

...evidence of gentle breeding has appeared in the columns filled by these correspondents. So far as the writers have been able to ascertain, the Prince, libelled those who received him, and dragged their profession under the feet of the people. That they have not more fully accomplished these results comes from their insignificance.

The Miramichi Fishery Society have had a second exhibition—the first was Gaspereau, we think. The one just held was of Salmon, Prizes were offered for the best smoked, the best box neatly sealed, and the best can, spiced. The first prize was obtained by Robert Innis; the second by A. D. Shirreff, and the third by J. A. Y. Much good is expected to result from these exhibitions. In October next another fish show will be held, for herring, codfish and mackerel.

AFFAIRS IN TEXAS.

WASHINGTON, August 31. New Orleans dated Tuesday have been received by mail. A man named Pierce has been arrested on a positive proof of having burned the town of Henderson, Texas.

The town of Mount Vernon had been burned incendiaries, one of whom was hung. A plan to burn Sulphur Springs had been discovered. A slave preacher acknowledged that several others had set apart a certain time to visit all the stores and dwelling houses, and with other deceptions, and if unable to whip whites to fly to the Indian nation.

A white man, who made the negroes his only companions, was to get a travelling card hung. Attempts to burn Indianola had been discovered in time to prevent a serious loss. There was a considerable excitement in Crockett and Atchison counties. Several fires had been traced to negroes, and a white man who was charged had been hung.

Plot among the negroes had been discovered near Prairie.

Persons had been ordered to leave the town, and Vigilance Committees were continuing.

The Times thus descants on the prospects of the Italians should a war break.

Italians in general are sanguine as to the result of such a conflict. Did the justice of a cause, did the superiority of numbers, did the spangleness, only too justly excited, guarantee success, we should have nothing to fear in the contests of united Italy; but, unhappily, the sign, if one should ensue, will be decided, by individual bravery, not by revolutionary fanaticism, but by the well disciplined valor of trained troops, by superiority in the arms.

The material of war, in all which Austria has enormous advantage. The Italian levies are numerous, but they have not in general looked up to the face of the war, and are, it is to be feared, by no means a match for the Northern powers. If the battle be left to the Austrians, we cannot doubt of its result. But the battle be left to Austrians and Italians? France stands patiently by and sees the result of her great victories of last year thus nullified from her by the very Power whom she so effectually humbled! The thing is inconceivable. The occupation of North Italy by Piedmont is the real trophy of so bloody battles, and France can scarcely expect to be thrown down with impunity. But will her intervention begin, and where stop? Will she announce to Austria her intention not to permit any intervention but the King of Naples and his revolted subjects? Will she communicate to Piedmont her views that she and her supposed champion ally, desist from any plans beyond the conquest of Naples? The King of Piedmont, it is known, annexed Tuscany and the Legations to the will of his great ally. Will that ally be ready once more to shed the blood of his subjects in order to protect Piedmont from the chances of her own ambition? Will France be the territory of St. Peter, which may be under her especial guardianship, to be sold from the Pope by Piedmont, or the throne of Naples to be restored and up-kept by Austria? Every one must answer these questions according to the extent of his knowledge and the degree of his penetration. We would not show how little, even in the present prosperous state of her affairs, Italy mistress of her own destiny, and how that destiny depends on two absolute monarchs of whom has proved hitherto but a friend, the other a persevering and resolute enemy.

THE MONTREAL EXHIBITION.—New Brunswick is not unrepresented at the Montreal Exhibition. The Toronto Globe's correspondent says:—What can be made from New Brunswick coal is shown by a neat mahogany case filled with bottles of oil of different hues, but shining most brilliantly.—Pay your money and you may have your choice of Kerosene Illuminating oil, or bi-calcic oil. Or if you in clime to finer substance, you may have Paraffine candles of any colour you choose or of any colour at all. There is no better way to make the Province known than by sending its products to exhibitions such as these. Whosoever sent the above articles to Montreal deserves much credit.

The fruit crop in this vicinity promises to yield more largely than for several years. The apple trees hereabout are burdened with fruit. We speak from personal observation, when we tell of the abundance in several orchards of the town of Belfast.—Aroostock Times.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW

(Tuesday, August 7.)

There's an ancient periodical, in blue and yellow bound, That appears on old Whig tables as quarter-day comes round, And many a good, old-fashioned Whig would make a sad ado Were a quarter-day to pass without his Edinburg Review!

But not in old Whig uniform of blue and yellow pied, Was clad that Edinburg Review which now wakes Punch's pride; And not in issue quarterly, four numbers in the year, Came out the Edinburg Review which Punch would welcome here.

But in sober greys and russets, and in plaids of sombre sheen, The latest Edinburg Review was welcomed by our Queen; And more than twenty thousand were the numbers it poured forth,

Where, Lion-like grim Arthur's Seat looks down upon the Forth,

From the storm-swept head of Dunnet, to Solway's level sands—

From the sea-friths of Argyleshire to where Arbroath castle stands—

From Lowland heugh, and Highland strath, from mountain, moor, and fell, Trooped forth these sturdy thousands—the loyal throng to swell.

St Andrew's Cross from Arthur's seat salutes with stately show

St. George's banner waving on Holyrood below;

Two hundred thousand fliers on the hill-side hide the green,

Two hundred thousand voices ring out "God save the Queen!"

And before the Royal Standard and the Royal presence too, Where twenty thousand Volunteers in martial ardor go; With rifles trailed, and springing stride, and port erect and free—

If such are British citizen's what should her soldiers be!

An hour has gone, and still pour on that armed and order'd tide,

And well the Queenly face may flush and pale with such a deed

For such a body-guard as this had never Queen I know—

From the days when Malcolm wore his tunic of twined gold, till now.

And never sent a country such a band of stalwart men

To guard their hearths and household gods, their wives and little ones—

And never had defenders such an awe to hold that which lies on us and them—those peaceful soldiers bold.

The South had spoken out before, and now outspeaks the north,

In this many-thousand muster upon the shores of Forth;

May it ere Scotland forge the hold and true,

That came out this seventh of August in her Edinburg Review!

THE DEAN OF DENHAM

Grace Baumgarten burst into tears, and laid her face upon her husband's; she loved him almost as passionately as she had ever done. "Ryle," she whispered, "if there be any such feeling in it, it is born of my love for you."

He smiled to himself. "I know it, my dear; but it is not the less excusable. You cannot bear to think that another was my wife, and that he is her child. Grace, she has been dead for years, so long as almost to have faded from remembrance; surely you might let your jealousy die out and not visit it upon him."

"But you do indulge him, Ryle; you indulge him to his own—I was almost going to say destruction—but perhaps that is too strong a word. You indulge him more than is good for his benefit, for more than you do our own children."

"Nay, Grace, surely not; the idea—forgive me—must have had its rise but in yourself, in the feeling I have spoken of. Or, it may be that knowing you dislike him, I am the more kind—perhaps it is."

"I cannot help fancying, when I see you so lavish in your affection for him, that you loved her better than you love me," murmured Lady Grace.

He turned her face up to his face, and kissed it many times, telling her between whiles that she was "a goose," and worse than a baby.

"The Very Reverend the Dean of Denham!" groans the scandalized reader. Good reader, it may have been your fortune to know a dean in private life. It has been mine, and I can assure you they are not a whit different from ourselves. And Dr. Baumgarten, remember, was handsome, and young, for a dean; not quite forty.

Lady Grace was right, and the dean was right. The one in saying that the dean reprehensibly indulged Cyrus; the other in believing that Lady Grace disliked him. Unconsciously perhaps to himself, the dean was inordinately fond of Cyrus, and always had been; he did indulge him very much, especially in the fact of supplying him with a large amount of pocket-money. Cyrus was naturally extravagant, and it made him more so—it induced a habit of carelessness of money; and the indulgence fostered his self-will. Lady Grace's aversion was calculated to render him more indifferent than he was by nature; it was the chief cause of his acting the tyrant to his brother, so much more caring for in the home circle (the dean excepted) than he; while he was getting into a habit of untruthfulness and deceit, in hiding his faults from her. Altogether, with Cyrus Baumgarten's peculiar qualities and temperament, he was being brought up in about the worst manner he could well be. And yet, the boy might have been made into a good and honorable man, had they gone the right way to work. Poor Edith! could she look on at this lower world!

In the handsome drawing-room of their town residence, Berkeley square, sat the dean of Denham and Lady Grace Baumgarten. They had entered the room almost at the same moment, dressed to receive guests. The dean gave a dinner party that day, and the hour named for it was drawing nigh.

Years have elapsed, and the dean, a man of fifty now, is more portly than he was wont to be; but Lady Grace carries her age well, and looks not a day older than the period in which never confesses to having passed five-and-thirty. But in the dean's face there is a look of anxious care; what can the flourishing dean of Denham have to cross him!

A vast deal more than the world at large suspected. Gifted with an aristocratic wife, and she with aristocratic tastes and habits, the dean had fallen long and long ago into a more expensive rate of living than his means warranted. Embarrassment followed, as a necessary consequence, riding enough at first and easily stayed off—not done away with, stayed off. But the staying-off plan does not answer; it is something like the nails in the horse shoe, doubling as they went on; and Dr. Baumgarten had now attained to a height of perplexity in his pecuniary affairs, not frequently reached by a dignitary of the Church.

Half the labor of his latter life had been to side it from Lady Grace, and he had in a great measure succeeded. She could not avoid knowing that they were in debt, but she had no conception of what extent and debt is rather a fashionable complaint. She also found that the dean invariably ran short of ready money, but that is nothing uncommon either.

What of Cyrus Baumgarten? He had given trouble—was it likely to be otherwise? It had always been the dean's intention that Cyrus should follow his own calling, the Church. Cyrus knew of this, but had not given himself the trouble to object, although never intending to fall in with it. Make a parson of him! Guess him up in a black coat and a choker! the young gentleman was wont to say behind the dean's back—no; he'd rather go in for the clown at Astley's! he'd rather be a jockey at Newmarket! he'd rather hew timber in the blackwoods of America! he'd rather perch himself on a three-legged stool at a dark desk in a city office! None of those fellows need have a conscience, but a parson must, and so he'd leave the Church to those who liked consciences. The treason was reported to the dean, and he laid Cyrus before him; the boy was seventeen years then, and had grown less reckless with his advancing years. Though in spite of the dean's opinion to the contrary, the objection proved that Cyrus was not so totally devoid of conscience as some might have been. A serious dispute took place between him and his father, which came to no amicable adjustment, for the dean was positive and Cyrus obstinate. Following close upon this, a worse matter was disclosed; it was discovered that Cyrus, young as he was, had contracted debts to the tune of three or four hundred pounds. The anger of the dean was terrible; and it was whispered in the house that he had left his stick about Cyrus, vowing he should study for the Church, or be discarded; but whether this was true or not, even Lady Grace could not say. In the consternation arising from the disclosure of the debts, the ill-feeling that ensued upon the variance between father and son, Cyrus disappeared, and when he was next heard of it was as a sailor on board a ship, on her voyage to New Zealand. He had shipped himself as a common sailor, before the mast, and it was said had chiselled a drunken sailor out of his papers and passed them off as his own, to enable him to go so! The ship came back, but not Cyrus; he remained at New Zealand; in a merchant's house, he sent word home; and the dean transmitted him some money. Four years after, at twenty one, he was back again, gay, rattling, reckless as of old; but exceedingly handsome, exceedingly like what the dean had been before him. This was a few months previous to the dinner, for which the dean and Lady Grace are now waiting.

It was a formal dinner party, one periodically given by Dr. Baumgarten to a few nearly superannuated lights of the Church, who came in their rickety carriages with their old wives beside them; it was not at all one of those delightful by Lady Grace; neither Charles (but he was at college) nor Gertrude was admitted to it; Cyrus would have been still more out of his element; for Cyrus had not shown himself at home for the last week.

The dean stood with his elbow leaning on the mantel piece, and his hand supporting his head; a strange weight of care sat upon his brow, so great, so strange, that it could not escape the notice of his wife.

"Is anything the matter? You do not look well."

"Well? Oh yes."

"You are troubled then. What is it?"

"Nothing. It is nothing, Grace." And the dean removed his elbow, smoothed his brow, and called up a smile, just as the first black silk apron came sailing in. The dean, however, had received some painfully perplexing tidings not many hours before.

But never had the Dean of Denham been more courteous, more brilliant, more alive to the duties of a host than he was that evening. He sat at the head of his board after Lady Grace had withdrawn, and the social old bishops, admiring his bearing, referred to his wit, yielded to his fascinations, and enjoyed his good wine. It was a remark among their lordships the next day, that Baumgarten had surpassed himself. The ladies thought the same when he appeared with their lords in the drawing room. Gertrude Baumgarten was in it then, and was singing to them some of her sweetest songs; but they forgot the songs when they listened to the dean.

A servant was crossing the saloon with a coffee cup; he halted for a moment near his master, and spoke in a tone imperceptible to other ears. "The gentleman is come again, sir, who was here to-day, and some one else with him. I have shown him into the library."

Drawing to the door imperceptibly as it were, with a word for one, a smile for another, the dean passed out of it unnoticed, for they were engaged with their coffee, and Gertrude was singing again. In the library were two gentlemen, and further off, sitting at the edge of a handsome chair, as if handsome chairs and himself did not often come into contact, was a shabby-looking man. The man had been there for several hours, and had had refreshment of a substantial sort served to him three times. Of the gentleman one was the banker, the other his lawyer; and the man was a sheriff's officer. The Dean of Denham had been arrested.

The Dean of Denham had actually been arrested! Such calamities have occurred to men even higher in the Establishment than he. As he came up to his door that afternoon, and put his foot upon his doornail to enter it, he was touched upon the shoulder by the man sitting now in that uneasy chair. The exclusive dean shrank from the contaminating contact his haughty pride rose, and he spoke severely.

"Fellow! what do you mean?"

"The Rev. Ryle Baumgarten, I believe, Sir, you are my prisoner."

"Staggered, shocked, almost bewildered, he, by some process of persuasion or reasoning, got the man to enter his house, and wait while he sent for his lawyer. The lawyer came, arrangement appeared to be hopeless, for the dean was worse than out of funds, and his revenues were appropriated for years to come. The dean said, received the bishops that night, as had been fixed, he must; and the perspiration streamed from his face at the idea of going to prison. The lawyer knew him to be a man of honor, whose word was unquestionable, and he passed it, to go quietly to his destination the following morning provided he could remain in his house that night. The lawyer answered for him to the capturer, and the latter was made at home in the library. Meanwhile the dean wrote a note to his banker.

The latter, wishing to be courteous, answered in person, and sat now at the library table, the dean on one side him, the lawyer on the other. But where was the use of his coming? he had been privately saying to the lawyer, he and his house were too deeply, as it was, and not a shilling more would they advance; no, not to keep the dean out of purgatory, let alone out of prison. He intimated somewhat of the same now to the dean, though in more courtly terms.

They consulted together in subdued tones, not to be audible to the man at the back, but to no earthly effect; it all came round to the same point: the dean had neither money nor money's worth; even the very furniture of the house he was in, and of the deanery at Denham, was pledged, so to be called, for money which had been lent upon it; heavy liabilities were thick upon him, and he had no means of meeting them; he had staved off and staved off the evil day, only to make it all the worse, now it was come.

Nothing could be done, nothing whatever; the lawyer was unable to help, the banker would not, and the conference closed. Dr. Baumgarten, upon whom in more ways than one, went back to his wondering bishops, the comforting assurance that he must surrender the next morning playing old Harry with his brain.

"Oh, here's the dean. Lady Grace feared you must be taken ill."

"Never better in health in my life," laughed the dean, gaily. "I was summoned to the library on business: people will come at inopportune times. Your lordship is winning, I see a knight and a castle already: fair trophies; but Lady Grace generally contrives to lose all before her, when she attempts at chess."

"The guests departed at the sober hour of eleven, and Lady Grace immediately prepared to go to her dressing-room. The dean had been making up his mind to tell her while he talked to the bishops: a glib tongue covers an aching heart—how is it that the proverb runs?

"Grace, don't go up this minute. Good night, Gertrude."

"Good night, dear papa."

"Ryle!" uttered Lady Grace, as the door closed, "you are not well, I am sure of it! What were you doing when you were out of the room so long to-night?"

The dean leaned against the wall by the side of the fire place, all his false bravery gone out of him. When the spirits have been forced for hours, the revulsion is sometimes fearful. She went up to him in alarm, and he had hold of her hands.

"It seems," he said, with a ghastly face, "as if I should almost die in the telling it."

Her lips trembled whiter than lilies, and her voice sank to a dread whisper. "Something has happened to Charles?"

"No, no; the children are all safe, it has nothing to do with them. It has to do with myself alone; and—you—in a degree—as part of me."

"Ryle, you are ill," she faintly said; you have some disorder that you are concealing. Why do you keep me in suspense?"

"It is my mind, Grace. Oh, my wife, how shall I tell you that I have been an embarrassed man for years, and that now the blow has come."

She shivered inwardly, but she would not let it be seen. "What is the blow?"

"I am arrested. I must go to prison tomorrow morning."

So little was Lady Grace familiar with "arrests" and "prisons," that she could not at once comprehend him, and when she did, the popular belief in her seemed to be that dean, so constricted in divinity and dignity, could never be made an inmate of a prison. The first emotion passed, they sat down, and Grace poured upon him question after question. Whatever had brought it on? how much did they owe? why didn't he tell the lawyers to settle it?

Puzzling question all, for the dean to answer. It had been coming on too long for him to be able to trace what had brought it; little by little, step by step, the grain of sand had grown to a large desert; how much they owed he could not precisely tell; himself; and oh! the mockery of the innocent remark, Why didn't he tell the lawyers to settle it?

they would cash. The money was not self. Who for, then? It does not signify; it is gone. But you must tell me, you know, Ryle, as I came to this pitch, you must not keep the dark. I must know how much you owe the money has gone and the right of everything. Of course there's nothing done now, but to raise money upon my property. What did that two hundred and twenty?"

"Arrests seem to be catching in the family," observed the dean, with a bitter smile. "Cyrus got arrested, and I had to extricate him; as not much, Grace; as a drop of water in a sea."

Whether as a drop or a bucket, it seemed to Lady Grace. "Cyrus!" she ejaculated. "He is my son. Grace, this blow will..."

"If you went to prison it would be enough that can't be thought of. Money must be had on my property, I say. My dear, I thought you knew better. I care for your life only, and then it descends on your children. The Lord Chancellor himself did not raise a shilling upon it."

Lady Grace started up. "Is it so? What a world is to be done!"

He did not say what he foresaw too well, his countenance betrayed it. She put her hand to her forehead.

"No, Ryle, dearest, you never shall: there is no prison for you whilst I live. I will be at an hour."

"Why, where are you going?" he exclaimed.

"To my brother. A cab will take me there. He must manage this. Now, don't stop to stop me, Ryle; what harm should I do if you are afraid, come with me."

"I wish I could, Papa a prisoner." "A prisoner!" she ejaculated. "Here your own horse?"

"I am not quit it, except to exchange it for the prison!"

She had a bonnet and shawl brought down, a man servant was ordered to attend her, and in her life Lady Grace condescended to explain. "She had business with Mr. Aron, and the dean felt too unwell to accompany her. She remembered one important item of information she was ignorant of, and went back to ask it."

"Ryle, how much is it you are arrested for?" "Close upon three thousand pounds."

To be Concluded.

GOOD OPINION OF ONE'S SELF.—If white people think negroes incapable of taking themselves, negroes sometimes think it does a surer than white people. Here is a amusing instance:

The late Chief Justice Marshall, while riding morning to court in his single carriage, was told and broke a shaft. It was put that to do. Tom, a neighboring negro was appearing to drive up, he asked him to aid him out of his difficulty.

"O yes, massa, if you'll lend me a shaft!"

Tom took the knife and cut a sapling pole grape vine from a neighboring thicket, which he spliced up the broken shaft.

"Now, Tom, said the judge, why didn't I think of that?"

"O, massa," replied Tom, "you know dat people will hab more sense den others."

GARIBOLDI'S SOLDIER-MONK.—The renowned Giovanni Garibaldi's soldier-monk played great courage at the battle of Mel Unarmed, only bearing the cross in his hand along the ranks, cheering and animating volunteers to the ranks, constantly shouting them "Fear not, God is on our side! Mark minister, and the foremost to exposed myself the grape shot and the volley of musketry, remain unscathed. Charge! Italians, charge! And still, as he shouted, he waved about the setting this example, and repeating aloud verses from Scripture, he cheered on the so to some purpose, it must be owned, as by indomitable courage they carried the strong town of Melazzo.

At the Russell House, Quebec, a few since, the reporters of the New York Tribune the London Illustrated News, who were taking the train of the Prince of Wales, were robbed of a watch and money, and the five hundred dollars.

the latter, wishing to be courteous, answered the person, and sat now at the library table, the one on one side him, the lawyer on the other. There was the use of his coming? he had privately said to the lawyer, he and his were too deeply, as it was, and not a shill more would they advance; no, not to keep an out of purgatory, let alone out of prison. He intimated somewhat of the same to the dean, though in more courtly terms. He consulted together in subdued tones, not audible to the man at the back, but to no effect; it all came round to the same. THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE.
POLITICAL CAMPAIGN.
Inducements to Clubs:
 NO IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE.
 THE TRIBUNE—now more than eighteen years old, and having over a quarter of a million subscribers, or constant purchasers, diffused through every State and Territory of our Union—will continue in essence what it has been—the earnest champion of Liberty, Progress, and of whatever will conduce to the national growth in Virtue, Industry, Knowledge and Prosperity.
 THE NEW YORK DAILY TRIBUNE is printed on a large imperial sheet, and published every morning and evening (Sundays excepted). It contains Editorials on the topics of the times, employing a large corps of the best newspaper writers of the day; Domestic and Foreign Correspondence; Proceedings of Congress; Reports of Lectures; City News; Cattle, Horse, and Produce Markets; Reviews of Books; Literary Intelligence; Papers on Mechanics and the Arts, Cookery, &c. &c.—We strive to make THE TRIBUNE a newspaper to meet the wants of the public—its Telegraphic news alone costing over $15,000 per annum.
TERMS:
 THE DAILY TRIBUNE is mailed to subscribers at $6 per annum, in advance; $3 for six months.
 THE NEW-YORK SEMI-WEEKLY TRIBUNE is published every Tuesday and Friday, and contains all the Editorials of the Daily, with the Cattle, Horse, and General Markets, reliably reported expressly for THE TRIBUNE; Notices of New Inventions, Foreign and Domestic Correspondence; Articles on Cookery; and during the Sessions of Congress, it contains a summary of Congressional doings, with the more important speeches. We shall, as heretofore, make THE SEMI-WEEKLY TRIBUNE a Literary as well as Political Newspaper, and we are determined that it shall remain in the front rank of family papers.
TERMS:
 For Copy, one year, $3 00
 Two Copies, one year, 5 00
 Five Copies, one year, 7 00
 Ten do. to one address, 20 00
 Any person sending us a club of twenty or over, will be entitled to an extra copy. For a club of forty, we will send the Daily Tribune one year.
 THE NEW-YORK WEEKLY TRIBUNE, published every Saturday, for the country, is published every Saturday, and contains Editorials on the important topics of the times, the news of the week, interesting correspondence from all parts of the world, the New-York Cattle, Horse and Produce Markets, interesting and reliable Political, Mechanical and Agricultural articles, Papers on Cookery, &c. &c.
 We shall, during this year, as hitherto, constantly labor to improve the quality of the instructive entertainment afforded by THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE, which we intend shall continue to be the best Family Weekly Newspaper published in the world. We consider the Cattle Market Reports alone richly worth to cattle raisers a year's subscription price.
