Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). There are dispatches stating that the heavy water plant at Trail, British Columbia, is being closed down. Can the minister inform the house if that is correct and if so what disposition is to be made of that plant?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the heavy water plant at Trail was built under an arrangement with the government of the United States. If it is being closed down it is being closed by arrangement with the United States. The government of Canada has never had any interest in the plant nor has it obtained any material from that plant.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce concerning the closing of the heavy water plant at Trail. Can the minister assure the house that this will not affect the operations of the plant at Chalk River? I ask this question because in the years when the atomic energy committee was sitting we were told that the heavy water used at Chalk River came from the plant at Trail.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I can assure my hon. friend that the closing down of the plant at Trail will not affect the position of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. I am surprised that the hon. member has been told that the heavy water at Chalk River came from Trail because it is not to my knowledge that that is the case. We purchase our heavy water from the atomic energy commission of the United States and it is my understanding that it comes from quite a different source.

HOUSING

ST. CATHARINES—REPOSSESSION OF HOMES OF MEN ON STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I have given the Acting Minister of Public Works notice of this question together with representations and telegrams received. Will the minister state the status of negotiations carried on with regard to the possible eviction by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation of certain workers on strike in St. Catharines?

Hon. Roch Pinard (Acting Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to indicate to me his intention to ask this further question. I think the statement I made on the 1st of February was quite clear, as to what had been going on at that time, and I shall quote from what I said on that date. This is what I said on that occasion:

> At the present time there are 13 orders for repossession in the hands of the sheriff, but action is being withheld on these pending negotiations now going on between representatives of the union and officials of the corporation.

I did not refer to any negotiations between General Motors and the union but to negotiations between the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the union.

Now, to answer the question of my hon. friend, I would say that these negotiations are still going on between the officials of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the union; in fact, a meeting has been arranged for Monday between the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the union officials.

I might add as a further comment that the conditions which are being offered and discussed between the officials of the union and the branch manager of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and his officials are along the same lines as those that have been offered to the union in a previous automobile strike, which terms had been accepted at the time.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? May I take it then that the report is not true that these people will be evicted on Tuesday unless the conditions put to them have been fulfilled, namely payment?

Mr. Pinard: As I have already said, the conditions offered by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the union are the same as those which were offered previously and it is hoped that these conditions will be met.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

INQUIRY AS TO PRODUCTION OF 25-POUNDER SHELLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Can the minister advise if Canadian Arsenals Limited or any other firm in Canada is manufacturing 25-pounder ammunition?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take that question as notice. I am under the impression that our lines on 25-pounder ammunition are closed, but I should like to check.

GRAIN

PROVISION FOR GUARANTEE OF BANK LOANS TO PRODUCERS IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Friday, January 27, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Howe (Port Arthur)—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide, by way of a guarantee for bank loans made on or after the 15th day of November, 1955, and before the 1st day of June, 1956, for short-term credit to grain producers in the prairie provinces to meet temporary financial difficulties arising from inability to deliver their grain; to provide also that the governor in council may extend the application of the act to cover loans made before the 1st day of June, 1957; and to provide further that any amount paid to a bank under the act be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Bryson: Mr. Chairman, during the course of this debate I have attempted to point out a few of the many reasons why this legislation should not be passed. In conclusion I should like to summarize those points which I attempted to make when I last spoke in this debate. Before I do so, however, may I refer for a few moments to what must surely have seemed like an extremely humorous incident involving the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) and a Manitoba farmer's reaction to this legislation. I mention this matter only because of the fact that it has some significance. As far as I am concerned, this man's feelings were quite understandable. I imagine that since last fall he was completely incensed at the injustice of the situation and became further incensed at the proposition the government is putting forth in the form of bank loans to cure that particular situation. So all winter long this man nursed this great and burning sense of wrong. Then, almost at the breaking point, he had the great misfortune of seeing on television the hon. member for Rosthern in an extremely clumsy attempt to justify the government's bank loan legislation. I can imagine with what demon-like glee he reached for his shotgun and in one reckless moment had his revenge, satisfied at last that he had gained some kind of wild justice. I think that all of us in the opposition should take up a collection and buy for this, shall I say, rather impetuous gentleman a new television receiver as a token of our appreciation of his having brought to the attention of this house in a dramatic way what surely must be the inner feelings of the majority of western farmers. As far as the hon. member for Rosthern is concerned, he can take cold comfort from the fact that it was only a television show.

The producers are opposed to this legislation because they see in it an attempt to exact a penalty for the production of food. In other words, they feel that they are being victimized because of the fact that this government has failed to bring in a realistic agricultural policy that would be geared to distribution, not only on the domestic front but in the export market, with respect to the agricultural products that have been produced in this country. The farmers repudiate this legislation on the ground that it did not work in 1951. In the light of present-day conditions they see in it an indication of its utter uselessness, in view of the unfortunate experience in 1951. As to the $1,500 as a maximum loan, they see that as a delusion.

It is just a piece of bait that is being dangled under the noses of western farmers. I suggest to the government that when they attempt this sort of thing on future occasions they should keep in mind the old adage, when you bait a mousetrap be sure to leave room for the mouse. If these are not enough valid reasons why this legislation should be rejected, then I suggest to hon. members that the arguments put forward by the Minister of Trade and Commerce are in themselves the best reason why it should be rejected. To imply, as the minister did, that all those who oppose the legislation do so with the express desire of getting rid of the wheat board—mind you, that opposition includes the western pools, the farm union organizations, the federated co-operatives and many thousands of individual farmers—is a pretty weak argument.

The farmers feel that only by a realistic agricultural policy are they going to be able to obtain for themselves a standard of income comparable with that now being enjoyed by other industries in the country. I agree that farming, as was said by the Minister of Agriculture, is a way of life and it cannot be confused with any other kind of business. In other words, when no profit is forthcoming the farmer still stays in business. That is the difference, but I accuse the government of exploiting that fact to the very limit. The government knows that the farmer will stay in business in order to try to protect the investment of a lifetime even if he knows that at the end of the year he is only going to get the meanest of wages for his work. The government knows the farmer will carry on until he goes under in order to protect that investment.

If every farmer stopped producing because his farming operations were not showing a profit today it would mean chaos for the Canadian economy and starvation for most of our people. Yet if the government allows the farmer to go under because they fail to introduce a comprehensive agricultural policy that will put some stability under the industry the whole economy will be dragged down. The most expensive gesture any government can make, and apparently it is the expensive gesture this government is making, is to believe that our prosperity rests on the manipulations that take place on the stock exchange rather than believing, as they should, that our prosperity rests on the broad base of our land resources. To think otherwise is a fallacy and one that can only end in disaster.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a few remarks with regard to this question, interest in which, in the prairie provinces, has never been exceeded by any other political issue. Indeed, as we read last evening of the near tragedy that might have been suffered by the hon. member for Rosthern, some indication of the feelings of the western farmers and people in general was shown thereby. Indeed, the fact that this incident took place during the course of a debate in which the hon. member for Acadia, the hon. member for Assiniboia and myself were also participating might have placed us in a very disagreeable position if anything had happened because we might very well have found ourselves in the position, to use a legal expression, of having been accessaries before the fact.

Mr. McCann: It is reported now that you were the one involved.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friend should not be interrupting after the "McCanntics" of last summer. What I want to speak about is the general reaction in western Canada to this legislation. Meetings took place in various cities and towns. There was a suggestion by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) that I had had something to do with convening the meeting in Prince Albert. Let me say that statement bore about as much resemblance to the truth as some other statements the minister made. As a matter of fact, three of four days before that meeting was convened by representatives of the farmers union, the board of trade and the Prince Albert chamber of commerce, business representatives such as the retail merchants association, I was invited to speak. The total length of time I spoke in a meeting of some three hours in extent represented not more than 10 minutes. Indeed, one of the outstanding Liberal supporters and a very fine gentleman named Mr. James McCarter who I believe is one of the senior members of the Prince Albert Liberal executive, came out strongly in support of the only means whereby anything could be done on behalf of the western farmer, a system of advances on farm stored wheat.

Now, for the life of me I cannot understand the attitude of the government. All kinds of explanations have been given as to why the farmers should not be entitled to this. The first position that was taken was that it could not be done because the elevator agents would not be able to do it. Today the elevator agents are responsible for the collection of whatever moneys are lent by the banks. The farmers in the western provinces find themselves in this position, and I think the analogy is a fair one. What would any labouring man do if, working for a concern, he found himself in a position when he came to collect his wages where the employer would say, "Well, we have not sold the raw products yet. We will guarantee your loan at the bank. We are the only source of payment but we cannot pay you now. You go to the bank and borrow and we will guarantee, up to a certain extent, the repayment of that loan." That is the position in which the farmer finds himself under this legislation, substituting one debt for another, substituting a series of debts for one united debt.

So far as this legislation is concerned, it had its birth in a series of statements made by various ministers. Tracing something of the history of this legislation, we find the first notice we had was when Mr. McDonald, the leader of the Liberal party in Saskatchewan and an estimable gentleman, realizing that the situation was serious, made a pilgrimage to Ottawa. He said his plan was a secret, but it would be revealed to the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and to the members of the cabinet who were particularly concerned with the marketing of wheat. He went and he carried that secret in his soul. He revealed it to the cabinet. Two or three days later he was able to return to Saskatchewan and say, in effect, "Eureka, I have got it."

Well, it was the old, old loan scheme of 1951, decorated up a little, polished over and reburnished. This scheme did not work, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce has so often said. Now, when the first announcement was made that the loan scheme was going to be the one, Mr. McDonald, with true powers of statesmanlike perception, said, "This thing will be just as helpful as a stirrup pump against a forest fire." Today the stirrup pump has become the cornerstone of government policy.

Now, apparently the Minister of Agriculture did not know what government policy was on October 24, for in Winnipeg on that date—

Mr. Gardiner: I just said you did not know.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not know because it was a secret carried to the cabinet. Cabinet secrets are not divulgeable at all, under any circumstances. The minister was speaking to the Manitoba young Liberals' association, and this is the press report of what he said:

> Agricultural Minister J. G. Gardiner hit back Saturday at critics of the federal plan to aid cash-short western farmers, branding the criticism as "premature" and based on speculation rather than facts.

Speculation was that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was going to bring in a system of loans. According to one report the right hon. gentleman declared that he believed that cash advances from the wheat board might even be combined with bank loans.

Well, that apparently was his view at that time.

Mr. Gardiner: I never said any such thing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I never heard of a minister who was so completely misquoted.

Mr. Gardiner: There are members in this house who heard what I said and they will agree that I did not say any such thing, no matter what is in the press.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am reading from the record, Mr. Chairman, and there has been no denial at any time except when it becomes convenient to deny a statement made that should not have been made. This was reported in the Free Press and Winnipeg Tribune. The minister says there are some here who heard. They may have heard but apparently they did not understand.

Mr. Gardiner: They understood.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now, the new scheme that was finally evolved was this loan scheme. Now, what kind of scheme is this? What is the purpose of it? The people in western Canada are aroused. The farmers are annoyed at this time. The only western people who are in favour of it so far as I am able to ascertain, and I have spoken with a great many, are those who are bound to this government. The wheat pool in Saskatchewan came out in favour of cash advances. The hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) sent a resolution from his association and the other day, amidst what Hansard records as a considerable clatter, he endeavoured to distinguish between an advance and a loan, much to his own discomfiture.

Now, sir, what is this scheme? What is this loan scheme? Well, the doctors have what they call a placebo. It is an inactive medicine prescribed to quieten a patient, to neutralize opposition. It is a harmless substance given to soothe a patient's anxiety rather than as a remedy. It is a preparation given to silence or temporarily satisfy a patient. It is something intended to soothe. This is the government's placebo, but it has not done what it was intended to do, to soothe the aroused feelings of western farmers.

What information have we regarding the success or failure of this plan? I cannot understand answers like these. They seem to emanate generally from the Department of Trade and Commerce. I asked a simple question. It is answered as No. 12. The questions were:

1. How many bank loans on farm-stored grain subject to government guarantees have been applied for in each province, week by week, since the inception of the plan in November last?
2. Of the said applications, how many have been turned down or refused?
3. What is the total amount loaned in each province to date?

Grain

The answer to questions 1 and 2 is as follows:

As applications are made to chartered banks, the government has no record of the number of loans applied for and the number turned down or refused.

Up to November 30 the loans under this scheme amounted to $2,500,000.

Up to November 30, Mr. Chairman; why did we not get the information up to December 30 or up to January 15? Why is it that the information given the other day was so restrictive and circumscribed? The reason is that this plan has been a total flop so far as the western farmer is concerned. It has not worked; it will not work. It is not supplying money to the western farmers. Farmers are being turned down by the banks on every hand when they do apply. If their normal credit is not sufficient, time after time they find themselves turned down. They are asked what the purpose is in securing the money, and if they give as the reason that they have in mind the payment of certain accounts, in many instances the answer immediately is: "That is not what this loan plan is for."

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend is making statements about the lending policy of the banks. I think he should prove his statement by specific instances. If the banks are doing that, they are violating the agreement with the government. I do not believe my hon. friend knows many farmers. He talks for the city.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I am making this statement in this house as a responsible member responsible to the people.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): In very vague terms.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have example after example. Let me make it clearer. Your scheme is a complete flop.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): In your opinion. You did not understand it before.

Mr. Gardiner: Some people think you are a complete flop.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Since the Minister of Agriculture has spoken, let me give him one. I suppose he will deny this. He was explaining why the government had not acted, and he said: "The mills of the government grind slowly". It used to be the mills of the gods.

Mr. Gardiner: As a matter of fact, if I made the statement that is what I would have said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the government say today these two terms are synonymous? Sometimes we agree, Mr. Chairman.

Grain

I now want to deal particularly with one of the major reasons why the farmer is not getting funds.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You would not know why he is not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: These are the types of interruptions that indicate the attitude of the minister to the western farmer.

Let me deal with some of the records in so far as the marketings are concerned. Here are the actual figures that cannot be contradicted. I am going to deal first with marketings in the prairie provinces. Let me compare 1954-55 with 1955-56, up to December 8. In the latter year 50 million fewer bushels were marketed in that period than there were a year ago, and it has been getting worse. The minister said things are improving. Up to January 19 the marketings in the prairie provinces were 75·6 million bushels fewer than they were a year ago. In other words, the total prairie marketings of grain have steadily declined right from the beginning of the crop season, from August 1, down to the present day.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Why was that?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will come to that in a moment. It was because of the department's failure, firstly, to provide through the controller the necessary freight cars that were available for the purpose. I have the actual statistics now. The minister gave us the figures the other day, but I do not know where he got them. They certainly did not come from the wheat board.

Let us take a look at lakehead stocks. Up to December 8, 1955, as compared with the preceding year, the lakehead stocks were down by 1·9 million bushels. Up to December 14 they had decreased by 9·9 million bushels; up to December 29, they had decreased by 15·3 million bushels; up to January 5, they had decreased by 20·3 million bushels; and up to January 19, by 21·1 million bushels. Lakehead stocks have continued to decrease steadily during the past several months.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is because wheat is being sold.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We will come to that in a second. That is the explanation at the moment, but I shall show shortly what the explanation is.

I now turn to millions of bushels in country elevators. On December 7, 1955-56, there were 23·8 million more bushels of wheat in country elevators than a year ago. That has been reduced. Up to January 19, it had been reduced to 12·9 million.

We now come to the shipments from country elevators. For the week of December 9 we find the shipments were fewer by 3·9 million bushels. That situation was accelerated, until December 28, when shipments amounted to 5·1 million bushels fewer than the preceding year.

The minister mentioned that that situation had been somewhat improved, and very considerably improved lately. Because these facts and figures are unchallengeable I am going to say immediately that up to January 19 of that week there was an improvement. There were 500,000 fewer bushels of wheat in country elevators in 1956 than in 1955.

The cumulative shipments from country elevators are very interesting. Up to December 7, 1955-56, the total number of bushels of wheat shipped from country elevators amounted to 141·7 million bushels. In the previous year the figure was 212·2 million bushels. In other words, the cumulative shipments from country elevators were 71·5 million bushels fewer. What is the position today? On January 19 they had increased. The cumulative shipments from the beginning of the season this year to January 19 amounted to 188·8 million bushels, as compared with 274·6 million a year ago, or 85·8 million fewer. There is your picture. If the farmers had been able to market the same amount of wheat, if the storage facilities had been used —and I emphasize that—if cars had been made available as they should have been, there would have been an improvement. You say the weather had something to do with it. The weather had nothing to do with cars being made available to remove the wheat that was in the elevators in the province of Saskatchewan, or in the line elevators of Alberta or Manitoba.

What about car unloadings? This tells a story of somnolence on the part of the government. Up to December 8, 1954-55, 67,791 cars were unloaded at the lakehead. This year it was only 45,537 or 22,200 less but it got worse week by week since that time and on December 14 for that week there were 24,482 less cars unloaded than the year before. On December 28 there were 27,869 less cars unloaded at the lakehead than a year before. January 25, 29,656 less; and January 19, 30,106 less than a year ago. In other words car unloadings are far below last year's approximately 35 per cent.

The daily average tells a story. The daily average during December and in successive weeks was 201 less than a year ago, 210 less than a year ago, 218 less than a year ago, 219 less than a year ago and up to January 19 it was 203 less per day than a year ago. In other words, we are placed in a position where car unloadings have fallen to unequalled depths as compared with a year ago.

The other day the Minister of Trade and Commerce said that we have increased the number. The average for the last week of January was 867, as I remember it. That is all to the good, but what does that show? I have averaged this out and the average indicates that, even making allowance for what has taken place during the last week of January, this year 31,000 less cars of wheat have been unloaded than a year ago since the beginning of the crop year.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Is my hon. friend just now analysing the situation and discovering that Canada is short of box cars? I announced that three months ago.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We will come to the question of box cars. I have some statistics from the dominion bureau of statistics indicating that every industry in Canada has had an increase in box cars, but as far as western farmers are concerned there was a tremendous decrease of approximately 35,700 up to January 19. Where has the controller been? He has been away on vacation at a time when a most serious situation faces the western farmers. I say that this reveals a collapse in organization. It indicates that not sufficient attention has been paid to providing cars to the western farmer.

There was space available. I have figures concerning the availability of terminal space. The hon. gentleman said we were all wrong in assuming that there was 100 million bushels of terminal space available. I have taken the rated capacity of the elevators across the country in British Columbia, the prairies, the lakehead and in eastern Canada. Deducting that rated capacity of from 10 per cent to 12 per cent in order to provide for the effective working capacity, accepting the figures which appeared in the wheat board returns, there was available in the month of January at least 95 to 97 million bushels of space that just lay there because of the failure of the government to act in regard to the provision of cars.

I shall read what the Regina Leader-Post said with regard to that on December 27, 1955:

> Empty terminal space worthless—
> Clearing space in the lakehead and Pacific grain terminals for approximately 97,000,000 bushels of prairie grain should be cheering news for prairie farmers. Deducting the 38,000,000 bushels in transit, this would leave room for approximately 60,000,000 more bushels. If utilized for wheat, this would put something like $85,000,000 more cash into the prairie farmers' pockets. But it will do no good if it stays empty while country elevators remain clogged so that farmers are unable to deliver their grain.

Grain

> The fact that within a few weeks, this space has developed to the extent it has indicates a grave weakness in our grain handling system. Reports attribute it to a shortage of cars for shipping grain.
> The situation smacks at the best of a lack of foresight on the part of those who are in charge of grain handling. At the worst, it has the earmarks of ignoring the prairies and the plight of its farmers who are hard pressed to maintain their families and their operations on the proceeds of the sale of their wheat plus what they are able to borrow from the banks at five per cent interest.

Then it goes on to say this:

> Mr. Howe said in Edmonton a few days ago that he had made it plain to the railway companies that there is no higher priority than box cars for grain. Obviously, he did not make this sufficiently plain to get results. This oversight should be rectified immediately.

Here are the two positions which indicate what happens when governments are long in power and when those in charge of departments develop an infallibility belief. There was storage available to the extent of from 90 to 100 million bushels.

I have the record for freight cars indicating that practically every other type of industry has had a tremendous increase in the number of freight cars available to it. Why should the western provinces have been placed in the position, in this regard, of being a depressed area in an otherwise expanding economy? Those are the things in relation to which we have a right to ask what is being done. Why did the controller not act?

I mentioned that I would give certain figures from the dominion bureau of statistics published on January 11, 1956. These figures tell their own story. Loadings in the year 1955 were as follows: Grain, 1955, 333,233 cars; 1954, 364,160 cars. Grain products, 1955, 130,902; 1954, 134,900. Then you take the other elements within the economy and you find tremendous increases in the number of cars made available.

What has happened, Mr. Chairman, has placed the government in the position where they now run for cover and they intimate that anyone who criticizes the situation is thereby inimical to the wheat board. As far as I am concerned I still remember that it was the Conservatives who set up the wheat board and I remember it was the Liberals who set it aside in 1937 and did not restore it until 1942 when they brought it in in order to keep the price of wheat down. Those things I remember—

Mr. Gardiner: Your memory is bad.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Very faulty indeed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As far as the wheat board is concerned, a statement was made the other day in my absence by my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. Jutras) which I must refer to. That statement was to the effect that my attitude was at fault and the hon. member for Prince Albert would fire the wheat board overnight without batting an eye. Mr. Chairman, that statement does not have the degree of truthfulness for which my hon. friend has established such an enviable reputation. That statement bears no relationship to the facts. When I spoke about the wheat board I asked the question, which is not yet answered: why is it that the members of the wheat board said they would not stay on the job if cash advances were provided for? We have not yet had an answer to that question. I asked for the letters that were received. I wonder if they take that attitude. As far as I am concerned the wheat board must remain inviolate and it must stay, but we have a right to ask that the government's tinkering with the wheat board be discontinued.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Chairman, during the course of the debate last Friday I obtained the idea in some way or another that it was thought to be highly dangerous if members of the opposition group continued to prolong this debate. It was indicated that by doing so we would do more harm than good. I cannot follow that kind of reasoning because it is my opinion that members of this house should be permitted to express themselves freely at all times on any matter that concerns them. This particular question before us surely is of great concern to all hon. members of the house because it deals with the basic roots of the greatest industry in Canada.

It was intimated last Friday as well that if this debate were to continue much longer the farmers of western Canada might panic. I have lived with the farmers of western Canada all my life and I know that they do not panic. Yesterday a newspaper contained a picture of an hon. member with a few comments about the use of a shotgun. I can assure the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) that he or any other hon. member can come out to my constituency and no shotguns will be used. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is fully aware of the fact that the farmers of Alberta can shoot some pretty warm questions when they are concerned. He experienced it at the farmers' union meeting at the Alberta college auditorium in December last year when for 90 minutes the delegates peppered him with questions to which they received answers which did not satisfy them.

Our farmers are used to being treated roughly, as apparently that is their lot in Canadian society. On Friday the old reciprocity issue of 1911 was dragged across the floor of this house. I thought that skeleton was buried long ago. The farmers of the west were able to get through the days of the depression even though they were on an almost starvation level. They came through the war period. They are true Canadians and they will stick to their guns even though they are not getting what the national economy should provide.

However, they have learned a few lessons throughout the years. They have learned one lesson in particular, that it is only through organized efforts that they have been able to get the few advantages they have obtained.

Some mention has been made of the wheat board, and that we on this side of the house are opposed to the wheat board. I submit that that statement is far from the truth. We have always supported the wheat board and will continue to support it as the years go by. Through their co-operative organizations, through the wheat pools, the united grain growers, the farmers' unions in the three western provinces, our farmers are now presenting a united front which I hope will continue to grow stronger and stronger as the years go by.

The farmers in my area are definitely opposed to the $1,500 5 per cent guaranteed bank loan. They do not like it and I do not believe there are many of them using it. I know for a fact that a few have tried to obtain loans but were refused. I am thinking in terms of a young farmer who applied for the $1,500 bank loan but was refused. Why? He was refused because he had an outstanding debt of $1,600 on a combine, $800 payable this fall and the other $800 payable next fall. His only other debt, besides his store and fuel bills and so on, was a $300 breaking bill. That young man wanted to establish himself as a good farmer but he was unable to get a loan.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Is it not true that his grain was pledged under section 88 of the Bank Act in connection with his other loans?

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): This young man had 5,000 bushels of wheat. What is the history of this so-called bank loan as known to the people down here? We know the history as it has been related to us many times. I have been quite concerned when in the corridors of this building I hear from hon. members who are not directly associated with wheat growing that they are getting sick and tired of hearing about the wheat problem. I can only say that I hope they get so sick and tired of listening to the details of that problem that they will get behind us and support us. The Edmonton Journal of October 19, 1955, contained the following statement as a result of an interview with the Prime Minister:

> The cabinet spent the morning discussing the urgent need of getting some cash into the hands of prairie farmers who hold heavy stocks of grain on their farms.

And again:

> He brushed off questions about cash advances for farm-held grain, saying Mr. Howe will make the announcement.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce finally made the announcement of a $1,500 guaranteed bank loan to the farmers of the west. Following that announcement a wave of protest swept through Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Protest meetings were called, not by politicians or big businessmen but by farmers, the little fellows on a quarter or half section of land. They got together and protested and they are still protesting about these bank loans. The following statement which appeared in the Edmonton Journal of November 30 seems significant to me:

> Ottawa. The federal government is guaranteeing the chartered banks against any foreseeable loss on their wheat loans to western farmers but it is also making assurance doubly sure that there won't be any loss to the treasury.

There seems to be great concern on the part of the federal government that the chartered banks shall not lose any money or that the federal government itself shall not lose any money, but what about the farmers of the west. When they take out a loan they are faced immediately with a 5 per cent reduction in the amount of the income they should receive. The article goes on:

> The only thing that will save Mr. Howe from a repetition of last year's defence production bill filibuster is the fact that by the time parliament gets its hands on the issue it will be a fait accompli.

I submit that the issue of surplus wheat disposal, was critical enough last fall to have justified the government in calling a special session of parliament so that this issue could have been fully discussed before it was a fait accompli. In the same statement the following appeared:

> The elevator officials—the agents—will make out two payment tickets.

Still we are told in this house that the elevator officials are not capable of doing that in the case of cash advances. This surplus problem is not a new one; it has been with us for years. It became of great concern toward the end of the last crop year. Throughout the early fall the farmers were wondering how they were going to market their wheat so that they could pay their bills and so on. Through the press we had statements which were issued by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He blamed all sorts of things for the surplus. He blamed better European crops, scarce ocean shipping and United States surplus disposal methods. He is now blaming the box car situation, the weather and so on. I should like to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that he lay the blame where it belongs, namely on the operation of his own department.

Let us go back to the shortage of box cars. May I ask this question, Mr. Chairman? Who owns the Canadian National Railways, other than the people of Canada? Who subsidizes the Canadian Pacific Railway other than the people of Canada? Surely we should, as a group of people, have something to say about the directing of box cars to where they are needed.

It has already been pointed out by the hon. member for Prince Albert that box cars are apparently plentiful for other branches of industry in Canada, but certainly they are not plentiful so far as agriculture is concerned. Last fall the farmers of my area were permitted to market—if they could find space in the elevators—300 bushels of grain. The income from 300 bushels of grain was certainly not enough to meet the day by day expenses incurred by the farmers of the west, such as fuel bills. I can well recall one farmer showing me a cheque for $413 and, at the same time, a fuel bill for $456. That was a fuel bill only. Grocery bills are unpaid. Taxes to municipal governments and so on were not paid before the last day of discount or are not paid at all. I know of one well-established farmer who, for the first time in his 25 years on the farm, was this year unable to pay his taxes. This situation affects not only the farmers, Mr. Chairman, but it is having its effect in every small community in my part of the province. Its influence is being felt, I submit, even right down here in the east. There is not one small town or village in Alberta through which you can travel and not notice stored up on vacant lots or other places combines and farm equipment of all types which have not been sold. If you go into hardware stores which had been expecting to sell deep-freezes, and other equipment that is badly needed by the farmers in the west, you find it is still there in the stores. The farmers have no money with which to buy it.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): The government is in a mental deep freeze.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Much has been said, Mr. Chairman, about some of the so-called fantastic schemes by which this situation might be cured, such as the adoption of a two-price system by this government, the use of the barter system and so on. May I ask this question, Mr. Chairman? Which is the more fantastic: to attempt some of the schemes used by other respectable nations in this world and get rid of our grain, or to stay away from these so-called fantastic schemes and to see millions of bushels of wheat on the farms of western Canada while at the same time millions of people are starving throughout the world?

I should like to submit, Mr. Chairman, that in the United States of America the farmers are offered $2.08 a bushel for wheat. What does the United States do with this wheat? It gives special deals to importers backed by the federal treasury. In the Argentine the price is $2.72 a bushel; Argentine offers special deals to the importers and accepts barter deals. In France the price is $2.64 per bushel, and the two-price system is used. In Canada the price is $1.40 a bushel. The farmers in Canada are still forced to follow that so-called old system of rugged individualism in this modern age. Australia accepts sterling. I am suggesting that it will not be too long before we in Canada as well are forced to accept sterling.

It has been suggested that the farmers of the west do not want cash advances. May I say that the farmers of the west have asked for cash advances. The Farmers' Union of Alberta in convention early in December passed the following resolution:

> Cash advances on farm-stored grain after inspection as to quantities, grade, and condition of storage facilities.

For the life of me, Mr. Chairman, I cannot see why the government is so reluctant to grant this request for cash advances. That is something I just do not understand. However, I know that the $1,500 bank loan will not be used to any great extent. It will certainly not be used by the people, the younger farmers, who actually need it because the banks will not give them the loan without banker's security.

I have before me this resolution. It is a modern one, and I can produce others as well. It was passed by the Farmers' Union of Alberta local in my territory, and it reads as follows:

> Resolved that this meeting go on record as being dissatisfied with the federal government's policy on guaranteed bank loans on farm-stored grain. We regard it as completely inadequate and unrealistic in view of the economic situation of the western farmer.

At this particular meeting 72 farmers travelled to a centre over roads that were practically impassable. They are concerned and they are determined that something must be done.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, may I say this. Instead of trying to spend our time in debating something that has already been accomplished—by so doing we are not going to change the course of history—I feel that we should adopt another course. Parliament did not ask for the $1,500 loan. It was the Minister of Trade and Commerce who did that. What has been done is done. There is nothing we can do about it but cry. Instead of wasting our time doing this, I suggest that the Minister of Trade and Commerce should bring forth immediately a definite, long-term policy regarding the marketing of wheat so that we could sit here as a group of legislators and discuss it.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Chairman, I am not rising to prolong the debate. I am rising to put forward, as briefly as I can, the position that I think most of us on this side of the house take in relation to the proposal now before us with regard to bank loans. I want to say categorically that my understanding of the position of the western farm organizations is that they regard this bank loan legislation not only as being ineffective but as legislation which discriminates against the wheat producer.

After the tremendous barrage of criticism made by the official opposition, and in particular by the hon. member for Prince Albert this morning, in respect of this legislation, I suggest that they should do what I intend to do as an effective protest, namely vote against this measure when it comes to a vote in this chamber.

The other day the Minister of Trade and Commerce made certain statements. I cannot quote them from the record, Mr. Chairman, because they were made in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. However, he said something like this. He said that recently there has been a drive for advances on farm-stored grain. Then he went on to say that the suggestion had been made that three-quarters of the value of the grain be advanced by the wheat board. He stated that many hon. members might think that this inspiration came from the farmers but that the fact was nothing of the kind, that it came from the cities. Then he went on to ask who were its supporters and said that its supporters were the enemies of the wheat board method of marketing. I have summarized what he said, but it can be found at page 127 of Hansard of January 16. I want to say to the house and to the hon. gentleman that if any group in the house should be ashamed of its record in connection with the wheat board it is the Liberal party and the Liberal government.

I have a long memory and vivid recollections. There was only one Liberal member elected in the province of Saskatchewan in 1921, and that one Liberal member was the late Hon. W. R. Motherwell. I remember seeing the hoardings plastered with signs and a big sign stretching across the main street of the city of Regina saying: "Vote for Motherwell and the wheat board." At that time I was a member of the old Progressive movement which I supported until the movement disintegrated. I remember the fight for the wheat board all through those years. I remember how the wheat board came into being in the 1930's. I remember that in June of 1935 one of the very last acts of the Liberal representative on the committee discussing the wheat board legislation, the late Colonel Ralston, for whom I have a very high regard, was to move a resoution providing for the winding up of the wheat board within one year.

I came to this house in 1935 and the very first speech I made in the house was in criticism of the government's action in relation to the wheat board, the dismissal of John I. McFarland and the appointment of a new chairman of the board who was president of one of the line companies which had been so closely connected with the agitation against the wheat board. I have vivid recollections of all of this but I have a more vivid recollection of an event in the house in June of 1938 involving one of the men—I was going to say "the" man and I do not think I would be very far out, the man who perhaps more than any other except the late Ed Partridge of Sintaluta was responsible for the establishing of the old grain growers organization in the province of Saskatchewan in the early part of this century.

I refer to the Hon. W. R. Motherwell. I can see the Hon. W. R. Motherwell in my mind now standing before his desk in the front benches of the Liberal party. I remember what the Hon. W. R. Motherwell said then about an order in council that had been passed and which was designed to discontinue the operations of the wheat board as laid down in the legislation. I am going to quote what the Hon. W. R. Motherwell said on that occasion, and it can be found at page 4446 of Hansard of June 30, 1938. He was discussing the order in council setting aside the wheat board as the legislation had created it and he had this to say:

> . . . that while the present government was joint father of the Wheat Board Act, it has committed infanticide or at least has mutilated the foster child to such a degree that it might as well be dead. This act is simply an ornament on our statute books.

Those were the words of W. R. Motherwell, a former Liberal minister of agriculture, not my words, and I remember the circumstances very distinctly. Then he went on to speak of his own experience shortly before and said this:

> I first heard about it—
> The order in council.
> —on a Saturday night and I refused to believe it. I thought it was some fool report across the wires such as we sometimes get, some mistake; and it was not until Monday morning that I discovered, when I went to deliver my wheat to the pool elevator for the board, that I could not do it.

The order in council prevented the delivery of the wheat to the wheat board, as Mr. Motherwell testified. I do not suppose any man could have borne more eloquent and authoritative testimony to what the Liberal government had done to the wheat board in 1938. The Minister of Agriculture remembers those words of the late W. R. Motherwell. The order in council said that the wheat board was not to accept wheat from the farmers if the wheat had not fallen below 90 cents a bushel—

Mr. Gardiner: Yes.

Mr. Coldwell: —and the floor price that was set was 87½ cents.

Mr. Gardiner: Tell the reason.

Mr. Coldwell: You may be able to tell the reasons but I am quoting Mr. Motherwell and I remember perfectly well the Minister of Agriculture rising on occasion after occasion in the house and defending the grain exchange method of marketing.

Mr. Gardiner: Oh, no.

Mr. Coldwell: Hon. members who were in the house at the time, and I am sorry to say there are only a very few of us left, can remember it as vividly as I can.

Mr. Gardiner: Oh, no. My hon. friend should not quote unless he has Hansard here to prove it.

Mr. Coldwell: I have read Hansard. That is what I am doing now. I am quoting Hansard. I am not quoting from memory. I am talking about what Mr. Motherwell said with regard to the government's and the minister's policies.

Mr. Gardiner: Do not mix it up with something I did not say.

Mr. Coldwell: I am not mixing something the hon. gentleman did not say. I have read the record right through, and not only that, I sat through the proceedings and have a very vivid memory.

Mr. Gardiner: Would the hon. member permit me to correct him?

Mr. Coldwell: Certainly.

Mr. Gardiner: He is quite right in saying that at one time I supported the grain exchange method of marketing, but it was long before I came to this house.

Mr. Argue: You still do for rye and flax. You are only half converted.

Mr. Coldwell: I am very glad to hear the minister admit that some time he did support the grain exchange method of marketing.

Mr. Gardiner: That was long before I came to this house.

Mr. Coldwell: It was not until the necessities of wartime arose that the wheat board became really effective. At that time we had to market our grain nationally and through agreements with our customers. Then we got the wheat board method of marketing. So please do not let any member on the Liberal side of the house rise in his place and accuse those of us who have supported the wheat board method of marketing for the last 35 years of wanting to undermine and get rid of the wheat board. Do not let us have that. The record is too clear and too concise.

I did not want to go into the background of this matter this morning but I felt that somebody just had to put this statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce right. I felt somebody should say to hon. members who want to know the whole story of the wheat board method of marketing: Go back into the records. Read the debates of 1935 to 1940, of 1941, 1942 and 1943. Read those debates. See from which side of the house support for the grain exchange method of marketing came. See from which side of the house support for the wheat board methoding of marketing came. Let us hear no more of the statement that certain of us who have supported the farmers' demand for the wheat board are now trying to undermine it.

I say to hon. members opposite and to the government that the farmers of the west are incensed. I am not going to bring in any extraneous happenings in Manitoba, but the farmers of the west are incensed because of the policy the government has adopted and which it is trying to force upon the house and the country.

You may say to me, and quite rightly, what do you mean by advance payments on farm stored grain? About all I intended to do this morning was to say very precisely what I said last October and November when I was in my own constituency of Rosetown-Biggar and in western Canada. I am going to put as concisely as I can what we mean when we speak of advance payments on farm stored grain. What we mean is this. Parliament should authorize the wheat board to make a payment through the elevator companies, as is now being done, of 75 per cent of the initial price of farm stored grain. That is the first point.

The second point is this. The government should ask this parliament to appropriate funds for this purpose and provide those funds through the wheat board without interest, so that these payments could be made. Then, what would happen? The grain would become immediately the property of the government through the wheat board.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No.

Mr. Coldwell: Parliament appropriates the money, the government provides it to the wheat board and payments are made on behalf of the wheat board to the elevator companies so that the wheat then becomes the property of the agent of the government and therefore it is in effect the property of the government.

Then, on what amount of grain should these advances be made? I make the suggestion to the minister that it should be determined by the anticipated quota for the current year. What do I mean by the "anticipated quota"? If the minister is optimistic and says we are going to market 12 bushels, then the quota would be 75 per cent of 12 bushels. If he says we are going to be as low as last year, 8 bushels, then the payment should be made on 75 per cent of the initial value of the 8 bushels. The elevator agent who took title on behalf of the purchasing authority could measure the bin and seal it if the government wish. But I am going to say this. I think the experience of the past will show that the western farmer is fundamentally honest, and not one in ten thousand would misuse the trust that would have been placed in him. The agreement then is made accepting the grain at the initial floor price.

On later delivery of the balance of the grain at the elevator itself, the other 25 per cent should be paid to the farmer. Of course, the usual participation certificates would be issued on the balance of payment as at now for presentation after disposition of the current crop by the wheat board. That is the policy. It is very simple and very sound, I think. I believe it is one that would be acceptable to the western farmers.

It would do two things. It would give him an advance payment on a quantity of grain sufficient to tide him over until he could market the whole of his grain. It would also guarantee to him a floor price, the initial price being that floor. It seems to me that is so much less complicated than this business of guaranteeing the banks and the farmers paying 5 per cent interest. I cannot help making a contrast in my own mind. When powerful United States companies, who may build a pipeline, are able in effect to get an advance in the form of building a pipeline at 3½ per cent, I cannot understand the government charging the Canadian farmers 5 per cent. But that is not the point. The point is that we are determined that the representations of the farm population of the west should be made on this question of advance payments.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Could I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. Coldwell: Yes.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Would the grain elevator operator be expected to search the records and find out if there were prior commitments against the grain on which he was making an advance?

Mr. Coldwell: I do not think that is necessary. As a matter of fact, the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose (Mr. Smith) was challenged a few moments ago to ascertain if he knew that there was a lien of $800 against 5,000 bushels of grain. There is ample security there. I think that is merely a side issue for lawyers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He could make an affidavit.

Mr. Coldwell: He could swear an affidavit. An affidavit is a legal document and a man making a false statement could be attacked in a court of law and dealt with severely.

Now, then, look at the house at the moment. Look at the Liberal side of the house. Look at the number who are interested in this particular problem. Look at the other side of the house. We will find out how many there are, Mr. Chairman. I move:

That the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Coldwell: It is not debatable.

The Chairman: Would the hon. member be kind enough to send me a copy of his motion?

Mr. Coldwell: Yes.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

The Chairman: May I remind hon. members that we are not sitting as the house but we are sitting in committee. While I am reading the question any hon. members who wish have the right to enter the house.

Motion (Mr. Coldwell) agreed to: Yeas, 46; nays, 36.

The Chairman: I declare the motion carried. Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the committee have leave to sit again?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Later this day.

Mr. Knowles: Next sitting of this house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Later this day?

Mr. Nicholson: Next sitting.

WHEAT

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF CARRYING COSTS OF TEMPORARY EXCESS RESERVES

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure for the payment of carrying costs of temporary wheat reserves owned by the Canadian wheat board in respect of board stocks of wheat in excess of one hundred and seventy-eight million bushels at the commencement of a crop year, such payment to be made to the board by the Minister of Finance out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, in form, this is a simple bill. In principle, it is of great importance. It is proposed that the government of Canada should assume carrying charges on stocks of wheat held by the wheat board in excess of 178 million bushels as of August 1, 1955 and that a similar obligation should be assumed by the government in each crop year until the board's stocks of wheat drop below 178 million bushels as of the first of the crop year. At that time, the legislation will lapse.

The purpose of the bill is to relieve the wheat board, and through the board, the wheat producer, from the burden of paying storage and interest costs on the abnormally large stocks which have accumulated in the hands of the board in recent years.

These excessive stocks have accumulated for one reason and one reason only—good rainfall on the prairies during the past 4 or 5 years. They are not due to excessive plantings of wheat. In fact, acreage is lower than it was 25 years ago. They are not due to subsidization of wheat production in any form. Prairie wheat growers receive exactly the price realized on world markets for their wheat, less storage and other expenses of handling and marketing. Unlike wheat growers in so many countries of the world, they have not cost the taxpayers or consumers of this country a penny in recent years.

Nor have these excessive stocks accumulated because of poor sales. In fact, during the period of accumulation of present stocks, export and domestic sales have been at record levels.

The cause of excess stocks is simply and solely good, well-distributed rainfall which produced a series of remarkably big crops, including the largest and second largest in history.

To all intents and purposes, the Canadian elevator system was filled to capacity on August 1, 1955, the beginning of the present crop year. At that time the Canadian wheat board owned 395 million bushels of wheat. The elevator system is likely to continue to be filled to capacity on August 1 next as producers deliver grain now on farms to replace grain moving into consumption at home and abroad.

The wheat board, therefore, faces the prospect of having to carry very large stocks of wheat for some time to come. Under the wheat board system of grain marketing, all carrying costs are charged to the producer who receives the net proceeds of sale, that is, the sale price less all costs.

The impact of increasing carrying charges first affected wheat board operations in the administration of the 1953-54 pool account.

Could we have a little order, please, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Apparently these genial comedians across the way are not interested in wheat.

Mr. Ellis: How many members did you have in the house?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): How many have you listening to this speech?

Mr. Knowles: Put your temper in storage.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am going to have a few words to say about the opposition when I get through this more formal part of my remarks; make no mistake about that. I continue with my statement. This pool was under administration from August 1, 1953 to April 29, 1955. Carrying charges and interest came to 15·67 cents per bushel on the 398 million bushels of wheat delivered to the pool by producers. By way of comparison, if we look at the 1952-53 pool, the same items came to only 7·57 cents per bushel on producers' marketings of 533 million bushels.

The heavy carrying charges incurred in the 1953-54 pool would, of course, again be felt in the 1954-55 pool on which the board is still operating. In fact, it is estimated that the carrying charges incurred by the board in the administration of the 1954-55 pool might run close to 20 cents per bushel.

Under ordinary circumstances, there would, in my opinion, be no reason for the government and the general taxpayer to intervene to relieve the wheat board and the producer from any share of carrying costs. At the present time, however, I think there is a broad measure of agreement that it is in the interests not only of wheat producers, but of the country as a whole, that the wheat board should follow an orderly policy in disposing of its large holdings and not resort to panic methods of selling or giving-away. The experience of the 1930's is too fresh in the memories of all of us for anyone to suggest that attempts should be made to clear the shelves at any price. The frantic efforts to sell wheat in those years only produced price collapse. They did not sell any more wheat than could have been sold by orderly marketing. And extremely low wheat prices helped to aggravate and prolong the world depression of the early 1930's.

Aggressive but orderly selling is therefore in the national interest. If, however, the wheat board is faced with the burden of unusual and accumulating carrying costs for some time to come, it will be under the necessity of balancing price cuts against accumulating storage and interest costs. An assumption by the government of abnormal or excess carrying charges will therefore be a powerful aid to the principle of orderly marketing of wheat which this government supports.

This proposal may, therefore, be regarded as a contribution, and an essential contribution, to the stability of the wheat economy of the prairie provinces and an indirect contribution to the stability of the whole Canadian economy.

Over the period of 15 years prior to the harvesting of the large 1951 crop, average stocks of wheat in elevators at the end of each crop year was 178 million bushels. It seemed to the government that this was a fair gauge of normality. The 15-year period includes the low carryovers of the late 1930's, the high carryovers of the war years, and the low carryovers of the late 1940's.

The stocks of wheat on which the wheat board were paying carrying charges on August 1, 1955 were 395 million bushels. Subtracting 178 million bushels, we arrive at a figure of 217 million bushels on which the government will assure the carrying charges during the present crop year. The charges themselves are in each case based on the last year's actual rates of storage and interest so that a figure may be arrived at immediately. The rates in effect on July 31, 1955 were equivalent to about 15 cents per bushel per annum. Therefore, the cost to the treasury this crop year will be about $32 million. What it will be in subsequent years will depend upon the level of board stocks, but it cannot go much above $32 million in any event because of the physical limits on storage capacity.

I believe that I have said sufficient to explain the government's reasons for introducing this legislation. The detail of the legislation itself, I believe, is self-explanatory.

The government has been urged to subsidize the western producer. It has been urged to subsidize exports and to resort to camouflaged forms of give-away. It has been urged to guarantee a minimum price considerably higher than the present initial prices.

The government has rejected all these proposals. It does not want to get into the business of subsidizing wheat production or exports as is being done in so many countries of the world, for this is the basic cause of the trouble in world wheat markets today.

The government does believe, however, that it is in the national interest that the treasury should help the producer over the present rough spot by carrying stocks in commercial storage above normal levels.

In due course, present wheat stocks owned by the board will begin to decline. When they fall to 178 million bushels, payments by the treasury will cease. If at some future time they should rise again above normal, it will be for the government and parliament to decide at that time whether there is any national responsibility. The present bill deals only with the situation now confronting the country and the wheat producer.

We have heard a great deal today and in recent days of what the opposition parties would do for the farmers were they in the position of the government. Well, now, there is a way of finding out what they would do. The surest way to find out what any man would do in a given situation is to find out what he did the last time he encountered this situation. We have a pattern set in the 1930's when the Conservative government came into office and encountered a similar surplus position. The government took office on the 7th of July, 1930. The price of wheat on that day was slightly over $1 a bushel—

Mr. Rowe: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister, was it not 92 cents?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, sir.

Mr. Rowe: It was within a week.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It was one dollar and one-half cent on the Winnipeg grain exchange for No. 1 northern grain, Fort William, on July 7, 1930, and if the hon. member does not believe it he can look it up in the noon recess.

Mr. Rowe: I believe it because I was here. I would ask the minister, however, did it not drop to 55 cents before the end of that year?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes.

Mr. Rowe: Who was to blame for that?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Who was in power?

Mr. Rowe: Just for a month or two.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You were in power from the 7th July—

Mr. Rowe: Until September—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The price of wheat dropped from the day this government took office.

Mr. Rowe: How much did it drop the year before, from 1929 until then?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The election was on July 28 so we were not in power on July 7.

Mr. Rowe: Wrong again.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I should have said August 8.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh yes.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am glad to be corrected.

Mr. Fleming: Another inaccuracy.

Mr. Rowe: You were not here.

Mr. Fleming: There will be a correction tomorrow.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): But I was interested in wheat.

Mr. Rowe: I will not interrupt you again.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You can speak later.

Mr. Rowe: I should not have interrupted; you are in enough trouble.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is getting close to one o'clock.

Mr. Rowe: I am sorry, go ahead.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): As I say, the price of wheat on the day the Conservative government took office, which I recalled was July 7 but have been informed was August 8,—it was the beginning of a new crop year in any event—was one dollar and one-half cent, No. 1 northern grain, Fort William. The average of that crop year was only about 66 cents per bushel. The price of grain declined steadily until, after the government had been in power for two and a half years, it touched the low price of 39 cents per bushel in storage at Fort William for No. 1 northern wheat.

Well, the government was active. We have heard a great deal about the Bennett government instituting the wheat board. The wheat board was not in action at that time but the government was in the futures market attempting to stabilize the price of wheat, and the prices grew lower day by day until wheat dropped to the lowest price in history. That was a serious surplus situation and not too attractive a price. What did the government do for the people in the west? That is a most interesting story. Did they guarantee bank loans? No, not even for $1,500 per loan. They did nothing of that kind. Did they help the farmer with his carrying charges? No. However, I would not say they did nothing because they did do something—

Mr. Rowe: Thanks.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There was quite a surplus of cheese down in what was then Tory Ontario and the government bought that cheese. Of course, the Ontario farmers had to be taken care of and not having any other place to put it the government distributed the cheese to the farmers in the west. The same thing was true of apples. There was also a surplus of apples down in Tory Ontario—

An hon. Member: What about cod fish?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, I am coming to cod fish. There was a surplus of cod fish down in the maritime provinces and that surplus was bought up and distributed to the farmers in the west. So when we hear the opposition talk about aid to the farmers and say that this government is being niggardly in this present surplus situation it is interesting to remember that the total aid the Conservative government gave to the farmers consisted of a few pounds of cheese, a few apples and a few dead fish. That is the whole story wrapped up in a package. I ask you to call it one o'clock, Mr. Chairman. I am not finished.

[Mr. Rowe.]

Mr. Coldwell: I should like to ask the minister one question—

The Chairman: Order.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, before adjournment I had started to discuss the regime which was in power in this country from 1930 to 1935. There is much more I could say on that subject but as my time is limited I shall refer more particularly to Item No. 3. I may say that this method of assistance to farmers was decided upon only after I had attended the annual meetings of two of the three wheat pools, after I had discussed the situation with a great number of farmers, after I had attended a meeting of the farmers' union in Edmonton and after I had listened to a great number of proposals made by producers of wheat as to the best method of remedying a situation which was then and is now causing this government anxiety.

I have heard the suggestion that we should go on a two-price system, that we should charge the consumers of wheat in this country a higher price than we sell the same wheat for export. That proposal presents great difficulties. It would invite our customers abroad to ship their flour into this market and if we placed an embargo against their flour they would then say, "Why should we not put an embargo on against your wheat?" I should hate to make the decision that one section of the country should charge another section of the country a price which was higher than they would be willing to sell that wheat in any market except Canada.

Other proposals have been advanced from time to time, but after discussing the matter with the directors and senior men in the pools and a great number of members of the united farmers it was decided that the method of assistance provided in this bill would be the most appropriate and likely to be the most helpful that could be advanced for the purpose.

However, I think we should get back to business and I should like to move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Motion agreed to: Yeas, 109; nays, 11.

Progress reported.

GRAIN

PROVISION FOR GUARANTEE OF BANK LOANS TO PRODUCERS IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Howe (Port Arthur)—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide, by way of a guarantee for bank loans made on or after the 15th day of November, 1955, and before the 1st day of June, 1956, for short-term credit to grain producers in the prairie provinces to meet temporary financial difficulties arising from inability to deliver their grain; to provide also that the governor in council may extend the application of the act to cover loans made before the 1st day of June, 1957; and to provide further that any amount paid to a bank under the act be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Rowe: Mr. Chairman, the resolution before the committee is one of keen concern to everyone interested in agriculture in Canada, as well as those—and I know this would apply to all hon. members—who are interested in the economic prosperity of this dominion. I realize that there is some difference of opinion as to whether we should grant loans at 5 per cent to the farmers of western Canada or make cash advances on the wheat which they hold, wheat which the government in conjunction with the wheat board has failed to sell. I think that is quite a legitimate difference.

The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has made a strong argument in favour of guaranteeing the banks when making loans at 5 per cent, but it struck me as being rather odd that the farmers should have to pay 5 per cent when many others are able to borrow money for less. It is believed by all sides in parliament today that cash payments to farmers are necessary. The point is, why are they necessary?

For some considerable time I have listened to extensive debates on agriculture, and especially on wheat. Wheat production is an important branch of Canadian agriculture. We have been proud for many years of our No. 1 hard wheat. In fact I sometimes think we have been almost too proud; we thought that the world could not get along without it. I can remember discussions about its importance, and I think that is admitted by all.

Today we find our surpluses mounting until there are actually mountains of wheat in Canada remaining unsold. At no other time in our history have we known of surpluses of the size we have now except during 1930, when they were the largest in the 20th century up to that time. It is unique that as the great party which sits to your right were getting ready to leave office in 1930 they left every elevator bursting with unsold wheat. Today at about the time they are getting ready to leave again, every elevator is filled with unsold wheat.

However, the minister has admitted that we have 100 million bushels of empty elevator space. As the hon. member for Prince Albert has pointed out, 100 million bushels of empty elevator space means that if that amount had been delivered to the elevators the farmers would have had $150 million more, and we would not need to be making either cash payments or loans at 5 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened in this house for a long time, for nearly as long as any other hon. member, and it is passing strange to find that even though we have a tremendous increase in the production of copper and all other primary products, the one primary product over the sale of which we have had difficulty down through the years with this government has been this golden asset of agriculture, Canadian No. 1 hard wheat. Perhaps there is a relationship, because I have not in all my time in this parliament ever seen a government so smugly satisfied with itself, so sure that there is some other reason that we are in difficulty rather than any shortcoming of the government.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce, with his characteristic optimism, says there is nothing wrong. He is more bullish than the greatest bulls on the market these days. He says there is nothing wrong. In fact he says he is rather happy about the situation. If we have too much wheat he says the reason is that it rained too much. The Minister of Agriculture sings "It ain't gonna rain no more" and says there will be no butter surplus because there will be no rain next year.

Mr. Chairman, I sometimes wonder how the farmers of Canada can get such satisfaction, comfort or hope when they observe the policies of this government. The Minister of Trade and Commerce told us the other day that we have been selling so much wheat that the transportation companies cannot get it away as fast as they are selling it. He has told us that we sold 90 million bushels more wheat a year in the last five years than we ever sold before. Yet on the other hand he says, "If the farmers want it we will give them something; we will make them pay 5 per cent on it, because they are so well off that otherwise they will buy victory bonds and we will have to pay interest ourselves." Is it any wonder that they are starting to shoot up the public monopoly of television?

The farmers of Canada are dissatisfied. They have been dissatisfied in the past, but they are more dissatisfied today. I could name cabinet ministers who know very well that what I say is true, but I will not embarrass them because any row they have in their own constituencies is their own problem. We have been told that we have had many more shipments and that the shipments had been going out rapidly. The hon. member for Prince Albert this morning showed conclusively what has been happening in that regard in the last few years.

We listened to the Minister of Trade and Commerce the other day. Experience must be the charm of the ages, because even with his short experience the Minister of Trade and Commerce almost made me feel that these mountains of wheat in western Canada were disappearing just like snowdrifts in a spring thaw. He said it might be an asset when we want it. I remember last year how he, speaking for the wheat board, said we might not have any bins full of wheat in Canada; we were to have it all sold, and probably there would be no wheat. What was a problem in January was likely to be an asset before July. Then the other day he said we sold 90 million bushels of wheat more each year for the last five years, and the only real handicap they had was the panic that was caused throughout the world by what the Leader of the Opposition had said about wheat.

I had realized previously that the words of the Leader of the Opposition are beginning to ring true. I realize that more people in this country are beginning to have confidence that we have a vigorous and forward-looking leader who will be the next prime minister of Canada. But I did not realize before that his voice was so strong that it would carry over into Europe and destroy the markets. As a colleague of his I am going to speak to him and tell him to be careful, because I am a farmer. I will try to get him not to say anything that might disturb the market for wheat. I agree with his policies in so many regards that I would not want him to upset the world wheat market by something he might say at this particular time.

The hon. member for Prince Albert this morning laid down in his characteristically clear style the true picture in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Rowe: The Minister of Trade and Commerce and the government have failed this house so often that I am not surprised that they now doubt themselves. If ever we saw a trail of contradictions, a trail of changes and signs of disunity, we saw it last week. I am not surprised that we find that situation prevailing on this important question. Despite what has been said, we know that deliveries from the farms in the 21 weeks from January 4 to January 16 were 65 per cent below what they were one year ago, and the deliveries or loadings overseas were 30 per cent less. How can the Minister of Trade and Commerce expect us or the wheat grower in western Canada to believe him when he builds up a picture, such as that which he built up the other day, when he says that the only trouble we have today is to find transportation to take the wheat away as fast as we are selling it, that we are selling more than we ever sold before. Then on the other side, on the same day we find him saying that we must find money to support these poor fellows in western Canada. We never before sold so much wheat for them, but they never needed money so badly.

An hon. Member: No wonder they shoot grits on television.

Mr. Rowe: I am glad they killed two. If they had killed one there would still be another.

Mr. Harris: And lots more, too.

Mr. Rowe: There will not be so many in your riding after the next election, despite your position down here. There is only one of you. You cannot afford to take that risk.

Mr. Harris: You can come over this year, as you did in former years.

Mr. Rowe: No. I never went there very much, because I had more important places to go. The Minister of Trade and Commerce tries to tell the house and the country that we have not a surplus that is at all dangerous. There is a great difference between the stocks in hand that the trader sees and the surplus that the politicians admit. Yet we have almost one billion bushels—almost one thousand million bushels—on hand and they tell us that is not dangerous.

If you are in power long enough to build a halo of smug complacency and optimism around you bigger than a balloon tire, then you can say that these little things like a billion bushels of wheat are of no more concern than "what's a million" in your financial statement. These are things that the people of this country are getting concerned about. These are the things that are disturbing the farmers across this dominion. Some of us do not grow as many acres of wheat, but we try to grow perhaps more bushels per acre. There is not a grain grower, a cattle feeder, a grain seller or a grain buyer in agriculture in Canada today who is satisfied with the way in which this government is bungling, befuddling and bewildering the whole picture. The Minister of Trade and Commerce suggests that the minister for Prince Albert—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Rowe: He will be a minister after the next election; don't worry about that. Maybe I am a little bit ahead of myself, but of one thing I am sure. When he is made a minister I hope he is ahead of the row I see in front of me now. He will stand out like a beacon light before these tired old men I see in front of me, these men who said we would not be able to find a cabinet or could not form a government. As was said two or three days ago, if I were to go out and shoot a gun down Sparks street, if I did not hit a television set I would still hit something that would match up well with the best you have in the front row. I have never seen a government so old and complacent, with such a lack of policy, so uncertain and indiscreet, as I see before me now. I do not want to embarrass them or I would ask some of them how they stand on certain issues. I would not want to embarrass the Minister of Justice but I could ask him some questions that would make him wish he were back in Minnedosa.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Rowe: Oh, if we can only get the transportation and it does not rain too much we will solve the whole problem. It will be a great thing to have wheat. The Minister of Agriculture said a few years ago that we might have to eat it, and if we got into a desperate situation in a world conflict we could eat nothing but wheat and live on it for a time. In fact I have listened to very little else in parliament for 30 years.

But, Mr. Chairman, amidst all these blunders, bluffs and boasts these new apostles of trade experiments have created a halo of mythology among the farmers all across the dominion. If there is any compliment coming to them I compliment them on that halo around their heads which, as I have said, is bigger than a balloon tire. But what has it meant in reality? I have listened and I am convinced that they think that if you are in power long enough you cannot be wrong. In their opinion they exemplify democracy at its best. How they smugly smile and laugh, wisecrack at the opposition and say, "All is well because we did it."

Going back to the days of the past, by what yardstick do these giants measure their greatness? What yardstick are you using? Are you considering varying world conditions? Are you considering the changing times through which we have gone? Are you considering the increased world population? Are you considering the increased world production of wheat? Are you considering that last year the world consumed 117 million more bushels of wheat, yet Canada had very little more than half the proportion of that wheat market that it had in the days of the Bennett government to which I belonged, and which the minister said sent abroad nothing but apples, cheese and so on.

I know what the western farmers will say today. They will say they have had nothing but applesauce for the last four years in western Canada. Yes, Mr. Chairman, where are these markets? What has this government done? I listened to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar this morning and I listened intently because, while I have not always been in full agreement with many of his policies, he is one of the outstanding debaters in the Canadian parliament. He put the matter so clearly that if you did not believe what he said all you had to do was to look at the Minister of Trade and Commerce and you would know it was true.

He remembers what happened in 1935. May I tell you, sir, that, coming from the same part of the country as you do, I remember distinctly what has happened since 1925. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar gave me a lead. I had not intended to do so today, but I should like to review some of our past history to see where the merit or demerit of these giants lies in retrospect and in relation to other governments that have gone before.

An hon. Member: 1930 to 1935.

Mr. Rowe: Yes, 1930 to 1935. You were not here and you have never heard anything about it from your side since then. That is why the future of your party is so hopeless. These tired old men are disappearing and you ciphers in the back are not learning well enough to be able to form a government. I am not hesitant at all, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Dickey: No, you are not. That is right.

Mr. Rowe: —about reviewing the history of those years. No man knows better than the Minister of Trade and Commerce—

Mr. Harris: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rowe: —that I was in politics before he was. In fact I urged the people of Port Arthur to make him president of the Conservative association at that time. I know his friendship for the grain exchange. He was a Tory of the Tories in those days. As the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar said, these people are not the champions of the wheat board, and why do they now try to parade themselves as such? Why, Mr. Chairman, it is utter nonsense. I can understand now why this mythology has grown. We are to blame because we have not told the people the truth enough. I am glad there are those still in parliament who can review the true history of what has gone on in this country.

I can well recall what Hon. Mr. Motherwell had to say, as was mentioned this morning. I can go back further than that, to 1927 and 1928, when I pointed out the dangers that were confronting us. I remember a member of the Liberal party telling me, "You know nothing about western Canada. I am telling you, Rowe, you will never see wheat below $2 a bushel again." I said that from what I could see of what was going on in the wheat business wheat would be selling at 75 cents a bushel before he ever returned to parliament. When he saw he was going to be defeated the Grits gave him a job in the civil service, and later when he was free from politics he admitted to me on Sparks street that I was right and he was wrong.

These, Mr. Chairman, are some of the things that have happened. At that time the Minister of Trade and Commerce was not exactly in love with the Tories but he had sufficient affection for them that he was well regarded by them. Yet, Mr. Chairman, he now has the temerity to tell us what we did, that all we sent was cheese. He did not tell you the kind of mess we found. He did not tell you that we were made the honorary pallbearers of the worst political mess Canada had ever seen.

No, Mr. Chairman, these things are not revealed, and perhaps I should not go back to them because I know that you, sir, as a younger man, feel that we older men should not talk about the days that are past. The Minister of Trade and Commerce would rather look to the future. He is the wild optimist who always looks to the future. His twin brother, the Minister of Agriculture, is afraid to look back and he is too cautious to look ahead. Where are the facts? Let me remind hon. members that the party now in power have not justified this halo of perfection they have built around themselves in smug complacency. Yes, Mr. Chairman, that cloak of smug complacency will be their shroud after the next election. It is true that they have skilfully advertised. Can the minister rise today and tell me about conditions in 1930 and 1931 which, as far as we were concerned, were a lot more difficult than they are today?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Ha, ha, ha, ha.

Mr. Rowe: Mr. Chairman, his answer is just what I expected. His answer is that smug complacency which feels that a laugh or a grin is better than a silly answer. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I can take him and hon. members of the house back before 1930. I well recall what happened in 1925. Yes, I can remember when the wheat pool was organized. I can remember hearing Mr. Henry Wise Wood, and I remember the differences between him and A. J. MacPhail. I remember the speeches of Mr. A. J. MacPhail who, the minister will not deny, knew something about the picture and was very much concerned. Henry Wise Wood, who organized the pool, thought that wheat should never go below $2. What a lucky chance they had in 1924 and 1925. I remember distinctly being in western Canada when the billboards in support of Hon. Mr. Motherwell were as conspicuous to me as they were to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar.

Where did those who were out to kill the wheat board get their lead? Whose baby was it? They never fathered it, they never mothered it, and they even hesitated to adopt it. Right Hon. Arthur Meighen suggested it and then Hon. Mr. Motherwell grabbed on to it, much to the disgust of many Liberals at that time. As the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar said, he was elected by going contrary to his Liberal party. He knew more about agriculture than even the present Minister of Agriculture, for whom I have a great regard.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, let us face the facts. No one group in Canada, whether it is the wheat pool, the grain growers, the wheat board, the Conservative party or the Liberal party, has any monopoly on either the errors or the perfections of the past or present. We were told in those years that wheat would not drop below $2 a bushel. I can recall that there was a short crop in 1924 which allowed wheat to go up slightly to $1.96 per bushel. Then it was said the wheat pools had done a great job. They did not need the wheat board. They did not need very much help at that time.

Without reviewing too much of the past I want to come now to the 1930's and what happened. This government who now boast of what they have done about markets had practically lost the United Kingdom market for every important agricultural export we had at that time. I am not going to review the situation because the Minister of Agriculture knows better than the Minister of Trade and Commerce that we had lost our markets for dairy products, for meat and to a great extent for wheat. We found ourselves in 1930 faced with a smaller United Kingdom market than we had had for 75 years. When this government that sits to your right, Mr. Chairman, assumed office in 1935, we had the strongest British market, more stable markets, for products than we have had in 50 years.

Why had the earlier decline taken place? It was the result of the haphazard regard for agriculture that was clearly demonstrated here today when the government majority was defeated by those who are concerned about agriculture. I am glad that the attendance is better this afternoon. I know hon. members are here because they do not want to be defeated, rather than hear me. The Minister of Trade and Commerce says he has tried to pick out the particular day when Right Hon. R. B. Bennett assumed office. At that time Mr. Bennett found this débâcle: every elevator filled with wheat, every barnyard filled with cattle and every lumber yard filled with lumber. Canada was facing the greatest débâcle it had ever known. Does anyone in this house think Mr. Bennett was powerful enough to create those conditions in three days? Why, three of these tired old gentlemen combined would not make a shadow of him.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce laughs, but he knows what I say is true because he was one of Mr. Bennett's work boys in those days. What did happen? Let me remind young hon. members who have listened to some of these hard-shelled old Grit campaigners tell about the squeak of Bennett buggies in western Canada, this mess was not created by R. B. Bennett. If we had not had as big a man as he was to clean up the mess, we would have been in a worse position.

What did he do? He found this country full of unsold wheat. I know the minister was right this morning when he referred to the price of $1 per bushel. The average price of wheat was exactly the same the month Mr. Bennett left office as it was when he assumed office. I ask the minister, knowing all the bungling he has committed in times of prosperity, how he would have met these difficult problems in times of depression. During those years, between 1930 and 1935, when we were in power we had only 26 per cent of the world market. Yet when we went out of power we had an average of 34 per cent. Today we have 5·5 per cent of the world's production and we are having more trouble than the Bennett government had with almost 9 per cent of the world's production.

I must say, Mr. Chairman, that not a bushel of wheat was sold below the world price. The other day the Minister of Trade and Commerce said we would sell wheat at less than the world price. Where did he get that idea? Where did he hear anybody say that? The Bennett government never sold a bushel of wheat or recommended that the wheat board sell a bushel of wheat for less than the world price. Yet this government has sold wheat to the extent of $4 million or $5 million less than the farmers in western Canada should have had. If they had that money they would not need loans today.

We talk about the wheat board. It is not our purpose to kill the wheat board. We created it. You have messed it up with Liberal socialism until even the wheat board does not know where you are going. The board is afraid to move. If one tries to find out what is going on in this wheat business, one finds it is like trying to peek behind a socialistic bamboo curtain. We are told we do not sell wheat for less than the world price. When I ask how much we sold it for I am told it is not in the public interest to give an answer. I am told we are trying to destroy the wheat board. We do not want to destroy the board; we want it strengthened by young, expert salesmen rather than have old politicians mussing it up.

You have laboured hard and long to create this myth that only you can sell wheat. Well, there is more wheat unsold than at any time in our history. You have cost the taxpayers $120 million. The Minister of Trade and Commerce was not here, but when the Bennett government took office the average price of wheat that month was 92 cents. Later a floor price of 87½ cents was established. When we came into another crisis the Liberal government reduced the floor price to 80 cents. Then they turned around the next day and said, if we have to dump wheat we will do it as cheaply as anybody else in the world. In 48 hours the price had dropped 32 cents and was 60 cents where it had been 92 cents. Those are the champions in trade.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but it is my duty to inform him his time has expired.

Mr. Philpott: Well, Mr. Chairman, we have had a most interesting lesson in ancient history. Now, I think we should take a look at some modern history. Before we take a look at some modern history I may say that I agree with the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) on one point. I fully expect to live to see the day when the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) is the next Prime Minister of Canada, but I do not think that will be for another 20 or 25 years. I believe that once every 45 or 50 years the people of Canada should put in a Tory government for one term in order to be able to realize how good the Liberals were for the other 45.

Well, now, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe has pointed to the gentleman who is sitting next to him, my genial friend the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). I will concede right now, Mr. Chairman, that in my estimation the hon member for Prince Albert is one of the finest criminal lawyers—I hope the Leader of the Opposition will not go out too soon because I am coming to a speech of his in just a minute. The hon. member for Prince Albert, I am frank to say, is one of the finest criminal lawyers in Canada, and if I ever do lose my temper and take a shot not only at a television set but at something more alive than that, and do unfortunately bump off someone in the opposition, I think that my first choice of counsel to get me off at the subsequent trial would be my good friend, the hon. member for Prince Albert. But when the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe suggests that the hon. member for Prince Albert could sell more wheat than is being sold under the leadership of the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, I think it is a good idea to take a look at the record of exactly how the hon. member for Prince Albert said he would go about selling the wheat if he had a chance to sit where the Minister of Trade and Commerce now sits.

On March 25, 1954, as recorded on page 3339 of Hansard, when speaking in the debate on external affairs as the official spokesman of the Conservative party of Canada, he said we should not get rid of our surpluses, including wheat surpluses and other commodities. I am now reading from his speech:

> The people in the western provinces and farmers generally in this country are asking what are the possibilities for agricultural trade. Some argue trade with the U.S.S.R. would afford a means of getting rid of our surplus farm products. What is the attitude of the government with regard to this question? Has the government ascertained through its representatives in the U.S.S.R. that while industrialization has proceeded apace under the five-year plans agriculture has proven to be a failure?

The man who tells us how the Conservative party is to sell the wheat of Canada if or when that party ever assumes power proceeds to say over on the next page:

> Agricultural production has fallen to a level below that of 1928.

Then, a little further down—and this is the important point, Mr. Chairman—the official spokesman of the Conservative party, the man who would sell the wheat, said this:

> I hope and trust that in return for the benefits of the present that are apparent in finding markets for surpluses Canada will not rush into trade with the U.S.S.R. and will give every consideration to the perilous possibilities inherent in contributing in meeting ferment in the Soviet union to which the Kremlin has found no better answer than more repression and the tyranny of purges.

Then, further down:

> As to the question of trade, I fear that the economic advantages of the present will lure many to believe in the necessity or at least in the attractiveness of trade with the U.S.S.R. on the assumption that we can restrict the things in which we trade to non-strategic commodities. In my opinion there is no more strategic commodity in the world than the production of agriculture.

In other words, if the hon. member for Prince Albert had to do with the selling of the wheat of Canada, we would not have sold the 1,000 tons of wheat that we sold to Poland last week; we would not even be negotiating with the Russians down-town in Ottawa today to try to sell a very substantial quantity of wheat. If the hon. member for Prince Albert had his way as the official spokesman of the Conservative party and the salesman in waiting of the Conservative party of the wheat of Canada we would not sell a single bushel to Poland, we would not sell a single bushel of wheat to any part of the one-third of all the world that now is so unfortunate as to have a communist government. We would have no truck or trade with the communists, exactly as the Conservatives advocated in the election of 1911.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I say before we listen to any of the glib and shallow talk about the inefficiency of the present government in selling our wheat, or in not selling our wheat, we should look back to the clear-cut expression of policy on the part of the Conservative party which has until this day never once been disavowed as to how they would refuse to sell a single bushel of wheat, or of other surplus food, to any part of the communist one-third of the world.

Since we have listened so long and so generously at times in the past few weeks to how not to sell wheat, may I offer one constructive suggestion as to how I think we might sell it? I myself have travelled at different times for long periods in the countries of Asia. When I was in India in 1951 there was a near-famine there. Our trade commission was trying very hard to sell wheat in India. In my conversations with members of the Indian government I found them most reluctant to buy Canadian wheat if it meant the use of Colombo plan funds for that purpose. I also found that it is not just so simple as some members of the opposition sometimes suggest to dispose of wheat to two-thirds of the people who go to bed hungry every night. You must have some way of doing it. We had an instance of that in British Columbia not very many years ago. We wanted Canada to give some of our British customers apples. We actually offered them one million boxes of apples, but when it came to giving the one million boxes of apples to Britain we found there was no machinery to handle the gift. In the end the apples had to go to the people of Britain through the ordinary channels, of trade, and the only beneficiary, of course, was the treasury of the British government, which was all very well. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we must have some practical suggestions as to how we might dispose of some of our surpluses beyond those that have been forthcoming. I would like to make two practical suggestions.

First of all I believe this government should send the most intelligent and alert salesmen that they can employ to try to sell wheat to China. I for one believe that if the Minister of Fisheries had not had that unfortunate accident, which resulted in the cutting short of his visit to China, something might have come out of his visit that would have led to a trade deal before now.

The second constructive suggestion I should like to make is this. I find that the great countries of Asia, such as India and China, have always lived on the borderline of starvation. They always live on the raw edge of nothing. There is always a small margin between the bare sufficiency which they ordinarily have and outright starvation. The margin is so small because there is no reserve. I believe it would be in the interests of this country, and of other countries in the western democracy, even if we had to put up a large sum of money, to enable those great countries of Asia to build up a sufficient food reserve, including a wheat reserve. Thank you.

Mr. Zaplitny: Mr. Chairman, the debate on this measure so far has more or less resolved itself into a question of whether this parliament should enact a bill which would be a guarantee to the chartered banks in the event that they should make some loans to farmers on farm-stored grain, or whether this parliament should move toward cash advances on grain. Up until this point we have heard a number of statements and speeches. Only this afternoon we heard speeches which reviewed the policies of previous governments, both Liberal and Conservative. It is not quite clear which party did more violence to the wheat board in its term of office, which did a poor job of selling wheat. I shall leave that to the people to decide. In the meantime, I intend to touch briefly on what I believe to be the opinion and attitude of the farmers in my own province of Manitoba. Manitoba seems to have crept into the picture rather dramatically in recent days. From what I hear, in that province those who view television really get a bang out of it. It brings back into the discussion the arguments that have been made by the hon. member for Rosthern in defence of the government's measure.

I think it can be summarized in this way. The hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) in making what I would consider to be the main defence for the government in support of this bill made no attempt to argue that bank loans at 5 per cent were better, more sound or more realistic than cash advances. What he tried to argue was that what the government was doing represented cash advances and I think that is the main reason why his analysis of the situation and his argument in relation to it created so much heat amongst farmers on the prairies.

The farmers on the prairies, at least those in my province, do not mind being told by the government that in the government's opinion its considers bank loans at 5 per cent to be a better proposition than cash advances, and then proceed to argue from there. But when someone tries to shove down their throats something they know is not true it is an insult to their intelligence.

I am not surprised at the incident which took place the other day in Manitoba as reported in the press. A farmer on the prairies could read with some degree of equanimity the arguments presented by the hon. member for Rosthern and the other Liberal members as reported in Hansard. He might even be able to restrain himself when he listened to the voices of Liberal members over the radio. But when one of them intrudes not only his voice but his face right into the farmer's living room and argues in support of this resolution the farmer could only retaliate in a dramatic fashion.

An hon. Member: And shoot the works.

Mr. Zaplitny: I am going to place on the record something which represents the attitude of the organized farmers in Manitoba. First of all a resolution was passed. As it happens, it was the first resolution to be considered by the annual meeting of the Manitoba farmers' union which was held in the city of Winnipeg on December 5, 6 and 7. This is the exact wording of this resolution which I think sets clearly before this committee what the attitude of that organization is. It makes no bones about it and it does not beat around the bush. The organization put it in plain language and I will put it on the record:

Cash Advances

Be it resolved that this fifth Annual Convention of the Manitoba Farmers' Union disapproves of the present system of bank loans to farmers on farm-stored grain, and

Be it further resolved that we request the Federal Government to make immediate provisions for cash advances to farmers on farm-stored grain on the following basis:

(a) that these advances shall be the full initial payment

(b) that these advances be paid on the basis of one-half of the deliverable grain

(c) that all administration and interest charges be borne by the Federal Government
(d) that these advances shall be repayable on the basis of one-half the value of each delivery made by the farmer
(e) that these advances be made through the facilities of the Canadian Wheat Board.

That resolution is very comprehensive and clear. It does not make any attempt to skirt the issue and it states exactly what the organized farmers, in the sense that they belong to that organization, are asking for so far as this parliament is concerned. For any member of the house from the prairie provinces, and more particularly from the province of Manitoba, to rise in this house and say that the farmers in Manitoba did not ask for cash advances or to say that what they are getting now can be considered as cash advances, is of course to argue against the membership of the whole of the Manitoba farmers' union which includes thirty to forty thousand farmers in that province.

I come now to the submission of the Manitoba federation of agriculture and co-operation. This was contained in a submission they made last December to all federal members from the province of Manitoba. I understand this same submission was made to hon. members of all the parties concerned. On page 7 of this submission, under the heading of "Cash Advances", we find the following:

Because of the current grain marketing congestion many farmers are in need of financial assistance. We most vigorously protest the payment of 5 per cent interest on loans against grain in store on the farm.

Now, that is perfectly clear. At best the government's measure provides temporary relief. The government of Canada has an obligation to the western grain producer. It should accept the greater risk in making interim payments on grain delivered. It should provide legislation for a long-term program for the financing of farm-stored grain.

The farmers who belong to this organization in many cases belong to both of these organizations because the federation includes all the co-operatives in the province. It is a well known fact that practically every farmer does business in one way or another with the co-operatives in Manitoba. Of course, it also includes a great many non-farmers, those of us who are not engaged directly in agriculture but who do business with the co-operatives, and that probably includes a large percentage of the people in Manitoba. They are automatically members of the Manitoba federation of agriculture. Therefore these two organizations could be said to speak for practically the whole of the population of the province.

They have set themselves on the record very clearly on two points: first, they are opposed to the legislation which is now being proposed by the government, and secondly they are asking that cash advances be made. That is exactly what the members of this group have been fighting for ever since this session began.

As I said earlier, the hon. member for Rosthern and some of the other hon. members who are defending this legislation are attempting to draw a red herring across this whole argument by saying: After all, after the Saskatoon conference, the delegation that visited Ottawa and interviewed the cabinet or some part of the cabinet simply asked for cash advances and did not specify just how this should be done, leaving it to the government to decide this.

I am convinced, however, you cannot get away with that kind of technical weaseling out of the position the farm organizations whose resolutions I have quoted have requested as of December 1955. This can be backed by numerous other resolutions that have been passed in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. These groups have laid bare their attitude and opinions very clearly before the government and before this house.

Let us examine what the government is actually proposing. The resolution that is now before the committee has been described by hon. members of the government as a measure for providing for loans on grain to the farmers, but a careful reading of the resolution will reveal that it is nothing of the sort. Let me read it:

Resolved, That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide—

To provide what?

—by way of a guarantee for bank loans made on or after the 15th day of November, 1955, and before the 1st day of June, 1956, for short-term credit to grain producers in the prairie provinces to meet temporary financial difficulties arising from inability to deliver their grain.

This resolution purports to provide for short-term credit to grain producers but it does nothing of the sort. It envisages a bill to guarantee to the bank any money which the banks happen to lend to farmers who have grain to deliver. It guarantees nothing whatsoever to the farmers. There is nothing in this proposed legislation to say that any farmer who requires a loan or is eligible for one will receive it; it is left entirely in the hands of the banks. Therefore this resolution and the arguments advanced in its support thus far in the debate have been perfectly misleading. They have tried to create the impression that something is being done to ensure that farmers will obtain loans when nothing of the sort is guaranteed by this proposed legislation.

Of course, I am not in a position to know what the exact wording of the bill will be but I have projected my imagination a little and I have written down what I think the bill will be when it comes up. Perhaps there will be a different version when it is introduced, for we do get different versions of things in this house, the Currie report for example. This is the kind of bill which would logically be written on the basis of what the resolution actually provides for. I have numbered it Bill No. CD-1 and it is entitled "An Act for the Relief of Chartered Banks". The preamble and the sections, of which there are three, would read as follows:

Any similarity between this measure and cash advances on farm-stored grain is purely coincidental and completely ridiculous.

1. Nothing hereinafter contained in this act shall be construed as guaranteeing anything to farmers. Any benefit accidentally inuring to the benefit of grain producers under this act shall be promptly reported to the Minister of Justice, who will forthwith put a stop to such nonsense.

2. Should any farmer manage to obtain a bank loan under this measure, this unusual event shall immediately be reported to the Minister of National Revenue because such farmer must have an excellent credit standing and is therefore a good prospect for income tax boys.

3. Notwithstanding any opinions expressed by farmers or their organizations or representatives to the contrary, grain producers shall take this measure and like it. (This order is pursuant to a decree issued by the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, and shall apply mutatis mutandis to all future legislation decreed by radio and/or television.)

That is the only kind of bill that I can envisage that could logically be drawn up on the basis of this resolution. This resolution is not a measure to provide for loans to farmers; it is a measure to provide relief for the chartered banks of Canada, and any bank loans which might be made under it would of course be purely incidental.

One might think that I am expressing the opinions of the people of only one province, but I should like to add to what has been said about this whole matter what was contained in an editorial in the Star-Phoenix of November 10, 1955. Although I am not very familiar with this newspaper, I understand that it is not noted for being too unfriendly to the government. I hesitate to quote anything from the Winnipeg Free Press because recently the members of the government have become allergic to anything appearing in that newspaper. But I do understand that the Star-Phoenix has been fairly friendly to the Liberal party. Here is what they say:

Honesty and humility require us to admit that our comments on the federal government's emergency farm loan plan probably aren't nearly as interesting as those made by certain politicians. But we take comfort in the thought that our arithmetic is less confusing.

Then it goes on to point out some of the arithmetic that has been bandied about in the province of Saskatchewan by some of the Liberal leaders. It continues:

For instance, Mr. A. H. McDonald was quoted as saying, at Moosomin on October 21, that a maximum loan of $1,000 per farmer at an interest rate of 5 per cent would be less effective than a stirrup pump at a forest fire. But on November 7, after the plan providing for a maximum loan of $1,500 per farmer had been officially announced, Mr. McDonald was interviewed in Saskatoon and expressed the view that the scheme would help the farmer who most needed assistance. Apparently $500 transformed a stirrup pump into a serviceable fire engine.

Meanwhile Rt. Hon. J. G. Gardiner has been arguing that, because the emergency loan is repayable on the basis of half the borrower's receipts from grain, as it is delivered,—

I want hon. members to note carefully the words from here on because they are in quotation marks:

—"by the time he has paid off the whole loan he has had $3,000 in cash to carry on with and has paid interest on half of it."

Those are truly wonderful mathematics. That is the end of the quotation marks and I hope that is not another one of those shameless misquotes. The editorial continues:

True, but he will still have borrowed only $1,500, at most—and if he hadn't taken advantage of the loan he would, by the same point in his grain deliveries, have had $3,000 cash with no interest to pay on it.

We don't think it helps anyone—least of all the politicians—to intimate that $1,500 is really $3,000, or that $500 makes a bad loan scheme into a good one. Whether the scheme is good or bad, the politicians are stuck with it. They ought to be devoting their attention now to the search for a more permanent solution to the farm problem.

I am glad that that last sentence was included in the editorial because that is exactly what the members of this group have been attempting to point out during this whole debate. Regardless of whether the government has its own way, which it appears to be determined to get now by pushing through this legislation in spite of general and I might say almost unanimous opposition by all farmers on the prairies, even if the government changed its mind and accepted the proposals made in this house by the C.C.F., and provided for cash benefits, even if they went that far, it would not provide a permanent solution to the grain problem.

We would still be in the position of having another crop coming along in 1956 and be faced with congested elevators, a shortage of box cars and all the things with which we are faced today. What is required is action on the part of the government in connection with selling grain and introducing marketing policies which would be conducive to the sale of Canadian grain. Our tariff structure should be reduced in order to allow those nations which normally buy our grain to be able to send their goods to Canada and thus give the Canadian people the advantage of lower prices. That in itself would not only help our export markets but tend—this should interest the Minister of Justice—to reduce combines and monopolies in this country. The breaking down of trade barriers and the allowing of goods into this country would be the most effective way of doing away with monopoly and combines practices. It would keep our Canadian customers for Canadian grain and other agricultural products.

But if this government continues, as the Minister of Finance seems to be committed to continuing, a policy of restricting trade for the purpose of benefiting certain industries in this country rather than to allow trade to flow freely for the benefit of all Canadians, then we are going to continue to be faced with grain crisis after grain crisis. If the government has nothing better than this measly type of resolution to offer to the farmers of Canada they can expect greater and greater difficulties on the prairies.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, the speech delivered by the last speaker brings up one or two matters which I think require a statement by me as Minister of Agriculture, coming as I do from the province of Saskatchewan. The province of Saskatchewan produces considerably more than half of all the wheat we are talking about in discussing these questions and therefore those of us who represent that province, whether we sit on this side of the house or on the other side, are very much interested in the discussion which is taking place.

I am sure we all agree that this is no question about which we can indulge in too much humour. I am not given to indulging in humour while speaking although I enjoy it when others use it, but on an occasion of this kind it is somewhat different. Neither am I so much concerned at the moment as to what brought about the conditions facing the farmers of western Canada apart from the fact that it is a combination of good crops and difficulty in delivering wheat to markets, even to those markets which we have available.

There has also been some difficulty in finding markets at this time for all the wheat that is available. Those are the main factors in connection with the situation which has developed. I only wish to say with regard to that matter that as a farmer in western Canada I am always more satisfied when we have a good crop than I am when we have a poor one. I am always more satisfied when we have more wheat than we can sell than I am when we have very much less than we can sell. I have gone through both experiences.

Some suggestion was made that at one time I favoured the grain exchange method of marketing. That is perfectly true. There was a time when we really did not have any other system but the grain exchange system of marketing. We developed from one thing to another until we eventually obtained the pooling system of marketing in western Canada. I have never been in favour of any other system but that one since it was first brought into being. As a matter of fact, I had something to do with stumping sections of the western part of Canada in putting it into being. I have had no reason to object to it or to oppose it since then.

I come down to this particular question which was all confined to one particular fact that existed last summer and last fall. The businessmen in the small towns and in the cities as well had been doing what they have always done in western Canada. They carried the farmer from the spring to the fall without any question whatsoever. When a farmer walked into their place of business and asked for oil, they gave it to him; when he walked in and asked for groceries, he obtained them; when he walked in and asked for clothing, he obtained it simply because they have always been accustomed to having bills run by these farmers over the years; and even in the years when we had to give them relief in order to get them by, the businessmen went to the very limit in order to see that the farmers were supplied. They did that this last season. There was an additional reason why they did it this last season.

Last spring we started off with the idea that we were not going to have very much wheat because we were not going to be able to get it seeded. It was raining too much. Then when we did get it seeded, growing conditions were so good that, as the summer advanced, everyone was of the opinion that we were going to have a good crop but that we might not get it off because it was late. Then when we came into the middle of the month of July, we had weather which ripened our crops much more rapidly than we expected to have it ripened. We therefore harvested a very considerable crop; it was the eighth highest crop we have ever harvested in the province of Saskatchewan and over all of western Canada itself, in so far as wheat was concerned.

I say again that the businessmen did not hesitate to give credit; but it can be said of the farmers who farm in western Canada, they did not use as much of that credit as they had been accustomed to use over the 10 years since the war, the reason being that they had themselves very well equipped with machinery. At the end of the war they had little if anything with which to carry on. That was bad for operation on the farm, because they could not buy equipment during the war. But during the years up until this last year they had been equipping their farms and had them very well equipped. They did not buy as much machinery during the last year as they had bought recently, the obvious reason being that they were being careful in financing their farms. In spite of all that, when we came up to the months of October and November, the businessmen were looking for the cash that they in turn had to pay to the wholesalers here and there and to those who had supplied them with equipment from the eastern part of Canada and elsewhere.

So the concern was not so much concern on the part of the farmer as it was concern on the part of the businessman. He said, "Look here; I must have cash". The farmer said, "I have not got it". There could not be any argument about that. Whatever the reasons were, whether it was on account of car shortage or whatever it was, wheat had not been moving and the farmer did not have the cash. It would have been quite easy for some farmers to say, "It is not so much my worry; as long as I can go back to the businessman in the small town or elsewhere and get credit as I have always had it, I shall be able to carry on." Not many of the farmers said that, but they might have been justified in saying it. Instead they said, "Look here; these people have always carried us. What is going to be done about it? How are we going to get cash into our hands as soon as possible in order to go in and pay these men and let these men pay the wholsalers and others across the country and thus be in a position to carry on?" There was no one who had any idea in mind—the farmer, the businessman or anyone else—that any policy brought in at this time was going to settle all those problems that have to do with the marketing of wheat.

There are in this chamber members who, every time a westerner gets up to speak with regard to wheat, recall all the things that have been said over the last 30 years with regard to marketing wheat and who express the hope that the discussion will not be along the same lines. That is all right. But we are not attempting to settle the problems that we have been discussing over the last 30 years or that we are going to be discussing over the next 10 years or even the next year. Here at the moment we are discussing only the problem that was involved in getting enough cash into the hands of the farmers who could not raise it otherwise in order to make it possible for them to pay their accounts in town, get their line of credit again and go on doing business as they have always done. If we can keep our minds on that particular question and deal with it, then we can discuss intelligently ways and means by which that may be brought about.

One of the ways, it is quite true—and the farmers do not hesitate to say so—would have been to get some variation of the old system that used to prevail before we had the wheat board at all. The farmers know—as do I and as do any other people who ever delivered wheat in western Canada—that there were times when a farmer went to the grain dealer, the elevator company and said, "I have wheat but I do not want to draw it in at the present time; I do not want to pay storage costs on it because the highest storage costs in the world are those in elevators. I want to keep it out on the farm and I will deliver it in due course". In those days the elevator company advanced 60 per cent of the value of the grain on the basis of the price on that particular day, and the farmer carried on. That procedure applied only to a certain group of farmers, farmers whose credit was perfectly good and about which there was no question.

Mr. Nicholson: Who decided that?

Mr. Gardiner: The elevator company decided that.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Did the minister ever do that?

Mr. Gardiner: Yes; I have done it; but it is some time ago. I may say that anyone who could not do it was someone whose credit was not as good as mine, and mine was not as good as it is today. But we went along in that way. Some of us got help in that way. There are some people at the present time who can get help in that way. They do not need to go to the wheat board. They do not need to go to this government. They do not need to go anywhere except to the bank. When members on the other side of the house or on this side of the house say that there has been far more money lent outside of this plan than will be lent under it, they are only saying that the farmers of western Canada are in a little bit different position from that which they have been describing to this house.

A very considerable number of farmers in western Canada are able to go to the banks and get whatever money they require, a very considerable number of them have considerable wheat in their bins, and I am not going to depart from the position I have always taken since I have been in the house and long before I came here that the best bank account any farmer in western Canada can have is a bin of wheat. That still remains the best bank account he can have. There have been no difficulties with farmers who, having bins of wheat on their farms, have gone to a bank and borrowed money, but every businessman in western Canada has had difficulties with people who were able to go to the bank and borrow money when they did not have wheat or did not have something else. They have had difficulties in those cases.

The situations of different people in the west have been described to the house a number of times. There is the young fellow, the chap who did not have any interest in land until a few years ago and then got it one way or another. One way was to go and buy land. Now he has payments to make. In other cases the father came to the time when he did not want to farm any more and he turned over his land to a son. When this occurs, nine times out of ten the young fellow makes an agreement with his father and sometimes with other members of the family that he will give them cash as a result of the crop he harvests. He will turn over cash to them. They usually make agreements based pretty much on everything that they are going to get or do. He will keep so much to run his own show. He will agree to pay so much to take care of his mother and father wherever they may be. He may agree to pay so much to keep a brother in university or someone else he is taking care of.

Then he comes to a fall like last fall and he is not able to market his wheat for the reasons that have been discussed here and he needs some cash. All this legislation says is that here we have a banking system set up in the country from one end to the other, a system that is looked upon as one of the best anywhere in the world and whose purpose is to serve the needs of a country like ours. That system is there. It is established. It is true that there is not a bank in every town but there is one in most towns and farmers who live near places where there is not a bank can go to a town where there is and get money by way of a loan.

That immediately suggested itself to everyone as the simplest way to arrange for the distribution of cash to the farmers. Other people came along and said, "Why not have the wheat board make advances?" A great many people who think there is some merit in that suggestion say that it could not be made to work so far as meeting this situation is concerned. It may be something you might bring into effect at some particular time to deal with a situation that is there all the time but it is not the way in which to deal with this situation, and if you attempted to make it deal with it it would cost the farmers far more than 5 per cent in order to do it. I want to illustrate what I mean by that and the fact that this editorial was read a few moments ago gives me the idea that it should be said. When the farmers met and passed these resolutions at Saskatoon, in Manitoba and elsewhere they called attention to the fact that they thought half the money obtained from any wheat delivered during the winter months should be left in the hands of the farmer. It did not make any difference whether it was going to be advanced from the wheat board or where the advances came from. The indication was that half the money was to be left in the hands of the farmers.

In drafting this proposal the government said: All right, let us say a farmer wants $2,000. He has the wheat to use as security for the whole $2,000 and he wants the money over the next six or nine months until he gets into another crop year or until the wheat now in the elevators starts to move and he is able to deliver his wheat and get more money. Someone challenged us the other day to go out and have meetings in our constituencies. I had meetings in my constituency and I explained the matter to the farmers. What I said was this. I said, "If you want $1,200, go to the bank and ask for $600. If you want $2,000, go to the bank and ask for $1,000. If you want $3,000, go to the bank and ask for $1,500." That is what the editorial indicates I said. Then I said, "You can pretty well bank on being able in a few months to get some of your grain into the elevator and when you do put it in half of the money will go to pay off your loan and half will go into your own pocket to do whatever you wish with it."

I should emphasize here that with respect to these particular loans some of the things that have been said do not apply at all. The bank only has the government's guarantee provided they put the money in the hands of the individual and allow him to do what he wishes with it. You cannot get a guarantee any other way. To say he has got to do this, got to do that and got to do something else is all right if you are referring to ordinary banking but the banker cannot do it under this system. The farmer gets the money and the man who gets the money is told that he can go ahead and pay his accounts, take care of any indebtedness he has or use the money to live on during the period. But when he delivers wheat only half the money for that wheat goes on the loan and the other half is handed to him to do what he wishes with it.

How anybody can figure out anything else than that if the man gets a loan of $1,500 he is going to have the use of $3,000 over the period of the loan is more than I can understand. I should like to have it explained. He has got $3,000 in cash over the period to pay costs.

It is all very well to say that if he had not got it that way, if he could have got cash at the beginning of the season, he would have had the whole $3,000 and would not have had to pay 5 per cent interest, but I come back to what I said at the beginning. This was a set of circumstances that was there and had to be dealt with. It was not something about which you could theorize. The farmer needed the money, it was being provided to him and by next summer he will have had the amount of money I have indicated that is double what he borrowed.

I pleaded with them not to ask for too much in the way of loans because financing on loans has never been the best way for the farmers of western Canada. I have here the results of what happened at the two places where I addressed meetings and also at one place halfway between where a meeting was addressed by the hon. member for Assiniboia. In the first place where I addressed a meeting 61 of the farmers obtained loans under this plan in the first three weeks. I have not had the records since. They got $39,650. The average loan was $650 and there were four $1,500 loans.

An hon. Member: How many were at the meeting?

Mr. Gardiner: About 200.

Mr. Nicholson: Can the minister say where and when the meeting was?

Mr. Gardiner: Oh, you have all seen reports of it in the papers and probably you would ask a lot more questions if I told you where it was. It was in the west end of my constituency. Let me repeat that 61 loans have been made, four of them being $1,500 loans, and the average amount was $650. On the other side of the place where the hon. member for Assiniboia had a meeting I addressed another meeting. At this place there were 52 loans amounting to $44,190. The average amount was $850 and eight of the loans were for $1,500. I have been given a note which says, "Tell Mr. Gardiner so and so got the first loan." He was the only man who got up at the meeting and objected to bank loans on the ground that he would not be able to get a loan. He got a $1,500 loan. The note goes on to say that the bank expects 20 more loans if no quota is opened and none if a quota opens.

In the one town there have been 61 loans from one bank and in the other town some 40 miles down the line there have been 52 loans, with the possibility of 20 more. Then at the town halfway in between where the hon. member for Assiniboia spoke and told them this was not any good at all, 27 of them went to the bank and got loans. The average there was $800 and there were no $1,500 loans. The total amount was $21,585.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Gardiner: Yes.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): What is the source of the figures on bank loans which he has just quoted?

Mr. Gardiner: These are the actual figures obtained by my secretary from the banks where the loans were made.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Is that information that is publicly available to all of us?

Mr. Gardiner: It will be publicly available to all of you when I have finished. If my hon. friend wishes, I can give the town. Perhaps I should have given the names to the hon. member for Mackenzie, who suggested it a moment ago. The first town is Lipton; the second town is Lemberg and the third town is Balcarres, which is half way in between.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I just thought our private business with the banks was safe from the prying eyes of ministers.

Mr. Gardiner: I think the hon. member for Assiniboia would say he was at Balcarres. I have the reports of all three meetings on my desk if it is necessary to give them.

What I want to point out is this. These loans do work. What is more, part of these loans has already been paid back by the very method I mentioned. Since that time, in accordance with one statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, cars have been finding their way into western Canada in greater numbers than before and wheat is being shipped out. As a result of wheat being shipped out, these 20 loans that have been referred to as being possible have not been required. The other loans have been partly paid off. All I want to say is that is exactly what the plan was set up to do, and that is exactly what it is doing.

The result has been that the businessmen in the towns of the Lipton-Dysart area had the benefit of $39,650 paid on accounts into their places of business, or if they did not have it paid on accounts that were running they are getting it paid into their business places during the winter, which they otherwise would not have had. In the town of Lemberg the amount is $44,190 and in the town of Balcarres the amount is $21,585. I think if the hon. member for Assiniboia had never gone there it would have been just as high as the others. I have had sufficient experience with the farmers of western Canada to know they do not pass up these things. There were meetings held all over the province of Saskatchewan. There was this one at Balcarres and one at Neudorf, addressed by the same gentleman.

Mr. Argue: I was not at Neudorf.

Mr. Gardiner: You must be mistaken.

Mr. Argue: No, I am not mistaken.

Mr. Gardiner: Maybe you were at Dubuc.

Mr. Argue: No, I was not there either.

Mr. Gardiner: You must have been along there somewhere.

Mr. Argue: I was in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend was pretty well around in the province; put it that way. I venture to say that at every point he called the farmers got less service under this plan than did the farmers at any point he stayed away from. That is the thing the farmers are going to remember. They are not going to remember what he has to say on the floor of the house during this debate. They are going to remember the fact that he came there, told them certain things, and they did not take the money out of the bank. The businessmen are going to remember that he came there and told them certain things, and they did not get some of their accounts paid as early as could have happened.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend can laugh himself into good humour if he likes, but there will not be any good humour around when he goes back to these places. Now, that is what the system was intended to do. This system was intended to put cash into the hands of the farmers at the smallest cost to them as soon as possible. This would permit them to pay their accounts or arrange for a line of credit based upon the fact that they had cash and would enable them to do business until they got another crop or until they were able to put some of the grain they already had in the elevators.

This plan was never intended to do more than that. It was not intended to settle all the problems having to do with farming in western Canada. It was not intended to raise the income of farmers down in the province of Nova Scotia. Hon. members get up and quote cash farm income in Canada or quote the net income in Canada and try to tell us this system does not correct that. It never was intended to correct that. It was intended to do exactly the job it is doing. There are many farmers in these areas who can go to the bank and get assistance without this scheme.

This bears out everything that has been said by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, namely that there has been a lot of wheat grown in western Canada in the last five years and there has been a lot of wheat sold, but that does not eliminate the fact that farmers here and there require some kind of assistance to get cash in their hands in order to pay their accounts now rather than wait until next spring or next fall. The business of the country is continuing to be done.

Those are the facts. I do not think one needs to expand upon them very much in order to indicate that this measure ought to be allowed to go through just as rapidly as it can be got through. I do not say that because it is going to help anyone particularly now. The business is being carried on just the same as it would be if this were passed. I am not going to argue that it is otherwise. But I am going to tell my hon. friends that if they had got away with the snap vote they took this morning, and if it had had any effect whatever upon this matter so that in the end they had not had any legislation at all, they would be the sorriest group of people going back to western Canada of any who left this house at the end of the session. I am quite sure the people they represent are not going to lose sight of what might have happened to them if my hon. friends had been able to accomplish what they set out to accomplish this morning.

I am not going to take much more time, but I am going to say this. The last speaker from the official opposition did me the kindness of saying that he has some regard for some of the things I say. I just want to say this to him. I have been here quite a few years, but not as many as he has. I do not think that many sessions have gone by when I have not discussed wheat. I have been here just as long as I was in the legislature of Saskatchewan, and I discussed wheat there every year for about 20 years. In that time I, of course, have said a lot of things, many of them under circumstances entirely different from those which exist now. The remarks made then, therefore, cannot apply just in the same way as my remarks do now.

I am going to say to him that this story that has been told here by two or three with regard to the wheat board is not exactly correct. The first wheat board we had was at the end of the first war, and that wheat board was done away with by the official opposition which became the government under Mr. Meighen. There was a very strong agitation in all the years from then until 1930 to get the wheat board back. In the meantime we had the wheat pools organized.

It is quite true that Mr. Bennett introduced a bill in 1935 to set up a wheat board. He had the greatest majority in this house that had ever been behind any government up to that time. He introduced a bill which provided for doing exactly what we are doing now. Well, Mr. Ralston, representing the Liberal party of that day in opposition, opposed it. He said we ought to set up a system under which we would have the right to deliver either to the wheat board or to the trade. Mr. Bennett could not get his bill through the house despite his large following. He withdrew the bill, appointed himself chairman of a committee, put Mr. Ralston on the committee with three others, and they drafted a new bill. The new bill was the one we had to put into effect when we came into office.

I quite agree that the Liberal party was responsible for that bill having been redrafted by putting up opposition to the former one; but I point out that the government could have put the first bill through if they had wished to. They did not wish to put it through. They had enough support on their own side of the house to put it through; but they put through a bill which gave a choice to the farmer either to deliver to the wheat board or to the trade.

It carried on in that way past the year 1938 to which my hon. friend from Rosetown-Biggar referred, when an amendment was moved and Mr. Motherwell rose in his place and opposed it, because it said that under certain circumstances the farmer could not deliver his wheat to the wheat board. But that is not the big question or the big point that we come to. The time of real choice was in 1943. In that year, in the middle of the war, every elevator company in Canada, including the wheat pools, came here and appeared before a committee of the cabinet, of which I was a member. In that committee they asked us to take over all the wheat that had been delivered to them and that had been paid for by them, and to take it over at the price of wheat that day, namely approximately $1.25 a bushel. We agreed to take it all over on one condition, that another pile of wheat would not be built up by the same elevator companies between then and the end of the war that we would have to compete with in selling our wheat.

That was the beginning of the compulsory board as it had been brought in first by Mr. Bennett, in 1935. The wheat board bought all the wheat; and having bought all the wheat we said that the farmer must now deliver all the wheat to the wheat board so that a second pile would not be built up to come in competition with the wheat that was being sold, and that system has been carried on since.

I just wish to say the farmers in western Canada are agreed that this is the best system they have had. What the Minister of Trade and Commerce said the other day was that some newspapers—one of them was read a few moments ago, published by exactly the same people who publish the Free Press, or which up to that time was published by the same people; now it is being published by another branch of the same family—were opposed to the wheat board. If anyone thinks they are not still opposed to it, all they need do is come to my office and I will show them a letter I received within the last few weeks in which they say they were always opposed to the wheat board, they are still opposed to it, and they will always be opposed to it.

Well, if anyone wants anything clearer than that, I do not know what it would be. What my friends have been doing during the last few days is this. They have been reading one editorial after another from those papers telling this house what the government ought to do. Well, if they can interpret that in any other way than that they are behind the strongest organization in this country that opposes the wheat board, I should like to have it interpreted for me, because I cannot understand it in any other way.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on this resolution before the debate closes. I listened very carefully to what the Minister of Agriculture had to say. He is always a very good debater. Unless you watch yourself very carefully he can almost make you believe that black is white. I admire him for that, and I always derive a great deal of pleasure from listening to him.

It seemed to me, Mr. Chairman, the minister overemphasized one point most clearly, namely that there was a great need throughout western Canada to have financial assistance rendered to farmers at the present time. The minister nods his head. But the other day the Minister of Trade and Commerce said that was not so. He said there were only comparatively few people who wanted this legislation. I think the two ministers should get together and come to some agreement.

Mr. Gardiner: The hon. member had better read our speeches again and we will not have to get together.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I think the past has proven that you should sit a little closer together. Mind you, I think the Minister of Agriculture expresses the views of western agriculture a little bit more exactly than does the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It has always seemed to me that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was not as closely associated with western agriculture as he might be.

The Minister of Agriculture did emphasize the dire necessity that agriculture finds itself in at this time. He says that the legislation which is now put forward is meant to meet that need. None of us in this house has argued against the fact that the farmers of western Canada are in need of assistance. One of our contentions has been that the way in which this assistance has been rendered is not the way in which it should have been given, and it is not the way in which the majority of the people in western Canada, farmers and other organizations as well, chambers of commerce and so on, want it to be done. They have all asked that it be done through advances.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce, and apparently the Minister of Agriculture, say there is a great difference between advances and loans. The only difference I can see is that farmers would not be required to pay interest charges on advances, or at least they would not be required to pay the tremendous interest charge that is being asked here. On the other hand loans are to be advanced at the maximum rate of interest, namely 5 per cent.

I was happy to learn that the other day one of the outstanding spokesmen for the Liberal party, the one who was on television the other day—I was glad he was not fired at in person but just his image; therefore he is still in a position to know what the people of western Canada are thinking—had this to say. Let me quote his words. When he spoke on this very legislation the other day he talked about advances. To my way of thinking he was backing up the government's views in regard to this legislation. At that time I asked him if he would differentiate between loans and advances. This is what he said, as reported at page 629 of Hansard:

> Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Are you differentiating between advances and loans?
> Mr. Tucker: Advances are exactly the same as loans.
> Mr. Johnston (Bow River): The minister does not agree with that. He says everybody who asks for advances is a saboteur of the wheat board.
> Mr. Tucker: I am dealing with the question as I see it. The minister makes his own speeches. If my hon. friend thinks I have always got to agree with the minister, he is mistaken.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

I am glad he put that on the record. I am glad he does not agree with the minister in this regard. I am glad he does not agree with the Minister of Agriculture, either. I noticed that in his argument a few minutes ago the Minister of Agriculture never said one word against advances.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, if I did not, I made it as plain as I could that an advance would cost the farmer two or three times as much as a loan from the bank. That is what I intended to say. I do not think there is anything particularly wrong with an advance, but I did say why it would cost the farmer more to do this job in that way than it would to do it as it is being done.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I am sure this committee would be very interested to hear the minister explain that very point before this debate closes. How can he think for a moment that it would be more costly to issue advances than it would be to make loans at 5 per cent? I cannot understand it.

Mr. Gardiner: I explained it. There is a system of banks built up right across this country that can do this at as low a cost as it can be done. If you started to build up another system just to take care of it for six months the cost would be so high that you could not possibly compare it with the 5 per cent. It would be nearer 20 per cent.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I would not believe that for one moment, because I do not think it is the fact. When it comes to the banks lending money at 5 per cent you can be assured there is a good profit in it. The other day when I spoke, and also when the hon. member for Acadia spoke, we both indicated that we had borrowed money, and that he and I had borrowed money from the banks at less than 5 per cent interest on a government guarantee. Our government guarantee was a bond. Who is behind the bond if it is not the federal government? And when we come now to give the banks a government guarantee for these loans at 5 per cent they are getting one of the best guarantees that exist. If they could lend us money as individuals at less than 5 per cent on the backing of this federal government they could surely lend money to the farmers on a government guarantee. There are other arguments as well.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend paid for the bonds; he did not go to borrow money from the government.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): That does not make any difference. Let us not try to draw any red herrings across the road such as the Minister of Trade and Commerce was speaking of a while ago when he said they were all dead. I was out in Saskatchewan and I saw one of the herrings the Minister of Trade and Commerce was speaking of printed on a sign nailed to a post. The sign read, "Vote for the Liberals and get hooked like we did". Let us not get these things confused.

I am saying that when I borrowed money I had a government guarantee. The guarantee I had was that the government of Canada was behind that bond. What is the difference between that and these loans made to the farmers, when the government say they are standing solidly behind them?

I was told just a while ago, Mr. Chairman, that one Alberta wheat pool is borrowing money from the chartered banks at less than 5 per cent interest, and they have not the guarantee of the Canadian government behind them. They have not as good a guarantee as that which we are talking about. When the Minister of Agriculture stands up and says it would be more costly to make advances rather than loans I just cannot believe that for one moment—

Mr. Gardiner: Do you want to hear what I really say about it?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Are you asking me now to forget what you did say?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gardiner: No, I am going to answer exactly what you are saying. You say the wheat pool can borrow money at 3½ per cent—

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I did not say that.

Mr. Gardiner: You said something like that.

An hon. Member: He said less than 5 per cent.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I think 3½ per cent was the rate, but I did not say that.

Mr. Argue: Last year the rate was 3½ per cent.

Mr. Gardiner: It has been said, too that you can borrow money for pipe lines at 3 or 3½ per cent.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Yes.

Mr. Gardiner: Of course, one is a loan to a farmer and one is a loan to the pools, and this rate can be charged because the loan to the pool is in millions of dollars at a time. It does not cost nearly as much to put out millions in a block as it does to put out $600 to each farmer across the country. The cost of putting out small loans is not comparable with the cost of making a loan amounting to millions of dollars to any organization whether it is for a railway or a pipe line or a farmers' pool or whatever it might be. It is always cheaper to get money under those circumstances.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I just got through indicating to the minister that we as individuals got it for less than 5 per cent. It does not make any difference so far as the cost is concerned whether the transaction is written in the books of the bank as $50, $100 or $5,000; there is no more cost attached to it. I will admit immediately that there is a greater cost when there is a greater number of cases, but that cost is infinitesimal.

The other day I put on the record the profits of some of the banks, and of two of them in particular. According to their balance sheets they are not in as much need as the farmers who are suffering because of the policy of this government. The farmers are not to blame; it is the policy of this government.

Let us examine what the Minister of Trade and Commerce said the other day, when he implied that there was not too much need in Canada for this sort of thing, and that this resolution was designed to help only the few who are in need. I want to put on the record some statistics that will indicate the position of agriculture. I believe I should just speak for my own province of Alberta. The Albertan of Tuesday, October 18, 1955 carried an article entitled "Farm Income Drops", which says:

> Edmonton—Farm income in Alberta was nearly $3,000,000 lower during the first eight months of this year than in the same period of 1954, the provincial bureau of statistics reported Monday.

I have just dealt with the province of Alberta, but we can see that a number of people in that province are in need of assistance. I believe we settled that once and for all when the Minister of Agriculture recently rose and said there was great need, and I suggest we can disregard what the Minister of Trade and Commerce said in that respect.

This same trend is indicated by the dominion bureau of statistics. According to the bureau the net farm income for agriculture in western Canada in 1951 was $1,127 million. In 1952 it was $1,082 million. In 1953 it was $884 million and in 1954 it was $376 million. That, Mr. Chairman, relates to the western provinces.

Let us now look at the farm income for all of Canada. In 1951 it was $2,154·5 million and in 1954 it was $1,125·6 million, representing a difference of about $1 billion. If we look at the figure for western Canada for 1951 we see that it was $1,127 million and for 1954 it was $376 million, which represents a difference of $751 million. This relates to the three western provinces. If we compare the two figures we find a difference of $249 million. The sum of $249 million would represent the loss in agricultural income in all the rest of Canada, seven provinces, while during the same period the three western provinces lost the sum of $751 million.

This, too, contradicts what the Minister of Trade and Commerce said the other day in regard to the income of western farmers. Therefore when we look at this problem squarely in the face we must recognize it as a situation requiring an emergency measure. The remarks of those hon. members who have endeavoured to belittle the fact that western agriculture is really in need should not be given too much consideration.

I wish to deal again with the question of advances and loans. The Minister of Trade and Commerce in his speech the other day is reported at page 127 of Hansard as having said the following, and I had better read his words because I do not want to misquote him:

> Recently there has been a great drive for advances on farm-stored grain. The suggestion has been for three-quarters of the value of the grain to be advanced by the wheat board. Many hon. members may think that the inspiration for that suggestion came from the farms. I can assure you there has been nothing of the kind. It came from the cities. If I had time, I could quote chapter and verse to that effect. Who are its supporters? The supporters are the enemies of marketing through the wheat board.

I want you to notice, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is endeavouring to belittle all those organizations in western Canada which dared advocate advances. In a moment I shall read a list of some of those people who have advocated those things.

As I indicated when I was speaking on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, I attended a large number of meetings in my constituency before coming east last fall. These were not meetings which I called; I did not call one of them. They were called as protest meetings, not because the people of my constituency desired to call protest meetings but because those people were in dire need of assistance and something had to be done to help them. There were U.F.A. meetings called and there were meetings called by chambers of commerce. Those were not farmers' meetings, and those groups certainly could not be classed as saboteurs of the wheat board.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, is my hon. friend aware that the chambers of commerce of Canada pass a resolution each year asking for the abolition of the wheat board?

Mr. Quelch: Not in western Canada.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I am speaking of western Canada. On October 11, 1955, a delegation was sent to the government of Canada concerning the urgent need for cash advances on farm-stored grain in western Canada. Let me read to you the names of those people whom the minister is now saying are saboteurs of the wheat board. As a matter of fact these are the very people who have advocated most strongly for the inception and the continuation of the Canadian wheat board. For anybody to stand up here in the house and say that most of the members from western Canada, and that all these organizations who have sent protests to the minister asking for cash advances and not for loans are saboteurs of the wheat board is stretching one's imagination pretty far. Even the Minister of Agriculture does not agree with his colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Here are the organizations who signed this submission:

> Alberta department of agriculture
> Manitoba department of agriculture
> Saskatchewan department of agriculture
> Saskatchewan wheat pool
> Manitoba farmers union
> United Grain Growers

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, no.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Yes, yes.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The United Grain Growers voted against advances through elevator agents.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): You just write to these people who sent the minister and the Prime Minister this submission. If I can read correctly it says:

> Manitoba farmers union

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Not the United Grain Growers.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): The United Grain Growers. Their name is right here.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): You will have to argue with the United Grain Growers, not with me. Here are the other names:

> Saskatchewan federation of agriculture
> Manitoba federation of agriculture and co-operation
> Alberta federation of agriculture
> Saskatchewan farmers union
> Alberta wheat pool
> Interprovincial farm union council
> Alberta farmers union
> Manitoba wheat pool

It is said that all these are saboteurs of the wheat board. How ridiculous can we get in this house? I am not saying that in any disrespectful way, and I do not want the minister to think I am doing that. I am simply pointing out how ridiculous it is to suggest, as the minister did the other day in this house, that those who are asking for advances are saboteurs of the wheat board. If the minister wants to say something I shall be glad to have him do so.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I just want to know what document it is that these people signed.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): This is a submission to the government of Canada respecting the urgent need for cash advances on farm-stored grain in western Canada. It was presented by those whose names I read to you. I will send it over to the minister so he can have a look at it. It says "Respectfully submitted". Let me read the names of those who signed it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I will accept that document. I take it that this is the brief submitted by the delegation that came to Ottawa to meet the cabinet, is that correct?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): It is dated October 11, 1955.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I can tell you that several people in that delegation representing organizations you have referred to advised the government against the case you are advocating. You are misrepresenting what the document says.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Are you implying that the people who submitted this to you spoke against it?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes.

Mr. Blackmore: Double-crossed.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I would say that in my judgment those are most respectable organizations.

Mr. Gardiner: I was there and heard what was said. The reason they gave for bringing 20 delegates was that they could not bring a smaller number and represent the views of all.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): So they brought some who did not mean what they said?

Mr. Gardiner: They brought 20 to express their views.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I had better read the names of those who submitted this, just in case there should be any doubt about it. They say "Respectfully submitted" but it is doubtful whether it was received so respectfully, because the minister has indicated that some of those who submitted this told him afterward they did not believe what was in it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It was not afterward.

Mr. Gardiner: It was right at the time.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I will read who submitted it respectfully:

Alberta department of agriculture
Manitoba department of agriculture
Saskatchewan department of agriculture
Saskatchewan wheat pool
Manitoba farmers' union
United Grain Growers
Saskatchewan federation of agriculture
Manitoba federation of agriculture and co-operation
Alberta federation of agriculture
Saskatchewan farmers' union
Alberta wheat pool
Interprovincial farm union council
Alberta farmers' union
Manitoba wheat pool

Let us see whether they meant it or not. I take it that they did. The minister will have to answer to them if he says that someone told him they did not really mean what was in this. This is what they asked; this is the resolution which was passed:

Be it resolved that the organizations participating in this conference urge the government of Canada to make immediate provision for advances to farmers on grain in store on the farm and further that these advances should be up to one-half the value of the normal delivery expected and should be repayable on the basis of one-half of the value of each delivery made by the farmer.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is exactly what we did.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): That is exactly what you did not do. Had you done that there would not have been all this argument. There would not have been any difference between me and the minister.

Mr. Gardiner: May I ask my hon. friend a question? Has he read the report which Mr. Hanson, the president of the farmers' union of Saskatchewan, made when he got back to Saskatchewan?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Is it different from that?

Mr. Gardiner: It is certainly different from what you are saying.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I am reading the resolution, and if you are contradicting that you will have to take it up with them. In the second paragraph of the resolution they say:

While the principle of cash advances—

That is not loans. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has said that is what the government did, that he has complied with the wishes of these people.

An hon. Member: Does it say "not loans" there?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I have not the time to go over and educate the hon. member as to the difference between loans and cash advances.

Mr. Byrne: I am only asking you to read it.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Go to the hon. member for Rosthern. I would advise the hon. member to get a television set; it might get a little bit more personal. Let me read the second paragraph of this, which says:

> While the principle of cash advances on farm-stored grain was unanimously endorsed—

The United Grain Growers apparently did not disapprove of that.

> —by the organizations present at the conference, various proposals were offered on the mechanics of making these advances.

Mr. Mang: May I ask the hon. member a question? From the hon. member's reading of that resolution I did not hear that it specified advances through the wheat board or through the elevator companies. Did it specify them through those channels?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I do not care how you make them. These people were not concerned with the details; what they wanted was the principle.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): What I am asking for is that advances be made. If they are made through the wheat board then the federal government must pay the interest charges. After all, the farmers complied with requests made by the government, particularly during wartime, to increase production. At that time the Minister of Agriculture promised that if the farmers would do that he would see to it that they would sustain no loss in the days to come. The fact is that they lost between $300 and $400 million, and then the Minister of Trade and Commerce reluctantly gave them $65 million in settlement of those losses. That is how this government has lived up to its obligations.

One of the main bones of contention in western Canada is the tremendous interest rate being charged. I submit that it is a tremendous interest rate. That is what is causing the uproar more than anything else. That is the great difference between making loans through the chartered banks and having advances made. There is no organization that I know of that came out and asked for 5 per cent interest rates, yet the Minister of Trade and Commerce says that he went to western Canada to see what the need was and after hearing all these representations he decided that they wanted loans at 5 per cent.

Mr. Gardiner: Did I say that?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I doubt if any organization ever asked the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Trade and Commerce for loans at 5 per cent. Will the minister answer that question?

[Mr. Johnston (Bow River).]

Mr. Gardiner: I was just asking you when I said it.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I said I doubted if ever anyone asked you for that. Of course you did not go out on those visits with the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Gardiner: I always live on my farm for two to two and a half months every summer, and I was out there from the middle of July to the end of September. I heard those discussions.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): You should get around and meet the people and not stay on your farm in between sessions. The rest of us try to get out and meet the people and find out what is going on.

Mr. Gardiner: About the only place I stayed away from was the by-election in Alberta.

An hon. Member: You lost out on that one.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): While we are speaking of this interest charge, Mr. Chairman, may I indicate to you what the Minister of Trade and Commerce had to say about this matter as reported at page 127 of Hansard, this is what he said:

> It has been said that the interest rate is too high at 5 per cent. I have been a borrower from banks all my life, and I have never yet succeeded in borrowing money from a bank at less than 5 per cent . . . I therefore cannot be too greatly concerned about objections—

So he did receive objections.

An hon. Member: But he is not concerned.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): He said:

> I therefore cannot be too greatly concerned about objections to guaranteed loans bearing an interest rate of 5 per cent.

Yet almost every organization in western Canada had sent a brief to the minister or had sent representations here, and protest meetings were held throughout the west by farmers' and other organizations. The minister disregards these things and he says, "I cannot be too greatly concerned about them".

Mr. Gardiner: I was not listening. Is the hon. member quoting me?

Mr. Quelch: No. He is quoting your colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Does the minister object to that, too? I should not be surprised if the Minister of Agriculture objected to that because I would certainly object to it if I were he.

Mr. Gardiner: I may answer your suggestion by saying this. In the 40 years I have been in politics I have listened to everything that everybody has had to say and then I have tried to arrive at a reasonable conclusion as to what ought to be done, using my own intelligence along with what they had to say.

Mr. Knowles: You are the sum of all you have met.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I wish the Minister of Agriculture could sit a little bit closer to the Minister of Trade and Commerce so he could inject some of those ideas into him. If he could succeed in doing that he might improve the situation a little bit. A while ago the Minister of Agriculture was pointing out that in western Canada there was a need for these loans. But as to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, while he admitted that there was a slight need and that we were putting this legislation through for those few who were in necessitous circumstances, this is exactly what he said as reported at page 129 of Hansard:

> Apart from that,—

And "that" refers to the storage price.

> —it did not seem to me that there was any particular burden on the farmer through this condition of plenty.

If I may interpret that statement, I would say this. Apart from that, it did not seem to him that there was any particular burden on the farmer through the condition of surplus. I think that would be a fair interpretation of that statement. Yet the Minister of Agriculture disagrees with him strongly, as does almost everyone in western Canada. They disagree with him so strongly that they have protested in every way possible. It seems to me that the minister should have been fair enough, after hearing all these representations almost without exception asking for advances interest free, or if there should happen to be an interest rate, that it should not be more than 2 per cent.

That could have been done, and the banks could have done it if he had wanted to do it through the banks. They could have done it for at least 2 per cent or 2½ per cent or 3 per cent. As I pointed out the other day, the province of Alberta made loans to their municipalities at 2 per cent, and they did not have the guarantee of the dominion government behind them. They never lost one penny on the loans. Surely if the provincial government can do that with their limited means of getting money, then the federal government with almost unlimited means should be able to equal the provincial government in that regard.

I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that while we as Social Crediters strongly object to this legislation—and we have tried our best and in no uncertain terms to convince the government that it is wrong and that it should change its policy—we realize the necessity, as does the Minister of Agriculture and as do the farmers in western Canada who need some assistance. We therefore intend to support this legislation, knowing at the same time that it falls far short of meeting the requirements or what was asked for by the farmers of western Canada and the various organizations there.

Just let me close by saying that I believe the federal government never intended that these loans would be of much use. The minister said he was basing his calculations on the 1951 loan, and in 1951 only 1,500 farmers accepted that assistance and there was a total lending of $625,000. That was because the interest rate was too high. Now over 2,000 farmers have asked for loans and they have borrowed over $2 million. In conclusion let me draw this inference. I believe that the minister never intended these loans to be used except in dire necessity, for this is what he had to say in Calgary on November 28:

> It is my hope and belief that comparatively limited use will be made of the lending facilities, that most farmers are either in a position to carry on without borrowing, or are in a position to finance in the ordinary way.

He never intended that they should use this legislation.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I have a question that I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture arising out of his remarks a few moments ago. Do I understand that the banks are revealing to the minister's staff the names of those who are borrowing under this act?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can answer that question. The government, being guarantor of the loans, is entitled to know the amount of its liability. That information is furnished to us. I can say that at the end of the year about 8,000 farmers had borrowed about $7 million, an average of about $800 a loan. The names are not given and they are not requested.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): It is necessary for me to square that answer with the comment made by the Minister of Agriculture when he said he knew who borrowed the first loan in a certain place. I want to know how he knew who that individual was.

Mr. Gardiner: I read it from this slip that is in my hand.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): What is that slip?

Mr. Gardiner: It was supplied from the community where the discussion took place.

But in fairness to the individual I think I should ask permission of the committee to strike the name out of Hansard if it appears.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I am not satisfied with that answer. There is a serious principle involved here. Apparently the banks, in certain instances, are revealing to the agents of the minister the names of those who are borrowing under this act. Otherwise there is no way in which he could have known who had obtained the first loan.

Mr. Gardiner: No. It was a matter of discussion at a public meeting before 200 people. I had a discussion with this gentleman there. The first day loans were available he went in to get the loan. He told us he could not get it. He appealed to me to help him get it. I advised him to apply later when the regulations were adjusted. It was stated at the meeting by an official of the farmers union he would likely get the loan. It was stated later that he got it.

Mr. Ellis: How do you know he was the first?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Macleod.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to make an extended speech, but I should like to ask the minister a question. Did he receive representations from any other lending institutions asking the same guarantees as this legislation is going to give the banks? If so, what was the particular reason for refusing to grant that same protection?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, there was a request from—is it the credit unions of Alberta?

Mr. Hansell: If I may help the minister, it was from the government of Alberta through its treasury branch.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The difficulty was that we wanted the protection of the federal Bank Act. We could not obtain that if we used any institution other than the chartered banks. We were advised by our legal staff that the loans should be confined to chartered banks, and that course was followed.

Mr. Hansell: I should like the minister to explain what he means by saying that they wanted the protection of the Bank Act. Does he mean the present government wanted the protection of the Bank Act?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is correct.

Mr. Hansell: I wish he would elaborate on that a bit, because I do not understand how the government could have the protection of the Bank Act. As I see it, the position is this. The Alberta government asked for the same guarantees that were given to the chartered banks. Whether there is any legal complication involved I do not know, but I would suggest that the refusal to grant the Alberta government the same guarantees would indicate that the chartered banks are in a better position than the Alberta government, and I do not believe that is so.

Then there is a further remark I wish to make. I do not know whether or not the Alberta government through its treasury branches would have lent money at a rate of interest less than 5 per cent. However, it is conceivable that they could have done so, and it is conceivable that other lending institutions might have been able to lend money to the farmers in this emergency period for less than 5 per cent. I cannot bring myself to believe that the minister and the government were not aware of that, and I do not understand why they insisted that guarantees be given to the chartered banks at 5 per cent whether or not the farmer could get money at a lower rate of interest from other reputable institutions. I doubt whether there is an institution in a sounder financial position than the government of Alberta.

These are the observations I wish to make. If there was another way of granting loans to the farmers at less than 5 per cent, why did the government not seek that way and attempt to alleviate the condition of the farmers to the extent of a reduced interest charge?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The guaranteed loans represent a comparatively small part of the loans that have been made against farmers' wheat. I understand that about $7 million has been lent under guarantees, and that close to $70 million has been lent by the chartered banks in western Canada. What interest they have charged on loans that are not guaranteed I do not know. I am perfectly sure that the government of Alberta is also lending money to farmers, and it is quite possible that my hon. friend is correct in saying that they lend at less than 5 per cent. I hope so. If that is the case, the farmers of the province of Alberta have the benefit.

However, the Bank Act is an act passed by this parliament. The guarantee is a guarantee given by this parliament. Therefore it was felt that the guarantee could only be given for loans through banks operating under the legislation of this parliament.

Mr. Castleden: Mr. Chairman, I believe it is a very fine thing that the debate on this issue has stirred the house to the extent it has today. I think it emphasizes the fact that serious injustice is being suffered by the people of the prairie provinces, and that the members representing those areas are energetic, emphatic and determined in their efforts to bring this matter to the attention of the house in the hope that the government will do something about it.

Dealing with the situation in the few minutes I have left, I should like to start by saying we should all realize that the people of the prairie provinces, who form the backbone of the economy of those provinces, have suffered very severely not just this year but for a number of years. Some very excellent figures are available from the dominion bureau of statistics which show the terrific decline in net farm income. In 1952 net farm income in the province of Saskatchewan was approximately $565 million. In 1954, two years later, it had dropped to $126 million, a decrease of about $440 million. That is not gross but net income, and is a drop of about 77 per cent. As far as the farmers of Alberta are concerned, the drop there was about 50 per cent, and in Manitoba it was about 54 per cent. In the other provinces of Canada the worst decline was about 15 per cent.

I maintain that the position of the western farm producer is not understood. In fact it is misrepresented not only by the press of the country but sometimes even in the house. Hon. members should be made aware of the actual situation, which has not been presented properly. I was interested to hear the Minister of Agriculture say this afternoon that he was quite satisfied with what the present bank loan legislation had done. In the light of the position of the producers of the west the provision made does not amount to 10 per cent of what is needed. I would say that it only meets about 5 per cent of the actual and immediate need from which everyone in the west is suffering, not only the agricultural producers but the whole economy.

When these producers found themselves in an almost impossible position, tied hand and foot so they were almost unable to continue in operation, constantly harassed by debt, they needed something more than this and they asked the government for help. They said: We have the assets and we do not ask for a handout. Make it possible for us to realize some cash on the assets we have. We have just harvested one of the largest crops of the best quality grain. You have failed to give us box cars whereby we can deliver it. Our bins are overloaded. For heaven's sake give us advances on grain properly stored in our bins. If that is made possible then we can carry on. Every delegation from the western prairies and every representation made has made it known to the government that this is the minimum required to meet their need.

I should like to call it five o'clock.

Grain

The Chairman: I wonder whether I might crave the indulgence of the committee before rising to make a few remarks with regard to the votes that took place in committee today. This morning several members to my right entered the house while I was reading the question. In the vote in committee this afternoon several members to my left entered the house, I believe, while the count was going on. I do not wish to criticize those members in any way because there was considerable obscurity under the old rule as to the position with regard to entering the house or the committee during a vote. The old rule, as hon. members know, read as follows. It is rule 12 (2):

> When Mr. Speaker is putting a question, no member shall walk out of or across the house, or make any noise or disturbance.

I must admit there was some obscurity in my own mind as well, because this morning I had forgotten that the rules committee and the house had changed rule 12 (2) to include the word "enter", so that the new rule now reads as follows:

> When Mr. Speaker is putting a question, no member shall enter, walk out of or across the house, or make any noise or disturbance.

I was, therefore, inaccurate this morning when I said that while I was reading the question any hon. members who wished might have the right to enter the house. Under these circumstances I intend to say no more about the votes, and I think it might be fair and impartial to allow them to stand as previously recorded.

I have this suggestion to make, however, which would be, I think, of guidance to members and would certainly be of assistance to the deputy chairman and myself. It is this. When putting a vote in committee, just before the question I think I might say, "The question is the following", and at that juncture hon. members might kindly take it that the question is being put and refrain from entering the house. If this suggestion meets with favour, I think it would guide all hon. members and give us, shall I call it, a cut-off point at which hon. members would feel free to enter the committee or feel that they must remain behind the curtain.

I will say nothing more about it at this time, but I do feel that suggestion might prove of assistance in the future.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Applewhaite of the committee of the whole reports that the committee has considered a certain resolution, has been directed to report progress, and asks leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR HEARING OF CORPORATION APPEALS IN PUBLIC

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved the second reading of Bill No. 10, to amend the Income Tax Act (corporation appeals).

He said: This bill, Mr. Speaker, is a companion one to the bill which was debated and voted upon in the house yesterday. The arguments for and against Bill No. 9 of yesterday are substantially the same arguments that would be used for or against Bill No. 10 which is now before the house. It is not my intention, therefore, to speak more than a moment or two in presenting this bill to the house. I present it despite yesterday's defeat of Bill No. 9 in order to give hon. members who may have repented of their action of yesterday an opportunity to redeem themselves by voting today for the lifting of the iron curtain of secrecy with respect to corporation income tax matters, at least to some extent.

Whereas yesterday's bill dealt generally with corporation income tax returns, today's bill deals only with the hearing of corporation appeals before the income tax appeal board. At the present time there is a subsection in the Income Tax Act, subsection 2 of section 92, which reads as follows:

> An appeal may, in the discretion of the board, the chairman, the assistant chairman or hearing officer, as the case may be, be heard in camera or in public unless the appellant requests that it be heard in camera in which case it shall be so heard.

My amendment would simply add these words, "provided that if the appellant is a corporation the appeal shall be heard in public." In other words, just as yesterday we in this group took the view that corporation income tax matters are of public concern, and that the information in corporation income tax returns should be available to parliament, so today we take the view that corporation appeals to the income tax appeal board should be heard in public and not in camera.

As was the case yesterday, this bill leaves the matter of personal income tax appeals as they have been in the legislation. I remind hon. members, particularly those to my right in the Progressive Conservative party, of how anxious they were last year to get information as to who was the appellant in case No. 227 which was heard before the income tax appeal board. The question in that hearing revolved around the desire of a corporation to get income tax deductibility for money which it had spent entertaining certain government people—we do not know what government—in an attempt to win contracts from that particular government. I remind my friends to my right that they were just as annoyed as we were that the information as to who that appellant was could not be obtained. This is their opportunity to say that hearings of that kind should not be held in camera but would have to be held in public.

So, Mr. Speaker, rather than give the house again all the arguments for this bill, since they were given yesterday in support of Bill No. 9, I rest the case on the basis of yesterday's arguments and the additional remarks I have just made. I urge hon. members to take this opportunity to vote for a lifting, in part, of the iron curtain of secrecy with respect to corporation income tax matters.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): I am not going to make a speech at all, Mr. Speaker, I am just rising to say that the same arguments which were used against favouring the bill yesterday are the ones we use today. The principle of this bill is the same as the principle involved in the bill that was before the house yesterday. I need say no more. The same arguments apply to this bill that applied to the other one.

Mr. Knowles: Don't you believe in repentance?

Mr. Hansell: Not in this respect.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I might say just a word. As the sponsor of this bill has stated, we had a rather extensive debate yesterday on something very close in principle to the principle related to this bill, and I think the house expressed itself yesterday. I assume that it will express itself in the same way today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Small Loans Act

SMALL LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR A REDUCTION IN RATE OF INTEREST

The house resumed, from Friday, January 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Argue for the second reading of Bill No. 3, to amend the Small Loans Act.

Mr. Elmore Philpott (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in the last couple of days we have had a great many debates on what we might call these hardy perennials which seem to spring up year after year from the opposition benches. I must say, however, that I am doubly astonished that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) should have raised this particular question again this year. What do they want, jam on it?

An hon. Member: Sure.

An hon. Member: Don't forget the cream.

Mr. Philpott: When we talk about the welfare state we can go right down the list of welfare provisions which have been enacted by this government; old age pensions, unemployment insurance and the best system of family allowances in the whole world. This year, if you please, we have the announcement of national health insurance which is going to cost the taxpayers of this country plenty of money.

Just on this point, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that every hon. member from British Columbia, regardless of his party, will be extremely pleased that our province of British Columbia, by the announcement of the government today, has the honour of being the first province to announce its intention to come into the national health insurance scheme. Once again British Columbia lives up to its reputation.

I want to say to my friend the hon. member for Assiniboia, has he really no sense of responsibility—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. MacDougall: None.

Mr. Philpott: Is it possible, Mr. Speaker, to suggest increases in these allowances year after year without regard to the kind of taxation that will be required to pay for them and without regard to who is going to pay the extra taxes?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I ask the hon. member what he thinks he is speaking to, if he knows?

Mr. Coldwell: I think the hon. gentleman is speaking on the wrong bill.

An hon. Member: You are doing a good job; keep going.

An hon. Member: There is no difference.

Mr. Churchill: This has been a bad week.

Mr. Philpott: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to admit that in this particular case I am perhaps one jump ahead of the hon. member for Assiniboia, because I thought we were on the resolution for an increase in family allowances.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Put him in the Senate.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker—

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Harris: Please proceed.

Mr. Drew: Go on.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I am quite certain the Leader of the Opposition will regret his generosity in a moment, but if he will not take my courtesy in the way I mean it I have to do what I intended to do; namely, point out again to the house that a year ago in response to a motion of this kind we did say that we would introduce legislation with respect to the Small Loans Act. We said that in the speech from the throne, and the bill has been presented to the Clerk of the house this afternoon.

Under these circumstances, and having in mind the rules of the house which prevent us from coming to an affirmative decision one way or another on this bill, or if we do, preclude us from considering the other, I therefore move the adjournment of this debate.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Harris) which was agreed to on the following division:

GRAIN

PROVISION FOR GUARANTEE OF BANK LOANS TO PRODUCERS IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Howe (Port Arthur)—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide, by way of a guarantee for bank loans made on or after the 15th day of November, 1955, and before the 1st day of June, 1956, for short-term credit to grain producers in the prairie provinces to meet temporary financial difficulties arising from inability to deliver their grain; to provide also that the governor in council may extend the application of the act to cover loans made before the 1st day of June, 1957; and to provide further that any amount paid to a bank under the act be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Castleden: Before time was called at five o'clock, Mr. Chairman, I was referring to the matter before the house under this resolution, and I was outlining why we were opposing this resolution, what the position of the producer was, what his requests were, why they were made, the government's offer, and what we think should be done.

This being assistance to the western grain producer, an opportunity to borrow money from the banks with the government guaranteeing those loans, people will wonder why it should not be considered as something of value. It is admitted that perhaps it is of a little bit of value. A 5 per cent loan may be a little bit better than a 6 per cent loan. We protest that the whole thing is inadequate and that even the loans, such as they are, will not take care of the situation which exists with respect to the producers there at the present time.

We are opposed to this measure because we think it is impracticable as a means of dealing with the situation. We think it is unjust. We oppose it because we believe it is wrong in principle to ask these people, who are in the position in which they now find themselves because of the actions of this government and the administration of this government—they are tied hand and foot and are unable to move—to go to the banks and make these loans and pay interest at 5 per cent on the money they borrow. This provision is niggardly and completely inadequate in the face of the need that exists, and it is not going to help those who need it most.

The farmers have asked for cash advances. Every organization has let the government know that cash advances are what the farmers need. The farmer with thousands of bushels of good grain in the bins on his farm has an asset. He should be allowed to deliver it. He is not allowed to deliver it because box cars are not available. There is some space in the elevators but there is not sufficient space to take care of the whole crop. But he says: I will hold this grain. You can, if you wish, come and inspect it, grade it in the bins, arrange to have a padlock placed on the bins if you like, as is done in the United States where similar loans are made. Enter it in my permit book against any deliveries which might be made in future; let them know that you have allowed me to have the money in advance for the assets which I have. As soon as I am permitted to deliver, you can deduct from my deliveries those advances which you have made. Surely such a request is not out of line with what should be granted. It is a relief to the farmer. It would be a relief to the whole economy.

If the government is responsible for the condition which exists, surely the government should be willing to pay the interest cost. They can get the money much more cheaply than can the farmer. Certainly the farmer does not feel it is right that he should be asked to pay 5 per cent on these advances. I will tell the government this. If they will let the farmer deliver his grain; if they will open the delivery points and get box cars so the farmer can deliver his grain, the farmer will be satisfied. That is all he is asking. Let him deliver. Then there will not be any demand for this kind of legislation. The whole economy is tied up because of lack of cash. Under the circumstances the farmer is surely not asking for something that is not right.

I find it difficult to convince people in this part of Canada of the situation that exists. I am surprised at the lack of knowledge on the part of people in the east with respect to the actual situation. The misunderstanding of the farmers' plight in the west, in my opinion, often stems from reports that appear in the papers about the condition of the farmers in the west.

I should like to give an indication of the kind of thing that I find in newspapers in the east which is a misrepresentation of the case. The other day I ran across an article in the Hamilton Spectator by H. M. Halliwell entitled "Prairie Letter". This is what this person has to say about the case of the western farmer:

> Just who is this fellow, the wheat farmer and what is his case against the rest of the country that he feels he should be helped? Well, he's a man of many parts. He's a big operator on, say, two sections of land or more, all paid for. He has a full line of implements, probably a house in the nearest town or city where he spends part of the winter if he doesn't go south or west, and he probably has 20, 30 or 40 thousand bushels of wheat in his bins to borrow money on if he can't sell it or protect him against crop failure.

This portrayal of the situation is entirely wrong. I remember a cartoon in one of the Ontario papers last year at the time we were suggesting that the situation of the prairie farmer was getting desperate because of the drop in net farm income and the constantly increasing cost of operation. We said that the first thing the government knew the farmers of the west would be marching on Ottawa. The cartoon that appeared in the paper showed the western farmers marching on Ottawa with the parliament buildings in the background and a wide roadway in front. The roadway was lined with Cadillac cars and the western farmer was depicted with a ten gallon hat and a big cigar in his mouth. On the side of the cars were signs saying that on his way back from Florida he was marching on Ottawa to ask for help.

These are the kind of things that give an entirely wrong impression of the actual situation. Do the people of the east realize that the net income of farmers in the province of Saskatchewan alone has dropped by 77 per cent since 1952? It is true that in odd cases money was made in some areas of the province a few years ago when farmers picked up tracts of land cheaply and planted a crop, but that does not represent the average position. That is not the condition of the farmers today. With that kind of drop in their income something must be done. Surely any fair-minded person in the house will realize that a situation exists which requires action, and that is what we are asking now.

The request of the farmers was for cash advances. The misunderstanding of the farmers' position is, unfortunately, aggravated sometimes by statements made by cabinet ministers and sometimes by people representing the west who came down here. You will see reports in the newspapers that the farmers of the west were never so well off in their lives and never had it so good. That condition may have existed three years ago. Today the average farmer on the prairies is in desperate circumstances, and that is why he is protesting.

The reason the farmers of the west are opposed to the proposal of bank loans at 5 per cent is that such a provision is inadequate. When loans were first proposed he was told that this was a great solution, and that he was going to be allowed to borrow money from the bank. Some farmers have to travel 40, 50 or even 60 miles to get to a bank. I talked to one farmer who went to the bank. A number of people were lined up ahead of him and he had to wait for three hours in the bankers' outer office before he could see him.

When he did get in he had to fill out a loan application form. The name of the bank has to be filled in and the farmer has to give a complete report almost the same as in his permit book. He has to give particulars of land owned and land rented from others. He has to estimate the quantity of grain that will be available. At the bottom of the form there is this provision:

> In order to qualify for guarantee the amount of the loan must not exceed one-half the dollar amount inserted in paragraph 5 or $1,500, whichever is less . . .

He has to make all these entries that are made in his permit book. Then he has to make an estimate of his financial worth in accordance with the statement of affairs on the bank's form, and then fill in particulars of all liens or other claims. The bank manager tells me that after an application for a loan is received he has to sign the following certificate at the bottom of the application:

> I hereby certify that I have scrutinized and checked the foregoing application with the care required of me by the bank in the conduct of its ordinary business, and that at the time the loan was made the borrower produced to the bank the above-mentioned permit book for the farm described above and endorsed therein a direction as in form "GB" that one-half of all moneys payable in respect of grain delivered by him or on his behalf under the permit book be paid to the bank until the loan is repaid in full, and that to the best of my knowledge the terms of and conditions in accordance with which the loan was made are such as to qualify it for guarantee by the Minister of Finance.

The bank manager has to sign that certificate. He also informed me that his instructions required him to write to the secretary of the rural municipality in which the producer lived to find out whether there were any tax liens against the property or the grain held there by the farmer. He also had to write to the court house and have a search made to find out whether there was any other lien against the property or the grain. He also had to write to the Bank of Canada branch in Regina to find out whether there were any other encumberances against the farm. He said that it took weeks sometimes to do all this, and that there was great delay.

Not only was the value of the grain held by the farmer reduced by one-half, but the value of any grain which the farmer might have delivered was deducted from the amount of the loan that could be granted. Any arrears of taxes also had to be deducted, as well as any other encumbrances. The result was that the loan a man could receive from the bank amounted to very little. This extra security was required, but the only farmers who could get a sufficient amount to be of any help had to have such an amount of assets in the form of cattle, acreage and so on that they could get a loan from a bank anyway without all this trouble.

I should like to call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

BANFF NATIONAL PARK—TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Motion No. 23—Mr. Johnston (Bow River):

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Speaker, this motion relates to documents and correspondence with regard to two properties in the Banff national park. The first one is the Wheatley property. Expropriation proceedings in that case are now before the Exchequer Court of Canada. The matter is sub judice. The second case involves the anthracite property. There are eight owners and the case of one of the owners is before the Exchequer Court of Canada. It is considered to be a test case. Consequently the whole subject matter is before the courts. I submit that according to Beauchesne, third edition, citation 295, the documents should not be produced. Moreover, it is not in the public interest to produce them.

Mr. Knowles: Anyway, you do not want to do so.

Mr. Speaker: Those who are in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those who are opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

MINISTERIAL ORDER OF JULY 7, 1955

Motion No. 25—Mr. Fulton:

For a copy of the ministerial order of July 7, 1955, authorizing the shipment of Harvard aircraft to Egypt.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, this is probably another occasion where you will be asked to call for the yeas and nays. This motion is repeating the request which was made orally on Thursday by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), as reported on page 787 of Hansard. At that time I explained why we felt the request could not be complied with. It now comes forward in the form of a motion for an order for return which we cannot accept.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, just so that we will understand the situation, are we to take it that there is a ministerial order but that it is the policy of the government not to produce it?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): There was a ministerial decision; I do not know whether it should be called an order.

Mr. Drew: That is what it was called.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): It was called an order, but I would not want the hon. gentleman to get the impression from my answer that it was a formal order recorded in the council minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand that there is agreement as to the dropping of this motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT ON POSITION OF EMBARGO ON ARMS SHIPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Prince Albert asked me this question:

> What is the present position in regard to the embargo which the Prime Minister undertook to impose pending the foreign affairs debate on shipments of aircraft and armaments in general to the Middle East? Has the embargo which was imposed been lifted or is it still in effect? What is the position with regard thereto?

My answer was that the embargo had not been lifted and that the matter was then under consideration. It has been considered, and the embargo is now to be lifted at once. The government intends to continue the policy which has been in force of considering each application for military equipment on its merits and ensuring that if permission is granted it shall, in the future as in the past, be for military equipment of a type and quantity which could not provoke an arms race or provide an incentive to aggression. If the political situation in the area should change in a way which would make inadvisable any shipments of any kind, necessary action to refuse applications or postpone shipments will be taken.

ISRAELI-ARAB BORDERS—PARTICIPATION BY CANADA IN SUPERVISORY FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the government given consideration to any request that Canada supply 500 personnel to an international border supervisory security force for Palestine? If so, has any consideration been given to the transfer of some of the Canadian troops now in West Germany to that international police force to preserve and assure peace in the Middle East?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No, there has been no request sent to Canada for a force of that character, and naturally no such consideration has been given in view of the fact that no request has been made.

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce what is delaying the tabling of the annual report under the Export and Import Permits Act, which is required to be tabled in the house as soon as practicable after December 31. I am speaking of the report on the operations for the calendar year 1955.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I understood we had some three months to comply with that requirement. I presume the report is taking the ordinary course. I shall make inquiries and see whether it can be speeded up.

Mr. Fleming: Is the minister aware that last year the report for the calendar year 1954 was tabled in the house at an earlier date than this?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GENERAL MOTORS STRIKE—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Would the minister tell the house what progress is being made toward a settlement of the General Motors strike at Oshawa and, if no progress is being made, does the federal government anticipate taking any measure to effect a settlement?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): This is a dispute that is entirely under provincial jurisdiction. The answer to the second part of the question is no.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

PRODUCTION OF GUIDED MISSILES AT CANADAIR PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. The question is prompted by an advertisement in the Ottawa Journal of February 3—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Harkness: —which reads:

Canadair, guided missiles department, has an immediate opening for an electronics engineer.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Harkness: The question is, what guided missiles are being made at Canadair and for whom are they being manufactured?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Defence Production): Any work on guided missiles in Canadair is undoubtedly for the Canadian government. I do not know that I wish to name the weapon at the moment, although I will make inquiries and see whether I can do so on another occasion.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO ALLEGED CANCELLATION OF PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Why was the discussion on the book "The Age of Mackenzie King" cancelled by the C.B.C.?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have asked the C.B.C. about this matter and I am informed that it was not a case of cancelling a program. The C.B.C. reports that, while some consideration was given to the book as a possible subject for a national television network discussion, on consideration it was not thought to be a good basis for such a discussion.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MINTO ARMOURIES, WINNIPEG—INQUIRY AS TO RECONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. C. Trainor (Winnipeg South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is it the intention of the government to reconstruct in the near future the Minto armouries in the city of Winnipeg, which were recently damaged by fire?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the situation is now being reviewed. As of now the intention would be to reconstruct the armouries. They are not entirely destroyed. But until we have a final review of the cost involved, the state of the building, and other relevant factors, I cannot give a final answer.

REFERENCE TO ACCIDENT AT BRAMPTON, ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Pallett (Peel): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the report correct in the newspapers to the effect that the pilots who were killed at Brampton were practising forced landings?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): I am not aware of the circumstances of that unfortunate accident. It is being looked into, but I have no report as yet. I am sorry, therefore, that I cannot at the moment answer the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They were using Chipmunks, too.

FISHERIES

SALMON—REPORTED RECOMMENDATION TO CLOSE STRAIT OF JUAN DE FUCA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Watson MacNaught (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, on January 31 the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Pearkes) asked me whether the recommendations of the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission for the 1956 sockeye salmon fishing regulations had been received. I replied that the recommendations had not been received but that when they were received a report would be made to the house.

The recommendations of the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission have now been received in the department and are being studied. The recommendations ask that, for conservation reasons during the 1956 season, the area generally referred to as Juan de Fuca straits be closed to salmon net fishing from June 28 to August 5 inclusive and that such closure be made effective under authority of the Fisheries Act in so far as Canadian nationals are concerned. The commission has recommended similar action to the government of the United States regarding United States nationals on the American side of Juan de Fuca straits, the regulations to be made effective under the legislation of the state of Washington.

The commission also proposes to prohibit salmon net fishing in outside waters, that is west of a line from Bonilla point to Tatoosh island for both Canadian and American fishermen. This latter regulation is made by the commission itself under the provisions of the international sockeye salmon convention.

The commission's recommendations regarding closure of the Juan de Fuca straits area are being studied by officials of the department and an announcement will be made in due course. Salmon net fishing in the area in question does not normally commence until the latter part of June.

TRANSPORT

YARMOUTH-BOSTON—REQUEST FOR CONTINUATION OF FREIGHT SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): I wish to direct to the Minister of Transport a question of which I have been unable to send him notice. Has the minister received communications from shippers in western Nova Scotia with respect to the termination of freight service between Yarmouth and Boston? If so, will the minister be prepared to make a recommendation for the continuation of this service for the time being?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Some representations have been received and are under consideration, but no final decision has been taken.

BRIDGES

PETERBOROUGH—STATEMENT ON OPENING OF SWING BRIDGE OVER TRENT CANAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to the question asked me last Friday by my friend the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Fraser).

I am informed that the Canadian Bridge Company Limited, who have the contract for erecting the Warsaw road bridge over the Trent canal at Peterborough, have been delayed by a shortage of steel. However, the steel members have been secured, fabrication is nearing completion, and it is expected that the bridge will be completed about April 20.

TRADE

STRATEGIC MATERIALS—INQUIRY AS TO CHANGES IN LIST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister or the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether the list of strategic materials the export of which is banned to countries behind the iron curtain is now under consideration? Are any changes in contemplation or have any been discussed with Great Britain or the United States?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The list of strategic materials is revised from time to time by a committee of the NATO organization. I think the last revision took place seven or eight months ago. I have not heard of any further revision since then.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DREW—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN WINNIPEG "FREE PRESS"

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Before the orders of the day are called I rise on a question of privilege. In the edition of Friday, February 3, of the Winnipeg Free Press, on the editorial page, there is an article headed "One Solution Overlooked". From it I shall read a short statement that indicates that serious misinformation has been given to the public without, I am sure, the intention to do so. It reads as follows:

> It is a curious fact that so far no party has advocated payment by the wheat board on the farms—that is, neither lending nor advancing money but making a partial payment on the farm.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Drew: Then it goes on later to state this:

> The Conservative party favours loans as of right through the wheat board.

And again this statement is made:

> The loans or advances proposed alike by the Liberal, Conservative and C.C.F. parties would be repayable by farmers in cash.

Mr. Speaker, that statement going out to a large number of readers of this paper gives an impression that is difficult to reconcile with what has been stated clearly and emphatically in this house. I would refer—

Shipment of Arms Abroad

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt the Leader of the Opposition to point out that in my humble view he cannot, on a question of privilege, debate in this house what appears in the press as their interpretation of what has happened in this house. The debate in this house is one which must take place between members. If the press make their own interpretation of what has been said or of what has taken place in this house and we then proceed further to debate the matter with them, I think we are departing from the rules of the house.

Mr. Drew: Your Honour, I was about to follow a practice that has been followed here on numerous occasions. I was about to read from Hansard in order to show what I had said with regard to this matter, which has been misrepresented to the public. I would ask Your Honour whether I am permitted to quote from Hansard remarks I made in the opening speech I made in the debate on the speech from the throne.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition will understand the position I am taking. If in the editorial there had been a direct quotation relating to the Leader of the Opposition it would be a different proposition. It would have been a misconstruction of his words uttered in this house. But from what he has read, I understand that the editorial is perhaps misunderstanding what has been said. Perhaps they are all wrong, but that is a matter of debate. The Leader of the Opposition should seek another opportunity to debate the matter. He should not rise on a question of privilege in order to argue it out now. Now that he has referred to the matter again, perhaps the newspaper will understand the matter better next time. My point is that I do not think a question of privilege should be raised for the purpose which the Leader of the Opposition has in mind at the moment.

Mr. Drew: I do not propose to debate the ruling, Mr. Speaker. It is not debatable. I shall avail myself later this week of an opportunity of placing the record properly before the house.

SUPPLY

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

SHIPMENT OF ARMS ABROAD

Mr. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity this session, on going into supply, for

Her Majesty's loyal opposition to raise a matter of importance and draw to the attention of the house a subject which, in the opinion of the opposition, deserves serious consideration.

For the last several weeks we have been considering some matters pertaining to the procedure followed by the government in dealing with the shipment abroad of military equipment, and a number of questions have been asked from time to time in order to obtain information. Some confusion has arisen with regard to the method and procedure followed in the shipment of military equipment from this country, not only in the minds of the members of this house but perhaps across the country, and there may even be some confusion in the minds of some members of the cabinet.

It would be interesting to clear up some of the terms that have been used from time to time in reference to the shipment of arms, ammunition and military equipment, such as orders in council, ministerial orders, ministerial decisions, export permits, and terms of that nature. I intend to move a motion to the effect that this matter be turned over to a committee of the house. At this stage I shall read but will not move the motion which will form the basis for the debate, and on which I hope to base my argument. It reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the procedure with respect to the issuing of permits for the export of arms, ammunition, and military equipment, should be referred to the standing committee on external affairs with instructions to consider and to recommend to this house a definite code of procedure with respect thereto.

The value of suggesting reference to the external affairs committee is that expedition will result from that method of procedure. That committee is well able, from its experience, to deal with a matter of this sort.

Ignorance of the law is no excuse, but ignorance of government policy and administrative procedures might be used as an excuse for a person's lack of knowledge of what is going on, because government policy is sometimes obscure, sometimes in a state of flux, and sometimes it remains unknown unless intensive investigation is carried on, or some accident occurs.

During the course of the last several weeks we have been endeavouring to obtain information with regard to this matter I have raised. We have uncovered confusion. To every member of this house examples will occur of answers which lead to various interpretations, answers which are only partial replies to the questions asked, and answers which appear not to be answers at all. I propose using as an example three questions that I asked in the house dealing with three matters concerning which I thought we should have information. My first question is found at page 525 of Hansard. It was addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and referred to mutilated gun barrels and breech blocks. I wanted to know whether those mutilated gun barrels and breech blocks were, if or when they were exported as scrap, beyond repair. Here is the minister's answer:

> The instructions to the disposal corporation are that before guns are scrapped, and before they leave the possession of the corporation, the breech blocks are to be demolished. In other words, they are mutilated beyond repair.

That was a reply to half my question. I was much more interested in gun barrels, and to that part of the question no reply has been forthcoming. A mutilated gun barrel, in army parlance, is one which is not beyond repair. When sent to an armourer it can be put back in shape rather quickly. Is there any use in my asking now of the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether or not during the year 1955, or the preceding year, mutilated gun barrels have been exported from Canada as scrap metal? In all probability I would get a reply to the effect that no scrap metal had been shipped from Canada last week, and I would be no further ahead.

My second question concerned the extent of our traffic in arms, ammunition and military supplies. I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs, at page 521 of Hansard, whether or not we had sent any military equipment to any South American country in the last two years. This is the reply of the minister as recorded at page 557 of Hansard:

> The answer is, no permits were issued for guns, ammunition, or military weapons of any kind, or for military aircraft or military vehicles to South America.

Does that mean that no military equipment was shipped to South America? Can military equipment be shipped without permits? I am at a loss to know what the answer means. I would place opposite that answer in Hansard the information which I obtained from the dominion bureau of statistics, which shows that during the year 1954, and for the ten months of 1955, military equipment to the amount of $63,980 was shipped to Peru, Ecuador, Uruguay and Venezuela. I took extreme care, and I checked the atlas. I found that after all these years these countries are still in South America. The headings in the dominion bureau of statistics return are: "Guns, rifles and other firearms; cartridges, gun and rifle."

My third question, addressed to the same minister, had reference to the shipment of military equipment to the 34 sensitive areas he had mentioned earlier, with the exception of Israel and Egypt. His reply indicated that $1 million worth of military equipment had gone during the last two years to sensitive areas outside the British commonwealth but he felt unable to give the names of the areas to which that equipment had been sent, although I asked for the names of those areas. It occurs to me that it is possible that a committee sitting in camera would be given that information so the picture would be entirely clear. It is because of answers like that, and because of the even more confusing answers we have heard in response to other questions, that I am suggesting this whole matter be referred to a committee which could seriously attempt to unravel the skein of confusion which prevails with regard to the entire question of exports of arms, ammunition and military equipment.

It seems to me that in matters of this sort the government follows a course of concealment, and when the truth appears to have been discovered it is followed by a denial such as the one which said in effect that no planes had been sent to Egypt and no arms to South America. This is followed by certain grudging admissions when pressed, and if the matter is pursued further it culminates in certain guilty disclosures. At that stage panic sets in and a smoke screen is thrown up to confuse the issue completely, and the fall-out extends from coast to coast. Of course, at that stage it is also customary to blame the opposition for not having raised the question on some other earlier occasion when the matter might have been considered and the information given by the government.

Well, Mr. Speaker, what are we doing about the shipment of arms, ammunition and military equipment overseas? Unless we can bring this matter before a committee and make a diligent search into it we will not know exactly what is being done. We have been told that there is no prohibition concerning shipments to our allies in NATO or to the commonwealth countries, but that there is a prohibition in relation to the Sino-Russian bloc. The question then arises concerning shipments to other countries outside of those areas, and it is with regard to those other countries outside of NATO and the British commonwealth that I was in complete ignorance of the fact that we were engaging in commercial transactions involving arms and general military equipment.

We have had pointed out to us in this rather purple fringe area of activity that careful steps are taken to prevent any weapons going overseas that should not go, and things of that nature. Even today we were assured by the Prime Minister that in lifting the embargo the government was following the same policy as in the past. If I interpreted his words correctly they were to the effect that military equipment was not being shipped out of Canada to these countries of a nature that would encourage an arms race or be an incentive to aggression.

So we are informed that an elaborate control system has been set up; that such matters have to go before the cabinet and go through a procedure before three cabinet ministers; that various checks are involved that would secure Canada's position. The phrases used such as "consideration at cabinet level", "special care with regard to sensitive areas", "shipments only to defence departments", "assurances against re-export", "estimates of legitimate defence requirements of the receiving countries", "very special care that there is no temptation to commit aggression by the receiving country", indicate a very cautious approach indeed, as if the government realized that it was dealing with something of considerable significance to the people of Canada, as indeed it is.

But does the system work? It is only through an examination by a committee that we can find out whether or not that system does work. There is an escape clause—at least it is a confusing clause or phrase—in some of the information we have been given. The words used were, "shipments of any significance". We are told that such shipments have to go through the procedure that has been outlined. However, the words "any significance" have not been defined. What do they mean? Do they refer to the type of material that has been shipped or to the quantity or the value? We have not been told.

Another interesting question is, who makes the decision as to whether a shipment of military equipment is or is not significant? We are not informed with regard to that aspect of the question either. All arrows point to the minister in charge of the Department of Trade and Commerce, but the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence also bear some responsibility with regard to this matter.

At this point, in order that we may be reassured the cloak of righteousness is thrown over the shoulders of the cabinet. If only we knew the number of orders that had been received for jet planes and the alacrity with which the cabinet turned down those orders.

If only we knew the total value of equipment that has been ordered and refused. The government has been tempted and has resisted temptation.

Well, that may be very reassuring to some people but I am not sure whether it will be reassuring to the hon. members of this house. Then we are told that after all no great quantities have been shipped, and also that the weapons that have been shipped are not modern and dangerous.

Only a committee could find out the facts with regard to the procedure in the shipping of military equipment overseas to those countries outside NATO and the British commonwealth. How can we obtain that information in the house? That subject deserves intensive study.

There is a great danger in thinking that simply because great weapons of massive destruction have been developed over the last several years, weapons of so-called conventional design are not dangerous. It is wrong to think that simply because we are not shipping abroad atom and hydrogen bombs, jet planes, rockets and guided missiles and tanks, that we are shipping weapons that are not dangerous. Thinking in those terms you can reach the point where you think in effect that to kill men by obsolete and conventional weapons is not as objectionable as it is to kill them by modern means of mass destruction. We have it on the word of a person who heretofore has been considered competent to express opinions along those lines, and I would like to read the following words to the house:

> We hope that atomic weapons will never be used. We also hope that machine guns and howitzers will not be used. The danger is that the uncritical acceptance throughout the world of the reprehensible quality of atomic weapons as such, rather than of violence itself, may lead to an assumption that the use of "conventional" weapons to kill men in order to achieve political objectives is somehow not so objectionable. A man is equally dead if killed by a bullet, an arrow or an atomic blast. It is the use of force that is to be condemned, not the physical source of that force.

Those words come from a book entitled "Democracy in World Politics" of which I think the author is the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson). Yet here he would have us believe that conventional weapons such as those we are disposing of are not modern and dangerous.

I would hope that the committee investigating this subject would consider our method of procedure, and in doing so find out what types of material were shipped overseas and whether or not we were sending modern and dangerous weapons. The purpose of weapons such as aeroplanes, tanks, guns, machine guns and rifles is to deliver upon the enemy an explosive charge or a bullet which will destroy or kill. A jet aeroplane without ammunition is not as useful as a helicopter and a tank without ammunition is not as useful to an army as a bulldozer. It is the ammunition which is the important factor along with the weapon.

In the first world war artillery and mortar fire killed thousands of men and machine gun fire killed tens of thousands. Machine guns dominated the battlefield until their power was broken after four years of static warfare by the invention and use of the tank. In the second world war more powerful weapons of destruction were invented and used, but many thousands of men fell before the fire of machine guns and rifles. The V-1 and V-2 were used toward the latter part of the war, but their destruction of civilian property and installations was not particularly important from the standpoint of the armies in the field.

Reporting in the latest issue of U.S. News and World Report, General Gruenther indicates that even if nuclear weapons are used there will still be need for armies to continue the use of conventional weapons. So how can you say they are not modern and dangerous? Therefore I submit that shipments of ammunition from this country to countries outside of NATO or other than countries which are our allies should be carefully examined. In what way are the permits issued? What controls are exercised to see that this ammunition does not get into the wrong channels?

An examination of the bureau of statistics report shows that in the last eight years Canada has shipped $800,000 worth of ammunition to Central America, the islands of the Caribbean and portions of South America. That would buy millions of rounds for rifles and machine guns. Why has Canada been shipping this type of material to areas which have nothing to do with us from the standpoint of our NATO alliance? What controls are exercised? Why are these shipments made? Is Canada entering into a traffic that represents an arms race and provides an incentive to aggression?

I notice that in 1949 over $20,000 worth of ammunition was shipped to the Dominican Republic. Why should the Dominican Republic want that amount of ammunition? I discovered that at that time that country feared an invasion from some of its neighbours and conferred upon its president full power to declare war. Consequently they needed ammunition. The adjoining neighbours whom they feared were Costa Rica, Panama and Cuba. Following its policy of balancing sides, of providing material to both sides so that peace would be preserved, we find that Canada shipped about $40,000 of ammunition to those three areas.

Then I notice that in 1951 Cuba received over $100,000 worth of ammunition, and another $50,000 worth in 1952. What purpose was served by these shipments? Who issued the export permits? Were the needs and requirements of this country examined? We are told that extreme care is taken to determine the defensive requirements of a country, to see that the balance is not upset one way or another. What was going wrong in Cuba in 1951? The record shows that in the spring of 1952 the government of Cuba was overthrown. An officer obtained control of the army, and with all that ammunition handy he was able to unseat the government. At the same time there apparently was no threat from the neighbouring countries, so Canada did not supply a great deal, except the customary $13,000 worth of ammunition to Costa Rica.

Then as my third example let us see what was going on in 1954 in Central America that interested Canada. The record shows that in 1954 Guatemala got over $16,000 worth of ammunition from Canada. In the preceding year they got only $172 worth. That caught my attention and I wondered what in the world had happened in Guatemala. I looked into it and found that things were in a rather disturbed state in that country at that time. In 1953 important positions in the government had come under the control of the communists and in January, February and March of 1954 shipments of arms reached that country from Canada. But the Russians did it on a proper scale. When they play they play for high stakes, and a whole shipload totalling 2,000 tons of military supplies which were loaded at Stettin in Poland, ostensibly headed for Africa, reached Guatemala. Of course then the neighbouring states had to interest themselves in the problem, there was intervention in Guatemala, the government was overthrown and the situation was restored.

In 1954 Canada supplied $25,000 worth of ammunition to Costa Rica, which is not far away, $30,000 odd worth to Cuba and $15,000 worth to Panama. So in the year 1954 we find from the operation of the export permit system of this government that the Canadian government supplied ammunition to a communist controlled government in Guatemala. I think the committee might very well investigate the method by which our ammunition is disposed of.

I would like to ask this question. What is the final disposition of this ammunition? Has it been re-exported? Has it perhaps ended up in communist hands in Malaya or Indo-China? Has it perhaps ended up in the hands of some of the Mau Mau tribesmen of Kenya, or is it now in the hands of Algerian tribesmen? Once ammunition is exported to a world market without any effective control over its re-export, the most disastrous things may happen. It surely is shameful to think—and I hope a committee of inquiry shows otherwise—that perhaps Canadian-manufactured ammunition has fallen into the hands of people who with that ammunition will kill British and Australian troops in Malaya or French legionnaires in Algeria.

Those are some of the reasons I can advance for the need of a committee to examine our method in dealing with these modern and dangerous weapons. Ammunition does not become obsolete. The Hotchkiss, the Lewis, the Vickers, perhaps the Bren, are now considered obsolete and have been superseded by the Browning machine gun, but those same guns in the hands of men who are bent on fighting would be just as effective as they were 20 or 30 years ago, when they were considered modern and dangerous.

Canada has got itself into a very peculiar position with regard to trafficking in arms. The only way we can find out whether or not we are permitting the export of destructive weapons is by an investigation. An investigation would show whether our tinkering with military supplies to countries that are not our allies and are not engaged in assisting us against the one major opponent is not likely to do more to foment trouble and strife rather than to maintain peace.

What in the world has happened to the millions of rounds of ammunition sent down to Central America, the Caribbean and South America? Who knows now where that has gone? Perhaps it has made its way over to the sensitive area in the Middle East or some other sensitive area. Then what is going to be the outcome of this reckless disregard, as it appears to me, in handling that type of equipment? In the final analysis, trouble will break out somewhere and Canadian troops will be required to take some action. That is what may happen, and by all means we should resist and oppose anything like that happening.

We can only check the danger by a thorough investigation here in the House of Commons. We cannot do it by questions and answers on the orders of the day. That has been proven over the past three weeks. We can do it only by a thorough investigation. Such an investigation, laying before the committee and finally before the house the facts of the matter, will give us an indication as to whether or not there has been any properly controlled policy or method of procedure on the part of the government. At the moment I think that the matter is completely out of control, and I think dollars have been the consideration.

I do not know how the moral aspect of it could be investigated, but we have had a new moral principle brought forward for our attention, to the effect that if a number of larger nations ship arms to an area where there is tension, it is not morally wrong for Canada to do so as well. That would be a nice question for our moral philosophers to deal with. Right or wrong is not to be determined by the morals involved but by numbers. It is an exercise in numerology. If we are not going to indulge in an arms race or permit other countries to engage in an arms race, as the Prime Minister pointed out today, how do we prevent it? How do we balance arms and ammunition against arms and ammunition? Do five hundred guns equal 500 guns? How many anti-aircraft guns equal one airplane? That is an impossible basis. There are so many other factors that have to be considered; the supply of ammunition, in which Canada is very active, the training of troops, leadership and morale.

In playing this game we are like children in a kindergarten piling up building blocks to see how high we can get them before they topple over. In supplying arms to both sides, Canada has got itself into a very awkward position, and only a thorough investigation by a committee of this house would determine whether or not the method of procedure of the government is sound and proper.

I see it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: May I be allowed to tell the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and those who will follow him in the discussion of the amendment he announced earlier that there appears to me, judging by the tenor of his arguments and the words used in his speech today, a very close relationship to the debate that took place not very long ago on a motion of want of confidence, moved when the debate on external affairs was arranged. He does not come to the same conclusion by his amendment, but perhaps we might have a debate which is not so repetitious of the one that took place the other day if arguments were directed more closely to the purport of the amendment he intends to move, and about which he spoke earlier.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Churchill.]

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to bring my remarks to a conclusion in a very few minutes. Before the dinner hour I was dealing with the subject of the shipment from Canada of arms, ammunition and military equipment generally. I questioned the effectiveness of the present system of export permits in controlling those shipments. I gave just a few examples. The amounts of money involved are small in relation to the cost of airplanes and tanks. I was dealing with the cost of ammunition. Ammunition is cheap, but it is ammunition that kills.

To those who are impressed by size, let me say that a battalion of infantry attempting to cross 400 or 500 yards of open ground against a battery of 25-pounder or 105 millimetre guns—and those are terribly destructive weapons of war of great size—would have a greater chance of surviving and reaching its objective than if crossing the open ground against four machine guns properly sighted for cross-fire and firing small ammunition. Under our present system of export permits we are placing millions of rounds of small arms ammunition in the hands of men here and there throughout the world in order that they may kill each other.

I have urged that for the purpose of securing the necessary information in order that the house may make a decision, the whole matter should be referred to a committee. This is a method to which I am sure there is no objection, and the government may wish to adopt the suggestion in order that full information may be made available to the public. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan):

> That the motion be amended by deleting therefrom all the words after the word "That" and substituting therefor the following:
> "in the opinion of this house, the procedure with respect to the issuing of permits for the export of arms, ammunition, and military equipment, should be referred to the standing committee on external affairs with instructions to consider and to recommend to this house a definite code of procedure with respect thereto.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say that I am going to support the amendment, because I feel that after the discussions that have taken place in the house over the last few weeks there is considerable uneasiness in various parts of the country with respect to Canada's exports of munitions of war.

I am not suggesting that at the present time Canada is fomenting trouble anywhere in the world. That, I think, is not the intention either of the mover of the amendment or his party. But I think it is wise that the house and the country should understand the procedures involved in the issue of permits for the export of munitions. We know very well that permits are not required for the export of war material to our allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Nor, I take it, is it the intention of the mover that we shall divulge to what extent we are supporting our sister nations of the commonwealth in the securing of the necessary arms and so on in order to defend themselves and our way of life if they or that way of life should be attacked.

But over the last few weeks we have had considerable discussion in the house, and many questions have been asked, regarding the export of airplanes, ammunition and guns by permit through private organizations. I have a very vivid recollection over the years of discussions in the house and throughout the country regarding the activities of these private companies. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I think they are no more scrupulous in their activities today than they were in days gone by when they were so frequently called, as they were the other evening by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Pearkes), merchants of death.

I have noticed some of their activities in our own country over the last year or two. I was very annoyed, for example, by a photograph that appeared as an advertisement by Canadair in Time magazine, other magazines and some of the newspapers of this country. It so happens that I am a member of the church which was photographed and used in the advertisement. It is one of the largest churches of my denomination in the city of Ottawa. I refer to St. Matthew's church. The photograph in the advertisement showed a few people scattered throughout the church, and the implication was that we were not prepared either spiritually or through armaments to defend our way of life against communism. In fact that was the tenor of the advertising around the picture of this particular church and its interior.

The story of the photograph is rather interesting. Canadair secured the services of a well-known photographer. The church authorities did not know why the photograph was going to be taken. Canadair got about 20 elderly people from one of the homes in the city, took them to the church scattered them throughout the church so as to make it appear that the church was habitually empty when people were called to worship there. Yet I can testify—

Mr. Rowe: On a week day?

Mr. Coldwell: On a week day—that St. Matthew's church probably is one of the best attended churches in the city. If you go there on Sunday morning, as I hope some of you may do on occasion, you will find that the pews are full. Yet the advertising around the photograph conveyed the impression that this was one of the empty churches of today and referred to the danger of communism because our people were not paying sufficient attention to their spiritual obligations.

Mr. Harris: When did this occur?

Mr. Coldwell: Last spring; and the advertising appeared in the autumn of last year. The church is St. Matthew's church in this city.

Mr. Fleming: It was probably charged up to the public, too.

Mr. Coldwell: I may say I know very well what happened, because I am a member of that congregation. Here you have Canadair urging the production of war machines, planes and so on, advertising through the medium of the newspapers, Time and other magazines, and publishing what is in effect a false impression of what is actually the case so far as our churches are concerned. Nothing is sacred for some of these munition makers.

There we find an indication of precisely the kind of thing they will do. Consequently I think that in these times, when these people are finding it extremely profitable indeed to make munitions of war both for our own government and to send overseas, we should understand exactly how these munitions of war are allowed to be sent out of Canada. Indeed, I would go further and say that the amendment contains an extremely valuable suggestion. I say that for this reason. How many members of this House of Commons know precisely what is done with the large appropriations of money that we make for the provision of munitions of war for this country?

I have often felt that there is one aspect of our expenditures about which members of parliament know nothing. I refer to the expenditures that are made by the Department of National Defence for munitions of war. I am not for one moment indicating that in times like these we should not look to our defence. I am not for one moment saying that in times like these we are not obliged to see to it that we have the best possible equipment with which to defend ourselves and with which, if necessary, to assist our allies in the same cause in our joint defence. But I am saying that we should know precisely what is being done. I am saying that we should know what these corporations—which are private corporations, and which get permits in order to export munitions of war—are doing, where they are sending their munitions, how they obtain these permits and what happens to be the manner of granting them.

I am therefore going to support this suggestion. It does not encompass very much. For example, it cannot be said that this amendment in any way embraces the kind of problem that we were discussing in connection with external affairs a week ago. It is much narrower than that. But it would give members of parliament, through the external affairs committee, an opportunity of making an inquiry into how these orders are being placed, and how these permits are being issued; and perchance we might widen that inquiry and find out how these munitions of war are being paid for. We should then be in better circumstances to understand some of the factors that enter into this great private industry.

As I say, we have built up in this country some powerful industries. I mentioned Canadair. As a matter of fact, Canadair is a creature of our own parliament. We laid the foundations of it. There are in our own country other organizations of the same sort to which, during the war, we provided valuable plants and facilities or to which, when the war was over, the plants and facilities that we had built up in order to win a great war were handed with little return to Canada, and today they are unfortunately the basis of an extremely profitable industry.

I am not going to elaborate, because the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre went into the matter quite fully from his point of view and gave some reasons why this amendment has been moved. All I want to do tonight is just say to the house that here we have a proposal that will enable members of parliament to inquire into the export of munitions from this country; will give members of parliament an opportunity to understand how permits are issued; will give us a more comprehensive view of where some of these munitions have gone in the past; and will enable that committee to recommend to this parliament—not to the government—ways and means of exercising a greater measure of control.

As the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre stated this afternoon, none of us knows to what extent the ammunition that was sent, for example, to South America has found its way to some other quarters. We do not know that. We do not know just where some of the munitions go after they leave this country. We should have a thorough understanding of what this involves. Of one thing I am quite sure. Neither the government or any member of it nor any member of this parliament wishes to provide any aggressive force with the means of making a war that might spread and involve all of us in it.

It was with considerable heartburning, Mr. Speaker, that last week I voted for the amendment that was moved by the official opposition, because I saw that we perhaps might be denying to one side munitions of war that the other side was getting from another source. I saw that. Yet at the same time I could not bring myself to accept the wide open exportation in which the government has been engaged over the last period of time, sending munitions of war into an area which was explosive—and to both sides.

I am not going to detain the house any longer, Mr. Speaker, except to say this. I have not had a chance to discuss the matter with my colleagues yet, but I am going to vote for the amendment as I suspect they will, too, because I believe it has some merit. I hope that we shall not have to vote on it. I should like to see the government say that they accept this proposal, and that they are prepared to send the matter to the external affairs committee and let its members investigate it fully.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I am rather pleased that such an amendment as this has been presented in the house this evening, because it gives us a further opportunity to suggest a way by which this parliament and the Canadian people can become a little bit more satisfied that things are being done properly within some of the departments of government. There is no doubt that considerable confusion existed in the attempt the government made to answer a question some days ago.

I need not now recapitulate the events to which I refer. We all recognize the fact that a question was answered, that the answer had to be modified and corrected, and that eventually another answer came down after several of the departments had got together. It therefore occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that there is just not enough co-ordination between certain departments of government. Perhaps they are not interrelated quite enough to carry on to the satisfaction of parliament the work of the country and the particular work affecting those departments. Perhaps there is an explanation of it.

Frankly, in some respects I have never been able to determine where the responsibility of one department ends and that of another department begins. Here I make reference to four separate departments of government. We have the Department of External Affairs which deals with the relationships between this government and the governments of other countries on, shall we say, the diplomatic level. Then we have the Department of National Defence which has to do with the three branches of our forces and their relationship to other countries, wherever that relationship becomes involved. Then we have the Department of Defence Production, the responsibility of which is to see that—I was going to say war equipment—munitions and supplies are ordered, manufactured and delivered. Then we have the Department of Trade and Commerce, which strikes agreements with other countries.

It seems to me those four departments should be more correlated when it comes to the exports of munitions of war, because that is what they are. We can use the term "defence" all we like, so far as we in Canada are concerned we trust that those munitions will be used for the defence of our country. Nevertheless, if they are used, they will be used because there is war.

I say once again I do believe there is not enough co-ordination of these departments. If there had been, the confusion would not have arisen and would not have existed, and the answers to those questions would not have been brought down in the way they were. One of the questions was a very simple one. It was whether or not Harvard planes had been shipped to Egypt. It should not have taken very much investigation to answer that question adequately.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that we must give some little leeway in answers which are not just at the fingertips of the ministers when the questions are asked. I think we all appreciate your magnanimous view of that question period which takes place before entering on the orders of the day. Sometimes we spend as much as an hour asking the ministers questions during that period. It is an admirable thing, and I am not going to blame the ministers too harshly if they are not too fully informed of all the details when questions are fired across the floor of the house. They have no notes and have to trust to their memories.

I recognize that some of those departments of government are huge. All you have to do is to open a departmental telephone book and see how many telephones there are reaching out all over the city of Ottawa in connection with perhaps one department. They are huge departments employing vast numbers of people, and the minister is bound to rely upon some of his deputies and understudies for his information.

It is reasonable to suggest that in the end the government determines certain policies, and the minister relies upon his staff or his deputy to pursue the administration of the department in order to accomplish certain things within the policy which had been laid down. Therefore I am not going to be too harsh if the ministers do not immediately have at the tips of their tongues or the ends of their fingers all the details of the answers. But there is a way in which that can be handled. All the ministers have to do, as they often do, is rise and say that they are not acquainted with the answer at the time and that they will have to get some information on it, but they will see that the member asking the question gets the answer tomorrow. They have many experts and large staffs. Some of us wish we had some of them. It should not be too much to expect a minister to be able to supply us with a complete answer within 24 or 48 hours.

While I would be in favour of the amendment—and I think most of my colleagues in this corner of the house would be also—I do not know that I am altogether in favour of the speech made by the hon. gentleman who introduced it. I do not know, but to me the speech savoured a little of isolationist policy. Perhaps that will be denied, but that is all right; I will not make too much of it. I say now, I do not believe we can afford to be isolationists in the world in which we are living. That is one reason why this group voted against the two amendments that were proposed the other day on the shipment of armaments to the sensitive area in the Middle East.

Right here might I just interject and express a thought with respect to the advertisement to which the leader of the C.C.F., the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), referred. I read that advertisement after it was drawn to my attention. There is no doubt about it, there was reference to munitions of defence. I do believe, however, many people read that advertisement and perhaps concluded that it was a good one. The reference to armaments was not too pronounced.

Mr. Coldwell: Was the picture not a lie?

Mr. Hansell: I am coming to that. I am not now supporting the advertisement, but we should use well balanced judgment, because I doubt very much whether people's attention would have been drawn to it had the hon. member not mentioned it. There are a good many people who would read that advertisement and would say it was a good one. They would say, here is an advertisement which tells us to place a little more dependence upon spiritual power than upon the power of arms. There are many people who would read it with that in mind.

As far as the church building is concerned, there was no mention of what building it was. To look at it you would think perhaps it was a fashionable church in New York city, and that very few people attended it. That is about the way you would look at it. I do not know the wisdom of mentioning what particular church it was. I agree with the hon. member that in this particular church they probably have a large congregation. While I am not an Anglican myself, I dodge around the city and I have been in that church. There was a good congregation when I was there. In fact, I must say that if you go to church on Sunday morning in Ottawa you will find the churches pretty well all filled.

However, there is that point there. People would get this from the advertisement, that we should depend on spiritual power more than we do, instead of relying on the force of arms. I mention that only in passing.

I said we in this party were not isolationists. That is why we voted against the amendments the other day. The world today is a very small world indeed, much smaller than it was a decade or a generation ago. We have only to read about supersonic jet propelled planes encircling the globe in a few hours in order to begin to realize how small the world really is. We are approaching a stage wherein no nation lives unto itself and we cannot ignore the fact that what happens to our neighbours—we are all neighbours in this world—is of very real concern to us.

Palestine, or to boil it down the state of Israel, is only a small piece of land. I believe there are farmers living in my own constituency who own and farm as much land as the total area of the state of Israel.

Mr. Coldwell: The total agricultural area, certainly.

Mr. Hansell: Yes, certainly. If a series of jet bombers were to strafe that country, they could do it within two or three minutes; it would not even take an hour. One might say that the state of Israel is an extremely sensitive area and arms should not be shipped there, but the argument can be used the other way. It is sensitive enough that this government should pay particular attention in respect of shipments to this area. It is not the withdrawal of arms from those areas that should concern the government but shipments of arms to those areas in order to stop any possible aggression.

If my information is correct, some of the iron curtain countries are shipping a great many armaments into the Arab states, perhaps to Egypt in particular at this time. Indeed that is a sensitive area. Perhaps if we knew the whole truth we would say that the government should pay a little more attention to shipping armaments there; I do not know. I do not like to be interpreted at this time as suggesting a lot of arms shipments; nevertheless the world today is in such a state of uncertainty that all governments bear a responsibility in this respect. Might I say too that I have no brief for this government. I think it is—

Mr. Harris: Pretty good?

Mr. Hansell: No, I do not think it is pretty good or we would not be out to try to unseat it. However, I am suggesting that if an outbreak of some magnitude should take place in the Middle East; if it should be revealed that one of the countries involved had called upon Canada for armaments and Canada, let us suppose, had refused to ship them, the very people who moved these amendments the other day would be among the first to criticize the government.

Mr. McIvor: Too little and too late.

Mr. Hansell: I say that because, after all, governments have responsibilities and they must take the consequences of their decisions too. Therefore I say I am not too critical of the government on that particular score. However, in talking about the responsibilities of government I would venture to say, and I do so with some modification, that I do not know just how far an opposition in parliament should exert itself in telling the government how it should do something. As I have said, I make that statement with some degree of modification, and the reason is this. Over the years I have heard the government say, although not in so many words, "Well, how would you do it?" Any government that has to come to our party and ask how we would do it had better move over, let us assume control and show them how to do it.

An hon. Member: You are not kidding.

Mr. Hansell: I am not convinced that we in the opposition should tell this government what to do; and when the government ask us how we would do it my answer is, "Well, why ask us? If you have to ask us, then you do not know how to do it."

Mr. Dufresne: Tell them where to go.

Mr. Hansell: The government has a responsibility. Parties go out at election time and place their platforms before the people. They bid for power to run the country. When the people have put them into office then the responsibility of the government is to deliver the goods. Our responsibility is not now to tell the government how to do its job. As voices of the people our responsibility here, whether on this side of the house or on the government side, is to severely criticize the government if it does not accomplish the thing it was elected to do.

Let me deal with this matter of exports of munitions of war. I agree with what has been said in this respect, that no one can tell the ultimate destination of these munitions whether they be actual war machinery or ammunition. No one can tell the ultimate destination to which they may go. I do not know what might be involved in these agreements that are signed between Canada and other nations, but we do know that previous to the last war a great deal of scrap iron was sold to countries which became our enemies. In fact I was once told that certain shells were fired at our Canadian boys, blowing them into eternity; and when our boys went over and captured the enemy territory they found the following words indented on the shells, "Made in—" and it was the name of one of the allied countries. That is something which to me is an eternal tragedy, that munitions of war manufactured in this country might be used against our own forces. That is what happened in the last war. That is what happened when our scrap iron was sent to Japan. This subject was brought up in this house over and over again in debates held during the last war.

There is another point which I should like to place before you, Mr. Speaker, which makes this motion commendable. At this time we hear a lot of talk concerning strategic materials going to other countries, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce mentioned it this afternoon. I have never been able to determine what that means. What are strategic materials? I do not know, but I think we should know. I believe that one thing this proposed committee could very well do would be to demand to know exactly what constitutes strategic materials. Even foodstuffs could be strategic materials under certain given conditions.

There is another point I should like to make. I do not know whether this motion will pass; I do not know whether the government will be magnanimous enough to say, "Yes, we want to lay our cards on the table," but even at that I do not think we can expect to discover a great deal. I will tell you why. During the war years we set up the war expenditures committee, and for one session I happened to be a member of that committee. Its work was of such a nature that it continued during the recess, and many of us came back in the fall to continue our work even though parliament was not actually sitting.

We went into all sorts of things, contracts and one thing and another. We asked all the questions we wanted to ask. But hidden away in the estimates were items covering the expenditure of money to be used in the development of the atom bomb, and not one single member of parliament discovered them. That indicated pretty good work on the part of someone in keeping the secret. I do not believe any of us want to reveal such items as that, as we should be well balanced in our thinking. I agree that you cannot reveal to the enemy all you are doing, but this motion does not call for that.

All that is asked is that there be revealed to parliament the process by which this whole business of the export of munitions of war is carried on. That is really all it asks for. I would regard it as a sort of procedural motion, not as a want of confidence motion. It indicates a desire on the part of parliament to ask the government to put down its cards face up in respect to the process by which this whole business of the export of munitions of defence or of war to the rest of the world goes on.

I submit that is something we have a right to know. After all, we represent the people, and it is only through us that these demands can be made. It is only through members of parliament that these results can be obtained. The people cannot get them. How on earth can they get them? If they came to the government and wanted to know, would the government tell them? I do not think they would. They would regard it as something they should not reveal in that way. But members of parliament have the right to know the way these things are done.

That is all we are asking for, to be told the method by which it is done so we can come up with suggestions that may help the government. There could be no harm in that. If the government contend that possible recommendations are not as good as the practice they are following, they can scrap them. There is nothing mandatory about it. I should imagine the government would want to say, "If a committee can recommend a better way of doing this, then let us have it." That is the way I look upon the amendment, and for that reason we are going to vote for it.

Mr. G. C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, this problem of the control of armaments is certainly not new. It is something which has persisted all through history. I remember reading of the old days when the gentlemen of France objected to the use of the crossbow by the English because it was an indecent weapon which resulted in the gentlemen getting killed. They suggested that the crossbow be abolished. Later on a similar objection was taken to the use of powder and guns. It was contended that they were indecent weapons which constituted a threat to chivalry, and therefore should be abolished.

So we have come down through the ages until today. In those days the opposition was not to the killing as much as it was to the method of killing. But the world has changed, and today we are looking upon this more realistically, as an objection to killing in itself. I think that is the gravamen of this debate, the basis for it, arising out of the discussions which have been taking place during the past few weeks.

As has been suggested by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell), I suppose that technically this is a want of confidence motion; yet I am sure that if the government could see its way to accepting it, and I think they should, the matter could easily be resolved and there would be no question of confidence involved whatsoever. It does suggest something which I think the people of Canada want. They want an investigation into those matters which have been discussed during the past few weeks. They would like to see a committee of some kind established whereby a pattern would be laid down for this country to follow.

No country in the world has paid more lip service than Canada to the principles of the saving of life, the abolition of war and the United Nations. We have boasted of the fact that we were one of those responsible for the establishment of the United Nations; and I have heard it suggested that the distinguished gentleman, the Prime Minister, was father of the United Nations. We have heard praises heaped upon him throughout the years. The United Nations is supposed to be opposed to war and killing, and the charter of that organization says that all states shall settle disputes by peaceful means, and shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state.

Those are mighty principles, and I think they are principles which should be supported. If so, then why are we engaged in the sale of arms to countries which are not associated with us either through NATO or through the commonwealth? A little while ago the hon. member for Macleod said that this motion savored something of isolationism, but I can assure him that there is nothing isolationist in the motion. In so far as Canada is concerned, and in so far as the commonwealth is concerned, we believe that there should be complete freedom to do as we see fit in order to maintain our independence and to give us protection.

But when it comes to the sale of arms indiscriminately throughout the world, that is a different story entirely. Canada has taken an active part in the United Nations, not only in its organization but in the disarmament conferences that have been held. We have been members of those, and we have always urged disarmament. We have passed resolutions in the United Nations urging the countries of the world to disarm. On reading the minutes yesterday I noticed that we were the ones who negotiated with Russia and got that country to accept at least the nominal principle of disarmament.

Yet we have just listened to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) tell us about the countries to which we have been shipping arms. It is true the quantities are not so great, but I suggest it is not the quantity that counts, it is not a question of whether it is $1 million or $10 million worth of arms, because a bullet may mean a life. That is the way it should be considered. When bullets are sold lives are threatened and lives may be extinguished.

I suggest in all seriousness that in the way in which this government has been carrying on the sale of arms, even though they be in limited quantities, they have violated the principles of the United Nations, and have not been carrying out that principle which we have been preaching so long and so forcibly. In fact one might borrow a word that has been bandied about in the press lately; one might almost say they are United Nations deviates in the way they have acted in this matter. It is time to take a serious look at this. That is why this resolution has been moved.

There is something incongruous in their protestations of virtue on the one side and their practice on the other. Not only is it incongruous; it is almost an affectation, if not something very near to hypocrisy. It is true that they say it balances out. We send anti-aircraft guns to one country and the aircraft to the other, so that they will have an equal chance. When the guns shoot down the aircraft, we can say we did it. When the aircraft shoots the gun crew, we can say we did it. So we are all right, whichever way it goes. That is not, I think, the way in which this matter should be handled.

We were told that the procedure was a very simple one. I looked up the act today, the Export and Import Permits Act. It is a statute that was passed some years ago and which expires, according to the act, in 1957. Under this act we have delegated certain powers to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The governor in council can name products and countries. Then the Minister of Trade and Commerce decides whether permits will be issued. That is what the act says. Under it all the power is delegated to the minister. Even the greatest critics of the minister—and I am sure he will admit that he has quite a few—will not deny the fact that he is a very busy man who is administering two departments, to say nothing of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, T.C.A. and many other things. It is not good enough that these powers should be delegated to that one man to exercise in this way.

It is true that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said that there is a code which is followed. He said it does not work out that way, and it is not left to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He said that if there are sensitive areas—whatever they may be, and there are 34 of them, some of them presumably more sensitive than others—then a conference is held among the Minister of National Defence, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

That is fine in theory, but does it work? As I have said, the Minister of Trade and Commerce is very busy. The Minister of National Defence is probably over in Paris attending a NATO conference; and the Secretary of State for External Affairs may be making a long-delayed trip to Israel. When we ought to have a conference, the Minister of Trade and Commerce usually has to go ahead. He usually issues a permit and then forgets about it. Undoubtedly that is what happened in these cases to which reference was made the other day.

I was reminded of the story about the big fellow and the little jaunty fellow with the bow tie who had been out hunting together for a long time and were used to each other. They finally came to the edge of a clearing. They looked across and saw a deer, as they thought. They both fired and hit it. The little fellow said, "We shot it." The big fellow said, "What do you mean, 'we'? I shot it." They walked across the clearing and found that, instead of a deer, it was a horse. The little fellow said, "Boy, we are in trouble." The big fellow said, "What do you mean, 'We're in trouble'? You are in trouble." That was the pattern that was established in this discussion of who issued what and where and how.

In any event, I suggest that that procedure is not as set forth by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It could not have been, because never was a matter so clear cut; never was a matter so circumscribed by rules and regulations; never was such a clear directive given as to how it should operate; yet never did a matter cause so much delay, so much confusion in explanation, so much circumlocution and—I think I can say, too—never did an explanation prompt so many revisions. Certainly it could not be so clear and it could not operate in quite the way in which we were told it operated; otherwise we would have had a more clear cut explanation than we did receive.

Some may say, "We have not sold much." The Secretary of State for External Affairs says, "This is all right. If we were immoral, other people were more immoral. If we were wrong in doing this, then somebody else was more wrong." I do not think we should accept that principle of morality. I heard a lecturer on morality once give an illustration. He said that at election time an old man had been approached by a Conservative agent who offered him $3 for his vote. The Liberal agent then offered him $5 for his vote. He took both amounts. When asked for whom he voted, he said, "Of course I voted for the Conservatives, because they were less corrupt than the Liberals."

That is the same principle the Secretary of State for External Affairs was trying to elaborate the other night: "We are less corrupt than Britain or less corrupt than the United States, because we do not sell quite so many arms and do not get quite so much money for them." I do not think we can accept that principle. I suggest the time has come when we should accept a definite code of conduct in this matter, and we should have a clear cut investigation of it by the parliament of Canada as a whole. Then the people of Canada will feel much happier about it than they do now.

It is true that some will say the arms we sold were not very powerful, that they were only old material or they were tank tracks or rifles or ammunition of some kind that would not hurt very much. But a bullet will kill you as fast as an atomic weapon. Once you are dead it does not make much difference which way it comes. That argument is one that surely cannot appeal to our reason. It is true that in the old days those were the conventional weapons, but today the time is rapidly coming when somebody sitting in an easy chair can push a button and start a projectile hurtling through the air which in a matter of a few minutes or a few hours can bring death and devastation to tens of thousands of people. Those weapons can be exchanged back and forth, and we can blast this world out of existence.

We know that great wars start from small ones. There is an old adage that great oaks from little acorns grow. We have been told by everyone that the deterrent effects of nuclear weapons are such that no one is going to start on his own initiative a nuclear war. But one may be started easily, possibly from the smaller conflagrations starting out with conventional weapons, and that is one of the things we should try to avoid.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre said this afternoon that wherever there has been shooting in the past five years in Central or South America, we were sending arms there. Why? So people could get killed. They can be killed with our bullets. We are shipping arms to various sensitive centres, 34 sensitive centres in the world. I do not know how sensitive they are, but I presume that the more sensitive they are the less arms we ship and, therefore, the fewer people we kill. But is that the principle on which we want to operate? I do not think there is an hon. member in this house who wants to subscribe to that practice.

I do not want to engage in hyperbole or exaggeration at all; therefore I will not say that the people of Canada generally have been shocked. But I do say that they have been profoundly bothered by the disclosures and the debates of the past two weeks. I do not think our people want our government, directly or indirectly, to be mixed up in the sale of arms or permitting the sale of arms except to our own associates and allies where we know, as well as we can reasonably know anything, that they are going to be used for our own defence.

That is what we should aim at. No one knows how much has been sold. No one can tell. The dollar value means nothing. You sell something for a few cents on the dollar and you say that you have only sold a million dollars worth. Well, a million dollars worth of bullets will do quite a lot of damage. If that million dollars worth happened to be on the basis of 5 cents on the dollar you would be selling a lot more than a million dollars worth.

No one knows how much has been sold for scrap. I noticed that the Secretary of State for External Affairs the other day, in response to a question, said that he had gone back as far as January, 1952, and had found that wherever guns had been sold for scrap the barrels were defaced so they could not be used as weapons.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that if he had gone back one month beyond that, if he had gone back to December, 1951, he would have found a situation where the barrels were not defaced for scrap. There was an incident in the city of Halifax at that time in connection with scrap. Men were engaged by War Assets in packing and crating scrap to be sold through a certain company which was exporting it out of the country. Many of the men working there were returned men from the second world war. They became somewhat incensed about this scrap which was being packed and the price they believed the government was getting for it, about 25 cents a pound.

Good machine guns were being included in that scrap. So these men, decent Canadians, said. "We will fix this." They took acetylene torches and burned the barrels of 71 of these guns, and defaced them so they were properly scrap. These were Browning machine guns. The man who was buying them came down and said, "I am not going to take these." They said, "You are buying scrap and at 25 cents a pound; you will take them." He said, "I will show you. The government will deal with you."

Inside of a week instructions came from the director of armament in Ottawa, Mr. Monroe, telling them in Halifax that these guns had not been sold for scrap purposes. I do not know what that word "purposes" means, Mr. Speaker. You either know whether you are selling scrap or you do not. But in this case these men were told that they had not been sold for scrap purposes and the men who had defaced them were ordered to replace the barrels, the 71 that had been burned. They were ordered to take 71 barrels off repairable or serviceable Browning machine guns.

There we have an incident where people were buying so-called scrap and paying scrap prices for it, and this happened only one month previous to the time covered by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his check. He said he went back to January, 1952. If he had gone back to December, 1951—perhaps that is why he did not go back—

Mr. Knowles: He had better do it now.

Mr. Nowlan: —he would have found this situation. He would have found that we replaced 71 barrels on those scrap guns with serviceable or repairable barrels. They were then exported to one of the countries about which we have been talking during the last few days. I have the bill of lading for the freight car. I have the number of the freight car.

It has been suggested that they were not sold for scrap purposes. I can tell you that the C.N.R. hauled the car out of the yard in Halifax as scrap. The bill of lading said "scrap" and the freight rate applicable to scrap was paid. They were shipped to Montreal and from there overseas. One hundred and twenty-five guns were sold as scrap. Seventy-one of them only had been defaced and the 71 barrels had to be replaced. That is a situation which developed in this country. True, it was five years ago. True, it was in December, 1951.

An hon. Member: Where were they going?

Mr. Nowlan: They were shipped to Montreal and were exported from Montreal. That is what happened in that particular case. As I said, we do not know. We talk about dollars. What is the value of that in a situation such as this, when you are getting so many cents a pound? The men who were packing them believed, rightly or wrongly, that the people exporting them were getting $250 apiece for them. Whether they were or not I do not know, but that was the situation in that particular case. I believe the same thing has happened scores and scores of times all across this country. I believe there have been numerous instances in connection with the sale of such weapons.

It is time for an investigation. It is time something was done about it. I believe that is one example that will impress anybody with the necessity of having a committee to study these things; because when you get young Canadians, boys who served overseas who were working on this material, getting so indignant at what was going on that they did what they did and then were reprimanded for it and had to replace the barrels, you can see that this is not a matter to be dealt with jocularly. I think it is much more serious than that.

This afternoon we were told that the temporary embargo imposed a while ago had been lifted. There will be ample opportunity to debate that at some other time, but there again it shows the necessity for some investigation. Either the government was right in putting on an embargo or it was not, and if it was right it should not have taken it off. It certainly showed that it was very worried, very uncertain, very jittery about something when the embargo was first put on, and now we are told it has been taken off.

It may be that the government knows of certain factors which, of course, are not known, and properly so, to all members of the House of Commons. We cannot expect that, but I do suggest that the embargo could have been retained, we could have had a committee investigation, and we could have evolved a code of conduct which would have been more satisfactory than what is now in operation in this country, because the whole background of this discussion has shown uncertainty and indecision and I know has caused unrest.

What we are asking for is an investigation by a committee of this parliament, not a punitive one, not a witch hunt, nothing of that kind, but a committee which can discover the facts and establish a code of conduct, because I think that is necessary. Someone may say, "Well, what is the good of a code?" Somebody has to make a start. Disarmament, to which we have paid lip service for years, is not going to come overnight. If we wait for every country in the world to do it at the same time it is never going to come. There is jockeying back and forth between the great powers. Russia says, "Disarm nuclear weapons", and naturally the western powers say, "We cannot disarm nuclear weapons because then you are going to have a tremendous advantage in conventional weapons, so you reduce your conventional weapons and we will keep the nuclear weapons."

The see-saw argument has been going on now for three or four years. I know there are some hon. members opposite, as well as some on this side of the house, who have taken part in the United Nations. They have sat and watched the play acting going on with respect to this matter. They are simply mouthing words; that is all they are doing. If you read the report of the United Nations for the last four years dealing with disarmament, as I did yesterday, you will find that the whole debate turns on whether they will amend subsection A of paragraph B and so on. It almost sounds like one of those amendments of the Income Tax Act the Minister of Finance brings in every once in a while that no one can understand. They get bogged down and involved in these long, technical, boring amendments, and in the end they get nowhere. I say that a beginning has to be made some place.

As for the right hon. gentleman who was here this afternoon and whom we were all so happy to hear speak to us—and he is still in the city tonight—so far as my reading goes of anything he has said about foreign affairs he has expressed the view that you must start with small things; that you cannot expect to settle overnight all the problems of the world; that you get a little approach made here and a little advance made there, and then gradually you can attempt to arrive at a solution of these problems.

I have a suggestion to make. It is only a small thing, perhaps, but I suggest that Canada can set an example on this matter. I suggest that we can establish a code which we can agree to maintain strictly, and which will be about as close to getting disarmament as is reasonable or practically possible by a middle class power to establish in this troubled world today. If we can do that we will make one step—and it is a positive step —along the road to total disarmament and to peace. That is what this world needs. I think that is what Sir Anthony Eden would advise.

Although some may say that this is only a minor matter, that this will not get as anywhere, I say this to the government: Why do you not try it? Why do we not set an example to the rest of the world in this matter? Perhaps we could send out a little beacon light across the troubled waters, which in the end will evolve into a great burning light which will lead the nations of the world to disarmament which seems so far away at the present time. That is why I urge the government to accept this proposal, in the belief that the House of Commons and the parliament of Canada will welcome it.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I hesitated to rise in this debate at this time, but I feel that the matter under discussion is of great importance to the Canadian people. I am sorry that no speaker from any other party sees fit to take part in the debate at this time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Rowe: He said "at this time". He is right.

Mr. MacLean: I mean at this time.

Some hon. Members: Give us a chance.

Mr. MacLean: Until now no member of the government party has taken part in the debate.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): You should know. You never let us know this was coming down.

Mr. Rowe: We are not running the house yet.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, in the past number of years Canada has enjoyed an enviable position in the councils of the nations of the world. We have attained that position because we have been looked upon as a disinterested and fair nation, a nation of people who are basically peace-loving and, perhaps most of all, a nation which would be loath to improve its position, especially in a material sense, at the expense of any other nation, great or small. I say with regret that, owing to the things which have been taking place over the last few years and which are now gradually being revealed, I am afraid that Canada has gone at least some way toward losing that enviable position which she has held. I believe the situation can still be saved, but I think the Canadian people have real concern over the state of affairs which is now disclosed to them.

There are, of course, those who would say that it is in the revelation of the facts that the mischief lies and that the facts themselves, if perfectly concealed, may do little or no damage. The people who put forward that point of view, for reasons of their own, belong to the school who think that undetected crime is practically tantamount to virtue; and I think such a point of view is not worthy of any further consideration.

Owing to the importance of Canada's position in the world today an importance that will continue to grow as we grow as a nation, I believe it becomes vitally important to the cause of peace and to the furtherance of our own interests that we should see that our position is preserved. A fair question to ask is this. What are we doing at the present time to preserve that position? I do not think that aggravating the situation in sensitive areas of the world by even token shipments of arms to any side in any dispute is furthering our interests. When we do that we betray the confidence which the peoples of the world have placed in us as a disinterested and fair nation. I believe the Canadian people feel that the government should be alert to the situation at all times and that under no circumstances should any action be taken that might upset the balance in any particular area or set a match to the powder kegs which exist in many places in the world today.

Some people may say that the exporters of those arms are to blame, and that if they were men of conscience they would not engage in such a business. It is my contention, Mr. Speaker, that they should not be called upon to judge whether or not it is wise or right to ship arms to a particular area. These exporters apply to the government, and rightly so, for permits to export arms or other materials to various areas. When they are given an export permit they naturally assume that the Canadian people, through their government, have put the stamp of approval on that transaction.

It is up to us to see that Canada does not engage in any traffic in arms which might threaten the peace of the world, and to see that none of its citizens do so. As the representatives of the Canadian people it behooves us to see that the wishes of the Canadian people are carried out. That is a heavy responsibility which is placed squarely on our shoulders, and we must face up to it. I believe the people of Canada wish that we should not contribute to the suffering and misery of any people whose homes may be ravaged by war or insurrection of any kind, even if it is on a small scale. We should not provide the spark to set alight the powder keg of war in any area. We all know that in this shrinking world a small conflagration anywhere may rapidly spread into a raging prairie fire that would sweep across the world and engulf us all in a third world war. Such a war, if it ever comes, will be a catastrophe, because with the advent of modern atomic weapons the danger of our very civilization being wiped out is very great indeed.

I think it was Sir Winston Churchill, in referring to the first world war shortly after its close, who said that victory was bought at such a price as to make it almost indistinguishable from defeat. If a third world war should ever come there would be no victor.

I think it is a fair question to ask ourselves at the present time, Mr. Speaker, whether or not we think the wishes of the Canadian people are now being carried out. I would like to think they are, but I am forced reluctantly to doubt whether they are.

Earlier this session a question was asked of the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding the export of certain aircraft. He rose in his place and said that he knew of no such export. Later information showed that aircraft were being exported at that particular time. The Secretary of State for External Affairs should have known whether or not aircraft were being exported. Furthermore, I would say that it should be impossible for munitions of war of any sort, especially aircraft, to be exported without the knowledge of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Later on a similar question was asked of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Campney) regarding the export of certain war material, and he said he had no knowledge of it. That is a state of affairs that should not exist. It should not be possible for those things to go on without the knowledge of the responsible ministers.

Still later a question was put to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), who is responsible for the act under which these exports are made, namely the Export and Import Permits Act. The question had to do with the export of certain aircraft. It seemed to be the attitude of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that since the aircraft were small and of a commercial type the question was irrelevant, or almost so, as far as the possibility of any danger being involved in the export of such aircraft. That is not a good explanation.

I point out that the list of materials which require export permits includes, of course, and rightly so, civilian aircraft, equipment and parts thereof. The minister tried to belittle the incident by saying the aircraft in question was merely a Chipmunk, which is a light training aircraft to be used, he said, in patrolling certain oil lines. I would point out that aircraft of any kind may add to the potential of any nation to making war. The then minister of national defence recognized that very thing when he spoke in a debate in this house on April 15, 1953. In referring to Canada's definite offer he had this to say, as reported at page 3922 of Hansard:

> We are producing the F-86E, the CF-100, the T-33 trainer, the latest Harvard type trainer, plus light transport aircraft—the Otter, the Beaver and the Chipmunk, leading aircraft of their type. As far as we know there is not anything to match them; and it is high time, I think, that the Canadian people began to recognize that their air force has become one of the leading air forces in effective fighting power on our side today.

The then minister of national defence recognized in that statement that aircraft, even light aircraft, adds to one's potential; and the importance of aircraft varies a great deal, of course, with the situation. Of course, a Chipmunk or a Beaver aircraft, or aircraft of similar types, would be sitting ducks if they were to operate against perhaps Sabres or some other type of modern jet-propelled aircraft, but they are very formidable weapons if they are operating against stray patrols on a desert who have no adequate means of protecting themselves against aircraft. As a matter of fact some of these similar types are ideal for that sort of thing.

Then aircraft can take on special importance, even obsolescent types of aircraft, or small transport aircraft, under certain conditions. During the last war the R.A.F. found it necessary, when the threat of invasion was very great and the means of defence very small, to prepare to use Tiger Moths and other very light training aircraft for offensive purposes against ground troops if an invasion came.

I seek clarification of the statement of the minister regarding this particular aircraft. The minister said the aircraft in question was a Chipmunk. I seek this information by the way. Since the minister himself is not in his seat, perhaps he might have notice given of it so that an answer can be forthcoming. I note that the item regarding that aircraft is listed as being in one case about $44,000, and in the other, about $41,000. That is approximately the price of a Beaver aircraft. I think a Beaver aircraft sells for $35,000 plus in this country depending on what equipment is on it; and a Chipmunk, which is the other aircraft, costs about $25,000 in this country. I should like to have an explanation of the great difference in price.

Shipment of Arms Abroad

In the course of the questions and answers on the orders of the day over the last two days, it would appear there has been an attempt on the part of the government to belittle our exports of arms and other warlike material in certain cases because they are obsolete, or the items themselves are small, or the quantity is not great. This makes little sense to me. What the government is saying in effect when such exports go to sensitive areas is that we are only tossing small sparks into the powder keg. I would like to point out that under certain circumstances even small contributions of lethal weapons can be very aggravating to the persons on whom they are used.

I am speaking only from memory in this case but I believe it was the Prime Minister who recently said that when export permits were asked for, great consideration was given to the situation and an endeavour was made to ensure that the export would not upset the balance of power between two of these minor countries, and therefore there would be no danger of their engaging in an arms race. It would seem to me there might be occasions when we might believe the power as between two nations was in balance, but I think it would be an extremely difficult task to convince them, if they were in balance, to stay that way. I am sure if a small nation with aggressive or belligerent tendencies were to learn that its power was in balance with its would-be victim, it would not be satisfied with that situation and would make every effort to get the balance upset in its own favour as quickly as possible.

Even if it were possible to maintain perfect balance as between two small countries, what is the objective? Is it to keep them in a state of tension, sniping at each other indefinitely in an indecisive way until they eventually attain the condition of the Kilkenny cats? What is the motive? There is great danger that a small war may spread and involve the whole civilized world. In this day of the atom bomb such an event would be absolutely fatal to our civilization, in all probability, if a full scale war were waged.

I therefore think this theory is completely unsound; it is much akin to using the argument that if you see two small boys fighting in the street and the little fellow is getting the worst of the deal, you should furnish him with a brick in order that he might try to knock out the bigger fellow's brains. That does not make sense to me. I think what is required is a firm, honest approach to the situation. The boys should be chastised and if necessary the police should be called.

That, I think, is the situation today as far as small belligerent nations are concerned.

[Mr. MacLean.]

After all, the United Nations was set up as an organization in an attempt to find a means of resolving differences between nations by means other than war and force.

I believe it has been said in this house that if we were to refuse arms shipments to a small nation, we might be endangering its existence by withholding from it its ability to defend itself. In that regard I should like to point out that the United States appears to be of the same opinion as I am with regard to the two small boys. Just the other day the government of the United States turned down a request from Israel for a shipment of $50 million worth of arms on the grounds that such a shipment would not be in the interests of the maintenance of peace in the area concerned, but rather that such a shipment would further endanger peace in that area. If war is to be prevented it must be prevented by the existence of a force which can compel small nations who are bickering among themselves to come to the conclusion that they must resort to reasonableness and compromise to settle their differences.

I think, Mr. Speaker, we cannot further Canada's interests and retain for Canada the enviable position it has attained in world affairs if we renounce our ideals and our principles for some minor convenience for somebody. I believe that in the end ideals are still of greater consequence and value than are bombs, even than atom bombs under some circumstances.

This cabinet includes men, I believe, who would like to be looked upon, or who would like to think they are looked upon, as world statesmen. This is the opportunity for them to prove their worth. An amendment has been proposed asking that the whole question of the export of arms on the part of Canada be thoroughly examined so the facts may be revealed. If we have the facts we can then determine where we should go and what action should be taken. If this government is made up of men of good will I think they will welcome such a committee. They will see in it the opportunity to demonstrate their capabilities in dealing with these matters of world importance.

I think the Canadian people at this time demand a frank, forthright statement as to what is the situation. The Canadian people do not want truculence on the part of their ministers, they want candor. The Canadian people rightly demand that they have the right to work out their own destiny. Not only do they want to know where they are going, they want to know to where they may be led. I am quite sure the vast majority of the Canadian people have had no idea that Canada was exporting arms and munitions of war to areas other than NATO and commonwealth countries. I think it is only reasonable to ask that the Canadian people should be made fully aware of what the code of conduct shall be for Canada when considering the export of arms or munitions of any sort to any part of the world.

If this government is made up of men of good will they will welcome this opportunity, they will welcome the assistance which representatives of the people would be able to give them in trying to find a means of controlling the export of arms so that such export will work to the benefit of the Canadian people and for the cause of peace. They should be glad that we are seeking the facts; they should be glad that an opportunity is being given for merit to be recognized, for errors to be corrected and for objectives to be attained.

If they wish to prove themselves men of good will they will accept this amendment knowing that it will provide an opportunity for them to demonstrate if not their efficiency at least their high motives. Naturally I assume that the members of the government are men of good will; as a matter of fact I guess I have no other choice. This is essentially a problem of external affairs, and the conduct of a maturing nation in world affairs is vital to the Canadian people. If Canada with the growth of its strength is to retain the high position it has held in the councils of the world we must be sure that we act in the interests not only of ourselves and of our allies but of peace as well.

I am happy to support the amendment which has been moved, and I hope it will be accepted by the government. By doing so they will demonstrate that they are men of good will. I believe completely that on earth there shall be peace to men of good will.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, this whole question of the sale of arms, munitions and equipment of war is of course closely tied up with the whole matter of disarmament. Last fall I had the pleasure of being a parliamentary observer at the tenth general assembly of the United Nations and sitting in at all the meetings of the disarmament conference. Anyone who has had that opportunity I think will realize fully the difficulties of the problem of disarmament. World disarmament cannot be achieved very easily, but I think the general observation can be made that the indiscriminate sale of arms, particularly to trigger-happy tribesmen and others, will do nothing to further improve world peace. I certainly think that Canada, which is so highly respected among other countries, should set an example in this regard.

This afternoon the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre moved the following amendment:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the procedure with respect to the issuing of permits for the export of arms, ammunition, and military equipment, should be referred to the standing committee on external affairs with instructions to consider and to recommend to this house a definite code of procedure with respect thereto.

That amendment naturally brings two questions to mind. First, assuming that a code of procedure is needed, why have the proposed committee recommended such a code of procedure? Second, why is a code of procedure with respect to the issuing of permits for the export of arms, munitions and military equipment needed at all?

With respect to the first question, apparently there is no procedure at the present time with regard to the issuing of export permits for arms and other military equipment. This has become quite obvious since the opening of this session from the answers that have been received to questions asked. Apparently we can expect that sometimes the government makes these decisions, while on other occasions, as the Prime Minister indicated this afternoon, the decisions are purely ministerial and nothing else.

This proposed committee, which I hope will be set up, should certainly formulate a code of procedure so that hon. members can find out, in camera if necessary, the quantities shipped, their destinations, the controls over the shipment of arms and the reasons for the shipments. I am sure that Canadians generally do not wish this country to be regarded by other countries as a merchant of death. If we are going to sell arms I think the reasons for selling them should be carefully considered.

This code of procedure should set out controls over the ultimate destination of arms. Arms may apparently be going to country A but it may be quite possible that they will end up in country B. Third, and most important of all, this procedure should be such as to assure that all ministers of the crown are informed of what arms sales are being approved.

My second question is, why should there be a special procedure necessary for the sale of arms? Arms are a very special commodity; they are not like apples, potatoes, wheat, fish or anything like that. The sale of arms to other countries could very well alter long-term government policy or even short-term government policy toward such countries or toward related countries. There can be nothing but confusion if one minister permits the sale of arms without the other ministers knowing about it, particularly if the policy toward the government that may be affected by the sale is the responsibility of ministers who are not informed about the sale.

Since I have come to this house I have heard the government referred to as acting in such a way that the one hand does not know what the other hand is doing. I do not know that that is a suitable metaphor and I think we should go back to ancient times, to Greek mythology, to find a more suitable comparison. One of the labours of Hercules was to slay a creature called the Hydra or better known as the seven-headed serpent. This was a creature with one body and seven heads all going in different directions, and one not knowing what the other ones were doing.

An hon. Member: That is the government.

An hon. Member: They have seven bodies and one head.

Mr. Nesbitt: It might be better, in view of the remarks of my hon. friend, to have seven bodies and one head rather than one body and seven heads going in different directions. I should like to give a few illustrations of the point I have just made. First of all, the sale of arms can affect the long-range policies of the government. I think there is very little question about the fact that the general long-range policy of this government is to maintain world peace. That is what we have been told in this house and outside it. I should like to refer to an article which appeared in the London Free Press, week end magazine edition, for January 28, 1956. This is an article entitled "This is our Foreign Policy" by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On page 2 of this edition the article states, referring to Canada:

> We are respected because we try to play a constructive and conciliatory role in international affairs.

Continuing a little further, it states on page 3:

> We are respected also because we have not hesitated to accept our share of the burden of maintaining peace and promoting friendship between peoples; in the United Nations, in NATO, and elsewhere.

A little further on it states:

> That, in fact, is the aim of our foreign policy: to play our full part in collective action for peace and in the search for solutions to the problems that now so dangerously divide the world.

It would seem to me that the sale of arms to the countries in the Caribbean, as referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, and elsewhere, can hardly bring about such conciliation and conciliatory measures.

More important, these approvals of the sale of arms by one minister of the crown when the others are apparently unaware of it, in effect are short-term policies toward various countries.

The same article to which I have already referred in a box on page 4, stated the policy of this government toward Israel and the Arab countries, as follows:

> We have had requests in the past—in the last few years—from both Israel and Egypt and other Arab states. Our attitude is to do nothing that would disturb the military balance—

Here is what might be called the punch line:

> —or add to their offensive strength.

This is an article written by the Secretary of State for External Affairs laying down government policy with respect to Israel and the Arab States. It says that the policy is to add nothing to their offensive strength; yet we have had admissions this year of the approval of sales of arms to those countries. There is hardly any consistency in that.

For these reasons we must have a code of procedure with respect to the sale of arms, even if it does nothing more than inform all ministers of the crown as to what arms are being shipped to other countries. The present slipshod, slap-happy method of doing things can only lead, as it has already, to disintegration of government policy. You might say that the present policy is simply an illustration of "I don't know where I'm going but I'm on my way."

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I intend my remarks to be very brief, but they will not be as brief as three minutes. I do not know whether to call it ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Macdonnell: Apparently there is not consent. I have been interested in this debate and have been asking myself, if the government is not prepared to agree to this, why that can be so. I would like to read the resolution to remind the house what is in it, how simple it is and how obvious is its good sense. The amendment is:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the procedure with respect to the issuing of permits for the export of arms, ammunition, and military equipment, should be referred to the standing committee on external affairs with instructions to consider and to recommend to this house a definite code of procedure with respect thereto.

The first question that arises is as to whether there is now a definite code of procedure. I would think any member in this house and, most of all, any member of the government would be quick to agree that there is no definite code of procedure. I was going to say that at best there was a hodgepodge of understandings among ministers, but I think that would be a great exaggeration. I think I should say "a hodgepodge of misunderstandings", because we never seemed to get to the point where there was an understanding among the ministers. We had an interesting galaxy of ministers parading before us—the minister of external affairs, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of National Defence—and we got an interesting glimpse of the way they communicate with each other. I am reminded of the Prime Minister, but I omitted the Prime Minister because I think he was as innocent of the whole matter as a new born babe.

Mr. Hees: They do not tell him what is going on.

Mr. Macdonnell: I doubt if he even heard any of the echoes that reverberated from department to department.

Mr. Hees: They never tell the boss.

Mr. Macdonnell: That being so I come back to my first suggestion, that the government should be very glad indeed to have a definite code of procedure, and that a very sensible way of getting it would be the method suggested in this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, if my eyes tell me rightly it is ten o'clock. As the rest of my speech contains a few suggestions as to the only possible reasons the government could have for not agreeing to this, perhaps the government would be more interested in hearing them tomorrow.

On motion of Mr. Macdonnell the debate was adjourned.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

NATIONAL REVENUE—PAYMENT OF TAX ARREARS

Question No. 41—Mr. Argue:

1. Can the Department of National Revenue register a judgment or otherwise force payments of tax arrears without a court order?
2. If so, under what authority?

Answer by: Mr. McCann:

1. An amount payable under the Income Tax Act may be certified by the Minister of National Revenue after 30 days default in payment or forthwith if, in the opinion of the minister, there has been an attempt to avoid payment. Such certificate may be registered in the Exchequer Court of Canada. When so registered, the certificate has the same force and effect and all proceedings may be taken thereon as if such certificate were a judgment of that court.

2. The Income Tax Act, R.S.C. chapter 148, section 119 and section 51(2).

Customs and Excise Division—

1. A certificate of default with respect to sales and excise taxes may be registered similarly in the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Excise Tax Act, R.S.C. chapter 100, section 50 (4).

EGRET FEATHERS

Question No. 71—Mr. Regier:

1. Is the importation of the feathers of the egret bird permitted?
2. If so, what is the estimate of the number of birds that had to be killed to supply Canada with aigrette in 1955?
3. Have any representations been made to the government asking for a ban on such imports, and what has been the nature of the reply?

Answer by: Mr. McCann:

1. Aigrettes and egret plumes have been prohibited importation into Canada for many years (item 1212 of schedule C to the Customs Tariff).

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

Prime Minister of the United Kingdom to MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND THE HOUSE OF COMMONS in the
HOUSE OF COMMONS CHAMBER, OTTAWA
Monday, February 6, 1956, at 2.30 p.m.

Sir Anthony Eden was introduced by Mr. St. Laurent.
Hon. L. René Beaudoin, Speaker of the House of Commons, presided.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister of Canada): Mr. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, fellow members of parliament, it is my agreeable duty and privilege to welcome to the Canadian parliament the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. This I do with warm personal pleasure, and I know that all members share that pleasure and wish me to express on their behalf, as well as my own, our most cordial greetings to our distinguished guest.

We were all delighted, sir, when we learned that it would be possible for you to spend a few days in our capital following your important discussions in Washington, and that you had graciously accepted to speak to us here this afternoon.

I should like also to say how happy we are that the foreign secretary, Right Hon. Selwyn Lloyd, was able to accompany you on this visit. To him as well we extend a sincere and hearty welcome.

We recall, Mr. Prime Minister, that you previously addressed this parliament some 13 years ago when we were emerging from the darkest and most dangerous days of the war. The might of the enemy forces was still great, but the dawn of ultimate victory was beginning to appear.

Those of us who were here have vivid recollections of the inspiring message of courage and confidence you brought us from the battle-scarred but indomitable British nation.

You were then the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in a wartime government headed by one of the great Englishmen of historical fame, that towering figure, Sir Winston Churchill, to whom the whole free world will remain forever indebted.

Today we welcome you as the worthy successor in office of that great man, and we do so on the morrow of your visit to Washington where you have been strengthening Anglo-American co-operation and friendship, the essential foundation for the structure of peace which we are all striving to build.

May we be permitted to congratulate you on the success of that mission? Of course, I do not need to tell you that whenever London and Washington and Paris seek to deepen their friendly understanding, there is a feeling of very special satisfaction in Ottawa.

That visit to Washington was only another instance of the energetic, skilful and constructive part which you have played in international affairs during these troubled and trying years.

Your visit to us emphasizes the close association we enjoy with the United Kingdom and the other members of our commonwealth of nations. That association, based on the freedom of its members, spans the oceans and the continents; it is playing a worthy part in the search for peace, security and constructive progress.

We are also proud of our association with the United Kingdom as allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and as fellow members of the United Nations. In these organizations, too, we appreciate the opportunities of working with you for the strengthening of the free world and the maintenance of peace.

(Translation):

Mr. Prime Minister, you know that there are in Canada, and in this parliament, two official languages. And so I wish to tell you, on behalf of Canadians of French descent like myself, how happy they are also to greet you here and to extend to you a most hearty welcome.

I am conscious of accurately expressing the feelings of my fellow Canadians from the Atlantic to the Pacific when I say that they have the very highest regard for you.

Address by Sir Anthony Eden

(Text):

I now invite Right Hon. Sir Anthony Eden, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, to address us.

Right Hon. Sir Anthony Eden (Prime Minister of the United Kingdom): Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, members of the Senate and of the House of Commons, Mr. Prime Minister, I am indeed grateful to you, sir, for your generous words, and to the Canadian parliament for this invitation. I am deeply moved by the compliment which you have paid to me for the second time in my life. That must be a rare event. I believe that it is in fact unique in history. On neither occasion, Mr. Speaker, have I been able to catch your eye. I do trust the backbench members will not in consequence be so much aggrieved that they will move the closure on me. I was a little reassured to learn, sir, that this is an unusual custom for your parliament.

You know that I speak sincerely when I say I am happy to be amongst you again. It is now 30 years since I first came to Canada and travelled across your country. On many occasions since then I have had opportunities to visit your vast and hospitable land. I am proud to think that I have more friends here than in any country outside my own.

(Translation):

French-speaking Canadians, I thank you cordially for your welcome. I do wish to say how much I admire and respect that culture and those traditions you so proudly preserve. You know that I am genuinely glad to be amongst you again. Thirty years have elapsed since my first visit to Canada. I have returned several times to your vast and hospitable land and, on each occasion, I have found many old friends and have made new ones.

I am deeply grateful for the high honour you have paid me in inviting me, for the second time in my life, to address the Canadian parliament.

(Text):

Inevitably, my mind goes back this afternoon to that earlier occasion, to which you, Mr. Prime Minister, have referred, when I spoke to you during the war. Then, though the tide had turned, victory had yet to be won and the future beyond it lay all uncertain. He would be a rash man or an ill-informed man who would attempt a confident prophecy for mankind today.

Yet there is a certain balance sheet of good and evil which we can draw up, and I propose to do so, and to begin with the good, because it is more comforting that way. There is next the unshakable strength of the Anglo-American alliance in which we all join. Third, the growing unity of western Europe within the framework of NATO. Fourth, and grimmer but still real, the deterrent power of the new weapons, including the hydrogen bomb, which restrain where they cannot reform. Fifth, the growing understanding by the west of the threat of communist penetration which it has to meet and of the new methods which we will have to employ.

And now on the debit side I would cite, first, the increasing hazards which some are prepared to take; second, the dangers of aggression by countries which believe they can ignore the deterrent; third, the continued existence of local disputes, whose consequences could engulf the world; fourth, the daily communist call to abhor the west sounds sharply. In contrast, the steady effort of the west to raise the standard of life for all free people must take time. It is easier to spread hatred than to make two blades of grass grow where one grew before.

Mr. Speakers, it is with this balance of good and evil in mind that we have to prepare ourselves. Economic weapons may take the place of military ones. But always our purpose must be the same; to maintain the right that men's minds may be free and the care that their bellies be filled. Well now, to achieve this, free nations like ourselves, like free men, must draw and hold together and it is in the spirit of those reflections that I would like to make some comments on the recent conversations which I have held in Washington with President Eisenhower.

I can best sum up my impressions of those talks by saying that there has never been so full a measure of agreement between our governments. In the whole field of European diplomacy, which a year or two back was troublesome enough, there was no difference between us. You may have noticed the attempts of the Kremlin to obscure the issues and confuse our councils. In fact they only provided most obligingly an opportunity to underline the unity between the United States and ourselves.

Now, Mr. Speaker, much of our meeting was devoted to the difficult and critical problems of the Middle East. Here too we were in agreement that the first danger was the continuing Arab-Israel dispute. We were also in agreement as to what we should do to try to resolve it. We decided that the necessary treatment should be of three kinds. We should continue to work without publicity—I really think diplomacy is more effective without publicity—and by every means to bring about a settlement in that area. This can only be realized if both sides are prepared to reconcile the positions they have taken up to now.

That means a compromise. Some people tell me compromise is a horrible English habit; however, some might learn from it to their own advantage in the world. But we can both help, and are ready to do so, for example by financial aid to help settle the tragic refugee problem and by a guarantee of the frontiers once agreed.

Meanwhile, as you know, Mr. Speaker, we, the United States and France have our responsibilities under the tripartite declaration of 1950. We arranged for discussions on the action to be taken to meet an emergency should it arise. The French government has agreed to join us in this. Personally I am convinced that to make ready in this way is to reduce the risk of conflict. It may also be, Mr. Speaker, that a strengthening of the United Nations truce supervisory organization would assist to prevent incidents. Both the United Kingdom and the United States governments are very ready to agree to this. But of course we should wish to be guided by General Burns, a brave Canadian soldier who is resolutely carrying out this thankless task.

As regards the dispute which we have with Saudi Arabia, our position is this. We are not prepared to return to arbitration. There can be no question of that in view of our recent experiences with their bribery and corruption. On the other hand, as we made clear in Washington, we are ready to enter into direct discussions.

The United States government has declared its solid support for the Baghdad pact, to which we belong. This again we welcome and here again our views are alike. The pact has economic purposes and aims which fully match its military provisions and importance. We have considered the kind of help which each member country needs and we are determined to make a success of the pact.

All this does not exclude some help to other countries in the area. An example is Jordan, to whom we shall continue to make substantial payments under our treaty.

So much then for what is perhaps the most critical region at the present time. Of course, we talked of many other problems, in many parts of the world, just as I had the privilege to do with the Prime Minister and your cabinet this morning. We discussed the declaration of Washington which the President and I issued together. In this we set forth the true principles which guide the free world. Some say that these have been stated before. Maybe, but it does no harm to state them again in a manner which makes it clear that we are aware of the modern communist challenge. The declaration of Washington is, in fact, a charter to which the whole of the free world can subscribe. I am sure that here in Canada you will agree with its purpose. It is in the tradition of the work you have done so well to unite the countries on either side of the Atlantic in defence of the free world.

Mr. Speakers, I now come back to our own friendship and the work of our two peoples together. Many speakers and writers have tried to define the commonwealth. None has really succeeded, for the reason no doubt that the spirit which gives it life is indefinable.

In a few months' time I look forward to welcoming the prime ministers of the commonwealth to our London meeting. Foremost amongst them is your own Prime Minister, wisest of counsellors and most loyal of friends. May I here suggest that though we enjoy being the hosts to all these meetings of prime ministers, it would be good if from time to time the meeting place were to revolve.

Mr. Speakers, I am here this afternoon surrounded by the familiar setting of our own House of Commons. This morning, Mr. Prime Minister, you were good enough to invite me and my colleague the foreign secretary to attend the Canadian cabinet. Our systems, our modes of thought, our traditions and our ways of life are all so much alike that perhaps we ought not to take too much credit to ourselves, but Anglo-Canadian relations are a model to the world.

But there is more to it than all this. The pervading influence which the commonwealth carries into the four corners of the earth is one of understanding among friends, of tolerance and of peace.

In all this work Canada now plays a leading part. It is impossible to travel, as I had to do as foreign secretary until a year ago, into so many lands without constantly hearing warm praise of the judgment and kindly help you have so often extended to "less happier lands". The service that you are rendering in Indo-China is but one example of the world's debt to you. By this action alone you made possible an armistice which may yet become a peace.

Mr. Speakers, if I may conclude on a slightly more familiar note, I have from my childhood, like many of you, seen this great nation grow up into a position where its authority is among the foremost in the world. I have no doubt of what the future holds. You will be called upon to carry ever more burdensome responsibilities, but they go with authority. That is inescapable. Yet ever so at home and over the world at large there is great comfort in that thought, for I have no doubt that the guidance and wisdom of Canada will always be thrown in the scales on the side of toleration and peace.

Visit of Sir Anthony Eden

It is not given to many of us to look far into the future, but of this no one who observes your country from outside can doubt a future, an almost unimaginably great future, is in your hands. I have no doubt that you will fashion it in a manner worthy of a great people.

And so, Mr. Speakers, I salute this Canada which commands the future as probably no other land in the world today. I salute you also as the standard bearer of loyalty and a herald of good will. And I wish you well.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson (Speaker of the Senate): On behalf of the Senate of Canada may I say to you, Mr. Prime Minister, how greatly we appreciate your visit to Canada, your courtesy in meeting with us and, on their behalf, may I thank you for the address you have just delivered.

We will never forget the gigantic effort and sacrifice that the people of the United Kingdom made in the cause of freedom; their contribution in the rebuilding of a war-torn world and their efforts in building a better future.

The attendant circumstances of your visit, Mr. Prime Minister, are evidence of the leadership you are continuing to show in this respect. I need hardly say that in the peculiar position Canada occupies in relation in particular to the United Kingdom and the United States and, in general, to the other countries that are signatories to the North Atlantic treaty, we welcome every effort that is made towards greater understanding and in the achieving of a common viewpoint. Your very presence here and in Washington is evidence that you are keenly alive to the inestimable value of personal contacts in helping to attain these ends.

We would particularly ask you, Mr. Prime Minister, to convey our greetings to the members of the United Kingdom parliament. We hold them in the greatest respect, but we see far too little of each other. If it were possible to develop something more of the personal relationship and understanding between the members of our respective legislatures that already exist and are being constantly developed between the executive and administrative branches of government, not only would the attendant benefit be inestimable but it is quite possible that the difficulties of those whose responsibility it is to initiate policies might be lessened accordingly.

We wish you well in your undertakings. May divine Providence bless your endeavours.

Hon. L. René Beaudoin (Speaker of the House of Commons): Honoured guests, Mr. Prime Minister, hon. members of the Senate, hon. members of the House of Commons, ladies and gentlemen:

(Translation):

Once a well-known American writer, Nicholas Murray Butler, pointing out the multitudinous problems peculiar to the twentieth century, stressed the high ability required of the men called upon to solve those problems. Then again, another distinguished American author, Whittier, said: "Each crisis brings its words and deeds".

These words naturally come to mind at this time when it is my very great privilege to thank you, Mr. Prime Minister, for your interesting speech and your kindly presence among us. May I be allowed to add that the success of your career arouses in us the deepest admiration.

I should fear to lapse into the commonplace in repeating that Sir Anthony Eden, "the specialist in foreign affairs, the virtuoso of diplomacy", to use the words of his biographer, Campbell-Johnson, is a statesman of the highest intellectual standing who has always shown supreme ability and understanding in tackling the most difficult international problems.

At the general elections, in 1950, he summed up his political creed by referring to the theory of the three unities; first, the unity that should exist within the commonwealth; second, the unity of western Europe; and third, the unity which, across the Atlantic, binds England to the United States. Today he has restated his political faith in those three unities and has added two others which are most important and inseparable from the first three.

We believe, as he does, in maintaining a friendly solidarity between the countries which make up the commonwealth.

For us, who are French-speaking and whose mother country was France, we cannot forget, sir, that you have always been a friend of that great nation, that you have, on many occasions, revived the principles that made a success of the Entente Cordiale. You have always believed that the solidarity of Anglo-French relations, nay of western European relations, was the very basis of relations between all western European countries, not only for the present but also for the future.

There are, of course, "other places under the sun" and, as a North American people, we rejoice at your relations with the United States. On the occasion of your visit to America in 1943, President Roosevelt was able to say that you both seemed to agree on approximately ninety-five per cent of the problems, which is a remarkable proportion. And in the last few days, you and the present President of the United States have just agreed one hundred per cent on the definition of the philosophy behind our way of life, as you personally chose to call it, a definition which was incorporated in this henceforth memorable document, the declaration of Washington.

This is consistent with the objective which is yours today and which you set yourself a long time ago when you said in the House of Commons:

> I am convinced that a closer understanding between our nation and the United States constitutes the most important objective that the government of that country could propose to us.

In addition you have accomplished a tour de force, as it were, in bringing about an effective rapprochement with new Germany.

As I said just now, each crisis brings its words and deeds, and brings forth the indispensable men whose courage and logic carry ideals into the realm of reality.

(Text):

Each crisis brings its words and deeds; it brings also to the fore the men to utter those words and to do those deeds, and men with sufficient courage and consistency to translate their ideals into realities. Of such a breed is our honoured guest today.

So, in the name of the House of Commons and of the Canadian people, may I say to you, sir: Thank you and good luck!

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 7, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO ALLEGED CANCELLATION OF PROGRAM

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have a question which arises out of the answer given to me yesterday by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) regarding a particular C.B.C. broadcast.

His answer to my question said that the broadcast had never been scheduled, and I should like to read to the house from the C.B.C.—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I interrupt the hon. gentleman to tell him that he might find a recourse by putting supplementary questions when we reach the orders of the day, because at this moment I do not think he has a question of privilege in what he has been saying.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bryson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is the minister aware that the December 18 issue of the C.B.C. Times states:

> Anthology on Tuesday night plans to bring an extended discussion by various qualified people of a new book called "The Mackenzie King Era" by Bernard Ostrey and H. S. Ferns, two young Canadian political scientists who are teaching in England. The discussion will be introduced by one of the authors of the book, which is said to be highly controversial.

That was to have been scheduled to go on the air at eleven p.m. on December 20. On that admission, is the minister also prepared to say that there was no cancellation of this program?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I had not received any notice of the question, and obviously it is so long that I could not catch the whole of it, but I think the answer I gave yesterday with reference to cancellation still stands. It is the answer that was given to me by the C.B.C.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. Is there such a thing as a directorate in the C.B.C. which concerns itself with whether such a program will or will not go on the air and, if so, who constitutes this directorate?

Mr. McCann: My understanding is that there is a directorate, but I cannot give its personnel at this moment.

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): May I direct another question to the Minister of National Revenue. Can the minister inform me what medium the C.B.C. will use to review the book on Mackenzie King?

Mr. McCann: I suggest that this is a question which might well go on the order paper. After all, I act as liaison between the C.B.C. and parliament, and I cannot be expected to know offhand the answers to questions with which I am not directly concerned. I will do my best on all occasions to give answers when I receive them from the C.B.C., provided the questions are in a form which can be answered accurately.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SHIPMENT OF AIRCRAFT AND SHELLS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made by the Prime Minister yesterday that the embargo on arms had been lifted, does that mean that the government proposes to proceed with the delivery of the remaining 12 Harvard planes to Egypt and the shells that had been mentioned earlier in this discussion?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the shells no decision had been arrived at and that matter is still under consideration.

With respect to the Harvard aircraft for which a permit had been previously granted, there is no intention of interfering with the shipment of these 12 planes unless there is a change in the situation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CONFERENCE ON FEDERATION OF BRITISH WEST INDIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is Canada showing any specific interest in, or have we an observer at, the conference being held in London on the possibility of the British West Indies being federated and becoming a self-governing member of the commonwealth of nations? Is consideration being given to these islands joining Canada?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. member was good enough to give me notice of this question, which enables me to deal with it at once. We are continuing to follow very sympathetically the movement toward closer association of the British islands and territories in the Caribbean, with which we have had long and friendly relationships. We will be receiving reports on the conference which is now being held in London.

It should be made clear, however, that even if agreement is reached at that conference in London, ten legislatures will have to approve the final agreement before federation can be established. It may take as much as three years to accomplish these last steps. Even then the federation is not expected to be completely independent financially, as United Kingdom grants in aid will still be needed for some years. Therefore the movement toward complete self-government as a federated state will take some time.

So far as the second part of the question is concerned, the government has not given consideration to this matter.

RUSSIA—POSSIBLE OPENING OF CONSULAR OFFICES IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The other day the hon. member for Eglinton asked the following question:

> Has any application been received from the Russian government or the Russian ambassador for permission to open consulates across Canada? Has there been any expression of a desire in that respect?

If I might answer the second part of the question first, I may say that a year ago an official of the Soviet embassy intimated informally that his government might eventually request permission to open a consular office in Winnipeg or Toronto. However—and this answers the first part of the hon. member's question—no formal request for a consulate in any Canadian city has since been made. I should like to add that if such a request were ever received it would of course be examined on its merits, but as of today the government would not consider that circumstances would warrant Soviet consular representation outside Ottawa.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

CONSTRUCTION OF NEW HYDROGRAPHIC SURVEY SHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. R. Balcom (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Can the minister state when the hydrographic ship now under construction is expected to go into service, and will she be based at Halifax? Can the minister indicate the number of men that will be employed on this ship?

Hon. George Prudham (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, there is a new ship under construction for the hydrographic service which will be known as the C.G.S. Baffin. Although it is too soon yet to say exactly when it will go into service it is hoped it will be completed during the coming season in time for a trial run in northern waters, and perhaps several weeks on survey work. Negotiations are presently under way with the Canadian navy for space at what I think is known as French Cable wharf in Halifax harbour, on the Dartmouth side.

The new ship will be equipped with two helicopters and six surveying launches, and will require a complement of 102 men. For several years the department has had a ship on loan from the Canadian navy, H.M.C.S. Fort Frances. It is expected that when the new ship is completed the crew of the Fort Frances will be transferred to it.

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF—REQUEST FOR GREATER DEGREE OF SELF-GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has the minister received a request from a Banff advisory council asking for a larger degree of self-government in Banff and, if so, what action has been taken?

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that there is any urgency in this matter, and I do not believe we should take up the time of the house—

Mr. Harkness: The people of Banff think it is urgent.

Mr. Lesage: —to discuss this question at this time.

BANFF—REQUEST FOR ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR NEW SCHOOL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct another question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, notice of which I have given. What decision has the department arrived at regarding the request made by the Banff school board for the acquisition of block 54 in the township of Banff for the purpose of erecting a new school thereon?

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The remarks I just made with respect to the question asked by the hon. member for Calgary North would apply also to this question.

EGGS

INQUIRY AS TO METHOD OF INSPECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if the departmental egg inspectors work on the basis of secret instructions rather than according to printed regulations, as reported in the Western Producer of February 2, 1956?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was kind enough to send me a copy of his question. The reply is as follows. The report in the Western Producer of February 2, 1956, implies that secret instructions have been issued to the poultry production inspection staff in British Columbia, particularly with respect to the washing of eggs.

No such secret instructions have been issued. Some months ago the district officer of the poultry division of the federal Department of Agriculture in British Columbia advised the divisional headquarters in Ottawa that it had been proposed that the department should, under their regulations, prohibit the washing of eggs sold as grade A-1. Federal regulations with respect to the grading of eggs make no reference to washing, and there is therefore no authority under these regulations to prohibit or otherwise deal with the washing of eggs. The district inspector in British Columbia was advised accordingly, and that he should not take any steps to prohibit the washing of grade A-1 eggs. This was routine administrative procedure, and was no more secret than any other routine instructions issued to district inspectors.

I should point out, however, that the inspection of eggs in British Columbia or in any other province in Canada, in so far as it concerns eggs that are produced and sold within that province, is a provincial and not a federal responsibility. In some of the provinces they do require them to wash eggs, and in others they do not. The only position our inspectors would take with regard to it is that if eggs are being shipped into British Columbia from outside, or are being shipped from British Columbia to some other province or to the United States, then our inspector would have something to do with the inspection.

In order to overcome difficulties our inspector, when he inspects eggs that are produced and consumed in British Columbia, is operating for the provincial government of British Columbia. We have standing laws and regulations with regard to that matter. When the provincial inspector is inspecting eggs that go out of the province or come in from outside, he is acting for our department. So it would be impossible for any individual to know, without going into all the details, just which government the inspector was acting for at the time.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I wonder if I might ask the minister a supplementary question. Could he tell the house whether the article referred to and the prices paid to producers had anything to do with the regulations he mentioned?

Mr. Gardiner: I have never tried to take responsibility for what any newspaper publishes. I have enough trouble trying to keep them in line with what I say, on occasions when they publish what I do not say. I understand from what the Leader of the Opposition said last evening he had somewhat the same trouble with the Winnipeg Free Press.

PRICES PAID TO PRODUCERS IN RELATION TO FLOOR PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. It is supplementary to the previous one asked by the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough) with relation to eggs. Has the Department of Agriculture or the government any jurisdiction over the prices paid to producers for eggs in relation to the floor price which is set by the department?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): The floor that is set for eggs across Canada is an offer of the federal government to take delivery of eggs that are in storage as of December 1 in any particular year at a price of 38 cents delivered at the plant where they are stored. It is in the same position as the price of hogs. This government has no authority to set a price in the provinces with regard to what is paid for eggs by individuals doing business within the provinces. But this government has set a floor price which can be enforced by the provincial government. The provincial government is secured by the price offered by the federal Department of Agriculture and can if they see fit establish an actual price which must be paid by those doing business within the province. I might say to my hon. friend that if they do so, I hope they will do it before next summer out in the province of Saskatchewan, because I have a fairly good idea what you are going to say under certain circumstances.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED LATE RUN OF COHO SALMON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Fisheries. Has the attention of the parliamentary assistant been drawn to a news dispatch in the Vancouver Sun of Saturday, February 4, to the effect that a late run of Coho salmon has appeared in the rivers on Vancouver island? If so, would he care to make any comment at this time as to what action the department is taking in this connection?

Mr. J. Watson MacNaught (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. It has permitted me to get a copy of the Vancouver Sun and read the news dispatch in question. I asked our officials to get in touch with our officers in British Columbia to see if there was any substance in fact for this news story. If the information I receive warrants it, a further comment will be made.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO PROTECTION OF POST OFFICE AT SUNDERLAND, ONT.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Hodgson (Victoria, Ont.): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General with respect to a question I asked a week ago about the Sunderland post office, which has been robbed five times in a couple of years. Has the department installed a telephone or a burglar alarm in that office?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Postmaster General): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I have not the detailed information. I will endeavour to get it. I do not know exactly what post office the hon. member referred to. As a matter of fact, I read his question in Hansard and he simply referred to a post office in western Ontario without mentioning the name.

Mr. Hodgson: It is at Sunderland, Ontario.

MEAT

HOGS—PROCEDURE WHEN BOUGHT BELOW FLOOR PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture in order to answer the requests of certain farmers. What penalty is exacted or what course is followed in the event that a packer makes a return to the farmer for hogs sold and delivered to that packer at a price below the floor price set by the government?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Well, Mr. Speaker, there is not necessarily any penalty. It is the general practice that when attention is called to anything which is considered irregular, it is corrected. However, in so far as those matters are concerned, I doubt very much if anyone in the house or outside it can determine whether or not a regulation has been broken when all you have is the actual price paid.

That is so because in some cases the individual trucks his own hogs to the centre where they are to be marketed. In many of these cases he takes them directly to the packing plant. He must take them to the stockyards if he is going to have them come under the floor price, but whether or not he takes them directly to the plant is a matter of his own choice.

There is another means by which they get there. An individual trucker may take the farmer's hogs from his farm in a truck to the stockyard or the packing plant, and in some cases there are costs for shipping that have to be taken care of when settlement is made with the individual who sent the hogs. All these matters have to be checked before you can determine whether there has been any breach of the floor, and they are all carefully checked as soon as the individual sends in his sheet.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If there is a breaking of the regulations what happens?

Mr. Gardiner: I have not known of any, so I am not going to say what will take place if something happens which may never happen.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister be prepared to table in the house the regulation under which floor prices for hogs are established?

Mr. Gardiner: I think I can explain it now in less time than by laying the order on the table. The government offers 23 cents, basis Toronto or Montreal, for grade A hogs to anyone who finds that he cannot get that much for them from any other source. It is up to the individual to deliver them to the government in the way that is set out.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I wonder if the minister would indicate under what authority or regulation this price is established?

Mr. Gardiner: Under the authority of the government to buy anything from any person that they might choose to buy. If my hon. friend wants a full answer to what he is asking, the fact of the matter is that this government has no authority, under the constitution or otherwise, to set prices for products that are produced and sold by a person in the province to some other person in the province. It has no authority whatsoever. But we set a floor price, and any provincial government can use that as their security in setting a price which they can enforce. We cannot say it is the price. If my hon. friend wants any different circumstances than exist out in Saskatchewan, he knows how to get them.

[Later:]

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): In view of the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture with regard to floor prices on hogs, would he reconsider the answers he gave on January 12 in reply to a question by the hon. member for Moose Mountain, in which he said and I quote from Hansard—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that we have had several questions relating to hogs and eggs, and now the hon. member wishes to have the minister go over some of the answers which were given a few days ago. Could not this matter be left for debate at the proper time?

CHEESE

INQUIRY RESPECTING FUTURE IMPORTS FROM NEW ZEALAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It has to do with a question I asked the minister about ten days ago. Has the minister any information yet with respect to whether there are likely to be any imports of New Zealand cheddar cheese into Canada within the next six months?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I made inquiries at the office of the high commissioner of the government of New Zealand, and he knows of no shipments coming this way. My own office knows of no shipments. However, my crystal ball is on loan at the moment, and I cannot say what will happen in six months.

[Later:]

Mr. G. S. White (Hastings-Frontenac): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of the answer he gave to the hon. member for Oxford. Is it not correct to say that cheddar cheese from New Zealand could be imported into Canada without the knowledge or permission of the minister, or any permit granted by him?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It would have to come in Her Majesty's mail to make that possible. We have a record of any freight that is landed from a ship.

Mr. White (Hastings-Frontenac): But is it not correct to say that anybody can import cheddar cheese from New Zealand into Canada without the authority of the minister or without obtaining any permit from his department?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There is no permit required, but there is a customs duty on cheese, and the port record would show if there were an importation of cheese by ship. No permit is required. Anyone can import cheese who cares to pay the duty.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): I wonder whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce would recover his crystal ball long enough to answer now the question I asked him yesterday and tell the house when he will table the report on the 1955 operations under the Export and Import Permits Act?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am glad my hon. friend asked that question, because the report was tabled at the opening of this session.*

PUBLIC SERVICE

PREVAILING RATES EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF WAGE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Does the consideration which he and his department are giving to the wage scales of the civil service include consideration of the position of employees whose wages are set by prevailing rates? Will they too be awarded an increase at any early date?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I suppose that one should retain his patience, but surely it is obvious that the Minister of Finance, in the discharge of his duties, would be considering all these matters.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FLEMING—REFERENCE TO REPLY GIVEN BY MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the minister gave an answer to a question of mine—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Fleming: On a question of privilege; he said a return had been tabled at the opening of the session. He did not make it clear that what he referred to was today's session, and I think it is quite apparent from the laughter—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming: I think it is quite apparent from the laughter that greeted his remarks that a number of hon. members thought he meant the beginning of this session of parliament.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Obviously, the hon. member wishes to clarify an answer he has received. He can do so by asking a supplementary question and asking the minister if he meant the opening of this session or the opening of this sitting.

Mr. Fleming: Then I wish to ask the minister why, in answering this question this afternoon—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Fleming: —he did not give—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member be good enough to put his question.

Mr. Fleming: That is what I was in the midst of doing. Why did not the minister give a frank answer this afternoon instead of a misleading one?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think I was quite right in asking the hon. member for Eglinton to ask his question and not to further comment in his own fashion as to the type of answer he received.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The hon. member complained yesterday that the report had not been tabled. I did not question the fact that it had not been tabled. I looked into the situation and I found the department had the report in print in English but were waiting for the French version so both could be tabled simultaneously. I instructed yesterday that the English version be tabled today. It was tabled today, and I do not know what my hon. friend is complaining about.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Fleming: My question would be as to why the minister, in answering that question, did not state his answer in a manner that would not mislead his supporters in the house.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, February 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Harris for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Churchill.

SHIPMENT OF ARMS ABROAD

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is obvious that the hon. member for Greenwood is not going to begin his remarks until some order has been established by the house, and I quite agree with the position he is taking. I think if every hon. member who initiates a debate at this time of day would take the same attitude the hon. member is now taking, we might perhaps have order right at the beginning of our discussion following the orders of the day.

Now that I have the opportunity I should like to make one further point. Would the hon. member for Greenwood please be seated while I do so. I wish to point out that too often standing order No. 12 is being disregarded. May I take this opportunity to ask hon. members to carefully study what standing order No. 12 says. I beg to draw your attention to paragraphs 3 and 4, and in particular paragraph 4, which says:

> No member may pass between the Chair and the table, nor between the Chair and the mace when the mace has been taken off the table by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

This is the point I am making further to that which I made a moment ago in asking hon. members to maintain order as soon as the discussion begins when the orders of the day are called. The calling of the orders of the day seems to be a general signal to promenade for far too many members. Often you see hon. members passing between the Chair and a member who has the floor, or circulating in other parts of the house. Certainly that is not good decorum, and I would ask hon. members to respect the letter of this standing order which has been placed there for a purpose. I would ask hon. members for their co-operation in this regard.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is my contention, Mr. Speaker, that under a ruling given by Mr. Speaker Sproule on February 13, 1913, in which he said that a motion must not raise a question substantially identical with one on which the house has given a decision in the same session, our present discussion is out of order. It is my contention that this house on February 1 of this session made a decision on a question which is identical to the one which is about to be debated this afternoon and which was debated yesterday. This was done on a recorded vote of 153 nays to 64 yeas. The amendment to which I refer as having been discussed in the house reads as follows:

> In view of the present critical situation in the Middle East, this house expresses its strong disapproval—

These are the underlying words—

> This house expresses its strong disapproval of the government's policy of authorizing the shipment of munitions of war to countries in that area not within the NATO alliance.

It is my opinion that the house made a definite decision and that the method by which the government determines its export of arms was decided by that vote. The amendment in relation to which discussion is taking place this afternoon reads as follows:

> That in the opinion of this house, the procedure with respect to the issuing of permits for the export of arms, ammunition, and military equipment, should be referred to the standing committee on external affairs—

If we have expressed an opinion on the method by which the government has been conducting its affairs with respect to the export of munitions, I feel that we need not discuss the question further on a motion to go into supply, which has been preserved for hon. members to bring to the attention of the house matters that could not and would not come before the house under ordinary circumstances. This amendment concludes as follows:

> —with instructions to consider and to recommend to this house a definite code of procedure with respect thereto.

I feel that this house has definitely recorded its opinion as to how affairs are conducted in respect to shipments of arms, and for that reason I maintain that this amendment is entirely out of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I say a word on the point of order. I observe that the question as to order has not been raised from the government benches.

The hon. member for Kootenay East suggests in effect that these are similar motions. In my submission, Mr. Speaker, they are quite different and entirely dissimilar. My hon. friend has misread them or has misinformed himself in the course of reading them.

May I direct your attention, Mr. Speaker, to precisely what the house decided on February 1. On a government motion that you leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of ways and means, the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) on January 31 proposed the following amendment, to be found on page 724 of Hansard:

> That all the words after "That" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "in view of the present critical situation in the Middle East, this house expresses its strong disapproval of the government's policy of authorizing the shipment of munitions of war to countries in that area not within the NATO alliance; and also condemns the government for the lack of candour with which the matter has been dealt with in this house."

Later that afternoon the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) introduced the following amendment to the amendment I have just read. It is to be found at page 728 of Hansard and reads as follows:

> That the amendment be amended by inserting therein immediately after the word "alliance" the following words:
> "without at the same time making sure that peace in that area would be guaranteed either by the United Nations or by the powers that signed the tripartite agreement of 1950, namely the United States, the United Kingdom and France.

Those two amendments were defeated on division in the house on Wednesday afternoon and those questions, of course, are therefore withdrawn from the subject matter of any other resolution or motion which may be introduced in the house at this session. No one questions that. However, in comparing those two amendments with the amendment now under debate you will see that they cover quite different subject matters.

I would draw your attention, sir, to the fact that the amendments introduced on January 31 were concerned with the policy of the government in reference to the shipment of arms; second, that the shipment of arms involved was to a particular area in the world. A third question was involved in the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Prince Albert, namely condemnation of the government for lack of candor. That has not arisen in the course of this present debate.

The amendment under debate today does not concern itself with the shipment of arms to the Middle East; it has to do with the shipment of arms anywhere. The amendment of last Tuesday, January 31, concerned itself with the policy of shipping arms to that particular area. The present motion has to do with the procedure to be followed in reference to the shipment of arms anywhere in the world.

Between the subject matters of those two motions there is a world of difference. However, it must be perfectly clear to hon. members that this present amendment has been framed having in mind the necessary acceptance of the fact that the question in regard to policy as to shipments to the Middle East was settled by the vote taken last Wednesday. The house decided last Wednesday that apparently it would not entertain a proposal disapproving of government policy permitting the shipment of arms to this troubled area. The present motion says in effect, "All right; that question has been decided. Apparently the policy is to permit the shipment of arms. We will now go on from that point and concern ourselves with the question as to how those shipments are to be carried out as a matter of procedure."

That involves the question of the issuance of permits; that involves the question of what government departments are to be concerned in the issuance of permits; that involves the question of what knowledge parliament is to have of the matter; that involves the question of government method in this matter, or whether it is a matter of ministerial order or decision. It concerns the whole basis upon which these permits are to be issued.

That is quite a different field. This motion could not challenge the decision in reference to the policy that shipments of arms are to be permitted by government decision. But accepting that situation arising out of the defeat last Tuesday of the opposition amendment, this amendment goes on to say, "If shipments are going to go, it is time the house knew how"—you can spell "how" whichever way you wish—"they are to be made." This house must concern itself with the whole basis of the procedure in reference to such shipments. We are in a quite different field from that covered by the motion last week.

I point out that the subamendment introduced by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar did not enlarge the scope of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Prince Albert as I have just now discussed it.

I would also draw your attention to a very brief review of these decisions, including the one to which my hon. friend made reference, to indicate that there is no ground here for ruling out the present motion. In Beauchesne's third edition, page 139, reference 357, we find the paragraph to which my hon. friend made reference. This contains a ruling by Mr. Speaker Sproule on February 13, 1913, which ruled out a proposed amendment on the ground that a motion must not raise a question substantially identical with one on which the house has given a decision in the same session.

I emphasize those words, "substantially identical". I have pointed out that far from being identical or even substantially identical, in this case the present motion is framed on the basis that the question as to policy in regard to the shipment of arms to the Middle East and Near East was decided by the house in rejecting last Wednesday the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Prince Albert on Tuesday.

Then if you will look at the notations on Speakers' decisions on pages 714 and 715 you will see that rulings in regard to matters that are substantially identical are not given lightly. On page 714 we have a decision by Mr. Speaker Smith on April 8, 1859, when he declined to rule out a later amendment simply on the grounds now put forward by my hon. friend because several additional particulars had been added to the former motion which was said to be substantially similar. Even the addition of several further particulars in that case was regarded as ground for holding that the two motions were not substantially identical.

Then on page 715 we have a decision by Mr. Speaker Cockburn given on April 3, 1871, when he ruled in effect that the amendment with which he was dealing related to an act which had already been before the house, had been reviewed by the house and had been the subject of amending legislation at the same session. The later amendment sought to be introduced de novo therefore was ruled out of order because the subject matter had been disposed of already. I have already made mention of the ruling of Mr. Speaker Smith where additional particulars were contained in an amendment.

It is quite obvious, I think, that we have here a clear distinction. The only possible effect of the amendment now under debate is that it does not attempt to reopen the decision made by the house last Wednesday on the amendment of the hon. member for Prince Albert. It goes into a new field. It accepts the decision made by the house and goes on to deal with a new question arising as a consequence of the decision of the house at that time.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) has felt that this is at least a borderline case because apparently he has done considerable homework in order to counteract any arguments that might be made. The hon. member has suggested that this is an entirely new field. I was in the house for practically the whole debate, and I heard no new arguments. The whole debate revolved around whether we should or should not have shipped 15 or 25 unarmed planes to Egypt. The only change in the whole situation was the number of imbecilic stories through which I had to suffer.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Byrne: I would draw your attention to the standing order dealing with irrelevancy or repetition in connection with amendments. If this amendment is not a repetition—

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, on a point—

Mr. Speaker: There cannot be two members in possession of the floor at the same time.

Mr. Drew: I am rising on a point of order. I should like your ruling as to whether it is proper to refer to debate in this house as imbecilic. If it is, then we will have a word that perhaps can be employed more widely.

Mr. Speaker: I did not hear the expression being used. It may have been when I was looking up the authorities. I did notice that some hon. members were reacting unfavourably to what the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) had said at one point, but I am sorry I did not hear it. Is the expression just mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition one that the hon. member used?

Mr. Byrne: I was referring to stories which had taken up the time of the house when an important matter was being discussed, and I considered that they were imbecilic. If that casts any reflection upon the hon. member I am quite happy to withdraw it.

Mr. Knowles: Before I indulge in a speech on this point of order, would it be fair to ask Your Honour if there is any doubt at all about it? It seems to me there is no doubt that this motion is sufficiently different from the other one that it could hardly be ruled out of order on the grounds suggested by the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne).

Mr. Speaker: I would say I have no doubt as to the position I want to take with respect to this matter. I do sympathize, however, with the point that has been raised. This I think, in fairness to the hon. member for Kootenay East, I must say because I have in mind at the moment a reasoning by Mr. Speaker Black with which I find a great deal of sympathy. He said that you cannot divorce a speech that is being made from the motion to which the speeches lead. This is why I stressed that point the other evening in the middle of the speech made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill). If you speak in a certain direction and end in another, it is difficult to know exactly where the house is going, because the opener of the debate sets the pattern.

There is no doubt that the debate that took place the other day was on a motion to discuss external affairs. That was the intention, and the debate was arranged for that purpose. It was to be a wide debate on external affairs. Prior to the debate on external affairs the Secretary of State for External Affairs had made a speech during the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, in which he said, as reported on page 463 of Hansard:

> Now, what are the principles, the rules governing the shipment of military equipment from this country? These principles are the result of careful consideration and are, I think, sound and reasonable. The decisions based on them are made only after studying the relevant factors in every case submitted to us. The system of controls and checks through which policies and decisions are carried out is as effective as that of any other free country.

Then he dealt with the procedure, which is precisely what is being hit at the moment by the amendment moved to the motion that the Speaker leave the chair. It is the policy referred to in that speech and the provisions made to carry out these policies that were hit by the motion of want of confidence moved the other day. So if the speeches are to be the same, leading to two different amendments, there is a good ground for the hon. member for Kootenay East to think that there is similarity between the two motions.

I am at the moment considering that a motion for the Speaker to leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply is an opposition motion. It is one that gives the opposition great latitude, and I would not want to curtail the rights of the opposition in airing grievances. I would simply conclude this little argument by saying that the amendment is sufficiently different from that which was debated and decided upon the other day by the house, to be considered to be not substantially the same. I was not here last evening—as a matter of fact, I almost adjourned the house by mistake—but I do ask hon. members again, if they repeat arguments used in a former debate, not to make the same speeches which would have applied to the motion of want of confidence that was debated and defeated the other day. They should direct their speeches closely to the subject matter of the amendment they have moved, namely the procedure.

Some hon. members on both sides have referred to rulings that have been made, leaving perhaps the impression that the rulings made by former Speakers were proclaiming a doctrine that is new. It is the assertion of an old rule of parliament, which I find in Bourinot, fourth edition, page 328, and which reads as follows:

> It is, however, an ancient rule of parliament that "no question or motion can regularly be offered if it is substantially the same with one on which the judgment of the house has already been expressed during the current session". The old rule of parliament reads: "That a question being once made, and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again, but must stand as a judgment of the house". Unless such a rule were in existence, the time of the house might be used in the discussion of motions of the same nature and contradictory decisions would be sometimes arrived at in the course of the same session.

Hon. members may consider too—and this is a point for future amendments which may be moved to motions that the Speaker leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply—that if the other day the house said that the policy of the government in dealing with this matter should not be condemned and if it decided today that the procedure under which they execute their policies should be condemned, then would we not have two contradictory decisions? It is a difficult point.

[Mr. Speaker.]

As I say, the motion in this instance is an opposition motion, and I would let the opposition benefit from the latitude which is usually given to motions of this kind.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in what you had to say about the promenade which usually takes place after the orders of the day. I would like to think that the rather larger numbers facing me today are due to a desire to hear what I am about to say. However I do not entirely believe it, because I think it has more to do with discipline than with any desire to hear me. It relates, no doubt, to a small incident the other day as a result of which I understand precautions have been taken so that it shall not occur again.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member at this moment is under the domination of a rule which says that, whenever he begins speaking, his remarks should be relevant to the question before the house.

Mr. Macdonnell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: He needs discipline.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Speaker, I am venturing a short interlude in this debate because it seems to me, as far as my short experience of this house goes, rather unprecedented. I have often criticized the government before with a good heart, but I must say I never felt before that the government had made itself so supremely ridiculous as it has done in this case.

That is my excuse for being prepared to support the resolution that was laid before us, which makes a very simple suggestion, namely reference to a standing committee so that a definite code of procedure may be adopted.

It seems to me this thing has gone from bad to worse. Even today we are disappointed to learn that the undertaking that was given a short time ago is evidently now considered to be too comprehensive, and we understand from the Prime Minister today that it is being restricted.

Now that we have had a little look inside to see what happens, one begins to wonder whether this all-wise government does much of its other business in the same way. Why should it all be confined to the export of arms? Therefore I am proposing to discuss this resolution for a few minutes and try to assess the reasons, if there are any reasons, which the government might have for not adopting it.

I said last night that, so far as we could see from the evidence we had before us, in these series of occurrences the government has been proceeding by a kind of hodgepodge of misunderstanding among two or three of its members. That is my justification. To me it is as clear as crystal. This is no ordinary matter. It is perfectly clear that this matter is affecting the conscience of the people of Canada, yet how was it dealt with by the government? It was dealt with in a routine way, as if it were supremely unimportant. I shall have a word to say about the famous order in council. I shall try to give a very short saga of the order in council which we discovered finally was not an order in council. It really seemed to evaporate into thin air.

At any rate it is perfectly clear, as I say, that there was bungling and confusion and anything but the kind of efficiency which this government likes to pretend it has. As I say, it was all treated casually. When I think about these 34 centres, sensitive centres I believe the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) called them, and when I try to apply to them the reasoning the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) put forward last night, the vivid picture he gave of arms starting off in the casual way they do start, going off across the horizon to God knows where, and the utter impossibility of our being able to know what happens to them after that; when I think that might happen in literally dozens of cases throughout the world, I find myself extremely shocked. I also think a great many other people were shocked.

The other thing I want to know is how long this would have gone on. It was not found out by the government as such. It was found out by the opposition, by parliament.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What was found out? Will my hon. friend tell us what was found out?

Mr. Drew: Not too much.

Mr. Harris: Make up your mind.

Mr. Macdonnell: The shipment of these things we are talking about, the subject matter of the order in council which the minister told us the other day was not an order in council. It shrank during the course of its career in the House of Commons. I think we all know just what we are talking about, even though there has been a good deal of confusion about the matter. What a display this has been.

Although I am not an adherent of the government, I think I can honestly say I was shocked to find that a government, which after all is the only government we have, could do the things it has done and come here in a complete state of misapprehension among its various members, and then proceed to sound off with really the most extraordinary series of mistakes. I would have thought that when this matter arose the government would have made very certain that there would not be any more mistakes made, and that there would be no further openings given to us.

I want to spend a moment or two, not long, in giving what I call the saga of this order in council, because I think it is very desirable for us to remind ourselves just what has happened. Then I propose to ask very briefly just what the reasons could be that the government would refuse to allow parliament to have a hand in the matter. If they will not it seems to me we may well wonder whether the legend on the labour publication the other day, which referred to parliament as one of the agencies of the government, was so wrong after all, and whether that is not the way they do regard parliament.

I want to give the saga of the order in council. On January 24 the Minister of Trade and Commerce said that the date of the order in council was July 7. On January 27 the order in council had a strange experience, because during the course of three hours it shrank. As appears at page 599 of Hansard of January 27, the Leader of the Opposition directed a question to the Prime Minister to which he answered as follows:

> I shall see just what the order in council is and endeavour to have it available before the debate on external affairs.

Later that afternoon, as appears at page 639 of Hansard, the Minister of Trade and Commerce rose on a question of privilege and said:

> . . . I should like to correct a misstatement I made through carelessness. I am reminded by a question addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) this morning that on January 4—

I think it should be January 24.

> —I referred to an order in council which conveyed approval of the shipment of Harvard training aircraft to the Middle East. I had in mind that orders in council were required for every export shipment, but that is not the case. They are required only in case government property is concerned. In the case of an export permit relating to private property, if it has anything to do with military affairs or if it is going to be a sensitive area—

One of the 34.

> —ministerial concurrence is required by the ministers of external affairs, defence and trade and commerce.

Finally we have the death knell, as it were, of the order in council, at page 787 of Hansard. This was on February 2, two or three days later, when the Leader of the Opposition again asked the Prime Minister about the order in council and the permit and the Prime Minister said:

Mr. Speaker, that is a document which for other reasons it is not practicable to make public.

Later the Leader of the Opposition said:

Mr. Speaker, may I then ask the Prime Minister what document there is that can be placed before the house which will show what actually took place on July 7?

The Prime Minister replied:

There is no document which can be placed before the house to show what actually took place on July 7. The hon. gentleman has been informed of how the matter was dealt with. It was dealt with by communications between ministers and those have invariably been regarded as confidential documents and have to be treated as confidential documents so that the ministers who are all jointly responsible for that which has been done, even under statute, by any one of them may see to it that they are properly informed of when and how they are going to have this joint responsibility.

In other words, as we see, in the course of about a week the order in council shrank into a permit, then it shrank into an understanding and then it really seemed to disappear into thin air. I think what happened is worthy of being compared with the writings of the author of "Alice in Wonderland". You remember these lines:

He thought he saw a banker's clerk descending from a bus,
He looked again and saw it was a hippopotamus.

Really it seems to me that this order in council, which has changed its character throughout, is almost worthy of being described in that way.

Mr. Rowe: It started out as a hippopotamus.

Mr. Macdonnell: What we are suggesting is a code of procedure. As I say, this is no ordinary business. This is a matter which touches the public conscience, and I think perhaps that is going to become more evident as time goes on. I should like to read a short extract from an editorial that appeared in the Toronto Star of January 28. It reads in part as follows:

In the present state of explosive tension in the Middle East, there can be no assurance whatever that the arms and equipment sent by Canada will not be used for aggressive purposes. Therefore, to ship arms there in any quantity or in any ratio is morally irresponsible; and it is inconsistent with a policy of promoting peace.

I quote again later—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Is this the editor of the Toronto Star speaking? Are you reading from an editorial?

Mr. Macdonnell: I am reading an editorial.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Good. It is illegal, but go ahead.

[Mr. Macdonnell.]

Mr. Fulton: Is that a ministerial order or an order in council?

Mr. Harkness: You have now issued your permit.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Speaker, the acting speaker indicates that I may proceed. I continue:

A better way, we suggest, would be for the west to halt its arms shipments to the Israelis and Arabs, guarantee the existing frontiers against aggression by either side until a peace treaty can be signed, and back up the guarantee by placing international patrols in Palestine. This should be done through the United Nations if possible; and if that is not possible, it should be done by any combination of nations willing to take part.

The amendment has been put before the house as something which we are entitled to ask because of the unusual circumstances, because of the ineptitude which we have seen and which has shocked us, and because there is no sign that I can discern that the government is really going to change its ways.

I ask myself what reasons there are against the acceptance of this simple suggestion, namely reference to a committee to consider and to recommend to this house a definite code of procedure. There are two reasons which occur to me. The first is that there may be something more to be discovered, that there may be things which the government knows or suspects or fears. I do not want to think that at all; but if the matter is left as it is, I suggest that that consideration, that suspicion, that fear will remain. I think it will.

Surely the government does not suspect that in the plane which took the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Winters) down to Rio there are any concealed machine guns, or that the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Sinclair), whose recovery we all hope for most sincerely, took a few rifle barrels down with him. Surely there is no fear of that kind. But that is one of the reasons which will be assigned if our suggestion is not followed. People will certainly ask, are there any skeletons in the cupboard? Of course when you find so many skeletons in one cupboard, you certainly may become suspicious of the others.

The other reason would be the one we know so well, namely that for the government to face the thought that parliament be allowed to take a part or to do anything is something they cannot do. It is just a thought which they cannot face. Here in July last there was an interlude in which certain things happened, and I think the Canadian people were interested. One might have thought that certain views might have been changed but I find little sign of that result.

Here is what I find about the Minister of Trade and Commerce. His feeling about what took place then was that we were just tiresome. If my memory serves me aright, at that time he said, as he listened to the speeches from this side of the house, that they seemed to him to come from some strange land. I hope I do not do injustice to his wording. I think I express what was in his mind. Then on January 16 last he said this, as reported at page 125 of Hansard:

> What was the purpose of keeping us here during the month of July? It was to prevent the government from getting authority on a reasonably long-term basis to deal with the materials in short supply and to allocate those materials to the best advantage of the Canadian economy.

When I think of all the labour we devoted to the matter and all the instruction we gave to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I am disappointed that we made no greater impression than that; but there it is, and you must face the facts.

I think we must face the fact that the government may take the attitude which they so often have taken in the past, namely that to allow parliament to play any part in this matter is something that is just not done by well-regulated governments who have been in power for 20 years and who feel their oats.

The only thing I can do is suggest to the government that, just as happened last summer with respect to another matter, this matter is beginning to reach the public mind. I think there may be an increasing appreciation of the situation if it goes on, and I suggest to the government that as it was parliament—through the opposition—that brought this matter to light, and as it is parliament that is bringing it still further to light and is impressing it on the minds of the people of Canada, the people of Canada may well be surprised if the government takes the attitude that parliament may have nothing to do with this matter and says: We have blundered; we have been inept; we have been forgetful; we have been careless; we have been badly organized; nevertheless we are still the government and we are not going to allow parliament to have anything whatever to do with this matter.

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support this amendment I have in mind the remarks that have been made in this house today. I have no intention of describing incidents which have taken place in the past couple of weeks or even in the past couple of days. It seems to me that they are already on the record and there they will stand.

I might say that I approach this amendment with some diffidence because, as must be apparent to all members of this house, I certainly do not belong in the field of military experts. At a display of arms and munitions I confess to being somewhat awed. But I make no apology for that fact, because I believe that any ordinary citizen should be awed by the tremendous forces for human destruction which are today in the hands of men. I therefore speak today, Mr. Speaker, as an ordinary citizen concerned for the future of this nation and also for the sons and the young husbands and fathers who will inevitably be sent to defend us in the event that we should at any time find ourselves flung into war.

I do not want anyone to think for a moment that I am a pacifist; I am not. I am not an isolationist; I am far from it. Under NATO we are committed to co-operation with and support of our friends. As members of the British commonwealth of nations we are also committed to support the welfare of all the other members of the commonwealth. This is our family, and what involves them also involves us. However, when it comes to other countries I believe strongly that the sale of arms to small countries is not a deterrent to war. No, Mr. Speaker; I think the deterrent is in the knowledge that the great powers which are banded together in the United Nations will say no; and that not only will they say no but that they will back up what they say with action. Under the United Nations we are committed to trying to stop wars, not to fomenting them. I should like to read a couple of quotations from the preamble and the purposes of the United Nations as set out in the United Nations charter. At the beginning of the preamble we have these words:

> We the peoples of the United Nations determined to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, . . .

Those are the very first words. I am one of those in this house old enough to have lived through two world wars. I know there are many hon. members in this house who have not lived through two. There are also a great many who fought in two, and some who fought in the last one. To them I am sure a different picture must be presented than that which is presented to me as an individual who, because of my sex, was not permitted to fight in either war as a direct combatant. However, there was no one who stayed at home in those wars who did not do his or her part in some capacity or other. So these words in this charter, Mr. Speaker, touch our hearts as well as our intelligence

In the preamble it goes on to say, after citing the other determinations:

> And for these ends, > to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and > to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and > to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, . . .

Yet we say to other countries, "Here are the weapons but do not use them"; or we say, "Here are the weapons and we will not look while you use them." Nothing here set out lends support to a policy of supplying arms, and certainly not to supplying arms to both sides in a controversy.

The purposes of the United Nations are outlined in the very first paragraph, which reads as follows:

> To maintain international peace and security, and to that end to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace.

As I said previously, Mr. Speaker, the greatest deterrent to war is the knowledge that the great powers will say no and will back it up with action. Yesterday in this house we had as a guest one of the greatest statesmen in the world, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. Included in his remarks were some very pertinent comments. He spoke about the last war, and how even when we were sure victory had been won there were still things that had to be accomplished. He made this statement:

> He would still be a rash man or an ill-informed one who would attempt a confident prophecy for mankind today.

I think that is what bothers all of us, the uncertainty. Where are we heading? What is in front of us? When even several members of the cabinet of one of the great nations of the world cannot agree as to what has taken place under their own jurisdiction, no wonder the people of that nation feel some uncertainty as to their future.

After listing the various good points, as he called them, Sir Anthony had this to say about the bad points or, as he called them, those on the debit side. He said:

> First, the increasing hazards which some are prepared to take.

I hope we will digest those remarks of his, because in all the excitement of yesterday I think possibly some of us were more concerned with giving welcome to a welcome guest than we were with digesting his words. He listed the following:

> First, the increasing hazards which some are prepared to take. Second, the dangers of aggression by countries which believe they can ignore the deterrent. Third, the continued existence of local disputes, whose consequences could engulf the world.

There were others, Mr. Speaker, but those three I should like to place on the record. It seems to me that the final one is the most dangerous of those three. It is dangerous because it could be built up on the first two. I do not believe for a moment that the people of this country get terribly excited about what happens a few thousand miles away if they think it is going to stay right there. But there is no power on earth that can draw a little line around a conflagration once it has started. There is no power that can say that when one tree in a forest catches fire the whole forest will not go; and that is what we are up against. How do we know that if a conflagration breaks out in some remote part of this earth today we will not be caught up in it before it is finished? We do not know. We are sitting on a keg of dynamite while the ministers of the crown throw lighted matches in a fine spirit of abandon.

If trouble breaks out somewhere, Canadian troops will inevitably be involved. If we are drawn into trouble, then this whole country will say to us, why did you not do something about this in the initial stages? Why did you not foresee that trouble would engulf us? Did you not live through two wars? Did you not see a minor incident in a remote country build itself into a war which engulfed all the peoples on this earth? Every member in this house, Mr. Speaker, represents thousands of citizens, and it is the duty of every member in this house to know what course we as a nation are going to follow. It is for that reason we think the matter of supplying arms and munitions should go to a committee where it could be properly assessed, a committee of experts on external affairs.

Yesterday in this house a statement was made by the Prime Minister with reference to the lifting of the embargo on the export of arms and munitions. Last evening, listening to the news on the radio, I cannot say I was surprised but I was interested to note that without exception the attitude taken by the newscasters was that this opened the gate again for a resumption of the activities which had been denounced in this house last week. Here we go all over again; more weapons to both sides.

We are bound on subjects of this sort, to obtain the considered opinion of a standing committee of this house charged with the responsibility of delving into the pros and cons of each individual case as it comes up. I am agreed that each case must rest on its own merits, but the overall policy must be sound. Let us have no more of this trafficking in weapons; let us have no more of these invitations to war.

I said a few minutes ago that I was no pacifist and I am no isolationist. It is well known, Mr. Speaker, that I have always supported the defence preparedness of this nation and will continue to do so. I am satisfied to leave it to those who are experts in the field to determine what is adequate. I do not know whether or not the defences which we have today for Canada are adequate, and I should be talking nonsense if I attempted to establish myself as being knowledgeable on that subject.

However, it is my firm belief that we do not dare relax our preparations; we do not dare to let up in our efforts. It is also my belief that in the event we are drawn into war every able-bodied man and woman in this country must be available for the duties they are required to do, whether it be in the front lines or at home; and it is becoming increasingly apparent that these two posts of duty may very well be synonymous the next time a war occurs.

Therefore we must exercise care, Mr. Speaker. So we feel that these decisions must not be made in several departments of government without reference to other departments of government. We believe that anything as important as the export of arms and munitions must go to a place which will act as a clearing house for the various departments of government.

As I said, I believe we must be prepared, and I believe we cannot relax; but I object most vigorously to a slap-happy policy which makes of our people pawns in a game where the stakes are the lives of our young men.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as my leader the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) indicated last evening, we shall support the amendment that is now before the house if a vote on that amendment should become necessary. It does seem to me that the government might even yet give favourable consideration to the idea of accepting this proposition without making it a matter of want of confidence. At the same time I should like to commend my friend and neighbour the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre for bringing this matter before the house in the terms in which his amendment has been drawn.

I think we are all aware of the origins of the present discussion, and we are aware of the origins of this desire; nevertheless what is sought now is something totally different from what was under debate last week.

What is now sought is that permission be given to the standing committee on external affairs to review the whole question of the procedures that are employed in the issuing of export permits for munitions and materials of war. It is also suggested that that committee might be given the power to recommend a code which the government might in turn consider. I think it is obvious to all of us as the result of things that have happened in the house in the last two or three weeks that such a review is highly desirable, and I wish to commend our friends to the right, the hon. members of the Progressive Conservative party, on the excellent speeches they have made in connection with this matter.

I intend, Mr. Speaker, that my remarks in support of this amendment should be very brief. It is not my purpose to repeat the arguments that have been advanced by hon. members to my right or the arguments given last night by my leader, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. However, I do think emphasis might also be laid on the fact that not only is there a certain amount of uncertainty and bungling on the part of the government with respect to this matter which calls for a review, but it should also be remembered that there are certain private interests in the country which seem to have no objection to trafficking in the weapons and the materials of war.

We have been reminded during the discussions on this matter that there are two main categories of military equipment. There is that equipment which is in the possession of the services or the Department of National Defence, and there is also any equipment which commercial interests may have for sale to other countries. In addition to our concern as to the procedures with respect to war materials owned by the government or in the possession of the services, I think we should also be concerned as to the procedures by means of which permits are granted to private firms to export war materials of any kind to other nations.

In that connection I would remind hon. members that the morality of some corporations in a matter of this kind is not of the highest order, as was called to our attention back in 1943 in the case of Falconbridge Nickel Mines, Limited. Other hon. members who were here with some of us at that time may recall that on May 11, 1943, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar drew to the attention of the house a few rather shocking sentences in the remarks of the president of Falconbridge Nickel Mines Limited, which he made at the annual general meeting of the shareholders of that company which had been held on Wednesday, April 21, 1943—

Mr. Harris: And which everyone condemned.

Mr. Knowles: The Minister of Finance is getting a bit ahead of me. He is perfectly right, it was condemned by everyone from the prime minister of the day down. But the point is, Mr. Speaker, that we should not forget that instances of this kind indicate the morality of some of these people.

Despite the interjection of the Minister of Finance I think hon. members should recall what it was the president of this company said to the shareholders of the company on that occasion. He had been discussing the position of the company's Norway refinery which was then in German hands. So far as the balance sheet of the company was concerned he said they might as well forget it for the time being, but he went on to say this:

> Incidentally, you will be glad to learn—as I was—that through indirect channels it is reported that your Norway refinery is safe so far and is being maintained. It is in operation by your Norwegian staff, under German control, on the same Norwegian nickel-copper ore-production that we formerly handled on toll basis.

As the Minister of Finance has pointed out, once that statement was drawn to the attention of parliament by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar it was indeed strongly condemned by Mr. King and by others, for we all agreed that profits were hardly something to be glad about if it meant they were accumulated at the expense of material being used against our own troops overseas.

I should also like to remind hon. members of the statement which was made on September 12, 1939, by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, when there was a discussion about a certain limitation on profits. This is what the minister said, as recorded on page 179 of Hansard of September 12, 1939:

> I can say to my hon. friend that from that day to this the defence purchasing board has done its very best to place contracts on that basis—

The basis referred to was the 5 per cent profit limitation.

> —and has used every pressure that could be brought to bear in the form of patriotism and so on, but to date it has not succeeded in placing a single contract on that basis.

I know that statement has been argued backward and forward a good many times since, but there it was, an honest revelation by the minister of the experience which he had had with certain profit-seeking interests in this country. I mention these two things, the Falconbridge statement in 1943 and the statement by the minister of munitions and supply, as he was then, in 1939, to indicate that the sinners in this matter of trafficking in weapons are not limited to ministers on the front benches opposite, but are also to be found among the ranks of the producers of war equipment.

Because there are these other interests, interests that think only of profit, interests glad to get orders anywhere in the world, I submit that for that reason, as well as because of the bungling we have seen on the part of the government since we came here for this session, it is time that the whole question of the procedures employed in the issuing of permits for the export of arms and ammunition should be reviewed by a committee of this house. Therefore we are glad to support the amendment which is now before us.

Mr. Ray Thomas (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) indicated last night, we welcome this amendment. We feel that it is good and timely, because events of the last few weeks have indicated that there are severe weaknesses in the cabinet, that it is shot through with indecision and lack of co-operation. We certainly hope that the cabinet are not as loosely knit in all their other decisions as they have been in regard to shipments of arms to various parts of the world. There does not appear to be any co-ordination among departments, and one minister does not seem to know exactly what is going on in other departments even though the actions may be closely related.

As has been pointed out, not only has there been a lack of co-operation among various departments in this regard; the Prime Minister seemed to be completely at sea as to what was going on. I quite agree with what the hon. member for Macleod said last night, that the opposition should not have to step into the breach and plug the holes caused by administrative blunders. I agree also with him when he says that when the government ceases to be able to govern, it is time to throw it out.

But we must stop to think and realize that we will not have an election coming up very soon. The government does have to run the country until an election is called. Therefore we will have to help to support them, we will have to put our arms around them and guide their faltering steps, until they can be replaced by an aroused Canadian people through an election.

I think we are somewhat similar to a sportsman out in the woods who finds that his boat has sprung a leak. He would like to buy another one, but until such time as he can get to a large centre he must simply plug up the hole and keep going. That is the position in which we find ourselves. It is the duty of all hon. members, including those of the opposition, to try to keep the government afloat and save the country from absolute ruin until such time as a competent government can be elected.

I was amazed at the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) interjecting in that regard, because he should remember how in 1952 and 1953 the Liberal government in British Columbia had taken the same attitude. They were thrown out hard and thrown out fast. As a matter of fact they were defeated so decisively and their morale was lowered to such an extent that they will not run candidates in by-elections any more.

The proposal to send this matter to the committee on external affairs is I think good, and it should bring about a system of co-ordinated action as far as the government is concerned with regard to the shipment of arms. Then we in the opposition, as well as all hon. members, will be able to obtain some sort of coherent information when we ask questions in the house.

Although we agree with the amendment, I do not think I can agree wholeheartedly with the sentiment which provokes it. Several hon. members of the official opposition would seem to favour some degree of isolationism. As much as I dislike the thought of war—I do not want to go back again, and I do not want to see my children go to war—I cannot agree that our refusal to export arms is going to rectify the situation.

I do agree that there should be a great deal of thought and consideration before arms shipments are made to any part of the world, particularly to countries which are not our NATO allies. To be quite frank, I do not think the government has given proper consideration to the shipment of arms to countries throughout the world, but if we tie our hands so that we cannot make any arms shipments then we place ourselves in the position where we cannot ship arms to a country endangered by aggression.

We must remember that the iron curtain countries are shipping arms all over the world. They are gaining the favour of those countries by arms shipments, and if we refuse to ship arms we will only alienate the affections of a good part of the people of those countries. We simply cannot afford to do that. It would not be proper to permit the Soviet union to make arms shipments to certain areas without making at least some attempt to maintain the status quo.

There is one more point in this regard I should like to deal with, one which I think is most important. If we tie ourselves down so we canot make arms shipments we may be laying a good part of the world open to communist aggression.

Speaking last evening the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) seemed to be highly indignant that other hon. members were not taking part in the debate. He seemed to indicate that they were the only ones willing to speak. I would remind the hon. member that they were in a position to go ahead and speak because they were in a position to be prepared. We in the other groups in the house had no idea of what was coming up, and we could not possibly be prepared. They had a veil of secrecy over the whole thing, the same veil of secrecy they seem to abhor in the Liberal government.

Mr. Martin: You mean the Tories had the veil of secrecy?

Mr. Thomas: That is right. They had as much secrecy about that motion as they seem to deplore in the Liberal government. I would certainly hope that air of secrecy would not be the attitude taken if we ever had a Tory government in Ottawa. I mention that only briefly because I do not think there is any possibility of that, so I shall not say any more about it.

As I said before, I can support the amendment because it gives us a chance to brace the weakening foundations of this government to the point where it may be able to stand upon its own feet until another election is called. However, I cannot support the sentiment attached to it, which appears to be isolation, as has been pointed out by the various speakers of the Tory party.

Mr. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I think the last statement of the previous speaker is undoubtedly off the beam. Certainly I do not think any member of the Conservative party is a pacifist or isolationist to any degree whatsoever. I have risen to speak on this motion because I feel the subject matter is of very great importance. There is a definite moral principle attached to it. Also I believe it is one of the most important subjects we have discussed since I came here in the fall of 1953. I would just like to read the motion:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the procedure with respect to the issuing of permits for the export of arms, ammunition, and military equipment, should be referred to the standing committee on external affairs with instructions to consider and to recommend to this house a definite code of procedure with respect thereto.

That is simple enough. It speaks for itself. It simply means that we are suggesting that this matter be discussed by the committee on external affairs and that it be given power to study and examine it from all angles and, having examined and studied the matter, it then brings a report back to the House of Commons.

To me there are two main questions involved. First, if we are going to traffic in arms, should we not know exactly what is going on and also exactly where it might lead? Second, it seems to me there is a question as to whether we should be in this deplorable business at all.

I do not propose to argue the factual or technical aspects of the debate. That has been done more capably than I can do it, by other members of my party much more equipped to talk on the subject in a detailed way than I am and with a world of experience. However, I cannot conceive of a more confused approach than has been taken by this government over the past weeks. What has been the attitude by this government in the past? They have given lip service to a role as peacemakers and go-betweens for quarrelling governments.

What do we find? The Secretary of State for External Affairs made a trip to Europe on a fact-finding basis, presumably a good-will tour. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has been acting like a carpet-bag pedlar of munitions, willing to sell to practically any nation in the world. The Prime Minister says it is a competitive business. Is this not what some of the huge armament manufacturers have done in past years? Undoubtedly they have also in the past been responsible for starting wars; perhaps small conflagrations, but at the same time they have fomented strife simply to further assist in selling arms.

I wonder how many Canadians actually know what has been going on. I doubt if very many do. Quite frankly I know I had not realized, until this debate commenced, just what has been happening. As the hon. member for Hamilton West said a few moments ago, and I am repeating those words, I am no pacifist, I am no isolationist; I am a Canadian first, last and always, but I certainly would like to know what is going on and whither it all may lead. The present policy of the government might well be thought to be gambling in lives—of the people of some other nation, possibly, but could it not eventually lead to Canada?

We are told that what is sold is scrap or so-called obsolete weapons. Why are we selling scrap? I am asking that question. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has remarked in this house that there is a shortage of practically everything except wheat. Is there a shortage of steel? Why should we not keep this scrap in Canada? It could well be used here. Just how obsolete are the so-called obsolete weapons? In my estimation they are not obsolete to the people who are receiving them. Weapons can become obsolete only when they can be replaced with something better.

I feel the government's attitude must fall into one of three categories: first, acquiescence in the present hopeless position; second, shame at their mishandling of the whole business; third, outright alarm that at long last they have been found completely negligent.

I would like to know how this whole issue sits on the conscience of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who have for so long posed as champions of peace. Has not this exposé of government traffic in arms made a mockery, for instance, of our role at the United Nations? The United Nations is dedicated to peace. We have had disarmament conferences at the United Nations to talk peace. In my estimation we have been doing a great deal to foment trouble in various parts of the world.

Furthermore, Canada entered the North Atlantic Treaty Organization as a purely defensive alliance. Time and again, at home and abroad, government spokesmen have reiterated a Canadian policy of non-aggression. Now we find these are merely lofty sentiments. Apparently these sentiments are not to be allowed to interfere with what might be termed the cold practicality of turning what the government considers to be an honest dollar and which might well turn out to be blood money.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. I am going to interrupt the hon. member for a moment and tell him quite frankly that he is causing me some embarrassment. I have no desire to interfere with the course of a debate which I know has been allowed to become fairly broad and which I take it should, in the opinion of the house, be allowed to become fairly broad, but I think the hon. member's remarks have brought me to the position where I must point out to him that the meat of the motion we are now discussing is that the procedure with respect to the issuing of permits for the export of arms should be referred to the standing committee on external affairs. Of course I have left out a lot of the words of the amendment.

In order to justify our right to debate that particular motion at this time it was pointed out at some length earlier this afternoon that what we are discussing is not—and I am using my own words—the morals or ethics or lack of them in the exporting of arms but the question whether or not the procedures adopted by the government should be referred to a committee for investigation and recommendation. I am going to ask the hon. member and those who will be following him to try to direct their remarks largely to that question because, as was pointed out from this rostrum earlier today, otherwise we are going to have, if not in resolution at least in debate, a complete repetition of what we had last week. I feel quite sure the hon. member for Perth and others realize the difficulty in which that puts the Chair and will do their best to assist us.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not wish to put you in any difficulty. That would be the farthest thing from my mind. However, I feel quite strongly about this matter, and my reason for approaching it in this way is to try to show that there are reasons of humanity across the whole world why it should be referred to the committee on external affairs.

As I mentioned at the outset of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I am going to be brief and I am not going to deal with the technical or factual side of the question as I consider others to be more capable of doing so than myself. But I should simply like to say that there is either a right side or a wrong side. If we are on the right side it must be uncompromisingly so. If we are wrong, then I think our policy should be changed. How can we find out except by referring the matter to the committee on external affairs? If we do not do this, it seems to me it will be a downright shame for Canada.

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address myself rather briefly to the amendment before the house.

Mr. Byrne: How about wheat?

Mr. Zaplitny: You will hear plenty about wheat. The amendment calls for referring this matter to the external affairs committee for the purpose of establishing a procedure. Two things that are rather noticeable have been missing from the debate up to this point. One is the fact that no member of the government nor, as far as I am aware, any member of the party supporting the government, has had anything whatever to say on the amendment.

Mr. Byrne: We decided the question last week.

Mr. Zaplitny: That makes it rather difficult to know just what the intention of the government is with respect to the amendment, whether they intend to sit out the debate, assume that the amendment is a straight matter of want of confidence and treat it as such or whether they would prefer on this occasion to treat it on its merits.

The leader of this group has placed on the record the attitude of our party. We are supporting the amendment in the hope that it will bring about a method by which members of the house, and in that way the public, can become better informed as to what is being done and how shipments of arms abroad are made. That is the reason why it would be very valuable if some member of the government were to take part in the debate and set out the attitude of the government. If they feel the amendment is not justified, then there has certainly been plenty of time in which they could have so informed the house and stated their reasons therefor. The silence of the government indicates that either they are supremely disinterested in the question as such or they have no defence whatever to offer, and I hope it will soon become clear which one of these reasons prevails.

In my opinion the other thing that is lacking so far is that while the amendment calls for referring the question to a committee for the purpose of setting up a code of procedure, so far as I am aware not one member of the official opposition has yet stated just what procedure or method they would like to adopt. It is easy enough to call for a code of procedure, but I think the house and the country deserve a more explicit statement of what is in the minds of those who have moved the amendment.

Mr. Martin: It is quite clear they have nothing in mind.

Mr. Zaplitny: That of course puts them right in line with government policy. I have a proposal to make which I hope will commend itself to the members of the Progressive Conservative group, my friends to the left and perhaps even to the members of the government. If we are going to exercise public control over the export of arms, and it is understood that we are now referring to arms shipments to other than NATO or commonwealth countries, then I think the best way to do it would be to set up a crown company which would be charged with the responsibility of being the clearing house for this type of export. The crown company should be responsible to parliament, report to parliament through a minister, and report to a committee. Unless something of that nature is set up then I am afraid we would not be very far ahead if the government, for example, were to say that they were quite prepared to let the members of the external affairs committee ask questions about the issuing of export permits and so on but of course they would guarantee no answers. That type of thing has happened before.

As a matter of fact it was the subject of a motion on the part of the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) last year when he complained bitterly about some of the things that went on in the estimates committee where ministers of the government either were members of the committee or took the attitude that their officials could answer only those questions which the minister concerned permitted them to answer. Therefore unless some clearly established machinery is set up through which all these procedures can be channelled in a responsible manner, and unless such an organization can be made responsible to parliament as a whole, I doubt very much if we will be very much farther ahead than we are at the present time. There are good reasons why there should be a public clearing house such as a crown company for the purpose of keeping strict public control over arms shipments outside of the NATO and commonwealth countries.

Reference has been made in this debate—mostly by interjection—from the other side to the fact that the amounts, the volume or the value of the arms shipments made to date in recent years has not been large. In relation to our war expenditures or our defence expenditures, that statement certainly is true. The amount of $20,000 or $1,500 or $30,000 or half a million dollars in relation to the total defence expenditures or the war expenditures during the war is a small amount of money. But the principle that is involved, as I understand the present procedure, is this. It is not too easy to understand, I may say, because we get a great variety of explanations, and then explanations of explanations, when ministers are questioned. But as I understand the matter up to this point the procedure is this. Again may I say that I would appreciate it if a member of the government were to enter this debate and make a clear-cut explanation of what actually is being done. But as I understand it, what is being done now is that a private firm may come to the government, and not necessarily to the government as such but to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) or to some official of that department, because we know that responsibility is delegated down the line. It might be the fifth assistant of the third deputy who receives the application for a permit for the export of certain arms to a certain country by that private firm. We have not yet been told just what is done or what investigation is made at that point as to the propriety of the export of those arms; as to the effects it may have on our international policy; or as to the effects it may have on the possibility of an arms race among various countries in a certain part of the world.

We do not know—we are not told and we are not able to find out; in fact we are as much as told that it is not any of our business—what procedure is followed to investigate and to determine whether such a permit should be issued. We know that certain permits are issued. We are not told—and we cannot find out at the present time—whether these firms that apply for these permits for the export of arms have any international connections in their business. We know that in the past it has been the case. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) recalled to the house, even during the time when Canada was at war we know that certain of these firms had international connections which, even in time of war, found themselves on the other side of the fence doing business. But even in peace time do we know whether some of these firms have international business connections, whether they have particular private interests to protect which are not combined with the public interest of Canada or with the national interests of Canada or of the commonwealth. All these things have a bearing on what is done.

For example, we do not want private firms to be profiteering at the expense of human life and property, whether it be in Canada or elsewhere; nor do we want international business connections to become privateers in the business of arms regardless of what effect it may have upon Canada or upon Canada's friends and international relations. These are things that need to be found out and I can conceive of no better way at the moment. If someone has a better suggestion I should like to hear it. Certainly, unless I have not heard correctly, I have not heard a definite proposal made by any member of the Progressive Conservative group as to what they have to recommend with respect to a clearing house procedure if this matter was referred to a committee and if the committee gave this matter consideration.

My proposal is that a crown company should be set up, that that company should be responsible to parliament as a whole, and that it should be the agency, under the control of parliament, which should determine in which cases export permits may be issued if it is in the best interests of this country that this should be done; and there conceivably are cases where it may be in the interests of this country that export permits should be issued. But that is a matter that should be considered on the basis of public interest and of the national interest of this country and not in the interests of any private group who are out to profiteer or to a privateer in an arms race.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who preceded me has just drawn attention to the fact that we have not yet had any statement of the government's position in this matter. Quite apart from the question that fact raises as to whether the government—including the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin)—has anything in mind, it might be regarded as somewhat of an insult to the house that a serious suggestion put forward in a field which is of such grave concern to the people of Canada should receive from the government no statement as to their position.

It is not usual that hon. gentlemen opposite are so coy. It is not usual that they hide their light under a bushel. In the past we have had experience of their readiness to parade their virtues—

Mr. Fleming: If any.

Mr. Fulton: —and to extol the merits of their course and of their decisions, with the result that when this unexpected silence, this coyness, this shyness,—

An hon. Member: This unwonted modesty.

Mr. Fulton: Yes; when this unwonted modesty descends upon them we must ask ourselves whether it does not indicate that in fact they are rather ashamed of their policy. Indeed, they might well be ashamed, not only of their policy but of the procedure under which the decisions with respect to the export of arms are arrived at. Or perhaps there is another reason. At least, Mr. Speaker, this policy of silence, this self-denying ordinance under which they are now conducting themselves, has from their point of view the virtue that in silence lies safety, namely safety from contradiction. At least we are not hearing conflicting and contradictory statements from the ministers. We are now hearing no statements at all. I wonder whether a ministerial order has been issued. I wonder whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce has held another cabinet meeting and issued an order—having the effect of an order in council—that there shall be no more statements from his colleagues on this matter. That may be the case. It is a probable explanation. In that case I think we should ask the minister to let us know what is the policy of the government and whether or not that policy was arrived at with or without consultation with his colleagues.

However that may be, Mr. Speaker, I suggest in all seriousness that this is a proposal which demands from the government a statement as to their position. We are entitled to know whether they are satisfied with the procedure; whether the fiasco which has been unrolled and developed before our eyes as we have seen the complete lack of co-ordination with which this matter is dealt with, is to be repeated; whether the procedures within the cabinet and between ministers and departments, which have resulted in this fiasco of contradiction and uncertainty, is to be prolonged; or whether there is to be some change in that procedure. Without some such statement, Mr. Speaker, we shall be forced to conclude that in this matter, as in most others, the government regards itself as being above and beyond criticism and as responsible to no one, not even to parliament.

Under the terms of the motion moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), we are discussing a suggestion that the procedures governing the issuance of permits for the export of munitions of war should be referred to the standing committee on external affairs. The motion relates primarily to the procedures under which this matter is handled. But I think it might be said that there is in addition a need for a review of policy on this matter in the light of certain developments which have taken place within the last 48 hours.

I refer particularly to the statement issued by the United States government when they turned down an application for the export of $50 million worth of munitions to Israel. This fact is significant in itself, but I suggest that even more significant is the statement made on behalf of the United States administration that in their view the only way to prevent an outbreak of hostilities in areas such as that, and other sensitive areas, was not to export arms to either or both sides, but by a joint declaration, backed up by the necessary preparation, for the major powers to make it quite clear they will not permit the resort to force to settle this agreement.

The other factor which indicates there is an urgent need for a review of policy in this field is a statement made yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) as recorded on page 880 of Hansard, when he answered a question asked earlier by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

My answer—

Referring to a previous answer.

—was that the embargo had not been lifted and that the matter was then under consideration. It has been considered, and the embargo is now to be lifted at once.

In the light of the oft-repeated statement made by this government, and with which

I think most if not all hon. members of the house fully agree, as to the essential importance of maintaining unity of purpose of policy between Canada and the United States, it seems to me that we are faced with an extraordinary situation, namely that the Prime Minister has stated on behalf of the government of Canada a policy which is at direct variance with, if not indeed in contradiction to, that of the United States government.

Mr. Cannon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kamloops is not speaking to the motion which is before the house. He is talking about a matter of policy which was decided by this house some time ago.

Mr. Fulton: I would point out to the hon. gentleman and to you, Mr. Speaker, that he had perhaps better consult his calendar because the statement of policy made by the United States government was made after the earlier debate had been concluded and the statement made by the Prime Minister yesterday was certainly made after the conclusion of the earlier debate.

Mr. Cannon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I am not talking about a statement that was made—

Mr. Fulton: I am talking about it; that is the whole point.

Mr. Cannon: —I am saying that the hon. member—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. I think the first point of order we will decide is that there cannot be two members occupying the floor at the one time. As I understand it, the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Cannon) wants to refer to a point of order.

Mr. Cannon: If you wish to restate my point of order, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Fulton: It was wrong the first time and it will be wrong again.

Mr. Cannon: —it is the very point that you brought up yourself when one of the previous speakers had the floor. The amendment that is now before the house deals with a matter of procedure, and I have been listening carefully to the hon. member so I am certain he is talking about a matter of government policy which was decided some time ago by this house and which should not be discussed again at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Does the hon. member wish to reply to the point of order?

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Fulton: In my view it is not a point of order, and does not call for any reply. I was pointing out that events of the last few days have put a new light on this matter by virtue of which the government should, in addition to reviewing procedures by which the export of arms is dealt with, take a fresh look at its own position with respect to exports to sensitive areas generally.

The situation now is that the procedure presently in force can result in arms being shipped to both sides. We have that on the clear statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson). We must presume they will be shipped to both sides of a dispute in a sensitive area. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there can be no hon. member in this house who views with equanimity the continuation of a procedure which will permit that course of conduct. It is, I am confident, a procedure which is abhorrent to the people of Canada and contrary not only to the best interests of our country but to the preservation of peace.

However, we are in the position here that at the present time the only effective action this house can take is to call for a review of that procedure. Here, I might refer to what was said a moment ago by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny). We would hope the committee on external affairs would, when it has all the facts before it, and we do not have the facts before us at the present time, recommend a procedure by virtue of which the situation about which we are now complaining could not be continued. It is for that reason we have refrained from suggesting any specific procedure in our motion. Any suggestion that might be made at the present time would be extremely apt to be inapplicable because it would not be made in the full knowledge of the facts which are relevant and necessary before a comprehensive suggestion might be made. In addition, as I am sure the hon. member himself is aware, it is a well-established principle that when you appoint a committee to investigate and recommend, you do not seek to circumscribe it in advance by saying what it should recommend.

Turning then to the consideration by a committee of the procedures, it might be asked by some: why is this review necessary? There is one over-all paramount fact which emerges from this situation, and which makes it abundantly clear, even if there were no others, that such a review is urgently necessary, and that is that notwithstanding the bungling contradiction that we have seen unrolled before us with respect to the handling of this situation, we have not been able to push aside fully the cloak of secrecy with which the government veils its procedure. There is still a disturbing determination on the part of the government to refuse to the house and to the country full knowledge of how it deals with these matters, and the policy and procedures on which it bases its decisions. I refer, sir, to the interchange which is reported on page 788 of Hansard when we were seeking to obtain information about just how this export permit had been issued and what was covered in it.

It is not necessary for me to rehearse again all the extraordinary convolutions followed by the government and the various ministers, as a result of which we emerge with an order in council that had been, I think the word is denigrated into a ministerial order, and then indeed it was not even a ministerial order. There was apparently no formal order. It was merely minutes, nebulous minutes, signed we were told by some ministers and circulated by them one to the other. And so we asked to get the full information as to what the situation was and we asked for the production to the house of the documents which showed what decision had been made and upon what basis that decision had been reached. We were told by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) that we could not have those papers, they were secret. We were told that the whole procedure back of this thing is to be kept secret. Then we asked for the production of the export permits. There was at least that one document the existence of which could not be denied. When we asked for its production the Prime Minister said, as recorded at page 788 of Hansard:

> All export permits are treated as confidential documents for commercial reasons. They contain information with respect to commodities, prices of commodities, the sources of supply, the firm dealing in those commodities, and for that reason these documents have always been treated as being confidential for the proper protection of those who are engaged in competitive business.

Therefore, for the protection of those who are engaged in competitive business, this house is to be denied information as to how decisions regarding the export of munitions of war are arrived at on the ground that the export of munitions or other commodities which will enable a country to wage an aggressive war is competitive business.

An hon. Member: Oh no.

Mr. Dickey: You know perfectly well that is not right.

Mr. Pearson: It is absolute nonsense.

Mr. Fulton: The Secretary of State for External Affairs says absolute nonsense. Well, here we have another cabinet minister describing the statement of the Prime Minister as nonsense.

Mr. Pearson: Your comment is nonsense.

Mr. Dickey: Very funny.

Mr. Fulton: You have convinced me of what remains of the principle of cabinet solidarity.

Mr. Rowe: There is none left now.

Mr. Fulton: The information regarding export permits covering the export of military aircraft was denied us on the basis that all these documents were secret and were kept that way for the proper protection of those engaged in competitive business. And yesterday, when we asked by a formal motion for the production of these papers, production of them was denied on the same basis; not that there was any military security involved from Canada's point of view, but that the principle of secrecy enunciated by the Prime Minister as reported at page 788 of Hansard must be maintained.

I would ask the government to explain what moral standard we have arrived at when shipments of materiel from Canada by commercial enterprises which will increase the military potential of countries in sensitive areas is described as competitive business.

Are we in this country encouraging, in fact permitting, either the government or private agencies to ship munitions of war as a competitive business? Have we so far forsaken the standards on the basis of which we previously recorded this question as to say it is purely a commercial consideration? Is this House of Commons to be denied information as to what is being shipped because that would reveal commercial secrets? I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is an atrocious basis on which either to conduct this business or to deny this house information as to the way in which this business is being conducted. We have purveyors of instruments of war and we are not to know what they are doing because it might reveal their commercial secrets. One cannot but remember that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been praised in the past as one who would devote every effort to the preservation of peace. I suggest that in this situation which has been unfolded to us the hitherto unsullied reputation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs has suffered a damaging blow.

"Competitive business"—that is a new description for the shipment of arms sent from Canada to sensitive areas. However, that is the basis upon which we are denied information. That is the basis upon which secrecy is maintained. We are left, therefore, with nothing more to rely upon as the basis of our knowledge of the situation than ministerial statements. Well the ministerial statements that have been made in this house to date in relation to this matter are not very encouraging as a basis upon which to think that we can actually understand what is the policy and the procedure.

I have already referred, as other hon. members have done, to the example of the order in council which was not an order in council but which was a ministerial order but which was not a ministerial order but which was merely an exchange of minutes. These ministerial statements upon which we are compelled to rely for our information because we are told we cannot get the documents prove conclusively that the ministerial statements coming from these ministers are so unreliable that they cannot be treated with any seriousness. These are statements upon matters on which the ministers are or should be—in fact, must be—taken to be informed. These statements are made with a great degree of carelessness; carelessness as to their accuracy, carelessness as to their effect and carelessness as to their importance. Such is the carelessness with which they are given that they could not be more misleading were they deliberately intended to be misleading.

I wish to refer to a statement made on February 3 in this house by the same minister who is in charge of the whole procedure of issuing export permits. This statement is to be found at page 833 of Hansard for that date. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) was questioned as to the closing down of the heavy water plant at Trail, British Columbia. He was asked what implications that held for Canada and as reported at page 833 of Hansard he said:

> The government of Canada has never had any interest in the plant nor has it obtained any material from that plant.

He was then asked by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) whether the closing of the plant would affect the operations of our atomic energy installation at Chalk River and the minister replied:

> I am surprised that the hon. member has been told that the heavy water at Chalk River came from Trail because it is not to my knowledge that that is the case. We purchase our heavy water from the atomic energy commission of the United States and it is my understanding that it comes from quite a different source.

That is what we were told by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in two replies to questions. This is the minister entirely responsible for the whole field of atomic energy research and development in Canada, the minister who alone knows the facts and is in possession of all the facts and upon whose statements this house is entitled to rely.

[Mr. Fulton.]

I should like now, Mr. Speaker, to refer you to some press reports concerning statements made by this minister upon whose statements we are expected to rely, who is the only source of information we are to have with respect to the procedures now in question. I think the statement I am about to read will disagree with that statement made by him with respect to the heavy water situation, a statement made so carelessly as to its accuracy, its content and its effect, as to be as misleading as it could have been had it been deliberately calculated to meet with that object.

I shall now read from a Canadian press dispatch originating in Ottawa on May 19, 1954, as reported in the Montreal Daily Star of that date. It reads:

> Scientists at the Chalk River atomic energy project say Canada may be the first country in the world to build an economical atomic power plant.

And later:

> Since Canada entered the atomic energy field her experience has been with experimental reactors partially controlled or moderated with heavy water produced at the Trail, B.C., smelter plant.

Another article appeared in February, 1954.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I am sorry, as I do not like having to interrupt an hon. gentleman, but I think hon. members will surely agree with me that a motion as to whether or not the procedure to be adopted for the export of arms should be referred to a committee is not one in connection with which we should arrive at the correctness or otherwise of statements made by a minister as to the closing down of the heavy water plant at Trail. I have no hesitation in saying that it is not in order and I would ask the hon. member to come back to the amendment before the house.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect may I say that I think you have failed to appreciate the point. I am discussing the reason why it is desirable that the question of procedures should be referred to a committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I followed the hon. gentleman very closely. He was endeavouring to prove by this incident that some statement which he received from the ministerial side of the house could not be relied on. I think he is entitled to make that statement, but I do not think he can go into the merits of such a statement. Otherwise we could spend the next 40 minutes debating the accuracy or otherwise of any statement by any minister on the government side of the house. I am going to request the hon. member to come back to the question of the export of arms and the reference of the procedures thereon to a committee.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I shall of course bow to your ruling, as I always do, but may I be permitted to observe that I was not attempting to establish the inaccuracy of the statement or to attack its merits; it has been proved beyond any doubt to be inaccurate. What I was trying to do was to show how inaccurate a statement which is definitely and deliberately—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fulton: —made can be, that we can no longer place any reliance upon any statement made by ministers opposite with respect to matters within their knowledge, matters of which they should have knowledge—

Mr. Martin: I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): The Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Martin: The hon. gentleman has just said that we can no longer rely or place any reliance on the observations of certain ministers of the crown. I submit to you with confidence that that is a wholly improper remark to make and that the hon. gentleman ought to be asked forthwith to withdraw what he said by way of implication and direction.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I would point out that if in the hon. member's opinion it was an improper remark it was prompted by the wholly improper conduct of ministers.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Does the hon. member for Kamloops wish to say anything with regard to the point raised by the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Mr. Fulton: I think I should say that in any expression I have used there is nothing unparliamentary. I have stated a fact; I have supported the conclusions at which I arrived. I have stated it as a fact in language which is well within the rules of parliamentary debate. I submit to Your Honour that there is nothing to withdraw.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I have been following the hon. member for Kamloops very closely. In my opinion he did make the statement to which the Minister of National Health and Welfare referred, but I do not think he implied at any time that there was any deliberate misinterpretation or deliberate misrepresentation by anyone on the part of the cabinet. I would be glad to have his confirmation of that.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martin: May I speak to this point. Referring to certain ministers the hon. member said that we could not place any reliance on what they said. I submit with confidence that that is saying that the minister in question is not capable of giving expression to something that can be characterized as truthful. I submit to you with great certainty that that is an improper remark for any hon. member to make about another hon. member of this house.

Mr. Fulton: As the Leader of the Opposition has stated already, my observation was prompted by the wholly improper and irresponsible attitude of ministers opposite when they make statements upon which this house must rely as to its knowledge of the facts with respect to which those ministers are making statements.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I think before we go any further it is going to be my duty to dispose of this incident, to the dissatisfaction of both sides. If I followed correctly the remarks of the hon. member for Kamloops, he was entitled to point out that there are what he termed various forms of weakness in the cabinet and that incorrect replies were being given. As I understand it, he did not accuse any cabinet minister of improper motives or of any deliberate misconstruction of facts. It is his privilege to make accusations of incompetence if he chooses and it is not within the duties of my position to decide on the correctness or otherwise of those accusations.

The hon. member for Kamloops has stated explicitly that he did not charge the cabinet with any deliberate misinformation. I think on the basis of that I am entitled to come to the conclusion that he has said nothing further than he is entitled to say as a member when referring in the heat of debate to the party sitting opposite him.

I would like to revert to the other point and request the hon. member to come back to the motion we are discussing which is, and I repeat, one to refer certain procedures to a committee of this house.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the subject which you have pointed out is before the house, I submit that the only way in which we will get information on this matter and a satisfactory understanding of how these procedures work, if they work, is by reference of the matter to a committee, and the logical committee is the standing committee on external affairs. In that committee we could consider the matter with the right to call witnesses and call for records and documents which are so important in enabling one to arrive at the facts of a matter.

Unless such a procedure is adopted this house is going to be left to continue in its present unsatisfactory state where secrecy is maintained, where information, the accuracy of which we have no means of judging, is placed before us, and where the veil of secrecy is used by the government to deny the production of documents called for by two motions. Supported by their members present in the house, and on the basis that the information asked for was secret because it related to competitive business, the motions were defeated.

I think I have said enough to indicate that with a matter of such vital concern to the welfare of this country, to world peace and to the moral regard in which Canada is to be held by ourselves as well as the rest of the world, we cannot allow that situation to continue.

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) calls for two things. First, that a committee investigate the shipment of arms which has taken place and, second, that the committee recommend a code to govern such shipments and procedures in connection with them in the future. I submit that those two proposals are eminently reasonable.

Surely parliament is entitled to know exactly what has been done in this matter up to date and what will be done in the future, particularly the policy and the procedures that will be followed from now on as far as the shipment of arms is concerned. Certainly we do not know at the moment either of these things. The whole matter has been a picture of confusion ever since the beginning of this session of parliament. We had a series of statements by ministers, each one amending or correcting what the previous statement had said. It was quite evident that the ministers directly concerned with this matter, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of National Defence, just did not know what happened. Apparently they did not know what policy, if any, was being followed, and, particularly, the way in which it can be carried out. Thus it is quite apparent that the cabinet as a whole was just not in the picture as far as arms shipments are concerned.

When we come to parliament and the Canadian people, nothing was known of these arms shipments. It came as a shock to me, and I think to most of us here and also, I am sure, to most Canadians, to learn that we have been shipping arms to the Middle East, the very area where there is and has been for some months past the greatest fear of a war breaking out. It was a further surprise to all of us to find we had been shipping arms for several years past to Central and South America. I do not think that many Canadians relish at all the idea of Canada being in the arms business. I am sure all of our citizens want to be assured that, to the extent that we are in this arms business, the strictest supervision and control is exercised in the sending of arms abroad.

As a result, I am quite sure that a committee such as that proposed and a definite code coming out of that committee, to govern all arms shipments, would be generally welcomed throughout Canada.

The Prime Minister's statement yesterday that the embargo on the shipment of arms has been lifted returns the situation to the same unsatisfactory state it was in before the question was raised. I would just like to read part of the Prime Minister's statement and comment upon it. He said, as indicated on page 880 of Hansard:

> . . . the embargo is now to be lifted at once. The government intends to continue the policy which has been in force of considering each application for military equipment on its merits and ensuring that if permission is granted it shall, in the future as in the past, be for military equipment of a type and quantity which could not provoke an arms race or provide an incentive to aggression.

How can the Prime Minister or any of the other ministers, or the cabinet as a whole, determine what type and what quantity of munitions is going to provoke an arms race or is going to be an incentive to aggression? I do not think it is possible. As has been pointed out previously, many conflagrations start from very small sparks. The first great war started from the murder of an Austrian archduke, and I am quite sure that when that murder took place very few people thought it would develop into a world war. Similarly it is not possible, in my opinion, for the Prime Minister or anyone else to say that a batch of arms or a group of ammunition is not going to be an incentive to aggression and is not going to provoke an arms race.

It brings up what some people seem to consider a distinction between defensive and offensive arms. Personally, I do not think there is any distinction. I have heard some people arguing that some or most of the arms we sent abroad were defensive arms and not of an offensive nature. Arms of any sort are offensive in the general sense of the term and in the sense of the term that they can be used to mount an attack, that is, the strictly military use of the term "offensive". I seems to me that, no matter what sort of arms you export, you are putting into the hands of the people who get those arms the capability of mounting an attack, of starting an aggression. You cannot distinguish as between types of arms. In that regard, I suppose many people might consider anti-aircraft guns as purely defensive arms. However, during the last war—particularly during the last year of that war—the heavy ack-ack guns of our army fired a greater number of rounds in the ground role, and certainly not in a defensive role, than they fired at aircraft. They were extremely good medium guns when used in ground actions. Therefore you cannot class any of these weapons as purely defensive arms. They are all offensive; and they can all start trouble.

There is another facet of this matter which makes the reference of it to a committee very desirable. What I refer to is that it involves the cost to the Canadian taxpayer of the arms and ammunition which have been shipped abroad. I do not refer here to the arms shipped to other members of the commonwealth and to members of NATO. We have shipped large numbers of arms to the NATO countries as part of our commitment to that organization. Whether we should have shipped some of those arms or whether it would have been better to have kept them at home is a matter of defence policy, but those are not the arms I refer to. However, it is a very pertinent matter for this parliament to know to what extent arms shipped to countries other than the commonwealth and NATO countries have been subsidized out of public funds.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) yesterday outlined how upwards of a million dollars' worth of guns, rifles and ammunition have been shipped to Central and South America during the past eight years. The question immediately comes to mind: Was this material manufactured by private firms on a commercial basis, such as the commercial transactions about which we have heard, or was it government stocks which had been disposed of as surplus to requirements? If it was the latter, as I suspect very strongly it was, what did it cost the Canadian taxpayer, to begin with, and how much did we receive for it when it was disposed of to these other countries? Particularly, was it sold at bargain prices at the expense of the Canadian public treasury?

When we examine the list of war materials sold to the Middle East, we find $771,000-odd was received for 15 Harvard aircraft sent or about to be sent to Egypt. That works out at approximately $51,000 each. That seems like a fairly good price perhaps, but the point comes up here that these planes were, as I understand it, assembled from spare parts by a commercial concern, but these spare parts presumably came from government stocks.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I think we should at least be accurate. It has been made very clear two or three times that nothing about those planes came from government stocks. The Canadian Car and Foundry Company happened to be the sole supplier in the world of Harvard aircraft, and the transaction was purely a private transaction.

Mr. Harkness: It had never been clear before, so far as I know—

An hon. Member: Maybe you were away.

Mr. Harkness: —that none of these came from government stocks. I am very glad the minister has now shed that further illumination on the question.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Everyone knew it but yourself. Why not talk about something you know about?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, he says we are talking about something we do not know anything about. That is the whole trouble with this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dickey: That is true of anything you speak about in the house.

Mr. Harkness: We have brought up this matter in order to get information. We are asking for a committee to get information we should have.

Mr. Garson: Meanwhile you talk a lot about it.

Mr. Harkness: When the minister says we do not know anything about it the members of his party clap loudly. I say we do not know as much about it as we and they should know about it as members of parliament.

Mr. Dickey: All you are doing is giving misinformation.

Mr. Rowe: How would you know back there when they cannot agree up here?

Mr. Harkness: I must say the debate does from time to time produce a little more information. We learn a little more as it goes on, just as we learned another fact from the minister a moment or two ago which we did not know before.

Mr. Dickey: You have been told three or four times.

Mr. Harkness: Undoubtedly in any of these debates as time goes on, as the minister gets a little irritable or something else of that sort happens, he does give us a little information, a tidbit, a crumb or two which we could not have had otherwise.

Mr. Dickey: A crumb for the crumbs.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, when we come to the list of arms sent to Israel we find that it is somewhat more extensive. There are 75 millimetre shells, quite evidently for Sherman tank guns. There is anti-tank equipment. We do not know what it is. If it is 17-pounder anti-tank equipment it is a quite large and expensive type of gun. There are tracks and spare parts for Sherman tanks. There are 25-pounder guns and accessories. There are 3·7 anti-aircraft guns, accessories, spare parts and ammunition. That is a heavy anti-aircraft gun.

I think there is no doubt that all these were government owned. I do not think the minister will interrupt at this moment and say that they had nothing to do with the government. They were all government owned pieces of equipment, and they were sold for a total of $2,067,685. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) said he could not make the quantities public because the Israeli government considered this would imperil its security. However, surely parliament is entitled to know the price at which each one of these individual items was sold. What was the price for a 3·7 gun? What was the price for a 25-pounder gun? What was the price for a 75 millimetre shell? Surely we are entitled to that information. We could then compare those prices with the cost to the Canadian taxpayer.

I think one of the most pertinent things that the house and the people of Canada are entitled to know is how much all these items of military equipment cost us and how much they were sold for. In other words, to what extent are Canadian taxpayers subsidizing the export of these arms to other countries and as a result possibly doing their bit to start another conflagration?

One thing I do know, Mr. Speaker, is that a 3·7 inch heavy anti-aircraft gun is a very expensive piece of equipment. My understanding during the war was that these guns, together with the necessary fire control aiming equipment, cost several hundred thousand dollars each. They are a big and expensive gun. Under these circumstances that would mean it would only take 5, 6 or 7 of them to make up the total amount of money that we received for all this equipment.

The 25-pounder gun is also quite an expensive piece of equipment. I think we are entitled to get information as to the prices at which each of these pieces of equipment was sold. It would not imperil the security of the Israeli government or anybody else's security. It is a financial fact that the house should know. From looking at the list and knowing only a little about what the cost of some of these items was during the war, I strongly suspect that all this equipment has been sold at a fraction of its cost to the taxpayers of this country.

It is all very well for one of the ministers to get up now or at a subsequent time and say that the 3·7 heavy ack-ack gun is obsolescent. It may be obsolescent but we have nothing to replace it. Every time we ship a 3·7 ack-ack gun out of this country we leave a blank in our defences and so far we have nothing with which to fill it. Although it may be obsolescent it can still have quite a deterrent effect. It seems to me that the whole policy of shipping guns out of the country without having something with which to replace them is a matter which should come under review and needs such a review in very quick order.

The same thing applies to the 25-pounder gun. There are many gunners who would say that these guns are equal, if not superior, to the United States 105 millimetre which is replacing them at the present time at very great cost. In any event, we have shipped a large number of 25-pounder guns chiefly to our NATO allies, and to my knowledge we have not received any guns to replace them. The result is that another blank has been left as far as our artillery situation is concerned. That is a further matter which should be investigated. I think it certainly requires investigation.

The general position is that we are getting rid of equipment which cost us very large sums of money at very low prices and without getting anything to replace it. As a result we are leaving ourselves short. As has been suggested by others in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the government will accept the suggestion put forward in the amendment and refer the whole matter to the external affairs committee or some other committee for investigation and report.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I feel I ought to say a few words in this discussion although the hon. gentlemen opposite have not left very much time for a reply to some of their more extravagantly inaccurate statements.

Mr. Drew: You could have got up at any time.

Mr. Pearson: I could have got up at any time earlier in the afternoon except that during that time I was in conference with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of the United Kingdom, and I think that on the whole that was more important to the discharge of my responsibilities than listening to the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Drew: Is this a one-man government now?

Mr. Rowe: You could have got up yesterday.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, there is a newspaper published in Toronto which customarily supports the official opposition and sometimes vigorously condemns the government. Naturally, therefore, I do not always agree with its editorial comment, but it did have an editorial this morning with which I agree. It said that the activities of the opposition in this particular matter were becoming faintly ludicrous. Well, at least that editorial was half correct. Personally I would have dropped the word "faintly".

An hon. Member: Have you read the editorial in the Star tonight?

Mr. Pearson: I have been reading Hansard today, and last night the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) said that he would do his best to resist the temptation to engage in hyperbole or exaggeration. That, of course, is what the opposition have been doing all afternoon. I thought that the extreme of exaggeration and hyperbole in this debate was reached by the hon. member who has just sat down who said—and I think I took down his words correctly—that we should not be in the arms business at all in this country. I do not know what he meant by that.

Mr. Harkness: I said the arms shipment business.

Mr. Pearson: "Arms business" is what the hon. gentleman said. I took down his words. That means, of course, that we should not be able to help our friends and allies in any way in their defence.

Mr. Drew: Nonsense.

Mr. Pearson: Last night some reference was made to our obligations under the United Nations charter and it was said that we should act as good members of the United Nations in this and other matters. It is an obligation under the United Nations charter to be prepared to defend yourself and to help your friends to defend themselves against aggression. That statement by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) goes even further than the policy which was enunciated by the opposition previously, namely that we should not send arms of any kind to any part of the world except the commonwealth, North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries—

Mr. Rowe: Nobody said that.

Mr. Harkness: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) does not want to twist what I have said today and what he knows I have said on many previous occasions. I think he will admit that I said we should send arms to the members of the commonwealth and to NATO. If I did not put in the word "shipment", that was purely an error on my part. I do not think that the minister would like to twist completely what my position has been all my life in regard to these matters.

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker; I do not want to twist the hon. gentleman's words. I took down what he said; and as I took them down, that is what he said. If he says that the words "arms business" should have been "arms shipment", I accept his statement that that was a slip on his part. I am quite ready to admit that there is a great difference between "arms business" and "arms shipment".

This policy that was enunciated this afternoon I think goes even further than that which was enunciated by my hon. friends opposite the other night which would have —and would still do so if it were put into effect—prevented us from helping any of our friends unless we had a definite military alliance. I refer the hon. gentleman to Hansard if he does not think that is an accurate statement of what he said.

We have been vigorously attacked by the opposition for our concealment with regard to details of arms shipments, especially by the hon. gentleman who has moved the amendment. May I say that we have given more facts in parliament in regard to arms shipments—as I said the other day—than is customary in any government in London or Washington. But when there were certain details which we did not think it appropriate to give because they concerned our relations with other countries,—and I myself believe that that is a legitimate position to take—we did say that we had all these details which we should be glad to show in confidence to any hon. member opposite. Has one of the hon. gentlemen who have taken part in this debate come to me and asked me for that information? Not one.

Mr. Drew: Why should we take it on those terms?

Mr. Pearson: In the words of the old Methodist hymn, "No, not one".

Mr. Rowe: Why have parliament at all?

Mr. Pearson: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), in his contribution yesterday afternoon, when he was asking for this information especially in regard to sensitive areas, said that if it is not proper to give that information here, we could have a meeting of the committee on external affairs in camera. If he is willing to receive that information in camera in the committee on external affairs, why would he not receive it in person in camera and get the same information much more quickly? He has not approached us as yet in that regard.

Mr. Rowe: Why have parliament at all?

An hon. Member: Oh, be sensible.

Mr. Pearson: Quite a case has been built up, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of rather flimsy evidence indeed. My friend the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre got quite excited over the confusion and deceit, as he would call it, with regard to the replies made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) about scrap metal. When is scrap metal mutilated and when is it not mutilated? It was explained to the house by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that guns are mutilated beyond repair before they are allowed to leave this country.

Mr. Churchill: I mentioned breech blocks.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. gentleman said: "Yes, it might apply to breech blocks but what I am interested in is gun barrels", whereas the minister's reply—as he will see if he will read it again—referred to guns themselves, not to any particular parts. It seems ridiculous, Mr. Speaker, to build up a case to such a high moral and emotional level on evidence of that kind.

The hon. gentleman also made great play with the fact that I and others on this side of the house did not realize that conventional weapons are modern and dangerous. Of course we realize that a conventional weapon can be both modern and dangerous. As I have often said—and it is an obvious truism—you can be killed by an old-fashioned bullet as well as by a new-fashioned atomic bomb. But that is not the point, Mr. Speaker. Hon. gentlemen opposite are criticizing us because we are adding to tension, are producing incentives to aggression, are causing trouble, are losing our reputation in the world, and are being toppled from our moral position. As was said by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) this afternoon—if I may be pardoned a personal reference—my own reputation as a peacemaker has now been sullied because we have sent to friendly countries, under control, some old surplus conventional weapons, small in quantity and really not very important in quality. And in doing so we have followed exactly the same policy as that followed by all the free governments with which we are associated and allied.

Mr. Drew: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Pearson: Surely.

Mr. Drew: Is the minister not aware of the fact that the exports of arms and equipment in 1954 amounted to $81 million, no small amount?

Mr. Pearson: That is another figure, Mr. Speaker, that has been tossed into this debate.

Mr. Drew: That is the figure given by the government.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, who is the sponsor of this amendment, said this, as reported at page 887 of Hansard:

> What in the world has happened to the millions of rounds of ammunition sent down to Central America, the Caribbean and South America? . . . Then what is going to be the outcome of this reckless disregard, as it appears to me, in handling that type of equipment?

He even went so far as to suggest that we were responsible for the revolution in Guatemala. In a few moments I shall come to the details of the shipment to Guatemala which produced the communist revolution. He also suggested that we might have had something to do with the overthrow of the government in Cuba in the few thousand dollars' worth of ammunition that went to that country; and $800,000 worth of ammunition and equipment, as he called it, that has gone to the Latin American countries in the last eight years. That was the type of thing that he put on the record. I should like later to examine in some detail one particular shipment to which he referred.

He referred first to my statement, recorded at page 557 of Hansard, that no permits were issued in 1954 or 1955 for the export of:

> . . . guns, ammunition, or military weapons of any kind, or for military aircraft or military vehicles to South America.

He suggested that by a careful midnight examination of his own he had found that I had incorrectly represented the situation, and thereby must have misled the house. My original statement, Mr. Speaker—and it has been checked—is perfectly correct. No such permits were issued. Earlier in the session—and I commend this to the hon. gentleman who might refresh his memory by reading some of these back statements—I referred to the list issued in accordance with the provisions of the Export and Import Permits Act, items subject to export control. That was the heading under which I gave my figures. The hon. gentleman has shown a great deal of industry in examining the export statistics by the dominion bureau of statistics, whereas if he had come to me I would have given him the original material on which I based my answer to the house, in all of its detail, and he could have checked it against any public or private source. I should have thought that he would have considered it worth while in the course of his research to look at the control list; arms solely for sporting purposes—and this is in the control list—firing ammunition not usable in firearms designed or intended for war are clearly exempted. He could have found that out. Perhaps he did find it out and it escaped his memory before he made this statement. The various shipments to Latin American countries to which the hon. member referred, and by doing so gave the impression to the house that they had been omitted by me in my statement to the house, fell in this category. They consisted of 22 calibre rifles, shot guns, revolvers and ammunition for them.

Let me remind the house, Mr. Speaker, that such sporting weapons and ammunition for them are freely available for private purchase in shops throughout Canada. The total annual trade in such ammunition for such weapons within Canada alone is of the order of $10 million a year. A single Canadian firm does an annual business in such ammunition within Canada of some $5,800,000 a year. That, Mr. Speaker, is the perspective within which we should look at the figure of $64,000 of such items shipped within a two-year period to four different countries in South America, and over which the opposition has become so very indignant; over which they have condemned the moral standards of the government, and as the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) has just said, have provided the incentive to aggression.

The hon. member, throughout his remarks, returned several times, and I have mentioned this earlier, to the suggestion that the government was concealing information on this matter. I should like to remind him now, and others who have spoken on this matter, that the exemption of sporting weapons from export permits requirements appears in regulations published almost two years ago, regulations which in fact were brought to the attention of the house two weeks ago. Furthermore, the shipments of such items that have been made appear regularly in separate figures issued by the bureau of statistics. No doubt that is where my hon. friend got this hair-raising information.

The hon. member has, in fact, himself demonstrated that this information is readily available. It is public now. My only comment on his activities is that in his haste to put these supposedly damaging figures before the house he appears to have overlooked one additional item for $155 for Venezuela in 1955.

Well, Mr. Speaker, so much for that information and so much for the deductions which have been drawn from it that we have been responsible for all sorts of dire happenings in the central and south American area, especially in Guatemala, where there was of course a little difficulty a few years ago. The hon. member referred to that.

Mr. Churchill: Under a communist controlled government.

Mr. Pearson: The shipments to which he referred, to Guatemala, were in this same category, ammunition suitable only for small arms designed solely for sporting purposes. They consisted mainly of 22-calibre ammunition but some shotgun ammunition and revolver ammunition was also included. No guns of any kind were involved. These items, Mr. Speaker, were consigned by the firm in question to a Guatemalan sporting club. There is no reason to suppose that they were used for anything else than target shooting at clay pigeons. The amounts involved were small by any standards or else we might have had some reason to get suspicious of them if they were very large in amount, because you can do damage in any country even with ammunition designed to shoot clay pigeons. But in relation to the quantities of ammunition shipped, it is ridiculous to suggest that these shipments could have contributed to maintaining in power the communist infiltrated government which was replaced in July, I think, of the following year.

It is that kind of argument, Mr. Speaker, and the deductions that have been drawn from it which leads some of us on this side to wonder about the motives of the opposition in raising this matter in the way they have raised it, at a time when we are discussing with our friends in Washington, our friends in London and our friends in Paris, how best we may work together in contributing to peace, not only in the areas of the Middle East but in the other areas of the world. Only in the last few days in these discussions we have been going over the question of arms shipments to sensitive areas, especially to the Middle East. It may not have escaped the notice of hon. members that the Secretary of State of the United States this morning has reaffirmed, after the discussions which took place in Washington between representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States, that he on behalf of his government was going to maintain the present policy and principles in the declaration of 1950. He did not intend to depart from that policy because, as was indicated, a departure from that policy would have had most unfortunate consequences in the Middle East in respect of one country at least which is not in a position to get help from behind the iron curtain that certain other countries in that area are now getting. The United Kingdom, Mr. Speaker, intends to maintain that policy, too. We, in this government, intend to maintain the same policy, and work it out in co-operation with our friends and under controls at home.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) who moved the amendment said that some of this ammunition might eventually get into the hands of the Mau Mau. I suggest that so far this ammunition has only gotten into the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite, where it is being used not with an effect that I would describe as lethal but rather as a soporific. I believe, of course, that arms policy and arms shipments are perfectly legitimate subjects to discuss. But so far, we have heard a great deal more about arms procedure than we have heard about arms policy from hon. gentlemen opposite. I must say, however, that they have, in some of the statements made from the opposition side, made their position pretty clear in regard to their refusal to send any arms except to the commonwealth countries and the NATO countries with which we have a definite military alliance.

We will continue to follow the policy that has been outlined previously, and to follow it in a way which will not be conducive to aggression or conflict but which might help, by the way it is controlled, to preserve peace by removing the temptation to an aggressor to attack an unarmed country opposite or close by. There is no greater temptation to aggression than the certainty of an easy victory. A policy, if it were adopted by all free countries, of refusing to send any arms to any country except under the conditions which have been outlined by hon. members opposite, would leave some countries weak and defenceless, and other countries which did not have any scruples about receiving arms from behind the iron curtain in a position to attack those countries. If we had followed ths policy, we might very soon have cause to regret it.

My final word, Mr. Speaker, is that the committee on external affairs will be set up very shortly. As is customary, I expect to appear before that committee. I will be very happy, as usual, to subject myself to cross-examination as complete as hon. members opposite would like to make it in respect of any sphere of my activities, arms policy or anything else.

Mr. Drew: May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with certain statements that were made this afternoon. Hon. members know what transpired here but people outside may not see Hansard or if they do see Hansard they will not, of course, know the circumstances in which the details were put on the record. For that reason I wish to clarify one point.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) tried to create the impression that he had been deprived of some opportunity to enter this debate. His words were: "Mr. Speaker, I feel I ought to say a few words in this discussion although the hon. gentlemen opposite have not left very much time for a reply to some of their more extravagantly inaccurate statements."

It was pointed out to him by me that he had plenty of opportunity and then these were his words: "I was in conference with the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of the United Kingdom and I think on the whole that was more important to the discharge of my responsibilities than listening to the hon. gentlemen opposite—".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drew: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I hear the applause from the opposite side as I read these words. That is the attitude taken by hon. members opposite while we are talking about selling the tools of death without any restraint whatever—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Drew: We are talking about a serious effort, to refer the subject to a committee to get the facts which have been denied to us since we met here and tried to discuss this subject. That observation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs was in keeping with other observations he has made. He had been sitting here in this house for well over an hour at the time he rose, and speaker after speaker had risen. He had waited for this moment so that he could get in and take the closing period until six o'clock; that is why he waited and for no other reason. As a matter of fact, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the foreign secretary of the United Kingdom left here at twenty minutes to five.

We listened to contemptuous remarks in regard to this important subject. He made light of the shipments to South America mentioned by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill). He claimed they were sporting weapons. Perhaps he might explain some of the details about sporting weapons.

I have in my hand a magazine known as Field and Stream, which claims to be the outstanding sporting magazine on the North American continent and is published in New York. This will perhaps indicate to some of the hon. members that the minister was out of touch with the situation when he talked about sporting weapons. In this magazine there is an advertisement under the heading, "Everything for the sportsman." This is interesting because this is a New York publication. It is the advertisement of a firm in Montreal which reads as follows:

> Famous Service Rifles—Revolvers:—30-06, ·303 Enfield Rifles. Colt, Smith and Wesson and British Webley Revolvers. Lowest Prices. Shipped duty free. International Firearms, 1011 Bleury, Montreal, Quebec.

This advertisement appears in the February, 1956, edition of Field and Stream. Is this the kind of sporting weapon the minister is referring to? I do not think he knows; in fact, he has shown a complete lack of knowledge of the facts since he entered this discussion in its earliest stages. Of course, most hon. members in this house know that sporting weapons can be pretty deadly; ·303 Enfield rifles, Colt, Smith and Wesson and British Webley revolvers are not ordinarily regarded as sporting equipment but they are offered duty free under the benign arrangements made by this government.

This is the kind of subject we want to have come before a committee. We want to find out exactly what is being done. We want to find out why a private organization can sell famous service rifles and revolvers as sporting equipment and why they can promise to sell them duty free and at the lowest prices. Obviously they are in competition with the government. Perhaps they bought it for scrap, as has already been explained. That is the kind of thing that does require an explanation.

Let us now examine the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in discussing this subject. He pooh-poohed the suggestion that there was any importance to this; he indicated they were just unimportant little shipments,—these ·303 Enfield rifles, Colt, Smith and Wesson and British Webley revolvers—some old surplus international weapons small in quantity and poor in quality.

If that is so, why is he so concerned about not shipping them? If they are unimportant in quality and quantity why is he then so concerned about the right to ship these to certain parts of the world? The fact is that the statement is incorrect and more and more it demonstrates why we want to examine the evidence from someone else rather than from him.

He then made a perfectly typical remark. I think he forgot that someone might be following after him in this debate; I think he thought this debate would conclude at six o'clock—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drew: When I asked him if he was not aware that exports in 1954 amounted to $81 million his reply was typical. These were his words: "That is another figure, Mr. Speaker, that has been tossed into this debate."

Mr. Pearson: Mutual aid and to the commonwealth.

Mr. Drew: It is not mutual aid at all; it has nothing to do with that. That demonstrates how little the hon. gentleman knows about it.

Mr. Rowe: Wrong again.

Mr. Drew: Yes, he is wrong again. These were the exports of arms and I think they should be placed on the record. The figures are not available for 1955 but they are available for 1953 and 1954. The 1953 figures are as follows: aircraft, $24,646,151; aircraft parts, $15,600,356; cartridges for guns, rifles and other firearms, $19,873,298; guns, rifles and other firearms of all kinds, $24,109,640, making a total of $84,229,445. The figures for 1954 are as follows: aircraft, $12,601,190; aircraft parts, $15,841,058; cartridges for guns, rifles and other firearms, $13,803,510; guns, rifles and other firearms of all kinds, $39,548,560, making a total of $81,794,318. This is the scale of shipments—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mutual aid to our allies.

Mr. Pearson: What was their destination?

Mr. Martin: Where did they go?

Mr. Drew: —which of course does not include scrap, the kind of scrap that has been described here; scrap which was mutilated but had good serviceable barrels which were useful for many purposes.

Then the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the flighty way—indeed, the claptrap way—in which he was dealing with the subject, said this in regard to the question of the shipment of arms, and these are his words: "It may not have escaped the notice of hon. members that the Secretary of State of the United States this morning has reaffirmed, after the discussions which took place in Washington between representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States, that he on behalf of his government was going to maintain the present policy and principles in the declaration of 1950". He then went on to give the impression that the situation was just the same and that shipments would go on.

Now, since he has referred to the Globe and Mail let me quote from the Globe and Mail a description of an article from the New York Times news service dated February 6:

> Dulles' statement indicated that there is no immediate prospect that the U.S. will grant the request to Israel for permission to buy arms in the U.S.

Mr. Dulles then went on to say:

> We are not convinced that that disparity can be adequately offset by additional purchases of arms by the state of Israel. Dulles said that Israel's population is only 2,000,000 while that of the Arab states amounts to tens of millions "and they apparently have been offered access to huge stores of Soviet bloc material."
> Under these circumstances, Dulles expressed the view that Israel's security could be better assured "by means other than an arms race".

That is our belief. Then follows a direct quotation from Dulles' statement which was so misinterpreted to us:

> "The combined influence of the nations which would, under the U.N. charter and the tripartite declaration, be against any armed aggression," said Dulles, "is a far more effective deterrent to any potential aggression than any amount of arms which could be obtained by either side."

That is precisely the position we have taken. We have asked by this motion that the committee on external affairs be empowered to deal with this subject. That is not met by the committee on external affairs meeting. The Secretary of State for External Affairs closed his remarks by stating that this committee would soon be set up and that he would be prepared to appear before that committee. These were his words: "I will be very happy, as usual, to subject myself to cross-examination as complete as hon. members opposite would like to make it in respect of any sphere of my activities, arms policy or anything else."

Mr. Drew: That continued noise is an attempt to shut off this debate.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Drew: No, the minister does not know the facts. We want a committee set up that can have people come before it who do know the facts. We want to know what is being done in regard to trafficking in the tools of death, and we have a right to know. We believe in the supremacy of parliament. An iron curtain has been closed down on the supplying of information by the votes taken yesterday.

Let us have an opportunity to examine this subject properly. There is a motion before the house which the government could accept to empower the committee on external affairs to inquire into this whole subject, to bring before it men who really know the facts and are prepared to give accurate information which we have not yet received. No more important subject will come before this house. As was said earlier today by one hon. member, if we should approach a serious period let every hon. member check his conscience and ask himself what answer he would give if he were asked to—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

An hon. Member: The vote is on.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will please give me a chance to perform my duty. In order to do so I must be heard. The Clerk has just informed me that it is 8.15 p.m. and it is gradually getting to be 8.16 p.m. It is my duty by virtue of standing order 56 (4) (d) to interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put the question on the amendment which is now before the house.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Churchill) which was negatived on the following division:

POLICY OF CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I have drawn attention in times past to the dangers of monopoly particularly in reference to the media for the communication of ideas. Likewise, attention has been drawn on more than one occasion by those who sit in this part of the house to the danger of attempted government control of the means of expression, especially when that control is directed to serving partisan purposes. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation claims to operate free of government control. The time has come, sir, to examine such claims and also at the same time to examine the definition of some of the terms that have been used in this regard.

Last autumn there was published a volume entitled, "The Age of Mackenzie King". The authors of that work are Bernard Ostry and H. S. Ferns, two eminent Canadian scholars now on the staff of the University of Birmingham. To say the least, the book was not complimentary to the late Mr. Mackenzie King or to the record of the Liberal party before and during the period of his leadership. Indeed, the book has gone some distance to explode some of the myths which the Liberal party has sought to create. The book has, therefore, become a controversial book.

Mr. Lesage: Wait until the history of your leader's life is published.

Mr. Fleming: It is undeniable that it is an important book. It has been widely reviewed. There is much evidence of interest in it. It was, therefore, eminently suitable for a panel discussion on radio and television by competent persons, a panel discussion because that affords an opportunity for some degree of balance in relation to a controversial subject. I am not debating here, although I will be glad to on another occasion, the contents. I am dealing here with the fact that the book is of a controversial nature and one of very high interest.

Indeed, sir, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation thought it was of sufficiently wide public interest that it decided it was suitable for its programs, programs both of television and of sound. So an approach was made to Mr. Ostry in England by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and at the request of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation Mr. Ostry made a recording for use in connection with both television and sound programs in relation to this controversial book. The film and the recording were sent to Canada to be used as introductions to two 30-minute panel discussion programs which were scheduled for dates in December over the networks of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and, as was mentioned this afternoon by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort (Mr. Bryson), the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation went so far as to announce its intention to carry these programs on the network.

In the C.B.C. Times for the week December 18 to December 23—this being a well known C.B.C. publication; it is commonly referred to by the officers of the corporation as a sort of house organ—at page 6 we find, under the programs listed for Tuesday, December 20, the following:

> 11.00—Anthology—

That is 11.00 p.m.

> Radio's literary magazine. Tonight: The Mackenzie King Era, by Bernard Ostrey and H. S. Ferns
> CBA, CBH, CBI—

And so on.

Mr. Speaker, that television program never was carried out. The sound broadcasting program was never carried out. Why neither of these programs, notwithstanding that announcement, was never carried out has not yet been explained.

Mr. Trainor: It is obvious.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Ostry sought from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, through its responsible officers, to be informed as to why that program, in which he had been asked to participate and in which he had already participated in the film recording and the sound recording, was not to proceed. He was met with the statement on the part of those officials of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the programs were not going to be broadcast because of a decision taken at Ottawa. When he pursued his question as to who at Ottawa made the decision, he was given the cryptic answer, "It was done by the directorate". When he asked what the directorate was or who were the members of the so-called directorate, he was refused an answer.

I have been a member of the house committee on radio broadcasting since the year 1945. In that time I think there have been six or seven of those committees. I may say that never previously had I heard of such a thing as the directorate. That was the reason why I today asked the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) about the directorate. He indicated that he was aware of the existence of the directorate but that, at the moment of the asking of the question this afternoon, he was not in a position to tell me who constitute the personnel of the directorate.

I simply mention that on the frequent occasions when Mr. Dunton, the chairman of the board of governors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, has been asked in the committee who makes decisions with regard to programs, and as to who are to go on and who are to be kept off and kindred questions, he has declined to answer. He has always said, "I take the responsibility", and he will not submit to further questioning as to who carry out the function of making these decisions. But now at long last we are told that there is a directorate, apparently functioning at Ottawa, which decides what programs shall go on the air or what shall not. In this case we are told that it was by decision of this directorate that these two arranged programs did not proceed.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort (Mr. Bryson) asked of the minister a question which it would have been my intention to ask concerning the reason why this program or these programs had been cancelled. As reported at page 881 of Hansard, the answer of the Minister of National Revenue was as follows. Perhaps I should read the question. The question was:

> I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Why was the discussion on the book "The Age of Mackenzie King" cancelled by the C.B.C.?

Then the minister's answer was as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I have asked the C.B.C. about this matter and I am informed that it was not a case of cancelling a program. The C.B.C. reports that, while some consideration was given to the book as a possible subject for a national television network discussion, on consideration it was not thought to be a good basis for such a discussion.

There you will observe that the minister is saying that the program was not cancelled. That is an amazing statement in view of the fact that responsible officials of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation had already informed Mr. Ostry that the program had been cancelled. Even in the face of the arrangements which had been made, even in the face of the publication by the C.B.C. in the C.B.C. Times of its intention to broadcast that program on the television network on the evening of December 20, the minister has the audacity to say that the program was not cancelled. Mr. Speaker, we have here another example of these inaccurate answers from the government. You cannot get away from that kind of statement by mere quibbling, by saying that "session" just means "sitting", for instance, as we heard today. No, Mr. Speaker, you cannot get around a statement of that kind by any such quibbling.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You are still annoyed, are you?

Mr. Fleming: Here is a minister saying that it was not cancelled. But the fact is that it was cancelled after it had been announced. Why was it cancelled? Who reached the decision to cancel it? Mr. Ostry has been told that the directorate—whoever they may be—made the decision to cancel it. On what grounds did they make their decision? With what information before them and with what communications before them did they reach that decision?

Mr. Pickersgill: They probably read the book.

Mr. Fleming: That is an interesting comment from the minister. I think this time the minister is right: they read the book; and thereby, Mr. Speaker, hangs the tale and no doubt the explanation.

Looking about for the source of this idea to cancel an announced program concerning a book which, as I have indicated, to say the least is not complimentary to the late Mr. King or the record of the Liberal party, is it not fair to ask this question: Where does the advantage accrue from such a cancellation? To even the most untutored in the tortuous ways of this government it is perfectly obvious that the only advantage that could accrue from the cancellation of that program was an advantage to the Liberal party and the government opposite. Hence, Mr. Speaker, we are left with two alternative explanations.

The first one is that this program must have been cancelled by request of the government. I am not so naïve as to suggest that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) wrote a letter to Mr. Dunton and asked that this program should be cancelled. Oh, no; I do not make that suggestion. I do not even suggest that the Minister of National Revenue necessarily picked up the telephone and called Mr. Dunton or spoke with anyone representing the so-called directorate. I am not even suggesting that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill) necessarily communicated, perhaps by artful stratagem or hint, the feelings of the government in this matter or his personal feelings which would be the same thing. But, Mr. Speaker, by whatever method the view was conveyed or the hint, it is quite obvious that the feelings of the government were not offended by the cancellation. That is one of the two possible explanations.

The other alternative explanation is that the directorate, in proceeding to cancel this program, was acting in the interests of the government and the Liberal party even without direct government intervention.

Sir, of the two alternatives the second would be the worse for Canada because it would mean that the directorate, the responsible body in the Canadian Broadcasting organization, was anticipating government desires in this matter and was showing such a tender solicitude for the partisan interests of the government as would serve the desires of the government. Take your choice, Mr. Speaker, of those two alternative explanations.

Suspicion could not fail to be aroused by the method in which this matter has been handled, the secrecy of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in the way it went about the ugly task of the interment of the plans for this broadcast. There was no frank, straightforward statement coming from them. No, it is quite obvious that they felt they had something to hide; they had something to hold back and therefore the interment must be secret.

In addition, we have what has become the so familiar pattern in this house of another inaccurate answer from a minister. This, sir, has been an ugly act of suppression. It underlines again the dangers of monopoly in reference to an important medium for the communication of ideas. It underlines again the rank peril of government interference, direct or indirect, with this means of communication of ideas. It should not be forgotten that by the statement of responsible officials of the broadcasting corporation the decision to cancel this program, which amounts to a ban and therefore I say decision to ban the panel discussion of this controversial book, was taken at Ottawa. It was a decision to cancel a program already announced.

Where is freedom if this sort of thing can be done? There is only one T.V. network permitted in this country, and here was a program that had been arranged for the network, with all the preparations made so far as the principal figure was concerned.

One thing remains and one alone out of the announced plan of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Gone are the plans for the panel which would have assured a variety of qualified participants in reference to a controversial subject. You will bear in mind, sir, I am not suggesting that the participants in such a panel would be men favourable to the book. The whole purpose of panel discussion, as I understand it in reference to a controversial question, is that you have a variety of points of view and the public hears all sides of the issue.

But gone are the plans for a panel discussion in reference to this controversial volume. All that remains is a plan for a review a little later on by one person, in this case by a gentleman who no doubt would have been suitable as one of the participants in a panel discussion of the book and what it has disclosed, but who now being the sole selected individual to put on a one-man review of the book, happens to be a gentleman employed by the executors of the estate of the late Mr. King as one of his literary editors. We will still recognize that the book is important enough and of sufficient public interest to have warranted the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation last autumn undertaking a sound broadcast and a panel discussion on a television network.

Is this the government's idea of fair play? Is this the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's conception of its duty to the Canadian public? Rather, sir, this is one particularly ugly example of the grip that the Liberal party has laid hold upon the channels of communication and its use of them or abuse of them for its own partisan advantage. We have seen the same thing in reference to television broadcasts. We were reminded not long ago that when the corporation, feeling very uncomfortable in the face of the present situation, desired that the use of the television panels should be opened up to the political parties of this country, the objection made to the use of the channel came from the Liberal party. We shall not forget that it was in this house on January 12 that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), with no doubt commendable frankness, appeared to take personal responsibility in the matter.

Let the Canadian public well realize it has been the Liberal party that has been denying the fair use of the television channels to the political parties. They have all the advantage now. Anything is an excuse for putting a minister on television, but nothing is sufficient justification for putting a representative of another party on the television channels. The advantage is all with the government today, and they mean to keep that advantage just as long as they can.

[Mr. Fleming.]

One further thing, sir; let it not be forgotten that when the representatives of the political parties were called into session to discuss the inauguration of such a service in which the various political parties of this country would be afforded an opportunity to participate, from the lips of the representative of the Liberal party at that conference there came the question as to who was going to censor the program. Here is an act of censorship. Here has been an act of banning, regardless of what the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) says. It was an act of cancellation and this has been done in a way that has accrued, so they think and undoubtedly so they hope, to the partisan advantage of the Liberal party and this government.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Fleming: With pleasure.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I understood him correctly, I understood him to say that at a meeting between the C.B.C. and the various representatives of the political parties a representative of the Liberal party asked the question, who was going to censor the program. I wonder if the hon. gentleman was present at that meeting or what his source of information was? I think we are entitled to be told because I understood this was a private meeting. I think we are entitled to be told what the authority is for that statement because I do not believe, sir, that it is true.

Mr. Fleming: Whether or not the minister thinks it is true does not alter the fact it is true. I was not present at that meeting, and I believe he was not either, so I do not know why he arrogates that kind of authority to himself, but I will tell him I have heard it from several sources, and in every case a reputable and dependable source. There can be no doubt the remark was made.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may be permitted I would say that I have had the privilege of reading the minutes of that meeting.

Mr. Fleming: Were they secret?

Mr. Pickersgill: And there is nothing of the kind in the minutes.

Mr. Fleming: Apparently it did not get on the minutes. Did the minister have anything to do with suppressing the minutes of the meeting he was talking about that was so secret?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—LABOUR RELATIONS

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): I wish at this time to draw to the attention of the house some of the unfair labour practices engaged in by the government of Canada. I do so as a result of several questions asked with regard to the post office department since this session commenced, and which were asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and myself with respect to the liquidation of overtime accumulated during the Christmas rush. As a result of the answers given by the Postmaster General at that time I am wondering whether we realize the seriousness of the government's attitude towards the problem of the 40-hour week and the whole question of overtime. At the time the bill to increase postal rates was before the house we were told it would be necessary to increase the postal rates in order to take care of the additional costs of instituting the 40-hour week and the wage increases involved.

During the course of that debate many of us wondered just how clear the government was in its understanding of the 40-hour week. I recall asking the Postmaster General at that time if he was aware of the fact that the normal practice for a 40-hour week was to pay time and a half for all time worked in excess of the 40 hours. At that time he replied that the government policy was to give the workers a 40-hour week and if they worked over 40 hours they would then be paid at their regular rates of pay. As a matter of fact, it was much worse than that at the time. We were told that the regular postmen who agreed to work a sixth day would be paid at the rate offered to temporary or casual help, which would mean in effect that they would be working at a rate less than their regular rate of pay. Then, after a great deal of confusion on the part of the minister, we did get the impression that the government policy in this regard was to require that the employees work 40 hours and then to ask them if they would work a sixth day. They went much further than that, too. There were complaints coming to hon. members from postal groups throughout the country referring to the efforts made on the part of the postmasters to get personnel to work six days; and mark this, while they were supposed to be working a 40-hour week they were asked to go back and work six days at their regular rates of pay. The government could see nothing wrong with that at the time. I think that is a clear indication that this government has no concept of what the 40-hour week really is.

There were several other matters which entered into the discussion at this time and these matters were brought up at a later time when the estimates of the Postmaster General were before the house. I am not going to refer to them except to state that the pattern indicates the lamentable record of the government in its relations with its employees. We were happy that the government backed down in connection with the question of the priority of holidays which would have been destroyed to a large extent by a change in regulations.

Not long ago the government proposed to introduce penalties for those who were late in arriving at work, and we remember the tremendous outcry which quite naturally arose from those who were affected. Hon. members in this house indicated the folly of that plan, an insult to a loyal group of public servants.

A short while ago the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Fraser) brought up the question of the installation of television in the post office in Peterborough. It is quite true that the government has not talked about putting television in any other post office but we are led to believe that this is more or less an experiment and if the government is satisfied with it then I presume there will be a movement to instal television in other post offices across Canada.

Each of these instances is serious enough in itself but when you see the over-all pattern indicating the callous disregard on the part of the government for the rights of public servants in this country we realize that the government should undertake a revision of their entire attitude.

While we are talking about the dismal record and maladministration on the part of the Post Office Department we must mention the latest instance, which has to do with the liquidation of Christmas overtime. I received, Mr. Speaker, a copy of a resolution passed at the January meeting of the Regina branch of the Canadian postal employees association and I should like to read the resolution because I think it clearly outlines the legitimate complaints of these postal workers:

> Whereas—
> During the Christmas rush, postal workers are called on to work 14 hours per diem (less lunch periods) in order to process the tremendous amount of extra mail to ensure delivery before the holiday.
> And whereas—
> Workers are put to additional expense for extra meals and for taxies,
> And whereas—
> Four extra hours are worked per week before time and one half is paid,
> Therefore we of the Regina Branch of the Canadian Postal Employees Association do unanimously protest the recent ruling of the Post Office Department to liquidate some of this overtime during the month of January.

When this question was raised in the house the Postmaster General made the most amazing statement. He said that there is nothing wrong with this because this is the practice throughout the civil service. In other words, crime is not important if it has become compounded. The fact that this is the practice throughout the civil service is a poor excuse for treating the post office employees in this shameful manner.

The minister made another amazing statement when he said there is an order in council which covers the question of overtime. Well, who passed the order in council? How can the government hide behind an order in council on a matter of this kind? The government passed the order in council stipulating that overtime would not be paid under certain circumstances but instead this time would be liquidated during the month of January.

My contention is simple: If the government could pass an order in council restricting and impeding rights of postal workers, then the same government can rescind that order in council and treat the postal workers properly. If the minister considers that because this is common practice throughout the civil service it is an excuse for the poor treatment of one group of civil servants, then I suggest it is time the government reviewed the system. I should state, Mr. Speaker, that while I am giving a specific instance concerning the Post Office Department I am by no means suggesting that the Postmaster General is more at fault than is any other member of the government. This is a decision which has been made by this government and the Postmaster General is apparently carrying out the government's policy in this regard. It is that government policy which I am protesting at this time.

I think we have to be quite clear that a 40-hour week means that the workers work 40 hours and every hour worked in addition to the 40 hours is overtime and must be paid for at overtime rates of pay. I think we have to recognize that the payment of overtime rates is not a question of incentive to the employee. In reality, overtime rates of pay are a penalty against the employer. A great many unions forbid their members to work overtime because they realize that many employers use overtime as a means of keeping their labour force at the irreducible minimum and that if overtime were not paid the labour force would have to be increased.

Moreover, if there are employees who are not averse to working overtime I suggest it is because their rates of pay are so low they are compelled to accept overtime as a means of supplementing their income and the answer to that is simply not working more overtime but paying more adequate rates of wages.

I have stated before in this house that the government of this country ought to be setting an example to all other employers in Canada but instead of that we find departments of this government which have established the reputation of being the worst employers in Canada as far as treatment of their employees is concerned.

I ask this question: How many employers in this country could get away with what the Post Office Department apparently got away with this year? I wonder how many packing houses or how many factories could say to their men around Christmas, "We are awfully busy this year and are going to require you to work many hours in excess of the regular work week; if you work you can take time off in January." They would not get away with it; there is not a trade union in this country which would put up with it for a moment, and yet civil servants of this government are being obliged to put up with that sort of thing.

I make the plea to the government at this time that they give serious consideration to this matter and recognize their responsibility to the people of this country and that they ought to be setting a good example to other employers rather than setting a bad example. They can set a good example by taking into consideration all the aspects of the 40-hour week and doing away with unfair labour practices which have given the government a black eye as far as their relationship with their employees is concerned.

I say to the Postmaster General (Mr. Lapointe) and through him to the government: Now is the time to pay heed to the representations that have been made. I do not know what the Postmaster General and other ministers of the crown do when representations are received. I have read the resolution passed by the branch in my constituency and I think it indicates to hon. members the reasonableness of the request these people are making. They are not asking for anything which any employee in this country has not the right to get.

What is the government going to do about it instead of getting up and saying they are not going to do anything in connection with this department because it would affect other departments. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill) stood up in this house last year when the post office estimates were being considered and said that they did not want to discuss this matter at that time because it had to do with the civil service commission and the civil service as a whole.

I am not levelling my criticism at the Postmaster General alone. I ask him and his colleagues in the government to give active consideration to the request made by these public servants and usher in a new and better concept of labour relations in the government service.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the subject raised by the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Ellis). I have had occasion before to speak in regard to this matter for certain civil servants. I think the time is long past when any branch of the government of Canada should adhere to the old method of asking workers to work overtime for the privilege of taking time off a little later. As far as the post office employees are concerned they are glad to do this and are ready to work overtime at a time of the year when most people like to have time with their families. But when they do this they are asked to take time off at a period in the year when there is not much else they can do except to sit at home. Surely this government is advanced enough to get away from that old way of treating employees.

I am not going to say much more in this connection. I think all that needs to be done is to draw to the attention of the government how obsolete this sort of treatment is and to ask the government to treat the civil service on the same basis as the employees of private industry are treated. Times have changed in the last few years as far as the relations of workers and employers in industry are concerned. The workers are no longer standing in daily fear of what may happen to them in their employment. They have developed organizations and are thus able to demand consideration from their employers which they never would get without such organizations.

I have not the press clipping with me but since coming down here I read an article in a paper published in Quebec—I think the incident occurred in that province—dealing with the prosecution of some employers in the lumbering industry for cruelty to the horses used in their operations. The judge was quite scathing in his remarks and he said something like this: The workers in industry have organized and can demand proper working conditions, but the horses are not in a position where they can organize, and when cases of this kind are brought before them the courts should see that animals are treated properly. I intended to bring that clipping down with me and I probably should have it, but I left it on my desk.

That brought home to me the fact that only a few years ago the workers in this industry had just as little to say about the conditions under which they had to work as the horses had. But things have changed. I suggest to the Postmaster General (Mr. Lapointe) that he discuss this matter with his administrative staff and I think they will soon realize how old-fashioned it is to say to an employee, "The circumstances are such that we want you to work overtime for the next two or three weeks and then a few weeks later you can take time off as we will not need your services then".

A worker should be paid for his services. If he works overtime he should receive a higher income. When he receives that higher income he should be able to do with it what he likes and in his own time and not be at the beck and call of his employer, whether that employer be the government of Canada or private industry.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I have spoken privately to the minsters about this matter of post office employees, as well as hourly-rated employees in the national parks. I think these two matters are sufficiently related to justify their being dealt with at this time. I feel I should express my appreciation to the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Ellis) for having brought forward this matter, and indicate that I intend to support him in his contention that an employee, whether working for the government or for industry, should have equal rights and privileges. When it is impractical or impossible to carry out the amount of extra work in a post office during the Christmas rush, it is the normal practice to hire temporary employees, but it would seem that they are not extending this practice sufficiently far to provide for all the extra work that is required. Therefore the regular employees are required to work overtime during the Christmas rush and then take time off when they are not required. A more orderly consideration should be given at the outset to this, and if we have enough employees on regular employment that it would cause no dislocation to have them take time off during the work week, then we are not making the best use of our regular employees. If they are required to work overtime, in the province, particularly, where the work week is defined, they should not be expected to work in excess of that work week without some compensation. I do not believe that the compensation is set down in the actual statutes. They simply state the work week as so many hours. Usually the employees make their own arrangements with the employer as to what compensation shall be paid. Certainly overtime is not straight time at regular rates. They should be compensated at rates higher than the regular rates when required to work over the eight hours or over the 40-hour or 44-hour week, as the case may be.

Pensions for Disabled Persons

The other question with which I am concerned is the matter of day rate employees working in the national parks. Those who are in the civil service have their regular work week set down by the civil service commission; and in many cases it is eight hours less per week than their fellow employees working almost side by side with them. The civil service employees will be able to call it a week on Friday evening in many cases, while the day rate employees must continue to work on through Saturday and very often at a lower rate of pay. We understand, of course, that in such services as are provided in national parks Saturday and Sunday work must be carried on. In that case, I understand, the practice is to give the employees days off during the week, but the daily rate employees have been required to work longer hours and have not been compensated or have not had their hours adjusted. I thought I should bring that matter also to the attention of the minister.

PENSIONS FOR THE DISABLED

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, the reason why the Conservative party is the party of the future in Canada is precisely because it is the only party whose representatives are expressly directed to represent faithfully the exact wishes of all their constituents, regardless of party affiliation.

One of the most tragic things in this country lies in the fact that enough people have not stopped to realize how badly this country is being governed. This government has become impotent and, through non-use of its governmental functions, has become atrophied and petrified.

May I dispose of the recent remarks of the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart)? Yes, I wrote to the Creditist Movement president in my area, Mr. Armand Grondin, and it was a pleasure for me to assist them in a few subscriptions to their journal, Vers Demain. My only regret is that I did not suggest that those subscriptions be sent to the ministers and the hon. members across the way. I am of the Conservative party, but that does not stop me from being grateful to the thousands of former Liberals in my riding who voted for me and the Conservative party. Those Liberals took one look at the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage) and all the other ministers and the numerous Liberal M.P.'s who came to my riding, and they all said they would never vote Liberal again.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Van Horne: The Liberal government—

[Mr. Byrne.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I wonder if the hon. member would resume his seat while I am on my feet. Perhaps if the hon. member would state his grievance to the Chair, we would have more order in the house.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, my grievance—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Van Horne: —is the treatment the Liberal government is giving Canada. All that the Liberal members have to do to be defeated is to be seen and heard by the people of Canada. It has happened in my riding in the last by-election on September 26. Former Liberal members in my riding are unanimous in stating that it is not the Liberals who left the Liberal government; but it is the Liberal government which has left the people of Canada. Let me say this. I would much rather wake up on the morrow of an election—

An hon. Member: You will.

Mr. Van Horne: —and find myself grateful to the many former Liberals and Creditists, than to find myself in the position the Liberal members are in; of having to be grateful to the communists.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. member again that he must resume his seat when I rise? May I remind the hon. member also that we are engaged in the discussion of a motion that Mr. Speaker do leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of supply? On this occasion, hon. members may raise grievances within the legislative competence of this parliament, but so far I fail to see that the hon. member is raising a grievance that is in order under our rules. I must ask the hon. member to keep his remarks within the rules of this house.

Mr. Green: On a point of order, may I suggest to Your Honour that you also remind the government supporters in this house that it is against the rules to shout down a member who is speaking?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have found that in this house certain conduct usually invites certain replies. As soon as I found that disorder was taking place, the hon. member who has just spoken will realize that I rose and requested order for the hon. member who had the floor.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I am coming to my grievance—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Van Horne: —but I had wished to dispose of the attacks that had been made the other day by the hon. member for Charlotte, whose tactics—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I at this moment also remind the hon. member that he will of course not refer to a debate of the same session which was concluded on a previous occasion.

Mr. Van Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, my grievance is invalids' pensions.

An hon. Member: The price of potatoes.

Mr. Van Horne: It has got to the point in this country that unless a person possesses certificates from several doctors stating that the only reason he is alive is that he cannot afford to be buried, he cannot get the invalids' pension. I am convinced that the only body in Canada which is so completely and permanently disabled that it can fully qualify for the invalids' pension—

Mr. Byrne: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this is completely repetitious debate. The hon. member went into this question in the speech from the throne debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska.

Mr. Van Horne: As I say, Mr. Speaker, the only body in Canada which in my opinion is fully qualified to receive the invalids' pension at the moment, which is so fully, completely and permanently disabled that it can no longer act and can no longer move, is the body politic of the present Liberal government. They do not need any certificates at all to get a pension.

An hon. Member: Is that your grievance?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Van Horne: No. I gather it is possible to speak on more than one grievance. As a boy going to school I was taught to hold this house in high regard as a sort of sanctuary where the voice of the people was heard and listened to. What a disappointment! What a horrible impression must remain in the minds and hearts of the people who come and sit in the galleries of the house! The other day I was tempted to cross the floor—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: We do not want you.

An hon. Member: Stay where you are.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I request hon. members kindly to preserve order while the hon. member is stating his grievance.

Mr. Van Horne: Frankly I was worried because there was one member across the way whose neck was horizontal and, I thought, possibly broken, while his body was vertical and he was sound asleep.

Then I have another grievance. I come from a French-speaking riding and when I come here I should like to speak in French. I feel there should be translation facilities in the house which would permit every member to hear me in English simultaneously when I speak in French, just as they have at the United Nations. Then there should be recording devices to supplement the shorthand notes of the reporters which are never 100 per cent accurate.

Why does the government not give these desks to some poor school district in my riding and supply us with desks under which we would have room to put our knees and where we could do some work? Furthermore, there should be a waiting room where we can receive and greet people who come to see us as members of parliament. Something should be done now to remove the bad impression which this House of Commons gives the people of Canada when they come to visit us. People must be made to respect this house and honour the noble traditions of democratic government. Not one person in ten who visits here leaves without an impression of having been let down.

The tragedy of Canada is that our people do not realize how indifferently, how inadequately and how badly we, the Canadian people, are governed. The government-financed Liberal propaganda machine has, by hollering loud and long and by dint of repetition, lulled far too many Canadians into believing that all is well and that this country may continue in this slap-happy, indolent method of government while we struggle with only a small part of the Canadian heritage which would be ours if we had in Canada a progressive wide-awake government, which only the Conservative party can provide.

I was forcibly reminded of this during the recent by-election campaign when the real issues were brought before a people that had hitherto placed its confidence in the Liberal party. If the Canadian people knew the facts they would resolve never to vote for this government again. In the time of the late Mackenzie King it was government on the advice received at seance meetings through these professional mediums, of dead people and dead dogs. Of course those were the days before high fidelity and the late prime minister is reported having complained that the voices from the grave were often scratchy. Of course he never bothered to look under the draped tables in these seance meetings to see the old gramophone which brought him these dead voices.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I really hope I do not have to rise once more. Surely the hon. member must realize that we are discussing grievances, and I cannot see that the hon. member's remarks have been in order for the last several moments. As I said before, I have granted the leniency which I think is due a new member, but I really hope I will not have to rise to my feet once more.

Mr. Van Horne: My grievance, Mr. Speaker, was originally with certain aspects of the Department of National Health and Welfare and primarily invalids' pensions. In my county about 2 per cent of the people entitled to invalids' pensions are getting them. It has become a problem of the utmost importance; the department must take action to establish honest and just measures by which those people who are prevented from earning a living because of sickness can get these pensions. It is now nothing more than a means of propaganda fostered by the Liberal propaganda machine to get votes.

Mr. Robichaud: Administered by the provinces.

Mr. Van Horne: It does not help any province. It does nothing, and only one person in a hundred is able to get a pension. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) and the department hide behind all sorts of excuses and say that the provinces have something to do with it. The provinces come back and say that the department uses dictatorial methods in establishing the policies that must be followed with regard to invalids' pensions. The Minister of National Health and Welfare will probably say that something may be done in the very distant future, but we want something done now to give these pensions to the people who deserve them. In my opinion the government shirks its duty and is irresponsible in its attitude to the people by continuing to state that we have invalids' pensions when in fact invalids' pensions are not available to the people who should get them. Can my complaint and my grievance be any more clear than that?

I say, Mr. Speaker, that we in Restigouche-Madawaska, and in the maritimes generally, are fed up. We are tired of this government which fails to recognize, through indolence, indifference and apathy, the real and vital problems with which we have to deal from day to day. Let the government wake up to the needs of the Canadian people and the needs of the maritime provinces. Let the government realize that it is responsible to the maritime provinces as well as to the people in the rest of Canada. I am getting away from my main grievance again, Mr. Speaker, but I have finished what I wish to say now.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Robichaud: Will the hon. member permit a question? Is the hon. member still prepared to use the term he has used in this house on January 17 when he sees this poster which says, and I translate: "$5 for your potatoes; vote for Van Horne".

Mr. Van Horne: I want to answer that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Kootenay West.

PENSION SCHEMES—INCOME TAX REGULATIONS

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I would not for a moment attempt to compete with the highly volatile and explosive member who has preceded me. In listening to his remarks and noting his mannerisms, his verbosity and loudness, I am reminded of a member who sat to my left some years ago.

An hon. Member: Where is he now?

Mr. Herridge: He remained in this house a very short time. He has long since disappeared from this chamber.

I rise to make a mild request. I may say that my requests are always mild. In fact, one of my political opponents on one occasion said that I was the mildest-mannered man that had ever cut a political throat. Anyway, I am going to be quite brief.

Mr. Knowles: It does not take long.

Mr. Herridge: A number of working people in my constituency and in other constituencies in Canada are very much concerned about the income tax regulations with regard to pension schemes and things of that sort. On that account last session I dealt with the question in the house at some length and on that occasion I was pleased to note with what great interest the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) listened to my representations. I understand that later on a departmental committee was formed to study this question. I know it is a matter of great concern to many working people because I have had it raised with me in conversations and I have received a number of letters about it. Many people interested in pension plans are much concerned about this matter and are waiting with some impatience for the decision of the government in this respect.

I rise at this time only to urge upon the minister that the government make an announcement in this respect at as early a date as possible because we are approaching the time when negotiations are carried on and things of that sort. There are many men who are much concerned about what the decision of the government is with respect to the application of the income tax regulations to pension funds in this country.

REFERENCE TO MISTAKE IN BY-ELECTION ADVERTISEMENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my grievance is one which I shall state briefly. I am prompted to state it because of the fact that the hon. member who spoke previous to the last one was the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne). I hold in my hand a page from Le Madawaska—

Mr. Van Horne: That was a mistake.

Mr. Knowles: —published at Edmundston, New Brunswick, on September 22, 1955.

Mr. Van Horne: That was a mistake.

Mr. Knowles: As everyone can see, it has a picture of the very good-looking hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska and it has an appeal in French to the constituents of that riding to vote for him. It is perfectly in order for such an appeal to be made but I should like to call to the attention of the house the first item on this page. My grievance will then be quite clear if my French is understandable.

Mr. Van Horne: It is a mistake by a Liberal newspaper.

Mr. Knowles: It reads as follows:

(Translation):

Increase of pensions: in May 1954, all Liberal members, including Jean Lesage and Bona Arsenault, voted against the motion submitted by Stanley Knowles, Progressive Conservative member—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles:

—to increase the pension by 50 per cent.

(Text):

I think my grievance is obvious. One is obliged to take a lot of things in this political life but I do not like being characterized as a Progressive Conservative deputy although I was pleased to have the support of that party as well as the support of other members on this side of the house on my motion calling for an increase in the amount of the old age pension.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I had attempted to rise following the conclusion of the remarks made by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) dealing with the particular subject concerning the C.B.C. I want to say a few words in that connection in view of the fact that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) was rather reluctant to answer some of the criticism levelled by the hon. member for Eglinton.

In putting forward the criticisms I am going to make, may I say that I am going to try to make those criticisms in a constructive manner. The C.B.C. is after all a child of this government, and I would hate to see anything happen which would result in its being discredited by those forces which apparently have been brought to bear on it. I am just as much interested in the case that was made by the hon. member for Eglinton in regard to this matter about which he spoke, namely this controversial program, as is the hon. member for Eglinton; but I am afraid that the points the hon. member for Eglinton was trying to make were such as to cast reflection and to try to discredit the C.B.C. rather than to get justice for the book in question. I am also sure that the Minister of National Revenue and the C.B.C. in particular are going to have—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Do I understand that the hon. gentleman is following the remarks made by the hon. member for Eglinton earlier this evening? If so, I am just asking myself whether he is in order inasmuch as there have been, as he well knows, intervening subjects which have been discussed. If, on the other hand, the hon. gentleman had not been recognized following the hon. member for Eglinton, I think perhaps leniency might be extended to him.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Bryson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I rose I pointed out that I had attempted to rise following the remarks made by the hon. member for Eglinton. As I was saying, I am concerned about this particular question that has been raised by the hon. member for Eglinton. As a matter of fact, I myself raised it in this house no later than this afternoon. I am worried that there is not going to be sufficient explanation to clear the C.B.C. That is the point that I want to make in the few minutes that I am going to speak on this question. If the C.B.C. is going to be an instrument of government propaganda, then it will lose all the significance and all of the value for which it was set up. Until the government explains its position or until the C.B.C. explains, as I am sure it is going to have an opportunity to do, what has happened in this particular instance—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort (Mr.

Bryson). It is unfortunate that he could not get the floor immediately after the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming). I suppose at that time he overlooked the fact that there was no amendment before the house. When there is no amendment before the house the subject which is introduced by an hon. member may be discussed until completed. Once another subject has been introduced by another hon. member, as was the case earlier this evening, one cannot revert to the former subject.

There are only a few minutes left. If the house is prepared to give its unanimous consent it can do so. Otherwise, I could not create a precedent whereby a subject would have been introduced, another subject intervening and then a reference to the former subject. See Beauchesne's third edition, citation 468.

Mr. Harris: As this is the first motion of this kind during this session, Mr. Speaker, it might be permissible for hon. members not to be as aware of the situation as they will be later. I suggest the hon. member have permission to continue.

Mr. Speaker: As there is unanimous consent and since this is not going to be considered as a precedent, the hon. member may continue.

Mr. Bryson: My remarks will only be of a few minutes' duration. I should like to say that I believe a great many people are concerned about the future of the C.B.C. They see something that is good in the C.B.C. We must keep the C.B.C.

As I said in the first instance, my criticisms are based on the proposition that we must not have any government interference that might result in the misuse of that organization. I would say that until the government has cleared up this question doubt and suspicion will remain in the minds of a great many people that this public institution is being misused by this government in order to keep from the people what would appear to be something that was not in the interests of the Liberal party. I do not think that is good. I hope, therefore, that the minister is able to clear the C.B.C. on that score.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): There are only a few minutes remaining, but I should like to state a matter of privilege. It seems to me that when time is limited under our new rules for a certain debate, perhaps some arrangement might be made where there could be a more equitable distribution of the time between the various parties in the house. Now you will notice perhaps my point of privilege when I explain that a debate took place the other day wherein the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) spoke twice to the exclusion of even permitting another group to mention why they were going to vote in a certain way on the amendment. All day yesterday and today we debated an amendment to the motion that you leave the chair. The Leader of the Opposition and many others spoke on that motion. Now, that was in the form of a grievance.

As soon as that motion was disposed of a member of the same party rose to take the floor. Perhaps he had a right to do it, but he spoke on the same subject on which the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort (Mr. Bryson) asked a question today. Perhaps he would have followed that with his grievance if the next party in line had obtained the floor. It simply means this, Mr. Speaker, that there should be some gentlemanly agreement and fairness in the distribution of time. It does seem to me that when one party leaves off, at least the other party should be able to follow. After that, I am not too concerned. Much of that responsibility, I think, rests with our Conservative friends. If they expect all parties to be fair they had better be fair now because they may not be sitting in that preferred position after the next election.

Mr. Trainor: So say you.

Mr. Hansell: They will look to others who are in that position to be fair. I mention this as a point of privilege, and I think when it is considered perhaps all will agree that my point of privilege is fairly well taken.

Mr. Fleming: On a question of privilege, I should like to point out for the information of the hon. member that in speaking tonight after the vote on the amendment I was speaking for the first time in this debate. As to the second point, his suggestion that the matter I was discussing had been raised by way of a question by another hon. member, I may tell him that I also was concerned in that matter. He apparently was not in the house to hear me say that I had intended to ask a similar question and did ask a question this afternoon. I had also informed the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort that I intended to raise this question here tonight. There was no intention on his part to raise it, as he indicated to me at that time, so there is no ground for any suggestion that any member was prevented from raising the same question I raised here tonight.

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) has said, it is a matter that hon. members could well either discuss amongst themselves through the usual channels in order to arrive at some understanding or else if an hon. member believes that the member taking the floor should not be doing so he can always move a motion that must be put without debate, that is that the hon. member be now heard. Standing order No. 29 reads:

When two or more members rise to speak, Mr. Speaker calls upon the member who first rose in his place; but a motion may be made that any member who has risen "be now heard", or "do now speak", which motion shall be forthwith put without debate.

I will do my best to distribute the time as fairly as possible, but as I say the house can always take care of the matter because by virtue of the standing order I have just quoted it is in their own hands.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

BOX CAR SHORTAGE

Question No. 55—Mr. Argue:

1. Has there been a shortage of box cars for the movement of grain since August 1, 1955?
2. If so, what has been the extent of the shortage during this period?
3. What steps have been taken by the government to relieve the shortage?
4. Have exports of (a) wheat; (b) oats; (c) barley, been hampered by any shortage of box cars?
5. If so, in what way and to what extent?

Answer by: Mr. Howe (Port Arthur):

1. Since August 1, 1955 the transportation position has gone through two phases. During approximately the first 90 days of the present crop year elevator congestion was severe and only limited unload space was available, particularly at the lakehead. During this phase car supply was adequate. The second phase commenced in late October when board selling increased sharply. From this time onward transportation available for the movement of grain did not keep up with sales, with the result that elevator space was created at Pacific coast ports and at the lakehead.

The filling of empty elevator space at the lakehead following the close of navigation on the great lakes normally takes some time. While the policy is to fill this space as quickly as possible with grain from country points while there exists empty space at the lakehead, it is not proper to attribute this empty space at this particular moment as being entirely due to a shortage of transportation. The factor of practical railroading must be considered.

2. See answer to No. 1 above.

3. The government, the transport controller and the Canadian wheat board have worked with the railways in securing an improvement in transportation available for grain in the face of a heavy demand for transportation throughout Canada as a whole.

4. With minor exceptions, export programs to date have been completed on schedule.

In recent weeks there has been some delay in loading ocean vessels at Pacific coast ports with particular grades of wheat, although port stocks as a whole have been adequate for current movement, but not sufficiently large to constitute an adequate reserve against heavy export programs.

5. See answer to No. 4 above.

WHEAT—PURCHASE FOR LOCAL CURRENCIES

Question No. 58—Mr. Thatcher:

1. During 1954 or 1955, have any nations expressed a specific desire to the Canadian wheat board or to the Canadian government, to purchase Canadian wheat with local currency, due to a shortage of Canadian dollars?
2. If so, what nations?

Answer by: Mr. Howe (Port Arthur):

1. No.
2. See answer to No. 1 above.

AIRPLANES IMPORTED FROM IRON CURTAIN COUNTRIES

Question No. 64—Mr. Starr:

1. Were any airplanes manufactured behind the iron curtain imported into Canada during the year 1955?
2. If so, (a) how many; (b) by whom; (c) at what price; (d) from what country or countries?
3. What taxes were collected on such imports, by way of customs duty or otherwise?
4. Have any such planes been imported during the current year? If so, how many and by whom?

Answer by: Mr. Howe (Port Arthur):

1. Imports into Canada are recorded in trade statistics by country of consignment and not by country of manufacture. During the period January 1 to October 31, 1955, (latest figures available) airplanes were consigned to Canada from Czechoslovakia.

2. (a) Three; (b) Under the Statistics Act, the names of individual importers may not be revealed; (c) One aircraft (sailplane)—$2,855, one aircraft (including engine)—$10,215, one aircraft (including engines)—$21,972; (d) All consigned from Czechoslovakia.

3. Customs duty and taxes—nil.

4. Information not yet available.

Questions

INDIAN AFFAIRS—DOCTORS AND DENTISTS

Question No. 72—Mr. Regier:

1. On how many occasions in 1955 did the civil service commission of Canada ask for applications for the services of doctors and dentists for the department of Indian affairs?
2. What was the average salary offered?
3. What was the average number of applicants for each of the positions?

Answer by: Mr. Pinard:

1. During 1955 the following competitions were advertised to fill vacancies for medical officers and dental surgeons in the Indian health services of the Department of National Health and Welfare:

Medical officer, grade 3, Lady Willingdon hospital, Brantford, Ontario.

Medical officer, grade 5, (internal medicine), Charles Camsell Indian hospital, Edmonton, Alta.

Medical officer, grade 5, (paediatrics), Charles Camsell Indian hospital, Edmonton, Alta.

Medical officer, grade 3. Vacancies various locations in Canada.

Medical officer, grade 10, northern health services, Ottawa.

Dental surgeons. Vacancies various centres in Canada.

2. Salaries offered depended on the grade of the position advertised. Appointments of medical officer, grade 3, were made at a starting salary of $6,420 per annum; medical officer, grade 5, $7,000 per annum; and medical officer, grade 10, $9,500 per annum.

The competition for dental surgeons, grade 2 has not yet been completed but it would appear that there will not be a sufficient number of qualified applicants to fill vacancies which exist. Appointments will be made at a salary of $5,940 per annum.

3. A total of 43 applications was received for two medical officer, grade 5 vacancies, medical officer, grade 3 (Lady Willingdon) and medical officer, grade 10. These competitions were held to fill individual vacancies. There were 11 applications in the competition for dental surgeons, grade 2, and 20 applications in the competition for medical officer, grade 3, with vacancies at various centres in Canada.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING POLLUTION OF INTERPROVINCIAL RIVERS

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 66, to amend the Criminal Code (nuisance).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

STARRED QUESTIONS

SOMASS RIVER, B.C., HYDRO PROJECT

Question No. 9—Mr. Barnett:

1. Has the Department of Fisheries been informed of plans by the British Columbia power commission to initiate a hydroelectric project on the Somass river system, Vancouver island, British Columbia?
2. If so, have plans of this project been submitted to the department in sufficient detail to enable a full assessment of its effect on the sockeye salmon run to this river system?
3. Has any conclusion been reached as to whether or not this sockeye run would be adversely affected?

Mr. MacNaught: The answer to the first part of this question is that departmental officials on the Pacific coast have learned unofficially that the British Columbia power commission is contemplating the development of hydro power on the Somass river.

The answer to the second part of the question is that no details of the project have been submitted as yet to the department. And the answer to the third part of the question would therefore be "no".

SOURIS RIVER DAM, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 10—Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain):

1. Has application been made to the international joint commission by the government of Saskatchewan or any agency thereof, in connection with the proposed construction of a dam on the Souris river, south of Estevan, Saskatchewan?
2. If so, will the minister inform the house of the progress which has been made with respect to the studies surrounding this application, and recommendations of the commission?

Mr. Martin: As the Secretary of State for External Affairs has had to go to the airport with the Prime Minister to extend a farewell to the British Prime Minister and his foreign secretary perhaps I may be permitted to give the replies to this question. The reply to No. 1 is that an application dated May 30, 1955, has been made to the international joint commission by the province of Saskatchewan for the proposed construction of a dam south of Estevan on Long creek, a tributary of the Souris river.

The answer to the second question is that the Saskatchewan application is one of several applications now before the international joint commission covering projects in the Souris river basin which have been submitted for the approval of the commission. Hearings on these applications were held by the commission in September in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and North Dakota. The matter of these applications has recently been discussed by the commission in its executive session held in January in Toronto. No report, as yet, has been presented to the government of Canada or to the government of the United States.

Question No. 80—Mr. Murphy (Lambton West):

1. How many paintings have been purchased by or for the national art gallery of Canada in the last 20 years?
2. Who were the artists, what were the names of the pictures and the price paid for same?
3. How many of these paintings have not been shown to the public for a period longer than a few months since their purchase?
4. Of these, what are the names of the artists, the names of the paintings and the price paid for such paintings?
5. If paintings were stored in the vault and not shown to the public, what was the reason?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if question No. 80 could be made an order for return and if the hon. member for Lambton West would permit one modification in the second part of that question, which asks:

Who were the artists, what were the names of the pictures and the price paid for same?

There is no objection to giving the price paid for all the pictures bought in each year, but for obvious reasons it has never been the practice to give the prices paid for individual pictures. With that modification, I would be very glad to bring all the information down.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

WEST GERMANY—MAINTENANCE OF CANADIAN TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister been advised of any change in policy by the government of West Germany regarding that government's contribution towards the maintenance of Canadian troops in Europe? If so, would the minister make a statement on the situation?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question, which I received just as I was coming into the house. The only information I have as yet is the dispatch contained in the newspapers. This is a very important matter, as I am sure we all realize, and I would prefer not to comment until we have official confirmation of the position.

Mr. Pearkes: Will you make a statement at a later date?

Mr. Campney: Yes, when I am in a position to do so.

REFERENCE TO ACCIDENT AT BRAMPTON, ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, a couple of days ago the hon. member for Peel inquired about the regrettable aircraft accident which happened near Brampton on February 5 last. Specifically, he asked whether the pilots who were killed were practising forced landings.

In reply I would point out that these two officers were members of the Royal Canadian Air Force primary reserve carrying out training in an aircraft owned by the R.C.A.F. but on loan to, and operated by, the Toronto Flying Club under civilian licence.

As the aircraft is under civilian licence, the investigation of the accident is being carried out by the Department of Transport. However, preliminary information indicates that the officers concerned were practising forced landings for which they had been duly authorized in accordance with the refresher flying training plan in which they were participating.

For the information of hon. members perhaps I might add that the refresher flying training plan is designed to maintain a pool of approximately 600 primary reserve officers as basic flying instructors who can be available in an emergency to assist in the rapid expansion of air force training capacity.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

TRANSMISSION EQUIPMENT—ACTION TO BE TAKEN CONCERNING ALLEGED COMBINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I ask the Minister of Justice if his department has yet reached a decision with respect to the prosecution on the basis of the report of the restrictive trade practices commission of an alleged combine in manufacturing, distribution and sale of transmission and conveyor equipment?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. The report was submitted for the advice of counsel to Mr. D. W. Mundell, Q.C., of Toronto, about three weeks ago, and we have not yet had an opinion from him.

PULPWOOD AND PAPER—PROGRESS OF INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Maltais (Charlevoix): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question. Would the minister care to comment on what progress has been made with respect to the investigation under the Combines Investigation Act into the alleged price fixing of pulpwood in the pulpwood and paper industry?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): I wish to thank my hon. friend for having given me notice of his question. The answer is that the inquiry in question is proceeding in the usual way, but until I receive a report from the commission I am not in a position to report to the house.

TRADE

EXPORT OF MILITARY SUPPLIES TO UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does the dominion bureau of statistics issue under his authority a publication known as Trade of Canada, giving full details of the value and destination of all products exported from Canada? If so, does the issue for December, 1954, disclose the export from Canada during the calendar year 1954—

Mr. Fleming: Order.

Mr. MacEachen: —of aircraft, aircraft parts, cartridges for guns, rifles, etc.,—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is now putting a very lengthy question in which I am afraid he is giving the house much more information than he intends to ask for. Would the hon. member be good enough to put his question.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nowlan: Order paper.

Mr. MacEachen: Does the December, 1954, issue of the publication, Trade of Canada, include exports of aircraft and aircraft parts, etc., in the value of $81 million conforming to the figure given yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition? What proportion—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is obvious that the hon. member has looked at the report and knows that the information is there. Why should he ask that it be confirmed in the house?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that is quite a legitimate question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming: The authority on legitimate questions.

Mr. Speaker: It amounts to the same thing as if the hon. member, after perusing the public accounts tabled in the house, had asked the Minister of Finance to confirm whether so many items are contained therein. This is a printed publication available to the public and I presume it is available to any hon. member who wishes to look at it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that these figures can be misused.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Goode: May I ask a supplementary question? I have not seen the report and I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should go to the library and ask for a copy of the report.

Mr. Knowles: Take the Minister of Trade and Commerce with you.

Mr. Martin: You do not want the truth.

[Later:]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, may I direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce an abridged question which I hope will meet with your approval. What proportion of the $81 million of exports mentioned yesterday were directed to the United States?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The hon. member was good enough to give me notice of his question, and the answer is 94 per cent.

Mr. Drew: To assist the minister, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the Leader of the Opposition have a question to ask?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Drew: Will the Minister of Trade and Commerce explain to the house that none of this had anything to do with the arrangements between the NATO countries for the mutual shipment of arms?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The shipments to the United States, Mr. Speaker, had to do with an arrangement made with the defence department of the United States, by which Canadian purchases of armaments in the United States would be offset by United States purchases placed in Canada. Our purchases from the United States of armaments were somewhat larger than the figures referred to as our shipments to the United States.

Mr. Drew: The minister did not answer the question. I would point out that it is quite—

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Would the Leader of the Opposition be good enough to put his question.

Mr. Drew: Is the minister aware that on page 6 of Trade of Canada, a record of the dominion bureau of statistics which is under his department, it is stated that none of these shipments referred to transfers under the Defence Appropriations Act, and that the exports under the Defence Appropriations Act—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Drew: —in 1954—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Drew: —were $202 million.

Mr. Speaker: As I quite properly pointed out a moment ago, the purpose of question time is to seek information and not to read documents that are public. I realize the position of the Leader of the Opposition, and a moment ago I tried to offset what I considered to be something that would become a debatable matter. I do hope we will return now to the question time.

Mr. Drew: I was really trying to find out whether the minister knew the facts or was trying to mislead the house.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO PROVISION FOR PERSONS DENIED BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister in a position to make a report to the house on the success or otherwise of the revision of the interpretation of the Unemployment Insurance Act, concerning which he made an announcement two weeks ago, with reference to qualifications for benefits? Has it been successful and can he say how many persons have benefited by it to date?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): No, I am not and I do not expect to be for some little time to come. It will take some weeks yet to carry out the program I outlined to the house the other day.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps the minister will be able to give that information by answering a set of questions of mine which will be found on the order paper.

CRIMINAL LAW

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION RESPECTING CRIMINAL SEXUAL PSYCHOPATHS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister tell us how soon the report of the royal commission now studying the problem of sex offences will be completed?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Inasmuch as my hon. friend did not give me notice of his question I suggest that I take it as notice.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ALLEGED REFUSAL BY MINISTER TO ANSWER QUESTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Can he inform the house on what grounds there is a refusal to give the price paid for individual pictures as he did refuse in answer to a question today?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that I refused anything. I asked concurrence of the hon. member for Lambton West to a modification in his question and I understood him to nod and give that concurrence.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, if I may say so at this time, I did not give concurrence.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think we should now revert to a matter that was dealt with before the orders of the day were called. I stood up and I said "Is it agreed?". Not hearing any objection I took it that it was agreed and I called the orders of the day. We are now dealing with the orders of the day.

DISABLED PERSONS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour. Can he tell us when we might expect to have copies of the report and recommendations of the national advisory committee on the rehabilitation of disabled persons?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am constantly getting reports from that committee. Perhaps my hon. friend would tell me to which report she refers.

Mrs. Fairclough: I refer to the report which I understand was finished a couple of days ago. I just wondered how long it might take for it to be processed and to be printed for the use of members of this house.

Mr. Gregg: The report referred to was a report of a subcommittee of the national advisory committee. That subcommittee indicated that they would like to make their report back to the main committee.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—INQUIRY AS TO DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, if I may. I wonder if he would consult with the heads of the Canadian National Railways with a view to seeing that the C.N.R. property on the St. Lawrence seaway is not disposed of at a fraction of its value.

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that I do not understand the hon. member's question. However, I shall read it in Hansard tomorrow and see what answer should be given.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): I can give you full particulars. I have done it before.

[Later:]

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. When he is making his inquiries, I wonder whether he would ascertain whether within the last two or three years the Canadian National Railways sold property other than in my area to defeated Liberal candidates?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

POTATOES

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION FOLLOWING REPORT OF TARIFF BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister indicate whether any action has been taken respecting the tariff on potatoes subsequent to the report by the tariff board on November 5 of last year? If so, is any further action contemplated? Would the minister please explain?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): The report of the tariff board on potatoes was an extremely comprehensive document and was the result of a hearing before the tariff board which occupied considerable time. When we realized that, we felt that it would be proper to consult with both the applicants before the board and the various governments concerned. We therefore wrote to the ministers of agriculture in all those provinces which are particularly interested in potato growing and marketing, to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and to the Canadian Horticultural Council, inviting them to come here and discuss the report. I think they will be here on Friday and Saturday of this week.

GRAIN

PROVISION FOR GUARANTEE OF BANK LOANS TO PRODUCERS IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Friday, February 3, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Howe (Port Arthur)—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide, by way of a guarantee for bank loans made on or after the 15th day of November, 1955, and before the 1st day of June, 1956, for short-term credit to grain producers in the prairie provinces to meet temporary financial difficulties arising from inability to deliver their grain; to provide also that the governor in council may extend the application of the act to cover loans made before the 1st day of June, 1957; and to provide further that any amount paid to a bank under the act be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Castleden: When this debate was adjourned I was dealing with the reasons why we were opposing this legislation as a means of correcting a very serious cash shortage situation in the prairie regions. At that time I pointed out the scheme was impracticable as a measure to get cash into the hands of the farmers who needed it most.

I maintain it was unjust and wrong in principle to ask those people who had spent their time during the year in producing grain and then, because of the policies of this government, were unable to deliver it, to assume a further burden of debt, and to carry on top of that a further interest of 5 per cent on the loan.

The Manitoba farmer who blasted his television set in a moment of righteous indignation expressed the feelings of the prairie farmers in a very real manner. What he is reported to have said on that occasion exemplifies exactly what the producer thinks. He is reported in the Winnipeg Free Press of February 3 as having said:

That man Tucker! Does he think I am going to work all year and then pay interest to the banks on my whole summer's work?

That is exactly how the farmer looks at this legislation. For that reason we maintain it is unjust and wrong. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) says that he is supporting it, and that the legislation does exactly what it was intended to do. Well, a few farmers may be compelled to pay the 5 per cent interest. A very small percentage of the farmers may be able to qualify. Under the pressure of debts against them they may go to the banks and, if they qualify, assume an extra burden of debt, but I can assure the minister and those who are supporting this legislation that the farmers do so with a great deal of disgust, and they feel the injustice of it.

The difficulties of the situation are very real. I have a letter from one of the producers in my own constituency. He writes:

On January 11, 1956, we delivered our first load of grain since December 22, 1954.

It is over a year since he had been allowed to deliver any grain at all. Many farmers are in the same position, particularly if they had decided that they were not going to deliver the grain except to an elevator which they owned. The farmers' requests have been very clear. If the minister or anybody else assumes that the farmer has been asking for anything else, he is entirely wrong. They made their requests very clear. They asked for cash advances on the grain which is properly stored on the farm. It could be inspected by people who know how to inspect it. It could be graded; it could be sealed up and the advance noted in their permit books so that they would be absolutely sure that they could not deliver without repaying the advance which they had obtained. Surely there is a minimum of justice in their request.

For anyone to agree with this legislation is to agree with what the leader of the Liberal party in Saskatchewan termed it. It is something useless, as he described it. It is like voting for a stirrup pump in fighting a forest fire. As a matter of fact, the producers there look upon it as a deliberate insult. It reveals a callous disregard for those people who have been placed in the difficulties in which they find themselves today by the policies and the administration of the government opposite. The failure to sell the grain, the failure to provide the means for transporting this grain out of the elevators, have been the two things which have brought about the situation that exists at the present time. Here they are with their bins loaded. Many of them have not even room in their bins for all the wheat. They are still sitting there completely unable to get anything in the way of money to carry on their businesses or to pay any of the cost of operation of the past year.

I was speaking the other day of the difficulty that a person from the prairie region has in letting the people of eastern Canada know what some of the difficulties are out there. I went to the net farm income of the dominion bureau of statistics and found that the reports for the past three years gave the net farm income in 1954 as compared with 1952. The figures for 1955 are not out yet but the trend is exactly the same. The following are the decreases in net farm income for the eastern provinces from 1952 to 1954:

Maritime provinces	19 per cent
Quebec	3 per cent
Ontario	15 per cent

When we come to the prairie provinces we find these figures:

Manitoba	54 per cent
Saskatchewan	77 per cent
Alberta	50 per cent
British Columbia	10 per cent

Those figures reveal why it is the farmers in the west are disturbed about the situation when after another year of decrease in their income they find themselves with an abundant crop of good grain which they are unable to deliver.

It is in the face of the unqualified refusal on the part of the government to give consideration to the payment of cash advances against properly stored farm grain that we make the protest we are making. We are going to continue to make that protest.

To add insult to this refusal to make cash advances on properly stored farm grain, similar to what has been done in the United States for years, we have the Minister of Trade and Commerce saying that those people who recommend such cash advances are enemies of the wheat board method of delivering grain. Then we have the Minister of Agriculture who comes from that area, and who should know what the situation is, saying that the bank loan system will do what it was intended to do. What it is intended to do is to put the producer deeper into debt. It must be that because that is exactly what is going to happen, there will be another burden of interest placed upon his back.

What do we suggest should be done under the circumstances? We say that the farmers should be given advances on properly stored farm grain. This job is too big for the banks to handle and we suggest that since the elevator agents under the arrangement proposed by the government are going to be asked to collect the grain and thus pay off the loan they should be allowed to recommend the advances.

The elevator agent is the one who knows the farmer well. There are far more of these agents throughout the west than there are bankers. Many farmers are some distance away from the bank and they possibly cannot get out to the bank, but all farmers haul their grain to the local elevators. They know the elevator agents personally because they do business with them. The elevator agents know the farmers and they could even visit the farms to grade the grain and see that it is properly stored. If necessary they could place seals upon the granary doors. They could enter the details in the permit book which is in the elevator, and when the farmer is allowed to deliver his grain, that could be deducted from the cash advance. The producer would thus be enabled to carry on his operations.

Next I would suggest to the minister that he get his box cars into operation and clear up the congestion that exists. Box cars should be placed across Canada to do the job they are intended to do, that is to carry grain from the small delivery points to the space available in the elevators.

On Monday of this week the house had the privilege of listening to Sir Anthony Eden, Prime Minister of Great Britain. Sir Anthony made a statement which should have been listened to closely by the members of this house when he said:

> Economic weapons may take the place of military ones. But always our purpose must be the same; to maintain the right that men's minds may be free and the care that their bellies be filled.

Sir Anthony told the government and this country that the economic weapons of today may replace military weapons. We have a government here which is ready to spend $2,000 million a year on defence and military weapons, but not one-tenth of that for economic production. This government is ready to administer the affairs of this country so that money is spent on military weapons to provide profits for industry in the heavily industrialized areas where prosperity is maintained, but little is spent on those who are producing the economic weapon of food for a hungry world. While the rest of Canada enjoys prosperity, agriculture, which represents about 20 per cent of the population of Canada, must be satisfied with slightly over 8 per cent of the national income.

The government is sponsoring this resolution and the bill to follow, and the official opposition have declared that they are going to support it. The Social Credit party have indicated that they are going to support it, although somewhat reluctantly. The 23 members of this party cannot hope to prevent the passage of the legislation, but we do urge the opposition parties to support us in our fight against a piece of injustice, a piece of useless legislation which will accomplish little more than to add an increased debt burden to those who are doing this job of producing. We oppose it in principle and it is clearly our duty to fight against it. Certainly I can say to the committee that we will never support it.

Grain

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I rise to deal with a matter which I attempted to place before the house on an earlier occasion this week, but as it was pointed out to me that there would be another opportunity, I am availing myself of this opportunity as I indicated I would. In the Winnipeg Free Press of February 3 was an article on the editorial page dealing with the debate in the house on this subject. It was headed "Farm Loans Debate at Ottawa" and then followed in capitals, "One Solution Overlooked". The article then went on to suggest that the solution overlooked was the proposal for the payment of cash for wheat actually on farms.

I started to point out earlier that this was entirely contrary to the facts. As it was indicated at that time that I could not proceed with the matter, I intend now to place on the record exactly what is the situation. This article, which would be read extensively in western Canada where this subject is of utmost importance, contains statements to which I should like to refer, one being:

> It is a curious fact that so far no party has advocated payment by the wheat board on the farm—that is, neither lending nor advancing money but making a partial payment on the farm.

Later in the same article these words appear:

> The loans or advances proposed alike by the Liberal, Conservative and C.C.F. parties would be repayable by farmers in cash.

I realize that those who are dealing with the debates in this house must find it difficult to follow every detail, but most certainly this article is entirely inconsistent with the facts. For that reason, and because this subject is so important, it does become necessary to place side by side with that statement what has already been said, and said without any uncertainty. An added reason why this becomes necessary is that the Minister of Justice took it on himself to enlighten his own constituents by a letter to the Minnedosa Tribune. He was discussing this proposal by the government which is now under consideration. He tried to throw a smoke-screen around the debate that has been taking place here and he sought to convey an inaccurate impression of what has been said in this house. Whatever excuse may be offered on behalf of the writer of an article of this kind, such an excuse does not apply to a member of the house who sits here and knows perfectly well what the facts are. This statement was contained in the letter of the Minister of Justice to the Minnedosa Tribune:

> This is a much more beneficial arrangement for western wheat farmers than any small difference there might be between bank loans at five per cent and a slightly lesser rate of interest on advances made by the wheat board.

That is the line that is being followed in attempting to becloud the issue. The suggestion is being made and, undoubtedly, innocently picked up by others who are not so directly acquainted with the facts, that it is simply a difference of the method by which the loans will be advanced and repaid. That, of course, is not the situation. Not at the beginning of this debate, nor even during the recent months that have passed, but very much earlier, we advocated that there should be legislation on the statute books under which it would be possible to make cash payment for wheat stored on the farm at any time when the elevator space to absorb that wheat was not available. I made that specific proposal, as I have mentioned on other occasions, on December 17, 1952. I am not going to suggest that others may not have made that on earlier occasions. I do say it is a matter of record in Hansard that on December 17, 1952, I advocated without any reservation that there should be placed on the statute books legislation which would make it possible to pay cash for grain stored on the farm where that grain could not be taken over by the elevators which would ordinarily provide not only the storage but the payments.

I indicated then, as I have indicated since, that we are dealing with an abnormal situation and that the farmer has no place to look to but the government for the grain he produces, under the laws and regulations as they now stand. Because of the attempt to create the impression that it is only a question of which kind of loan and the amount of interest that is involved, it does become necessary to recall what has been said during this present session. The fact that it was said so short a time ago makes it doubly difficult to understand why anybody should be so confused about what has taken place in this house, and particularly a minister of the crown who has been following a subject. This was what I said on January 12, 1956, and this session opened only on January 10. I quote from my remarks recorded at page 40 of Hansard:

> The banks are not in a position to carry out any system of cash payments. There was a perfectly simple method, and that was to make cash payments as advances on the quota book in the ordinary way in relation to a stated quota of the grain grown last year, and then to have the grain made deliverable upon demand as soon as space became available in the elevators. No real difficulty presents itself in connection with that. The elevators are strategically situated to absorb the grain; the elevators have the staff to do the job. The elevators could have handled it satisfactorily under a system that would have been simple and that would have involved no serious difficulties of any kind.

Then I discussed the responsibilities of the government in regard to this matter, and on page 41 of Hansard I am reported as saying the following:

I have made certain proposals and I repeat them now. One: Provision should be made for immediate cash advances in the ordinary way on the quota book by the wheat board for farm-stored grain on a quota basis, making an initial payment thereon as if the wheat had been delivered to the elevator. The wheat would then be delivered on demand by the farmer as elevator space became available.

Two: Low-grade wheat now occupying elevator storage space while high-grade wheat cannot be stored should be sold for feed grain in Ontario, Quebec and abroad. This would provide elevator space for a good part of last year's high quality crop.

Three: The government should recruit top-flight salesmen from Canadian business concerns who would plan an aggressive selling policy for Canadian wheat and give advice as to long-term selling policies.

Four: The government should refer the whole problem of the handling and sale of Canadian wheat and its relationship to the Canadian economy as a whole to the Gordon commission on Canada's economic prospects and ask for an early interim report as well as a more complete report later on.

Five: The government should take immediate steps to assure the full use of all elevator space.

Those were the specific proposals made at that time. They were definite; they were clear; they were not subject to any qualifications. Since that time, in the discussion which has taken place, I have emphasized the vital importance of a statement by the government at this time as to what its policy is going to be, not only in regard to this immediate problem but in regard to the crop that will be grown in 1956. I have pointed out that not only are we concerned with the immediate and urgent problem confronting so many farmers in western Canada at this time but that these farmers very shortly will be called upon to ask themselves what they are going to do about seeding for the coming year. It is the duty, it is the urgent obligation of this government, not only to the farmers of western Canada but to all Canadians, to say now what they are going to do about the 1956 crops. Otherwise we may have a gravely aggravated situation infinitely worse even than that which exists today.

The government can have no excuse. Not only from ourselves but from members of other parties in this house, although not from the government side, has come the demand that there be a clear statement in regard to the policy that will govern our farmers in their seeding and in the planting of their crops for the current year.

Now I should like to deal with another matter. I pointed out that there is a vital and fundamental difference between this problem and the problem that confronts many other agricultural producers. It is very natural for the potato grower in Prince Edward Island, in New Brunswick or elsewhere to say to himself that he faces an even more urgent problem. In some ways in regard to his own farming he does. He has a perishable crop. He has a crop that cannot be held in the same way. The farmer who is relying mainly on potatoes faces a real crisis. The same can be said of the apple grower. The same can be said of other agricultural producers. But I pointed out that there is a difference. These problems must be dealt with. It is the responsibility of the government to face up to these problems.

In the case of the western wheat grower, however, there is a particular aspect to the problem which makes it a different problem and one for which every member of parliament must accept responsibility. We are accepting that responsibility by urging the government to act now in a practical, sensible way in order to meet the immediate requirements and also to state their policy for the current year so that the farmers may know where they are at in planning their seeding for the current year.

We have also urged, as it is our duty to do, certain specific things with regard to the long term problem as well. In order that other Canadians not living in the prairie provinces and not directly affected by this may understand why this problem is different and why there is a special obligation on the part of the government to take appropriate steps with respect to the situation, I said this, as recorded at page 608 of Hansard of January 27 of this year:

One of the things which should be borne in mind, without in any way debating all the questions that may arise as to details of operation and otherwise, is the fact that the government says by law "this is our grain", which makes them in effect the owners of that grain the moment it is harvested. I emphasize that point. In effect the moment the wheat is harvested the government becomes the owner of the grain. There is no other purchaser. The wheat farmer has been permitted to assume, and with reason, that the wheat would be taken up appropriately year by year so that from this grain, which must be delivered to the government agency, he would get an adequate return on the basis of a quota per acre at the initial price fixed by the board, and that this amount would then be handed to him as a cash advance on his quota book.

Our argument, and we have put it forward for some considerable time, not just in the last few months, is that the government alone can take the wheat and the government is already in fact the ultimate owner and by law can be the only owner in the end when it is sold.

That is the crux of this whole problem, Mr. Chairman. The government has said: You can only sell to us. The government has implied: You can look to us for an adequate return. Any other interpretation would be meaningless, would be senseless. Unless and until the government is prepared to say that some other policy applies, it is reasonable for the farmers of western Canada to expect that they would get an appropriate cash payment for their grain. When the government has failed to take the necessary steps to clear the elevators, that is all the more reason why the government must provide a cash payment to the farmer on his farm for the grain which in fact can only be sold to the government.

It is not open to question that there is over 100 million bushels of elevator space in this country at the present time where grain could be absorbed if the government took real action with respect to this matter. It is not open to question that certain things could have been done under the authority of the government to move out lower quality grain and make way for the high quality grain which is marketable at all times with appropriate sales efforts in the markets of the world.

These are the things we have put before the house. I have only re-entered the discussion in the committee stage to correct the most inaccurate impression that was conveyed, I am sure innocently in the case of the writer of the Winnipeg Free Press but I am certain not so innocently by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Chairman, I rise this afternoon to take part in the debate on the resolution because I feel every Canadian is interested in the problems of the wheat growers of western Canada. This is my third session sitting as a member on this side of the house, and I have been thoroughly indoctrinated in the intricacies of the wheat problem. As a member of the standing committee on agriculture I have had further instructions respecting wheat.

When speaking to the house the other day the hon. member for Saskatoon referred to the Liberal backbenchers, and goodness knows we have been called everything you can imagine, rubber stamps and so on. In referring to the majority here he said that it was so large that he could not keep track of it and that it would never do for three members on the government side to get up and vote for something which would be for the good of the wheat farmers of Canada because the government might be defeated. It is a debatable point as to what is for the benefit of the wheat growers of Canada, but I believe this resolution is and that is why I am supporting it.

As the member for Westmorland I do not know of any constituency outside of the prairie provinces that is so greatly affected by the wheat situation. When wheat does not move to the winter ports we suffer greatly through the reduction of the number of men required by the C.N.R., and when it moves through as it is doing now we experience a small local boom. I of course am not a wheat expert but I have listened to wheat growers here. In fact, from the opposition benches I have listened to school teachers and assorted professions as well as the usual platoon of Tory colonels and assorted brass who are experts on everything. As an eastern barrister I therefore feel I have a right to speak on this question.

I also represent a great number of real farmers who are on their farms the whole year round and who do not get their milk from the nearest city. I should like to point out to some of these representatives of wheat producers that farming did not originate in the prairie provinces. I have here a paper, the Maritime Farmer, which is in its 61st year of publication. It was first published about 11 years before the prairie provinces were carved out of the west.

Mr. Knowles: Manitoba is older than that.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I think the guarantee of loans to western wheat producers should be of assistance to them. I know that the farmers of New Brunswick would like to have the same guarantee. Of course I am often told that we do not have farmers because our farms are much smaller and that when we are dealing with the question of guaranteeing loans to western wheat producers we are dealing with a different type of producer than in eastern Canada.

The farms out west are as big as entire foreign countries. Speaking here in the House of Commons the other night the hon. member for Macleod stated that in his riding there were some farms that were as large as the state of Israel. I have heard members of the C.C.F. party who view with alarm the conditions of the wheat producers. I have heard other farmers from the west who tell us that the western wheat producer is not badly off. What is the socialistic government of Saskatchewan doing to assist the western wheat growers? I do not know. They may be doing something. Perhaps later on in the debate we shall be told.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Plenty.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): There must be provincial loan institutions that the Saskatchewan government can guarantee loans of, in just the same way as the federal government proposes to guarantee the loans to farmers at the chartered banks. For a while in this debate the hon. member for Bow River criticized the action taken by the government in guaranteeing these loans, and then he said that he would support it. I know that in Alberta the farmers would prefer to have loans guaranteed at the chartered banks because they would sooner have real money than funny money.

Mr. Blackmore: That is a nonsensical remark.

Mr. Quelch: Is the hon. member aware of the fact that the farmers' organizations have asked for cash advances?

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I have the floor and I intend to keep it because if the wheat growers get it they certainly will not give me the chance to finish.

Mr. Quelch: Do not make silly statements.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Another point that I think the C.C.F. should take into consideration in the guaranteeing of these bank loans to the farmers is that last year in this house we listened to a debate on the nationalization of banks. If this proposal—the government's guaranteeing bank loans to the wheat growers—is not the first step towards the nationalization of banks, if not I do not know what is, and therefore I think they should applaud it.

Mr. Quelch: Are you supporting nationalization?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): In this session I have heard people from the opposition benches criticize the selling of butter at 37 cents a pound and say that the government should have sold this butter to the Canadian consumers. Why do they not come up with the same suggestion on wheat? Why do they not suggest that the government buy the wheat and give it to the Canadian public at such a low rate that bread will be a penny a loaf? Why do they not attempt to wreck the domestic market on wheat as they did the domestic butter market? No, they do not suggest that. They suggest that we should have an increase in the price of domestic wheat.

Mr. Knowles: Is that your way of getting rid of the surplus?

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): You do not know the difference between May wheat and Mae West.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I have noted with amusement the enjoyment that the C.C.F. members have derived from an incident that was reported in the paper, namely the shooting of a television panel. Of course, no one understands why this western wheat producer would use a shotgun or scattergun on a 1½-foot target containing four members of the panel. One would have thought he would have shot everybody. Speaking of this incident the other day, the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort—and I wonder whether he is summing up the mentality of the western wheat grower—said this, as reported at page 835 of Hansard:

> So all winter long this man nursed this great and burning sense of wrong. Then, almost at the breaking point, he had the great misfortune of seeing on television the hon. member for Rosthern in an extremely clumsy attempt to justify the government's bank loan legislation. I can imagine with what demon-like glee he reached for his shotgun and in one reckless moment had his revenge, satisfied at last that he had gained some kind of wild justice.

What does the western wheat producer want? Does he want wild justice?

An hon. Member: More shells.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I have here in my hand a clipping from the Regina Leader-Post which contains an article from Saskatoon. It is headed "Mass march on Ottawa 'next step'" and reads in part as follows:

> A mass march on Ottawa was the next step unless the federal government heeded the demand for cash advances on farm-stored grain, parity prices and a more realistic export sales policy, Hazen Argue, C.C.F. M.P. for Assiniboia, warned in an address here Thursday evening.

Mr. Nicholson: What date was that?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I have not the date but it appeared in the Regina Leader-Post.

I listened to the members of the opposition parties here all trying to say something that is going to please those western wheat growers, and all making a plea for the support of the western wheat producer. It seems to me that the western wheat producer in this case is the man who holds the big stick and of whom everybody is afraid politically. However, I cannot see the reasoning in this regard because we know that the judgment of the majority of the western wheat growers does not seem to be too good.

Mr. Knowles: Is that the Liberal opinion with respect to the judgment of the western wheat growers?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Otherwise they would not send to Ottawa this large number of splinter party members; they would send more Liberal members.

Mr. Ellis: Liberals make good targets.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): We in this party are doing what is best for the western wheat producer. If the western wheat producers in these constituencies represented by the C.C.F. members would stop shooting at their radio and television sets and would listen to what we have to tell them, I think we would soon have a large Liberal representation here from Saskatchewan. I think that this point should be gotten across to the wheat producers, namely that we are trying to do something for them. All this obstruction by the socialists is used only as a weapon to keep them dissatisfied in the west. Use is made of such expressions as "burning sense of wrong" and "march on Ottawa". As long as they can keep the wheat producers discontented, they feel that they will come back here to Ottawa. I have listened to these members pleading with the government. I will now make a plea to them. My plea is this: Let the government do something for the western farmers. Stop your obstruction and you will have contented wheat farmers in the west.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry the hon. member was not in the house the other day when the Minister of Agriculture spoke. As reported at page 858 of Hansard the minister said this:

> I am sure we all agree that this is no question about which we can indulge in too much humour.

Mr. Ellis: Toe the line over there.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I really have not any quarrel with the farmers down in Westmorland county, and I am sure that the hon. member who has just spoken will not go down to meet his farm people and compare what he has said this afternoon with what the western farmers are saying through their members in parliament. I want to establish the fact that, while we are probably more vocal than are the members from other farm communities in Canada, our situation is not more serious. But that should not muzzle us all. I wish the hon. member who has just spoken would take some time to find out the position of the farmers in Westmorland county and ascertain if they are satisfied with the share of the national income that they are getting compared with—

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): No one is guaranteeing their loans.

Mr. Nicholson: —the share of the national income that is going to other sectors of the economy.

Mr. Ellis: The hon. member for Westmorland is satisfied with the government.

Mr. Nicholson: When the Minister of Trade and Commerce opened this debate, he spoke about the sales of wheat for the last five years and said there is no period of five years which comes within hundreds of millions of bushels of this record, and that is quite true.

[Mr. Murphy (Westmorland.)]

However, the minister did not say that for the same period farm costs had been at the highest level of any time in the history of Canada. The minister indicated that he was very well satisfied with sales. I am sorry that he and the Minister of Agriculture do not agree, and I am sorry that he does not take time to read his own statistics.

The last issue of Canadian Statistics Weekly, issued January 25, reached us last night or the night before. It points out that farm marketing of wheat in the period August 1, 1954 to 1955, was 126 million; this year 94 million; marketings of oats dropped from 45 million to 20 million; barley from 74 million to 49 million and rye from 7 million to 1 million. How can the minister say he is satisfied when farm marketings are dropping off at this rate?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I was speaking about export sales. I was not speaking about marketing. My hon. friend is speaking about marketings in the country and I was talking about export sales.

Mr. Nicholson: The minister said, as reported in Hansard for January 27, 1956, page 603:

> It is now evident, however, that sufficient sales will be made by the Canadian wheat board this crop year to enable farmers to deliver the equivalent of a better than average crop.

He went on to say the farmers would be able to deliver 320 million bushels. If the farmers are going to be able to deliver that quantity of grain it is time the minister got the trend moving in the other direction.

The hon. member for Assiniboia was good enough to lend me a copy of "Full Prosperity for Agriculture". This has been produced by a conference on economic progress. There is a very imposing list of about a dozen outstanding people in the United States who have worked on this project. On the cover there is a graph showing how the national income in the United States has been going up since 1951 and the farm operators' net income going down. In this book there are some charts showing the position of the United States farmer in their economy, and the farm income in the United States compared with the national income going to other sectors of the economy. While I cannot prove it I am sure that these United States figures are true of Canada. I shall have something to say about this a little later.

Although the minister who has sponsored this bill is in charge of the bureau of statistics he has failed to give directions to the bureau to make similar statistics available for Canada. Here is a chart showing the percentage of the people in the country who are able to enjoy such comforts as electricity, running water and so forth. I am sorry the hon. member for Westmorland cannot take it any longer, but some of his neighbours—

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): What is that?

Mr. Knowles: Welcome back.

Mr. Nicholson: I am glad to see the hon. member has come back. I should like the hon. member for Westmorland to look at this table which has been supplied to me by the bureau of statistics giving the percentage of Canadians who are able to enjoy these comforts, necessities for most people. This is for Canada. Only 56·2 per cent of the rural areas enjoy electricity; 75 per cent of the non-farm and 99 per cent urban; running water, 32 per cent farm; 46 per cent non-farm and 94 per cent urban; flush toilet, 20 per cent farm; 34 per cent non-farm and 85 per cent urban; installed bath or shower, 15 per cent rural; 27 per cent non-farm and 77 per cent urban; telephone, 44 per cent farm; 33 per cent non-farm and 71 per cent urban; mechanical refrigeration, 21 per cent farm; 30 per cent non-farm and 58 per cent urban.

Mr. Boisvert: What about television sets and cars?

Mr. Nicholson: I will come to that later. I ask members of parliament who have any farmers in their constituencies: Do they like to live in a country where only 20 per cent of them in the hundred years that Canada has been developed as a farming country now enjoy the luxury of flush toilets in their home? If there is any member in this house who believes that farmers should not have these modern conveniences, let him get up and say that we should be satisfied with the situation where so few of our farm people are able to go into the market and provide employment for plumbers and other people.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Would the hon. member permit a question on those figures? Does he know that the percentage enjoying such facilities as flush toilets and running water is almost twice as high in New Brunswick as in the socialistic state of Saskatchewan?

Mr. Nicholson: If my hon. friend wants to make another speech, he will have another half hour when I am through. I am speaking about the rural areas, not the city.

This publication from the United States gives the information concerning the percentage of farm people in the United States getting less than $1,000 a year, less than $2,000 and different amounts. I thought this was valuable information to have, so I telephoned the bureau of statistics to get comparable information for Canada. I was advised that we have never compiled that sort of information in Canada. I was advised that it would cost some money to compile it and I know it would. I think it also costs some money to keep 20 per cent of the Canadian people in a position where they have no accurate information as to how rotten a deal they are getting in the country.

Now, in the United States in 1953 there were 10 per cent of the farmers who had an income of less than $2,000 a year. This suggests that there is a large sector of the population that should be in the market for the things which they want but which they cannot have. The other day I mentioned the fact that we have this information broken down for the non-farm sectors of our economy. I think it is interesting to find that in the non-farm sectors of the economy we have 34 per cent of the people who get less than $2,500, and we have 23 per cent who get less than $2,000. If we could put those two sets of statistics together, if we could have the percentage of farm people who are getting less than $1,000 a year, less than $2,000 a year, and face up to the fact that in the year 1956—

An hon. Member: Order; he is out of order.

Mr. Nicholson: Well, Mr. Chairman, if some of the backbenchers want to take over—

Mr. Studer: That is the speech you made last year.

Mr. Harris: On a point of order, I quite realize it is pretty nearly always desirable to let hon. members say what they will because they will speak 30 minutes and sit down, but it is a little difficult at this time to understand just what the remarks the hon. member is making have to do with the bill to provide loans on a voluntary basis to those farmers who wish to take them.

Mr. Nicholson: I am glad the Minister of Finance has intervened at this stage because one of the reasons this legislation is before us is that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) has admitted there is a problem; but it is obvious that the Minister of Finance does not share that view. And certainly, if you listened to the hon. member for Westmorland there are a lot of backbenchers here who do not think there is any real need for this legislation. We have to decide whether wheat farmers in western Canada have been able to set aside bonds, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce suggests that if advances were put through they would go into the bond market. With all due respect,

Mr. Chairman, I think what I am presenting here is quite in order. We should have some more information on this.

I received from the Minister of National Revenue his last taxation statistics. These also suggest that this problem affects all sectors of the country. After I spoke the other day one of the government members, who flatters me by listening to what I have to say, remarked that surely I was wrong in suggesting that fewer than 20 per cent of the farmers have ever had enough income to pay income tax. I admitted that I did not have statistics before me, but I checked with national revenue and I found that I should have said around 10 per cent, because in 1953 only 69,200 farmers in Canada had enough revenue to pay income tax. I would also say to the member for Westmorland that the farmers in poverty-stricken Saskatchewan paid more than half of the income tax paid by all farmers in Canada in 1953.

I am suggesting that there has been a very serious development since 1953. When the 1954 statistics are available the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue are going to find that their revenue from income tax is away down on farm revenue all over Canada. It is a pretty serious state of affairs.

The Chairman: Order. I did not rise immediately after the Minister of Finance raised the point of order because I wished to give the hon. member who had the floor every opportunity to discuss this resolution. I feel that I must rise at the present time, however, since, on a resolution in regard to guaranteeing bank loans to farmers, he is going into statistics with regard to income tax, and comparing payments of income taxes as between the several provinces in this country. I think the hon. member will agree that a discussion of that kind has no place in the discussion of this particular measure. I hope he will try from now on to confine his remarks particularly to the resolution before us.

May I remind him that we are governed by a rule which states that speeches in committee must be strictly relevant to the item under consideration.

Mr. Nicholson: Thank you, I shall be glad to come back to this at some other time. Before the legislation is passed hon. members should be satisfied as to whether or not there is need for it.

I have returns from the municipal secretaries in my constituency giving the arrears of taxes at the end of last year compared with the year before.

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. Nicholson: Well, if farmers cannot pay their taxes, it is some indication that something is wrong. If the arrears at the end of last year amounted to $1,209,000, compared with $819,000 the previous year, it indicates that something is wrong in this sector of the economy.

If the Minister of Trade and Commerce is satisfied that there is not a thing to worry about; that sales are to go on; that we are going to be able to market more than an average crop, then all the people of Canada should take an interest in this important industry.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce supplies us information with regard to what they are doing in other countries in the world. He boasts of the fact that Canada has not provided any subsidies. We have this large amount of wheat on hand because of good crops and good weather. Surely, he is not going to suggest that our hope of salvation lies in our having a series of crop failures. If we can have poor crops for a year he will be able to dispose of the surplus, and the municipalities and somebody else will worry about the people who have not been able to meet their responsibilities.

The Minister of Agriculture also sends us a good deal of information from time to time. I see that in the last issue of Agriculture Abroad he has an interesting section on what they are doing in the United States. In his report to congress the President of the United States gave quite a different picture from what the minister gave in the book he put out. The Minister of Agriculture points out that in the United States they are making plans to provide a soil bank and to try to move some of the surplus wheat in that country. He said something about people who are not able to get enough to eat in certain countries.

I should like to move to another subject. On Tuesday, January 31, I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question about sales to Poland. The minister gave me a bit of a lecture and said, as reported at page 704 of Hansard:

> It has been a well-known rule of the department not to answer questions on current wheat transactions. My hon. friend could ask me today how many bushels we have sold to Poland, and tomorrow how many bushels we have sold to the United Kingdom, and following that how much to Germany, thus telling our competitors our exact position in every market.

Well, I find that in the issue I have here the minister gives the exact figures of the sales to the different countries; he gives the details of the sales to Poland.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friend is quite mistaken. What he is looking at is the list of exports. Sales are never made public.

Mr. Nicholson: I have before me one of the minister's reports. It does tell the number of bushels that went to Poland in the last month and in the last six months.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Exports.

Mr. Nicholson: Well, those are sales.

Mr. Argue: They are pretty closely tied together.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No.

Mr. Nicholson: This grain is moving into one of the important markets.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Tied together or not, let my hon. friend refer to the list by its proper title, which is exports instead of sales.

Mr. Nicholson: I presume they would not go if they were not sold. In the minister's wheat review he does not mind telling us what our competitors are doing. He points out that:

> The French grain board has made another large sale in the form of around 200,000 tons (7,349,000 bushels) of wheat and 100,000 tons of flour (5,062,000 bushels of wheat equivalent) to Poland. Recent purchases have been at $71.25 per ton ($1.94 per bushel) c.i.f. with a year's credit.

If France is prepared to make wheat available to Poland on that basis, then I do not think the minister should consider what he has proposed to do as a secret. If this type of transaction is to continue the minister is going to have to take the people of Canada into his confidence and encourage the purchase by Canadians of some of the goods that Poland must sell if it is to participate annually in this sort of transaction. It is not good enough for the minister to suggest that it is secret.

I understand that Poland wanted to buy 200,000 tons of wheat. I realize that the government must decide whether they can take a risk as to credit, but I should think that, with such large supplies of wheat on hand, having once decided that we will take some chances in extending credit, we should be ready to take further chances by extending additional credit. Nearly everyone in the west who wants to get something in the west can get it if wheat can be used on a barter basis. There is wheat all over the place and farmers are dealing with one another and making deals with the townspeople. Wheat is being used for a variety of purposes.

If Poland is prepared to take part of their imports from Canada we should welcome that sort of transaction. Apparently France has agreed to give credit for a year for 7 million bushels in the form of wheat and over 5 million bushels in the form of flour. With such a large volume of wheat on hand I see no reason why we should not be prepared to extend more credit for a longer period.

I understand that Poland is making a real effort to get goods into this country. I have seen some of the booklets they are putting out on Polish foreign trade which are printed in English, French, German, Spanish and Russian. They are sending these out with a view to interesting Canadian importers and buyers in their products. I suggest that the two organizations with which I am associated, the wheat pool in Saskatchewan and the federated co-op, should be brought into the minister's confidence.

For instance, last fall you could not buy cement within 60 miles of where I live. Finally we were able to get hold of some United States cement but the price was 80 cents a bag more than Canadian cement. At the same time Poland was trying to get cement into the Canadian market. When we are unable to supply our own market it seems to me that the Department of Trade and Commerce should be—

The Chairman: I am sorry to be forced to rise once more, but I have now listened to the hon. member for a considerable time and he has spoken of transactions in wheat with Poland and he is now speaking of purchases of cement. I am utterly unable to ascertain how he relates those remarks to the particular resolution before us. I realize that in his opening statement the minister referred to exports of wheat in a general way and a discussion of that kind is not being denied any hon. member during the course of this debate but I do feel that these particular matters have little or no relationship to the resolution under discussion and therefore should not be entered into at this time.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I accept your ruling. We are discussing a problem which is vital to the prairie wheat farmers in three provinces. The proposal which is before us to shift responsibility from the government to the banks is one which I just cannot support. I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he thinks his colleagues would accept a proposal of the kind he is making to the wheat farmers and that instead of having their cheques for $2,250 each month they would have to go to the bank for a loan and would not receive any further salary until our wheat surplus had been disposed of. That might not be a problem to some members of the cabinet, but it would be a great problem to many Canadians if they were told that they would not be able to get their salaries, that they could borrow up to $1,500 maximum under certain conditions but regardless of their expenses they would not be able to have the balance made available to them.

I suggest that the Minister of Trade and Commerce have another look at the problem which has been presented to him. I think that hon. members in all sections of the house who speak for farm people—

Mr. Studer: You are speaking for the socialists.

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. member who has interrupted me has not taken part in this debate but I am sure he will not go back to Swift Current-Maple Creek and try to convince the people there that this proposed legislation is good enough for the people of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to traverse any of the ground that I covered on a previous occasion, but I do want to reiterate the stand I took against bank loans on the security of farmers' wheat. During the last few days, as a consequence of the debates that have taken place in this house, I find that western farmers more than ever regard this legislation as something in the nature of a deliberate slap at their legitimate demands. The hon. member who has just resumed his seat suggested to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that ministers of the cabinet, under the circumstances which he outlined, should be advised that instead of getting their monthly salary they might very well go to the bank and borrow. It occurs to me that there has been a great change in the Minister of Trade and Commerce in recent years. A few years ago he said, "What is a million?" But the other day he said, "I am not interested in those who think $1,500 is chicken feed."

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): While we are on that subject may I say that a few years before that I was going to the bank to borrow money so I could pay the people who were employed by me.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am still comparing the million dollar mentality of the minister with his later comment in regard to the farmers when he said that he was not interested in the man who thought that $1,500 as the maximum loan under this plan was chicken feed.

As far as the western farmer is concerned, he is not asking for a handout nor is he expecting to receive anything in the nature of a handout under the legislation now before this house. The alternative suggested by the opposition is a system of cash advances on wheat in the farmers' granaries.

Some mention was made the other day that the wheat pool of Saskatchewan was in favour of this legislation. I have before me a report which appeared in the Star-Phoenix of November 9 last in which it was indicated that the wheat pool officials, having read a report to the effect that the government bank loan policy was supported by the pool, issued the following statement:

> Over the years, the policy of the wheat pool organization is laid down by the delegates in annual meeting . . . After a very complete discussion of the whole situation, the delegates passed resolutions, reading as follows:
> "That we urge the government of Canada to make immediate provision for advances to farmers on farm-stored grain.
> "That advances to farmers on farm-stored grain should be up to one-half the normal delivery expected and repayable on the basis of one-half of the value of each delivery made by the farmer.
> "That advances on farm-stored grain should be made by way of government-guaranteed loans to the Canadian wheat board; the Canadian wheat board to arrange with elevator companies to make the advances to individual farmers, and that any interest involved in such loans should be absorbed by the federal treasury."

That in general represents the viewpoint not only of the wheat pool organization in Saskatchewan but of farmers in general throughout the province. The situation in which they find themselves today is resulting in very pronounced reductions in the purchases by farmers of those manufactured products which come into the western provinces, in the main, from the eastern provinces. This is not a sectional problem. This is a national problem, the maintenance of a fair purchasing power among farmers.

The other day mention was made of the prices of wheat during the 1930's as compared with today, to indicate that today there was no real need for cash advances. What really counts is the purchasing power of a bushel of wheat. According to unchallengeable statistics issued by the bureau of statistics, it is interesting to note that the purchasing power of a bushel of wheat of the 1953-54 crop is the same as the purchasing power of a bushel of wheat in 1933-34. In other words the purchasing power of a bushel of wheat today, as then, is 70 cents. In 1934-35—that would be the period while Mr. Bennett was in power—the purchasing power of a bushel of wheat was 84 cents. Then that figure went up and down, and last year we found—and the situation is worse this year—that the purchasing power of a bushel of wheat was 70 cents. It was 71 cents in 1939-40. It rose to $1.28 in 1945-46; the purchasing price since 1945-46 until 1954 has fallen by 58 cents to the bushel. That is a major consideration. It is not the actual price; it is what that price will supply in purchasing power.

When I hear my hon. friends opposite talking about the 1930's, let me repeat this. In 1953-54 the purchasing power of a bushel of wheat was exactly the same as it was in 1933-34. That, I hope, is an answer to the situation of the western farmer. It is less today. The purchasing power of the 1954-55 and 1955-56 bushel of wheat today is approximately 59 cents a bushel. In other words it is much lower than it was in 1933 and 1934, which indicates the major need for something to be done.

As far as this present plan is concerned, I do not know anybody who is in favour of it outside of this house and other than Liberal supporters in the country who, regardless of what the government does, support it. Even in the last few days one or two organizations have passed resolutions in support of this policy of advances on grain in the granaries. The Saskatchewan credit union league, in the last 10 days or so, passed a resolution in support of it. So, generally speaking, the farmers are asking for a very simple action on the part of this government.

There is no danger of loss. Any suggestion that fraud will be committed is denied by the fact that the local elevator man in each case knows approximately the production of all the farmers in his area. The quota book hampers any possibility of wrongdoing among the small percentage of wrongdoers. Indeed, a few years ago there used to be a great many wheat thefts. There are no wheat thefts any more because there is no quota book for thieves, and there is no way in which a thief can in any way dispose of wheat that does not belong to him.

I mentioned a moment ago the decline in the purchasing power of wheat. Now I wish to refer to the price of Canadian wheat in the free market. I am quoting from the representations Dr. Britnell made last June. He is head of the department of economics of the University of Saskatchewan. He says the price of Canadian wheat in the free market has fallen almost 50 cents a bushel over the past two years.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, may I ask what market he refers to as the free market?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Dr. Britnell is referring to whatever market is available to the Canadian farmer outside of the international wheat agreement and outside of domestic sales in Canada.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You mean the bootleg market?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, he is referring to the selling price of wheat. He goes on to say:

> . . . the price under the international wheat agreement and for domestic sales in Canada is somewhat less.

He refers to the fall in the price of wheat over the past two years of almost 50 cents a bushel. Then he goes on to say:

> The present and prospective future purchasing power of No. 1 Northern wheat is reduced to not more than one-half the 1945 level.

Then he goes on to mention the cost-price relationship. He says that ordinarily this cost-price relationship, with rising costs of what the farmer has to buy and the fall in price, would long since have been disastrous, but he says:

> . . . a cost-price relationship that would normally have squeezed the wheat grower was eased and obscured for several years by higher than average yields, higher than average farm marketings and higher than average overseas exports.

Then he deals in general with the entire wheat picture. He points out the very serious position in which the Canadian wheat farmer finds himself, with falling prices, precipitously falling purchasing power of the bushel of wheat and, at the same time, rising farm costs. The farmer finds himself generally in Canada in the position that in the past three years his actual income has fallen by approximately 23 per cent. The costs of the things that the farmer has to buy have risen by approximately 2½ per cent across the board. I put it to the committee in this way. What would happen if labour across Canada found itself in the position today of having to accept 25 per cent less than it received three years ago? That is the position of the farmer. He is not asking for a raid on the treasury, but simply for justice. I mentioned a moment ago that in the last couple of weeks a resolution had been passed by the Saskatchewan credit union league board.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Are there any farmers, any wheat growers on that board?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, yes, the president himself is a farmer.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Where does he live?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I understand there are also other farmers on the board. There is a suggestion on the part of the minister that the only people asking for this are, as he said the other day in a rather derogatory and sneering fashion, those in the city who are endeavouring to take advantage of the situation. Let me tell you that is not a tribute to the demands of the Saskatchewan wheat pool and the other farm organizations in the province. The resolution, to which I referred a moment ago before the minister interrupted, reads as follows:

> Whereas it is necessary to maintain the national economy of Canada at a high level; and
> Whereas the agricultural industry of western Canada is suffering from a serious lack of cash because of the inability of farmers to put their grain into the hands of the Canadian wheat board and that this disruption in the usual farm income is having a serious effect on business and municipal governments which, in turn, may well cause a serious disruption of the entire national economy;
> Therefore be it resolved that the federal government be urged to provide a permanent system of cash advances on grain . . .

That represents exactly the attitude of the overwhelming majority of western farmers, go where you will. I really cannot understand my hon. friends from the western provinces who support the government in the face of this almost universal demand, believing that haphazard dibs and dabs here and there will meet the situation.

The other day the minister provided for a payment of 10 cents a bushel on certain grades of the 1954-55 crop. As far as northern Saskatchewan is concerned, and I am speaking now of the Prince Albert district, the Prince Albert Herald immediately recorded the fact in its news columns that almost all the wheat in that area graded lower than 4 and that therefore the advance of 10 cents a bushel, welcome as it was—and I welcomed it when it was made the other day—will not help those farmers whose crop is grade 5, 6 or feed. I suggest to the minister that something be done to extend the application of the advance of 10 cents a bushel; otherwise it will be of no advantage to farmers in many parts of northern Saskatchewan.

As far as the policy contemplated by the resolution is concerned, it does not, it cannot and it will not meet the situation. It constitutes a stubborn and relentless disregard of the wishes of the people. It seems almost as if the government has determined that they have a steamroller majority, and regardless of the wishes of the western farmers they are going to push the measure through hoping that by the time the next election comes around something will happen that will cause the western farmers to forget. There will be no forgetfulness, Mr. Chairman, of this deliberate slap in the face to the western farmer.

This is something that could be repaired even at this time. With all its power the government finally abdicated last summer from the arrogance of the position it took on the Defence Production Act. It is not too late now for the government to take action, realizing the universal demand for cash advances on farm-stored grain is supported not only by all the farmers but also by the opposition parties in the house and by many of my hon. friends who support the government who, were they able to speak as they feel, would denounce this resolution as unjust to the legitimate demands of western Canada.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, the members of the government may wonder why they are meeting such opposition in introducing this measure at this time. I think I can offer some explanation of that; the method by which they introduced it. The Minister of Trade and Commerce stated in a previous debate that before going out to address the annual convention of the Saskatchewan wheat pool he knew that things were rather bad and something would have to be done, so he introduced the bank loan legislation. It is a very ill-conceived piece of legislation, because it does not take into consideration the wishes and desires of the farmers and farm organizations in western Canada. It is ill-conceived because of the way it was introduced, by order in council and by a television program.

It seems to me that we in this democratic parliament are receiving an annual stipend commensurate with a year's work, and I think we should be free at all times to be called together to discuss such important problems. Had we been granted that privilege the Minister of Trade and Commerce would have had our advice expressing the views of the farmers and farm organizations in our constituencies, and he would have been able to modify the resolution in conformity with our suggestions in order to meet the requests of western Canadian farmers.

He could, for example, have taken into consideration the resolutions which the hon. member for Rosthern continually ignores in all his dissertations. The hon. member for Rosthern tries very hard to prove that a bank loan is a cash advance or vice versa. He has quoted at length from the conference held in Saskatoon. I should like to read certain resolutions passed on the first day of the 31st annual convention of the Saskatchewan wheat pool after the suspension of the regular order of business. These resolutions were passed virtually unanimously on the floor of the assembly. They are under the heading, "Advances on farm-stored grain", and read as follows:

> 2. That we urge the government of Canada to make immediate provision for advances to farmers on farm-stored grain.
> 3. That advances to farmers on farm-stored grain should be up to one-half the normal delivery expected and repayable on the basis of one-half of the value of each delivery made by the farmer.
> 4. That advances on farm-stored grain should be made by way of government guaranteed loans to the Canadian wheat board; the Canadian wheat board to arrange with elevator companies to make the advances to individual farmers; and further, that any interest involved in such loans should be absorbed by the federal treasury.

That is quite a different thing from the proposal already conceived by those in the higher brackets of the government before going out to discuss the problem at the Saskatchewan wheat pool convention.

The subdistrict and district conventions of the Saskatchewan farmers' union could have given the minister some valuable advice and recommendations. If the minister had doubted their capacity to represent the farmers he could have asked the municipal councils, and there would have been no doubt left whatsoever as to the inadequacy of government guaranteed bank loans on the basis of the 1951 legislation. He could have gone further and asked individual farmers. Individual farmers I have asked indicated to me that they were unalterably opposed to the principle of paying interest on their own money. As a result of the meetings held in the constituency last fall I have concluded that we could sum up this legislation by saying that it is unjust, inadequate and impracticable. It has been pointed out by my colleagues that it is unjust because it requires farmers to borrow money on their own earnings.

There are many members of this house who have no comprehension whatsoever of the conditions that exist in agriculture in western Canada. It is most sickening to hear members talk about western farmers driving about in their Cadillacs. The hon. member for Westmorland gave an indication of that lack of knowledge on the part of members from other parts of Canada. Their absence at the vote last Friday indicated that they were not concerned with the problem. In fact, as I recall it the hon. member for Westmorland served on the agriculture committee. In order to impress him with the importance of our task, I took him down a sample of wheat. He greeted me with thanks, saying that he had never seen it before. What kind of advice can we expect from members who have no knowledge of the subject matter and who are not interested in finding out?

An hon. Member: They had better stick to marsh hay.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): As was pointed out by my colleagues, this legislation is unjust because the financial position of the farmers in western Canada demands that they have additional purchasing power with which to pay off previous commitments such as store bills, gasoline bills and labour charges incurred during the harvesting season. In many instances they are unable to borrow directly from the bank. They were unable to sell their grain. The crux of the matter really is that of correcting the cost-price relationship of the farmers with respect to the goods they are obliged to buy and the prices they receive for their products. It is indeed a cruel blow to see a surcharge of 5 per cent placed on the moneys to which the farmers are entitled.

I say the resolution is most inadequate because, as the hon. member for Prince Albert has pointed out, the minister said he was not interested in the farmer who thought $1,500 was chicken feed. I think the minister would do well to refer to some of the publications put out by his colleague the Minister of Agriculture, because in the Economic Annalist of February, 1951, there is a study on costs of farming in the Elbow-Saskatoon area of Saskatchewan in 1948-49. Since 1951 it is estimated that the cost of production has increased by 20 per cent. It therefore works out, Mr. Chairman, in this way. The costs of production on a one-section farm in the Saskatoon-Elbow area, on good soil, were $2,006 in 1948-49. Costs have increased nearly 20 per cent since that time, so the cost in 1955 would be over $2,400. By the same token, the costs of production on a larger farm, one of over 800 acres, would be nearly $4,000. These are the cash outlays required to operate your farm. The minister must reorganize his thinking. He must appreciate the fact that was pointed out by my leader in the previous debate, namely that the purchasing power of a bushel of wheat has declined 50 per cent since 1945.

The Canada Year Book points out that in 1955 Saskatchewan had 247 branch banks, Alberta had 270 and Manitoba had 175. This problem is a real one in my constituency. For example, there is a bank in the town of Leader. If someone in the area of Horsham down in the southwest corner of my constituency is desirous of going to the bank to get this loan, he must travel 55 miles to go to the bank. He normally does his business with the credit union in Fox Valley, but this legislation requires him to go to a bank. He will therefore make the trip to the bank and make application for the loan. He will fill out the necessary forms and return to his farm.

The banker will have the task of mulling over the application. He has never seen the farmer before. He does not know whether the farmer has on his farm 1,000 bushels of wheat or 1,000 head of sheep or just 1,000 trees. So when it comes to a matter of resolving the question of granting the loan, knowing that bankers are in this business for the purpose of making money we can expect that the loan will be refused. That is precisely what has happened.

I have placed a question on the order paper to determine the amount and the number of these loans but evidently I do not have the same luck in getting this information as does the Minister of Agriculture, since the question as yet is unanswered.

Mr. Gardiner: That is because you do not take the trouble to get it.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): I beg the minister's pardon?

Mr. Gardiner: Anyone can get all the information I had. It is only because you do not take the trouble as a member of this house to get it that you do not have it.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): I have put a question on the order paper. If the minister can prod his colleague into fulfilling his parliamentary responsibility, I shall in turn be gratified.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I will give the hon. member the information now if he wants it.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend is talking about two different things. I had my secretary go to the bank and ask how many loans were made. You can get that information anywhere.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): I point out that the government are apparently having difficulty in getting the information. I would suggest to the government that they talk to their colleague the Minister of Agriculture, who has evidently no difficulty, so they in turn can get the information and answer my question.

Mr. Gardiner: You can get it if you go out and ask for it. You do not want to know.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): That is the responsibility of the person to whom I have directed my question. From the course of this legislation it is apparent that the government is indisposed to progress and to move ahead in the line of progressive legislation. I think it might be said that we have progressed with the Liberal government from the stone age to the metallic age. At least the government members have silver in their hair, gold in their teeth and lead in their pants. They have failed to provide legislation that the people of western Canada need and which the people of western Canada have indicated they need since as far back as 1942, when this problem was brought forward by the present premier of Saskatchewan who was then in the House of Commons advocating the principle of orderly marketing through cash advances on farm-stored grain.

[Mr. Johnson (Kindersley).]

The Canadian wheat board has followed the principle of buying from the farmers of Canada more wheat than they can sell. That principle has been established. Otherwise we would not have in the hands of the Canadian wheat board the surplus in store that the last wheat board report indicates. Therefore if the principle is desirable enough to establish in one instance, let us expand that principle. Let us give to the Canadian wheat board the power to follow the procedure outlined by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, to make cash advances to farmers on the wheat stored on the farm.

I think the mechanics of this legislation are relatively simple to anyone familiar with the grain business. We know that in recent years the farmers have been obliged to build a great deal of storage. It is new storage and it is well constructed, because the farmers have learned that any wheat they have in store on their farms might be there for a goodly number of years. Hence they have built as well as they could. In many instances that storage is much superior to that being licensed as off-site storage by the board of grain commissioners. It is superior to the temporary annexes which are in profusion throughout the country. We do not need to worry, therefore, about the aspect of waste or rotting of the grain due to moisture conditions if it is in properly constructed bins.

It would then be a simple matter for the elevator agent, who is located in close proximity to the farmers in a community, who is familiar with them, to inspect to a standard the granary on the farm and issue the farmer a cash advance of 75 per cent of the anticipated quota. The farmer would then have money with which to pay his immediate obligations, and the Canadian wheat board would stand no chance of loss because the only place the farmer can market his grain is through the Canadian wheat board and through the elevator agent. By following such a system the farmer would be receiving a return for his produce and would not be subjected to the task of having to go to the bank to borrow money on his own earnings.

It might be pointed out that the cost of such a scheme would be exorbitant. I think that has been mentioned by hon. members from time to time. I believe the information on the costs of making cash advances on farm-stored grain might be of interest to the members of this government, as I have analysed it. In 1955 there were 62,910,000 specified acres. These are the most accurate figures I could get and I know they will be acceptable to the Minister of Trade and Commerce because they are taken from a United Grain Growers publication. Then we will follow the resolution of the Saskatchewan wheat pool requesting a cash advance of 50 per cent of the anticipated quota, which would be 251,640,000 bushels. But at the time the government introduced this bank loan legislation the farmers had already marketed 106 million bushels of all grains, excluding flax. The advance would then be made on 145,640,000 bushels. I think we can assume that the average price would be $1 per bushel, so that would be an equivalent amount of dollars.

Now, as the Saskatchewan wheat pool and the C.C.F. advocate, the Canadian government should bear the interest cost of making these advances available to the farmers. Interest on this amount of money at 3¼ per cent for a period of four months would be $1,577,733, a very reasonable, modest sum indeed in the light of the fact that the government is prepared to pay out $7·5 million through guaranteed bank loans. The farmers in western Canada would favour continuing the principle of orderly marketing and having these cash advances made through the elevator companies and by means of the Canadian wheat board. It would have pleased members of parliament from other parts of Canada, because it would have cost less than the way the government is now doing it.

I was rather disappointed to note that in the course of this debate we did not hear too much from the Benedict Arnolds from Saskatchewan. I think there is a responsibility on all members in this house to present the views of the people in their constituencies as they see them. I was hoping that the influence of the hon. member for Westmorland would have percolated across the aisle to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and that he would have given us his words of wisdom and presented the picture as it is in the Qu'Appelle constituency.

Related to this problem which confronts us today is one problem which has apparently been written off by the government. In reply to a question by my colleague the hon. member for The Battlefords it was pointed out that there is storage space available for 58 million bushels at the present time. On the basis of the figures I quoted, figures gathered together by the United Grain Growers, we would have room for almost a one-bushel quota in that space. This would do far more to assist the farmers of western Canada than this bank loan legislation. But what is happening? I have received a telegram from a point near Horsham to which I was referring. It is from Richmound, Saskatchewan, and points out that car allocations in the Burstall subdivision are nothing short of terrible. It says:

> Linacre shipped only 3 cars entire month of January and still has 17 board shipping orders on hand. Horsham has 25 board orders, Fox Valley with 60 orders.
> All three points with many farmers who have not delivered 300 units stop Worse case is Estuary which has shipped only 5 cars since December 1.

There we have the pattern of this government in relation to agriculture. They have allowed a situation to develop in which the terminals are emptied, where boats are coming and collecting demurage from the farmers through the Canadian wheat board because there is no cargo available. The government representative who looks after this was away, I understand, and no one was assuming his responsibilities at all. No one was telling the railways to spot cars where they were required or to fulfil their responsibilities to Canada by moving the grain from the congested areas to the terminals in order to give the farmers some purchasing power.

I think I could sum up, Mr. Speaker, by making a reference to the occasionally loquacious member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. He has failed to take part in this debate, but I have noticed his periodic trips over to the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, which indicate that he is trying to get permission to say something. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek wrote a little article in the Maple Creek News of Thursday, November 3, 1955, in which he deplores the inaction of the western governments in dealing with the wheat situation. The hon. member for Westmorland must have picked this up from the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. Apparently this is an indication of the way the members of the Liberal government want to protect the Canadian wheat board. The suggestion of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, in his own words, is as follows:

> I would suggest that the wheat board sell each western province 50 million bushels of wheat, the province to pay the wheat board the initial payment. The province could then accept sterling in exchange for wheat or barter the wheat for their needed equipment in foreign countries and pay the wheat board the favourable balance on the transaction.

Well, Mr. Chairman, if that is the way the members of the Liberal party from Saskatchewan want to deal with the wheat situation, I am not at all surprised that the Minister of Trade and Commerce would be so ill-advised as to follow their advice by introducing bank loan legislation such as this. It is obvious that to allow any of the provincial governments to go out in open competition with the Canadian wheat board would immediately shatter the whole principle o orderly marketing through the Canadian wheat board, a principle that has met with so much favour on the part of the farmers of western Canada. It is these same members of the government who are always pointing the finger at the opposition and saying, "You are the enemies of the wheat board." It is an indication of where the real enemies of the wheat board stand or lie as the case may be.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, the case for the western farmer has been so well put by so many able speakers on the opposition side this afternoon that I believe it would be impossible for me to say anything that would not be a repetition of what has already been said. In the circumstances I think I will not say a great many of the things I had intended to say. But, in discussing the resolution calling for provision for making loans to western farmers, what actually is being done is something like this. The measure provides for only a nibble at a slice, while the wheat grower is entitled to, and ought to be granted, the whole loaf of bread. He has earned it; he ought to have it.

Everywhere on the prairies we have the demand for advances on farm-stored grain. This demand comes from all over the west. Apparently the government has made up its mind that in spite of everything it will not give the western farmers, or the western provinces, what they want.

This measure reminds me of a few words which I read from Nikita Khrushchev's remarks last September. He said:

> If you really think (addressing the capitalist world) that your system is not too old and rotten, if you believe that it is really possible to keep in the race, go ahead and try and compete. But the truth is on the side of our people.

If Khrushchev wanted a specific instance to establish the general truth of his position, he could ask for nothing any better than this contemptible wheat loan proposal the government is offering to the farmers of western Canada. Here we have Canada one of the finest capitalist nations of the earth, endowed with about the finest resources to be found in the world, with a production of over $26 billion in the year just past, showing abundantly that it is completely possible physically to provide those farmers with all they want. All that is required is a little financial intelligence to make financially possible what is physically possible—and here we have the absolutely disgusting scene which is presented by Canada at the present time! I must say I am absolutely ashamed of the government.

In my speech of January 13 I advocated immediate payment on wheat stored on farms to cover full average costs of production, plus a living allowance large enough to cover the average costs of carrying on. My remarks are to be found on page 95 of Hansard. That is all we want, and certainly that is what we ought to get.

I will quote a statement from the caucus of the Social Credit members of Alberta, which will show the position they took after the proposal was made to make available loans of up to $1,500 at 5 per cent. I am quoting from one of the Alberta newspapers:

> The federal government program of loans to farmers on farm-stored grain Wednesday was described as "entirely inadequate" by Social Credit members of the legislature attending their annual fall caucus in Edmonton.
> The policy statement on the wheat situation said, "The proposal to put farmers further in debt is unfair and unjust."
> It added, "Not many farmers will be able to qualify for the full amount of the loan. Even if more of them did, the amount would not be sufficient in many cases to take care of the debts incurred in putting in and taking out the crop.
> We believe the federal government should make it possible for the Canadian wheat board to make cash advances to the farmers against grain stored on the farms. The Canadian government should make an immediate start on provisions of approved storage on the farms.
>
> One way of doing this would be to pay the farmers storage rates on the same basis paid to elevators, if they built approved storage facilities.
> It is obvious the federal government does not have the answer to surplus production. We do not look upon surpluses as a calamity. It is only when we bungle the handling of them that they become such. If we provide proper storage, widely dispersed on the farms, and are prepared to use the national credit to finance the cash advance against the surpluses so stored, these surpluses can become a blessing to our country, and the world in the years ahead".

I think nothing more needs to be said by me. The hon. member for Prince Albert presented a case which, as far as I could see, was as completely airtight as it could be, a case which makes utterly contemptible the efforts of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture to becloud the issue and confuse the people generally by playing a lot of silly, childish politics when they should have been facing up like responsible members of the cabinet of Canada and dealing with the problem honourably and honestly.

Just as an example of some of the things the two right hon. gentlemen have attempted to convey—I hope I am not unfair—the first point was that there would be greater costs in the case of advances than there would be under the loans which are proposed. The case made by the hon. member for Prince Albert explodes that idea completely. Surely the government of the Dominion of Canada, with all the credit behind it of this great nation, could borrow money in a vast sum incomparably more cheaply than could any farmer, even though the government's guarantee is behind his loan.

If the money were borrowed in a large lump sum and advanced to the wheat board, with instructions that the wheat board would disperse that money or disperse it through the elevators to the farmers, you would have none of the costs that were conjured up by some of the speakers on the other side as being certain to accrue if advances were offered to farmers.

The argument that this process would wreck the wheat board is absolutely puerile. I do not know how a man could undertake to delude the Canadian people in that way, how he could stand up and face a parliament of intelligent people or go out and address an intelligent audience, and say it could possibly wreck the wheat board to take a vast sum of money borrowed by the dominion government from the Bank of Canada, put into the wheat board's hands and dispensed through the elevators to the farmers as a forward payment or an advance payment on farm-stored grain. How that could wreck the wheat board it would require a congregation of lunatics to see. There just is no sense at all in such a position. Apparently a deliberate attempt was made to confuse the people of Canada through the press from coast to coast into believing this bit of nonsense.

An attempt was made to indicate that the farmers were fairly well off. These hon. gentlemen were not able to find very many farmers who were sufficiently in need to have any requirement for advances! That is almost in the class with the other piece—I must keep from using too strong words—of nonsense, I will say once more. If in the United States, just across the border, farmers can store grain on their farms and get $2.10 per bushel; if in the United States farmers are fairly well off, how can it be reasoned that Canadian farmers on this side of the border, under the treatment that has been meted out to them, can be said to be fairly well off, especially when it is remembered that the costs of producing in Canada are just as great as they are in the United States, if not greater.

Mr. Quelch: Higher.

Mr. Blackmore: My colleague suggests that they are higher. That is my own impression, but I am not able to speak from first-hand knowledge.

I do not propose to multiply words before you this afternoon, but I do want to say that we are going to vote for this measure as a Social Credit group because even though it is a contemptible morsel of a slice of a loaf, it is better than nothing. Let no one suppose that in supporting this measure we are in any way whatsoever approving of it.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Chairman, I almost hesitate to enter this debate because I make no pretence whatever of having any specific knowledge of the problems facing the grain farmer. I leave that to my colleagues. However, there are some aspects to this question that I think need to be discussed.

As I understand it, we are being asked today to give statutory authority to a program which is already in operation. For that reason it is most necessary that we should understand just how it is working today and what are the implications of that program. On Friday, February 3, the right hon. Minister of Agriculture made a statement in this chamber which disturbed me greatly, and which caused me later on in the day to rise and question him. I received an answer of a sort, but on studying that answer in Hansard I discovered it was no answer at all to the question I had raised.

In order to refresh the memories of hon. members I should like to quote the statement made by the right hon. Minister of Agriculture on that occasion. He had been discussing the number of loans that had been granted under this scheme by chartered banks in various places in the province of Saskatchewan, and the minister then said:

> I have been given a note which says, "Tell Mr. Gardiner so and so got the first loan." He was the only man who got up at the meeting and objected on the ground that he would not be able to get a loan. He got a $1,500 loan. The note goes on to say that the bank expects 20 more loans if no quota is opened and none if a quota opens.

Shortly after that the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace asked:

> What is the source of the figures on bank loans which he has just quoted?
> Mr. Gardiner: These are the actual figures obtained by my secretary from the banks where the loans were made.

Then afterward he told us that his secretary went out there to obtain the information.

Mr. Gardiner: That is scarcely correct. My secretary was out there and he obtained the information; he did not go out there to get it.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): He was out there. Later on I asked the right hon. minister this question, and I quote from page 869 of Hansard of February 3:

> I have a question I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture arising out of his remarks a few moments ago. Do I understand that the banks are revealing to the minister's staff the names of those who are borrowing under this act?

At that point the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce interjected with what I must say with all respect was a complete non sequitur. It was quite irrelevant to the question I had been asking. When the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce sat down I continued:

> It is necessary for me to square that answer with the comment made by the Minister of Agriculture when he said he knew who borrowed the first loan in a certain place. I want to know how he knew who that individual was.
> Mr. Gardiner: I read it from this slip that is in my hand.
> Mr. Johnston (Bow River): What is that slip?
> Mr. Gardiner: It was supplied from the community where the discussion took place. But in fairness to the individual I think I should ask permission of the committee to strike it out of Hansard where it appears.

At that point I informed the right hon. minister that I was not at all satisfied with his answer. When I read the answer over later I was still less satisfied because when I asked him how he could possibly have received this information except from the bank I got this reply, as reported on page 870 of Hansard:

> Mr. Gardiner: No. It was a matter of discussion.

He went on to describe a public meeting which 200 people had attended. Earlier he had told us that he got the information from a certain note in his hand, but he did not identify the note. It still leaves us in the position that in some way or another the right hon. Minister of Agriculture is able to obtain from—

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, the hon. member is not giving the story as it is in Hansard. My hon. friend simply started out to say that something is not inserted which is not there. I want to point out that the information was obtained at a public meeting. The gentleman said that he was not going to be able to get a loan. There was a banker in the meeting at the time, as well as other people. It was a public meeting, and anybody could go to it. One gentleman got up and said the man who complained was going to get a loan. This discussion all took place in public, and all that was in the note was that the gentleman who raised that discussion got the loan.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): The right hon. minister is not reporting correctly what he told us. He is omitting one important operative word. The note did not merely inform him that so and so had got a loan, the note informed him that so and so had got the first loan from that bank.

Mr. Gardiner: I stated before this committee that if that name were there I would like it removed. I do not know whether that name was ever in Hansard, because it was not there when I saw it. The words are just exactly in Hansard as when I first saw Hansard. There has been no change.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo).]

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Chairman, I was under the impression that I had the floor.

Mr. Gardiner: I had the name because the man got up and discussed it.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Quite obviously you had the name.

The Deputy Chairman: On the first occasion when the minister rose the hon. member for Nanaimo I believe indicated that he was willing to hear the interjection.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I was willing to hear the explanation.

The Deputy Chairman: But on the second occasion he did not. If the minister has an explanation to make he will be afforded an opportunity to make it at the conclusion of the hon. member's speech.

Mr. Gardiner: He sat down, which is the same thing.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Perhaps in all fairness to the right hon. Minister of Agriculture I should tell him that although I have not been very long in this chamber, I sat for many years confronting Liberal cabinet ministers, many of whom for evasiveness and mendacity were the equal of any one could find anywhere. The minister told us that he received certain information in a note, not from any public discussion at the meeting, which took place, incidentally, by the internal evidence of this record in Hansard, before these loans were made.

Mr. Gardiner: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but the hon. member wants to get this correct or he would not be discussing it at all. On a matter of privilege, I am sure my hon. friend wants to get this correct. The note to which I referred simply said, "Tell Mr. Gardiner so-and-so—" and if I did not use the name I could have used it and I might have used it, "got a loan of $1,500." That is all, because the gentleman got up at the meeting and insisted to me that this loan to him should be possible. The discussion all took place in public. The banker who sent the note to me was not at the meeting at the time, but another banker was, and I presume he got his information from him and that he probably said, "Tell Mr. Gardiner he got the loan."

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Again I must point out that the minister has very carefully left out the important operative word. I have no doubt whatever he could find out the name, and many of us could find out the names of people who got loans under this act. They were in one of the various small towns where loans were made. But there is only one place from which the information could come as to who got the first loan. The knowledge as to the names of people who got loans might be a matter of common gossip. People might tell their neighbours they got loans. But only the bankers could tell the minister who got the first loan.

Mr. Gardiner: The man himself told—

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Chairman, I really must ask your protection from this continued interruption.

Mr. Gardiner: You need a lot of protection somewhere.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): As I say, I have dealt with such people many times before, but I am not to be diverted from this point. The minister has not yet told us how he obtained the information as to who was the person who obtained the first loan from that bank. There is a very ugly implication here that in some way or another the minister through his—

Mr. Gardiner: As a matter of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Gardiner: The hon. gentleman was asking me to tell him something, and I want to tell him.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would suggest that if we are ever going to proceed with this particular aspect of this debate the hon. member for Nanaimo should make his statement and complete his speech, and I shall see that the Minister of Agriculture is given ample opportunity to reply thereto and at such length as he sees fit. I hope both hon. members will permit me to say that during the last five minutes we have had the same allegations and the same denials. If I may use a colloquialism, this is almost where I came in. I would suggest that we proceed as speedily as possible to a discussion of the resolution before us.

I am not indicating that the hon. member for Nanaimo is out of order, but I am indicating that he might well come to the point and complete that part of his remarks, and then come back to the advisability of our carrying or not carrying the resolution.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, on a point of procedure might I suggest—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. May I point out to both hon. gentlemen—

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I do not propose to tolerate it.

The Deputy Chairman: May I point out to both hon. gentlemen that it is usual and customary, and I think expected by the house, that members on either side will resume their seats when the chairman considers it necessary to rise to his feet. If the Minister of Agriculture is rising on a point of privilege, I shall hear him. If in my opinion it is not a point of privilege, I shall so advise him; but let me tell both hon. gentlemen that if there is to be any toleration we shall have to find out to what extent the house will tolerate an abuse to its rules. I do not propose to tolerate such abuses while it is my responsibility to see that the rules are carried out. If the Minister of Agriculture has a question of privilege, and it is a question of privilege, we will hear it. If it is a question of debate, then he will have ample opportunity to make his reply when the hon. member for Nanaimo has resumed his seat.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, with regard to your suggestion, I accept it. I have never been in the habit, in this house or in any other house for that matter, of asking any special privileges from anyone, but when a member on the other side of the house stands and keeps shouting at me certain things that I ought to say, I think probably I ought to have the privilege of getting up and saying them. If he is going to address this committee, he should address it through the Chair and not through me. If he is standing there and shouting things that happened in British Columbia and he is not going to allow them to happen here, I shall probably have to shout back at him. Otherwise I shall respect the Chair.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I trust we shall not have any other points of privilege of that type, but I do want to suggest that there has been in the statement of the Minister of Agriculture ground for suspicion that he and his staff are exercising, by persuasion or some other means, an influence on the banks who are making loans under this proposed legislation, which places in the hands of the Minister of Agriculture the names of those who are receiving the loans.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, on that suggestion, I just want to say I am not going to take up the time of this committee in discussing that question. It will only be of interest to the people in one town and community in Saskatchewan—

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Gardiner: —and they know all the facts, and they know what my hon. friend is stating has no relationship at all to them. They know how I got the information. They know the information was produced in a meeting, and all this statement says is that the man who said at the meeting he was the first one to apply for a loan, got it.

Grain

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, it is with great difficulty that I approach this subject with coolness, owing to the fact that we are discussing a resolution to bring in an innocuous bill in respect to bank loans to wheat farmers. I feel that this government is to be sharply criticized for its inaction in meeting the situation that has developed in western Canada. It was certainly plain to all people who at least wanted to explore the situation that there was difficulty in respect to the grain marketing situation in western Canada, and in respect to the western farmer's income.

I may say, in spite of the optimism the Minister of Trade and Commerce expressed in this house on occasions during the latter part of the last session, that some of us, particularly in this group, indicated to him that we had great concern about the movement of grain in this country and the plight of western farmers, and we tried to bring to the attention of this government the fact that a real policy for agriculture was needed to meet the ever-growing surpluses of grain in this country. I wrote the Prime Minister on October 3, 1955, before the crop season, and urged that consideration be given to an immediate plan of cash advances to farmers on farm-stored grain. The premier of Saskatchewan also, in view of the situation which he knew was developing, sent a telegram to the Prime Minister on October 24, which reads as follows:

> Saskatchewan government feels that proposed bank loans on farm-stored grain will not meet present situation. Urge that cash advances be handled by the Canadian wheat board through elevator companies. Farmers of this province almost unanimously in favour of cash advances through wheat board as permanent feature of orderly marketing system. Strenuous objection being taken by farmers to proposed bank loans on farm-stored grain as being unsatisfactory method of meeting present critical situation.

I want to indicate some of the factors leading up to the present situation. I may say that some of the western newspapers came to the rescue of the farmers in their effort to depict the situation to this indifferent government. I should like to refer to the questionnaire distributed by the Saskatchewan Farmer and Livestock Times as reported in their publication of November 3. With respect to the questionnaire it has this to say:

> Nearly 56 per cent favoured direct cash advances on farm-stored grain as a means of getting immediate cash into the hands of the farmers while just under 13 per cent recommended low interest loans.

Almost without exception the western farm organizations have been in favour of cash advances, interest free, on farm-stored grain. I for one do not feel that the measure before us will meet the situation adequately at all.

I believe that the provision of bank loans, with the banks having the right to charge 5 per cent interest, is nothing short of a farce as far as meeting the needs of the western farmers is concerned. Indeed, it is more than that; it is an insult to the western farmer who obtains his income from the production of wheat and now, by reason of this iniquitous legislation, is forced because of the market situation to go to the banks in order to get cash with which to meet his obligations.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture are to be sharply criticized for the statements they have made in and out of the house respecting the financial position of western farmers. I have here the issue of the Western Producer of February 2, which deals with an earlier statement carried in the Globe and Mail of January 24. The Globe and Mail article is headed, "Gardiner argues income up and farmers not badly off." The article in the Western Producer refers to a statement made at the meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture held in Hamilton, and it is headed, "Making monkeys out of us, delegate criticizes Gardiner."

I feel there has been a definite underhand movement on the part of government officials to try to play down the present critical cash situation facing western farmers. I believe the present position, as it has developed, is even worse than that. In my opinion members of the house are now being intimidated by the attempt of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to use what is termed in one editorial "shotgun methods" to squelch any opposition in the house to the government's proposed bank loans.

I have here an article that appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of February 6, 1956. It quotes Hansard and goes on to say that Mr. Howe foresaw a filibuster. At another point in the article it has this to say:

> He insisted that the highly unpopular bank loans bill must be approved before the storage bill can be considered. In his words, "We have undertaken to pass a very simple resolution and until that is passed we are not prepared to take any other resolution." He has thus, in effect, made consideration of a final payment on 1954-55 deliveries dependent on the passage of the loans legislation—a bill that has nothing whatsoever to do with wheat payments. Mr. Howe's desire to get this unpopular legislation through the house with a minimum of embarrassment to the government is quite understandable. Western farmers, however, would have more confidence in the legislation—and in the minister—if he did not apparently feel it necessary to use shotgun methods to secure parliament's approval of it.

I for one want to say that as far as I am concerned there is going to be no intimidation of me in this house at any time, and I speak for 98 per cent of the western farmers when

I say they are unalterably opposed to bank loans and paying interest on their own grain. I am one who has great faith in democracy, perhaps more than is indicated sometimes by the actions we see on the other side of the house. This afternoon I heard the Minister of Justice quoted as having said at a meeting in his own province that there were two methods, the first being bank loans through the banks at 5 per cent interest and the second loans at perhaps a lesser rate of interest from the Canadian wheat board.

I think the Minister of Justice should confer with his colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce, because the Minister of Trade and Commerce told us that if the Canadian wheat board were to undertake what we are proposing as an alternative method of giving advances to the farmers it would wreck the wheat board. Now the Minister of Justice says it will not wreck it but just partially destroy it. He has not suggested in his statement by any means that the Canadian wheat board could not have handled this matter.

Therefore I think the whole thing is a phony issue when the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Agriculture or anyone else suggests that it is not possible for the federal government to authorize the wheat board to make cash advances to the farmers interest free. We now see the Minister of Trade and Commerce trying to use dire threats in order to prevent members putting the real situation before the house.

The key problem has not developed overnight but over the years. It has only come to the fore because the cost-price squeeze has now developed to a point where the farmer is left without any cash in his hands. It is true that over the last five years we have had unprecedented production of grain in western Canada, but it is also true that the income of the western farmer has dropped very substantially, particularly in the last three years. I should like to give the house the bureau of statistics figures showing the drop in farm cash income in the province of Saskatchewan for the nine month period beginning in January and ending in September in the years 1953, 1954 and 1955. In 1955 the figure was $305 million. In 1954 it was $300·2 million and in 1953 it was $516·7 million.

There we have the story. From $516·7 in 1953 there has been a drop to $305 million in 1955. In addition, the Minister of Agriculture is prone to refer only to the cash income of the western farmer. He nearly always fails—as a matter of fact I have never heard him do it—to give the net income to the western farmer. In other words he gives the cash picture, but he does not give the net income to the western farmer; and relatively speaking, net income is the real income.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like the minister to make his own speech.

Mr. Gardiner: I am rising on a question of privilege. If my hon. friend will check the article he quoted at the beginning of his speech, in which the Free Press reports what I said at Winnipeg, he will find the net income and the cash income given.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I do not think the minister has a point of order.

Mr. Gardiner: It is not a point of order. My hon. friend said I had never reported the net income. Yet in the very news article to which he was referring a few moments ago both figures are given.

Mr. Knowles: And probably misquoted.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I was quoting from the report of the Hamilton meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

Mr. Gardiner: I thought the hon. member read from the Free Press.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): It did not quote all the figures of the minister, but it gives some figures. It also claims exactly what I have claimed, namely that he does not give the net income to the farmers and that is the important thing.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, let us get this thing straight. My hon. friend quoted from the Winnipeg Free Press and the other article refers to it, and both figures are in there.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): As I indicated earlier, because of the heavy crops this drastic situation which has now developed in western Canada did not come to the fore. So in 1951 agricultural prices were at 268·7 and costs were at 225·5. But by 1954 agricultural prices had deteriorated to 200·9 and costs had increased to 234·4. It is therefore understandable how the farmers have come to a cash position where they cannot pay their debts, and where they now should and must have some cash income to make up for their inability to deliver their grain in order to pay their debts.

As I said before, I am quite happy that some of the newspapers have taken it upon themselves to help to present to the Canadian people the actual financial position facing western farmers. That information can be found by the government if they want to read some of these newspapers. I have here an article appearing in the Toronto Star. It is a dispatch written by correspondent Robert Nielsen who, I understand, has written a series of articles. He has toured the west; he has gone into Saskatchewan and some of the other provinces and obtained firsthand information as to just what is the situation. I want to read from this article. He is talking about the bumper crops and the present situation. He says:

> That ailment is a cost-price squeeze. Between 1951 and 1954 the Saskatchewan prices of farm products (at the farm) fell by nearly 25 per cent while the prices of the goods and services the farmer buys rose by nearly 5 per cent.

Then he goes on to show that in the bountiful years between 1951 and 1954 the farmer was getting by but that now the cost-price squeeze has caught up with him. In the same article it is indicated that Professor K. A. H. Buckley scored the Ottawa government, and I quote:

> . . . for not having developed a grain storage policy to accompany the price stabilization policy effected by the wheat board.

I speak for myself, and I think for this group, when I say we support the wheat board's policy of marketing grain. Here is a situation where the farmer, after producing his grain, must depend upon this government and its policy to sell that wheat for him in order to receive his income. This government is now bringing in and forcing on this house the present legislation which will compel the farmer, if he wants any cash from his wheat, to go to the bank and pay bank interest.

I have in mind another resolution and, I suppose, legislation which will come before this house where a certain corporation will be given a low rate of interest on a projected pipe line. Here we have the farmer who has produced his wheat, who now, like any other person with an income in this country, must go through a great deal of processing, must give certain details of his financial status, and take out bank loans at 5 per cent interest. As far as I am concerned that is nothing short of adding insult to injury.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I had a return tabled in the house which shows that this government is not doing its job and that the eternal optimism of the Minister of Trade and Commerce is often misleading. I am speaking now with respect to the marketing of wheat in this country. He assured the farmers last year that their bins would be empty and that they would be able to sell their wheat.

I had a question on the order paper and I obtained a return as to the trade commissioners in foreign countries and how many of those were specifically appointed to sell Canadian wheat. The return I received on January 24 states that out of 85 trade commissioners posted in 55 places, not one is specifically appointed to sell Canadian wheat. When wheat is our primary industry, I feel that we certainly should have some people appointed to go abroad and try to find markets for that wheat. Thus we have the situation backing up on us, and now the farmer once again is going to be obliged to stand the brunt of it.

I never felt at any time that bank loans were going to meet the situation. I wrote to all the secretaries of the rural municipalities in my constituency and asked them for a survey of the financial situation of the farmers. In every case there has been growing arrears of taxes in all those municipalities. In addition, in one letter there is a comment in respect to bank loans. This secretary informs me that at this point, where there is a bank which serves not only that village but also three hamlets, to date only one bank loan has been issued.

I want to be fair in this matter, and say that this situation has arisen in a place where the farmers' crops have been fairly well drowned out because of the heavy rains and flood conditions last year. But the same fact remains, namely that here is a community which is similar to many others, where there has been only one bank loan issued up to date. I feel that this legislation does not meet the situation that prevails in western Canada.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce tried to indicate in this house that those of us who are unalterably opposed to this resolution preceding a bill providing for the making of bank loans at 5 per cent interest are in effect trying to wreck the Canadian wheat board. Nothing could be more ridiculous or further from the truth. We support the Canadian wheat board. But if the western farmer is to have faith in the marketing of his wheat through the Canadian wheat board, we feel that this government has to wake up and has to formulate policies which will meet the situation.

I recall that last year one of the newspapers in my constituency carried an article which indicated that if we had a crop failure it perhaps would be a blessing in disguise. I believe that must be what this government is hoping for because of its failure to formulate policies to meet a situation where we are having great overproduction. I think, Mr. Chairman, that in the years to come we are going to have a situation where science and technology will help us produce more grain. I think we should be prepared for it.

I came into this house in 1945, and I have repeated the suggestion many times in the house that we should adopt a policy of an ever-normal granary. I know that perhaps it is not an original suggestion. I said that I believed Canada should store grain in years of plenty to prepare for years of scarcity. I was only young during the thirties, but I recall that we were scraping our bins as we did not have any wheat. I believe it would be a good idea for the federal government to finance a policy under which this country would store wheat and other things for years of scarcity which have prevailed in the past and which undoubtedly will come again.

If we undertook such a policy, Mr. Chairman, we would not have this type of legislation coming before us which only puts the farmer in a more difficult financial position. We would set up a proper plan for agriculture whereby we would store for the years of scarcity. If we undertook such a plan I believe we could keep in federal storage the 400 million bushels of wheat which we need for domestic and export trade. We could do better than that, even. If our farm people could produce sufficient grain to carry a billion bushels of wheat in this country in government storage, it would be one of the greatest things for the peace of the world and security at home. The farmers would be paid for their grain and the grain would belong to the Canadian people.

Some of the newspapers have stated that there has been no definite statement as to what the opposition parties would propose as an alternative to bank loans. I do not feel that is a true statement, because those of us in this group who have spoken have made our position quite clear. We are against bank loans at 5 per cent interest. We do not believe it is fair. It is just as unreasonable as saying to the wage earner, you cannot get your wages but we will make arrangements with the bank to make you a loan on your income at 5 per cent interest. It is an analogous situation. We do not go along with the government's proposal. In this case we believe there should be a long and a short-term policy undertaken. The government has allowed things to dangle along and get completely out of hand.

As an immediate solution I feel the government should have done what the farm organizations in Saskatchewan and in the west generally advocated, namely made cash advances on farm-stored grain through the Canadian wheat board. It would have been a very simple matter to put cash into the hands of the farmers, which would have enabled them to carry on until future deliveries took place. I am at a loss to know whether once again the government is trying to do a favour for the banks, or whether they are not ready to undertake their responsibility as a government and underwrite a parity policy for all agricultural products.

This afternoon, Mr. Chairman, I heard a member from the province of New Brunswick state that the farmers in his constituency had never asked for handouts or for any bank loans. Well, I do not know what assistance they get down there, but I am one who has always favoured any policy which will help agriculture in every province and the people in every province, regardless of their occupation. I believe we in this house should realize that we are like the mother of parliaments, responsible for all the provinces. We should legislate to bring those policies into being which will be in the best interests of every Canadian, regardless of where he lives or what his occupation may be.

Getting back directly to the proposals, I would suggest first that this government should not introduce this legislation at this time. I feel it could do something better. The government could pay the interest on those loans already made, and then set up proper lending facilities through which the farmer could get interest free loans on farm-stored grain until such time as he could deliver his grain.

From time to time we have suggested that this situation would not have developed if the government had done certain things. Amongst those suggestions has been bilateral agreements with other countries that would enable us to sell our wheat for the goods we wanted from the other countries. We have suggested barter arrangements. We have suggested the extension of credit. We have suggested that further assistance be given under the Colombo plan, and also that in some cases famine relief be considered as a measure for helping people less fortunate than we Another thing I want to deal with at another time but which I should like to mention now is the tariff. I feel that a change in rates would be of great assistance to the western farmer. Earlier I indicated that the western farmer is in a price squeeze, and it is going to be a problem for him to continue to operate unless we can develop a plan by which the prices for which he sells his products bear a closer relationship to the prices of what he has to buy.

In closing I should like to indicate that the western farmer is now in a very unfavourable position in respect to the income of other workers throughout the nation. I have here figures for 1946 to 1954 from the dominion bureau of statistics, which state that although farm income from 1946 to 1954 increased to 10·4 per cent as compared with 6·1 per cent in the 1930-39 period—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. gentleman but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It seems to me that a word now to bring this debate back into focus would be worth while. There seems to be a feeling on the opposite side that we are forcing something on the opposition. We are not doing that. At the request of the delegation that came down from western Canada, we arranged with the banks to institute a system of loans on farm storage grain. We thought we were following the wishes of the delegation that put this before us. The unfortunate thing is that the house not being in session, the government gave an undertaking to the banks that if they would not wait for legislation, as the first bill before this parliament the government would undertake to ratify the action it was asking the banks to take. In other words we asked them to lend money on the undertaking that the government would see that the losses were guaranteed.

Well, we have been a long time on this debate. I think most members in the C.C.F. party from the prairies have now spoken twice. I am willing to delay this matter. We will have to tell the banks we cannot carry out our undertaking now. We will have to tell them that at the end of the session we will undertake to keep the house here until we can have this undertaking by the government ratified. It will be up to the banks whether they want to continue lending without the guarantee, but the government is not insisting that this be thrust upon the farmers. We thought it would be helpful.

According to the records I have in hand, it has helped some 8,000 farmers. I have received some letters saying that they are very happy with the assistance they have received. But somehow or other this has got twisted around so that the government is attempting to force this policy on the opposition. It is nothing of the kind. It seems to me that no more repetitive speeches are needed. We have had the same speeches made twice now, I think, by all the members from the prairies. I now see a member getting up to speak for the third time. That is his privilege in committee; nevertheless, we are now down to the point of obstruction.

When we recall that this is a bill that can be obstructed on second reading and on third reading, as well as in the resolution stage, we realize that it is nothing new. There is nothing to debate in the principle of this bill. It is up to the opposition to decide whether they want to carry this on tomorrow. I am willing to drop it until June, but it is just as the opposition say. I think there is a limit to patience. When we get away from debate and get down to obstruction, I think I should have the privilege of making these remarks.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, I think the last remarks of the Minister of Trade and Commerce are certainly an inexcusable piece of insolence on his part. We were sent down here to do a job. Meetings were held throughout the province of Saskatchewan last fall. I do not recall any issue in recent years which has aroused so much interest and resentment throughout the prairies as the resolution we are discussing at the present time.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I ask my hon. friend a question? Does he wish to block this bill? All he has to do is say yes, and the bill is blocked for several months.

Mr. Ellis: I resent the minister making a threat under the guise of asking a question. It is just another example of the type of intimidation which has been going on in this whole debate.

Mr. Knowles: We want something better.

Mr. Ellis: Interest has been expressed in this measure throughout the prairies. Hon. members have attended meetings called by the farmers' union groups and other groups throughout the prairies. If there is a great deal of interest evinced in this house it is certainly not out of proportion to the interest throughout the country.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce rose in his place in the house to answer a question asked by an hon. gentleman on the orders of the day just a few days ago and implied that there was a filibuster because we had had the temerity to debate this thing for one-half a day. If that is the attitude of the Minister of Trade and Commerce on a matter which has aroused the interest—and I might say the resentment—of farmers throughout the prairies, then I suggest the government know full well we are not getting the type of legislation which we have a right to expect.

I attended a few meetings and spoke to a great many farmers in southern Manitoba last fall. I found wherever I went great interest among the farmers and hostility and resentment toward this measure. We came down here. We are expected to put forth the views of our people, and we are not going to be intimidated by any minister of the crown.

Why the impatience? I suggest the minister is impatient to ram this through the house because he knows it is the most unpopular measure that has been brought before this house for some time. Because it is unpopular the government wishes to spare itself the embarrassment of criticism. You follow that line of reasoning to its logical conclusion and it will lead you to a totalitarian state. Any time ministers rise in their places and suggest that the opposition are obstructionists because they wish to debate a measure, you get a scene such as we have had here today.

As far as the members of the government are concerned, they would just as soon the opposition did not say anything. They would like to be given a free hand to mismanage the country as they have done in the past. I believe that the unseemly haste, the impatience of the minister in this connection, prove very revealingly the arrogance which we have been subjected to in the past. It reveals, I think, better than anything else the knowledge on the part of the government that this measure is highly unpopular. We have heard hon. members read the names of farm organizations throughout the prairies that have expressed their opposition to the measure.

Mr. Studer: That is all you have ever done.

Mr. Ellis: In spite of the fact that farm organizations and important people throughout the western prairies have protested against the measure, the government not only want to put it through, but they want to put it through with a minimum of discussion. I suggest that in a democratic parliament every member ought to have the right to speak his mind on any piece of legislation before the house.

A few moments ago the minister said that some members of this group had spoken two or three times. That is not true. There is not a member in this group who has spoken twice on this measure. I challenge the minister to name one. He cannot do it. Yet the minister suggested—he did not suggest it, he said it a moment ago—that a member of this group was getting up for the third time. That is patently false. I think it is time the minister pulled in his horns and permitted the opposition to do the job they were sent down here to do.

There is a resolution on the order paper dealing with farm storage. We were told in effect by the minister the other day that he was not going to allow that matter to come before the house until he had rammed this bank loan resolution through. What happened? The other day we had an amazing spectacle. There were only 36 Liberals in the house, and when a vote was called on a motion for the committee to rise and report progress, and that motion was passed, we went on with the storage resolution. But the minister was not satisfied. Just as soon as he could round up enough of his cohorts he reverted to the bank loan legislation.

The country ought to know—indeed they do know—that the reason the storage legislation has not been passed at this time is entirely the responsibility of the government. The matter was brought before the committee, but because the minister was so angry and in a huff, and wanted to save face, he came back to this house and overrode the previous decision of the committee, disposing of the storage bill and turning back the committee to the bank loan legislation.

The fault is definitely with the government. I hope we hear no talk among the Liberals that the C.C.F. group have obstructed the legislation. I hope we will not have the Liberals going out saying they were anxious to pass the resolution and get this storage bill through, but the C.C.F. stood in the way. It is the government that has prevented the measure from coming up. As a matter of fact it was before the committee, but was turned aside in order that we could go back to this unpopular, controversial legislation.

Of course, we know from experience their efforts to use this kind of intimidation on the opposition to force it into silence.

Will you call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: In the hope that we might conclude this debate we will continue it tomorrow.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

WHEAT BOARD—LOANS ON FARM-STORED WHEAT

Question No. 51—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Did the chairman or any members of the wheat board notify the government at any time since July 1, 1955, that they would resign within a matter of days if loans on farm-stored wheat were brought into effect? If so, which of them did so?

2. What was the date or dates of said notifications and were same given verbally or in writing?

Answer by: Mr. Howe (Port Arthur):

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1 above.

PENSION PLANS

Question No. 66—Mr. Knowles:

1. Is the government now in possession of information as to the number of pension plans in Canada, covering firms with 50 or more employees, which include any provision for the employee to transfer his pension rights, including his own and the employer's contribution, and any accrued interest, to some other employment? If so, how many of such plans are there?

2. How many pension plans in Canada include provision for transfer thereto of an employee's pension rights or interests earned in a previous employment?

3. Is the government taking any steps to encourage and facilitate the mobility or transferability of pension rights, (a) with respect to employees in private industry; (b) with respect to employees in the public service?

4. Is the government studying the possibility of an over-all government-sponsored industrial pension plan, into which various industrial pension plans might be integrated, to facilitate retention of pension rights by persons who move from one employment to another?

5. Are any studies being made of any other ways to facilitate the mobility or transferability of pension rights? If so, what are the results of such studies?

Answer by: Mr. Gregg:

1. No statistical information is available on the transferability of pension rights, but it is believed that such provisions are comparatively rare in industrial pension plans.

While no statistical information is available, the Department of Labour does know of three types of plans which contain provisions for a limited type of transferability:

An amendment to the Ontario Municipal Act in 1953 made it mandatory for the standard municipal plan for municipalities and municipal organizations in Ontario to provide for immediate vesting of the employer's contributions where a terminated employee left to become employed by the civil service of Ontario or Canada, the civic service of any other municipality or local board in Ontario, or the staff of any board, commission or public institution established under any act of the Ontario legislature.

The Canadian Welfare Council, Halifax community chest, and the greater Toronto community chest have plans in operation. Each plan contains a special transfer clause which gives complete vesting of employer benefits if any employee transfers to another social welfare agency.

In employer-union negotiated plans there is a recent trend toward the recognition of the principle of "transfer values" within the industry or between the member employers in a specific trade in a particular locality or localities. These plans cover union members in good standing. The elevator (lift) industry has such a plan in effect. As long as an employee remains employed in the industry by one of the member employers, his pension credits continue to accumulate in accordance with the terms of the plan. Not until he leaves the group of employers represented does the termination clause of the plan become operative. The printing trade in the Toronto area has a plan on similar lines. If an employee stays with the trade but moves outside the Toronto district or if he leaves the trade, he is considered as a terminated employee. The garment making industry in Montreal and Toronto jointly had introduced a scheme along the same lines for members of their union.

2. Answered by No. 1 above.

3. (a) Under certain circumstances persons entering the federal civil service from companies in which they were eligible to be covered by pension plans may claim their service in such plans as pensionable service under the Public Service Superannuation Act, but they must make contributions to cover such service. In such cases there is a type of transferability of eligibility rights but no transfer of benefit rights.

(b) Under section 28 of the Public Service Superannuation Act there is provision for transfer of pension rights as between the federal civil service plan and the plans of (1) provincial or municipal governments, (2) Canadian crown corporations, (3) the government of any country other than Canada, and (4) any international organization designated by the governor in council. Five such agreements have been signed. There are such agreements with the province of British Columbia, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Bank of Canada, the Canadian National Railways and Canadian Arsenals Limited.

4. No.

5. A study is being made by the Department of Labour in co-operation with other interested departments of the effect of pension plans on the employment of older workers. In the course of this study various possible ways of facilitating or encouraging the retention or transfer of pension rights are being explored.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—PROBATION

Question No. 88—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. How many adult offenders in Canada have been placed on probation in each province for each of the years 1945-1955?
2. How many juvenile offenders in Canada have been placed on probation in each province for each of the years 1945-1955?
3. What has been the rate of recidivism among these (a) adult probationers; (b) juvenile probationers, for each of the years 1945-1955?
4. How many probation officers have been employed in each province for each of the years 1945-1955 for (a) adult offenders; (b) juvenile offenders?

Answer by: Mr. Garson:

Under section 92 of the British North America Act the provincial legislatures are given exclusive legislative jurisdiction over the subject matter of probation under head 14 which relates to the administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts. The government of Canada does not require returns to it from the provincial courts concerning the number of adult or juvenile offenders who have been placed on probation during any period, the rate of recidivism among such persons or the number of probation officers who have been employed by provincial governments.

IMPORTS OF MOTOR VEHICLES AND PARTS

Question No. 95—Mr. White (Middlesex East):

1. What number of motor vehicles have been imported into Canada from the United States of America each month, in the years 1953, 1954 and 1955, inclusive?
2. What is the value in Canadian dollars of these importations, by months?
3. What quantities of motor vehicle parts have been imported into Canada from the United States of America in each of the above mentioned years, by months?
4. What is the value in Canadian dollars of these importations, by months?

Answer by: Mr. Howe (Port Arthur):

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRANSPORT

EFFECT ON CANADIAN SHIPPING OF UNITED STATES SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. What will be the effect on Canadian great lakes shipping of the order of the United States maritime administration announced today making United States ship operators on the great lakes eligible for government subsidies?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have only to serve as the basis of an opinion the account which appeared in the Montreal Gazette this morning. I have not seen the text of the announcement made yesterday by the United States maritime administration but I understand from the press dispatch that the administration has declared the ocean route between United States lake ports and western Europe to be essential to United States trade and economy so that, I understand, they could make subsidies available to operators over that route.

However, I should like to point out to the hon. member that this seems to apply only to ocean shipping covering the route between United States lake ports and, I think, western Atlantic ports in Europe. I do not think one may infer from the communique that it is intended to subsidize operations within the great lakes themselves.

Mr. Green: Will Canadian shipping be given any assistance of this kind?

Mr. Marler: Mr. Speaker, at the moment there is no Canadian shipping that is using this particular route because, as my hon. friend knows, the canals limit the ocean-going vessels to those having a draught of 14 feet or less. As the vessels on Canadian register and vessels on United Kingdom register owned by Canadian interests are all of greater draught, the question of subsidy to them does not arise at the present time.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM—INQUIRY AS TO PLANS MADE AT CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister what plans, if any, were made at the recent conference with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of that country with reference to trade between Canada and the United Kingdom?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman realizes, as we realized before, during and after our conversations with the Prime Minister and minister of foreign affairs of the United Kingdom, that they are as anxious as we are to increase the volume of trade between our two countries. However, that has to be a two-way traffic, and we discussed various ways in which that was being encouraged and the fact that those steps were developing at the present time an increase in that trade.

Mr. Fleming: Could the Prime Minister be specific as to what particular means are in contemplation in relation to that trade?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The hon. gentleman knows that they are both free enterprise countries and that it is the individual traders in those countries who make their own investigations and try to serve in the best way they can their own individual interests.

We were informed that there would be substantial advantage to the United Kingdom and to ourselves if more special industrial groups could visit the United Kingdom, because it was pointed out to us that it was only the very largest of their trading firms who could come here and seek markets for the commodities they have available. It was also pointed out that two or three of these groups had visited the United Kingdom and as a result of their visits there had already been a noticeable improvement in the quantity of exports they found it was possible for them to absorb from that source.

We are as much concerned as the hon. member is with the imbalance in our trade with the United Kingdom, and to the extent to which we can influence those events we would like to see as much of the needs of our economy as can be absorbed supplied from an area which would in return be only too happy to purchase more of our products.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY SIR ARCHIBALD NYE—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT COMMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister's attention been drawn to an alleged and widely publicized statement of Sir Archibald Nye that "western powers who did not recognize the new Chinese government made a great mistake"? If so, has the minister any comment to make?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): My hon. friend was good enough to give me notice of his question. My only comment is to regret press reports which appeared in certain Montreal papers, where Sir Archibald was speaking, which by taking a paragraph out of context gave a wrong impression of what he said. The full text of his speech, which I have before me and which I have read, makes it quite clear that in the paragraph in question he was talking about the Asian attitude toward China whereas the report, by producing one paragraph in isolation, gives the impression that it was the United Kingdom and western attitude generally that he was discussing.

As a result of these reports there have been some regrettable speculations regarding the position of the United Kingdom high commissioner. I can only repeat what I said to the press the other day, that our relations with Sir Archibald remain very friendly and co-operative, and we have a high regard for the work he has been doing here as the representative of the United Kingdom.

SHIPMENT OF ARMS—ATTITUDE OF UNITED KINGDOM PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the widespread or so-called widespread apprehension regarding the shipment of arms, when the United Kingdom Prime Minister was here did he raise any objection to Canada's policy respecting the shipment of arms to non-NATO countries? Yes or no.

[Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East).]

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, no objection was raised, and we are happy to find ourselves in substantial agreement with the policy of the United Kingdom in this matter.

USE OF PUBLIC FUNDS TO PUBLISH SPEECH BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he considers it a proper use of public funds for the information division of his department to publish the speech he made in the house on January 24 on the subject of arms shipments abroad, but no speeches by any other members of the house including members of the opposition?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I would have to look into that matter to see if my speech was worthy of that kind of publicity.

Mr. Fleming: Is it a proper use of public funds?

REPORTED DELIVERY OF ARMS BY RUSSIA IN RETURN FOR SLAVES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I should like to answer a question addressed to me the other day by the Leader of the Opposition when he asked:

> Can he enlighten us further or indicate the position taken by this government in regard to the shocking facts disclosed in a report to Dag Hammarskjold referred yesterday to the United Nations in connection with the reported purchase of arms from Russia by the delivery of 1,500,000 Chinese slaves.

The allegations to which reference is made are to be found in the joint report on forced labour submitted to the economic and social council by the Secretary General of the United Nations and the director general of the international labour office. This document—a voluminous one—records new information on systems of forced labour submitted by member states and non-governmental organizations in accordance with a resolution of the council. It includes a report from the Chinese nationalist government entitled "Information on Forced Labour in Communist China".

This report—that is, the report from the nationalist Chinese government—is based on statements in Chinese communist newspapers of individual prisoners who had got out of China, and on Chinese communist laws and regulations. The particular reference of my hon. friend to the purchase of arms by China to be paid for by the forced labour of Chinese is from a Hong Kong newspaper which published a letter from a Chinese in Thailand who had escaped from a prison camp in China where he had heard that this arrangement had been made.

Canada has already made its position clear at the United Nations with respect to forced labour. We have fully endorsed the condemnations by the economic and social council and the general assembly of the United Nations of the existence of systems of forced labour; we have also expressed support for the adoption of a convention on the abolition of forced labour as a means of political coercion or economic development.

FRUIT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR INTERVIEW FOLLOWING SEVERE FROSTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister received from the Fraser valley small fruits emergency committee a letter requesting an interview for the purpose of discussing with him the serious situation resulting from the severe frosts of last fall? If so, is it the intention of the minister to grant such an interview?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was kind enough to send me notice of his question. I have a letter from the Pacific co-operative union—I presume that is the organization to which he refers—suggesting that they would like to have a delegation come down here and discuss the matter with us. I also have a communication from the government of British Columbia with regard to the same matter. The questions involved are under consideration. I have not yet had time to answer this particular letter.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, I believe it was written on that stationery, but that at the end of the letter it was stated that it was from the emergency committee to which I have referred.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member therefore knew that the letter had been received. He was not seeking information.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General?

An hon. Member: Do you know the answer?

Mr. Patterson: Has it ever happened that a letter that has been posted has not been delivered to its destination?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Postmaster General): I understand it has happened in the past, Mr. Speaker.

WATER RESOURCES

UPPER THAMES VALLEY AUTHORITY—REQUEST FOR AID IN CONSTRUCTION OF TWO DAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention two matters. One is this. Might I be permitted to welcome my colleague the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. McCubbin) back to the house? I want to direct the question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or the Minister of Finance. Would either minister indicate what decision has been made on the application of the Thames valley authority for federal assistance in the project outlined by the authority in a brief presented about one year ago?

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): It is still under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REGULATIONS WITH RESPECT TO BANK LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is he prepared to table the regulations in force concerning bank loans and any adjustments thereto?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): To what bank loans is the hon. member referring?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): The bank loans under the legislation we are now discussing.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The requirement is that the bank must be satisfied that the grain which is to be security for the loan is in the possession of the farmer. The bank must be satisfied that the same grain is not pledged to another bank under section 88 of the Bank Act. If it is pledged to the same bank, that is not necessarily a bar to another loan. Those two questions are the only questions that are asked of the potential borrower.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Are those the regulations in their entirety, or have there been any adjustments with respect to them?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Not that I know of.

Mr. Knowles: How can there be regulations until the legislation has been passed?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister answer the question?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Through instructions from the head offices of the banks to their branches; and these instructions are issued by agreement with the government. We believe that eventually, after some weeks, we shall get authority to guarantee the loans, in accordance with our undertaking to the banks.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question? Are we then to understand that regulations have been made based on legislation which has not yet been passed?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): May I answer this question, Mr. Speaker? It was I who wrote the letter to the banks undertaking with them that if they would proceed with these loans in the early fall we would eventually pass legislation such as is now before the house.

Mr. Knowles: You meant you would introduce it.

Mr. Harris: I beg your pardon; we would introduce it. As part of the obligation I thought I owed to the Canadian taxpayer, we did draw up some understanding with the banks as to the precautionary things they would do in dealing with an application. If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre chooses to call them regulations, I have no objection to them being called by that name.

Mr. Knowles: Speak to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Harris: That may be. Those would no doubt become regulations if the legislation were passed and we adopted them as regulations. In the meantime they are working arrangements with the banks, but you can call them whatever you like.

Mr. Fulton: Would the minister be willing to table the letter or a copy of it?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest that perhaps the hon. member could deal with this when we reach committee.

Mr. Fulton: With respect, sir, the Minister of Finance has told us he wrote the letter but he is not the responsible minister when it comes to the legislation. I think it is a proper question to ask at the moment.

Mr. Harris: I think you will understand that the Minister of Finance is the one who can guarantee to the banks a charge on the public treasury. That is why he wrote it. Nevertheless, it deals with a subject with which the Minister of Trade and Commerce is far more competent to deal than I am.

Mr. Fulton: It is not his letter; it is the Minister of Finance's letter.

Some hon. Members: Order; sit down.

Mr. Speaker: If the document is required to be tabled, and if the hon. member asks for it in the course of debate in the committee and the minister undertakes to table the document, he will do so at the first opportunity when the Speaker is in the chair. If that is not done, the hon. member may put a motion for the production of papers on the order paper.

POTATOES

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS FROM NEW BRUNSWICK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): Would the Minister of Agriculture state what action, if any, has been taken to implement the recommendations of the New Brunswick federation of potato growers to relieve the very serious and alarming situation, other than the present unsatisfactory diversion program?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): I understand that the authorities in New Brunswick who are concerned with the matter have been in communication with the officials of my department, and have suggested they come to Ottawa, I think on the 16th of this month. If they come the whole matter will then be discussed.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

EXERCISE "CRACKERJACK"—PARTICIPATION BY AUXILIARY PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Did any of the R.C.A.F. auxiliary squadrons, or any of the auxiliary personnel forces, take part in the test of our northern defences in exercise "Crackerjack"?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): I think the hon. member asked me a question about exercise "Crackerjack" last week and I told him I could not give him an answer until I had time to digest the report. I have not yet had time to do so.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): It is a straight question; it is not a matter of opinion. Will the minister please take my question as notice?

(Translation):

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO IMPROVEMENT OF ACOUSTICS

Mr. Hector Dupuis (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to make concerning the acoustics in this chamber. There has certainly been an improvement, but I do think that the loudspeakers should be shifted to different locations. In the galleries the loudspeakers are behind the listeners, and visitors there hear far better than we do down here where we have to lean forward on our desks to hear what is being said. I think that would be a good suggestion in the circumstances. If you would be so kind as to look into the matter yourself, you will find that audibility down here is rather poor, while excellent up in the galleries.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. Mary has asked that the loudspeaker system be looked into so as to perhaps find ways of improving audibility in the house, especially in the far corner where the hon. member is sitting at the moment. I shall have the technical advisers of the company look into the matter, and no doubt the Sergeant-at-Arms will ask the Department of Public Works to inquire further into it.

Mr. Macdonnell: May I put in a petition in respect of this area, too?

Mr. Speaker: I think we all agree that nothing much can be done with respect to raising the voices of hon. members, but we shall do all we can to improve the system.

GRAIN

PROVISION FOR GUARANTEE OF BANK LOANS TO PRODUCERS IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Wednesday, February 8, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Howe (Port Arthur)—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide, by way of a guarantee for bank loans made on or after the 15th day of November, 1955, and before the 1st day of June, 1956, for short-term credit to grain producers in the prairie provinces to meet temporary financial difficulties arising from inability to deliver their grain; to provide also that the governor in council may extend the application of the act to cover loans made before the 1st day of June, 1957; and to provide further that any amount paid to a bank under the act be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, as a representative in this house from a constituency located in the heart of the world's finest wheat growing area, I feel it my duty to place before the committee some of the reasons I am opposing the legislation presently under consideration.

In opposing this measure I do so first of all because I feel it fails to meet the legitimate requests of the preponderance of spokesmen for western agriculture, who have on many occasions indicated their insistence on cash advances rather than bank loans. I think the excuse offered by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that there was not perhaps complete unanimity when the delegation recently made certain proposals to the cabinet is a mighty poor excuse for the government's refusal to meet the requests of the vast majority of the spokesmen for western agriculture.

On this point, I have been somewhat surprised at the silence of private members on the government side of the house, and I was particularly surprised at the failure of private members from the province of Saskatchewan on the government side of the house to put forth their reasons for supporting this resolution.

On occasions we in this section of the house have been asked by some of the hon. members from Saskatchewan on the government side who asked us to take a particular stand and who asked us to vote against a particular measure. I should like to ask them this question. Whom are they representing in this house when they support a proposition which has not met with the approval of a single agricultural group in the province of Saskatchewan? We are on record as being opposed to this proposal, and have asked for something worth while. The silence of private members from Saskatchewan on the Liberal side of the house in relation to this matter reveals only too clearly that they are aware of the situation, and they dare not stand up in the house and state their reasons for supporting this resolution.

Mr. Harrison: Are you going to send this speech home?

Mr. Ellis: I think it is quite obvious that the resolution envisages legislation which will be totally inadequate to meet the requirements occasioned by the present serious shortage of cash on the prairies. I believe the whole question was very neatly summed up by the leader of the Liberal party in the province of Saskatchewan a few months ago when speaking at a public meeting in a town in the constituency of the Minister of Agriculture, when he referred to this as being as effective as a stirrup pump in a forest fire.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say that when the provincial leader first made the statement he was not speaking in my constituency. I should like to say further that three out of five Liberal members from Saskatchewan have spoken on this resolution.

Mr. Nicholson: No.

Mr. Ellis: No. You are wrong again. I should like to know the names of the three hon. members. I do not recall the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek speaking on this resolution. I do not recall the hon. member for Qu'Appelle having spoken nor do I recall the hon. member for Meadow Lake having spoken. Who are the Liberal members from Saskatchewan who have spoken, if that is the case?

An hon. Member: Mr. Tucker.

Mr. Ellis: The only private member who has spoken is the hon. member for Rosthern.

An hon. Member: That's two.

Mr. Ellis: One of my colleagues says that is two. I do not know whether the fact that the Winnipeg Free Press has referred to the hon. member for Rosthern as having a dual personality, with one voice in the west and another in the east, has influenced the thinking of the Minister of Agriculture to the point where the minister regards the hon. member for Rosthern as two private members in this house, but in any event, if I may continue—

Mr. Gardiner: The hon. gentleman says he would like me to name the hon. members who have spoken. Mr. Tucker spoke on this resolution and I spoke on this resolution. Mr. Mang spoke on the address and I understand expressed himself on it.

Mr. Ellis: Oh, no. I hope the Minister of Agriculture does not think he can get away with having made an incorrect statement a few minutes ago by weaseling out of it in this fashion—

Mr. Gardiner: I am not weaseling out of it. I am making a correction.

Mr. Ellis: The minister made a statement to the effect that certain hon. members had spoken on this resolution. I was speaking about private members and was not referring to the minister—

Mr. Gardiner: I was talking about the Saskatchewan Liberal members—

Mr. Ellis: You said five. I made the statement that only one had spoken. The fact that one hon. member spoke in the throne speech debate is not pertinent to the statement made a few moments ago. I am talking about the debate on this resolution and not the throne speech debate. The hon. member could have spoken about a great many things.

We are concerned about the attitude of those hon. members in relation to this specific resolution.

The Minister of Agriculture referred to the fact that the meeting at which the Liberal leader in Saskatchewan made this statement was not held in his constituency. I was under the impression that meeting had been held in Langenburg which I understood to be in the constituency of Melville. As I was saying when I was interrupted by the minister, the Liberal leader in Saskatchewan apparently recanted, and we have heard very little from him on this score.

This would lead us to believe that not only did our Liberal members in this house toe the line but that the Liberal party, as it has in the past, still exercises dominant control over the Liberal party in the province of Saskatchewan. When the Liberal leader makes a statement that is found unpalatable to his colleagues in Ottawa he is told to keep quiet and say no more about it. I do not think anyone in the province has summed up the situation more ably than the Liberal leader. It is too bad he could not have stuck to his guns and defied the powers in Ottawa.

One of the chief objections to this legislation is that it locks the door to worth-while legislation. We had this type of legislation in 1951, and it failed to satisfy the needs at that time. We are trying to establish a principle of cash advances. Members of the C.C.F. group have been talking about cash advances for over 10 years. We want that principle definitely established. The idea of treating the farmers in the manner outlined in this resolution is far from satisfactory, and we feel that the withdrawal of this legislation would enable the government to bring in legislation more in keeping with the needs of western agriculture.

I suggest that the legislation is only as good as the excuses offered on its behalf by its apologists. I have been trying to find out the reasons behind the government's insistence on this legislation. We have been told by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that delegations from western Canada have asked for it. That is not true. In order to save the Liberal government some embarrassment an individual might have taken a position contrary to the vast majority of the spokemen for western agriculture, but surely the minister cannot insist on complete unanimity. Surely he will accept the wishes of at least 95 per cent of the spokesmen. I would say that as far as the grass roots are concerned it is 100 per cent. If you can find among the vast number of spokesmen representing agricultural groups in the west one or two who, to save the government some embarrassment might be prepared to support bank loans, that is a far cry from saying there is support for this legislation on the prairies.

We even had the hon. member for Rosthern reading into the record a resolution passed at a Saskatchewan conference, completely twisting the meaning of that resolution beyond recognition in a vague and clumsy effort to prove that black is white or that white is black. When they ask for cash advances, he interprets that to mean bank loans.

Then, of course the more tortuous argument is put forth that the government are out to protect the wheat board, that somehow or other those advocating cash advances are in some way undermining the position of the wheat board. The whole validity, or lack of it, of this argument will depend upon the Liberal record with regard to that board. It seems passing strange that at this time the Liberals should be proclaiming themselves as champions of the wheat board. I suggest that one look at the record.

It is well known, as far as the C.C.F. is concerned, that long before the C.C.F. was formed the forerunners of the C.C.F., the men and women who worked in the farm movements on the prairies and who brought forth the C.C.F., these spokesmen for the farmers and workers throughout Canada were the people who gave the impetus and leadership to the creation of the wheat board. The demand was there.

As far as the Liberals are concerned, the wheat board as we know it came into being in 1935 and was brought in by the Bennett government. At the time that legislation was brought in the Liberal party fought it tooth and nail, and the leading opponent of it at that time was the late Hon. J. L. Ralston, in an eleventh hour effort to weaken, if not destroy, the wheat board. Amendments were brought in which would have the effect of placing the wheat board in operation for one year, to be extended only under certain circumstances, whereas the act brought in the wheat board on a permanent basis.

After the Liberal party had fought a losing battle to prevent the creation of the wheat board, and had used every method in its power to weaken it in order to destroy it later, it had the temerity in western Canada in 1935 to go around the country professing to be the friend of the wheat board. The late Mr. King went out to western Canada and referred to the wheat board as the brain child of the Liberal party, after his colleagues had bitterly opposed it just a few months previously. Western Liberals were elected by paying lip service to the wheat board.

What is the sorry record? We know the first step, of course, was to dismiss Mr. McFarland and the advisory committee of the wheat board, thus destroying the one vestige of producer representation on the board. I should mention in passing that later on, at a by-election in which the present Minister of Agriculture entered this house as Minister of Agriculture, the C.C.F. opposed him—unsuccessfully, of course. We opposed him because we had every reason to believe that from his record the Minister of Agriculture was opposed to the wheat board in principle, and opposed to the whole question of setting an initial price. He was opposed to the whole idea of orderly marketing. We were afraid that once in office he would join with his colleagues in Ottawa in a systematic effort to sabotage the wheat board, and that is precisely what they did.

My leader, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, referred to a speech made in this house by the late Mr. Motherwell, who at that time was the member for Melville, in which Mr. Motherwell denounced the Liberal government and denounced his own colleagues for seeking to destroy the wheat board. It appeared quite definite that among the vast number of Liberals who sought election in 1935 and were elected by paying lip service to the wheat board, there was at least one Liberal who stood by his convictions, and that man was the late Mr. Motherwell.

Not only did he indict the government for its attitude toward the wheat board, but he had some caustic comments to make with regard to their government by order in council. I believe he suggested that they might just as well have Mussolini take over the house, when they were governing by order in council. They had an act of parliament set forth certain procedures by which farmers could deliver their grain to the wheat board, and the government of the day—a Liberal government—sought to destroy the wheat board through underhand methods by order in council. We know that during those years of 1936-37 and 1937-38, at the time the order in council was passed to the effect that the wheat board was only to accept delivery of wheat if the price of wheat dropped below 90 cents, farmers were denied the right to deliver their wheat to the wheat board. They delivered their wheat to the elevators at prices ranging between 90 cents and $1.

Later in the same year they saw the price of wheat go up to $1.43. If the wheat board had been in operation, if the farmers had been permitted to deliver their wheat to the wheat board, they would have shared in that price through participation certificates, but the government action had the effect of destroying the wheat board for the time being at least and played right into the hands of the speculators on the Winnipeg grain exchange.

Then we know that in the crop year 1938-1939, when the price of wheat did go down below 90 cents, the board accepted delivery of wheat not at 87½ cents, the price laid down in the original legislation, but at a price of 80 cents. I do not want to go into too much of this history, but I wish to deal with the question of the wheat board because it is quite evident that the only argument Liberals from western Canada have used, and it is a phony argument at that, is the fact that they pretend to be concerned about the welfare of the wheat board. I ask hon. members to judge them by their record in this regard. We know that the government of that day appointed the Turgeon commission which made a study of the whole question of wheat marketing.

The Chairman: Order. I was glad to hear the hon. member say he was not going to pursue this subject. I have just been trying to refresh my memory on the debate, and I do not recall that there was any extended debate with regard to the wheat board on this resolution. I stand subject to correction, but if the hon. member will also refresh his memory I think he will find that the extended remarks with regard to the wheat board took place in the debate on the address, and in this debate we have been keeping more strictly to the subject under consideration.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, when the Minister of Trade and Commerce introduced the resolution he wandered far afield. He dealt with the question of cash advances. He dealt with the whole question of wheat marketing. I agree that the government does not want to go into the matter too deeply. They just want to get across the insinuation that opposition members are doing something which can hurt the wheat board. They do not go into it too deeply and I do not blame them; but the fact is that this matter has been raised by a number of hon. members.

The Chairman: Order. I had occasion, reluctantly, to interrupt the hon. member for Mackenzie yesterday, and at that time I pointed out that several hon. members had mentioned in this debate the question of exports and similar general matters and that there had been no attempt whatsoever to curtail discussion along those lines. However, I feel that this particular discussion of the pros and cons, if I may call them such, of the wheat board is perhaps not in order on this resolution.

[Mr. Ellis.]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, may I respectfully submit that the whole basis of this legislation arises from certain words that are right in the resolution, "to meet temporary financial difficulties arising from inability to deliver their grain." It seems to me it is that difficulty in connection with the delivering of grain that made it proper for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Agriculture and others to talk about the wheat board and other methods of delivering or disposing of grain. I submit with all respect that Your Honour is being unduly critical of members when you suggest that they cannot also discuss whatever is involved in the inability to deliver grain.

The Chairman: Order. It was not my intention to limit the discussion in such a manner at all. I see, for instance, that previously in this debate there has been a discussion of the possibility of the wheat board handling these advances, and also certain allied subjects. What I meant to do when I interrupted the hon. member for Regina City was merely to state that in my opinion this prolonged discussion of the history of the wheat board and the pros and cons of the wheat board is not in order under this resolution. A discussion of the wheat board in so far as it affects this resolution is of course in order. It was the somewhat extended and particular remarks of the hon. member which I thought were perhaps not in order.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, I must say that my treatment of this subject was occasioned by the fact, as I pointed out, that the whole basis of the argument made by some of the apologists for the resolution was their supposed concern for the wheat board. Therefore I think the validity of this argument will hinge to a very large extent upon the government's handling of the matter throughout the years, because after all the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce are two of the men who were vitally concerned with this matter at the time the wheat board was dealt with in the manner I have just been describing.

However, I will hurry on and dispose of the subject by making one further reference. Notwithstanding the indirect pressure against the wheat board in 1939, on February 16, 1939, the Minister of Agriculture announced a new wheat policy at the time the estimates of the Department of Agriculture were before the house. The pertinent point in the new policy enunciated by the government was as follows:

> That the government should remain out of the grain trade and our wheat should be marketed by means of the futures market system.

Certainly under those circumstances it is quite easy to assess the validity of the arguments these hon. members have been making. Under these circumstances you may say, why have we a wheat board today? That is a proper question. It was not because of the Liberal party but in spite of them. It was because of the wave of protest that spread throughout western Canada. The United farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section; the Saskatchewan wheat pool; the Manitoba pool; the Alberta pool, all the farm organizations joined together to protest the onslaught on the wheat board. A petition was circulated throughout my province and I believe there were somewhere in the neighbourhood of 160,000 signatures on it.

At that time the Liberal government were a little more sensitive to public opinion. They had only been in office for about three years. Now they have been in office so long that they just do not care about public opinion and are prepared to ram this thing through regardless of what the people back home think. It indicates the change in the attitude of the government in recent years. At least at that time they were sensitive enough to public opinion that they made up their minds that if you could not beat it you might as well join it. The Liberal protestations of devotion to the wheat board today bear all the earmarks of a shotgun marriage, because nothing in their past has indicated that their concern about the wheat board is their real reason for bringing forward this legislation at the present time.

I have been quite interested, Mr. Chairman, in the attitude taken by other opposition groups with regard to this resolution, particularly the attitude of the Progressive Conservative party. In spite of the critical comments they have made about the measure they have announced through their leader that they intend to support the government. The same applies to the spokesman for the Social Credit group, who announced the support of his group for the legislation introduced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I had hoped that as a result of this discussion we might persuade the other opposition groups to join us in presenting the attitude of western agriculturists toward the resolution now before the house.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it is my duty to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, there is something that seems a little curious to me. When a farmer in the west is hard up and wants to get some cash he does not have to go to a small loan company in this case and pay 12 per cent, 24 per cent or a lot more. I was just wondering what these people represented by the hon. member for Assiniboia—the thousands of them who had to borrow money and pay 12 per cent or more—would think if they were able to borrow money from the government at 5 per cent. This is a contest that I should like to see cleared up. These farmers in the west are not all hard up. I know some of them who are not even going to borrow.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): As to what the hon. member for Fort William has said, I see no reason—

Mr. Byrne: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I understand the hon. member for Kootenay East is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Byrne: Or a question of privilege. The opposition, particularly the C.C.F. opposition, have been complaining that members from this side of the house are not speaking. I wonder whether it would not be proper for them to relinquish their place and allow a member from this side of the house to speak.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Chairman, I think you know as well as I do that this is not a point of order or a point of privilege. You have the right to recognize whomever you like in this chamber, and you are the one who decides the matter.

As to the statement by the hon. member for Fort William, perhaps he did not hear the remarks made by our leader the other day in the house when he pointed out that this government is quite content to lend money to foreigners at 3 per cent but to Canadians at 5 per cent. We do not like that sort of thing. If we can lend money to United States corporations at a rate of 3 per cent, then if we are going to lend money to Canadians let it at least be at 3 per cent. Apart from that aspect, we in the C.C.F. still do not like the legislation.

What I want to deal with for the next few minutes are some of the illogicalities and absurdities given us by the Minister of Agriculture in the last few days in the course of what he has had to say. The right hon. gentleman is sometimes extremely loquacious, but on these occasions he either spoke far too much or else far too little. As reported at page 861 of Hansard he said:

> . . . financing on loans has never been the best way for the farmers of western Canada.

We who come from western Canada know that it is not a good way for farmers to finance. But if that is so, and if my hon. friend knows it is so, why is he supporting this legislation the purpose of which is financing farmers by means of loans? My right hon. friend has told the house that he has been through Saskatchewan talking at meetings here and there; but apparently he is not yet convinced that the great majority of the farmers are opposed to this legislation.

I do not know what sort of farm groups he was speaking to. I know that I met with some in Manitoba who were strongly opposed to this legislation. Perhaps the minister never came across those farmers. But he told us—or one member of the government did so—that only 4 per cent of the farmers of western Canada have taken advantage of loans under this scheme. That means that 96 per cent either have not taken advantage of them or have been denied the opportunity to take advantage of them. The minister tells us that financing by loans by western agriculture is bad. If he believes it is as bad as all that, why does he not talk to his colleagues on this matter?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I ask the hon. member a question? How many farmers has he in his riding?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I come from an urban constituency; and coming as I do from an urban constituency I know that the welfare of my constituency depends upon the welfare of the farmers, and that what is good for the farmers is good for my constituency and for Canada. Members of parliament from eastern Canada also ought to realize that fact, especially those from industrial areas where farm implements have been sold in the past to western Canada. They know the unemployment which prevails in these industries because the farmers have no cash with which to buy implements. We have to get cash into the hands of the farmers, and this legislation is not designed to do it. The Minister of Agriculture must know it is not designed to do that. Yet despite the fact that he says that the financing of farmers by loans is a bad thing, apparently he still intends in this house to support it.

But let us consider some other things he said. He was at a public meeting in Saskatchewan and at this public meeting he had a discussion with one whom I shall call Mr. X. We do not need to know the name of the individual at all. Mr. X applied for a loan under this scheme. Mr. X could not get it. Mr. X thereupon appealed to the minister, and the minister advised him to apply later when the regulations were adjusted. I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce today to table the regulations. I hope he will still do that. He told us what the regulations were in a couple of brief sentences. I asked him what adjustments had been made and I was told there were none. But his colleague sitting next to him says that adjustments were made and that after they were made this farmer would probably get a loan. Then, according to the Minister of Agriculture, it was stated at the meeting that the farmer likely would get the loan. Who would be in a position to know if Mr. X got a loan?

Mr. Gardiner: Would you like to know?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I certainly would; but I do not want a speech, I just want the name.

Mr. Gardiner: The fact is that in Saskatchewan the provincial government have passed a law that, as to anyone who has not paid his taxes, his name must be posted in the elevator and the elevator operator must deliver the money to the municipality in which the taxes are payable. That is what we were discussing. This man said he could not get the money with which to pay his taxes until he got the loan. I certainly indicated to him that the matter was under consideration at a meeting in Winnipeg, and it was adjusted.

Mr. Coldwell: When was that legislation passed?

Mr. Gardiner: The regulation about paying taxes?

Mr. Coldwell: Yes.

Mr. Gardiner: Some time ago. It is maintained by the present government, whether passed originally by them or not.

An hon. Member: It was passed back in the Liberal days.

Mr. Gardiner: Just a minute. It was the position taken by the attorney general in the present government that arrears of taxes and other charges against the wheat had to be paid before the farmers could get a loan.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be interrupted. The right hon. gentleman can take any one point which is a fact and twist it, turn it and distort it faster than anybody else in this house. Apparently what was said at this meeting was that it was likely this farmer would get a loan. The only two people who actually knew that he would get a loan were either the minister, who has some influence over the bank, or the bank manager himself. The minister could not know what the manager was going to do, surely. Only the bank manager must have known. So the bank manager said this man likely would get a loan after these adjustments were made which the minister indicated were going to be made and which the Minister of Trade and Commerce denies were made.

It is hard to get some sort of semblance of sense out of this whole story. As I said, the Minister of Agriculture has either spoken too much or too little; and I do not want any more interruptions in my speech. After I am finished he can get up on every point of order or question of privilege he can think of and make a speech, but I do not want to be disturbed.

An hon. Member: Then stop asking questions.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): As reported at page 861 of Hansard, the minister told us he was given a note saying, "Tell Mr. Gardiner so and so got the first loan". My colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo yesterday said that the operative word there was the word "first". Who knew that Mr. X. got the first loan? Only one person really could have known, and I maintain that was the bank manager.

I have heard the Minister of Agriculture complain bitterly time after time that he has been misquoted, that he has been misrepresented. He has blamed the press for misrepresenting him all over this country. Yet he misquotes himself. He cannot even accurately quote a sentence of his own. He tells us as reported at page 861 of Hansard that the minister was given a note saying, "Tell Mr. Gardiner so and so got the first loan". Then he tells us, as reported at page 984 of Hansard: "Tell Mr. Gardiner he got the loan". That is a vastly different thing from that about which my colleague was complaining yesterday.

Then we find out eventually who sent this note. A banker sent the note to the minister saying that Mr. so and so got the first loan. There is only one inference one can draw from this information. The minister in attempting to save himself can perhaps consign this banker to limbo for all I care, but a banker has no right to divulge in a Liberal meeting or in a Liberal caucus or anywhere else the financial details of the business of his customers and his clients. If this banker did so, as the minister alleges he did, then I think he ought to be disciplined by his own particular head office.

But the minister was not content to stop there. As reported at page 862 of Hansard, he goes into certain fantasies of which only he is capable. He told us that in the town of Lemberg the amount of loans is $44,190, and that in the town of Balcarres the amount is $21,585. Less than half has been lent in Balcarres as compared with Lemberg. Then he goes on in his inimitable Liberal, with a capital "L", style to say:

I think if the hon. member for Assiniboia had never gone there it would have been just as high as the others.

Mr. Gardiner: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): The minister says hear, hear. What is the inference in that? Is the government lending the money or the bank? Is he saying that because the hon. member for Assiniboia went there the banks are going to cut the loans in half? What the minister is arguing is that there is collusion between the banks and the government as to who is or who is not going to get a loan. The minister cannot wriggle away from that. He has told us that if we go into a constituency in Saskatchewan and speak against this pernicious legislation the farmers are not going to get loans because the banks will turn them down. On whose instructions?

Mr. Gardiner: What I am saying is that the farmers did not ask for loans.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I am not going to be interrupted by the minister. I have the floor and I am going down the line so far as he is concerned. If he wants to object afterwards, let him object; I do not care. He has told in these words that wherever opposition members go and speak, the loans are going to be cut down.

He went further on the same page and said:

They—

Being the farmers.

—are going to remember the fact that he—

Being the hon. member for Assiniboia.

—came there, told them certain things, and they did not take the money out of the bank.

Because the hon. member for Assiniboia went there, the farmers did not get loans. Does the Minister of Agriculture think the hon. member is the Minister of Trade and Commerce? The hon. member for Assiniboia has not the power of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, so why does he ascribe to him the power of being able to stop these loans?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friend has asked me a question. What is the question?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I am not asking the minister a question at all.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): If my hon. friend is asking about me, what is he asking?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I am not asking the minister a question at all. Wait until I get started on him, and then he can rise on points of privilege, points of order or anything else.

Grain

I want to turn again to the very illogical statements of the Minister of Agriculture. He told us the hon. member for Assiniboia stopped the farmers from getting loans. A couple of minutes before that the minister had said:

I have had sufficient experience with the farmers of western Canada to know they do not pass up these things.

Let the minister make up his mind what position he wants to take. Let him not go off in all directions at once and be equally wrong in all directions.

I am coming now to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. After one member of this party had spoken in the house the minister said, as reported at page 789 of Hansard for February 2, 1956:

I now understand that the bill is to be filibustered.

After one speaker from this party—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The hon. member for Assiniboia made that statement before he left western Canada, and all the newspapers have made the same statement.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I cannot help what the newspapers have done.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Despite this claque over there, the hon. member did not say that. The minister is looking into his crystal ball and it is cracked. Yesterday the minister got up in this house and, in effect, tried to blackjack the opposition into silence. We will not be silenced.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): If my hon. friend would be silent on occasion and talk less he would know more.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): There is a tendency in all governments when they have been in power for so many years to become corrupt. There is corruption mentally as well as corruption otherwise. There is a basic mental corruption here when there is the tacit assumption that the minister is there by some divine right of Providence. He is not. If the minister is going to present legislation to this house, he must be prepared to take the consequences of that legislation. Even his own colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, does not like what he is doing.

The minister himself does not like it, either; otherwise why would he threaten to withdraw it because a few C.C.F. speakers had rebuked him and said this measure was not good enough? The minister is afraid of it. He is going to withdraw it because he is afraid; he is hurt; he is piqued. He is going out; now I feel a lot better, having driven the minister out of the house. There are some things I want to say to him and I am sorry he is not going to stay to hear them. He is going to get them rammed down his throat just the way he would like to ram this legislation down our throats.

Yesterday the minister said, as recorded at page 990 of Hansard for February 8, 1956:

Well, we have been a long time on this debate.

How long was that time; how many days, how many weeks? It amounts to three days, two and a half days to be exact but we will say three days. We are now on the fourth day, and that is 33 per cent more. No wonder the minister feels so badly that he has left the house. I do not blame him. I continue quoting:

I think most members in the C.C.F. party from the prairies have now spoken twice.

His thinking is as faulty as his understanding of this whole subject. It was pointed out to him yesterday that each speaker had spoken once only, but if we all want to speak twice we will speak twice. We will speak as often as we want. If we feel we are representing our constituency by coming down here and fighting the foolishness of this government, we will do it. We know what we are paid to do and what we are expected to do. Then the minister said graciously:

I am willing to delay this matter.

He will delay it as long as we wish. We are going to battle it until we are satisfied we cannot get any more out of the government. Then and only then will we let it go through. The minister continued:

We will have to tell the banks we cannot carry out our undertaking now.

Can this be a surprise to the banks? The Liberal government cannot carry out its undertaking. In 1919 the Liberals promised health insurance, and they have never carried out that undertaking yet. Year after year they make promises, they give undertakings, and they forget about them. Their memories get very hazy. Why should the banks be worried? I am pretty certain that any farmers who can take advantage of this legislation have now taken advantage of it, and not many more farmers are going to get much help from it. Then the minister said:

I am willing to drop it until June . . .

Why does he mention June? We are willing to be here in June, July, August, September, October, November and December. We are paid to be here, so why should we not be here? If the minister wants to bring it up in June, well and good. If he wants to bring it up in December, all the better, because the longer we are here discussing these other matters which the government has given us, the more chance we have to see the mistakes, the bungling, the errors and the confusion which permeates this whole administration.

Mr. Byrne: At the outset, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say—

Mr. Knowles: If the minister were here he would ask how many farmers you had in your constituency.

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: Keep quiet.

Mr. Byrne: During the question period this afternoon there was some indication that the C.C.F. party raised some objection to the regulations having been based on legislation that had not the authority of this house. I cannot conceive any possible means for the government to have provided cash for the farmers on the western prairies without having used some such method as an order in council. If legislation such as the opposition is requesting had been anticipated, certainly that also would have had to have the legislative authority of this house.

Mr. Ellis: Can parliament not meet in the fall?

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You are never satisfied anyway.

Mr. Byrne: Unless the C.C.F. opposition particularly wish to keep cash entirely out of the hands of the farmers they could not have raised a more serious question. We have heard some strong words used in this debate such as phony, pernicious, weaseling—

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mistakes, bungling, confusion, error—I could give you a lot more.

Mr. Byrne: Perhaps I may be pardoned some indiscretion, Mr. Chairman. I am going to look up the actual meaning of pernicious. I find that it is "destructive, ruinous"—well, it applies to anaemia, too.

Since the debate began we have heard that the average loan to the farmers in the prairie provinces has amounted to $800. I understand that wheat deliveries provide that these loans from the banks shall be repaid in about 6 months. I hear no objection to that; therefore I presume that is a possibility. If so, then 2½ per cent of $800 would amount to approximately $20 in interest. The farmers on the western prairies must be in a much worse condition than I have ever imagined in travelling through the area if $20 is the difference between ruination and prosperity.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): You must have gone through at night.

Mr. Byrne: Since I am speaking of the actual financial position of the western farmer, I do not want the impression to go out that I have no sympathy for him. Certainly I have had close relationships with western farmers, as my father raised wheat for a great many years. On my return to Ottawa this year I stopped off and had a discussion with him. He reminded me of the days when he sold wheat for 18 cents a bushel. Those were tough times. However, he recalled other days when there was no wheat to be sold, and he had to ask for assistance to get seed to put into the ground in the spring. He certainly has seen very difficult conditions.

For that reason I have every sympathy for the farmer. The C.C.F. and the Conservative opposition would seek to create the impression that the Liberal party has no feeling whatsoever for the farm population of this country. Nothing could be further from the truth. To use language corresponding to what we have heard today, it is a downright lie.

I looked over the agricultural estimates and found that the total vote for agriculture this year is $77,716,091. A very large percentage of that amount is to go to the very areas and districts that my hon. friends represent at the present time. We have the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act and many other pieces of legislation which are for the benefit of the western farmer.

I have not been a member of the house long enough to know what the arguments were or who established the wheat board; but the fact remains that it has been operating for the last 20 years while the Liberal party has been in power, and it would seem to me they have done less to destroy it than the arguments that my hon. friends are presenting in this debate.

The wheat farmer is not entirely disregarded by the taxpayers generally across Canada. We have to remember that some few years ago, I believe it was in 1950, an appropriation of $65 million was taken from the general revenue of the country and given directly to the wheat farmers.

I come from a riding which is mainly industrial. It is not entirely industrial; there are a large number of farmers in that riding and for that matter some very large wheat farmers. As the representative of that riding in Ottawa I say that I did not go uncriticized by many of my constituents for having agreed without protest to the $65 million subsidy to the wheat farmers. I know we should hear all kinds of arguments to the effect that it was not a subsidy; it was a mishandling by the wheat board or the government through their inability to sell the wheat. The fact remains that the wheat was being sold by the board under the agreement which my hon. friends opposite have supported in the past, and I am sure they have given every indication that they intend to support it in the future. They have asked for these things, but we gave in addition the $65 million without objection from members from all other parts of Canada.

This little group that has been isolated in a small part of Canada are putting up the last great stand, and they would have all the rest of Canada believe that we are down on the western farmers. That is the attitude of that little bastion of socialism. I am sure they would like very much to see the Liberals in this house join unanimously to oppose this legislation and oppose the legislation that is to be introduced later on in the session to give an additional $30 million to the farm population in payment of storage charges on their grain.

Let me compare the estimates of this year, and this year only—and of course every year it is much the same, except when such grants as $65 million are made at one time—and see what I find. There is a similarity. As I have said, agriculture is to receive $77 million this year. The appropriation for the Department of Labour is $73 million. This of course includes $35 million which is paid in a lump sum to the unemployment insurance fund. The unemployment insurance fund is financed by the employer, the employee and the government. The labour force in Canada today is something in excess of 5 million people. While I do not know the actual numbers, I would suggest that the heads of families being supported by farm operations number around 300,000. I am hazarding a guess, but I believe that figure is somewhere near the actual number.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Are you discussing bank loans?

Mr. Byrne: I am amazed at the audacity of the hon. member, Mr. Chairman. He has gone back at least 30 years in this debate, and he seeks to project himself into the future, even into the next general election. That seems to be his aim. I am simply pointing these things out for comparison purposes, and not in opposition to the legislation. I know the C.C.F. party is going to oppose it. That party is going to vote against it; I am not.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Are you going to the Senate?

Mr. Byrne: I have pointed out some of the things the general taxpayer is doing. He feels it is justifiable in an attempt to level out the gross national product of Canada. It is not objected to seriously. But what one does object to is this continual carping criticism and biting of the hand. That is the experience we have had in this house on this measure that proposes to do something more.

I might point out further that in the general economy of Canada the wheat farmer on the western prairies is also receiving substantial assistance through the maintenance of the Crowsnest freight rates.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): You really are against the farmers, are you not?

Mr. Byrne: The hon. member says I am really against the farmers. My humble and honest opinion is that the hon. member and those of his party on that side of the house would see the farmers go down to ruin just as long as they could be returned to this house. They know their party is going to ruin, and they would like to drag the western farmers down with them. I am not saying the Crowsnest freight rates should not be maintained—

An hon. Member: The railways have not lost any money.

Mr. Byrne: I know I have expressed some impatience, but if you will just have patience I will deal with that. British Columbia particularly has shared the brunt of this—

The Chairman: I hope that on this resolution we will not embark on a discussion of freight rates.

Mr. Byrne: I think I have seen the debate range far afield so I shall simply confine this portion of my argument to a few brief words—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Byrne: —and I will say that it costs one-third as much to ship wheat in Canada as it does in the United States. The loss must be made up by other freight rates and in other respects, and British Columbia and other parts of Canada are making that up in paying higher rates because of the inability of the railways to obtain compensating rates under the Crowsnest agreement.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Has he read the agreement under which the Crowsnest rates were set up?

Mr. Byrne: I know all about the Crowsnest agreement.

Mr. Coldwell: If you do—

Mr. Byrne: If you, Mr. Chairman, will permit me, I will—

Mr. Coldwell: Just a minute. Does the hon. member know the Crowsnest rate was granted on account of a large subsidy which was given to the railway at that time?

Mr. Byrne: I know the amount of the subsidy and what they received, and if you wish me to continue debating it I shall be happy to do so.

Mr. Coldwell: You can do so on another occasion when there is an opportunity for such a debate.

The Chairman: I see that I was probably well advised to indicate to the committee a few minutes ago that we could not embark on a discussion of freight rates under the terms of this resolution.

Mr. Byrne: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have not left my subject entirely unstudied, and if the hon. member wishes to debate that question later on I shall be only too pleased to do so. I simply want to let him know that I have already asked this house to agree to the recommendation of Chief Justice Sloan to have these things adjusted—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Coldwell: He had better consult his own colleagues.

Mr. Byrne: The opposition seems to—

An hon. Member: The C.C.F. party, at any rate.

Mr. Byrne: Yes, we have heard more from the C.C.F. party than from any other party in the house. Some hon. members in that party seem to think the only place that any suffering has ever been experienced in Canada is within the province of Saskatchewan—

Mr. Coldwell: Oh, nonsense.

Mr. Byrne: I know; I have suffered there too.

An hon. Member: We think of your people, too.

Mr. Byrne: But it has not all been suffering; they have had some fairly good times. It has been shown by the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce that they have had good years, and they are continuing to sell wheat at the same rate they have sold it in the past five years.

I grant that one hon. member said yesterday that one of his constituents wrote and told him he had been unable to deliver any grain since the fall of 1954. At the same time he went on to say it was because he could not deliver to the elevator of his choice. Well, if the constituent is so independent as to insist on the elevator of his choice, then he cannot be as badly in need of cash as the hon. member would seek to establish.

Mr. Coldwell: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Is the hon. member a trade unionist?

Mr. Martin: No.

An hon. Member: He certainly is.

Mr. Coldwell: Would you do something with which your organization did not agree, if you could help it? That is the position the farmer is in with the pool.

An hon. Member: You might as well sit down.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, I suppose you could say that is an irrelevant question, but I certainly believe that if the farmer's principles are as strong regarding the question of delivery of wheat to an elevator of his choice as they are regarding this particular question as to whether the loan should be obtained from the bank or whether it should be obtained through the wheat board, then I think he has every justification for remaining away from it. But it has been shown here in the house and in the agriculture committee that this is not a principle over which the farmer would persist to the length of going hungry.

An hon. Member: They do not want to pay interest on their own money.

Mr. Byrne: I was saying before I was interrupted that the comparative wealth in the prairie provinces and those areas of industrial development might be further referred to in relation to the question of income tax.

The parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance told us the other day that during the war years a man earning $3,000 a year in industry was paying $884 income tax. I experienced this myself but I had not entirely remembered it. If we go through the tax records of the western prairies for those years we will find that the income tax paid there was very low. On the other hand, we know that when bonds were issued and the campaigns began, in many of those prairie regions the bonds were sold out before the issue actually opened. But in the industrial areas and in the mines where I worked we campaigned for two or three weeks and finally had to ask the companies to come along and finish it off, because we just did not have cash available with which to buy victory bonds.

I want to reiterate, Mr. Chairman, that we have every sympathy for the western farmers and we intend to put through this legislation that will be helpful to them. It is my intention, and I am sure it is the intention of the rest of the so-called quiet backbenchers, to vote for an additional $30 million a year to pay farm storage. At the same time I want them to know that although we will have to face criticism, and we are prepared to face it, I do not think that calumny should be heaped upon us by the hon. members sitting opposite.

Mr. Quelch: I did not intend to speak again, but one or two statements have been made that I think should be corrected. I can assure the minister I am not speaking for the purpose of holding up this legislation, and I am not even suggesting that anybody else is; but a statement was made by the hon. member for Rosthern concerning a statement by myself, which I think should be corrected. I quote from page 628 of Hansard:

> The hon. member for Acadia indicated that in his area there were charges against the grain to the extent of in some cases perhaps 60 per cent of the value. If what is advocated by the opposition were done, and if advances were made against that farm-stored grain by the elevator company on behalf of the wheat board, what you would have would be this situation. When the time came to deliver the grain, the charges would have to be paid to the extent of 60 per cent and those loans would have to be paid to the extent of 50 per cent. There would not be enough to pay actually what was owing on the grain. Who would go short? Obviously the person who would go short would be the wheat board. As no statutory priority could be given to the wheat board, before any cheque could be issued to the wheat board all these prior liens would have to be met.

I was not in the house at the time, but the hon. member for Bow River interjected:

> The hon. member for Acadia never said there were liens on it.
> Mr. Tucker: I heard what he said.

I must say to the hon. member that if he heard, or if he thought he heard me say "liens", his hearing must have been affected by the gunshot, because I never used that word in my whole speech. Let me quote to him what I did say from page 616 of Hansard:

> As I say, a very large percentage of wheat is already pledged. Take the Morrin district, probably one of the best wheat districts to be found in western Canada. It is on the gumbo plains. I was told at that meeting that in that district 60 per cent of the wheat on the farm is already pledged.

I went on:

> The reason such a large percentage of that wheat has already been pledged is that heavy costs were incurred in the production of the wheat. Farmers were obliged to get bank loans to meet those costs, and they were obliged to charge bills with machine companies, stores and oil companies, and those bills exist at the present time.

I am talking about bills owing at stores. I am certainly not talking about liens. The hon. member for Rosthern knows the practice in the west as well as I do. He knows it is the practice during the summer, when the farmer is short of cash, for him to go to the local storekeeper or the local machine man, or to the oil dealer, and point out to the merchant that he has not enough money to pay for his stores or his supplies, and he asks the storekeeper to advance him these goods on credit and promises—here is where the pledge comes in—that when he threshes his crop he will pay that bill. There is no legal document of any kind signed; there is no lien signed; there is nothing transacted legally that compels that farmer to pay that bill when he sells his wheat. It is merely a promise he makes to the storekeeper, and the storekeeper knows from experience that the majority of farmers who make a promise of that kind will honour it.

Therefore, if the farmer received an advance on his wheat, what would he do? As soon as he got an advance he would immediately go around town and to the best of his ability pay the storekeepers the amounts he owed them. If the advance had been made at 50 per cent of the delivery, then half of the advance would be repaid and the other half would be used by the farmer to pay off any further bills he had not been able to pay when he first got the advance.

That is what I meant by the pledge. It is exactly the same as the Minister of Agriculture meant when he said the farmers would get an advance of credit from storekeepers, that in many cases the storekeepers were actually acting as the farmers' bankers. I was not suggesting that the farmer signs any note or legal contract which would have priority on an advance or a loan made by the wheat board or by the government.

There is another matter to which I wish to refer, and that is the statement made by the hon. member for Regina City. He referred to the fact that the members of the Conservative and Social Credit parties were supporting this legislation, and he implied that we were not acting in the interests of the farmers by so voting. Personally I feel that when we vote we are not voting in the interests of the C.C.F. party; we are voting that way because we believe it will be in the interests of the farmers to support this resolution.

If we had the alternative of voting either for this legislation or advances, unquestionably we would vote for advances, but we have not that chance. There is only one piece of legislation before us. We have no assurance whatsoever that if this legislation is turned down other legislation granting advances to farmers will be passed. We have no reason to believe that, and so we are bound to ask ourselves this question. Would it be in the interests of the farmers today for the government to withdraw the legislation now before us? Would it be in the interests of the farmers for the government or the banks to stop making loans to the farmers? I am satisfied the farmers would not want that done at the present time. True, they would prefer advances, but if they cannot get advances they want loans.

I am not in any doubt about the attitude of the farmers in my constituency toward this question, because that whole matter was threshed out for a number of hours at meetings I attended last fall. At the largest meeting, held at Morrin, a meeting attended by farmers from Drumheller to Stettler and from Three Hills to Hanna, this question of government policy which had been brought to their attention at that time came up for discussion. Most of the farmers spoke quite bitterly against it.

Then the proposition was raised as to whether they should vote against the proposal and take a definite stand that they would not accept it. Much consideration was given to that question. The decision arrived at by those farmers was that they would like advances but if they could not get advances then they wanted bank loans. I was present at that meeting, and I was instructed by the farmers at that meeting to support this legislation if there was no other alternative. As I say, there is no other alternative at the present time.

What has been the attitude of the Alberta wheat pool on this question? At the last annual convention it adopted a 12-point program. In that whole program there was no mention of advances or loans. But during the conference there was mention of this question. The official wheat pool budget has this to say:

> Delegates felt that advances on grain, whether interest free or otherwise, were only an emergency measure and would offer no solution to marketing problems. They believe that farmers who find it necessary to borrow should get as favourable interest rates as possible, but they did not ask that the wheat board become involved in the loaning business for fear of jeopardizing its usefulness as a merchandising agency.

They have not much faith in loans or advances as a solution to their problems, but they feel that if loans are made they should be secured at the lowest interest rate possible. That has been our main criticism of the bank loan, namely that the rate of interest is too high and should be 3½ per cent. We have felt that instead of the government bringing down a policy under which the farmers can get bank loans, they should have brought down a policy under which advances could be made to the farmers who have grain in storage by the government itself without any interest, in other words a prepayment. The government could take ownership of the wheat. It could make an initial payment, and the balance could be paid when the wheat is sold. That is the policy the farmers believe in, but the government refuses to bring down that policy. The farmers say that if they cannot get that they would be glad to get the bank loans.

Many farmers today need help of some kind or another. We in this group make no apology for supporting this legislation. We are sorry we have to support it rather than advances, but the government controls the matter. They refuse to bring down advances, and we are certainly not going to vote against the farmers receiving this small help.

I received two petitions yesterday sent by farmers in my constituency. One is from the farmers' union and contains this clause:

> That while the present restricted delivery situation exists, provision be made for cash advances against grain stored on the farm, such advances to be equal to 50 per cent of the initial payment on an 8 bushel quota, and to be issued through the elevator system at not over 3½ per cent interest.

There they are talking about interest being charged at 3½ per cent. I say the government should reconsider the rate of interest and make it 3½ per cent instead of 5 per cent. Notice that they are talking about loans. I was surprised that they would do so in a petition, but that is the petition I received yesterday. Therefore we in this group would be in a very funny position if, when the government has told us, as they have told us, that they are not prepared to support advances but are at least prepared to let the farmers have loans, we should say that we were not going to allow the farmers to have loans. That is why we will vote for the legislation.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, there has been some discussion here about who has spoken on the resolution and who has not, and that sort of thing, but I want it to be clear that I am speaking on the resolution because I believe the people whom I represent in parliament would wish me to do so. My genial friend from Westmorland dragged me into the debate yesterday by referring to me in the early part of his speech. I could not discover what his object was. He complained because I had said that I thought our Liberal friends from Saskatchewan might get up and say what the farmers in their part of the country think about this matter, and he took me to task for that. I presume he thought it was too much to expect of any member of the Liberal party.

Mr. Studer: It will not be a socialist speech. You only represent the socialist farmers.

Mr. Knight: Of course when I hear remarks from the barn I like them to come out the front door.

Mr. Studer: Come out from behind your socialist shell and learn something.

Mr. Knight: I was going to say that perhaps the hon. member for Westmorland should stick to marsh hay. It is a bit salty—

Mr. Studer: I think you should stick to chickens.

Mr. Knight: —but it might be more palatable to him on that account. This, I think, has been a strange comedy of errors on the part of the government during the last week. After all, I have been here since 1945 and although I have seen isolated instances I have never in any week seen such a complete display of weakening, irresolution and indecision on the part of the government. I say that in complete sincerity, because I believe it.

I do not want to say too much about this matter today. The arguments have been pretty well covered, but I think there are two or three things that should be said by way of rebuttal to what has been said by some hon. members. I listened to the hon. member for Kootenay East. I realize that he is a labour man, and probably a good one. I say more power to him for that, but I assure him the attitude he has taken is not the attitude of labour generally across the country. That applies not only to the smaller unions in the west but to the larger unions in other parts of the country.

I am not going to take the trouble to put on record a letter I have here from the president of the Saskatoon and district labour council, but it is in full sympathy with the desires of the farmers in this regard. I may say to the hon. member for Kootenay East that the labour organizations were represented by their leaders at the Saskatoon conference which passed the resolutions about which he knows.

I am not going to enumerate the errors in this comedy of errors. One was made this morning by the Minister of Agriculture, when he pulled his latest boner without respect of even commas or periods. He stated that three Liberal members who represent farmers in the province of Saskatchewan had spoken in this debate, but only the hon. member for Rosthern spoke.

Mr. Studer: You just represent the socialist part.

Mr. Knight: The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek is noted for nothing in this house but rude interjections and interruptions. Let him get up and make a speech. He knows what would happen to him at the next election if he did.

An hon. Member: He would make his own speech.

Mr. Knight: Let me come back to the Minister of Agriculture and deal with the climax of this comedy of errors which occurred the other day when my leader, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, moved that we should leave this silly piece of legislation and go on with something that was important for the farmers of western Canada. There were only 36 Liberals here, including western members. That is all who were interested in getting on with this legislation that is supposed to do some good. The Minister of Agriculture was proven wrong this morning, for only one private Liberal member has spoken on this particular legislation, the hon. member for Rosthern. If the minister was here the other day, and I do not know whether or not he was—

Mr. Gardiner: Oh, yes, I was here.

Mr. Knight: —and if he had looked around when the vote was taken he would have found that the only Liberal member present from the province of Saskatchewan was the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Knight: Here we were discussing a subject that is on every tongue in western Canada—

Mr. Gardiner: In spite of the fact that I am a member of the government I am still a Liberal member from Saskatchewan.

Mr. Knight: —and the only private Liberal member here was the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I do not propose to rise to my feet any more often than I have to, but I must request that members take their seats when I do rise. If the Minister of Agriculture has a question of privilege to raise, which frankly I cannot see at the moment, we of course will hear it, but if not the hon. member for Saskatoon will continue.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, the hon. member stated that I made a mistake this morning. In the first place, the house was not sitting this morning so he made a mistake this afternoon. Then he goes on to say that I referred to three Liberal members from Saskatchewan as having spoken, and he says that is not correct. Then he proceeds to try to argue that there was only one.

All I want to say is that is not a correct representation of the position. I am a member from Saskatchewan. Two members from Saskatchewan have spoken in this debate, and I corrected the statement there were three later on the suggestion of the hon. member for Regina City.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that was a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. MacInnis: Keep quiet. I have kept quiet for you. That is not a question of privilege while the house is in committee. If the Minister of Agriculture or any other member—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacInnis: —wants to make a statement or a speech such as the minister just made—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacInnis: —he is entitled to make it, but he is not entitled on a question of privilege to interfere with another speaker. I think, Mr. Chairman, that phony questions of privilege should be discouraged.

Mr. Gardiner: I do not have the rules before me at the moment, but I have been working under them for a long time. My understanding of the matter is that if one wants to raise a question of privilege he has to raise it at the time the mistake is made.

Mr. Knowles: But it has to be a real question of privilege.

Mr. Gardiner: When the hon. gentleman gets up and refers to a statement I made as being wrong, if I do not raise the question then I have not much opportunity to raise it at any other time. There is a question of privilege when a member makes a wrong statement about another member.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps for the edification of the committee, though I doubt whether they will remember it very long, I might point out that the Minister of Agriculture is perfectly right in saying that he should raise a question of privilege the moment it arises. I should also point out that a question of fact, a debatable point, is not a question of privilege. It is a matter of personal explanation which, even with Mr. Speaker in the chair, it is usual to allow the member to correct at the conclusion of the speech of the member who has the floor.

I think it also fair to point out, and hon. members know this of course as well as I do, that when a matter of fact which particularly affects the statements or actions of one member is contested on the floor it is quite the usual thing for the member who has the floor to yield for a moment in order to allow the correction to be made, but he does not have to do so. That procedure can, I think, be described as a courtesy which members usually afford to one another, rather than a rule which the Chair can enforce.

Having disposed of the question of privilege—which was hardly a question of privilege—perhaps the hon. member for Saskatoon will continue.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, in so far as I have shown any discourtesy to the Chair or, in fact, to anyone else, I apologize. I was perhaps speaking in the heat of debate. I must say I did not notice that you, Mr. Chairman, were on your feet.

I think I had made the point sufficiently clear that when that particular vote was called the other day, there was in the house only one private Liberal member representing the people of Saskatchewan. If any Liberal member wishes to get to his feet and deny that statement he will have the opportunity to do so.

I had said that the Minister of Agriculture erred this morning. That word "morning" was a slip of the tongue. I have heard the minister himself make one or two of those slips. As to his knowledge of what is or is not a question of privilege, may I say this. I think he has been in the House of Commons about 30 years, and if he does not know—

Mr. Knowles: Only 20 years. It may seem like 30 years but it is only 20.

Mr. Martin: Twenty-one years.

Mr. Knight: In any event, he was in another important legislative body prior to that.

To get back to the topic under discussion, I also want to say a word or two about what my friend the hon. member for Kootenay East said about the $65 million grant. I take it that he looks upon it as a matter of charity to the western farmers. I want to point out to him that this grant of $65 million was given to the farmers of western Canada for the reason that all during the war they had subsidized the price of bread to the consumer in Canada. That grant was an adjustment. It was not a complete adjustment, but it was at least a partial adjustment for their sacrifices during those days.

Mr. Byrne: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knight: No, not at the moment. I have had enough of them. There is another statement I want to find fault with in what he said. He stated that as this measure was for the benefit of the farmers, for that reason we ought to be prepared to support it. I am not prepared to admit that it is a measure for the benefit of the farmers at all. I say it is a measure for the benefit of the banks, or better still a measure for the guarantee of the banks.

I think this measure should be opposed. I think probably our group are not going to have any more members speak—although I do not know—on this measure in its first stage. It is true that this legislation is not vicious but it is harmful in this respect, that it is taking the place—and probably permanently—of some measure which might have been more useful. I think such a measure would have been one to provide advance payments through the wheat board.

There are one or two other matters I should like to clear up. I was talking about odd statements. I note that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has returned to the chamber. I am afraid we shall have to list him as one of those who were in error last evening. The minister made some remarkable statements. I am quoting directly from Hansard at page 990 where he says:

I think most members in the C.C.F. party from the prairies have now spoken twice.

As a matter of fact I had not spoken at all. No member of this party had spoken more than once on this particular resolution. Again the minister said:

We have had the same speeches made twice now, I think, by all the members from the prairies.

Again the minister was wrong. Even the minister can be wrong. He said further:

I now see—

And he looked at the hon. member for Regina City.

—a member getting up to speak for the third time.

Again the minister was wrong. Then he said:

. . . we are now down to the point of obstruction.

In my experience in this chamber, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that ever before has a debate lasting a couple of days been described as obstruction.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): How many days?

Mr. Knight: I think it is about 2½ days. If it is obstruction, it is for a reason. Then the minister asked a most astonishing question of my friend the hon. member for Regina City and he attributed tremendous power to this backbench member. This is what the minister said:

May I ask my hon. friend a question? Does he wish to block this bill? All he has to do is say yes, and the bill is blocked—

Says he.

—for several months.

I always knew that our Minister of Trade and Commerce was a man of tremendous power but I did not know that he could come into the House of Commons and, on the spur of the moment, and without consulting with the rest of the cabinet, say to the hon. member for Regina City, "All right; if you do not pass this bill we will withdraw it." What a strange power he seems to have. He, forsooth, is prepared to abandon legislation which he asserts would be good for the farmers of this country and good for this nation just because he happens to get angry with the hon. member for Regina City.

Of course I do not believe in a bluff like that. I think it was more or less a threat. But let me say this about that threat. If it was a threat, I am still prepared to vote against this resolution and take the consequences, because I know how odious it is to the people of western Canada, particularly to the farmers.

Let me say this to my hon. friends in the Progressive Conservative party and to my hon. friends to my left in the Social Credit party. If they conscientiously believe that this resolution is bad, they should vote against it. The only means of effective opposition to a measure, or the culmination of such opposition, should be a vote opposed to it. I do not see how they can escape those consequences.

I heard my friend the hon. member for Prince Albert who is a master of invective. I heard the tremendous indictment he made against the government. Let me quote some of it. As reported at page 977 of Hansard he said this:

I do not know anybody who is in favour of it . . .

That is this resolution. Then he went on to say with the exception of a few adherents of the Liberal party. Then he said that this was a stubborn and relentless disregard of the wishes of the people. I think those are his words. Can he then vote for it? He said it was a deliberate slap in the face of the western farmers. Are my hon. Conservative friends going to vote for something which is a deliberate slap in the face of the western farmers?

Then my friend the hon. member for Lethbridge, as reported at page 983 of Hansard, said this, "Let no one suppose that in supporting this measure we are in any way whatsoever supporting it." Mr. Chairman, that is a nice exercise in semantics. He says, "Let no one suppose that in supporting this measure we are in any way whatsoever—"

Mr. Blackmore: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knight: I will just finish my sentence.

Mr. Blackmore: The hon. member put in my mouth a word I did not use. I said, "approving of it".

Mr. Knight: Let me read it again.

Mr. Blackmore: Get it out of Hansard.

Mr. Knight: We will get it out of Hansard. Let me read the words again, Mr. Chairman. I am quoting from the hon. member for Lethbridge at page 983, at the bottom of column 1. This is what he said:

> Let no one suppose that in supporting this measure we are in any way whatsoever—

And since there has been talk of operative words, let me suggest that the operative word here is "whatsoever".

Mr. Blackmore: Continue with the quotation.

Mr. Knight: The quotation is this:

> Let no one suppose that in supporting this measure we are in any way whatsoever approving of it.

Mr. Blackmore: All right; that is what I said. There is a great difference.

Mr. Knight: Again I must apologize. I shall soon be in the class of the Minister of Agriculture.

My suggestion was simply this. We are opposing the thing and we are going to fight against it, as is our privilege. I know quite well we are not likely to win.

I just wish to say another word or two and then I am finished. I want to mention the treatment this matter has received from the hon. member for Rosthern. The hon. member mentioned two main points with which I take issue. In the first place, he made the statement that this legislation is in fact what the farmers requested. After all that has been put on Hansard in the last few days I do not think I need to say much about that. I have the resolutions here. I attended the Saskatoon conference for three full days; except for my meals I was never out of the room. I know what went on there. I know not only the letter of what happened at that Saskatoon conference, but I know the spirit. I know what the people meant. I know them personally. I know what they were thinking. There is not much good going into that. If anyone wants me to do so, I can read resolutions here by the dozen. They mention advance payments, and advance payments through the wheat board. They do not mention advance loans guaranteed by the banks or by the government.

You know, the hon. member for Rosthern is not the only one who has adopted that argument. It has been adopted by the Liberals in Saskatchewan who are trying to cover up the pussy-footing on this particular legislation. One of them, the leader, stated this very thing that the hon. member for Rosthern stated. He stated that the wheat pools were backing this loan business guaranteed by the banks. He was publicly rebuked, I take it, by the wheat pools themselves. I will just quote one line or two:

> The policy of the Saskatchewan wheat pools—

They tell Mr. McDonald.

> —as approved by its delegates in annual meetings is clear-cut. It does not favour the government's proposal for bank loans.

There it is. There is not much use talking about it any further. If the hon. member for Rosthern talked until he was blue in the face, it would not make any difference.

The next thing he tried to argue is that this particular legislation satisfies the demands made at the Saskatoon conference. Well, I have already said a word or two in regard to that, and I do not think I shall repeat it. I believe that is largely the story, and I just wanted to reiterate what I had said the other day about it. I cannot see how anyone can strenuously oppose this legislation and then vote for it. If I could paraphrase what the hon. member for Lethbridge has said again, that this business of support is in no way whatever to be taken as approving; well, I say again that is a problem in semantics. Does a vote in favour of the legislation not in some way or other approve of it? I leave that question to my hon. friends to the left and I also address it to my hon. friends to the right. I challenge them to say if they can continuously get up and condemn this legislation and then support it by a vote.

I should like to say a word about the statement made by the hon. member for Acadia. The hon. member would defend the action his party members are about to take because he says that this is better than nothing. I believe the hon. member for Lethbridge used somewhat the same expression, that half a loaf was better than no bread.

Mr. Blackmore: No, a morsel of a slice, not half a loaf; be sure you get these things right.

Mr. Knight: May I say that I was paraphrasing what the hon. member said.

Mr. Blackmore: Then get my words right; they are good words.

Mr. Knight: If the hon. member insists I will take the extra time to read it again.

Mr. Blackmore: Go ahead and read it, but do not state what is not true.

Mr. Knight: The point is this. Our claim is that in most cases the people who are going to get these bank loans and have them guaranteed by the government are the people who would have obtained loans in any case. We feel that most of those loans that are going to be taken out have already been granted. We do not believe this will be permanent legislation on the statute books, and we think, that being the case, that to put it on the books now would stand in the way of better legislation, legislation which the farmers want, namely a system of advance payments on stored grain and not loans.

Mr. Leboe: I only rise to ask a question arising out of the minister's statement concerning section 88 of the Bank Act. Do I understand from the minister that the banks can take section 88 security on wheat on the farms, and then under this legislation the farmer can borrow again from the same bank on that wheat? That is the question I would really like to have answered because it seems to me if they have it once they cannot get it twice.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It depends on whether in this transaction section 88 covers a sufficiently large stock of the grain to make some room for a second loan. The section 88 security on the old loan may not require the full quantity of wheat, and if there is a surplus it is quite possible to get a loan on that surplus wheat even though section 88 applies against it, provided the section 88 coverage is held by the same bank.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, would that include livestock as well as the first security that is taken in section 88 or is it just the wheat?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is just wheat.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the minister, is there to be any limitation on the use a farmer may make of the funds he receives from the loan?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, sir, it is his money. The understanding is he will receive the money from the bank and do what he likes with it.

Mr. Fleming: There will be no strings attached to the use he may make of it?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No.

[Mr. Knight.]

Mr. Drew: I am not going to make any remark except to indicate the position our party takes and why it has taken it. Since reference has been made by an hon. member of the C.C.F. party who just spoke a few minutes ago about the position of our party in this matter, I think I should make it quite clear.

We indicated at the outset that we did not believe this legislation is legislation which will meet the very urgent situation with which the farmers are confronted. We have put forward arguments which we hoped would still, at this stage, convince the government that they should adopt a system of cash payments on farm-stored grain with payments on the quota book. We have emphasized that position and we repeat it now. Nevertheless, following well established traditions, we say we will vote for a measure which certainly does not carry out what we would like to see carried out, but which at least does offer some assistance.

We still urge the government, independently of this legislation, to adopt the proposal we have made for cash payments on farm-stored grain. We have made it clear that this is a straight cash payment on the quota book, just as though the grain were delivered. We have made it clear that this is a payment without interest, because it is cash being given to the farmer for his grain, which is only being held up because it cannot be taken by the elevators.

This measure is separate and independent of that proposal. By supporting this legislation, inadequate though it may be, unsatisfactory in many respects though it may be, there will be placed on the statute books a provision under which farmers can obtain some money, if they see fit to do it in this way.

The fact that we are prepared to vote for this measure in principle, although we do not agree with the details, follows the perfectly proper and usual course. We wish to make it quite clear that we are continuing to place our urgent request before the government that they recognize the need for something quite separate from this, something much more flexible, and something which will make cash readily available to the farmers by payments in cash on their quota books for farm-stored grain.

Mr. Macdonnell: I wish to ask a supplementary question of the minister. In answer to the hon. member for Eglinton the minister said that the money borrowed would be free from any condition of any kind. Does that mean it would not be competent for the bank and the borrower to enter into any arrangement they might see fit between them specifying the use of the money?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, we are talking about money that is borrowed under government guarantee. Much more money has been borrowed without the government guarantee than with it. I think the total loans granted on the prairies outside the government guarantee are about $70 million, and under the guarantee about $7 million. These guaranteed loans are intended to make provision for the man who has not established a credit at the bank, and whose resources are not such as to warrant the bank in giving him a loan without some endorsement. There are about 8,000 farmers who have borrowed under the guaranteed provisions as at the end of December, and they have borrowed about $7 million. These farmers are entitled to the money, to obtain the cash, and we presume they use it for a useful purpose; but the banks have no instructions from the government that the money is to be applied in any particular way.

Mr. Fleming: What limit, if any, is the bill going to put upon the amount available?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The amount is $1,500 per individual loan, and a total of $50 million.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say one word, since the position of the other two parties on this side of the house has been placed before you. We intend to vote against this measure, not because we wish to deny to the farmers of the west any small amount that they may get under this legislation. I recommend this consideration to my hon. friends of the other two parties in the house because, if this house votes in favour of the legislation, it will have placed its approval on all that the government intends to do. That is the reason we are voting against it. We are not going to vote for a measure which is inadequate, insufficient, and which means that the government proposes to do nothing more in this important matter than this particular resolution indicates.

We are making our protest in the only way in which members of parliament can make their protest. We are making a protest by our vote.

I should like to say one further word. My colleagues have endeavoured to discuss this measure, not with an idea of obstruction. May I say to my hon. friends on the opposite side of the house that the government makes its decisions. We are sent here to discuss the decisions of the government when those decisions are placed before us from time to time. We have no control over preparing anything to bring into this house. All we can do when it gets here is to express our opinions regarding the legislation before us without any thought of obstruction. Indeed, if the government considers that any group in this house is obstructing the progress of legislation in this house, then, under the rules of the house, it has the means to stop it. It can move closure. Therefore, when a minister rises in his place and says, "If you do not agree to this by six o'clock this afternoon, we are going to withdraw the legislation", that surely is not the way in which this house should be treated.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I did not say that.

Mr. Coldwell: I say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, no matter whether he or I may think that a debate has been exhausted by six o'clock, it is up to hon. members to decide whether they want to continue to discuss the measure before the house. Consequently, I say that the government always has in its hands the power to stop what it considers to be obstructionist tactics by moving closure. That power is in the rules of the house. We were not obstructing the legislation.

Mr. Follwell: Has the minister had any representations from the western wheat growers indicating they would prefer to market their own wheat rather than through the wheat board?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, there are all sorts of opinions amongst the wheat growers, and I have heard that opinion expressed by certain wheat growers; but I am perfectly certain that the great preponderance of feeling in western Canada among the producers particularly is, that they desire to continue to market their wheat through the Canadian wheat board.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Motion (Mr. Howe, Port Arthur) agreed to: Yeas, 130; nays, 18.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 82, to provide for short-term credit to grain producers in the prairie provinces to meet temporary financial difficulties arising from inability to deliver all their grain.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

WHEAT

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF CARRYING COSTS OF TEMPORARY EXCESS RESERVES

The house resumed, from Friday, February 3, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Howe (Port Arthur)—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure for the payment of carrying costs of temporary wheat reserves owned by the Canadian wheat board in respect of board stocks of wheat in excess of one hundred and seventy-eight million bushels at the commencement of a crop year, such payment to be made to the board by the Minister of Finance out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Fleming: Is the minister going to make a statement?

The Deputy Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Dauphin.

Mr. Zaplitny: Hon. members of this group approve of the resolution and for that reason it will not be necessary to spend too much time in discussion so far as we are concerned.

As a matter of fact, we showed our approval of the resolution rather more dramatically a few days ago when a motion of the leader of this group was instrumental in bringing this resolution before the committee ahead of the one upon which we have just had a decision; however, it was not the desire of the government to have it otherwise and we had to wait until this moment.

The decision of the government, which will I think meet with unanimous approval, to provide a part of the storage costs on the carry-over of grain, that part which is considered to be over the normal carry-over, is something which will be welcomed by grain growers across the prairies. It is expressing a reply to the demands made by the various farm organizations and by various hon. members of this house in previous times.

I can recall that in many previous debates hon. members of this group have strongly advocated action in this direction, and I particularly recall the hon. member for Moose Mountain doing so in one of his speeches as far back as 1946.

And while we approve of the immediate objective of this resolution, which we feel will be of some help at this time, I should like to say that there is a need for some long-term planning on this whole question of grain carry-over. I do not feel that this is a one-time proposition; I feel that we are going to be faced with grain carry-overs for many years to come.

Various hon. members, including the Minister of Agriculture, have stated in this house that it is a good thing on any farm to have a carry-over of grain from one year to another because it indicates a form of stability and an insurance against crop failure. I tend to agree with the minister that it is good to have stocks of grain on any farm, and if this is true of the individual farm then it is certainly true of the nation as a whole.

We are a trading nation; we are a big exporter of grain. Many of the traditional customers of Canada for grain will be looking to Canada for many years to come for a steady and reliable supply of the various grains they require. Therefore it is a good thing for Canada to have available in stock a reasonable volume of grain for quick shipment whenever and wherever it is required. However, if the nation as a whole is going to carry stocks of grain, then I think this resolution in itself is an admission of the fact that it should not be carried at the expense of the grain producer.

Even after this proposed legislation is put into effect the farmers will, of course, still be carrying a large part of the cost of storing grain in the elevators and all the cost so far as storing it on their farms is concerned. But this is a step in the right direction in that it introduces a new principle. It introduces an admission by this parliament that at least part of the responsibility should be borne by the national treasury. I believe there is a need for some long-term planning in that direction.

We have heard a great deal about the various ways of financing agriculture, particularly grain. I believe that much of the discussion we have had in the last few days could have been avoided if more careful planning had been entered into some years ago. I believe the best form of cash for grain in the farmer's hands is that form whereby the wheat board is able to accept delivery of grain and pay the farmer his money and take full possession and responsibility for that grain. That is the ideal situation.

When we get to the point where we will not have restricted quotas, when we achieve a situation wherein there is no congestion of box car and elevator space and we are still able to produce and move large volumes of grain in this country, then we can say we have reached a stage of orderly marketing. Until we have planning which will result in such a situation, we can hardly say that we have reached a stage of orderly marketing in the full sense of the word.

I am not going into any detail at this time because the consensus of the committee is that we want to carry this as quickly as possible, but I do want to express the hope that this government or any future government will take into consideration plans under which the wheat board itself may have at its disposal greater storage facilities; not necessarily terminal facilities only, although those are important, but there could also be off-terminal facilities apart altogether from the country elevator system.

I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce and any hon. member from the western provinces will agree with me when I say that country elevators were never intended to be a place to store grain. Primarily elevators were places where grain could be handled and delivered and where cars could be loaded, in order to get the grain moving as quickly as possible. It was for this reason they were designed. But in the last ten years or so they have been attempting to perform a double function. While trying to handle the grain as expeditiously as possible the elevators have also been faced with the responsibility of storing grain. We have seen annexes built to the various grain elevators all across the prairies and we have seen what the results have been. There has been deterioration of grain and congestion due to the storage of grain in the elevators which has created a bottleneck in the system of orderly marketing.

I therefore hope that at some time the government will give some consideration to long-term planning in order to provide well constructed storage facilities so that grain can be kept for a considerable length of time without deterioration, so that we shall have an ample supply of grain in storage, storage for which would become the responsibility of the nation so that as a nation we will be in a position at all times to serve our customers quickly and expeditiously when orders arrive. In this way the bottlenecks and congestion which have bedevilled the whole system of orderly marketing in the last ten-year period will be removed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, this is one of the occasions when we can all be in agreement, in so far as the principle of this resolution is concerned. It has been supported by this party for a very considerable time and, indeed, a very strong campaign was raised in behalf of a measure such as is contemplated in this resolution by the farmers' union in the prairie provinces. The achievement of this resolution represents the carrying into effect by the government of the desires of all the farming community that to a great extent produces wheat.

One of the situations consequent on the tremendous amount of wheat in storage in this country in recent years has been the fact that the return to the farmer is reduced by approximately $144,000 a day, which represents the storage charges paid to the elevator and storage companies on the amount now in storage in the elevators. Indeed, the storage and elevator companies are securing returns today far greater than was the case before the wheat board was established. The figure of $144,000 a day is a tremendous one, and farmers generally have felt, having regard to the fact that the government has assumed the responsibility for marketing their wheat, they should not be required to pay the storage over and above a normal amount of carry-over.

Whilst we support this resolution, I wish to point out one thing. It does not, however, while meeting the long-term needs of the farmer, do what is so necessary today, namely, immediately place cash in the pockets of the farmer. When one considers the immense increase in wheat production in recent years in the world, one begins to wonder how this problem will be finally met. The average wheat production among the wheat producing countries of the world, up till 1951 from the end of the war, was about six billion bushels a year. That amount was increased during the three succeeding years to about seven billion bushels.

With the new economic offensive of the U.S.S.R., which in part comprehends the adding of many tens of millions of acres to the production of wheat, one begins to wonder how this problem will be met in the years ahead. For certainly, if the U.S.S.R. carries into effect in the next five years its threatened policy to increase production of wheat and field crops by some 75 million acres, the surpluses that will be piled up in the U.S.S.R. and those countries that are joined with the U.S.S.R. under the Warsaw pact will bring about even more serious problems in respect to surpluses in the years ahead.

However, as far as this resolution is concerned, it is a step in the right direction. It is generally approved by all farm organizations. It represents an attempt on the part of the government to meet a problem which has become increasingly more serious year by year as the extent of the surplus of wheat has increased. Knowing that it is desired, representing as it does the implementation of the view that we on this side of the house have expressed on many occasions, we are going to support the resolution.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, we in this group support the general principle of the resolution. On the other hand, we believe that the storage and disposal of surpluses can be dealt with satisfactorily only on an international basis. Unfortunately, in the past, nations have refused to co-operate to the degree necessary to make this possible, and attempts that have been made by the food and agriculture organization to set up a world food board and an international commodity clearing house were blocked by the member nations of that organization. So internationally we have failed to deal with the question of surpluses, and today we find surpluses are still on the doorsteps of the nations that produce them.

One cannot help wondering what has happened to the ideals we heard so much about in the early post-war days. It was said that we should abolish want and poverty from the world and that never again should we agree to a policy of reducing and destroying production in the face of want. There is no question that farmers have made an excellent job of meeting the challenge of production. They have expanded their production to a point where there is today a very substantial reserve of wheat. However, at the same time, while those large reserves of food exist, 50 per cent of the population of the world is still hungry. One may well ask what is being done at the present time to get these large surpluses of food to the people who need them so badly. Internationally, as I say, we have done very little. What has been accomplished in that direction may be called a drop in the bucket. Today the United States is reducing its production and taking steps to bring about a reduction in wheat acreage. In Canada we are depending very largely upon crop failure to solve this problem. By that I mean this. To a very large extent the government is depending upon the normal channels of trade to sell the wheat. Therefore they would be able to sell only what is equivalent to a normal crop which, of course, will not reduce the surplus we have on hand. Therefore I say the success of the government's policy in reducing these surpluses will to a very large extent depend upon short crops or actual crop failure.

Of course, on the other hand, a change in trade policy would bring about a very substantial expansion of markets. I could not help noticing what the press reported Sir Anthony Eden as having said when he was in Ottawa a few days ago. I quote the report in the Ottawa Journal of February 7, 1956, headed, "Canada Must Buy More From U.K." It states:

> At a time when Canada is anxious to sell more goods, especially surpluses of wheat and other foods, Sir Anthony gave a plain warning that this country must expect to buy more as well as sell more in the British market.

Further on Sir Anthony is reported as saying:

> "Canada last year exported to Britain about twice as much as we sent you. We want trade to keep on growing but it is most important this unbalance is rectified."

I would especially draw that to the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce because in the past, when I have time and again insisted upon the need to try to bring about a balance of trade between Canada and Great Britain, the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said, "That is nonsense. We cannot balance trade unilaterally; it has to be done on a multilateral basis". Here is the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom telling Canada in no uncertain way that if we want to sell more to Britain we have to be prepared to buy more from that country. We have suggested that as a sign of good faith we could very well accept sterling from Britain under the definite understanding that that sterling would be used for the purchase of British goods. The minister has stated in the past that if we accept sterling under the understanding it will be spent in Britain there is no difference between that and accepting dollars. Let me point out there is all the difference in the world. When you accept sterling under the definite pledge that that sterling will be used to buy British goods it assures Britain a market for her goods. When you insist upon payment in dollars and then use those dollars to try to offset the imbalance in trade with the United States you are not expanding the sale of goods from Britain and you are not helping them in any way to balance their trade.

I think there is a mutual obligation between countries to do everything they can to bring about a greater balance of trade. Therefore I am suggesting that instead of depending so much upon short crops or crop failures to bring about a reduction of our surpluses we should take steps to try to bring about a better balance between the dollar area and the sterling area. In that way and that way alone can we hope to expand our sales to the sterling area.

I was very interested to note a press comment to the effect that the Minister of Agriculture was going to try very hard to sell more agricultural products to Britain. I hope he succeeds, but certainly in view of the statement made by the prime minister of England it does look as though he considers it is an obligation on the part of Canada to find ways and means first of all to expand Canada's imports from Great Britain, and until we are prepared to do that there seems to be little likelihood of our expanding our sales to Great Britain.

Therefore until we find ways and means of expanding our exports of farm products it looks as though further heavy crops will continue to expand our surpluses. Normal crops will in all probability leave the surpluses as they are. Crop failures alone will reduce the surpluses. I am wondering whether the government is justified in believing that short crops will come about and reduce the surpluses. I believe that in the future crops in Canada will in all probability stay above the long-term average.

Let me briefly refer to the history of farm production for the past 40 years or so. It will be recalled that some 30 or 40 years ago most of our agricultural cultivation was done by the horse and the plough. It used to be the common practice to start breaking the prairie in early June and then later to start summer fallowing, probably in the latter part of June or in July. By that time the weeds would have grown fairly high and the soil would have started to dry out. In many cases the weeds would have gone to seed. In that situation the only likelihood of getting a good crop was in the event of excessive rainfall the following year. If you had a normal crop year you would get a poor crop. If you had a dry year you would have a complete crop failure.

That was the situation we were faced with in those years. But since then the majority of farmers have bought tractors. The farms are now highly mechanized, so we find the majority of farmers are able to get over all their land by machine in the first week of June. Using the tiller, the cultivator, the rod weeder and the one-way discer, they are now able to cover 20 feet in a swath instead of the old practice of 3 or 4 feet with a plow. As I say, as a result of that practice they are able today to cultivate all their land by the end of the first week in June, and land cultivated in that way and kept under proper cultivation throughout the year has an excellent chance of raising a good crop in just a normal year, of raising an excellent crop if you have a good crop year, and of raising a fair crop even in the event of a very dry year.

In my part of the country even when we have a very dry year we expect to get around 15 bushels to the acre and yet in the past, in the days when we had to use the horse and plow, we were very lucky indeed in a dry year to get our seed back. Now we use combines and they are a great improvement in harvesting methods. A combine leaves a trash cover on top of the soil which helps to prevent soil drifting so there is not nearly the danger of having a crop blown out by wind that there was in the days when we used threshing machines.

Some members will say that a combine makes the land weedy, but we now have sprayers which make it possible for farmers to spray the crops while they are growing even though the land does become infested with weeds. By the use of the sprayer the weeds can be destroyed while the crop is growing and weeds now are nothing like the menace they used to be in the old days.

Then there is a tremendous improvement in the varieties of wheat. We can greatly reduce the hazard from frost by using the early varieties that have been introduced. We can greatly reduce the hazard of rust by using rust resistant varieties. We can greatly reduce the damage by sawfly by using varieties that are resistant to sawfly.

Some members will say: Yes, but you have forgotten the fact that the soil is becoming depleted and is not nearly as fertile as it used to be. Of course there is widespread use of fertilizers in the west so even though the land is becoming less productive that can be taken care of by the use of fertilizer. I know that some members may say: Well, if all you say is true the farmer should be able to produce wheat much more cheaply today than in the past, but every single thing I have mentioned means a cost to the farmer. Mechanization has been a heavy cost. The use of fertilizer is a heavy cost. The price of a combine is a heavy cost. Therefore, while it is true that the farmers have been able to reduce the danger of crop failure to a very large extent, the measures they have had to adopt have been costly measures and do not permit them to produce wheat at a lesser cost.

So I would say that if the government is going to depend upon short crops or crop failures to reduce the surplus of wheat they may very well be disappointed unless, of course, the crop failures are on a world-wide scale. One thing, however, is very certain. The farmers themselves will do everything in their power to prevent a crop failure. They want a federal farm policy that will encourage efficiency rather than having to depend upon short crops to remove the surpluses.

I was very glad that the Minister of Trade and Commerce emphasized the importance of building up a substantial reserve of wheat and, furthermore, has acknowledged the responsibility of the nation to pay part of the carrying costs of that surplus. The need of a reserve is obvious when 50 per cent of the population of the world are hungry, but the surplus is due not only to heavy crops but to the failure to make wheat available to nations unable to procure their supplies through the normal channels of trade. Instead of depending upon crop failures to remove the surplus, we believe that we should bend our energies towards ways and means by which these surpluses may be made available to nations that are not able to obtain the food they desire through the normal channels of trade.

The farm organizations have made a number of requests to the government regarding payment of storage and carrying charges. I think the majority of the farm organizations have asked the government to pay the storage and carrying charges on all wheat in storage in the elevators at the end of the crop year. This resolution does not go as far as that. It leaves the responsibility for 178 million bushels with the farmers, and the minister assumes that the cost of the carrying charges will not go much beyond $32 million owing to lack of storage facilities, he says. If, however, the crop continues to be heavy, is the government prepared to see that additional storage facilities are provided to take care of the increase in the surplus?

> Therefore, the cost to the treasury this crop year will be about $32 million. What it will be in subsequent years will depend upon the level of board stocks, but it cannot go much above $32 million in any event because of the physical limits on storage capacity.

The question that immediately comes to my mind is this. What is going to happen if we do not have crop failures? If these heavy crops continue,—something which is quite a possibility—what is going to happen? When we had the second heavy crop we thought the third year would be sure to bring a short crop but we had another heavy crop. We have now had about four heavy crops. There is no assurance that we shall have a crop failure next year. As a matter of fact, conditions out west right now look to be quite encouraging. I think we all hope there will be another good crop. But if these good crops continue, what is going to happen to that wheat?

The minister says there is likely to be a limit of about $32 million on the cost of storage because there are not the storage facilities available to take more wheat. Then what is going to happen to that wheat? It appears to me that there are two alternatives. Either we shall have to build more terminal elevators and country elevators—and I understand there is a real need for the rebuilding of some of the existing elevators—or on the other hand I think the government should take steps to encourage farmers to build more granaries on the farm by allowing them accelerated depreciation, then—and I think this is an important point—include the farm-stored wheat that is in excess of a normal carry-over along with the wheat in the elevators at the time the government pays the storage charge, and then deduct 178 million bushels from that amount. It seems to me that that is quite a reasonable suggestion. I think the minister's suggestion that the farmers should be prepared to carry 178 million bushels in the country elevators and the terminal elevators is a reasonable one. Provided that the surplus wheat can be stored in the terminal elevators, that procedure would fairly well look after the situation. But from what the minister says I gather that there is no intention to increase the storage space in the elevators because he says that the charge to the government will not go much above $32 million. If large crops continue, that will mean that the farmers will be obliged to put the increased surplus in granaries on their farms. Hence, instead of having a normal carry-over, you will have far more than a normal carry-over on the farms. It therefore seems to me that a reasonable suggestion is to say that the excess carry-over on the farm should be added to the amount of wheat in storage at the end of the crop year and then 178 million should be deducted from that amount. Before the resolution carries I should like the minister to say whether he does not think that is a reasonable suggestion.

There is no question that this legislation is definitely a step in the right direction. However, it seems to me it has three main weaknesses. First of all, it ignores the heavy storage charges of two years ago. I think it was in 1953-54 that we had heavy storage charges. We feel that that matter should be brought into the operation of this act. I understand that the year 1954-55 is covered under this act. If I am wrong in that statement, perhaps the minister would correct me.

In the second place, we feel that this legislation ignores the abnormal carry-over on farms about which I have just been speaking. I think that excess carry-over should always be taken care of so that the excess carry-over on the farm can be added to the general carry-over and then 178 million bushels deducted from the total of those two.

In the third place, it ignores the fact that many farmers are obliged to hold the current quotas on the farm owing to the unsatisfactory distribution of box cars which in some localities results in the farmers not being able to deliver any wheat at all on the quota, others being able to deliver one bushel, others two bushels and others three. Just yesterday I received a letter saying that even up to then the farmers in a certain district have not been able to deliver any wheat on the one-bushel quota. All they have been able to deliver is the original three hundred bushels but so far they have not been able to deliver any more. But the minister states that at some points they have a three-bushel quota. That seems to be an unfair situation. I am not suggesting that it is an easy one to govern. It is not an easy thing to have a fair allocation of box cars. I think the minister will agree that steps should be taken to remove that injustice by bringing back into operation the policy we had some years ago—I believe it was about 1948—under which the price of wheat was raised by one cent a month on the quota. That one cent a month would take care of the interest charges and would compensate those farmers who had not been able to deliver their wheat as compared with the farmers who were able to deliver a three-bushel quota. If that was done I believe much of the criticism would be removed as to the injustice that exists as between the farmer who has not been able to deliver any wheat and the farmer who can deliver three bushels because the farmer who was not able to deliver any wheat at all would be receiving one cent a bushel on each bushel that he should be able to deliver. In any event, I think a great deal of the inequity of the present situation would be removed. As I say, we are greatly pleased that this legislation is being introduced and we will support it. Before the resolution carries, however, I hope the minister will indicate what his reaction is to the idea that the excess carry-over of the farmers should be added to the general carry-over in the elevators and then 178 million deducted from that amount.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to rise at this time to support the resolution that is before the committee. In my opinion this is an extremely important resolution. By this resolution the government is taking a long step forward in its current wheat policy. I am sure the minister realizes the length of the steps he is taking or the distance he is going. I do not think that the $32 million—important as is that sum in this resolution—actually demonstrates the extent to which the government is going forward in its wheat policy. By accepting the principle that excess storage and carrying charges over a certain quantity of grain shall be paid by the national treasury, by continuing as I am hopeful it will the current initial price for wheat, the government is in fact accepting important responsibility for this large quantity of grain.

The minister has said that the existing storage facilities will limit the amount of the government's commitment in the future to something in the neighbourhood of $32 million. I do not think that statement is likely to be borne out. Certainly it will not be borne out unless there is a substantial change in wheat board policy and government policy as far as storing grain is concerned. I was pleased that the Canadian wheat board and the board of grain commissioners this last fall made it possible for many communities throughout the prairies to build large storage facilities, usually in the form of a quonset hut that, when emptied at some point in the future, could be used as a skating and curling rink. These quonset buildings, or rinks, are going up in one community after another. They will hold anywhere from 100,000 to 200,000 bushels of wheat.

The policy of the government as it is now before the house means this: It means that these buildings are leased to the elevator companies, the elevator companies pay storage that is paid for by the government through this policy to the community that owns the rink. The farmers in that area will be able to deliver from 100,000 to 200,000 additional bushels of grain, place it in the rink building and receive the initial payment with the government bearing the excess inventory and carrying charges when the crop year ends. That is one way of placing not just $32 million in the pockets of the farmers of the west, but a much larger sum of money because of the payment of the initial price by the wheat board and the expansion of storage facilities.

I should like to see this resolution extended. I see no reason why it should be confined to wheat only. We have large quantities of barley and oats in inventory at the end of the crop year. I can see no good reason why the provisions of this resolution, applying as they do now to wheat, should not be extended to cover oats and barley. I should like to see the 178 million bushel floor raised, and the provisions of this proposed bill extended, so that the grain in storage on farms may be covered by it. If the government would amend this resolution to allow storage and carrying charges to be made on off-site storage in excess of 178 million bushels, the government would be putting large sums of money in the pockets of the producers. It would not be difficult for the title to the grain in storage on the farms to be transferred to the elevator companies, the farmer to receive the initial price and the government to accept the cost of the carrying and storage charges.

If this legislation could be expanded at this session or at a later session it would remove, to a large extent, the need to discuss the subject that we were discussing in the previous debate for many days. I am underlining this provision to point out that the government, by this action, is taking a very important step forward in its wheat policy.

I want to associate myself with many of the remarks of the hon. member for Acadia, particularly those remarks having to do with the disposal of wheat in international markets.

I agree with him that so long as the majority of the people in the world are hungry, at least nutritionally hungry, it should be possible for governments in this day and age to see that the surplus food in certain countries is moved to deficit countries so that the people needing that food can have it available.

I am sorry that over the years Canada has not supported the idea of an international commodity clearing house or the idea of an international food pool, but rather has said through the Minister of Agriculture at the United Nations that Canada, as well as other nations, should handle the disposal of surplus products on a national rather than an international basis. Some fantastic suggestions can be made following that line of argument. I feel that if the member nations of the United Nations would endeavour once again to form an international food pool and an international commodity clearing house, call it what you like, we would be able to obtain a solution to our surplus problem.

I see the Prime Minister in the house, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and other members of the cabinet. The members of the cabinet appear to be in good attendance at this time. The Minister of Agriculture is not in his seat, but I am sure he is away on important business. Tonight's Ottawa Journal has a report of an interview with the Minister of Agriculture and the foreign secretary of the United Kingdom, Selwyn Lloyd, which has to do with the disposal of Canadian wheat. It says:

> The Canadian minister had assured a Windsor meeting recently that he would discuss possible further sale of Canadian food products with Prime Minister Anthony Eden and Mr. Lloyd during their visit to Ottawa.
> It was learned today that he had raised with Mr. Lloyd, as he had done once before with Sir Winston Churchill, the possibility of Canada encouraging immigration from the United Kingdom by giving some compensation.
> This time, Mr. Gardiner suggested, that the valuation might be 1,000 bushels of Canadian wheat for each immigrant. When the wheat was sent to the United Kingdom, the federal treasury would pay the Canadian wheat board which supplied the grain an amount which would be approximately $1,500 at present wheat prices.
> Mr. Gardiner's plan, not offered as a government proposal, is designed to achieve two purposes—adjust the imbalance of trade now running two to one in favour of Canada and increase the number of United Kingdom immigrants to Canada, 30,150 in 1955 compared to 44,593 in 1954.

Let no one think that this is not a very extensive suggestion because at $1,500 per immigrant in 1955 the wheat board would have received from the national treasury $45 million. I am all for more immigrants coming to Canada. I am all for more immigrants coming here from the United Kingdom. I do not see why the Minister of Agriculture should confine his suggestion, as apparently he has done, to persons coming to Canada from the United Kingdom. He might have extended it perhaps to France. They may not need wheat, but they may have taken some surplus butter, pork or something else. Perhaps the policy might have been extended to Germany or to Italy. I should like to know from the government whether or not this policy has ever been discussed in the cabinet, whether the government is giving it serious consideration or whether it is just another figment of the very fertile imagination of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Pearkes: How many bushels will the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration require for a Canadian baby?

Mr. Argue: That is a very good question. We might like to hear him comment about it. If this policy could be extended to other nations, I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture is going to pay 1,000 bushels of wheat for each immigrant from each nation or is he going to vary the amount? I wonder what immigrants from France might be paid, or from West Germany or Italy. I think that shows just how bankrupt the Minister of Agriculture and the government are when it comes to dealing with this important question of the disposal of wheat.

Other suggestions have been made that the government might pay a good deal more attention to. I hold in my hand a publication issued by the Saskatchewan wheat pool. It is entitled "Wheat Policy for 1956". At this point I wish to congratulate the Saskatchewan wheat pool board of directors and all of those people who had anything to do with drawing up the Saskatchewan wheat pool's 1956 policy. As far as farm policy is concerned, this is an indication of new and forward thinking in the farm organizations. I want to read the program because I think it is of great importance. The first plank is: "Maintenance of the wheat board for grain marketing". I think that will assure the Minister of Trade and Commerce that in spite of the Saskatchewan wheat pool's advocacy of cash advances its No. 1 plank, its 1956 wheat policy, is maintenance of the wheat board for grain marketing. I might say I am sure the Saskatchewan wheat pool would be glad to see the wheat board legislation expanded to include all grains, to include rye and flax.

There may be some who think that because it has been difficult for farmers to market wheat during the last few months it is the fault of the wheat board, it is the fault of the system of orderly marketing. I do not think that is so at all. I have had criticism to make of the wheat policy that is followed. No doubt I shall have criticism to make in the future, and I shall have criticism to make in this statement. But I do not think the difficulty in the selling of Canadian wheat is in any way the fault of the wheat board system of marketing grain or of the personnel of the wheat board. On the contrary, it can be attributed to international difficulties, currency difficulties and certain aspects of the government's trade policy.

It is true that farmers have been able to get rid of a substantial quantity of flax on the open market. Some may think that because they have been able to get rid of a substantial quantity of flax, by using the open market facilities, the open market is a superior method of marketing grain. Ask the prairie producers today who sold all their flax last fall before the large price increase what they think of the speculative market in flax, and they will tell you they do not like it. They would far rather have the wheat board handling flax so that the producers of flax, if they had the right, could deliver it to the wheat board and get in any crop year the same price for flax as other producers.

Mr. Trainor: The price would be less.

Mr. Argue: The wheat board comes before the agricultural committee every year and demonstrates the efficiency of the wheat board method of marketing grain. I should like to see the hon. member for Winnipeg South on the agricultural committee to advance his ideas, whatever they might be, and I am sure they would be properly dealt with by the wheat board officials.

The wheat board system should be extended to the marketing of rye and flax. I go one step farther. I see no good reason why the wheat board should be using the facilities of the grain exchange in selling oats and barley.

The second plank is: "Renewal and expansion of the international wheat agreement." That is a further projection of orderly marketing, or of government responsibility in the marketing of wheat. The reason we are having difficulty in the marketing of grain today, in my opinion, is not the fact that we have orderly marketing, with the government taking some responsibility at home, but the fact that the government's responsibility very largely ceases to exist the moment the wheat board has control and ownership of the wheat. If we can obtain an international wheat agreement, with the United Kingdom in that agreement, then this further extension of government responsibility in the marketing of grain may make it possible for producers in Canada to sell larger quantities of grain at satisfactory prices.

I should like to see the government do something more. I am hoping, as I say, that a new international wheat agreement, with satisfactory prices and satisfactory quantities, may be signed; but I wonder why the Canadian government itself should not sit down with the governments of other nations and enter into contracts for the sale of Canadian grain over a period of years. Why should not the Canadian government, through the wheat board, attempt to sell substantial quantities of Canadian wheat to importing nations at agreed-to prices over a period of years? Perhaps the government would be prepared to do that; but in order to make such a policy feasible and practical something else has to be done. Our government should stand prepared to enter into contracts, with nations that would take our wheat, for the purchase of the goods that those nations can produce and wish to sell.

The government prides itself on believing in the capitalist system, and so do the members of the Conservative party. As I have sat in this house over the years and have seen legislation promoted by the government, it has seemed essential and necessary for the government to accept ever greater and greater responsibilities for the welfare of the people of the nation. I expect that, in the future, governments of the world must of necessity accept greater and greater responsibility for the marketing of grain. In my opinion, the days of free trade in grain are over and done with. If we continue to tie our wheat policies to a so-called system of free trade on the international markets it will probably be as unsuccessful as tying our domestic sales of grain to the so-called free market at home, which, of course, is the Winnipeg grain exchange. We shall obtain a solution to our wheat problems and to our marketing problems when this government accepts a greater measure of responsibility for the marketing of such grain.

I know the government criticizes the policy adopted by the United States government. Even though we may criticize their policy, the United States government is able to sell larger quantities of food products on the markets of the world, and we would be selling less and less wheat if the Canadian government was not able at this time—and I am very pleased that it is able at this time—to enter into contracts for the sale of grain to countries behind the iron curtain. Because the United States government, under public law 480, stipulated that they could not sell food products to communist countries, Canada has been able to increase sales of Canadian wheat, butter and other commodities to those countries.

Wheat

In his message to congress President Eisenhower asked the United States congress to delete from public law 480, section 304. Section 304 is the section which makes it impossible for the United States government to sell food products to iron curtain countries. Therefore, the time remaining for the Canadian government to increase its sales to such countries may be growing shorter and shorter.

The attitude of the United States government, a republican government, is not to get out of sales of wheat on the international markets, but rather to increase the scope of such sales.

The third policy outlined by the Saskatchewan wheat pool is: "An initial price of $1.40 for the 1956-57 crop year". The fourth statement in its wheat policy: The national treasury to make up any difference between the final realized price on the sale of the present year's crop and the I.W.A. minimum of $1.55 per bushel. In my opinion that too is an extremely important plank in wheat pool policy. It is saying to the Canadian government that it is no longer prepared to accept a continuing drop in wheat prices paid to Canadian farmers but is asking the government to put under prices a floor that will be received by the producers although to obtain such a floor money may have to be paid from the national treasury.

Five: The government of Canada to assume the carrying charges on all grain in store in Canada at the end of each crop year. That plank is being implemented to some extent at this time.

Six: A price of $2.05 a bushel on wheat used for human consumption in Canada. If that were adopted it might have resulted in an increase of one cent per loaf in the price of bread and it may not have resulted even in that small increase.

Seven: Maintenance of an aggressive sales policy including the arrangements by the Canadian government of suitable credits for wheat buyers, the acceptance of sterling and other currencies and the participation in famine relief programs and the economic development of backward countries as a means of increasing potential markets for Canadian wheat.

The measure before the house this afternoon has a great deal to do with the size of the final payment for the 1954-55 wheat pool. When I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce recently when a final payment might be made, he said, "I cannot say anything about it; I cannot say anything about an interim and final payment until the grain storage bill has been approved." Well, we have the grain storage resolution before us at the present time and we have already had the announcement that an interim payment of ten cents a bushel is to be paid on the higher grades of wheat. I have welcomed that announcement but I do believe that the time is here when the government should announce not just the interim payment but also the final payment, the total payment to be made on the 1954-55 wheat pool.

It used to be the policy that when a farmer delivered a load of grain in the fall he obtained his initial price. He could look for an interim payment the following February, about mid-winter, and a few months after the close of the crop year, and usually before Christmas, he could look for a final payment. This was a highly satisfactory operation as far as the producer was concerned.

However, in the last two or three years the interim and final payments have been delayed for longer and longer periods. The interim payment that was announced the other day is one year late; ordinarily, as I say, it is made in February of the current crop year. On this occasion it is announced in February of the year following the end of the crop year. If the final payment should be made as late as the interim payment, then the final payment will not be made for many months to come. I hope that is not the case. I hope the government will announce the final payment now.

The only argument against making these payments at regular times so the farmer can plan his business is the statement that we do not know when we will be able to sell the carry-over or whether the international price will go up or down and to state a final payment and to close out the crop year may mean that we are making a final payment that is too high or too low depending on the prices for which we are able to sell our grain in the next crop year.

I would suggest that when wheat is grown in a good year it is ordinarily to be marketed in the coming crop year and that the greatest amount of fairness and equity can be obtained if the crop year in which the grain is marketed is closed out; in other words, if the wheat pool is closed out at an early date, shortly after the end of the crop year, July 31, and it is closed out on the basis of the current price for wheat at that time. If the price of wheat should go down, then of course the payments for the next crop year will go down, but that will be on the current crop. I do not think a good argument can be made in favour of such long and continuous delays in making these final payments.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I have a few suggestions that I wish to repeat. I should like to see this legislation made permanent. I should like to see it extended to barley and oats and to cover larger quantities of grain, and I should like to see it extended to grain on the farms. I should particularly like to see the government establish a floor price of $1.55 for wheat as was suggested by the Saskatchewan wheat pool. I do not think that is a sufficiently high price but certainly it is a minimum price. I believe the government should have the wheat pool accounts closed out at regular times and regular amounts of money should be paid based on the floor price I have suggested.

The government should continue to support the establishment of a new international wheat agreement and there should be an expansion of sales in the international markets in the way I have suggested.

The Chairman: I understand that the Prime Minister has a statement to make. I wonder if I might rise and report progress and request leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

WHEAT

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF CARRYING COSTS OF TEMPORARY EXCESS RESERVES

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Howe (Port Arthur)—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure for the payment of carrying cost of temporary wheat reserves owned by the Canadian wheat board in respect of board stocks of wheat in excess of one hundred and seventy-eight million bushels at the commencement of a crop year, such payment to be made to the board by the Minister of Finance out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, the house has before it at the present time a resolution to bring in a bill that will provide for storage of wheat in Canada at the end of the crop year. This will in effect provide for storage costs on 178 million bushels of wheat.

I am sure all hon. members of this house will in a degree be happy that the government has at least awakened to the seriousness of the marketing situation in Canada. Personally, I feel that the provision for the storage of grain in Canada to be paid for out of the federal treasury is a matter which should have had attention by this house and by the government of Canada at a much earlier date.

Whilst we are very happy that the government is now bringing in this legislation, I do not feel for one minute that it meets the situation confronting Canadian agriculture. I might say that since 1945, when I first came to this house, I have advocated a policy which would embrace the principle of the ever-normal granary. Before I came to this house and since, I know many members of this party have endeavoured to convince the government that it had not launched an aggressive policy to meet the needs of Canadian agriculture. So this evening I desire to treat the problem from two points of view, namely the economic viewpoint as it affects Canada, and, rather briefly, the effect which our own program may have on world politics and, indeed, on the whole free world.

It seems to me that the federal governments we have had in this country have never come to grips with the problem of conservation. I feel that this measure may be perhaps, to some extent, an awakening to the need for conservation of our soil in this country because, in effect, it will make it possible for the people in the hazardous occupation of agriculture to have a small degree of assistance in respect to their occupation.

Agriculture, of course, is a very hazardous occupation. When the farmer sows his grain, he has no way of being assured that he will reap a harvest. He has to take the chance on all the hazards in connection with the growing of that crop. Anyone connected with agriculture will realize that these are varied and many. He has to depend upon good weather, the vagaries of nature, rust, insects, pests and weeds and everything connected with the growing of wheat. To date the agriculturists and the people who are producing wheat in this country have to a great measure met the challenge of modern methods of production. Today western agriculture is highly mechanized and highly scientific. We have found ways and means of producing larger crops. In order to grow bigger crops, we have also learnt how to cultivate new strains of grain, how to spray our crops in order to eliminate weeds and, of course, with new varieties and new techniques of production, I think we have met the production problem.

The greatest problem facing the agriculturists and the farmers of the west is one of price. I feel that agriculture is in a precarious position. If any hon. member of this house feels that the whole economy of this country is not closely dependent on the prosperity and the health of agriculture, he has been very badly misled. If we do not have a prosperous agricultural economy, or the 10 or 12 per cent of the people engaged in agriculture are not in a prosperous condition, it will affect the whole Canadian economy. Indeed, I recall that in 1945, when I came to this house, we saw a delegation come to this parliament building and meet some of the cabinet ministers. It was a labour delegation interested in the welfare of over 6,000 workers who were unemployed in the farm machinery industry.

So it is that we welcome this resolution today which proposes to pay storage on 178 million bushels of wheat at the end of the crop year. I would like to see this legislation made a permanent piece of legislation and a permanent policy for this country. I would like to see it extended so that it would include a greater amount of wheat and so that we would have a proper vision of the picture, so that, instead of a nominal 178 million bushels, all wheat in Canada would become the property of the people of Canada and be stored at the expense of the federal treasury. What I have in mind is the picture of an ever-normal granary where we would store, having produced the wheat, not only enough for our domestic consumption, which is around 70 million bushels per annum, but also sufficient to meet all the sales we can achieve and, indeed, in the years of plenty, so that we would store for the years of scarcity. This government is rather short-sighted when it cannot even read the biblical treatment of this subject, in which we are told that in Egypt in the years of plenty they stored for the years of scarcity. So I think we should ask this government at this time to take a second look at this legislation and include in the bill means by which this government would take over all the farm grain and, as the hon. member for Assiniboia indicated this afternoon, take over also coarse grains and barley that farmers may wish to deliver to the wheat board.

As I have already indicated, this is a step in the right direction. I welcome it on that basis, but I feel that some responsibility for this problem has been accepted at long last by the government simply because the government knows that agriculture today, in every phase, is in a precarious position—our livestock marketing, our hogs, our beef and our grain as well. I wish to speak particularly about the grain situation because that is what this measure deals with. I asked this government for a return showing the number of trade commissioners the government had sent to posts in various parts of the world. The return indicated that there were 85 trade commissioners at 54 posts abroad. I asked how many of these commissioners were appointed with exclusive instructions to sell Canadian wheat and I was astounded to learn that not one single trade commissioner had been posted for the express purpose of selling Canadian wheat. When agriculture is our primary industry I think there should be at least some trade commissioners posted abroad whose explicit and sole duty will be to sell Canadian wheat. If that had been done it is my opinion we would not need to be worrying today about how our farmers are going to get some cash in their pockets in order to carry on their business and pay their debts.

I have said something about the government waking up to the problem confronting agriculture in this country. I know now that in some measure the government is waking up to the depletion of our forest resources and is at long last realizing that we need conservation in that regard, but very little, if anything, has been done with respect to soil conservation. In the last few years the farmer's income has been going down and his costs going up. He has been caught in a price squeeze. Because of this fact, the hit-or-miss policy applicable to agriculture and the vagaries of a system whereby he cannot tell from year to year what his income is going to be, he cannot launch upon a proper and wise soil conservation program in his farming operations. Neither can he follow proper land utilization. If a farmer is going to do these two things, namely, conserve the nutrient content of the soil and practise soil conservation measures so as to have the ultimate use of his land, he must know whether he is going to get a fair return when he engages in one type of production or another.

If we are fighting to try to preserve freedom, if we are trying to preserve those things in our democracy in which most of us believe, then I feel that this measure does not meet that need. Therefore I hope the government will reconsider it. If they do not do so at this session I hope that when they have made this first halting step they will see fit subsequently to bring in more adequate legislation to establish the ever-normal granary. For the benefit of the people of Canada and, indeed, to feed hungry people throughout the world, an ever-normal granary policy should be established in this country.

I should like to deal briefly with the effect that I think the program outlined in the resolution will have on the world picture. We are, I am sure, all interested in orderly marketing. The farmers of western Canada have endorsed such a policy and supported the Canadian wheat board for many years. We believe that the old type of marketing under the Winnipeg grain exchange was not in the interests of the western farmers and, indeed, was not in the interests of the Canadian people. When the members of the C.C.F. party come to this house and try to express the opinions of the western farmers I think we are doing a service to everyone in Canada regardless of their occupation. Whether a person lives in British Columbia or Nova Scotia their income and standard of living will be affected unless a fair deal is given to the people who work in that great breadbasket of western Canada to produce wheat to feed our people and for export. The government must wake up and see that from the point of view of trading our wheat and engaging in international commerce we should establish in this country a stock of grain on the basis of which we can enter into long-term agreements with other nations. I feel it is rather presumptuous on the part of the government to expect importing countries to enter into agreements with us on a long-term basis if the government and the country are not prepared to guarantee delivery of grain to these countries under such an agreement.

That has been the situation in the past. We have had no program. The onus and responsibility for growing the wheat and storing it has been placed entirely on the backs of the western farmers. I am happy that the government has seen fit to go at least this far. I think each and every one of us realizes that a tremendous fight is going on throughout the world. It is a fight of ideologies, a fight where the ideology that will catch the imagination of men's minds will be successful in the end. If we join with other countries to bring about an international food bank out of which we can help to feed hungry people throughout the world we will have done more for democracy and the freedom of the world than all the munitions of war we can ever hope to produce. I am very happy that here at least is the first faint beginning of that sort of thing.

I realize that in the international field you have to have international co-operation, but perhaps one reason why we have not been successful in that regard to date is that we have never been prepared to do it at home. I sometimes think that the government is more interested in trying to maintain something which is as dead as the dodo, namely, the capitalist system, the free enterprise system. There is very little free enterprise of any sort left. I could have brought into the house a whole stack of reports of investigations under the Combines Investigation Act which would have shown clearly that there is very little free enterprise left and that on the other hand there is collusion and price fixing so that free enterprise is pretty well removed from our country.

Getting back to the international picture and a world food bank, in the final analysis I believe food may well be the deciding factor with respect to whether we shall have a free world or a world enslaved. I am very happy to support the resolution.

Mr. Decore: Mr. Chairman, before I say a word or two in connection with the resolution I should like to refer to the announcement made by the Prime Minister before six o'clock and take this opportunity to congratulate the hon. member for Davenport and the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres on their elevation to the post of parliamentary assistant. I am sure I express the sentiments of all in the house when I say that the Prime Minister's choice was not only wise but meets with the approval of members on both sides of the house. I wish these two young members every success in their new and added responsibilities.

With respect to the resolution before us, I think it is certainly most gratifying, after what we have heard about wheat in the last few days, to hear such hon. members as the hon. member for Prince Albert and the hon. member for Assiniboia say that the government has taken the right step in the right direction. The fact is that the government has been in power for the last 20 years, and the reason it has been in power that long and the reason it has the confidence of the people of Canada from coast to coast is that it has the knack and ability to take the right step in the right direction.

Everybody knows, including hon. members of the opposition, that Canada is fortunate to have a man of the calibre of the Minister of Trade and Commerce dealing with the wheat problem at this time, a problem that is international in scope and similar to the one we had in the early thirties. We find that the wheat board has been successful in selling better than average crops in the last few years and at the same time maintaining a fairly high price level. As I say, when you compare that with the situation in the early thirties we find that in my part of the country the farmer was getting a price as low as 19 cents a bushel for his wheat. What the farmer wants is to have this type of policy pursued. He would sooner sell one bushel instead of two bushels for the same price, and keep the other bushel at home.

The wheat surplus problem is one which affects not only the western producer but the whole economy of Canada. The Minister of Trade and Commerce recognized this fact when he made this statement as reported at page 846 of Hansard:

> At the present time, however, I think there is a broad measure of agreement that it is in the interests not only of wheat producers, but of the country as a whole, that the wheat board should follow an orderly policy in disposing of its large holdings and not resort to panic methods of selling or giving-away. The experience of the 1930's is too fresh in the memories of all of us for anyone to suggest that attempts should be made to clear the shelves at any price.

Then he goes on further and makes this statement:

> This proposal may, therefore, be regarded as a contribution, and an essential contribution, to the stability of the wheat economy of the prairie provinces and an indirect contribution to the stability of the whole Canadian economy.

We find that to the farmer this means a matter of 15 cents a bushel on the surplus that is under consideration or a total of some $32 million which represents purchasing power in the hands of the buyer. It is something which not only will help the western producer but will benefit our national economy as a whole.

The important point to remember about this proposed measure is that it is retroactive. However, I should like to make a suggestion to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It could easily happen—and we hope it will—that we have another bumper crop in western Canada this year. Of course, if we have another bumper crop we shall naturally be confronted with acute storage problems. I should like to offer this suggestion. While I do not think it will cope with the problem completely I think it will probably go a long way toward covering the situation.

During the last 2½ years I believe storage facilities have been increased substantially, to the extent of some 40 million bushels. One of the reasons why that was done was the accelerated depreciation which has been offered to grain companies whereby they would be able to write off for income tax purposes in three years, I think it is,—I do not know whether it is three years or five years—the buildings they put up for the storage of grain. If we should be confronted with another bumper crop, I would suggest that possibly the same privilege could be granted to the farmer; that is, if the farmer had approved storage buildings, he also would be granted this accelerated depreciation whereby, for income tax purposes, he would be able to write off those buildings in a matter of three or five years. That is a suggestion which I humbly submit to the minister and which I would ask him to take into consideration.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, I rise purely to correct what I think is a misunderstanding which at present stands on the record. The hon. member for Acadia this afternoon repeated what has often been said in this chamber, namely that we could greatly increase our sales to Britain if we were prepared to do what is called "taking sterling". My belief is that that is a complete misunderstanding. My belief is that the people of Britain will have no part of it. It is in fact, of course, nothing more or less than our lending the money to Britain. I believe they have made it perfectly clear that they do not want to do business in that way. I believe they have made it officially clear. If that is true, I think it is a pity to leave the record as it is. If I am correct, I should like the minister to confirm it. We have so many difficulties with regard to so many things that are uncertain and perplexing in the matter of international finance that it seems to me a great pity to add to them by using this phrase

"taking sterling" which, so far as I can make out, really means nothing at all. If that is so, then I think it would be desirable to have it on the record.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, I have been asked to touch on one or two points referred to by other speakers, so perhaps I might make a few remarks to close this debate. I would call your attention to the fact that over the last several days we have been discussing the government's program for assisting the farmer to meet an unusual situation. We have been told that part of the program is terrible, unbelievable and names have been applied to it that are startling; and it has been said that the other part is wonderful. It is rather remarkable that someone would not have had wit enough to add them up, strike an average and say that perhaps between the two resolutions they are not too bad.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Who used the word "wonderful"?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friend did not. My hon. friend's picture of the prairie farmer is of a man with a tin cup looking for handouts. I think that is a most atrocious picture of western Canada. I may say that I went out there in 1913 and have been there a great deal in the ensuing 42 years. I think I know as much about western Canada as does my hon. friend.

However, these two complementary pieces of legislation were arranged to meet the particular needs of the farmers. The first piece of legislation was designed to give the farmer immediate cash. This year, for the first time, we encountered a situation where all grain elevators were filled to capacity, country elevators were filled and the movement from farms was extremely slow. There is no doubt in the world that buyers of wheat held off as long as they dared in the hope that our price would break just as prices in other countries were breaking. Finally they decided that ours would not break, and so the normal wheat movement commenced. But there has been a period when it was important for many farmers to get bank accommodation. The larger farmers had no great trouble, of course. They were accustomed to using the banks. They had ample collateral. They needed no help from the government in order to obtain the cash they required. However, there is the half-section farmer to be considered, or the three-quarter section farmer or the young man who is just starting and who has never had a bank connection. These men, in the judgment of the government, needed help. We arranged that help by making an agreement with the banks that banks would issue loans up to $1,500 on the security of the farm-stored grain, with the proviso that, as soon as parliament would meet, the government would undertake to see that its guarantee was given to the banks for repayment of those loans. A great deal has been made of the rate of bank interest. According to what we have heard, that apparently is a back-breaker for the farmer. But what does it amount to? The average loan to date has been $800. I would think that the average period could not possibly exceed six months.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Just sit down, will you?

Mr. Knowles: Then I rise on a point of order and ask what the minister is discussing. He seems to be discussing the bank loan legislation which is not now before the committee.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): All right. It will be before the house within the next day or two.

Mr. Knowles: As the minister sometimes says: You are wrong but go ahead.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We are talking about interest on a much greater quantity of grain than—

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. If the minister is going to revive this discussion that we have had for two or three days, you will have to give the rest of us an opportunity to enter the debate again to go over the ground.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): If there is anything my hon. friend has not covered that has happened over the last five years, I cannot tell him what it was. However, the total payment of interest by the farmer on the average loan is about $20 and that, of course, is a crime. However, the resolution on the order paper immediately below the bank loan resolution meant at least 10 cents a bushel to the farmer on all the grain he will market in this crop year. Surely, there must be a balance struck and a sense of proportion kept in mind, when hon. members say that one is a calamity and the other is a very good idea.

Now, I have mentioned the reason for the first piece of legislation, so we go on to the second piece of legislation. Over the years the accumulated overages have put a burden on the farmer to the extent that he has been required to pay the carrying charges, which are made up of storage and interest, on a larger amount of grain than is normal, and that grain is held in government storage over a much longer period than normally. In normal times the carrying charges on wheat amount to about 7·5 to 10 cents a bushel, depending on the size of the crop. Last year they amounted to 16 cents a bushel, and this year they could amount to more than that.

Well, the government said, what can we do to restore that situation to normal? We tried to find a period that could be considered normal before the period when the surpluses began to accumulate. We took the 15 years prior to the big crop of 1951 and found the average of the carry-over in each of those years. We found that it worked out to 178 million bushels on the average, averaging good years and bad years. We said that that is normal for the farmer. If the farmer is only dealing with a carry-over of that amount he has a normal situation. But the carry-over this year was about 215 million bushels larger than that, so we said the government will take the 215 million bushels and assume the carrying charges on that amount of grain for the full year. This amounts to about $32 million dollars, which is a contribution by all the taxpayers of Canada to those producers who have an equity in that prairie grain.

When we speak of the government advances we must remember that the government has no money. It is the taxpayers of Canada who have the money. When we say the government is paying these carrying charges, it means that the taxpayers of Canada are relieving the owners of the grain of carrying charges to that extent.

There has been a great deal of talk about payment for storage on farms. Questions are asked as to why the government cannot pay carrying charges on grain stored on farms. Grain stored on farms does not belong to the government. The government takes the grain into storage and acquires ownership by paying an advance of $1.40 per bushel on that grain when it is delivered to a country elevator; it then becomes the government's grain. The grain on the farms belongs to the farmer, just as the cattle on the farms belong to the farmer. If there is open storage space, the farmer will deliver the grain and get his payment. Then, that grain belongs to the government. If he has cattle on his farm he can market them, provided the stockyards are not congested and are able to take his cattle. There is no difference between the two. While they are on the farm they belong to the farmer. There is no way in which the government can properly pay any charges on grain that does not belong to the government.

It has been said frequently here that in the United States grain in the farmer's bin is paid for by the government, but that is not true. I have the rules here, and they are rather long. I can assure hon. members that the government of the United States does not have anything to do with grain until it is delivered into the government's approved storage. We, in Canada, cannot have anything to do with the grain until it is delivered into the government's licensed storage. The two are practically the same.

Mr. Argue: They are approved on the farm in the United States.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The government of the United States devised a scheme involving steel tanks which they put on a man's farm, and under inspection the grain is delivered into these tanks for government account. It is measured, graded and becomes the property of the government in the government's own bin. Well, that is no different from putting it in a skating rink that has been licensed by the board of grain commissioners as a government granary. It is exactly the same principle. Some people assume that everything in the United States is free. Perhaps hon. members would be interested in seeing the charges that the farmer pays for putting the grain into approved storage on his own farm, the inspection fees and charges of that kind. Sometime later in the debate perhaps I can put on Hansard an outline of the United States system, and thus disabuse the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite who have been making statements about how it is done south of the border.

Mr. Blackmore: Do it now.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I have not got the document here.

Mr. Argue: They get $2.08 per bushel.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, $1.81.

Mr. Argue: Plus protein bonus, storage charges and so on, making $2.08.

Mr. McIlraith: Why don't you move over there?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): A great deal has been said about selling wheat. We believe in the wheat board system of marketing. Unfortunately, the whole wheat board does not know how to sell wheat. George McIvor has only been selling wheat for the government since 1931, and the other members of the board have only been at it 10 to 15 years. They have been in every market in the world. They know ever buyer in the world. Nevertheless there are people opposite who can tell them a great deal about how to market wheat; and what they should take in payment. We have heard the clichés such as the ever-normal granary and the world food bank. I should like to have someone get up and tell me how each of these works in practice.

Mr. Argue: The Minister of Agriculture spoke against them.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Perhaps he did not know what they mean either. I am sure I do not. It is about as nebulous a subject as I have ever encountered. However, that is the great solution. We should be taking some kind of money that is not our own and not convertible into our own, and because there is a barter deal we would not look at if it were a money deal we should make a barter deal. We have heard all these things. Nevertheless, the wheat board marketing policy does not change. That is the one great value of the Canadian system. The wheat board goes on year after year doing business with the same customers in the same way. The customers know they can rely on the wheat board. They know a bargain made by the Canadian wheat board will be carried out and carried out exactly in the terms of the contract.

I feel, therefore, a great deal of the time of this chamber could be saved by people who theorize about how grain should be marketed in foreign capitals. I would not venture myself to advise the wheat board. I have only been associated with the grain trade for 42 years. I have worked for customers who deal in every grain exchange in the world, and I think I have been in most grain exchanges in the world. I believe I have some idea how wheat is sold in foreign markets.

We are told our trade commissioners do not deal exclusively in wheat. Well, as long as they deal with wheat and give it the time required, I do not know why they cannot spend a few hours selling some other Canadian product without great detriment to wheat selling.

We have said nothing about the agents of the board who are the wheat marketing agencies of the world. Every Canadian exporter is an authorized agent of the board, and all of the great international firms are also agents of the board. These firms have offices in every country that is a buyer of wheat. And yet we are told that we ought to hire bright young men from industry and send them out to sell wheat. That is very amusing indeed. I am afraid some people do not appreciate the humour of it.

I do not know that I need say any more. I think the government have put forward an attractive and realistic program for the western farmer. We have taken steps to restore the abnormal situation in this year back to normal. We have made bank funds immediately available where required, and we have relieved the farmers of the carrying charges that may be regarded as abnormal. I think the farmer believes that we have done a job for him, and I am not prepared to take the chit-chat which comes from the far corner about a situation of the farmer in western Canada; I know too many of them.

Mr. Knowles: You are treating us with a smile tonight; that is better.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Oh, yes.

I was in a meeting a while ago, and there was a good deal of complaint from one man. He was taking a rather bitter view of things. I happened to come out of the meeting with him. I had a few blocks to go and he had a car. He asked me whether he could give me a lift and I said "yes". I said: "This is a good car you have". He said: "Yes, I just bought it this year; I like it very much". He said: "You know, I am doing rather better than I said I was in that meeting. All my life I have looked forward to the day when I would have my farm clear of debt and one crop in the bins ahead of the current market". He said: "For the first time in my life I have that, and no man can tell me I am in very bad shape". I think that is the true picture of western agriculture as it is today for the real western farmer.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I have just one comment to make in this discussion tonight. I have listened very carefully to the speakers who have spoken since eight o'clock, and I have been rather impressed with the tone and the amiability that have emerged from the last two previous speakers. Unfortunately, I cannot concur in the opinion that has been expressed by my worthy friend, the hon. member for Vegreville. He indicated that because some complimentary remarks had been made in reference to the resolution before the house, it was suggested that the farmers of western Canada were giving universal approval to everything that the government of Canada has done in regard to the present crisis in the marketing of our grain. I will say at least this much for the resolution before the house. It at last is a recognition by the government that the farm population is faced with a real emergency and a real financial crisis at this time.

In his remarks just concluded, the Minister of Trade and Commerce also suggested that notwithstanding the fact it has become necessary to take emergency action, as indicated in this resolution, namely, paying storage on wheat in surplus above 178 million bushels, everything in the farm economy is for the best in the best of all possible worlds.

I said I had just one comment to make. That comment arises from the direct contact I have had with a part of the agricultural district of western Canada. I refer to the southwestern part of Manitoba. It was my privilege on Tuesday evening to attend a widely representative gathering, and from comments I heard from farmers gathered together at that time, I can say that they would not at all concur in the optimistic note that has been struck by the two previous speakers in this discussion.

As a matter of fact, on Tuesday evening at the hour of ten o'clock, the television program that has become rather famous in Canada during the past two weeks was broadcast over the CKX television station in Brandon. As a result of the impact of that Citizen's Forum discussion, which dealt largely with the present crisis in our grain-marketing situation, I was approached by a representative group of citizens who voluntarily, on their own initiative, had subscribed a substantial sum of money to replace the television set that had been blasted in another incident that has become well known in this chamber, I believe. The earlier presentation of that program over the Winnipeg station had resulted in the reaction of a certain Manitoba farmer, which led him to try to shoot one of the characters on the television screen. Mr. Chairman, I am in the possession of a sum of money for a fund, if such a fund exists, to replace the television set of this noteworthy citizen. I understand the suggestion emanated from the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort that the opposition combine in an effort of this kind. If such an effort is already taking shape, I want to assure hon. members that I have a substantial donation voluntarily contributed as a part of the protest of the citizens of western Manitoba.

I support this resolution mainly because it is the first recognition by the government that a real problem faces our grain producers on the prairies; but as the Winnipeg Free Press said in a recent editorial:

> The hard fact remains that the government intends to do no more than the absolute minimum to help prairie farmers.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I thought this resolution was going to be through by six o'clock, but after listening to the Minister of Trade and Commerce I cannot allow it to pass.

I think the suggestion that the gentleman whom the Minister of Trade and Commerce happened to meet sometime ago, who was in the position of having his farm paid for, having a substantial amount of money, and driving a very good car, was a typical farmer, does a great injustice to the farmers of this country. I am not suggesting that what the minister said is not true. It would seem strange that if among the 600,000 farmers in Canada there would not be a few who drive good cars. I want to tell the minister that his own department, in co-operation with the Department of National Revenue, presents figures that show that around 10 per cent of the farmers in Canada receive enough income to pay income tax, and roughly half of all the income taxes which are paid by all farmers in Canada are paid in Saskatchewan.

I hope you will not come to the conclusion that because half of the taxes paid by the farmers in Canada come from Saskatchewan we are rolling in wealth. It happens that the percentage of the farmers in Saskatchewan who pay taxes is higher than it is for the whole of Canada but when you consider that 80 per cent in Saskatchewan and 90 per cent in Canada are not getting enough money to pay taxes, I think it points up the minister's conclusion as being quite unfair. It is small wonder that the farmers in the prairie provinces are up in arms when responsible ministers like the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture give the impression that the prairie farmers are in the position of the gentleman who is driving a new car and has all this money put by.

I might say that I had four years farming while I was away from here. I was fortunate enough to belong to the group which is able to pay income tax. However, I want to warn the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of National Revenue that a great many farmers who have been paying income taxes are going to be claiming refunds on the income tax they have paid when you come to average out the amount for five years.

I could cite case after case of farmers who were in the position two or three years ago of being able to have new cars, with all their debts paid, money in the bank and victory bonds but who are now in the position of having had to dispose of their victory bonds and their visible assets are rapidly disappearing. The minister fails to tell the people of Canada that 96 per cent of the world's wheat is handled by organizations similar to the wheat board and that while Canada is one of the big exporters in the world it is the only major country which till today has not provided some sort of subsidy.

Although it is one-sided, the minister has information from the United States and he will admit that substantial amounts have been taken from the treasury there to subsidize this product. I suggest to the minister that he read the speech which his colleague, the Minister of Finance, delivered in New York on November 1. I am sorry I do not have a copy with me but the Minister of Finance while in New York pointed out that the Canadian farmers are producing the best quality of wheat in the world, and that they are prepared to sell it in competition with any other wheat in the world; but they cannot be expected to sell in competition with heavily subsidized wheat or in the face of tariffs. An example would be France. I am sure I am quoting the minister correctly but I will have a copy of the speech here tomorrow and I shall deal with this subject at greater length, but that is roughly the point the minister was trying to make—

An hon. Member: Don't tell me you are going to speak again tomorrow.

Mr. Argue: Another wheat expert.

Mr. Nicholson: —that many of the people in Canada are in the position where they cannot do anything but produce wheat and it is unfair for them to have to try to compete in world markets with other producers whose wheat is subsidized.

The last time I discussed the matter I had on my desk some information regarding Uruguay. If I remember correctly, since embarking on a subsidy program, Uruguay has increased exports tenfold; and the minister says we cannot pay farmers for storing on the farm. In Uruguay the government subsidizes the difference between what they pay the farmers and the price at which they sell the wheat in the world market. The price at the beginning of the crop year is $2.51 a bushel and it goes up each month until it reaches $2.72, a difference of over 20 cents. Therefore the farmers are paid over 20 cents a bushel for keeping the grain on their farms from the time they harvest it until—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend is speaking of Uruguay. Could he give me the total export of Uruguayan wheat?

Mr. Nicholson: If I remember correctly, Uruguay increased its exports from 6 million to 60 million; I think it is around 60 million bushels. I said to begin with it is not a large amount compared with the Canadian export. But sixty million bushels is ten times six million and Uruguay is coming into markets that have been ours, and I do not see how the Canadian farmer who has been forced to produce without any subsidy is going to be in a position to compete with farmers from the United States, Uruguay, Great Britain and Sweden and from every major wheat-producing country in the world with their large subsidies.

As I mentioned yesterday, France has recently completed a sale to Poland of some 12 million bushels. The French treasury pays $1.01 a bushel and the farmers through contributions to their funds put up over 50 cents a bushel; and $1.61 a bushel is what the subsidy amounts to on every bushel of wheat from France that went into the world market last year. How can the Minister of Trade and Commerce go into the markets of Europe and sell Canadian wheat in competition with high quality wheat from France that carries a subsidy of $1.61 a bushel? I think the minister is doing a real disservice in not bringing to the attention of his colleagues in the cabinet the fact that we are in a new situation where 96 per cent of the world's wheat, as I have said, is being marketed by boards such as ours, and we have been trying to compete without some form of a support price.

The minister made some critical remarks regarding the suggestions which have come from this side of the house concerning the accepting of a partial payment in soft currency and accepting barter. The minister is very slow to move, but he is gradually accepting some suggestions. A year ago he did recommend to his cabinet that wheat be sold to Poland on time and that the government underwrite the insurance. That has been well received across the country and Poland has been well pleased with Canadian wheat according to the information we received from them. However, when Poland wanted to buy 200,000 tons recently the minister said, we will give them 100,000 tons. I submit we cannot increase our sales with that sort of public relations policy when France is prepared to take a chance on selling 200,000 tons of flour and 100,000 tons of wheat.

I think it is as plain as A.B.C. that if we are going to continue sales in the new markets we have to be prepared to accept goods from these markets. I hope the minister's department, in addition to having a staff to sell Canadian goods abroad, will be prepared to take the initiative and give leadership in Canada to find a means whereby we can get some Polish goods into the Canadian market. Saskatchewan farmers last year bought United States and British cement at high prices. Boats were coming into Churchill for grain and I think it would have been an easy matter to have arranged to have some cement come into Churchill for the prairie market when the boats were going to take out wheat.

Apparently Poland expects to buy from 40 million to 60 million bushels of wheat each year for the next ten years. They think that of the 4,000 million dollars' worth of imports we bring into Canada each year they might expect to have four or five million dollars' worth of their goods come in. If we will take four or five million dollars' worth of goods from them they are prepared to take fifteen million dollars' worth of wheat from us. These deals are not going to come about by chance. The minister's agents have had long experience in selling wheat, but up to this moment we have not had people going into our potential markets in an effort to find out what goods can be brought from those countries into our country. How can they be sold in Canada without disrupting our automobile industry, our textile industry and our other industries? Believe me, unless we are going to face this problem very soon we are going to lose out in some of the potential markets we have.

Now there is a final word I feel obliged to say. The Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture particularly deserve the criticism from the farm members of this house for their failure to present the plight of agriculture in all of Canada in its proper light. It is a great misfortune, when corporation profits are at an all-time high and when every sector of our economy is prosperous, that the minister refuses to recognize this. Consider the job he did during the war as minister of munitions, when a million dollars did not mean a thing to him, when $50 million to develop the synthetic rubber plant at Sarnia was provided with a snap of the fingers, when it was apparent that probably it would be a dead loss but the minister was not afraid to risk $50 million because we had lost our supply of natural rubber. But, when it comes to providing some sort of security for the 600,000 farm families in Canada, that is a different matter. When it comes to giving them some assurance for providing food for our own people and our neighbours in other parts of the world, then we get the sort of performance we have had tonight. He gives the impression that the wheat farmers are driving new automobiles, that they have money in the bank, that their land is free from debt, or if not it is their own fault. I could not allow this debate to end without challenging that incorrect picture of western agriculture.

Mr. Hahn: It is only through the chance remarks—or possibly the quite deliberate remarks—of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that I rise to take part in this debate. If I heard his words properly, he said that the reason for not paying storage on farm-stored grain was that it does not belong to elevators. Later on he went on to explain that paying for cattle in advance would be the same as paying for farm-stored grain. I am not going to take any exception to what he had to say in that respect. I leave that to the farmers in the house or those who represent farming communities to explain their particular point of view with respect to that question.

However, the part that did intrigue me was the fact that the grain stored on farms does not belong to the elevators. I would say that is probably perfectly right. However, how does that tie in with the question that was asked by the hon. member for Cariboo on January 20 of the Prime Minister? He asked:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, in view of the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce yesterday that ships are awaiting rail shipments of wheat, owing to shortage of box cars. Will the government reconsider the offer of assistance in the building of the Pacific Great Eastern railway, in view of the fact that this railway will shorten the haul from the Peace river area to tide water by half the distance, in other words, that one box car on the short haul will do the work of two?

That statement is possibly very true—I might say it is completely true—that with the building of the Pacific Great Eastern railway the farmers will require one box car instead of two to transport their grain to a Pacific coast terminal. The difference is caused by the fact that the haul is shorter. Knowing full well that the Pacific Great Eastern railway is going into the Peace river area and that its terminal in the north Vancouver area is practically complete at this time, I would urge very strongly that the government consider building a terminal elevator at the terminus of the Pacific Great Eastern railway in North Vancouver.

Further, may I point out to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the annual report of the port of New Westminster for the year 1953 indicates that in the year 1952 the number of bushels of grain sent out of that port was 9,633,733. That is practically 10 million bushels of grain. In 1953 that figure dropped to 8,571,058, according to the following year's report, and in 1954 it dropped to 5,448,714 bushels. We have there a terminal elevator that will house some 800,000 bushels of grain. We have all the facilities that are required. We have, as the Minister of Transport will recognize, one of the finest ports on the Pacific coast. We have all the rail lines leading into the area, and we could use more grain storage facilities for the very purpose of assisting those farmers in the west.

I am satisfied, as other members of this house must be, that the crops of today are not just an accident. They are not just bumper crops that occur from time to time, as we are led to believe. Certainly it should be recognized by this time that whilst the crops have been somewhat above what we would ordinarily call normal for the past several years, there have been many extenuating circumstances in the past few years that have helped to make these crops continue to be well over the national average over the past 30 years. For that reason we shall require more storage space at all times. Therefore I would once again urge the government to examine the possibility of building a terminal elevator at the port of New Westminster and one at the terminus of the Pacific Great Eastern railway.

Mr. Thatcher: I have only one point to make before this resolution passes. This bill is going to cost the taxpayers of Canada $32 million. I know there are many hon. members from eastern Canada and the west who are not too enthusiastic about it. This is a good deal of money, and so I suppose they cannot be blamed. However, as a western prairie member, I find this legislation, which is going to give the western farmers $32 million, pretty easy to take. As a matter of fact, I think it can be justified because, certainly, the west is in very serious difficulties at the moment. So I appreciate the fact that the rest of Canada is going to give the west a helping hand at this time. Perhaps later on we can reciprocate.

The hon. member for Moose Mountain said this was only a "halting step". It is a $32 million halting step, and I think it is one that will be welcomed by most prairie farmers. I know there are many hon. members in this house from other parts of the nation who think that Saskatchewan members are always complaining and are never satisfied. Well, sometimes I wonder whether we do not tend to paint a picture which is perhaps too gloomy. Frequently I wonder whether too much complaining by prairie representatives, may not mean in the long run, that the province's well-being is harmed.

In any event, I want to assure the Minister of Trade and Commerce and members from the rest of Canada that most Saskatchewan farmers are independent, self-reliant, aggressive and like to stand on their own feet. They do want the opportunity of course to earn a decent living on their farms. I do not think the resolution is going to solve the farm crisis, but I do think that 99·9 per cent of the farmers in the three prairie provinces will welcome it.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, I only rise to make one comment with respect to a matter raised by the hon. member for New Westminster who referred to what the Minister of Trade and Commerce had said respecting the farmer's wheat on the farm being in exactly the same position as his cattle. He owns the cattle; they are on his farm. He owns the wheat; it is on his farm. I am sure that analysis will not go down with the farmers of western Canada, and I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce knows that is not the whole truth.

It is true that the western farmer owns the wheat on his farm and owns the cattle on his farm but there is a difference between the two. The difference is just this, that he can go out and sell his cattle wherever he can get a buyer to buy them. He can go to the local packer. He can go to the city where there may be several packing houses. He can sell to other people and other interests if he wishes. But there is only one channel through which he can sell his wheat and that is the wheat board, which is going to take the wheat eventually anyway. That is where the difference lies. So the farmer says: Well, if the wheat board is going to take my wheat anyway why not give me a loan on it or why not even give me an advance payment? That will tide me over. They will have the wheat even though it is stored on my farm. That is the difference. I believe my point is well taken and I think the farmers will know that the minister has slightly erred in his analysis of the situation.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Trade and Commerce has prompted me to make some comment. He referred to members—I think he was addressing this group particularly—who have made a strong fight against bank loans and the resolution preceding the bill which will force farmers to pay interest to the banks if they want to get some money on their farm-stored grain. He says he feels that members should have a sense of proportion and I think admitted in his statement that it was a rather bad piece of legislation. I agree with him. It is very bad and it is repugnant to the western farmers. He goes on to say that in view of that bad piece of legislation he is now bringing in a good piece of legislation which we should be happy about and accept. Therefore I suppose he feels we should start patting the government on the back. To me, Mr. Chairman, it is just like taking a good egg and a bad egg, trying to make an omelet out of them and saying that you have a pretty fair omelet. I do not think it would be a very good omelet. I do not think we should necessarily accept a bad piece of legislation just because the government is proposing to bring in something that may be a little more acceptable to us.

Wheat

Certain members of the house, particularly on the Liberal side, have tried to indicate that this measure is going to be of some considerable aid to the western farmer. I would not have been prompted to rise if that had been true, but nothing could be further from the truth. The $30 million that is going to be spent will be spent in the interests of everybody in Canada. Members on the government side of the house are prone to get up and try to indicate that the farmers ask for handouts. I remember quite well the U.K. agreement under which the government shipped to Great Britain over a four-year period 160 million bushels of wheat for the first two years and 140 million bushels for the subsequent years at a price of $1.55 a bushel when the world price was much higher.

I quite agree that we had price controls in Canada, and no group in the country was more ready to accept price controls than Canadian farmers. Under the agreement with Great Britain there was a have-regard clause stating that the British government would have regard for the prevailing world price which would have some bearing on the settlement at the end of the four-year period. According to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and other government spokesmen the British government met every responsibility under the have-regard clause. But what did this government do? They had $65 million in the kitty left over from a loan arrangement with Great Britain so they said: We will give this to the western farmers and maybe they will be content. There was no sense of justice or proportion as to what would have been fair recompense having regard to the position of the farmers during that period.

The minister says that this is not the government's money but is the people's money. Of course it is the people's money and it is the farmer's money too. During the war 60 million or 70 million bushels of wheat were consumed annually in Canada and under the policy that prevailed at that time the farmer only received $1.25 a bushel. In addition, he subsidized the Canadian consumer to the extent of over 70 cents a bushel on every bushel of wheat going into the making of bread in Canada. Therefore I say that if anyone has lost his sense of proportion it is the Minister of Trade and Commerce. That is all I intend to say now other than to say that I do not agree with the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre when he tries to say that this is giving the farmer something. That is the word he used, "giving". This is not a handout to the farmer. This is a policy of good government for all the Canadian people.

[Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain).]

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 83, respecting the payment of carrying costs of temporary wheat reserves owned by the Canadian wheat board.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT

AMENDMENTS TO REORGANIZE CAPITAL STRUCTURE, INCREASE AMOUNT OF LOANS, ETC.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act to provide for a number of administrative changes under the act; inter alia; to reorganize the capital structure of the board by cancelling existing share stock and issuing new stock up to a par value of three million dollars; to allow loans to be made up to sixty-five per cent of the value of the lands with a maximum loan of fifteen thousand dollars; that there be only one reserve fund not exceeding an amount equal to the capital stock of the board;

And to provide further for the repayment of the capital advanced by the government to the board with respect to its operation under the Canadian Fisherman's Loan Act, less the deficit of the board on its operation under the act and the amount of outstanding loans.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Chairman, hon. members will find that the bill to follow this resolution will have two chief aspects. I refer first to the aspect of financial opportunities for farmers in borrowing under the act. The bill will provide that the maximum loan opportunities will be increased from $10,000 on first mortgage plus $2,000 on second mortgage to a maximum over-all of $15,000.

Hon. members will also find that lending value will have an increase from 60 per cent to 65 per cent. The bill will also provide simplification by the elimination of the second mortgage procedure now in part II of the bill. In the second aspect there will be simplification of the balance sheet and the capital structure. In so far as this part of the proposals are concerned, I think that hon. members will like to see the bill before they go into too much detail over the balance sheet and capital structure. In addition, there will be some minor and technical changes.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, this act has now been in operation for many years. I think the sense of the committee is that it has well served the purpose for which it was intended. Although many conditions have conspired to reduce the percentage of the population which is taking part in farming, nevertheless I think we all recognize the fact that agriculture is doubly important, first of all because of its material contribution—and I shall come back to that matter in a moment—and second, because of the fact that those who live on the land, those who have that steady and steadying influence in their lives, form an extremely important part of the population. I think it is undesirable when they shrink to a small percentage. As time goes on I hope there will be offsetting considerations. Of course, we cannot overlook the fact that a great deal of work that was formerly done on the farm is now done in the factory and that one man can now raise the food that it formerly took ten men to raise. Nevertheless I think a measure like this one, which is designed to assist those who are now in farming and, perhaps even more important, to induce other people to take to that profession, is an extremely important measure indeed.

The board has carried on in a sensible way. I think they have won confidence. Their losses have been small. When we are asked to extend their powers, to extend the amount of the loan and to extend the percentage which may be loaned, I think we may feel that we are giving these powers to men who over a period of many years, have shown that they are responsible and that they are entitled to be entrusted with these powers. There are certain questions of detail which one will wish to ask with regard to the administrative changes, changes in capitalization—there are special points with regard to fishermen's loans—and others. But as there will probably be other members of the committee who would like to make some general observations—some of them who are closer to the industry than I am personally—I shall content myself now with saying just what I have said, namely that I feel that this is a matter of great importance; that for nearly 30 years we have had experience with those who are managing it; and that the results are such as to make us wish to continue the powers so that in the future the act may, if possible, serve a more useful purpose than it has served in the past.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have had a lifelong interest in agricultural credit because I am a great believer in agricultural development, particularly at this time in the still pioneer sections of our country. I think experience proves the historic necessity for agricultural credit by means of low-interest, long-term loans if you are going to establish a sound agriculture in any country.

I am particularly interested in this resolution because I notice that there is provision for an increase in the amount of loans, up to a maximum of $15,000, and that the resolution suggests that loans can be up to 65 per cent of the value of the farm concerned. However, I wish to offer a few suggestions, as a result of experience, and to make a few criticisms.

I quite agree with the hon. member who spoke previously that during the past 30 years the record of the board has been good and that it has served a useful purpose so far as agricultural development in Canada is concerned. Before proceeding further, Mr. Chairman, I must make it clear that I represent a particular breed of farmers who are obliged to work 12 months a year, from 12 to 16 hours a day in order to make a modest living and who are more acquainted with the axe, the crosscut saw and the grub hoe than they are with the rubbertired tractor or the combine. It is on behalf of that particular group of farmers that I am speaking this evening.

My first criticism and suggestion with respect to the administration of the act would be that, as far as British Columbia is concerned—particularly owing to developments in the last 10 or 15 years—the administration is somewhat centralized. We have a branch office in New Westminster. To this office everyone is obliged to write and from this office all the officials are obliged to travel to all parts of British Columbia. I suggest that the board would be wise to consider the establishment even on a modest scale, of one or two branch offices in the interior and northern sections of the province. I think the experience of the Veterans Land Act administration indicated that, for efficient service that procedure was necessary.

I think the present rather centralized administration, having just one office in New Westminster in British Columbia, at times creates inconvenience to the applicants as well as unnecessary delay. On account of the fact that the staff are obliged to make their headquarters at New Westminster—and I am not blaming the staff—there is a tendency to lose contact with local conditions in various parts of the province, and with farmers and farmers' organizations directly interested in the administration of this act. I also think there is a tendency on the part of those who have to deal with the larger farms—such as those in the Fraser valley and other parts—because of their lack of local contact with local conditions, to underestimate the opportunities that are provided for pioneer development. Those opportunities abound in the constituency which I have the honour to represent. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that I think you are also acquainted with the conditions of which I am speaking this evening. While you remain silent, I am sure that at heart you will be sympathetic with what I have to say.

In the West Kootenay district we have at the present time between 14,000 and 15,000 acres of undeveloped agricultural land which up until recent years could be reached only by steamer, primitive roads and trails. But as a result of road development within the last five or six years, large areas of this land are becoming accessible. Schools are being built and the sick can be taken to hospital. Several times during the last 50 years much of this land was considered for agricultural development, but it was not developed because of the lack of access to schools, hospitals and communications generally.

Now I am confident, Mr. Chairman, that if the board had their administration decentralized, if they had a branch office in the southern interior and one in the northern interior, the officials would get a better appreciation and understanding of the opportunities that exist for sound agricultural development under pioneer conditions. Now, to demonstrate the opportunities for development which exist as a result of the availability of long-term low interest agricultural credit, I want to quote briefly from the Nelson Daily News. Here is a large heading across it, "West Kootenay Fills Only 16 per cent of Own Food Needs." The article says:

> West Kootenay in 1951 required food valued at $5,293,888 in order to satisfy the appetites of its population of 54,737 persons. A little better than 80 per cent of this value was made up of goods brought into the area and 16 per cent was of local origin.
> These facts are brought out in a report on the market for farm products in the 13,000 square-mile area of West Kootenay, written by W. C. Shipley and I. F. Furniss of the federal Department of Agriculture.

We have the land and we have exceptionally good markets, Mr. Chairman. We have the young people who desire to settle on that land. In some cases the young people wish to take over the farms and orchards that their parents have operated for many years, but there are others who are willing to go on the virgin land that is available.

I suggest also that under certain circumstances the regulations are too rigid. I read in the 1954 report of the Canadian farm loan board, page 16, this one paragraph which is marked, "Who may qualify?"

> Any person whose principal occupation is farming and who owns or proposes to purchase a farm and who is actually engaged in or about to become engaged in farming the land offered as security.
> An applicant must satisfy the board that he has the necessary experience and ability to successfully operate the farm and repay the loan.

I want to bring to the attention of the house the reason I maintain that at the present time —I am not blaming the officials for this—the regulations apparently are too rigid. There is in my constituency a very experienced and successful farmer who farms 390 acres. Now, that is a very large farm in the riding which I have the honour to represent. He has 100 acres of that land in hay and the balance in pasture and a small area in grain. He gets well over 100 tons of hay a year and has an excellent herd of good beef cattle. This very successful farmer made an application to the board for a relatively small loan, and his application was rejected. They admitted he was an experienced, successful farmer, but it was rejected on the ground that his house was not on the land on which he wished to raise the loan.

The circumstances are these. This is a cattle farm at an elevation of about 3,000 feet; it is in a mountain valley near Slocan city. I am sure the member for Vancouver-Quadra knows the area about which I am speaking. It is west of Slocan city and it has been farmed for years. There is a very rough mountain road to get there and he cannot live on this land because of getting his children to school. He has to have his milk herd on land closer to Slocan city which is, incidentally, the smallest city in North America. I believe it has a population of something over 375 persons. He has to live on the lower levels in order to get his children to school and deliver his farm products to the city and surrounding district. His application was rejected strictly on the ground that he was not living on the land he was farming. I bring that to the attention of the house because I think it illustrates in some respects that the regulations are too rigid.

Then, as I said before, there is a tendency, and I think it springs from the regulations, to underestimate the possibilities for successful farm development under pioneer conditions. I am quite sure that some of those gentlemen who come from the coast do not believe this heavily wooded area looks like a good investment when compared to some of the land in the Fraser valley or the coastal regions of British Columbia. However, they underestimate, in some cases, the productivity of the soil. They possibly do not realize the excellent markets that are available within a range of 50 miles. They underestimate the calibre of some of these young people particularly who are anxious to settle on the land.

My further criticism would be that the interest rate is too high. At the moment the interest rate is 5 per cent. Experience in the United Kingdom and in Europe indicates that agricultural credit can be extended very successfully at not more than 3 per cent for loans that are kept up to date. I think the experience of our own Canadian farm loan board indicates that the investment in loans on Canadian farms has been a sound investment throughout the years. It indicates the excellent security and stability of the Canadian farmer. I feel that the experience of the Veterans' Land Act administration bears this out also. Incidentally they have lent considerable sums of money to veterans wishing to settle on land in my constituency and I have yet to hear of the first failure to meet the payments within a reasonable time.

I do urge, therefore, that consideration be given to making the interest rate 3 per cent. As I said before, the experience with agricultural credit in Great Britain and the European countries indicates it is a sound policy. It has proven sound for many years. I believe we should do that at least for these young men and women particularly who are anxious to go into pioneer districts, clear the land and add to the total production of this country. We need to develop our agricultural resources. We need to provide opportunities for our young people. I make this suggestion, Mr. Chairman, as a result of some experience in farming myself, some personal knowledge of the conditions I speak about, and I do urge the minister to give consideration to my representations.

Mr. Hahn: We in this group consider this legislation very desirable, largely for the two reasons suggested in the resolution itself. First, it says that loans shall be increased to a maximum of $15,000, and secondly loans can be a maximum of up to 65 per cent of the land value. However, we do have a criticism to make concerning the past operations of the act. Frequently we find that appraisals are much too conservative and the property is actually worth many times the value the appraisers place upon it. This makes it impossible for a farmer to get a loan of a reasonable size.

Frequently, we hear remarks to the effect that the appraisals are more conservative than one would get from ordinary mortgage companies. I am not sure of the exact workings of the act. If representations are made by the Fraser valley fruit growers, who suffered such a serious loss from frost in November that they will not have a strawberry crop for the next three years at least, I certainly hope that those funds will be made available to them in an amount that will make it practicable for them to go back to the raising of that particular crop.

We have the large area in the Cariboo section of British Columbia which is going to be opened to the public as soon as the railway line is completed. We are satisfied that those who wish to settle in that area to farm should be able to find some use of this act, if it should function in the way in which we hope it will function.

I should now like to refer to the section having to do with fishermen. I am not too certain whether the intent here is that it should act as a revolving fund. It would appear to be so. For that reason and for reasons which others have given who have spoken on this resolution, I hope that when the resolution reaches the bill stage it will be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce for further consideration and discussion.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Harris thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 84, to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

COMMITTEE ON ESTIMATES

MOTION TO APPOINT SELECT COMMITTEE

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister) moved:

That a select committee to be designated be appointed to consider such of the estimates as may be referred to it and to report from time to time its findings and recommendations to the house.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I propose to refer only briefly to the motion, but I should like to make two points. First, we had a very considerable use of this committee last year, and it seemed to me that—I know there will be objections voiced with respect to some of the procedure in the committee—the committee did perform a useful function. I do not think it can be said that it cut down the time of consideration of the estimates in the committee of supply, but that was not the only reason for appointing the committee. There were many other reasons, and it does seem to me that we ought to continue the experiment for another year at least, if not longer.

Last year, I think the house will recall, we placed before the committee the estimates of four departments. In discussing the motion I said it would be desirable to try to get around to all of the departments in the course of a parliament which would run the normal period of time. That is still our intention and our hope.

We had considered what estimates we might refer to the committee this year. We did that some two months ago and decided to refer to the committee the estimates of the Department of Labour, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of National Revenue and the Post Office Department.

Requests have been made by opposition groups with respect to other departments. I should like to say, sir, that we shall do our best to fit into the program those departments that are now ready to appear before the committee, but if there is time we shall do our best to accommodate the opposition groups, not in full because I know that will not be possible, but in part at least.

On that basis, I hope, sir, that the motion will carry and that the committee may be able to get to work at an early date.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that the motion will carry, although there are some changes we should like to see in it before it does carry.

The minister has said that this committee was set up last year on an experimental basis. I took from what he said it was felt by himself and his colleagues that it performed a useful function last year.

With that statement I would agree. We in the official opposition felt that it was a useful step in enabling this house to deal more effectively and efficiently with one of its major tasks, perhaps its major task, namely, the scrutinizing and the control of the spending of public money, but we felt—and on reflection we have no reason to change our opinion—that its usefulness was largely circumscribed by the restrictions on its power.

It is our view that this committee can perform a useful function, and it should be continued on a basis that will enable it better to perform that function. Perhaps so that we can be quite clear as to the basis of discussion here, I should say we feel that there are two main functions that this committee on estimates could and should perform. One of them is a considerably minor function. I will mention it first. It is a possible method of saving the time of the whole house. There were, as I recall it, in the committee appointed to assist Mr. Speaker in the revision of the rules which sat for several years, a number of discussions as to whether we should have a committee on estimates, and if so, what should be its nature, its composition and its purposes. There were quite a number who suggested that one of its major functions would be to save the time of the house and to shorten the session. Both at the time these discussions were taking place and as a result of the experience we had in the committee, I did not feel and do not feel that was or should be its primary function.

With the growing volume of government business and with the growing volume of expenditure, I think it is inevitable that there will be a tendency for sessions to grow longer. Therefore we should approach that aspect of the situation not so much with a determination to shorten sessions, because if we do we are going to have to cut down on the effectiveness of our work somewhat. We should approach it rather from the point of view of how we can most effectively and efficiently discharge our work so that sessions will not grow unnecessarily and burdensomely longer. It is that function which I think this committee can best discharge, and which should be its main purpose; that is, to enable parliament to perform its function of the control of expenditure most efficiently and effectively. In the light of the growing volume of government work, and the extension of the field into which governments seem to engage unnecessarily—some no doubt will say necessarily—unless there is efficiency in the work of parliament in scrutinizing the expenditure of governments, the whole question of the extent to which the people's money is taken and spent by government may get entirely out of control. I do not like to be extreme in my statements, as the Minister of Finance knows, but there is some ground for feeling that it has already gone too far and the government dips its hand too deep into the national revenue to an extent that has gone beyond the safety point.

In considering this matter, as in so many cases, I think it is useful to look at the experience and history of other countries, and the one which forms the readiest guide for us is the experience of the United Kingdom parliament. In looking at the debate at the time when their estimates committee was first set up I find that this was the basis upon which they decided to set up that committee in the year 1912 when they first had an estimates committee. The statement of the chancellor of the exchequer, Mr. Lloyd George, in which he introduced the motion setting up the committee, made it perfectly clear that the purpose which the government had in mind in setting it up was to enable the house to provide a means by which the House of Commons could more effectively discharge its duties to scrutinize and control expenditure. It was made quite clear in his statement that there was a large body of opinion in the United Kingdom parliament at that time, and I think it would be accurate to say it could be taken from the chancellor's statement that he shared that opinion to a great extent, which felt that the committee of the whole house, which in this case would be the committee of supply, could not effectively check the growing tendency towards increased expenditure.

He complained, as I suppose his counterpart here, the Minister of Finance and his predecessors and successors will always complain, that the great preponderance of the pressure he gets from hon. members of parliament is for increased expenditure rather than the reverse.

The chancellor told a moving story of the difficulty that confronted him in any endeavour not only to reduce expenditures but to even prevent them from growing beyond all reasonable bounds, and he said in effect that really he was not unduly critical of hon. members for that tendency because, as he said, they come to parliament with individual needs, cases arising in their constituencies which they feel they must put forward, or the necessity of individual groups within the framework of the national economy, and it is natural and proper that they should press those needs; but the result was that there was an over-all pressure in the direction of increased expenditure and that really the only body which regarded itself as the watchdog, and the only body which ever came anywhere near exercising a tendency in the opposite direction, was the treasury, which in Canada we call the treasury board. I think I have heard the Minister of Finance argue somewhat along the same lines in this house.

The committee of supply is a committee of the whole house and thus a committee of a large number of hon. members where it is difficult to come to grips with details and perhaps it is inefficient to come to grips with details because it means that every hon. member who engages in a discussion of any length with the minister on a matter of detail does so while 264 other hon. members are waiting until the individual discussion is concluded before any of the rest of the business can be proceeded with. For these reasons it is possible that the committee is not a body where discussions of detail can be efficiently carried on as a general practice.

That sentiment was agreed to, I think, by most of the hon. members who spoke in the debate in the United Kingdom. Now, sir, I mentioned that at some length because I think it is important that we should keep before us the main function which this committee can and should serve, and that is to deal with details, to be a watchdog of expenditure, to be an agency by which the committee of supply can discharge the function which has perhaps rather slipped from its grasp over late years and which perhaps was inevitably bound to slip from its grasp by the nature of the complexity of the business with which parliament now deals. Therefore, if this committee is to perform this function of effective scrutiny and thereby increase the efficiency of departments and ensure that the people of this country get a dollar's value for every dollar that is spent, I submit it is absolutely essential that the committee should have the necessary powers to enable it to discharge that function.

I submit to you, sir, without any hesitation on the basis of our experience last year, that the commitee as then constituted did not have those powers and that the committee as contemplated in the motion now standing in the name of the Prime Minister will not have the necessary powers to enable it to discharge its function unless the resolution is amended along the lines which we intend to offer in the course of this discussion.

If it suits the convenience of hon. members I should like you to call it ten o'clock.

On motion of Mr. Fulton the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, we will take the estimates of the Department of Agriculture tomorrow.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

POLIOMYELITIS STATISTICS

Question No. 85—Mr. McMillan:

1. How many cases of poliomyelitis were reported in Canada, province by province, during 1955 up to and including December 31?
2. How many cases, by provinces, were of the paralytic type?
3. How does the incidence of polio during 1955 compare with the five-year annual average for the years 1950-54 inclusive?
4. How many deaths were reported from polio during 1955 and how do these figures compare with the five-year average, 1950-54?
5. What are the results of the evaluation of the Salk vaccine as used in Canada during 1955?

Answer by: Mr. Martin:

1 and 2. With 1,028 cases of poliomyelitis of all forms reported across Canada up to December 31, the year 1955 goes on record as having the lowest rate reported in the past decade. Of the total cases reported, about one-half, or 544, were of the paralytic type. The following table, based on provisional figures, indicates the total number of cases and the number of paralytic cases, province by province, as well as the attack rates per 100,000.

Province	Total Cases	Rate per 100,000	Paralytic Cases	Rate per 100,000
Nfld.	15	3·6	12	2·9
P.E.I.	11	10·2	11	10·2
N.S.	114	16·7	55	8·0
N.B.	39	6·9	6	1·1
Que.	125	2·8	78	1·7
Ont.	178	3·4	79	1·5
Man.	30	3·5	13	1·5
Sask.	72	8·1	20	2·2
Alta.	214	20·1	124	11·6
B.C.	230	17·6	146	11·2
Canada	1,028	6·6	544	3·5

3. The extent of polio in Canada during 1955 was a little more than one-quarter of the average annual incidence over the past five years. This applies to both paralytic polio and total cases of polio, with the average number of cases per year from 1950 to 1954 amounting to 1,683 and 3,898 respectively. It should be noted, of course, that the five-year averages include the year 1953 during which Canada experienced the most serious polio epidemic in its history.

The relatively low incidence of polio was general throughout Canada, with the exception of British Columbia where the number of paralytic cases, 146, was actually higher than the five-year average of 139. As will be shown later, the use of the Salk vaccine produced the most striking results in this province where polio was most severe. In Nova Scotia, the total number of cases of all forms, 114, exceeded the five-year annual average of 91, but the 55 paralytic cases were significantly lower than the five-year average of 68. Of the ten provinces, British Columbia was hardest hit, with Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia following with 92 and 81 per cent respectively of the five-year annual average for paralytic cases.

Manitoba, on the other hand—where only 30 cases were reported, of which 13 were paralytic, and no deaths occurred—had the lowest incidence as compared with the five-year average, with ratios of four and three per cent respectively. Saskatchewan was next lowest with 72 cases of which 20 were paralytic. Total cases were about 13 per cent of the five-year annual average of 565, while paralytic cases represented about one-tenth of the annual average over the past five years of 187. It will be recalled that these two provinces were extremely hard hit during the serious epidemic of 1953.

In Newfoundland and New Brunswick polio occurred during 1955 at the rate of about one-quarter of the five-year annual average. In Quebec, where 125 cases were reported—of which 78 were paralytic—the ratio was about one-third of the five-year average figures of 350 and 203 respectively. Ontario had a relatively light incidence with 178 cases, or about 16 per cent of the five-year average of 1,054. Among the total cases, 79 were paralytic, or about 18 per cent of the five-year average of 416.

Although the attack rates in Alberta during 1955 were higher than in other provinces, in relation to the five-year annual average the 124 paralytic cases amounted to about 27 per cent. The total number of cases of all kinds, 214, was approximately 38 per cent of the five-year average of 585. In the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, no cases of any kind were reported during 1955.

4. As with its general incidence, there was also a marked decline in the number of deaths from polio last year with a provisional total of 28 reported as against 157 in the year before and an average of 230 deaths annually over the past five years. In each of three provinces—Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and Manitoba—not a single death from polio was reported during 1955.

5. The use of the Salk vaccine in Canada during 1955 was the most ambitious mass immunization program ever undertaken in this country. It also provided an opportunity for carrying out a nation-wide epidemiological study, the results of which have demonstrated the safety and effectiveness of the vaccine as an immunizing agent. In addition, the whole program offered an outstanding example of co-operation between federal, provincial and local health authorities and served to bring home to the people of Canada in dramatic fashion the value of public health activities generally.

In co-operation with the health authorities in the ten provinces, the epidemiology division of the Department of National Health and Welfare has undertaken a careful survey of polio in Canada last year, particularly among the age groups five to ten where the use of the vaccine was largely concentrated. As early as last May, a meeting was called in Ottawa with the provincial directors of communicable disease control and a uniform system for reporting polio and assessing the vaccine's effectiveness was devised. For the purpose of this study, polio was classified as "paralytic" in all cases where there was evidence of some muscle weakness extending over a period of more than 24 hours.

With regard to safety, among all the children in Canada who received one or more injections of the vaccine, not one case of poliomyelitis occurred within 30 days of its administration. This is the interval during which polio, if caused by the vaccine, might be expected to develop. In further confirmation of the safety factor, within the study group described below, only five cases of paralytic polio were reported in nearly 600,000 vaccinated children. In each of these cases, symptoms of polio first occurred at least two months following the inoculations, clearly indicating that the vaccine could not have been responsible for the infection. In other words, these five children contracted polio in spite of, and not because of, the vaccine.

As to the effectiveness of the vaccine, a careful epidemiological study was carried out during a predetermined period of observation—July 1 to November 30 inclusive. The study involved nearly 1,500,000 children in the age groups five to ten, including about 600,000 who received two or more inoculations prior to July 1, and slightly less than 900,000 in comparable age groups who did not receive the vaccine. Among those not included in this study are the substantial numbers of children under the age of five who received the vaccine. Other vaccinated children were excluded for a variety of reasons, for example, those who received only one injection, children vaccinated since July 1, and those living in isolated areas where it is difficult to gather complete epidemiological data.

The following table indicates the result of the evaluation carried out among the study group, province by province:

CANADA	.....	589,716	5	0·84	885,000	51	5·76

[1] For purposes of comparison, children of the ages specified only have been included. For example a substantial number of children in the province of Quebec under 5 years of age who received 2 doses of the vaccine have not been included.

[2] Since some figures are based on age group estimates, all have been rounded to the nearest hundred.

* Grades

It will be noted that for all Canada, among 589,716 children ranging in age from five to ten who received two or more doses of vaccine, five cases of paralytic polio occurred during the period of study, or a rate of 0·84 per 100,000. Among some 885,000 unvaccinated children in comparable age groups, 51 cases of paralytic polio were reported, or an observed rate of 5·76 per 100,000. On the basis of these figures, an observed reduction in rate of about 85 per cent may be calculated.

To assess the significance of these findings, it is necessary to examine the results from the individual provinces. In three provinces—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Newfoundland—there were no cases reported among either the vaccinated or unvaccinated children in the age groups specified. This is probably explained by the generally low incidence in these three provinces where there were only 5 paralytic cases in the entire population as against a five-year average of 624.

The most significant feature of the entire study is the result reported from British Columbia. Despite the fact that more cases were reported in British Columbia than any other province, there was not a single case of paralytic polio among 45,067 vaccinated children in the study group. As opposed to this, ten cases were reported among the 12,488 unvaccinated children, for a rate of 80 per 100,000 as against zero in the vaccinated group. On the basis of these figures, if the rate among the unvaccinated children were applied to the number of vaccinated children in the study group, it might be calculated that some 36 cases would have occurred; instead, there was not a single case among the children receiving the vaccine.

Because of the small number of cases reported among the study group, the results of the evaluation are not considered statistically significant in provinces other than British Columbia, when examined individually. The figures for Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, if taken together, however, are statistically significant. Considering these two provinces together on the basis of geographic proximity and the relatively high incidence of polio in each in relation to the five-year average, it will be observed that, among 20,406 vaccinated children, there were no cases reported, while among 52,089 unvaccinated children there were 13 cases or a rate of 24·95 per 100,000.

Thus, in those provinces—British Columbia, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia—where polio struck with severity roughly comparable to the annual average over the past five years, the Salk vaccine achieved significant results in preventing paralytic polio. In these three provinces, no cases were reported among 65,473 children aged five to ten who received two or more injections of the vaccine. On the other hand, among approximately the same number of children (64,577) in comparable age groups, no less than 23 cases were reported. These results clearly demonstrate the effectiveness of the Salk vaccine as a preventive against paralysis from poliomyelitis.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 10, 1956

The house met at eleven o'clock.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REPORTED DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS IN TRADE FOR BRITISH IMMIGRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. How many millions of bushels of surplus wheat does the Prime Minister expect will be sold under the scheme announced in the Free Press by the Minister of Agriculture whereby wheat will be traded for British immigrants?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I have not seen the Free Press story, and I do not expect that any wheat would be sold under any plan such as that referred to in the hon. member's question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what I thought.

Mr. Drew: May I ask the Prime Minister if he is aware that according to the C.B.C. news report the minister has confirmed the story?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, I am not aware that the minister has confirmed the story. All I saw was a paragraph in the Journal last night which purports to be a story relating to some suggestion that might have been made by the Minister of Agriculture. However, that is not to my knowledge, and all I can say is there is no such plan being considered by the government.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture, with regard to his interesting suggestion to exchange immigrants for wheat, whether it will be on a weight for weight basis, so many pounds of immigrant for so many pounds of wheat?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. What consideration has he given to the weird plan of the Minister of Agriculture? Is it intended to extend it to people from continental nations? How many immigrants are envisaged as coming in the first year?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, like some other hon. members apparently, I listen to the radio while I am taking my bath in the morning. I heard the same piece of inaccurate news, which the hon. member for Assiniboia has characterized as a question of privilege, which I do not think was really a question of privilege, because I do not think one is entitled to correct in the house a statement made outside the house.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am giving an answer to a question which was put to me, sir.

Mr. Fleming: And undertaking to act as a schoolmaster.

Mr. Knowles: You are all wet.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I understood that any suggestions the right hon. gentleman may have made were made in a purely private capacity as someone interested in the development of this country, and he has done a great deal to develop the country.

Mr. Fleming: I ask the minister whether he would make use of a towel?

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REGULATIONS WITH RESPECT TO BANK LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I pursue the question I asked yesterday? Will the minister table a copy of the letter sent to the banks giving the basis on which they might make loans to farmers under the impending regulation?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RUSSIA—EXCHANGE OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who, I presume, is acting for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the Canadian Press stories in the morning papers to the effect that Russia may buy $5 million worth of wheat a year from Canada, would the minister consider recommending to the cabinet the accepting of the U.S.S.R. invitation for a Canadian parliamentary delegation to visit Russia, which was transmitted to the Canadian embassy in Moscow on January 6 of this year?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): My hon. friend just gave notice to the office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs a few moments before I came into the house. I suspect that if the Secretary of State for External Affairs were here he would want to take this question into serious consideration before giving a reply, if it really in fact deserves one.

USE OF PUBLIC FUNDS TO PUBLISH SPEECH BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister consider it a proper use of public funds that the information division of the Department of External Affairs should publish the speech made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the debate in this house on January 31, and no speeches of any of the other members who participated in that debate? I asked a similar question yesterday with reference to the publication of the speech made in the house by the same minister on January 24.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is a question that I should be expected to answer on the orders of the day. I think the hon. gentleman asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs about that matter a day or two ago and that he said he was looking into it.

Mr. Fleming: It was not the same matter. It was a different speech in a different debate but a similar situation where public funds are used to publish a speech of the minister but of no other member who spoke in the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think these matters could be dealt with when the estimates of the various departments are before the committee of supply.

UNNECESSARY DELAY OF UNION OFFICIALS BY UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, may I direct a question to the acting minister? Would the minister make a statement on the charge by the united fishermen and allied workers' union that a Mrs. Mickey Beagle and union delegates were unnecessarily delayed and questioned by United States immigration authorities while en route to meetings of the international halibut commission, the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission, and a meeting of local 3, international longshoremen and warehousemen's union, all taking place in Seattle, Washington?

Mr. Speaker: The question is unusually long. It may be one of urgency, but I do not think it is the type of question which should be asked at this time. While I am on my feet I will ask hon. members to realize that the rule which allows them to put questions at this time places strict limitations on the type of question which may be asked. I know that there is a tendency to break away from that limitation and perhaps institute a new style. The questions which are to be asked at this time are not to supervise the day to day operations of the government. They are to seek information which later may be used by hon. members in debate, which makes it quite a different proposition. This is the rule the house has adopted and the one you expect me to put into effect.

Mr. Hahn: With all due deference to your ruling, I would point out that—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry that it just happens that I say something when it is the hon. member asking the question. He does not ask very many questions and is not at fault very often. However, the hon. member stands up and says, "With all due respect to your ruling." This is another very important rule, that rulings of the Speaker are not debatable. To what extent are we going to observe this rule? I would hope that whenever I do make a ruling, hon. members would take it that it is not debatable.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct another question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or, in his absence, to the acting minister. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs assure the house that he will examine into the charges I mentioned earlier so that Canadian citizens will be able to choose delegates that can properly represent them?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I did not hear the question, Mr. Speaker. It may have been directed to some other minister, but if it was directed to me, I shall see that the minister or his parliamentary assistant is advised.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CONVICTION OF CLIFFORD WILLIAMS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice which I do in the light of an article by Sidney Katz in the current issue of Maclean's magazine. Will the minister, in the interests of justice and humanity, make an immediate further review of the case of Clifford Williams and, if the facts are as stated in the article, order a remission to bring the sentence into conformity with the nature and circumstances of the offence?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my hon. friend for having given me notice of his question. As he probably knows, all matters of remission and commutation are under the care of the Solicitor General. Since the hon. member gave me his notice I have had an opportunity of speaking only briefly to the Solicitor General who tells me that he has had this case under active consideration for quite some time. After I have had a further opportunity of discussing the details of it with him, I shall be glad to make a report to the house.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. May I say that I attempted to file this question yesterday and was informed that it was an improper question to ask because the matter did not come within the purview of this parliament. I am glad, however, that the question has been asked and that it has been answered to the extent that it has been answered.

TRADE

INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH RUSSIAN DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): In the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister care to comment on the report in this morning's press that trade negotiations involving a sale of many millions of dollars' worth of wheat with the Russian delegation are now in the final stage? Can the Prime Minister say when the negotiations will be finalized and the results made public?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I cannot say when the negotiations will be finalized. They have not yet reached a point where it would be appropriate to make any statement. I do not think it would be helpful for me to make any comment whatsoever one way or another on the story which is in the press this morning.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION FOR CONTINUATION OF CERTIFICATION OF UNIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the government preparing to take any necessary steps to make provision for continuation of all certifications under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act regardless of any changes of union names that may result from the coming merger of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada and the Canadian Congress of Labour into what will be known as the Canadian Labour Congress?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend kindly sent me notice of this question which I received this morning. The information he desires is, of course, related to the work of the Canada labour relations board and a matter in which the heads of the national labour unions are interested. I think I should like to have further time to discuss the matter with the chairman of the board and with the heads of the congresses before I make a statement on it.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

USE OF TELEVISION ELSEWHERE THAN AT PETERBOROUGH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): I should like to address a question to the Postmaster General or in his absence to his parliamentary assistant. Is the article in the Montreal Gazette of this morning under the heading "Ottawa" correct wherein it is stated as follows:

> Informants say that the Post Office Department has reluctantly decided against applying its Peterborough T.V. snooping experiments in post offices elsewhere.

Mr. T. A. M. Kirk (Parliamentary Assistant to the Postmaster General): Unfortunately I have not seen the article in the Montreal Gazette and the notice of the question just reached my desk since the orders of the day were called. If I were to answer the question, I would be forced to remove two of the qualifying words. I do think that the report given by the Postmaster General on Tuesday, January 24, is very full and very accurate.

BURNABY—REMOVAL OF MAIL SORTERS TO VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond): In the absence of the Postmaster General, may I direct a question to his parliamentary assistant? The municipality of Burnaby's population is over 80,000—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to put his question.

Mr. Goode: I am putting my question, Mr. Speaker, but I have to put that part. That is my question. Orders have been issued by the Postmaster General—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Goode: This is part of the question. I am going to show you I must put this before I can put the question. Orders have been issued by the postmaster at Vancouver that all mail sorters in the Burnaby South postal station are to be removed to the Vancouver post office and that mail is to be sorted in Vancouver for Burnaby. Will the Postmaster General countermand those instructions until the two members of parliament from Burnaby have a chance to make a protest?

Mr. Speaker: I understand that a protest is now being made through the very question the hon. member is asking. These matters are part of the administration of the department and they should be held until the estimates of the department are before the committee of supply.

INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT OF REMOVAL EXPENSES OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Postmaster General. At such times as the post office changes the place of employment of hundreds of its workers, does it assume any responsibility for the cost of those workers moving their families into the city of their new employment?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I shall be glad to draw the Postmaster General's attention to the question.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ARGUE—CORRECTION OF NEWS BROADCAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I wish to correct a radio news broadcast this morning reporting that I supported the suggestion of the Minister of Agriculture that Canadian wheat be exchanged for immigrants from the United Kingdom. Yesterday in this house I termed the suggestion "bankrupt" and in no way supported it.

CRIMINAL CODE

SEX DEVIATES—INQUIRY AS TO INSTITUTION OF REFORMS

On the orders of the day:

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the recommendations made yesterday by the Ontario attorney general, urging that reforms of the Criminal Code regarding sex deviates be instituted, is it the intention of the government to look into those reforms at once?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is always our practice to give careful consideration to any recommendations which provincial attorneys general or law enforcement officers may make.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO INSTALLATION OF JET ENGINE IN FIGHTER AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, and in his absence, to his parliamentary assistant. Is the Pratt and Whitney turbo jet engine a more advanced design than the K-57 to be installed in Canada's first supersonic fighter aircraft?

Mr. P. T. Hellyer (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think this question is one which could properly be answered when the estimates of the department are before the house. I shall take the question as notice and see what information I can find.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF DIFFERENT FORM

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue? Will his department consider publishing a form to enable income tax payers to take advantage of section 36 (1) which provides special treatment for the lump sum payments received from a pension fund?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I will direct the attention of the officials of the taxation division to this matter.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration service—

1. Departmental administration (including advisory committee on agricultural services), $496,998.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman—

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, the estimates for the Department of Agriculture for this year are down slightly but only slightly, and one could say they are practically the same as they were a year ago.

There will be explanations to make as we go along with regard to the different items and it is not my intention at the moment to deal with the different items further than to state what I have said.

Two or three matters which have been discussed rather freely since the beginning of the session concern agriculture. I did not discuss them on the address because they had already been listed for discussion on the order paper and two of those matters have since been discussed and I do not intend at this time to say anything with regard to them.

One of these matters was the 5 per cent loan and another was the payment of storage costs. There were other matters which could more properly have been brought up on my estimates which have also been discussed. I have mentioned the first two and the others have to do with farm production and marketing problems in general, all of which affect farm income across Canada, and I intend to confine my remarks largely to those matters which have had some discussion from day to day but no complete discussion.

We hold a conference in Ottawa in December of each year which is attended by ministers and officials from right across Canada from the different departments of agriculture across the dominion, and last year we had a representation of the farmers' union from two provinces, the province of Saskatchewan and the province of Ontario. In addition to that we have representatives of the different countries with which we trade in agricultural products either through importing agricultural products from those countries or shipping agricultural products to those countries, and then we have the press, particularly the agricultural press, represented at that conference, who take down any of the discussions and make them known to the public.

We have had papers prepared on Canadian and world conditions as related to the purchase of Canadian farm products and the possible production to meet known markets at home and elsewhere. The reading of these papers has been followed by discussions which have resulted in the leading agriculturalists from across Canada carrying a message to farmers from wartime until now which has brought about certain results. The first is that areas utilized for the production of apples, potatoes and most special products excepting tobacco have not changed greatly. Surpluses of these products go to the United States, Britain and South America and we do make some exports in small amounts to other countries.

The second is that while there has been little change in the production of milk there has been considerable adjustment in the use made of milk in order to meet the condition under which our dairy products are marketed in Canada.

The third is that it was found advisable to adjust our production of eggs and pork to the requirements of the Canadian and the United States markets.

The fourth is that considerable surpluses of farm products have been confined almost entirely to cattle, barley and oats, and these have gone chiefly to the United States, and to wheat which has gone to Britain and to some other countries.

In 1954 we exported $236 million worth of farm products to the United Kingdom and $235 million to the United States. There is just a million dollars difference between the quantities that we sent to the two great countries to which we export goods. To other countries we exported $382 million worth of agricultural products. The greater part of our exports to the United Kingdom are wheat and flour and the greater part of our exports to the United States are grains for feed, seed and brewing. In addition to that we export live animals and animal products.

I wish at this time to spend a little more time on dairy products and particularly butter than any of the others that I have dealt with in the distribution of problems which concern us at the present time.

Those problems are concerned first with the production of farm products and later with the marketing of them.

There is one which has raised quite a bit of controversy in the country and that is the question as to how our plan has been developed in connection with butter and what the present condition is in relation to it. I thought it best to deal with that at once in order that the information might be on the record to be dealt with by others as we go along with our estimates and particularly at the time when we come to the dairy item.

There has been considerable discussion about butter. In order to get a correct background it is necessary to go back over the records. I have done so by going back 20 years but I shall just deal with the record at the end of each five years.

The production in 1934 was 334,974,000 pounds of butter and the stock carried on the first of January of that year was 22,027,000 pounds. The production five years later in 1939 was 356,972,000 pounds and the stock carried as of the first of January was 45,120,000 pounds. In 1944, five years later, the production was 336,257,000 pounds and stocks on January 1, 1944, amounted to 46,683,000 pounds. In 1949, five years later, production was down to 313,827,000 pounds and stocks at the first of the year stood at 37,649,000 pounds.

Then I am going to ask the committee to note that in 1954 we produced 334,343,000 pounds of butter, while in 1934, twenty years before, we produced 334,000,000 pounds. So that the suggestion that there has been a great change up or down, particularly up, in the 20 years that we have gone through is hardly borne out by the facts. The statistics indicate that production was the same in 1954 as in 1934, and at the end of the five-year intervals two years were higher and one year was lower than that figure.

For the 10 years immediately after 1934 the production figures were higher than in 1934, while for the next 9 years they were lower than in 1934 or in 1954. But the variations were within a range of 75,000,000 pounds annually and were due to differences in grass or variations in price or increased production of cheese or some other product made from milk. There was a variation up and down for that 20-year period of around 75,000,000 pounds, but generally speaking production was on a fairly level range.

During the six years of lowest production from 1947 to 1952 we imported 42,500,000 pounds of butter. During the first two years the average monthly price of butter at wholesale at Montreal varied from 40 cents a pound, while we were importing butter, to 68 cents a pound.

I give that background in order to indicate what the situation was at the time the present plan was worked out and put into effect in this country. We had just imported very considerable quantities of butter and when we were importing that butter, which was in the wintertime when the farmer required a higher return for the butter produced during that period if he was ever going to require it, that butter was down to around 40 cents per pound wholesale. Then later in the same year it was up to 66 cents per pound wholesale and in the next year it went up to 68 cents a pound. So it was in order to stop these variations and get a plan under which we could have something which would work better that the present policy was brought into being.

We brought the present plan into effect in 1949. We agreed to buy butter in storage at 58 cents a pound, grade A, Montreal and Toronto. Butter in storage jumped to 56 million pounds by January 1, 1950. You will note that in the last year of the record I gave a moment ago the amount was 37 million pounds, and in the first year of price support, whether that was the reason or whether it was something else, storage jumped to 56 million pounds on January 1, 1950. The result was that we were stampeded, you might say, into reducing the floor to 53 cents and largely because of poor pasture, although the price might have had something to do with it, we had to import 22 million pounds of butter in 1950 and 1951 in order to meet the requirements in Canada.

During the shortage in February, 1951, while butter was being imported, the price went up to 85 cents to the consumer on most markets and as high as 90 cents a pound on the Toronto market. This proves that we needed storage of at least 78 million pounds of butter, the 56 million pounds in storage on the first of January and 22 million pounds more imported, in order to supply the needs of this market under the conditions which prevailed, and those conditions were largely brought about because we had poor grass in 1950 and 1951.

I wanted to lay that down in order to say this. This proves that we need storage of at least 78 million pounds of butter on January 1 in order to be absolutely sure we can hold butter at a stabilized price to the consumer based on 58 cents a pound to the producer. I think the facts prove that conclusively and therefore there is not much more I need to say with regard to that point.

On January 1, 1954, we were carrying 71 million pounds. That is 6 million pounds less than the figure I used. On January 1, 1955, we were carrying 91 million pounds of butter, which is about 13 million pounds more than the figure that has been proved to be absolutely necessary. This year, although we were only carrying 81 million pounds on government account as of January 1—it is recorded that the trade is carrying 19 million pounds—we have decided we can reduce our holdings by some 10 million to 20 million pounds by disposing of that much butter and thus keeping ourselves in a safe position in connection with the plan which was put into effect back in 1949.

Since 1950 the cost of the plan, including the $1,600,000 paid to the trade to reduce the price from 58 cents to 53 cents, has been over $6 million, and when we take into consideration all the moves that have been made this year to reduce the holdings to a lower level the figure will probably reach $8 million by May 1, although I am not certain whether the figure will be a little higher or a little lower. This would indicate that the cost per pound to the government may be between a third of a cent and half a cent a pound over the period that the plan has been in operation.

This will be our most costly year because we have been disposing of the accumulations over five years which we held to make certain there could be no manipulation of the market to the detriment of either the producer or the consumer. Again I repeat we are quite satisfied that that condition requires us to have at least 78 million pounds of butter as of the first of January each year in order to maintain the position that was established under this particular plan. All I want to say with regard to that is that is exactly what I have had in my mind when I have stated from time to time that there is no troublesome surplus so far as we are concerned.

The fact that there may be a considerable amount of butter in May, probably 40 million to 50 million pounds, is not a new thing. The record I have read indicates that we had 56 million pounds in storage on the first of January when we started and in other years the amount in storage has been very close to that figure. The fact is that our production is up and down owing to grass and pasture changes from year to year, just as wheat yields change from year to year, and because it goes up and down there has to be some provision made for the years when we may not have butter on hand.

Under present conditions, with approximately 78 million pounds of butter always on hand as of the first of January, we can make fairly certain that it is not going to be necessary to import butter into this country, and I am sure that will meet with the approval of members on both sides of the house. Members on this side of the house recall when a government composed of members of the official opposition first allowed margarine to come into the country and first allowed it to be made here. As a result of that action we had a real, live political issue which affected candidates right across the country and we had a change of government. Then prior to 1930 a Liberal government composed of members from this side of the house allowed the importation of butter and 42 million pounds came into the country, pretty much the same figure I referred to a few moments ago that we are trying to prevent coming in again.

Forty-two million pounds of butter came into Canada from New Zealand and Australia, and I still remember trucks going up and down the roads at election time carrying the cartons in which the butter came. I am quite sure that the members of the opposition who were so anxious at that time that we should not create conditions under which butter would come into this country will be most helpful now in order to see that that kind of thing is not done. We think it is absolutely essential to have 78 million pounds, which is close to 80 million pounds. Right now we have only 70 million pounds of butter. We think it is important to have that much butter on hand in order to see that this policy is carried into effect.

Mr. Brooks: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Gardiner: Yes.

Mr. Brooks: How long can butter be safely kept in storage? For what period of time?

Mr. Gardiner: We can keep it in the best of form at least for 1½ years. Some maintain that you can keep it much longer that that. In that connection I think I should say that we have in storage in this country scarcely any that was produced before May of 1955. Practically all the 1954 butter is gone. What has not gone up to now—and that may be 5 million or 6 million pounds—will go out in the trade without any difficulty in the weeks that are still ahead of us. In that regard I should say this. I had not intended to say it at this stage but inasmuch as the question has been raised, maybe I should do so. We grade all the butter into storage. It must grade No. 1-A to go into storage and it must grade No. 1-A to come out of storage and to go into the trade. Hence it is all No. 1 butter both going in and coming out of storage under this plan.

I rather resent the suggestion that has been made once or twice when we talked about selling butter out of the country so that we could continue a plan that makes it unnecessary for us to bring butter in. When we talk of sending a little bit of butter out, somebody always says, "Oh, that butter is stale" or "That butter is spoiled" or "That butter has been in there for two or three years". May I say that there has been no such butter going into the trade anywhere in Canada from government storage. With regard to that matter I should say that that does not mean that there is no stale butter being sold on the Canadian market. We never handle it at any time. We do not place in storage at any time more than one-third of the butter that goes onto the market in Canada but there is being marketed all the time in this country butter that this government has nothing to do with except to regulate the grading of it across the country under our regulations which deal with that kind of thing.

There is one other question which I am sure someone will be asking me about if I do not give the facts with regard to it, namely the recent sales of butter to Europe. In June and July of 1955 we sold 314,832 pounds of butter. I was over in Britain at that time and I have read the discussions which took place in this house while I was away. I therefore do not need to discuss the question further now. Hon. members discussed it quite fully at that time. In December, 1955, we sold 895,639 pounds of butter to Czechoslovakia; to East Germany in November and December we sold 6,024,760 pounds and to East Germany in January, 1956, we sold 1,984,304 pounds. That makes total exports of 9,219,535 pounds. I call attention to the fact that these figures are higher than the figures that were given to the hon. member for Lanark in the answer to a question a few weeks ago. With the January sale the total now is 9,219,535 pounds or about 9¼ million pounds. It is getting up towards 10 million pounds. We are still carrying on negotiations which could result in the sale of butter to European countries. As I said a few moments ago, the plan that we are attempting to carry out would not be injured in any way at the present time if we found it possible to ship from 10 million pounds to 20 million pounds of butter out of Canada.

In addition to that, I am sure that someone may want to know what the results were of our providing butter to institutions at lower than normal price. I have here the figures up to January 27 and I can give them to the committee. The total quantity of butter in pounds that went to institutions was 6,179,660. That is not quite a year but it is almost a year. We started about the middle of February last year. I have not the figures right up to date but the figure will run somewhere close to 6½ million pounds. The value of the discounts on what I have listed here is $1,297,728.60. That sum has been added to the sum I used previously in the conference in December which covered our sales up to that time to Europe and the loss we had taken on sales to Europe, and covered our losses of $3 million over the preceding years in doing one thing and another in connection with butter. We now have a figure which, when we come down close to the end of the year, will run about $1,500,000 which has been discounted from the actual price of the butter. The important thing about the matter is we started out to prove to our satisfaction one of two things: Either that people or institutions use more butter when they are getting it cheaper or that they may use more butter and less margarine when they get it cheaper. The statistics do not indicate that they have done so in this case. They are using just about the same proportion of butter—maybe a little bit more in some places and a little bit less in others—at 40 cents a pound as they used previously at 61 cents and they are using about the same amount of margarine now as they used previously.

Mr. Dufresne: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Gardiner: Yes.

Mr. Dufresne: Has the minister the figures for each province?

Mr. Gardiner: Yes.

Mr. Dufresne: Can he say whether, in the province of Quebec, this arrangement of giving butter to institutions at 40 cents a pound has increased the consumption of butter?

Mr. Gardiner: I had better look at the first sheet as well as the last one in order to answer that question. I have them all here for every month of the year that we have been operating. As of March 4—that is the first report we had—in Quebec the number of institutions there then was 236. Of course the numbers may be different now. They used 154,000 pounds of butter that month; the figure is closer to 155,000. If the hon. member is taking them down, maybe he had better put the round figure at 155,000. *They used only 6,000 pounds of margarine. Then they had other fats, neither margarine nor butter, amounting to 53,000 pounds. Just to keep the records close together so that I do not have to go back over too many, may I give these further figures. In Ontario, the next province, they used 118,000 pounds of butter, or closer to 119,000 pounds, 31,000 pounds of margarine and 36,000 pounds of other fats.

Now, those are the figures for the two provinces. Coming down to the last month I have on hand, there are 777 institutions in Quebec now which is about three times as many, and in the last month they used 297,000 pounds of butter, *13,591 pounds of margarine and 103,146 pounds of other fats. In Ontario there are 403 now where they had 276 before. There is not as big an increase as there was in Quebec. They used 141,000 pounds of butter—nearly 142,000—33,324 pounds of margarine and 61,550 pounds of other fats. There is no great difference in the proportions used in the institutions in the first month as compared with the last month except for the fact there are more institutions in the last month of the year than there were in the first month. In total, the number of institutions that were in in the first month was 1,068—that is right across Canada—and those 1,068 institutions used 426,000 pounds of butter; 75,000 pounds of margarine and 140,000 pounds of other fats. In this last month 2,001 institutions used 629,000 pounds of butter; 104,000 pounds of margarine and 235,000 pounds of other fats.

I believe when you analyse that you will find there is no great difference in the proportions of butter and margarine that were used as a result of the reduction of 21 cents in the price of butter. That is something that is worth knowing, but I do not know whether it is worth $1·5 million to find it out. We have not yet determined whether it is something we should continue for another year in order to assist in doing some of the things some people think we ought to do, that we ought to distribute more butter in Canada and less elsewhere. This point will be fully considered by the government as we go along, and some decision made with regard to it.

I believe those figures form the most of what I wanted to say with regard to the position on butter. There is only one other thing that I think should be said at this time in order that hon. members might have the information upon which to base discussions, and that has to do with the consumption of margarine and butter. The fact is we are consuming in Canada as much butter now as we were before margarine was permitted to enter the country. However, there are more people consuming it. If we are not going to increase our production of milk or increase the production of butter, then the farmers who are producing butter are able to get rid of it in about the same quantity as they got rid of it before margarine was permitted in the country. On the other hand, if it is our intention to try to increase dairy production in Canada, the fact that margarine is here no doubt has some effect on our efforts.

The effect of margarine is pretty well indicated by the figures that were brought out the other day by the hon. member for Lanark. I only heard one figure that he used which I thought was slightly out of line with the figures I have here and which are in my own mind. When margarine was permitted to come into this country we were using 28 pounds of butter per capita. We now use 21 and a fraction. The most important fact in my opinion is that the reduction from 28 down to 21 and a fraction came about during the first year that we had margarine. The per capita consumption has remained at 21 and a fraction since that time. I think the hon. member for Lanark said that last year consumption of butter was down by 8 pounds, or margarine up by 8 pounds, but my records indicate, so far as I have them up to date, that it was 7 and a fraction every year for margarine and 21 for butter. The consumption of butter per person, therefore, dropped about 25 per cent but because of the increase in the number of persons the total amount of butter being consumed in Canada is about the same as it was when margarine was permitted in the country.

The Chairman: I am extremely sorry to interrupt the minister, but it is my duty to advise him his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

The Chairman: Has the minister unanimous consent to proceed?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Gardiner: I am sorry. I suppose I did not read the rules carefully enough and I did not realize that in this case one introducing a subject had to be within the limit.

Mr. Blair: Before the minister leaves the statistics, I may say that I have a question on the order paper and in view of the fact the minister has the statistics here could he say what were the total stocks of butter on January 1, 1952; 1953; 1954; 1955 and 1956. The other question is, what were the government-owned stocks on those dates? If the minister has those figures, I should like to have them.

Mr. Gardiner: I do not know that I can give the figures for the government-owned stocks. I would have preferred to bring out the figures at the time we were discussing the item. What were the years the hon. member mentioned?

Mr. Blair: I mentioned 1952, 1953, 1954, 1955 and 1956.

Mr. Gardiner: We have not 1956 as yet, and I have not 1955 here on this list which is the regular list that is published. The stocks as of January 1, 1950, were 56,134,000; 1951, 39,319,000; 1952, 64,974,000; 1953, 54,497,000; 1954, 71,312,000. I think I gave those figures in my earlier remarks. The one other which I also gave was 91,000,000 on January 1, 1955.

Mr. Brooks: You gave 10 million for 1956.

Mr. Gardiner: That is 1 million for 1956, 1,300,000, I think. I gave a figure a week or so later after we had sold some few million pounds to Germany, and it is still lower. You will find the figures with regard to that on Hansard. In addition to giving the figures now, I wanted to say those things with regard to butter.

Then, there was one other question which had been discussed here. People have said that I said certain things and I did not say other things. The other day we had some little discussion about what had been said in an article in the Winnipeg Free Press, so I brought the article along because it does set a point at which I can start a discussion on farm income. I can quite understand why the hon. member for Moose Mountain was misled by the statement he was reading from.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Apparently the farmers were, too.

Mr. Gardiner: No, they were not at all; but if you go back to it you will find that it is one of those things—I know my friends will laugh about it, but I had nothing to do with it. Therefore, you can laugh at somebody else. If you go back and read the article which emanated from Hamilton you will find you read the word which was there, and it is quite proper that you should do that. The word is "not", but if you read the article through you will see it is a typographical error. The word is "net", not "not". It goes on to say that I dealt with both net and gross cash income and indicated that maybe something else should have been done. They said the figures were correct, which is more, and the figures were correct.

The article which caused the discussion down in Hamilton is headed: "Not so hard up". You cannot find that in the article at all, even as reported in the press; except by leaving off half a sentence. Here is the sentence:

> Right Hon. James G. Gardiner, federal Minister of Agriculture, Monday stated that farmers are not as hard up "as some people would try to have us believe".

That is what I said. That does not really mean that they are not hard up. It does not really mean that they are not having difficulties, but it does mean they are not as hard up as some people are saying they are.

Mr. Nicholson: How hard is hard up?

Mr. Gardiner: Well, my hon. friend was not so hard up when he could pay income tax on his farm earnings, as he told us last night. I do not know anyone in Saskatchewan who should be harder up than the hon. member for Mackenzie when he is farming. You can figure that one out later.

Here is what they report me as having said:

> Mr. Gardiner said total income for Canadian farmers in the last five years was $13,037 million, the "highest by far we have ever had". For the previous five years gross income was $10,359 million. He noted there had been a 30 per cent increase in the most recent period. He added that the net farm income in the last five was $8,349 million compared with $6,636 million for the previous five years.

Then it goes on to say that I said something about butter.

Mr. Nicholson: Has the minister the figures for the last two years, because the five years would be unfair?

Mr. Gardiner: I am going to deal with all those figures and, with the permission of the committee, I shall put them on the record because many people who have not read them need to read them. I have read them all.

If I have the permission of the committee to do it, rather than read them all, I should like to put the figures on the record.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the minister permission to put the figures on the record?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gardiner: It seems a little difficult for some to analyse those figures when they are all on one big sheet. This is gross cash income. This is the sheet as published by the bureau of statistics. It gives all the provinces separately. By adding up the figures in the different periods you can get the results.

The net income is given on this sheet. It might be interesting to some hon. members to know that prior to 1938 they did not show net returns. I wondered whether that is owing to the fact that in the five years previous to that the highest cash income for farmers was $536 million, and the lowest was $412 million. I can quite understand that with that little cash coming in farmers probably did not have any net income. They probably had less than a net income. Therefore, I have no figures back beyond 1938 for net income. The figures of gross cash income are here right back to 1926.

In order to answer some of the things that have been said—and before doing that may I say I read it in the Regina Leader-Post which came yesterday. It was not put out by me, it was put out by the organization that my friends from Saskatchewan have been quoting in the last couple of weeks, namely, the Saskatchewan wheat pool. They call attention to the fact that there was a drop of $400 million in farm income in this country in the years referred to. They refer to the $400 million drop in income in the three prairie provinces, and they say there was an increase in all the rest of Canada.

I want to put on the record the figures that I have here which were taken from the farm cash income and net income sheet published by the statistics branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

[1] Excludes Newfoundland.

I shall deal with the maritime provinces by themselves. In the first year we have here they start out with income of $35 million, and they finish up with income of $120 million. There is a gradual rise every year, beginning with 1936. There is not a single decrease until you get to 1948, and then it is $105 million. In 1949 it is $100 million. It goes up again in 1950 to $108 million. As one goes along—

Mr. Brooks: May I ask a question? Can the minister tell us the difference between the purchasing power of a dollar in 1935 and 1950?

Mr. Gardiner: I am sure you will do that; I do not need to.

Mr. Brooks: It makes quite a difference, anyway.

Mr. Gardiner: There is a gradual increase in farm income from 1936 until you get to 1952.

Mr. Nicholson: Gross or net?

Mr. Gardiner: It is gross. The net is here, too.

In 1951 it took quite a jump in the maritimes. It went up to $121 million; and in 1952 it went up a little higher, to $126 million; and then it dropped down again to $110 million, just $2 million higher than it was in the peak year before, 1951. In the next year it went up to $115 million; and the following year to $120 million. What are the facts in relation to that? The facts are that in the only two years in which it is out of line at all with the gradual increase are the two years when it went up higher. How is that going to hurt the farmer? What were those two years? Those two years were the years of the Korean war, and anyone could give the reasons why there was a higher income then. But whenever my friends make a comparison they take 1951, which, in any place but the maritimes, was the highest year of all. They take that year and then they calculate what it was last year, and they say it is down 23 per cent. Well, to say the least, that is not very helpful reasoning. I was almost going to say it is dishonest reasoning. I am inclined to think that that term could be applied, but if I applied it to any particular individual I suppose I would have to withdraw it.

But what about Ontario and Quebec? I have lumped them together. They start out at $258 million and they gradually go up every year from $258 million until 1950 when they reach $1,039 million, and there has not been a slump any time all the way up, and this government has been in power all the time, and not even the Duplessis government has been in power through all the time during that period.

In 1951 the income jumped by almost $200 million in those two provinces; it reached $1,224 million.

In 1952 it dropped down to $1,154 million and then the next year it started in at $1,112 million. The next year it was $1,113 million and the next year $1,133 million. There has not been any lapse in the advance at all except for the two years of the Korean war when it went up higher.

And so, as the wheat pool says in Regina, there has not been any going down of farm income on farms in general across Canada; the farm income has been higher year by year.

Now, coming to the prairie provinces, we started out at $272 million and I might call your attention to the fact that by 1944 we had got up to $1,058 million, all of which indicates that we had a very good crop in the years 1942 and 1943. We sold a lot of wheat and we had a much higher cash income that year than during any of the years up to then. It was $272 million in the first year and it gradually rose to $694 million in 1943 and then jumped to $1,058 million in 1944. That did not hurt us out west. We all recall that we have been boasting about the 1942-43 crop ever since, basing the enormous crop we did get on the fact that in 1941 we paid farmers to take their land out of crop and put it into summer fallow. In other words, we stored the grain not in elevators but in moisture in the land. The next years we produced wheat and did not have to pay any storage on it because the wheat was there. I should not say we did not pay any storage because we carried it until pretty near the end of the war but in that year we were producing a much bigger crop because we stored moisture in the ground to produce wheat and feed. We exported grain through hogs.

In 1945 we went back somewhat, to $851 million. We went down about $150 million and took a fresh start after those crops and we gradually went up again until we got to $1,264 million in 1949; that is a cash income.

You will remember that the 1949 crop was one of the poorest crops we ever had. Statistics show it was just as poor as some of the poorest crops we had in the drought period. The only reason we have not heard anything about it in this house is because wheat was so high in price at that time that it did not have the same effect on farmers that it had in the thirties. Nevertheless the crop was poor and this is shown in these figures.

In 1950 when we were selling a considerable part of that crop we dropped down to $973 million. In the next year, 1951, we went up higher than ever; $1,362 million. In 1952 it rose to $1,465 million and in 1953 we dropped down a little to $1,449 million although this is not too great a drop. In 1954 it was $1,045 million. Why? There are two reasons. One is the fact that we could not get all the wheat we had into the elevators and get anything on it and the other reason is that the crop was rusty all over the west.

I should like to remind those hon. members who think that is funny that what we did about it was to pay $32 million into western Canada under prairie farm assistance and $21 million of it, as much money as is now being paid out at 10 cents a bushel on the 1954 crop, was paid out in Saskatchewan in prairie farm assistance during the year 1955.

I think that is something that ought to be referred to when we are discussing this particular question concerning cash income and it has something to do with the fact that the income in 1955 was as high as it is, namely $995 million.

I have the British Columbia figures here which run pretty much along the lines of the figures for the maritimes and I shall just turn them in to be printed.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Is the minister including the figure paid under prairie farm assistance in the figure for 1954?

Mr. Gardiner: They were paid on account of 1954 but they were paid in 1955. We did not get the payment out in 1954 for reasons that are well known to hon. members, because of the rust. It took a long time to get the figures lined up and the payment was made in 1955.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Gardiner: Please let me finish and then I will answer questions. I wish to point out what the wheat pool said in the last statement it made which was just this week. It indicated that the $400 million drop represented in the figure for 1953 which was $1,449 million and in the figure for 1955, $995 million, represents the whole drop in farm income for the Dominion of Canada. No one can dispute those figures; they are there. And if you are going to quote from the statistics of the statistics branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce, then the figures ought to be quoted as they are and not as someone gave them in Hamilton or anywhere else. Those are the correct figures and I do not think any hon. member from western Canada, whether he sits on this side of the house or on the other, is helping the western farmer when he tries to apply that situation to all the farmers in Canada; it is brought about by a situation which developed on the prairies in relation to wheat.

There is one other fact which ought to be kept in mind. When I was speaking—

Mr. Nicholson: Before the minister leaves the statistics I wonder if during the recess he would get the percentage of farmers in all of Canada who paid income tax and also the percentage of Canadian farmers who had a net income of less than $1,000 and between $1,000 and $2,000. Would the minister get those figures?

Mr. Gardiner: My friend put that on the record twice this session within my hearing and I do not know why I should put it on again. In any case the work of the Department of Agriculture is to encourage production of a proper kind, to see that our production is properly graded and then arrange for the sale of products which are sold within Canada. Then we have the Department of Trade and Commerce arrange for the sale of products outside of Canada if we have surpluses.

I am going to say what I said a few moments ago. I know where my hon. friend farms, I know his farm. He said yesterday that he paid income tax. I am going to repeat that is probably the explanation for some of the figures he gave as to why there are so many farmers in Saskatchewan who have had to pay income tax. But they are not paying that income tax this year unless they did what most good farmers in Saskatchewan do. Good farmers in Saskatchewan, since we have had income taxes to pay, carry their wheat along knowing that they can average their income over the years by not delivering all the wheat that they happen to grow in a good year; they can deliver some of it when they would not have any income at all if they did not have that wheat.

Mr. Argue: I thought all farmers were good farmers.

Mr. Gardiner: Most of them are, but there are a few who are exceptions or who use up too much of their time doing something else to be really good farmers. But the fact of the matter is that these farmers are getting a certain income and we should indicate that they are getting it. Because income is down $400 million in the three western provinces because of wheat, we should not come out and say that everybody else is suffering, that as a result of that every other farmer is suffering. It is all very well to say that the implement dealer is suffering as a result of not being able to sell so many implements;

it is all very well to say that others are suffering, that people in business are suffering; but to say that the farmers down in Nova Scotia or Quebec or Ontario are suffering because the returns for wheat are down $400 million is going a little too far.

Mr. Nicholson: Will the minister permit another question? I gather that the minister has been trying to establish that farmers in Canada on the whole are in a strong economic position, that they have not been affected by conditions in the west.

Mr. Gardiner: I am not trying to establish anything, I am giving the absolute facts and hon. members should establish them in their own minds. These are the only facts anyone can get because they are put out by the only organization that is putting out such facts. Those facts are there.

Mr. Zaplitny: Will the—

Mr. Gardiner: If you will just let me continue. I did not have a very nice time last night trying to break in on some of you chaps. If you will let me go on and finish then you can ask your questions.

That is the position in so far as that matter is concerned. I wanted to say it and I wanted to add to that the figures on net income. I am not going to read this if I can have permission to put them on Hansard. They tell pretty much the same story. I did ask the officials in the department why they did not produce a net worth statement. You got me by the point you wanted to get me by, but I must come back to it.

I made a statement the other day which was questioned by hon. members on the other side. I stated at the conference held last December that real income,—not cash income and not net income—which appears on these sheets—in 1955 would be just as high as the real income of the farmer in 1953. Since those returns came out I have found editorial writers right across Canada coming out and saying that Gardiner was wrong again.

They did not use the real income, they did not use the term total income. After quoting it in the first line of their statement of what I said, they ignored the term and criticized on the basis of cash income. Every farmer in western Canada knows that there is very little relationship between the cash income today of a farmer on the western prairies and his real income. He is not getting cash in spite of the fact he is getting wheat. I therefore come back to the thought that net worth gives a better check than gross or net cash income.

The figures given to me based on that thought are these:

> The attached copy of "Balance Sheet of Canadian Agriculture" contains all the information available to arrive at net worth of Canadian farmers. Much of the information is missing, such as farmers' investments outside of the farm and debt other than to mortgage companies and government loan agencies.
> However, the available information indicates that in 1950:
>
> Farmers' physical assets were (excluding off-farm investment) $8,696,303,000
> Known debts were 458,155,000
> Known net worth $8,238,148,000
> While in 1954:
> Farmers' physical assets were (excluding off-farm investment) $10,381,438,000
> Known debts were 558,858,000
> Known net worth $9,822,580,000

What I want to point is that that statement indicates what men have in their minds when they are talking about net income. It is not total income at all. The net worth statement is the statement which indicates the advancement the farmer has made in that period. While in 1950 it was $8,238 million, in 1954 it was $9,822 million, or $1,500 million higher. That to my mind is a conclusive answer.

When I asked our people why they did not have a net worth statement such as they have in the United States the only answer I got was that it costs a lot of money to get it, that you must have quite a set-up in order to get it. Up to now we have not considered it to be worth while.

What I want to say to hon. members is, as I stated at the conference in December, that the real income of the farmers of Saskatchewan in 1954 and 1955 is the wheat which they grew multiplied by the value of that wheat per bushel, whether the wheat is on their land or wherever else it is. What this government is doing is attempting to have it made more valuable for them by taking up some of the costs of carrying it. I do not know how anyone can work out any better plan in order to deal with the situation as it exists.

I should have quoted another sentence on this sheet which is as follows:

> Some of the increase in net worth is due to increased land values (almost $1 billion) while some is due to increased investment in machinery, $616 million. Livestock inventory values, however, have declined by $180 million since 1950.

Put those facts all together and you get some idea whether the farmer is advancing or whether he is going backward in connection with his operations up to the present. When I talk to farmers out west I always have in my mind a statement made by Sir Wilfrid the first time I ever heard the old gentleman making a speech. He repeated that statement in this house many times. It was made at a settlement where there were some half-breed people, some French-speaking people and some English-speaking people. He said something that one of those people repeated to me the first time I went around looking for votes in 1914. A person said, "When Sir Wilfrid was here in 1895 he said to us, 'Your pony is worth $25; put us in power and it will be worth $100' ". He said when Sir Wilfrid came back in 1910 we were getting $100 for a bronco. He went on to say, "A cayuse is worth $100 to me; I am going to vote for you." Sir Wilfrid said more than that. He said, "People are going around trying to tell you that you are no better off than you were before." He said, "All I know about it is that when we came in, all you had to do to find out whether you were wealthy or not was to put your hand in your pocket and there was nothing there, but now when you go to town or go out and want to play pool or do some of the things you like to do you can put your hand in your pocket and you find coins there." Exactly the same situation exists today.

If one wants to compare the present period with the period before this government came in he will recall that when we were at a public meeting all they talked about was the fact that they had no cash, whether it came from—

An hon. Member: You can play pool.

Mr. Gardiner: I think I could beat my hon. friend at that. The fact is that at that time we did not have cash. Our friends in the official opposition did do something about it, they paid 5 cents a bushel on all wheat.

An hon. Member: That was a compensating adjustment.

Mr. Gardiner: Yes, 5 cents a bushel on all wheat produced in the province of Saskatchewan in that very difficult year, 1931, I think it was. The result was that the people who were farming in the community that the hon. member for Mackenzie comes from got $2 an acre because they had 40 bushels to the acre whereas people living down near the district that the hon. member for Assiniboia comes from had nothing and did not get anything. That is the way it was handled at that time. I do want to point out that in the way it is being handled now it does not have that kind of result. Farmers in areas where there is a good crop do get a price eventually even if they are not able to get it all in one year. In the areas where the farmer has little or no crop there is prairie farm assistance to the extent of the $32 million that he got last year and he has other assistance as well which helps him and puts him in a position where he has cash in his pocket. The policies we have been discussing for the last two or three days do the same thing.

I am going to conclude by saying that I think the department has done a very good job over the last 20 years and it is a very simple matter to show anybody that they have because we are spending ten times as much to assist agriculture now as any government, Liberal or Conservative, ever spent before. You may argue that it is not all being well spent, as I suppose some of you will, but nevertheless most of the farmers think that it has been at least fairly well spent and that the intention to do something for them is just ten times as great as it was under any other government we have had, Liberal or Conservative. Therefore they are fairly well contented when the right picture is put before them. I suggest to my friends that when they get Hansard tomorrow with the tables therein they examine the tables very carefully. I think they will find the argument I have made is absolutely sound. As we go along through the estimates I will be prepared to discuss any of these matters in detail.

The Deputy Chairman: In order that there may be no misunderstanding, is it agreed that the minister has been given consent to place on Hansard the various tables of figures from which he has been quoting?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: I see several hon. members rising to their feet and I propose to recognize the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand to make the next speech, but if there are pure questions of clarification of the remarks made by the minister and they are restricted to that I think it might help if we had them now.

Mr. Zaplitny: With respect to the net worth calculations that the minister gave, what basis was used for calculating the physical assets of the farmers of Canada?

Mr. Gardiner: What basis did I use? I did not use a basis at all. The bureau of statistics used it, and I suppose they used the same basis as any similar organization uses in figuring these things.

Mr. Zaplitny: The question is, what was the basis? Is it the basis that the income tax department uses or did they have a basis of their own?

Mr. Gardiner: This is not from the income tax branch. It is from the statistics branch.

Mr. Cardiff: I should like to ask the minister this question. Can he give us the percentage of the gross national product according to population that the farmers got in the last year or two?

Mr. Gardiner: I cannot give that offhand. I gave the total figure but I did not give it in proportion to the gross income.

Mr. Hahn: I have tried on more than one occasion to get the minister's attention to have him put the British Columbia figures for agriculture on the record as he did for the maritimes, the central provinces and the prairies. I would appreciate it if we could have that.

Mr. Gardiner: It will be all on the record tomorrow.

Mr. Hahn: It does not help very much today when the figures for the other provinces have already been given.

Mr. Gardiner: I could give you one copy but I have not got one for everybody.

Mr. Carter: I should like to clarify one point arising out of the figures the Minister of Agriculture put on the record this morning. The figures indicated a steady increase in net income over a period of years, but certain members of the opposition said that during that time the purchasing power of the dollar had depreciated. Can the Minister of Agriculture tell us whether the number of farmers sharing that net income has decreased to a point where the average individual income of a farmer would be keeping pace with the depreciation in the dollar?

Mr. Gardiner: In the first place I should like to correct the suggestion that I read the net income figures on the record. I did not read them. They are to go on the record, but the figures I read were cash income. The net income figures will be included in the table. I did say that the net income figures bore out the same argument I was making. With regard to the number of farmers, if you just take the two figures that are given the statistics indicate that there were not as many farmers in Canada in 1951 as there were in 1941. However, I am not too sure that gives the right picture because in 1941 all the land you had to have in order to be a farmer was one acre whereas under the 1951 census you had to have three acres. I believe those are the figures. That lops off a lot of persons who some people would say at once are not farmers. I am not too sure whether or not it is correct to do that, but that was what was done. I cannot say definitely how many farmers there are in any particular province now compared with the past, taking exactly the same basis to check them, but in looking at the situation in my own district I find it is pretty difficult to get anybody off the farm. I have been trying to buy one for quite a few years and I have not been able to do so.

Mr. Brooks: Come down to New Brunswick.

Mr. Gardiner: That is too far away for me. However, that is the indication in our area. The same farm families who homesteaded the land are still on it in most cases, which is another fact that should be remembered. Whether or not that applies to New Brunswick I do not know but it applies in Huron where I was born. I go back there to visit the people living there now and the people living on the old Gardiner homesteads are nearly all relatives of mine.

Mr. Cardiff: That is the best place you have ever lived.

Mr. Gardiner: Oh, it is a good place.

Mr. Philpott: Could I ask one question about the figures for margarine in Quebec? Some of us were under the impression that the sale of margarine in Quebec was illegal.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): In view of the fact the committee has given unanimous consent to the minister to extend his remarks, and since he has explained the situation with respect to butter at some length but has not made any reference to hogs and eggs, I wonder whether he would give us a resumé of the situation regarding those two important commodities and the question of floor prices.

The Deputy Chairman: Before the minister answers, in fairness to the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand, whom I indicated I intend to recognize, I think I should reiterate that I thought the committee as a whole would like me to enable members to clear up some points they tried to raise during the course of the minister's remarks and which he requested be left to the end. However, the hon. member is raising entirely new subjects and as I do not think we are going to complete this particular item before lunch I now see the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand.

Mr. Charlton: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I know we are all very much interested in the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture. He said, of course, that the figures he gave were irrefutable, but I will say that they can be very misleading. I am not going to try to refute any of the figures the minister has given. However, I just want to point out to him that he ignored or practically ignored the fact that margarine came into this country about 1948 or 1949, I believe it was, and that those butter figures have increased considerably ever since then. I think probably he is ignoring that fact when he figures out how much butter must be held over in order to—according to the expression that has been used—keep the pipe line filled. The minister has coined several new expressions today and they are extremely interesting. But when he says that they need 78 million pounds of butter in order to make sure that the consuming public will have all the butter they need, I still say he is losing sight of the fact that the consumption of margarine has increased to almost 10 pounds per capita, as I understand it.

In reference to the dominion-provincial conference—and the minister made some slight reference to it—I should like to suggest sincerely that that conference has been of great value—and I will admit that—for the purpose for which it was set up back in the war years. But now I would say that it has simply become a listening conference, to a great degree; it has become a conference listening to dominion officials with long speeches and masses of figures. I think it could serve a useful purpose if committees were set up and some solutions to the various problems were worked out when all these various ministers and officials are here from all across the dominion. I think it would be advantageous to the minister himself and to his departmental officials to have the results which might be achieved by these committees meeting and working on the various problems.

We now come to the statement the minister made on farm income. As I said before, Mr. Chairman, figures can be most misleading. In the first place, all the figures the minister gave to us were gross figures, as he suggested just previously in answer to the Newfoundland member. Does the minister realize what the net position of the farmers is? I should like to ask the minister to define this term "real income". I do not know, but apparently it is a net worth statement. I have always heard of gross income and net income but I had never before heard the term "real income" used. I should like to hear the minister define "real income" and to find out whether it is other than a net worth statement.

This gross income figure means little. I will leave it to the good judgment of the farmers in eastern Canada to answer the minister and to say whether they agree with him when he says that they are better off now than they ever were before. The figures that he gave would indicate that situation. They would indicate that their income has increased practically every year since he became Minister of Agriculture. Of course he forgets that the country has been going ahead in spite of the fact that any particular government was in power and that the value of a dollar now is less than 50 per cent of what it was in former years. I should also like to ask him if he agrees that there is a parity price. On one occasion previously he admitted in the house that he did not know the definition of parity and that probably nobody else did.

Mr. Gardiner: Not exactly that. I said that none of us agree as to what it ought to be.

Mr. Charlton: That could be said for many things other than parity price. I am using the figure set forth by Dr. Hannam of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture when he says that at the present time—and he made this statement last fall at the dominion-provincial conference—we are back within one point of the position we were in back in 1940. He was referring to the parity price position of the farmers across Canada. That is the only meaningful statement that we can take for actual net worth, namely that the parity position of farmers across Canada is within one point of the position we were in back in 1940. Would the minister suggest that the eastern farmers are now in as good a position as they have ever been in?

Mr. Gardiner: You will notice that I did not say that. It was you who said it. I said that the figures spoke for themselves.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, the minister often misleads with figures. By the use of figures he certainly intimated that the eastern farmer was now in better condition or in a better position than he had ever been in previously because he said the $400 million loss was entirely in the western provinces.

Mr. Gardiner: That is a different thing. I proved that he had more cash than he ever had in that period of time but that does not prove that he is better off.

Mr. Charlton: I am glad to hear the minister make that admission, because I am going to leave it to the farmers of eastern Canada to say whether or not they are better off. I do not care what the minister says. I do not think many people will agree with him. I notice that the minister just patted his own back a little bit for the fact that these figures were so good since he had come into power. I suggest to him sincerely that he is probably the only one that is patting his back because few farmers across Canada today are doing so. I wonder whether the minister deducted the 5 per cent interest they are going to have to pay on the loans before he came to the net worth statement of the western farmers?

Then we have the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce made the other day in the House of Commons. I know that I am not supposed to quote from a previous debate in this house but I can at least put it in my own words. I would hate to agree with the minister when he stated in effect that the Canadian economy was travelling in the highest gear possible at this time. I would hate to think that we are going to stand still from now on. In spite of what government is in power, I think Canada has a great future and that it is going to go ahead and not stand still.

He also suggested that if we had had a dry spring or a dry summer last year, the situation would have been far different than it was in relation to wheat and butter, that there might have been a deficit position or a scarcity in the supply of wheat and butter. I was under the impression that the minister was here in Ottawa last May, June and July. But apparently he was just in the city. Never in the history of the Ottawa valley has there been a drier year than last year, practically speaking. That statement applies not only to the Ottawa valley but to practically all of the province of Ontario, and the province of Quebec. Last spring and last summer were practically the driest in history. Yet the minister apparently did not know it or did not realize it. He said that if it had been a dry year last year we would probably have had a deficit in butter. I suggest to him that it did not make much difference to the farmers and apparently it does not make too much difference in their production figures. They now have other means of feeding cattle and are not dependent purely on pasture.

We have heard a considerable amount about the crystal ball, Mr. Chairman. Apparently this is just another case where the ministers and the members on the other side of the house are still gazing into the crystal ball. Few people have any faith in that form of political daydreaming and the conjuring up of mythical pictures. They are too easily beclouded with political expediency.

During the depression years the farmers survived, and in many cases only survived, by living on their capital and allowing their properties to deteriorate practically to the point of destruction. That is the only way they existed. Then, the war came along and the demand for food was increased tremendously. They had very good prospects of recouping some of the money they had lost during the previous years. But what did the government do? They set a ceiling price on all farm products. They froze prices. It was, therefore, impossible for the farmers to recoup during those years. Then, scarcities began to arise and the government was forced into a position of paying subsidies to induce greater production of farm commodities.

At that time the Prime Minister of the day assured farmers across this country that if they would not expect high prices, would not squeeze the last nickel for farm products, they would not suffer after the war. Prices would be sufficient to give the farmers a good income. The farmers across Canada accepted the challenge and produced more than they ever produced in history. They made a handsome contribution to the war effort by working long hours, sometimes under conditions that were not too good. However, the government could not control costs, and what happened? The price-cost position became poorer and poorer, and the net income of the farmer diminished. What did the farmer do? He did what he always does when he arrives at that position: he tried to produce more on the land he was using in order to make up the decrease in income. By hard work and improved methods, yields were increased considerably.

Then, we found we had surpluses. A very small surplus, Mr. Chairman, can cause a great depression in price. Around 1949 I had the privilege of visiting the western provinces. At that time and previous to that time we had been suggesting from this side of the house that we were losing, as a matter of fact, had lost, many of our British markets. This government laughed at us. They did not say we were lying, but they said everything else that meant the same thing. They said it was not true. In the west apparently the Minister of Agriculture and the various cabinet ministers travelling out there had the people believing there was no truth in that statement. Election time came, and you know the results.

The minister was in my home town of Brantford on December 7 of that year. At a meeting there the minister finally admitted what he had known for two years, and he admitted it not in the House of Commons but in a speech at Brantford. The speech was made to the Brantford board of trade on December 7, 1949. The minister said, and I quote:

> During the last two years a very decided official effort has been made to drive every one of these products (pork, cheese, beef, eggs, etc.) off the British market. And now that the four-year wheat contract is drawing to a close an effort is being made to drive off a considerable part of our wheat as well.

Before the election, Mr. Chairman, we were called practically every kind of prevaricator for even suggesting that was the case. After the election the minister admits the truth of the situation and then blames officials, apparently, from Great Britain for trying to push these products off the British market. It is for that reason I made the suggestion many times that members of this government, particularly members of this cabinet, are paying more attention to politics than they are to the country. It has been said often that only big men will admit mistakes. This government has no agriculture policy. It just has a carpetbag appeal to various sections of the country. Apparently when ministers are going to visit various sections of the country they grab the bag for that particular section and go and make their speech. What a grab bag that is. One thing is quite clear: politics is always uppermost in their minds.

Now, we have the famous cheese import fiasco of last year. I notice it is one o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, at one o'clock I had just mentioned the cheese imports of 1955. I should like to go back for a moment to another matter which must be interpreted as government policy. I refer to a statement issued by the Minister of Agriculture in the dominion-provincial agricultural conference in 1953. I should like to quote a statement that appeared in the Globe and Mail of November 25, as follows:

> And most of Canada's surplus wheat still will go to Britain. Some might argue that Canada no longer has any large market in Britain. "But you can say," Mr. Gardiner told the delegates, "that we have the biggest market we've ever had in Britain."
> Mr. Gardiner felt that the best answer to questions raised at the conference "is to go out and produce what you are best able to produce."

It is obvious that at that time this government was paying no attention to any increase in surpluses. They said to the farmers: "Go out and produce what you are best able to produce". Apparently that has been the attitude right straight through.

With regard to the cheese imports last year, in the face of a terrific job being done by the Ontario cheese producers to try and market their own cheese and to keep their own domestic prices up to the reasonable figure of 30 cents, we were told at that time that we must buy cheese or some product from New Zealand to help keep our trade in balance with that country. I should like to ask the minister why it is that the farmer always has to bear the brunt of those trade balances? We buy on the protected market and we sell on the open market.

This morning I made some reference to income, and I should like to add just a word to it at this time. It appears obvious now that the minister has come up with another gimmick. It is not a new one. But if his figures were true this morning, and if he had found them soon enough he might not have had to go back five years to get the average farm income. The minister has been doing that ever since 1951 and 1952. I do not think it is fair to go back and pick out the good year of 1951 to calculate farmers' income.

In 1952 he took the 2-year average; in 1953, the 3-year average; in 1954, the 4-year average; and this year, the 5-year average. I wonder how long the minister is going to have to keep on doing that? I assume until another good year, and then he will stop and take that year alone. You know, Mr. Chairman, it reminds me of a man who has had a bleeding attack. He does not lose much blood the first day, a little more the second, third and fourth day, but on the fifth day the minister comes along and, since the average for the five days is not great, he says: "You are O.K.; you do not need any attention".

I hold in my hand a copy of the Economic Annalist of December, 1955, volume No. 6. I should like to quote figures on farm prices. In 1951, the index stood at 296·8; in 1952, 274·4; in 1953, 250·4; in 1954, 233·4. There was a steady decline. The monthly figure is given up to only September, 1955, in this issue. If you calculate the average for each month you will arrive at an average figure of 225·8 for 1955, so that there is a decrease from 253·4 to 225·8 in 1955. The consumer price index has risen from 113·7 to 116·8, and the commodities and services used by farmers, the composite, has increased from 230 to 241·3. That gives the story in a nutshell that the farmer is not as well off now as he was a few years ago. As Dr. Hannam of the federation of agriculture says, he is back practically to where he was in 1940.

I have another interesting figure on floor prices. First of all, there are the non-agricultural subsidies, and then the agricultural subsidies cost. All I am going to do is to give the figures of the percentage of these total subsidies. These are taken from the dominion bureau of statistics. Mind you, this is not the total money paid out to various people, but is what is regarded as a strict subsidy. The percentage of subsidies paid to agriculture in the year 1946 was 44 per cent of the total. In the year 1947, 36 per cent; in 1948, 44 per cent; in 1949, 37 per cent; in 1950, 53 per cent; in 1951, 74 per cent; in 1952, 64 per cent; in 1953, 58 per cent; in 1954, 40 per cent. This is the last figure we have. This will give hon. members some idea of the actual figure in percentages of the subsidies that are paid to agriculture. Do not let it be said that agriculture is the only industry that is being subsidized across the country. In only two or three years was the figure over 50 per cent, and two of those years were the years when foot-and-mouth disease had a great deal of effect upon them.

The next figure that I should like to give is the cost of the floor prices having to do strictly with butter. It has been said that a tremendous amount of money has been paid out by the taxpayers of this country to pay subsidies on butter. I shall give the cost per capita in the various years to pay the entire loss on butter by the prices support board. In 1950 it was ·025 cents per capita; in 1951, ·01 cents; in 1952, ·003 cents; in 1953, ·09 cents; and in 1954, ·003 cents. If you work it out on the basis of a family of four, which is quite reasonable, you will find that the cost, in the case of a married man, in 1950, was ·10 cents; in 1951, it was ·4 cents; in 1952, ·1 cent; in 1953, ·36 cents; and in 1954, ·1 cent. I venture to say, Mr. Chairman, that if it were not for the floor price on butter the price could go up as high as 80 or 90 cents in the winter months, and the full cost and more could be wiped out in one pound of butter.

I say to the minister that he is practicing a form of hypnotism. I do not know whether I should call it that, but if it is that, then he is a master of that profession. This form of hypnotism is also a big club. It is not quite so obvious when used in that form. It would appear, however, that either fear of reprisals or hesitancy to embarrass this government has softened the voices of some of the executives of some farm organizations across the country. Divide and conquer is this government's theme song, playing one group against the other, or one section of the economy against the other.

I commend the hon. member for Waterloo North on the speech he made in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, which is to be found at page 449 of Hansard. At least, I commend him on part of that speech, on that part having to do with vegetable oils and animal fats. I wish him luck in getting the government to accept his proposal. A similar suggestion was made to the dairy farmers of Canada in Vancouver in 1953 but they apparently did not want to accept it.

I see my time is just about up, Mr. Chairman. I just have this to say. This government has bogged down in many departments. Time is running out and the truth is catching up to them. The farmers of Canada want a definite statement of policy, not a piecemeal day-by-day scheme.

Mr. Bryson: I am sure that after listening to the extended remarks made this morning by the Minister of Agriculture all of us feel that we have been pretty well buttered up. That is one of the products which is bringing some real benefit to agriculture because it is supported under the Agricultural Prices Support Act and I am only sorry that other livestock products are not receiving the same consideration.

I thought it was rather significant that the minister did not bring up in the house this morning the question of supporting the price of hogs in Canada. I am not going to deal with any aspect of the minister's department other than that. I am bringing this up with a view to getting some clarification from the minister because I am sure that throughout the country there are grave doubts particularly in the minds of hog producers as to why things are as they are in respect of this so-called support price we have been led to believe is in effect in this country relative to hog production.

I think we will all have to agree that the production of pork in Canada is of considerable significance in the over-all economic position of agriculture. I have a few figures here which I am going to quote a little later on to bear out that statement. This, of course, is not a question which is of particular concern to any one section of the country; hog production is pretty well scattered over the entire dominion. However, it is of some extra significance to those of us in western Canada in the light of the fact that we have great quantities of feed grain in the west which we can dispose of to our advantage through feeding that grain to hogs. Sometimes when we look at the price of pork it appears on the surface that the possibilities of obtaining a profit are remote, but when we look at the price in relation to the price of barley and the difficulty of getting rid of barley and other feed grain then the question of hog production begins to take on a completely different complexion.

I think we are all interested in seeing that prices for hogs are maintained at the highest possible level because of the fact, as I mentioned a moment ago, that we can get rid of thousands of bushels of feed grain by feeding it to hogs.

In 1946 we had a tremendous export market for hogs. In fact, I think we exported to Great Britain alone some 694 million pounds of pork in round figures. However, since that time our export markets have fallen off sharply; as a matter of fact, we are not exporting any pork to Great Britain at the moment.

In 1951 hog marketing in Canada amounted to $251 million; in 1952 it amounted to $263 million and in 1953 it amounted to $238 million, a small drop in the returns for that year.

During the years 1951 and 1952 the hog-barley ratio—and that is something I shall mention a little later on—was quite favourable toward the production of hogs. The hog-barley ratio is something that has been developed over the years and it has become a sort of yardstick by which hog producers can ascertain with some degree of accuracy what the chances are of their realizing a profit out of feeding feed grains, especially barley, to pigs.

The hog-barley ratio is the number of bushels of No. 1 feed barley that equals 100 pounds of grade B1 pork plus the premium and over the years it has become an established principle. In these two years 1951 and 1952 the hog-barley ratio was such that there were fair prospects that the farmers could make a profit. In this regard I should like to mention that the hog-barley ratio is also used in the maritimes and other places in Canada to calculate the prospects of making a profit out of hog production.

On this point I should also like to mention a matter raised by the hon. member for Westmorland who yesterday continually reminded us of the fact that the taxpayers of Canada were subsidizing the western farmers in respect to the storage bill with which we were dealing. In this connection I would point out that we in western Canada have shipped $234 million worth of grain to the maritimes and to eastern Canada all of which received a freight subsidy paid for by the taxpayers of Canada. I believe that is a good principle and I hope it continues. I was sorry last year when the minister cut his appropriation in that regard. This is one of the things which eastern members possibly overlook.

Early in 1953 the government reduced the floor price on hogs across Canada to $23, 100 pounds for grade A hogs f.o.b. Toronto and Montreal. I feel if we are going to have a support price and if that support price is to mean anything, then this drop to $23 from the original $26, which it was prior to 1953, was completely unjustified if we are going to live up to the spirit and the letter of the act as laid down in 1944. I refer, of course, to the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

We must remember that in 1953 barley was worth $1.22 a bushel and the long-term average for the hog-barley ratio is 18 bushels. In other words, it took 18 bushels of No. 1 feed barley to equal in value 100 pounds of B1 pork. With a little calculation you can see it would have taken $29.77 worth of barley to equal 100 pounds of B1 pork at that time. Nevertheless in the face of that the government thought it necessary to drop the support price from $26 to $23 and I say it was completely unjustified if they are going to live up to the letter of the regulations in the Agricultural Prices Support Act. I am going to refer to that a little later on in order to elaborate and expand this point.

The question now arises, why did the government drop the price from $26 to $23? Obviously there must have been some reason; at least we must assume there was a reason.

In the November issue of the Current Review, which is a publication of the economic division of the Department of Agriculture, the minister's own department, we find that in 1955 the price of hogs dropped disastrously. As a matter of fact, some of the figures I have, indicate that pork dropped $7.77 from June 1 up until a month or two ago.

In this review which I have mentioned and which was sent out by the minister's department, we find that in 1955 there were 18 per cent more hogs on farms in Canada than there were in 1954. In the province from which I come there were 32 per cent more hogs than in 1954. Immediately it will be said that much of the reason for the drastic drop which I mentioned in hog prices was because of that increase, but if we look further into the review which I mentioned a moment ago we find that that is not exactly the case.

We find that the total disappearance of meat in Canada in 1955 amounted to something over 119 million pounds more than in the year before. It is interesting to note that of the 119 million pounds of meat which disappeared in 1955, 86 per cent was pork or 102,568,000 pounds. The total estimated pork production in 1955 according to their calculations was about 105 million pounds more than in 1954. Taking into account exports in 1955, which were in the neighbourhood of 4,500,000 pounds, we find that Canada ended up with about the same pork stock in 1955 as she had in 1954.

As I pointed out earlier, the figures for 1955 in connection with production disappearance, etc., were the same as in 1954, but the price at Winnipeg averaged $29 a hundred pounds for grade A in 1954. However, in 1955 the price steadily declined from $29 to $20 or less.

Here we see a completely unwarranted dislocation of pork prices because of the government's refusal, first to introduce a national livestock marketing act, or in the event that they could not see their way clear to do that to implement the provisions of the floor price legislation which was passed in 1944. The same thing can be said of other agricultural products, but I am not going to deal with those at the moment.

The minister will say, as he has said in this house, that we have a floor price under hogs. A great many other people are saying that. There is not a farmer in my part of the country, and I doubt if there is a farmer in the whole of western Canada, who does not believe that this government has established a floor price under pork. It is for that reason that I have brought this discussion before parliament today. I should like the minister to make some definite clarification, something he has not done in the past to my knowledge, to show just what the case is in respect to floor prices.

To justify my statement that people by and large believe that there is a floor price I should like to indicate what was stated at the dominion-provincial agricultural conference held in Ottawa on December 5, 6 and 7 last. Representatives of the ten provinces were present and it was stated that those ten agricultural representatives had argued that it was necessary to continue support prices for butter, eggs and hogs and the freight assistance on feed grain. Even those ten representatives of the provinces believed that there is a floor price under hogs. I question that very much and I hope the minister will clarify his position before this debate is over. If there is a floor price, why was it, in the face of the evidence which I produced a moment ago, that the price of $26 should have dropped to $23 when there was absolutely no justification for that drop?

The minister will say, as he said on one or two occasions just lately, that until the provinces enter into marketing agreements and set up marketing boards the hands of this government are tied in respect to floor prices. I wonder to what legislation the minister was referring when he said that the federal government will give assistance to the provinces when and if they set up marketing legislation.

I wonder if he was referring to the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act. Apparently he was, because of what he said in Saskatoon on April 24 when he was speaking to the members of the farmers' union. They had been giving a great deal of consideration to establishing a marketing board out there and the minister went out to give them some advice and answer a few questions. He outlined what the present federal legislation provided for if a marketing board was set up under provincial law. The report of this meeting continues:

> The co-operative marketing act of 1939 allowed the federal government to enter an agreement with a producer marketing board, whereby the government could guarantee up to 80 per cent of the average price over the preceding three years as an initial payment to the producer.
> However, Mr. Gardiner made it clear this was not a support price, and that the federal government would not wish to enter an agreement of this type whereby it would be continually subsidizing the producer.

Then the minister went on to say that the federal government did not have legislative power to set prices for producers. I challenge that statement. If the minister was indicating that if a province went ahead with a livestock marketing scheme the federal government under the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act, would come into the picture and that that would have some stabilizing influence on the price of hogs, then I have completely misinterpreted the act itself.

The Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act does not set floor prices. They only assume some responsibility; they give some assurance that if the price of a product falls below the average wholesale price for the past three years the government will come to the assistance of that organization to a maximum of 80 per cent. In the past that has been scaled down on a sliding basis and in reality it has been more like 60 per cent and I understand that at times less than 25 per cent. Therefore I suggest that no province is going to benefit from this legislation and to say that it will is a pretty nonsensical statement. I should like the minister to state if this is the act he had in mind when he said the other day that the federal government would assist the provinces if they set up marketing schemes. I hope he will make that clear today.

Then I wonder if the minister is referring to the Agricultural Prices Support Act which was introduced in 1944. There is nothing in the estimates this year to indicate that any money is going to be paid out under that act. I should like to see something in that respect. In the first instance this act was conjured up by the government during the war with the idea of giving some support to agricultural products. The government was given complete power to introduce such legislation during the transition period from war to peace. As has been quoted here on many occasions, Mr. King, the prime minister at that time, said:

> If, to help win the war, the farmers are asked to accept a ceiling on prices, we believe they are entitled to a floor under prices to insure them against an agricultural depression after the war.

As an essential part of its post-war policy, the government intends to ask parliament at the next session, to place a floor under the prices of the main farm commodities.

The first method of support provided in the act is the power to buy any designated agricultural product at a defined price. A second method of supporting prices is also provided for in the act and involves the determination of a price which is regarded as fair for a particular product for a particular period of time. Under the act how are they going to ascertain what is a fair price? I think this is the nub of the whole situation. The act has this to say in that regard:

. . . in prescribing prices . . . the board shall endeavour to ensure adequate and stable returns for agriculture by promoting orderly adjustment from war to peace conditions and shall endeavour to secure a fair relationship between the returns from agriculture and those from other occupations.

It would seem that the government has completely evaded its responsibility in this respect because every time that the price of hogs starts to approach the floor the floor is immediately dropped. We have seen that happen and we may see it happen again. I hope we do not. I hope the government is going to make some attempt at least to maintain some semblance of a floor under hogs throughout the country. I should like to see it go a little further than that. I should like to see the act really have some teeth in it.

There was a discussion in the house the other day regarding this very question, and I have yet to hear the minister make a clear and forthright statement as to just what the situation is. It seems to me there is a great deal of confusion in the mind of the minister and also in the minds of producers.

Mr. Studer: In the minds of the socialists.

Mr. Bryson: I am very glad to see that the hon. member—

Mr. Studer: The only place where there is confusion is in the minds of the socialists.

Mr. Bryson: —for Swift Current-Maple Creek has at last got over the terrific case of laryngitis he has had for the last two or three days—

Mr. Studer: I do not make socialist speeches.

Mr. Bryson: —during the debate on wheat. On January 31 it was brought to the attention of the minister that hog producers were receiving less than the floor price and at that time the minister said, as found at page 708 of Hansard:

In any case where the matter is brought to the attention of the Department of Agriculture the officials see to it that the proper price is paid and, of course, the farmer will not settle until he gets his premium and all the rest of it. That is all checked. The proper procedure is for the farmer or anyone receiving the certificate from the farmer to immediately send it to the prices board.

I am wondering how many farmers know that. Why is it that the farmers are continually receiving less than the floor price? I am still getting these receipts and they are from different companies, Canada Packers, Intercontinental Packers, Burns and others. Why is it that the farmers are not made acquainted with this regulation? It looks to me as if the floor price is being maintained because of some tacit understanding between the government and the packers. I have never seen instructions posted anywhere advising producers that they have this recourse.

Mr. Trainor: You advise them.

Mr. Studer: Why do the socialists not go into the packing business?

Mr. Bryson: Of course we know that the minister was quite concerned about it. This is not the first time it has happened. It happened in 1953 when the floor was dropped from 26 to 23 cents. I hope the minister will make a clear and forthright statement today as to just what the condition of affairs is with relation to the floor price, because I know that not one farmer in western Canada realizes there is any such machinery set up whereby he can be recompensed for the difference between what he receives and the so-called floor price.

Mr. Gardiner: If my hon. friend will permit me, when he says there is not a farmer in western Canada who knows what the condition is he is saying there is not a farmer in the pool organization of western Canada because the pool has all the information and they are in a position to inform individuals as to how to proceed.

Mr. Bryson: I am still not satisfied.

Mr. Gardiner: You never will be.

Mr. Bryson: In reply to a question by the hon. member for Yorkton the minister said, as found at page 790 of Hansard:

The floor price is made available at the stockyard. Any person delivering hogs in Saskatchewan can get the floor price at the stockyard and there is no excuse for anyone not getting it provided he takes the hogs there.

This again I cannot understand.

Mr. Studer: Where do you take your hogs?

Mr. Bryson: I have delivered quite a lot of hogs in my time.

Mr. Studer: Where do you take them now?

Mr. Bryson: I take them where 90 per cent of the farmers take them, to the local stockyard. I unload them there and I do not go to Winnipeg. I do not know what the grade is going to be until they are hung up on the rail and the government grader grades the hogs.

Mr. Studer: Is that a pool stockyard?

Mr. Bryson: I should like to know what instructions the farmer has ever received that he can get the difference between the $18.75 as found on this slip I have—

Mr. Gardiner: If, instead of getting up here, you will ask every farmer to be sure to go to the pool organization at the stockyard in Melfort they will tell him what the situation is.

Mr. Bryson: Why should they send these slips to members of parliament if there is provision made for them to get the money through the regular channels? I cannot see any reason.

Mr. Gardiner: I can give you some reasons but I will not insult you by doing so.

Mr. Bryson: In any case, I think it has to be admitted that there is a great deal of confusion and I still wish the minister would explain to me how he can get up in the house and say there is a floor price when the price of hogs starts to go down below the floor. He does not maintain the floor price. He drops the floor, as he has done on one or two other occasions. In my opinion we are in exactly the same position today as we were 20 years ago so far as the orderly marketing of hogs, cattle—

Mr. Studer: You are in the dark.

Mr. Bryson: —or any other livestock product is concerned. Until the government is prepared to introduce an over-all national livestock policy I do not see how we are going to get anything different from what we have today. A certain pattern has been followed for a great many years. It is the same old pattern and the losses and hardship suffered by the prairie farmer because of price instability are impossible to calculate. We know that they are great. Long-term production planning is impossible. It is not even practical to contemplate it in the face of price instability. When prices are low—this is the pattern we have seen over the years—breeding stock becomes scarce and the market appears to be rather favourable from the point of view of farmers going into the livestock industry, and that is exactly what they do. By absorbing stock from the market for breeding purposes the market is further depleted. Then we begin to see an increase in the price of livestock. Prices start to go up.

Instead of buying at high prices the packer takes advantages of the low prices and fills his lockers full of meat. His storage capacity is filled. When the farmer has completed his breeding program and starts to put his product on the market the packer will not buy it because in the meantime the price has started to rise. The packer uses the products he has stored in his plant during the period of low prices. That is the situation we face. The same cycle of events has taken place for the last 20 years. The farmer cannot hold back his product because it is perishable. He has to put it on the market, but the packer will not buy it because he does not have to buy it. He has plenty of meat in his locker.

Then we have the inefficient producer who went into the livestock business in the hope of high profits, and because of the price situation he cannot maintain his herd now that prices are falling. He has got to sell it, lock, stock and barrel. This further depresses prices to the point where the efficient producer is no longer able to carry on. These are the problems that we must face up to. Nothing that I have heard the minister say and in nothing that I have read in any of the acts that have been passed by this government do I find anything that will solve the problem. There is only one solution and it is this. We must have in this country an agricultural prices support policy on a national basis. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, before this debate is over I hope the minister will get to his feet once again and see whether he can give us a clear and forthright statement as to what constitute the support prices about which we hear so much.

Mr. Studer: You would not understand it anyway.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, I believe that all hon. members enjoyed the minister's opening statement. Ever since I came to the house 20 years ago it has been a matter of astonishment to me how enthusiastic the minister always is over what he has to tell.

Mr. Studer: He has something to boast about.

Mr. Blackmore: He becomes so completely optimistic that he convinces himself. In my particular area I do not find much justification for the glowing statement which the minister made pertaining to agriculture. However, it is not my purpose to undertake to find any particular fault with the minister's statement.

I wish to raise four matters which I believe the Canadian producers ought to face up to without much more delay. Many hon. members have brought to the attention of the house this year already the fact that there are vast numbers of people in the world who are not able to get the necessities of life. Some people say that one-half of the world's population is going to bed hungry every night.

Mr. Studer: Tell us a new one.

Mr. Blackmore: I am not saying that is true. I said that some people have said that. Will the hon. member question that statement? Mr. Chairman, we seem to have two or three members over yonder who are bubbling over with some sort of effervescence.

Mr. Studer: We should like to hear something new.

Mr. Blackmore: When I get through there is going to be plenty of time for the hon. member to get to his feet and talk.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): He is afraid to do so. He would show his stupidity.

Mr. Blackmore: What we are going to do as a nation in respect of this hunger is something concerning which I think we really should form some notion before it becomes too late. Either we are going to endeavour as a nation to participate in a movement to help to solve the problem of hunger among the peoples of less favoured lands or we are going to endeavour to live entirely to ourselves in the main and to limit our production to what we ourselves are able to consume.

Mr. Studer: How much are you producing?

Mr. Blackmore: As matters stand at the present time we are just about half-way between the two general attitudes. We talk about FAO and international distribution but we never do anything about it.

Mr. Studer: You cannot eat words.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I should sit down and let the hon. member have the floor?

Mr. Studer: That is a good idea.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Blackmore: Would the hon. member like the floor to himself?

Mr. Studer: Do something because you cannot eat words.

Mr. Blackmore: Would the hon. member like the floor to himself?

Mr. Studer: Talk sense and we will listen.

Mr. Blackmore: Would the hon. member like the floor? Some people are a standing reflection on the constituencies that send them here.

Mr. Studer: They produce more than words.

Mr. Weir: There is one man standing now.

Mr. Blackmore: My general feeling is that since hunger in the world is one of the major causes for unrest which can easily contribute to a state of world disorder that might sweep civilization off its feet, we should be contemplating the means whereby we can help in solving the problem of hunger among the underprivileged. If we are going to do that in any organized sort of way, I submit there are four main considerations which we ought to have before us in this session of parliament and from now on until we find a solution.

In the first place, we should give a great deal of study to storage. In due time I should like to ask the minister a number of questions with regard to his policy with respect to storage. Then we should consider orderly production. The hon. member who has just taken his seat has pointed out how difficult it is for anyone who desires to go into the hog producing business to know what to do. It seems that the prices stay up for a little while until men go into the production of hogs, and then they go down, resulting in tremendous loss to those who have invested in the hog producing business. Then they go up again and then they go down again. Several years ago we had a fall in prices which caused a tremendous amount of loss to the people in my area. I do not see any reason why we should not devise some means whereby all our producing could be on an orderly basis and not nearly so much a haphazard concern as it has been hitherto.

Then the matter of fertilizers is one which I think should be given the utmost attention. If we propose to pass this nation on to our descendants in anything like the condition of productivity which prevailed in the nation when we took over, we should give most careful attention to how to maintain the fertility of the soil. Then I think it is time that we knew something of the minister's ideas with respect to marketing abroad. I will give the minister credit for being the only member of the cabinet up to the present time whom I have heard say anything that indicated he was aware that there was need for devising means whereby to market abroad. I believe it was in 1952 that he made a statement something like this: If we cannot learn how to get our goods into the hands of those who need them, there must be something wrong with our ideas. I wish the minister had felt free to elaborate on the concept which he had in his mind when he made that statement because I am certain that the inability or the failure to get our goods into the hands of those who need them constitutes an evidence that the whole nation of us is lacking in ideas.

I should now like to give just a little bit of attention to each of those four general topics I have mentioned. We need to know what the minister is doing in respect of storage facilities. I have been greatly interested in the wheat problem as I believe have all members of the house. I have held that, in order to deal adequately with the wheat problem in a long-range manner, we ought to have storage on the farm so that the government could advance payments on grain stored on the farm. That storage ought to be such that the government could approve it. I should like it very much if the minister, not particularly now but when the time comes, will give the house a statement concerning the discoveries which his department has made in respect of storage facilities. We would like to know what is the best kind of storage facilities to put on the farm. Is it the quonset bin or what kind is it? What has the minister's department learned? What is it prepared to recommend? What would be the cost of erecting farm storage facilities capable of storing say 5,000 bushels of wheat?

Then, what has been done in respect of storing other kinds of food? Has the minister's department given consideration to the possibility of storing honey, for example, on the farm? Has the department considered storing dried beans, peas, corn and the like? If it has given attention to these things, what have been the findings? I find myself somewhat at a loss to appreciate the fact that we talk so glibly about the possibility of nuclear war; we spend a lot of time and money devising how to defend ourselves in a civic way, and yet we have given no public indication that we have any kind of plan for the important matter of having some food stored so that in case of a nuclear war there would be food available for those of us who happened to survive. That is why I mentioned storing such things as honey, sugar, beans, peas, corn and other things that could be stored.

I should like to know to what extent we have progressed in the dehydration of food, the dehydration of milk, eggs and various other kinds of food to make them suitable for storage in that form. I should like to know what progress has been made so that we might possibly devise some sort of policy in this respect. Now, the next aspect of the storage question is, have we planned any kind of overall storage program? If not, then I must say that certainly the government is failing to meet the responsibilities which the situation forces upon any government in any democratic country in the world today.

I turn now to the matter of production. We have a commission which is studying the matter of the potential of Canada's resources. I wonder if the government has had a survey made of the whole of Canada to determine the productive capacity of the country, and where that capacity is particularly located? By way of illustrating what I have in mind, I might point out that in my particular area from High River south to the border of Alberta, we can produce more sugar from beets than could be used by the whole of Canada every year. We now have three splendid sugar factories in operation, but we have a tremendous potential for the production of sugar beets. Probably there are other areas in Canada, since I have mentioned sugar, in which sugar could be produced. Has the Department of Agriculture gone over the ground, so to speak, to find out how much sugar we can produce in Canada in case we found we needed to produce sugar?

Now, having learned the capacity we have, what can be said concerning the actual production in Canada? Of course, that is very well known. I wonder if the information has all been brought together so it can be read in a comprehensive detailed report? I wonder whether or not the federal government, working in co-operation with the provincial governments, takes pains to plan the production of Canada in a general way? If I might illustrate, I would say it would help very much if we in Alberta knew about how many hogs it would be in the best interests of Canada for us to produce; how much sugar; how many potatoes, and probably how much of every one of the major agricultural products. If we knew fairly well how much would likely be expected of us, and each province knew this, then we would have a target before us to aim at, namely the production of that amount of goods. I believe it would save us from a good many costly experiences which arise because of our producers going at the problem in a haphazard fashion.

I am told that in one of the constituencies in Ontario they produced a very fine crop of Bartlett pears, grapes and an equally fine crop of peaches last year. When the time came to harvest those commodities it was found that those fruits could not be sold. I am told that they heaped up the peaches in piles and paid men to stand and watch those peaches spoil. People were forbidden to eat one of the peaches. The same sort of thing happened to the pears and the grapes. It seems to me that there was a colossal waste there of the agricultural potential of that particular area in Ontario. I feel we could avoid a great deal of that kind of waste if we planned more carefully, both the dominion and the provinces.

I should like to know to what extent the minister and his department have canvassed this aspect of our production. The next question would be the matter of economic guidance. It may be found that it would not be economical to have one province produce a certain kind of product when that product perhaps could be produced much more economically in some other province. If there were some guidance given through the district representative of the Department of Agriculture, under the direction of the provincial government, I believe we could use this great asset called Canada to far better advantage than we are now using it.

The next important matter is that of protecting home producers. The things that have been said by certain members since this session began concerning what has been happening in respect of potatoes indicates we are still very far from attaining anything like the ideal with regard to protecting our potato producers, particularly those in British Columbia and the maritime provinces. I think that, in so far as such measures are possible, they ought to be taken to avoid disappointment and losses of that kind.

I turn from this aspect of the picture to that of fertilizer. I should like the minister to be ready to tell us when the time comes what progress has been made by his science organization in the perfecting of fertilizers, ones for the replacement of each and every one of the different kinds of soil nutrients; how successful they are, and so on.

Then, I would like to have him tell us what measures have been taken in an orderly sort of way by his department to have factories established for the production of such fertilizer; whether there is any understanding between the government and those engaged in such manufacture to see to it that the manufacture and the marketing of fertilizer are accomplished in the most economical fashion, so that those who need the fertilizer to restore the fertility of their soil will be able to obtain it at the most economical price.

Then I would like to have him tell us just what are the costs of the various kinds of fertilizers in the various provinces of Canada.

I pass now from that question to marketing abroad particularly. I wonder first of all how co-operation is effected between the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Trade and Commerce with respect to marketing abroad. Is there an understanding, is there co-operation between those two departments, or does each one of them more or less carry on in an independent way by itself? I think we ought to know about this. I should like to know just what progress has been made with respect to the FAO and the creation of a world food bank, or food organization.

I should like to know what the holdups have been. As I have gathered from the press, the Minister of Agriculture has been to a very large percentage of the meetings of FAO and of international distribution of food. I am sure the members of the committee and the people of the country would like to know what has been done about establishing an international food bank, and what has been the hurdle in the way of accomplishing the setting up of such a food bank. What is the matter? Is it lack of money? Certainly it is not lack of food. If it is lack of money, why was that hurdle not foreseen when the United Nations and all the people who are behind the United Nations and other international organizations were doing so much talking about setting up a food bank? Why did they not foresee this difficulty and make some provision for solving the problem? If they did make some provision, what was their provision, and how comes it about that today, ten years after the enthusiastic talk about international distribution, we are apparently just as far from it as we ever were in the history of the world?

I think the minister will tell us that the difficulty is a financial one. We in Canada do not feel that we can give our wheat, our oats, our barley, our rye, our sugar and all the other things that we can produce. We cannot distribute those to an international food bank until we can get money from the food bank to pay for those commodities. Well, where is the food bank going to get the money with which to pay it?

Mr. Studer: From social credit.

Mr. Blackmore: Social credit is right. You said something that is correct, but I have not noticed the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek advocating social credit.

Mr. Studer: Send your missionaries over there.

Mr. Blackmore: What we want to know is whether or not there is any financial provision in the minds of the Canadian leaders, or of the leaders of any of the other free nations, whether there is any idea in their minds as to how this problem can be solved. If there is not, and they are all agreed that it is impossible to set up an international food bank, then let us stop talking about it and settle down to the idea that we simply must live to ourselves, and the hundreds of millions of luckless people who happen to be living in areas in which they are unable to produce the things that they want, or that the United States wants, or that any one of the free nations wants, will just have to die of hunger unless they can do something to solve the problem in their own countries.

I have not endeavoured to go into any particular detail in respect of those four problems, but I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of Agriculture ought to go into each of these matters with a great deal of care. He should call together his experts and be ready to tell us at the appropriate time all that he has available for the use of the country in respect of storage and production in an orderly way in Canada, and fertilizers and marketing. In due time we shall ask him to give us the information which he has accumulated in respect of these matters.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, I have not been a farmer lately; but as I sat in this house and listened to the farmer members from Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, and even from Brant-Haldimand, I felt sorry for the plight the farmers of Canada found themselves in. I did see considerable hope in the fact that they are not in as bad a position today as they were 30 years ago. My proof of that is the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture today that the growth was steady. I think I am guilty of speaking on what I know, and I am looking to find out the X, or what I do not know.

There are a good many farmers in the Fort William district, Mr. Chairman, 50 miles south and 125 miles west. We have had the champion potato grower of all of Canada in our district. Therefore, I say we do not need to take second place to any place, not even to Saskatchewan, for good farmers. I have respect for our farmers. They are intelligent; they are faithful workers and they do not spend all their time on the highways burning up gas. I know the farmers in our district have to pay a considerable amount in income tax, which shows that they have something left to live on.

We have two men in our district who do a great deal to help our farmers. One represents the government of Ontario, and he is a good man even though that government is Conservative. He goes everywhere. He keeps the farmers posted with up-to-date information; he helps them in a good many ways, and the farming in the district is greatly helped and production is greatly improved because of his services. The other man is the federal man, Mr. Knight, who has charge of the agricultural substation. He is just like his fellow worker. They work hand in hand, co-operating thoroughly. The farmers around Fort William are doing a splendid job. They have a potato club. They set a mark of 500 bushels to the acre. Hon. members will be surprised to know how many men go over 500 bushels. I knew one man who had 773 bushels to the acre. They have an oat club. Competition amongst the farmers is very keen.

It is a great pleasure to go out in the country in the summertime and meet the farmers at a baseball game. It is very fine to go out in the winter, too, and see their hockey clubs in competition among themselves, which shows that the young people on the farm are enjoying themselves.

I rose to ask the minister a question. I congratulate the hon. member for Lethbridge on the number of questions he asked. The more questions that he asks the Minister of Agriculture the better the minister will like it and the more information the hon. member will get.

Somebody from Saskatchewan said that the farmers of Saskatchewan paid more income tax than all the other farmers in Canada. I am not sure whether I am right in saying that, but if my impression is correct I can tell you, judging from the farmers around Fort William, that the farmers in Saskatchewan are not so terribly hard up.

I am going to ask the minister to comment on that situation. If a man can pay income tax he certainly has something left to live on.

I congratulate the minister on the statement he made today. I was going to make some criticism of certain aspects of it but I would only make myself look foolish in the face of the statement the minister made today which was straightforward, clear cut and according to the facts. Thank you for your patience.

Mr. Thatcher: This morning the Minister of Agriculture devoted a good portion of his time to dealing with the Canadian butter situation. I should like to comment on that policy again, as I have done on previous occasions.

I think the minister can take pride in the fact that most parties in the house appear to approve of his butter policy. Certainly the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand expressed approval this afternoon; members of the C.C.F. group agree with it, and I think with certain modifications the Social Credit group also is in accord. However, although I realize that very few hon. members agree with me—

An hon. Member: Hurray.

Mr. Thatcher: —I think the government's butter policy is shortsighted and economically unwise. As the house knows, it is, in the first place, costing the taxpayer directly a good deal of money. I believe the minister said this morning the figure would probably come to about $8 million during the current year. Of course, that figure is only part of the picture because indirectly, by holding the ceiling price higher than it otherwise would be, the policy is costing the average Canadian a good deal more than that amount. Even if the differential was only five cents a pound, let us say, on the production figure of 1954 which was 334 million pounds, the cost to the consumer would be $16,700,000 and if the differential was ten cents it would be twice that amount. Of course the exact sum can only be a matter of conjecture but it would be substantial.

I would not object to this subsidy in any way, Mr. Chairman, if I was convinced that it was helping the butter producer. But I am convinced it is not, for a number of reasons. The minister said this morning that we have no troublesome surpluses so far as butter is concerned. I find it difficult to understand how he could come to such a conclusion. Every time the dominion bureau of statistics releases figures on butter in storage, the total seems to be higher than it was for the same comparable period a year ago.

On January 1, 1956, our butter surplus was over 100 million pounds. Butter spoils fairly easily so I think there is danger that we may be in trouble before too long if we do not take some kind of action.

Mr. Gardiner: If I might interrupt the hon. member, I should like to clarify a point. I am sure that my hon. friend used the term unintentionally but he said our butter surplus on January 1 was 100 million pounds. The amount of butter in storage was 100 million pounds and that is not all a surplus.

Mr. Thatcher: That is a fair correction and I accept it. The amount of butter in storage is over 100 million pounds. As I say, I know the minister has been concerned about this problem and he has taken three steps in the past several years to deal with it.

In the first place, last February he brought in legislation whereby hospitals and orphanages could buy butter at a discount of 21 cents a pound. Today it is rather obvious that the legislation was not successful. This morning the minister said, if I understood him correctly, that while it cost the taxpayer about one and a half million dollars to give the institutions the discounted price, they did not use very much if any extra butter because of the reduced price. If such is the case, if the experiment is not helping the producer of butter, it seems to me that the government surely should consider discontinuing that policy.

An hon. Member: In Saskatchewan the government prefers margarine.

Mr. Thatcher: You could have a point there, too, I do not know. The second step the minister has taken to dispose of the butter surplus is to sell it to countries behind the iron curtain. I think he mentioned this morning that the amount of recent sales was about nine and one-quarter million pounds. I cannot help feeling there is something ludicrous about a policy that sells butter to the Canadian housewife at about 64 cents a pound retail and sells it to a communist housewife for 37 or 38 cents a pound.

Mr. Gardiner: If I may just correct the hon. member's statement again, sir, I would say it is just an impression that has been created. By the time the butter reaches Germany it sells at approximately the same price for which it sells here. When all the costs are added the housewife there pays about the same for butter as the Canadian housewife.

An hon. Member: You know these retailers!

Mr. Thatcher: The fact is we are selling it to countries behind the iron curtain at 37 cents per pound, as I understand it.

The third step the government has taken is to commence paying the charges for handling butter in storage. I believe the cost of this action will amount to about three cents a pound, which the taxpayer will be called upon to absorb. It does, in turn of course, mean a saving to the consumer. In spite of these three steps our surpluses of butter have been steadily increasing and it is pretty obvious that sooner or later we will have to take some other kind of action.

I think and I may be alone in so thinking, that our trouble is that the government floor price is placed at a level which is unrealistic. It is too high for the good of the consumer and it is too high for the good of the taxpayer. I think it is also too high for the long term interests of the producer.

I realize that originally this legislation was brought in by the government in good faith, and in an effort to help the dairy industry. But I also contend that the legislation is actually having the opposite effect. High butter prices today are doing little more than driving the consumer into the hands of the manufacturers of margarine. The net effect of the government's policy has been to force hundreds of thousands of Canadians, who otherwise might be eating butter, into eating margarine and other substitutes because the price is cheaper. Strangely enough, Mr. Chairman, I think it is Mr. Duplessis and the Quebec government who are actually saving the government's butter policy at all. The fact that he put a ban on margarine several years ago has prevented the surplus from getting out of hand altogether.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): What about the spreads we have in Quebec?

An hon. Member: You are really spread at times.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): They call it butter spread; they do not call it margarine.

Mr. Knowles: You mean price spreads.

Mr. Thatcher: I maintain that the artificial floor price on butter is not doing the job for which it was designed. I think I have support from certain people in the dairy industry. For instance the president of the national dairy council of Canada, Grant M. Carlyle, seems to share my views.

Mr. Argue: Is he a farmer?

Mr. Thatcher: Speaking at the dairy council's annual meeting in Toronto a few months ago, Mr. Carlyle had this to say:

> Holding prices of dairy products at an artificially high level to the consumer involves a conflict of aims which can only be harmful to the dairy industry in the long run.

He warned. Again I quote:

> Holding an umbrella over the heads of producers at the expense of the dairy business by curtailing markets in Canada was poor business.

He went on to say:

> These are the only markets on which we can rely with a degree of certainty and they ought not to be sacrificed by a policy intended to benefit dairy farmers, but which works against their long-term interests.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Does the hon. member realize that the man he is quoting is not a farmer?

Mr. Thatcher: I said a moment ago that he was president of the national dairy council, and I assume he is a man of some importance in the industry.

The export market for Canadian butter has long since disappeared because our price was about one-third higher than the world price. It is true that if we want to subsidize butter, we can get into the export market, but it can be done only in that way.

It seems to me that both the government and the dairy industry must face certain harsh economic facts. If our producers want to regain their share of the domestic market, if they wish to get back some of the market which has been lost to margarine, they will have to accept a floor price at least a few cents lower than the present level.

Speaking to the annual meeting of the Canadian dairy council, Madame H. E. Vautelet of Montreal, president of the Canadian association of consumers, warned them of this fact, and pointed out that consumer resistance was building up to high butter prices. In my opinion the most effective way in which the government can deal with our mounting surpluses, outside of banning margarine, is to reduce the floor price by 4 or 5 cents so that butter will be brought to a point where it will be competitive with margarine.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the house had the privilege of listening to the hon. member for Fort William making a contribution to this discussion and in it he referred to the member for Brandon-Souris as one of those who joined in the cry of havoc so far as the western prairie farmer was concerned. I make reference to the hon. member's remarks because in any statement I have made in this house concerning our prairie agricultural problems as they exist at the present time I have always taken extreme care not to be unrealistic in drawing the attention of the Department of Agriculture to the matter. In fact I have always stressed that Manitoba is in a slightly different category than Saskatchewan, for example. In commencing my remarks this afternoon I should like to say that if the record is read I do not think it will show that I have indulged at any time in irresponsible criticism of our agricultural policies as they exist today.

I listened this morning to the Minister of Agriculture as he made his state of the union address so far as agriculture is concerned. I must confess that from time to time as the minister addresses hon. members his oratorical ability seems to have a somewhat soporific effect upon his listeners and it would seem that the hon. member for Fort William has been a very apt pupil in this regard.

I enter the discussion this afternoon because I fail to grasp the significance of the minister's new category of real income. Perhaps he will clarify this point before we finish the discussion on this first item.

According to the category set up by the minister on the basis of real income the farmers are enjoying a relative degree of prosperity at the present time. That is entirely at variance with the representations I have had from agricultural groups such as the Manitoba federation, the Manitoba farmers' union, as well as from individuals. They all stress, I think with a great deal of responsibility, that in proportion to the total productive level of the Canadian economy our prairie farmers are in a relatively depressed condition. Notwithstanding that fact the Minister of Agriculture endeavoured this morning to suggest that the farmers do not know what they are talking about.

It is true, and we often hear this theme re-echoed from the other side, that the Canadian economy as a whole has enjoyed an unprecedented level of prosperity since the end of world war II, in fact since the concluding years of world war II. That was due to the obviously favourable geographic position of Canada in relation to the war-torn countries and to the backlog of consumer demand which had accumulated during world war II. It was due also to the fact that the economy of our neighbour to the south had changed radically. She had exhausted to a large extent her primary resources and had begun to call upon Canada to an increasing extent for the replacement of those primary resources. As a result Canada was drawn into an economic vortex which led to a continuing level of prosperity.

Considering the minister's remarks, there is one point that needs to be made in connection with the level of prosperity of our farm economy. I am including not only our prairie agricultural economy but the farm economy right across Canada. I am sure that Ontario farmers as well as those from the maritimes will be able to speak for themselves in this regard. The total farm economy has been placed in a position of declining prosperity as a result of the fundamental changes which have taken place in the Canadian as well as the entire North American economy.

I do not think that anyone, either by statistics or by any amount of verbosity, can demonstrate successfully that our Canadian agricultural economy is in a prosperous state at the present time. In recent days we have been discussing some particular aspects of the problems on the prairies. In particular we have been dealing with the difficulties encountered in connection with the marketing of our surplus grain. The Manitoba federation of agriculture has pointed out repeatedly in its representations to Manitoba members of parliament that there has been a severe relative decline in the net income of Manitoba farmers.

The figures have been given many times but it would seem that they need repetition. By 1954 net Canadian farm income had dropped 47 per cent compared with 1951, and in the prairie provinces the decline amounted to 67 per cent. Admittedly that is due to the fact that a large part of the wheat has not yet been marketed, and I would conclude from the remarks made by the Minister of Agriculture that in his new economic category of real income he includes total grain production, that is, grain still in the hands of the farmers as well as the grain already marketed through the wheat board in order to arrive at the figure he refers to as the real income. If such is the case, such a calculation is completely out of touch with reality.

It has been suggested by the hon. member for Fort William that western farmers are always at the wailing wall crying over their sorry state of affairs. That again is not an accurate description of the situation, and in that regard I would emphasize particularly the position of our Manitoba farmers. We in Manitoba have gone a long way towards self-help. We have diversified more extensively, I suppose, than either of the other two prairie provinces. We have, for example, constantly decreased our total production of wheat. Last year total marketings of wheat from Manitoba sources were only 9·4 per cent of total prairie wheat marketings. Therefore it is obvious from that figure that wheat production in Manitoba is not making any substantial contribution to the growing surplus. In fact, it is hardly aggravating that particular problem in any way.

In recent years we have been moving towards the production of barley, and during the past three years Manitoba farmers have actually produced more barley than wheat. Last year for the first time the value of the barley crop was greater than that of the wheat crop. Having mentioned these aspects of the trend towards diversification in farming in Manitoba, I think we cannot be included in the group who are supposed to be crying havoc in the House of Commons.

Although I have no direct knowledge of the situation, I am informed that in the other provinces too, when the government has failed to move rapidly to deal with the very critical wheat marketing problem, the farmers have demonstrated initiative, in so far as they are able under the terms of the wheat board act, in helping to bring ready cash into the coffers. For example, I understand that farmers in Alberta have been bartering grain quite regularly for consumer goods and the merchants in the towns and cities have been encouraging this process. Advertisements are appearing in the papers offering consumer goods, furniture and so on, in exchange for the delivery of grain. Unfortunately, however, the price received is a very small price indeed when compared with the world market today. It runs around 60 cents per bushel and when we consider the inflation that has prevailed in Canada since the war it would actually be somewhere around 30 cents in terms of pre-war purchasing power.

Thus the prairie farmers, within the limit of their ability, are trying to cope with the unfavourable position in which they find themselves, a position that is growing increasingly difficult because they are caught in the squeeze of the basic transition in our Canadian economy. There are other solutions than those that have been put forward by the government. One of the basic solutions of the agricultural difficulties in the prairie provinces was outlined by the prime minister of Great Britain during his visit to this country last week end when he emphasized that trade is a two-way street and that if we are going to recover the former position we occupied in the markets of the United Kingdom we must in turn be willing to increase our imports of manufactured goods from that country.

I was glad to note that in a speech in southern Ontario recently the Minister of Agriculture also raised this same question when he suggested that Canada was going to make an earnest attempt to get back into the United Kingdom market. That was the first time there had been any acknowledgment that we had lost the United Kingdom market to any considerable extent. We must have stable export markets for our agricultural products, and certainly the traditional source of stable markets has been the United Kingdom rather than our neighbour to the south. Our farmers are considerably disturbed as they watch with each succeeding year the growing imbalance of trade with our neighbour to the south.

Another solution that has been proposed from time to time to assist the agricultural producer, particularly the prairie agricultural producer, in successfully negotiating the period of transition in our economy has been a demand for parity prices. In fact, I understand that one of the theme songs of the farm organizations on the prairies during recent months has been a parody on the well-known popular song, "Faith, Hope and Charity". The farmers have been singing "Faith, Hope and Parity, that's the way to live successfully." The essence of parity, of course, is to place the farmer in a position where he will enjoy a reasonable level of prosperity in proportion to the extremely high level of prosperity being enjoyed by other segments of the Canadian economy. That of course demands a much firmer price support program than we have enjoyed hitherto in Canada.

At the present time No. 1 northern wheat has an initial price of $1.40 per bushel, but in some years only a small part of the wheat crop is graded No. 1 Northern, which means that on the average the initial price would be considerably lower than $1.40 per bushel. If the wheat producer on the prairies, and he is our major agricultural producer, is going to enjoy a reasonable share of the farm income he has to have a much more substantial return for his product in relation to relative world prices than that which is offered by an initial payment of $1.40. For example, we have here a little publication produced by United Grain Growers Limited, in which they give up to date figures on the prices of wheat in other countries of the world.

The international wheat trade—

Says this publication.

—has not grown in proportion to population increases in wheat-consuming countries. Practically all of these have been stimulating domestic wheat production by guarantees of high prices to their own farmers. Equivalents of such prices, in U.S. dollars, were recently reported as follows: *Algeria $2.64; Argentina $2.72; Austria $2.63; Belgium $2.56; Chile $4.50; Egypt $2.18; Finland $3.95; France $2.64; West Germany $2.72; Greece $2.40; Ireland $2.39; Italy $3.05; Japan $2.61; the Netherlands $1.86; Norway $3.46; Peru $1.83; Portugal $2.85; Spain $2.73; Sweden $2.35; Switzerland $4.19; Turkey $2.49; Union of South Africa $2.75; United Kingdom $2.30; Uruguay $2.96.

* Extract from South Western Miller, April 12, 1955.

In every case the price for grain produced in those countries is considerably above the price that our western grain producer has been receiving for his production during recent years.

Mr. Studer: How many of those countries are exporting countries?

Mr. Dinsdale: Very few of them are exporting countries. But these figures indicate the inferior economic position in which our prairie farmer finds himself as compared with producers in these other countries. Unfortunately for us, some of these countries have been endeavouring to become more self-sustaining in grain. For example, France has been exporting during recent years, and even India and Pakistan are in a much more favourable position so far as the production of wheat is concerned.

I therefore think there is a real need for a complete re-examination of our price support program in Canada at the present time. It may be, as has been suggested by many hon. members who have spoken, that the present phase through which we are passing is merely temporary and that within a year or so the prairie grain producer will find himself in a much more favourable competitive position in our Canadian economy. But as the result of radical changes in technology and of a more businesslike approach to the matter of grain production, it seems to me that we are in for continuing surplus production down through the years; and until we have a large enough population on the prairies and introduce other phases of industrial activity there so as to build up a more stable internal economy, it seems to me the farmer is going to need considerable assistance from the federal government.

So much for the general problem of wheat and the position in which the prairie farmer generally finds himself in the economy at the present time. There is one subject matter that I should like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture—in fact there are two—and I shall do so briefly. The problem of flooding in Manitoba has been under continuous discussion in this house during the past three or four years. When the estimates of the department have been before us, whenever we reached the section dealing with the activities of P.F.R.A. we have had one or two casual questions concerning the progress of diking and flood control on the Assiniboine and Red rivers, and the minister has told us in casual terms that the work is proceeding according to plan.

Last spring, however, the problem of flooding reached unusually severe proportions and there were demands for immediate action from the farmers affected. They were so greatly disturbed that they organized a flood control association, which has been meeting regularly since then in order to bring this problem directly to the attention of the government. The hon. member for Portage-Neepawa made an effective presentation last year in regard to this question. He went back to his own constituency in order to review the situation for himself, and he came back thoroughly convinced that immediate action was required to deal with the situation. If the minister replies to the various questions that are thrown at him during this preliminary discussion on the first item of the estimates, I would appreciate it if he could inform us what action has been taken or what plans there are for the immediate future to deal more directly with this problem.

Then there is also the matter of assistance to the farmers who were affected by the flood last year and in the previous few years. Under the federal-provincial flood formula I understand that no consideration is to be given to the loss of livestock, grain or chattels. Under the assistance program I believe that only building damage is recoverable.

If that is the case it completely avoids the issue, because most of the farmers somewhere in their farm area have a relatively high level of ground, and they have seen to it that their buildings were placed on that high level. Almost without exception the flood damage did not cause any difficulties in connection with the houses, barns and other buildings. The damage arose largely because of inundated fields and inability to sow the crop last spring. There was also some injury to the farmers' livestock. Therefore if it is true that the federal-provincial flood formula covers buildings only, it makes no contribution at all toward solving the problem of the financial loss suffered by the farmers in the recurring recent floods.

I understand also that the formula applies only to farmers who have been flooded by what are described as foreign waters such as the Assiniboine river, the Red river, the lakes of Manitoba and so forth. Again, much of our problem was caused from excessive rain damage. Of course if we were going to consider the difficulty in all its aspects, this would lead us to a consideration of the P.F.A.A. program. I believe there is in store for us at a later date some legislation with regard to P.F.A.A. I shall therefore leave any further remarks I have to make on that score until that legislation is before us.

There is one final item to which I wish to refer, and it is a recurring one. It is a problem that has been considered thoroughly by the committee on agriculture during the past two or three years. It is a problem that it seems we have not begun to solve even after all the careful deliberation which has taken place. In dealing with the question of the allocation of box cars the agriculture committee of last year came to this conclusion:

> Your committee gave particular study to the difficulties of moving grain at this time of relative congestion and the inherent problem of the equitable distribution of box cars.
> Your committee was seized with the present necessity of wheat board shipping orders having overriding priority. This committee recommends that the wheat board allocation of shipping orders be carried through, by the wheat board issuing instructions to the railways to spot box cars at elevators at each shipping point in proportion to the wheat board orders approved for that point.

At the time that seemed to be an adequate solution, but I have had more letters of protest than ever before on this box car problem. It would therefore seem that there is still something lacking. I know the question comes more directly under the Minister of Trade and Commerce but I trust the Minister of Agriculture, because of his professed interest in the welfare of the western grain producer, will use his influence in bringing about a more satisfactory solution to this difficulty.

Mr. Carter: I want to say how happy I am to learn that so many farmers are in a position where they can afford to pay income tax. My primary interest, of course, is fish because I am the representative of a constituency composed almost entirely of fishermen. I am looking forward to the day when the fishermen of Burin-Burgeo will also be in a position to pay income tax. I only want the farmers to be in a position to keep on paying income tax, and we want to bring the Newfoundland fishermen up to the point where they can pay income tax.

In order that these happy results may be achieved without detriment to the farmer, I am rising today to issue a word of warning to my friends from Saskatchewan. I want to suggest to them that they warn their farmer constituents against expanding the production of wheat, because a method has now been found whereby bread can be made from fish protein. Everybody knows that protein is far more essential to health than starch.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): At the outset, Mr. Chairman, I want to say this party has stood firm for a national agricultural policy comprehensive enough to embrace all phases of agriculture in Canada. We are simply not satisfied with the hit or miss, hodgepodge policy of this government.

I was most astounded this morning when the Minister of Agriculture, in introducing his estimates in this house, failed to mention two of the very important phases of agriculture, namely livestock and hogs, eggs and poultry. In spite of the fact, that the committee gave unanimous consent to allow him to continue his introductory remarks, he did not see fit to deal with these topics. Perhaps he had some reason for it; I do not know. But I want to say that until we do have a comprehensive system of parity prices and other formulas by which the Canadian agriculturist is assured a fair price, I feel we have not a suitable agricultural policy for Canada.

Now that some segments of our Canadian agricultural economy are really in a price squeeze, I think it is important that this house give careful scrutiny to certain aspects of the agriculture situation. Once again this morning the Minister of Agriculture took exception to some remarks I made in a former debate, when I indicated that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture had criticized him with respect to his statement concerning the welfare of the agriculturist in Canada. I want to deal with that matter before proceeding with my remarks concerning policies in general. The article to which I referred in a former debate was carried in the Western Producer of February 2, 1956, and was entitled, "Making Monkeys out of us; Delegate Criticizes Gardiner".

At the Hamilton meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture a delegate got up and took exception to remarks the minister had made at a previous meeting in Winnipeg in respect to the income of farmers in Canada. This delegate asked that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture pass a resolution, and took exception to what he claimed was a misrepresentation by the minister. I want to read from the article. Incidentally, this delegate told Dr. Hannam, C.F.A. president, that he was evading the question which he had put to him earlier in the session and asked that he make a direct answer. The article says:

> Dr. Hannam said he had answered it the first time when he referred Mr. Stauffer to his presidential address in which he said that while most Canadians were enjoying prosperity, the farmers were not sharing in it and this should be recognized in the national picture when 1956 programs were being made.

Then the Canadian Federation of Agriculture passed a resolution criticizing the statement of the minister, and this is what it says:

> The 20th annual meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, in session today, noted with regret a press dispatch reporting a speech made by Mr. Gardiner, federal Minister of Agriculture, at Winnipeg. He is reported to have said that farmers' cash income for the past five years has been "the highest by far we have ever had".
> His comparison of cash and net farm income in Canada for the two most recent five-year periods, while technically correct, tends to leave an entirely erroneous impression with the public. During the past five years the annual cash farm income of Canadian farmers has declined by $480 million and net farm income by $700 million. This situation reflects not only the sharp decline in farm prices, which has been experienced by Canadian farmers, but also some increase in farm costs during the five-year period.
> The farm price situation is most simply reflected by the ratio of prices received by, to prices paid to farmers during the period. This ratio has dropped from an average of 110 in 1951, to 80 at present, and is now at the lowest level since 1940.

Mr. Gardiner: There is only one thing involved in what I said this morning. I pointed out that my hon. friend had said I had not discussed net income, and that report indicates I did.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I will accept what the minister states, if he wants to say he discussed net income. Even so, he knows quite well he is leaving a false impression with the general public when he makes the statement, taking a five year period—

Mr. Gardiner: I did not do any such thing. My hon. friend said yesterday I never at any time, and especially at Hamilton, discussed net income. Is he going to be honest enough to say he was wrong?

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): When the minister had the opportunity to take the floor, by the unanimous consent of this committee, he refused to make a further statement. Now in my 30 minutes I want to deal with this, and he can reply at a later date.

The Winnipeg Free Press of January 28 referred to the statement the minister made at Winnipeg. I am going to quote the article in full because I think here again this newspaper is reporting what the public, and at least this newspaper, think about statements the minister makes at some of these meetings. It is headed, "Mr. Gardiner Figures Again", and reads:

> The federal Minister of Agriculture seems absolutely determined, at any cost to his own reputation, to misrepresent the true state of the wheat farmers' income. Speaking to the western Canada fair association's annual meeting in Winnipeg earlier this week, Mr. Gardiner paraded an armful of arguments that could only be designed to mislead his audience.
> The income figures he quoted were for all farmers in Canada. The argument is about the income of the prairie wheat farmers. By including a large body of people not included by anyone else, Mr. Gardiner fortifies his argument. But this alone is not enough to indicate that the income of the wheat farmer has not shrunk. So Mr. Gardiner figures in five year averages, and says that, on the average, farmers in Canada have been more prosperous in the past five years than they were during the previous five years.
> This, of course, is simply a gimmick. Averages cover enormous variations. Mr. Gardiner's broad sweep of averages cloaks the whole point: which is that for the last two years farmers have been much harder up on the prairies than they were for many years before. This is an incontrovertible fact. Mr. Gardiner's figures do not attempt the impossible and deny it. They are just chosen to cover it up.
> The liberties taken by the minister are so flagrant that they have drawn formal criticism from people who have historically been friendly to him. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, in annual meeting in Hamilton, on Thursday passed a resolution criticizing the speech; their resolution pointed out that from 1951 to 1955 the cash income of farmers has declined by $480 million, their net income by $700 million. And they charge Mr. Gardiner with leaving an "entirely erroneous impression with the public." It is to be hoped that rebuke from this source will at last show Mr. Gardiner that he is beating his head on a brick wall.

I think that pretty well answers the statement, if there had been any confusion before. The fact is that farm income has dropped and farm costs have continued to rise. I wish to quote the closing sentence of an article that appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of December 3, 1955, which states:

> For every dollar of actual cash income that the farmer had in 1951, in 1954 he had only 60 cents.

These figures illustrate exactly the price squeeze which is developing each day in western Canada and making it more difficult for the farmer. There must be farmers throughout Canada who are likewise feeling the financial pinch. We of this party do not want policies only for western Canada. We think we must have policies which will embrace the whole Canadian farm economy. While I am dealing specifically with the situation in western Canada, I think it is one which reflects the whole Canadian farm income.

I hold in my hand figures taken from the dominion bureau of statistics record which indicate that while the national income increased from 1930 to 1939, and again from 1946 to 1954, the share of the national income going to the agriculturists or farmers lessened in that period. We find that in the period 1951-1954 the farmer's share of the national income dropped so rapidly that in 1954 it was a mere 5·6 per cent, which was even smaller than the average figure in the depressed 1930's.

I hold in my hand a clipping from the Winnipeg Free Press, which deals with some of the farmers' problems. The article is entitled "Squeezing the Farmer". It deals in particular with some of the farmer's costs and refers to him having to pay one-third more on certain items than formerly because of tariff regulations and classifications. It illustrates that in tariff board rulings there is often more than one interpretation and consequently, as it states here, the tough interpretation is to be preferred. It would seem that is the way they operate. The article goes on to point out:

> Sales of parts in Manitoba in 1954 dropped by 12 per cent from the 1953 figure; parts sales in Saskatchewan dropped by 30 per cent.

The reference is to machinery repairs and parts. In that connection I may say that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, as reported in the wheat pool report of January, 1956, asks that tariffs be cut on certain items the farmer must buy. It includes in the article a list of products on which it feels the tariff should be taken off.

The situation in respect of the whole western economy is getting worse. It is affecting our merchants, our retail sales trade and also the livelihood of the people. I hold in my hand an article from the Journal, dated August 15, 1955, dealing with the falling sales of farm machinery. This article states:

> In 1954 sales of all farm implements across Canada dropped 38 per cent, or more than $92 million. Even the sales of repair parts were down 14 per cent, an even surer indication that farmers are pressed for ready cash.

In reference to Saskatchewan it says:

> For instance Saskatchewan sales last year dropped by more than one-half, Alberta's by 45 per cent.

Hon. members who are not acquainted with conditions pertaining to western agriculture in particular can understand why some of us are very disturbed about the cost-price squeeze facing the western farmer. As I said at the beginning, we in this group have fought in the past and shall fight in the future for Canadian national agricultural policies which will have adequate parity prices for all the different phases of agriculture, and by which the farmer can be assured of a fair standard of living.

As I indicated earlier, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Agriculture did not deal with two very important subjects. In the last few months the western farmers have been quite concerned over two matters; first, the falling prices of hogs and the fact that in some instances they are getting lower prices than they believed and were told were the floor prices, and also in respect of the selling of eggs.

I want to deal first with the matter of floor prices for hogs. Perhaps I should first deal with a matter that came to my attention last year. I recall that the Minister of Agriculture spoke to the agricultural fair in the coliseum in Ottawa. In the course of his speech he had in his hands the presentation of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in which they asked for a flexible parity structure for Canadian agriculture. At that meeting the minister read from that brief and intimated that on each occasion the farmer was already receiving a flexible parity price, namely the 85 cents asked for by the federation at that time. Since that time the marketing and pricing of hogs has become more treacherous, and I think the western hog producer is realizing it may well be that he will not get the price which he has been told he is guaranteed under the floor price system of the federal government.

I have in my hand two copies of receipts from farmers who have shipped hogs to packing plants. One of them is from Burns and Company and the other is from the Swift Canadian Company. I want to say that I take exception to the way in which these receipts are filled out. The statement from Burns and Company illustrates that this farmer shipped four hogs and got a price of $18.75 per hundredweight. The other receipt is for two grade A hogs for which the farmer received a price of $18.85 per hundredweight. There is no indication on either receipt as to what the farmer paid in respect of freight, trucking, transit insurance, yardage, yard fire insurance, commission or prorating. All he has is a net statement made out in his name. I maintain it is quite impossible for a farmer to know whether or not he is receiving the floor price.

Recently in the house I asked the minister how a farmer should go about getting the floor price for his hogs and the minister replied, as recorded at page 708 of Hansard, that all the farmer has to do is take his receipt and send it to the prices board. Later on in answer to the question he said he should send the slip to the Department of Agriculture.

[Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain).]

I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that there are no floors to the producer of hogs in western Canada, and that under the policy of this government it is not living up to its undertaking to provide floor prices on hogs as guaranteed to farmers under the Agricultural Prices Support Act. This indicates to me that this government has been taking credit where no credit was due. Up to the present time we find that due to the demand for hogs there has been no move for any policy of federal support to come into play by which the government would of necessity have to provide floor prices for hogs.

In 1953 the so-called support price for hogs dropped from $26 per hundredweight for grade A hogs to $23 per hundredweight. We now have a situation where more pressure is being put on the market, and it would seem that farmers are getting a price below what they thought was the floor at Winnipeg, Regina, and Saskatoon. Under the Agricultural Prices Support Act this government has the power to provide adequate floor prices for the western hog producers. I am now asking this government to take some concrete action by which the hog producers will get a floor price in conformity with the cost of production.

There is no use having floor prices which are in the cellar, and there is no use having the so-called floor prices go down to a point where the Agricultural Prices Support Act will not come into play, and where the $200 million provided under this act would not be used in order to support adequate prices for the hog producers. I maintain that so far as western Canada is concerned, and indeed in Canada as a whole, there are no floor prices as far as hog producers are concerned.

The same thing is true of eggs in this country. The other day I directed a question to the Minister of Agriculture concerning eggs. I referred to a newspaper account of a charge made by Charles Walls, secretary manager of the British Columbia federation of agriculture, that in his province egg inspectors have secret instructions which nobody but themselves are allowed to see. Mr. Walls said that the inspectors were inspecting eggs on such instructions rather than the printed regulations about which everybody knows.

Illustrating his point that uncertainty about floor prices each year ruined the good work they were supposed to do, Mr. Walls said that in that period this year in two centres the price of grade A large eggs had dropped 16 to 20 cents. That, Mr. Chairman, clearly indicates that there is no floor for the producer. I have tried to get as much—

Mr. Gardiner: Where were they when they started to drop?

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I do not know; Mr. Walls does not state that in his charge. I know for a fact, however, since this so-called price formula came into being producers in the west have sold their eggs for less than 25 cents a dozen.

Mr. Gardiner: Eggs were 85 cents a dozen.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I do not care what they were to the consumer; that is not the point I am making right now. That is the reason I think this government does not have an adequate floor price, certainly not to the producer.

What is the situation with respect to this matter? There is a guaranteed floor of 38 cents a dozen to the people who store the eggs. And how is the price to the producer arrived at? The producer stands all the shot for every single cent of the cost in relation to the eggs, with plenty of spread for everyone. Today the producer pays for the transportation, the washing, the oiling, the fillers and the crates, and for the interest on all the money involved. In addition, when these eggs go into storage and come out six or eight months later they are degraded; about 20 per cent of them are "rots" or cracked. The producer pays for all of that, because the cost of degrading is deducted.

Mr. Gardiner: Will my hon. friend tell me why it is that in the province of Ontario they have 18 or 20 boards to look after the kind of thing he is talking about in order to see that it is done properly, and can he tell me why we have none in Saskatchewan?

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I will tell you why—

Mr. Gardiner: Because you have a C.C.F. government, that is why.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): In Ontario it is done under the co-operative marketing act. Last year united farmers' organizations in Saskatchewan tried to promote the idea of marketing boards, and we had the packing companies through their stooges throughout the province discredit that type of organization to the producers. That is why we do not have them.

Mr. Studer: Why didn't the government do it?

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): The fact is that we have not—

Mr. Studer: Why didn't the government do it?

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Has the hon. member for Swift Current got verbal constipation, or what is wrong with him? If he wants to make a speech he can do so when I am finished.

Mr. Fulton: I think he has verbal diarrhea.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): We in this group, and I think it will be supported by all hon. members in the house, hope the government will see fit to bring in a comprehensive national agricultural policy by which we can provide parity prices for the producer. That is all we are asking for. We want a fair price for the producer that will give him a fair return for his labour, and I do not think that is asking too much. I believe it is not good enough to just have a floor price to the packer. We need a policy that will provide a floor price to all agricultural producers. I think this can be done under the Agricultural Prices Support Act and under the co-operative marketing act.

I dislike to receive letters like the one attached to these receipts, which is a case where a producer is caught in the price squeeze. As I have indicated, he shipped four grade A hogs to the packing plant and got a net return of $18.75 per hundred. That is not all, Mr. Chairman. I wish to point out an even greater injustice than that. In the degrading of hogs when there is a heavy run on the markets, the packers can pick up hogs pretty well at their own grade.

I am not satisfied to have the minister get up and say that we have government graders and all the other nonsense. I should like to see some way by which the producers can know they are getting a fair deal in respect to the sale of their hogs. I would like to see something done so the producer would know that he was getting a fair deal in respect to the sale of his hogs.

The receipt I have here shows that this man shipped two hogs which were graded as C. Their weight was in the 120-185 bracket, the two weighing a total of 241 pounds. But the price received was $3 per hundredweight less or $15.35 less than for grade A hogs. On the other side of the receipt are set out the classifications under which a farmer must sell his hogs. I am all for the grading of hogs, but I submit that the weights are most unfair to the producer. The grades are A, B1, B2, B3, C. D. lights, heavies, extra heavies, sows No. 1 and sows No. 2.

If a hog is sent in that is one pound overweight, in other words if it weighs 171 pounds, it would be outside the grade A classification and the farmer would automatically get $3 per hundredweight less. I think this is something the minister should look into. Last year we had a debate during which we tried to determine whether the producer was getting a fair price for his livestock products. I am sure that in this country there is no justice or fairness in what the producer gets and what the consumer pays. I am speaking more particularly of the hog producer. As I have indicated, neither in the case of hogs nor in the case of eggs is there a floor in this country which will guarantee the producer a fair and just price or even a stated price for which the government has taken credit for a number of years.

Surely in this year of 1956 this parliament, faced with a gross national income of over $26 billion, should not have to look into the dim past for an agricultural policy. We should be able to bring forth a policy which will meet the needs of a progressive country, a country which can produce not only for its own people but for hungry people abroad. Under that kind of policy the producer would be protected and have a guarantee of justice and a fair income.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Chairman, I rise to take part in this debate because the minister has given us a program to follow of which I for one do not entirely approve. The Minister of Agriculture has proved himself to be a much better political adviser to the government than a minister of agriculture so far as the farmers are concerned. I have listened to him for the last 16 years, and I give him credit for being a clever minister. I appreciate his ability in a great many respects, and certainly would not attempt to analyse the figures he has given us at one time or another. The fact is that he is a marvel with figures and pretty hard to tie down when he is quoting them.

An hon. Member: He is telling the truth.

Mr. Cardiff: I was not intimating that he does not tell the truth at all times. I have great respect for the minister in that regard, but he has the happy faculty of twisting figures.

An hon. Member: Figures do not lie.

Mr. Gardiner: I just give them, I do not twist them.

Mr. Cardiff: The minister has placed on Hansard certain figures. We have not had an opportunity of seeing for ourselves what they mean, but when it comes to telling the farmers that they are in a better position than they ever were, that is a different story. Anyone who knows anything at all about farm income knows perfectly well that the farmers of this country are the only group which has not prospered as the national income has gone up. All other groups have prospered under that increase, but the farmers have not. They are the ones who have been taking the brunt of this thing from start to finish. They always get the last rise in prices and when prices start to go down they take the first fall. We have been taking falls for almost three years. We have been going down instead of going up at a time when everything we have to buy has gone up. The price we get for what we produce does not constitute something that is real. What we have left after we have bought what we have to buy is our profit, and we have not had very much profit.

I do not intend to talk about wheat, but if I were going to I would say that the government is to blame to a large extent for the fact that we are out of the British market with our wheat. We refused to let the British dealers sign for $2 wheat because we insisted on $2.05. As a result we have never sold any wheat at that price. We could just as well have held the British market as lost it. The British are smart buyers, and they know when they are offered a good price.

When we held our wheat at $2.05 we lost the British market, and since then they have not been buying very much wheat from us. I heard the Minister of Trade and Commerce state that we had not lost the British market, that they would have to buy wheat from us, but they have not had to buy wheat from us. They bought their wheat from Russia, where they could buy more cheaply than here. Not only that, but countries in Europe have been forced to grow their own wheat because ours was too expensive to buy.

Had we in the east been able to buy feed wheat at a price we could afford to pay we would have bought many thousands of bushels. That would have made more space available in the elevators for wheat now lying out on the prairies. That is one reason we have such a surplus of wheat, because we in the east could not afford to buy feed grain.

When we found we could not buy feed grain at a price we could afford to pay we had to buy screenings, which up to that point had not cost anybody anything but had been taken off the western farmers as dockage. We had to buy those dirty screenings that should have been burned, at a time when there was plenty of surplus grain in the west. We could easily have bought a lot of that grain and thus made storage space available for thousands of bushels of wheat now lying out on the prairies.

Progress reported.

IMMIGRATION ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ACQUISITION AND LOSS OF CITIZENSHIP

Mr. H. A. MacKenzie (Lambton-Kent) moved the second reading of Bill No. 7, to amend the Immigration Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to propose this amendment to the Immigration Act I am fully conscious of the fact that it affects the citizenship act because the two are inseparable and so interwoven that it affects both. Therefore I want to talk mainly about the citizenship part of the amendment.

For some years now I have been rather dissatisfied with both the regulations and the attitude of some of the new Canadians who have come here from time to time. I appreciate that this country is really a land of immigrants. Many of us in the house today are immigrants ourselves, and in the great majority of cases our parents or our grandparents were immigrants who came to this country. I should like to put on the record a summary of the number of immigrants who have come to Canada since the war years. These are round figures, and are as follows:

Year	Number
1946	71,000
1947	64,000
1948	125,000
1949	95,000
1950	73,000
1951	194,000
1952	164,000
1953	168,000
1954	154,000
1955	109,000

In the ten years from 1946 to 1955 a total of 1,222,319 immigrants have come to the shores of Canada. I should also like to put on the record comparative figures of immigration and naturalization. New Canadians are required to live here five years before they can apply for citizenship papers. I have taken the five years from 1946 to 1950 and then the five years from 1951 to 1955. In 1956 71,719 immigrants came to this country and five years later, when they were eligible to take out citizenship papers, 12,553 obtained their papers. In 1947 there were 64,000 immigrants and in 1952, five years later, 10,000 obtained their papers.

During the five years from 1946 to 1950 some 430,000 immigrants came to Canada, and in the period from 1951 to 1955 116,375 took out their papers. Less than one-third of the immigrants who came to Canada from 1946 to 1950 took out papers in order to become naturalized Canadian citizens. With your permission I should like to put these two tables on Hansard, because I have not given them in detail. They are quite short and I do not think anyone will object.

Mr. Green: May I ask the hon. member a question. Do these figures of the number of immigrants who came to Canada include immigrants who are British subjects?

Mr. MacKenzie: Certainly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Has the hon. gentleman leave to place these tables on Hansard?

Mr. Fulton: Could I ask him the source of the figures? Are they from the bureau of statistics?

Mr. MacKenzie: No, I got the figures from the department of citizenship, and I assume they are correct. They are for the calendar year and not the fiscal year.

Mr. Fulton: I have no objection. I just wanted to know the source.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacKenzie: The tables are as follows:

That is probably not a true picture. It cannot be said it is an accurate picture, because we do not know how many of the immigrants who came to Canada went to the United States or some other country, and did not remain here long enough to take out naturalization papers. However, there is a trend there revealing a situation that in my opinion should not exist. I wondered if it was the fault of Canadian citizens, or should we revise our immigration regulations to make them more elastic, more strict, or at least to make the immigrants who come here more citizenship conscious.

The process of taking out citizenship papers is not in itself very difficult. Again, in case someone asks me, I got these regulations from the citizenship department. The Canadian citizenship certificate grants specific rights and privileges such as freedom of speech, religion, thought and action, the right to vote as you choose and the right to be secure in your possessions. The obligations of citizenship are set forth clearly in the oath administered to each potential citizen. Each newcomer repeats the oath of citizenship, repeating the words in groups of 7 or 8, phrase by phrase as pronounced by the judge of the court. The oath sworn is:

> I swear to be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, her heirs and successors according to law, and that I will faithfully observe the laws of Canada and fulfil my duties as a Canadian citizen, so help me God.

There is nothing automatic about the privilege of uttering this oath and receiving the prized certificate of citizenship. The process of induction really starts in the country of origin, where immigration and visa officers of Canada make a careful selection from among those desiring to enter this country. Before the prospective citizen appears in court for the swearing-in ceremony and the granting of a certificate of citizenship there are procedures designed to check on the suitability of the candidate. I might say here that the department told me that less than 2 per cent of the immigrants who apply for citizenship papers are rejected.

An officer of the court is assigned to assist the applicant in making out a detailed form in two copies, one of which is posted so that any member of the public may make objection if he wishes, and the other sent to Ottawa for scrutiny. Name, place of birth, occupation, arrival in Canada, places of residence since landing, periods outside the country, ability in languages, intention of domicile, are all covered in detail in the application.

The applicant must disclose "if you have been confined in, or an inmate of any penitentiary, gaol, reformatory, prison or asylum for the insane in Canada." The marital status of the applicant is checked, together with children and their ages. A careful description is given and "your applicant humbly prays for a decision that he is a fit and proper person to be granted a certificate of citizenship".

After a lapse of three months, as required by law, the applicant is called back to be examined by the judge of the court, who must be satisfied about the fitness of the petitioner for citizenship. The judge goes into such matters as residence within the past year, legal domicile, service in the armed forces, if any, lawful admittance into Canada, character of applicant, his knowledge of the English or the French language, and whether the petitioner has "an adequate knowledge of the responsibilities and privileges of Canadian citizenship."

[Mr. MacKenzie.]

The judge of the court then affixes his signature, approving or rejecting the candidate, with any remarks and observations he may care to make. This copy of the application—the second—is then sent to Ottawa. The citizenship branch at Ottawa completes its investigations and, if the petition for citizenship is granted, a numbered certificate is made out and sent to the court.

The prospective citizen is then notified to appear for the swearing-in ceremony, this being the final goal of his efforts. The complete ceremony requires about an hour. The newcomers first have the procedure explained to them by the clerk of the court, who then calls up the judge who presides at the oath-taking. Both the clerk and the judge usually speak in English and then in French. The potential citizens in the oath-taking procedure place their right hands on the Bible.

At each sitting of the court it is the practice to have a representative of one of a large number of voluntary associations, interested in promoting the welfare of immigrants, speak briefly. It is important that immigrants be integrated into community life. Community organizations thus have an important role to play in fostering good citizenship among newcomers as well as among the native-born. The concluding event at each sitting of the citizenship court is an address of welcome to the newly inducted citizens by the judge of the court, who points to the significance of the occasion and expresses the hope that prosperity and all the other accompliments of a full life will be theirs.

I sometimes wonder why the new Canadians who are domiciled here for five years in many cases at least are a little reluctant to make out their applications for citizenship. I have here a letter which I received recently from one of the county court judges, from which I should like to read just one paragraph. He says:

> I have for years felt that we as a whole do not take sufficient interest in the welfare of our new Canadians, nor do we outwardly indicate our desire to be of assistance to them. Our naturalization courts on the whole are too cold and lack the personal interest and concern in the well-being of our new citizens.

I sometimes wonder whether our own Canadian citizens are too modest in acclaiming our own land, its opportunities, its privileges and the benefits they enjoy in it. I must confess that I sometimes think we Canadians seem to be in an apologetic mood for the fact that we were born in Canada and that we are Canadians. As a matter of fact, I must confess that I myself had to go to a foreign land in order fully to appreciate the value of Canadian citizenship and what it meant to me.

I remember going one time on a trip, or a mission if you like, with the United Nations relief and rehabilitation administration which took me for two and one-half years to China. There I dealt with people of many nations. At one time under that UNRRA program there were probably 2,000 personnel on the staff in the China field. The majority of them were Americans because after all, while many nations contributed to the program, the basis of the contribution was a percentage of the national income. As the United States had a much larger national income than the others, they made over 70 per cent of the whole contribution that was made. Hence naturally 70 per cent or probably a little bit more of those on the staff were Americans.

I lived and worked with those people for two years or two and one-half years. I was rather amazed at the Americans who were always singing the praises of their country, saying it was the greatest country in the world, the country that had the brightest future, the country that had the highest standard of living and even going on to say—although they could not very well do it now—that it was the country that had a dollar that was worth more than that of any other country in the world. I will admit that at times they made me tired and annoyed me, but I must confess that in many ways I admired them for doing that.

I think we as Canadians can borrow some of that plan from our American friends. Why should we be modest about the country in which we live? Do we not live in a country that has had the greatest expansion in her history in the last 10 or 15 years? Never in our lifetime have we had such great expansion and such development as we have had in the last 15 years. It is the belief of many people who are in a much better position to judge than I that we are on the threshold of a much greater expansion and a much greater development than we have ever had before in our history. Further, I believe the Prime Minister of Britain emphasized this matter the other day.

In my opinion, and I know it is the opinion of many other people, there is no country in the world that is held in higher regard among the nations of the world than is Canada today. I therefore think that we as Canadians should impress on the minds of not only our new Canadians but our associates the great privileges we enjoy and the great future we have in this country.

The amendment I have submitted here to the Immigration Act is a simple one, and it is proposed with the thought in mind of creating among new Canadians who come to our land more incentive to take out their citizenship papers. It is true that many who come here are British subjects. Many come here from the British commonwealth of nations. Those people also must be domiciled here for five years before they can take out their own naturalization papers. They have, however, some advantage over the people who come here from other lands owing to the fact that when their five years of residence in this country are up, they may make direct application to the registrar of the citizenship department here and they are issued their citizenship papers without going through the process in court which the other people must do, with a three-month stay before they can finally get their papers.

I find that some of the people who come from the British commonwealth—and I admit that it is a limited field I am speaking of now—feel that as British subjects they do not necessarily need to take out citizenship papers—they feel that it is not required—and some of them are rather reluctant to do so. On the other hand, many of the immigrants that live in my district—and many of them are central Europeans who come from war-torn districts—are extremely anxious to take out their citizenship papers, and they make their application as soon as their five years of residence has been completed here.

While living in China I remember running across some people who came from central Europe. They came through the rise of Hitler and settled in Shanghai, not knowing where to go. Seeing the rise of the communist regime, they wanted to come to Canada or the United States, to the North American continent. One couple over there whom I knew very well decided they would like to come to Canada. I told them to put in their application because I felt sure they would be accepted. I had known them for two or three years, and in my opinion they were a very fine type of citizen.

This summer I visited Vancouver and they met me at the depot. After exchanging greetings the first thing they said was, "Do you know you are looking at new Canadians now?" They were delighted to think they were now Canadians. Sometimes immigrants who come to this country have the mistaken idea that the filing of what is called a notice of intention is going to hasten their citizenship papers. Of course that really is not true. The notice of intention has no bearing at all on the ultimate issuance of citizenship papers. It only means you intend to apply for citizenship papers when you have completed your five years of residence in this country.

There is a somewhat similar situation in the United States. A few days ago I was talking with a consular attache at the United States consulate and he said they have a similar regulation, that you must reside in the United States five years before you are eligible to make an application for citizenship papers. I said I understood they had something called first and second papers which led to citizenship. He said that was something the same as our own notice of intention. It is a notice that you intend to do this some time. It does help one to hold a job if you have filed a notice of intention or first papers showing that you do intend to become a citizen of the country, but it does not necessarily mean you are going to have your citizenship papers. Certainly it does not mean you are going to have them any sooner.

Mr. Green: Does the United States have any provision compelling a person to take out citizenship, similar to the proposal the hon. member is asking to have written into our law?

Mr. MacKenzie: I am coming to that in just a minute. As a matter of fact I do not think there is any compulsion in this amendment I am submitting. I did mention to my friend that since we lived fairly close to Detroit I remembered quite well that during the depression some Canadians who had gone to Detroit and taken their first papers were let out of their employment and returned home. I said that I knew some of them had their first and second papers, but they were let out. He said that was not an over-all regulation in the United States, but was really instituted by the city to look after their own relief rolls.

I agree that the most normal, and probably the only, way to have citizenship in the true form is to have a desire in your own heart and soul to become a citizen. A person has to be anxious to become a citizen. You cannot compel a person to become a citizen. I do not believe the amendment I have submitted does compel anybody to become a citizen. There is nothing compulsory about it. If you reside in this country for five years, then normally you have three months to wait before you get your citizenship papers. This amendment proposes that you have one year in which to make up your mind. There is the five years residence, and then you have one full year to make up your mind whether or not you want to become a citizen. If you do not make that application within one year, then you simply lose the first five years residence and start all over again.

Mr. Macdonnell: May I ask a question at this point? Would there be nothing whatever that could serve as a sufficient excuse or reason, I mean illness or anything, for having let the year expire?

[Mr. MacKenzie.]

Mr. MacKenzie: There is no such provision in this amendment. This is only a suggestion to the members of the house. It is up to the members to make these suggestions. I would think that if you lived in a country for five full years, and then had one more year making six years in all, you would have some idea of whether or not you wanted to become a citizen. If you put in an application, then that clears you.

If you do not put in an application, then you lose the first five years residence. You can pick it up again, and it is only a matter of extending it five years more. A person may live his life in Canada, may engage in business and become quite prosperous without ever taking out his citizenship papers. In fact, some of them do that. Nobody molests them; nobody says anything about it. It is quite optional.

I cannot see how the amendment I am proposing has any compulsion about it. It is entirely voluntary. It is just an added incentive. If you want to put in your application, all right; but if you do not nobody is going to molest you as long as you obey the laws of the land and do not become a public charge. I believe we all agree that the sooner the immigrant becomes a Canadian citizen, becomes integrated into our Canadian life and assumes the responsibilities which are his as a citizen, just as he accepts the privileges and benefits, the better it is for all concerned. I say again, in submitting this proposed amendment to the Immigration Act, I feel it is something that does not have any compulsion in it. It is a matter of creating greater interest and enthusiasm amongst ourselves so there will be a greater number of enthusiastic Canadians in our country.

Mr. John Decore (Vegreville): I want to make a few remarks in connection with this proposed amendment to the Immigration Act, Mr. Speaker. Listening to the hon. member who proposed the amendment, it appears to me that probably his prime intention is to get more of our newcomers to become Canadian citizens as soon as possible. This feeling is understandable, because I believe it is a feeling that is shared by many of us in this house. We like newcomers to become Canadians and to assume the duties and obligations, as well as the privileges, of Canadian citizens.

Although I am sympathetic with his intentions, I am afraid I must disagree with his methods. This amendment would make it mandatory, according to the note of explanation—

Mr. MacKenzie: I do not like the word "mandatory"; I am sorry.

Mr. Decore: Well, it would make it mandatory for an immigrant to apply for a certificate of citizenship within one year after acquiring domicile, otherwise he would lose such domicile for an additional period of five years. The hon. member has stated that this does not compel a newcomer to become a citizen. I might go along with him and agree on that, but it does imply compulsion because of the fact that a newcomer would be subjected to this penalty. You might as well put it in the form of a penalty because, by having failed to make his application within the year in question, he would have to wait an additional five years.

If this amendment passed I would think probably more people would become Canadian citizens; that is, newcomers to the country. But is that what we want? We certainly want newcomers to become Canadian citizens, but do we want to use any form of compulsion to require those people who do not apply within a certain period to wait another five years? If we resort to this method we might have more people apply, and in that way the object the hon. member has in mind might to some extent be attained.

I think this is in violation of a very important principle of our way of life. It is simply this. In a democracy we should respect the freedom of the conscience of the individual. Just as religious faith is a matter of conscience, so should citizenship be a matter of conscience in a democratic country. Citizenship is something that is not for sale. Pressure should not be used to make people conform. All the people who come into this country want to become Canadian citizens eventually, but it takes time. The desires of a newcomer are these. First of all he would like to get acquainted with the language of this country. He would like to have economic security. He would like to be socially acceptable in the community or in the area in which he finds himself.

I think we all know that until recently we have not been very effective in selling Canadianism to Canadians. In the early days of the settlement of the west many people were told to become naturalized Canadians because that was the only way in which they could obtain a patent or a title to their homestead. Of course that was not the right way to approach this very important matter. I feel that since the Canadian Citizenship Act came into effect in 1947, very important steps have been taken in the right direction. We are becoming more and more conscious of our responsibilities as Canadian citizens.

At this time the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, with the assistance of some of our organizations such as the Imperial Order of Daughters of the Empire, are doing very good work in first of all trying to get the newcomer acquainted with the facts of this country, the geography, the language and the economic conditions. Second, they are trying to do their best to create a warm and friendly feeling that he is desirable, that he is wanted and that he is also one of us. We may not be doing enough. Probably more should be done along those lines, but certainly in my opinion if this amendment is passed it will not help the situation.

The hon. member pointed out very well that many of those newcomers who came from that area of Europe where there was turmoil, where they found themselves in displaced persons' camps where they were stateless, when they reached the shores of this country were most anxious to obtain their citizenship certificates as soon as possible because they would have something they were not able to get in other places they ran away from. But the fact is some of these other immigrants have come from Holland. Let us not forget that these people come from a different country. They had been very loyal to their queen and to their way of living. They had their roots deep in that country, and after they come to a new land it takes time to get themselves acquainted with the language, to get their new roots in. The reason they came here was that they wanted to become Canadian citizens.

We would be far better off when any newcomer takes the solemn oath to which the hon. member referred, if we knew that he was not taking it because if he did not take it now he would have to wait another five years. We want him to take the oath because he sincerely feels that he is loyal to this country and wants to be a Canadian citizen.

Many things could be said about this amendment, Mr. Speaker. I am afraid I shall have to vote against it.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Vegreville, I have every sympathy with the purpose behind the bill which has been introduced by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. MacKenzie), but like the hon. member for Vegreville it would not be possible for me to support the bill.

Indeed, I would hope that my hon. friend would not feel like pressing it upon the house at all. It will serve a quite useful purpose to have had this subject raised and to have a little attention drawn to the fact that there is a desire—and I think from the spirit of the house there can be no doubt that the desire is shared by hon. members on both sides of the house and in every corner of the house —to have the newcomers who have come to live in this country, to make their homes here, become citizens and share fully and equally with us in all the privileges of citizenship.

I agree, of course, with the hon. member for Lambton-Kent that in the technical sense of the word there is no compulsion about the amendment he suggests. I suppose an argument could be made that there was not even any element of implied coercion; but, as the hon. member for Vegreville pointed out, in the explanatary note the word "mandatory" is used. There is no doubt that there is a penalty imposed for not doing something, and for not doing something that I think none of us would want to see done except as a purely voluntary act.

Therefore instead of doing anything that implies in any way any suggestion whatsoever of pressure upon newcomers to join our citizenship, what we ought to try to do is make our citizenship appear to the newcomers so attractive that the great majority of them will need nothing in the law to urge them, when the five year period is up, to make their applications. I do think there are one or two ways in which the objects of this bill can be achieved very much better by other forms of action both on the part of governments and on the part of ordinary citizens.

Perhaps you, sir, and the house will bear with me if I make one or two suggestions as to what some of these things are. I do not think there is anything basically wrong with the citizenship act. It is true that my hon. friend the leader in the other place has introduced a bill which will later come to this house, which proposes to make some minor amendments to the citizenship act. Without at this time anticipating a future debate I should like to emphasize the fact that they are minor amendments and have nothing to do with the fundamental principles on which the law is based. I do not think there is a need for any fundamental change in the law. I do believe there is perhaps some need for improvement in some of the practices.

As far as my department is concerned we try to make the technical side of acquiring citizenship as easy as possible. I refer to the technical side advisedly. I do not think we want to encourage newcomers to treat citizenship lightly, or to have them regard it as a process by which you can put a coin in a slot machine and have a document come out. I feel this is perhaps the most solemn, voluntary act, except marriage, that any individual can take; therefore it ought to be vested with a certain solemnity and it ought to be taken seriously and certainly freely.

However, owing to the geographical nature of this country there are many remote places where newcomers are living where it is very difficult for an individual without considerable cost and inconvenience to appear three times in the court, and that is what is normally now required in order to obtain citizenship. Certain amendments have been made to the regulations to make it somewhat easier to fulfil certain of these technical requirements.

I may say, sir, I would welcome any effort that any hon. member can make in his own district to make these requirements better known to newcomers, and to help them in obtaining their citizenship. I should also welcome from any hon. member on either side of the house any suggestions as to further technical improvements which could be made in the procedure of the department.

With the exception of Montreal, Toronto, and the immediately surrounding areas, and certain remote localities, the Department of Citizenship and Immigration has not set up courts of its own for the purpose of granting citizenship. I think it would be most undesirable to do so, if for no other reason than because it would be a quite unnecessary charge upon the taxpayer. In the normal case the county or district courts, which are of course under the administrative control of the provincial governments, perform this function.

I should like at this time, if it is not inappropriate, to express great appreciation for the devotion not only of the judges of the county courts and the other judges and magistrates in this country who perform this function but also for the devotion and kindness which is generally shown by the clerks and other officials of these courts. I do think there are one or two places where I would hope there would be a little more interest taken by the judges and the clerks in arranging the ceremonies and in conducting the inquiries, because it does make a great deal of difference, I think, to the appreciation that newcomers have of Canadian citizenship if the formal act of acquiring citizenship takes place in an atmosphere which is at once friendly and dignified.

I have had the good fortune to be invited on two or three occasions to take some part in these ceremonies. I do hope that all hon. members who can find the time to do so on some convenient occasion will try to be present at one of the ceremonies, because they are really quite moving experiences. It is extraordinary the emotion that many of the applicants feel on these occasions.

If I were to criticize the work of my predecessors in preparing the present citizenship act—I know there are many arguments on either side—I would say that I sometimes almost regret that British subjects do not have ceremonies to attend when they obtain their Canadian citizenship. As all hon. members know, British subjects need only fill out the necessary forms and apply to the department, and they receive their certificate through the mail. I think they miss something in a way.

I think it is also true, as the hon. member for Lambton-Kent said in his remarks, that there are a great many British subjects who do not realize that there is any particular advantage to them in applying for certificates and many of them fail to do so until some day they require a passport in a hurry in order to travel abroad.

Mr. Green: May I ask the minister a question? Has he taken out a certificate of Canadian citizenship himself?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes; not only have I a certificate of Canadian citizenship, but I thank the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra for giving me an opportunity to advertise these excellent miniature certificates which can be procured for a very modest sum. I am afraid I do not remember whether it is $1 or $2.

Mr. Green: I will venture that you are one of the few hon. members who have such a certificate.

Mr. Pickersgill: I believe the minister has the right in certain circumstances to remit the charge—

Mr. Knowles: You did not do that in your own case, did you?

Mr. Pickersgill: I paid for mine, sir. But I think in some circumstances the minister has the right to remit the charge to others; and if there is any hon. member who would like a certificate and who would supply the necessary information and photograph and feels the fee could be devoted to an even better cause, the minister would do his best in the circumstances to meet his wishes.

An hon. Member: There is no excuse now.

Mr. Pickersgill: The miniature certificate is a very convenient thing to carry around. I have been able to identify myself with it once or twice in this country since I received it; however, I think it is something which all members of parliament might do very well to carry. I find over and over again that people ask me questions about citizenship and about what evidence one can get of citizenship, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has just done, and I suppose I have pulled this card out of my pocket two or three times during the course of each month since I got it to show it to some one—

Mr. Green: How long have you had it?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I have had it since they first began to be issued. The issue of these miniature certificates was one of the many excellent reforms instituted by my predecessor, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris). He was not in office as minister of citizenship to see the certificates issued, and I believe all the miniature certificates have been issued over my signature. I think perhaps mine was the fourth or fifth certificate to be issued; one or two were issued to my colleagues.

Mr. Fulton: That is a rather serious obstacle, you know.

Mr. Knowles: Is it waterproof?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, sir, I have never tested its water-resistant qualities. It is encased in some sort of synthetic substance which appears water-proof.

If I might continue with the more serious observations I wish to make, I feel that it is not so much what is done by the officials of the federal government or the courts that is important in making newcomers value Canadian citizenship, it is what was expressed in the words of the hon. member for Vegreville. He told us that immigrants want to get established, they want some measure of economic security; and then the hon. member said—and these are important words—that they want to feel they are socially accepted. That is the real test of citizenship.

Mr. Fairey: May I interrupt the minister. The hon. member for York Centre has just had a daughter.

Mr. Knowles: Don't you mean the hon. member for York-Scarborough?

An hon. Member: Where are the cigars?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, you and the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Enfield) are familiar with my views on that form of immigration. Those of us who are Canadian citizens, those of us who, like the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Fairey), have lived in this country either for a long time or those of us who have lived here all our lives, can do a great deal to make newcomers feel that they are acceptable and accepted in the community, or we can do the reverse. I do not think that there are many organizations in Canada that are more socially useful and more nationally useful than the citizenship committees which exist in so many centres in this country.

On several occasions I have had the opportunity to meet with citizenship committees in various cities in Canada. These committees are generally composed of the representatives of a great variety of voluntary organizations. It is remarkable the difference that these committees make in the attitude of the whole community toward the newcomers. In that respect it is very different from what I remember as a schoolboy in the days before the first world war, when almost no one paid any attention to the newcomers except those who had business dealings with them, or unfortunately sometimes something worse.

I do think that the extent to which the newcomers are welcomed and accepted into the community will be accurately reflected in the statistics of citizenship certificates granted by the courts in those communities. I feel that in that respect we can take a certain amount of credit—I am not claiming this for the government but for the Canadian people—from the fact that for the last four or five years not only has there been a steady rise in the number of applications for citizenship and the number of certificates issued, but that rise is greater proportionately than the rise in immigration of five years ago. Of course it is hard to measure these things accurately because some immigrants wait for more than five years—some wait for a great many more than five years—before making their applications.

I hope we never will have to follow every newcomer in order to keep track of his every movement and find out whether he intends to stay or whether he goes to another country. I have been told by newcomers that one of the things they find strange about Canada when they first come here is that people let them do what they want to do. Sometimes I think a lot of them would feel easier—I would not say happier—if they were told a little more about what they had to do, but after most of them have been here three, four or six months they do not want to be pushed around or told what they have to do.

I have been told by these people that the greatest thing about this country is not the job they have, not the car they have been able to buy, not the house they have purchased, not any of these material things but the fact that as long as they behave themselves the police will not interfere with them and neither will anyone else.

That is really why I feel that the right way to proceed is not the way which my hon. friend has suggested. I have the highest regard for him, but sometimes he is in a little more of a hurry than those of us who are older and more experienced feel it is wise sometimes to go. I feel that my hon. friend from Lambton-Kent has the right destination in mind, but he is not on the right road. Instead of doing anything that would even smack of putting pressure upon newcomers I feel we should redouble our efforts to make them feel at home in this country, and in that way we will achieve far more than would be achieved by the passing of this legislation.

On motion of Mr. Harris the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Monday is of course private members' day. On Tuesday we shall start with the second reading of the bill with respect to bank guarantees and after that take the resolutions with respect to committees of the house.

Mr. Green: Could the minister indicate in what order?

Mr. Harris: We will take the estimates committee and then the atomic energy committee.

DISABLED PERSONS—REGULATIONS

Question No. 50—Mr. Diefenbaker:

What action, if any, has been taken to make changes in and amendments to the regulations passed under the provisions of the Disabled Persons Act to widen the definition of a "disabled person", to the end that in the administration of the said act the act will be interpreted in accordance with the intention of parliament?

Answer by: Mr. Martin:

The regulations under the Disabled Persons Act were made by the governor in council following discussions between representatives of the federal government and the provincial governments.

Subsection 2 of section 11 of the Disabled Persons Act provides that—"No regulation, by reference to which an agreement with a province has been made, shall be altered except with the consent of the province or in accordance with the regulations to which it has agreed". Agreements with the provinces have been completed and therefore any change in the provisions of the regulations could become operative only with the consent of the provincial governments.

Arrangements have been made to have the federal medical officers connected with the administration of disabled persons allowances meet in Ottawa in February. An invitation to attend the meeting has been extended to medical officers representing the provinces.

When federal and provincial authorities have the results of the discussions among the medical officers further consideration will be given to the present interpretation given by the regulations to the expression "totally and permanently disabled."
