

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN 37 MEET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503

SIM SELLE SELECTION OF THE SELECTION OF

CIHM/ICMH Microfiche Series. CIHM/ICMH Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadien de microreproductions historiques

(C) 1985

Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

Th

The poof

Or be the side of fire side or

Middle en be rig

origin copy which repro	institute has attemp nai copy available for which may be bibli th may alter any of to duction, or which i isual method of film	or filming. Feat lographically u the images in t may significant	ures of this nique, he ily change	qu'il de c poin une mod	stitut a mid lui a été p et exempi t de vue b image rep lification d i indiqués	possible d aire qui s iibilograp iroduite, d lans la mo	le se proc ont peut- hique, qu ou qui pe éthode no	urer. Les étre uniqui i peuvent uvent exig	détails les du modifier jer une
	Coloured covers/ Couverture de cou	leur .			Coloured Pages de
	Covers damaged/ Couverture endom	magée			Pages da Pages en	maged/ dommag	ées
	Covers restored an Couverture restaur		•		_		d/or iemi et/ou peli
	Cover title missing Le titre de couvert			\checkmark				or foxed/ s ou pique
	Coloured maps/ Cartes géographiqu	ies en couleur			Pages de Pages dé Coloured ink (i.e. o Encre de couleur (i				Showthre Transpare	_
	Coloured plates an Planches et/ou illu-				Quality o		ries/ i'impress	sion
	Bound with other r Relié avec d'autres			Includes supplementary material/ Comprend du matériel supplémentaire
	Tight binding may along interior marg Lare liure serrée pe distorsion le long d	in/ out causer de l'	ombre ou de la		Only edit Seule édi Pages wi	ition disp	onible	oscured by	/ errata
	Blank leaves added during restoration may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming/ it se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte, mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmées.				silps, tissues, etc., have been refilmed to ensure the best possible image/ Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies per un feuillet d'errata, une pelure, etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon à obtenir la meilleure image possible.
V	Additional commercommentaires sup		Wrinkled pages may	film slightly	out of focu	18.
Ce d	item is filmed at the ocument est filme a		ction indiqué ci-d	essous.		ne v		20.4
10X	14X	ГТТ	18X	22X	1 1	26X	ТТ	30X
_	12X	16X	20X		24X		28X		32X

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

Library of the Public Archives of Canada

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

ifier

18 ge

ure,

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol → (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ♥ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

La bibliothèque des Archives publiques du Canada

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'iliustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'iliustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaître sur la dernière image de chaque microficha, seion le cas: le symbole → signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ▼ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

1	2	3		1
				2 3
	1	2	3
	4	5	6

ASHORT

HISTORY

OF THE

OPPOSITION.

[Price One Shilling.]

A Ji . T a l li

. . . 10

OPPOS. IIOS

A SHORT

HISTORY

OF THE

OPPOSITION

DURING THE

Last Session of Parliament.

THE FIFTH EDITION.

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR T. CADELL, IN THE STRAND.

MDCCLXXIX.

. 116 i i di

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE present situation of Public Assairs calls forcibly upon every good Subject, to exert himself in the Public Service. Every individual possesses a power, which can aid and support his country. He can draw his sword in her desence, contribute to her resources, or combat with argument, and expose to just indignation, those, who have proved themselves her internal, and consequently, her unnatural enemies.

The Author of the following Essay has long entertained an opinion, that the most formidable foes of Great Britain were nursed in her own bosom: These, under the masque of Patriotism, fomented rebellion in her Colonies; and by exposing her pretended weakness, created a combination of powerful States, not only against her interest, but her very existence, as a great and independent Kingdom.

In the emergency, which is the result of that combination, two objects seem necessary to the Public

Public Safety. These are, the knowledge of our friends from our enemies; and that spirited exertion, which alone can extricate us, from our present situation. If the facts advanced, and encouragements exhibited, in the following Essay, shall contribute to throw light, on the one; of to add vigour to the other, the Writer has attained his purpose.

ASHORT

ASHORT

ed ur

ei L

HISTORY

OF THE

OPPOSITION.

IN every age, and almost in every country, the ambition, which is inherent in human nature, has prompted individuals to aspire to distinction and pre-eminence, among their fellow-The means, used to obtain those objects, are various; as to render them successful, they must be accommodated to the spirit of the Government, under which they are applied. In despotic monarchies, the favour of the Prince, who is the fountain of all preferment, is generally procured by intrigue or ad-In republics, influence and authority are acquired, by gaining the confidence, or by seducing the principles of the People; and, in mixed governments, like that of Great Britain, B the

the nearest road to power lies between those two extremes.

The Revolution, which happened about ninety years ago, though it made but few changes in the forms of authority, established a balance of influence, between the Crown and the The first retained the essence, but lost much of the terror of power. The representatives of the latter having a great deal to bestow, as a body, thought themselves, as individuals, entitled to a share in a government, which they fupported. 'A mutual dependence was created, by the possession of the means of conferring mutual favours. A Prince, who stood in need of supplies, was directed, by common prudence, where to chuse his servants. But as candidates were more numerous than offices, the disappointed never failed to persecute the successful; till, by watching faults, errors, or misfortunes, they obtained their point, and they themselves became, in their turn, the objects of attack.

As a degree of the public confidence was necessary to direct the Sovereign in his choice of fervants, men who wished to be employed, took care to support, in their public appearances, the principles and perhaps the prejudices of the people. An habitual jealousy of the power

WO

out ew

d a

the

loft

ita-

W,

als, ney

ed,

of

ce,

tes

ap-

ıl;

es,

ves

ne-

of

ok

es.

of

er

of

of the Crown, kept open the ears of the public to every alarm. Scarce any measure of Government could be so free from error, as not to be vulnerable on some popular ground. Every Opposition seized this obvious advantage, and assumed or obtained the title of step the popular party." No distinction was made, in this respect, between Whig and Tory. Each party, when out of place, adopted the same principles; and thus both were alternately dignified with the once honourable name of Patriots.

The present reign began, with advantages, calculated to put an end to foolish distinctions, which ought to have expired, with the prejudices, on which they had been founded. A young prince had fucceeded to the throne, who disdained to govern his people through the medium of a faction. The door of preferment was laid open to all his subjects; but though this liberal conduct might have pleased the unprejudiced, it was incapable of extinguishing party among the interested. These, though of different principles and characters, by impoling on the weak and credulous, formed new factions, on the shadows of departed political tenets. However heterogeneous before, the heat of refentment, and rage of disappointment, as it were, gradually melted them into one mass; and they revived in B 2. themselves themselves the name, though little of the principles of Whios.

The vehemence of the present Opposition feems to have carried them to extremities, which supersede all former descriptions of party, and which cannot fail to defeat their views. In former times, the candidates for public favour thought it prudent to adhere, in their exhibitions, to public principles. But in our times, an eagerness to thwart the measures of Government has expelled all regard for the opinions of the people. The dignity and honour of the nation were formerly the favourite themes of Oppolitions; melancholy, meannels, and despair, now fill the whole circle of patriotic oratory. With a want of prudence, as well as of decency, they tie up the hands of their country in the hour of danger. They not only justify rebellion, against her authority, but indirectly promote a foreign war against her very existence. By magnifying the power of her opponents, they endeavour to depress her spirits; by expoling her real or pretended weakness, they wish to inspire her enemies with a considence of fuccess.

These strange positions, and many more of the same kind, might be established, on incontestible authorities, by a plain narrative of the conduct rin-

tion ties,

rty,

ln

our

ibi-

mes,

ern-

s of the

Op-

tory.

ncy,

the

ebel-

pro-

ence.

ents,

ex-

they

ce of

re of

conduct

conduct of Oppolition, fince the commencement of the present parliament. But, the pursuing them through such a variety of matter, and such a length of time, would be a task of great labour, and little entertainment. We shall, therefore, confine ourselves to the most striking features of the last session. In the space of seven months, they have contrived to croud together most of the absurdates of seven years; and, though the studied brevity of this disquisition must necessarily exclude many circumstances, enough, we trust, will appear to shew the principles, designs, and views of so strange a confederacy.

On the 26th of November, 1778, the fifth fession of the present parliament was opened, with a speech from the throne. A complaint of the persidy of France, in commencing hostilities, and the obstinacy of America, in refusing terms, together with a request of support, were the chief heads of the speech. It expressed, at the same time, a regret "that the efforts of his Majesty had not been attended with all the success which the justice of the cause, and the vigour of exertions, seemed to promise." Unanimity was, in the usual form, recommended; and surely no period in history more required the unanimous exertion of the whole nation.

Opposition

Opposition have denominated themselves " an active Opposition;" and if zeal in thwarting, affiduity in obstructing, and success in defeating public measures, merit a designation, which implies a kind of applause, they are certainly entitled to that name. The unanimity and concert, which their Sovereign requested, for the support of the interests and honour of the nation, exist only among them, for the ruin of the one, and the tarnishing of the other. A short detail of the principles, which they advanced in the first exhibitions of the feafon, will establish the truth of this observation. The orators in the Lower House mixed reflections on the past, with prophecies of future difasters. The first we shall submit to the judgment of the Reader; several of the latter have been already refuted by time.

Opposition opened the political campaign; with assertions, which had been often refuted; and with predictions of national disasters, which heir own conduct seemed, uniformly, calculated to realize. As the public misfortunes may be deduced, from the rebellion in America, they asserted, contrary to fact, that hostilities had been first commenced by Government. They recurred to their usual prophecies, relative to foreign wars; and they even went so far as to arm Holland, our ancient ally, against this devoted kingdom.

ves

art-

de-

ion,

are

ına-

eign

elts

ong

iish-

rin-

ibi-

this

oufe

s of

t to

tter

ign;

ed:

hich

ated

be

hey had

hey

to

irm

ted

om.

kingdom (a). To fow discontents, among the militia, they alleged, that the officers had been scandalously neglected (b). To excite mutiny in the army and navy, they afferted that Governmenthad employed no commander of an army, no admiral of a fleet, whom they had not difgraced, or with whom they had not quarrelled (c). With a contradiction in terms, which neither folly nor rage itself could justify, they averred that Ministry had succeeded in no instance; yet that fortune had been favourable in every instance, during the whole campaign (d). They owned, that unanimity was absolutely necessary for the safety of their country; yet, with peculiar bonesty, avowed "that they would clog " the wheels of Government, when it ought to " be affifted by every man (e)."

Though the clogging the wheels of Government at home, and their encouraging the seditious abroad, had been the obvious cause of the rise and progress of the American war, they traced the cause of that war to the pretended tyranny of Great-Britain (f). Though America had continued an atrocious rebellion for many years, against

⁽a) Mr. T. T ------ d's Speech, Nov. 26th, 1778.

⁽b) Speech of T. T ---- d, Nov. 26, 1778.

⁽c) Speech of C. F-x, Nov. 26, 1778. Speech of $C-1B-\acute{e}$.

⁽d) Ibid. (e) Ibid. (f) Ibid.

against her parent and benefactres; yet they affirmed, that a war against America " is against our own country." Though the Americans have been declared rebels, by all the folemnity of law, by all the forms of the constitution, " they are still our fellow-subjects, " and every blow we strike is against our-" felves (b)." Though they have broke capitulations (i), difregarded flags of truce (k), violated conventions, trampled on every principle of war, that governs civilized nations (1); " yet as their "war is a war of passion (m)," we ought "to withdraw our forces entirely from their coast (n)." Though " offensive war is pointed out as proper for this country (0)," war ought not to be offensive with respect to America." With unexampled absurdity, they alleged, that rebels in arms had a better right to " a relaxation of hostilities," than foreign enemies, whom the alliance of those rebels had excited against their country. With a perverfion of terms, unknown, in any other times, they afferted, that men, whose hands are daily stained with the blood of their countrymen, ⁽b) Speech of C. F-x, Nov. 26, 1778. Speech of C-1 B--é.

⁽i) Governor J-st-ne's Speech, Nov. 26, 1778.

⁽k) Admiral Gambier's Letter to Congress.

⁽¹⁾ Speech of Governor J-ft-ne.

⁽m) Speech of Mr. F-x, Nov. 26, 1778.

⁽n) Ibid. (o) Ibid.

ought to be treated not as enemies, but as peaceable fellow-subjects and friends (b).

In the Upper Assembly the zeal of Patriotism, as springing from higher ground, rose to a greater height. Not content to amend the Address to the Throne, it was insisted, that no Address at all should be made (p). It was asferted, that our armies were either mouldered away, by death, defertion, and fickness, or reduced by loss in battle (q). That our commerce was totally loft, our public credit drawing to annihilation, our fleet on the verge of absolute ruin (r). That nothing could fave the empire, but withdrawing our troops from America, acknowledging her independence, and imploring her forgiveness (s). That it would be even imprudent, if not impossible, to persist in a war against France (t). That Spain would aid France; that Holland, as a commercial state, would treat with America; that the whole world would join against us; that we were without men, without money. without an ally; that nothing, in short, could

they

the

1 the

con-

ects,

our-

pitu-

lated

war,

their

with-

(n)."

pro-

t not

rica.35

leged,

o " a

ene-

s had

erver-

imes,

daily

men.

cch of ⁽e) Speeches of all the Opposition.

⁽p) L-d B-1's Speech, Nov. 26, 1778.

⁽q) L-d C-y's Speech, Nov. 26.

⁽r) L-d B-1's Speech.

⁽s) Vide Opposition Speeches, passim.

⁽t) B-p of P-rb-gh's Speech.

fave the state, but an immediate dismission of all his Majesty's present servants, and the placing the reins of Government, in the hands of Opposition (4).

in the transfer was the wint of the transfer Affertions, which carried along with them their own refutation, were not likely to make converts within, nor profelytes without doors. But what the party could not effect by facts and arguments, they endeavoured to accomplish, by address and intrigue. Mismanagements, and a consequent want of success, on every fide of the war, had convinced the nation, that there was an error in planning at home, or a defect in the execution abroad. Generals and Admirals had returned from their different commands, not only without laurels, but some of them covered with disgrace or misfortune. The coldness, with which they had been received, by their country, had raised their resentment, as it hurt their pride. As Government brought forward no accusation against them, the prefumption was, that they themfelves were partly to blame. As men of little prudence and considerable names, are the fittest tools for the hands of party, Opposition took care to secure engines, which they hoped to play off with advantage, on the enemy, and a ⁽n) Speeches passim, Nov. 26, 1778.

of all

icing

Op-

11-

them

nake

oors.

facts

com-

nage-

ccess.

1 the

ng at

road.

thout

grace

they.

aised

Go-

ainst

heme. little

tteft

took. i. to

G-1 B ne, though a man of spirit, conducted himself, as if political prudence formed no part of his character. His enemies remarked, that he came from America, where he had loft an army, with as much confidence, as Terentius Varro returned to Rome, from the fatal fields of Cannæ. Men, in general, have less blamed his conduct abroad, than his behaviour at home. His accepting a leave of absence from a Congress, who had shamefully evaded his own convention, the remembrance of recent misfortunes, and a suspicion of former errors, justified the court, in adhering to an etiquette, which excludes officers, who have been unfortunate, from the Royal Presence, till they are acquitted by a Court Martial.

The General forgot his own errors, if such existed; and remembered only, what he thought, the severity of Government. He also forgot, that he had left his captive fellow-soldiers, whom he ought to have protected, from insult and oppression, by his presence; and he even eluded orders given him to return to their aid, in their melancholy and severe captivity. It was observed, upon the whole, that regret and pity were all he could hope to meet with; but, it seems, he expected approbation. Resentment arose, in his mind, as from injustice;

erespency and any of series of this policy of the policy of any or and the

and with a precipitancy, which cannot easily be defended, the either fought or accepted the protection of Opposition.

Sir W- H-e had, indeed, loft no army, but as he had decifively improved no advantage, the American war rather increased, than diminished, upon his hands. Possessed of the common routine of military knowledge, he feems to have been capable of fecuring from defeat fuch troops as be led against such an enemy: But the conducting them to any brilliant victory, and the making a decifive use of the superiority he enjoyed, appear to have been objects foreign to his talents. Sensible, perhaps, of this defect, in his own mind, he chose to prevent any reverse of fortune, by retiring from the command of the army; but as " mi-" litary fecessions," in the midst of war, require an explanation, his retreat was ascribed to his having loft the confidence of men in power. The fact might be true, but it was not sufficient, to fatisfy the people. Though he was received with kindness by the Sovereign, and attention by the Ministry, he perceived that he was vanishing fast from the memory of the nation. In the space of a few months, he found himfelf of as little account, in the estimation of Public, as any of his own commissaries; and,

eafily

d the

rmy,

dimi-

mon

have

Such

But

tory,

upe-

ob-

per-

chose

iring

mi-

uire

o his

ient,

ived

tion

va-

ion.

im-

of

es;

and, to recover his reputation, he closed eagerly, with Opposition; as they promised him their hearty assistance, in a Parliamentary Inquiry.

To these lucky aids from America, the party added a still greater acquisition in Europe. An Admiral possessed of professional reputation, equal at least to his merit, though connected with Opposition, was placed at the head of the Western Squadron. The selecting men of opposing principles, for the command of sleets and armies, has been long a favourite maxim of Government. This conduct may have had its soundation in liberal sentiments; but it has operated like weakness, and led to a train of misfortunes. Few officers are such "sturdy mo"ralists," as to exclude political prejudices from the line of their duty.

Our Admiral put to sea, with one of the most powerful squadrons, that ever sailed, from the ports of this kingdom. He met the enemy; and a running sight, rather than an engagement, ensued. No trophies were lost; but no laurels were gained. The professional terms, in which the accounts of naval actions are involved, render them obscure, if not unintelligible, ligible, to the generality of mankind. One fact, however, was universally admitted: "A fiperior British sleet had engaged an inferior French squadron; and neither advantage nor trophy was obtained."

A nation, accustomed to value themselves, upon naval victories, were not likely to be fatisfied with a drawn battle, under such circumstances. But though no symptoms of approbation appeared, no figns of refentment were shewn. A cold silence certainly prevailed; a species of censure, more mortifying to a feeling mind, than even clamour. Had the Admiral been permitted to remain, under this cloud, he would have become a useless engine, in the hands of his party. To derive benefit from his former popularity, it was found necessary to remove the stain, which want of success had left upon his character. Some officers, in his fuite, were, accordingly, induced to propagate infinuations, to the disadvantage of Vice-Admiral Sir H--P-r. That gentleman, by being in place, might be supposed to act in concert with men in power, for the ruin of his Admiral; and to make the former the accuser was to arm the prejudices of the people in favour of the latter.

The Vice-Admiral being a man of more spirit than forelight, unfortunately fell into the trap laid for him by the faction. Conscious of his deserving praise, instead of censure, for his behaviour on the 27th of July, he became irritated at the injustice done to his reputation. From being the accused, he became the accuser; and this step turned the scale of opinion in favour of his opponent. In this circumstance alone, the gallant Vice-Admiral, as it afterwards appeared, was to blame. Had he demanded and infifted upon his own trial, his character would have recovered its deserved lustre; and that of the Admiral might have lost much of that splendour which was thrown upon it, by his industrious friends.

A party, who had lost the confidence of the nation, seized with eagerness the sudden change which appeared in the popular tide. Whispers artfully propagated, without doors, were improved by degrees into a general clamour. Within doors, every opportunity was taken, and every artifice used to feed the rising slame. The two Admirals, if a vulgar expression may be used, were pitted against each other. Much sport. or what is the same thing to Opposition, much mischief, was expected from this contest. A man of popularity was accused, by a man etr. 1

राम यह र है। व क्षत्र विभावन त्य के निविधानिक वर्ष वस्त्र नामित

Vinv

One

: SE A

nferior

ge nor

felves,

be farcum-

proba-

were led; a feeling

dmiral

id, he

in the

om his

ary to ad left

fuite,

nsinu-

al Sir being

oncert

niral:

o arm

f the ferial interference were rung, without cealing, in the ears of the people. The helpless condition of Innocence, when perfecuted by Power, was echoed, from every corner, by the runners, writers, and abettors of Oppolition. The two houses of Parliament resounded with vehement declamations, or broken accents of whining oratory; and that amiable but much abused virtue, pity, was excited, every where, in the breasts of the deluded, the credulous and the weak.

francistication of the second to the second of the

In vain had Sir H—P—r declared, in the most solemn and public manner, that he had not communicated his design to any man in office. In vain did men in office assirm, upon the faith of Gentlemen, that they knew nothing of the accusation, till it was officially delivered to the Admiralty. No credit was to be given to any member of a Tory Administration. They were leagued together in one plan of oppression, in one dark design, in one pre-concerted conspiracy, to ruin the reputation, and even to take the life, of a Whig Admiral.

In this general turmoil, this intemperate joy of faction, Oppolition not only forgot their poor country, but even their poor friends. mini-

elples

ed by

er, by

ppoli-

unded

ccents

much where.

us and

ed, in

hat he

man in

upon

othing

ivered

ven to

They effion.

con-

enito

t upit perate

for-

poor

iends.

friends. Sir W--- H--- could not gain their promifed support, for a moment, with all the verdure of his laurels. The advantages hoped from his exculpation were not equal in themselves, and they were more distant in prospect, than the benefits to be derived from the acquittal of Admiral K-l. In vain did General B—ne endeavour to awake the pity of the party, when he failed to command their attention. In vain did he exclaim " that he was one of those brave men who made the con-44 yention at Saratoga: That, however, he claimed no fingle merit in that transaction; "that, in the face of famine, despair, and 46 death, he had compelled the enemy to grant « conditions, honourable, if they had been complied with (x)." The party were deaf to "the tale of tears;" and all the attention paid to the unfortunate general scarce amounted to one "dolorous anhelation (y)," from the feeling bosom of Mr. E-d B-ke.

The conduct of Opposition, during the trial, and after the acquittal of A—1 K—1, is too recent in the recollection of the public, to require more than a very general recapitulation.

⁽x) Almon's Debates, No. XI. p. 75.

⁽y) Vide Dr. Johnson on the Irish Howl, p. 13.

Their abrogating the old forms of the Admiralty, by removing a trial for a naval offence to the land, to accommodate their own purposes, their appearance at Portsmouth, upon the occasion, their biassing witnesses, their carrying all the indecencies of a play-house audience into a Court of Justice, their soliciting the officers of the navy, their sowing discontents among the common seamen, their parading the streets, for the purpose of inflaming the populace, were such mean, scandalous, and unjustifiable tricks of faction, as can scarcely be paralleled by any example in history.

The pitiful victory which they obtained over an unfortunate, because a vehement, man, was pursued with an intemperance inexcusable even in boys, and with a rancour which the most profligate and hard hearted men, if prudent, would have concealed, to preserve, at least, the appearance of decency. That men of the first families, in this country, should disguise themtelves like porters, to force illuminations by breaking windows, is a circumstance which throws an indelible stain upon the times, as well as on the party. It even appeared, that, with every inclination to commit mischief, the riotous demagogues were obliged to have recourse to the bottle, for that courage which nature ture had denied. That in the hour of " intoxi-Admi-"cation and adfcititious boldness," they attacked offence the feeble and old among the men, and terrified. rpofes, into fits and miscarriages several women, by the e occarude barbarity of their behaviour. That, howing all ever, as a just retribution for their wanton cruinto a elties, many of them suffered under the hands cers of and cudgels of the injured; and that several ng the were carried into Roundhouses, covered with ts, for ignominious marks of the chastisement they had , were received. tricks by any

Few men of sense, who were not connected with the views, or privy to the designs of the party, could perceive any just grounds for this species of vulgar ovation. Though the accuser had not brought his charges to the standard of legal proof, the accused had not exculpated himself to the satisfaction of the public. Those who were most willing to deny his want of conduct, regretted his want of good fortune; and a general cry went forth, that an opportunity was lost, which might never return again.

The conduct of the Admiral himself, on the occasion, was not calculated to establish any high idea of his good sense or of his principles. If he thought that he merited a triumph for the drawn battle of the 27th of July, 1778, what

D 2

are

d over n, was e even ft prowould he apirst fathemns by which es, as that, f, the ve reh nature are we to think of his understanding? If, on the other hand, he made himself the tool of a faction, what judgment must we form of that dignified honour? which his friends annex to his character? A victory, which had lain concealed for seven months, and was, at length, discovered by accident, was not, intrinsically, worth the expence of many candles; and the applause of a mob is the coarsest commodity either a gentleman or his friends can purchase.

But the Faction, as well as their naval friend. acted as if they really gave credit to their own affertions and assumptions. Whilst HE paraded the streets, amidst the foolish, if not hired, acclamations of a rabble, THEY were busy in weaving a wreath, for his brows, in both Houses of Parliament. Thinking, at length. they had fufficiently charged the engine with popularity, they refolved to bring it to bear, not only upon Administration, but upon their Sovereign. They proposed to make motions, against the former, on naval subjects; be undertook, with peculiar modesty, to write refcripts to the latter. Even before this double battery was opened, Opposition began to preenjoy their expected success, with that childish intemperance which has uniformly marked their conduct.

A-1 K-1 having acquired, in the beginning of March, as many laurels as he was likely to obtain, his honourable relation, Mr. F-x, introduced the first of a long string of motions, which, he owned, led to an address for the removal of the first Lord of the Admiralty, and ultimately of all his Majesty's servants (2). In support of the motion, he alleged, that the noble Lord, who presided over the naval department, had, as early as the month of November 1777, solemnly pledged himself, in his official capacity, that there were thirty-five ships of the line ready for sea, and fit for actual service. That, notwithstanding this affertion, there were not fix ships of the line, in a state to meet an enemy, in the month of March 1778. That early in the month of June, his honourable relation (a) was fent to cruize, on the coast of France, with twenty ships of the line only; though it was known, or ought to have been known, that there were twenty-feven ships of force lying in Brest water. From these supposed facts, he deduced this conclusion, that the Ministry, who had led the nation into so perilous a fituation, ought instantly to be removed,

f, on

of a

that

ex to:

. con-:

ngth

cally

d the

odity.

riend.

nwo.

raded

, ac-

fy in both

ngth,

with

bear,

their

tions,

e un-

e re-

buble

pre-

their

⁽x) Mr. F-x's Speech, March 3d and 8th, 1779.

⁽a) Admiral Keppel.

as unequal to the trust committed to their charge (b).

In opposition to these affertions, it was proved. from official documents, that, in November 1777, there were actually thirty-five ships of the line ready for service. That, in the month of March 1778, some more ships were in a state of great forwardness for sea. That the whole number, fit for meeting an enemy in June, amounted to forty-four. That when Mr. K-- was ordered to fail, with twenty ships of the line, of which a large proportion was three-deckers, there were but seventeen ships in the harbour of Brest ready for action. That should it even appear, which was by no means the case, that there actually was a greater number of ships in Brest, it was well known to seamen, that an inferior force may block up a superior one in a narrow harbour. That, upon the whole, the Board of Admiralty had placed a number of ships, adequate to the service, under the command of A--- K--- even to the satisfaction and approbation of the Admiral himself. That, therefore, as the premises, endeavoured to be established by Opposition, were not founded in

⁽b) Crime enorme aux yeux du Sieur Fox. Gazette de France, du Vendredi 26 Mars 1779.

their

oved. mber of the nth of ate of numunted l was ne, of . there f Breft ppear, there Breft. nferior narrow ard of , adend of n and

ette de

That.

to be

ded in fact,

fact, their conclusions must of course fall to the ground (c).

Such were the affertions, which Oppel ion, mixed with much abuse and altercation, repeatedly echoed, from side to side, in both Houses. Though the Public, as well as Parliament, are frequently invited to an entertainment of politics, by some very eloquent Patriots; the dish served up is always the same. To use their own expression, "they have travelled so "often over the ground," that they have trod out every appearance of vegetation; and those who are so idle as to accompany them in the "dreary journey," can neither expect amusement, nor reap advantage.

The operations of the party, without doors, were more decilive than their arguments within. Confident of success, or assuming the appearance of confidence, they had previously gained the votes of several provident members, who wifely look into suturity. Lazy Whigs and expecting patriots were roundly told, that to share in the spoil it was necessary to take an active part in obtaining the victory. Mandates were issued for the immediate appearance of all

⁽c) Lord M——ve's Speech, March 3d and 8th, 1779.
absentees,

absentees, from every corner of the kingdom. The beds of the sick, the couches of the gouty and lame were visited; leaders were sent to the blind. In short, patriotism crowded the lobbies of both Houses, with all the mortifying pictures of age, missortune and disease.

To aid, with a species of mutiny among seamen, the attacks of Oppolition upon Admiralty, the feeds of fedition had been fown with a lavish hand at Portsmouth. Officers had been attacked through their ruling passions; the vain with flattery, the weak with fallacious reasonings, and the avaricious and ambitious with promises. To add indecency to presumption and folly, the nation was threatened, with what is vulgarly called a Round Robin, from every feaport. An Admiral, who had made fuch a splendid figure on the 27th of July, 1778, dared to fay to his Sovereign, that he would withdraw his talents from the service, unless the Admiralty, and every department of the State, were placed in the hands of men whom he could truft.

Opposition drove, with so much rapidity and so little judgment, that they overturned their own designs. Their mean, and even criminal conduct, offended the people; and the Sovereign,

ingdom, e gouty t to the lobbies pictures ong seaAdmin with a lad been

the vain
reasonus with amption
ith what
n every e such a 1778, lld withthe Adte, were

ity and d their riminal Sovereign,

e could

raigh, with becoming dignity, rejected their infolent requisitions. The current turned against them, and their spirit vanished when their hopes declined. The nation discovered their insidious defigns, their lust for power, their thirst for places. It was perceived that they meant to facrifice Great Britain, her rights, her interests, and even honour, to the demagogues of America, by rendering her independent of the parent from whom she fprung. Even those who had been seduced by their assurances, or gained by their promises, finding their mistake, began to retreat. friends whom they had brought from the country, by a species of babeas corpus, packed up their cloak-bags and left the town. The beds of the fick, and couches of the lame, were reoccupied; and even the blind found their way home. Ad-1 K-1 executed his threats against his devoted country, by quitting her fervice. The muddy stream, which had overflowed the whole kingdom, and covered it with slime, returned to its old bed; and babbled, as formerly, through the rugged channel of Oppofition (c).

⁽c) The Gazette de France, du Vendredi 26 Mars 1779, with a kind of regret, says: Aupre touts ces débats, les voix etant recueillés, la motion de Sieur Fox n'en eut que 170 contre 204.

The hopes of the Faction had been raised so high, that disappointment depressed their minds in proportion to their former elevation. Some, who either ignorantly or sondly imagined that the nation would take their part, began to talk of a secession. A sew orators are said to have actually retired, to vent the tropes of unfinished speeches to the "echo of trees and murmur" of rills" on some friend's estate (d). But as is listless groves and insensible streams are not the most encouraging audiences, the solitary patriots were induced to rejoin their friends, who, though deseated, still remained in the field.

Whilst the expectations of Opposition were at their height, by the aid received from A——I K——I's acquittal, a new topic was started, which, as it promised much mischief to their country, opened a fresh prospect of advantage to the party. The trade of Ireland, and consequently its revenue, had been on the decline for some years past. The causes of that missfortune are more difficult to ascertain than the fact itself. Whether this diminution of commerce ⁽d) A certain Baronet, who in a fit of despair relative to the good Old Cause, has lately become a zealous Whig, is much given to such solitary rehearsals of the Speeches which he intends to fire off, upon the House.

ed for

ninds

iome.

l that

talk

have

nished

ırmur

But as

" are

ie fo-

their

nained

ere at

tarted.

their

intage

confe-

ne for

ortune

act it-

merce

ative to

big, is

eeches

eded

proceeded from a decrease of domestic industry, or a failure of foreign markets, it equally demanded a remedy, if it could be applied. Some steps had been accordingly taken, toward that object, in the preceding session. But it appeared, at the time, that the facility with which relief was granted, instead of satisfying Opposition, was calculated to create new demands. These demands, as they interfered with the commerce of Great Britain, were certain of being opposed: a circumstance, which could not fail to create that desirable confusion which suits the views of the party.

To those, who really wished to remove the evil, it appeared that the Irish legislature ought to be the best judges of the remedy. But neither that legislature, nor their constituents, had signified any diffatisfaction at the relief obtained. To convince both of the impropriety of their peaceable conduct, Opposition, by making demands in the name of Ireland, pointed out what the might extort from Great Britain. This artifice, they hoped, would reduce the Ministry to a disagreeable dilemma. Should they grant the demanded relief to the Irish, they could not fail to offend the whole commercial interest in Great Britain: should they refuse it, there was a prospect, by proper management, of creating E 2 tumults.

tumults, and, perhaps, of kindling a rebellion in Ireland. The borness of his hard and the little hard

Though this commercial adventure has not yet been productive of all the profit expected by the Faction, as the ship is still at sea, the cargo may turn out to some account. The inferior Irish are, and have been, in a distressed fituation. The nature of the government, the tenures of the country, a listless inactivity, which always accompanies diffress, a want of industry, created by domestic discouragements of various kinds, have combined to render their condition more wretched than that of almost any other people in Europe. They have long felt their own mifery, without knowing well from whence Our worthy Patriots, by pointing out it came. Great Britain as the author of Irish distress, may have some chance of rousing Irish resentment. They have fomented and encouraged refistance in America, and why may they not excite rebellion in Ireland? The truth is, they feem to have injured their country beyond their degree of forgiveness; and if they cannot fatisfy their ambition by her misfortunes, they are at least refolved to gratify their refentment by her ruin.

The attacks, in both Houses, were so similar, in manner, affertion, declamation, and invective, ellion ಗಾಶತ

SF 10

as not pected a, the he indreffed nt, the which. dustry, various ndition other lt their whence ing out s, may tment. fistance cite refeem to degree y their at least

o fimiand inrective,

by her

been weighed and pre-concerted in the cabinet of sedition without doors. In this political warfare, the post of honour was given to the Patriots of the Lower Assembly, where the enemy was supposed to be most vulnerable. After the battle was lost below, it was generally rehearsed above; where some noble orators wielded, with peculiar dexterity, those very weapons of scurrility and invective, which had so little availed the cause in the hands of their more humble friends,

In the slightest skirmishes, with the common enemy, the same co-operation, the same concert appeared. Though composed of such discordant members, the whole party played in unison; and every key, that was touched below, was faithfully answered by a similar note from above.

The Irish business seemed to promise such a plentiful harvest of confusion, that the whole party employed their joint labour, in preparing the soil and sowing the seed. Individuals were not, in the mean time, idle, in their separate efforts, for the benefit of the common cause. The D— of R——d, with his usual application, tenacity, and vehemence, had introduced and supported, in the Upper House, an Inquiry into the Management of Greenwich Hospital. The nature and fate of this Inquiry, are so recent in the memory of the Public, that a particular detail is as unnecessary in itself, as it would be here out of place.

It may be sufficient to observe, that the intention of the enquiry was to criminate the first Lord of the Admiralty. That after a most tedious examination, which lasted near three months, not one of the charges was proved. That the E. of S-ch, instead of meriting censure, deserved the highest praise. had paid peculiar and uncommon attention to the Hospital. That he had improved its revenue, increased the number of the pensioners, prevented the admission of improper objects, made new regulations, for the more speedy recovery of the fick, and the better accommodation of those in health. That, instead of converting his superintendency of the charity to any advantage, he had abolished all sinecures of inferior offices, which had formerly been in the disposal of the first Lord. That, in direct opposition to what had been alleged, there is not one, out of 2169 pensioners at present in the Hospital, who is not intitled to the charity, by length of service, or infirmities, contracted in the discharge of duty.

Whilft

nent

te of

ffary

1013

e in-

: first

st te-

three

oved.

riting

at he

on to

reve-

made

overy.

on of

adf in-

the

op-

not

the by

in

hilft

Whilst the D. of R ____ d derived some hopes, to the faction, from the expected iffue of the Hospital Inquiry, a more flattering prospect of criminating men in office was opened, in the Lower Affembly. Sir W---- H-we. though not publicly accused, was still anxious to exculpate himself to the Public. fwayed, by a good opinion of his own conduct, or trufting to the kind partiality of his friends, he had flattered the Patriots and, perhaps, himself, that he should be able to lay the burden of American misfortunes, to the account of the minister for the American department. The nation found itself disappointed, but till matters were examined, it was not known decidedly where censure ought to fall. An unwillingness in Government, to admit of a Parliamentary Inquiry, on a military fubiect, furnished their enemies with an opportunity of drawing conclusions, unfavourable to Ministry. These conclusions, in the usual manner, became topics of patriotic invective and declamation; which, in a manner, extorted an inquiry, that had been once refused, by a vote.

But the result of the Inquiry was very different from what Opposition hoped. It appeared, that rebellion first arose in America, from an ambitious

tious faction; and not from the general sense of the body of the people (a). That the reduction of that faction and, confequently, the extinction of rebellion, had uniformly been the object of Administration, and not the conquest or unconditional subjection of the colonies (b.) That to accomplish that desirable end, they had not only fent a force sufficient for the purpose, but a much greater one, than was either wished for or expected, by the most fanguine friends of Government in America (c). That the army had been amply provided, on all occasions, with every necessary, every implement, every refource of war. That the hands of the General had been so far from being tied up, by instructions, or his operations counteracted, by orders, from home, that the manner of carrying on the war had been left entirely to his judgment and discretion.

(a) E idence of Major General Robertson, before the House of Commons, June 8, 1779, MS p. 9, 10.

(b) The object of the war was to enable the loyal subjects of America to get free from the tyranny of the rebels; and to let the country follow its inclination, by returning to the King's government. Evidence, June 10, p. 18.—No idea of subduing the Americans—but to assist the good Americans to subdue the bad ones. Ibid. p. 20.

(c) Ibid. p. 17. "The demand of 20,000 men was thought to be rather extravagant." Ibid. p. 63.—

"The force we had was adequate to the fubding the re" bellion." Evidence, June 10, p. 22.

ife of

ction

tinc-

bject

r un-

That

d not

, but

d for

f Go-

y had

with

ry re-

eneral

ftruc-

rders.

on the

t and

ore the

ral iubrebels:

turning

. 18.—

he good

nen was

the re-

It

3.-

It appeared, that the Americans, inflead of overpowering by numbers, had never, together, at one place, above 16,000, and confequently had never been fo numerous, in the field, as the army under Sir W ---- H-we (d). That our troops were well disciplined, and uniformly made the best and most military appearance (e). That the enemy were an undisciplined rabble, without order, without aims, without cloathing (f); though by procrassinating the war, they attained discipline and acquired military knowledge. That, upon all occasions, the British troops executed their duty, with energy, bravery and effect. That, upon no occasion, those of America behaved, with the spirit, firmness, and intrepidity of sol-That the former were victorious, in every affault, attack, and fair battle. That the latter obtained no advantage, but by stratagem or furprise. The inferences deducible, from these tacts, were, that the British army were either unskilfully or languidly led; or that the natural strength of the country, and unanimity of its inhabitants, had enabled the Americans to prevent the consequences of losses, and disafters in the field.

⁽d) Evidence, June 10, p. 14.

⁽e) Ibid. p. 16.

⁽f) "Except the Maryland Regiment, who were well"cloathed and accounted." Ibid. p. 16.

In support of the first position, it appeared, That the evacuation of Boston had been too long delayed; and undertaken, at length, in an improper feafon. That the retreat to Halifax furnished the rebels, with an opportunity of strengthening their force at New-York. That the victory obtained at Long-Island might have proved decisive, had it been properly purfued (g). That an opportunity of putting an end to the war had been lost at the White-Plains, by a delay in attacking the rebels, when they offered battle. That the distance and injudicious dispositions of the stations chosen in the Jerseys, the placing foreigners, who neither knew the nature nor the language of the country, in a post liable to surprise and attack, the giving the command to an Officer, whom an habitual intemperance had rendered unfit for the discharge of his duty, by presenting an unexpected opportunity to a ruined and dispersed enemy (b), encouraged them to re-affemble, and enabled them to obtain an advantage which turned the scale of the war. That the operations, which followed this disaster, were less calculated

⁽g) "Some of the troops were going to florm the lines." Gen. H-we called them back.—Putnam, who had the command of 7000, had detached all but 300.—But this was not known." Evidence, June 9, p. 73, 74.

⁽b) Who had dwindled to 3000 men. G. Robertson's Evidence, June 8, p. 16.

lated to retrieve the misfortune, than to encourage the enemy. That the retreat from Quibbleton (i), the embarkation of the troops, the tedious expedition to the Delaware, and then to Chesapeak-Bay, the neglecting to improve the victory obtained at the Brandywine, the furprise at German Town, the injudicious manner of affaulting Red-Bank and attacking Mud-Island, the inactive winter at Philadelphia, if not proofs of incapacity, were instances of blameable inactivity, in the General.

With regard to the strength of the country, it appeared, that it presented no advantages to the natives, which it did not hold forth to the invaders. That, on the contrary, it was rather more favourable, to the latter, than to the former. That its great rivers, instead of covering the retreat of the rebels, by being navigable, laid them open to fresh misfortunes, from an enemy, possessing the command of the sea. That Hudson's River, in particular, by cividing the whole continent from North to

e lines. ad the ut this

ared,

n too

ngth,

at to

ppor-

York.

might

pur-

ng an

lains,

they

njudiin the either

counk, the

om an fit for

unex-

d ene-

hd en-

urned

tions,

alcu-

rtfon's

lated

⁽i) " Our army (in the Jerseys in 1777) was 17,015 " men; that of the wbels, some said 8, some 9, and " fome 10,000 men in that camp." Evidence, June 9, p. 63.—" We had 52,815 men in North America; of " those Sir W. Howe had under his command 40,874." Ibid. June 10, p. 39.

South, formed a natural and strong barrier, between the revolted provinces. That the feizing this barrier was an object of the first consequence (k), towards the extinction of the rebellion. That this object might have been eafily obtained, as the river presents an excellent and expeditious water-communication, between New-York and Albany (1). That this great advantage rendered the co-operation of the main army, with the troops coming from Canada, as obvious, as it was and expeditious; and that, it was the want of fuch co-operation, that ruined the Northern expedition (m), lost an army, turned the scale in favour of rebellion, and loaded Great-Britain, with the expence and danger of a foreign war.

In the course of the evidence taken at home, and more especially by the most authentic information from abroad, it has appeared, that the in-

⁽A) Evidence, p. 51.

^{(1) &}quot;An army may pass from New York to Albany "(170 miles) by means of Hudson's River, in two days." Ibid. p. 47.75.

⁽m) "Many feared that General Burgoyne's army would "be loft, if not supported by Sir W. Howe. I wrote "myself, on being informed of the situation of the dif-

[&]quot; ferent armies, I wrote, &c. that if General Burgoyne

[&]quot; extricated himself, future ages would have little occa-

[&]quot; fion to talk of Hannibal." Ibid. p. 39.

judicious

r, be-

eizing

confe-

rebel-

ly ob-

nd ex-

New-

intage

, with

, as it

as the

d the urned

Great-

a fo-

home,

form-

he in-

Albany

days."

would

he dif-

goyne

occa-

cious

judicious and inactive management of the war has been the sole obstacle, to the restoration of peace. That a very great majority of the people of America are, and have been, averse to the measures, and disgusted at the tyranny of the Congress (n). That they were prevented, from exhibiting their loyalty to their Sovereign and their aversion to usurpation, by the defultory manner, in which the war was conducted, on our part; as it deprived them of permanent protection, and left them exposed to the insolence, cruelty, and revenge of their enemies.

That the quitting of the Jerseys, and the going to sea, with the whole army in July 1777, terrified other provinces from submitting, for fear of being deserted. That the three Delaware Counties had offered their submission to Government, on condition of their being only offisted, in protecting themselves, against the rebels (o). That their application having either been disregarded or neglected, they adhered to the usurped government. That, as a general idea had gone abroad, that protection was uncertain, or rather that desertion was certain (p), the vic-

⁽n) Evidence, June 9, p. 12. June 16, passim.

⁽⁰⁾ Evidence, June 16, p. 59.

⁽p) "We foon left the country. The rebels took up "the figners (of addresses), banished them, or fent them to the mines." Ibid. p. 25.

tory at the Brandywine, the taking of Philadelphia, the destruction of the rebel shipping, the reduction of Mud-Island and Red-Bank, were attended with none of those advantages, which accompany successes in war. That no person of great consequence, and few of any consequence at all, submitted after those events. That, when a resolution was formed to evacuate Philadelphia, fuch as had submitted were advised to make their peace (q), with the Congress. That some unfortunate persons, who followed that advice, fell a facrifice, to the relentless violence and unforgiving tyranny of the rebels. That, in short, the want of profition on the one side, and the certainty of pu ishment for defection, on the other, eradicated every hope from the minds of the loyal, and forced them to swear allegiance to an usurpation, which they despised and abhorred.

⁽q) "Mr. Schumacker mentioned to me what he had "told me, a few days before, that Sir William Howe ad" vifed him to go over to Washington, and make his peace."—Mr. Galloway's Evidence, June 16, p. 70.—"He (Sir William) gave me the same advice." Ibid. p. 71.—Sir Henry Clinton said, "that the game was not up, that the war was not over, but would still be car-"ried on vigorously, and desired that we would not enter-tain a thought of going over to the enemy." Ibid. p. 74.

idel-

the

werė

hich'

rfon

onfe-

ents.

acu-

e adrefs.

wed

vio-

That, Iide,

tion,

the

wear

bifed

had

e ade his

70.

Ibid. s not

carnter-

Ibid.

igh

Though these facts came forward with a force, which commanded conviction, the faction adhered, with invincible obstinacy, to the line of their former conduct. With their usual infult, upon the common feelings and common sense of mankind, they established false premiles, and deduced, from those premiles, arguments for the total dereliction, and consequently, for the independence of America. affirmed, that rebellion can never be extinguished; though the want of vigour, in pursuing our successes, has been the demonstrable cause of its continuing so long. They afferted, that a general unanimity prevails against Great Britain; though the adherence of the people to the Congress proceeded, from our not affording them a permanent protection, under the shelter of our arms. They alleged, that the courage of the rebels, and the natural strength of their country, are unfurmountable obstacles; though the first seldom appear in the field, but to fly, and the latter opens every where its bosom to invasion, by the means of extensive arms of the sea, and many great and navigable rivers.

When we deny other public virtues to Oppolition, we must allow, that they possess the negative merit of consistency in their political conduct. conduct. They struck one key, at the beginning of the American troubles, and they have ever fince continued the same note, or improved upon it, as events aroie. When the tumults began at Boston, when licentiousness and riot exhibited their first wild scenes, in Fanguil-Hall, they encouraged the piece, by applauding the actors. The prints of the departing steps of freedom, like those of Astræa, were only to be found, they affirmed, round the Tree of Liberty, on Boston Common. A gloomy despotism had feized Great Britain at home, and it became neceffary, that her hands should be fettered, to prevent the recovery of her authority abroad. Every effort on the part of the Mother-country was an exertion of tyranny; every refistance, in the colonies, was an instance of public virtue. The grim tyrant, Arbitrary Power, had taken up arms against that innocent little child, American Liberty; and to defend the weak against the strong, was a service of much reputation and little danger.

Obvious as the deceptions, held forth by the party, ought to have been, they were attended with success, both without and within doors. The people thought, that affertions, so considently and so often repeated, had some foundation in truth; and, though Government knew

egin-

have

oved

nults

riot

Hall.

z the

ps of

to be berty,

had

e ne-

d, to

road.

untry

ce, in

irtuc.

aken

Ame-

rainst

ation

v.the

nded

pors.

onfi-

und-

new the the contrary, they acted, as if they gave them credit. The consequence was, that languid measures were adopted, when vigour and exertion were necessary; and, thus, by the forbearance of Administration, the encouragement of Opposition, the inactivity or inability of commanders, that monster, Rebellion, which should have been stifled as soon as born, was softered and reared to maturity.

Unfortunately for this country, Opposition were permitted, in a manner, to take the lead in American measures. War, and especially rebellion, being one of the greatest evils, that can afflict a state, the most speedy and powerful remedies must be applied, to remove the The only certain road to peace lies through exertion and victory. An anxiety for negotiation, being generally a mark of weakness, too often encourages an enemy to a continuation of relistance. It has also a most unfavourable effect on the spirit of the people, among whose leaders such anxiety appears. This double confideration had rendered the propofing terms a favourite topic of patriotic eloquence. To depress the minds of their countrymen, to elevate those of the rebels; to make the first to doubt, the second to become confident of success; to keep up, if the expression may be used, the ball of contention between the parties, were circumstances that probably might lengthen the dispute to the verge of some public misfortune; that misfortune, if it favoured not the views of ambition, might, at least, be turned to the purposes of revenge.

The calamity expected, with fo much anxiety, by Opposition, at length arrived. An army was lost in America. A rebellion, which seemed to stagger even under partial and ill-pursued defeats, became firmly established by victory. The spirits of this country began to fink; and the Faction added to the general depression, by their unmanly oratory. Instead of proposing those vigorous exertions, which the honour, as well as interest of the nation required, they recommended a tame submission to rebels; an acknowledgment of former errors, and affurances of future amendment. The world, in general, ascribed to artifice a conduct which could not be reconciled to the principles of common sense. Was it probable that infurgents, who had offered no terms during their misfortunes, would receive any in the moment of victory? Or could it be expected, that a Congress, who had declared for independence, when thirty thousand disciplined soldiers were ready to land on their coast, would relinquish that independence, ence, after they had made a whole army prifoners of war?

vere

the

s of

our-

nxi-

rmy

med

de-

The

l the

oling

r, as

re-

ac-

nces

eral.

bt be

enfe.

had

nes.

pry?

who

hirty

and

end-

nce,

The most sanguine lovers of tranquillity could scarcely derive any hopes from this pacific system; but it was adopted. The Faction thus obtained that degradation of their own country, which feems to have been uniformly a part of their plan. But, as it had been justly apprehended, that American refistance might, at last, cease, through the failure of American resources, it had become necessary to procure powerful allies, for the support of the cause. The defeat and capture of the army, under G--1 B—ne, had certainly its weight in the French cabinet. But the deplorable picture given, in both Houses, of the state of this kingdom, could only induce France to throw her weight into the scale of America.

The weight of France having been found infufficient in the operations of the last summer, the necessity of obtaining another ally, to the cause of Liberty, became apparent during the winter. Every encouragement and every lure were held out to Spain. Under a pretence of bewailing their unfortunate country, Opposition exposed her weakness. Their own declamations shewed that her councils were distracted by faction; and their affertions, relative to the state of her navy and army, represented her to foreigners as an easy prey. To bring the certainty of her approaching ruin to a point of demonstration, some theorists, acquainted with figures, were employed to make fictitious states of her finances. Even some of the party had the folly, or rather presumption, to assert, in public, that the very independence of Great Britain was in the power of the house of Bourbon (r)

The phlegmatic councils of Spain were, however, too flow for the fire and vehemence of her British friends. Though their eloquence had its proper influence at Madrid, that desirable circumstance had been concealed in "Castilian "taciturnity." Deprived almost of every hope, from the other side of the Bay of Biscay, the eyes of our Patriots were again turned to the regions beyond the Atlantic. As the treaty at-

⁽r) Contemptible as such assertions may seem, at home, they make an impression abroad; as appears, from the Gazette de France du Vendredi 18 Juin 1779: "Il soutint " que les sorces de la France étoient presque égales a celle " de la Grand-Bretagne en Europe et en Amerique; que l'Espagne tenoit la balance. Il osa prononcer que l'An- gleterre ne domineroit plus, sur les mers, qu'autant " qu'il plairoit à la Maison de Bourbon."—L'eloquent Burke soutint que le Sieur Hartley avoit rien avancé, qui ne sut vrai; il appuya cette opinion, par un detail circonstancie de toutes les sorces de l'Espagne.

r to

CCT-

f de-

with tates had

t, in

reat

our-

howce of

ence

rable tilian

ope,

the

the

at-

ome,

utint

celle

que

'An-

quent.

qui

con-

ted

tempted last summer had stopt the operations of war, it was expedient to throw negotiation in the way of hostility in the present year. Though the party had reprobated their own measure, the conciliatory bills, as degrading and disgraceful, they proposed the renewal of the commission, which those bills authorised. This mode of relief, or rather respite, to rebellion, having been resused, the old proposal, of withdrawing the troops from America, was renewed. This last effort was also unsuccessful; and that melancholy gloom, which usually covers the rear of unsuccessful, political campaigns, began to fall on the party.

A fudden, though not unexpected light, broke through this gloom, and revived their drooping spirits. Spain, being seduced by France, and, perhaps, encouraged by the representations given, in our public assemblies, of our weakness (s), determined to throw her

(s) Le Sieur Thowsend, Fox et Burke furent, parmi les opposans, ceux qui signalérent davantage contre cette motion, en observant que la nation dans l'etat allarmant ou celle se trouvoit s'epuisoit par des dépenses énormes, tandis que chaque jour lui decouvroit quelque nouvelle ennemi; que l'Espagne alloit immanquablement se declarer; que l'Irlande, menacée d'une invasion, avoit pris cette circonstance pour se soulever contre le gouvernement Anglois; que l'Ecosse meme etoit pleine de mécontents. Gazette de France du Vendredi 18 Juin 1779.

weight

The uniform conduct of Opposition feemed calculated, if not intended, to arm Spain in favour of France and America; yet they affected a degree of melancholy when that event was announced. With a pernicious confiftency, they dwelt on the weakness of Great Britain, and on the force of her enemies. Instead of standing forth with that manly boldness, which other patriots have either felt or feigned, in times of peril, they unbraced the nerves of their country with womanish lamentations. To magnify the danger, they pretended to recommend unanimity; and to promise support to the S-r, whilst they undermined his just influence and authority. But the notes of affected forrow were foon changed for the voice of discord; and it became. became apparent, that the party lamented their own condition more than the state of their country.

one

fhe

ith

out

ent

ard

not cir-

old

nu-

hall

ned

fa-

ted was

hey

and

nde

her

of

try

the

ni-

r.

ind

ere

it

me

In the preceding detail, many circumstances are omitted, equally descriptive of the conduct, and expressive of the designs of Opposition, with those that have been related. But, as the intention of this Essay is only to give a general idea of the subject, it was thought unnecessary to descend to every particular. One obvious observation will naturally suggest itself to the mind of the Reader: That an Opposition begun in ambition, has degenerated, through disappointment, into a species of infanity; and that, in attempting to ruin the Ministry, the party have given a fatal stab to the honour and interests of their country.

In every popular government, opposition is not only natural, but, when conducted on liberal principles, useful, and even necessary. There is a kind of charm in authority, which may induce the most virtuous magistrates to extend it too far, if subject to no controul. The original object of a national representative, was to watch over the political rights of the people, and to check the incroachments of the executive power. The trust is great; and, strictly speaking, ought to be solely appropriated to the public lic good. Those who use it as an engine of private ambition and personal interest, meet with forgiveness, on account of the frequency of the practice. But the employing a weapon, given for the defence of our country, against its existence, is a species of political assassination which no example can justify, no state ought to pass without punishment.

If the great lines of the conduct of Opposition, during the last session of parliament, have been fairly traced, in the preceding disquisition, no terms can be too severe, no indignation too violent, in exposing the principles and plans of the party. If the account, which has been given of their affertions and actions, has been exaggerated, the Public will judge of both with more candour. But, unsortunately for Great Britain, the stamp of truth has been affixed to the representation, contained in this Essay, by the most uncontrovertible of all arguments, the events of the times: events unparalleled in the history of any other age or country.

Let the consequences of an opposite conduct, in the party, be considered, for a moment. Let it be supposed, that, instead of abetting relation and encouraging foreign war, they had ceclared that, when the American Congress avowed

eet

on,

its

ion

t to

ion,

ееп

no

vio-

the

n of

ted.

can-

ain.

pre-

host

s of

of

ict.

nt.

read

ess

ed

avowed Independence, and especially when they leagued with France, the grounds of the original question were entirely changed. That, as friends of their country, they had refolved to strengthen her hands, to restore her authority. to protect her interests, and to recover her honour. That the object of their pursuit had been to render Ministers responsible for remissines in carrying on the war; or for obstinacy in refusing adequate and honourable conditions of peace. That they had been the first to inquire into the failure of measures in the execution; not to affert, without examination, that the error lay in the cabinet and not in the field. That they had taken measures to ascertain, by what mismanagement or misconduct, in commanders, an army had been loft, to a contemptible enemy, and a superior seet had returned from action. without a victory? That, vinstead of receiving into the bosom of their party, a general, who had quitted his command, in the midft of war. they had inquired, why the advantages, he either possessed or obtained, had not been more decifively improved?

To render still more finished the picture of the reverse of their actual proceedings, let it be supposed, that instead of announcing, to all Europe, the weakness of Great Britain, they had, in their speeches and their actions, exhibited a spirited and disinterested love for their country, an unanimity to arm her exertions, not to clog her measures, a manly boldness to meet, to break, to disconcert the combinations of her domestic and foreign enemies. What would have been, in such a case, the present situation of public affairs? What the state of public opinion, relative to themselves? The resistance of America must have ceased. France might have given up the contest; and the junction of Spain would have been prevented.

One should suppose it hardly possible, that an Opposition, consisting of several men, whose rank and fortune connect their private interest with that of the public, should follow a line of conduct, that leads to the destruction of their country, and, consequently, to their own ruin. This is an argument which they themselves repeat, and think unanswerable. The truth is, that every faction may avail itself of the same argument; but general reasoning must fall to the ground, when contradicted by facts. There is a pride and obstinacy in party, which disdain to acknowledge error; and, therefore, though Opposition may, nay must, perceive the pernicious tendency of their conduct, they choose to persist, rather than own a fault.

An opportunity offered itself lately, which might have reflected credit on Opposition, without the supposed disgrace of changing their former opinions. The Spanish Rescript furnished this opportunity; yet the nation cannot fee, without indignation and aftonishment, that Acrs indispensably necessary for the safety of the State have been combated, with all the virulence and obstinacy of oratory, in every stage of their progress. That the party clogged every measure for arming the kingdom, by sea and land, whilst they afferted, that the enemy were ready to invade our coast, and that a few days. might bring the report of their guns to the ears of both houses of parliament. That, when a spirit of unanimity and exertion became the duty of all lovers of their country, the faction announced, with a species of savage triumph, that the City of London would not vote a man or a shilling, for the national defence, in the prefent emergency. That in short they ressumed to affert in public, that the tyranny of France and Spain would be more welcome to them, than the continuance of their rivals in power.

After such proofs of aversion to the public good, it will be in vain to hope for any reformation in Opposition. The distress in which they have involved their country, can advance but

H 2

one

An

ii-

eir

15,

to ns

at

ent

of

re-

nce

nc-

an

ink

vith

on-

un-

his

and

ery

nt;

nd.

ide

p-

us

ift,

one step farther, to furnish them with an opportunity of retreating from the line of their misconduct. That step is an invasion of this Island; the last effort of the conspiracy of our foreign enemies. In that critical moment, a moment which every good subject would meet with spirit and considence in his cause, there is every reason to sear, that Opposition would be still an Opposition. Such has been the inveteracy which a consciousness of criminality, a jealousy of rivals, a habit of opposing the interests and degrading the dignity of their country; and a despair embittered by an unpopular and fruitless contest of many years, have unixed with every spring of their actions, every power of their minds.

Upon the whole, we may fairly affirm, that neither the talents they possess, nor the conduct they have pursued, are likely to recommend Opposition as proper persons for managing public affairs at the present criss. If our situation is alarming, we must look for relief to the resources of the kingdom, and the spirit of our countrymen, and not to those, who have uniformly endeavoured to depreciate the first, and to damp the second. The truth is, that, very fortunately for this country, this desponding party have hitherto failed in their views of convincing us that our ruin is inevitable.

We feel the contrary, in the internal vigour of the state, and in that unanimity of sentiment among the people, which forbids us to connect danger with despair.

But why should either be mentioned, upon the present occasion? This country, with much fmaller relourges, and much lefs unanimity, has repeatedly weathered more dreadful florms than that which only feems to threaten it at present. In the first Dutch war, France and Denmark joined the enemy against England (b). She had no friendly port on the continent, from the Pyrenees to the pole; no ally but the Bishop of Munster. The Dutch came out, to a decisive battle, with one hundred and thirteen ships of war, eleven fireships, and seven yachts; led by able, experienced, and brave commanders. France, co-operating with her allies, entered the Channel with forty thips of the line. The usual revenue of England amounted only to the annual fum of one million two hundred thoufand pounds; and the supplies granted, for the year, exceeded not double that fum. Our standing army scarcely consisted of five thoufand men; and there was no militia in the kingdom. in general basel, near Beauty and

⁽b) In 1665, 1666, &c. Vide Life of Clarendon, Burnet, Rapin, Ralph, &c. &c.

The nation was, in the mean time, visited with two of the most dreadful calamities that can afflict a people, pestilence and fire. Near eighty thousand persons had been carried off by the first, in London alone. The city had become a kind of defert; and grass was observed to grow in the middle of Cheapside (c). The plague followed those who fled to the country; and terror and death filled every corner of the kingdom. This scourge was followed by a fire, which confumed fifteen out of the twentyfix wards of the city, confifting of four hundred ftreets and lanes, thirteen thousand houses, and eighty-nine parish-churches (d). But these misfortunes neither damped the spirits of the people, nor obstructed the measures of Government. Our fleets, though much inferior, fought, and vanquished the enemy. The alliance against us was broken, and an honourable and advantageous peace was obtained.

In the year 1690, the French fleet entered the English channel, appeared before Plymouth, on the 20th of June, drove the combined fleets of England and Holland, from the back of the isle of Wight, engaged and totally defeated them, in a general battle, near Beachy-head.

14 5

⁽c) Baker, p. 637.

⁽d) Vide Clarendon, Heath, Burnet:

In this unfortunate action we lost eight ships of the line, besides many more, that were rendered unsit for service; and the shattered remains of the sleet were forced to shelter themselves in the Thames (e). The French rode triumphant, for some months, in the Channel. They insulted our sea-ports; and threatened our coasts with invasion. There were, at the time, no more than five thousand regular troops in England; the militia were not arrayed; King William was, in a manner, confined to Ireland, by the superiority of the enemy at sea.

The nation was, at the same time, distracted and divided in opinion, on account of a disputed succession. Public credit, during the whole war, was so low, that soon after this period, Exchequer and Navy Bills became almost of as little value, as the pasteboard dollars of the American Congress; and even the notes of the Bank of England were at forty per cent. discount (f). Near six thousand trading vessels were taken by the French in the course of the war (g). Notwithstanding these missortunes, the vigour of Government and spirit of the people surmounted all difficulties. The enemy was disappointed, in all his ambitious views, an honourable peace was obtained, the revolution confirmed, the protestant succession secured, and public credit restored.

⁽e) Lord Torrington's Letter, July 1, 1690.

⁽f) Kennet, Ralph, Burnet, &c. &c.

⁽g) Vide Journals of the Commons, 1693.

In the present times, our resources are much greater, our spirit equal, and our danger less, than at either of those periods. We have an ample revenue, an untainted credit, a great and a growing navy. Instead of five thousand men. we have above fixty thousand disciplined troops, for our internal defence; and we have a certain prospect of half as many more, in the space of a few months. A spirit of unanimity, vigour, and exertion, begins to pervade the whole kingdom. Our nobility and gentry, with a spirit becoming Britons, either serve in our constitutional defence, the militia, or with their influence and purses exert themselves, in raising new corps. The greatest commercial society, in the kingdom, has fet a noble example to their fellow-subjects, by an unanimous and powerful aid to the state, in the prefent emergency. Voluntary subscriptions, for raising soldiers, and for giving a bounty to failors, have been opened, in several places; and the same spirit will diffuse itself through both the Beitish isles. Such as are debarred, by infirmities and years.

pears, from personal service, will, undoubtedly, exhibit, on the present occasion, their love for their country, and their zeal for its safety.

Instead of being depressed, with a sense of danger, all ranks and degrees of men seel that elevation, which threatened perils excite, in generous minds. Instead of looking forward to future disgraces or disasters, they restect on the glory of former times. The posterity of those, who conquered at Poictiers, Cressy, and Agincourt, and annexed France itself to the English crown, cannot form to themselves any fears from a French invasion. On the contrary, when they have sufficiently prepared for security at home, they will act offensively abroad; and carry back to the bosom of the enemy that terror, which he vainly hopes to create.

If we are at war in America, we have not the burden of a continental war; that fink, in which our treasure has always diffappeared, without any hope of return. The money laid out on our navy, or expended in our Colonies, will return to the center of the kingdom, through all the veins of commerce. Our trade has been protected, against the enemy, to a degree unknown in any former war. We have lost, in no quarter of the world, any have gained. In the West Indies, we are still superior to our enemies. We have eradicated them entirely, from the East Indies, and we have a flattering prospect of a speedy termination of resistance, in North America.

In the first stage of a war, the advantage of attack is possessed, by that nation, who first breaks the peace. The diladvantages of defence must, for some time, remain with its opponent. A state possessing such extensive dominions, as Great Britain, cannot be supposed, to be invulnerable, on every fide. We may fiffer fome loffes, at the beginning; for what people was arer uniformly successful in war? The Romans themselves were not always invincible. They frequently lost provinces and armies; yet they rose superior to all nations. The profits and loffes of war can only be estimated, on the day, which concludes a peace. Let us: be unanimous among ourselves, and that day cannor be distant, disdvantageous, or dishonourable; on the contrary, it will be attended with that glosy, which the spirit and exertion of a great state cannot fail to acquire.

Oprilis Pas heidyn i eid, egalgi ili engin

