means?
A. Yes.
Q. Have you connived at the adultery or schemed about it or planned it in any way?
A. No.
Q. Is there any chance of a reconciliation between you and your husband?
A. None whatsoever.
Q. If you had more time do you think you could rebuild this marriage?
A. No, we had plenty of time and I feel that we are both too mature to change.

Then there is reference to the child which you, Mr. Chairman, say is not relevant. Then we find the following questions:

Q. Have you forgiven him for the adultery which you complain about in the petition?
A. I have not.
Q. Do you know a—

And here is given the name of the co-respondent.

A. No.
Q. Were you with your husband on September 9, 1959?
A. No.
Q. Have you had marital relations with him since the separation?
A. No.
Q. How long did you know him before you were married?
A. One year.
Q. Was there any indication during that period that perhaps this marriage might not succeed?
A. No.

Then follows a question about the respondent's use of another name and Mr. Lieff makes a motion, which is granted, that the petition be altered also to read accordingly. Then Mr. Daigneault is called as a witness. He is an investigator and Mr. Lieff poses questions to him. He identifies a photograph as being that of the respondent. Then the following questions are asked by Mr. Lieff:

Q. Did you investigate his behaviour?
A. I did, sir.
Q. Over what period of time?
A. Our services being retained by Mr. McKay of Montreal during the early part of August, 1959, at which time Mr. McKay furnished us with this photograph.

I assume that Mr. McKay is another barrister or solicitor in the city of Montreal and that Mr. Lieff is, in fact, what is known as an agent or working with Mr. McKay. Then we find the following:

Q. Exhibit 2?
A. That's right, sir, and also giving us certain instructions. I verified those particulars and found them to be true and as a result of the investigation, on September 9, 1959, accompanied by Mr. Paquette we proceeded to—

There is given here the address in Montreal and the apartment number. The answer continues as follows:

—where after ringing the bell a few times the door was answered by—

Here is given the name of the respondent.

—at which time he was wearing a maroon dressing gown, slippers, and bare legs.
I identified myself to him and we walked into the apartment and I told him why I was there,—

You will notice, Mr. Chairman, the ease with which this takes place. There is no question of asking whether they can go in. He says:

I identified myself and we walked into the apartment and I told him why I was there, and on the righthand side of the back of the apartment was a pulled-out studio couch in which the woman was lying on the far side near the wall. That woman answered to the name of Mrs.—

There is given here a surname which is the same as that of the respondent. The answer continues:

—when I went to the door previously. I went to the bed and asked her her name and she hesitated a few moments and then she answered—

Here is given the name of the corespondent. The answer continues:

I asked her her address and she said, "I am living here". We told both of them they would be hearing from his real wife's attorney in the near future, and we left afterwards.
Q. How was that woman clothed?
A. When I went to speak to her she was in a kind of sitting position and she was at least in the top part of pink pyjamas.
Q. How many beds in that room?
A. That was the only sleeping accommodation in the whole apartment.
Q. What was its condition?
A. The left-hand side seemed to have been previously occupied because there was an impression on the pillow.

[Mr. Howard.]

Q. Please look at the petitioner. Was she the woman you saw there on that occasion?
A. No sir, I never saw this woman there.
By Senator Bradley:
Q. This woman,—

Here is given the name of the corespondent.

—was in bed when you saw her?
A. Yes.
By Mr. Lieff:
Q. What hour was that?
A. Approximately midnight.

At this point I should like to mention one thing I noticed immediately which appeared to be at variance with the usual method of giving evidence in these cases. I refer to the fact that in the initial part of his evidence Mr. Daigneault makes no reference to the time at which they appeared at this particular apartment. It will be noticed that in other cases it is always 11.15 or 11.35 or 12.30 or whatever the actual time of the day it might be. In his initial evidence I think perhaps Mr. Daigneault, he being quite experienced in these matters, could have cleared that point up immediately unless, of course, he had lost his mimeographed slip from which these gentlemen give this stereotyped evidence. In any event, they finally got around to saying that this was the hour of approximately midnight.

Mr. McCleave: Would the hon. member permit a question on a point of information. Does he not realize that witnesses are not allowed to read from statements in the Senate? They can refer to notes.

Mr. Howard: Yes. Perhaps in this case they were mimeographed notes. All I say is, Mr. Daigneault is apparently quite a competent, able and thoroughly experienced investigator, and surely after this period of time has come to know his role full well and to give evidence in that fashion of times and everything else. It did seem a little odd why this was not done previously. Then the chairman, Senator Cameron, intervenes and asks:

Q. Did it seem like they had been living there?
A. I asked Mr.—"Are you living here with this woman?" And he said "Yes, I have been living here with this woman for the past month or so".
By Senator Bradley:
Q. She heard that?
A. Yes.
Q. And she made no objection to it?
A. No.

In this instance the circumstances are similar to those in the other case except that the common law arrangement here is tied down to a period, "for the past month or so".

Mr. Paquette then appeared as a witness. He was sworn and asked certain questions by Mr. Lieff about identification of the photograph.

Q. Did you make any inquiries about him at any time?

A. On September 9, 1959, I accompanied Mr. Daigneault to his apartment, apartment 4, at—Montreal.

Q. At what time of the day?

A. It was about five minutes before twelve when we arrived there. Mr. Daigneault rang the bell and Mr.—opened the door. We identified ourselves and we went into the apartment. Once we were in the apartment he showed him this picture.

Q. He showed whom?

A. Mr.—

Q. The picture, exhibit 2?

A. Yes, sir. He admitted it was his picture. So, due to the fact it was only a one and a half room apartment we noticed right away there was a woman in the studio couch.

By Senator Bradley:

Q. It was then a bed, was it? What you call a studio couch was then arranged as a bed?

A. A double bed, yes. So at that time Mr. Daigneault asked her who she was and she said her name was—

Giving the name of the corespondent.

By Mr. Lieff:

Q. How was she dressed?

A. She sat in the bed and she had on the top of, it could be, baby doll pyjamas.

Q. What was the condition of the bed?

A. The bed was disturbed. You could see it had been used by two persons.

Q. How was Mr.—dressed?

A. He had a dressing gown on and it was open and you could see his bare legs and a pair of slippers.

Q. How many beds in the room?

A. Just the one double bed.

Q. Please look at the petitioner. Was she the woman you saw there then?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any conversation other than what you have told us?

A. We told Mr.—the reason we were there and that Mrs.—was taking a divorce.

Q. Did you find out how long—had been living there?

A. No, I don't remember.

Here again, Mr. Chairman, we have an indication of a common law alliance, although just where you draw the line between a casual acquaintance and a situation which will result in them being able to say they are living together as man and wife, I do not know. In this instance Mr. Daigneault indicated that they had been living there together for the past month or so.

This may be an interesting point that the judiciary has ruled upon or developed some case law on, namely as to when a relationship between a man and a woman who are not married changes from that of being a casual one to one in which you can say a common law arrangement exists. I only raise this point because I think the courts and undoubtedly the committee of the other place as well as this committee here would give more weight to a petition for divorce where there was in fact a common law or man and wife living arrangement than they might to the question whether there was an actual opportunity for adultery to take place.

Perhaps I might refer briefly to other cases by way of comparison. There is the evidence given in other cases where hotels or motels are involved, where they go to some length to talk about the state of the clothing and the condition of the bed, and the time element—waiting till the lights go out and all that sort of thing—in order to show that reasonable opportunity existed for adultery to take place.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if the house leader would indicate the business for next week, to the extent he is able to do so?

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

ADMISSION OF REFUGEES—ONTARIO REPRESENTATIONS

Question No. 349—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the government of Ontario requested the federal government to admit more refugees to Canada by paying transportation costs for such immigrants?

2. Has the government of Ontario offered to provide special assistance to help refugees establish themselves in Canada, provided the federal government will bring them to Canada?

3. If the federal government has received such representations what was the nature of the reply?

Answer by: Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration):

1. A statement was made in the Ontario legislature on April 12, 1960 by Hon. Leslie M. Frost, indicating that Ontario would, under certain conditions, make its normal welfare services available to privately sponsored refugees after six months' residence in the province instead of 12 months. These conditions included arrangements whereby the federal government would assume responsibility for the transportation and admission of these people to Canada.

2. See (1) above.

3. Correspondence has been exchanged between the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and the minister of health for Ontario, and arrangements are being made for a meeting to discuss the details of the Ontario proposal later this month.

Question No. 365—Mr. Hardie:

1. What amount was spent by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources on all equipment, including nets, boats and freezing plant, for the co-operative fishing project at Port Burwell, N.W.T., and what is the estimated amount to be spent in 1960 on replacement and new equipment?

2. How many Eskimos took part in the co-operative fishery?

3. What was the total poundage of fish sold in 1959, to whom was it sold, and at what price per pound?

4. What price per pound was paid to Eskimo fishermen?

5. How were fish transported to market and what was cost per pound?

6. What amounts have been charged to this project to cover transportation of industrial and welfare division employees or representatives from Ottawa to Port Burwell, or to other points in Canada and the United States, to secure information on markets, handling of fish, etc.?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. $22,094.29. Nothing is to be spent in 1960 on replacement and new equipment.

2. The equipment was taken into Port Burwell in 1959 but the fishing operation will not commence until the summer of 1960.

3. See answer to 2.

4. See answer to 2.

5. See answer to 2.

6. $659.80.

HOSPITAL INSURANCE AND DIAGNOSTIC SERVICES ACT

Question No. 376—Mr. Martin (Timmins):

1. What is the total cost of the hospital and diagnostic services subject to federal-provincial sharing under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act for the calendar year 1959 for each province?

2. What is the amount of the federal share of these costs, for each province for the calendar year 1959?

3. What amount of the federal share for each province is based on the national per capita cost of these services, and what amount is based on the provincial per capita cost in the calendar year 1959?

4. What is the estimated amount payable to each province out of the appropriation of $167,000,000 in the 1960-61 estimates for federal contributions under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Final costs for 1959 will not be available until late in 1960 when final provincial returns based on the audited financial statements of hospitals for the year 1959 will be available. However, provincial payments to hospitals during 1959, upon which federal advance payments to the provinces were based, were as follows:—

Province	Provincial payments
Newfoundland	$ 7,282,411.52
*Prince Edward Island	306,319.16
Nova Scotia	14,117,345.83
New Brunswick	5,749,332.71
Ontario	144,201,824.25
Manitoba	24,605,861.57
Saskatchewan	31,594,532.32
Alberta	30,593,985.92
British Columbia	42,486,579.69
	$300,938,192.97

*Participated only for last three months

Participated only for last six months

In some instances these payments include items which are not shareable; in other instances there may be items which are shareable but which are not included in these figures. The total payment shown above for all participating provinces will probably be slightly below the final costs which are subject to federal-provincial sharing. Also in the case of individual provinces it can be expected that there will be some variation with respect to the final shareable costs compared to the payments shown.

2. For the reasons indicated in answer 1 the amount of the federal share of the 1959 costs cannot be determined until late in 1960.

3. For the reasons indicated in answer 1 the amount of federal contribution to each province based on the national and provincial per capita costs for the year 1959 cannot be determined until late in 1960.

4. The $167 million is an estimate of federal contributions under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and estimates for each province relating to this amount were not developed. In the fall of each year estimates of federal expenditures are made by the department for the ensuing fiscal year on the basis of general projections of expenditure trends. This has proven to be a more practical approach and to date it has resulted in reliable estimates of the overall costs. It might be helpful to point out that at the time this estimate is made the provincial authorities have not received individual budgets from hospitals indicating what their planned expenditures will be for the next calendar year. Also, the extent to which the scope of any of the provincial programs may be extended with respect to provisions such as chronic hospital care and out-patient services in the coming fiscal year is usually not known at that time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 23, 1960

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

DECLARATION OF LOYALTY ON CELEBRATION OF BIRTHDAY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is the day officially appointed for the celebration of the birthday of Her Gracious Majesty the Queen of Canada, Elizabeth II. During the commonwealth prime ministers' conference I had the honour and pleasure of an audience with Her Majesty, and at that time she again impressed me with the warmth of her interest in Canada and the Canadian people. It is, therefore, a special pleasure for me to suggest that the house do reaffirm its loyalty and affection to Her Majesty.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I propose that after the Leader of the Opposition and any other hon. members who desire to participate join me in this tribute, we should stand and sing "God Save the Queen" as an expression of the feelings of her members of the House of Commons.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to associate my party and myself with what the Prime Minister has just said. This is a day that gives us an opportunity to reaffirm our respect for the monarchy as an institution which has meant so much to our freedom and development, and our affection and admiration for the person of the monarch herself.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this group I join the Prime Minister and the leader of the official opposition in the remarks that have been made by both hon. members with respect to our loyalty to Her Majesty and the great part she plays as Head of the commonwealth.

However I wish to make one suggestion. We would like the Prime Minister to give consideration to the House of Commons showing its delight with this occasion and other national holidays by arranging holidays next year for the members of the House of Commons and the staff. I think that would be most appropriate. I am not in favour of the present habit into which we have fallen.

Whereupon the members of the house rose and sang

God Save the Queen

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORTED FINGERPRINTING OF CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Acting Secretary of State when he is going to make the statement on the alleged fingerprinting of civil servants which, according to the Minister of Public Works on Friday last, he was to have made today?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Acting Secretary of State): I regret to say that I will not be in a position to answer this question for a day or two, as I have not yet received all the information from the civil service commission.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN NAME OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance; but before so doing, if you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, as a freshman in the parliamentary class of 1945 along with the hon. gentleman, I want to extend to him this group's greetings and best wishes. I understand this is his 55th birthday. We wish him continued and abundant good health, but I want it distinctly understood that the wish does not apply to the body politic.

[Mr. Dumas.]

My question is this. In view of the fact that a Progressive Conservative candidate for the next federal election has stated that in Canada the dollar should be known as "the beaver" and that this change would benefit the tourist business, will the minister inform the house whether the government is giving consideration to such a change? If so, would this name be used as a symbol to represent the industry of the beaver or to represent a well-known historic face-saving device in the days of chivalry known as a beaver?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): First, Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for his kindly remembrance, which I greatly appreciate. As to the question, may I say that the suggestion which appears to be its foundation is by no means new. It has been made in this house, as a matter of fact, more than once in the period that has passed since 1945, the date to which the hon. member referred; in practically every case, I think, by way of drawing attention to the fact that while the currencies of this country and the United States happen to have the same name, they are different currencies. Consequently there is no particular reason why it should be expected that they would be always quoted in terms of equal value.

So far as the government's intention is concerned, may I say that the government is giving thought to no such change as is proposed here.

I fancy that the reference in the final part of the question may have been lost on the younger members of the house, but having regard to the historic lore displayed by the hon. member in asking this question I think I should assure him that perhaps he and I could both profit by resort to the beaver as a head-saving and not merely a face-saving device.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PROTECTIVE STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I understand that it would be improper for me to direct a question to the Speaker of the house, so I shall ask the Minister of Public Works to come to my aid.

Last May I drew attention to the number of week-end visitors to the House of Commons. Believing that the desire of the house was to encourage tourists, I asked whether consideration might be given to extending the hour of closing and increasing the number of the protective staff. Yesterday I understand there were 8,696 visitors to the house and that five members of the protective staff tried to take care of them. I should like to know whether the minister would give consideration to my request.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I want to thank the hon. member for Trinity-Conception for asking the question. As an old parliamentarian he knows very well—although I can understand his asking me the question—that this is a matter within the sole purview of the Speaker. I am sure he will give the matter the attention which it deserves.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ALGOMA—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON SALE OF STANROCK URANIUM CONTRACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he has yet received a report from the board of directors, of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited on the sale of the Stanrock uranium contract in Elliot Lake. If so, can he make any comment on that report?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker; I am awaiting a report.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

BOBCAT VEHICLE—STATEMENT ON STAGE OF DEVELOPMENT WORK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Port Arthur asked a question of the Minister of National Defence or myself as follows, as reported on page 4080 of Hansard:

> Has the development work on the Bobcat armoured vehicle reached the stage where serious consideration is being given to letting a contract for its production?

In reply to this question I wish to inform the hon. member that the Bobcat is at the last stage of development. We expect its development to be completed by early fall, and the government will then give serious consideration as to whether or not to go into production.

[Later:]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Defence Production. Can the minister say whether any of our NATO allies have agreed to purchase and use the Bobcat?

Mr. O'Hurley: Not as yet, Mr. Speaker.

FLOODS

FOLEYET, ONT.—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last and again on Wednesday the Leader of the Opposition asked me whether I had had any correspondence from the authorities at the village of Foleyet in connection with the flood disaster. Search made of my records up to Friday last indicates that no such message has been received.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ELLIOT LAKE—ALLEGED REFUSAL TO ACCEPT UNION PRESS INFORMATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Revenue in his role as liaison officer for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. My question is occasioned by charges of the united steel workers local 5662 of Elliot Lake that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has refused to accept press information from them critical of Rio Tinto and its move to a monopoly position on uranium contracts. Could the parliamentary secretary say whether this matter has been brought to the attention of the C.B.C. and what its reply may be?

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of the matters stated by the hon. member. I will make inquiries of the C.B.C. and report to the house in due course.

AIRPORTS

SAULT STE. MARIE, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF COMPLETION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. E. Nixon (Algoma West): Might I ask a question of the Minister of Transport. Could the minister say when it is expected that the Sault Ste. Marie airport will be completed and ready for use? If he is unable to answer today the minister might give an answer at a later date.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I will look into that question and let the hon. member know.

National Board on Economic Development

THE CENSUS

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION BEFORE NEXT ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In order to dispel persistent rumours which are circulating, can the Prime Minister give any assurance that the 1961 census will take place before the calling of the next federal election?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member might recall that the census is fixed by law, and that the other matter he raises is not the subject of questioning in parliament before the orders of the day.

SUPPLY

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

LACK OF GOVERNMENT LEADERSHIP—NATIONAL BOARD ON ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT AND AUTOMATION

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, last week the Prime Minister gave the house his interpretation of the critical events which were evolving at that time, more particularly out of the failure of the great powers to sit in at what is called a summit meeting in the hope, which was shared by all of us, that such a meeting might have brought about an easing in international tensions.

The statement made by the Prime Minister in which he gave his interpretation of these events was warmly supported by every member of this house. Indeed, on that occasion we witnessed a unanimity of opinion and support not witnessed in this house since the present government took over the reins of office.

One regrets that in respect of current matters of a domestic character it is not possible to find any manifestation of anything like that measure of support. Particularly in so far as our domestic problems affect the maintenance of a high and stable level of income, there is no solid agreement except among those who sit on the treasury benches, supported by those sitting behind the ministers of the crown.

It would seem that at this time of disquietude in our country it is becoming gradually and increasingly acknowledged in this house and in this country that through the present government there is a want of leadership which reflects itself in the character of our economic policies. I do not say there is no leadership, but the leadership does not come from the government of the day. The lack of leadership is demonstrated not only in the person of the right hon. gentleman who is the Queen's first minister, but it touches other departments of government. Certainly it touches the Department of Finance (Mr. Fleming) over which presides the present minister—an old friend, a classmate whom I am happy to congratulate today on his surprisingly young fifty fifth birthday.

It touches as well, of course, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) and his department; it is not unrelated to the administration of national defence as reflected in the uncertain policy on defence that we have in this country. I cannot say that the demonstrations or the manifestations of lack of affinity in the case of the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) are as apparent as they are in some other departments, but I will say to the Solicitor General that there are occasions—those few occasions when he speaks in this house—when one is not altogether confident about the kind of leadership he himself gives to the very weighty department of government for which he has the responsibility of administration.

As to the Department of Transport there are, of course, indications there too. In agriculture, having in mind the depressed state which prevails in this very important section of the Canadian economy, and having in mind the changes in policy that have been pursued by the minister in respect of his administration, I suppose we would not find it very difficult to suggest that the kind of leadership which the Canadian farmer expects has not been coming from him.

My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker), who is a new minister and also an old friend, will not mind my saying about him and his administration that the unsatisfactory state of the government's housing policy is not such as to warrant any real feeling of confidence on the part of the Canadian people. I have already indicated on other occasions to my hon. friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) that the growing problem of unemployment in Canada is not such as to warrant a comfortable feeling, in so far as his department is concerned, or that the situation has been handled in accordance with commitments made by the administration. In his case I recognize at once, however, that the responsibility is so great that in all fairness it should be shared by the government as a whole.

Nevertheless it cannot be questioned that in respect of economic matters in this country, matters affecting our trade with other countries, the increasing level of imports, the growing problem of unemployment or the high level of unemployment, and the present state of the national income, the one single voice giving leadership in this country at the present time is not that of the government of the day but that of the governor of the Bank of Canada. That, in a democracy such as our own, is a serious reflection on the efficiency of the government.

The governor of the Bank of Canada has not been afraid to assess economic realities, actual and potential, as he sees them. He has regarded this assessment as part of his function. But his assessment has been accompanied by a tempered optimism as to the capacity of our people to meet the problems which now exist and those which lie ahead. In a memorable speech on May 12, at Hamilton, the governor of the Bank of Canada said, in the opening part of his statement:

> I shall probably not make myself popular by remarking that all is not gold that glitters. It is not a pleasant task to talk about economic problems rather than successes, about difficulties and dangers rather than achievements and enjoyments, yet I suppose that at times this must be the function and the duty of a central banker. If we do not see the dangers and pay heed to them, we shall never reach the goal that shines so invitingly.

I am sure that no one knowing the responsibility of the Bank of Canada to parliament will fail to appreciate the honesty of this kind of approach to our problems. It will be charged, undoubtedly, that those in the opposition are guilty of preaching gloom throughout the country; that we are harbingers of doom and gloom—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hon. gentlemen say hear, hear. All I can say is that we are in good company; we are in the company of the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, you are not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If the government of the day feels that the governor of the Bank of Canada is not expressing its views, there are constitutional processes to which the government of the day can easily resort to remove any inconsistency in the administration of the Bank of Canada, or remove from any responsible office in that important institution, responsible to this parliament, those who express views on which the government of the day does not rely or in which it does not believe.

But the governor of the Bank of Canada is not alone in this position. He is supported by important public officials in the public service of Canada who serve this government and who serve the people; and I suggest that while the governor of the Bank of Canada was undertaking a series of important speeches in different parts of Canada, almost at the same time the Minister of Finance was making speeches in Vancouver and in Winnipeg. The difference in the tone and in the direction of those two speeches indicates that the Minister of Finance certainly does not fully share the point of view expressed by the governor of the Bank of Canada in the speech made on May 12 in Hamilton. If he does, he will have an opportunity to say so. Certainly the speeches made by him in this house in answer to that made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) during the budget debate, the speeches made by the Minister of Finance in the two cities to which I made reference a moment ago, do not support the view that he shares the concerns and the solutions of the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Therefore no one in the opposition can be said to have met his responsibility if in assessing our problems he does not make the same straightforward, courageous assessment, also providing at the same time his proposals as to what may be the remedies.

We will not correct the dangers which seem to be lurking ahead unless we know what those dangers are, and unless we are prepared to take courageous steps to meet them.

Our objective in this country must be to maintain a high and stable level of income, and to provide jobs for our people. No other objective will be worthy of our society. That is the objective as stated by the governor of the Bank of Canada. At pages 15 and 16 of the text of his speech, released by him, he said:

> We can have economic growth without inflation, full employment without inflation, a rising standard of living without inflation, increased social services in various forms of government services without inflation, and a balance in our international accounts without inflation—and without unemployment. All this is within our own power to achieve.

That ought to be, if it is not, the objective of the government of this country. The government will find that the difficult situation which confronts us is actually a situation which well-known, knowledgeable individuals, who by training are in a position to comment on these matters, have indicated may confront us. The precedent to which I direct the attention of the government will be found in the white paper issued by the government of Canada prior to the end of the second world war, when the great concern was what kind of transition would be made from war to peace. It was suggested, and by many members in the house at that time, that once the war was over there would be a drop in the national income and we would see a repetition of the unemployment of the dark 1930's.

We know that after the war Canada enjoyed the most prosperous period in her history, with more men in the working force, more employment, a higher national income both in terms of the nation and of the individual citizen, than ever before; all during the period when our growing prestige among the nations of the world was widely recognized.

How was that achieved? It was achieved because the government of the day recognized that there were dangers ahead; that with the cessation of war there would be problems that would touch every department of government, as well as the citizens of this country. I examined the situation in anticipation, and it stated its objectives in the white paper, a copy of which I now have in my hand. This white paper is something for the government to look at now, in the face of the economic problems that confront Canada. In the fourth paragraph of that statement the government said:

> The central task of reconstruction, in the interest of the armed services and civilians alike, must be to accomplish a smooth, orderly transition from the economic conditions of war to those of peace and to maintain a high and stable level of employment and income. The government adopts this as a primary object of policy.

Have we heard from this government since the last election any declaration of an objective in these bold terms? The government went on to point out in this white paper:

> This goal cannot be achieved by legislation alone, nor by a single device or plan. In this, it is like the wartime stabilization program. Its attainment will require the effective working of a number of compatible policies, all directed to the same end, and each contributing to the success of the others.

Then at page 3 of this white paper will be found the plans which the government was going to follow to channel manpower and resources after the war was over in directions that would contribute to the economic enhancement of this nation and its people. Those purposes were carefully followed and the consequence was that the government, in co-operation with the people of Canada, was able to build up a high standard of living at the end of the most cataclysmic experience in the history of mankind instead of allowing to happen what followed in this and other countries at the conclusion of the first world war. The government said in the summary of its conclusions:

> In this paper, the government has stated unequivocally its adoption of a high and stable level of employment and income, and thereby higher standards of living, as a major aim of government policy. It has been made clear that, if it is to be achieved, the endeavour to achieve it must pervade all government economic policy. It must be wholeheartedly accepted by all economic groups and organizations as a great national objective, transcending in importance all section and group interests.

That statement is not unlike the words of the governor of the Bank of Canada, who enlisted the direction of the senior government and the other levels of government in co-operation with all groups in the nation in trying to meet the current economic problem and to arrest or deal with other economic dangers which he said lie ahead in the next ensuing period for this country. Have we had from this administration that kind of approach? We have not had from the Minister of Finance, from the Prime Minister or from any of their colleagues any indication that they look upon the problem as requiring this bold approach.

It cannot be because the government has not been advised by its own servants, perhaps the foremost among whom, next to the governor of the Bank of Canada, is Dr. Firestone, who confronted the government last October with an important statement in which he said, looking ahead to the immediate future:

> —we can see a fair rate of increase in economic activity for 1960 and possibly 1961 . . . If anything, the problems that we may be encountering as we go into 1962 may be more difficult to deal with than those we encountered in the post-war period. What I am implying is that the recession we may be facing in 1962 could be more extensive than anything we have yet experienced since the end of world war II—

It is true that the prognostication of this distinguished public servant does not, in so far as timing is concerned, harmonize with the observations made by the governor of the Bank of Canada or by certain other economic authorities in the country. But that was last October. There has been an acceleration of events noted by economic specialists which undoubtedly would warrant Dr. Firestone in timing his prognosis in accordance with events as they now confront us, and as seemingly they begin now to indicate an earlier arrival than was formerly the case.

But we do not only have the observations of those to whom I have already made reference. We have the observations of General Research Associates, directed by a gentleman who was at one time in the government service occupying a very important assistant post in the prosecution of economic studies involving forecasts and suggested remedies. I refer to such statements made in January of 1960, March of 1960 and April, 1960 all in the same vein. I now have before me the latest monthly business forecast of General Research Associates, whose references in the months of January, March and April I have already alluded to. In the first paragraph on page 2 of this report there is this observation:

> The leading business indicators as a group continue to reveal recession tendencies. Industrial common stock prices have moved seasonally and irregularly for the past four months, an indication of continued uncertainty.

Then in the fifth paragraph this is noted:

> The pattern of the leaders as a group is one which precedes by no more than a few months significant declines in production, employment and other central measures of over-all Canadian business activity.

If this particular organization, General Research Associates, is to be given the respect and attention which it receives from most students of this situation, we have a right to ask the government whether it agrees with these danger signals it has pointed out, or whether the government has a different position. We have the right to ask, will the government tell us what its own private confidential reports indicate. Some of these reports the government has not hesitated to make public. One that was always regarded as confidential was trotted out on the floor of the house by the Prime Minister in 1958. It would be interesting to know from the Minister of Trade and Commerce what that so-called secret report indicates. What does the "Economic Outlook for 1960" indicate? Does it confirm the judgment of the governor of the Bank of Canada? Does it confirm the view of the gentlemen associated with General Research Associates?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order. This is a motion to resolve the house into committee of supply. On such a motion it is open to any hon. member, of course, to rise to air a grievance; and if he has, as the hon. member for Essex East has, the opportunity of leading the debate, to introduce an amendment to express his view with respect to the grievance. But there must be a grievance. Otherwise, in my submission the type of discussion that is evidently being embarked upon is, it seems to me, quite apart from the course that is required by the rules in such situations.

What we have had so far has just been a repetition of the kind of speeches that were made by the hon. member and the Leader of the Opposition in the budget debate. Apparently we are just having a repetition of such speeches on this occasion. With great respect, Mr. Speaker, that is quite out of order at this stage of the session. All these matters that have been mentioned so far were raised in speeches made in the budget debate. If the hon. member says this is just his introduction to his grievance, then with respect he has gone the long way around. Surely the proper course on an occasion such as this, particularly in the case of the first speaker, is to air his grievance and then, if he wishes, introduce his amendment; but he must air the grievance and not embark upon a general broadside touching everything in the whole realm of politics and economics on which he thinks he can lay his tongue when these matters have all been discussed in the budget debate. We had precisely this speech in the budget debate, and in my respectful submission it is quite out of order now to attempt a repetition of it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On the point of order, it is apparent how justified I have been in saying that the government did not fully appreciate the situation. This is clear from the remarks of the minister. The procedure that is open to the house now is one to which I will address myself, with the permission of the Minister of Finance, in my own time and in a form and manner that will meet the procedural requirements open to hon. members in this particular kind of debate. If my hon. friend is not now beginning to detect the grievance I have in my mind, as have so many other people in this country, the fault does not rest with me. I shall be moving a motion at the appropriate time, Mr. Speaker, and I would suggest to you it is apparent that the point of order raised by the minister is without validity.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think I can intervene at this stage. The hon. member who has the floor is speaking in general terms and fairly broadly, but I assume he is coming to a conclusion. I think, until it has been disclosed, it is rather difficult to indicate that he is not relevant. As the Minister of Finance has said, there has been a good deal of repetition.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is nothing in our rules that would suggest that some repetition, in a debate of this kind, is not in order. I have already indicated where the points previously made have been stated. I have indicated the new material, including a speech by the governor of the Bank of Canada, in the monthly business forecast, and other statements to which I am going to refer. I would suggest to you, with confidence and with respect, that in this particular kind of debate one is not precluded—

Mr. Speaker: I have not accepted the point of order, so the hon. member need not continue.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is important is whether or not one is traversing a decision which has already been taken by the house.

National Board on Economic Development

I was referring to the conclusion of the General Research Associates, and there is to be found in the June 4 issue of Maclean's magazine a further elaboration of this position by Mr. Beckett, the director of the monthly business forecast. He was asked certain questions in that issue of Maclean's magazine. I will not deal with all the questions, but I will deal with those that have relevancy to the point I have been making. Mr. Beckett was asked:

> Will the next recession be the worst since the thirties?

His answer was:

> I would say yes. Definitely.

Then he went on to point out that this is the result of having too rapid an expansion of capital goods for too long, over a period of 10 years. Then when he was asked about unemployment in terms of this particular situation he said:

> I foresee it reaching 1.5 million.

This statement was not made during the budget debate but appeared in written form in Maclean's magazine, the issue of June 4. Further questions were proposed, and he said this about the situation:

> It could be softened by a vast increase in government spending at all levels—including city redevelopment, new schools, highways, hospitals and houses.

The minister, or whoever replies for the government, will, I trust, address himself to this particular question and answer this distinguished economist. Are these facts correct? Does the government support the positions taken by these gentlemen? Does the government agree with the conclusion reached in the last issue of the bulletin put out by the congress of labour which says, on page 7:

> Unless we run into some quite extraordinary good fortune or unless the government adopts some drastically new policies, we shall still this summer and fall have unemployment much heavier than in most post-war years, very much heavier than in the best post-war years.

Are these indications from these various sources true? What does the confidential document, which when I was in the Department of Labour was presented to the minister twice a year, indicate as to the possibility of improving the present unemployment picture this summer? What are the prognostications for next fall and next winter? Are these not matters to which this house should be prepared to give its full attention? Are these matters not questions to which we have a right to ask the government to give us clear answers? Can there be any doubt as to the situation that confronts us in terms of the maintenance of a high and stable level of income? Is the situation not reflected in the general economic conditions that prevail in the country, in the very high level of unemployment that continues to persist?

When we look at the current economic conditions, is it possible for anyone not to be concerned? There are still, of course, elements of strength. Our exports reveal that to be the case. These have been maintained at a high level during the first quarter of 1960, and we hope this trend will be maintained. But will they be maintained in the face of the new trading relations in Europe and the lack of a dynamic trade policy in Canada?

What about the agricultural sector of our economy? It is going through, admittedly, a new and difficult period. We note that in 1959 farm net income declined by more than 7 per cent, according to the Department of Agriculture. It will show a further reduction in 1960. Retail sales, which are considered to be a very good indicator of the rate of economic activity, have not shown any material increase in the first quarter of 1960 as compared with the first quarter of 1959. The dominion bureau of statistics daily bulletin, issue of May 20, indicates that these sales have increased by about $8 million in the first quarter of this year as compared with last year, which in percentage terms is less than three tenths of one per cent.

Another sign of economic inactivity or of serious weakness in the economy is to be found in the field of housing. According to the dominion bureau of statistics, starts in construction of new residential units in the first quarter fell to 11,118 from 16,365 a year earlier. This represents a decline of 35 per cent. The impact of this decline is not limited to the construction industry. It is felt in industries supplying construction materials, and in numerous other industries producing durable consumer goods like furniture and electronic appliances. Moreover, the bureau of statistics, in its weekly bulletin of Friday, May 13, 1960 points out that the output of motor vehicles declined to 42,000 from 44,659 in the same month last year.

Another significant indicator of activity is Canada's railway systems. Here again there are elements of weakness portrayed. According to this bulletin, cars of railway revenue freight loaded on lines in Canada in the last days of April numbered 90,056 compared to 99,598 for a like period last year, bringing the month's total to 281,378 cars as compared with 307,745.

Then, of course, the serious weakness in our economy is reflected in the statistics on unemployment in this country. Normally we would have had, last Wednesday or Thursday, a further statistical report on the number of applicants for jobs, on the number of persons without jobs and seeking work, and that would have been supplemented by the figure given the other day to the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) as to the number of persons actually in receipt of unemployment insurance as of the last available date.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I rise again on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is, in essence, the same point of order I raised a moment ago. I think it must be clear now, Mr. Speaker, what is the purpose the hon. gentleman is seeking to serve by his speech. First, may I recall the true rule with respect to the raising of grievances on a motion to resolve the house into committee of supply. I refer to citation 234 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, at the bottom of page 198 and running over to the top of page 199:

> When such motion is proposed, it shall be permissible to discuss any public matter within the powers of the federal parliament or to ask for the redress of any grievance;

May I draw to your attention the fact that the expression used is "public matter", not "matters" in the plural; it is the redress of "any grievance" not "grievances", in the one motion. We have a strict rule of debate, namely that when the debate has been launched on a particular grievance the course of debate cannot be diverted to another grievance, thus emphasizing the strict necessity of confining speeches on such matters to a particular grievance or a particular public matter.

But that is not at all the line which the hon. gentleman has been following. At point after point in his remarks this afternoon he has been touching upon matters which have already been debated in this house at the present session and on which debate has been concluded by a resolution of the house. He has mentioned housing. We have had a housing debate on a resolution, where this matter has been concluded. We have had discussions on unemployment and we have had motions on unemployment. The hon. gentleman is talking about unemployment. Let me go back to the debate on the speech from the throne and show what ground the hon. gentleman is now recovering in this shotgun approach of his today. On January 18, as reported at page 64 of Hansard, we find an amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition as follows:

> This house is of the opinion that the failure of the government to develop and enunciate clear and consistent policies or to provide full and accurate information, is a major cause of the confusion and uncertainty that prevails about national defence, public finance, agriculture, markets, employment and in other important areas of governmental responsibility.

National Board on Economic Development

Again in the budget debate, as reported at page 2873 of Hansard, the first amendment introduced on April 4 was as follows:

> This house regrets that the financial policies of the government will produce a fourth consecutive over-all deficit in a year of "so-called prosperity", while at the same time offering no solution to the problem of rising prices, rising trade deficits, a continued high premium on the Canadian dollar, increased pressure on provinces and municipalities to borrow outside Canada, declining farm income, and high and rising unemployment.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that objection was taken to the breadth of that amendment, in view of the broad and inclusive terms of the amendment to the motion for the address in reply to the speech from the throne on January 18. You permitted an amendment which reduced the number of references but left in those pertaining to high and rising unemployment. We had a similar subamendment on April 4, as found at page 2878 of Hansard.

It is quite obvious that the hon. member is conducting an abuse of the rules of the house by just making a shotgun speech in which he is touching on matter after matter which has already been concluded by a decision of the house at the present session, and is evading the point that has been raised head-on by refusing to state his particular grievance.

With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I say this is a highly irregular procedure. In introducing an amendment or speaking to a grievance on a motion to resolve the house into committee of supply it is not open to an hon. member to scatter his shots over a great many subjects. Under the rules he is required to confine himself to a subject or a grievance. He is up against two rules. I say with respect, Mr. Speaker, that he has broken both of them. First of all, he has been trespassing very much on matters that have already been decided by the house at the present session, and in the second place he has not been discussing a matter or a grievance as required by the rules.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I say a word on the point of order, Mr. Speaker? It seems to me that the hon. gentleman's position has no foundation or validity. In effect it would mean this. If we on this side wished to move a motion which would, for instance, recommend that some governmental machinery should be set up to deal with economic problems and condemn the government for not having taken this action previously, according to my hon. friend's contention we would not be able to discuss the necessity for that machinery in terms of the general economic situation in the country.

National Board on Economic Development

My hon. friend suggested that because we mentioned employment and unemployment in the debate on the speech from the throne, we are prevented from using unemployment or employment as an argument for advising the government to take a particular course of action which deals with this problem; and that is what the hon. member for Essex East is trying to do at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: I am considering how far the grievance procedure proper is applicable to the amendment which is customary on a motion for supply, that is to say whether the amendment must relate specifically to one grievance and be limited in its scope in that way. It certainly has not been the practice of the house, in dealing with amendments on motions for supply, to limit them as strictly as is done when grievances are discussed with no amendment before the house. Then one grievance at a time is aired and spoken to before another one is brought forward. But that does not preclude a particular grievance from being discussed on a motion to go into supply.

Whether what the Minister of Finance says about the application of that principle to the amendment itself and the discretion which precedes the amendment is correct is something about which I am not clear. I can contemplate an amendment that might be moved by the hon. member who has the floor which would require as a background something of the kind he has been laying. I am not sure that the subject should be approached differently. It is quite true—and this was my feeling before the Minister of Finance raised the point—that it seemed that we were hearing a debate which would have been entirely relevant and proper on the first amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition this year, namely the amendment on the throne speech, because the hon. member's remarks were along the line of that fairly wide amendment and were directly relevant to it.

However, I do not feel that I could tell the hon. member how to make his speech at this stage. He knows that it is not in order to redebate matters which have been closed. With that admonition I think I can just allow the matter to proceed and leave it to hon. members to rise on any specific item which they feel is improperly introduced into the discussion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we come to deal with my proposed amendment my hon. friend may address himself to the citation, which I will be prepared to meet. However, it is quite obvious that he is not so much concerned about my shotput approach as he is about the shot that will come forward in the form of the amendment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Why not use a rifle instead of a shotgun?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend is known to have the capacity of raising all kinds of procedural questions in every matter which seemingly has to do with—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. member again that I have disposed of the question of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I also thought we had done so, Mr. Speaker, but I was just commenting that the Minister of Finance, on his birthday at least, ought to learn from time-honoured practice that the way to facilitate matters is not continually to obstruct. In any event, the Minister of Finance may find by the time he is confronted with the amendment that it is one that does not necessarily concern him. I am not suggesting that is the case, but I am anxious to have the hon. member in the house while I speak, even though the matter may perhaps be of concern to some of his colleagues as well or possibly to them exclusively. This mystery which I seek to create is designed only to have the Minister of Finance in the same room with me for as long as possible on the occasion of his birthday anniversary.

I was saying that normally we would have had the unemployment statistics for the last available month given to us last Wednesday or Thursday. I asked the Minister of Labour why they were not available and he said there were occasions—and this is a fact—when the statistics were not produced with the regularity which generally attends their release. In any event, whatever those figures are shown to be, we do know on the basis of the last figures that unemployment in Canada continues at a very high level. We also know that if regional indications are any barometer, if there is any improvement that improvement is not to be found generally throughout the country.

In the Moncton Times of May 17, 1960 at page 14 I find these figures. I presume the editor got his information by calling the local regional office. The number of live claims reported in that area for April 30, 1960 was 714,000, as compared with 610,000 on April 30, 1959. That represents an increase of 104,000 or 17 per cent. The number of unplaced applicants as of April 30 was given as 756,432 as compared with 661,000 as of April 30, 1959. That represents an increase of 95,000 or 15 per cent. If that is any indication, then whatever figures may be released later this week, or later still, will be an indication that the situation continues to be serious. The fact is that the number of unplaced applicants in April, 1960 was higher than the number in April, 1958, which was considered to be the peak of the recession.

In the face of what the governor of the Bank of Canada has said about unemployment, I will show that the government is derelict in its duty in not coming forward, without invitation and without prodding, to give us a clear statement of the facts and of the policies which it proposes vigorously to pursue in order to meet this situation. The Leader of the Opposition stated some time ago that the causes of unemployment were not by any means one in number, that there were many causes of unemployment. Likewise I might say that there are many kinds of solutions which are available, some of them pointed out by the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is now coming within the purview of what has been objected to. He is dealing with solutions to the problem of unemployment. I understood from him originally that he intended to direct himself to some criticism of the government for not dealing with the economic situation generally, which criticism he proposed to demonstrate by reference to various factors in the economy. However, it is not in order for him to go into detail on these various matters. If he is laying a background for a specific amendment—and perhaps he will indicate whether that is his intention—then any reference to matters already dealt with by the house should be only in the remotest way and not be a redebate of a resolution which has been before the house.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, with great respect to the points you have raised, if my hon. friend were prevented from dealing with the question of unemployment at this stage in order to found an argument as to why something should be done by the government with respect to the economic problems of this country, including unemployment, might I point out that in the session of 1955 this particular matter of unemployment was incorporated as a subject—not as part of a general debate but as a special subject—into three separate opposition amendments. One amendment was on the address, moved by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe), calling specific attention to the government's failure to recommend necessary measures to solve the urgent problem of unemployment. Then there was a later amendment on a supply motion moved by the present Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) which dealt specifically with the question of unemployment and condemned the government for not taking the necessary action. That amendment is recorded on page 358 of the House of Commons Journals for 1955.

Subsequent to that, Mr. Speaker, an amendment to the budget was moved by the present hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) and seconded by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), also condemning the government because in its budget proposals it had failed to meet various problems, the first failure which was itemized was a failure to give effective stimulus to Canadian enterprise in order to create employment.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that with that precedent the fact that we have discussed unemployment once, twice or three times in a general way should not preclude the hon. member from mentioning unemployment on this occasion as a prelude to a motion to condemn the government for not taking certain action.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether the hon. member who has the floor is prepared to indicate what will be the subject of his amendment. It might facilitate settlement of this matter if he were able to do so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to comply with your request but I feel that before indicating the character of my amendment I should be allowed the widest latitude within the rules to lay the foundations for the proposal I have to make. The proposal which I have to offer does not in itself provide for a solution to the problem of unemployment; but under the rules of this house I am not precluded from mentioning, as a basis for what I have in mind, what I regard to be the kind of measures to which in this matter, and in other matters which I have in mind, the government might give consideration.

It is clear that the only precluding factor under our rules in a debate of this kind where members are privileged to raise, not only grievances but under citation 234 to discuss any public matter, is only if that matter has already been the subject of decision in this house during the present session of parliament. The amendment which I will propose does not touch on any matter which has been decided in this house. Only to that extent would I under our rules be precluded from carrying on the argument which I believe, in the national interest, I am entitled to carry on at this time.

National Board on Economic Development

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I say a word on the point of order. Page 198 of Beauchesne's fourth edition makes this point very clear. Let me go back and read the sentence I read earlier:

> When such motion is proposed, it shall be permissible to discuss any public matter within the powers of the federal parliament or to ask for the redress of any grievance; provided that the discussion—

Note, the "discussion", not just the amendment.

> —shall not relate to any decision of the house during the current session, nor to any item of the estimates, nor to any resolution to be proposed to the committee of ways and means, nor to any matter placed on or whereof notice has been given in the order paper.
> The debate in such a case is limited by the rules respecting past decisions—

And so on. Now, Mr. Speaker, if due weight is given to that sound and recognized rule, it surely is clear that the discussion on this motion must not relate to any decision of the house made during the current session.

What does the Leader of the Opposition argue here? He says that in 1955 the word "unemployment" was mentioned in the amendment to the address in reply to the speech from the throne; that it was mentioned later on a supply motion, and that the word "employment" was mentioned in the amendment to the motion to resolve the house into committee of ways and means.

Mr. Speaker, if I remember correctly—and of course I have not the books here before me—it was when that second motion was introduced, the amendment to the supply motion, that Mr. Speaker Beaudoin raised the point as to whether the amendment was not so broad as to trespass upon a decision taken by the house on the original amendment to the motion for the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I think that was the year and the occasion. As I say, I have not the books in front of me, but I well remember the Speaker of that day raising that point and expressing some doubt, and saying that thereafter he intended to be more strict with regard to amendments involving the use of words which might have been included in other amendments during the same session.

As far as previous cases of amendments being introduced in the same session are concerned, without having before me the full text of the amendments to which the Leader of the Opposition has referred may I say that what was justified there was on the basis that the amendment to the budget asked the house to pass censure on the government for failing to take certain specific measures in the budget to create employment. Obviously it was thought at that time that there was a difference there.

However, Mr. Speaker, the rule is here. It is stated in the plainest terms in Beauchesne and it has the whole sanction of history behind it.

I would just remind you, Mr. Speaker, of the language of the amendment introduced by hon. members opposite on April 4 in the budget debate, when they asked the house to express regret that the policies of the government had produced a number of results among which they included high and rising unemployment. The house declared itself on that amendment and disposed of it in due course.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. gentleman is a year older today, and that perhaps explains the fact that his memory has played him false. The occasion when the Speaker himself raised the question of the propriety of a resolution on unemployment was the third time, not the second time, this matter was raised in the house. On the second occasion it was on a supply motion. There was no question raised on the government side or by the Speaker as to the propriety of that motion, or as to whether it was in order. It was accepted, I understand, without any question being raised as to its propriety even though the subject of unemployment had been mentioned in the amendment to the address. It was on the third occasion that the Speaker himself raised the question of whether a third motion on unemployment—after two specific questions of this kind had been discussed and decided—was in order. He said that he had some doubts on the matter, but nevertheless he would let the motion stand.

Mr. Speaker: I have regarded the speech which the hon. member for Essex East has been making as one which intended to raise a question relating to the general state of the economy. On that ground he was advancing the various indices and indicators which would support his view as to the state of the economy. In these circumstances I do not think I could limit the hon. member, on the basis that he is coming to an amendment which deals with that subject and which he presumably considers he can make having regard to previous amendments which have been introduced.

However, when I intervened a minute ago it seemed to me he was then endeavouring to debate unemployment as a question in itself rather than referring to it as an indicator of the state of the economy—suggesting solutions, and so forth—which to my mind would be wrong because of the decision of the house on the budget amendment. The hon. member's use of these indicators of the economy should be by way of illustration and not as debates within a debate, and I do find some authority to support the view which the Minister of Finance has taken.

In the same year that has been mentioned, 1955, at page 3790 of Hansard, when the motion to go into committee of supply was moved, the Speaker expressed concern in these terms:

> What I am concerned about is that we should not deviate from what has been the practice with respect to the raising of grievances. It must be a specific grievance. According to the remarks the hon. member for Prince Albert has just made in explanation of what he intends to bring forward, he wants to deal with markets generally and the loss of markets for farm products and then, although he has already dealt with wheat, he wants to deal with the south Saskatchewan dam. He has just indicated he wants to deal with that point because that is the point to which the editorial in the Regina Leader-Post has reference. Furthermore, he wants to deal with the low incomes with which the farmers are now being faced. Maybe the hon. member is going to conclude his remarks with an amendment to the motion to go into supply. That would certainly specify the grievance he has in mind.
> If he is not going to terminate his remarks with such an amendment, then I am afraid I must say he can always deal with these various other subjects when other motions to go into supply are presented. At this moment, however, it would not be proper to initiate another budget debate, and it is certainly contrary to our practice not to have a specific grievance raised at this point.

That was the decision in a similar situation. I have not complained about the hon. member developing an argument about the state of the economy, but I think he should have regard to the fact that it should lead to and relate to a specific matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank Your Honour for the care you have given to the consideration of this matter, and I am sure you appreciate the position which I take, the position which has been so well stated by my leader. This is one of the time-honoured traditions of parliament; an occasion on which, under our practice and according to our traditions, a motion of this sort is open to the widest form of debate providing it does not touch on any previous decision of this house. I assure Your Honour that what I am going to say—and I regret that the Minister of Finance has found it necessary to interrupt me on two occasions; however, that is his privilege—will not transgress that rule. As Beauchesne points out in citation 234:

> The ancient doctrine that the redress of grievances shall be considered before the grant of supplies is maintained in the House of Commons of Canada—

And it is an ancient doctrine, the most treasured right of this parliament. The words of Beauchesne are:

> Whenever an order of the day has been read for the house to resolve itself into the committee of supply or the committee of ways and means, the motion "that the Speaker do now leave the chair" must be proposed, except on Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays as provided by standing orders 56 and 58. When such motion is proposed, it shall be permissible to discuss any public matter—

I am now discussing a very important public matter.

> —within the powers of the federal parliament—

This matter, and these matters, are within the powers of the federal parliament.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): "These matters"; that is it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It goes on:

> —or to ask for the redress of any grievance—

It is not that I must express a grievance. There is an alternative. I can express a grievance or discuss any public matter within the powers of the federal parliament.

> —provided that the discussion shall not relate to any decision of the house during the current session—

I can give you my assurance that what I have in mind by way of an amendment does not relate to any decision of the house during the current session, nor to any item of the estimates. In the words of Beauchesne, again:

> —nor to any resolution to be proposed to the committee of ways and means, nor to any matter placed on or whereof notice has been given in the order paper.

What I have in mind by way of amendment does not touch any of these things. What I am now seeking to do is to establish, after careful consideration, the basis for the course that we propose should be taken in this house with regard to the matters that I have discussed. My hon. friend said "matters" a while ago as though that mattered.

Mr. Speaker: I certainly—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If I may conclude, Your Honour may have been diverted by my suggestion when I said there were many kinds of unemployment and many kinds of solutions. I would suggest, Your Honour, that even that would not preclude the right to suggest consideration of proposed methods of dealing with a particular situation which we have discussed.

I do not intend to argue the point of procedure any further. I am prepared to, and am well prepared to, because we have anticipated this very objection on the part of the Minister of Finance, as the Leader of the Opposition has indicated, but it seems to me there need be no further argument on the point.

What I was seeking to establish, Mr. Speaker, before my dear and hon. friend, who obviously, is carried away today on his birthday anniversary, made his intervention—

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member proceeds, as he discussed the point of order further after I had indicated a view I just want to recall to his mind that although what he says is perfectly sound, that supply is the great opportunity of the commons to express its grievances before authorizing money for the administration, we have provided in our rules six supply motions, and it certainly was not intended that each motion could cover the same ground. Therefore, there are limits. If the hon. member will recognize that there are limits and try to direct his remarks to his amendment and proceed in that way I think we can get along.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think there are no difficulties. Your last words would, I am sure, if strictly interpreted, have to be redefined in the light of citation 234. If there is any repetition of the decision already taken, then I am out of order, but only within that context of the amendment referred to by my hon. friend. It does not in any way, as the Leader of the Opposition indicated, touch the point because no decision has been taken on the matter to which I will ask the house to give attention when I have finished what I have to say.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, there are many kinds of unemployment: Frictional, seasonal unemployment, structural unemployment, technological unemployment, unemployment caused by international trade. At this time we have a right to inquire whether the government at any time has given us a careful indication of the character of seasonal unemployment. Certainly the present level of unemployment in Canada does not represent in its entirety seasonal unemployment. But we have unemployment, and this has to be faced, along with other questions, as the governor of the Bank of Canada has recognized. There are solutions for this problem which have not been taken, or certainly which have not been discussed by the government.

We have been told recently in another place about fraud in our employment service. The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Thrasher) indicated that that exists and has pointed out the difficulty of eradicating it. I say to the administration that if that is so, no matter how difficult it is it must be the responsibility of the government of Canada to take steps to see that those situations are corrected.

With respect to technological unemployment, we must recognize that our national employment service must be brought up to its highest possible point of efficiency. We must see to it that the employers of our country fully use this service, if they are not doing so now; we must see to it, in order to make this service the kind of force which the situation now requires in Canada, that our national employment service officers are adequately remunerated to do this very important job.

We have had no indication from the government as to what steps it is prepared to take in the matter of the proper location of industries, such as is being done in England. Those are considerations which at some time or other, if this problem referred to by the governor of the Bank of Canada and others is going to be met, will have to be dealt with.

Are we satisfied to the extent that seasonal employment is a cause that we are taking every step that should be taken to meet this problem? We were told two years ago that the Department of Labour was undertaking studies in the matter of seasonal unemployment to determine its character, to determine remedies. We have never had those studies, and if rumour is correct those studies are not directed toward a proper appreciation of the problem.

At the present time there are thousands of university students, many of them trained, who could be utilized to assist in this important work, a job that was undertaken in the United States and in Great Britain within the last year and half. There are suggestions for reducing seasonal unemployment. There were suggestions made by the congress of labour in the last bulletin which was issued a few days ago. The bulletin embodies suggestions which we have a right to ask the government to consider and tell us whether it has considered them and what its comments are, because if one can accept the logic of the representations made by the congress of labour, they do provide what seem a priori to be solid contributions and solutions.

What does the Minister of Finance think, for instance? What do the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) think about the suggestions made by that body for lowering interest rates on winter construction? What do they think about the suggestion of grants to induce municipalities to carry out construction in winter rather than in other seasons? What about the suggestion of higher depreciation rates on winter projects? What about winter exemptions on building materials from sales tax? What about subsidies to individuals and to firms, municipalities and provincial governments which undertake to do what the national government has been urging?

Those are matters which are put to us for the first time by way of suggestions. We have the right to know whether these matters are being considered, or is the problem being allowed to run its course, and is the government's approach one of relaxed interest?

This is not going to provide the solution in this very difficult period, as the governor of the Bank of Canada points out. I make the suggestion that not enough consideration has been given to the possibility of a special capital investment program in depressed areas.

We have a situation in this country at the present time where we have an exceedingly high level of unemployment despite our proximity to the business cycle peak. Production is at a high level; there is no denying that. Hon. gentlemen sitting on the ministerial benches may refer to that as an achievement, may refer to that as an indication of prosperity. Alongside that is the anomalous fact that in spite of high production there is great unemployment, unemployment which persisted during this year, in 1959, 1958 and in 1957. Employment has not responded in spite of this increase in productivity. We now have a hard core of unemployment, coupled with repetitive seasonal unemployment of substantial proportions, more in this country, according to figures, than is known in any other country in the western world but one, even if one recognizes the different indices and standards which are applied. Incidentally, it is of interest to know that our D.B.S. standard, plus the number of temporary layoffs, is closer to the international labour office standards than any other.

But this problem is not going to solve itself. This problem is not going to be solved unless this government asserts the kind of leadership represented by the courage and the assessment made by the governor of the Bank of Canada, as I hope to show in examining some of the remarks that he makes.

The national problem of unemployment in Canada is aggravated by regional unemployment. The problem, although national in scope, is largely regional in its severity. Our national manpower is being inefficiently utilized. The nation is being deprived of products which could have been produced if our labour force had been fully employed during this period. To correct this situation would involve cost. This is met by the governor of the Bank of Canada in these memorable words which he used in this speech on May 12. Here is what he had to say:

> The cost of unemployment and of measures to promote increased employment are real, and must be borne by someone. There are non-inflationary methods to deal with this, if the people of Canada are prepared to share the cost. Such methods must all turn on the same basic principle. In one way or another, those of us who are employed must contribute out of our resources to help share the cost of unemployment and to help create conditions in which greater employment opportunities will be available within Canada. The question of maintaining a viable economic structure in different regions of Canada as well as in different industries within Canada is also one which calls above all for a sharing of burdens and opportunities. The cost that must be shared, the price that must be paid in the short run, in order that we may all be better off in the long run, and in order that we may all remain Canadians in the long run, is not in my opinion a very high price, but obviously it is more likely to be voluntarily accepted and undertaken—

This is what I am seeking to do.

> —if we all know and study and face up to the facts, and reach a broad measure of agreement on what we want to achieve and what methods are best calculated to bring about the desired achievement.

I said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that the speeches made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in Vancouver and in Winnipeg did not touch on this theme. I say at this time that the Minister of Finance, who now finds this somewhat of a laughing matter, must either accept the conclusions of the governor of the bank or repudiate them and resort to the necessary constitutional practices so that in his service and the service of the nation will be those who share his ideas and the ideas of the government of Canada. My hon. friend has not made one reference in any of his speeches to the problem of unemployment. He completely ignored it in Winnipeg, he completely ignored it in Vancouver, and he passed over it in a very cavalier way in the budget speech he made in the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, no.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But the governor of the Bank of Canada does not overlook the regional aspects of this problem. He said at page 18 of this speech, and I commend this to the Minister of Finance:

> And Canada can only be strong and meaningful in terms of national identity if each of its main economic regions is likewise enabled to develop and maintain a healthy economic structure as the varying circumstances of time and place may require.

Does the Minister of Finance agree with that? Does he recognize now what are the facts that are gradually being exposed? The unemployment problem in the maritime provinces is, of course, a manifestation of the national problem, but here are the figures that are given now and which reflect a seriousness that we do not all appreciate. We now find calculations made which show that in January, February and March 75,000, 83,000 and 85,000 people were without jobs and seeking work in that area. This represents 13.6 per cent, 15.2 per cent and 15.9 per cent of the region's labour force. In the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia the total volume of industrial employment has decreased in absolute terms in the period 1956 to 1959.

Then we find that in the province of Quebec, one of the regions where unemployment is greatest, unemployment in March, 1960 was 12,000 higher than in March of 1958. In that province during January, February and March of this year the number of persons without jobs and seeking work was 192,000, 242,000, and 236,000, representing 11.0 per cent, 13.3 per cent and 13.6 per cent respectively in those three months, people who were unemployed and seeking work.

There are, of course, other areas of unemployment in the country. There are several pockets in relatively prosperous regions. According to the latest figures published in the Windsor Star on Friday last, my own city of Windsor still has some 9,000 persons seeking jobs, and that situation has prevailed in that community on an even higher scale during the past three to four months. One recognizes how fortunate we in this country are to have had developed a scheme of social welfare and economic assistance through social measures without which the purchasing power of these unemployed would be negligible, and without which it would be the obligation of every citizen of this country out of their taxes to maintain body and soul, for these people. Under these social measures all of them are now able to be maintained as a matter of right, although one does not forget that last year there was imposed on the unemployment insurance fund a responsibility that belonged to the nation as a whole.

I asked the Minister of Finance the other day whether or not any loans had been made to the unemployment insurance fund and his reply was in the negative. I will admit that he readily corrected himself the next day and pointed out that the Bank of Canada had lent moneys to the unemployment insurance commission—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not say the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —$4 million on April 19, $12 million on April 25 and $3 million on April 29, and the minister also indicated that requests for an additional $19 million had been put forward. I would remind the Minister of Finance, as an indication of the economic situation to which I have been directing my attention, that last year was the first year in the history of Canada that the Bank of Canada or the government of Canada, as my friend wishes, was called upon to lend any money to the unemployment insurance fund. The minister is about to correct me but that is the fact. Last year was the first time there had to be any bolstering of the fund by the Bank of Canada on the authorization of the investment committee and the Minister of Finance.

When the minister was replying the other day he said that the fund will be in balance in the month of June. I make this statement to the minister. Having in mind that last year some $78 million by way of additional contributions was imposed upon the workers and employees of Canada to bolster the fund, an increase from 25 to 55 per cent on the average without providing any increase in the pattern of benefits, if we are confronted next year with anything like the kind of unemployment we have had this year then it will mean that there will not be enough money in the fund to provide the assistance which has been contracted out to the contributors to the fund. That is a serious situation when we take into account the fact that in December, 1956, the fund amounted to $924 million; on March 31, 1957, $874,574,000; on March 31, 1958, $744,200,000; on March 31, 1959, $499,811,000; and on March 31, 1960, $359,949,000. If these figures, brought up to date with the additional information provided by the government, are not a reflection of the economic weakness that prevails at the present time, then I should like to know what is.

We have put before this government proposals. They have all been passed over by the administration. Included in those proposals, which were never voted upon, never were put forward in the form of motions and let us understand that procedurally, were two which embodied proposals made by this government when its leading members were sitting to the left of Mr. Speaker. The government passed over them. The government has refused to act on them.

We urged the setting up in this house of a parliamentary committee to examine these related problems, but that opportunity was not given to us. Instead one aspect of this problem has been referred to a group of experts to try to find some device, which incidentally would have the effect of creating less embarrassment for the government, as a result of which some satisfactory, acceptable figure of unemployment might be given to the country. We have yet to hear as to the progress made by this group, although time marches on.

But, on the other hand, an opportunity has been given for some group outside to study and report upon the trend in manpower requirements and utilization in Canada, with the object of exploring the possibilities of maintaining and extending a high level of employment and without restricting the opportunity of that group of reporting upon the growth of the economy and all the other factors influencing employment opportunities, including particularly technological changes and the growth of the Canadian labour force. It is an effrontery to this house that the government should have allowed one of its spokesmen elsewhere to prosecute that kind of study, having denied that right to the representatives of the people, chosen in election, who sit in this house.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker,—this was not touched upon by motion, either—there is a standing committee in this house known as the industrial relations committee. This committee has been organized, one meeting has been called and a chairman has been selected. There has not been one meeting of that committee held since that organizational meeting. As a member of the committee I proposed that we ask the House of Commons to give the committee power to investigate the problem of unemployment. The motion was put and every member sitting behind the treasury benches voted against the proposal.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is it lawful, Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the house to make a reference to the proceedings of a committee which has not reported to the house?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It has reported; the committee did report.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let us have the report.

Mr. Speaker: I think that on another count the hon. member is quite out of order. What he is saying appears to me to be a reflection on the vote in committee. It is not in order for an hon. member to do that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker; you are quite right in that. I am sorry I did. The fact is there was a report. Not only was a report made, but there was an incident which took place in the house based on that report to which I should like to direct the attention of my vigilant friend, the Minister of Finance.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) moved that that committee be empowered to study the standards of measurement of unemployment. At the chairman's request that motion was suspended and not voted upon. The chairman said he wished to give the matter further consideration. Some weeks later in this house the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, exercising an undoubted but unusual privilege, put a question to the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Small), on the orders of the day. He asked the chairman when the committee would meet so that the particular motion could be dealt with, and the hon. member for Danforth replied in the best ministerial manner, that he would give the matter further consideration. Nothing has been done since. The committee is set up to work, but is not doing anything. We have been denied the right to use that vehicle to study the most important single domestic problem facing the people of Canada, the problem of unemployment.

The matter does not rest there. The congress of labour, through its president, in the month of January suggested at a board of trade meeting in Toronto that the time had come when government, industry and labour should confer together on problems of common interest. I asked the Minister of Labour several times if he would convoke such a conference. I was always able to receive from the minister polite replies, but the government never met the suggestion. I put this question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), and it will be found on page 616 of Hansard for February 2, 1960, early in the session:

> The Prime Minister will recall that I asked this question myself ten days ago. Will the Prime Minister now say whether or not the government has given consideration to this proposal made by the president of the congress of labour three weeks ago when he spoke to the board of trade meeting in Toronto?

The Prime Minister answered:

> The answer is no.

That was with regard to a matter, I say again, which touches the most important single domestic problem in our country. We have urged repeatedly, not by way of a motion, on the government and on the Minister of Labour in particular to call such a conference, but without any success. I was pleased but astonished when on Friday last in reading the Ottawa Citizen I noticed a report of a speech made by the Minister of Labour. Here is the speech as reported in the Ottawa Citizen of May 20, and the heading is, "Starr Asks Three-Way Market Bid":

> Gananoque, CP: Labour Minister Starr Thursday night called on labour, management and government to consult together to maintain a competitive position for Canada in world trade.

I do not know whether or not that is an announcement of policy. I hope the Minister of Labour secured authorization to say that. We certainly will back him up because that is something we have been contending for and urging upon the Prime Minister and others, something that labour itself has been asking, that the national chamber of commerce has been asking. Surely the Minister of Labour will now take advantage of his own proposal which confirms what we have been urging all through this session, so that at long last these questions might be put on a co-operative basis in order to try to find some procedural way of determining what steps should be taken to meet the serious problems that confront us, of which unemployment is but one.

The minister referred to the competitive position of Canada and that obviously is a very important matter. No decision can be taken which adversely affects the income position of labour without giving labour an opportunity of discussing its position with government and with industry. Nothing but good can come out of this suggestion. I should like to say that the Leader of the Opposition suggested in 1958, when speaking about the same problem of unemployment and the indications of a recession, the establishment of an advisory board with representatives from labour, industry, agriculture and the univer- problems of production and employment.

I now, as spokesman in this instance for my party, with the Leader of the Opposition sitting by and with whom I have discussed this matter as I have with my colleagues, urge the government to set up such a board on economic development to assist the government in prosecuting the problems which have been underlined by the governor of the Bank of Canada and which, in some instances, have not been recognized by the government of the day. That proposal was consistent with the suggestion made in 1957 by the Gordon commission which reported as follows:

> We believe it might be helpful if a body of experts were established (along the lines of the council of economics advisers to the President of the United States), whose function it would be to inform the government of changes which might be thought desirable in economic policy in order to ensure a high level of employment without inflation.

Then we have supporting the position we are taking the recommendation made by the mayors of Canada at their last meeting which was held in Chicago. In the London Free Press of May 12 an article headed "Overwhelming Support Given by Delegates" reads in part as follows:

> The Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities yesterday called upon the federal government to appoint an impartial board of inquiry or royal commission to investigate unemployment in Canada.

I would go further and make that kind of body a permanent agency of government including, I would hope, in its personnel the governor of the Bank of Canada, so that they could address themselves as the governor did in another statement in his speech to which I have made so much deserving reference and which does not seem to capture the sympathetic interest of my dear friend the Minister of Finance on his fifty fifth birthday. That statement which will be found at page 18 reads as follows:

> Although we have our difficulties and problems, let us not forget that we are capable of providing Canadians in all parts of Canada with a way of life which even in economic terms need be second only to that of the richest and most powerful nation in the world, and in Canadian eyes and taking account of non-material values as well, second to none. We do not have to choose between poverty-stricken independence and some form of economic colonialism, either for Canada as a whole or for any of the regions of Canada. If we put Canadianism in the forefront of our economic and social thinking, and recognize each other as fellow Canadians, if we co-operate and share, we can be both independent and wealthy, even as the world measures wealth. If we are sufficiently determined to pay our own way and make our own place in the world, all Canadians in every part of Canada can achieve productive employment, with an ever-widening range of modern industrial and scientific occupations available to them, and can maintain a standard of living and way of life which in the sum of all its aspects will be capable of satisfying the highest aspirations of the human spirit.

Those are the words that should be uttered by a Prime Minister or by a Minister of Finance if they are prepared seriously to acknowledge the prognosis referred to by men who are regarded as experts in this field, some of whom are now serving the government and the people of Canada in our public service.

For all of these reasons has the time not come—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, to introduce the amendment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —for this government to rouse itself from its lethargy, to abandon this policy of laissez faire—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is Liberal policy.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and to approach this matter with vigour consistent with the promises given to the people of Canada when they were promised a new economic era for the unemployed, for the farmers and for the other groups in our country. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) I move the following amendment:

> That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "this house recommends for the consideration of the government the immediate setting up of a national advisory board on economic development and automation with representatives of governments, industry, labour, agriculture and universities, for the purpose of developing economic policies designed to achieve a high and stable level of income and employment."

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister wish to comment on this proposal?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wish to submit to you that this amendment is out of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Even if the amendment were in order, the terms of the amendment will have made out of order about 90 per cent of the speech of the hon. member for Essex East. He has chosen—as I suggested earlier he was doing—to go ahead making a speech and to defy the rules of the house as he proceeded and then indicated he was going to move an amendment to which it would be relevant.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Harkness: The minister is speaking on a point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Then on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: The minister is speaking on a point of order. If there is a matter of privilege intervening, of course I will hear it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is quite evident that about 90 per cent of what the hon. member has been saying in his lengthy speech this afternoon is not relevant to this amendment at all. However, he has gone ahead. He has in effect defied the Chair by discussing things that have been decided by the house previously.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. This is the second time. I do not mind it when my hon. friend discusses points of procedure or points of order. But what my hon. friend likes to do—and he is obviously doing it now—is to indulge in personalities. I have not sought to defy the Speaker and it is not open to my hon. friend, even when he reaches his fifty fifth birthday, to make that allegation.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the minister is rising to deal with the point of order as to the relevancy of this amendment and not as to the relevancy of what was said prior thereto.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It has a bearing on the amendment as well. I have something to say about the relevancy of the remarks.

In my submission this amendment is clearly out of order on several grounds. In the first place, what is provided for under the practice of the house is an amendment that states a grievance. It must be something that in its terms purports to complain of something the government should do, a grievance that is entertained because the government has done or not done something. That is not the form of this amendment at all.

It is quite obvious that the hon. gentleman, faced with the amendments introduced earlier by the opposition, particularly the one of April 4, has sought to set up something that will just be outside the scope of that amendment. However, what he has done in effect is not to set up a grievance. He has advocated a course of action. This is not a grievance; he is proposing a course of action.

In the second place, no such board as is proposed here by way of a recommendation can be set up, it seems to me, without incurring an expenditure. The hon. member is asking the house to recommend for the consideration of the government the setting up of this board. He is asking to put the house on record on a course of action which will inevitably involve the expenditure of money. In my respectful submission, even with the use of the word "recommendation", this amendment is not in order.

I submit to you that what the hon. member has proposed in his amendment is a course of action which relates to the very substance of the earlier amendments, particularly the one on April 4. There the house was asked to put itself on record as regretting certain financial policies which had resulted in high and rising unemployment and many other things. This matter has been discussed. After all, all these matters referred to in the amendment have been discussed time and again at this session, and we have it brought up again now.

On May 17, 1955 Mr. Speaker Beauchesne said, as reported on page 3868 of Hansard:

> I would urge hon. members to realize that at this moment we are debating a motion to go into supply with the Speaker in the chair, and we are supposed to raise genuine grievances, not to repeat points which have been raised time and again since the beginning of the session.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the hon. minister give me the citation and the page? I have asked him twice but he has not acknowledged my request.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I gave it but the hon. member was not listening.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What was the page of Beauchesne?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am not talking about Beauchesne. I am reading Hansard.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member said Beauchesne and I asked him for the quotation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No; I am quoting Mr. Speaker Beaudoin, not from Beauchesne.

National Board on Economic Development

An hon. Member: You said Mr. Speaker Beauchesne.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sorry.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I was quoting page 3868 of Hansard May 17, 1955.

As I have said, the hon. member is approaching this question today with a shot gun. Mr. Speaker Beauchesne—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker Beaudoin, as reported on page 2523 of Hansard for March 29, 1955, in referring to an hon. member said:

> He may speak on any subject whatever, but only once. He cannot raise two or three grievances.

That is what the hon. member has been doing for the last hour and a half, raising a multiplicity of grievances. Now he brings in something to which probably not more than 5 per cent or being generous to him 10 per cent at the most of his remarks can claim to be relevant at all, and then what he brings in is not an amendment which is in order under the rules of the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would Your Honour like me to give you at this time my view about the matters under discussion?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I should have thought it was clear that the minister was indulging in a form of procedural intervention not so much for the purpose of having clarification but because he has referred to some of the things I said, again exhibiting that his main purpose is not the projection of all—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is just going into the same kind of tactic which he raised as a grievance against the minister, and I must warn him that he is not in order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I accept the warning but I would observe that the Minister of Finance is apparently more successful in being able to do that than I am.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is a fact.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member intends that as a reflection on my conduct of the proceedings, I would hope he would modify it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I intended that of course not as a reflection on Your Honour but as a reflection on the minister who did seek to debate the substance of what I have said. Whether he accepts what I say is a matter for argument; but to suggest that it is irrelevant is the very subject of the present procedural discussion before the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is not allowed to reflect on another hon. member.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister keeps talking about a grievance. We are not raising a grievance. The hon. member has apparently not understood what the citation from Beauchesne is intended to convey. Citation 234, as I as well as the minister have already quoted several times, provides:

> When such motion is proposed, it shall be permissible to discuss any public matter within the powers of the federal parliament or to ask for the redress of any grievance—

That is the alternative.

There is before the house an amendment which calls upon the government to give consideration to certain matters, but we are not proposing ourselves to set up a committee. We have no power to set up a committee and consequently no expenditure is involved under this particular amendment. All we are asking the government to do is to consider the immediate setting up of a national advisory board, et cetera. If the government decides it will come in with a resolution, it will make the proposal for the expenditure of money. This is merely a request in the form of an amendment in the time-honoured manner of asking the government to give consideration to a procedure which we believe would be one way by which the problems discussed in my statement could be considered for their validity or otherwise.

It is clear that what Speaker Beaudoin was referring to was something that involved a matter which had already been attended to by way of decision. The amendment now before the house is something that has not been proposed formally in this house this session. As far as I know, I am not aware of its having been proposed at any time in parliament. It has been proposed now for the first time, and the substance of the amendment is the setting up of machinery to discuss a number of matters, namely to set up a national advisory board on economic development and automation with representatives of government, and so on. But I repeat, the substance of the motion is to set up such a body.

The hon. minister speaking on the amendment says that this point has already been dealt with. With great respect I would point out to Your Honour that in the amendment moved on the address in reply to the speech from the throne the word "employment" was mentioned as one of five fields about which confusion and uncertainty prevailed. It was not the substance of the motion. There has been no decision in this house this session on the question of unemployment. But that is not the substance of my amendment. My amendment does not deal with the question of unemployment as such; it deals with the setting up of a committee to study a number of problems of which unemployment is one. The words "high and rising unemployment" were used in the budget amendment as one of four problems for which the budget offered no solution. But the very language of that amendment is clear. It is: "This house regrets that the financial policies of the government will produce a fourth consecutive over-all deficit in a year of so-called prosperity". The amendment was an expression of regret, at the same time offering no solution to the problem of rising prices, rising trade deficits, and so on. So that if we accept, as I think Your Honour will on consideration, that this particular amendment is one that deals with the setting up of an advisory committee, there can be no doubt about the validity of the amendment and that it is in order.

As I indicated, citation 234 (1) sets forth what may be discussed on such a motion. The main question arising from this citation is whether the amendment now being proposed relates to any decision of the house during the current session. That is the procedural point which will interest Your Honour.

In this connection I would like to go further than the hon. minister. I would like to examine the authorities to show how fallacious is the position he has taken. I refer Your Honour to citation 191 (3) of Beauchesne, which reads as follows:

> The question is the subject matter of the motion, and on the merits of that subject matter the House has to give a decision either unanimously or by the majority of the members present. The Speaker proposes the question in the words of the mover. When the motion has been seconded it merges in the question which is read by the Speaker, after which the house is in possession of the question and must dispose of it. Every question when agreed to assumes the form either of an order or a resolution of the house. By its orders the house directs its committees, its members, its officers, the order of its own proceedings and the acts of all persons they concern; by its resolutions the house declares its own opinions and purposes.

It must be noted that the opinions and purposes which it declares are not ones involving any expenditure of money. They are merely calling upon the administration to give consideration to certain matters.

Then there is citation 194:

> A motion or amendment cannot be brought forward which is the same in substance as a question which has already been decided, because a proposition being once submitted and carried in the affirmative or negative cannot be questioned again but must stand as the judgment of the house. This rule applies to the decision taken on amendments to the address in reply to the speech from the throne. A question once put cannot be altered by the member moving it, without the consent of the house. The reconsideration of a question already decided is not allowed under British parliamentary practice, but it prevails in many public bodies and societies. A resolution may however be rescinded, i.e. it may be made void and of no effect. A question once put cannot be altered by the member moving it, without the consent of the house.

These citations together clarify the meaning of the word "question". The main consideration is the substance of the amendment and not its appendices, or matters which are merely incidental to it. One could have left out any reference to a high and stable level of income and employment without in any way affecting the substance of the motion. One could certainly have left out the word "employment" without in any way affecting the substance.

It is apparent that at no time in the current session has this house reached a decision on setting up a board of the kind proposed. To deny this amendment would be to take away from the opposition the right to seek a decision on this matter by an amendment of this character. The Minister of Finance, in the budget debate, attacking the validity of our amendment, quoted citation 148(1) of Beauchesne which reads in part:

> It is a wholesome restraint upon members that they cannot revive a debate already concluded—

The hon. gentleman made reference to that, but that does not mean anything. What is significant is this: what do we mean by the word "concluded"? The question is: when is a debate concluded? The answer to that is provided in citation 120 which states that a debate is concluded when a decision is reached by the house. I will read citation 120 because it surely will convince Your Honour, if that is now required, as to the soundness of the position which we have taken. Citation 120 reads as follows:

> The proceedings between the rising of a member to move a motion and the ascertainment by the chair of the decision of the house constitute a debate, and this process affords an opportunity for, and usually involves, discussion, although a decision may be reached without discussion. The interval between the proposing and the putting of the question, which is usually used for discussion, gives an opportunity for further proceedings such as the moving of an amendment; and this may give rise to a subsidiary debate, with its own question and decision, within the principal debate.

And then:

> Debate arises when a question has been proposed by the Speaker and before it has been fully put. A question is fully put when the Speaker has taken the voices of the ayes and the noes.

Thus it should be stressed that the substance of the amendment before the house is the creation of a board to develop economic policies, and though unemployment and income are mentioned, these are incidental references within the amendment and do not constitute its substance. For this simple reason this matter, under our rules and under the citations to which I have referred, does not come within the mischief of the word "conclude".

I submit these representations to Your Honour confident in the belief that you will recognize their validity. They are founded on precedent and they are supported by our practice.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the hon. member one question? The use of the word "employment" at the end of the proposed amendment in conjunction with the proposal for the consideration of the setting up of the committee raises in my mind the possibility of a repetition of the debate on the amendment proposed during the debate on the budget which related to the financial policies of the government and their effect on unemployment. Has the hon. member any comment to make on that, because I would consider this to be a repetition of that debate, on which a conclusion was reached by a decision to negative the amendment, and would not be in accordance with the proper practice of the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I can only say to Your Honour in reply as to the view you take to the amendment to which allusion has just been made, that I can only, with respect, take issue with Your Honour, because I believe that in the amendment the reference to unemployment was incidental. However, Your Honour apparently takes another view, a view which I had hoped it would be possible to shake. I can only state that I believe the very language of that amendment indicates that it was incidental. But whether or not it was incidental then, the point is that it is clearly incidental now. I believe it was incidental in both cases. The substance of the motion before the house is:

> This house recommends for the consideration of the government the immediate setting up of a national advisory board on economic development and automation with representatives of governments, industry, labour, agriculture and universities, for the purpose of developing economic policies—

Period. That is the substance of the motion.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hon. gentlemen opposite say, "no". That is a matter for the Speaker, and I am sure none of them wishes to usurp that function.

Mr. Pearson: If I may say one word on the question which you have raised, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the closest precedent both in time and in nature is that to which I have already referred—the occasion in the session of 1955. In that session, as has already been pointed out, the hon. member for Dufferin moved an amendment to the address in which he regretted on behalf of the opposition that the government had failed to take or recommend the necessary measures—and then there is a list of six fields, of which the second is unemployment. The words were, in fact:

> (b) to solve the urgent problem of unemployment.

In the debate which took place at that time the subject of unemployment was brought in, but all the other matters referred to in those various other fields were also discussed. That did not prevent, nor did the government of the day seek to prevent, the opposition moving an amendment on going into supply which again dealt specifically with one of these matters, namely unemployment, though in a somewhat different form, because that motion read:

> That the government should immediately give consideration to the formulation of plans to deal with this emergency of unemployment.

That motion was accepted. It was debated, and it was decided, and it seems to me that if such a situation prevailed at that time this particular motion is surely in order, because it is not as closely related as those two motions were in 1955; it is not as closely related to any previous discussion.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could shorten this discussion by indicating my views on some of the points which have been raised, and the remaining difficulties. On the point the minister makes about the amendment involving the expenditure of money, I think the general approach, or the formula, by which the matter is recommended to the government is sufficient answer. It is that the house recommends for the consideration of the government. That is the form which has been used in many of our motions by private members. If it is accepted it does not commit the government; it does not commit the government to spend money. It asks the government only to consider setting up a committee, to give expression to it. In other words, the decision of the house does not bind the government to set up a committee, it only puts the government under an obligation to give consideration to setting up the committee.

On the question of whether this is a grievance or not, I should like to refer hon. members to Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, fourth edition, which defines this procedure in terms which I think are worthy of consideration. I refer to page 419:

> The order of the day for the house to go into committee of supply having been read, the Speaker will put the question—"that I do now leave the chair". The same question is always put whenever the house is to go into committee of supply, in order to afford an opportunity to members to propose amendments. On this point it is observed by an eminent authority that the ancient constitutional doctrine that the redress of grievances is to be considered before the granting of supplies, is now represented by the practice of permitting every description of amendment to be moved on the question for the Speaker leaving the chair, before going into committee of supply or ways and means.

"Every description of amendment"; there was no right of parliament broader than that of raising grievances before voting supply and, as Bourinot points out by reference to this authority, that right is preserved in our supply motions. I continue with the citation:

Upon other orders of the day, such amendments must be relevant, but here they are permitted to relate to every question upon which a member may desire to offer a motion. The same practice is now followed very extensively in the Canadian commons.

I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that a resolution recommending to the government that it consider setting up a committee, something which it has not done, is a grievance within the very broad terms of grievances, which include anything within the administrative power of the government, about which the commons can complain in the course of the process of granting supply.

The other point is the difficult one, to my mind, whether we are opening ourselves to repetition of debate that has been concluded by a vote. That difficulty arises not out of the recommendation for the setting up of this committee or in anything it says but in the words:

—for the purpose of developing economic policies—

Then, it goes on:

—designed to achieve a high and stable level of income and employment.

I cannot help but recall the words of the amendment to the budget resolution, which dealt with the financial policies of the government with respect to employment. Here we come to economic policies with respect to employment. While "economic" is perhaps a broader word and is more inclusive than the financial policies of the government, yet economic policies might be those of private industry and other agencies. This is the problem that remains and if, before I come to a decision, the minister or others would like to address themselves to that point briefly, I would be grateful.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Thank you. I would like to say a further word about it, to put before you as directly as I can the position in which hon. members would find themselves if this were ruled to be in order.

The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) cannot just conveniently drop words from his motion and ask you to consider the motion at this point as if they were not in, because these are the principal words of the motion. He asks the house to recommend that the government set up a national advisory board on economic development and automation with representatives from various sources. These are the words:

—for the purpose of developing economic policies designed to achieve a high and stable level of income and employment.

This is the whole purpose for which he asks that consideration be given to the setting up of a board. What are the policies? Those are policies designed to achieve a high and stable level of income and employment. No hon. member in this house can hope to discuss this question—I think this is the nub and essence of the whole question now submitted to you for decision—no hon. member can discuss this motion without going directly into the questions pertaining broadly to the achievement of a high and stable level of income and employment. This is precisely the question that was under debate in the budget debate. This is precisely the question that was raised by the amendment introduced by the opposition on April 4. We had such a debate back at the end of January and through February on the supplementary estimates, when we had an eight-day discussion on unemployment in this country and all manner of methods of coping with unemployment or aiding in reducing it. Yet we are now asked to go back and review that question all over again; we are asked now to review the whole question that was raised directly in the budget debate and do that all over again, because we are told this narrows the discussion down to a particular point.

That particular point can only be fairly judged in any approach to it by any hon. member in this house in relation to the broader question, and that broader question has been directly raised in debate this session not once, but I am sure at least twice, on the occasions I have mentioned. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, my submission is that that is the test and, having regard to the fact that the hon. member has attempted to justify the amendment and the grievance that it is supposed to deal with on the basis that it is assisting in achieving a high and stable level of income and employment, I say that these words bring him completely within the scope of those earlier motions.

It is not a matter of words only, although the words bring the amendment clearly within that scope, but it is the substance as well. The citation from Beauchesne which was quoted emphasizes the matter of substance. If this amendment were allowed to stand we would embark now on another debate on unemployment, the same question as has already been debated frequently this session.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps you could deal with the precedent which I mentioned. It seems to me to bear very directly on this issue.

So far as the argument of my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, is concerned, it really would amount to this if it were accepted, that because we talked about national income and unemployment six weeks, or two weeks ago we should not be permitted to talk about it during the rest of this session, no matter how conditions may have changed and no matter how necessary it may be for the government to take steps to meet those changed conditions. This is the logical inference to be drawn from my hon. friend's argument.

It is some weeks since we talked about unemployment in the budget. Since that time there have been changes in the situation. In our view the situation has perhaps deteriorated to the point where we think it more important now to set up machinery to deal with it than it was even then.

If this motion were in a form merely to advise the government to consider the setting up of a board in the terms in which they appear to be prescribed, a national advisory board on economic development and automation; if the motion stopped there with the names of its members, is it suggested by my hon. friend that in discussing the work of this board we should not be permitted to say what it might do in respect of income and employment? If he takes that position, it is absurd. If he does not take that position, surely by mentioning employment and a stable level of income we are not to be precluded from talking about them when if they were omitted we could talk about them. That is the situation as it appears to me.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, in case you should be influenced by the remark of the Leader of the Opposition to the effect that if this amendment is not allowed the opposition would then be precluded from discussing the question of unemployment in the future during the course of this session, may I remind the house that the estimates of the Department of Labour have still to come before the house as well as the estimates of the Department of Finance and, for that matter, all other departments. Occasions can be found in the discussion of the estimates to raise the problems that are mentioned here.

Mr. Robichaud: This is a supply motion. Have you forgotten that?

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In answer to the Minister of Trade and Commerce I simply want to say that that is not the purpose of this amendment. It is not that we want another opportunity to discuss unemployment. We shall have that opportunity. This is an amendment to provide a means whereby the agencies of government can be strengthened to deal with economic development and automation. That is what the purpose of the amendment is, and we could not put forward an idea like that on the estimates of the department. My hon. friend knows that.

Mr. Churchill: I was dealing with the remark of the Leader of the Opposition, but with regard to what the hon. member has just said may I say that the operative words in the amendment are the last words, "income and employment", and it is quite obvious that members debating this amendment would have to follow the lead of the hon. member for Essex East who spent 50 per cent of his time discussing the subject of unemployment. In view of the attitude that has been taken in other debates, where latitude has been permitted if a previous speaker mentions a certain subject, it is perfectly obvious that the debate would rapidly develop into a debate on the subject of unemployment, which has been covered very frequently in debates during the course of this session.

Mr. Speaker: I think the essential purpose expressed in the proposed amendment is the consideration of "a national advisory board on economic development and automation with representatives of governments, industry, labour, agriculture and universities". In other words, it is not a purely governmental body but an advisory board "for the purpose of developing economic policies designed to achieve a high and stable level of income and employment".

I think the amendment is capable of the interpretation that the purposes of the proposed board are in general the maintenance of a high level of economic activity in the country. Unemployment is not mentioned although it is the converse of employment, and undoubtedly there is a risk that one matter which has been decided, the effect of the financial policies of the government with respect to unemployment, would be revived and an attempt made to debate it. But that was a narrow amendment, one which is an illustration of a different principle and having to do with the financial policy of the government rather than an advisory board. As I am in considerable doubt I think I should give the benefit to the proposer of the amendment with the caution that I will not regard it as opening the door to a debate on the financial policies of the government with respect to unemployment, which subject has been dealt with as an amendment to the budget motion.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, certainly we welcome most heartily the great interest of the Liberal party now that they are in the opposition in the problems of unemployment and automation and the need to achieve a high and stable level of income and employment.

Mr. Hellyer: We had those things when we were the government.

Mr. Winch: I am not going to endeavour to comment upon or to follow the lengthy path travelled by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) in arriving at what I consider to be the point at which he was aiming, a discussion and inquiry into the effects of the growing and ever-increasing problem of automation. He spoke on that subject very briefly but in accordance with the wording of the amendment I think that is perhaps the key point on which I should like to spend a few minutes this afternoon.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member but as the Speaker has just left the chair I wonder whether he would be good enough to come back because I think the consideration of whether or not this amendment is in order has not yet been exhausted. There is a further point I should like to raise.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He has made his ruling.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He has given a ruling with some hesitation and he expressed himself as in some doubt.

Mr. Robichaud: A ruling has been given and accepted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have just arrived but I understand that a ruling was made that the amendment is in order, under certain conditions of discussion.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): With respect, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Speaker made his ruling with respect to three points that were raised and expressed himself as in some doubt on one of the three points. He said that as he was in doubt he would give the benefit of the doubt to the mover of the amendment and permit the debate to proceed. But there is a further point which has just been brought to my attention which should be raised and which is directly relevant to the question whether the amendment now before the house is in order or out of order on another ground.

Mr. Pearson: Whatever points the minister may have thought of subsequent to the ruling, the ruling has been made that this amendment is in order. It was made by the Speaker and we are proceeding to discuss the amendment under that ruling. I consider it would be disrespectful and improper for a minister of the crown to ask the Speaker to reconsider the ruling he made only five or ten minutes ago and to open the whole question again after the lengthy consideration which has been given to it.

Mr. Winch: May I draw this to your attention, sir, that not only was a ruling given by the Speaker that the amendment was in order but his ruling was not appealed and as there was no appeal I, as the next speaker, am speaking to the amendment now before us. I have never heard of any procedure whereby, if the Speaker's ruling is not appealed and the house proceeds with its business, you can ask the Speaker to come back and change his mind. It is a fantastic situation and is unfair to the house and very unfair to the Speaker.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Obviously the same point cannot be raised again but another point can be raised on another ground, and it is another ground.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As the Speaker has arrived I think it would be more appropriate for him to hear the arguments.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, a question of order has been raised by my hon. friend to the effect that this matter of whether or not this amendment is in order should be reviewed by you. You have given your decision; it was accepted, and there was no appeal from that decision by any member of the house. I assume, therefore, we are to be permitted to discuss the motion as you previously decided.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The point was this. You disposed of the point that was raised earlier on several grounds. You, first of all, disposed of two grounds and then, finally, you dealt with a third ground and expressed some doubt on the point. Then you gave the benefit of the doubt to the mover of the amendment and permitted the discussion to proceed. Having just turned up a reference I did not find earlier there is a further point I wish to raise. I am not going to go back and ask the Chair to reopen a point that has been argued.

However, I wish to raise another point, that is if I may, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, I wonder if it is proper to reopen a matter after I have concluded my decision. I placed the motion before the house by reading it. The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) took the floor and has been speaking. It may be that a matter which has come to the minister's attention would have had a bearing on the decision, and might have affected it. However, I raise the question of the propriety of opening up a decision which has been concluded. It seems to me we would be setting a very bad precedent in doing that, which would lead to lack of finality in any decision of the Chair.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would not be raising a point just to argue one of the points that had been raised before. It is another point. I could state it very briefly. The point is that this same matter—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Winch: The minister is arguing that you should change your mind.

Mr. Speaker: The minister is speaking to a point of order. I have asked the minister, before he pursues the matter, whether he does not think that a difficulty arises. It is true that when new evidence appears cases are reopened in court, but it does not seem to me that we can follow that practice, nor that we have followed that practice in the house. When a decision is taken the only remedy is by way of appeal. I think I should ask the minister not to pursue the argument.

Mr. Winch: I am not going to repeat what I said a few minutes ago, but merely emphasize that what I have to say on this amendment is related only to that aspect of it which applies to the recommendation that the government consider the immediate setting up of a national advisory board on development and automation. I feel that automation is one of the very serious and irrevocable developments in our economy to which sufficient attention has not been paid in so far as planning is concerned in connection with its impact and its implications.

Undoubtedly the problem has been well known for some considerable time. I should like to draw the attention of the house to a short quotation from a speech. I just want to quote the concluding paragraph because I think it is of interest. It reads:

> When we encounter problems of adjustment arising out of a national endeavour to reap the benefits that advancing technology, including automation, brings us, let us remember that most of these can be overcome by patient application, good will, and the co-operation of all sectors of our economy. Let us see such problems in their proper perspective, and let us remember that their solution is helping Canadians in facing up to a great challenge. And that is to replace:
>
> The hunger for power and > the hunger of poverty > with the benefits of peace and > the benefits of progress.

[Mr. Speaker.]

This is a quotation from a speech that was made on March 23, 1956, by Mr. J. H. Dickey, parliamentary assistant to the minister of defence production, to the society for the advancement of management in Montreal. At least there was one Liberal in an official capacity in 1956 who recognized the advance of automation and who recognized that something should be done about it. But at that time the previous government did nothing about it. We are very glad of their interest now. It is also unfortunate that, at least to the best of my knowledge, no specific study or action is being taken by the present government to consider all the problems of automation as it is growing now, and undoubtedly as we will have it in the not too distant future.

Over the years the intensity of this problem has been forcibly brought home, or should have been brought home, to governments and to all parties, irrespective of whether they are in government or in opposition. I was most interested in reading the report of the Director-General of the International Labour Office on automation and other technological developments. This report was made in 1957 and made it exceptionally clear that those interested in the welfare of the country, the welfare of the economy and the problems that arise because of technological advances, should be doing something about these things. I just want to quote a couple of sentences. He said:

> There is no doubt that we have entered a new technological era. Automation and atomic energy, unfolding simultaneously, are already causing drastic changes in the world of industry and labour . . .
> Automation, atomic energy and other technological changes are dominating the labour and social scene in more and more of the older industrial countries and are a key factor in the development of the newly industrializing countries. They pose serious problems of economic and social adjustment for our industrial society and throw down a challenge to our whole civilization. True, many of these problems are not new. They arose in earlier stages of industrialization. Today, however, they seem to take on a more dramatic and a more drastic form.

The point I want to make is that we have had indications in the past as to the importance of this question of automation, and nothing has been done. It is for this reason I believe the hon. member for Essex East has done a great service to this House of Commons, and to the people of this country, in raising the issue as he has today through the medium of this amendment which suggests that the government do something about it. Apparently, although it may not be a tactic that is generally recognized as being acceptable, you have to keep pounding away at and hounding the government to try to get them to do the things which it seems so obvious they should be doing.

This matter has been drawn to the attention of the present government time after time, and yet we do not see any action. The Canadian Labour Congress in its memorandum to the government of Canada on January 28 requested a continued study of the effects of automation and the development of a program of training and retraining and other measures to assist in the re-establishment of workers displaced by automation and technological changes generally. Then, too, we have the submission to this government of the national legislative committee of the international railway brotherhoods, dated February 2, 1960. They stated:

> May we urge that at this session of parliament a committee of the House of Commons be established to investigate and report on the effects of technological changes and automation.

Not as a direct submission to the government—but I know that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) must follow what is said by union leaders—we have the report of Larry Sefton, director of the united steelworkers of America at their national policy conference held in Montreal on April 21 and 22, of this year, dealing with this question of automation, its effects now and its probable effects on labour in the future. I know there are those people who think that labour is not prepared to accept progress, new technological developments and automation. That is why I think it is well worth while to draw to the attention of the house in connection with this matter the words of Larry Sefton in the statement I have just mentioned in which he states as follows:

> Workers and unions should not try to block technological progress, but a company or industry should be compelled to give consideration to human and social factors when it contemplates relocation of its operations. In many ways, unions can fill the breach with imaginative and constructive collective bargaining programs. These programs will not interfere with or question management's decision to relocate. They will, however, compel management to weigh the human costs involved in such moves, and not merely unload the burden on the workers and the communities.

In dealing with automation from the viewpoint of the worker—and he is the one who is really affected—the question naturally arises as to how labour is affected and why the workers are worrying so much about growing automation in our country of Canada.

I will say that for the workers there are five big questions about automation. First, what is it? Second, what can it do? Third, how far will it go? Fourth, how fast will it come about? Fifth, what will it do to present jobs? Those are questions that are in the minds of the workers and they are questions to which the workers and the trade unions are entitled to an answer.

The answer can come only either through the direct co-operation of industry, labour and government or indirectly through that co-operation through the medium of the procedure which is outlined by the hon. member for Essex East in the course of his amendment which we are now discussing. Surely we recognize the fact—or at least I hope so—that technological advance—such as that represented by chemurgy and automation—is not the brain child of one person, a thousand persons, a million persons or one country. It is the sum total of the understanding, the progress, the research and the inventiveness of all mankind. That being so, all must benefit.

That also is basically what the trade union leaders and the working people of our country are asking. They are asking that the government of this country make certain that the benefits of scientific advance are distributed equitably throughout all society in Canada. They are saying—as does this amendment—that management, labour and government must sit down together and do a great deal of planning.

It should have been started a long time ago but what is the use of recrimination and what is the use of going back and doing too much condemnation and damning? We cannot alter what has happened in the past. We must start from today. I think the need for it was clearly put even back in 1956 by the labour research department of the Canadian congress of labour. I just want to quote from their February issue of that year in which they state as follows:

> The problem of automation and employment in Canada can be solved. But it won't solve itself. Automation can give all of us more leisure without throwing any of us permanently out of work. It can give us a much higher standard of living. But it won't do either unless we act to make sure that it does.
> It can make goods cheaper; but only if monopolies don't get in the way.
>
> It can shorten hours; but only if employers don't decide that it's simpler and cheaper for them, individually at any rate, to lay people off rather than to spread work.
>
> It can give us much higher wages, but only if management and investors don't collar a lion's share of the increased productivity.
> It can benefit us in the long run; but only if we see to it that it benefits us in the series of short runs which make up the long run.

I believe those are sensible words and fair ones. But somebody must initiate the studies and the planning. Then, of course, when that is done there must be an initiating body in order to see that the benefits which accrue through scientific advance are equitably divided amongst all society. To me, at any rate, it appears that the only body that can initiate the planning and the action is the national government of the country. Hence

I am saying these few words and commenting on some of the various publications on this matter, in the hope that the seriousness of the problem of automation and the recognition of how directly it is going to affect all the working men and women of this country will result in our doing something about the problem now in the way of planning and action.

I believe that the basic principle was very well put by Norbert Wiener, professor of mathematics at Massachussetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, when he pointed out as follows:

> We must always exert the full strength of our imagination to examine where the full use of our new modalities may lead us.

That is what we in this group urge that we do here, irrespective of party, or whether we sit on the government side or the opposition side, namely recognize the problem or the challenge. I am going to conclude with this thought because I want to say only a few words on it. It depends to a great extent on those who are now members of the House of Commons and on the party which now forms the government whether automation is going to be a curse or a blessing. A great responsibility rests on our shoulders in answering that question. It can be answered. The answer lies in how well we who have been elected to legislative office are prepared both to face up to and to pick up the challenge.

As I say, this matter has come to the attention of governments and parties over the years. We have never picked it up yet, but the time is now here when we have to pick it up because automation is no longer in the future, it is here. It is facing the workers, it is facing the unions, it is facing industry, and on a competitive basis. So I say let us decide by our thinking and our action on behalf of the people of Canada as their legislators whether automation will be a curse or a blessing. One way to give that answer is in this house, either today or tomorrow, by supporting an amendment which says that the government should consider following a certain procedure in order that proper studies can be given to these questions and recommendations made for the advice and consideration of the government.

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in following the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) and the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) in this debate I find it somewhat difficult because the hon. member for Essex East wandered all over the lot in what he was going to discuss, and in his amendment he makes it very difficult to discuss some of the remarks he made. However, that is not unusual for him. We heard a good deal of his versatility the other day when one of the hon. members told us how one day he was able to be a great agriculturist, the next day a great industrialist, and so on; but when he is able to jump from one problem to another, I think that adds even further to his powers.

I gathered from his remarks today that he was very much impressed with the governor of the Bank of Canada and felt that he had made some very excellent suggestions to the country. I do not think there are very many hon. members who would want to dispute that. I would only say that I think the hon. member for Essex East seems to have had quite a change of heart in his regard for the governor of the Bank of Canada, because as I recall it last year we were having a discussion with the governor of the Bank of Canada—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It does not mean that a good man must always to be accepted, but in this instance he was.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): The hon. member for Essex East always likes to say something which suits him at the moment, but he would not hesitate to change it tomorrow if it suited his purposes. I would like to refer to the industrial relations committee report of 1959, page 378, and refer to one or two of the remarks the hon. member for Essex East made about the governor of the Bank of Canada at that time. He said:

> I am suggesting that the investment committee—

That was the investment committee of the unemployment insurance commission to which he was referring, of which the governor of the Bank of Canada is chairman and responsible for.

> —by error of judgment, by incompetency, by conflict of function, contributed to the large loss which Dr. McMillan estimates in the amount of $63 million.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And I believe that yet.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): He did not seem to have a very high regard for the governor of the Bank of Canada at that time. I am glad to see he is showing more sense now and is coming round to saying that some of the things he said are not so bad after all.

In dealing with the economic policies of the government and what they have done to create employment and to maintain employment in Canada, I want to deal to some extent with the province of British Columbia, which is of course of direct concern to me, as indeed is the whole country. I believe that many of these problems cannot be solved by any one national policy and they are going to require different things in different regions. Therefore I cannot accept the view of the hon. member for Essex East that setting up this one board is going to solve every problem in the country. Not only that, but I do not think the hon. member or the opposition appears to have been keeping up with what the government has been doing in this regard. Indeed, on January 26 the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) had this to say, as reported on page 334 of Hansard:

> Plans are being formulated in the department to set up an advisory council of business men who will be asked to give of their time and their experience in considering broad problems of trade, both export and import, and of industrial development. The decade of the sixties, if unmarred by warfare, will be a period of intensified competition in international trade. The active co-operation of many minds will be needed to seize and exploit the opportunities that will be offered.

That seemed to me to be a very sound policy in gathering together a group who would be qualified to deal with problems of trade and industrial development. I did not hear any commendation coming from the members of the opposition at that time. At times they seem to be quite fond of setting up various boards and committees; at other times they seem to be quite opposed to them, saying that we have too many and that it was the responsibility of the government to do these things.

However, I think here we have an example of a board that may be of use to the country, one composed of men with peculiar qualification to deal with one particular problem. I would think that if we were going to appoint one board, as the hon. member for Essex East suggests, surely it would do away with all of the advisers to the government at the present time. If these people are going to solve all our problems we would not need all the civil servants we have at the present time. In making the suggestion he has it seems to me that the hon. member for Essex East is reflecting on those advisers we have today in the civil service, and to be saying in actual fact, you are incompetent to do the job you are there for.

I want to deal with some of the ways the government has acted in order to help the provinces, and thereby help to create activity in the country and a high level of employment. There is a high level of employment in the country at the present time. I have had some figures prepared for me by the unemployment insurance commission, as I have been very interested in this problem in my own province of British Columbia. I had them draw up the latest figures which they have to show how many people are employed in the province of British Columbia and these figures are taken from the dominion bureau of statistics monthly labour force survey, January 1958 to March 1960. The number of people employed in British Columbia in January, 1958 was 482,000; in January, 1959 there was 492,000; in January, 1960 there was 507,000. In February of 1958 there were 482,000 persons employed; in February, 1959 there were 503,000 employed; in February, 1960 there were 513,000 employed. That again shows an increase. In March 1958 there were 487,000 employed; in March, 1959 there were 511,000; in March, 1960 there were 519,000 employed. So that there has been an increase in employment in every month in 1960 over what it was in the two preceding years.

This was brought about by the way the federal government has dealt with the province by putting money into the hands of people in the province and in creating economic activity in that way, I should like to put on record some of the financial arrangements which have been made between the federal government and the provincial government of British Columbia—for this purpose I have taken what the provincial government was receiving in unconditional and conditional grants from the federal government—in 1956-57, the last year of the Liberal government, and those estimated for 1960-61, our current fiscal year, in order to show how much money the federal government has put into the province of British Columbia to keep economic activity at a high level.

Under the heading of unconditional grants we have statutory subsidies which in 1956-57 amounted to $1,281,000 and will be the same figure in 1960-61. Under the tax rental agreement the province of British Columbia received in 1956-57, $55,730,000 and will receive in 1960-61, $65,396,000. Under equalization payments it received nothing in 1956-57 and will receive $5,825,000 in 1960-61. Under the stabilization agreement they received nothing in 1956-57 and will receive $754,000 in 1960-61. Under the 50 per cent share of federal income tax from certain power utilities they received in 1956-57, $1,415,000 and will receive in 1960-61, $1,509,000. The sub-total under this heading of unconditional grants, therefore, amounted in 1956-57 to $58,426,000; in 1960-61 it will be $74,765,000 which hon. members will, I am sure, agree is a reasonably good increase to have occurred in that space of time.

Under conditional grants and shared-cost programs the province received under the heading of agriculture the sum of $38,000 in 1956-57 and it will receive $118,000 in 1960-61. Under the heading of health it received in 1956-57, $3,210,000 and in 1960-61 it will receive $4,877,000. Under hospital insurance it received nothing in 1956-57 and will receive $21,443,000 in 1960-61. Under the heading welfare it received $5,971,000 in 1956-57 and will receive $10,331,000 in 1960-61. Under vocational training, it received $549,000 in 1956-57—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not sure I follow the connection between this set of figures which the hon. member is giving concerning federal payments to British Columbia and the resolution before us.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): I was endeavouring to show that in fact the government was carrying on a policy designed to develop the economy along the lines indicated in the amendment. Let us look at the terms of the amendment. It proposes that a board should be constituted for the purpose of developing an economic policy designed to create a high and stable level of income and employment, and I was trying to show that the federal government is already carrying out such a policy at the present time with the help of very capable advisers, and that the setting up of such a board as is recommended by the hon. member for Essex East is completely unnecessary and would be only a waste of the taxpayers' money. If Your Honour agrees with that line of thought, I should like to complete putting these figures on the record.

I am suggesting that one policy for the whole country on a national basis would not be adequate, because the creation of high levels of employment in particular areas requires special means. I am suggesting that one of the things we have to do is to put the provinces in a position where they can deal with particular problems, and that this in itself would tend to assure a high level of employment. I am suggesting that these payments which the federal government is making to the province of British Columbia are helping British Columbia to deal with this problem and, as I have pointed out, employment in British Columbia is at the highest level in its history.

I believe I was dealing with the item of vocational training. I might point out that this has a direct bearing on the maintenance of a high level of employment, because one of the things we need to do in order to get people working, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Vancouver East, is to put them in a position where they are able to take advantage of the opportunities which are available as a result of technological changes; to enable them to change their jobs if the advance of machinery should make that necessary. Thus, this particular item of vocational training is one which has been advocated by many welfare organizations.

I believe it is very admirable, and I am sure the whole house will recall that the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) has worked very actively in this regard. In fact, I was just reading in Hansard of February 1 of this year an exchange which took place on this subject between the minister and the hon. member for Essex East. The hon. member for Essex East asked the following question as reported on page 609 of Hansard:

> Has the Minister of Labour received a report from the vocational training advisory council respecting the vocational training program for unemployed persons under federal-provincial cost-sharing arrangements?
>
> What is being done by the federal government to encourage the fullest possible use of this program to provide new job opportunities for jobless persons with no formal training in a specific trade?

To which the Minister of Labour replied as follows:

> This program was discussed at the last meeting of the vocational training advisory council held on December 3 and 4, 1959, and the views of the council, as recorded in the minutes of the meeting, have been received.
> The federal government is constantly urging provincial governments to make the greatest possible use of the federal-provincial cost-sharing program provided in schedule "M" of the special vocational training projects agreement for training of unemployed persons.

Mr. Deschatelets: May I be permitted to ask the hon. member for the reference?

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Yes, that was on February 1, 1960, as reported on page 609 of Hansard. I think that will underline the connection between some of these figures and work being carried out directly by the provincial government in solving the problems to which the hon. member for Essex East has directed attention.

As I was saying, under the heading of vocational training the province received $549,000 in 1956-57 and in 1960-61 it will receive $1,553,000, almost three times as much. Under highways and transportation, another field which is of great importance in permitting the transport of goods, and so on, thereby assuring a high level of economic activity, the province received $6,680,000 in 1956-57 and will receive $18,872,000 in 1960-61. Again, that is about three times as much. Under the heading of resource development the province received $846,000 in 1956-57 and will receive $2,257,000 in 1960-61. Under the heading of slum clearance it received nothing in 1956-57 and will receive $700,000 in 1960-61. Under civil defence it received $187,000 in 1956-57 and will receive $450,000 in 1960-61. Under the heading of municipal winter works it received nothing in 1956-57 and will receive $1,335,000 in 1960-61. Under the heading of "other" it received $10,000 in 1956-57 and will receive nothing in 1960-61.

The grand total of payments made by the federal government to the province of British Columbia in 1956-57 amounted to $75,917,000, and in 1960-61 it will be $136,701,000.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I had just finished putting some figures on the record. I was showing how the payments by the federal government to the province of British Columbia had almost doubled since this government came into office and had thereby created a high level of economic activity and a high level of employment in the province of British Columbia by putting the government in a better position to deal with its problems. This policy has been in line with what most of the labour organizations have advocated in the country. I hold in my hand a labour research publication of the Canadian congress of labour, January to April, 1960. These are some of the suggestions they made at that time as to what in their opinion would create a high level of employment:

> Other possible employment stimulators are tax cuts, bigger income tax exemptions, higher social security payments, more aid to farmers, more aid to underdeveloped countries.

Generally speaking, when I have heard representations of this kind made my first reaction has been to say: That is all very well, but if you want the government to spend more money and if you want lower taxes, it is utterly impossible. But in making those statements to the labour organizations I entirely underestimated the capabilities of our present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) who, I might say is, in my opinion, the best Minister of Finance we have ever had in this country or are ever likely to have.

In addition to the payments made to the province of British Columbia, on a nationwide basis social expenditures on the part of the government in 1959 amounted to $1,500 million as compared with $1,000 million for the last year that the Liberal government was in office, or a 50 per cent increase over all in expenditures of that nature. In 1956-57, the last year the Liberals were in power, the federal government's contributions to all of the provinces, not including payments to individuals, amounted to $689 million. For the fiscal year 1958-59 the amount was $1,212 million, or an increase of 76 per cent. In the light of that, it would seem almost impossible that we could have had tax cuts at the same time.

I have said many times that the average taxpayer in Canada is paying less in taxes now than he paid when the present government came to office. To refresh my memory on this the other day I obtained a copy of the T-1 short form income tax return for 1956 and for 1959, and I shall just pick out one or two examples at random to show that notwithstanding those tremendous payments that have been made by the federal government to the provinces, notwithstanding the fact that the Minister of Finance has been able to present a balanced budget this year and in fact forecast a slight surplus, we were able at the same time to enjoy tax cuts. As I say, I shall pick out a few examples at random.

In the year 1956 a person with a taxable income of $1,300 paid $200 in taxes; in 1959, at the same scale, he paid $184. A person with a taxable income of $1,500 in 1956 paid $234; in 1959 he paid only $217. A person with a taxable income of $1,700 in 1956 paid $268; in 1959 he paid $250. Let me go up into a higher bracket. A person with a taxable income of $3,000 paid $509 in 1956; in 1959 he paid $494. This will give some indication of how the people of this country have benefited since the present Minister of Finance has taken over directing the monetary policy of this country.

Let me come back to some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Essex East. Perhaps they may have stemmed from a press conference in which he appeared some time ago, and in which he first dealt with some of the remarks made by the governor of the Bank of Canada which, as I said today, he appeared to be in favour of. I still do not know whether he was or not because he never cares to commit himself too definitely to any policy so he can come back to the other side if it suits him. In the press conference, of which I have a transcript here, of Tuesday, February 2, in which the guest was Hon. Paul Martin and the panel Frank Swanson, Ottawa Citizen, chairman; Tom Gould, Victoria Times; Peter Dempson, Toronto Telegram; and Arthur Blakely, Montreal Gazette, Mr. Gould asked a question, which appears in the middle of the transcript, but he did not get a very satisfactory answer. He went on to say:

> But this is a much bigger thing. Mr. Coyne, the governor of the Bank of Canada, told us that Canadians are living beyond their means.
> Mr. Martin: Yes, I read Mr. Coyne in Winnipeg. And I read Mr. Fleming's budget speech, as it were, before the Canadian Club in Toronto a few weeks ago. But I also read the speech of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, which took serious issue with what Mr. Coyne had said, and with what his own colleague, has been preaching for the last month or so.

Mr. Gould: Does the Liberal party take issue with both of them?

Mr. Martin: Well, the Liberal party is studying. We don't have all of the facts that are available to the governor of the bank and to Mr. Fleming, but we are studying these facts, and when we have arrived at a conclusion, we will certainly unhesitatingly state our position.

They certainly do not have all the facts in some of the statements they make. If what we heard here this afternoon is unhesitatingly stating the position of the Liberal party I am afraid I would hate to see the hon. member wavering around on anything because he was in the position where the Liberal party had considered the thing for some considerable length of time. The only thing they can decide is that they have nothing to suggest. We had better get somebody who knows something about it, who has looked into the matter and is in a position to take the place of the opposition and make some representation to the government because the opposition seems to be entirely inept in following any kind of a course.

I should like to say that in my opinion the government is doing a good job at the present time. They have competent advisers. As I have already said, we have the most competent Minister of Finance we have ever had. The setting up of a board such as suggested by the hon. member for Essex East and the Liberal party would be entirely useless and a waste of the taxpayers money.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, if we were to listen to statements made both inside and outside the house by members of the present government, including the hon. member who has just resumed his seat, we would be led to believe that never in our history has our country witnessed better times and a more buoyant economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robichaud: I hear applause coming from the government side. I hope this same applause will be repeated when I give them not only the facts but the truth.

It was the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) who said in this house last year—and here again our hon. friends on the government side may applaud—that Canadians worked more, earned more, saved more and spent more than in any year in history. In order to complete the statement the Prime Minister should have added: If we have partially emerged from the recession of 1958—

[Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

An hon. Member: What page are you on?

Mr. Robichaud: —if 1958 and 1959 are recovery years, unemployment has remained abnormally high and we have failed to cope with this important aspect of our economy. And, Mr. Speaker, there is certainly no improvement in 1960.

The purpose of the amendment introduced this afternoon by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) is to bring to light the failure of the present government to reach this major goal of economic policy which cannot be achieved without a high and stable level of employment and income. There is no question in our minds that employment has not kept pace with individual production during the past two years. The hon. member who has just resumed his seat spoke of the high level of employment in his section of the country, British Columbia, and referred to it as the highest level of employment in its history. What he failed to reveal was the percentage of employment compared with the labour force even in British Columbia today.

I have here the latest release available to us concerning the employment situation in Canada. This release from the Department of Labour and the dominion bureau of statistics shows that in the Pacific region as of March 17, 1960 there were 77,309 registrations at national employment service offices of people seeking employment. This figure compares with 74,333 as of March, 1959, an increase of 2,976 in a province where employment has reached the highest level in its history.

When at the peak of what is called a buoyant economic period the number of live claims for unemployment insurance benefits as of April 30 last reached 714,000 compared with 610,000 at the same time last year, an increase in the number of unemployed of 104,000 or 17 per cent, and when the present figure is only 8,000 below that for April 30, 1958; when we were supposed to be in a period of full recession, there must be something wrong somewhere with our Canadian system and with the policy of the present government. Furthermore when we consider the number of unplaced applicants without work and seeking jobs the situation is still worse. In fact, the figures obtained from the national employment service reveal that as of April 30 of this year the number of persons registered for work totalled 756,400 compared with 661,000 last year or an increase of 15 per cent over April 30, 1959.

I obtained these figures on Friday last from the office of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) and I could not understand the statement made this afternoon by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne) when he said that he had had his figures prepared for him by the unemployment insurance commission inasmuch as only last Thursday, May 19, the Minister of Labour told hon. members that the figures would be available from the minister's office and not from the unemployment insurance office.

If we go back to the recession period of 1958 we find that the number of registrations, 747,000 as of April 30 of that year, is exceeded by 9,400 on the same date this year. The fact is that there is unemployment. There is heavy unemployment almost everywhere and, as Calvin Coolidge said in 1931 in speaking of conditions in the United States, we can say of Canada today: the country is not in good condition. The present government has failed to implement a bold and definite program which would be in line with the promises made—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will recall that when we were considering the relevancy or propriety of the amendment I stated that the problem of unemployment in so far as government financial policy is concerned had been resolved by a vote of the house. I do not object, of course, to the hon. member pointing up the state of employment as relevant to the amendment to establish an economic board but I would ask him not to get into matters that have already been debated and concluded.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I want to abide by your decision but I have to make reference to the unemployment figures, especially after what was said by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway this afternoon, before coming to the main subject under discussion, the setting up of a national advisory board on economic development and automation. I want to assure you that my remarks as they refer directly to the unemployment situation will be limited.

The complacency of the present government in coping with the situation and its failure to take the necessary measures to improve the unbalanced position arising out of the increase in national income and the increase in the percentage of unemployment have led the opposition to introduce the amendment now under discussion. We recognize that full employment, desirable as it may be, is not possible in a country like ours. The fact remains, however, and I want to say this again, that in the last two years production has shown a trend to move above its pre-recession peak and during the same period employment continued its downward trend. In fact, in December, 1959, production had increased by 5.6 per cent above its pre-recession peak while employment was down by 3.1 per cent.

It is evident that a high and stable level of employment and healthy economic position cannot be achieved by the implementation of the policies of the present government. We therefore have every reason and every right to suggest to the government the setting up of a national advisory board on economic development and automation. The government has failed so far to listen to the suggestions which have emanated from this side of the house in the last few months, and as we have a strong desire to reduce unemployment to a minimum we are placing before the government a new suggestion which we feel could provide badly needed guidance and advice to enable the government to cope with this national problem.

In the few minutes at my disposal I should like to deal more specifically with the amendment as it affects the Atlantic provinces. This is an area, a section of the country which, unlike many others, is not blessed with the kind of natural resources that spurt out of the ground and produce large incomes without too much imaginative initiation or without too risky capital investment. The urgent need for getting together the representatives of industry, labour, agriculture and the universities is more evident in the Atlantic provinces than in any other areas of Canada. In fact, a step in that direction was taken a few years ago with the formation of the Atlantic provinces economic council, and the results of co-operation with that organization are already being felt in some sections of the Atlantic provinces. In no other section of this country today is there a more urgent need for this than in the Atlantic provinces. Our 105,000 unplaced applicants, as of April 30 of this year, reaffirm the fact that our percentage of 14.5 per cent of our labour force seeking jobs remains close to 50 per cent above the national average and almost 85 per cent above the Ontario average.

I know that I would be called out of order if I chose to discuss, in all its detail, the unfortunate unemployment situation in the Atlantic provinces. However, the present picture is a clear and an unquestionable evidence of the failure of the government to meet our needs and resolve our problems. How can the government, how can the Prime Minister justify his attitude in view of the existing conditions? I ask again, is the government wise when, at this period of unexceeded unemployment, it advertises opportunities for immediate employment for carpenters, painters, bricklayers, and so on. How could the Prime Minister—

Mr. Lambert: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The members of this house seem to have heard all of this about a fortnight ago when a similar motion to go into committee of supply was being discussed. It is my understanding, following Your Honour's ruling this afternoon and the interpretation of the rules of the house, that this practice should not be continued. I would submit to you, sir, that what we are now hearing is entirely out of order.

Mr. Robichaud: I am surprised that the hon. member would prevent a member from the Atlantic provinces from bringing forward—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is raising a point of order on the relevancy of debate. Before the hon. member who has the floor speaks to the point, may I remind him that the point refers undoubtedly to the amendment which was moved on the fourth supply motion, which was that a comprehensive plan and program of federal assistance be given to strengthen the basic economy of the Atlantic provinces. My conception of this debate would be that the hon. member should relate the setting up of this committee to its effect on the Atlantic provinces rather than to the policy of the government as such.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I say a word on the point of order? I understand that on the supply motion on May 2, the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) made the same kind of speech as he is making now, and that speech is to be found at page 3477 and following of Hansard for that date. It was the same kind of speech, the same theme, as he is giving now.

Mr. Robichaud: On the point of order, I may say it is true that I referred to one point which I have raised in a previous debate, but only one sentence. I want to relate it to a statement which has been made by the Prime Minister a few days ago in London, and which is altogether different from the point I raised in the previous debate.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member would be in order if he could, in dealing with the special interests of the Atlantic provinces, he could relate them to the setting up of the proposed committee. My hope is that all hon. members will refrain from repetition of other debates which have taken place on unemployment, and specifically one which was directed against the government's financial policy with regard to unemployment. In so far as hon. members deal with unemployment they might deal with it as a reason or basis for the establishment of the committee which is proposed in the amendment.

Mr. Robichaud: This is exactly the point to which I was coming. I want to refer to the last statement made by the Prime Minister when he said that we shall be able to welcome and absorb into employment many tens of thousands of immigrants. We are calling today for the setting up of a national advisory board to discuss economic development and automation. How can we relate this statement by the Prime Minister to the present situation? Is the Prime Minister, in his complacency, refusing to recognize the fact that Canada cannot absorb into employment today hundreds of thousands of her own labour force? How can he make such a definite assertion when there is heavy unemployment in every region, in every locality in this country? He said, when asked a question by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) that there was no necessity for any comment. I challenge him to repeat such a statement before the 700,000 unemployed in this country and the 100,000 unemployed in the Atlantic provinces.

I agree that the question before us at this moment is, what could result from the recommendations of a national advisory beard composed of representatives of industry, labour, agriculture and the universities? I am convinced that many of the suggestions evolving from such a board would be in line with many of the recommendations which we of the official opposition have sought to bring to the attention of the government in the last few months. I cannot help—

Mr. Regnier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; the hon. member is reading his speech.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I admit that I am referring—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has heard the point of order raised. I shall be glad to hear what he has to say.

Mr. Robichaud: I certainly have heard the point of order raised. I am referring to notes which I have here on my desk, just as 99 per cent of the members of this house are doing.

I cannot help but remind the government, and particularly the representatives from the Atlantic provinces, of the pledge which was included in their Atlantic resolutions and which they failed to support when they had the opportunity to do so in this house. In order to achieve a high and stable level of employment in the Atlantic provinces this government must give a more comprehensive and co-ordinated approach to the establishment of new industries in that particular area. This goal may only be reached—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the hon. member did not understand my earlier reference to the scope of the debate. He is arguing now that this government should do something or other with respect to the Atlantic provinces, and that is not the subject matter of this resolution. This resolution asks the government to consider setting up a committee. I hope the hon. member will address himself to that problem.

Mr. Robichaud: I am referring to the Atlantic provinces, just as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, before recess and from eight o'clock to 8.15, referred to his province of British Columbia. We have problems in the Atlantic provinces and we feel that those problems can be met by the establishment of a national advisory board on economic development and automation with representatives from government, industry, labour and agriculture. Such a board would have many suggestions to make to the government. I feel that I have a right to bring to the attention of the government certain recommendations which could be made by such a board. This is what I am endeavouring to do now. As stated in the Gordon commission report:

> The long term and ultimately effective solution of the problem must be expected from further resource development. The core of the problem is the creation of conditions which will attract capital into such development.

I have no doubt that a national advisory board, such as that suggested in the amendment introduced this afternoon by the hon. member for Essex East, would bring in suggestions like the one which is included in the Gordon commission report.

Capital will not be attracted into such development until such barriers as exist today—such as heavy taxes, high cost money, unrestricted freight rate structure and many others—are removed by the application of bold and comprehensive measures such as those which could be suggested by an advisory board like that mentioned this afternoon.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman made the same speech and dealt with the same matters in his speech on May 2. Is it proper to have the same speech made again? Surely if it was relevant to the amendment then under debate, either this speech or the amendment now under debate must be out of order now.

Mr. Speaker: I must say that I agree that we have been over this ground on the specific amendment which was moved on the fourth supply motion to which I have made reference.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On May 2.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member does not seem to me to be contributing anything new. He knows that it is not consistent with our practice to repeat, to rethresh or restate a proposition that has been disposed of by the house.

Mr. Robichaud: The suggestions which I am now bringing to the attention of the house, Mr. Speaker, are altogether different and are introduced before the house in an altogether different manner from that in which they were introduced in the debate which has just been mentioned by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). I understand that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway said the Minister of Finance was the best minister of finance we ever had.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robichaud: I agree that he is the best Minister of Finance to raise points of order that ever sat in the House of Commons. He is also the only Minister of Finance who ever called a Speaker of the house back after he had left the chair.

I said earlier that our area was not blessed with the kind of natural resources which spurt out of the ground and produce large incomes. But we have in the Atlantic provinces thousands of miles of coastline, the sea and a shoreline which provide our population with excellent harbours in the proximity of choice fishing grounds. When I am dealing with this problem concerning the fishing industry of the Atlantic provinces I hope that at least for once the Minister of Finance will remain in his seat and not raise points of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He will do so if the hon. member will for once follow the rules.

Mr. Robichaud: There is in the Atlantic provinces a resource which is not exploited to its full capacity. The fishing industry has been struggling for generations and has been partially developed by the hard work, the ingenuity and, I should add, the reasonable amount of good luck of the parties interested. The fishing industry means as much to the population of the Atlantic provinces as wheat means to the prairie farmer and as agriculture means to the farmers of Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. Regnier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is still reading his speech.

Mr. Robichaud: I realize, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members on the government side are not pleased when we of the official opposition try to bring to their attention problems concerning our respective areas.

Mr. Speaker: That is not the point of order which has been raised. The point of order, according to the hon. member who has raised it, is that the hon. member for Gloucester is reading a previously prepared speech. As he knows, that procedure is contrary to the practice or, I should say, the approved practice of this house. I will not say it is contrary to the practice because, if I am not mistaken, I have seen other hon. members who appeared to read their speeches. If the point of order is taken, the hon. member should observe the proprieties and not do what was complained of.

Mr. Robichaud: I will endeavour, Mr. Speaker, to comply with the rules and requirements of this house. As I have said before, I have been referring to notes from time to time and I intend to carry on.

I was just referring to the assistance which is being given by the federal government to the fishing industry. When one considers the total assistance given to fishermen for the years 1946 to 1959, including all assistance that comes under the jurisdiction of the federal government—including all the direct assistance programs such as in the construction of draggers or long-liners, in the Newfoundland bait assistance operation, the assistance given in the construction of bait freezing and storage facilities, assistance in transportation of British Columbia frozen herring to the maritimes to be used as bait during the bait shortage period, assistance through the agency of the fisheries price support board such as the price support purchasing activities; assistance given under the salt assistance to the producers of dried and salt fish; assistance given under fishermen's indemnity fund and the bounty for the destruction of harbour and grey seals—we find that in the years I have mentioned from 1946 to 1959 the total amount distributed by the federal government comes to less than $13 million.

When during the same period we take into consideration the amount paid under the Agricultural Prices Support Act, which alone was over $100 million paid by the federal treasury, and to this could be added the many hundreds of millions of dollars paid for grants to agricultural fairs, for premiums on high grade hogs, for grants on cheese and cheese factories, for payments made under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and for many other measures of assistance given by the federal government, through the Department of Agriculture—we must admit that the fishing industry as a whole, and particularly in the Atlantic provinces, is not receiving its adequate share of attention and of assistance from the federal government.

A national advisory board, as suggested in our amendment, composed of representatives of industry, including the fishing industry, labour, agriculture and universities, could devote to this most important problem the consideration which it deserves.

If the Canadian fishing industry is to improve its efficiency it must have better attention and increased assistance from the federal government. As I have stated earlier, the potentials are available. We have the coastline, the harbours and the fishing grounds. With proper planning and adequate assistance I would venture to state that we in the Atlantic provinces could supply facilities to an additional 3,000 or even 5,000 to 8,000 more fishermen whose lucrative production would provide work to an additional 15,000 to 20,000 shore help in the processing and packaging of fish for market.

Such a proposal, when implemented—and I repeat that the potential is available—would reduce by 25 per cent the number of unemployed in our Atlantic provinces at this particular period of the year. I hope to have more to say on this matter when the estimates of the Minister of Fisheries are introduced for discussion.

If our country is experiencing today an unprecedented period of development and of economic activity, as is asserted by hon. members opposite, the fact remains that at every opportunity we hear government supporters referring to the hope which lies ahead, to the vision which is being offered by the Prime Minister or by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton). Never since the period of the hungry thirties has there been a more urgent need for the setting up of a national advisory board to the end that the most effective use of the resources of Canada, and more particularly its manpower resources, may be assured in the interests of public welfare.

The government has failed to meet the situation and as a result the unemployment problem is growing from year to year. I firmly believe that the time has come for the setting up of such a board whose duty it would be to advise the government and to recommend proposals regarding economic development and automation. Representatives of industry, labour, agriculture and of our universities are the only ones in a position to submit proposals which would safeguard our economy and protect our labour force.

On every occasion when we of the official opposition seek to bring forward suggestions we are smeared by members on the government side and are accused of playing politics or of being prophets of doom and gloom. I would—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, is it proper under the rules of this house to say that some hon. members are trying to smear other hon. members? Surely it is a reflection on hon. members which is not in accordance with the rules and practice of this house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I should like to say this. I think this last intervention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) clearly indicates that he has not raised a point of order but has raised his voice at this time for only one purpose and that is to interrupt the hon. member who is trying to put forward the point of view of this party. It is about time this was stopped.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: An hon. member in rising to speak to a point of order should not impute improper motives to any hon. member who has a perfect right to rise at any time on a point of order. The rule of debate is that members shall refrain from making statements which are offensive; but this rule has not been strictly interpreted, particularly when it is not applied to an individual. I think that while it is a matter of interpretation of the rule, I could not intervene on the kind of statement which has been made in general terms about hon. members.

Mr. Robichaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

As I have mentioned once before in this house, the Atlantic provinces offer an outlet, a market of one and a half million of population, for the production of central and western Canada. In return we of the Atlantic provinces must rely on export markets for 70 to 75 per cent of our production. Our exorbitant freight rate structure prevents us from competing favourably with the more fortunately located and endowed central Canadian region. As an outlying part of Canada our industrial development is handicapped by the long haul and the freight rate making policy which tend to accentuate the decline of manufacturing in our region instead of helping us properly to participate in the national trend of development which exists in other regions of this country.

When we of the opposition claim for a new deal, a more favourable sharing agreement for the construction of the trans-Canada highway, our Atlantic provincial premiers, friendly to the present administration, remain silent and seem satisfied with the present arrangement; this notwithstanding the fact that our construction cost of the highway on a per capita basis is at least double what it is in any other section of Canada, with the probable exception of British Columbia.

If it was the intent of the fathers of confederation that the maritimes should have cheap access to the markets of central Canada it remains the responsibility of the central government to meet this specific problem which requires a solution if our transportation system is to serve the national interest without prejudice to the industries of other areas, and a national advisory board as we are suggesting could make suggestions to the government to this effect.

We of the Atlantic provinces offer an ideal opportunity for an era of co-operative effort to improve our living conditions, and this cannot be achieved by first aid of political expediency or of economic expediency which do nothing else but explore the surface and neglect the core of the disease. The patchwork effect of attempts made in the last decade, both by the present federal administration and by the previous administration, has had some influence in equalizing our pace of progress; but nevertheless there is continued evidence of lack of permanency, lack of sound permanency, which is essential if we are to provide the solution to our economic problems confronting the Atlantic region today.

Mention has been made of capital projects such as the Prince Edward Island causeway and the Chignecto canal. For the last three years the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) has been referring in this house to a preliminary engineering estimate of the Chignecto project which is being prepared by the Department of Public Works. On March 4 of last year, as reported on page 1593 of Hansard, the minister advised the house that arising out of the work which had been done to date he had asked that certain other estimates be worked out. Again on May 26 of last year he reported to the house that his department was giving close study both to the economy and the engineering feasibility of this project. Then on June 11 last year the minister referred to estimates—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in my remarks I intend to address myself to the amendment before us at this time. However, certain statements have been made by speakers of the Liberal group who have participated in this debate, by the mover of the motion and by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) who has just sat down. The statements in question had to do with the statistics which are issued showing those registering at the national employment service, and the hon. member has painted a picture which I feel should be rectified at this time.

I want to point out to the hon. member that in analysing the figures of those seeking employment the economists find that 48 per cent of those registered are seasonal workers. One of the reasons why these figures are to a great extent higher now than they have ever been with regard to those seeking employment during the period December 1 to May 15 is that the seasonal benefit formula was changed so that they could more readily qualify to draw these seasonal benefits. Also the actual formula of benefits as against contributions has changed in that those who made six contributions can draw five benefits, whereas under the former government it was two for one in the same way as the regular formula. Consequently more people are able to draw these benefits as a result of the change of formula which this government has brought about.

In addition to that the two additional months during which people can draw benefits have a great deal to do with this; and the hon. member must not forget that in the Atlantic region the people he talks about were never registered for employment under the previous administration because fishermen have been brought in to the scheme by this government and they are now able to register for benefits.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was the former government which brought fishermen under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member for Essex East can hold his patience—

Mr. Robichaud: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Starr: I did not endeavour to interfere while the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) was speaking this afternoon, although more than 50 per cent of it was irrelevant to the amendment he ultimately brought in. Let us look at this amendment which has been submitted. It reads:

> This house recommends for the consideration of the government the immediate setting up of a national advisory board on economic development and automation with representatives of governments, industry, labour, agriculture and universities, for the purpose of developing economic policies designed to achieve a high and stable level of income and employment.

The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) on March 2 of this year submitted in this house 25 points on behalf of the Liberal group, and the second point read as follows:

> Canada should have a national advisory board on economic development, automation, and employment to help deal with long term problems of production and employment.

This was what the opposition suggested on that occasion on March 2. Now they come back with the same suggestion. They have nothing new to offer. This is a method by which they feel they can have another committee set up. It was the practice of the former government to set up committees, advisory committees, and advisory committees to the advisory committees. That is one way of shirking the responsibility of government. This government does not intend to set up committees in order to shirk its responsibilities. This government feels it has a responsibility toward this problem, and intends to take action in order to do everything possible to relieve the problem.

I am sure hon. members on both sides will have studied the amendment with interest. Coming from the source it did, it is worthy of consideration. At least it represents a positive suggestion and, as such, it is welcome. However, I say it only repeats what was said on March 2. Many other ideas have been brought forward by the hon. member for Essex East on previous occasions on the very same topic. This is a topic which takes a great deal of his attention, because he feels it is one on which he can make political hay, and he has admitted that, probably, outside the house quite often.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a point of order. Surely the hon. gentleman realizes that that is imputing a motive, which is contrary to our rules. I ask the minister to withdraw. The reason I bring forward the subject of unemployment is because this government is shirking its responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: The rule to which I was referring a minute ago is standing order 35 which says:

> No member shall speak disrespectfully of Her Majesty, nor of any of the royal family, nor of His Excellency or the person administering the government of Canada; nor use offensive words against either house, or against any member thereof No member may reflect upon any vote of the house, except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

A good deal of latitude has been used in the interpretation of that rule, but I think that generally we have refrained in this house from imputing motives to members in the discharge of their duty. That is the substance of what the hon. minister has just said about the hon. member for Essex East, that his actions here were actuated by motives that are, perhaps, not improper; but as the hon. member has taken offence, I would suggest a modification.

Mr. Starr: I will abide by that, although I am surprised that the hon. member would take offence to a description such as I have given of him. After all, he does profess to be an expert on agriculture, and I think that making hay was appropriate in describing it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You are setting a good tone. Keep on that level.

Mr. Starr: Anyway, the hon. member remains unswerving in his devotion to the principle that anything can be done as long as we set up a committee to do it. I think the hon. member for Essex East looks at the economy of this country through dark-coloured glasses. He has advocated a great many committees, advisory committees, special committees, and now this one which is put forward today.

Let us take a look at this latest creation of his. Apparently this is to be one of those advisory bodies which would deal with the whole field of national development. That would take in a great many fields of endeavour. At the same time, so that this committee might not have too easy a job, the hon. member throws in automation for good measure. On that committee he wants representatives of government, industry, labour, agriculture and the universities to serve.

On that ground alone, I submit that because of the diversity of interests, the job of the committee would be impossible from the very outset. What would its job be? It would be to develop economic policies. Surely what that would amount to would be the setting up of a cabinet outside the cabinet; a committee set up as a government outside the government, bringing forth policies on a national level. This would be—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Liberal policy.

Mr. Starr: I know that the setting up of such a large and unwieldy committee is a technique often used by governments that wish to evade their responsibility but, as I said earlier, this government does not intend to evade its responsibility. This government intends to continue to deal with the things for which it is responsible. One can, it is true, visualize the necessity of setting up committees from time to time to deal with certain specific matters, but I find it difficult to justify the necessity for setting up any group with such a wide and sweeping field of operations as is suggested in this resolution.

What does the amendment seek to do? The objective is, of course, a laudable one, the achievement of a high and stable level of income and employment. At this stage, two points arise in my mind for consideration. I maintain, first, that in setting this kind of objective the mover of this amendment is once again simply trying to get in at the back door when he could not get in at the front door. When it comes to designing new costumes for old issues the hon. member for Essex East is an expert, as he has proved time and time again in this house. Despite one disappointment after another he shows an uncanny ability to lead his colleagues of the opposition down the same trail of depression and doom and gloom time and time again.

I say this in all sincerity, because here is a member of this house who has on many occasions previously disregarded any statistical figures of any kind on employment in this country and has come out with statistics of his own doubling the figures which those who have the proper sources for compiling this material have put out.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order. The hon. gentleman said I have come forward with statistics of my own. I would ask him to withdraw that remark or prove his charge.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, during the last session of parliament the hon. member for Essex East time and time again stated on his own authority that there were more than a million people unemployed in this country—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I ask the hon. gentleman to point to the occasion when I said that. The minister is confused. I said at that time that because of the policies of this government a projection into the future would suggest that there might be unemployment at those levels, and I was not very far out. They were projections and statistics, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Starr: When the hon. member for Essex East says he was not far out, evidently figures do not mean anything to him because he was out more than one quarter of a million.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Give us the facts.

Mr. Starr: Those projections of what he said would happen had a great deal to do with dampening the spirit of the economy of this country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member should not underestimate himself. After all, he was a member of the treasury benches for many years. He came to be known as a national figure and there are people who take for granted that what he says may be true, even though he endeavours to paint a picture different from what is actually happening in the country; and it has a psychological effect on the people of the country. I would not be one bit surprised if, because of his statements and his many predictions, many sales of automobiles were lost in his own city of Windsor. I would not be one bit surprised if that type of prediction caused unemployment in that city.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They are being lost now by the policies of this government.

Mr. Starr: What are the facts in respect of the economy of this country? In the first place labour income in this country is at a record high. Last month, for the first time in the history of this country, we passed the $75 weekly average of labour income in the country.

Mr. Robichaud: So has unemployment.

Mr. Starr: Industrial expansion has continued at unprecedented rates; steel mills were at 104 per cent capacity in March; production was up all along the line. What does the Canadian Statistical Review say on page 19 of the 1959 supplement? It shows that in 1954, those buoyant days of Liberal rule—1954 is the year they always point to; the hon. member for Essex East mentioned that date this afternoon—industrial production stood at 128.5. This was in the buoyant days of Liberal rule. In March, 1960, the latest available figure, it stood at 169.3, a gain of nearly 41 points.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You said that this afternoon.

Mr. Starr: Let us look at employment. In manufacturing, in 1959 there were 172,000 more Canadians at work than in 1954; 50,000 more in transportation; 110,000 more at work at construction; 315,000 more at work in service industries and 118,000 more working in trade. There has been a decline in farm labour, but this is due to two things: first, increasing mechanization of farms and, second, the movement of people from farm work to more highly paid industrial jobs. This transition, Mr. Speaker, has been going on since the second world war. There is nothing new in it. Economists have been pointing this out for many years and we get these reports from them continually.

The simple fact of the matter is that this is one of the symptoms of an economy in a state of transition. In the final report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects, the following appears:

> The record of growth reflects the emergence of this country as an increasingly versatile, skilled and rich industrial nation.

This change-over has been taking place at a rate unparalleled in any modern country, with the exception perhaps of Japan. Even in Japan problems of technological change and automation are becoming increasingly difficult and, from the reports we get, even in the Soviet union.

What would this committee come up with? Would it come up with something similar to what the committee dealing with the Atlantic provinces came up with?

Mr. Robichaud: On a point of order—

Mr. Starr: The last commission—

Mr. Robichaud: I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the minister is reading his speech.

Mr. Starr: The last commission of this type was appointed by the previous government and it dealt with the problem of the Atlantic provinces. It made the suggestion that the federal government should pay the transportation of those residing in the Atlantic provinces if they wish to go elsewhere. I do not know whether this type of committee would bring out anything more than what was said then. I know the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) is very much interested in the Atlantic provinces. I am sure he would not agree with what that commission brought out with respect to the province in which he resides.

Our task in this country has been the greater because we have been attempting to affect those changes through the free efforts of free men and free institutions in a free democratic country rather than through government control or regimentation.

What is the situation with regard to persons with jobs? The D.B.S. report for March shows a total of 5,668,000 Canadians with jobs; in March, 1959, the figure was 5,552,000, or 116,000 fewer. In March, 1958, the figure was 5,401,000, or 267,000 fewer than this year. In 1957 the figure was 5,460,000, or 208,000 lower. In 1956 the figure was 5,309,000, or 359,000 fewer than this year. I am sure that even the hon. member for Essex East will admit that employment in Canada is at a record level for all time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is unemployment that we are concerned about.

Mr. Starr: In comparison with any other year—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is unemployment that we are concerned about.

Mr. Starr: Of course the hon. member drew up this resolution and in it he dealt with employment. He refers to a stable level of income and employment. Surely, in these circumstances, he must admit that employment in Canada is at a record level for all time.

There is no mention of unemployment in his resolution at all.

Mr. Robichaud: What about unplaced applicants?

Mr. Starr: That this is another method of camouflage that the hon. member is pursuing is borne out by the fact that he made his speech and would not divulge his amendment until he was able to get in what he wanted to get in for the purpose that he had in mind.

Industrial production in Canada is up 5 per cent over last year; retail sales are up almost 2 per cent; labour income is 5½ per cent higher; employment is up 2 per cent over last year; and construction awards are up over 100 per cent over last year; that is for the first three months of this year—

Mr. Deschatelets: What is the increase in construction? Is that all construction?

Mr. Starr: Yes, taken from the Financial Post of May 21 of this year. The article gives the figures for the month. In the field of construction, contract awards, changes from a year ago are up 106.7 per cent. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, from the figures I have given so far one can see no sign of an economy in the throes of disaster. In January and February this year exports climbed 27 per cent over the same period last year. This is a good sign. We are closing the gap that has existed between exports and imports. But the responsibility for doing these things is not the responsibility of any committee that may be set up. It is the responsibility of the government. I say that the government and the actions that the government has taken have brought about the situation I have outlined this evening.

I admit, of course, that it would not be realistic for the opposition to concede that the government is responsible for these things. That is not their job. Their job is to sit here and try to find how best to criticize the government. If the members of the opposition are any good at all they will find ways and means to criticize the government. We expect them to do so and so do the people of Canada. But anyone who travels across the country can see nothing but tremendous expansion, hustle and bustle. Sales are up and people are earning more, spending more and saving more—

Mr. Robichaud: And more unemployment too.

Mr. Starr: —than ever before in the history of Canada.

Mr. Robichaud: And more unemployment too.

Mr. Starr: I said that it is not the job of the opposition to praise the government for what has been done in this field. Nor is it the job of the Canadian Labour Congress but in their last brief the Canadian Labour Congress did not hesitate to commend the government for what it has done in the past and ask us to carry on in the same way. It is interesting to read their brief because it certainly gives a realistic picture of what is happening. It is not often that a government of this country can gain commendation from the Canadian Labour Congress. We are proud of the fact that we have been able to do these things which have led the Canadian Labour Congress to agree with us and to urge us to carry on the work we have been doing. They say that the government has done a good job and they ask us to keep up the good work.

That is exactly what we intend to do, Mr. Speaker. None of these things can be done overnight. I need not tell that to the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin). It took him from 1919 to 1956 to bring in hospital insurance—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And even then he did not finish the job.

Mr. Starr: —and I know he was working on it all the time. But there are certain obstacles in the way before you can bring these things into effect. Certainly some good suggestions were made with respect to this matter last March. I must say that the hon. member for Essex East was only partially responsible because his colleague, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), added 17 points. There may be some good suggestions but they require study. They only made their suggestions on March 2 last and surely they did not expect that we would put the whole formula into effect in a matter of months.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why not?

Mr. Starr: We are studying these things and we are proceeding as rapidly as we possibly can. But the results of what has been done since we took office in June, 1957 are evident already. There are many problems in many fields. I feel that the most important problem before us is to put our manpower to work on a full employment basis.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: We all agree with that. As I have said, our economy is in a state of rapid transition and to bear me out I would point out that the royal commission on economic development has stated the same thing. While tremendous expansion continues in Canada there will continue to be problems, and automation is one of these problems. My department is currently studying the effects of automation, and we have already made a survey touching on the electrical industry, the heavy machinery industry, the household appliance industry and the automobile industry. The committee established by the department is composed of labour representatives among others, and they are studying these things. You have to be an expert. The board suggested in this amendment could not study automation. How would you be able to pick for the personnel of such a board people who would know anything about automation? Automation needs to be studied by experts and that is what we have in the department. That is exactly how we are proceeding in an endeavour to find out what is happening in the field of automation and how it affects labour and manpower. To illustrate how difficult a job this is, I might say that it takes from six months to a year to conduct an on the spot survey in only one industry.

To come back to the amendment, Mr. Speaker, the problems we have to face are not problems that can be solved by any committee. They are problems that must be met by the government which was elected to do the job and which showed in 1958 that it could meet these problems. I do not feel too disappointed when I hear the hon. member for Essex East and others endeavouring to find loopholes whereby they can gain favour in the eyes of the people of the country. That is exactly what I would be doing if I were in the opposition. It is something I did when I was in the opposition but on a constructive basis. I think the hon. member will admit that I did not stray too far from constructive criticism when I was in the opposition.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman did not have the same grounds. You had good government at that time.

Mr. Starr: After all that is his way of survival in the political arena and we expect it. At first I used to feel hurt when I heard an attitude expressed that was not constructive and certain things being implied by using a particular method, but now I have come to know the methods of certain members of the opposition and consequently I am not as worried now as I used to be in 1957 and the early part of 1958. With respect to the criticism of the hon. member for Essex East as to the actions of the government in the field of employment and the government's economic policies, I have come to the conclusion that you have to look closely to find out what his intentions are and then you can proceed on that basis.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that our economy is healthy and more people are working. There are problems because of the growth of our country but they are problems that the government intends to tackle and solve. Certainly we cannot do that in two months as the hon. member expects us to and the committee that has been suggested would not do it in two months.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You have been in office for three years.

Mr. Starr: We would not have a report from such a committee for two years.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You have been in office for three years.

Mr. Starr: We have solved a great many problems in those three years and when we have been here for another 20 years, as the hon. member was—

Mr. McIlraith: You will not be.

Mr. Starr: —there will not be too many problems left in this country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the minister a question? Can he tell us whether, as a result of the speech he made on Thursday last, it is the intention of the government to call a conference of industry and labour as he proposed should be done when he spoke in Gananoque and as reported in the Ottawa Citizen last Friday?

Mr. Starr: There we go again, Mr. Speaker. What the hon. member says is not entirely what I said on Thursday in Gananoque. I do not know what the report in the paper was to which the hon. member refers. I will have to take a look at it and check it but I am sure that the report is not as the hon. member has described it so I cannot answer his question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Another minister misreported.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Just misquoted in the house.

(Translation):

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks, I should like to discuss certain parts of the speech of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr).

I do trust that the Minister of Labour will not take offence at my saying, first of all, that we have just heard a most disappointing speech.

Following the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), we would have expected the Minister of Labour to quote some figures and to come forth with consistent explanations, and with a plan providing much greater hope for the Canadian people than is now justified.

I think the Minister of Labour is a bit of a doubting Thomas.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Not Thomas Aquinas.

Mr. Deschatelets: He has before his very eyes figures issued by his own department, but he does not believe them.

Just a few days ago, he referred to a photograph, published in Montreal newspapers, that showed an unemployment insurance office with such a crowd around it that it overflowed into the street. And the Minister of Labour's answer was that the photograph had been taken before opening time.

Mr. Martel: It is true.

Mr. Deschatelets: Whether it was before or after opening time, and whether those unemployed had been photographed on the sidewalk or inside the office, they are much more significant than a speech, whether in Montreal or in other offices across the country. They illustrate the sad and extremely serious employment situation now prevailing in Canada.

Now the Minister of Labour tells us: the figures are misleading, in the sense that they are improperly interpreted. He tells us that about 48 per cent of the unemployed are seasonally unemployed.

I would ask the minister to indicate what he has to offer as an excuse for the latest figures issued by his office on April 30 last, which show that 750,000 Canadians are now seeking employment, as against only 714,000 at the same date last year?

The Minister of Labour has pooh-poohed the suggestions put forward in this house and on television by the hon. member for Essex East, as well as the 25 proposals submitted to this house by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier).

He has even said that the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Essex East is the second point in the list of proposals submitted last winter by the hon. member for Laurier. Well, whether it is the second, third or tenth point, let me ask the Minister of Labour a simple question: Why did he not make use of it? Why, as Minister of Labour, and as the person in Canada who is best informed on the extent of unemployment, and on the pitiful employment situation, why did he not take the lead in having the whole employment problem reviewed by a committee of experts and economists?

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour tells us that if the amendment of the member for Essex East was accepted, it would mean that the government would waive part of its responsibilities. That is an answer or an explanation that could have been expected from a child, but surely not from an adult, and still less from the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Speaker, it would certainly not be waiving part of its responsibilities to have a problem such as employment in Canada studied by experts. That would in no way affect the government's responsibilities; its only responsibility would be to decide, after that board had submitted its report, whether the suggestions are beneficial to all Canadians or not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, while I am taking up certain statements of the Minister of Labour, may I point out that not a single minister is in the house at present—

Mr. Martel: That is untrue.

Mr. Deschatelets: Not a single minister of the crown—I welcome the Minister of Labour and I thank him also for his courtesy, because I am now commenting on the disappointing speech he made here tonight.

Mr. Martel: A member certainly has the right to go behind the curtains.

Mr. Deschatelets: During his remarks, the Minister of Labour said that the hon. member for Essex East, especially since he sits in the opposition, saw the gloomy side of the situation, that is, he made a pessimistic report of the present situation in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Labour chooses to mention the fact that the hon. member for Essex East looks at the situation through very dark glasses, he will allow me to deal with certain remarks he himself made when sitting in the opposition, and we shall see which one of us two described the true situation.

On March 3, 1955, the present Minister of Labour, who was then sitting on the opposition benches, said, when speaking of the empoyment situation as we may see on page 1693 of Hansard:

> Consequently we find ourselves with unemployment on a scale of national emergency—

Mr. Speaker, everybody knows that present conditions in this country are much worse than in 1955. I therefore ask the Minister of Labour, if he thought that the situation was on a scale of national emergency in 1955, what terms we might use tonight in describing conditions on April, 1960, when there were 756,000 Canadians looking for jobs?

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour went still much further when, as an opposition member, in 1954 he supported a political party which submitted to the government of the day a proposal to have a committee of experts look into the whole employment question.

Mr. Speaker, I ask him once again to explain his behaviour. It is quite obvious that in 1954—and figures are there to prove it—the employment situation in this country was not comparable to the present one. If the present Minister of Labour, when sitting in the opposition in 1954 wanted to have the whole question of employment submitted to a board of inquiry, why did he state today that he was opposed to an investigation of employment and income in this country, when present conditions are much more serious then they were in 1954?

Mr. Martineau: He gave us his reasons.

Mr. Deschatelets: The Minister of Labour suggests that, as far as employment and income are concerned, we are now in a period of boom. I should like to offer the Minister of Labour a challenge I wish he would take up one of these days. I wish he would attend a meeting in Montreal, for instance, where a third of all the unemployed in Canada are to be found, and make before these people the kind of speech he made here in the house tonight. If he took up this challenge, I am convinced the result would have nothing in common with the "boom" he tried to describe a moment ago.

It is obvious that there is nothing to be hoped from the Minister of Labour, whom we have urged during this session, perhaps every week, to find some formula or plan whereby a committee might study the situation and make recommendations, any more than there is anything to be hoped for from this government which refuses to assume its responsibilities in regard to unemployment and labour in Canada. Consequently, I am tempted to say that the Minister of Labour is nothing else than the minister of unemployment.

I say to the minister that the position he has taken tonight of refusing the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Essex East is one which is contrary to Canadian public opinion, and contrary to the opinion of the press. His attitude will certainly not be favourably considered by more than a million citizens who are now enduring hardship and, in this connection, I should like to read a few lines of an article published in the Montreal Star of April 21, 1960, where it says:

(Text):

> Why Not A Study of Unemployment?
> —Fortunately no federal election is likely for two years. This gives a government time to turn around, to study, to get advice. It has been a long time since there has been an independent study of the unemployment problem. The last one was before the war and the whole pattern of industrial technology has changed since then. Why not set up some body with resources of expert help, and see what recommendations emerge?

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, those are the remarks I wanted to make following the comments of the Minister of Labour. But, in closing this first part of my speech, since the minister referred to a "boom" in the field of construction, may I quote here a recent article from La Presse, which is entitled:

> A 70 per cent tumble.
> Officials of the National House Builders Association are not optimistic. They notice that during the first months of the year, the number of loans approved by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation took a 70 per cent tumble as compared to a year ago.
> So the officials of the National House Builders Association feel that the situation is precarious and they bitterly regret once again the lack of stability of their industry. Again, they urge the federal Minister of Public Works to recognize the urgency of appointing a royal commission or a committee of experts to make a thorough investigation of the financing systems of the housing industry, and they suggest solutions for the lack of funds which consistently paralyse it, to the great prejudice of the whole Canadian economy.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe the amendment introduced today by the hon. member for Essex East illustrates the views and the feelings of all Canadians. In fact, because the policy of this government failed to promote or maintain a reasonable level employment in this country, a thorough investigation of all aspects of this problem has become imperative.

Many enquiries made by the public opinion poll have confirmed the fact that, in the opinion of most Canadians, this problem of employment is, at this time, our major national problem.

This leads me to put a few questions. What did the Conservative government do to try and maintain employment at a reasonable level in Canada? What interest did this government show in avoiding a deterioration of the employment situation to the point I mentioned a few moments ago when quoting the last figures? To what extent did the government listen to the admonitions and warnings which it so frequently heard from the opposition? In other words, if the employment situation is alarming now, this government should assume all responsibility for it, because of its own slackness and policy of laissez faire.

If we look into the employment figures supplied since the beginning of this session, it is obvious that, at least in two instances, the government should have established such a committee of inquiry, without our having to ask for it.

We expected at first to hear it mentioned in the speech from the throne, right at the beginning of the session. However hon. members will remember that instead of announcing an inquiry on economic conditions with regard to employment, the only thing mentioned at that time was seasonal unemployment.

There was another circumstance when it would have been possible, and we might have expected the government to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. member, but if I rightly understood the directions previously given by Mr. Speaker, there is no justification in this debate to review the government's policy, or lack of policy, with regard to employment, or unemployment. The only permissible discussion is one relevant to the reasons which would justify the appointment of a national consultative committee on economic development and automation. As I understand it, the most appropriate subject matter to be discussed would be the advantages that could be derived from the setting up of such a committee. Therefore I would ask the hon. member to adhere strictly to those directives.

Mr. Deschatelets: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is not always easy to keep within the limits. I can assure you that I am doing my utmost to proceed along the lines you have just indicated.

I was saying that a complete study should have been made of the unemployment and labour problem at the very beginning of this session. We have repeatedly asked the government to do so several times.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Deschatelets: This government has always refused to take heed of our warnings. You were asking me, a moment ago, to confine my remarks to stressing the usefulness of an inquiry such as is being asked in the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Essex East. I feel that any thinking person will admit that, in a country like Canada, whose resources are so abundant, we can no longer tolerate a situation where hundreds of thousands of our fellow citizens are unable to enjoy the same standard of living as other Canadians. It is for the sake of those people that, from the very beginning of this session, we, on this side of the house, have never missed an opportunity of pointing out the deplorable state of employment. Now today, we have had submitted to us a very concrete proposal by the hon. member for Essex East. You will allow me, Mr. Speaker, to give special warning to my friends the hon. members from the province of Quebec, whom I would ask tonight to ponder seriously the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Essex East, before voting against it.

Mr. Speaker, I would also ask one of the authorized representatives of the province of Quebec in the government, namely the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer), the associate minister of defence (Mr. Sevigny), the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois) or the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley)—either of the four—to rise tomorrow and tell us how they feel about the employment situation, particularly in the province of Quebec, because they have been sent here to look after the interests of the citizens of the province of Quebec.

The Deputy Speaker: As I understand the hon. member, he is asking the minister to be out of order in replying to that question, in view of the fact that the hon. member is out of order himself with regard to the directives I gave him a moment ago.

Mr. Johnson: He wants to propose an amendment.

Mr. Deschatelets: I also hope that the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Johnson), who has just interrupted me, will rise in his place tomorrow to say what he thinks about the unemployment situation in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Johnson: I could do so right now, if you wish.

(Text):

Mr. Speakman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. member is obviously flouting your ruling.

National Board on Economic Development

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I indicated a moment ago that it was rather difficult to keep within the prescribed limitations. However, I shall try to do so.

Mr. Pigeon: You have got to be smart.

Mr. Deschatelets: We have before us a very definite proposal, one which I think could be the answer to Canada's unemployment problem.

A moment ago, the Minister of Labour stated that the government could do much more and much faster than a committee of investigation towards the settlement of that problem.

Let me point out to the Minister of Labour that such a committee could suggest two possible courses.

First, there are short term recommendations, and then long term recommendations.

It is obvious that, because of the fiscal and monetary policy of this government, we cannot help being in any other situation than the present one, but it is also obvious that some adjustment is required in the economic structure of our country, because we cannot again put up with the sight of hundreds of thousands of our fellow citizens being unable to share in the standard of living enjoyed by other Canadians.

If the amendment of the hon. member for Essex East is the answer to the problem of the nine other provinces, and if there is a province where it is necessary to investigate, it is the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, on April 30, 1960, 236,000 people were looking for work in the province of Quebec. It is the highest figures since the Conservative depression of 1930. I wonder if my hon. Conservative friends from the province of Quebec are satisfied with this situation.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) is ignoring your advice. You told him several times to comply with the rules. May I ask, Mr. Speaker, that you order him for the last time to cease ignoring your instructions.

Mr. Caron: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I believe the member who just rose is mistaken. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Essex East is so broad in scope that it is extremely difficult to wander away from it.

I believe the interpretation you made of it a few moments ago was a little narrower than that of the Speaker.

[Mr. Speakman.]

(Text):

Mr. Speakman: That is not what the Speaker said this afternoon.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: May I complete my point of order, without the hon. member interfering?

I think it is essential to speak of the existing situation because the purpose of the committee we are asked to set up, would precisely be to improve conditions.

The overriding issue in the province of Quebec today is unemployment, and I think we have the right to deal with it at this stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thought for a moment that the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont would stick to the proposal now before us—at least he had given me some hope in this respect—but I must say that at the time when the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm raised his point of order, I believed he was just about to discuss the unemployment or employment situation, which, as a matter of fact, is not the subject matter of the motion.

It is simply a matter of dealing with the effect the establishment of a national advisory council could have on economic development and automation.

Indeed, we can deal with unemployment—I believe the hon. member has had many opportunities to do so—but the main purpose of the amendment is the establishment of the committee, and it is in that sense that Mr. Speaker indicated the limitations of the debate, because the government policy with respect to unemployment has been dealt with a ruling of the house, and it cannot be reverted to.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I trust the points of order which have been raised will not shorten the time available to me—

Mr. Pigeon: This is not unanimous.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, the main reason why—

Mr. Martel: Order.

Mr. Deschatelets: The main reason why I believe all members of the house should vote in favour of the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Essex East, is that no one, until today, neither from this government nor from the government of the Union Nationale, has shown any interest in the unemployment problem.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The hon. member should adhere more strictly to the rules of the house. He should not take so much liberty with the rules. In fact, he is making fun of you.

Mr. Robichaud: Before the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, we listened to the Minister of Labour dealing for about half an hour with no other subject matter than unemployment itself.

Mr. Martel: No, of employment.

Mr. Pigeon: I appreciate that Mr. Lesage is fully employed at this time—which should not be the case after June 22.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I believe it is not necessary to repeat to hon. members the limits of the debate; so I would ask the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont to keep within those limits, to abide by the directives of the Speaker.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I shall try to abide by your directives.

Now, the reason why I believe this amendment should be adopted at this stage of the session, is the fact that it is perhaps the last effort—

Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could I be allowed to go on with my remarks without further hindrance? I find that the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Johnson) keeps interrupting about everything—

Mr. Johnson: And particularly about nothing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is recognized that the hon. member who has the floor should not be interrupted unless he agrees and particularly, he should not be interrupted if it annoys him.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I feel that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Essex East, in view of the circumstances described a moment ago, is perhaps the most important amendment introduced before this house in the course of this session, and I am appalled at the irresponsible attitude shown by my hon. Conservative friends from Quebec with regard to this amendment, which is probably, for the province of Quebec—

Mr. Speakman: For Canada.

Mr. Deschatelets: And also for the whole of Canada—

An hon. Member: Including the Yukon.

Mr. McCleave: Stop reading your speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest we call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is only two minutes before ten.

Mr. Deschatelets: I shall go on with my remarks.

I am appalled that hon. members from the province of Quebec, which is the province most affected by unemployment, show so little responsibility with regard to this matter—

Mr. Johnson: That is not true.

Mr. Deschatelets: —and the purpose of the amendment is to relieve it. I find it extraordinary that the Conservative members for the province of Quebec should joke instead of supporting us, because it is primarily for the citizens of the province of Quebec that the amendment was introduced. It is in that province that there are close to one third of all unemployed of the country.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Johnson: Order. You have talked enough; Mr. Lesage will tell you the rest tomorrow. Phone Mr. Lesage to learn the rest of it.

(Text):

The Deputy Speaker: Are hon. members calling it ten o'clock? I understand the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont is calling it ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: My embarrassment, Mr. Speaker, arises from the fact that you apparently have not resumed your seat after calling it ten o'clock in order to permit me to ask what the business of the house will be for Wednesday of this week.

Mr. Churchill: The business for this week will be found on page 4072 of Hansard but I now suggest a change for Wednesday due to certain circumstances beyond our control. For one thing, the resolution in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs with regard to the War Veterans Allowance Act will be postponed at the request of the members of the standing committee on veterans affairs, and the order of business for Wednesday will run this way: Item No. 8 on today's order paper, the resolution with regard to the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, followed by the second reading of Bill No. S-27, an act to control and regulate the sale of feeds, followed by the budget resolutions.

Business of the House

Mr. McIlraith: As I understand it, it was indicated on page 4072 that consideration of the budget resolutions will precede the legislation.

Mr. Churchill: That was the original intention, but there is a funeral ceremony that a number of hon. members are attending on the morning of Wednesday. They will be back late on Wednesday afternoon. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) is concerned, and he will be back in time to proceed with budget resolutions, though later than anticipated.

Mr. McIlraith: So that the order will now be the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act and the act to control and regulate the sale of feeds and then the budget resolutions for Wednesday.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Seventh report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines—Mr. Fraser.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REPORTED REFUSAL OF MINISTER TO DISCUSS FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he would care to comment on the reported statement of the premier of British Columbia that while in Vancouver recently he, the minister, had been invited to discuss federal-provincial financial arrangements for the Columbia river project and had not replied to the invitation which, no doubt out of respect for my hon. friend's favourite procedure, was sent to him by telegram.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): If that is the report in the press it is not a completely correct report of what happened. I was in Vancouver last week on the Sunday and Monday. I had previously addressed a letter to the premier of British Columbia suggesting that it might be advisable for representatives of the department of the provincial treasurer of that province and of the federal Department of Finance to meet at a mutually convenient time to discuss any questions related to the financing of the Columbia river development that might be appropriate.

I was on a quite tight schedule on that trip west. I was due to leave Vancouver early on Tuesday morning. At a very late hour on Monday night—indeed, just when I was in the act of packing in preparation to leave Vancouver—I received a telegram from the premier suggesting that I should go on to Victoria. It was quite impossible, of course, to do so at that time, as I was due to speak in Winnipeg the following day. I proceeded to Winnipeg, fulfilled my engagement there and returned to Ottawa on Wednesday morning. On my return on Wednesday I addressed a letter to the premier explaining the circumstances and why it was quite impossible, under the circumstances, for me to accept his invitation at that time, but suggesting that when he returned from his trip to the United Kingdom, on which he was to leave at the end of last week, I would be happy to arrange for such a meeting at a time that would be convenient to him.

I do not of my own knowledge know this, but I am told that having dispatched this telegram to me on Monday—apparently late on Monday—he went to the radio or made a radio statement within a day or so complaining that he had not received any reply to his telegram and that I had not gone to Victoria. Under the circumstances, if he made any such statement, it was obviously entirely premature. I think it would have been the part of fair play to wait until adequate time had elapsed for a response to reach him.

Mr. Pearson: May I thank the minister for his reply and tell him I quite understand the difficulties of a tight schedule. Does he care to comment on the further statement made by the premier, namely that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) had already informed the government of British Columbia some time ago that the federal government would pay 50 per cent of the cost of this project but that, in the reported words of the premier of British Columbia, they have been running away ever since from that?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs has not made any such statement to the government of British Columbia. There has been no running away from anything. It is not the practice of this government to run away from its positions, its statements or its responsibilities. I think this matter would be much better advanced, Mr. Speaker, to the mutual advantage of British Columbia and the rest of Canada if an effort were made to arrive at understandings of the positions of the two governments without rushing into radio or press reports, as apparently has been done in the quarter referred to by the Leader of the Opposition, and trying to make some political statement.

The fact of the matter is that there has been an exchange of correspondence on this subject with the premier of British Columbia. We have been quite clear in the statements we have made to him. The matter of the development and the sharing of cost has been discussed at the several conferences that have been held between representatives of the federal government and representatives of the government of British Columbia. At this very time a meeting is in progress at Washington at which both governments are represented in discussions with representatives of the United States administration on this entire problem.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think it is not inappropriate for me to say that there have been ample opportunities for discussion of this subject and that all the opportunities that are required will be afforded. There will be no running away from any responsibility on the part of the federal government. We simply ask that all those concerned approach this matter in the same understanding and co-operative attitude.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question. May I ask the Minister of Finance that the government not run away from their responsibilities to protect the residents of the Arrow lakes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the interests of the residents of the Arrow lakes area have been given due consideration at all times by the representatives of the federal government in the discussions which have been carried on.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Might I ask another supplementary question. I noticed that the premier of British Columbia passed within a few hundred miles of Ottawa the day before yesterday. Did Premier Bennett at that time make any effort to see the minister?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. I have received no communication from Premier Bennett since Monday night, May 16, when I received a telegram at a very late hour, as I have said, as I was packing to leave for Winnipeg. I have had no communication from him since. He did indicate in that telegraphic message to me that he was leaving for England at the end of the week and would be gone for some time.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask a further supplementary question. Is this an example of those more harmonious relations which this government has established with the provinces?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: If I may intervene, I suggest that the question is not an appropriate one to ask; it is an argumentative one, not one seeking information.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

AGRICULTURE

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS—PRESS REPORTS RESPECTING ALTERNATIVE PROPOSALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the denials by some leaders of farm organizations, does the minister wish to modify his statement made in the house last week that the federal cabinet had not received any alternative proposals to deficiency payments from farm groups?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly to what the hon. member is referring by denials of western farm organizations. The situation is as I outlined it in the house last week. The liaison committee representing the ten western farm organizations which wrote and wired requesting an interview with the Prime Minister and the cabinet were asked to send down in writing an alternative proposal for discussion between us.

I stated last week that they had not yet done so. They did submit a brief which to a considerable extent went over some of the things they stated when they were down on the march something over a year ago, which they thought might or should be done with regard to the dominion government assuming a larger portion of storage charges, and things of that sort. Some individual farm organizations have made representations, of course, but the liaison committee as a whole did not put in any definite alternative as requested in the reply to them by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Chevrier: A supplementary question. My question was prompted by two statements appearing in the Winnipeg Free Press following the announcement made in the house by the minister, to the effect that two major Manitoba farm groups had stated Friday that western farmers had made alternative suggestions to the Prime Minister for farm aid, and that they seemed to be under the impression that there was no reason for the government delaying the calling of a meeting to discuss them. Also the statement which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Has the hon. member a supplementary question?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes; my supplementary question is this. Since the minister made his statement, has he not been made aware of this denial by the western farm groups?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, these clippings from the Winnipeg Free Press were drawn to my attention this morning. I have just stated the situation, and it is the situation that I outlined last week.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

OTTAWA, ONT.—INVITATIONS TO OPENING OF NEW AGRICULTURAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, members of parliament recently received from the Minister of Agriculture for Canada formal invitations to the opening of a certain building, all printed in English. Can the minister tell us whether there were any written in French?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this is a detail which is attended to in my office. I presume the hon. member has reference to the opening of the new building to be called the K. W. Neatby building. I am not aware whether invitations were prepared in both French and English, but I will inquire and find out.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STATEMENT ON FINGERPRINTING OF CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in reply to questions by the hon. member for Kootenay West and the Leader of the Opposition, I should like to make a brief statement concerning the fingerprinting of public servants.

During the second world war members of the Canadian armed services were fingerprinted, primarily for purposes of identification. In the years following the war the Department of National Defence and a number of other departments and agencies initiated the practice of fingerprinting for those employees requiring access to classified information, as well as for certain employees responsible for the protection of public property.

In 1954 the previous government decided to extend this procedure to all persons employed in positions requiring access to classified matters, including certain persons employed in positions of trust although they might not have working access to secret and confidential papers. At that time the civil service commission was asked to provide the necessary facilities for taking fingerprints of these categories of civil servants at its offices here and across the country. Crown companies and agencies were asked to make separate arrangements for the fingerprinting of their employees.

There has been no change in this policy since its inception, and I should like to assure the house that it is not the government's intention to extend this procedure to all public servants.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I should like to ask the minister to tell the house what departments or agencies he was referring to in his answer when he said that since the war a number of other departments or agencies had begun the practice of fingerprinting. I have in mind departments other than the Department of National Defence and others directly relating to security matters.

Mr. Balcer: According to the information I received this morning—and I am not sure whether the list is complete—the following departments are concerned: post office, R.C.M.P., national defence, both service and civilian personnel; national research council, Canadian Arsenals, Atomic Energy of Canada, and some employees of the Department of Public Works in the custodial group, which means the char people and elevator people in buildings housing classified information.

Mr. McIlraith: A further supplementary question. If this was done by the previous government with respect to these employees in the Department of Public Works, why was it necessary to issue an order in the last few days requiring this action to be taken?

Mr. Balcer: There were no new orders issued by this government.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question. Who makes the decision as to which civil servants should be fingerprinted?

Mr. Balcer: The decision is taken by the various heads of the departments.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Is the press report that this procedure is to be extended to some 2,000 officials in the Department of Public Works inaccurate?

Mr. Balcer: I do not know the exact figure. I do not think there is anything I can add to what I have said so far.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Would the minister mind telling me what access an elevator operator has to secret documents?

Mr. Balcer: When I mentioned those employees I was referring to people who are in buildings at night, and during the daytime, when it might be possible for them to have access to these documents.

Mr. Winch: From the elevator to private offices? Oh, come.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED RAIDS BY MOUNTED POLICE ON CHINESE COMMUNITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I direct this question to the hon. lady because I believe the activities to which I shall refer concern her department. Is the minister able to give the house any report on the reasons for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police investigation and raids that are taking place today in Chinese communities across Canada?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is a natural outcome of the investigation which I announced in the house on January 14.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. In the statement made by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration on January 19, as reported at page 83 of Hansard of this year, the hon. lady said in part:

It is a little early as yet to evaluate the extent of the alleged illegal entries—

That is, from the mainland of China, Macao and Hong Kong.

—but there are indications that a number of persons may be involved both in Canada and in the Far East.

Is the minister now in a position to give any statistical information about the number of illegal entries to Canada from China and the number of people involved in the black market method of bringing immigrants to Canada?

Mrs. Fairclough: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not have that information. The investigations are in the hands of the police, and I am afraid it will be quite some time before we will have any specific information.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRIES RESPECTING NEWS COMMENTARIES ON UNITED NATIONS MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Tremblay (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue or, in his absence, to his parliamentary secretary.

Has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation authorized Mr. Jean-Louis Gagnon, of Montreal's La Presse, to criticize the foreign policy of the United States, to attack the members of NATO and to praise the speech of Mr. Gromyko, minister of foreign affairs for the U.S.S.R., in his broadcast commentary on the French network, at 3 p.m. yesterday, May 23, dealing with the emergency meeting of the Security Council of the United Nations?

Second, could the responsible minister ask—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that our practice is not to have a series of oral questions. As I understand it the hon. member has put one question, and perhaps he might await an answer.

(Translation):

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I shall take this question as notice and answer it in due course.

Mr. Tremblay: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, Could the responsible minister, at the same time, ask the C.B.C. for an explanation about the views expressed by the so-called expert on international affairs engaged on that occasion by the government-owned network, which views were inconsistent with those expressed in this house by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) on the recent tension in the wake of the summit conference failure?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I let my answer to the first question likewise apply to this one.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? While the parliamentary secretary is inquiring into the questions just put to him, would he also inquire about a program in the English language broadcast over the C.B.C. at about the same time, so that we may know whether the views expressed on that occasion were not identical with those expressed on the French program?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, the question of the hon. member for Laurier does not seem very explicit. Could he specify the name of the person involved, or the date of the program just referred to?

An hon. Member: It's pure hearsay.

Another hon. Member: This is just to whitewash Mr. Gagnon.

Mr. Chevrier: If the parliamentary secretary wants additional information, I may tell him that the program was broadcast at about the same time; the participants were Messrs. Blair Fraser, Norman De Poe, Stanley Burke and James M. Minifie, who made pretty much the same remarks of which the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) seems to be complaining.

ELLIOT LAKE—STATEMENT ON ALLEGED REFUSAL TO ACCEPT UNION PRESS INFORMATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) asked me a question in connection with the united steel workers and the Rio Tinto mining company. I have inquired from the C.B.C. and they advise as follows.

The Elliot Lake news item in question, based on a story that the area council of the united steel workers of America has accused Rio Tinto mining company of trying to create a monopoly in the uranium industry, was received by the C.B.C. newsrooms from the Canadian Press early Wednesday night, May 18, and was considered along with all the other news items of the day by the editor on duty. Along with scores of other stories rejected, it was considered on the basis of its news value not to warrant inclusion in the corporation's newscasts.

Almost 20 hours later a collect wire was received by the C.B.C. central radio newsroom signed by an Elliot Lake free lance newsman whose work is unknown to the C.B.C., offering the same story. Since the news agencies had already carried the story the night before and the C.B.C. had rejected it through the usual editorial processes, the corporation refused to accept and pay for this message.

AIRPORTS

SAULT STE. MARIE, ONT.—STATEMENT AS TO DATE OF COMPLETION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Algoma West (Mr. Nixon) asked whether I could bring him up to date on the progress being made at the Sault Ste. Marie airport. The runways will be completed and ready for use in the fall of this year. It is not possible at this time to say when the air terminal building will be completed, but tenders will be called this summer.

OTTAWA, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO INVITATIONS TO OPENING OF TERMINAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister yet issued invitations for the gala opening of Ottawa's new air terminal building on July 1?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, but that will take place one of these fine days.

Mr. Pickersgill: What, the opening or the invitations?

Mr. Pearson: You are not running away from it, are you?

FINANCE

ZINC OXIDE—INQUIRY AS TO TARIFF REDUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. May I indicate first that my question is based on a question I asked which was answered by the Minister of Justice on May 13 regarding a report of the restrictive trade practices commission. I then asked the Minister of National Revenue a supplementary question, which was as follows:

> May I inquire of the Minister of National Revenue what action has been taken or is contemplated with respect to the recommendation for the removal or reduction of tariffs on zinc?

I was referring to the recommendation of the restrictive trade practices commission. The Minister of National Revenue said that he would take my question as notice, but he thought the matter fell within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance. Has it been brought to the attention of the minister, and is he yet in a position to answer?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. I heard the question asked, but if any changes were proposed in any tariff rate they would, of course, first have to be laid before the house.

Mr. Howard: My question was what action has been taken or is contemplated with respect to the recommendation of the restrictive trade practices commission, not whether or not it would be laid before the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have indicated to the hon. member that I will examine into the matter. If there is anything affecting the responsibilities of the Department of Finance I will be glad to make inquiry.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, May 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Martin (Essex East).

National Board on Economic Development

LACK OF GOVERNMENT LEADERSHIP—NATIONAL BOARD ON ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT AND AUTOMATION

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, when the house rose last night, I had been giving what seemed to me to be the best reasons in favour of the immediate setting up of a national advisory board on economic development and trends, and automation.

It is quite obvious that the establishment of such a board is absolutely urgent. The main reason for it, in my opinion, is that the policy of the government, ever since it has been in office, has been one of makeshift and political expediency.

The creation of such an advisory board is, in my opinion, the most appropriate and efficient way to get us out of the economic deadlock in which we now find ourselves.

I submit there is no denial of the principle of responsible government, as the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) erroneously indicated last night, in the fact of seeking advice from experts; and I believe that if the government had adopted that policy two or three years ago, we would not now be in our present difficult situation. Not only is that advisory board advocated by Canadian newspapers, but it has also been many times endorsed by organized labour, as could be seen again this morning, in a release from the Canadian and Catholic Federation of Labour, which reads as follows:

> The Canadain and Catholic Federation of Labour announced over the week end its intention to ask the federal and provincial governments to set up economic advisory boards to consider practical solutions to the unemployment problem.

That, almost to a word, is the very essence of the amendment put forward yesterday by the hon. member for Essex East. Such an advisory board would also meet the hopes and suggestions expressed by our hon. Conservative friends in 1954. In fact, it is seen on page 2085 of Hansard, that the Conservative opposition at that time suggested to the government that a review of the economic situation should be made in 1954 as a means of finding employment. And everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, that the situation in 1954 was in no way comparable to the present difficult situation.

I think it might be well to place on record the list of our Conservative friends who, in 1954, saw fit to suggest that we review the matter. On page 2564 of Hansard, I find the following names:

> Mr. Balcer, Mr. Churchill, Mr. Diefenbaker, Mrs. Fairclough, Mr. Fleming, Mr. Fraser (Peterborough), Mr. Fulton, Mr. Green, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Hees, Mr. Howe, (Wellington-Huron), Mr. Macdonnell, Mr. McGregor, Mr. Monteith, Mr. Nesbitt, Mr. Nowlan, Mr. Pearkes, the Hon. Mr. Rowe and Mr. Starr.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Before commencing my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to a statement made last night by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, who has just taken his seat. At page 4168 of Hansard he made the following statement, and I shall read it in French:

(Translation):

> I should like to offer the Minister of Labour a challenge I wish he would take up one of these days. I wish he would attend a meeting in Montreal, for instance, where a third of all the unemployed in Canada are to be found, and deliver before those people the kind of speech he has made here in the house tonight.

(Text):

I think perhaps the hon. member is not in touch with what has been happening in Montreal, because I should like to point out to him that just two weeks ago the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), speaking to a group of labour leaders and union representatives in Montreal, made almost exactly the same type of speech that he made in the house yesterday, and he was greeted by applause from that group.

I should like first of all to examine the amendment with which we are now dealing. We are dealing with an amendment which is not quite a motion of non-confidence. There is, in this amendment, no condemnation of the government for anything it has done. It is merely a request or a suggestion that a committee should be set up. The hon. member for Essex East, after solemnly assuring the house that his amendment would not touch upon any matter that had been already decided by the house, nevertheless went ahead and made a long speech on unemployment, at the conclusion of which he proposed the motion to set up a committee to deal with the causes of unemployment. I would not accuse the hon. member of leading the house down the garden path, but he certainly did have me fooled.

I should like to have a look at the economic situation as it is in Canada today. I am positive that it is not as bad as it was painted yesterday by the hon. member for Essex East. We have to admit, Mr. Speaker, that in any expanding economy there are bound to be pockets of unemployment. This is caused by, among other things, the shifting and relocation of industry. However, the hon. member for Essex East quoted yesterday from a dominion bureau of statistics report. I should like to refer to some of the items appearing in that report of Friday, May 20, 1960. The only figures to which the hon. member for Essex East referred were those relating to construction. I cannot find the figures to which he referred because in his remarks, at page 4132 of Hansard, he stated that construction starts fell by 35 per cent; that was for the first quarter of 1960.

Looking at the weekly bulletin of Friday, May 20 we find that building permits issued in March fell by some 14 per cent from a year earlier. I think it is fairly obvious why this happened. Parliament had not voted any funds until some time during that first quarter, so there were no funds available from the time the money voted for the previous year was exhausted.

However, there were other items in this bulletin to which the hon. member did not refer. The first is manufacturing. Manufacturers' shipments in March were valued at an estimated $1,959 million, some 7 per cent greater than in February and 3.5 per cent above the March, 1959 level. Merchandising; department store sales, during the week of May 7 were 6.1 per cent greater than a year earlier, while April sales climbed by 6.9 per cent. Agriculture and food; more creamery butter, cheddar cheese, ice cream and skim milk powder were produced in April and January to April of this year than last. In so far as transportation is concerned, the number of cars of railway revenue freight loaded on Canadian lines in the week of May 7 rose slightly to 76,165. Manufacturers' shipments, inventories and orders; manufacturers' shipments in March were valued at an estimated $1,959 million, an increase of nearly 7 per cent from the revised average estimate of $1,837 million according to the latest dominion bureau of statistics figures.

Now, we can take any group of figures such as this and pick out one in which there is a decline, but taking the whole group as indicated in this latest weekly bulletin there has been a very definite increase all across the line in matters relating to the national economy.

I should like to look for a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, at some of the subjects covered by the amendment. I think the one deserving the most attention is the question of automation. The subject of automation requires very serious consideration. There is no doubt at all that the pattern of employment is changing in Canada, just at it is in North America and elsewhere in the world. As automation advances the place of the unskilled workman in our economy is gradually lessening. It is becoming more and more difficult for the workman who has nothing more to offer than his own strength to secure employment, while at the same time the help wanted columns of our daily newspapers are filled with requests for skilled help, teachers and professional persons.

We ask ourselves, what can be done? The Liberal party has proposed, through the hon. member for Essex East, that a committee be appointed; that is the substance of the motion before us. I believe there are some other things that can be done. The training and retraining of displaced workers is, I believe, a top priority. This work is being substantially aided by the federal government, which pays 50 per cent of the cost of any provincial training or retraining program of unemployed persons, both for buildings and for instruction.

The second thing is that I believe education at all levels must be improved. I do not wish to encroach upon the provincial domain nor to reopen a closed debate on university grants, but I do wish to point out that the federal government has taken an interest in education, to the extent which is acceptable, and that education along all lines is one of the best methods of alleviating the difficulty of the unskilled labour force.

I should like to say a few words about the position I would take on the amendment which has been proposed. First, with reference to the setting up of a board or a commission, may I say that we have a great many boards and commissions in this country at the present time. On the government and its advisers must rest the responsibility for creating economic policy such as that which has been suggested in the motion. The problems of automation and employment are extremely important, and certainly we as members of the House of Commons and the government must give serious consideration to the direction of future development.

Those groups which are mentioned in the resolution, namely government, industry, labour, agriculture and universities all have some responsibility in the matter of better employment and the problem of the changing economic scene. Each in its own field could, I believe, contribute to a better understanding of and answers to the problems. It might be that a conference of some type of the persons and groups mentioned in this resolution would be extremely helpful; but setting up a national board to develop economic policies would be, in my opinion, setting up a new giant in the field of semi-governmental bodies which is quite unnecessary.

Even if the terms of the amendment were altered or modified in the way in which I suggested, it would still be very difficult to support it. It is put forward as an alternative to granting supply. I do not believe it is the kind of amendment that even the opposition can support. It is not a motion of no confidence; it is merely a suggestion which can be made at any other time in our proceedings when supply is not at issue.

In the wording of this amendment there is something which is faintly reminiscent of the session of 1957-58. It gives the appearance of being a non-confidence motion but in fact, even if it were accepted and passed, it could not do any harm. If this is the best the opposition can do in the nature of a non-confidence motion I feel there is not much wrong in the country.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the amendment is not one for which I have any great enthusiasm, although my colleagues and I are going to support it. The reason it seems somewhat nebulous really lies, in my view, in the speech introducing it, in which the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), in a rather delightful wandering, much and often intercepted by irrelevant or at least apparently irrelevant points of order raised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), really did not fill us in on just what this national advisory board which he and his party were advocating would do. The motion reads in part as follows:

> —a national advisory board on economic development and automation with representatives of governments, industry, labour, agriculture and universities,—

While no mention is made there specifically of the provinces, they would have to come in. We are left, as a number of hon. members have pointed out, with the spectre of a board that would be rather large and perhaps unwieldy. I should like to have known whether the hon. member for Essex East contemplated something like the president's council of economic advisers such as the United States government has. I think we might have merited a bit more elaboration on how this particular board was to handle two items which, although related, seem to me to be quite different in scope and scale; that is, how it was to handle the question of economic policy, which is definitely a long term matter, and the question of automation, which is of not so great a theoretical scale and which surely will have to be faced by a series of short range steps. It seems to me that to give this suggested board those two particular functions could lead to a number of difficulties.

One word that is missing from this phrase "national advisory board," of course, is that magic word to which C.C.F. speakers usually give obeisance but which Liberal speakers tend to shun. I refer to the word "planning". We are enthusiastic about planning, and it might just be conceivable that we are going to have a national planning board in the future. I do not know how long it is going to take; it will depend on the initiative, or lack of it, of this government. Perhaps a national advisory board would be a step along the way.

But irrespective of what the hon. member for Essex East did not say in letting us know what this board was going to do, we had a speech from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr). One of the things that intrigued me about his responsibility is that he has given us what I think is the most forthright statement of any cabinet minister in Canadian history in that he has said that his government and he, in so far as his department is concerned, accept the responsibility for unemployment.

We have had in the past governments which have committed themselves. I refer especially to the Liberal government in 1945, which committed itself to a policy of full employment. But this is the first time to my knowledge, when I have ever been able to put my finger on it, that a minister has come right out and boldly said, "We accept responsibility". I think that is very much worth while.

But when we hear the minister talk we find that he gives us a picture that is rather radiant and sunny. It is as though his government has created a magnificent beach, and from one end of the beach to the other the water is warm, is at a consistently safe level, and you do not have to worry. But then he talks about problems. In other words in this nice beach, where the water is at an average level, delightfully tepid, and where you seem to be perfectly safe, there are a number of holes into which people can slip and drown. It is this kind of unevenness, these holes, that moves me to comment that I think we had every right to expect more from this government in the particular economic field than we have received.

As I said, the Minister of Labour is a particularly bothersome kind of personality to have been projected into this particular situation. We all admire him. We like the way we are treated. When you go to him or go to his office, you can get information. The other day he made reference to the fact when one of the Liberals raised the point that some unemployment insurance commission offices were no longer giving information to members of parliament, that he had provided it to me and to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai). This sort of thing is commendable. We have the minister saying that his department accepts its responsibility. But what we have not got, Mr. Speaker, is any confidence that the minister either looms large enough in the cabinet or that this cabinet is interested enough in this particular problem, namely the problem of the developing unemployment crisis.

The minister quoted from the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. I think this is probably the most overrated commission that Canada has ever had. I would say the conclusions are almost useless with regard to any government planning. The minister quoted approvingly from the report those sections in particular that dealt with the optimistic picture. I would point out to the minister that although the conclusions of this commission are very much lacking in pungency, on page 426 of those conclusions the report states:

> The fact of the matter is that the problem of preventing unemployment or of correcting a condition of unemployment once it occurs has not been fully solved. There are things which governments can do under such conditions and if they are done at the right time and with sufficient vigour and forthrightness, we may be hopeful, perhaps cautiously optimistic would be a better way to put it, that they will be successful, depending upon the circumstances at the time and particularly upon conditions and circumstances in the United States. But the business of influencing the level of economic activity in a country is a new art which is relatively untried. And there is nothing certain or foolproof about it.

I think most of us can agree with this particular conclusion; and reference is made to the fact that all the rosy predictions of the Gordon report rest on the assumption that we are not going to have any periods of severe cyclical unemployment. I do not know whether we have a really severe cycle in progress now, but I do know that as of May 5 in my own particular region, which is a prosperous one, over 15 per cent of the labour force were still seeking jobs and unable to find them. I think statistics generally indicate that we have a peculiar unemployment problem at this time, with high production but very many sore spots developing, and a very general level of unemployment that cannot be explained as frictional, that cannot be explained as seasonal and that cannot be explained simply as the result of technological change. My own assumption tends to place paramount the idea of technological change.

In my particular region, which runs roughly from Sudbury westward to the Manitoba boundary, we have the woods industry giving a rather buoyant economy at the present time. We have quite a number of mining prospects and mines in operation, and as we are in the nature of a bridge across central Canada we will always have a large number employed in the transportation field. In all three of our major industries, the pulp and paper industry, the mining industry and the transportation industry, immense amounts of capital have been inverted in recent years which have led to an unbelievable reduction in the working force; or if you want to put it another way, there has been an unbelievable increase in productivity.

I think this can best be seen in terms of the woods, where any woods manager today will tell you that with the equipment he has now he can cut three times as much wood with the same number of men as he could cut 12 years ago. Unfortunately there is neither the opportunity nor the prospect of increasing the cut of our woods so we can engage an increased labour force. Therefore we are left with the situation where the number of people needed in the bush is dropping, and dropping sharply.

Exactly the same thing is obvious to anyone who has followed the fortunes of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway; the railway employees are thinning out, and when central traffic control comes in, as it will within the next 18 months, the drop will be very pronounced.

As far as the mines are concerned the figures are not quite so startling. I can remember that at the first mine I worked there was an underground staff of approximately 100 to put up 400 tons of rock a day. I know one mine today in the same region which puts up over 3,000 tons a day with an underground force of 100. The picture we can see in our own particular region, and see it very startlingly and clearly, is that the kind of productivity increase which our large industries have been getting as the result of rather immense capital outlay has cut down labour opportunities. Of course in terms of gross size or growth capabilities or growth prospects, our future labour prospects are consequently deadened. It is impossible to build up a large population, even though productivity and the value of what we are producing is increasing, if your labour force is not expanding.

This particular condition which we suffer at the present time and which I think is going to increase highlights the need for some way out of the conundrum. We need some sort of study, co-ordination, planning, and then some kind of policy. I have no faith in this particular cabinet being able to get on top of this particular situation.

An hon. Member: They have no faith in you either.

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member interjects that they have no faith in me either, and there is no reason why they should. They are the ones with the responsibility and we are the ones to criticize. I remember that the hon. member sat in a committee I sat on and listened to one cabinet minister and several ex-cabinet ministers all say that they were far too busy to look after this and far too busy to look after that. That is one of the most unfortunate things about cabinet ministers today; they are loaded down with so much routine that these men—and I think many members of all parties share this view—have not the time to work out the kind of policy which we need.

It was mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne) that this resolution indicates a lack of faith in our civil servants. I have slightly more faith in the cabinet than I have in senior civil servants so far as their being able to work out the sort of policy decisions of the overall kind which we need in order to confront problems like automation and unemployment. It seems to me that we need some kind of internal change in the cabinet structure and some way of developing economic advice which can be used by the cabinet at the top level. This is why this particular board which is proposed might be useful.

I think those people who protest that this is just another step of creeping socialism should remember that the United States president has had this type of counsel at least since 1948. His advisers publish quite a number of reports, and their annual forecasts are looked over by a great many people. I think we should also remember that in the United States, where they make a fetish of free enterprise and private enterprise and a free market, they still have a tremendous number of agencies, both governmental and foundation, such as the twentieth century fund and the international brothers fund, all working on economic problems and developing economic policy. It seems that we have only the occasional royal commission.

To underline the need for some kind of national co-ordination, I think it should be pointed out that we have information sources, in the dominion bureau of statistics of a statistical nature, and in the national research council of a scientific kind. I know we also have some of our more regulatory agencies, such as the atomic energy board, the board of transport commissioners, the maritime commission, the aeronautics board, the tariff board, even the Bank of Canada and the controversial Coyne. In all these agencies we have knowledge and expertise, and I suppose the possibility of policy development on the part of these people. But it seems to me that they tend to be isolated. Regulators tend to short range, narrow decisions. They do not manage, co-ordinate or direct. There is little indication that any of these people are being brought together with other people outside of government, such as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Labour Congress, to work out plans for meeting the type of problem which has been highlighted by this amendment.

An economist by the name of Berle recently pointed out some thoughts on planning which seem to me to be relevant here. In his book "Power without Property" he said:

> The word "planning" has fallen into the lingo of stereotyped political controversy; you are for it as a solution; you are against it as a danger. Analysis of what planning is seems to be absent.

Certainly we talk grandiosely here in this house—and I am including Conservative backbenchers particularly, during the debate on the speech from the throne and the budget debate—about various aspects of planning, and all types of advice is given to the government urging them to do this and that. The author goes on to say:

> Factually, planning is not a panacea and cannot be—

We invoke the word "planning", but planning is not in itself going to solve everything. The writer continues:

> It is a process by which solutions can be reached, not a solution in itself. Planning does not remove conflicts of interest. Each economic sector will struggle to attain the most advantageous position it can, and will not be vividly interested in the problems or difficulties of other sectors. Plans when made may be successful, or they may be hopelessly inept or oppressive.
> What the planning mechanism does do is to supply a means and a method by which these conflicts can be resolved. The data on which plans are constructed necessarily forces consideration and development of principles on which conflicts may be resolved, and of criteria by which solutions may be judged, revised, or improved.

Then there is this sentence which seems to me to sum up what is taking place in the United States; I cannot see it on the horizon yet in Canada.

> In economics we are slowly pounding out a sort of common law whereby conflicts of interest and moral claims of individuals may be resolved other than by brutal economic struggle.

In Canada we have always hesitated to face the consequences of the brutal economic struggle. We have today a royal commission sitting to study all the problems of transportation. This underlines how deeply the Canadian government has been committed over the years to policies of participation and intervention. We have the maritime freight rates; we have these Crowsnest grain rates which no one should really talk about because it is such a sensitive point; we have subventions for maritime coal; we have a bridge subsidy to pay the railways for maintaining this expensive link across the country.

In connection with another aspect of transportation we find the trucking people appearing before the commission and asking for subsidies so that they too may get a share of the subsidy pie. We find the C.N.R. $50 million in debt in one year with no relief in sight in the future unless the prospects change substantially. We have the president of the C.P.R. going around and certainly not being optimistic about the future of his railway. All this seems to me to indicate that we need some kind of council, some kind of national focus. Perhaps this should be the cabinet at the present time, but I do not see how the cabinet is going to get to it. Despite the multiplicity of its sittings, where is the economic policy?

One thing which is so striking about the membership of this house, when one considers hon. members who do not come from the Montreal-Toronto golden triangle or quadrilateral, if you want to call it that, is that they all want secondary industry in their constituencies. Every time they discuss their needs among themselves, one hears this demand for secondary industry. In northern Ontario, western Ontario, in the maritimes, in the outlying parts of Quebec and on the prairies, everybody wants secondary industries. Yet there are no prospects at all for a large expansion of secondary industry in these parts of Canada and there will not be, in my opinion, until this government is ready to do something which the government of the United Kingdom has already done, namely bring in an establishment of industry act together with a definite policy of putting secondary industries into regions that are depressed or which have not enough job opportunities.

It is obvious that this government is not ready at the present time to make that kind of move, but it surely has to come. Surely this is the direction in which we have to go, and that is why there is a need for some kind of national economic board or national advisory board, as the hon. member for Essex East has put it. We know that such a board could get information on statistical questions from the dominion bureau of statistics. We also know that most of the provinces now have their own statistical bureaux. I think such a board could count on a great deal of help in research from the universities or from certain agencies in the universities. I believe we might expect the regulatory agencies which are already in existence, such as the board of transport commissioners, to be able to supply a certain kind of knowledge. But we badly need a means of bringing all this into focus, enabling us to develop a policy designed to meet these problems.

I do not wish to stray too far from this theme, but the problem of trade, for example, readily occurs to us. We have people in business associations going around the country clamouring for a change in our commercial policy, a change which would tighten it up. We know there are interests in the country which are very much against such a change, especially the people in the west. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken)—I think he was involved—has mentioned the disquiet in many people's minds about our educational set-up. The Minister of Labour himself not very long ago expressed chagrin and shock at the number of people who were leaving school too soon without the qualifications necessary to prepare them for useful careers. These are some of the problems we have to consider. There is also, for example, the question whether we should have shorter hours to work and get down to a 30-hour week; the question of the relationship of defence planning and defence production to our economic capacity, and so on. Consideration of all these questions needs some kind of strategy board, so they may receive the kind of attention and crystallization which the cabinet does not provide at the present time.

For instance, we were very anxious, when Canadian Car and Foundry in my own area suffered a serious blow when its commercial operations were switched to Montreal, that the company should have the opportunity to produce the Bobcat vehicle for defence use. However, many people who do not come from the lakehead are saying, why should we get into a venture of this kind, and how can you approve of the creation of this particular vehicle simply as a means of cushioning a particular community from the effects of unemployment or automation? I cannot conjure up an easy solution here. I know that every one of us becomes torn between constituency interests and the national interest. But surely, somewhere, someone should be considering questions such as this and giving advice with regard to them.

We are a number of years away, I should say, from the stage where we are going to have a national planning board whose plans would be automatically implemented. The Canadian tradition has been to appoint royal commissions and get indefinite recommendations, or sometimes definite recommendations, as in the case of the Rowell-Sirois commission, and then to implement pieces of those recommendations as the political and economic situation demanded or permitted. It seems to me we should consider that it is about time to move toward the creation of an agency such as has been suggested, to make a more modern approach to this question.

I should very much like to hear, for example, whether this country could or should guarantee the right to work, so that anyone who wished to work might know that they could go somewhere in Canada and get a job at a minimum wage, by a simple application.

Mr. Macdonnell: Would the hon. member permit a question? Could he tell us whether the act to which he referred as having been introduced in the United Kingdom proceeded along the lines of establishing a special committee from outside—presumably people with some knowledge of business—or whether the task was done by the high civil service officials inside the government? I am puzzled as to the exact usefulness of a committee brought in rather accidentally and then set to work on this very difficult problem, and I ask myself whether its members would be as capable of doing a job as a selection of top civil servants.

Mr. Fisher: In answer to the hon. member's question, as I understand it the policy has been worked out mostly by politicians who recognized the need in northwestern England, in parts of Wales and Scotland, and have taken the lead.

I am speaking on the basis of a very biased article which I recommend to the hon. gentleman. The article is entitled, "The Apotheosis of the Dilletante" and is written by Thomas Balogh. It is an attack on British civil servants for being a bunch of mandarins who, by being all-around gentlemen, sort of crossword puzzle experts, have never got around to having enough expert knowledge in any one sector to develop or elaborate policy. I feel that this criticism can be applied to our senior civil servants. There may be some excellent all-arounders, but I do not know whether we have a sufficient concentration of special abilities in some kind of co-ordinate form that will allow us to develop really positive policies.

I know that hon. members on the government side of the house will argue that there is no need for this. One would assume there is not when one listens to the bland assurances of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Labour that everything is fine. Perhaps they are right, and it may be that time will prove them so. However, we do have enough serious problems in Canada to warrant this kind of thing. We have a country which in my opinion is economically more difficult to govern than Britain or the United States. I think it is time that our cabinet, our civil servants and the best abilities we have in the country had some means of concentrating in order to develop the kind of reports and policy suggestions that the President of the United States, for example, gets from his council of economic advisers.

The need, of course, is urgent or less urgent, depending upon your political position and the region from which you come. I know it is fashionable, especially in the house and in the open, for hon. members of the government to express all kinds of compliments. One must give credit to the Minister of Labour, who has said that this government accepts the responsibility for the problem. The hon. gentleman has admitted that there are problems in various sectors, but on the other hand he frequently tells us that everything is fine. I suggest to the minister that the unemployment problem is building up. We must recognize that a large part of our working force in Canada is becoming permanently unemployable. We therefore have to get to the roots of the problem very quickly. I do not have confidence in the minister's civil servants being alive to the problem and doing something about it.

Another question that comes up in any consideration of Canadian economic problems is where do the provinces stand? The maritimes, through the Atlantic economic council, are complaining about the monetary and fiscal policies of this government and urging that there should be some way of developing policies to help regions like the maritimes. We have had strong indications of the feelings and problems of the prairie farmers. We also have had on the part of secondary manufacturing industries a demand for change in our commercial policies. The situation in our mines and forests does not compare favourably with that of even two or three years ago. Looking ahead we can see that these industries will be in serious difficulty unless action is taken. This is especially true of the pulp and paper industry, which faces the threat of Russian competition.

With all these manifold problems which Canada has always faced but which in my opinion it faces today in a more acute form through increased competition, it is time to take action. There is the germ of a suggestion here upon which I should like to see the government act.

One of the points made by the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects with respect to the whole question of economic planning and development is this:

> The whole matter is further complicated by the very important part which public confidence has to play. If businessmen and investors are confident and optimistic, it should not be hard for governments to encourage expansion of economic activity.

We are beginning to get indicators in this area. We know that a large part of the money for our expansion has come from the United States, but we see indications that this source is beginning to decline. We have the problem of the outer seven and inner six in the European common market. We have the age-old problem of inflation. We have the Minister of Public Works being so bold as to say, in effect, that this government is not going to take exceptional action this year in order to bail out the construction industry, which is facing problems and predicaments; yet that industry is crying and howling long and loud at the present time. We know that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has expert knowledge in this field and a body of facts available. I also imagine it has a policy that might be fitted into a larger picture, but we have no idea what is being done to elaborate that policy.

A few weeks ago I talked to a veteran newspaper man who spoke about the changes that have occurred since this government took office. He said that a newspaper man always looks for the source of power. If he finds it in a certain place he can put his finger on the pulse, as it were; he can formulate a conception of what is in the wind, what action the government will take in certain areas, and find answers to his questions. He said that when the Liberal government was in power there were two or three places you had to look. You had to check the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of Finance and usually the prime minister's office. The interesting thing he finds about this government is that now the real pressure is brought to bear in one central place. If you want to find out what is or what will be cooking you go to the Department of Finance.

To someone listening to this statement this will seem to be a natural situation. It would seem that this should be the department where major decisions are taken. I suggest, however, that the Department of Finance will tend to make most of its decisions negative ones because of the very nature of the relationship of the treasury board and the fact that the Minister of Finance is the budget master who is always concerned with things along that line. I do not want to suggest that this department should not be a large source of power or that decisions should not be made by the man who is in charge of the budget and keeping our monetary affairs in balance; but if that is where the main source of power lies at the present time I venture to suggest that we will have a negative attitude, one that will not enable us to develop positive policies to meet the wide range of problems we hear mentioned by practically every hon. member who speaks in this chamber.

For this reason I suggest that the time has come to implement a proposal similar to that made by the hon. member for Essex East. The way the hon. member outlined it, I fear there would be created far too big a board or council to be effective at the start. One thing I would hope for from such a board is that the government would stop trying to represent every region, every ethnic and religious group and every branch of industry in the country, and that kind of representation mania. Surely we are at the stage where there are men in Canada who are big enough and able enough to rise above the limitations of ethnic or religious considerations or an industrial or labour background and serve as a small council of economic advisers who could be of genuine assistance to the government, and especially the cabinet in working out economic policies to enable them to face the diversified range of problems we have in Canada.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Labour Congress and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce are not organizations which you readily think of as sitting down amicably together in a given situation; yet if you read what all three organizations have been saying recently you will see that they have been asking for something like this. I really thought the lion had laid down with the lamb a few months ago when I learned that the financial editor of the Globe and Mail advocated some sort of over-all planning board. He emphasized that it is necessary to parcel out capital requirements for certain developments in the future so there will not be too much competition among the various branches of industry. When you have very large agencies such as the labour congress and the manufacturers' association beginning to see that we cannot meet the gigantic problems facing us without some form of co-ordination I think it is time for us to start looking at our own federal government, the role it plays and the liaison with provincial governments.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) has insisted that the government accepts the responsibility for a national economic policy. I think it is time for them to say how this responsibility is going to be met and I think it needs to be met by more than platitudes or the general bland assurance that under this government everything is great. We will be watching very closely to see how much power is given to the Minister of Labour and what changes he will make in order to carry out the indications he has given which, even though we know this motion will be defeated, suggest that the government is going to do something along this line to meet the kind of problem that has brought about this debate.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, having heard most of the speeches in this debate I have come to the conclusion that the main theme of the opposition by way of a solution to a problem is the creation of a board or commission, irrespective of the results that may be obtained. They would like to have boards or commissions to look into problems affecting our economy and to tell us where the disease is and how it should be diagnosed. Unfortunately, however, they do not bring forward any recommendation as to the proper remedy to apply in order to cure the ills but leave it to the government to accept the responsibility of adopting policies and introducing the legislation necessary to cure these ills.

I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I am convinced that under no circumstances has the government ever fallen down with respect to its responsibilities for the curing of ills.

Mr. Winch: How many boards have you appointed in two years?

Mr. Fisher: The national energy board, the board of broadcast governors.

Mr. Pickersgill: A national record.

Mr. Keays: The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) accused the government of belittling the problems facing our economy and of not being concerned with a variety of problems affecting unemployment, exports and imports, agriculture, housing and railways. As already mentioned in this debate, the government is aware of and is giving close attention to the problems in all segments of our economy. To solve these problems the opposition has introduced an amendment advocating the setting up of a national advisory board on economic development and automation with representatives from different bodies with the aim of developing economic policies designed to achieve a high and stable level of income and employment. No one will disagree with the objective of the opposition but I believe that the method suggested in order to arrive at a solution is not the proper course to follow. I have been searching for words to describe the Liberal opposition and have found them in the statement that they are a quixotic government with a quixotic mind.

Mr. Winch: Government?

Mr. Keays: Party. I am glad the hon. member has drawn that to my attention.

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mr. Winch: You had it right the first time.

Mr. Keays: They are realists but they are not too practical: I humbly submit that a little more practicality and a little less unrealistic thinking on the part of the opposition would help the government to do the things which are desired for the whole Canadian population.

The hon. member for Essex East was here in 1935. He must have been aware of the problems facing our economy at that time, but did he ever suggest the procedure he is now bringing forward to cure the ills of that day? No, Mr. Speaker, fortunately he was taken off the hook at the cost of a war.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Keays: Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. member not know that in 1936, immediately after the Liberals came into office, an organism was appointed called the national employment commission to study the problems of unemployment of that day, and that it was not necessary for the opposition at that time to urge that kind of course because such action had already been taken by the government?

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, I think the results obtained speak for themselves, and that is just what I was referring to a few moments ago. In 1935 the Conservative government brought in an unemployment insurance measure. Was it not the King opposition that claimed it was unconstitutional? After the Liberals came to power in 1935 did they not take six years to bring in the Unemployment Insurance Act even though they had claimed that the Conservative legislation was unconstitutional? As already stated by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), did it not take the former minister of national health and welfare 20 years to bring in a national health insurance plan? Yet this same gentleman stands up now and expects the present government in the short period of two years to cure all the ills caused by their administration. I believe it took the dark, the bleak, the dull days they have spent in the opposition to lighten their intelligence.

Mr. Pallett: They did not have much to work with either.

Mr. Keays: Their proposals in 1956 brought about a tight money policy that crippled small industry and meant a cup of coffee every second day for the aged and nothing for the blind and crippled. How can the hon. member for Essex East be termed anything but a Johnny come lately? Is he not aware, as found on page 2387 of Hansard for March 24, 1960, of the committee set up by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) and the Minister of Labour to consider the most appropriate basis for an official national measure of unemployment in Canada and to recommend accordingly, and to review the adequacy of existing statistics for this purpose? I will not refer to the balance of the statement made at that time because it already appears in Hansard.

Is the hon. member not aware of the advisory committee set up within the Department of Trade and Commerce to look after the interests of small business? Are members of the opposition not aware—perhaps they were absent from the house—that on March 31 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) brought in a budget designed to give buoyancy to our economy, to combat both deflation and inflation, a budget that inspired more confidence in the people of Canada than any other since 1867.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think the Chair ruled yesterday that we could not revive the debate on the budget which the hon. member appears now to be seeking to do.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned those things because I believe those are the steps which have to be taken by this government to rectify the ills of the past administration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) insists that I make a ruling on his point of order. I would say that certainly it would not be in order to revive the budget debate but I doubt that a reference to the effect of the budget, as presented, would be out of order. I would not want to cut the sentence in two.

Mr. Keays: I will abide by your ruling, Mr. Speaker. I should like to consider the effects of these different measures taken by our government to aid our economy. The output of steel has been higher than the final two months of 1959. The steel mills in the first weeks of May have turned out 120,240 tons of ingots as compared with 110,803 tons a year ago. Shipments of iron ore during March totalled 219,619 tons as compared with 190,601 tons a year ago. Then, 90 per cent of the department stores dealing in various commodities find their position improved by as much as 5 per cent to 13 per cent as compared with a year ago. The effect all this has had on our export and import trade can be gauged by looking at the statistics for the first quarter of this year which show that exports were valued at $1,219 million, 22.8 per cent higher than the corresponding period last year and imports were valued at $1,330 million higher by 9.3 per cent than a year earlier. Thus the imbalance in the first quarter of 1960 was sharply reduced to $38.7 million from the $166.2 million in the same period of 1959.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, these have been the measures which this government has taken to give a lift to our economy. This has not been done through the creation of boards and commissions, irrespective of the assurance which the opposition gives that results can be obtained in that manner. I believe that the creation of too many boards and commissions is conducive to excessive bureaucracy. We must admit that we have inherited too many boards and commissions from the Liberal party. Very often these boards and commissions bring forward the ills from which our economy is suffering in their true light, but they always leave it to the government policymakers to initiate the methods by which these ills may be cured. Excessive bureaucracy may lead, and has led to indifference amongst business people toward political life.

Our government must, therefore, approach these problems of the present and the future in a business way, and not in a manner that will result in an excess of reports and red tape. We should actually adopt business methods to apply at home as well as abroad. When I refer to "abroad" I may remind hon. members that the methods adopted by the Department of Trade and Commerce are proving worth while today. I spoke about realism and the lack of practicality which is apparent in the opposition. They remind me of people who may be standing knee deep in the December snow while speaking about this year's tulips.

The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) mentioned yesterday that the core of the problem was in finding ways of attracting capital to Atlantic provinces enterprises. When a businessman contemplates undertaking a new business does he not consult industrial experts, export and import experts and financial institutions capable of advising and guiding the prospective entrant into new fields? No true Canadian is dependent upon others to tell him the type of business in which he should indulge because he is quite capable, as time has proven, of finding his own field of activity. However, he needs counselling and this government has set up the necessary machinery to give information to those who may desire it. It would be a sad day when any government would say to an industry, you will locate in this particular area; you have no choice in the matter.

However, I agree with the hon. member for Gloucester when he speaks about the Atlantic coast fisherman as the person in our national economy who must not be forgotten. This recalls the statements made during the 1957 election campaign to the effect that if you voted Conservative you would sell no groundfish to the United States market. This was the tenor of the remarks addressed to the fishermen of the Atlantic provinces. As a result of action taken by the Department of Fisheries, the sale of lobsters and other groundfish in the United States market has increased.

What else has been done in the Atlantic provinces? I will admit that what has been done does not meet all the desires of that area. However, this government has only been in power two years and has taken positive action to remove some of the difficulties from which the Atlantic area has suffered. Did this government not transfer 10,000 barrels of disease-resistant oysters to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia? Did it not find a new formula for the D.D.T. spray for spruce budworm which does not kill the fish? Did it no build a new vessel, the Cygnus, commissioned and in operation for the department in maritime waters? Did it not increase activity in groundfish investigation through the fisheries research board at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, and the board's vessel, the A. T. Cameron? Did it not increase the degree of co-operation between the department and the provincial administration in the maritimes, notably the development of gear and techniques, and courses for fishermen?

These and many other things mentioned by the hon. member for Gloucester have been the ways and means this government has adopted to help the economy of the Atlantic area and those engaged in the fishing industry. I will repeat that this does not represent all that is required, but I believe that anyone will realize that a government cannot accomplish everything within the short period of two years. The steps taken so far will, I am sure, prove fruitful to those engaged in fishing on the Atlantic coast.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I make reference to those divisions within the departments which bring help and information to those who require it in their attempt to bolster our economy. However, there are a few other words which are necessary, and they are those which should be addressed to industry, to labour and to management: Work harder, co-operate more and bargain harder.

(Translation):

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with only part of the remarks just made by the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Keays). He blamed the Liberal party for taking six years to set up the unemployment insurance commission.

If he had gone a little deeper into the matter, he would have seen that, as soon as the question had been submitted to the supreme court, and the latter had rendered a decision in October 1937, on November 5, 1937, the Canadian government submitted to the provincial governments a plan asking for authorization to set up an unemployment insurance commission to settle all problems that might come up from time to time.

He would also have found out that all provinces agreed, except two, those of Mr. Aberhart and Mr. Duplessis. It was only after Mr. Duplessis' defeat in 1939 that the Ottawa government was able to secure provincial assent.

It shows that, in this as in other respects, the Ottawa government wanted to respect provincial rights and that is what kept the unemployment insurance commission from being established sooner.

And heaven knows what dreadful predicament workers who are now unable to find employment would be in but for that commission.

Mr. Speaker, may I therefore, right at the start of my remarks, be allowed to offer my congratulations to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr).

The speech he made yesterday is probably one of the best ever heard in this house. He sought to indicate that everything is rosy and, with much ponderation, artful dodging of difficulties, and very skilful play upon words, he attempted to show that the problem is not so very important.

I may say that, for a good while he certainly managed to create that impression. It was therefore the most skilful speech he has ever delivered, and for all my being in the opposite camp, I cannot do otherwise than congratulate him and tell him, even though I do not share his views, that I enjoyed his speech tremendously.

I said a moment ago that he had played upon words. He did, and most adroitly. For instance, in referring to increased benefits, he managed to drag in the question of fishermen, and in such a way that we could readily suppose that the Conservative government had extended unemployment insurance benefits to them.

Yet, as administrative head of that department, as the man upon whom rests the great responsibility of seeing that the unemployment insurance act is applied, he knows better than anyone that it already existed when he took office, that it was under a Liberal regime that unemployment insurance was granted to Canadian fishermen, and that if fishermen did not come under the act—our national economy being somewhat upset as you will admit, Mr. Speaker,—they would be in an appalling situation, as are in any event the other sectors of our economy.

Mr. Fortin: Because of the Liberals.

Mr. Caron: Liberal members recognize facts as they are; as for Conservative members, who refuse to admit that everything is going wrong at the present time, they will learn about it at their own cost at the next federal election.

Meanwhile, I shall go on with my remarks.

Speaking about the amendment, the minister said this: "This government does not intend to set up committees in order to shirk its responsibilities". And he added: "It would be a cabinet outside the cabinet".

Now, Mr. Speaker, would it be the first time that this government has resorted to a group of experts to look into some particular problems? I doubt whether we could find another government which has set up a greater variety of commissions, about everything and nothing, as this one has done so far. However, all those commissions that were set up were perhaps designed for the legitimate purpose of helping definite areas or special sections. What we want is a type of organization that would make regular and detailed investigations and advise the minister and the government with regard to their problems. Would the minister be afraid, for instance, that such a commission of experts might arouse him from his lethargy, in the same way as the governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Coyne, tried to rouse the Minister of Finance? He would be in great need of this, if we are to judge by his actions so far and the results he is now getting.

We admit, as everybody must, that the employment situation in Canada is probably the worst we have had for a very long time.

And the minister added: "What would such a committee do?" The answer is very simple. The committee might undertake a complete inquiry on economic conditions, which could be of help to our leaders. Indeed, as the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) said a few moments ago, our ministers are overworked, have too much routine work to do, and probably have no time—as I fully realize—to go deeply into the situation. Have they, in their respective departments all the necessary experts available for this type of investigation? I doubt it. And even if various specialists were available in those departments, they are civil servants, and today officials are afraid to give frank and honest opinions because of the attitude taken by the government with regard to suggestions made by Mr. Coyne, governor of the Bank of Canada. Those people are afraid to open their mouths. However, if we had an outside group of experts, they would have greater freedom for a serious study and might offer some suggestions. It would then be up to the government to find out what was fair and reasonable for this country.

Such a commission might look into the employment situation and, not being connected with the government, they would have no interest in whitewashing every action taken by this administration. Then again, being no part of the opposition, they would have no interest in belittling government action. They would be independent of those contingencies. So, after a thorough-going study of the situation across Canada, they could advise the Minister of Labour who, in the presence of undeniable facts, might be in a position, if he himself has not the power to legislate, to try and convince his colleagues in the cabinet to do something about it. They could consider the particularly complex problem of unemployment, for unemployment is practically permanent at this time, and does not seem to fall off even in the summertime. Then too, there is seasonal unemployment, which requires an altogether different approach. A commission such as this independent of both the government and the opposition, and made up, not of civil servants but of employees who need not tremble at the frowns or thunder of either the minister or the Leader of the Opposition, might manage to come up with concrete, considered recommendations of such a nature as to help this government which, heaven knows, certainly needs help at this time.

For instance, it could consider the fact that men are being gradually replaced by machinery. The hon. member for Port Arthur said a few moments ago that, for the last 12 years, only half as many men as before are needed in the lumber industry. In the pulp industry and paper mills, new machines are so efficient that, in paper making for instance, only three men are now needed where 18 used to be required. Everything is done by machinery. There are devices that show where a break can occur. All the operator has to do is to push a button; the machine stops, the repair is made, and the machine is again set in motion. Thus, in many cases, a man has only a few hours of actual work to do in a whole year, and this creates a new problem that must necessarily be solved. We cannot ask the worker himself to solve this problem; because it is not his doing. So, we must ask the government to consider the situation. But, as the hon. member for Port Arthur said, the government has no time for it, nor have the Ministers of Labour, of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill), of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) or of Finance (Mr. Fleming). Still, someone has to do it. The only people who could have time to consider it would be those men that we could pick and single out for their special qualifications in different fields of the economy and, in this way, make up for the ministers' own lack of time by making suggestions to improve the situation.

Such a commission could find remedies that could become permanent features. But no, when we talk of a committee or commission or board, it is rejected by the present government, which has perhaps appointed—at least to my knowledge—more commissions than any other. Could it be because the suggestion comes from the ranks of the opposition?

The minister said yesterday; we have read the suggestions put forward by the opposition. We are considering them. It will probably take over two months to implement them.

However, we are dealing here with something positive that does not commit the government. The government can appoint an advisory board, but it does not have to accept its recommendations. The government could later consider what had been recommended by a group of men in a position to advise. Why is the government against this? Why did the Minister of Labour, last night, try to minimize the importance of such a board? It is beyond me. This is not a motion of want of confidence in the government. I realize that the motion would raise a problem that the government could not accept. I would say that on the political side, perhaps something can be done. We are just suggesting this: that the government itself set up this commission of experts to make a study in that direction. The Minister of Labour has thought fit to say that he does not want a government within another government. I cannot recall any advisory board having been in the nature of a government within a government.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Caron: Certainly.

Mr. Pigeon: How do you explain that, under the previous government, when there was a fairly acute unemployment problem, no commission was appointed along the lines suggested by the hon. member?

Mr. Caron: There was an unemployment problem at the time the Liberals were in power. As I said, the Liberals have not always had it soft. They have known difficult times. However, the unemployment problem which faced them in 1953 and in 1955 did not deteriorate to the point it has reached in this country today. At that time, we had in the cabinet men like Mr. C. D. Howe, for instance, who, on finding that our United States market was declining, toured Latin America, starting with Mexico and went deep down into South America, showing those people, with the help of our industrialists that Canada was able to produce many commodities they needed. I remember perfectly that, immediately after the visit, that is, in the fall of 1955, Canada was flooded with orders. As a matter of fact, the wheels began to spin so fast that, in 1956, we were favoured with a very prosperous year, thanks to the efforts and prestige of the men who formed the Liberal cabinet.

Mr. Roland English (Gaspe): Would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Caron: Certainly.

Mr. English: When he speaks of the year 1956, is the hon. member unaware that, in March 1956, there were 510,963 live claims for unemployment insurance?

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the 1955 statistics at hand but I know that, as from the winter of 1956, conditions improved and that in summer and autumn 1956, we had almost record seasons for Canada. All that was due to the Liberal administration.

Mr. Pigeon: Therefore, according to you, a commission such as the one you have been talking about would have been a good thing to have set up under the former administration?

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I admit that such a commission would have been a good thing; I recognize it today.

I agree that it would have been a good thing even at the time of the Liberals. However, if at that time the Liberals felt they had no need for it, is this a good reason why this government should turn down the suggestion from Liberal ranks at a time when we are facing the worst situation ever known in this country?

It has also been stated by the Minister of Labour that the income of workers had reached an all-time high. Perhaps it has, in some cases, but certainly not in the case of civil servants. We are told of record salaries; well they have to be record salaries, in the light of the increased cost of living between 1959 and 1960.

According to D.B.S. figures,—and I shall not quote those of 1952-53,—for 1959-60, we note that the cost of food has increased by 1.6 per cent; of housing, by about 3 per cent; of clothing, by 1.2 per cent; household appliances, by 1 per cent. The cost of other services has gone up from 133 to 137 per cent. Of course workers need record wages to meet those growing costs.

The minister added that employment had reached its highest level, but if we consider the continual increase in population,—a yearly increase of 600,000,—and if we take into account an increase of about 100,000 workers, is that comparable to the increase of population? No. There is a normal increase, a natural one, which occurs under any government, be it Liberal, Conservative, C.C.F. or any other; it is the increase in population. It is necessary that it should be so, but what about those who are out of work? That is the question which the hon. minister did not answer. Yes, what about those who have no jobs? Are they happy at the thought that nothing seems to be done to help them?

Yet, Mr. Speaker, those people would be very happy to know that the government has accepted some suggestion, even one coming from the opposition, in order to find a way of solving almost permanently the problem which is causing them to suffer today. Now, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Essex East is precisely aimed at giving special help to those who are suffering the greatest hardship in this country.

My last reference to statistics will consist of figures published in the Labour Research bulletin, under the heading "Unemployment again, unemployment still". We find that the people hardest struck by those conditions in this country are, first of all, the Atlantic provinces as a whole, which have 18.3 per cent of Canada's unemployed; Quebec comes second with 15.6 per cent, while British Columbia has 9.7 per cent of this country's total of unemployed, the average percentage throughout Canada being 10.7 per cent.

It has been said, and newspapers have repeated it, that when the figure is higher than 3 per cent, conditions are abnormal. Well, Mr. Speaker, we are certainly facing an abnormal situation, one which demands an outstandingly vigorous policy if we want to try and settle the issues we face at this time.

In concluding his remarks, the Minister of Labour said: "When I was in the opposition, I offered criticism, but on a constructive basis." Well, sir, I have here some criticism made by the hon. minister during the 1955 session, during the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. As we may see on page 78 of Hansard, volume I, he said:

(Text):

As an example, we in Oshawa found last year that when the rolls showed a decrease in the number of registered unemployed of something like 600 or 700 they were the people who on April 15 were cut off supplementary benefits, but work was still not available. Contracting work was not in progress and construction had not started.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I am still trying to find the constructive basis in those remarks made by the Minister of Labour in 1955.

(Text):

Therefore, those people were left stranded without any financial assistance whatever from April 15 to some time toward the end of May.

(Translation):

What constructive basis is there in that part of the speech made by the present Minister of Labour, who was then precisely dealing with the unemployment situation?

(Text):

I strongly urge that the Minister of Labour consider the extension of time for supplementary benefits beyond April 15; my suggestion would be from May 15.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, we have asked for the same thing, and the minister did not see fit to admit we were right.

What about the whole series—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. member.

Mr. Caron: You want to ask me a question? Very well, go ahead.

National Board on Economic Development

Mr. Pigeon: Under present circumstances, what is your opinion about immigration?

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will possess his soul in patience, I intend to refer to that in a moment, and I shall express my opinion clearly on the matter.

What did the minister do about all the suggestions made to him by members of the opposition? Since the beginning of this session, at least twenty five suggestions to improve the situation have been submitted to him. He told us yesterday that he was considering them but the process seems to be rather slow at this time.

Our municipalities are shouldering responsibilities which belong by rights to the federal government. Our municipalities have to support, house and clothe, and feed families of workers who no longer get unemployment insurance benefits. Such is the burden falling upon the municipalities, which are not responsible for the situation. And was it not the present Prime Minister who said, in 1955, that unemployment was within the jurisdiction of the federal government and of no other authority?

Our municipalities are hard up; they have trouble making both ends meet. They are spending so much on welfare that they are wondering where they are going to end up in a year or two. If the situation goes on, we will have more bankrupt municipalities than ever before in our history, and the carelessness and inaction of this government will be to blame.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I make a remark. May I point out to the hon. member for Hull that the government of the province of Quebec foots the entire public relief bill.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to allow questions, but I will not accept speeches within my speech, no more than the minister will accept a government within a government.

Mr. Ricard: Therefore, he is right, is he not?

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I am not saying he is right. I am just saying I refuse to accept it, that is all.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Essex East is precisely the remedy we need to end this situation. Canada's unemployed—particularly in large cities, when they are now reduced to begging—would be very pleased to see the government accept this amendment. They would see a ray of hope in the fact that the government, which so far has been unable to cope with the unemployment situation, is calling upon experts to try to find a way out.

Mr. Speaker, while hundreds of thousands of workers are walking the streets, seeking employment, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough)—I am coming to the point—authorizes the publication of advertisements such as that one in a Belfast newspaper, where jobs are being offered to accountants, aerodynamicists, architects, beauticians, bookkeepers, cashiers, bricklayers, butchers, meat cutters, etc. The list goes on and on.

As evidence of the inconsistency of the government's policy, here is something that happened recently. A gentleman from Hull, a meat cutter with years of experience, called on me and asked me to help him find a job. Confident by reason of the fact that the department of immigration, presumably in co-operation with the Department of Labour, had been advertising jobs available in Canada, this gentleman, as I say, sought my help in finding a job. Quite pleased at the prospect, I wrote the following letter to the minister:

The Hon. Michael Starr,
Minister of Labour,
Confederation Building,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Minister,

When I received a copy of the invitation to come to Canada, extended to several trades in Belfast, Ireland, by the Minister of Immigration I wondered whether we really had no Canadians able to fill at least some of those jobs.

In the list, I find "butchers and meat cutters", and I know that the unemployment insurance office does not seem to be aware of any scarcity in this trade, because Mr. Rene D. Lamothe, 135 Montcalm street, Hull, who has 25 years experience in meat cutting and slaughtering, and who is now in receipt of unemployment insurance benefits, has not been offered this type of employment.

As the unemployment insurance commission does not seem to be aware of opportunities in this field, could you let me know to what department Mr. Lamothe should offer his services?

I shall be looking foward to an early reply.

Yours truly,

Alexis Caron,
M.P. for Hull.

Here is the minister's reply, dated March 24:

I acknowledge your letter of the 18th—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member. I realize that he was drawn into this matter by the hon.

member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), but I would ask him to relate his remarks to the appointment of the committee referred to in the resolution that the house resolve itself into committee of supply.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, once a question is asked, one is placed at a disadvantage in not being allowed to answer it. I do not think it is in line with the traditions of this house to subject an hon. member to such a situation. The hon. member wanted to know something about immigration, and I just happen to have a case for him, which shows the inconsistency of the government's present policies. However, your ruling would deny me an opportunity to discuss it. Preventing me from replying to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm would be going rather far, I think. If I must comply, I shall in future refuse to accept any questions, because I do not enjoy being gagged. When asked a question, I like to be able to answer it.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, may I say a word on the point of order Your Honour has raised? It appears to me that as my friend the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) is recommending a motion to the house for a commission to study economic development it would be a very odd kind of commission that would study economic development without taking account of the effect of immigration on that development and the relationship of immigration to the whole problem of employment. I submit that even if there had not been a question asked of my friend from Hull (Mr. Caron) he would be quite in order in terms of the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I agree. My invitation to the hon. member for Hull was to relate his remarks to the subject matter of the motion before the house. The hon. member certainly may discuss immigration in relation to the commission or the board the establishment of which is recommended by this motion. That was the only ruling I made.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I intended to do, on the basis of the amendment which has been introduced. I note it is to be a board of advisers on economic matters and automation.

This ties in with the fact that we are asked, in certain quarters, to admit immigrants, while we have 800,000 unemployed in Canada.

I think that if the minister of immigration could count on the co-operation and advice of a board such as this, it might help her develop the proper policy to follow and would prevent abuses on the part of certain companies which are authorized to request immigrants.

I will sum up—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Caron: No questions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the minister replied that he had asked the Hull office to keep on trying to find a job for Mr. Lamothe in his particular trade. Mr. Lamothe is still unemployed, and that was in March. Why? Because there is no organization within the government; because there is no organization within the departments of labour and immigration to solve those problems which should indeed be solved, and I suggest the government is responsible for that. I am of the opinion that the people are in need of something more definite, more concrete and better organized than what we have at the present time.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I say—

Mr. Caron: No questions, I will not answer them.

Mr. Ricard: They are too embarrassing.

Mr. Caron: If a board such as this had been set up last year, it could have been of great service to the Department of Labour, which is causing the depletion of the unemployment insurance fund to bear upon only two groups of our population, namely employers and employees, whereas the unemployment problem is the concern not only of two groups but of the whole Canadian economy and of all Canadian taxpayers.

In spite of what he did, the unemployment insurance fund keeps being drained at such a rate that it will be in pretty bad shape next winter if the situation remains the same. Again, I say that we need a committee of experts, a board, and if we do not accept it, the proper authorities will have to assume the responsibility. Don't you believe, Mr. Speaker, that such a board could held solve all economic problems?

Recently, on April 28 and, therefore, not very long ago, I received from the president of DuPont of Canada a copy of his annual speech delivered before the board of directors of that company.

Here is what that man, free from all political ties and concerned solely with the administration of that company, said:

(Text):

For the moment let us speculate on just how a comparative balance sheet of Canada's national economic position would appear if one could be prepared along the lines of that of an industrial corporation. On the asset side, the major change would be a notable increase in the value of productive fixed assets. This in itself seems good, but does it tell the whole story? A security analyst examining a corporate statement would want to know how this was financed—from earnings retained in the business, from borrowings, from a merger or from the company not paying its bills. More intensive analysis of Canada's balance sheet would show him cause for concern.

There is nothing wrong with debt provided it is incurred for productive purposes and provided there are definite means to repay it as it becomes due. But Canada's financial statements would show that much of this debt—money borrowed to meet the deficit on international payments—was in fact incurred to pay for food, clothing, travel and other items which have long since been consumed. Our national picture is like a corporation borrowing funds in order to pay out dividends in excess of earnings. Surely any corporate president going before his shareholders with such a set of financial statements would be called severely to task.

(Translation):

I think, Mr. Speaker, that this is the finest account I read recently of the general economic situation of Canada.

The suggestion, proposal or amendment—you may call it what you wish—of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) suggests a way to cope with the situation.

The definite purpose of this proposal or amendment is to attempt to find methods likely to cure the ills that beset our economy.

Besides, suggestions have been made to the Department of Labour but the same answer is always given: No. Those people do not want a government within another government.

On February 1 of this year, as reported on page 550 of the English version of Hansard, the following question was put:

(Text):

Asked by Mr. Martin whether the government had given consideration to the proposal for a conference of representatives of labour, government and management to deal with unemployment, etc., made by the president of the Canadian Labour Congress three weeks before, the Prime Minister said: "The answer is no."

(Translation):

This is the way this government, which is always in some predicament, replies to the proposals of the opposition.

The member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Keays) charges us with not putting forward any suggestion; yet the minister said yesterday that he received 25 suggestions and that he was considering them.

Mr. Speaker, after the 1958 election, the Conservatives said they had a rendezvous with destiny.

Well, they lamentably missed their rendezvous with their promises, having promised to do much better than they have done. The Prime Minister, even at the risk of breaking section 65 of our election regulations, promised work for everybody, which is not allowed under the Canada Elections Act. He did not provide work; he gave unemployment to almost everybody.

Mr. Speaker, here is what the minister of immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) had to say in 1955:

that the government should immediately consider plans to remedy this critical situation, and to take whatever action is necessary to establish a long term program to promote employment, such program to be submitted to parliament during this session.

We have not gone that far. We are only asking the government to accept the advice of experts selected outside parliament, who are not members of the Liberal or of the C.C.F. or of the Conservative group, but with extensive knowledge in the economic field, who could indicate to the government what can be done to improve the situation which is deteriorating all the time.

(Text):

Mr. Paul Martineau (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Essex East we could first of all consider the reasons for his proposal that a national advisory council be set up. That proposal if I understood the hon. member correctly, was based on his assessment of the present economic situation facing our country. Having referred to these reasons, if by any chance they were found to be sound, then we could perhaps go ahead and analyse whether or not the setting up of an advisory committee or board would be the solution to the problems which, according to his assessment, are facing this country.

In a nutshell, Mr. Speaker, I believe that he has pointed to a deteriorating economic climate and a general weakness in the economy. Since yesterday—previously too, of course—I have examined some of his arguments in relation to the economic situation facing our country at the present time and I have come to the conclusion that if there is much that is deteriorating and shabby it is certainly not to be found in our economic condition but can be found, I believe, in great abundance in very many of the deteriorating and shabby arguments that the opposition has been putting forward. I say that they are deteriorating and shabby. They are repetition, continuous repetition that adds nothing new to the question and does not advance the solution one iota.

Yesterday the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets), a good friend and a man whom I respect very much, uttered some profundities. He said that we will never solve the unemployment problem by making speeches. Coming from the source that it did, that was certainly a profound observation because all that hon. gentlemen have been doing since the house started on January 14 is to make speeches and not speeches throwing any light on the subject.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is completely against the rules of the house to reflect on debates that have already been closed. It seems to me that is all the hon. gentleman is doing. Since, according to my reading of yesterday's Hansard, members on this side who have spoken were restricted severely to the motion before the house, it seems to me that the same rule should be applied to the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister above all members of the house.

Mr. Martineau: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that what I have quoted is part and parcel of this debate because they are words used by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont yesterday in the course of this same debate.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think you have disposed of the point of order. Could the hon. member read from Hansard that portion of my remarks?

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I do not think this question is relevant to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. The rule is that no one should reflect on a decision of the house but I do not think it has been applied to mean that nobody can make any reference to a speech already made by a member of the house in the course of another debate if the question decided in that debate is not brought into the discussion. Therefore I do not see that the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue has committed any breach of the rules up to now.

Mr. Pickersgill: With great respect, Your Honour, I was listening to the hon. member and he was entering upon a discussion of speeches made by members of the opposition since January of this year.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a well-known rule of the house, sir, that you cannot go back and revive debates or quote from debates of the same session. You can quote from debates in another session but not in the same session, and it seems to me that the hon. gentleman should be held to that rule. I am not asking for any restrictions upon hon. members opposite that are not put upon us but I think we should be treated equally.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the Chair has treated everybody in the same manner up to now. I would point out to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that there is a difference between reviving a debate and reviving a statement made by an hon. member.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the interjection by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) is only another indication of the weakness of one of the arguments we have heard from that side of the house in the course of this debate. In order to oblige the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, who asked me to quote the particular section, may I be permitted to refer to page 2175 of Hansard of March 15 where he is reported as saying:

(Translation):

> Mr. Speaker, the Liberal members from the province of Quebec rightly believe that the unemployment problem will not be settled by dint of speeches.

Mr. Deschatelets: That is why we want a national advisory board.

(Text):

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, that is the reference I was making. To substantiate his assessment of the weakness of our economy the hon. member for Essex East referred yesterday to imports. He did not say that the position was weak with regard to exports. He simply said that there are indications of elements of strength in our export situation. He thought he was making a great concession, but after saying that he went on to say, "But can these increases in our exports during recent months be maintained"?

Certainly the export picture right at this juncture is very good indeed. In every succeeding month since September of last year there have been increases in the volume and value of exports, and during the first quarter of 1960 exports reached a figure of over $1,200 million. That was an increase of some 22 per cent over the corresponding period of 1959.

At the same time our imports, it is true, increased but they increased much less rapidly than our exports. Our imports increased by 9.3 per cent and therefore our import imbalance picture improved very substantially in the first quarter of 1960. The import imbalance is down now to some $38 million whereas it stood at something like $162 million for the first quarter of 1959. Surely such astounding progress, on the one hand a 22 per cent increase in exports and on the other hand only a 9 per cent increase in imports, is not a basis for pessimism and is not a basis upon which the hon. member for Essex East can come to the conclusion that we are faced with this great, this terrible weakness in our economy, a weakness which I suggest lies more in the arguments of the hon. member. That was one of the points upon which his amendment was based.

He also picked out certain other elements where he felt there were weaknesses. Before we come to that I should like to say a further word about exports. Many people have been, and I suppose justifiably, asking themselves, what is going to happen next? Our exports have been holding up well. They held up well in 1958 which according to everybody was a depression year. However, there was no significant drop in our export figures for 1958. There has been a substantial increase in those figures for 1959 and today we are starting a new year. We have completed one quarter of that new year and we have chalked up a record in volume and value of exports.

In view of that encouraging picture can we be satisfied that there is reason for the anxiety and gloom exhibited by members of the opposition? When I hear these members of the oppositon speaking I am reminded a bit of a bunch of spoiled children. They have had everything that their little hearts could desire, but they are not satisfied because they think that sometime in the future perhaps things will not be as rosy. I believe that is a correct appraisal of the attitude which these hon. members have adopted. When we look at our export situation we can see important problems developing, perhaps as some have suggested through the formation of trading groups in Europe or the emergence of a new industrial trading giant such as Japan. It is up to the people of Canada, under the leadership of the government as that leadership is being provided now, to find a solution to these problems and assure that the progressive trends in our export trade will continue.

There is, as people know and will readily admit, great prosperity in Great Britain and in the countries of western Europe. These countries have become so prosperous in recent months that they have lifted import restrictions. They have gone all out to increase their volume of trade. I submit that this provides another great opportunity to our Canadian exporters to fulfil the needs of the people of these countries who are now prosperous and who are now increasing their standards of living to a degree they have never experienced before. Instead of looking at our export figures and asking whether or not they will be maintained, I submit that hon. members of the opposition would be better advised to try to point out to the people the true facts and the unparalleled opportunities for greater sales which would result in greater progress in Canada. I must say, therefore, that in so far as the weakness in our export trade is concerned as mentioned by the hon. member for Essex East, that weakness exists only in his own imagination and in the fallacy of some of his arguments.

Again I must say that the hon. member picks out of our whole economic situation a few choice items such as construction, and he seemed greatly perturbed about the fact that construction was going downhill. In the last week's issue of the Financial Post, I have just seen the report of the MacLean building survey. According to that survey there has been an increase of 26.5 per cent in all types of construction as compared with the first quarter of 1959. This report admits that during the first quarter of 1960 residential starts were down as compared with last year. It was stated, however, that this decline was more than offset by progress in industrial, engineering and commercial construction. I say again, therefore, that when the hon. member for Essex East bases his amendment on weakness, he must look elsewhere than in the construction field. And so it goes all along the line.

The hon. member mentioned, for instance, that there was a decline in the output of automobiles during one week. It is, of course, quite understandable that he would be interested in this subject because he represents a Windsor constituency. He just picked out one week. I was looking at some of the automobile production figures, and I found that in March there had been a substantial increase in production over 1959. There is no doubt that 1959 was a year of great recovery, and there is no doubt that 1960 will be a record year. The Financial Post as late as last week stated that all indications, taken as a whole, pointed to the fact that 1960 will be a record year unequalled by any of the past years, including all of the great years of prosperity, so-called, which my hon. friends say occurred under their regime. The Financial Post has not, as yet, revised its opinion. The article stated that this record year would be experienced by most firms in most industries. Now that was quite a sweeping survey of all spheres of activity, and after making adjustments for some declines in certain fields, it is stated we will have a record year.

In so far as residential construction is concerned, according to the latest survey there will be a marked improvement as more and more conventional lenders come into the field. The hon. member, therefore, was giving a very shaky reason for the establishment of that much vaunted national advisory council which he recommends in his amendment. If we look at the recent speech made by the president of the Toronto-Dominion Bank, Mr. A. C. Ashforth, we find that he says the year 1960 will see a contained boom in Canada. There is every reason for optimism concerning economic conditions in this country.

I do not want to burden you, Mr. Speaker, or the house with a long series of statistics. However, everywhere we look we can see indications that 1960, presenting as it may formidable obstacles, will chalk up new records which will be the result of the industry of the Canadian people supported by vigorous leadership as exemplified by the present government.

Mr. Deschatelets: What about unemployment?

Mr. Martineau: I have mentioned that before and I am going to mention it again, Mr. Speaker. I am glad my hon. friend mentioned unemployment. I treated a bit of it at the start of my speech. However, a certain phrase used by the hon. member for Essex East struck me forcibly because it stirred vague memories of its having repeated many times in the past. With a great show of concern and with his face wrinkled by the preoccupations which he felt—and which I have every reason to believe were sincere—he said, "We now have a hard core of unemployment in this country". He said that as if he were finding something that came from high above, as if he had received some sudden inspiration on the spur of the moment as to this hard core of unemployment in this country; and he spoke in such terms as to lead this house to believe that this was recent invention and that it had been invented by the present government.

I was a bit curious about that reflection and I went back a few years. I happened to be reading a speech made by no less a personage than a former minister of finance of this country, a highly respected man; I refer to Mr. Dunning. This speech was so enlightening that I believe it merits quoting here. I refer to Hansard of February 25, 1937, page 1217. These words were uttered by Mr. Dunning, the then minister of finance, in his budget speech of that year:

> Still more disheartening to most observers is the failure of the numbers on relief to decline proportionately with the revival of business... However, to those observers who look for an early end to the relief problem the decline during the past year will appear discouragingly small.

Then he went on to say this:

> It is probably true, Mr. Speaker, that a hard core of unemployment and relief will always remain... Even in the best of times, we have always had unemployment, but the unemployed have not been "in the statistics" nor a charge upon public funds to the same extent as today.

There you have it, Mr. Speaker. In 1937, not under a Conservative administration but under the great Liberal regime, almost two and a half years after it had taken power in 1937 on the promise that it would solve once and forever that great problem of unemployment, the minister of finance of that day admits tragically to the house that there was then a hard core of unemployment and that it would remain with us in the best of times. Yet today members of the opposition come here and say, "We have the answer to that hard core and the answer lies in the establishment of a national advisory commission".

That proposal may seem fairly sensible to a great many people. Certainly on its surface it looks to be appealing. But again I think it is always a good thing to look back into the record in order to see whether similar situations have ever existed previously and whether similar remedies were applied and, if they were applied, what were the results.

We remember 1935. We remember the great campaign carried on that year. It was an election year and Mr. King rode back into power on the promise of solving that big unemployment bug which was then plaguing the country and with regard to which no session passes without ample reference being made. His remedy to the problem was precisely the establishment of a national employment commission. That sounds very much like a national advisory council to look after full employment, automation and related problems. Hence one of his first gestures after assuming power was to bring forth that child of his brain which he had long nurtured.

It is extremely interesting to follow the progress of that commission throughout the years during which it worked. First of all, we have its establishment in the early part of 1936; I believe it was January. It was established then. That was already six months after it was promised but nevertheless it was established and persons were named to this commission and were supposed to get to work. When Mr. King made his much heralded promise during the election campaign of 1935, he pointed to an unemployment figure during that summer of 1935 of some 400,000 persons.

Mr. Winch: I hope the hon. member has enough time left to get to 1960, 1961 and 1962.

National Board on Economic Development

Mr. Martineau: We are getting there presently. If you take one thing at a time you never go wrong. I can understand the impatience of hon. members opposite in skipping those years. They always want to have this country believe that unemployment was a problem which was created in 1930 and which promptly came to an end with the ascension to power of that great Liberal regime in 1935. But let us face the facts as they are. If we analyse correctly the performance of our economy and the performance of the past administrations, perhaps we shall get to the root of the problem and find the correct answer. I am making my speech now. The hon. member has made his speech. He had his little say. Now let me have mine.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are back in 1937; and in that year in parliament there were many queries as to that famous national employment commission that had been set up. On going through the record we find that by the middle of 1936—oh, the commission had done a great deal of work—the government had issued 35 orders in council whereby they appointed all sorts of people and bought all sorts of the most modern equipment of that time to launch their famous commission. In 1937 parliament again convened. There was a debate on this national employment commission and we find that the unemployment figures were stable. In 1938 we find the same thing again; it is repeated all over again. It is on the record. If hon. members care to look it up they may read the debate on the national employment commission and get the facts.
