young fellow when he got about again, and to ask the honor—he is the honor—of his acquaintance. And when he came out of his study in dry clothes, this infatuated gentleman was waiting for him, and he and him introduced him to his wife and daughter. And daughter said, with tears in her eyes and a perfectly intoxicating vivaciousness, that it was the grand and the most heroic and noblest thing that she had ever seen. And he would gladly be a better girl for having seen it. Excuse me, Miss Galbraith, for troubling you with these facts of a personal history which, as you say, is a matter of perfect indifference to you. This young fellow was waiting for me, and he would do anything extraordinary but I don't suppose he did expect to have the same girl tell him that he was no gentleman."

Miss G., wildly:—"Oh, Allen, Allen! I know I like you; you are a gentleman, and I thank you for the goodness of your intentions. I merely had your word for it for now, that you didn't. Tenderly!"

"Will you hear me Lucy?"

Miss G., faintly:—"Yes."

Mr. R.:—"Well, what if I give it to you? Will you tell me if I love you?"

Miss G., with dignity:—"I am no humor for jesting, Allen. And can assure you that though I choose to hear what you have to say, or as nothing will change my determination. All is ever between us."

"You are a laughing-stock, and he perfectly. I am now asking more for general information. I do not expect you to relent, and in fact I should consider it rather frivolous if you did. No. What I have always admired in your character is your candor, and I have been so far from being deceived by the earnestness of a subject whose heart leaves no side of a visible unsearched; and an unwavering constancy in trait; are characteristic of a woman; but they are preeminent characteristics of you, Lucy. Miss G., I am sure, that you will make out whether he is in earnest or not; or he continues, with a perfectly serious air. 'And I know no more than that if you're offended with me, it is for no trivial cause.' She sits up comfortably in her chair. 'What is the matter with you, Allen? You must be something monstrous, if it has made life with me appear impossible that you are ready to deny away your own happiness—fellow, know you did love me, Lucy—and destroy mine. I will begin with the first thing I think from your mouth. You danced so much with 'Fanny Waterlvetree?'"

Miss G., indignantly:—"How can you insult me by supposing I could be jealous of such a perfect little creature as that? No, Allen! What is the matter with you? I still respect you too much for that."

Mr. R.:—"I'm glad that there are depths with you which you think incapable of descending, and that Miss Waterlvetree is one of them. I will now take a little higher ground, and I think I shall be able to reach you. Perhaps you think I flattered her too much. I think I have been flattered. I think I might begin to have that appearance, but I give you my word of honor that as soon as the idea occurred to me, I dropped her, and rather rudely too. The trouble was that you know, that I found so perfect a specimen of a woman, that I could not be hanging about on all the time, and I was afraid I might vex you if I went with their girls; and I didn't know what to do."

Nies G.:—"I think you have been really giving so much with me."

Mr. R.:—"I own it, I know it was all. But—"

Miss G.:—"It wasn't that; it was not that!"

Mr. R.:—"Was it my forgetting to bring you those things from your mother?"

Miss G.:—"No!"

Mr. R.:—"Was it because I hadn't given up smoking yet?"

Miss G.:—"You know I never ask you to give up smoking. It was entirely your own proposition."

Mr. R.:—"I am sure that it is that made me so easy about it. I am sure I could leave it off any time. Well, I will not disturb you any longer, Miss Galbraith. He throws himself overboard across his arm, and takes up his traveling-bag. "Good-bye, my dear!—congratulations; and I have no longer any excuse for remaining. I am going into the smoking car. Shall I send the porter to you for anything?"

Miss G.:—"No, thanks." She puts her handkerchief to her face.

Mr. R.:—"Lucy, do you send me away?"

Miss G., behind her handkerchief:—"You were going, yourself."

Mr. R., over his shoulder:—"Shall come back?"

Miss G.:—"I have no right to disturb you."

Mr. R., coming back, and sitting down in the chair nearest her:—"Lucy, dearest, tell me what's the matter."

Miss G.:—"Oh, Allen, you are not knowing makes it all the more hopeless. All killing. It shows me that I must part; that you would be breaking my heart, and grinding me to the dust as long as we lived."

Mr. R.:—"It shows me that you never understood me, and that you never will. I know you are good and kind."

Mr. R.—'I would much rather you would not put yourself on my account.'

Miss G., without regarding him, 'If you could mortify me before whole crowd of people as you are doing now, what could I expect marriage but mutual insult?'

Mr. R., in amazement, 'How I mortify you! I thought that I treated you with all the tenderness and affection that a decent regard for the feelings of others would allow me to feel! I find I could not keep away from 'Oh, you!'

Miss G.—'Oh, you were attending enough, Allen; nobody denies it. I was attentive enough in non-essentials. Oh, yes!'

Mr. R.—'Well, what vital matter did I fall in? 'I am sure I could not remember.'

Miss G.—'I dare say I dare that that would not appear vital to Allen. Nothing does. And if I tell you, I should have been more ridiculous, I suppose. But I know that I fell in with; I respected my too much.'

Mr. R.—'But know you must respect yourself quite so much more. And I promise you I will laugh at the most serious thing in my humor for the life. If it were matter of life and death, even I assure you that it would not bring a smile to my countenance. No, indeed! If you expect me to last now, you must say something particularly funny.'

Miss G.—'I was not going to say anything, as you call it, and I will say nothing at all, if you talk that way.'

Mr. R.—'Well, I won't then. I do you know what I suspect, Lu! But I would not mention it to everybody. But I will tell you—in strict confidence: I suspect that you are too ashamed of your girlishness to have any. I suspect it is that at all.'

Poultry.—Food and Feeding.

There is some little art, if so may so style it, in feeding your chicks to make a beautiful and vigorous growth while young. Five-ninths of the mortality among poultry, from sickness or disease, occurs while the chicks are still in the "downy" state, and the major portion of this loss occurs from improper food, and careless or ignorant feeding. Germanwells is far more generally used, is safer for your chicks, being too heating for the tender and immature digestive organs. Corn-meal has killed more young chicks than rats. The best food we have found for raising birds is state bread, either crumbed and fed dry, scalded and fed with cool, or else merely moistened with fresh milk. Where milk is abundant, it should always be used, and in the young birds get plenty of milk in some form, they will grow rapidly as to those that we have never given milk liberally to their poultry. We know of one breeder, a large dairyman in Chester County, Pennsylvania, who feeds his poultry part of his refuse milk to his principal old and young, and his birds are not only singularly free from disease, but large and freely developed in body and feathering. The breeder gives milk to credit of it all, but it may be due to poor to excellent care.—American Agriculturist.

As a dentist was standing at the grave of his late partner, and the corpse was lowered in, he soliloquized thusly: 'Poor fellow! he has just filled his last cavity.'

—There is a difference between the lips of a young man and young lady—but sometimes it is mighty small one.

WASHER ASKED.—The body of Arthur W. Edgett, who was drowned last December from the "Annie Bogart," was washed ashore on the beach at Hopewell, on Monday.

The vessel struck on a reef at Grindstone Island, and three of the crew were killed. A brother of the deceased took charge of the body and the funeral took place yesterday.

The bodies of the two other drowned men have not been recovered.

SILENT STUDENTS.—Those who were on the train from Halifax yesterday were full of students from the Dalhousie and Acadia.

The young people were going home for vacation. They were a jolly crowd and disposed to be sociable, talking with their fingers or with a pencil according to the wishes of the other.

They expressed themselves as highly pleased with the treatment they received at the asylum.

USUALLY LIKE.—Some Moncton people do not allow constables to serve executions on them. Constable Briggs, the other day had occasion to capture the body of John Phinney. John was fleet and escaped the constable went to the Phinney domicile, where John's brother commenced to beat the constable, a duty which he performed to the complete satisfaction of both parties. Then John was given up and James was arrested and taken to the jail.

The mother and a stranger within the gates, are complained of.

HEALEY'S HIBERNICA.—It is seldom, indeed, that a more enjoyable entertainment is afforded our citizens than Healey's Hibernica, on Saturday evening. All the parts were well taken, the songs and dances were capital, and the panoramic views of Irish scenery were really excellent.—Transcript.

SCHOOL MATTERS.—The Inspector of schools, Geo. Smith, Esq., visited Sackville last week and inspected the various schools in this vicinity. He gives a favorable report of their efficiency generally. The examination of pupils for the superior grant took place in Mr. Dean's school on Friday. The schools of Miss Lyons, Mr. Deans and Mr. Chas. Lund, presented thirty pupils.

ALMOST A FIRE.—Shortly after service in the Amherst Baptist Church, Sunday evening, the sexton in attempting to turn out the lights, upset a lamp which exploded. The sexton not knowing the nature of a kerosene fire went for a bucket of water, but before he returned others saw the blaze, rushed in and smothered it by applying carps. The fire, however, was not extinguished until it had thoroughly scorched the end of one of the pews.

HIBERNICA.—Healey's Hibernica is now on its sixth tour through the Maritime Provinces and will appear at Chignecto Hall on Saturday evening. Everywhere where they appear they are greeted with full and enthusiastic houses—a pretty good evidence of the well sustained popularity they have gained. The leading character, Bryan O'Lynn, has a continental reputation as a delineator of the richest and raciest traits of Irish character.
